terial responsibility. Sir, there is an important constitutional rule stated in the resolution of my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, and the Minister of Justice says it is not a constitutional rule at all. Well, I think I read a series of extracts from the discussions that took place on some half a dozen or more public matters in England, to show that it is a constitutional rule. And I tell the hon. gentleman more, that it is a constitutional rule so well settled that I defy him to produce an instance where the ciovernment of the United Kingdon has initiated a discussion upon a public or a foreign matter, and at the same time have withheld the papers upon which that negotiation hasbeen based. When the Minister of Finance made his statement with regard to the Washington Treaty, I objected to its leing made because the hon. gentleman has not laid upon the Table of the House those papers in orler to give us an opportunity of judging, not only of the skill and ability of the Government in those negotiations, but of the propriety of the propositions which they made and the propositions which they rejected. We were entitled to know that. These hon. gentlemen are responsille to this House ; they are, at all events, still responsible notwithstanding that they may have refused to exercise cheir juigment and to assert their constitutional right in these matters. When the hon. gentleman came down to Parliament and undertook to make a statement, he ought to have laid upon the Table of the House all the papers necessary to enahle Parliament to judge both as to the accuracy of his statements and the propriety of what he proposed and of what he had refused. No Minister of the Crown has any right to come down to Parliament and say: We want you to accept our word in this matter. No business is conducted in that way; no binker would for a moment be allowed to conluct business on behalf of a great corporation in that way; and it is not in that way that the constitutional functions of Parliament and the responsibility of Ministers to the House, can be discharged. These hon. gentlemen are entitled to proceed in a particular way, aud they ought to give to Parlianent certain information, and until they are prepared to give that information they ought not to initiate a discussion on the subject. If say again that the Finance Minister will look in vain through the whole history of English parliamentary government for an instance where the Minister of the Crown initiated a discussion on a public matter, and at the same time withheld the papers which were necessary to enable Parliament to form a judgment on the matter. Why, sir. I referred to several cases on the 29th March. when the same subject was under discussion ; I might refer to those same cases again, and observe that in every instance wherea Minister was asked to give the Honse an opportunity of discussing a question, he stated that the discussion ought not to take place until the papers were brought down. Of course, if a private member undertakes to initiate such a discussion in the absence of the papers, and the Minister says that those papers cannot, with due regard to the public interests, be produced, then the House will say whether, upon that imperfect information, they will go forward. But mind you, that is not the case where a discussion has been initiated by the Minister. There is not an instance where a Minister has initiated a discussion, and at the same time has withleeld the papers. If he is not pre pared to suimit the papers, if it is not in the public interest that they should be brought down, then it is not in the public interest that the discussion should take place. In this case the Minister undertook to relate to us what was said by himself, what was said by Mr. Blaine and what was said by deneral Foster, and what transpired generally, without a single line being put before us in which there was a formal record of these negotiations. That was a most improper procepding. I pointed out before that the telegram upon which the despatch to the Colonial Office was haserl, which was absolutely necessary to enable us to julge how these negotiations began, was surpressel, that everything relating to the subject of reciprocity was omitted from the telegram, and fown to this hour it has not been communicated to the House. Why, sir, the rule that my hon. friend has laid down is as well established as the rule that the House of Commons is electel for five years unless it be dissolved sooner by the Crown. The one rule of constitutional procedure is not any hetter settled than the other. I say again, there is not an instance in which a Minister has initiated a discussion, or in which he has rentured to carry on a discussion, on any matter of interstate concern, anl has at the same time withheld the papers, the correspondence and protocols, or any memorathinm of conversation, from Parliament. Parliament is entitled to full information upon these subjects; it is so entitled because Parliament is the master of the Government. It is to this House that the Ministers are responsible, it is for this House to say whether contidence in the Administration shall le continned. It is upon this House, in the last resort, that the responsibility rests for the full conduct of public affairs. Now, sir, the hon. gentleman said that in the Treaty of 15.1 the protocols were not publishea. I think the hom. ge:itleman has not looked. Those protocols of 18, were given to the House. The protocols in the Treaty of 1888 were very meagre indeed, but evell in the protocols of 1885 whit was brought down was representerl as being the full record that was made on that occasion; if it was not, then the House was deceived. It is true, those protocols were very imperfect, they were not in the form in which the protocols in every other instance of negotiations that I know of, are preserved. When those papers were brought down here in the returns that were made to the House in 1888, it was an abuse to call them protocols, hut they professed to be a full recoril as made. Now, I have here the protocols that were made when the Treaty of Washington of 1871 was being negotiated, and I find this, fol instance :

"At the conference on the 19ch April, the British commissioners proposed to the American commissioners to adopt the middle channel (generally known as the Douglass channel) as the channel through which the boundary line should be run, with the understanding that all the channels through the archipelago should be free and common to both parties. The American commissioners declined to enteriain the proposal."
And so on. What does the hon. gentleman call that.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That is a record of the conversation?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell)-

- The Anerican commissioners declined to entertain the proposal. They proposed that the joint high commissiun should recognize the Haro Channel as the channel intended by the treaty of 15th Jane, 1846, with a mutual agreement that no fortifications should be erected by either party to obstruct or command it."
And so on. So you have the propositions and the counter-propositions made from time to time, from the beginning to the end. The hon. gentleman has said that he has brought down to the Honse all that there was of record. Why, Sir, look at the despatch, look at the Minute of Council which the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries sent to Lord Knutsford. There is an allusion to the record of this very matter, and it is stated that it has l,een communicated to Lord Knutsford and that has not been commmicated to us. The hon. gentleman says, that that understanding with regard to informality and secrecy that was imposed before the elections in March, 1891, was withdrawn. The seal of secrecy having been removed, there was nothing to prevent the (iovernment making these communications to Parliament, and why, then, were they not mate" Why was not as complete a record laid lefore this House previous to this discussion taking place as it was possible for the hon. gentleman to present either to His Excellency, to his colleagues who did not constitute the embassy, or in the communications marle to the Foreign Office and to the secretary of State for the Colonies? I repeat again, that the diovernment have no right to come to Parliament and ask us to take an oral report of this conversation. That is not the rule olserved anywhere. There is no more propriety in asking it with regard to this than there would be in asking us to take a verbal statement on the whole husiness of administration. They are compelled to make a record and to conduct the business of this commtry in a business-like way, and it would not be conducting it in a business-like way if they simply disenssed these suljects orally with these gentlemen at Wiashington, and made no report of all that tratnspired in these negotiations. I would like to know how it is possible for this House to approve of, or to censure, what the hon. gentlemandid at Wiashington, upon the statement he has made to this House. What opportunity has he given us of judging of the propriety of the proposition which he made? He has given us none at all, and so, if the hon. gentleman persists in treating the House with contempt in regard to this matter, the House will le obligerl to look to the proceedings reported to Congress by Mr. Blaine and Mr. Foster for that information which it is entitleal to from its own Ministers. That being so, I sity that the hon. gentleman's course was highly irregular, that his conduct was highly improper, and that the rule is perfectly clear and is as well settled as any rule can be ; the rule which my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, read from Todd and which 1 read to the House on the 29 th of March last. I contend that the hom. gentlemen went to Washington as ordinary negotiators; informally it may be, but they went there to accomplish a certain result. They went there for the purpose of influencing the elections. The newspapers referred to their visit to Washington in every bye-election that took place, and prior to their return we heard of their visit to Washington. All these proceedings were not secret and were not intended to be secret, and notwithstanding the pledge of secrecy to Mr. Blaine, it was disregarded within a fortnight of the time it was first made. The H onse is, therefore, entitled to the information which we ask, and the hom. Minister of Finance hat no right whatever to refer to these negotiations or to make them the sulject of discussion here, mutil he was prepared to lay all the papers relating to them, the correspondence, the memorandmo of interviews, and everything that transpired, before Parliament. The hon. Minister takes exception to the report contained in the speech of Mr. Foster at New York, and he says that that comprehended other matters than the mere subjeet of reciprocal relations. But that statement although broaler is not guite reconcilable and will not harmonize with the statement made to this House with regard to what transpired, and this difference of opinion leaves the Homse in a combition of perplexity with regard to the matter. That is lue to the fact that the hon. gentleman has disregarded the constitutional rule and treated the House of Commons of Canada with contempt. He has held from it the information to which it is entitlen, and he hat olenied to it the opportunity of forming a judgment upon the negrotiations as they actually transpireal.

Mr. WELDON. It seems to me that this dis. cussion, commenced by the hon. leader of the $\mathrm{O}_{\mathrm{p}}$ position and continued by the hon. member from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), with some warmeth, partakes somewhat of the nature of a tempest in a teapot, and one is led to suspect that the warmth which has inspired these hon. gentlemen in respect to the statement marle by the Minister of Finance in his Budget speech, is due to the sulstance and not to the form of the matter which he commanicated to this House. The faces of the hom. members upon the front bench of the Opposition, of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), of the leader of the Opposition, of the hom. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) during the 12 or 15 minutes in which the Minister of Finance, in that delate, detailed coolly, calmly, cleariy and dispassionately the conversation which our Canalian representatives had with the representatives of the United states in that matter, were something that none who saw them will, for a long time, forget. The hon. gentlemen were first in. terestel. then they were bewildered, they then hegan to smart in pain, so much so that the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) could not conceal his pain, but like the suffering man in the dentist's chair he had to cry out and raise a point of order, but Mr. Speaker soon rulerl, rery properly, that there was no point of order, and in raising that point under the circumstances the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) indicated his frame of mind. This afternoon the matter is brought up again, and if the words of the hom. gentleman opposite are taken serionsly at their face value, one would think that the liberties of the people were in danger by the course pursued by the Minister of Finance in this matter. It will be very difficult to make them be lieve that the liberties of our five millions of Canadians are to be secured by bundles of red tape. Are these the fortifications that a free people would throw around them to guard their liberties?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Mr. WELDON. My hon. friendapproves of that statement and I an glad that he agrees with me. It seems to me that the gentlemen who are guiding the councils of the Opposition are finding themselves very badly off for material, when they take up a half day or more of the time of Parliament, at this stage of the session, in introducing a want of confidence motion when the sulstantive matter is no, graver than this. What happened in this case: Here were three of the members of the Government of Canada invited to go down to Washingtom, informally to confer with leading American statesmen representing the United States and to discuss a number of duestions, some respecting international boundaries on the lacific and Atlantic coasts, some, I think, with reference to the pollation of rivers, and injury to the tish in which loth nations have an interest, and some with regarl to wreckage and towage. All these matters and others were openel. Some of them were discussed at length, and some briefly. In respect of some of them conclusions were arrived at; and as to those sulject-mattersin which conclusions werearrived at a report was given to us in writing. Complaint is made in regard to certain discussions that were had on the sulject of trade relations - - in which no conclusion was arrived at, in which it would appear but little progress was made-that the Minister of Finance, when amouncing in his own Parliament the financial policy of the Administration of which he is a member, took framkly into his confidence his own Canadian people in regard to a matter in which it is true there wast in the pullic mind of Canalia very great confusion and uncertainty. The point was taken in the Budget delate that the hon. Minister was out of orler ; it was taken again in a sulseguent discussion: and that point is once more taken to day. It is laid down with a great deal of emphasis that the Minister of Finance initiated a discussion without prolucing the papers on which the discussion was based. That is not a correct-statement of the fact. The Minister did not initiate a discussion on certain papers. He ontlined a conversation which he had.

Mr. MILL.N (Bothwell). I did not say on certain papers.

Mr. Welinon. I took down the hom. gentleman's words on the instant, and I am satisfied that I and quoting them correctly. That is not a statement of the fact; it does not state correctly what oecurred. Now, I challenge the rule of procedure which the hom. gentleman lays down in broal terms. I have under my hamd a precedent which warrants me in doing so, and which bears somewhat closely on the point of controversy as to whether the Minister of Finance was within his rights in referring to conversations which he had had with other gentlemen without laying on the Table of the House a written record of those conversations. I am quoting from the English Hawsartl of 1884 . vol. 286 , page 1022 . One of the members of the Faglish House asked the ruling of the Speaker on a similar matter. Mr. Stanley Leighton rose and said :
"I wish, Sir, to ask your ruling as to the application to the rules of debate of the precedents laid down by previous speakers. I desire to know whether the VicePresident of the Council, having cited official documents -namely, certain reports of Her Majesty's inspectors of schools, and having stated the tenor of them-is not bound io lay them on the Table? I also wish to call your attention to these facts-first of all, that the report which I desire to have laid on the Table was made in consequence of a parliamentary pledge made to the House of Commons by the right hon. gentleman last session, und it. Would be to the public advantage that the honest opinion of the inspectors on over-pressure should be known. I wish also to point out that it is unreasonable for official documents to be considered confidential after the Minister in charge of them has published their tenor."
The ruling of the ipeaker was as follows:-
"In reply to the hon. member I have to state that it is an unquestioned rule of this House that public despatehes, documents and papers relating to public affairs should be laid on the Ta!le of the House, if quoted by a Minister; but in this case. the right hon, gentleman the VicePresident of the Council made, I understand. no citations from any document whatever. He merely said that he had consulted the inspectors. The statement which he made, as to the result of his enquiry as to over-pressure in the elementary selools. was made on his own responsibility and he is undernoobligationto lay any documentsor papers on the Table of the House."
I think, Mr. Speaker, that that citation is rery much in point. Now, I have before me a rule which was guoted hy a member of this House in the previous discussion ass to what the rights and limitation of Ministers are in respect of matters of which there may not have been laid on the Table of the Honse a full report. I think the question arose in a discussion connected with the Chinese Wiar. It was in 181;3, when Lord Palmerstom was First Minister. The objection was taken that Lord Palmerston was not within his rights in making the statements he did without laying on the Tahle of the House the documents in controversy, and Lord Palmerston laid down this rule in reply to Lort! John Manners, who took the objec. tion. He sidid:
"It is alogether a new doctrine to me that a Minister making a statement from information which has come to his knowledge, is bound to lay on the Table of the House the document from which that information is derived. I indmit no such principle. It is perfectly true that when Minister reads a paper he is bound to lay it on the Trable."

In this case there was no doumment from which the information was drawn ; so that Lord Palmerston's doctrine was stronger than that which we are contending for here. Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the substance and giavamen of the present complaint: What is the danger, what will go wrong, if the pitpers asked for are never produced? The whale point in the speech of the fon. learler of the Opposition is that the memory of the Minister of Finance may have gone wrong, and that he may not have stated exactly what words passed between him and Mr. Blaine. The hon. nember for Bothwell has gone further, having expressed doubts whether the statement of the hon. Miniscer of Finance was eandid or not. Now, as I said when I began, so I siy now, the whole substance of the complaint is that in a matter in which the public mind was greatly confused, in which there was great doult whether the Liberal-Conservative party or the Liberal party were telling the truth as to the real mind of the public nen of the United States on the subject, the Minister of Finance took the tirst favourable occasion, and the right occasion, to put before Parliament and the country what he and his colleagues had discovered to lee the real mind of the United States Govermment on the question. If he had not done that, he would not have done his duty, and, for furnishing us with that information, insteal of heing censured, he is entitled to our thanks and commendation.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I followed as well as I conld the last speaker (Mr. Weldon) who appeared to me to have a curious swant of appreciation of the objection contrined in the resolution of the hon. leader of the Opposition. The hon. memher has not encleavoured to controvert the constitutional point raised in that resolution. He guoted some precedents to show, if I umlerstood him correctly, that a Minister maty quote from an otficial document or despatel without producing it. If he follows up the case to which he referred, I think he will find that Lord Palmerston's statement on that occasion is not borne out by the general run of the authorities. But that is not in question now. The hon. gentleman made a curiously inapt quotation from the English Hanisard. I do not know why he quoted it, for it had no iuplication to the proposition before us. Now, he silys that he sees no harm at all in the Finance Minister alopting the course he did. In other words, he sees no harm inMinisters representing Canala, conferring with Ministers representing it foreign state on mattere of the most momentous importance to Canadian interests, anifl returning $t$ ) this conntry aml submitting the result of their deliberations io the House in the form of a verbal statement. The hon. gentleman cannot be serious in that. As a constitutional lawyer he knows the importance of such matters heing reducerl to writing. He knows how impossible it is for a large boly of the representatives of the people here to come to a conclusion in one wiay or the other as to the result of those negrotiations unless they have a report of them which they can thoroughly rely upon. Surely the hom. gentieman does not contend that the representatives of the nation can consult with those of a foreign nation, come back to Parliament, and say: Our recollection is that such a thing took place. but we do not propose to place before Parlidment any record. What are we discussing here? It is whether it is a constitutional rule that such consultations shonld be reduced to writing, in the first instance, and secondly, whether they should be communicated to Parliament. Nothing lut the importance of the sulbject justifies me in calling the attention of the House again to the quotation made hy the learler of the Opposition in support of his motion. He quoted from Torld's Parliamentary Govermment in England, not as to whether it was a point of order correctly taken, not as to the point of order whether the Minister of Finance could make this statenent. or not, because we have passed by that. The hon. member for Bothwell raised the point of order at the time the Minister of Finance made the statement. But we have passed away from the point of order and are now discussing the constitutional guestion, Whether the action of the Government in this regarr has been in accord with constitutional usage, and whether Parliament has been treated with proper respect in the matter or not. What does the leader of the Opposition cite in support of his rroposition? He cites the rule as laid down by Todd, to be found on page 3ī̄ of his work, biseed on statements made with respect to that rule by no less eminent authority than Mr. Dismaeli and Iord Palmerston ; and that rule is:
"It is a necessary rule that the substance of all personal negotiations between the representatives of the British Crown and the members of any foreign country should be committed to writing, in inatters of public concern."
That is the rule, and it is embolied in my hon. friend's resolution, and the reason of the rule is, as there explained, "in order that a fair and complete record of the transaction between Great Britain and the other states may be preserved in the Foreigin Office and in due course submittted to Parliament." So that there are two constitu. tional propositions involved in the statement made by Mr. Disraeli and Lord Palmerston. One is, that when the representatives of Great Britain confer with the representatives of a foreign country on matters of national concern, their consultation should be reduced to writing. And the other is, after they are reduced to writing, this writing should, in due course, be submitted to Parliament in order that the representatives of the people may have an opportmity of passing judgment upon it. That proposition is contained in the resolution lefore the House and nothing more. There is a limitation placed upon that proposition apparently, and that limitation is that, in certain cases, a member of the Government may, upon his responsibility, withhold from the public certain information as he may judge cannot he afforded without detriment to the public service. That rule is universally recognized. When negotiatious are pending between Great Britain and a foreign country and it is not in the interests of the public that these negotiations should be prematurely communicated to Parliament, a Minister frequently takes the responsibility of saying that in such a case he camot make a public statement. But no such rule can hold here. Why? Because the negotiations are concluded and the confidential nature of the communications have been withdrawn by Mr. Blaine. The hon. gentleman knows that at one periol it was considered that the negotiations letween the representatives of Canada and the United States should be of a confidential character, but in a letter which Mr. Blaine subsequently wrote, the confidential character of the negotiations was entirely withdrawn. If it was not, the Finance Minister has committed a gross breach of contidence in making the statement he did in the House, but he was justified so far as that phase of the case is concerned, if the confidential character was withdrawn. The question then comes, whether the Government have adopted that constitutional rule. The leader of the House has stated that, so far as his knowledge goes, it is not customary, in negotiations carried on between commissioners reprepresenting two countries such as Canada and the United States, to reduce to writing offers made on the one side and not accepted on the other; in other words, that negotiations on any specific subject which have proved to be alowtive, are not made the subject of a protocol. Why, I do not know how the hon. gentleman can reconcile that statement he has made to the House with the knowledge he must perforce possess of the negotiations which took place preceding the Washington Treaty.
Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That was a résumé of a treaty.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is not only a résumé, it is reduced to the form of a protocol. The nego: tiations which subsequently proved abortive, and the suggestions made briefly on the one side and discussed by the other and subsequently rejected, are all reduced to the form of a protocol and submitted to Parliament. Now, if the hon. gentleman will turn to the papers on the Treaty of Washington, to le found in the year 1872, he will find the substance of the discussion which took place between the plenipotentiaries of the two countries on the subject of their trade relations reduced to the form of a protocol and submitted to Parliament afterwards, and this was done with special reference to those discussions which proved abortive in themselves. The hon. gentleman will remember, in the first instance, that the proposition emanated from the United States Governinent, who proposed to admit free of duty, on and after a certain date, coal, salt and fish in return for certain concessions we were asked to make. He will see their proposition set out in full in a protocol. He will see the facts set out in full that the Canadian commissioners considered that they transmitted it to the Canadian Govermment, that the United States commissioners some days after withdrew the proposition. Every fact connected directly or indirectly with the proposition, although verbal in its character, when first made, was reduced to the form of a protocol and afterwards submitted to Parliament, so that the statement submitted ly the Minister is entirely at variance with the facts. He went on to say there is no further correspondence than that which is brought down. What position does the House stand in today \% It stands in this position, that there is an official record male of the negotiations which transpired bet ween the representatives of this Gorermment and the representatives of the Uniterl States at Washington, and that that record has not been brought down to Parliament, that the Government have attempted to snatch a verdict from a Parliament and the country while at the same time they are deliberately withholding that record. The hom. gentleman states it was not demanded here. I don't know whether be was in the House or not, hut when I had the privilege of atdressing the House in reply to the Finance Minister I specially called for this document if it existed. I stated it was not conceivable to me that these negotiations should have taken place letween the representatives of the two Governments, uiless the official record had heen kept, and I call upon the Govermment to liring that record down. Sulisequently, the hon. member for Bothwell, on the 11th of April, 1892, called the attention of the House to the fact that the othicial communication and reports of tie recent Washington negotiations had not yet been laid upon the Table, and that it was of great consequence they should be. The hou. gentleman sees that not once, hut time and again, the request has been pressed upon the Government to say whether or not there are ofticial communications, and, in the second place, to bring the record down, and not urge hasty discussion or decision on this momentous question before having this report. The hom. member for Allert talked about a tempest in a teapot. I can conceive of no question more important being brought before Parliament than the one now before us. The question is whether, in a matter affecting the trade of Canada and the trade relations of Canada with the neighbouring republic, and affecting it in a material degree, the information upon which alone a proper opinion can he based is to be given to Parliament or withheld. The hon. gentleman cannot now say that there is not such a record. We have before us the despatch signed by the leader of the House himself and by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries on the Newfoundland matters, wherein it transpires that there was an official record kept of those communications which passed between Mr. Blaine and the Canadian commissioners, that that official record has been transmitted to the Home Secretary for his information, and the House stands here to-day with the knowledge that that official record has been, and is being, deliberately withheld from it. The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), a constitutional authority of high standing, says he is quite satisfied to give his vote without having the official record, or knowing what Mr. Blaine's opinions were, except what he may derive from the verbal report made by the Minister of Finance in his Budget speech. We are not so satistied, and the country will not be so satisfied. If the hon. gentleman refers to that. despatch, he will find it stated that :
" The record which has been transmitted to the Secretary of State for the Colonies will show that an arrangement with the United States for greater freedom of trude between the two countries and for a settlement of the fishery question was found to be impracticable

Unless such and such took .place. I want to see that myself. I want to form my own judgment upon it and to read in the record what Mr. Blaine did propose. I suppose it is all down. They say that record has been transnitted to the Secretary of State, and they go on to show what in their opinion is the result of the record. Is Parliament to be treated in that way, and is the hon. gentleman prepared to support the Government in withholding from Parliament a record of the importance of that which has been transmitted to the Colonial Office? They never said that it is not in the public interest that this record should be sulmitted. The negotiations are over, and therefore no harm to the public interests can result. The Parliament of Caniala are, or ought to be, the masters of the hon. gentleman in this respect. The commissioners have made their report, and they refuse to let Parliament have that report. It is not treating Parliament with proper respect, and Parliament should not have been asked to come to a conclusion on this subject until this report was brought down. The constitutional rule which is formulated in this resolution is supported by Lord Palmerston and Mr. Disraeli, as cited by Todd, and no pre cetlent can be found where any Government held a conference and transmitted a record of it to the Home Government and then aske:d Parliament to come to a decision on the results of that conference while holding back the record of that conference from Parliament. It is contrary to all usage or precedent, and I defy the hon. gentleman to show either in Canadian or British history a precedent for such action as that. Common sense shows it. You bring down the protocol with reference to Alaska, you bring down the protocol with reference to reciprocity in wrecking, and in regard to all those subjects which are of infinitesimal importance in comparison with the great trade question which you went there primarily to discuss, and, while you give Parliament all the papers upon the smaller issues, you withhold the record in reference to the larger one. As I read the books, it is umconstitutional and contrary to reason and common sense.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman, if he has not-satisfied the House that the authorities to which he has referred endorse the proposition now under consideration, has without doubt satisfied the Housethat there isanintense curiosity onthepart of himself and his colleagues, not so much, I take it, that constitutional usage shall be carefully observed, as that gentlemen on that side of the House and the leaders of the Liberal party shall be in full possession of all the facts connected with the political questions of the day and particularly the question to which the greatest amount of reference was made. The hon. the leader of the Opposition showed, I think, that he is not only curious but he is dubious. The hon. the leader of the Opposition suffers on account of that anxiety the complaint of his colleagues. He stated to-day that he doubted the accuracy of the report as to the trade question which was given to this House by the hon. the Minister of Finance, and, if I inderstood him aright, that hom. gentleman stated as one reason for the doubt that it seemed an impossible position for Mr. Blaine to have taken on the question of discrimination, and to that guestion the hon. gentleman referred. I must confess my astonishment that the hon. the leader of the Opposition waseither surprised at the statement made by the Minister of Finance or that, having heard it, he dnubted it in the slightest degree. His colleagues, particularly the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), and he himself, as I have understood them, have been saying through this country that the only way in which reciprocity in trade can be obtained with the United States is liy alopting that very principle which Mr. Blaine stated he intended to adhere to, and that is, that (cmada should discriminate against other countries; and especially against Great Britain, if they desire to share in the great benefits of the trade of the United States. Let me remind the leader of the Opposition more forcibly of some reasons for my considering that he forgot for a moment the history of his party and the policy he himself has enunciated of recent years under that head. Take, for instance, the language of the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) at Oshawal. Could anything be plainer? He was asked :

[^70]The answer was straight and to the point.

Mr. MILLS' (Bothwell). Question.

Mr. TUPPER. That is the guestion which the hon. gentleman from South Oxford is answering. I know the hon: member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) would rather hear me in my own language, but I must ask him to listen to the words of the hon. member for South Oxford. He said:

[^71] member for Queen's, P.E.I. (Mr. Davies), incoming to the resolution, forgot, I think, for a moment the exact language of that resolution which is now under consideration. He has extended it to some extent and shown the oljject of this resolution or what he comprehends it to be. He referred, for instance, to consultations and to international yuestions as the points that should be recorded in reten*o. The resolution refers to all communications, and the hon. member for Queen's goes so far as to state that it is an undoubted parlianentary mle that these communications, including all the questions that would come up on an occasion of discussion of a treaty, and all the consultations, that is to say, all the conversations, should he reduced to writing. For that proposition he has given us nothing more than his ipse dixit.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The Washington Treaty protocols.

Mr. TUPPER. I am glad the hom. gentleman refers to Washington Treaty protocols. He will search those protocols from first to last, he will search the protocols of the Treaty of 1888 from legimning to end, and he will fail to find any attempt at reporting the communications between the two Govermments, le will fail to find any atteimpt to report their consultations. In reference to the Treaty of 1888 he will find that this Parliament was told by the protocols that the commissioners met on a certain day and iuljourned, and going on another day they met and adjourned.
Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I did not quote the Treaty of 1888 . I quoted the Treaty of 1871, the Washington Treaty.
Mr. TUPPER. The hon. member falls back on the treaty-

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I do not fall back at all. I do not suppose the hon. gentleman wants to misrepresent me. I never referred to the Treaty of 1888, and why the hon. gentleman thrusts it in my mouth I do not know. I referred to the Treaty of 1871. I hold the protocols in my hand. I did not read them all through, but I reatiom now that they contain the discussions between the plenipotentiaries on both sides.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has more discretion than I gave him credit for, and he now says that he did not refer to the Treaty of 1888 . I, however, do refer to it, and I call the attention of the Honse to the protocols of that treaty, and to the fact that no one on that side of the House thought it necessary, in maintaining parliamentary customs, to force such a debate as this upon the House, or to bring up such a question for consideration. But if the hon. nember goes back to 1871, he will find that the only difference between the protocols of the Washington Treaty and those of the Treaty of 1888 is that the references to the meetings are a little more full, and he will find no other lifference than that. To say that these protocols contain what the hon. gentleman contended to-day they contained, is, to my mind, absolutely monstrous.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) They are there.
Mr. TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman pretend that those protocols contain the consultations of the commissioners extending over the period that they profess to cover? Does he suppose that any one reading those protocols ever imagined that they purport to contain the consultations? They contained just what the papers before the House contained, that is, the proposition on the one side and the proposition on the other, the reason for refusing one proposition and the reasons for entertaining another. These are there, anl the information is on the Table of the House to-day in reference to all that took place upon which Parliament is asked to give its consideration. The hon. gentleman has not shown that where the Government of the day are not seeking for the advice of Parliament, in the absence of any request liy Parliament for the production of certain papers, the Government should, on its own motion, produce those papers, or that it should prorluce them at the suggestion of any individual member. I submit that all the hon. gentlemen have shown is that it is the custom in this country and in the mother country when Parliament is asked to take action upon international matters, the information in the possession of the Govermment relating to those matters should be in the hands of members of Parliament. That position they take, and that position is easily established. But they cannot go on from that to argue, without producing more authority than they have done yet, that such is the constitutional rule, that every communication that takes place between the representatives of this Government and those of another, should be laid on the Table of the House. Now, the hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon), I think, gave all that there is to be found in the authorities governing the procedure of Parliament on this point. I submit to the consideration of this House whether the hon. member for Queen's dealt with reference, for in. stance, to the ruling of the Speaker in 1884, in England, the case that the hon. member for Albert referred to. I certainly did not follow him if hedid. Now, then, the hon. gentleman will see that there is no rule for the reduction of the oral discussions to writing, whatever has been the custom. The hon. gentleman's lecture, for the most part, is not merely rirected against this Parliament, but his criticism is upon international action. The hon. gentleman is practically reading a lecture to the representatives of all civilized countries, and he has asked this Parlia:ant practically to teach, not merely a lesson to the Canarlian representatives on this subjcet, but to the representatives of the United States Government, when he says that all these negotiations and all the consultations shall be by the commission reduced to writing and laid upon the Table of the House. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) referred to the Treaty of 1888, and he referred to the alleged fact that the House was misled, if there were any further information to include in the protocols. It was not understood by the House in 1888 that the record was a full record of the proceedings in the sense in which he argued this record should be now. I call his attention to the fact that that subject was referred to, and this House was told that those protocols were not full, and the record was not produced, because it was agreed that the record should not be produced.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). My statement was not that this was all that transpired, but that these documents professed to be the protocols, and if they were not the whole of the record, they were not the protocols. That is my point.

Mir. Tupper.

Mr. TUPPFR. I umlerstoorl the hon. gentleman to say that he desired on the occasion that the Government should produce the record of the consultations between the commissioners; I understood that to be his view, because, otherwise, I could not understand the application of his argument to the case now under discussion. I remind the House that in 1888 the House was informed that fuller recorls conld not le produced without a violation of international contidence. I think that after the authority given hy the Speaker of the English House of Commons in 1884, in line with the authorities quoted in the text book, it would have been idle for me to have pressed upon the House a further consideration of the matter. They stated the rule in reference to the obligation of a Minister of the Crownindealing with publicdocuments. I agree with the hon. member for Bothwell that in 1888 everything was plain sailing, and if there was further information than is brought down on that occasion the House was mislen. However, we do not disagree on that point and I need not further refer to it. It was explained to the House on that occasion that further information could not be brought down without a violation of confilence.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Is that pleaded now:
Mr. TUPPER. I say nothing about that. I am lealing with the facts as they are now before the House, and it is not necessary for me to express an opinion on that. I submit in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. gentlemen have failed to show that there is such a rule as they have propounder, but it is obvious, that if that rule as understood and explained by hon. gentlemenopposite to-day, should obtain, and the fovernment was instructed by Parliament according to that rule, it would embarrass commissioners or representatives of this country in their future proceedings, and the commissioners would, perhaps, take a good deal of caution to say as little as possible upon such subject, when all that they would say, and all that was discussed, would find its expression in public reports, and be laid upon the Table of this House.

Sir RICHARD CARTYRIGHT. It appears to me that neither the Minister of Justice, nor the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, has at all met the real point in this matter. The real cuestion raised by my hon. frient, the leader of the Opposition, is that it no:v appears by documents laid on the Talle of this House, that a record affecting the negotiations recently held at Wishington was actually prepared, and was actually sent by the Canadian Government to the English Government. That point has not been denied, and consequently the point raised by my hon. friend has not been met at all. The position of my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, is this: That if there was such a record the House was treated with grave discourtesy by the Government, and notably by the Finance Minister, in keeping that from us, and in merely giving us a verbal statement of a matter which had been made a subject of record between the negotiators. That is the main complaint, as I understand it, which my hon. friend made, and I think no more just ground for complaint could well be submitted. Why, Sir, look at the very gravity and importance of the negotiations that took place between our commissioners, or our representatives, or our Ministers, call thein what you will, and the gentlemen who represented the linited States Government on that occasion. We know perfectly well that all the other questions, reference to which was made, were not merely of secondary, but of quite a third or fourth-rate importance as compared with this question. It was for the purpose, as members of the (iovermment themselves have repeatedly stated, of obtaining the view of the United States Government on the question of reciprocity between (anada and the United States that these hon. gentlemen went to Washington at all. It was on that grouml that more than a year ago they dissolved Parliament. It wason that ground the two parties in Canada have been arrayed against each other. If ever, sir, in the course of any negotiations there was the extremest necessity that all possible precaution should be taken to have a written record of what passed between the negotiators of the two countries, it was precisely on this occasion which we are now considering. Now, Sir, I will not say that the hon. Minister of Finance stated in so inany terms that there was no record, but most assuredly he implied and gave the House to understand that there was uone. Most assurelly in reply to the leader of the Opposition, and to the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), and to the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), and most assuredly in reply to myself did he time and again leave us under the inpression that the reason that a mere verbal statement was made was because there was no written record. That was the impression left on our mind.

Mr. FOSTER. We are not responsible for that. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That was the impression intended to be conveyed.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not so.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That was the impression left generally on the mind of the House and the country, but now in consequence of a chance allusion marle in another despatch laid on the Table with quite a different purpose, we find that all this time there really was a record which was deliberately kept back ly the hon. gentlemen. for their own purposes. We find that they had that record and that they refused to give it to Parliament, although, forsooth, they could give it to the English Secretary of State for the Colonies, or the English Foreign Minister. I say that in keeping that back they certainly slighted the Canadian Parlianient, and they certainly took every possible opportunity that they could to prevent us from understanding as we had a right to understand, and to prevent us being informed as we had the right to be informed, as to exactly what did pass between the hon. gentlemen and Mr. Blaine and General Foster on that occasion. I listened extremely carefully to the statements made by the Finance. Minister in the Budget speech, and I do not hesitate to tell the House that I came ther to the conclusion which I now entertain, that these hon. gentlemen went down to Washington with no honest purpose of negotiating a treaty at all; that they went down there for the full purpose of throwing a tub to the whale during the bye-elections that were going on, and also for the purpose of enabling them if they could, to return and tell the people of Canada that it was impossible to effect negotiations on reasonable terms with the people of the United States. Sir, the whole language, the whole tenor of the statement made ly, the Finance Minister, as I pointed out on that nceasion, went plainly to show that the olject was not to smooth a way for a treaty of reciprocity hetween Canada and the United states, but to raise and suggest every obstacle which his ingenuity could imagine against loinging aboat a treaty hetween the two countries. We know very well, Sir, what was the language used by that hon. gentleman on many public oceasions liefore his trip to Washington. We know what was the language used by his supporters, we know what has been the language used in this House, and we camot fail to remember, sir, the applanse with which the amouncement was greeted ly his supporters, when they heard this question was finally closed and that there was no chance whatever for obtaining a treaty of reciprocity with the United States. I say, Sir, that from first to last, the Ministers went down to Washington with the deliberate purpose, not of effecting a reciprocity treaty, but with the deliberate purpose of putting obstacles in the way, and of presenting these dhstacles to the biind of the American negotiators in such a fashion as to induce them to decline to proceed with the negotiation. That, Sir, was their purpose, and I have no doubt that they attained it. It is for that reason that it is of the greatest importance to us that we should know precisely what these hon. gentlemen stated in Washington, and that we should know exactly what propositions they made to the commissioners of the United States, and how these propositions were met. All that has been carefully concealed from us, and we are not going to get the infornation from these hon. gentlemen. Unless it is brought before the English Parliament or before the United States Congress, we are to be left in the dark. Now, Sir, we have ascertained that there have been certain commumications, and I find that on 29 th March, the leader of the Honse, speaking on this very suljeet, declared that every shred of the correspondence as far as he knew had been brought down. In another place he says :
"All that I say on that subject is, that, in the first place, every particle of the correspondence has been brought down, and that as regards ans record or memorandam that may have been made as to our interviews, we are just as free to make a statement to the House as to what transpired from our mission to Washington, as if we had never put the matter in writing at all.;
Now, it is a mere quibble, a not particularly worthy quible, for the First Minister or his colleagues to tell us that the report which it appears was marle to the British Government, does not fall under the head of correspondence: and there is no doubt that when the hon. gentleman made this statement, he designed the House to understand that all the information in his power in writing had been put before the House.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Quite the contrary, because I said as to the report that I was afraid it could not be brought down. I adinitted that there was a report.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. And does the hon. gentleman mean to tell us that he does not consider that a report to the English Secretary of State comes under the head of correspondence? The hon. gentleman is an ingenious sophist, exceedingly skilful in hair-splitting, contriving subtle defences, and using words in a non-natural sense; and most assuredly the word correspondence was used by him in a non-natural sense if he meant that it should not incluile the report sent to the English Necretary of State. Secretary of State.

sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman has just read the answer to his own unworthy insinuation.
Sir RICHARI) CARTIVRIGHT. I have just read the answer in which the hon. Minister declared that on this subject every shred of corvespondence has heen bronght down, and at the same time keeps back the fact that a most important paper which was sent to the HomeGovernment has not been communicated to us; and I say that in so doing he is trifing with the Honse, and in using words in a non-natural signification. With respect to this question of protocols, I very distinctly recollect that in the negotiation of the Washington Treaty of 187 l , very full information indeed was given to the House as to the various suggestions made from day to day, as to the various propositions which were made by one side and refused by the other. A very conplete report was laid before Parlianent ; and I do not admit that the very bad precedent which was set in 1888, of greatly curtailing and diminishing the amount of information to be commumicated to the House, is at all a precelent which this House ought to follow. If I remember righty, it was condemned at the time, and whether it was or not, it is no precedent by which we ought to he bound in considering negotiations of such great importance. Now, in 1874-i5, we sent a commissioner to Washington in the person of Mr. George Brown for the purpose of negotiating a treaty, in which he made some progress, but which he failed to carry into effect ; and I find that on his return, a very full memorandum on the whole subject was submitted to the House, in which a greit deal of information as to all that had passed hetween the two countries was given by that hon. gentleman : and it is to le found in the correspondence which was presented to the English Parliament by the command of Her Majesty. I think it would have been nuch better for these hon. gentlemen to have followed that example than to have taken the course they have chosen of utterly refusing to communicate to us that most important part of the neyotiations which referred to the propositions made by them. Sir, everybody on both sides of the House knows quite well that before we can expect the Government of the United States to enter into any negotiations with us for the purpose of framing a reciprocity treaty, we must in the first instance convince the people and the Government of the United States of the sincere and earnest desire on the part of Canada and:our negotiators to seeure such a treaty. This has been from the first wholly lacking on the part of these hon. gentlemen. They have had no desire to secure reciprocity, and for the best of all possible reasons they know perfectly well, and we know perfectly well, that a large class of their supporters on whom they rely for the means whereby they maintain themselves in power, have been from first to last steadily and continuously opposed to the negotiations with the United States which the great bulk of their countrymen desire to see carried to a completion; and I have no doubt whatever that the reason why the Government refuse to give us the full information on this question which reason and constitutional precedents warrant us in demanding, is that they are reluctant to allow other persons to know to what extent they were willing to go or how far they went in the way of offering any terms whatever to the United States. That, Sir, and mothing else, is, I think, the real reason why these hon. gentlemen are so extremely loath to give us the information which we have a right to demand at their hands. sir, I can hardly understand how any business man can come before this House or lefore the country and say that in a matter of the very gravest importance like this, he deems it enough to give us a mere verbal statement of what he recollects to have taken place a number of days ago. At the time I callell the attention of the House to the extreme inconvenience that would result from such a practice, I specially enguired whether the statements made in negotiation had been reoorded at all, or whether those statements had been submitted to the commissioners of the Cnited States ; lecause I told the hon. Minister of Finance then, and I now repeat, that unless those statements had been reduced to writing and submitted to representatives of the United States and igreen to by them, there was the very gravest danger of discrepancies arising between the recollection of himself-without necessarily imputing any blame to him-and the recollection of the United states authorities. Now, Sir, it is so clear, so plain, so obvious, that that as a mere matter of lousiness precaution that should have been done, that I could hardly bring myself at the moment to believe that it was neglecterl; and now I think it will appear that this was done, and that the fact was kept back from ns for the reason that it was not convenient to the hon. gentlemen to allow the people of Canala and the members of this House to understand the precise mode in which they approacher the Americin Govermment, to know the exact nature of the propositions they mame to them, to know how far they were willing to sacritice their beloved friends of the Red Parlour. I do not exactly know what the hom. gentleman meant by the statement which he made. That he proposes, as I see he states he proposes, a reciprocity treaty or certain modifications and extensions such as the changed conditions of the country might render necessary. Now, we ought to know, we should have been informed then, it ought to have heen made a portion of these same protocols and records, what particular changes and modifications the hon. gentleman suggested as a basis for negotiation. We ought to know how far he was willing to go in extending that stme Treaty of 18.4 which referred to natural products only. He wats told that if he desired really and honestly to obtain an offer from the United States his own offer must be male clearly and definitely. It does not appear from the statement here that such a thing was done, but I should suppose that the hon. gentleman must have made sone more or less definite proposition in order to obtain any answer from the United states at all, because he states that immediately on this being done he was informed by Mr. Blaine that they must go a great deal further, that they must go wider than natural products, and include a genezal reciprocity in manufactured articles as well. And then he apparently proceeded to enquire of Mr. Blaine whether such a treaty of reciprocity inrolved discrimination against Great lritain. Well, I have not the slightest hesitation in repeating what I have said here often before. All treaties of reciprocity, particularly all treaties to be made on as broad a loasis as we propose to make this, must, and will, of necessity, involve discrimination in favour of the country which grants reciprocity. We never denied that. It would be perfectly absurd for us to expect that we could obtain full and perfect reciprocity with the United States unless we are prepared to give them some reasonable advantages in return, and most assuredly it was a very unnecessary question for the hon. gentlemen to bring up and discuss with Mr. Blaine. If they hal gone down with any honest intention of negotiating a reciprocity treaty, it was perfectly clear that they should have been prepared to make certain definite and distinct propositions; and the reason more than almost any other which leads me to believe and to say that they went down with no such olject in their minds is this : that neither in their pullic statements nor in the despatch they sent the British Government, do they appear to have submitted any reasonable proposition such as they hal the slightest ground for helieving the United States would entertiain.

It leing six oclock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. CHARLTON. After the charges made against the Government to night, I am surprisei that we have heard from only one of the Ministers of the Crown with reference to the resolution placed in your hand, Sir, by the leader of the Opposition. Since 1878 there has always been manifested a spirit of sulserviency to the Ministers, a disposition to follow them blindly without enquiring into motives, without enquiring into their conduct, without holding them to their responsibility, that argues ill for the independence of this House and for the good government of this country. It certainly should be demanded by this House that the Ministers of the Crown, who are not the masters of this Assembly bat the servants of the people, should give a full account of their actions to the representatives of the people, should withhold nothing from us, but at all times and places should put us in a position to judge fully and independently, with all the facts before us, as to their conduct in the management of public affairs of every character. This has not heen done in the instance under discussion to-night. It has not been the custom of the Government to do so. The Ministry has never hesitated to trifle with Parliament. They have never hesitated to withhold from Parliament what it might suit their purpose to withhold ; and it is time now, as it has been at any time for the last twelve years, for Parliament to assert its rights and for this House to demand that the Ministers shall not trifle with it but shall place in our hands all the information which they are now withholding. It may be argued by my hon. friend the Minister of Justice or by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance that the verbal statement of the doings of the Ministers in negotiations is sufficient for this House. It might well be asserted that a verbal statement with regard to the expenditure of public moneys, or with regard to the tariff of the country, or regarding transactions of any kind of any department of this Government, would he sufficient. We would not necessarily call into account the veracity of the Government by refusing to accept verbal statements in regard to the management of affairs in a public department, hut we are entitled to have something more than verbal statements, and we do have in all these cases detailed statements that can be verified, and we are entitled in a matter of the kind under discussion, to all the papers and memoranda, to all the Government may have done, to erery proposition they have made, and every counter proposition they may have received, in fact, to everything coneerning their negotiations at Washington. We have not received that. I will use a word which I think will answer the purpose when I say thiat the insincerity of the (iovermment in regard to these reciprocity negotiations, in regard to all that preceder the assumed or alleged reciprocity negotiations, begets suspicion now as to the conduct of the Government at Washington with reference to this matter. We have the reasons assigned by the Government for dissolution, reasons bearing upon this question of negrotiations for reciprocity. It is proper to allude to this in this connection, because it leals up to the state of matters which we are discussing tonight, and the circumstances connected with the dissolution of the House warrant us in entertaining some suspicions as to whether the Govermment have dealt fairly and fully with the House in this matter, whether they have placed the House in full possession of information on this subject or have withheld something which is necessary to the full understanding of this question. You, Mr. Speaker, will recollect that the House was unexpectedly dissolved on 3rd February, 1891. The reasons assigned for that in the Government organ, which I supposed were inspired, and which have been enilorsed, because they were never disavowed, were that :
"It is understood that the Dominion Government have through Her Majesty's Government made certain proposals to the United States for negotiations looking to an extension of our commerce with that country. These proposals have been submitted to the President for his consideration: and the Canadian Government is of the opinion that, if the negotiations are to result in a treaty, which must be ratified by the Parliament of Canada, it is expedient the Gorernment should be able to deal with a Parliament fresh from the people, and not with a moribund House.
$\because$ It is understood that Canads will send a delegation to Washington after 4th March, the date on which the life of the present Congress expires, for the purpose of discussing informally the question of the extension and development of trade between the United States and Canada, and the settlement of all questions of difference between the two countries. This delegation will visit the United States capital, it is said, as the result of a friendly suggestion from Washington."
And we had placed before us a circular or despatch of the 13th December, 1890, from the Government of Canada to the Colonial Office in which it was proposed that commissioners should be appointed who should have authority to treat at Washington on the basis of the Reciprocity Treaty of 18 an 4 with certain modifications, and it was asserted that there were negotiations on foot at that date for a reciprocity treaty with the United States. Upon that assumption and representation of the case, the Government dissolved the House and went to the people. Subsequent developments made it apparent that no negotiations were on foot with the VIashington authorities at that time, that the Government of Canada had received no invitation, no overtures from the Government at Washington, and that the statement made was a statement destitute of foundation, and, when this state of affairs was brought to the attention of the American Secretary of State by a letter from Congressman Baker of Rochester, N. Y., Mr. Blaine in reply explicity stated:
"There are no negotiations whatever on foot for a reciprocity treaty with Canada, and you may be assured that no such scheme for reciprocity with the Dominion, confined to natural products, will be entertained by this Government."
Then it appears that there was no friemlly suggestion emanating from Washington, and that no negotiations for a reciprocity treaty were on foot, but, even if the statement were true that there were negotiations for a reciprocity treaty with Washington, the assertion that it was necessary to dissolve the House in order to have that treaty dealt with was untrue. A full year must elapse before a treaty could be sulmitted to the United States Senate for consideration. Even then it would be fair to assume that some months would elapse before that treaty would be considered by the Senate, so that the election could have been held a year afterwards, and the new Parliament would have been elected in ample time to consider this treaty, even supposing this statement made in the public organ was true, which it was not. I alludeto this for the purpose of pointing out why wedeemourselves entitled toentertain some suspicionsas to the character of the Government manourres at Washington, as to the character of their statements as to the Washington negotiations. Their first trip to Washington was evidently made without invitation, and merely to save appearances. The House was dissolved for other reasoms than those which were assignell, and it was necessary to carry out this game of deception, as I will characterize it, for it was nothing else, to go to Washington, as my hon. friends the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Finance did, where they remained for a few hours. They were not met by Mr. Blaine, but they received a rebuff and were sent alout their business and had to come home again. During all the campaign of 1891 it was perfectly apparent to any impartial observer that the Government, while professing to desire reciprocity, were not anxious for anything of the kind. At every meeting and in every speech by every Tory orator, abuse of the United States was indulged in, and, while hollow professions were made in favour of reciprocity, every opportunity was taken to show why the people of Canada would be better off without it. The insincerity of the Government was transparent, and was apparent to every candid and close observer, and now, when they have thrown off the mask and informed us that reciprocity is not attainable, and that it is useless to make any further efforts in that direction, the joy with which they occupy that position and abandon the game they have been playing and stand up in their true colours is sufficient to show what their fcelings have been throughout that transaction. Then, we are forced to believe that the Conservatives of this country are actually and truely enemies to the arrangements of any reciprocal arrangements between this country and the United States. It is possible that they might accept the old Treaty of 1854, which admitted the natural products free of duty. But beyond that, I venture the assertion they are not prepared to go, and would not go. Dealing with this question upon the busis of any scheme of attainable reciprocity, I do not hesitate to sity, that the Government are the enemiesof any such arrangement, and are not prepared, and are not willing, and will not attempt, to secure reciprocity.

Now, that is not the case with the party upon this side of the House. We would le glad to get reciprocity in natural products, the kind of a treaty our friends opposite talked of getting when they went to Washington. Butwe know we cannot ohtain it. We know that the uniform declaration of the American (iovernment since 1866 is that they never would renew the treaty upon that basis, and that means that it is useless to talk alout getting it. We know well that to talk to the people about securing a reciprocity treaty upon the lasis of the Treaty of 1854, is merely amusing them with a false pretense. We would be clad to get reciprocity on the basis of a free admission into the United States of the natural prolucts of this country, in return for the admission of a large list of American goods scheduled as free goons; we would be glad if a treaty could be got upon that basis. That is where we part company with our frienls opposite, because they would not, in my opinion, accept a treaty upon any such lasis as I have named. We are willing to go further, and if it is not possible to obtain reciprocity short of a treaty that is absolutely unrestricted in the free admission of the products of the labour of each country, we are willing to go that far, and that is another point where we differ from those hon. geutlemen. We are actually intent upon securing a reciprocity treaty, honest in our endeavours and wishes to secure it. The Government are not, and they have played with this question, they have used it as an electioneering dodge, they used in the general election of 1891, and they have made use of it in the bye-elections of 1892; they have used the issue with great skill as politicians, there is no doubt of that. But, Sir, they have all the time deceived the people of this country, and now they stand out unmasked in their true colours as the natural enemies of reciprocity, and as guilty, during all this time, of duplicity in their position before the people of this country.

Now, there is something in these negotiations that has been concealed, 1 am convinced of that. I anl convinced that my hon. friends opposite have not dealt in sincerity and truthfully with the people of this country. I want to understand as a member of this Honse exactly what was done at Washington. I want to know whether the Government made any proposition whatever with regard to obtaining reciprocity. If they did make any proposition, then I want to know what it was. I want to know when they made that proposition-whatever it might be, if they made one-to Secretary Blaine, what his counter-proposition was, what answer he gave to that proposition. I want to know ivhether, after laying that proposition before the Secretary of State and receiving his reply, they made any molification of that proposition ; I want to know, in short, if there were any negotiations at all. want to know, if there were any negotiations, what the character of these negotiations was. We have not that in formation. I believe, Mr. Speaker, we are likely to get it. We are not likely to get it from the gentlemen who ought to take the House of Commons into their confidence before asking us to pass upon this question. I understand from the Americans papers that the State Department at Washington intend to issue their version of the affiur, and from that statement we may possibly get at the truth. But we are entitled to that statement, we are entitleal to a true statement of the negotiations, a true statement of what was done and what was not done in regard to this matter, from the Ministers themselves, anl if they withholi that information from this. House then they are trifing with the representatives of the people of this country, and they are worthy of the condemnation which the resolution of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition throws upon them in this matter, for not having taken the House into their confidence, and for not having placed before us the actual conditions of the negotiations, what they have actually done, and what they have not done.

We have heard a great deal said about loyalty. We had something said this afternoon about the sin of discriminating against England. It is very refreshing to see the care of a certain party in Canala with regard to England, to see this mighty conntry taking England under its wing. They are very careful about British interests, very loyal to those interests. In my opinion it is our business to look after our own interests. The British people do not ask us to look after their interests. They laugh at the assumption of power on our part to care for their interests. We are placed here, occupying nearly one half of this continent, to look after the resources of this country. We have our own future to make, our own prosperity to secure, we have our own progress to care for, and, Sir, we must look after our own interests and move in the light of our own interests, and in that light exclusively, if we are to succeed in the race that is set before us. All this cry about loyalty is merely a herring drawn across the trail. The object is to divert the attention of the people from the true issuc placed before them. I believe in Canada for the Canadians, I believe in promoting the interests of Canada first. England would not hesitate, and has not hesitatel, to discriminate against us if her interests required it ; and if it becomes necessary in order to promote our own interests, to secure our own progress, and add to our own prosperity-if it becomes necessary incidentally to discriminate against England, not hecause we do it as a matter of choice, lout because it is to our interest to do it, I do not hesitate to say we should take that course, and make our own interest the primary consideration.

Now, very likely we will hear a word from the Ministers, and perhaps we will not. The peculiar condition of affairs of this House, and in all Houses that have sat in this Chamber for the last twelve years, renders it quite unnecessary for the Ministers to say anything unless they choose to do so. They have but to indicate their wishes; it is not necessary to defend them, they have merely to indicate their wishes to secure the applause of their followers. This is what I complain of in regard to parliamentary government in this country, the fact that there is a slavish subservient following that does not require from the Ministry a statement as to its motives, a statement as to its conduct, that does not hold the Ministry to accountability, that allows the Ministry to govern this country by Orders in Council, and allows Parliament to abdicate its functions and serve as a mare make-weight or tail to the kite of ministerial power. It is for that reason that I hold this motion is most opportune; it is for that reason I hold that this Honse should resume its functions, should demand that the Ministry should plate in its possession all the information that is uecessary to guile this House in arriving at a just conclusion upon all pulblicaffairs. I believe that in this instance vital and important information has heen withheld from this House, and that the motion of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition is most ipportune. most proper, and is urgently cailed for under the circumstances.

(In the Committee)

Immigration-Salaries, Agents. Europe . $\mathbf{\Sigma} 3,9(n)$

Mr. MeMCLLEN, I want to know who are the agents in Europe, where they are located and what their salaries are:

Mr. CARLINA: There are five agents in Europe, Mr. Dyke. of Liverpool, salary, $\mathbf{S 2}, 100$ : Mr. diahame, of Clasgow, salary, sl.3mo : Mr. Comolly, of Dublin, salary, \$1,0MO:Mr. Merrick, of Belfast, salary, 81,0 (M), and Mr. Down, of Bristol, Stsfibiti.

Mr. Mc.MULLEN. Are the duties of immigration agents perfommed at the ottice of the High Commissioner in London or is there a sejarate officer there:

Mr. CARLING. Not that I am aware of. I am quite sure that there is no office outside of the High Commissioner's office in London, and the work is fone at his office by Mr. Colmer and the officials connected with the office.

Mr. McMULLEN. I find that Mr. Grahame, of Glasgow, has a salary of $$ 1,300$ a year and is allowed St a day besides : why are the amoments charged separately?

Mr. CARLIN(i. This allowance has been given to the agents for the last 15 years. It was done by the Govermment of Mr. Mackenzie and it has been done by the Govermment since. However, it is not the proper way to do it, and it is not intended to continue them. It is intended to revise the salaries of the agents in the old country, so as to give them a fixed salary and allow them for actual travelling expenses. That is, I believe, the intention of the head of the Department of the Interior, who will have charge of this matter in the future.

Mr. McMULLEN. Ican understand that during the Mackenzie Government it might be necessary to make this extra allowance in Cliasgow and London hecause we did not have a High Comnissioner there. We have now a High Commissioner in London with a full staff of officials, and I do not think it is necessary to pay an extra 84 a day to these agents. I ani glad to hear the Minister announce that it is intended to readjust the salaries and the travelling expenses of the agents. Could the Minister give us an idea as to what the changes are to be?

Mr. CARLINI: It is intended to change the system in the direction I have indicated.

Mr. McMCLLEN. When will that come into operation?

Mr. CARLIN(: I believe it is intended to commence the next financial year.

Mr. MoMULLEN. Do these agents certify to their own travelling expenses, or will the High Commissioner have the supervision of the different offices :

Mr. CARIIN(:. The agent in Great Britain makes his report to the High Commissioner and he has a general supervision over them. Vonchers will have to he given for the actual travelling expenses the same as is done in this comntry and the agents will have to certify to them.

Mr. IIIBSON. It would appear as if Mr. Grahame, the agent at Glasgow, has been travelling 32.) days in the year at 84 a day, and that he was also 1.: sundays away from home. leeing a good Sootchman, I know that the Scotch people do not travel on Sunday ; lut this man seems to have heen travelling 15 Sundays in addition to the 32.0 days, for which he is allowed St a day; and certainly he must have spent some of his time in filasgow. I would like to know from the Minister if he is all the time on the roal.

Mr. CARLIN(: He is not all the time on the roarl.

Br. GIBSON. If the whole of this amoment is not for travelling expenses, hat part of it for salary, the exact amount paid for salary should be put under that heading.

Mr. Mc:MLLLEF. On page B-291 I find that the total expenses of the London office amount to So26.950. 46 . Among the expenses there is a charge of Sinn. 37 for harley exhibit. Was that in connection with the shipment of barley from this country?

Mr. CARLIN(i. I suppose it is the expenses in comnection with the barley sent to the old country to lee exhibited, at the request of the High Commisioner.

Mr. McDULLEN. I notice also a charge of 3321.20 for expenses of the Doncaster show. That appears to le a large amount for one show.

Mr. CARLIN(; The Doncaster Show is the chief texhibition in England every year, and at the reguest of the High Commissioner we sent cereals from the North- West and the varions provinces to to be exhibited there. It is considered of very great importance that that should be done, and this charge represents the expenses comnected with it.

Mir. Micmullen. There is a charge of $513,639.24$ for printing 628,222 copies of the report of the delegate farmers. Wias it printed here or in England?

Mr. CARLING. The reports were made to Sir Charles Tupper and were printed in England. It was very important that they shonll be issued as soon as possible, in time for the spring immigration, and the cost of printing was much less than it would have been in this country. It was done to save time and also to save money.

Mr. Momulles. Can the hon. gentleman say whether tenders were asked for, and whether the lowess tender was accepterl?

Mr. CARLING. I understand that tenders were asked ly the High Commissioner from the principal printers in London, and that he accepted the lowest temler, and he was anthorized to have the reports printed at, the price mentioned, about $\underline{2}$ cents each.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether any report of the delegates furnished to the dovernment were suppressed. There was a rumour that two or three of these ilelegates who visited the Maritime Provinces and Who afterwards visited Ontario and the NorthWest, presented a report of a character not entirely satisfactory to the (iovermment. The report. it was rumoured. set forth the disadrantages under which the (anadimn farmer laboured, dealt very strongly upon the necessity that existed for procuring for him free access to the American market, drew certain conclusions which were puite opposite to the position ti:ken by my hon. friend and his colleagues, and expressed the opinion that there was no future for the Camalian farmer. except in the oltaining of continental free trale. If any repmer of that kind was submitted to my hon. friend anl has not heen published. it wouh be a matter of interest to this House and the comntry to know why the (iovermment ventured to suppress the report of these delegates after they hal examined the fiell.

Mr. CARLIN(: I have seen no such report ami if any report of the kind mentioned has leen made, it has been made to the High Commissioner. But I am satisfied that no such report has been made to the High Commissioner, hecause I had an interview with those delegates in Toronto, and they did not indicate to me that they were dissatistied at all with the general policy of the Government or believer that it was so necessary to the Canadian farmer to obtain trade relations with the United States. These delegates were selected by the High Commissioner with the approval of the Goverument and their reports would be made to him in England, and they will be printed by him if he considers it necessary.

Mr. CHARLTON. If any report of that kiul is in the hands of the High Commissioner, I hope my hon. friend will see that it is published, whatever may be the conclusions arrived at by these delegates, whether they may happen to tally with the policy of the Govermment or be different from that policy. The public are entitled to the opinion of these men, especially if these opinions are fommed upon actual examination of the different sections of the Dominion and into the condition of the farmers. I have it on authority that such a report is in existence, andi that the Govermment do not wish it published. If there is such a report it should not be suppressel.

Mr. CARLING. I can only say I have seen no such report and am quite sure the Government has not seen it.

Mr. CASEI. This question of these farmer delegates in their reports is rather an important one. They seem to have cost us a good deal of money, first to last, although the Public Accounts do not enable us to ascertain, without a vast amonnt of labour, how much they actually cost. Has the hon. gentleman an account of the sum total expemled on the visit of the tenant farmers?

Mr. CARIIN(:. The total expense of bringing them out here and taking them back to the old country will he about $$ 13,000$.

Mr. CASEY. The figures I have been able to get out of the Auditor General's account show an expenditure of 38,000 , yet the Minister says they cost $\$ 13,04 N$, or $\$ \mathbf{B i}, 000$ more than I have been alle to tind. I find that the charge for postage and distrihution among the lifferent agencies of England foot up altogether to over $\$ 6,000$. Then the cost of printing in England is $\$ 13,639$, all of which added together comes to about $\$ 28,000$, and adding the Sit,()(N) which the Minister gives over and above what I was able to find, that brings the total cost of the visit of these delegates and the distrihution of their report to the end of last year to $\$ 33,(\mathrm{NO}$ ). This is a very large amount and I notice some very peculiar things in that connection. Look at the item of postage. I find under the head of Lomdon ottice a charge of $\$ 1,067$ for postage on the reports of the rlelegate farmers from that office. I presume the postage would certainly not be more than a penny on each report. It is only a cent in Canada on each report, and I am sure the book post in England is no dearer, but supposing the postage on each report was a penny, this amount of $\$ 1$, atin $^{-}$would pay for the prostage of - $83,-700$ reports, whereas there were only $628,0 \times 0$ princed altogether. The account reads: "Reports of the Farmers' Delegates, $628,622, ; 313,629, \quad "$ or somewhere approximating 2 cents apiece : so that while under 630,0100 reports have leen printed, we have enough charged for postage to mail over 780,000 at a penny a piece, and if, as I lelieve is the case, book post in Englani cost but half a cent apiece, that would make postage charged on considerably orer $1,600,-$ (NO) reports. We find here in the London office more than enough charged for postage to distribute the whole of these printed reports. But we also find other charges, $\$ 2,317$ in one place, $\$ 937$ in another, $\$ 121$ in another for listributing these reports in England, so that we are charging for distribution three or four times over. We are charged Sh,000 in all for postage and distribution of these reports which it only cost $\$ 13,600$ to print. They were printed in England and under the supervision of the commissioner in the London office, and there is more than enough charged in that office for postage to distribute the whole lot. Yet, besides that, we have 54,500 charged in other places for distributing them. I lo not understant how we can have those two classes of charges. If they were mailed to individuals from the London office, there should be no further charge for distributing. Evidently there is a job of some kind somewhere, and perhaps the Minister will explain.

Mr. CARLING. I am quite sure there is no job in the distribution. They were large reports, and I do not believe you could get one of those reports sent to parts of the Empire ior a penny. The postage to Great Britain is charged by weight. We have the High Commissioner and his staff there, and I am sure the House has sufficient confidence in Sir Charles Tupper and his staff to believe that this work will be properly done. I am sure that the money has been properly expended.

Mr. CASEY. No loubt the Minister is sure, but it is clear that his attention was never called before to the distribution of these pamphlets. Ha says, with his mild benerolent smile, with thet sweet and trustful expression which no doubt expresses his personal character, with the genial confidence he has in everyborlys goorl conduct, that he is sure that it is all right, members must not expect him to know anything about it, but he is sure that it is all right, becanse we have a High Commissioner and a staff of clerks to look after it. I can only put against this confilence which he has in the absolute correctness of all the clealings of his agents in every neighbourhood, the fact that stares us in the face that it costs us half as much to distribute these pamphlets as to print them. We have a charge of $$ 1,546$ to mail them from London and we have another item of 52,317 to distribute them at Liverpool, whether by mail or by hand does not appear. I know the size of these pamphlets, and they do not weigh more than eight ounces. Even if they weighed twelve ounces, they would go for $1 d d$, and this amount would cover all that were printed, making the greatest allowance. The amount charged in London for postage would cover the distribution of the whole of them, and yet we have $$ 4, i 00$ charged at other points. I think the amonnt is too large to be allowed to slip. It is the business of the Minister to see that too much is not charged .by the High Commissioner or anybooly else. I have not been able to find the expenses of the Paris agency in the Auditor General's Report.
Mr. somervilley. It is there.
Mr. POWELI. It is incluled in the miscel. laneous items.

Mr. CASEY. Then Mr. Hector Fabre is not under the control of the Immigration Department.

Mr. CARLING. No.
Mr. PERRI. I have not seen any of these pamphlets in Prince Edward Island. It appears to me that not only is the report of these delegates mysterious, but there is something mysterious in the mission of the clelegates themselves. I saw one of them and travelled with him on the cars. He said he liked the country very well, but he appeared to le frightened. The impression made upon me was that he had instructions from some members of the Government or some officer of the Government to hold his tongue and not to give expression to his own opinions. He appeared to be hampered and not to be willing to speak especially on one particular question. It would not be fair for me to mention that question here. When we have paid hundreds of thousands of dollars of the people's money it this direction, I think we have a right to know where it has gone and what the people have received in return for it. I would like to know from the Minister how many immigrants came from London, how many came from Liverpool, how many came from Glasgow, how many came from all the other ports of Europe. We have been told what iminigrants we have received during the past ten years. Where have they gone? The Government are not evenable to keep our natural population at home. The hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron) told us that the emigration commenced in 1854, and was principally between 1854 and 1866, and he had the audacity to say that it was nearly all from Prince Edward Islame. I think when an hon. gentleman talks about something out of his own province, he should stick to the truth. but he was far from doing that. I have looked at the census retarns from Prince Elwarl Iskand since $18+8$
Mr. Casey.

Mr. DEPCTY SPEAKER. Order. We are on the question of salaries. We have already gone astray a grool deal. When we reach the item of exnenses, the hom. gentleman can say what he likes on that suliject, but we will never get through if we lo not stick to the item.

Mr. CASEX. I rise to a point of orter. I think, under salaries as well as under anything else, we are at liberty to discuss the number of immigrants we have olstained.

Mr. DEPCTY NPEAKER. I am very sorry to have to check the hon. gentleman, but we shall never get through unless we confine our attention to the item maler iliscussion. He can make his remarks on the second item after this one, as long as he pleases.

Mr. PERRI: I do not know that we will gain much by splitting hairs in this way. It is rery seldom I trouble the Honse. I want, to know from the Minister whether the reports of these farmers. delegates were distributed in Prince Edward Island!

Mr. CARLIN: The delegates reports were distributed in the old enuntry. Latst session, hy orler of the Houst, in, (on more of those reports were ordered to he printed for distribution in Cimada. Whether they have been distributed, I. do not know, because it was not done through my department. They were ordered to be printed for the use of members, by the Printing Committee. The others that were printed were ilistrihuted in the old comutry.

Mr. NOMERVILLFE. What lecame of these $50,(\mathcal{M})$ that were printed for circulation in Canada?

Mr. CARLINA. They were not printed by the deparment, nor by the authority of the department. The Agriculture Committee recommended to the Honse that $:(H)$,e(x) copies le printed in English and in French.

Mr. PERRI. The Dinister says hedon't know. who is to know?

Mr. CARLIN(i. You have just as mach right to know as I have, because it was ordered by this House, and not the department.

Mr. BOIVELL. I dare say the hon. gentleman could learn what he desires on encuiry from Mr. Botterell, of the Distribution Uffice. All parliamentary documents are listributed from that office moler the instructions of the Printing Committee. The Minister of Agriculture had nothing whatever no do with this, any more than my hon. friend from Prince Elward Island (Mr. Perry).

Mr. PERRI. We have a right to get the information from the Minister himself. He ought to have a return showing how many of these reports were sent to earlh of the provinces. I got none, and I have not heard of it single person in Prince Edward Island who has receivel them.

Mr. CARLINi: They may not have been printed yet, and therefore they may not have been circulated yet.

Mr. PERKI. The more the Minister says, the more inconsistent he appears. He says perhaps they are not printed yet. That is a strange proceeding. I am not the Minister of Agriculture, I wish I were, and I would try to give more satisfaction than the present Minister is willing to give. Perhaps he thinks Prince Edward Island is too small and too far away to receive any consideration from him. I can tell him that that little Island is a leautiful little Island: it is the lest country in the whole 1 rominion of Cananla. Perhaps the Minister of Agriculture told this sentleman not to send any papers to Prince Edward Istand for fear the people would get some information. I contend that as we have helped to pay the expenses of these farmers delegates we shouhl have some of their reports.

Mr. WATsON. I do not remember that the Agriculture (ommittee asked that $\mathbf{5 0}(0,0 \mathrm{NO}$ copies of the reports of the farmers delegates he printed for circulation in Cimada.
Mr. (ARIIN:. If the hon. gentleman will enguire he will find that the oriler was given by the Printing Committee and pitsised through this House.

Mr. WATSON. If so. I think there would have heen a rliscussion on it, because it does not seem right that we should pay for the circulation of these farmers delegates reports in our own commtry : they shouh he circulated in the old country. It is the people of the ohl comintry that we want to enlighten. What means was taken to have these circulated:
Mr. (ARLING. lou must enguire from Mr. Potterell, of the Distribution lepartment. It is not a matter that conses under my control at all. There were 230,0 (x) copies of the reports of the agricultural farm printed and distributed last year, and these delegates reports would he distriliuted in the same way.
Mr. WATsON. I agree that the farm reports ought to he printed and circulated in Canada, hut the farmers delegates reports should ise circulated in the oll country.
Mr. CARLIN(i. All those that were printed by anthority of the department were distributed in the old comntry. IVe have not distributed any in Canama, except a few copies that were sent out to members last session. They were so well thought of loy the Committee on Agriculture that they desibed $\pi, 0(0)$ more to he reprinted and distributed in Camada.

Mr. MeNULLEN. The Minister said a short time ago that there were in England five agencies. In London alone we spent last year and we have no immigration office there unless in connection with Sir Charles Tuppers office. The hon. meniler for Elgin (Mr. (asey) has drawn attention to the enormons sum that was paid for postage on those various farmers delegates pamphlets. I find in connection with emigration in London, incluling the item charged on the High Commissioner's account for postage, anl the item in connection with gencral expenses under the head of immigration, that we paid altogether 89.50 a day for postage. I would like to learn from the Minister, in the recast he intends to make of the agencies, what rerluction he expects to be able to make in the general expenses next year. We would like to know how he expects to save money umler the arrangement that he anticipates making. The reason I ask this is that the amount asked this year is the same as was asked last year and there is no provision made for a reluction.

Mr. CARLING. My hom. friem will see that the large expenditure in England by the High conmissioner:s office includes printing the farm delegates reports. the postage on these reports and the crinde luok of Canalla that was sent to Lomidon, the ilistribution of chromos and posters, ann advertising in the Eaglish press. Of course an important thing is to advertise the comntry and to let the people kurw all about our great North-West and the adrantages of ('unala as a tield for immigrants. Fiery English paper in which we advertise has writien abhut (anadia in at most favourable waty and the articles have been sent out to us. There are :27, (101) post offices in (ireat Britain and the Postmaster deneral hats heen gonel enough to permit us to hang upone of our posters in each one of these oflices free of charge. Then we distribute pamphlets with maps in all the market towns and every plate where they will attract the attention of the prople. The expenses of the farm delegates. I helieve. were alse ? pain in Landen through the High Commissioner, ats weil ats all the other matters I have nemtioned. and that is the cathere of so much expense in his oftice.

Mr. NoMCLDES. I am quite satistied that a very visorous etfint hats hem mate by the Minister anil his staff to get immigrants into the enmitry. Howerer the question I put to the hom. gentleman was. what saring he expected to effect, as there is nop provision for any reduction in the vote asked :

Mr. CARLINi: I for not kuow as there will le any great saving in Cireat Britain, and perhaps there will he more expendeal, but as I have pointed out, the change will be made in the system of paying the agents in Eagland, and perhaps a reduction will he made in that line. As the hom. gentleman is aware the inanch of immigration has leen transferreal to the Department of the Interior, which I think was very wise, because the Department of the Interior has a coinmissioner at Winmipeg. and it hats land agents and land guides, and we think that a reduction in expenses cun be made in that wiy.

Mr. McMlldiEN. I earmestly hope that the change to the Department of the Interior will have a beneticial effect. becamse, while the hon. Minister of Agriculture has mate a vigorous effiort to bring immigiants here, it is a sad consideration for us to see that they are not here now. I hope the Department of the Interior will be better able to keep them in the country. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Perry) was anxious to know where the immigrants cane from, bue that is not a matter of such sital importance as to know where they went to. $$ 4(0$, ,(K) $)$ per year is an enomons sum to expend in one office in London on immigration, and it appears to me that a very considerable reduction conld he male in the iten of $$ 10$ a day for postage.

Mr. CARLIN(i. I think no money that has been expendel has had a better result than the bringing out of the farmers' delegates. The people in the oll country look with suspicion on any lecturers we send from Canadi, as they think they have some olject in view and they will not listen to them in the same way as they will listen to persons whom they selected themselves to come out to this country. I believe that the visit of the farmers' delegates and the circulation of their reports will be the means of bringing out a large number of the best class of immigrants this year amb next year. We will not of course have that expenditure this year, but still it is necessary that the people should les supplied with literature with regard to the Dominion of Camala. The people of (ireat Britain want to know more about Canada and with a popnlation grod deal of expenditure to have literature distrihotel. I am glad to say that the litterature has been so well distributed that we are receiring benefits from it now ly having a gool class of immigrants coming to Canala this year.
Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). I think the Minister is in error in saying that it was on the recommendation of the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization that :on, onfocopies of the reprot of the farmers delegates were printed for Camadian distribution. I have the report of the committee hefore me, and it only reammends the issue of its own report : but it refers to the 13 farmers delegates who risiten Ganda, and mentions that so(10), (10) copies of their report were printed for circulation infreat Britain and Ireland, and expreses the hope that (camala will reap a valuable influs of immigrants from that circulatiom. With respect to the copies which reached us in Canala, I may say that the only copy I saw was a single set of the Eaglish edition which was sent to me. I never satw a Canalian copy, and if a Canalian elition was issued it was nerer circulated that I am aware of in the western portion of Ontario. What I want to draw the attention of the Minister to is the actual position of our Nortch and trish agencies. The sicoteh agent at chlasgow presents his twentieth report, so we must presme that he is familiar with his duties from long experience. In that report he speaks of having visited many portions of the comatry and having circulated 41 , mot copies of the report of the seoteh delegates. The actual returns from Scotland show a stealy ammal diminution, and it seems to me that it is only a question of a few years when that immigration will disappear altogether very much ats sur immigration from France has disappeared under the care of Mr. Falne. The same remark applies in it greater degree to the immigration from Ireland. Thile our agent at Belfast makes a special reference to the competition he has to meet with from other countries offering better inducements, it seems to me that it would be worth while for the Department of the Interior which is now going to take charge of immigration to obtain a special report from those agents as to the nature of the competition they met with and as to the probability of their heing ahle to continue to draw immigrants from those sources. If our agencies continue to draw immigrants at the steadily decreasing rate which we have seen them doing for the last ten years, it will only lee five orsix years before they willentirely cease to bring any immigrants from lreland or Scotland. It seems to me that there is ground for stirring up those agents to present a distinct statement of the difficulties they have to contem with, so that we may understand whether we are getting value for our money or whether it is desirable to continue those agencies in their present form.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think there is a good deal in what my hon. friend from North Wentworth (Mr. Main) says, and, for my part, I think the time has come for the Minister of Agriculture to consiler :Whether it would not be allvisable to change some of these agents. They appear to have grown insty and to be not as able to do their work as they used to be, while their charges are constantly increasing. I am glan to know that the visit of the farmers' delegates to Camada is likely to prove beneticial. At the same time I think there was altogether tor much expense connected with that visit. Apparently there has not been a proper andit of the accomits, or some of the items would not have heen allowed. For instance, Mr. G. H. Camphell, of Wimnipeg, charges $10 a day for 110 days services in acompanying the delegates, amo other expenser hesilles. He is also paid at the rate of sit a dity as a general agent. I also find that Mr. C. difftith, photographer, was paid $$ 100$, and Mr. Thomas Mills, annther photographer, sion for waiting on the famers' delegates. There are a great many such charges, which I do not think should he allowed. I would like to know whether they have Icen audited, and, if so, by whom?

Mr. (ARLINi. Mr. Camplell was selected as a good man to take charge of the clelegates. There were twelve or thirteen of them altogether, and it was very important that we should send some one who knew the gengraphy of the country well, to take them from one end of Canala to the other, and to accompany them from the time they arrived at guehec, through the different parts of the great North-West and as far as Victoria, and until they left tite country. During thai time Mr. Campleill wats mot employed as an agent and he did not receive domble pay. Since then, he has heen employed in immigration work in the western States, and he has rome grool work there. Considering that Mr. (ampleell was well adapted to the work, and that he give forsl satisfaction, nist only to the department, but to those he trok charge of, I think that the expenditure is not excessive.

Mr. (ilBnON. I quite agree with the Minister of Agriculture that the delegates sent out here will do far more effective sevice in the way of promoting immighation than the agencies which have been established for some years. I have no complaint to make of the expense comnected with the visit of those delegrates. I find that that there were thirteen of them, and that they cost $8 \bar{n} 4(1)$ each, or in all Si,011.90). As I find it in the Auditor (ieneral's Keport it is ${ }^{7},(111.90$, but the Minister says it is $\$ 13,(1) W$. What I wish to call the attention of the Ninister to is the fact that in addition to the large salary paid the Glasgow gentleman he charges Sl, (i) for distributing the pamphlets, and his salary and expenses in connection with the duties of his office amount to 83,038 . This added to the expense of ilistributing these pamphlets makes his income $\therefore 4,110$. It seems to me that the whole expense in comnection with the printing and distributing of these pamphlets is unwarrantable. The whole amount is $\$ 18,8 \% 6$ of which $\$ 13,000$ is for printing and $\$ 3,200$ for distributing. The cost of a listributing seems out of all proportion to the cost of printing.
Mr. WATSON. While we must agree with the Minister that we shonfl do all we can to bring out farmers' delegates from the old country, I am a little surprised at the statements he has made that the men we sent from here were of little or no service because the people would not listen to them. I remember the hon. gentleman stating before the Inmigration and Colonization Committee that the experiment of sending home settlers from Manitola and the North-West was one of the best means adopted by the Agriculture Department and the Canadian Pacific Railway of giving information to intending immigrants.

Mr. CARLING. Those were men who hat come from particulat parts of Scotlamel and who went back to visit their friends. The people would not believe those who went as lecturers and whom they did not know anything about, lout they had faith in the statements of their own friemls.

Mr. WATSON. I would not like to reflect on the hon. gentleman's department to the extent he has. I would not suppose that he would have sent men to the old country to whom the people would not listen. I think he wouht have selected representative men who wonlh be listened to in the ohl country.

Mr. CARLING: so we did.
Mr. WATsON. Some of these men who went to the old comntry const the Government little or nothing amil cost the Canadian Pacitic Railway little or nothing.

Mr. CARLINU. Those were not lecturers.

Mr. WATsON. Iknow some whorlidlectureindifferent places and the result was a grool many immigrants of the best class were got into Manitoba. Manitoba, for a very small expenditure has been doing goon work in connection with immigration ; and as the Govermment are abont to transfer the immigration branch toanother Minister, I hope when that change is made they may work in conjunction with the Manitoba (iovernment and the NorthWest Council. The president of the Cinardian Pacific Railway, in an interview a few days ago, referred in the most farourable terms to the work now being done ly the Manitoba (iovermment and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and it appears to me that the Dominion Government, who have the most money to spend on immigration, should work in harmony with the Local Govermment of Manitoba and the North-West Council. The hon. member for Assiniboia brought up a motion the other day which was commendable. The North-West Comcil requested that a portion of the money set aside for inmigration should be relegated to them to be spent by them. That would be a good move. The people of Manitoba and the North-West are very much interested on obtaining settlers, and I believe would spend the money much more economically than would the department here. The system should have heen adopted a couple of years ago. The system of sending clelegates from the country to act as immigration agents, giving each man three or four months' trip to his native land, should be pursued in the future. If insteal of sending men who are not at all acpuainted with the comntry, the Government would send men who have settled in the country many years and could answer questions with regari to location, soil, &c., different results would be shown.

Mr. CARLING. As the hon. gentleman has stated that no order was given by the House to print these phamplets, I would refer him to the report of the Printing Committee of 22 nd June last, recommending that $\mathbf{2 0 0}, 000$ copies of the report of 1890 ly Drofessor Saunders on the experimental farms, and lon),(60 copies of the report on dairying, and $\mathbf{5 0 , O ( N O})$ copies of the delegates' report be printed and distributed.

Mr. sombrville. I remember the matter being up for discussion in the Printing Committee, but do not remember that the recommendation made hy the Agriculture Committee was alopted. However, if that order was adopten, as no loubt it was, it has never been acted upon, because we have never been put in possession of those delegate famers' reports.
Mr. CARLING. They are not printed yet.
Mr. Somerville. I think the House had hetter set aside that order now, because I cannot see what lenefit it will he for the people of the older provinces to have these pamphlets circulated. The hon. member for Marquette has said that this tavernment ought to act in concert with Manitola and the North-West. I think if it were possible that an understanding could lee come to by the Local (iovermments of the west and the Dominion (iovernment on the subject of immigration, it would be a good thing for the country in general, because we find that the (iovernment of Manitoba and the Government of the North. West send men down to Ontario to lecture about the North-West and Manitoba and to induce the settlers of Ontario, and no doubt of other provinces, to leave their native provinces and go out to the west. That is not going to lenefit the country. It is only the transfer of a man from one province to another. and loes not add to the wealth of the country. I think the immigration should come from the mother country and other countries, but this system is only an attempt to remove people from one province to another. That was the contention which was put forward by a umber of the members of the Printing Committee when it was proposed to have 50,000 copies of these reports of the farmers' delegates printed, because we could not see that any benefit could result from inducing the farmers of the older provinces and their sons to sell out and go to the newer provinces. I think it would be well for the Government to come to some arrangement with the Provincial Governments in the west. I an glad to see that a new order of aftairs has been instituted with reference to this immigration literature. It used to be the fashion to print and send out into Canada thousands of pamphlets, but I am glad to see that has been stopped. It is of no benefit to the older provinces, and we should circulate such literature in foreign countrics and in the mother country. I should like to know if the system of granting bonuses to immigrants is to be continued. I see that last year $\leqslant 11,179$ was paid in bonuses to adults and children coming into this country. Some years ago the Government pledged itself not to pay any more money in this way, but it still keeps on doing it. The matter was enquired into very carefully by a commission in the Province of Ontario two years ago, and the opinion which was given by most of the men competent to offer one was that it was unt conducive to the interests of the country that the system of bringing pauper children into Canada should be continned. However, I see that large sums of money are still paid for that purpose. It is no benefit to Canada to have those pauper children come here. The young people of this country cannot find employment. The sons of mur own people are driven out of the country, because they camnot find employment here, and they have to go to the States, because you are bringing in these pauper children to take away the bread and the occupation of the sons of Canadian parents, and they displace so many native-born Canadians who are thus driven across the border to the United States. I do not see that this is of any benefit to the country, and, as my hon. friend from Essex says, they are not as good stock. I see also that large sums of money have leen paid for advertising in newspapers. On page B-219 of the Auditor (ieneral's Report, I see that $S(0)$ was paid for a descriptive article on the amiversary of the Empire. I suppose that is the Toronto Empiriv. I should like to know what good a descriptive article in the Toronto Empire would do in regard to immigration. How was it going to bring foreign immigrants to this comntry" The Empire does not circulate largely in Europe or in Great Britain, and why should the Govermment pay $\Xi(2)$ to the Toronto Eimpire for a descriptive article: It does not even say whether the article was in reference to immigration or not. I think it is clear that this was simply a gift to the organ of the Government. Then there is the Brandon Mail, $24,($ (1) $)$ copies, $\$ 700$. What was done with that?
Mr. CARIING. Those were distributed in the western Ntates. We had agents in Dakota, enleavouring to induce Canadians who had gone there to come back to Manitoba, and we had the post ottice address of the parties living in Dakota, and the Brandon Mail was sent to each of these parties hy poist during the summer of 1890 .

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I suppose the same was done with the Sremimaricu-Canadian, 2i, (x) copies, $57 \pi$. I suppose that could not have been sent to Dakota?
Mr. Carling. No, that was sent to Scandinavia, and some were sent to leland.

Mr. someriolle. I see that the Westrow World received $$ 3(k)$ for aivertising, and 60 copies were purchased. Where is that paper published "
Mr. CaRLING. In Wimipeg.
Mr. somerville. Where was that circulated:
Mr. CARLING. In different agencies in Canada and in (ireat Britain. It is considered a very good paper, giving an illustrated description of the country, aml it was thought well to distribute it.
Mi. SOMERVILLE. Then we have the Winnipeg Colomist and 200 almanacs. Really the expenditure in that line seems to have been extravagant, and I do not think it results in any great benefit to immigration to advertise in that way.

Mr. CARLING. You must advertise.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Yes, but not in that way. I do not think that brings any direct benefit to the country at all. A question was asked about 2,100 copies of the Dominion Illustrated which were obtained for distribution for immigration purposes. The answer was that they were purchased at $$ 2,000$ and were circulated for the purpose of inducing immigration to this country. I would like the Minister to explain in what way he expects a publication of this kind will help immigration. It is an illustrated newspaper published by a company that became bankrupt, and the stock fell into the hands of a gentleman in thecity of Montreal. He had a large number of old copies of the Dominion Illustrated on hand, and got rid of them by selling to the Government. Nodoubt heexercised all the influence he had with the Government to induce them to tay these oll copies of a newspaper that, perhaps, did not have ten lines in six months referring in any way to immigration. I want so know what induced the Minister to buy these illustrated newspapers, where they were circulated, and how does he know that they were circulated?

Mr. CARLING: The book was not an ohl one. I dare say the hon. gentleman has seen it. It wasa volume of six months of the Dominion. Iilustrated, containg some $3(0)$ pages. It is a look that anyone would be glad to consult who wanted to ascertain the resources of Canada. The actual cost of the paper of the book when it was printed would be something like 52.75 or $$ 3$. We consulted with our agents in the old country and with the Canadian Pacific Railway people, and we bought the 2, (H0 hooks at $$ 1$ each, which was alout onethird their original cost. They were to be distributed in all parts of the United Kingelom, in all public places or resorts, in reading rooms and hotels; the most important points were selected. I believe the circulation of that book will result in great good to the country.

Mr. somertille. It is cheap enough, but the Minister will remember that that volume was made up of the weekly publications of an illustrated newspaper. When it was published there was no intention on the part of the publisher that it was to le used as immigration literature.

Mr. CARLIN(: When the book was purchased and bound they introduced a number of pages of introductory remarks, giving a description of Canada, and its adrantages as a field for immigration. That was added to the book before it was taken over.
Sir RICHAR1bCARTWRIGHT. Can the hon. gentleman furnish us with a sample:
Mr. CARLIN:. I shall be glad to lay one on the Table to-morrow.
Mr. SOMERVILLE. I camot see that this expenditure can be justitied, because, although the look is cheap at $$ 1$ a volume, still it had no reference to immigration matters, except the introduction the Minister speaks of, and that introduction was placed there for the purpose of selling this old stock that was of no gool to anybody. It lelonged to a bankrupt concern, and they appealed to the Dominion Government to help them in their distress, and the Government hought out the whole stock, a dead stock that could not have been sold for 10 cents each.
Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Who was the party in Montreal :

Mr. somerville. I believe I am correct in stating that Mr. Richard White, of the Montreal Gazette, was the gentleman who secured the money.
Mr. Carling. He may have been interested in it. It was from the lithographing company they were purchased.

Mr. somerville. I understand Mr. White is largely interested.

Mr. CARLING. Very likely.
Mr. SOMERYILLE. I think there can le no justification of the expenditure.

Mr. WATSON. I have a copy of the report of the Immigration and Colonization Committee of 1891, and I fail to find where any recommendation was made by that committee to print any number of the farmers' delegates reports.

Mr. FOSTER. That was done by the Printing Committee.

Mr. Watson. I think the Minister of Agriculture informs us that was recommended by the Immigration and Colonization Committee.

Mr. stevenson. No, the Printing Committee-
Mr. WATsON. I do not think the Printing Committee would undertake to publish any edition of an immigration pamphlet for circulation in the old country or Canada, without a recommembation of the Agriculture Committee. The only recommendation I find for printing any additional number of any report is the report I have in my hent, and it recommends the publishing of $\overline{7}$, (OX) extra copies. I find no recommendation for the publication by the Immigration and Colonization Committee of any of these farmers' delegates reports. I think if such a matter had been mentioned in that committee they would have objected to any such publication. In former years, in delating this distribution of literature, I have taken exception to the principle adopted by the Agriculture Committee of giving members of Parlianent these documents by the thousand for circulation in Canada. They are needed for circulation in the old country, net in this. Pamphlets were got up describing different portions of Canada, but they were not for circulation in Canada at all. If immigration pauphlets are to be published, they should not be distributed in Canada but in the old country. If these pamphlets have been printed, but not yet distributed, I think they should be sent to the old country and distributed there.
Mr. FOSTER. I find that the Committee on Agriculture recommended that a Canadian edition of the report of the tenant farmers' delegates he printed, and then the Printing Committee reported to the House in fayour of printing $\mathbf{j 0}$,(M).
Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). It is plain it was not consolidated in that report of the committee. It must have been done in some other form on some other occasion, because it forms no part of that report.
Mr. FOSTER. These are the two reports which were presented to the House, and which appear in the Votes and Proceedings, the report of the Departuent of Agriculture and the report of the Printing Committee.
Mr. ARMSTRONG. I do not agree with my hon. friend from North Brant (Mr. Somerville) in his estimate of the value of the publication known as the Jominion Illustraterl. He seenis to think it is of no use as an immigrant agency. Now, I hold in my hand a copy of it, and any gentleman who will look through it will find it is adnirably adapted to be an immigration pamphlet. First of all we have a cut -it is not a very bright one, but still it is highly creditable to a new country like Canada -ii is called " The Fair Alsatian." You know it is said, Mr. Speaker, that a thing of leanty is a joy for ever, and if you give an immigrant something of that sort that he can look at after his hours of toil, it must be a great aldantage to him. The next article is on what is called "Quakerism." You know we have an estimable section of people in western Camada, and I suppose in other parts of the Dominion, callen Quakers or Friends, and this magazine gives them a good character, and so far it is correct. We have nextan article on the Laturier Banquet. We heard a good deal about it the other day, that the leader of the Opposition was invited to a banguet in Boston and he committed the unpardonable offence of taking his mutton without the old Hag flying over him. The worst of it is that hom. gentleman was born with a great deal of the instincts of a gentleman, and as his character and training has been such as to develop these traits of a gentleman, it seems he did what any gentleman would do when invited to take dinner with an honourable company, and instead of looking around into every corner of the dining room to see that all was correct, he sat down like it gentleman and took what was set before him. The Jingo idea is, that hefore a loyal Canadian takes his dimer, he ought to inspect every comer of the dining rown to see that every thing is in accordance with the ideas of jingoism. Howerer, the magazine comes to the conclusion that this is a matter of opinion, and that on the whole, as it is a kind of hollow ceremony, that it is just as weil honoured in the breach as in the ohservance, and so far we agree with it. Then we have a whole column of literary and personal notices, telling about the Hon. A. J. Balfour being elected Chancellor of Edinburgh University, and notices of several literary men, and two or three literary papers, all tending in the direction of encouraging immigration. Then, Sir, we have a woonlent of the "Brigale staff of Niagara Camp, Ontario, October, 1sol." It must he encouraging to the people who come into this country to know that we have brave, handsome men to defend them. Then we have a little bragging about "Our engravings." It is well to have a good opinion of ourselves and the Domimion IIInstrated has cultivated that good opinion of itself. Then, sir, we have an article on fruit culture in Australia telling the sort of fruits that can bee grown there to perfection, and next an article on "High-toned joarnalism." All these things are intended to set forth the adrantages of Canada as a home for the immigrant. Then we have another article which makes out that American farmers are 50 years behind the times, and this is circulated in the old country as an inducement for these people to come out here and enlighten the poor Americans. Next we have a cut of "Chatauqua on the Lakes." What a splendid thing it must he for the immigrant when he goes to the back wools or out on the prairie to know that when he wants to cultivate his intellectual faculties there is such a beautiful place as Chatauqua on the Lakes.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. It is in the Unitel States.
Mr. ARMSTRONG. Certainly. Then there is a little piece of a serial article entitled "Out West, No. 4." It is written by a Mr. John McLean, and I see that it tells principally of the hardships that the Indian women have to undergo. It is intended no doult to encourage the wives and daughters of our immigrants who settle out in the west amidst these hardships, that they will always have the consolation of knowing that no matter how great their hardships are they are not quite equal to the sufferings of the Iudian women. Then, we come to "The re-interment ceremony at Lundy's Lane on the 1ith October, 1891."
Mr. FOSTER. That is patriotic.
Mr. ARMSTRON(. Certainly it is, and it must be an immense inducement to inmigrants to think that if they give their lives in the service of their adopted country, that a hundred years afterwards they will be decently re-interred. Then we have "Cricket written by an umpire who is well qualified to speak" and he gives a description of cricket as it is played in Great Britain and Ireland. I think you will agree with me, Mr. Chairman, that it is a grame thing for the immigrant to know how to play cricket. The next is a cut of "St. James" Methodist Cinurch, Montreal, rear view." We come to the serial story now, "The Romance of Crime. " I do not want to read it to the Honse. but when it comes to the most interesting part, and when you want to hear more about it it says "to be continued." The next thing is something about our own comtry. It is "Niagara Canon Falls, 15 miles west of Victoria, B.C., in winter," anl it has ice enough aromed it to last all summer. The next is "Part III, New Brunswick Literary Men." We are glad to know that we have a number of literary men in New Brunswick, and I to not know whether the Minister of Finance is amongst them or not, but if he is not he deserves to le. Then we have a group of gumer's who fave been out hunting and we have "The red and hlue pencil" which are notes by the editor and no word about our new country at all. Then we have, most important of all, it history of the Schuyler family of Allany, New York, United States, for the last two or three hundred years, with portraits of these cminent men who livel a hundred years ago, and the very house they lived in is given, aml then we have another chapter on sports and pastimes. It seems that on Thanksgiving Day last fall, there were two games of ball plaved in the city of Ottawa, and you can see here the very positions the men stood in.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Anything about fashions:
Mr. ARMSTRONG. Nothing about fashions; they must have forgotten that. I have been realing this pullication during the last year and every number of it contains a conversation leetween a reporter and in Indian chief callell the Sagamore, and I will tell you what the Sagamore talked about. It seems that there had been an eclipse of the moon a few days before, and the reporter went to find out what the wise old Sagamore thought of it. The Sagamore thought awhile, and then he said that the moon was a long distance from the earth aud that it took a long time for news to travel there, but that the revelations at Ottawa and Quebec had made the man in the noon so sick that it caused the eclipse. So far as the revelations at Quebec are concerned, I never paid much attention to them. I looked upon them as a domestic matter which the people of Quelec could settle for themselves, and in which any interference from other provinces would be a piece of gratuitous impertinence. But with regard to the revelations at Ottawa, I ami sery much of the same opinion as the Sagamore. So that, on the whole, I think my hon. friend from North Brant

Mr. Armstrong.
(Mr. Somerville) should take back what he said and apologise, for I think after a careful survey of the situation he must come to the conclusion that though as a medns of rewarding a hungry supporter it may le considered rather roundahout and clumsy, still as an immigration agency it is a howling success. I think the hon. gentleman should bear in mind that it is the first duty of the Government to feed their hungry supporters, and all this talk about using up the funds of the poor people of the country is nothing at all compared to that great and important object of the Government, supporting their hungry surpporters, all of course for the honour and glory of the old flag.

Mr. FOSTER. I desire to call the hon. gentle. man's attention to the fact that he has transgressed a law which is held to be very sacred and very dear on his side of the House: he has beenquoting from a pultic docmment and has not laid it on the Table.

Mr. sombrville. After this exhibition of the merits of the publication in question, I think the Minister ought to give us some explanation of how he came to buy these broks. I think this Honse anl the comutry are entitlel to know what pressure was brought to bear on the covermment to invest this s, (x) in a publication of this character. which could have no influence whaterer in induring immigrants to come to this comntry.

Mr. Mo.vullen. If the hom. Minister is not soning to answer the question put by the hon. memher for North Brant, 1 have a question to ask with regaid to Mr. Dyke, the agent at Liverpool. I notice that he is allowed st a day for 36.7 days for travelling expenses, and $$ 1,400$ or $$ 1$, . $0(0)$ a year for salary, and that he also charges s! for travelling in Canala. Why was he paid for travelling in Canarlit:

Mr. CARLINi: He travelled to the NorthWest and British Columbia in comnection with immigration matters, and I think that the si a day was not expected to cover travelling in the North-West. That is an extra amount allowed for extra travelling.

Mr. MoMCLLEN. Was he paid extra for traselling in Canada and did he draw the old comntry allowance at the same time?

Mr. CARLINE. I believe he did. I believe he was requested hy Sir Charles Tupper to come out to Canada and visit the North-IV est and British Columbia and to inform himself as to the country, so as to le in a better position to give information to those intending to come to Canadia.

Mr. McMULLEN. It is very singular that he should be allowed travelling expenses in Canada in allition to the sta day. Was he with the farmer delegates or alone?

Mr. CARLING. He was not with the farmer delegates.

Mr. somertille. I would like the Minister of Agriculture to explain what inducements were held out to him to buy these illustrated journals. Did he examine the work before he bought it?

Mr. CARIING. Yes; I have a specimen book which I will be glad to lay on the Table.

Mr. somerville. I understand this publication is no longer in existence and that the publishers became bankrupt. Were these old copies purchased after the newspaper hecame bankrupt?

Mr. BOWELL. It is not dead.
Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Why was this work selected at all? What pressure was brought to bear on the Minister, and to whom were the copies given "
Mr. CARLING. I have already explained to the House that these copies were distributed to all the agencies and the realing rooms and public honses and other places of public: resort by the Camadian Pacific Railway, who undertook to iistribute them withont any expense to the fovernment.

Mr. Paternon (brant). What wid the Minister hope to accomplish ly it?

Mr. CARLIN: There is an introdnction in this book with regarl to (Gmada, siving a descrip)tion of the country, and then we had illustrations of parts of Camada and the harrests in the NorthWest. There were also illustrations of seenes in British Colmbia, Ontario and the Martime Prosinces.

Mr. SOMEPVIILE: I miterstome the homgentleman to say this was a half year's newspaper bouml up in one volume.
Mr. CARLIN: Each volume was six months and hat some tion pages.

Mr. somervilie. Ior I milerstand the hon. gentleman to say that these volmues were all for the sume halt year :

Mr. CabliNi. No.
Mr. SOMERIILLE. Then they were the aceumulated stock in the oftice from year to year which had not heen sold.

Mr. CARLINi. They were for two or three years, from 1889 to $18: 1$.
Mr. sombRVIl.LE. They were simply the overplus of stock om ham at the time.

Mr. CARLIN: They had a large number left, some $1, \pi(M)$ and 1 , han know what they have done with these.
Mr. LANDERKIN. Have you secured the balance?
Mr. PATERNON (Brant). What portion of immigration matter was in the book:
Mr. CARLING. Four pages or twelve columas.
Mr. somerville: Was this publication not bound when purchased?
Mr. CAPLIN(i. No, the arrangement was that the introluction shonli be bound up with the book. The (iovernment had nothing to do but pay a dollar and they had a volume fully lound.

Immigration Expenses........... $$ 150,000$

Sir RICHARI) CARTWRIGHT. I understand this department has been transferred to the Interior, and I would ask the Minister of the Interior to explain this item.
Mr. DEWUNEY. I have not yet leen able to give much consideration to the subject. The Immigration Department was only transferred to me a week or two ago and $I$ have not leen able to make myself sutficiently aequainted with its workings to express an opinion as to the changes I may make, and I do not think it will be proper to make that amouncement now. I may say, however, with regard to the agencies in the old country conceming which an hon. gentleman said that enquiry should be marle, that I have given instructions, and an investigation is now being made into the amount of work done by those agencies and their general management. As soon as $I$ receive the reports, I shall be able to conclude whether it will be adrisable tomake any changes in that respect or not. A certain amonnt of this expenditure of $\$ 150,(100)$ has been paid for the farmers delegates, and a certain sum I believe has been paid for bonuses given to settlers who came ont from Europe and took up land in the North. West. It is proposed to utilize a part of that money, and it may be that a great deal will have to be used for that purpose in the future. It will depend upon the amount of immigration we get from the old country. Of course it is pretty well unlerstood, I think, that the object of the transfer from the Department of Agriculture to the Deparment of the Interior is that, as the Department of the Interior has the control of the lands and almost the first thing it settler does is to go to the land office ame enguire as to the lames, a siaving might be effecterl in this way, and we might be saved the expense of some of our immigration agents in the west and might work this matter almost entirely from our land ottices. I am sure we shall be able to do goond service to the immigrants from those ottices and will he able to send men from them to act as land guides and to do goon service to these immigrants, hetter service that they have hitherto received. Of course this question of immigration is very large. but when there is only $\$ 150,000$ to lee spent in the work, it dwimilles down to a very small affair. I think every means should he taken to make every dollar go as far as possible, amd in the interest of immigration proper. There is a difference of opinion in regard to the value of literature, in regard to sending lecturers, and in regard even to semling returned men. I agree to a great extent with the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson) in what he said as to the returned men, if the proper men are selecten. There may have been instances where men have been sent to the ohd country who have not brought about the results anticipated, but I know a great number who have cone there and have done a great atmount of good. I think where good men are selecterl, who have leen for some years in gur country and have prospered, they can do gool work by going among the men among whom they were brought up, and by inducing their frients to come out and join them in this country. I think also a great deal can be done in inducing our prosperous settlers to correspond with their friends at home. I think one letter from a thriving settler here to his friends in the old country will do more good than any lecturers or pamphlets or even returned men, because, when a letter of that kind gets into a small community, it becomes the talk of the village for days and weeks and even months. I think, speaking gencrally, the tide has turned to some extent in our direction. The colonies generally are now drawing in their horns in regard to immigration. In Queensland they stopped giving assisted passages in February last. In Western Australia the same thing was done except in regard to mechanics, and the assistance given to them is on a very small scale. They are reduced passages hut not free. In Cape Colony and in Natal they have done the same thing. In Natal, they are only giving assisted passages to mechanics and female servants. In the States, we know they are enforcing very strict regulations in regard to immigration. The Argentine has been a failure, and I think people are returning from that country rather than going to it. So I think we should anticipate and shall have a much more extended immigration into this country in future than we have had in the past. The hon. gentleman asked me what I proposed to do with the $S 1 \pi(1)(0 n)$. It will be expended virtually, I fancy, for the next year as it has heen in the past. I agree with what the hon. member for Marguette (Mr. Watson) says as to joining hamls with Manitoba and the North. West in regard to immigration, and I do not see why we should not join with all the provinces. I think in 187t there was an arrangement made with all the provinces, and they agreed to take a share of all the burdens of immigration, but 1 an not sure whether that was carried out in its entirety or not. Manitoba has rlone her share in a certain class of work by senting delegates to the older provinces and inducing many to go to the NorthWest, but this is a kind of immigration which I do not think we as a Dominion should take part in. I think the money shonll be almost entirely spent in inducing immigration from foreign countries.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Ioes the Minister of Agriculture intend to continue to give these assisted passages: I see that last year $$ 2,960$ was expended on assisted passages, and 84,725 as bonuses to adults at Sis a head, or the large sum of $$$ the grant to the Women's Protective Nociety of Montreal of Sl,000.

Mr. CARIIN(: There has been no assistance given tro immigrants in the way of assisted passages since 1888. That amount was a disputed account with the Beaver Line, and was contracted prior to that time. A reduction was made of some $\mathbf{z} 2(0)$ or s300, but no assisted passages have been given since 1888.

Mr. NOMFRVILLE. The item is put in the Auditor General's Report withont any date, so I could not he aware to what it referied. Is the bonus to idults and children to be continued?

Mr. DEWDNES. The hon. gentleman will excuse me giving him an answer in regard to that because, until he drew my attention to it, I was not aware whether that was given or not.

Mr. CARLING. The $$ 5$ is given to shipping agents on the continent. It has bein done for some years. If an agent sends out an immigrant to Manitoba, he is allowed sis on the certificate of the agent at Wimipeg that the immigrant arrived. It is the only way we have on the continent of advertising. We are not allowed to have an agent there, we are not allowed to arlvertise. We have the shipping agents and booking agents to whom we offer an inilucement to send out immigrants, and on their arrival in the North. West we have paid them a bonus of 85.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Is not that likely to induce an inferior class of immigrants? The shipping agents, as long as they ship a man and receive their sis for him, do not care what class of a man their he is.

Mr. Dewdney.

Mr. CARLING. The class of people that cone out are a goorl class of people. There may be occasionally an inferior man.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. As to the bomuses paid for children brought into the country, do you intenul to continue that system?

Mr. CARLING. I am not prepared to say whether we shall continue the system. Altogether it has been satisfactory. It has been said that these were pauper children which have been sent out by the Local Govermment loards. They really were not pauper children. Our agents visit the children every year in different parts of the 1 Heminion : and their reports are very good. Not a per cent of the children turned out henl. We have been giving $$ 2$ per head for the children, of whom $1,3(N)$ arrivel last year. The reports we have from our agents are very satisfactory as to the conduct of those children.

Mr. NOMERVILLE. Is it adrisable to continue this system when the fact is the young people now in our country cannot get employment? We are bringing these people in to take away the work from our own young people.

Mr. CARLING. We have reports from our agents in Ontario that the farmers camot get men to work on their farms. We have applications from 'Toronto, London and Hamilton, saying how many people they can place on farms, and that they cannot get a sufficient number to do their work. The ages of the children range from five to eighteen.

Mr. GIBSON. I observe that $$ 385$ were paid to the steamship companies to induce immigrants to leave France and come out here: I want to know what Mr. Fabre is for, if he is not to induce impigrants to come out to this country.

Mr. CARLING. I have explained that the steamboat looking agents are distributed in every little village and tow'n in France and the other comntries of the continent. That is the only way we have of reaching paople who desire to come out to this country. If the agent is against us and will advise people not to come to our country, it will be to our disadvantage. It has been strongly urged by the High Commissioner that that is the best way we can take to induce people to come to this country. We have allowed $8 \bar{s}$ to the booking agent for every man that he sends to Manitoba, on the certificate of the agent that he has arrived there.

Mr. (IIBSON. Both these items were paid to the city of Paris, where Mr. Fabre lives. I would like to know what use he is to this country for the 34,000 we pay him.

Mr. CARLING. I suppose we do the same with him as with Sir Charles Tupper. The money is paid hy Sir Charles Tupper to the steamboat agent, and all we do is to get a certificate from our agent that the party bringing with him a certificate of the booking agent has arrived, and then the money is paid.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I understand the department has adopted the policy of giving a bonus both to the agent and to the settler, $$ 10$ per head to every settler settling upon land west of Ontario, and $$ 5$ to every child over 12 years of age.

Mr. CARLING. The hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibson) was speaking about the \$5 that is paid to immigrants who come from the continent. Last year the Govermment alopted the policy of allowing ${ }^{\text {sis }}$ to the booking agents in Great Britain in the same way that we have done on the continent, on condition that the immigrant, on arriving in the North-West, took up lani. In addition to that, we paid? $\leqslant 10$ to the head of each family, and 25) to each member of the fanily over 12 years of age.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would like to ask the Minister what principle guides him? I see in the report of Sir Charles Tupper that:
"Wide publicity, was given to the bonuses which the Government, in conjunction with the transportation companies, offer to persons settling upon dand. no matter to whom it belonged, in Manitoba, the North-West Territories and British Columbia."
Now, is that what is done? If an inmigrant comes out, 3 is given to the agent who sends him here. If he goes up into the North-West aml settles upon a farm, he gets $$ 10$, and eath of his children over 10 years of age gets S. If that is done in the Province of British Colmmbia, also, where they have their own lands, why is it not applied to the other provinces as well: Farms are being abandoned in Ontario; why should not these inmigrants be allowed to settle upon them:

Mr. CARLING. There are mol Crown lands in Ontario for immigrants.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). They go out to British Columbia and settle upon lanis " no matter to whom they belong." There is land in Ontario belonging to some one.

Mr. CARLING. It has not been given to parties who settled on 160 acres of laml. It has been given to parties whu took up homesteads and became actual settlers. So far they have not availed themselves of the offer to a large extent, but I expect this year that when the offer is better known in Great Britain, a very much lariger number will avail themselves of the inducements we offer them.

Mr. Paterson (Brant). Sir Charles Tupper, in his report, says :

[^72]According to that interpretation, Sir Charles Tupper has published that it is the policy of the Government that any immigrants coming into Manitoba or the North-West or British Columbia and purchasing land no matter whether it belong to the Canadian Pacific Railway or whether it iss an improved farm, will get the bonus. The Canadian Pacific Railway have had large grants of land here, and at the time there was such extraor: dinary privileges given to them we were told by the leader of the House and his confreres that it would relieve us of a large amount of expenditure in connection with inimigration, and that the company would become the great immigrant agents of the Dominion. If the bonus applies to immigrants taking ap improved land, why should it not apply to Nova Scotia, Quebec, Ontario and Prince Edward lslaml \% I do not know what precantion is taken to ensure that the immigrants will remain when they get here. The report of the Minister of Agriculture says that the policy of granting a bonus to immigrants is continued on the certificate of the Dominions lands agent that the settler has taken up the land. According to that the Dominion lands agent is to certify hefore this money is paid. Will he certify with regard to lams that do not lielong to the lominion at all? Suppose an immigrant purchases a farm which has heen cleared and improven, and wishes to remain on it, will the certificate of the Dominion lands agent entitle him to the money?

Mr. CARLIN(i. It is understood that the land shall he wild land that has not been taken up before. Whether the land helongs to a railway company or to the Dominion, so long as it is wild land, a bond file settler coming here with his family and remaining will get the bonus. The object is to get the people into the country and it iones not matter what lams they settle on.

Mr. PATERNON (Brant). If an immigrant goes to British Columbia and buys an improved farm from another farmer, is he entitled to this bonus:

Mr. CARLING. I lonot think so. It is understood that he must become a settler of moccupied lands, but of course we have had no case of that kiml.

Mr. PATERNON (Prant). It is a matter that should be known, because Sir Charles Tupper has held out that imfacement to the immigrants in his report.

Mr. (ARLIN(i. The object is to get immigrants into the country and we pay the bonns when they settle on any wild land whether it belongs to the Dominion of to the railway companies.

Mr. DEWINNEY. I certainly think that the pararaph from Sir Charles Tupper's report, as read ly the hon. member from Brant (Mr. Paterson), is capable of the interpretation he has putupon it. I may state that all these payments made to immigrants have leen made through the land commissioner at Wimnipeg, and I feel quite sure that if he had been asked to pay a bonus to a settler who had taken up an improved farm he would have refused to do it. My impression is that no honus would be paid to any new settler until he has settled on wild land. Now that the matter has heen brought to the attention of the Government it is well worthy of enquiry. and I shall make very early enquiries from the land commissioner in that regard.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think it would be well to call attention to that, because, if Sir Charles Tupper has given publicity to the fact and has given people to understand that they would be entitled to a bonus no matter where they might settle, the Government might be liable to lie charged with a breach of faith.

Mr. WATSON. What length of time is a settler supposed to occupy this land previous to receiving the bonus?

Mr. DEIVDNEY. Six months, I think.
Mr. WATSON. What guarantee is furnished that the settler is going to remain in the country before the shipping agent receives his 85 ?

Mr. Paterson (Brant).

Mr. CARLIN(: We do not pay the shipping agent until the settler has actually taken up land. The shipping agents complain of that and think they ought to be paid the bonus the moment the immigrant arrives in Wimnipeg, but we have refused to do so.

Mr. WATsON. I think that is a very wise provision, because one can very easily understand that the Canadian Pacific Railway in competition with the American roals might offer inducements for settlersior Dakota or :limnesota to go around hy Wimnipeg or St. Jaul, and unless some precantion is taken a large number of the immigrants for the States might receive this bonus as being immigrants for canala.

Mr. GiPsion. These continental steamboat agents are reported to have sent out 961 persons, and the Minister tells us that 515 foc the head of a family, and $\Sigma_{-i}^{-} . \overline{50}$ for each alult member of a family, is pail to actual settlers. I find that only sinio was paid to actual settlers, and assuming that to have heen paid to a family cousisting of at man, his wife and two children, it means that 48 settlers were obtained in return for these bomuses. How does the hon. Minister explain the diserepancy between the 061 persons sent out and only 48 who became settlers:

Mr. CARLIN(i. We do not exact from the steamboat agents on the continent the same conditions that we do from the steamboat agents in (ireat Britain. When our agent at Winnipeg certifies to the High Commissioner in Fugland that an immigrant from the continent has arrived there, the shipping agent is paid the Si: ; but in the case of the agents in Great Britain we insist that the immigrants sent out by them shall become actual settlers before they are paid the bomus.

Mr. GiASON. What is the use of encouraging these continental settlers to come out if they do not settle:

Mr. CAPLIN(: When our agents certify that they have arrived in Manitola, the amome is paid.

Mr. Watson. I suppose British Columbia is treated the same as Manitolas?

Mr. CARLING: Ies.
Mr. IVATson. Then it appears to me that this is only a bonus of sis for a large number of people who come from the old country to travel by the Canarlian Pacific Railway, because it is well known that a great many settlers go to British Columbia over the Canadian Pacific Railway on their way to Washington Territory:

Mr. CARLIN(x. We have to run that risk. But the bonus is only paid to agents on the continent for advertising the comntry:

Mr. WaTSON. I think there is a great risk run, because the census shows that the people have not remained in the country, though we have been charged with the cost of bringing them in. I had hoped to hear the Minister of the Interior say that he intended to revolutionize the whole immigration system, which, in the past, has been a failure. It appears that Mr. Dyke had actually to come out last year to see the country to which he has been advising the people to come for years past. I think that a man, knowing no more of our country than Mr. Dyke does, is not a suitable person to be an immigration agent, because he is not able to give the information which intending immigrants require. We ought to have a man there well acguainted with the country, who would ise able to give everybody enquiring gool practical information, so that they would know what to ex pect when they come. The Manitoba Government has such an agent in the old country in the person of Mr. McMillan, and from what I learn from the othicers of the (iovermment as well as from the Canadian Pacitic Railway otficials, the work Mr. Me Millan indivilually is doing amounts to more then that of any agent that either the Dominion Government or the Camalian Pactitic Pailway have in their cmiploy.
Mr. CARLIN: He gets the admatage of all that we have done.
Mr. WATsON. Amd he gets the adrantage of all his own experience as a settler in Manitoha, and I believe that is the reason of his success. He has hrought out a great many immigrants of the very lest class. I hope that the Minister of the Interior will revolutionize the whole system, and that he will phace agents in the ohd country who will be ahle to give people such information as will indace a class of settlers to come here who will remain in the country after they come. I do not oljject to the expentiture of money for bringing immigrants to our North-West. We have to get that country settled. and in order to do that we must spend money. But we must have the right kind of setthets, and they can only be selected by men who have a thonongh knowledee of the country.
Mr. DALI. The hom. gentleman is entirely mistaken in believing that Mr. Dyke is unacquaintal with Manitola and the North-West. Mr. Dyk knows more of it than the hon. gentleman dies, because he was there before the hon. gentleman was and has travelled over every foot of it. The year hefore last, when he cane out, he did so conly to angment the information which he had he: fore. I had the pleasure of meeting him on that ocasion, and although I have lived in the country for eleven years, the information he gave me about it was simply surprising. He travelled over every foot of Manitola, the North-West and British Columbia, and it was to inform himself on particular portions of the North-West which he hall not visited previously that he came out. In reference to Mr. McMillan, the hon. Minister of Agriculture is probably as well acquainted with that gentleman as the hom. member for Marguette. 'I recommended Mr. McMillan to him, and it was under the auspices of the hon. Minister that he first went to England in the interestsof immigration. Mr. McNillan is a good man, he lived in Manitoba and farmed there, and he is acquainted with all the requirements necessary to bring out settlers, and he is doing good work. In reference to the general question, I am pleased to hear from the hon. Minister of the Interior that he desires to act in concert with the Government of Manitola and the Government of the North-West Territories. As a Canadian I hope that he will not only co-operate with those Governatents but that he will induce the Government of Ontario, the Govermment of Quebec and the Governments of the Maritime Provinces to cooperate with him in immigration. Although it is important to the whole of Canada that Manitoba and the North.West should be filled up with settlers, it seems, in view of the fact that every year many people are leaving the older provinces to setthe in the North-West, that some effort should be made to fill their places. In Gireat Britain they would find many tenant farmers who would be delighted to come out to Ontario and the older provinces and take up the homes of those who have gone to the North-West, because the tenant, farmer, as any persion who has studied the subject knows, in Great Britain, Scotland and Ireland, is a man of considerable means. He has not been doing well during past years, but has the remmant of a considerable fortume left in almost every instance, and he comes to the country with from $\mathfrak{t l},(\boldsymbol{O H})$ to, in some instances, $\mathfrak{E} \notin, 0(1)$. Such a man would be better pleased to settle in an old settle, portion like Ontario and buy farms in that province for $\mathbb{S}_{4}$ to $\mathbb{S i n}_{6}$ an acre, and it seems extraordinary that the attention of the people of Ontario has not been drawn to the fact, and I hope it will be a matter of pleasure aud duty to the Minister of the Interior to request the co-operation of the Government of Ontario in this matter. It seems to me there is a duty lefore the Minister which it would redound to his credit and that of the (iovermment to perform, and that is to make considerable changes in the organization in direat Britain of to-day with reference to immigration. With all deference to the Ninister, I must say that a consilerable amount of dry rot exists in our agencies in Great Pritain. Mr. Dyke is a capable mam. but I camnot see for the life of me, judging by the reports of the agents in Clasgow and elsewhere, what these men have done for their moncy, and I think it will he the duty of the Minister to see that they do something in return for the expenditure. I ilo not know that any of the gentlemen at Dublin, Glasgow or the other places have that acequaintance with the country which Mr. Dyke has, but it may lee that I am doing them an injustice, and that they have been hamperen in their efforts through want of money. I know that Mr. Wyke felt considerahly hampered in this respect. I know that some jears ago, when the estimate was considerally more than at present, our agents were able to hranch out in other ways, by advertising and in other lines, and meet the competition from the United States, the British Colomies and the Argentine Republic, but as year after year the estimate was cut down, the work they had done was dropped and might just as well not have been done at all. Immigration like any other business has to be built up from the beginning, and just as som as you call get the thing in working order and induce people to believe that Canada is the country for the immigrant, you must see that the work is not allowed to slacken for lack of means. In Manitoba particularly, and the North.West, where we have the great inducement of free homesteads to the setiler, which is found in no other country today, as soon as that channel is opened up and the stream of immigration started, instead of having $\$ 150,006$ on the estinates we ought to have three times that amount in order to enable those gentlemen to carry on the work properly. If the work has not been what was expected, it is due in a great measure to the dilatory and niggardly policy the Government has pursued. My views were ventilated considerably on this subject some three years ago ; and I think as the resulte, the vote on that occasion was considerably augmented. I am disappointed that the Minister of Finance has not seen fit is still so distant. There are still estimates to place a larger amount in the estimates. I hope to be brought down, and the reception which those that the work done as the result of the extra amount votel which assisted to bring ont the delegates will be shown hy an increased immigration this year, and will satisfy the Minister of Finance that the expectations arisingout of that expenditure have heen realizel, and that next year there will be a larger amoment voted for immigration.

Mr. FOSTER. I am sorry to hreak in upon this interesting discussion, but as we have now sat up three long nights, if there is any more information remired concerning this item, it would be hetter that we should aljourn and resume the disenssion amother day.

Mr. Paterson (Brant). I would like to know if this bonus would apply to immigrants in the Cnitell States:

Mr. DEWDNEY. No.
Mr. WATson. It think it would be advisalle to extend it to American settlers. It is well known that many of our Canalians are in the United States, and certainly they are much hetter settlers to bring to the North-West than the people who are not accustomed to the country.

REPRESENTATION BLLL.

sir JOHN THOMPSON moved for leave to introluce Bill (No. 76) respecting Representation in the House of Commons. He said: I am sure that this Bill will be very cordially received by the House if I may judge by the anxiety which was evinced that $I$ should introlluce it, and I feel very great pleasure in meeting the wishes which have been evinced principally on the other side of the House that it should be brought down. I hope that it will not at all justify the observation that was made from the other side when the last Redistribution Bill was introduced-that the Bill came both too early and too late-too early in the sense that it ought never to have been introluced, and too late because the end of the session was then approaching.
Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Then the hon. geutleman wants a long session.
Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am sure we shall have the gratification of seeing the pleasant countenance of the hon. gentleman and his associates for many weeks yet in this House, irrespective altogether of the provisions of this Bill. The hon. gentleman knows the regret with which we part company at the end of the session, and I am glad to know that the period when we shall separate that have been brought down have met at the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite, the pleasant discussions which take place night after night in this House on those estimates, make it a joy to the Government to bring down more. Therefore, I am happy to know that the time when we shall part company is vet remote indeed, and that there will be ample opportunity to consider all the merits of the Bill, and there is nothing lout merits in it. I looked to see the date at which the last Bill was introduced, and I find it was lescribed in one of the speeches made on the second reading to have been either the tenth or the eleventh week of the session, I think the eleventh. This, therefore, comes down two or three weeks earlier than the last.

Mr. MILL;' (Bothwell). Quite a progress.
Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes, and I hope, when my hon. friends opposite hear the contents of this Bill they will recognize that that is not the only improvement. Notwithstanding the fact to which I have referred, Parliament was prorogned almot three weeks after the Bill was presentell here, showing a haste which I hope may not le repeated this session, in order that we may remain together longer.
Mr. CHOQLETTE. We all expect that.
Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I do not claim that this bill will satisfy everybolly. That is the only misgiving I have on this sulject. I think that those who are disposed to criticise a measure of this character, apart from political consilerations altogether, will say that those who are not pleased with it are very hard to please, but we must recog. nize the fact that, amongst friends as well as oppoients, there are those who, from strong attachment to their constituencies, are exceedingly indisposed to make a change which will appear in any sense to weaken or lessen the streugth of these constituencies, although the provisions of the law are imperative that a redistribution shall take place, and although we are bound to consider when the period of redistribution comes, as it has come, the changes of population which make it necessary to re-adjust the representation of constituencies which, otherwise, we would be very reluctint to touch. In making some preliminary remarks in which more interest may be taken than in the Bill itself, because the Bill is of so simple a character, I may say that we are proposing to introduce this measure in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act which require that, after the completion of each decennial census, the representation of the various constituencies in this House shall be re-adjusted on certain well-known and well-defined principles. We have felt that, while there might be no pressing necessity for our legislating on this subject during the present session, we should le more strictly within the lines of the constitution were we to do so, and we have to bear in mind the cardinal consideration that this House must always be prepared for the contingency of having a new representation called for by the exercise of the prerogative of dissolution, and it might be most inconvenient and detrimental to the free working of the constitution, if, by not bringing forward this measure, there should come into a new Parliasnent provinces more strongly represented than they are entitled to be, and others more weakly represented than they are entitled to be. For that reason, it has seemen necessary that the Bill should be gone on with during this session. Now the census returns give the population of the provinces thus: Ontario, which in 1881 had $1,926,922$, is returned with a population of $2,112,989$. Quebec, which had then a population of $1,359,027$, is now returnell as having a population of $1,488,586$. Nora Scotia had then 40,572, and now 450,523 . New Brunswick then had 321,233, and now 321,294. Prince Edward Island had then 108,891, and now 109,088. Manitoba then hat 62,260 , and now 1.24, 442 . British Columbia had then 49,459 , and now ! 12,767 . The Territories then had 25,515 , and now 67, ant. Under the provisions of the British North America Act, the representation would stand thus: Ontario has now ninety-two members, she will have the same number. Quehee has sixty-five members, she will have the same number. Nova Sontia, by reason of the fact that the growth of her population has not been as large as that of other provinces, instead of twenty-one members, will hereafter have twenty. New Brunswick, instead of sixteen will have fourteen. Prince Edward Island which has now six will have five. Manitoba which now has five will be entitled to seven. The representation of the Territories is hased on an arbitary arrangement which it is not proposed to disturb. They have now four members, and it is proposed to leave that representation untoucher. In British Columbia readjustment according to the terms of the census would give her four members, but under the terms of the Act of Union she came in with six members, and is entitled to remain with six until she shall lecome entitled to a larger proportion. Now, the question arises as to the rearjastment which is necessaly to meet these conditions. I will refer, begimning at the eastward, to the readjustment proposed for Prince Edward Island. As I have saind, the Island now possesses six members, and with the readjustment will be entitled to only tive. It will be necessary, therefore, to change the boundaries of the constituencies in the Island. The mode of division hitherto adopted has been very convenient, hecause it corresponds with the county lines. There were three counties in the Island, and they were each represented by two members. In orler to make five constituencies, it will he necessary to depart from county lines, and the realjustment which I propose, and the plan of which I will lay on the Table of the House, is, I think, the fairest that can be suggested with regard to that province. We propose that there shall be five constituencies named West Prince County, East Prince County, West Queen's County, East Queen's County, and King's County, each having one member. The division is made according to the description of lots in that Island, which I think correspond to townships elsewhere, and no lot, according to the original division of the Island, is divided. The division by population will be thus: West Prince Comuty will have just ahout 21,000 of a population; Fast Prince County will have $20, i 23$, this includes the town of Summerside; West Queen's will have ${ }^{\text {a }}$ population of 22,209 , this includes the city of Charlottetown ; East Queen's will have a population of $\mathbf{2 3 , 4 6 6}$; and King's, which includes Georgetown, will have a population of 21.684 , so that under this plan the population of the Island will have been equalized as nearly, I think, as is practi. cally consistent with allhering to the township lines I have mentionet.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the division which the hon. gentleman has outlined ignore county lines altogether: For instance, does East Prince County embrace any portion of Queen's County, or does East Queen's embrace any portion of Queen's, or is King's County left intact?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The county lines are departed from in each case. Now, coming to the Province of New Brunswick, where, as I have said, the number of seats will have to be reduced by two, the changes which will have to be made are these-

Mr. MILLs (Bothwell). Will the hon. gentleman state what the population of the counties of Prince Edwarl Island is, following the county boundaries:

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Prince has a population, in 1891, of 36,470 ; Qucens hats a population of 45,974 ; and Kings a population of 26,633 . Now. coming to, the Province of New Brimswick, the first change oceurs in the City and County of St. John. The representation of the whole province is as follows: Outside the City and County of St. John there are thirteen members, the City of st. John has one, and there are two for the city and county combined. The one member representing the city is electen. of course, hy the votes of the citizens only, the two memikers representing the city and county are elected ly the votes of the citizens amil the residents of the county. It is proposed to take one member from the City and county of st. John, so that hereafter the representation will be one member for the city and one member for the city and county. It is then intended to join the Counties of Sunbury and Queens. That will leave for the Province of New Prumswick the fourteen members which she is entitled to under the British North America Act. The City and County of St. John has a population of $49,5 \%$; the united Counties of Sunbury and Queen's will have a population of 17,935. No other changes are contemplatel in New Brunswick.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the population of the city and county separately?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. St. John City has a population of 24,184 under the city as originally constituted, and the city of Portland, I think, contains about 20,000 persons. St. Jolm's County, that is, including the city of Portland, includes 25,390.
Mr. COLTER. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the city will be entitled to one representative and the county to one?
Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No : the city is entitled to one and the city and county to one.
Mr. COLTER. Then a voter in the city can vote for the city representative and also for the county representative, and has two votes, while a voter in the county has only one.
Sir JOHN THOMPSON. That remains as at present. The city has only one, and the city and county combined have one.
Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That gives every roter in the city two votes, while every voter in the county has but one.

Sir JOHN THOMPNON. Yes. Cuder the present law hom. gentlemen mulerstand, I think, from my explanation, that the city voter has now three votes and the county voter hats two. (coming now to the lirovince of Xova Scotia, the smallest constituency in that province is the County of Queeris, with a population of 10,610 . The puphlation of shellurne., which is the aljoining eonnty to the west warl. is $1+, 9.9$. The aljoining emonty to the eastwarel is Lumenhurg with 31,0.6. We pro pree simply to mite the (counties of Shellame and Gueen $\underset{\text { a }}{ }$ and to make the district the electonal district of the (ounties of shelhurne and (Queens. with tion of that province will he alowt $92 .($ (N) and the mite, commties will, therefore, somewhat exceed that unit. hut not exceed it as much as several other comaties in the province. There is this to be seid in fatour of that methon : that the two comaties besides lying sideloy side are united in interest and in may wther points of similarity. I might mention ans regarls these comentes in that province which will exceed the unit in the way I hate deseribed. that Colchester exceeds the unit having a populahas :3s.ingt, Halifax Comity $\mathbf{3 2}$, sfin. Hants County slightly exceeds it, Inverness hats enabl. King's slifhtly exceets it. Lumenburg exceeds it, having

Mr. MIISLS (bothwell). There must lee many counties very much helow the unit.
sir JOHN THOMPSON. There are several. Referring now to the Province of Quetrec: I will mention first of all smme lealing features in comner. tiom with the prpulation which seem to require innmediate attention. There are great centres of popnlation in that porince which repuine larger represemtation than they now have in this Honse. The city of Montreal, possessing three members now. hats a pipulation of 180, (69:0, Hochelaga has a population of su,gons : the two combined hating a mited popmlation, therefore, of 263.693 with hut four members. la our opinion it is only just that the representation of the city of Montreal should he increased to tive members, anil that Hovhelaga should have two memhers. so that Hochelaga aind Montreal will have seven members. In addition to that, and for the purn we of a winding inereasing unduly the representation of these large centres of population, the redistribution takes anay from these two constituencies of Montreal and Hochelaga, parishes which will be added to dacpues (Gartier and Laval. In addition to that the Cominty of Ottawa calls for further representation on account of its population and very great extent. We propose to give an adilitional menler to the county, therefore, and under the new arrangement which we propose the County of Ottawi will have two members with a constituency of $3 \mathbf{3}$,( $(\mathrm{KK})$ population each, and the constitnencies of Hochelaga and Montreal will have a population of $3 \mathbf{3}$, ,(ANO) each. It will be necessary, of course, to provide for these new constitucacies by taking from other portions of the province where the population is not so large, and I will mention briefly the changes which are proposed to te made, and will then read from the Bill which will give particulars of the changes. I may state, howerer, at this point, that in the Prorince of Quebec the unit of population, I think, is about 22,500 as nearly as it can be made. The population of the Comity of Ottawa is now bid, MNO. Referring particularly to Montreal, with a population, as I have said, of nearly $2(0)(\mathbf{K N})$, it is to be divided into five. constituencies. One, St. Mary's division, will have $38,(M N O)$ : St. James division $32,(x h)$, the St. Lawrence division 42,010 , the St. Antoine division 44 . (NMO) and the present (entre division is left intact unler the nane of st. Anne's division, with a popmlation of $\mathbf{2 x}, \mathbf{0 k})$. The additional constituency taken for the County of Ottava is supplied hy joining the two constituencies of Three Rivers amblist. Mantice. and the three other constituencies are taken from the southern comices, that is, these comoties ly ines somth of the st. Lawrence River from the western boundiry of the Province of Quelse to the County of Nicolet. These connties, thirteen ia mumber. are only entitled by their population to nine members, inil threconnties being taken out. it leaves then ten mem. hers, or one more than they are entitled to according to the unit of population which 1 have just deseribed. Nipierville is made to disipplear ami is divided between (hatemugay and Lapmarie. St. . $o$ hn amb Inerville are joined together, and Verchreses is also mate to disatppear and is divided hetween (hambly, st. Hyacinthe and Richelien which surromal it. This arrangement gives to the region formed he the comuties north of Ottana and of the st. Lawrence. from lomian to (hamplain inclusive. thintern members with a perpulation of 2-a,2014. That is an average for each comoty of 2?.(KK) as nearly as can he statem. The hom. gentle. man asked me to state the portions of the womstituencies of Montreal and Hochelaga which are wiven to the neighmoring eomstituencie: of haval and bacepues (artier. There is : new constituency callen the electomal dis. trict of West Hochelaga, whieh will comsist of the twan of Ste. Cungomale and St. Hemri, and of the parrishes of st. Pabriel Wiarl (ammesed to Montreal) inul (iote St. Antoine. East Hochelaget will consist of the towns of Maisommene and Cite st. Lonis. of the villages of ('ite Visitation and Mite Emil. and of the parishes of Hochelaga Wiand (ame xed to Montreal) and St. Jean Baptiste Waral (amnexed to Montreal). The electoral district of batpues (artier will hereafter consist of the town of Lathine. of the villages of Ste. Ame le Bellevate. Ste demevirve. st. Doachim de lit Pointe (laire. st. Laturent, (iote les Neiges, Cite it. Maul, Notre Dame de dirice, and Verdum, and of the parishes of Lathine (site. Aume du Bout de ITsle), Ste. Geneviere, st. Joachim le la Pointe Claire, st. Laurent, st. Raphaeil ile lisle Bizartol, Cote st. Panl, Notre Dame des Neiges Ouest, and Ontremont. The electoral district of laval consists of the rillage of Ste. Rose, and the parishes of ste. Dorothée, Nt. Francois de Nalles, Nt. Martin, Ste. Rose, st. Vincent de Paul, sault an Recollet. St. Joseph Riviire des Prairies, St. Léomard de Port Nanrice, Langue Pointe and Pointe anx Trembles.

Mr. LACRIER. What is the population in the Conuty of Laval :
Sir JOHN THOMPSON. About 19,(NKO. The Comnty of Ottanaa will be divided thus: There will be an electoral district of Suuth Ottawa, consisting of the townships of Masham, Eardley, Wakefiell, Hull (including the city of Hull and the town of Aylmer), Templeton, Portland, Derry, Buckingham, Mulgrave, Lochaber, Ripon and Petite Nation; and an electoral district of North Ottawa, consisting of the townships of Lowe, Denham, Bowman. (N... \&e.. inchuling all those townships forming the remaining part of Ottawa County as it was comstituted (inclunling unorganized territories) on the 3lst of Jamuary, 1961, ly section 1 of chapter $\bar{\sigma} \boldsymbol{i}$ of the Consolidated Statutes of Lower (illialia.

Mr. LaNDiFLIER. What will be the populat tion of each division :

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. About 32.0 nn .

Mr. LAARIER. The hon. gentleman has not Netinerl in what mamer the Counties of St. John and Iberville are to be constructed.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. They are tobe unitel.
Mr. LACRIFR. I umlerstoon that part of Nitpierville was going to (hateauguay.

Sir JOH. THOMPS(ON. The electoral listeice of Nit. John an! lherville will comsist of the towns of St. John and Iberville. and of the parishes of $\mathrm{N}_{\mathrm{t}}$. Mr. LAURIER. Will the hon. gentleman tell us now what hecomes of Vercheres:"
sir JoHN THOMlsON. If I real the descriptions of Chambly. Richelieu and St. Hyacinthe, 1 think they will contain the remmatis of Vercheres.

Mr. IACRIER. What is left of Rouville?
Nir JOHN THOMPNON. The electoral district of Rouville shall consist of the village of Sit. 1 ©satire and St. Dominique.

Mr. BROINEUR. That is Bagrot.
Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman dees not recognize his own province. It must be the to my bal pronunciation. The electoral district of Rouville will consist of the villages of St. ('isaire, Nt. Mr. MILLK (Bothwell). Is there any change in Pontiac:

sir JOHN THOMPson. No.

Nir HECTOR LANIIENIN. Before the hom. gentleman passes to Ontario, would he le kini enough to say if thereare any other changes in the Province of Queluec:

Nir JOHN TrHOMPNON. I think I mentioned all of them. In the Province of Ontario very few changes are proposed.

Mr. LAURIFR. Happy province.
Nir RIC'HARD (SARTWRI:HT. It has been well attemied to hefore.

Mr. LAANI)ERKIN. (hanges are not neerled.
Nir JOHN THOMPSON. I think there are some changes needed, more in the representation of the constituencies in this Honse than in the ennstitu-encies,-…-

Sir RICHARI) ('ARTWRIGHT. Hear, hear.

 sir JOHN. THOMPSON-but we have decided wheare that in the hamls of the electors whone doing it so almirably. Werlonot proposeto pass any statute on that subject.Mr. MILAN (Bothwell). But in the other pro. vinces you propose to help the electors.
Sir JOH: THOMPSON. No, we donot : hut the changes which have been minle are mone extensive in that province for the reasoms I have mentioned. that it is necessamy to give these very large centres of pepulation, NÏontreal, Ottawa amil Hochelaga, mhlitional representation in this Howse. and that could not be done without alteringe a number of constitnencies which have smaller populations. I was about to mention that the reasoms which call for the change in the lrovince of Ontarios are principally of the kinil I have just mentioned with regard to population. There is the case of the city of Poronto which, on the same principle as that which has callenl for a change with regatil to Mentreal, requires adilitional representation. There is a neersity likewise for providing for an additional representative for the oreat district of Algomat. and likewise for a portion of the population for the (onnty of Renfrew. whichpopulation is it present out of the limits and range of repiresentation. The district I refer to is North Renfrew. We propose to give a member to the Nipissing district, and this will inchule a portion of Eastern Algoma, and we propme to give an additional member to the city of Toronts. In order to provide for this adilitional representatiom, Niagara district is restricted so ats to lring the constituencies more nearly up to the average representative population. The only other changes in the Bill are the township of clarence which is taken from the County of Rassell ind adiled to Prescott, therehy tending to egualize the population and place ('larence in a riding where the people will be more in harmony with the rest of the population of the riding. The Island of Seugog is taken from North Ontario and placed in South Ontario. The island properly leelongs, as regards geographical proximity, to the constituency in which we propose to place it, and the population is not large, about 600. The village of North Elgin is taken from North Bruce and placed in West Bruce to which it belongs geographicilly. If I am not mistaken, the village a considerable distance from the limits of the constituency in which it is placed now. Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The same distance as it was ten years ago.
sir JOHN THOMPSON. Les, amd no doubt the hon. gentleman will not be better satistied now than he was ten years ago when it was put into the constituency from which it is now taken. The Counties of Lincoln and Welland are united.
sir RICHARD (ARTWRI(iHTS. Do yon mean that Lincoln and Welland are one county and one member?

Sir JOHA THOMPSON. No: I will give the letails. The electoral district of the County of Lincoln and Niagara will consist of the trown of Niagara, the city of st. Catharines, the townships of (irautham, Clinton, Louth, Pelham, and Gainshorough, and the villages of Beamsville and Port Lathousic. The electoral district of the County of Welland will consist of the townships of Bertie. Crowland, Humberstone, Stanford, Thorohd and Willonghly, the villages of Chippawa, Fort Erie, Niagara Falls, Merritton, and Port Colhorne, and the towns of Niagara Falls, Thorold and Welland. The electoral district of the Counties of Haldimand and Nonck will consist of the townships of Oneida. Ramham, Seneca, North Caynga and South Cayuga, Canborough, Dum, Moulton, Sherbrooke, Wiaintleet, and the villages of Calerlonia, Cayuga, Hagersville and Jummille.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Are Haldimand amd Monck marle into one constituency:

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Not as they are now, but there will be one comnty ilescribed as I have stated. SGuth Wentworth will consist of the townships of South Fleet, Binbrooke, Barton, Glanford, North and South Grimsly, Caister, East and West Famborough, the town of I Oundas, and the villages of Grimshy and Waterdown. The electoral district of North Wentworth and Brant will consist of the townships of Ancaster, Blenheim, Last Brantford, South Dumfries and Bererley. The electoral district of the south riding of the County of Norfolk will consist of the townships of Houghton, Walsingham, Charlottevilie, Woodhouse and Viblpole, the town of Simeoe, and the villages of Port Dover and Port Rowan. I think 1 have mentioned the only changes made by the Bill in the Province of Ontario. It will be olserved that the reconstruction which will take place is contined to the neighbourhoos of Toronto and the group of districts about Lake Ontario, and every effort has been made to interfere as little as possible with the representation its it exists at present, and with the geographical lines.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I would ask the Minister if the population in the Niagara district is not greater than the population east of Kingston?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I camnot make the calculation while I am on my feet.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I understond the object was to equalize the constituencies and to bring them nearly up to the unit of comparison : but are not the districts east of Kingston populated much less than those west of Kingston :

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. We could not equalize all through Canada without making a most sweeping change. We think these changes are all necessary to give uhlitional representation where it was called for, and can be justified on the gromel of numerical population.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Will you give us the population of Haldimand and Monck, and North Wentworth and Brant:
sir JOHN THOMPSON. I was about to give the population of these constituencies. I think the unit of population in Ontario is about ens, (N) or 2:3,(KN), North Wentworth had a population of 14,591, North Brant 16,993, Nouth Wentworth 16.770, Lincoln $21, \leqslant 46$, Welland $2 \overline{2}, 131$, Monck 1.7,31\%. Hahlimand 16,318, South Norfolk 17, 880. Vinder the proposed arrangement Haldimand and Nonck will hate a population of $21,4 \overline{74}$, South Norfolk $22, i(02$, North Wentworth and Brant, 21,629 , south Wentworth $-5,72 \pi$, Lincoln and Ni agara $2,0,230$ and Welland 26,944 . The population will he much more nearly equalized in these combties and will be honght nearer to the mit of the procince. Now we will refer to the province of Manitoha.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before leaving the Province of Ontario, I would ask the hon. gentleman where does Manitoulin Island fall in the division of the Algoma district:
sir JOHA THOMPSON. It remans in the western livision where it is now with the other islamds. The House, of course, has observed the extent of the increase of population in the Province of Manitoba, that population having increased from 62,260 to $1.04,42$, requiring that her representation in this House should be raised from tive to seven. I will call the attention of the House to the way in which that additional representation is provided for. A change has been made by calling the present constituency of Lisgar, Selkirk. The: reason for this is that there are the towns of East Selkirk and West Selkirk in this constituency, and all of Lorl Selkirk's old settiers live in that constituency. For those reasons we think Selkirk is a more appropriate name than Lisgar. Provencher remains as it was before. Old Selkirk is divided into two ridings. The reason for this division in the population is that Lisgar was well and thickly settled. Brandon, it is to be expecten, will, in about four years, fill up and have more than the preseat population of Lisgar, and make them about equal. Narquette we have divided into two constituencies, Nacdonald and Marguette. I need not say to the House that in selecting a name for the new constituency we have give the name of the statesman who was leader of the House for so many years, and has devoted so much of his life to the development of this country, and especially with matters connected with the development of the territories out of which the Province of Manitoba was created. For that reason it was deemed proper to give the name Macdonald to one of the new constituencies. The discrepancy in the population between Macdonald and Marquette, can be explained by the fact that the Dauphin country is in Marquette, and the territory in Marquette will fill up in a few years, in all probability, to equal, if not exceed, Maclonald. The unorganized territory in Provencher, it is expected, will fill up likewise and largely build up the population there. If the House desires it, I will read the descriptions of the lines, but I suppose it will only be tiresome to the House. I will Sir Johs Thomeson.
mention the population of the constitnencies as they will exist. The city of Wimnipeg has a popmtion of 25,6339 ; Lisgat has 29,287 , that will be Last Selkirk; Bramdon has 22,403 : Marguette, 12,any: Macdonald, 22,104 : West Selkirk, $23, \pi 60$ : Prosencher, 22,104 . I mentioned to the House that it was not proposed to make any change for the present in the representation of the Territories. There is no change reguired in the number of members for the Province of British Columbia, but a change does seem called for by the peculiar distrihution of property, to say nothing of territorial extent.
Mr. Watson. Pefore the Minister leaves Manitola, would he just give the divisions of north and south, east and west, for Marquette and Macromate:
sir JOHN THOMPSON. Marquette will comprise the rural mumicipalities of Odanah. Clan William, Harrison, saskat chewan, Blanchard, stathdair. Shoal Latke, Oak River, Miniota, Archie, Birtle. Ellice. Russell, Silver Creek, Rosshurn, shell River. Boultom, the town of Mimedosa, the town of Birtle, and the town of Rapid City ; and also all the organized territory lying between the westem bomdary of the Erovince of Manitoba and the easternly limit of range 17, west of the Ist west principal meridian, north of township 18 in ranges $i_{1}$ and 22 inclusive of west prinapal meridian, anl also lying north of township 28 in ranges $\underline{2}: 3$ to $\stackrel{2}{2}$ ) inclusive of west principal meridian. for the northem loundary of the Province of Manitola. The electoral distriet of Macelomald shall comprise the rural municipalities of South Cypress. South Norfolk, North Norfolk. North (Ypress, Langforl, Rosedale, Lansdowne, Westboume. Portage la Prairie, and the town of Portage la Prairie, the town of ciladstone, the town of Neepana, and the village of Carberry, together with the unorganized territory lying within and baumber by the following limits, that is to say: On the west ly the eastern limit of range 17 . west principal meridian, on the east by a line raming through the millile of Lake Manitola, on the south liy the northern bomulary of township 20, and the same produced east to the same line rumning to the midule of Lake Manitoba, and on the north by the northern boundary of the Province of Manitoba. I was soing on to say, that in the Province of British Columbia, the only changes proposed are mate necessary by the changes which the influx of population have created. That will be apparent when I mention the population, and when it is compared with the extent of the territorial divisions as now constituted. There are three electoral districts outside the Island of Vinconver. These are at present, New Westminster, Caribou and Yale. We propose that the new electoral district of New Westminster shall consist of New Westminster district and the Coast district, as defined in the public notice issued from the Lands and Works Office in said colony, on the lith December, 1869, purporting to be in accorlance with the provision of the 39 th clanse of the Mineral Ordinance of 1869, and to give to that New Westminster district two members. We propose that the electoral district of Yale and Caribou shall be joined, and that the new district shall consist of Caribou, Lillowet, Yale and Kootenay districts, as specified in the same public notice. That will, of course, have one member. The new district of Yale and Caribon will have a population of about $20, \dot{3}(1)$; New Westminster will have 42,226 , with two members ; Vancouver clectoral district will have 18,229 : and Victoria, with two members, 18,238, as it is now.
Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman retain the double constituencies of Picton, Halifax and Ottawa?
sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes, and Cape Breton. I was going tor say in mentioning the changes in Ontario, that I did not refer to the change in the city of Ottawa, hecause it is a very slight one. It was merely made in view of the municipal change which has brought stewarton into the city of Ottawa, and which oceurred after the last distribution was passed. For municipal purposes, and I believe for provincial purposes also, stew arton was comprised in the city of Ottawa.
Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Is it proposed to divide Hamilton and Halifas?
Sir JOHN THOMPSON. If it were proposed to do that I wouhd have mentioned it long before this.
Sir RICHARI) (ARTWRI(iHT. The hon. gentleman did not state how Toromto is to he divided!
Sir JOHN THOMPMON. West Toronto will be given two members, amil the other two divisions will remain as they are.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How many districts in Canada will have a double representation?
sir JOHN THOMPSON. I cammot tell on the spur of the moment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Is West Toronto to be divided into two districts or to be given two members:
Sir JOHN THOMPSON. West Toronto, as it is now, will hate two menibers.
Mr. LACRIER. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible at this stage to discuss at all the measure which has just been introduced, becanse whatever good or whatever bad there may be in the measure itself consists in the details of the apportionment which has been made, and at first glance it is not possible to say whether the apportionment is fair or unfair, but I must say at once that as far as the Province of Quebec is concernet, in so far as I can see it at first sight, the apportionment seems to me to have been the most arbitrary that could have leen lesigned. I am sorry, sir, that those who were in charge of that measure from the Province of Quebec did not choose to follow the principle which was laid down as far as the Province of New Brunswick is concerned; that is to say, of making the changes in the line of existing divisions. In the Province of New Brunswick, two counties are united together, and in so far as I can see, whenever changes are to take place, if the changes are made on this line, it is the least objectionable of all. Likewise in the Province of (Quebec, the city of Three Rivers and the district of St. Maurice are united, and at first blush without looking at the details of the Bill I can see no very serious objection to that. Likewise the County of Ottawa, which has a very large extent in territory and a population exceeding $60,(\mathrm{KOO}$, is divided into two counties, and if the division is made on at all a fair Masis, which I camont saly at this moment, the principle seems to be one which camot serionsly be whjecten to. But when we come to the comities south of the sit. Lawrence River in the Province of wuebec, where the strength of the Liberal party hats always been for twenty years or more, we find gervimander on such a scale that it will be impossible to recognize the counties now in existence. No attention has been paid to existing limits, parishes which have been mited together for rery many vears are now divided and are jumbled over into five or six different counties. The (ounty of Verchires, an ohl county which was represented in the ohl larliament of (analaby Sir feorge fartier, for, I believe, more than 15 years, now disappears and is distributed into three different comaties. Richelien, sit. Hyacinthe amd (hambly. Then the Coment of ( hambly receives a portion of the (omaty of Rom ville. and the County of Rouville receives a portion of sit. Hyatinthe, if I remember aright, and a portion of biggot also. What reason or what justification can there be for that? As far as the city of Montrealame the comety of Hochelaga are concerneal. I camot speak with very great accuracy beanase the limits have heen given in only a very imperfect mamer, hut so far as I can see enough has beengiven to enable me to congratulate the Ninister of Public: Works, who had in the County of Laval a very soft bed before, and who will have in the new Comuty of Laval a still softer one now.

Mr. OUIMET'. Mr. Speaker, the hom. the lealer of the Opposition, in his elosing remarks, satil that the Ninister of Public Works had a soft bed lefore in the County of Jival. I confess that imleed I harl, but I won it after a hard fight and I kept it, and molooly can hame me for that. If 1 had attemed to atmy selfish motives, if I hal listened to the appeals made to me from my friends in my county, who have so faithfully fought for me and tor the party, the old cominty of Laval would not have been disturbed, and there are very good geographical reasons why it should not he disturbed. The hom. the leader of the Opposition has mentioned that the Comnty of Vercheres should not have been disturhed on account of its historic name, but I may remind him that the County of Laval bears it name which is certainly the equal of Vercheres, and besides, geographically speaking, my county was intended to stand alone, as it is an island. If I took some parishes from Hochelaga in order to decrease the alrealy too large population of that county, I think I should have received credit for having done so. I may say to the hon. leader of the Opposition, hesides, that the parishes which are now added to my county were in the last election largely Liberal, and perhaps after 19 years of battle to remain in this Parliament, it might have been reasonable for me as an old stager to expect to be left alone. But I arlded these parishes to my connty, and I did it from no seltish purpose, but in order that I might not be open to the attacks which the hon. gentlenian has now made against me. Now that my personal case has heen settled, I will try to explain how I thought the divisions that I assisted in making in the Province of Quelsec, are fair. I may wiy that we have divided the province into three large groups for the purpose of redistribution. The tirst group consisting of the counties which we call the " Guebec Comities "aceorling to political divisions, are twenty in number. They extend from Champlain, lortneuf inclusive, to Chicontimi and Sagnenay: and on the other side of the river from (iaspe up to Nicolet. These twenty counties have a population of 43,900 , which divided by twenty gives a population of 29.195 for each. Thus, althourh the arerage population of each of the twenty counties does not reach the unit of population fixed by law, that is, $\quad \boldsymbol{\sim}$. $\mathrm{S}(\mathrm{K})$ it comes pretty near to that: and it was thought fair, in order to awoid any friction or complaint--though it was at great siacritice on the part of our friends from the district of Guehec-not to have any changes mate in those connties. I think we ought to be eredited for that. Now, the comaties of the Eastern Townships are ten in mumber, representing all aggregate: population of $2.2 \pi, \underline{2} 6$, or an arearge of en,ith. In these there were inempalities in the representation to be remedied, but we thought it would le more satisfactory to the public, anf also to the Opposition, that mi; change should be mate there, since the areatace was as near as possible to that fixed by law. Then, we come to what I call the political listrict or region of Montreal, which is formed of three great gronps, that is, the thirteen comnties lying morth of the Ottawa River aml the st. Latwrence. from Pontiac to (hamplain. which have common interests and are pretty similarly sitmater. These thirteen comoties have an aggregate population of $9 \boldsymbol{i} 6,2] 4$, riving an a reage for each comity of $21,29 \%$. We felt obligel to give an additional representation to Ottatiat County, for which the hon. leader of the Opposition might give us credit, for he knows that Ottawa Comenty is a Liheral comoty. If he consults the retums from the last elections he will see that in each of the divisions ats male, the Liberal canditate had a majority. So that from a political point of view-though we did not and ought not to consider. that-- we have practically given the Opposition one more member there.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That escaped your attention.

Mr. OUIMFT. It did not escape ourattention. We shall look after it at the next election. Now. Three Rivers and St. Daurice have not the average population, aml although they were two Conservative comnties, and althongh hoth are represented lix. two very valuable and, I may say, most prominenit members, we thonght we conhl not aroid-though we did so very reluctantly-miting these counties.

Mr. BRODFUR. What is the name of the new county:

Mr. OUIMET. It will be known by the name of Three Rivers innl st. Manrice. Their boumbaries are not disturbed. Coming to the group which I call the central group, extending between the Ottawa River on the one side and the st. Lawrence River on the other, formed by the Counties of Soulanges, Vaudreuil, Jaçues Cartier, Hochelaga, Laval, Montreal West, Montreal Centre and Montreal East, these eight comnties contain a total population of 307,312 , an arerage for each of 38,416 . According to the unit this group is entitled to thirteen representatives; but in order not to be too harsh upon the other groups, we only give eleven representatives to this central group, dividing it as rationally as can be done under the circumstances. Laval and Jacques

Mr. Lathier.

Cartier are what we might call rural counties. Hochelaga was composed before partly of what I call sulnurban population, and partly of rural population. We thought it would be fair to divide between Laval on one side, and Jaeques Cartier on the other, the rural part of Hochelaga, and to divide in two that part of Hochelaga composed of suburban population.

Mr. BRODEUR. The Counties of Soulanges and Vaudrenil are not united?

Mr. OLLDET. They are not, and 1 will give the reasons. These two comnties form part of the central group, and if any one has a right to complain of under representation, it is the population composing that central group. ame not the population of the other comities which have more than their share of representation. Desides, I think a very good athlitional reason is that, in future, the increase of population will likely take place in that central group ; and it is more than likely that ten years hence, when a new distribution is made, this central group will be entitled to an increased representation. and it will take it from itself. Then will be the time to unite the Comnties of Vaudrenil and Noulanges. Now, the southern group, lying south of the st. Lawrence, is composed of thirteen which entitles them only to nine members. At the present moment they have thirten representatives, and we thought it only fair to take from that group. Liberal or not, the three seats thato we wanted out of the four which they had in excess of their rightful number, and so we have done; but we have done it with no intention of injuring our opponents prolitically. We have done it in a way to interfere is little as possible with the geographical bomidics, and with a due regard to popahation. First, we have done what my hom. friemd adrised us to do in every case. That is, we have attachen together two cometies which are lying cintignous, the Connties of St. John and Iherville.

Mr. BRODECR. They are separated ly a river.

Mr. OUIMETR My county was separated by two rivers. That will be another river for the hon. member to cross. Now, we had to take a connty from the three adjoining comities, Chateanghay, Napierville and Laprairie. Laprairie had not the repuisite population, and in order to complete the mumber we had to ald to it part of Chateanglay, nos hecumse it was Conservative, for I think the majority in the last election was Liberal in the parishes of Chateauguay and Ste. Philomene.

Mr. BRODELK. Why not add ste. Martine:

Mr. OULIET. We might have very well addad ste. Martine to Laprairie and have auded to the Conservative majority of Lapraipie, but we did not do so beculuse we thought it would be an apparent injustice, and did not want to be open to the charge of hating mate the division from a purely political point of view and in order to bring about direct ailvantages. I am very sorry, on account of my hon. friend from Napierville, that the name of his connty should disiappear, but, as in the case of St. John and Iberville, we could not do otherwise, hecause Napierville had to be divided in two, and it was impossible to and it to the next county. Now I come to what appears to le a sore point, and I am sery sorry for our ohl friend from Vercheres, and I hope this will not be the means of securing his disappearance from our midst after the long years he has served his come try so well, but it had to be done and we did it in order to make the divisions of that territory as equal as possible. The Comenty of Chambly was the lowest in population, and in orler not to spoil its geographical apparance, we just took from the County of Vercheres the two parishes of Lipmairie, Varennes and ste. Julie, and going in that direction we had to cross the river and take two or three par ishes from Rourille. My hom. friend will not be sorry as these parishes were not too overwhelmingly in his favour duriug the last election, amd it will only improve, at all erents, his own position.
 in this as in most cecasioms of life. The remainder of Vercheres has ineen attacheel to Richelieu. Richelieu mutil last sear was a Comservative comnty, and whether this change will make it a Liheral comuty I do mot know. If it were a gnestion to to whetiner the name of Pichelien would be less dear to the heart of my hom. friend than the name of Vercheres. it wonlil be very casy to make the change and call the two comuties Vercheres insteal of Richelien.

Mr. LAURIER. What is there in a mame?

Mr. OUIMET. It is the electors the hom. genteman wants and not the name. If we had left the remainder of Vereheres with Richelien, it would hatre made too much, and we thought it would be very useful to temper the very promounced Likeral colour of sit. Hyacinthe liy adding to st. Hyacinthe the two parishes of st. Alare amd st. Antoine. As to the County of Rourille, I suppose I need not justify the caluable allititions we have made in favour of our friend the present representitice. As to Bagot. we had to take from Richelien the parish which was next to it and which properly helones to it, and my hom. friend, the memher for Bagot. was so sensitive that he was afraid of heing open to the charge of having taken away too mamy of his opponents in the patishes of st. lie and st. Doninique, and he took the Liberal parishes from Drummond aml Arthabaska, which have already tow much population. These two Liberal parishes he expects to manage so that in the future they will be goon Conservatives. Those are St. (aidlame anh st. Bomaventure. After these explanations, I am sure that my hon. friend will withdraw his expression of opinion that the changes we were olliged to make were most arlitarily made. I think nur friends have more reason to complain than our upponents, and if I had been left to myself, if we had not wished to aroild giving the slightest groumd for the charge of umfarness, 1 would rather than have seen any change, for reasons that will be ob vious to the hon. member for Vercheres, have preferred to keep my county as it is, just as he would like to preserve his own. But the inequality of representation was so glaring that we had to do justice to the city of Montreal and the suburbs of Montreal and Ottawa County, and it had to he adjusted in some way. Some one must suffer, and I hope our friends will not complain that our opponents should have really won a county in Ottawa and one in st. Maurice, which is really two out of four. I think that on the whole the present redistribution is fair to all parties and our copponents in the Procince of Quebec at all events, will not have reason to eromplain of any gerrymandering.

Mr. BARNAR1). I presume the proper time to discuss this measure will be at the second reating. So far as the relistribution in British Columbia is concerned, I do not think it is the best that could le devised, nor do I think it is one which will he satisfactory to the people of the mainland. I hope, betore this Bill receives its second reading, the fovermment will see their way to divide the mainkand into three constituencies, cach with one member, which is quite possible, and which would he certainly a fair and proper division. I will reserve any further remaths for the second reading.

Mr. MILLs (Bothwell). It is not my purpose to enter into a discussion of the details of the measure the hon. gentleman has submitted. Like the hon. gentleman who has immediately preceded me. I think the proper time to point out what I regard as the misehievous and the unjust character of this measure will be when we come to consider it on the second reating, and when we have the measure printed hefore us and will be able to compare the Bill itself with the actual population of the various districts. I will say this much at the outset. 1 may say that, muler the British North Amer. ica fict. there is provision for the distribution of representation aceording to population among the provinces, lat there is no provision nor was it intended that there should be equal population in the rations districts, that the rule of three should be applied in the division of each province into electoral districts. The objections which apply to a measure of that sort were well stated a long time ago by Mr. Burke, and there may be an opportunity for pointing out these reasons, and to some extent they were stated by the late Premier in 1851. However, I am not going into a riscussion of that matter on the present occasiom. In liseg we were toll, when the neasure Wats submitted to Parliament for the redistribution: of seats, that care was had to pay due resard to the satered principle of representation by popmation. I am about to call the attention of the House to one feature of the measure which the hom. geetleman has snlmitten to us, so far as it atfects the Province of Ontario. It is only necessary to look at the census to see that the portion of the Province of Ontario which lies west of Joronto is under-represented at the present time, and the portion which lies to the east, between the Ottawa and the st. Lawrence Rivers and the eastern portion of Lake Ontario, is over-represented, but the hon. gentlenan and his colleagues have taten away two members from the district which is already under-represented and have left that section of the province which is at the present time and has been all along over-represented, having in this Honse a representation out of proportion to the numbers which its population would warrant, just as it is. Why that is done is perfectly obvious to every member of this House and will be perfectly obvious to every citizen in the Province of Ontario. The hon. gentleman has in the western portion of the province made but one change. The city of London had its boundaries extended ot few years ago. I think it is nearly ten years since what was called the town of Eist Loudon containing a population of about $6,(0,0)$ was embraced within the limits of the city, and two years ago the district of South

Mr. Oifmet.

Lomion was also incluced in thecity of London. Now the hon. gentleman inchudes neither of these in the city, but he takes from the constituency to which those two portions of the city now belong another municipal division, the village of London West, and adds that to the city of London. Why did he not add a portion of the city itself? Why did he go outside of the city and take from the riding of East Middlesex a portion of that riding and add it to the city of Lomlon? The reason is perfectly obrious. Lomdon Soath has a majority of $1(N)$ against the Administration. London East has also. I believe, a majority against the Administration. but the rillage of London West gave a considerable majority to the Conservative candidate at the last election, and so, with the view of strengthening a member of the Administration, it is proposed to take Lomolon West and ald it to the city and leave out two warals of the city as portions of the riding of East and of South Middlesex to which at present they belong. Every one will understand the character of that division. I wish also to bring under the attention of the House, and under the attention of the country, the fact that at this moment the Govermment have in this House, I think, two-thirds of the representatives from the Province of Ontario. (iving the Government the crenlit for their success at the lye-elections, there were recorded against the Arministration in the elections for the members sitting at this moment in this Parliament a majority of the electors of the Province of Ontario. There are some thousands of the electors who voted against the Alministration orer those who voted for them. and yet under this distribution the hon. gent lemen who sit on that side of the House have two-thirds of the members from that province. That is accorling to the statement mate hy Mr. Johnson, which is an inacurate statement as against us.

Mr. BOWFLLA. Wis not that statement made lefore the bye-elections:

Mr. MILLS (bothwelli. I am speating after giving crealit to the dovernment for the bye elections, and they will not do away with that majority of , (MK) against the fiovermment or with one-thiril of it, as the hom. gentleman knows, so that you have two-thirds of the members elected ly a minority of the voters. Does the Govermment propose to correct that injustice! What do the Govermment do, in order to give to the minority in this House and to the majority of the electors outside a fair representation in Parliament? Nothing. They undertake to still further pack the representation in larliament. They take away from a district already under-represented wo of its members, and they leave the sections of the province which is already overrepresented all the representatives they hare. Hon. gentlemen may think that that is perfectly fair, they may think that the principles of ethics do not apply to public: matters. I have a different opinion, I believe the people of this country will have a different opinion, and it is the duty of hon. gentlemen who sit on this side of the House to bring under the attention of larliament and of the whole country the character of the measure the hon. gentleman has submitted to this Honse. Let me take the case of the County of Midllesex. Fou have four representatives in this House from that county, one Reformer and three Conservatives. What is the rote in that county ?

There is more than jO 0 of a Reform majority in the County of Midllesex. In the Niagara district, the hon. gentleman proposes. although the vote as it stood the last time gave a majority in favour of the Opposition, to give the Opposition one member that is, to give the majority one memher, and to give three to the minority. That is the arrangement marle by the hon. gentleman in this Bill. Do these hon. gentlemen think they can sustain an injustice of that sort. that an injustice of that sort will he tolerated by the people of this comitry: Sir, I remember in 1882, when my constituency Was gerrymamdered and its bommlanies were altered. When, aceording to the vote that hat been recorded hefore, I was put in a minority of $3(x)$ : I appealed to the sense of justice and fairness of my constituency, and I say it to the honour of the Conservatives there, that a large number of them supported me and have continued to support me ever since, becaluse they would not wink at miseonduct so gross, at a system of political warfare that was in its chanacter so cowardly. Nothing the hon. gentlemen canclo. can be more discreditable to thein than ow undertake to secure themselves in possession hy altering the bommaries of constituencies in such a way as to cnable a minority of the electors of this comntry to elect a majority in Parliament. I saty it is an ontrage that ought not to be tolerated, that it is a principle as foreign to every man of proper british feeling as anything well can be. 1 can mulerstand how a policy of that sort may be tolerated in a comolty like Mexico or Pera, where the people hate no regard for principles of faimess ats applied to public matters and public life : but I say that it is an improper, it is an immoral and a cowardly course, for any party to pursue: and when hon. gentlemen propose to take from a section of country that is not alcumately represented at the present moment, two of its representatives and give them to a section of country that is regarder as Conservative, leaving the sections that are overrepresenter because they are conservative unchanged, they have adopted a course which the people: of this country will not sustain, and I trust there is a sense of manliness, a sense of fair-play sufficiently strong on that side of the Honse to discountenance such a course, and that hon. gentlemen opposite will assist hon. gentlemen on this side of the House in making this a fair measure, instead of heing an unfair measure as it is laid upon the Table of the House, and as it has been explained hy the Minis. ter of Justice.

Sir RICHARD (ARTIVRIGHT, I would sug. gest to the leader of the House that in bringing this measure down a second time, it prould be conrenient if a schedule were attached, giving the population of the proposel counties. He can easily fo that from the information he has in his hand, and it will save a good deal of trouble.

Mr. MILLx (Bothwell). I would ask the hon. Minister whether it is intender to have copies of the maps made for listribution among the members?

Sir JOHNTTHOMPSON. That cannot be done without very considerable delay. It would take a long time to draw the plans.

Mr. LAURIER. I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that no map of Quebec is to be found among those brought down.

Sir JOHN THOMPNON. There is one prepared.

Mr. BoW ELL. These maps only represent the old constituencies and not the proposel ones.

Mr. MILLA (Bothwell). But if the Honse were in possersion of shatl copries of these, we could easily mark ourselves the proposed changes. It would he a matter of great convenience.

Mr. Boll ELL. No far ats Ontario is concemed, the changes are so small that they can he easily laid upon the Table, as surgested by the member for South Oxford.

Motion asteed to, and ? Bili reat the first time.

HARBOUR OF THREF RIVERS.

Mr. Fositer mored that the Honse resolse itself into Committee of the Whole to consider. resolution (April esth) to anthorize the Harbour Commissioners of Three Rivense to raise a shm to be applied to the purchase of whares or beach pro. perty.

Sir RICHARI)('ARTWRIGHT. Before doing so the hon. fentleman had better state exactly what is to be done and how far we are to be mate liable for this sels,(OH).

Mr. FOSTER. In 1880 I fint that l'arliament authorized the Harlour Commissioners of Three Rivers to issue debentures to the amomit of $83(1)$, (XN), hearing 6 per cent interest. In the interim between 188: and 185. they hatl issued debentures to the amount of sibi, (in $)$, and in 158.5 the GoNernor in Council was authorizerl to alvance this $\mathbf{S}(63,6(0)$ alrealy issued, and the sum of $\$ 18,4(0)$ necessary to complete the works which at that time had heen malertaken, making altogether $3 S_{2}$, (KNI. Power $t=$ issue the remainder of the bonds was taken away from the Harbour (ommmis. sioners, and the forermment was given the lmods a sinking fund of one-half per cent. It is now proposed to give the commissioners authority to issue debentures for the balance lietween the $\mathbf{S} \mathbf{8}$ ?, $(M)$ issued amd advanced by the liovernment, and for which the fiovermment holl bonds, and the $\mathrm{S} B(\mathrm{~K},(1 \times \mathrm{K})$ which was originally proposed ; that is, to hearing 6 per cent interest, or : per cent interest. and 1 per cent for sinking fund, and to give these debentures 8218,0100 priority over the $882,-$ (n) of bonds that the Covernment hold at 4 per cent. I may say that for a number of years no interest has been paid. The works have been muproductive, they have not lieen finisher, no in terest has heen paid, and it is a condition precedent to any debentures heing issued muler anthority of this act, that the arrears of interest up to the date of the Act being assented to, shall he paid to the Govermment.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRI(H'T. Are the commissioners to negotiate these themselves, or is the Government going to alvance the money"

Mr. FOSTER. The commissioners negotiate these bonds, and the (iovernment have no reponsibility themselves.

Mr. IAURIER: I have no objection to the hon. gentleman taking the present stage, but I presume that before he takes a further stage he will be prepared to lay on the Table of the House the corres. pondence that has taken place.

Mr. FOSTERR. All the pipers will be hrought down.

Motion agreed to, amd Honse resolved itself into Committee.

(In the (ommittee.)

Sir RI(HARD) CARTWRIGHT. As I umber. staml. what the Minister proposes is to give these prionity over the existing lebt of the (iovermment?

Mr. Foster. Ves.
sir RI(HARI) CARTWRIGHT. It seems tome that that shouh not be done without a more satisfactory explanation than we have hat. To give S2ls,(KA) priority over sso.oKK) may amount, and very often ions amonnt, to absolutely wiping ont the second mortgage, and most people would regiarl it ats a very unsatisfactory security. Before we go further with this. we ought to know what revemue the corporation possesses, and what are the ammal expenses of maintaining the hathour, or maintaining the works from which this is groing to he levied.

Mr. FOsteR. I will emleavour to have an estimate, so far as it can be male, as to what the expected revenue of the works when completed will be. The tronble is at the present time that. as it stamds, although it is an asset, it is really a dearl asset. The works are not even half completed, they are only about one-guarter ilone, and conseruently the amount of revenue derived is rery small indeed. They contemplated, at tirst, works to the amount of $\$ 3(M),(M K)$; maler the pesent legislation, if approved, they will be authorized to make an expenditure to what they at tirst desired to make, that is. np to $\mathrm{S} 3(\mathrm{M},(\mathrm{NMO}$. That, it is thought, will place the harbour in it combplete state so that revenues may be olitained from it. As it is at the present time our interest has fallen in arrears, simply because the revenues from the incomplete work have not ieen sufficient, after paying the small expense of administration, to yiehl any consi-lerable amount. Something has been paid, but a large part of the interest is in arrears. By this legishation we do two things. In the first place, we get our arrears of interest up to date, and in the secom place, by having the harbour put into a complete state, we shall make the whole a live asset, so that probably if the business at all fills the anticipations of it, our security, though it is a second lien, will certainly not he less valuable than it is to-day, and it stands a chance of being an available asset. As it is at the present time, I must confess that it is a dead asset.

Nir RICHARI) (ARTWRIIHT. Looking at it as a purely business transaction, I would suggest to the Minister that it would be more to our interest, if we are to make any considerable reduction of our debt, to let them borrow siso, (N) or $$ 300,0 \times 0$ and pay us off. That would be a neat transaction, it would avoin the incomvenience of having two mortgages, and I for one would be willing, if the other members of the House are of the same opinion, to treat Three Rivers liberally and make a handsome reduction. I would throw off the interest and throw off a little bit of the principal in order to get the balance.

Mr. FOSTER. I think we will do hetter than that.

Mr. Lat:kiek.

Sir RICHARD) (:ARTWRIGH'S. I lo not think we will. The result of this will be practically that we might as well wipe out the $$ 80,(00)$ altogether. That is usually the result of putting large sums: ahead of our claims. I have no means of knowing, and the hon. gentleman has not as yet the data in his hands, what amount of trade or commerce is likely to be developed there, hut looking at the population of Three Rivers and looking at the general situation, it appears to me that the chance of paying the interest on SPIR, (MK) and of maintaining the works, and afterwards paying us back, is very slim indeed.

Mr. FOSTER. It camot be more slim than the prospect of paying the interest now.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Do I mmerstand the hom. gentleman that we postponed the priority that we how possess, in favour of the loan which he anthori\%es the commissioners to acguire?

Mr. FOSTER. The anthorized issue becomes a proferable lien: ours is put afterwards.

Mr. NAVIES (P.E.I.) I did not catch the hon. gentlemans reason as to why he thought that hy putting ourselves second we wonld inprove our security.

Mr. FONTER. The reasons I have given were these : The works are at present incomplete, and in conserfuence they protuce no alepuate revenue. Representations have been male, and I think, with a good deal of probability, that it is impossible that the trate can be carried on there until the harbome is put in a complete state. It the present time, although we have nominally a first lien it pays us no interest, lnt if the harbour is put in a state in which it will draw the tarle, the revenues will be increased, and the prospects will certainly be no less that we shall get something from it. We do gain ly this armagement the arramage of interest which will be paid, and the commissioners will he put in a prosition to make their harbour profitahle, if it is possible to do so. by the trade which will he drawn there consequent upon the completion of the facilities to accommondate it.

Mr. LAURIER. What are the works to be completed:

Mr. FONTER. Nome property there is to be acyuired, hut the main expenditure is for the buileling of new wharies.

Mr. DAVIEN (P'F.I.) I look with the greatest possible suspicion upon legislation of this kimel, and I think that anybody who has followed the legislation of the last twelve years in respect to allrances we pemitted the Quebec Harbour Commissioners to make for alleged improvements, will join in my feelings that in so far as we postpone the indebterness now due to us, we lose it altogether very probably, and in the not far distant future we will be callerl upon to assume this liability. The hon. gentleman knows that has been the experience with reference to the Quehec harbour works, and that will be the experience with respect to this work. I sulmit that it is reasonable and fair that, hefore we authorize the borrowing of this sum of money ly the Three Rivers commissioners and authorizo the postponement of our present claim in favour of the new loan, this House ought to be more fully informerl as to the character of the works. I think that the Giovernment, before introlucing this resolution, should have heen prepared with the report of the engineers ind the estimates of the work, so ats to enalile us to see the probability of interest heing paid upon this expenditure. As it is now, the House is alssolutely in the dark. Reasoning by anology and julging of probable results in this case from what has heen the actual results in similar cases, I think I am not going too far when I assert that we will not only probably lose the $$ 80,(0) \times$ which we have already adranced, but that a very strong effort will he made to induce us to assume the responsibility for this loan which these commissioners are authorized to make.

Mr. FONTER. It is always in our own hamls.
Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) 1 t is, and this is always the preliminary step towards asking the Dominion to issume the whole delit in order to recover the loan which is marle. I press upon the hon. gentleman that it is not fair on his part to isk Parliament to vote this resolution without putting us in possession of information, which I assume he himself must have, ats to the precise character of these works, and such information which would enable an ordinary menher of the House to juige whether there is a reasmalne probability of this money earning interest. The hon. gentleman has not given the House the information. If there are reports from engincers we shonld have them.

Mr. FosTERR. The hon. gentleman is perfectly right in saying the House onght to have information, but. as the hon. the leater of the Opposition has sain, this being only the initiatory stage, it was not necessary that it should be submitted. On the intronduction of the Bill I shall beglad to give the fullest information $I$ cian.

Mr. DAVIEN (P'.E.I.) I submit that the initiat tory stage should not le taken without this information. Weare taking a preliminary step, but a necessary step to the introduction of the Bill, and I contend that the information to justify us in baking that step shoulh be hefore us. Parliament will afterwards lee more or less committerl, and I enter my protest hecanse I have seen, in times gone hy, that when Parliament legislates in this direction it is not long before we are asked to aşume the entire debt. I have no faith in this proposition, and I certainly think the House ought to have the infomation that has justified the hom. gentleman in asking us to tote the resolution. That he has not given, although he must have hai it.
(Committee rose and reported resolution.

SUPPLY'-.WEXT INDIAN TRADE.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the Honse again resolve itself into (ommittee of Nupply.

Mr. BORDEN. Before the motion is carried, I desire to make a vary few olservations in reference to a matter to which I called the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance a day or two ago by a private note. It relates to the present position of trade relations hetween this country and the Spanish West Indies. I desire to get some information as to what result, if any, has come, or is likely tocome from the negotiations now going on letween the representatives of this (iovernment and the British Government and the Spanish fiovermment. Alrout a month agol I put the following question :-
" Whether any and what steps have been taken to secure for Canada the continuation of the present arrangement, ending on the 30th of June next. with spain, by which Canadian products, notably putatoes, fish and lumber, are admited to the Spanish West Indies, on the same terms as the products of the İited states."
I received the following answer from the Minister of Finance :--
"The matter has been represented to the British fiovermment, and Sir Charles Tupper has beell given full plenipotentiary puwers with Sir Drummond Wolff to enter into negotiations with the Simaish Government in regard to this matter."
Now, it seems that negotiations are going on, and it is with a view if possible to get some statement as to the present position aml the prospects with regard to those negotiations, that 1 hring this matter up now. I may explain to the Honse, in justification of this comerse, if any justitication is necessary, that the constituency which I have the honour to represent is specially interested in this matter. The export of potatoes from that comity, as well as from many other comnties from the Province of Nova scotia, will lee seriously atfected by the loss of the Spanish West Indian market. At the present moment the Havian market is the only market, with the exception of a very trifling one in the British West Indies, that we have for our potatoes : and as the Finanse Minister very well knows. the product of potatoes in the western part of Novia Neotia is a very large and important one. A year ago, probally fil, (k) harrels were shipped from my constituency alone. At any rate, from one port in that county $\mathbf{t 1}$, (MO) harrels were shipped direct to Havana, ami there werenoshipmentstrany other part of the world, becanse the markets of the rest of the world are absolutely elosed to us. The volume of the export trade from Nova Scotia to the Spanish West Indies during the year ending the 30th June last is shown hy the Trade and Nit exports to the Spanish West Indies in fish, hmber and potatoes were nearly equal to our exponts to the whole of the British West Indics. Therefore it will be seen that this tratle is one of very great consepuence to the people of the Prowince of Nova seotia. Now, I have heen urged by my consticaents tooltain if possible ananswer to the prestion I ann at present asking, hecause the season for planting potatoes is again approaching, and if we are not to continue to have that market on the same terms as we had it last year, it will be useless for the people engaged in that branch of agriculture to put in their cropswith any hope of exporting the product. A year ago, the question was under discussion in this House whether our products would have, during the seasom that is just past, entrance to the Havama market on the sime terms as similar products from the United states. At that time I took the view, which was supported by many members of this House, including the hon. Minister of Finance, that under the treaty leetwen Fingland and Spain, then existing ant still existing, under the most-favoured nation clause of that treaty, Canalian products must he almitied on the same terms as the proclucts of the United States under the treaty recently negotiated between the United States and Spain. It turned out that that riew was correct. Now we have approached a much more important aspect of this matter. We are face to face with the fact that. Spain has denounced the treaty under the most-favoured-nation clause of which the prolucts of Nova Scotia were admitted free to the Havana market last year, and that treaty will come to ant ent on the 3oth of June next. Consequently, we are face to face with this state of things, that after the Buth of June next Cnited States products will have free entry to the markets of the Spanish West Indies while the products of Nova Scotia and this bominion generally will have to meet a serious tax. In the article of potatoes the duty is sil per harrel. American potatoes will le admitted free. (amadian potatoes will have to meet a hostile tariff of Bl in Spanish gold per barrel, and you can say that is a prohilitory duty. It will te absolutely impossible for us to send our potatoes to Havana if that condition of things happens. I can illustrate that to the Honse ly something which happened during the month of september last. A shipment of potatoes was made of a steamer load of. , (OKN harrels from Kingsport in my county to Harana. The cargo reacherl Havana before the spanish officer there had receiver instructions from his (iovernment not to collect the duty. The duty was imposed by the Spanish officer, amd the net pronluct of that cargo of $\mathrm{J} .(\mathrm{OK})$ barrels, which was retwned to the shipper in Kingsport, amomited to the magnificent sum of Si3. After instructions had been received hy that ofticer, the duties were remitted, and a chegue was sent to the shippers for some 54, an $)$, which represents the cost and protit, if there were any, upon the shipment. Now, it is plain from that illustration that if we had not succeeder under the favoured-nation clause last year, in getting our products into Havana upon the same terms as those of the United states, it would have ammonted to simply giving away the potatoes after they had been exporten, and it would have been ahsolutely impossible to send a single barrel of potatoes to that market : and that is what will happen this year unless the dovernment is able to secure a continuation of that treaty. The people desire to know whether or not there is a reasonable prospect of ohtaining a continuation of that treaty. I shall not enter at any length into the discussion of the probability or otherwise of our leing able to (lo that, but I will mention this fact: I observe that in the treaty which has heen made between the United states and Spain, under a provision of the McKinley Bill which gives power to the Executive to make special reciprocity treaties, the spanish Minister says, in a communication to Mr. Blaine, that " his (iovermment has deciden to respond as promptly and as fully as its national interests and intermational engagements permit, to the legislation of the Congress of the United Nitates as set forth in the note of 3rt Jannary." I observe that there were really two treaties mare with the United States. One was hut a provisional measure which should terminate on the 3oth of Jme next. and I find that at that rery monent, or shortly afterwaris, the (iorermment of Spaingave notice to the British Government of its intention to terminate the treaty existing between (ireat Britain and Spain on the 30th of June next : and I observe that a further arrangement was made hetween Spain and the United States, which is called a rlefinitive arrangement, to come into force after the 31th of June next. Conseyuently it would seem as if there was a deliberate intention to terminate international engagements referred to ly the Spanish Ministry existing between Spain and other countries, in order to enable the Spanish (iovernment to make this definitive treaty with the United States. If that view of the case he the Mr. Borde:s. correct one, thon it would look as if we aould scarcely hope to procure an extension of the existing treaty, hecause spain would scarcely have denounced that treaty, and framed its policy with the view of making a special arrangement with the United States, and then within a few months or hefore the very day when notice was given to terminate the treaty, agree to an extension of it. However. I should be very glad to hear that there is a prospect of an extension of the treaty ; but if not it is open, of course, to the (iovernanent to make a new treaty, and it is with reference to these matters and for the reasons I have attempted to give that I desire the fullest information should he given, either now or at the earliest possible moment, with reference to this most important question, a question particularly affecting the trade of Nowa Scotia in the articles of lumber, fish and potatoes.

Mr. Boll ERs. I have had several letters from my constituents pressing this matter on me amd asking me to obtain if possible information from the fovernment. I mentioned the matter to the Finance Minister hut did not get much satisfaction. hut perhaps the hon. gentleman had not much information to give. I received a letter a short time ago from one of my constituents in Bear River, a member of the tirm of Clark Bros., who carry on a large lumber husiness there. He says:
"I have just received a letter from our agent at New York in regard to the effect the termination of the present treaty between Fugland and her colonies and Spain will have on our shipments to Spanish West Indies. At present Cuba draws her supply of sprnce lumber almost if not entirely from Nova Scotia. After 1st of July, all lumber from Nova Scotia going into Cuba will pay at the rate of $\delta 9$ (nine dollars) per M. duty while American lumber will go in free. The duty you will observe is so great as to make it impossible to send lumber to Cuba, in fact it is practically prohibitory. This will entail a very henwy Loss on lumbermen all uver Nova Scotia, but particularly on western Nova Scotia, as our shipments for some years past to Cuba from Annapolis, Bear River. Plymouth and Yarmouth have covered more than half the entire quantity cut. Can you ascertain from the Government if there is a probability of the treaty being renewed or what the outlook is?"
I would also call the attention of the (iovermment to the large amount of dry tish and farming produce sent from Digly ( oounty to the Spanish W'est Indies and which form a very latge part of the ex. ports from that county. The sereral ports of BearRiver, Dighy, Weymouth, and all along the shores of St. Mary's Bay, will ileeply feel the loss of those important markets, and I sincerely trust that the (iovermment will som be able to assure the comotry that such treaty will lee renewed.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not possible for me to give the hon. gentleman who has asked this guestion any definite information. The hon. gentleman has stated the case very correctly, I think, and theanswer which I geve on previous occasions have shown him and the House that negotiations are on foot.

Mr. DAVIEN (P'E.I.) Has Sir Charles 'Tupper gone to Madrid on this matter, or is he still in London:

Mr. Fonter. I will give the House the information before I have fillished. Representations were at once made by this Govemment to the British (iovernment in the way of negotiating for a continuation of the same terms we now enjoy or for other terins which would be favourable to our products, but the Spauish Govermment refused alisolutely to make any advance towards negotiations mutil they saw the result of the legislation in the French Chambers, because the legislation at that time under way in the French Chambers promised to bear very heavily on Spanish products, and is: the end did bear heavily upon Spanish products : and, while that was in progress, the Spanisli liovernment refused to enter into any negotiations at all. After that legislation became an accomplished fact late in the autum, the spanish Government had an additional motive for delay in studying the legislation which was accomplished and its effect upon spain herself. Shortly after the hegimning of the year, however, circumstances seemed (t) be more farourable, and, after the change of ambessadors, Sir Drummond Wolff was put in charge on the part of Cireat Britain, which was also, anxions to undertake negotiations for a treaty on her own account with Spain, and shortly after that again Sir Charles Tupper was appointed, as I have stated, co-plenipotentiary with the English ambassador at Manlrid. The English ambassador went to Mallid and from that time to this has been approaching the subject, dependent of course on the ammant of co-operation lent to him by the Spanish dovermment, which up to a late periond hats not been very marked. Sir Charles Tupper has not yet left London for Madrich, but is in daily expectation of being called there. He will lee called there as soon as negotiations have progressed so far that his services will be actually necessary ; there is no use in his being at Madrid until the spanish doverment are willing to madertake the ponjurlers. The latest information we have on the subject is contained in a telegrann just received from Sir Charles Tupper in which he states that he expects to start for Madrid at probably a few days notice. As negotiatious are in that state, my hon. friend will see it is impossible for me to give him any definite information. The only thing we can do is to hope that the relations of Spain with (ireat Pritain which, on account of the termination of treaties. have placed prospectively in a different position the two countries, and one less favourable to their mutual interest than hefore, may make it a point of interest to both nations to make new arrangements to take the place of those that will come to a termination on the lst July, and we may also, I think, from the treatment we have offerel to Spanish products by our tariff, which is much more favourable to them than that of the United States on the whole, be hopeful that there will be a farourable outcome to the negotiations which are in progress.
sir RICHARI) CARTWRI(iHT. In what respect is our tariff more farourable to them than the tariff of the United States:
Mr. FOSTER. I say that it is more favourable, taken as a whole. The articles which are the basis of the treaty of the United States with Spain are coffee, hides, sugar and molasses. Now the chief exports from the Spanish Antilles are sugar and molasses. It will be in the recollection of hon. gentlemen that, while these negotiations were proceeding between the United States and Spain, Spain tried hard to get her tobaccos into the United States on more favourable rates. She did not succeed. She pays the full tariff, which is very high in the United States, on her ummanufactured tobacco which goes into that country, and, whilst in the article of molasses, which is not a very large export, the Unitel States tariff gives an adrantage over ours, and while on sugar over No. 14 she gives an adrantage under the tariff, thongh $I$ ann told that the sugar over No. 14 forms a very small percentage of the total export, we give free entry to all her sugars up to and including No. it, and we give her tobaccos free access to our market in the ummannfactureal state, so that, taken on the whole, our tariff conditions are more favourable to Spain than those of the United States. More detailed information it is impossilhe to give except that this Government and the British fiovermment are pursuing the negotiations and pushing them as rapidly as possible, but of course there are two parties to these negotiations and one cannot proceed more rapilly than the other will consent to.
It being six oclock, the speaker left the Chair.

SUPPLS- WEST INDAS TRADE.

Mr. FLINT. When you left the Chair the Minister of Finauce had just male a brief but very lisconarging statement to the representatives of the Maritime Provinces. In common with all the representatives, particularly from Noca Scotia, I heard the statement of the Finance Minister with a great deal of regret: nor do I propose. in the few remarks which I shall make on this important sulbject, to lay any blame at the door of the dovernment for any of these unfortunate results or failures in commection with the negotiations for the continuance of the present satisfactory terms on which our products are received in the Spanish Antilles. In order that the House may perceive the great importance of this sulject to the perphe of the Maritime Provinces, and particularly to those of Nova Scotia, I will ask the liberty of again calling attention to some of the more salient items of our export and import trade with the Spanish West Indies. Almost the whole of the export trade of the Dominion of Canala with the Spanish West Indies is from the Province of Nowa Scotia. From the Province of Quebee the item is so small as not to merit a quotation, and the same may le said with regard to the Province of Ontario. The small Province of Prince Edward Island exports to the Spanish West Inclies scarcely anything of importance; but when we come to the Province of Nova scotia we find that ninety-ninehundredths, I may sty, of all our exports to the Spanish West Indies go from that province, the total amount being, of products of the Dominion, $\$ 1,191,917$. To show the magnitude of this item, as compared with our other exports, I need only say that our exports to Great Britain are $\$ 2,263,3,594$; our exports to the United States are $\$ 3,318,504$. Thus it will be seen that the exports from Nova Scotia to the Spanish West Indies are about half those to the United States; and a very large percentage in proportion to those that go to Great Britain. The largest item in connection with these exports is that of the pronluce of the tisheries, anomanting to $\mathbf{8} 041,633$. The next laresest item is exports, the products of the forest sis. $\overline{3}$ : 2 : of agricultural products, $\$ 137$, ,i33. Now, if, as has heen said ly the hon. member for Kings, and iss mast be quite apparent from the few remarks that he made in illustration, the probable, and 1 might almost say, ineritahle, effect of the rescission of the present adrantagens terms moler which our products are received in the spmish West Indies. will he. I think it is 'fuite apparent. that' this trame will almost come to al stamilstill: and 1 cammot but express my regret that this comes at a time when. owing to complications with our fellow colonists in Newfomilaml, it seems that a large portion of our trate with that colomy was aks, about to be intercepted. 1 must say that 1 do mot think that the Ministry. whether the fanlt is entirely theirsor partially theirs. or whether it be altongether the fault of circumstances, can congratulate itself upon its success in wegotiations for reciprocal trate arangements particularly during the past few years. They have failed, miserably failed, wreteheily failen, in their efforts to secure ayy amelionation of the trale restrictions with the United States of America. We have alson failed. notwithstanding, 1 helieve, the rery serious efforts made on hehalf of the Covernment by the Finance Minister, to secure any alleviation of our trade condition with the British West Indies. Then we have this last bow coming upon the people. particularly of the Province of Novia Scotia, and 1 must say that, taken in comnection with the excessive tariff upou imports into that province. and the large exolus which is groing on week ly week and month hy month, from that province, the outhok is discounaging imbeed. If there were any words of hope in the few ohservations addressed to us by the Minister of Finance to-lay, they would have been received by the representatives of that province in this Honse and ly the people of Nova scotia, with a degree of sitisfaction which can probably le imagined from the broal statement of the figures which have been laid before the Honse in connection with our trade relations with those islands. We have, however, the promise that the High Commissioner of Canada in England is expecting to be called upon wry shortly again to renew negoti ations on this important subjeot at the Court of spain. This. muler sonne circumstances. might give us a great deal of encouragement, knowing, as we do. the chergy and the capalility of that hon. gentlenam: hut, even this is very much dimmed when we recall the fact that for the last eight or nine sears we have had promises made which have mot heen fulfilled, sone of them in very strong terms imbeed, and expectations held out of a very favourable character, as to what was heing accomplished, or was likely to be accomplished, hy the efforts of the High Commissioner with the people of Spain. I trust most sincerely that some result may flow therefrom, and that the Ministry and the (Government may be in a position, within a very short time, to amnounce to this House, or in some other way to the people of this country, that a more favourable outlook is promised in regard to our trade with the Spanish West Indies. We have a large import trade from those islands, larger, perhaps, than many hon members are aware, certainly larger than a great many people throughout the country have an idea of. The Province of Ontario imports almut $\$ 37$, (KK1), paying a duty of sit.34. from those islands: the Province of Quebec last year returned imports of $\$ 1,4 ; 0,67 \overline{7}$. paying an import duty of $\$ 829,623:$ the Province of Nowia Sontia imported $\$ 318, \mathbf{i} 36$, apon which they paid a duty, in round numbers, of S161.0(0). New Bruswick imported \$133.4:7. upon which they paid a duty of $\$ 1.312$. I think that this large volume of imports from the spanish West Indies. paying into our treasury so large an amount of revenue, certainly is a great reason for making farourable nerotiations with the riovernments of those islands. 1 think that in considering any reduction of our tariff, the dovernment might take into consideration the circumstances of this country, and the large colume of imports from the Spanish West Indies which pay duty into the Dominion treasury, to see if they camot make use of this fact as an assistance to their negotiations in comnection with their efforts to ohtain the favourable terms they have alluded to. I presume, and 1 think $I$ ain riçht in assmming, that none of these features have heen neglected. and from it persomal knowledge of the marest which is felt in commercial circles. particnlarly in the fishery business circles of Nova scotia. I call omly reiterate to the members of the Honse and to the diovermment, that in all their efforts-if they are making serious efforts-through their High Commissioner to imeliorate our trade relations with the spanish West Inlies, particnlarly in anticipation of the 30th day of June next. that they will have the warm and earnest sympathy and co-nperation of members on both sideof this Honse. This at the present time is a matter of almost vital importance the people of Sova Scotia, and moless some arrangement is made. by which our senods. particularly the promace of our fisheries. cim be sent to the Spanish West Ludies upon ats favomable terms as those of the United States. very great loss and very great eommercial depression will be felt throughout almost every portion of the Provinee of Noria seatia. I presume that it would be tox much to expect that this session we should receive any important news in comnection with this matter, but 1 trmst that long before the House meets again we will be able to hear from the dovermment the amomeement of a definite settlement of this important yuestion.

Mr. Forbris. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Finance Minister whether these negotiations at Madrid. hetween England and Spain, are being transacted on helalf of the British Empire and Spain, as a whole, or whether, through the Colonial secretary and Home dovermment. on behalf of the Dominion of Canadia Covernment specially. I wonld like to know whether the negotiations have reference to the tiagre of the Dominion particularly or to the trade of the whole Empire. The matter is probally of no more vital importance to any part of the Empire than it is to the Province of Nova sentia. I would als, like to ask the Finance Minister if he cim tell us. why it is, and for what reason, the old treaty was abrogated at the instance of Spain. Was it because of anything that Canada or (ireat Britain had refused to do for Spain or the Spanish West Lndies, or was it that requisition hat been male to the Imperial or Dominion Covermments for concessions to the Spanish West Indies and to

Spain. which could not he concerlenl? Why was it. ami wherein lith the obstacles exist to our having a comtinnance of the ohl treaty, or the establishment of a new one on possibly hetter relations: Prominence has been given to the great importane of the tanle of the Spanish West Indies with the Imminion of Canada, amd 1 wish particularly to draw the attention of the Finance Ninister--I have mo doultt that he is well aware of it alreanly himself -to the fart that almost our entire trale with the Spanish West Indies is from the lrovince of Nova Scoria. The total export trade from the Dominion to the Spanish West Indies amomithg last vear to ince of Sowa Neotia : the great hulk of it consisting of the two great matters of export from that prorinee. namely, pronlucts of the tisheries and the forest. Of promitets of the fisheries we expmet Sung.(KK), and of ile pronlucts of the forest $\mathbf{S}$ © we only export to the Spanish West Indies, sin.!nio, le. Wise for us to matke certain concessions to the Spanish West Indies which I have no cloult woblel realily be aranted by the other provinces of the [bominiom inasimuch as the great part of the tranle is "ith the Province of Nowa Neotia, and she in hev tam womld he willing to make equal concessions to the other provinces in some other line wherely more extended trade relations might he established with the spanish West linlies. It is of great im. protane to the life of the trale of the lrovince of D., ar sootia that some hetter trale relations shombl In. - atablished between the Doninionand the Spanish IVest Inties. It is almost certain that we: will lose the Spanish West Indies tranle. and after 3uth Jume "1- atre in danger of losing the British West Indian trate. as it is well known to be a rule of trale that where a comitry sells her sumplus pros. fhers there also will she buy what is reguired. (innsempently. when the treaty between the british Wi:s Inlies and the United Nates comes into aperation it islikely that they willouy their supplies from the Conitel riates and thus we will lose that arenue of trale. 1 slo mot iloult that this matter hats lneen already brought to the attention of thes Finame. Minister and that he is doing his utmost to hring alont a letter state of things, but it is alondutely necessary that every piat of the lhmis. nion shomill be male anare of the vast importance of this question to the Province of Sova Scotiat. I thust that if anything can be done hy any representatives of the other provinces of the Dominion in the ('ilhnet, that they will give way wherever it maty lne necesary tosustain the trale which we hate now left to us, and to promote more extendend relations with these foreign markets. Probalhy the Minister of Finatnce will not express an opinion ats tor the difficulties that lie in the way of this treaty heing hanl, but that is in matter for him to saty. The merchants alomg the south shore of Novit suotia are anxious to know whether the elifficulty comes from Spain or her colonies. or whether it comes from dieat Britain and her eoomies. The repiy of the Minister of Finance to the hon. member for King: (Mr. Borden) leaves us exactly in the position we were in twelve months ago, and it leaves us with the prospect of no better future after the lst of July next than we have to-day. This is a matter of serious moment to the Maritime Provinces, and I trust that a fair solution of the matter will he arrive: at, and ome that will be protitable to the Maritime I'rovinces.

Mr. ('AMPBFILI. Mr. Speaker. the stabject Which has heen bronght before the attention of theHouse is well worthy of serions consideration. Our trale with the jpanish Antilles is of very great importance to the people of the Province of Ontarios as well as to the province down hy theseal. It is well known that a great many of the articles which we mannfacture in the Province of Ontario, untally flomr. have hat their markets largely circumserihed of late. We found at protitable market in Newfomallame for a large quantity of our Hour, and from the begimning of the fiscal year in duly, to Nomember, when the Newfommbland (iovermment impresed discriminatory duties against (amada, we sent to that colony l(M), (an) harels of thomr. That atformed : very protitable: ontlet to the millers of the Provinee of intario for the flow that they manufacture hat owing to the obstruction thrown in the way by the Dominion Govermment in impsinge a duty on their tish, ther cetaliated hy imposin!er at duty on our fonr. anil conseguently that matiket has heen lost tu us. The (uhan and lorto Riew markets are very large eonsumers of flowr, amet it is of the utmost importathese that they shombl he opren the ( imanian millers as well as to Americans. I timl ath article in the great importance of that market, and how the: American people appreriate it. It silys:
"We have shown how muder the reciprocity treats and exports of flour tu Cuba have multiplied nine-foll sine last sear-the figures being 118, t2l barrels. valued at Sise, 64, for the months of Jamary and February last pending monthe ot lsul. hefore reciprocity went into operation. In sixty days after the new treaty in its allplication to flome went intocffect, we sent nearly as much precediar.
That shows the great importance of those markets. and how highly they appreciate them. Then. further on, the article siay:
"And the effects of reciprocity are heing only partially. felt as yet. For emmetine Canalian arriedtural products are now being admitted into Cuband Porto Rico under the same conditions as aur products. But Spain has "denonneed" the commercial treaty with the british (forermment, by which the Canadians clames this - most-favoured-nation privilege. The treaty expireson lit July next. Thereafter. Canadiom products will hate to pay full duty in Cuba and Porto Rico, amd we, shall enjuy a practical inoneply of the: colonial markets."
In view of that stitement. I think it is of rely great inportance that every possible step shoulil he taken to prevent the abrogation of that treaty: hy which we are able now to abtain aceess to the markets of those two conntries on the sitne terms ats the American people. I umberstom from the Finame Minister, to. lay, that our High Commissioner was waiting for it smmmons from אibin to negotiate a treaty. We were tohl, last year. that he was waiting for the same summons, so it seems that he has been wating for twelve months amel no summons has tome yet, and I think it likely that he will have to wait a long while before it will come. Now, the manufacturers of the l'rovince of Ontario, owing to the failure of the negotiations for reciprocity with the United States, and the blumlering of the Dominion (iovernment in shatting up the Newfoundland market, tind it very hard, inleed, to oltain outlets for their goonls; and now, seeing that these new olstructions are likely to he set up on the lat of July next, and that time is rapiolly ipproa :hinge it is of the utmost importance that the (iovernment should take every means in their power to prevent any disurimination against Canada in entering the markets of the spanish Antilles. We can only hope that the Government will make every effort to prevent the abrogation of the privileges we now enjoy.

Mr. MILL: (Bothwell). I think that some of my hom. friemis here must have forgoten the proproitions embrated in the Aldress of the diovernment to the Imperial Parliament, or at all events to the (iolonial Necretary, last year. It is assumed that the Minister of Finance and his colleagues would ileprecate the termination hy spain by this weaty containing the most-favomed-nation clanse. Well, Nir. I am rather astonished at that expression of opinion, becaluse the Spanish fiovernment has only done what the Minister of Finance amb his colleagues asked the Imperial (iovernment last sear by a formal Aldress to ilo: and I suppose that ats long as the result has been accomplished, as long as the treaty has been denounced, the practical conseyuence of its denunciation will be exactly the same, whether that came from the fiovermment of spain or from the (:overmment of the United Kingdom. The hom. gentleman, at the close of last session, after nearly every member on both sides of the Honse: hatl fone home. asked the fuorum that remained to present a formal Aldress, which the hom. gentlemath did not think it worth while to bring down at an earlier perion of the session, to the Imperial Parliameni, not only advising the Ministers of the ('rown in the United Kinglom what they ought to do in the interest of Canada, but what ought to be lone in the: interest of the whole Empire. The hom. gentleman followed the example of the tailors of Tooley Sitreet : he proposed to speak, not only of the cominty which he representenl, but for every other portion of the british dominions which he did not represent. Now, let me call the attention of the Honse to the concluding paragraph of the Aldeess which the Minister of Finance asked this Honse to seml to our Most firacions sovereign. That Aldress condules as follows:---
"The Senate and House of Commons therefore humbly request lour Majesty to take such steps an may be necessary to denounce and terminate the effect of the provisions referred to as well in the treaties with the German Zollverein and with the Kingdoun of Belgium, as with any other nation in respect of which such provisions are now in force."
Surely it could not he supposed that the hon. Minister of Finance, when imploring our Gracious sovereign to denounce all the treaties containing the most-favoured-nation clause, could be carrying on a correspondence to prevent the denumciation of this one particular treaty? I think it is a pretty wel! recognized principle of logic that what is said of the whole must be said of each of the parts, and when the hon. gentlemanasked for the clenunciation of all the treaties containing this clause, he included in that universal category the treaty between Spain and the United Kingdom under which those advantages were enjoyed which are now about to be terminated. Well, sir, it is quite clear from this Address what the views of the hon. gentleman were as to important questions of public policy. The hon. gentleman knew right well that there was not, at anl events in his lifetime, the slightest hope or expectation that the fiscal policy of the mothercountry would be changed in the direction pointed to in that Aldress---that the Imperial (iovernment would legislate to the detriment of the trade of $t^{-}(H)$, (KK), (N) , with foreign states, in order to confer a special bencfit upon the depentencies of the Empire, the trade with which was not onefourth of that amount. No the hon. gentleman knew that there was not the slightest probability or chance oi the moption of the policy which was suggested in that Alliress: but he was looking, in this as in other matters, not to the general wellheing of the community, but to the political ailvantages which the dinvermment might enjoy hy undertaking to persuade the somewhat sensitive loyal population of (amala that this was in the interest of the Empire--that it would he of very great athvantage to inlopt hetween the present day and the day of juigment the poliey marked out in this Alddress. And so the hon. rentleman was prepared to sacrifice any day that advantage that ('anala might enjoy under the arrangements now existing in oriler to secure those political alvantages which an appeal to the loyal sentiment of the country might confer upon the Arlministration. And so we find the hom. gentleman and his colleagues asking the Imperial Govermment to denomece this treaty. Well, the: Imperial liovemment exercised a hetter and a more olisinterested juigment on hehalf, not only of the people of the Uniteal Kinglom, hat of the dependencies of the Fimpire, and they decline to pursue any such course. They reclined to take the line which the hom. gentleman suggested in this Aldilress at the fay ent of the session. But Spain did for the hon. gentleman what the mother country refuserl, and so we find the liovermment in the present position, that one of the most important markets open to the people of the Naritime Provinces for the special prolucts of these provinces has leen closed in conserguence of the action of the Spanish (iovernment, and closed, sofar as we know, in ennseguence of the action of hon. gentlemen at the last days of the session last year. I think that the Acministration owes something to the Honse. Let those hon. gentlemen get up in their places and tell the people of this country how they came to move the Aldress which they sent to the Imperial diovernment, in the absence of a large majority of those who sit on this side of the House, in the alsence of a large majority of those who sit on that side, after the memhers had left, after the opportunity for full discussion had gone by. When they proposel this Address they must have foreseen what the consequences of such a proposition would be. Did the hon. gentleman want this treaty between (ireat Britain and Spain, under which those alsantages were sustained, denounced: If he did not, why did he ask for this general denunciation by the Aildress last year? The people will hold the hon. gentleman responsible for that Adilress, and they will hold him responsible for the disastrous consequences which are likely to flow from that Aldiress by the denunciation of this treaty by Spain. How could the Imperial Government press upon Spain the propriety of the continuation of this treaty when the very parties who were most concerned in its maintenance, through those who, it must be assumed, representel their opinion, called upon the Imperial Government for its denunciation? That responsibility the Imperial (lovernment were not ready to take. That responsibility, therefore, was one they left to the hon. gentleman opposite and left to the sovermment of Spain. But the result, however disastrons it may be, will lie at the loor of the hon. Gentlemen who sit on the Treasury benches. This aldress is clear and specific in its terms, and from those terms it will he seen that the hom. gentleman wanted not only this treaty denounced hat every other treaty which seenred any advantage to the people of Gmata or the people of any other portion of the British Empire. They did in this address call upon the lmperial (iovermient, not only to denome these treaties, so far as they affected (cmada, but they undertook to speak for Australia and Cape Colony and every other possession of the British Empire as well as for the British Islamls: aml if the people of the Maritime Provinces fiml a market which is well nigh essential to their existence, chosel to them. they have their representatives who sit on the Treasury lenches, and who are responsible for the administration of the affairs of this country, alone to blame for what has actually transpires.

Motion agreed to, and House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Immigration Expenses........... sision, (4)

Mr. FLINT. In comection with this item, 1 wish to call the attention of the committee to an occurrence which took place last sumner while the Homse was in session, in comnection with the visit of the farmers lelegates to this country, and I wish to ask the Minister if it is contemplated that there whill be any more attempts made to have visits from representative famers of the mother country:

Mr. CARLINE: There is no intention so far as I am itware. I do not know what the Minister of the Interior maty do, hut so far as 1 know there is nos intention.

Mr. FLINT. In comection with that, I wish to express a certain degree of regret that at this stage we have not the report of the delegates who visited the Lower Provinces during the latter part of last summer, because it would be interesting to find what their views and ideas are as regards the state of agriculture there and the prospects for canrying ont in immigration policy in those portions of the Deminiom. In comnection with that suljeet, I desire to call the attention of the committee to a complaint which was made almut the middle of september last with regard to certain official courtesies which were attempted to be extended to the farmers delegates by the Provincial Government, but which, owing to what I shall at present call an unfortunate misunderstanding, were not extended. As I recollect the circumstances, the High Commissioner in Lomlon sent a communication to the Premier of the Province of Nova Scotia asking him to extend the courtesies of the Provincial Giverument to these delegates and generally to use his position as Premier in influencing the Local Government to make their visit a success. The Premier, being about to visit England, left word with his colleagues and particularly with the acting Premier, and through him with the head of the Agricultural Bureau of Nova Scotia, to see that these delegates were properly looked after. The superintendent of the agricultural branch made arrangements to receive the delegates on their arrival, to look after their hotel accommonation. and to give them such at reception, and such a view of the comntry. amd such an opportumity tomet lealing agriculturists as would display in the best possible light the resources and facilities of the province generally. Lp to almost the ere of the arrival of the delegrates, it was understrond that the prorince would do its share to show the ressurees of the province to them, and to show proper courtesy them, but it transpired upon the arrival of these gentlemen that a private genteman in the city of Halifas who was prominently comected with the Conservative party hal authority from the Department of Agriculture, or from some of the Cabinet Ministers it Ottawa, to umbertike this duty himself on lehalf of the Dominion davernment, and that one of the lepmoties or subordinates of the Minister of Agriculture was detailed from Ottana to meet the lelegates, take charge of them, see after their comfor, and assist them in the ascharge of their duties. This createla sery painful and disiagreeable feeling not only in political cirches in Nopa Sootia but anong the peopie at lage. particulatly among the large mumber of the peoph oi the province who supperted the l'revinctal Alministration. It was felt that here a gerat apportmity was lost in the first phate to remove from the visit of these delegates all appeamane of politiad hias on feeling whatever, and in the second phate there was lost, "wing to this error of julament, this misunderstanling which I think arose from the great ohliguity which was shown on the part of these whotetel in this way in the city of Halifas in regarel to what suciai , luties demanderl. an op. portunity for favorably impressing the e delegates: with the resources of the province. I do not desire to take up the time hy realing from the long worrespondence which tonk place at that time hat I will sum it up and will ask a full and complete explanation from the Minister in regard to it. The correspondence amomed to this: that owing to the reguest of the High Commissioner to the Premier of the province, expectations were held out, and the Local (iwermment. were prepareal to receive those delegates on lehalf of the province, to throw the whole of the resources of the province open to them, to accompany them to various parts. of the province, hat that private citizens. prominently comected with the party in power at Ottawa, and particularly in opposition to the Lowal (iovermnent, including no less a one than the leader of the Opposition in the Provincial Legislature, took charge of them in order to show them through the country: Friction was created, mpleasant social relations existel, and, I think, the expectations of the public in the Province of Nowa Nootia were, to a great degree, frustated, owing to this, as it appears to me, 'very great sociat and diplomatic blunder on the part of somebody. I think it was unfortunate that the Local Covernment was not taken cheerfully into the contidence of the Department of Agriculture at Ottawa, and that the most friendly relations were not sustained hetween the two Governments. Then the visit of these delegrates would have been as great a success as it should have been. Of course, I am speaking subject to the disalvantage of not seeing the reportof the delegates. We may have that before us at a later perion. I am also under the disalvantage of not knowing what has taken place between the high parties concerned sine the converponlence was published in the press, hut it secons tolue a little unfortmate that. when Ifelegrates are visiting us from the mother comatry in regarel to the publication of whose views a great deal of interest is manifested, the spirit of which we were suaking last evening shonlal not lee displaye.l. I toust that, in all matters emmected with immisuation. there will he an active interest taken liy the Ihminion and the exerentive boties of the varinus provinees to work together harmonionsly. This has been tow much neglected in the past. anil. if $w$ eran ealtivate a manimity of atem in the - vpembitur of mondy in all matters commected with immigration, I Ielieve the deportment will hat ee much greater sucesess than it hats hat in the piost. In somic pirticulats. I think the interests of the prov inces, and particulanly the interests of the Naritime lrovinees, have heen overlomkel amel dambiged he the orer-eargerness amb zeal and :ansiety of the bominion divernment to introlne inmigitats into the Sorth. West. There has been a teninlency to werlink the needs. the resources and the repuirements of the Maritime Provinces. On this sulijeet. I shatl look with interest for the remberks of the Minister.

Mr. TCPIPFt: Perhaps 1 may lue alloneal m sity a few words on this sulpact. its the hom. gentle. min was gernl $\cdot$-1ungh to tell me in adrance that he propesseil to allulie to this matter. Nucloulit he gave me that information hecanse my mame was comineted with the correspundence whichappeated in the mess of Nova sentia hast fall. ambl. though I have not refrembed my memory her pernsing that correspmense for the small priat i tork in it. in reply to at telewam sent tu me hy lhe Lainson. I thinik 1 rememiner enomest to be ahle a saty that it Wats unthing mome or lese than a mismmerstanding oll the patit of some members of the Laxal fios: ermment of Nova Nerotia, and at the same time it reubest to the lepartment of Agriculture that that weprarment wobld see that some one was at Handfax on the arrival of these delegates to meet them and practianlly to guide them or arrange for guides for thens in their jrogerss through the province. I Was comsulteal on the suligeet, amil inamed a Fenthonit to whomi I think the hon. membere for Fammoth (Mr. Flint) referred, Mr. (ithath. who reptesents ance of the comaties of Novat seotia in the Lonal Legislature and he memertook tore for the lhepartment of ferriculture in that comection. It appeass that after that the secretary of the department also went. to Halifas. and I received from 1 br . Lawsom. Whin is the seoretary of the Bonarl of Agriculture: a telegram in which he repeated word for word, apparently, the letter of intronluction whith the High Commissioner had sent to the lremier of Nova scotia hy these farm delegatess : there was nus other word in the telegram. merely a repetition of that letter. Without the slightest ilesire to be disoonteons, on the contraty, simply to state the fact, my recollection is that 1 answereal 1 hr. Lawson's telegram. Though no question was atsked, I mentioned the fact that Mr. Cahata hat heen asked by the Departnent of Agriculture to look after these gentlenen. Now, I did not reme, I do not real now, the letter of the High Commissiomer in any other sense than, apparently, the sense in which it was framen. He was not asking the Local fiovermment to incur any expense, nor to appoint any particular officel to take charge of them, hut he was asking, just as the: nember for Viarmonth (Mr. Flint) umierstands the letter. that the Lanal fiovemment should exteml to them all eonurtesies in their power. so as to make the visit of the delegates to the Province of Nova Nentia as pleasant and profitalbly. as possible. The hon. gentleman, I am glan tosaty. is wrong if he thinks that the misumlerstandinge lasterl long. and that those: comrtesiess were not extemiden, hecaluse the secretary of the l epartment of Agriculture is my atuthority for stating that these difticulties were overome. and that the delegates were contenusly received and entertained lis the Loceal fiovermment, who, so far as they could, facil. itated their movenents thronghout the province. For instance, I recollect that ihey requested and oltacined passess wer the Windsrir anil Amapolis Railway, if 1 am not mistaken. and the lanal (iosermment assisted in that respect the seceretary of the bepartment of derie:ulture in comnection with the commission. The unpleasant feeling that aruse was happily elispellell hefore these genthonen left the province. No far is I recollect. I Was mot reguested, nor dor I leliere any niember of the Eavermment was repbiested, to explain the: part that was taken: lut from the piapers it aceurs to me that br. Latwism misimulerstomel the reppuest as contained in the letter which was sent lig the High (ommissioner to the Premier of Non a ferotia. That there wiss a misumberstambing is clear : that there was any intention 1 . offent the members of the Local isovermment of Noma Sontia, I most stoutly and pessitively blens: That intention nerer existed from first to liset. alas the reduest. so fiar ats the departmerst wits cont. ermeal: for some gemeloman torlerote his time tor the eompany anm act practically as agent for theordelegrates, was most matmonlly made to Mr. ('ahans. Who was in overy sense gualitied : the hom. qentle:man will not deny that he was well $\mathrm{I}^{\text {nablified to }}$ act in a case of that kime, being familiar with th. prodince and its reshures. He was in every semse well albe, and did very suce:essfully inform these Ilelegater what protions of the provinee to visit. and the means of setting there, and sar oin. The secretary of the departiment, as 1 ann informeal. received from the Lacal (inemment eansiderable assistance. The delegates receiven the comrtesy Sir Charles Tupper anticipated would bee shown them ly the lacal dinemment. I speak mow without having had recent reference to any sorrespondence that ocemred, and my reoollection is that the only eorrespmelene was iomataned in the telegrans which I have mentionel.

Mr. FLINT. I Wh I malerstand from the Minis. teit that all further friction between the department and the Local diovernment has cetisedy? Hats there been any rapporarlomen! between the $t$ wa (iovermments ly way of explanation to remone this apparent ditliculty ${ }^{\circ}$ I think it is to be regretteal that something of this kind was not donc, because we know that in the l'rovince of Novia sicotial local politios run pretty high. I desire to say here that I am speaking entirely on my own authority without having had the slightest consultation on word, direct or indirect, with the Local (iovernment of Nova Keotia. I am spenking solely from impressions maile upon my mind hy converstation with parties outside the (ioverment of Nova Nicotia.

Mr. Finst.

Mr. TUlPPER. Ami Dr. Lawson's letter.
Mr. FLINT. Ves, I mean to sity that I think there was ath error of judgment, at the very least, in sletailing the leader of the Local Opposition prominently to take charge of the farmers' delesates in the Province of Nova scotia, particularly in fitce of the fact that the visit of those delegates trook phace after a conversation between the High (ommissioner and the Premier of the province. It secems that the l'remier of the prosince was in Englaml. and I presime he had a fric:odly conversittion with the High Commissioner as to what would lie the most facomable season of the year for the delegates to visit the province, and he eahled his acting l'remier with the result of the conversation. Si, the arrival of the delegates at the time they did arrive, was the result of the comseration leetween the Premier of the province and the High (ommissioner, and it was very unfortmate, to say the least, I hink it was an error of julgment, in issking the leader of the opposition to take a tow prominent part in the publice reeeption and the public travels of the agents thoush the province, particularly in face of this mismilerstanding. I am glan to know that the Ireach hats not heon any more extensive, and I simerely trust that on future occasions of visits of delegations to the province, there will be a determinerl effort on the part of the dovernment not merely (1) arobloccasion for any feeling of this kimb, hat that there will beean active desire to draw the Laxal Alministration into the reception, and into the journeyings of the delegates, in onder that they may feel that they are participating and sharing with the Imanion, perhaps in the expense, at any rate in the pleasure, and the responsibility, of making these risits agreeable and suceessful.

Mr. PORBFS. Do 1 unlerstand the Minister to say that the gentleman whom he retained on lefhalf of the Dominion forermment, was the leader of the local Opposition, Mr. (ahan, and that he has heen paid therefor:

Mr. TLPPIER. I do not say what he was paid. 1 sity that Mr. Cahan acted in that capacity, hat I hat nothing to do with his pay.

Mr. Fonbitis. Merhaps the Minister of Agriculture conld saty whether he has been paid for his services, aml how much:

Int. CARLINE: I think Mr. Cahan was paid for his services, for the time he gave to condacting the delegates aromel the provinces.

Mr. FolRPSE. Cin the Minister tell how much:
Mr. CARIING. His travelling expenses only.
Mr. FORBEA. Will it be possible to get the exact figntes:

Mr. CARLIN: I think so.
Mr. FORBEN. (am the Minister give them now:

Mr. CARLIN(: I think it is Siso.

Mr. BORDEN. I am very glad to hear from the Minister of Marine that there was no affront intended by this Guvernment to the Govermment of Nova Scotia. But I think that the Minister must agree, that at the moment, at any, rate, that this matter occurred, the (iovernment of Nova Scotia had a right to think that an affiront was intended. There was the fact that the High Commissioner had sent these delegates with it letter to the leader of the (iovernment of Nova scotia.

Mr. TCPPER. The existence of that letter was not known at the time.

Mr. BORDFN. I rid not understand the Minister to say that, but the fact that the existence of the letter was not known puts an entirely different construction upon the affiair, 1 admit at once. It was very unfortunate, however, that the High Commissioner did not communicate the existence of that letter to this (iovernment. It seems to me that it was the most natural and the most proper thing in the worlh for the High (ommissioner to send these gentlemen to those who had charge of publie affairs in the Province of Nova Sentia. It showen that the High (ommissioner at any rate recognized the fact. that so far ats questions of this kind are concernel by which the comntry is to be benefited irrespective of party polities, that it was better to utilize the powers that happened to be in charge of the (iovermment in that province entirely outside of political considerations. I am very glail indeed to know that the High Commissioner took that position, and I say that it is unfortumate that the Alministration here di! not know of the letter. or dial mot take the same view. What particular status harl the learer of the Opposition in Novia seotia that he shomble placed in charge of these gentlemen! Why not have asked Dr. Lawson to look ifter them, if there was an ohjection to the diovermment of Nova Sootia, which hippened to lie Liberal. They might have been entrusted to 1h. Lawson who is a fery able man amd a gentleman known to he a Conservative in politics, although he ocecupies a high otticial position umler a Liberal Administration. It would have been letter, in the interests of all concerned, hat the 1 iovermment not chosen to place these men in charge of Mr. Cahan. I have no objection persomally to Mr. (ahan, but while there was a perfectly ohvious reason for putting the delegates in charge of the (iovermment, there could have been no reason whatever why they should be placed in charge of the leader of the Opposition. Now, with regird to the manner in which these gentlenen were taken abont in the Province of Novia Nontia, I can say with reference to my own comenty that these delerates were sent to two or three proints. along the line of the Windsor and Amapolis Railway, that they were received by two or three prominent Conservatives, and that ats the matter seemed to be kept a secret, no one outside of these gentlemen knew that the delegates were to come there at all. I do not believe that they got anything like atn adequate inlea of the western part of Nova Nootia through which they passed. I am very anxious, Mr. Chairman, to see the report of these delegates, and I think I understood the Ninister to sity they would he soon forthcoming: Does he know whether it has been printed ?

Mr. CARLIN(: I do not know.
Mr. BORDFN. This visit took place in Neptember last and I fincy the delegates concluded their visit in the Naritime Provinces some time in Octoler. Surely the Giovernment ought to know by this time whether the report has been printed or not. I have hearid remarks that that report was not of a nature particularly gratifying to the fiscal views of gentlemen who occupy the Treasury benches. I have heard it remarked, I camot speak from personal knowledge of course, that these gentlemen stated on more than one occasion, and I helieve on one orasion publicly, that they fouml Nova Scotia and the Maritime Provinces blessed with a good soil, and a good climate and well alapted for farming, but they could not conscientionsly recommend their fellow-countrymen to come out here. I have heard it stated that a speech was mirde hy one of those delegates. I think at Amherst, in which he expressed himself somewhat in that line, and I have heard it also that very promptly instractions came from (Ottawa cantioning that gentleman that he was getting on ramgerous ground, and that he must le very careful to abstain from any allusion to polities of any kind whatever. When after that the Island of Irince Elward was visited and when my hon. friend from l'rince umbertook to datw the delegate out and conld get no satisfaction from him whatever, he hat probalbly got his cantion. I think that the Minister ought to give us some satisfactory assurance as to whether these reports had been printen, or ever will be printed, and if so when they will be distributed:

Sir JoHN THOMIPNON. Perhaps I ought to siay a word, as questions have been asked about commmications letween the Provincial (iovernment of Nova Sootia and members of the (iovernment here. As my colleague, the Minister of Marine, has stater, on learning that the delegates were coming, the first important matter to be considered seemed to he the necessity of putting some person in charge of arrangements for showing them the clifferent parts of the province, and Mr. Cahan was asked to attend to that. I am sure that no person could be letter cualified for that purpose, irrespective altogether of politicial considerations, and I am sure that noboly could take the slightest objection to Jr. Lawson, an officer of the Provincial Govermment, who is, in every respect, a very well qualified gentleman, in whom any one would have implicit trust for business of that kinul. After we had recommended Mr. Cahan, and when inl officer of the department here went down to help to receive the delegates and show them the comntry, and while Mr. Cahan wasactually attending to that business, I received a telegram from the Attorney General stating that the delegates harl brought a letter of introduction to Mr. Fielding. Mr. Fielding was then absent, and the Attorney General, I presume, was acting in his place. I can only guote the substance of the telegram from nemory, because I did not know that the sulbject would be mentioned and I did not refresh my memory. I immerliately telegraphed to the Attorney (ieneral stating that Mr. Cahan had been requested by the Department of Agriculture here, to give any assistance he could to the delegates, and that I was sure lie would be very glad to co-operate with the Local Government, and that we hoped they would co-operate with hin. I received afterwards a reply from the Attorney General, stating that that was not at all acceptable to his Government, and that they could not co-operate. I have heard, as has the hon. member for Queen's, the rumour that these gentlemen had expressed strong views about various matters which they were not sent ont to report upon, and upon which I would not have the slightest respect for their opinion, because, I think the people of our province are quite as well able to judge of their own affairs as these gentlemen were. Neither by natural adrantages nor ly education were they better qualified to decide those questions than our own people. But I was afterwards toll that when they were asked whether such was the case, they repudiated the assertion that they had interfered in any way in matters heyoml their cognizance or control.

Mr. DAVIEN (P.E.I.) I think it is well understool that those delegates did not venture to express any opinion on what is known as party politios pure and simple. When they came to the Maritime lrovinces they were consigned, if that is the proper expression, to the care of gentlemen in political sympathy with the fiovernment. and were kept under their control as much ats possible. But they were men of more than ordinary intelligence, and the leater of the House will see at once that being sent here to alvise their fellow-tenants at home as to whether this was a country to which they could properly recommend them to emigrate, their luty was to report not only on the soil and climate, but on those combined circumstances: which go to make a comntry a desirable home for immigrants. The fiscal policy of the country, the cost of living, the cost of prolucing different prolucts that ve export from the Daritime Provinces were some of the main elements in cletermining whether they should recomment this comotry or not. For instamee, if the markets of the Unitenl Nates are closed to our prodncts, and we are compelled to semd them to the oll comotry, the question arises whether the products are such as can be sent to the mother country. Then comes the question of the cost of production, and that depends uponi ine fisca! policy we alopt. These delegates cal?e to the couclusion that our tiseal policy precluded them from advising their co-tenants in the wh country to come to this country. They were lelighted with the soil and the people, they were delighted to find that we had so many of the elements of civilizationhere; and they would have been delighted to have adrised their people to come to the country : but they satid that while the present fiscal policy of the diovernment was continued they were not prepared to recommend them to dos so. Hon. gentlemen opposite may not like that, but it is the fact : and the reports, not being satisfactory to the diovermment, are nut printed. The hon. Minister of Agriculture does not say that they are printed. He tells us, as he has so often told us, that he does not know. Is the hon. gentleman serious in that " Is he wilfully abstaining from enquiring about them: The hon. gentleman knows that the reports of these tenant delegates were such as he rlare not publish, because they would he the condemnation of the fiscial policy of which he is a mouthpiece. As the people of this country have paid a large amount for the expenses of these delegates, they have $\varepsilon$ right to their report ; and if it is a fact that the fiscal policy of the fiovermment is preventing immigration from coming to Canada, the sooner we know that and alter the fiscal policy the better.

Mr. CARLING. I think I owe an explanation to the House. I was asked last night if the delegates who were sent to the Maritime Provinces had made a report. I may say that I found on enquiry at my office to-day that a report of one of the delegates had been sent out here in the beginning of March last. It was sent up to me at London when I was ill and contined to my bed, and I reppestel that it shombl he retumed to sir Charles Tupper, which was done. I never real the report, min member of the (ioverment ever saw it, and I do not know what was in it. It was sent back to Sir Charles Tupper and was dealt with, I understand. in the same way as the reports of the previous delegates who came out to Camada. They were selected by sir Charles Tupper, and the reports were made to Sir Charles Tupper and printed by sir Charles Tupper. Only me report was sent to me, that was the report of Mr. Me(Queen.
Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Printed?
Mr. CARLNA: No, written : and I instructed that it should he sent back to Nir Charles Tupper to he dealt with by him in the same way as the reports of the delegates of the previous year. I have no knowlelge of what was in that report, and if it has been printed it is without my knowledge. With regaral to the statements made alout Mr. Mequeen amb the other gentlemen having made -peeches on the trade policy of the Government. I spoke to them about that when I saw them in Tormito, and they told me that it was not the case. They said that they had been at a meeting and that some people had tried to draw them into a trap to express opinions, and that they had been misré presented in the press and had not male the statements attributer to them. I had not much opportunity of talking to the gentlemen, but I found them very intelligent men. I saw them hoth before and after their visit to the North-West, and altogether they seemen to be very much pleased with this enuintry.

Mr. MILLx (Bothwell). Who accompanied them through the Province of Ontario and the NorthWest?

Mr. CARLINe: We had not charge of them after they came to Ottawa. They had letters of introluction to our agents and other people in the North. West, and I think I gave them letters of iutroduction to Mr. Donaldson, in Toronto, and to sime of the Ninisters of the Local Government. B:at they were not paid when travelling in the North-Wiest or in Ontario.

Mr. MILLs (Bothwell). Were they paid while tavelling in the Maritime Provinces:
Mr. CARIING. Their expenses were paid.
Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). How is it that a different rule was alopted there from that adopted in Untario anl the North-West?
Mr. CARLING: Because the delegates who canne out the previous year came out to visit Canada, while the two delegates who came last autunn came specially to visit the Maritime Provinces. The delegates of the previons year were detained so long in the western part of the Dominion that they had not time to visit the Maritime Provinces after their return, it being too late in the season, and Sir Charles Tupper, when in Canada in the following winter, requested that I should allowhim to select two gentlemen specially to visit the Maritime Provinces.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRI(AHT. How many

 delegates were there?Mr. CARLING. Two, one from England and one from Scotland, Mr. Davy and Mr. McQueen.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The representations made with regari to these Ielegates were that they were put by the (iovermment here under the contiol of a political friend when they came into the Maritime Provinces, and that if they had been suspected of some offence they conald not have been more closely shadowerl. Care was taken to keep them from coming into contact with any one who held views at cariance with those of the Administration.
Mr. Carlinci. No such thing.
Mr. MiLLs' (Buthwell). And I understand that when they came to Ottana, very serious attempts were maile to comvert them into the dovermment way of thinking.
Mr. Carlini: No.
Mr. MILLS (Pothwell). I understand that the Government failed in that enterprise, and abandoned these men as hopeless reprohates, le wing them to the condemmation and the hatdness of heart which aceompanies depravity of so sweeping a character.
sir JOHN THOMPsion. I do not think they were so bal as the hom. gentleman represents them.
Mr. MILLS' (Bothwell). 1 am describing the view the hom. gentlenam took of them. He has a peculiar standard of uprightness.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I never sat them.
Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The (iovermment speaks as a mit. It is the hon. gentleman who sits opposite me who has the brains of the Administration, the reflective faculty for this particular purpose. My hom. friend who leads the House thinks for the Administration on other matters, but on this particular matter the exponent of the views of the Administration is the Minister of Agriculture. I understand that these delegates tried to persinade the Minister of Agriculture that they had not been taken posisession of lyy the enemies of the Administration and been made to believe that the Government were all wrong in their fiscal policy, and pursuing a course detrimental to the hest interests of the conutry. I unlerstand that those opinions which they expressen, they unlertook to convince the Minister of Agriculture were their own views, formen from their own olservations, and from such information as the friemls of the Administration had placeel within their reach. I understand that, so far as the Opposition was concerned, there was no opportunity whatever for any member of the Opposition to come in contact with them. We might just as well expect an accused party to hold an intercourse with some co-conspirator in the presence of a vigilant policeman as to suppose it were possible for either of these delegates to have acyuired any information whaterer on public matters, except what was picked up from the newspapers holding views at variance with the Administration. I understand that they visited various portions of the Dominion, and came to the conclusion that the policy of the Govermment was such as not to justify them in recommending tenant farmers to leave the United Kingdom and settle in the country.

Mr. CARLINi. Not at all.
Mr. MILLS (Both well). We shall see when their report comes dowi. If the hon. gentleman has not seen the report how can he tell?

Mr. CARLIN:. I had the pleasure of meeting the gentlemen in the Queen's Hotel after they had Visited the Maritime Provinces ambll the North-West and wereon their way home, and hat a conversation with them.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). And the hon. genteman no iloult supposell he had persualed them that the perfection of wistomexisted on the Treasury benches of cianalia. But it seems he did not succeed to the extent he may have supposed, and when we get the reports of those two delegates we will he able to see what opinions they formed under the guidance and instruetion of the hon. gentleman in the east. When they got as far as Ottawa, they were trusted to make further progress on their own accomant. If, this report should have the effect of convincing hom. gentlemen that the tiscal policy they have pursued cluring the past fourteen years is it mistake, even though it should for a year or two prevent immigration to Canala, it will in the end confer a very great benetit on this comutry.
sir RI(CHARI) (ARTWRIGHT. I would remind the Minister of Agriculture that he promised to produce a sample of that investment of S , (kn) in old new.wapers.

Mr. CARLIN(i. I conld not put my haml on a copy to-lay, hut I have sent for one and will bring it down Momday.
sir RI('HARI) ('ARTWRIC:HT. I understime the item weare now discussing io to be placed umber the control of the Minister of the iaterior. I want to know from him if he can inform me of the amome of land at the disposal of the (iovernment in Manitolna, and what amomet is a vailable for free grants. in that portion of Assiniboia south of the houndary and hefore you come to the inferion lands:

Mr. DEWDNFS: 1 fancy the plumtity in Southern Manitolat is very little.
sir RICHARD ('ARTWRIGiHT. In Manitola generally.

Mr. DEWDNEY. There isa very latgeamome, particularly in the northern portions north of the Cimalian Pacitic Railway. South of the Canalian Pacitic Railway there are very few homesteals now a a ailable. In the northern portion, the majority of the hamesteal lands are still opren. The settlement in the aroth is principally about the main route to lake Dauphin, and in the southern portions of Manitolal almout Lake Winuipegosis. North of that there is very little settlement indeen. In the southern portion of Assiniloia, west of the bommary of Manitola, the greater part of the land is still open for homesteal entry. Within the last few months a very large quantity in the eastern section has heen settled on.

Sir RICHARI) ('ARTWRIGHT. (an you tell me generally how much of it is arailable for settlement south of the bommdary in that part of Assinihoia?
Mr. DEWIDNEY. The comntry most valuable for settlement will be about 70 or 80 miles west of the bommary of Manitoba. It averages about 100 miles from the railuay down to the bemmary.
Sir RICHARI) CARTWRIGHT: Three-fourths of that is vacant to-day. Practically speaking, if I follow the hon. gentleman aright, he has a block of abont 30 miles by $1(0)$ miles west of the Province of Manitola which is available for settlement. That is, I suppose, one-half is in the hands of the Covermment, and the other half in the lands of the Canadian Pacific Railway or other railways:

Mr. DEWINNES. There is a great portion of that which has not been granted to any company.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRICHT. Has any correspondence at all been had with the Imperial (iovernment as to the question of their joining hamds with ourselves, or the Local Govermments, for the purpose of making any considerable colomiyation in that cuarter " A good many rumours have been flying through the newspapers at various times. and many suggestions have been made from time to time in the Imperial Parliment as well is in the English press. Has anything erystallizel from these discussions or propositions: I know that one or two attempts at colonization were male in which people from seotland and pissilhy from one: or two other portions of the British Islimels were assisten hy their lamullords to settle, bat I desire to. knw if any negotiation or correspondence is going on with the british foverment with a view to their assisting perple to settle in Canada.
Mr. DEWDNEY. There is no correspombence. that I know of except that in regard to the crofters, the last of whom came ont two years ago. That is the only correspmone we have hall with the Imperial liovernnent in regarl to colomization.

Mr. LIs'TER. I think the hom. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) has got off on a side track. We have not yet timished with the tenant farmers. I would ask the sinister of Agriculture if any agreement was made, or any mo derstanding come to, het ween the dioverument or the High Commissimer and these tenant farmers, as to the payment of their expenses while in Cimalla, or for any portion of the time they were in (anadia?
Mr. CARLING: The ammgement was that they shonl! visit only the Maritime Provinces, and when they came out here they thomght well to visit on their own account the North-West, and we paid them for their expenses from the time they left the old comentry till they came to Ottawa and from Ottawa hack to the ohl country. The mulerstameing was that we should pay them on the same hasis as we paid the previous delegates, but their visit was contined to the Maritime Provinces.
Mr. LINTER, What was the arrangement as to their per dirm allowance, because I suppose they were paid the same as the previons tenant farmers. delegates:
Mr. CARLIN: They were paid sis a day aml any expenses they might be put to in carriage-hire and so on.
Mr. IIsTER. Any railway fare.
Mr. CaRLING. I think they hat passes provided for them by the railway companies.
Mr. LISTER. The other delegates hat not passes. I find in the Auditor (ieneral's Report the railway expenses are charged : Brown, son, Elwards, 896 , and all the delegates charged in the same way their railway expenses, hesides their pur diem allowance. How much did those delegates cost the country?
Mr. CARLING. I statel last night that the total expenses of the delegates. $1: 3$ in number, were about $\mathbf{S 1 3}, \mathbf{O N O}$.

Mr. IISTER. That is not in reference to the last two delegates of last year?
Mr. CARLING. No: I am toll the expenses of the last two delegates amomed to about $\leqslant$ sion each.
Mr. LINTER. The hon. gentleman toll us he had a conversation with these delegates in Toronto. Did he have an interview with them in the city of Ottawa:
Mr. Cathinc: Yes: I hat one hereand ome in Toronto. I met them in Toronto when they were on their way home.
Mr. LISTER. Is it the intention of the fioncrmment to bring out any other delegates:

Mr. CARLINi; I do not know what the intention of the Minister of the Interior is, but as far as I ann comeerned, as I have already stated, it is. not the intention.
Mr. IISTER. Who sent the report to the hom. sentleman which wis sent to Sir Charles Tupper:
Mr. CARLIN: I helieve it was sent hy sir Charles Tupper to me, and it reached me while I was unwell in London, and I requested my secretary to return it to sir Charles Tupper for him to deal with in the same way as he had dealt with the reprott of the other delegates the previous year. The delegates were all selected by him, and the reprots were make to him, and he looked after the printing and the proofs, and attended to them ahogether.
Mr. IISTERS. Is it the custom of sir Charles Tupper. on receiving areport in mannseript, to forwarl it th the department for apporal before pullishilig it?
Mr. CARIIN: I am not quite sure whether he sent any of the repurts of the previons delegates on. not. I know that he was very ansions that the report of the delegates who cane out the previoms year shouli be circulated as som ats possible to influence immigration for the following year. I do not think he sent the reports of the previous year lefore printing, as it was desireal top print theim ass som as possible.
Mr. ASTER. Am I correct in inferring that this repurt was sent to the Minister for approval. or can he suggest any reasom why the report was sent to him:
Mr. CARLIN:. I cammot, except that it was a matter of courtesy, and, as I had had nothing to dow with the selection of the gentlemen, and had mothing to do with the previons reports, I told my secretaty to return that sent to me to sir (Charles Tupper to deal with as before.
Mr. LIN'itER. Was the report real by the secretary:

Mr. CARLING. Not that I know of.

Mr. LINTER. it was sent without reading?
Mr. CaRLIN: . Yes, so far as I know.
Mr. Lister. Was any letter sent with it?
Mr. CARLING. I camot say. I do not remember. I was unwell in hed when the report came to London.

Mr. somerville. I would ask the Minister to explain the item on page 203 - B of the Auditor (ieneral's Report: H. Hurtean, repatriation agent, salary one year, $\mathrm{s} 1,2(\mathrm{~N})$; fares, $\$ \mathbf{\$ 2 9 . 2 5}$; cals,

Sis; living, 17 days at 82 . It appears that this man was paid a year's salary and only worken some 17 clays. Where is this gentleman located:
Mr. CARLIN: Mr. Hurteall was a member of this House some years ago, anm he has heen attacheal to the agency in Montreal for the last few years as an assistant of the immigration limach there. and has visitell the eastern states on two or three occasions to induce his comutrymen to cone back to Camala. He has leeen paid for his work, amb has heen located at Montreal.
Mr. SOMERTILLE. If he was employed as repatriation agent, he might to have beell iver in the States a longer perionl than $1 \bar{a}$ days in one year, if he expected to get any of the (anaidians to come back to the l'rovinue of Quelnec.

Mr. CARLIN: He was not expected wive all his time on the other side.
Mr. somerville: It appeats to me there is an extrandinary real displayed by the officers of this department to see dat diovermment money is expenden. The grat is a very large ome, slonimno, besides sialaries and other contingencies. Ite have to be arreful to see that the money wored by this House is judicionsly expembed, anil we must julpe of the methonls of expenititure liy what we expenditure in the past. Now. I have in my pussession an extragrlinary document which 1 will gite to this committee with regarl to an expenditure in issicsis. It appears in that year, the cocermment was in the halit of giving out comtratets for the publication of immigration pamplete. The memhers of the Honse who were in former l'arliaments: will remember the discussions that towk place with regarl to the extramdinary price paid for work of this kime to newspapers alli over the comutry. Sow. it appeats that in 1ssit, a Mr. .I. I. Shant\%, who is it resident of Perlin, engeged int the buttom manufacture, paid a visit to Manitolat and took an interest in the settlement of immigrants there. He wrote a dierman pamphlet that was afterwards entrustel to a mam nameal (asper Hett, it printer in the town of Berlin, to be printed. The (ionernment orlered ionskn) enpies of it. After the work was performed a hill was renlered hy Mr. Casper Hett, who also, I believe, puhbished the Berlin finsy" Brami, and the annount he demamed for his work was sion.tifo. The aceerme was placeel in the hamds of the Gueenis brinter to he andite. The gacens Printer andited the aceonnt and conchaled that even at the extramodinary prices which were allowed ly the dovermment foir this work hy ontsile printers, he was only entitled to $$ 434.74$. But Mr. Hett was mot satistied with the payment, and he entered into communication with the department over which the Minister of Agriculture presides, asking that they reconsider this matter. I have in my posisession the letter which was written in rephy to Mr. Hett regarding this matter hy Mr. John Lowe, who was then the secretary of the department, and who now, I helieve, is Deputy Ninister. I have a eopy of this letter which I will read :

[^73]actual use. We would not hold you responsible for it, but would semi you other paper."
Now here is the extrondinary part of the letter:
.- As respects the copsright, and referring to your letter which I received ti-day, I do not see that it is necessary to make an actunl registration of the cons right. but you mipht still assume it to be your property, and we purchase it from you. You mention alse that you would sell us the electrotppes of the entire Germun pamphlet. Would you kindly inform me at what price you value these. I ctsk this guestion because the amount of sour account was origmatiy stonotio while the audit of the Queen's Printer did not allow you zore than S434.74, making a difference of $\vdots 31 t i .86$, whirh is the amonnt I wish to gry Fou. Perlins the electrotypes and the coprright might be includerl in this amount. \$816, 86 would be a little high fur the comyright alone of that pamphlet. Please write me by return of puil, and I will endeavour to base the matter sertled with yon ats som as possible.
(Signted) "JOHN LOWE."
We.ll, in referring to the Aulitor General's Report for that year, I tind for the year ending 3oth dmes. Issi., an acomant which I presume is the aceomit I speak of. hecause the figures are exactly alike, from phlets. and I find that the copyright and the electrotypes were paid for at the price which was mentioned in this letter. and the total amonnt of sonl. itl. the original aceome remered hy (iaper Hett. Wals paid in full. Now, the committee will perceive that the Queenis Printer is an officer entrusted with the atuliting of all these atecoment and that monacomat which is mot atuditer by the Queen's Printer is afterwards to he paid by the fiovermment. He is the anthorizel officer to dio this work. liat when the now le:puty Minister. then the secretary of the department, liscovered that Mr. (asper Hett was not groing to get the full amomit of his accomnt. he displayed this extraordinary \%eal, and instigated Mr. Casper Hett, and inspired him with the fileat that he could get paid if he would just follow his instructions; and he wilfull: and deliberately took this at:comet--assmming that he was the owner of the copyright of this pamphlet when he knew that he was not the owner of it--imd instructed Mr. Hett not to register the copyright, but he might assume, he says. that it was his property, and the forermment would hay it from him. Then he goes on to tell him that he might sell the electrotypes of this pamphlet, which I suppose would he of no use whatever, worth about $s$ or ? cents a pouml for ohl type-metal, hecause then the pamphlet had alrealy heen worked off, and these painphlets I do not suppose werc ever duphicateal. Here we have an otticial of the Government, who is now Deputy Minister of that department. and a man who was then secretary of the department, instructing this man how he could get rouml this audit which was made by the Queen's Printer of this aceoment, and he deliberately tells him that if he will follow out his instructions he will be able to cheat the Govermment out of si316. 86: He says: That is the amount, and I want to pay you, notwithstanding the fact that the Queen's Printer had andited the accomit and insisted that $$ 434.74$ was the total amount which this man was entitled to get for his work. Now, I think that this was a deliberate frand, not only on the part of Casper Hett, lut on the part of the secretary of the department, when he instructed that man how he was to perpetrate this frand, how he was to cir cumvent the Queen's Printer and to secure the payment of Sillf which he was not entitled to by following out instuctions. I do not know whetlier the Minister or the department was conversant with these facts, 1 llo not know whether we are to hold him responsible for the acts of his Deputy Minister, hut I thin' the country will hold him responsible for such acts, and if he was not fully informed with regard to these transactions he ought to be fully informed and lie ought to have held the hand of hissecretary when he was penning this letter to Mr. Casper Hett telling this gentleman how he could defraud the (iovermment ont of S316. It is not a large amount, but it is a fail sample of the way in which the money voted ly this Parliament for immigration purposes has beeu expended. This matter is a serions one and it is one which requires investigation on the part of the depalment. If it is proven conclusively, as 1 believe it can be, that this is a gemuine document I have every reason to believe that it is a genuine locument-and if it is so established by investigat tion on the part of the department, then I say that this man, John Lowe, who is now Deplity Minister, is no longer worthy the contilence of the diovernment, and that he ought to lee discharged from the position which he holds. A man who in his calpacity as an important officer of this fiovernment wilfully and deliberately writes to a man who is performing work for the (iovermment ant whose account hal heen andited and fixed at st34.7t: and who wilfully writes to that man, and points ont to him the way in which he might cheat the Govermment, is not worthy to be continuel as an otficer in any department of the forermment. I have reforred to this matter hecause I thonght it well to show that the closest supervision shonld be had over this expenditure. We are voting large sums of money every session to secure immigrants for this conntry, and if the money which we vote is wastel in this way, and in the way which was pointed out last night hy giving to a newspaperproprietor in Montreal papers, it is time that we should look to what we are iloing. These oll newspapers were printerl and left over an erery newspaper man knows week after week, amd after they hat accumalated for three years they wert sold to the (iovermment and bouml and sent home as immigration literature. This case now lefore us is another example of the way in which this money is wasted, and I ask the Minister to explain how it comes that he allowed his secretary to thus instruct this man how to perpetrate a frand upon the department over which he presides.

Mr. CAPLING. Mr. Chairman, I think it is hardly fair for the hon. gentleman to bring up a matter that is now six years old.

Mr. LINTER. It does not make any difference.
Mr. CARLING. It makes this aifference, that I do not think that he can expect, or that the committee can expect, that I can give him an explanation of a matter that happened six years ago. The hon. gentlenan will let me have the letter, and I certainly will enquire into the matter and see whether it really did take place or not. I would like him to hand ne the letter--I am entitled to have it as he has read it to the Housebut it is not fair to the Deputy Minister that this statement should be made without Mr. Lowe having an opportunity of explaining, as he can no doubt explain, what was done on that occasion. It is unfair to expect, and I do not think the House dres expect that I, as head of the department, cam explain an acemont that was paid solong age as the date mentioned.
Mr. sombrillis. I harilly expected that the Minister would lee able to explain it. He says it wist unfair for me to bring the matter up here, hut I would like to point out to the committec that this is the only plate where this matter can le inrestigated. If I hand moved in the P'ublic Accomints (committee to have this account of (asper Hett sul). mitten, the prohalility is that the committee or the House would have refused to allow me to hate the matter investigaten, because it was an oll affiar. Here, when we are discussing the expenditure for immigration purposes, I think I was perfectly in order in hringing this matter up, and I think if Mr. Lowe has any defence he will have an ample opportunity of putting it hefore the diovermment. I do not think it can lee chargel that I have taken any undue adrantige. This is a public matter and if we are not to disensis public matters atfiecting the evpenditure of the country from any delicate feeling of offending some gentlenan whon may have at situation in one of the iepartments, then we might as well quit disenssing these appropriations alto. Eether. We are here for the purpose of disenssing this kiml of expenditures and 1 cammot see that I combli resort to duy other eonarse than the one I have now taken.
Mr. LANTER. I de wet think that the hom. member for Brant (Mr. Somerville) is lumult to hamid over to the Dinister of Agriculture a coppy of the lether which he has read to the department this afternom. The Minister of Agricultare must remember that the letter purports to come from an ofticer of his department. and under the rules and regulations of that department, if it is carried on in it hasiness-like way, as I suppose it is, a press cinp of the letter must he in the department, and all that the Minister ean ask for from the hon. mem. heer for Brant (Mr. somerville) is that he should sive the name anl date of the letter. If the letter is not tol le fomm in the reeords of his department then it bears the appearance of impropriety on the face of it. If it was a proper tramsaction on the part of the Minister's present deputy, and his then: secretary, that letter ought to appear in the letter loroks of the oftice. If it does not appear there, then I repeat it is incontestable evidence almost that at the time he penned that letter he knew he was guilty of an inpropriety. One can harelly imagine in ofticer of the dovermment oceupying a high and important position, next in importance almost to thit of the Minister himself, lending himself to a wretched little piece of fraud, becanse it bears no other name, like that which my hon. frient has presented to this House. This country and Eng. land and Irelamd have been flomed with the most worthless pamphlets that it is possible for a ciovernment orindividual to issue.
Mr. CARLIN:. That is your opinion ouly.
Mr. LISTER. That is my opinion, and I have seen them, and $I$ venture tosay it is the opinion of any impartial man who reads them.
Mr. CarliN(i. No, it is not.
Mr. LINTER. Theyare in the majority of cases simply ridiculons. The whole country is floonted with pamphlets, not for the purpose of attracting immigration to Camadi, but for the purpose of pro-rilling pap for the greedy and hungry supporters of the fovermment throughout this eomentry.

Mr. ('ARLIN: The hom gentleman knows that the pamphlets are all printed be the Queen's Printer.
Mr. LINTER. This one was mot.
Mr. CARLIN: That was six years ago. The hom. gentleman must know that the rule andopten now is that all printing shall he done ly the Queen's Printer.
Mr. LISTER. 1 unlerstonal from the hom. gentleman's statement that the farmers delegates pamphlet was to be printell in Englaml. That is ome pamplet which hat not been printed at the printing establishment in this country, and I know not at liow late a date the hom. gentleman changel the rule of giving the printing of these paumplets to the olsware little sheets throughout the comatry which could not get it lecent living it they were not enabled to chatge exorbitant rates fior the printing of this literature. Gne can scarcely conceive of a more miserable derice than that printed out hy my hom. friend for the pmpone of getting out of the treasury of this comutry the paltry sum of 3316. Why shond the secretary suggest to this individual the plan of selling something that he dind not possess, the coppright of that little pimphlet, which was of no bialue to any one except to the forermment. and mot even to the davernment. becanse I think it is perfectly apparent that the fovernment never issied a second series of the pamphlet. In aldition, for fear that the matter might not look exactly right, this worthy secretary suggests that they shoulid put in the electrotype, worth. as my hon. friend says, ahout 8 cents a pomal: and strange to say the price put upon this precions article was exactly the latance of this indivinhal's aceount originaliy put in for the printing of these papers. Now, if this little matter is foumd out, it is not a violent presumption to suppose that there hats been a good deal more of this kind of mosiness going on in that precious repartment : and if this kimb of thing is going on there, it is ahout time the doverment changeil the repartment, at all events so far as immigration is concerneal, and that the rontine work of that depart-ment-I I lo not pretend to say that the Minister himself had any knowledge of this--were placed in other and I hope hetter, hands than it has leen in the past. 1 agree with my hon. friend in saying that it is the boundenduty of the Minister to investigate this matter, aull if it turns out to be true that this gentleman has suggestel to this neely publisher the way in which lie could get his little account paid, then I say that officer is not a proper person to le in the employ of this Government. It is his duty to economize the funds of the people of this conntry, and to look after them with more care than he would his own. He may spend his own funds with any prodigality he thinks proper; but the country expects him to deal with the puhbic moneys entrustel to him with economy and with honesty.

Mr. CARLING. I think it is to be regretted that the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Iister) has made the statement he has to this House. The pamphlets that are being printed by the dovernment and distributed in Gireat Britain, and on the coutinent, and the pamphlets and reports which we have distributed, are worthy of any country, giving ats they do a description of the country and its resources, and the hon. member stands up and says that they are worthless trash.

Mr. LI, TER. I say so now.
Mr. (ARLINri. I donot think the hon. gentleman has read the pamphlets.

Mr. LINTER. I have glanced over them, but I Would not take the troulle to real them.
Mr. (ARLING. Althongh the hon. gentleman has not real them, he says they are trash. think that is unworthy of an hon. member of this Honse.

Mr. LISTER. In answer to the hon. gentle man's hot remarks, I would say that I have not real all the pamphlets. I glanced over a groml many of them, but it would require more patience than I posseess to rearl them through. I have said, amd I repeat - not in any manindly spirit to the hom. gentleman that I domot think all of these so-catled immigration patmphlets that I saw: with the exception of one relating to Manstoba, are worthless: and I think this is the proper place for me to express my opinion on the suliject, if I have an opinion, so that this sort of thing may be stopped. Many thousands of dollars have heen wasted in the publication of these useless pamphlets: aml 1 ani sorry to say that thomsamls of dollars have been expented for the purpose of hringing people to this country, while the census show: that we have not kept the immigrants that we have hooght here; we have lost them all, and a grood many besides. We are paying shipping companies and shipping agents for the purpose of bringing immigrants to Canala.

Mr. CARLINI: Are we paying shipping $\mathrm{om}^{-}$ panies.

Mr. LASTER. Yom are payime at per repita allowance to heads of families and to members of families who come to this comntry. Vou have taken no precantion hefore the payment of that money to see that these people wonlil hecome: permanent settlers.

Mr. CARLIN(i. I am not aware that we are paying shipping companics to bring ont immigrants.

Mr. LISTER. You are paying your agents, and I suppose they are paying the shipping companies. At all events you are paying the hearls of families and every member of a fanily for the purpose of minging them to Canada, and then they only stay here a few days. The census shows that you have utterly wasted $\sin (0),(O N)$ to bring immigrants into Canalia who have not remained here. Your statements from time to time show that you brought $S(N),(K N)$ immigrants into the comitry, and the census shows that you have lost then all and a large portion of the natural increase besides. What, then, is the use of wasting more money? Fou camot point me out a rural section in Untario where an immigrant from England, Ireland or Siotland has bought a farm in the last five years. Farms are being sold there every day, people are learing there and going to Manitoba or Dakota or other parts of the United States, and I can safely say, speaking of my owno county, that there has not been an English, Niootch or Irish immigrant in that county for the last five years who has bought farm property there. Why not stop this terrible waste of nomey or else adopt some other system! The hne-books show that the agents stationed in England. Ireland and Scotland, and in Queloe. Ontario, Manitoba and the Maritime Provinces are all olrawing large pay, living like fighting cocks upon the fiovernment, and iloing absolutely nothing. Their reports do not show that they have done anything worth keeping them there. We have expensive otfices in every guarter of the eomitry and expensive officers. Ino the Linited Ntates keep up these immigmation offices all through their country? Are they keeping up expensive establishments in foreign countries: So. They do not depend upon such means to get immigrants. $\mathrm{IV}_{\mathrm{e}}$ are bringing them out ly excellent immigration agents, no doubt, but we are immigration agents for the United States. There is where the money is going. theme is where the people are going, and the somer we stop the sy:tem the better for the comatry.

Mr. Mr.MCLI.FN. This letter which hats just been discovereal by the hom. :member for North Brant is certanly a matter of importance. The: Minister, of comse, has seen the letter.

Mr. (APRLNA: I have not seen it.
 leagues have seen the letter, andi it is of great moment that we should have very distinct and explicit explanation with regard to, how it was that the person in charge of that department shouhd have rentural to issue such a letter to a person seeking to extatat from the Dominion treasmey money that he was not entitled to. That, alonis With many other facts revealed in comnection with insestigations which took place hefore this comb mittee as well as before the Pablic Accounts Committee, go to prove that under the head of immigration enomoms amonnts are splatmered, hoth in allertising aml otherwise. The Minister mate some reference to the pamphlets being painted hy the Queens Printer. 1 understood him to say last. night that the department had given a very large number of these reports to be printed in Lommon, and that they had been circulated in rery large gnantities throughout Fingland, sootland and Irelaml.

Mr. ('ARLNNe. Ves, I said so.

Mr. Mr.MELLEX. With regan to the report of the other wo delegrates who came out here last summer and returned last fall, it is high time that the in report should be laid on the Table. We are here investigating the expenditure of money in commec. tion with the visit of these delegates and yet that report is mot lefore us. It was sent out to the hon. gentleman, it was laid on his resk, and notwithstanding the fict that this was in March last when we were alout to assemble, he deliberately returned it to Nir Charles Tupper, and the hon. gentleman is not now alle to communicate its contents. He cannot say whether in reality it was a report that highly commended Canada as a tield of immigra. tion or what else it said. It has already been hinted by some members of the committee that it contains reflections upon the policy of the fiovernment with regard to this comatry. We ought to have that report and there has been ample time to have had it printed and laid on the Table. Here are two men who came out and who with nos selfish interest or desire to serve, deliberately report upon this comutry, and that report is not laid lefore us.

Mr. Cabling.

Mr. CARLIN(: Do yon think we have the report:

Mr. Mr.IULLLE.N. Will the hom. gentleman say that it is not the case:

Mr. CARLIN(: I have said that I have not seen the report, that no member of the (iovermment has seen it, and the report is in the hamis of the High Commissioner. Not a single memher of the diovermment saw the report. I did not lay it on my lesk. It was brought to me, aml I was not in a condition to look orer it.

Mr. Mr.MULLEN. Well, we have some reasm to believe that such statements were in the report. The hon. gentleman satys he is not in a position to saly whether they are or mot, hat we havegood reat sin to helieve they are. Notwithstaniling the fact that it has eost a great deal of money to loring these ilelegates ont, the hon. gentleman is mot ahle to tell us what the report contained. Has the hom. Sentleman hat a report from Sir Charles Tupper on the contents of that report, or is it to be printed in Bacland as the other report was for circhlation ?

Mr. (ARLIA: 1 suppose so.
Mr. Mr: Vlillbli.. Is the Minister able to sity letinitely:

Mr. (ARLINi: No.
Mr. Mr.NLLLES. What were the hom. gentlemanis instructions to Sir Charles Tupper in regard to that report:

Mr. (ARLING. As I hate stated again and arain. 1 gave instructions to return that report to Sir © 'harles Tupper to deal with as he had dealt with the previons report.

Mr. Mr. DULLAFN. That repont wasprintedand eiroulated. Were the hom. gentlemans instractions to sir (harles 'lupper to print and circulate this report:

Mr. (ARLIN(: My instructions were that he was to take the same course with the report of the farmers delesotes to the Maritime lrovinces as he tork with regard to the farmers delegates to the North-West.

Mr. MralliLLEN. Is it mot rather peenliar that the Minister of Agriculture has neglected to examine, or even to direct one of his subordinates to examine, that report, hut has returnel it to Nir Charles 'lupper without knowing whether its contents are such as he would recommend to be printed or not:

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). It would appear to me that it is ahout time there was a change in the head of the department. According to the statement of the Minister to-night, it appears that the practical head of this business is not in this department, but in the High Commissioner. I have a good deal of respect for the abilities of our High Commissioner, but, if the administration of this part of C'anada's affairs is to be transferred to a London office, it is about time we had some new head to the management in Canada. If a man who is on the spot with a staff of ofticials to help him has got to transfer this business to the London office, we should know it. Whatever may he the administration of the Department of the Interior, this business cannot get into a much worse tangle in that department than it is now in. 1 rose, however, not to refer to this matter, but to protest against the tone of the Ministers ahlless on the subject of the remarks of the member for South Brant (Mr. somerville). We are tired of hearing that, the moment we criticise the action of a Minister or of his department, we are cloing something detrimental to the interests of Canala. If the members of this House are to get uponly when they are ordered ly the Minister of Agriculture, and are to sit down when he tells them to sit down, and are to do just ats he tells us, the somer we go home and cease to exercise our functions here the better. If we are not to have the richt of a free and indepement ariticism of the doings of this department, and of the expenditure of the public money of the perople of this comntry, the somer we know it the better. It seems to have come to this, that the fiovermment think they own this (amada. that they have supreme and absolute control of the public funds. and those fumis are only to be expenten aceorling to their direction, and the moment yon interfere with that sumoth and pleasant current, you are injuring your comatry, you are traitors to your comitry, anl then comes the waving of the old thag and the ery of disloyalty: If hon. gentlemen will tum hack to the perion up to 1 sis, and a number of us were in the Homse at that time, they will fimb that just as stomer language was placed on recoral in the Hannelerl with reference to the alministration of public affairs when it was in the hamds of gentlemen whore now in Opposition as has leen indulged in ly members on this side of the House to-night. The question which has heen brought up ly my ho:1. friend from North Brant (Mr. Nomerville) to-night, is a question which on the face of it deserves the eareful consideration of the Minister and of his department. I do not pretend to say, and my hom. friend from Brant did not preteml to say, that the Minister should be in a position to give an explanation off haml : but, if Parliament is not to have an opportunity of investigating and ventilating these matters, and if the Minister camont bring his officers to book in regard to them, the somer the public realizes that we are getting to he maler an antocracy in the management of the atfatis of this comitry, the hetter for all concerned. We should realize that the Opposition are here in the interests of the community, and, whether the (iovernment like it or uot, they will have to submit to caiticism of those affairs.

Mr. (AMPBELL. There is no douht that the remarks of the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Pain) are in point. I think it is a duty we owe to the comitry to point out where the money has been misspent or not spent to the hest advantage. The hom. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville) was quite right in bringing a matter of that importance to the attention of the committee. Such conduct as that, supposing the statements be true, is certainly very reprehensible and should receive the severe censure not only of the Department of Agriculture but also of the whole House. There is no member of this House, if the conduct of the Deputy Minister of Agriculture is what has been staterl, but would say that that man ought to be severely censured, and the Minister of Agriculture instead of objecting to the hon. member for North Prant (Mr. Somerville) having brought this matter forward, shouhl, if he desired to conduct his olepartment as it should be conducted, he thankfulto any hom. gentleman bringing to his notice such miscomduct as that. There is $n o$ doubt that such a state of affiars existing in any department is dangerous uot only to the country but to the Giovermment, and the member for North Brant deserves credit for ferreting out and bringing to the motice of the House such conduct as he has mentioned. I cannot help thinking, considering the enomons imounts which have been spent for promoting immigration to this country, with the facts staring us in the face that every dollar of that money has heen pratieally thrown away, that we mast come to the conclusion that there are a thomsamd more cases as had as the one mentioned by the member for North Brant. I was astonishel to time that the Minister of Agriculture has never real the report of the farmerss delegates. Is it possible that a pamphlet of such importance which hats been cirenlated throughout the old eomitry has never been read by the Minister of Agriculture:

Mr. (ARLIN: I never satid that.
Mr. CAMPBELL. I thought the hon. gentleman saill he had sent it back without reading it.

Mr. CARLIN: 1 explatined that that report was sent hack :o Sir Charles Tupper and dealt with in the same way that he hat slealt with previous reports. I wid I had not read it.

Mr. (ADIPBELLL. It seems to me most astonishing that the responsible hean, and the gentleman who is responsible to this House for the large anounts that are spent under that head, shoshd be so negligent of his duty as that a report that was intemped to be circulated all over the ofd country, should never have heen read lyy him. How does he know what that report contained? How does he know that it would induce immigration to this country: His first duty was carefully to real that report, or have some person read it for him. We find that over (iOO), (K)O copies. at an expenditure of $\$ 13,0 \mathrm{KN})$, have been circulated, of a pamphlet that he never read at all. Then I tind that in circulating these pamphlets in theold country we paids4,i20. $\bar{i}$, and we paid for postage, $83,371,22$. Now, 1 would like to know if the hon. gentleman considers it a wise and business-like transaction for this country to make a large expenliture, not only in printing pamphlets but in distributing them over Europe, when the responsible head of the department has never read them at all.

Mr. BAIN (Wentworth). There is one other item, and that is the returns that we are in the habit of making in connection with what is known as settlers effects, that is, settlers coming insto (anada, and their effects passing through the customs house. For a number of years past the Americans have abandoned the system of counting people going into the United States across the frontier amongst their immigrant returns, believing that, placed as they were with a long Canadian frontier, with a population going and coming all the time, these returns were utterly unreliable. Now, if you will turn to the returns of those who were counted in as immigrants added to Canada for the last threeor four years, it will appear to all of us how absurd it is to continue to count that class of people as immigrants coming into Canada to settle. Take, for example, the Quebec returns. In $18 s s$ we hatl $1 s, 466$ : in 1889 , 19,663 ; in 1800, 19, 6.54 : in 1891, we hat 20, 8.i-2 returns of settlers crossing into the Province of Quelsec from the United Nitates with settlers goorls, and classified as immigrants coming into Canala. Now, in turning to the summary of the reports that are made by our repatriation agents who have been working in the castern States-hecause you can only consult a summary of those reports for these years- -in looking at the original reports for the past year. I find that the lalours of these men are levoted not to lringing parties back to the older provinces, hut to hringing (anarlians from the United States to our North-iVest country. Now. it seems to me that after all, these thonsimils that go to swell this list are merely men whog gover into the New Fingland states for a few months, taking their effects with them and retaming at the emel of the seatson, and I think the poobabilities are that the same individuals have been passing the frontier for a series of years, each year being comated in to swell the munher of settlers who came back into (anama with a view of settling here with their goods. It is worthy of consideration. When the operations of this department are being revised, whether it would not be better to drop that system of anting parties who come into this eonuntry and eounting them ats immigrant settlers. I alloware that the returns sive us the mumber coming into (anala from foreign countries separate from those returns: of parties who pass the customs with settlers goonls, but in the rifficial returns you will find that they are almost insariably classified unitenlly ats the gross results of the operations of our immigration policy. In nine ciases ont of ten, these figures are combined together as the results of that years expenditure for immigration purposes. Our agents in british Columbia, in former years, referred to the ditficulties in separating the ordinary class of parties repassing back and forth from the class that were gring into that province to settle, and there appeared to be a process by which they sifted out alout one-fourth of their whole passengers and took the balance as What might las considered immigrants coming to settle in that country. I think there is a strong reason why we should alopt the American system and drop these altogether from our returns as parties consing into Camarla to settle. If there is any process by which we can retain a check upon those that are coming into our North- West Territories from Dakota and other portions of the United States we shall be glad to have some information that is correct and reliable on those heads.

Mr. BOWELLL. The remarks made by the hon. member for North Wentworth (Mr. Bain) in reference to customs returns, may lie, to a certain extent, correct, but there is no system that can be devised that will accomplish the object that he has indicated, or the results which he thinks should follow from the keeping of a full return of those who come into the country. He is ๆaite in error in supposing that the same system prevails in Canada that prevails in the United States in reference to the noting of persons crossing the border as immigrants into their country. It will be remembered that a few years ago when this question was under discussion, affidarits were produced from parties living at Port Huron, and also at Point Edward, that the system that prevailed in the United states, and which was afterwards abamoloned as leing utterly unrelialle, was to count every passenger that crossed from Cimada into the United States and add them to the list of immigrants going to that country. On the contrary, there has been no system prevailing in Canada other than this: That a man alone, or with a family, entering Cinala with settlers' goods, has to make an affidavit that he is coming into Canada to reside with the grools which he is bringing with him, thus bringing within the clanse in the Customs Act which permits the importation into this country of settlers gools free of duty. These are the only persons who have been returned to the (ustoms lepartment and reported to the Agriculture Department as parties who came into the country as settlers. The hon. gentleman, however, is quite correct in saying that in many cases Canalians have left Canalia and gone to the Uniteni States, amom remaned there for a certain length of time, and then on returning clamed the privilege of free armission for whatever effects they might bring back. In some cases it is foum that these effects have leen purchased within the limits which prevent:s the free importation of goods. There are other cases in which they have returned to Canada before the expiration of one year. and their effects wre alanited free, so that to a limited extent the remarks mate by the member for North Wentworth (Mr. Bain) may be considered correct. I agree with what the hom. gentleman says that it is highly desiable that we should have as correct returns as possible, hut I venture to assert that there is no system that can be adopted hetter than has heen in force here, or that greater precautions could be taken than have been taken by the Customs Department since I have known anything of its working, in order to have the correct returns made in the manner I have indicated. There are other settlers from Northern Dakota or Minnesota, who originally left Manitoba, settledin these states and remained there for six months and sometimes for two years and sometimes longer, and then returned to danitoba, and they clamed the same rights as settlers. They certainly were immigrants in that sense of the word on returning here, although they had previously gone to a foreign country. The only possible means to carry out the suggestion made hy the hon. gentleman would be to ascertain where these people were born, where they formerly lived, and to eliminate from the list of immigrants who come into this country those who hat previonsly livel in Canada. That is really the surgestion mate by the hon. gentleman, but he will see from the explanation that I have made that the system which prevailed in the United States was altogether different from that which prevailed in Canada, because we know that the system of the United States in reference to the statistics on this sulject was to set down as an immigrant almost every traveller who crossed the borper. I know no better system that could be adapted so far as Canada is concerned, than that which has prevailed in the past. I may say that I listened to the hon. gentleman's remarks a few moments ago with some little degree of astonishment and surprise when he stated to the House that unless they, the Opposition, could discuss matters thoroughly they had better go home, as the Government seemed to own the country and that they objected to any criticisms. I certainly have not hearl any oljection on this side, to fair, legitimate and even improper criticism of the items. If a stranger were to read the remarks made hy the member for North Wentworth (Mr. Bain) on this subject, he certainly would come to the conclusion that there was such an immense and powerful majority in this House, not only numerically, but every other way, that it prevented a free discussion of every item which comes before Parliament. I am under the impression that so far as this particular item of immigration is concerned, we have had three days discussion on it alrealy. One day no item was passed at all, and tlo next day two items were passed. We have been for two days and two nights un to the present time disunssing this question, and yet the hon. gentleman states that gentlemen opposite are prevented from discussing this question as they ought to discuss it. I confess I lo not know how much more liberty men can possilly have in any part of the worll than we enjoy here, and particularly in the discussion of estimates. 1 am sure that the hon. member for Kent (Mr. (amphell) must have misumerstool the Minister of Agriculture, when he said that the pamphlets referred to han been circulated already, and that the Minister had never read them. I heard the Minister of Agriculture say that he did not read the reports to which the attention of the House hat heen called. I confess I never read them, and I do not know any: thing about them, but I losaly that if they were of the character indicated by the hom. member for North Wellington (Mr. NeMallen) I wouh, if I were Minister of Agriculture, suppress them at once. I would not allow reports to be published which were derogatory to the conntry, or which reflected upon its institutions, or upon any policy which might be alopted hy the majority of the people. I do not hesitate to say above board that I would suppress them without i moment's thought. These delegates were brought to the country, not for the purpose of criticising our institutions nor to find falult with the policy of the majority of the people, or to say whether we should have a system of incidental protection or free trate. That is a matter on which they had a right to have their own private opinions. They came here and their expenses were paid for the purpose of visiting this country to ascertain whether it was a country, in which the overphus of population of the ohl country could settle with advantage to themselves. If they made a report that it was not a country fit for settlement, owing to its fiscal policy or for any other reason, and if such report were sent to me as heal of the department, I would at once act on the principle that I have indicated to this Hosec, and not publish it. I would not permit these delegates who had been brought here at the expense of the country to make any report and circulate it at our expense if it were intended to injure the country. The contrary principle to this may be the one on which my hon. friend thinks this country should be governed, but it is certainly one for which I would not hold myself responsible, nor would I be a party to it if I knew it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Would you pay their expenses?

Mr. BOWELL. Certainly, just as all other delegates were paid, but that is no reason, if they made a report which would injure the country.
that we should put an ardlitional expense on the country in enabling them to print and circulate it. I ani guite sure that the hom. member for Prant (Mr. Paterso:i) would not do so either, because I think he is too much of a patriot and likes his country too dearly to do anything of the kind. If he had the misfortune as a responsible Minister of this comntry to lring delegates to it, and if they should $^{\text {a }}$ make a report to him and he should real it. amd he thought it was of a character that was going to injure the comutry. I question very much if he would puhlish it to the world in order that it might do that mischief.

Mr. PATERNON (Brant). Did they make such at report:

Mr. Boll ELLL. I do not know. I did mot say so. I never hearel of such a report.

Mr. (AMblBELL. Wias it not submitter to the Minister of Agriculture :

Mr. Boll ELL. I Io not know. I am telling the Honse distinctly what I ats a member of the Hios: ermment woulidiondividually if it catme before me.

Mr. (AMPBFELE. Vin would not seme it batek withont reatling it:

Mr. BoWFELS. I domon know what I might do. I am very wuch inclined to think that if the hom. gentlemain wrote me ar report I might do as the member for West Lambton (Ah. Lister) dil. I might not have the time, or not think it worth rearling. Refering to Mr. Lowes letter, which I have not seen hefore. I fully agree with the remarks mate in reference to it. It is an improper letter for any deputy-head to write. and I amsatisfied that the Minister of Agriculture and the (iovernwent of which he forms a part, will see that the reputies sho not write letters of that kinl, or if they do that they will receive what they ought to receive after it hies hecome known. If the forernment paid for the writing of that pamphlet, then the copyright belonged to the Government, and I do not hesitate to say that this letter having been made publis ---how my hon. friend obtained it I do not know-I think I can safely say to this committee and to the puhlice that steps will be taken to ascertain why a deputy head of a department wrote a letter of the kind in order to extract moneys from the coffers of the country which should never have been pail.

Mr. FLINT. We have heard from the hon. Minister of War in regard to the principles that would actuate him in case a report was sent to him of which he disapproverl.- He has stated as Minister of the Crown that he would not have published at document of the kind he has alluded to: but he has not stated that he would not read it.

Mr. BOWELL. No. I did not say that. Of course I would real it, otherwise I would not know that it should be suppressed.

Mr. FLINT. And I presume that a large number of the members of this House will agree that if the report of the delegates was hostile to the interests of the country and to immigration which the department desires to promote, it would not be advisable to publish it as an immigration ducument. But I take this ground, that the Government having invited these delegates-men of high standing and exceptional intelligence and ability-to report on matters of this kiml, it was the duty of the fiovernment to have had that report in theirarchives in a position to be laid before this House, in order that the members representing the constituences of the country should be able to see the views expressed to the (iovernment by men temporarily in their service. I think the complaint which the representatives of the Maritime Provinces particularly have a right to make lefore this committee is this: These delegates, whowere peculiarly qualified to report on the capabilitie: and prospects of the Naritime Provinces. were invited to do so, their expenses were paid through. out the Maritime Provinces, they male a report. and their report is somewhere in the archives of the fiovermment either in Camada or in Lomdon: and we contend that the representatives of the people should have an opportunity of examining that report and seeing what the vicws of the delegates were. If they referred to the tiscal poliey of the locremment, if they showed that those grovinces were not desirable tields for immigration, then I think it would he only reasmalle that the diovernment shond say. We will not semblocaments of this kind abroml. becanse they may temd tocheck immigration : but 1 think it is a lumach of fath towiands the representitives of the people in this Honse. partienlarly to the representatives of the Maritime: Provinces, that we should not have anopportunity. of seeing what the views of those gentlemen were. I hope that the impressions mate on the mimls of those nelegates were not as strong is they hare heen represcated to be : lat we have reason to helieve that they reporte ${ }^{\text {t }}$ the thovermment that the anditions of life in the Daritime Provinees were too severe to permit them to recommeml thase portions of the lominion at any rate for immigration. If they have male this statement. it agroes with the opinion of a large number of the people of the Maritime Provinces and their representatives in this House. The combitions of life in eomserguence of what has been termerl by a prominent member of the Conservative party in Nosat Seotia this iniquitons tariff, and in consequence of the enomons extravagance of the dovermment, the ditticulties placed in the way by the failures of the Government to negotiate a reciprocity treaty with the United States. hare created such a repression in the Maritime provinces, that not moly is it unlikely that immigrants ean settle there with any prospect of improving their circumstances, but the residents of the country are fleeing away as fast as they call, and the reasons I have given are the true reasons for this exolus. We have in the Maritime Provinces, so fir as nature is concernen, as great advantages as any other part of the Dominion. I defy any hon. gentleman topoint out any territory with greater resources, a more agreeable climate, a more industrious population than the Ammapolis Valley in Nova Scotia; and yet in that fair valley, with all its resources, and its advantages of society, of education and of culture, we find the people leaving as rapidly as they can. Some of the finest counties in Nora Scotia hare actually decreased in population in the last ten years. We have enormous fishing, mineral, forest and agricultural resources of a very superior character, and the climate of the country is unerualled. We have the benefit of those equal laws which are the proud boasts of British subjects everywhere. There is no possible complaint that can be male of any feature of life in any.portion of the Maritime Provinces except those features comectel with the upportunity of the people to make in living and to prosper. Theseare the canses why immigrantsdo not come there $;$ and $I$ contend that the lest immigration prolicy that this fovernment could have, and the best alvertisement they could give the Maritime Provinces throughout the world, would be to reduce the taifif and tomak eanearnest endeavour tolning about reciprocal trale with our neighbours in the United States. Then we should have no reason to spuamder enornous sums to induce immigrants to come from alromal, because the circumstances of the people woulh le so easy and the conditions of life surroumbing them so cheerful and happy that immigrants would seek our shores without this enormous expenditure of money. Coning to the report of the farmers delegates, I think the committee has haul hefore it enough information to justify it in Drincing the Ministers before the bar of public 'phinion for uot publishing this report. We donot ats them to publish the report if it is against the interests of the comery, but we do claim that it should be laid before the Honse for the information of the members, so that we should have an "pprimity of seeing it and judging whether it -hnold loe puhlished or not. We have had placed hefore the House, motably the last time it was in committe, some reasons from the fiovermment sinfe why the inmigrants from abroal hand not renainel in the comitry, why intending immigrants in the old world hat declined to come to Canala, and why a large proportion of our people had from time to time left the conntry and are now leaving the comitry togoto the Cnited States. 1 think of all the ahsurd reasons ever given to a levislature, the most ahsurd was that given by the Minister of Agiculture the other night. that it was in consequence of the speeches, made by the Gppositim. Arguments of that kind may do very well as jocularity in a har-room, or a hotel corridor, wa at an excitel public meeting where people are only too realy to grasp at anything for the sake of turning an argument ; hat as a serious atgument in Parlianent, it is not worth a moment's comsideration. It seems to me purrile, in the face of the difficulties people have to overcome, in face of the combitions surrounding them, owing to the failure of the iowermment to extend our trale, to say that $^{\text {a }}$ the exmbus is chue to speeches of public men. I defy any hom. gentleman to point to one atdress of any leading man in Cimada, in which tither the resonires of the country, its capalilities, climate or the opportunities it affords for advancement, have heen decried or in any way made light of. Widd charges are mare that pulicic men have run lowan the Dominion, but let us have some duotations from their speeches in proof of such charges. If any such speech did exist or any such statement, hon. oentlemen opposite would be only too glan to place it in the must glating light possible before the people on every opportunity. But no such statement can be founl. I will tell hon. gentlemen, however, what does exist, and that is free criticism of the policy of the (iovermment, free and full discussion of the effects of their policy. It is the duty of members of the Opposition to see how the moneys have been expended, to see where the promises of the Government have been unfulfilled. ile know that these gentlemen made magnificent election promises that when placed in power prosperity would the the rule, and the exodus would be stopped. These claims, made by them at a time of great depression, were accepted hy the people who believed that the ( iovernment could, in some mysterious way, by the policy they propounlen, bring ahout a new era. But now we know hy hard experience that theex whas in greater than it ever was at any time during the Mackenzie regime, and that the taxition of the perple has been enormously increased. We know now that our expenditure has increased three fold, whileourpopulation hasscarcely increased at all: we know that the ohl and the weak remain at home and bear the burden of taxation, while the young and enterprising leare the country as if it were stricken with it pestilence. With regard to inmigration, while we see no signs of it in the estimates before the House, there are indications in caricus quarters, from sources supposed to he inapireal, that there will be a tremendons pressure in the next twelve months to induce some more formidable expenditure in comection with it. I wam the diovermment, howerer, that unless they revise the system, muless their agents are made nore responsible, unless they can show clearly that some material benefit will acerne from the expenliture of a larger sum, there will arise, particularly throughout the ohler provinces, suchalostility to the whole scheme that it will hare tolveahamdoned. It is ineredille that the fair provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotiaand the wealthy old Prorince of Ontario, have no attractions for immigrants from the old world. It is incredible that they shond have wo attractions for men with $\mathbf{t} 1,(\mathrm{kn})$ on $\mathrm{t}^{2}$,( HN ) sterling, who could find in the tine Province of Ontatio a must excellent climate, splendid soil and sitnation, and other attactions social and otherwise which woull be appreciated by the best class of immigrants. some other reason exists than the stale one that the Opposition speeches were driving the people ont of the comitry. Let the (:overmment make the combitions of life easier. let them cut down expenses, let them show that the public departments are not honeycomber with corruption, let them show that the great powers given (iovermment and the legislature were not given them to erush political freedom and emalle them to give the minority the representation which should be hat by the majority. Then immignation will come in, our own population will he kept at home, and will enjoy the prosperity long promised us. sir RI(PHARD (ARTWRICHT. Does the Minister of Agriculture intend to make enguiry into the authority of this letter signed ly his deputy, and inform us whether that letter is in the archives of his department:
Mr. CARLING: Certainly, I shall make the emuiry.

Sir RICHARI) (ARTWRIGHTS. I think that is a matter which should le dealt with promptly. I desire also to know whether we are to understand that the hon. gentleman will obtain from England and lay before us the reports of these two delegates: Before entering on a discussion of this kind, we should have had these reports. I want to know what the hon. gentleman's decision is on that point?
Mr. CARLING. I can only say that the reports made in 1891 were all submitted to the High Commissioner before they were printed, and as he selected these delegates in 1891, I referred the report to him to be dealt with and examined, is the High Commissioner for Canada. 'That was one particular reason why I did not go over the report and hold it, as I might have otherwise done. There was no other member of the (iovernment who had an opportunity of seeing or reading it, or, I think, who knew anything of it until they heard about it in this House.
sir RI('HARI) CARTWRI(iHT. We are now aware that there is such a report. Will you lay it hefore us?
Mr. CARLIN(i. I shoull be very happy to do so, hut I have no doubt it is now in the hands of the printers in England.
sir RICHARI) ('ARTWRE(iHT. A cablegram will hring it in a few days.

Mr. CARLIN: But it is probally in the printers' hands.
Nir RICHARI) CARTWRIGHT. A copy can be sent.

Mr. CAMERON. The hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Bain) has challenged any hon. memher on this side of the Honse to show any groumls why I should have stated that the specches of hon. members opposite would have any influence on parties who cmigrated from this country or on those who have been alsent in preventing them from returning to Cunda. It is not necessary to go into ancient history to show that their speeches would have that effect. When this question was under discussion a few nights ago, my hon. friend from North Wentworth (Mr. Bain) said:
"These gentlemen tell us, with the calm assurance which characterizes my hon. friend from Inverness (Mr. Cameron), that the reason why people leave this country is that gentlemen on this side of the House decry this country. I deny the statement emplatically, and I defy them to show any statement to prove their assertion."
This was his defiant demand for any evidence that my representations were founded on fact, but, before he concluded, he himself said :
"I say that the sooner we set about endeavouring to find a remedy for this condition of things, the better it will be for the people of Canada, for I can come to no other conclusion than that if we keep on at the present rate we will see our population gradually melting away and leaving our shores for a country where the conditions are more favourable for their personal advancement."
This is the same strain with the speech of my hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) who has just concluded. On the same evening my hon. friem the senior member for Prince, P.E.I. (Mr. Perry) said:
"The hon. member for Inverness must know that we have now in the United States over 2,0ư0,000 Canadians, a labouring class of people, who are developing the resources of that country, when we should have them here assisting to build up this country. When did these go there? Did they go in 1854 ? I do not know of one emigrant from Prince Edward Island who went to the United States from 1854 to 1866, but $I$ know that many Americans in that period came and settled in the Island. The hon. gentleman knows as well as I do that emigration from Nova Scotia is far greater now than it was from 1854 to 1866 ."
And he went on to show that the conditions on the other side were of such a character as to induce our people to go across the line, and that has been the tenor of all the speeches I have listened to for a period of years whenever this question of immigration has been before this House. I stated before, and I think I can prove, that the emigration that left the Dominion of Canada, or the Maritime Provinces particularly, was greater during the existence of reciprocity between 1854 and 1866 than the emigration which left this country at any other period of its existence. When this question was under the attention of Parliament in 1880, it did not occupy much of its attention. At that time, it was pointed ont that the census was not of a reliable character, that the entries in the customs were not reliable, but it was agreed on all hands that it could not be remedied. No one felt compelleal to change from the dre jur to the dre farto system. However, in $18(M)$, when this question was maler the consideration of the House, it was pointed out by the hon. members opposite, and particularly by the hon. member for Quebec, the senior member for Queen's, P. E.I., and other hon. gentlemen on that sids, that it was necessary to change the system, to abandon the de jure and come as near to the de jurfo system as possible. I felt at the time that, if an approach were made to the de facto system, the result would be disappointing to the people of this Dominion, but the Minister of Agriculture consented to adopt the system which was suggested by hon. gentlemen opposite, and that was concurred in by all those who were then in attendance. The Minister of Agriculture said :
"There was no fixed time in the Order in Council, but instructions were given each enumerator to consider those who were absent on employment during the summer as temporarily absent, and to include them as belonging to the house. The enumerators are sworn, and receive instructions as to how the census shall be taken. There may be mistakes, but $I$ am sure erery precaution was taken and will be taken that none shall be entered on the lists but those that are in the house at the time and those who are considered temporarily absent for a month or two during the summer."
My hon. friends opposite have taken advantage of the apparent decrease in the increase-if that term may be allowed--of the population of this Dominion, but there is one reliable source of information, which I believe hon. gentlemen opposite will not refuse to accept, and that is the census taken upon the other side of the line. I do not think that any gentleman opposite will maintain that the census of the United States, as far as it represents the foreign birth of residents on the other side, is not a reasonably fair representation of the emigration from Canada to the United States. The census of the United States will prove that the emigration from Canada into that country, during reciprocity between $18: 54$ and 1866 , was greater than the emigration from Canada at any period before or since. In 1830 the number of pers. ple in the United States of British North American origin was only 2,277 ; and in 1840 the number was 31,627 ; in 1850 it was 147,711 . Up to this time there was no National Policy to affect emigration from Canarla into the United States. In 1860, which decade includerl the first six years of reciprocity, the number of British North Americans in the United States was 249,970 . The increase during the first six years of reciprocity was not less than 101,259. In 1870 the number of Canadians in the United States amounted to 493,463 , and this decarle included the second six years of reciprocity, showing an increase 243,493 . I say that in 110 twelve years since Canada was organized, did so many people emigrate as during that period. On a former occasion I gave reasons to show that it was not due to the National Policy, but to the free trade relations that existed between Canada and the United States in the products of the sea, the soil, the mines and the forest, that so large a number of people emigrated to the United States, when not less then 3:1, 229 during 20 years, in 12 years of which we had reciprocity with the United states, left this country to cross the border. In 1871 the number I gave included 33,208 Nova Scotians: that was orer one-tenth of the population. From New Brunswick there were $\mathbf{2 6}, \mathbf{3 6 4}$, which embraced more than one-tenth of the population of that province. From Prince Edward Island there were only 1,357 : and any person who knows that that is the garden of the Dominion can easily see why, at that time, it was not necessary for them to go abroad toseek their fortunes, because the market which reciprocity in the products of the soil had given, afforded them employment at home, and enabled them to live and to make money, as the senior member for Prince County (Mr. Perry) said when this quesion was under discussion a few nights ago.

Mr. LANDERKIN. What was the increase in Canada during these years ?

Mr. CAMERON. That has no bearing whatever on the question. In 1881, there were 717,153 souls of British North American origin, residents of the United States, and I would remind my hon. friends opposite that that decade included the five years they were in power.
sir RICHARD CARTWRItiHT. During which period the agricultural population of Ontario increased seven times as fast as it did during the last ten years.

Mr. CAMERON. My hon. friend gets his information from sources which he has leclared to be utterly unreliable.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The hon. gentleman knows nothing of what he is talking ahout.

Mr. CAMERON. I have never been characterized in my earlier days as a mixer and muddler of figures. In 1880 we hall 610,090 Canadians of old Canada in the United States. We had in that year $\mathbf{5 1 , 1 6 0}$ Nova Scotians, 41,788 from New Brunswick, and 7,537 from Prince Edward Island. The most of them left during the blue-ruin reign of the Grit party in this Dominion.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Would you repeat those figures again? I did not catch them.

Mr. CAMERON. I do not think my hon. frient is able to catch anything just now. The figures, then, prove that the emigration from Canada to the United States was greater, if the census of the United States is reliable, during reciprocity than it was at any other period of the history of Canada. They also prove that the emigration from this country was greater during the regime of the Grit party than at any other time. I venture the assertion on the basis of common sense that there was a less emigration during the last ten years into the United States, than during any other period in the existence of Canada, and that emigration decreased on account of the National Policy during the last decade. There is another point to which I wish to call attention. An exodus is not always a sign of blueruin. Emigration from the rural districts of this Dominion into the United States, is not a sign of ruin and decay. If my hon. friends opposite would only have a little patience and await the census returns of the industries of this Dominion, which are forthcoming, they will find that the population in the rural districts are in leetter circumstances now than they ever have been before in the history of this Dominion; they will find that although a few young men are leaving the rural districts for the States, they are going there to better their own condition and better the condition of those whom they leave behind them. If a farmer has two or three or four sons on his farm, and it only reguires the labour of half the number to operate the farm, is it not to the advantage of those at home that some of them should leave the farm to better their condition in the cities, or go to the other side of the line as our hou. friends opposite suggest that they should do. I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to contradict the figures which are given from the United States statistics.

Mr. LISTER. They are not correct.
Mr. CAMERON. They are not correct in some respects, but they cannot be incorrect when they give the population of the United States by the births. I have not the slightest doubt that the number which are taken of foreign births in the United States or Canada are as correct as any portion of the census can possibly be. I venture to make another prediction which is not always very pulatable to my hon. friends opposite.

Mr. MILL; (Bothwell). Are these predictions?
Mr. CAMERON. Not palatable to my philosophic friend opposite.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I understool my hon. friend to say that he was stating facts, but he now states that they were predictions and he is going to give us another one.

Mr. CAMERON. I said that I marle some predictions which had been verified and that I would make another one now. I predicted some years ago that so long as the Grit party pursued the policy of obstruction and howling blue-ruin, that they would not obtain power, and that has been verified. I also made the prediction that they never would attain power while they were encouraging our people to emigrate, by the speeches they were making in the country and in this House.

Mr. MILLS' (Bothwell). My hon. friend says they are leaving the country for their own advantage.

Mr. CAMERON. I hope my hon. friend will keep calm.
Mr. BOWELL. It is a good job for the country that they are all Grits that are leaving.

Mr. CAMERON. les, I proved that too. I believe that the census of the United States will show conclusively in the enumeration by origin of the people there, that fewer people left Canada during the last decade than left it at any other perion. There is not a sensible person on the other side of the House who will not agree with me that as far as the enumeration by birth of the people of the United States is concerned, that the census of that country is reasonably correct, and that in that respect it is a better test for 1 s to go by than our own census. We know that as a matter of fact my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) and my hon. friend from Quebec (Mr. Langelier) and in fact every leading gentleman opposite, proved conclusively that in the census of 1881, there were hundreds of thousands of our people on the other sile of the line at that time. I tirmly lelieve that if the census of 1891 were taken as they were taken in 1881 and in the previous census, there would not le such a great disappointment at the results.
Mr. PATERson (Brant). Would my hon. friend le kind enough to say what he considers the difference in the way in which the census was taken by the Canadian Govermment in 1881 and in 18:9!

Mr. CAMERON. My hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. )avies) and other hon. gentlemen opposite stater positively in 1890, that there were hundreds of thousands of Canadians on the other side of the line that were enumerated in the census of 1881. I agreed with him at that time and I believe that he was right. I believe that humdreds of thousamis of our people living in the Luited states were enumerated in the census since 18s1. Up to last year it would not be fair to take the census under the de farto system lecause the few who were on the other side of the line previous to that time were only temporarily absent, and when the census was taken here it was like what my hom. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) said, that if a father were asked if a son who was twenty years away was expected to return, he would naturally say "yes." The Government of the day with that parental desire to see the chiddren of this Dominion return held on, without a change in mode of taking the census, up to the last census, hoping that they would return.
Mr. Paterson (Brant). Did they do that with people who were absent for twenty years?

Mr. CAMERON. My hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) said that in 1800.
Mr. Paterson (Brant). What do you say :
Mr. CAMERON. I believe that my hon. friend from Queen's was correct, and that there were hundreds of thousands enumerated.
Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That were away 90 years?

Mr. CAnERON. He said that some who were away 20 years were taken in the census in Prince Elward Island, and I believe from my experience that he was correct. We cannot hope for an absolutely correct census in this Dominion or in the United States or in any other country where the people are floating from one side to the other, and there is no one knows that letter than my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Paterson).
Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. Did the census takers receive instructions from the Government to that effect? I would like to know if the Government instructed the census takers in 1881 to count people as residents of Canala who had been absent for 20 years?

Mr. CAMERON. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) said so, and Mr. Blake said so, and hon. gentlemen opposite agreed with them.
Mr. Paterson (Brant). What do you say?
Mr. CAMERON. I believe they were correct. However, on the suggestion of theee gentlemen, the mode of taking the census was changed, and if it had not been changed as my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) knows, the showing of the census would have been far different.

I say that the census of 1901, which will be taken I have not the shadow of a doubt by the LiberalConservative party, will show that the increase during the transpiring decade will be larger than the increase during any decade since Confederation or before that time. I do not mean to say that the increase of population would be very material ; but owing to the change, according to the evidence of my hon. friend the senior member for Queen's, P.E.I., the evidence of the leader of the Opposition of the day, Mr. Blake, the evidence of my hon. friend from Quebec aud other leading gentlemen opposite, there were no less than 400,000 people on the other side of the line who were enumerated in the census of 1881. It is owing to the mode in which the recent census was taken that that was changel, and not in order to gratify hon. gentlemen opposite : but surely the change has given them ample excuse for trying to induce the people of this country to believe that lecause our people have been going across the line, the country is going to the dogs. Why, no less than $3 \mathrm{Fon},(\mathbf{0} 0$ people went to the United States between 18.5 and 18:1, during a part of which time we had reciprocity; and yet no one would pretend to say that at that time the country was going to the dogs. It is not going to the dogs now. I have no doubt that when the report showing the industries of the Dominion will le presented to this House, it will show that the country is more prosperous now than it has been either before Confederation or since.

Mr. MaCDONALD (Huron). I wish to refer to a few of the remarks mate by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. He took a great deal of trouble to show that we on this side are continually decrying our country. Now, I do not think that one line can be produced to show that the members of the Liberal party have decried their comntry. True, we have said that our country was not as prosperous as we wished to see it. We have said that a large number of our people were leaving us, not because of any natural causes, but principally on account of the policy inaugurated twelve years ago by the hon. gentlemen sitting on the Treasury benches. I fo not think that stating the facts in reference to the condition of the country is decrying the country at all. If I were called in to see the Minister of Militia, and I found him sick and I told him he was sick, I would not in any way be decrying hiseharacter. Now, the constitution of the country is good, and its advantages are very great, but it is sick, it is not as prosperous as it should be, and if the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat thinks that this is decrying the country, I would recommend him to read some of the speeches delivered by his late leader, Sir John Macdonald, in 1877 and 1878. If he would read the speech delivered at Sherbrooke on one occasion, he would find that Sir John Macdonald pointed out that thousands and tens of thousands of the very best people of this country-for he stated the young men and young girls-were leaving Lower Canada and going to the manufacturing centres of the United States, there to add to the wealth and prosperity of a foreign nation. If it was patriotic on his part to make such statements then, how can it be unpatriotic on our part? Then he will do well to read the speech delivered by Sir John Macdonald in Montreal, in which he stated that we had no workmen nowalays, because there was no work in Canada for them.

Mr. CAMERON. That was the time of the soup kitchens.

Mr. Macionald (Huron). And they were compelled to leave this country on account of the insane policy of the Liberal party then in power. He will do well also to read the speeches delivered by Sir David Macpherson when that gentleman travelled up and down the length and breadth of this country, stating that this country was in a desperate condition and that our people were leaving and going to the Unitei States to find employment. He stated that there were insolvencies in the country the like of which were never known in the country before. He will do well to read the speeches of Sir Leonard Tilley delivered in 187 and 1878 , in which he will find the statement that we could not borrow money in England, because, the credit of the country was gone under the insame policy of the Liberal party. If he will read those speeches he will find paragraph after paragraph in which it is said that the people were learing our comentry because it was in a had condition under the regime of the Liberal party. This was untrue to a very large extent, and I am going to prove it to the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman stated that 400,000 people went to the United States from 1854 to 1871, or in about 20 years, or about 20,000 a year. Will he follow a few tigures which I will give in regard to the exotus under the National Policy? The hon. gentleman will not doubt the accuracy of the statement made in the report of the Minister of Agriculture that 886,000 immigrants came into this country who stated their intention of becoming citizens of Canada during the last 10 years. Now, taking the natural increase of our population at the same rate as that of the United States during the last decade, that is 14 per cent, it would amsunt to an increase of 600,000 , which, added to the 886,000 immigrants, would make $1,486,000$ people which should have been the increase in our population. Now, we had an increase of just 504 ,( $1(6)$, which leaves about $1,000,000$ to be accounted for. Will the hon. gentleman undertake to account for them? I will sit down for five minutes if he will undertake to do so. Where have they gone? If they did not come to the country we were led astray by the statements that we supposed to be true; if they did come, the question naturally arises where have they gone? Echo answers "where?" They are not in this country. They must be in some other country. It is not likely that they went beck to England, and so we conclude that they have gone to the United States. Divide that $1,000,000$ people by 10 , and the result is that 100,000 people went away each year under the National Yolicy, assuming that the figures presented us were true.

Mr. CAMERON. Will my hon. friend just have patience until the census of the United States will show the birthplaces of those who reside in the United States.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Will the hon. gentleman take the figures before his eyes at present, prepared by his own Government, and will he say that those figures are untrue. What is the use of going to the United States when we have public documents prepared by ourselves. Is the hon. gentleman not willi:g to accept them? And will he ask us to wait un'il some time when he will receive from some other :ource a contradiction of these documents. The i n . gentleman says that the movement of the pop slation can be accountel for largely by the number who have gone from the rural sections into the city. Now, I have taken ten cities of Ontario, the nost prosperous we have, and I have taken up ten similariy sized cities in Ohio, Michigan and Indiana, the three states adjoining our own country, and I find that while our cities increased about 36 per cent, theirs increased about 63 per cent.

Mr. CAMERON. A good place to go to.
Mr. MACIONALD (Huron). So a gool many of our people think, and the reason is they think they can do better there than at home. The hon. gentleman knows very well that it has been estimated that no less than 40,(0)O Nova scotians are in the city of Boston, irrespective of the large number in Providence, Rhode Island, and other places in the adjoining states. The hon. gentleman has tried to account for the smallness of the population by saying that the system used when taking the census in 1881 was not the same as that used in 1891. He must know that the two systems are exactly the same with the exception of limiting the time of the abseniee. Does he not know that Mr. Johnson, the statisticiani, has stated that even if the two methois were identically the same, it would not make any appreciable difference, that the result, instead of having $11 \cdot 6$ he would only have $12 \cdot 6$; and that is a small increase compared with $2 \overline{3}$ per cent on the other side of the line. Another point the hon. gentleman brought up was that Mr. Davies, P. E. I., stated some years ago that there were 100,000 in the United States who were not in Canada in the census of 1881, and the hon. gentleman says he believes Mr. Davies before he believes the Governnent, because, if he believes Mr. Davies was right, he must believe that the Government had not a proper system with regard to the method of taking the census. If the hon. gentleman thinks that the Government has so little understood their duty as to be unable to count our people without counting large numbers in the United States, he believes they are wrong.
Mr. Cameron. What Mr. Johnson did say is this:
"To prevent the indiscriminate counting of absentees a time limit was introduced for the first time in the recent census. The application of this limit restricted the enumerators to taling only those persons whose. ence from the Dominion or the province was really temporary. The absence of the time limit in 1881 led to considerable laxity and perrons were included in the popalation who had been out of the country for years."

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). Read the bulletin of Mr. Johnson and you will find that the difference in his opinion would not exceed one per cent.
Mr. CaRLING. Five per cent.
Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I saw it one per cent in one of the books. There is a great difference in the immigration we get into the country and the exodus from the country. Those who leave are Canadians born and bred, whom we have educated at great cost, and who, as soon as they have received the full equipment to prepare them for the serious work of life, leave us. It is the healthy, the robust, the intelligent, the vigorous and enterprising people who leave us, and whon do they leave behinds They leave the odder people, and we have to bring in large numbers from foreign countries to supplement that loss. No one will say that one immigrant from the old country is equal to a Canadian, because even though he be physically strong and energetic he must lee a few years here before he can become habituated to the work of the country, and therefore he is not as goorl a citizen as the average Canadian. Again we are in the habit of bringing out to this country a number of children, boys and girls, every year, and I would ask the Minister of Agriculture: Who has the inspection of those children lefore they come here ? Are they selected by the poor-house boards or by the parties who bring them out and receive S2 a head for them? Who are the parties appointed to inspect these children as to disease and hereditary taint? Are they doctors" And liy whom are they appointed, and by whom paid! Are they responsibie, directly or indirectly, to the Government of Canada for their inspection and reports? I maintain that a large proportion of those children are tainted with hereditary and scrofulous diseases, and when they grow up and marry they sow the seeds of disease and immoral ity in our population. There is not a gentleman on either side of the House $w$-ho, if he looked over the character of the children coming out, would not come to the conclusion that quite a proportion are unfit to le brought into this country. I knew just nine in our neighlourhood who were brought fronithe homes and adopted by people there, and every one of the nine has leen a failure. Some of the girls have lost their character, and some of the loys had to be returned. They become so profligate and so dissolute that they are different from other parties, and it stands to reason that there is no person in this country who would not take greater care as to the purification of the stock in his barnyard than we are taking in the purification of the people of this country, because we import these people from the slums, yea, some of them from the reformatories to which they have been sent for crimes they have committed, and they are brought out here from those dens of infamy to mingle with our people. Any one can tell you that these children, born of dissolute, immoral and scrofulous parents, inherit to a certain extent, and although the diseases may not show in that generation, they will in a future generation, so that it is very dangerous unless there is some inspection by a Government officer, responsible to the Government for the duty he performs. This is a question of importance which I bring before the Minister, and I hope he will answer it. Of course, if they were examined by an officer of the Government, paid by the Government and compelled to report to the Government, they would have taken all the care they could, but I understand there is only an inspection made after they land in this country in many cases. It is said that any person who is found tainted is returned, but I have not heard of any case where they have been returned, and it would be a sorry thing to return a few boys or girls after they had come to our shores, and were found to be tainted with diseuse. It would be better to have the inspection made there by persons who would see the thing properly done and who would only send out people who were pure. It is the duty of the Government to prevent our population from being made impure by the introduction of impure bloonl from abroad. In reference to the letter which was read by the member for Brant (Mr. Somerville), I was sorry that the necessity arose for reading it, but I compliment the Minister of Militia for the emphatic way in which he condemned any officer of the Crown who would write such a letter, and I thank him for doing it, and it adds to his reputation as leing one of the most honourable men in the Conservative party.

Mr. DEPUTY speaker. Carried.
Mr. MaCionald (Huron). No, I want an answer to the question I have put to the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. BoWEEL. That question has heen discussed in this House repeatedly. I think there is a gool deal of force in what the hon. gentleman has said, but the sulject has been repeatedly brought under the notice of the Government.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I brought it up in the Committee on Immigration and Colonization, but 1 should like to have an answer to the question. By whom are these chillren selected:

Mr. CaRLING. To what children doee the hon. gentleman refer ?

Mr. MaCDONALD (Huron). Those who are brought out by Dr. Barnardo and Mrs. Burt and others. There are 3,410 children brought out by these societics for whom the Government pay $\leq 2$ a head, which amounts to $\$ 6,800$. By whom and how are they selected, and how are they inspecter:

Mr. CARLING. I understand that the children brought out by those philanthropic persons are not inspected at all. It is the pauper children brought out, that we do not pay for at all, who are inspected by the Imperial Government, and that is seen to by the High Commissioner, and our agents in Canala inspect them each year and report to the Imperial (iovernment as to their condition and how they are getting aloug. The reports are very satisfactory, and there are not more than 5 per cent that have not turned out to be good boys and girls.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). With all die respect to the Minister, I think this is a very por way of doing business in regard to this important question. He says he hardly knows who inspects them. He says that those for whom the Government pay $$ 2$ a head are not inspected at all.

Mr. CARLING. Those are all healthy children. There has never been any charge that they are not healthy.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). The Minister says there is no inspection of the children brought out by Miss Rye, Dr. Barnardo and others. It is shown by his own report that a number of these children are taken from the reformatories of England. This year's report gives a statement of the reformatories from which they are brought. No person can impose upon the intelligence of the House by saying that children who have been guilty of some crime and have been sent tos the reformatory as a punishment and then brought to this country, are the children who should come, and there should be some inspection to guarantee a certain class of children being brought to this country. Again, how can the inspectors of this country do any good by inspecting children who have arrived and remained in this country? Can we pick them up from amongst the other chillten and send them back? Is it not reasomable that the inspection shoull take place on the ground where they are, and that the children fit to le sent out to this country should be selected, and that we should have a doctor responsible to this (iovernment and paid ly this Government so that he would give the benefit of the doubt to the (iovermment and so that these childiren should be examined as to scrofulous, venereal and r, ther diseases with which many of them are affecter, if not hy their own action, by the action of their parents. If the children are found pure after their inspection, they could be sent out.

Mr. CARLINi: I am not aware that they are inspectelat all. The children that are brought out by these ladies and gentlemen are healthy children. and they are pronounced healthy when they arrive here ly our agents.

Mr. MacDoNald (Huron). The Minister has not had the same experience in examining these chilliren that I have had. I must assure him that a large proportion of them are affected with scrofulous and skin diseases, or secondary venereal diseases. I know this for a fact, hecause I have examinel children coming from these homes: and it is no use telling the intelligent people of Cinada that children gathered up in Eagland from the slums of large cities, are coming out here without lringing with them a certain quantity of that disease from which Canadian children, horn under different conditions, are free. I think if the firvermment have no system of inspection in Figlan!, it is their duty to establish one, so that the chilltren coming out here, for whick we pay two dollars a head, should not le taken from the reformatories of English paupers and brought over here to hecome criminalsin our comntry, and to infect our population with their diseises. It is our duty to protect the innocence of our own people. Remenber, also, that from the statements of police magistrates in this country this very class of children figure very largely anong the criminal classes. Now, it is no use shatting our eyes to these facts. I think it is impolicy on the part of the Covernment not to decide at once that these children must le properly inspectel, and to allow none to come in to pollute the stream of living humanity in our comntry by diseases of that character. I am glad I have put these questions, because it has brought ,out the fact that there is no inspection. I would strongly urge upon the Minister the need of looking into this matter with a view of taking some steps to see that a proper investigation and inspection is made into the physical condition of the children brought over here by public funds.
Mr. Watson. I hope that the debate that has taken place, and the evidence that has been produced lefore the House, notably the letter from the Deputy Minister of Agriculture which has been condemned by the Minister of Militia, will have some good effect, and that the arguments that this side of the House have made will, at least, receive the consideration of the Immigration Department. I certainly think that the Deputy Minister, who has leen attacked by members on this side of the House on different occasions, should be a responsiinle gentleman. It was stated last night by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) that, with all deference to the Minister, a considerable amount of dry rot exists in the agencies in Great Britain: the only exception he marie was that of Mr. Dyke. I woul not go so far as that hou. gentleman went last night, even if I knew Mr. Dyke as well as he pretends to know him. I would not admit, after living in Manitoba 8 or 9 years as he has, that Mr. Dyke or any one else coming from the old country, could give me information as to the wants of the people of the North-West. The hon. member for Selkirk almitted that Mr. Dyke was able to inform him of the needs of the people of Manitoba during his visit there last year. I was surprised to hear an hon. gentleman representing a constituency, who hal lived 9 years in that country, almitting that a gentlenan. casually visiting the province from the old country, could inform him as to the needs of the province in which he livel. Nou, that hon. gentleman stated that dry rot existed among all our agents in the old country, except Mr. Iryke. As I understand it, Mr. Dyke is a supervisor, to some extent, of all the other agents in the old country. I can almost even excuse Mr. Dyke when we know that the gentleman who has practically control of the Inmigration Department is the present Deputy Minister of Agriculture. I have thought for years, and I think this House must have thought for years, from the evidence given by that gentleman year after year. before the Immigration and Colonization Committee, that dry rot had set in in that gentleman long ayo. It has appeared to me, and to all the other representatives of Manitola and the North.West, that a change should be made in the deputy head. I have been attacked in the committee by that gentleman for speaking my mind in the House, when every statement that I made with regard to the immigration returns was proved by the census. Notwithstanding that we have had that gentleman year after year telling us the number of immigrants that were coming to our country, the census clearly showed that they had not come, or if they had, they were not in the country now. Then we had hon. gentlemen on the fovernment side of the House getting up and decrying our country in apologizing for the fact of these people not leing in the country. One went no far as to say that it was on account of the early frost in the North. West. Now, I do unt think that language has ever been used hy any of the hon. gentlemen on this side of the House that was calculated to do so much injury to the North-West as that. We give reasons why the people have left the country : we believe it is the fiscal policy of the Government, and that being the case, 1 certainly think, if they are going to retain that policy, that their whole immigration policy should be reorganizell. So I think that this reorganization should not only include these agents in the old country and Mr. Dyke, but that it should also include the Deputy Minister of Agriculture. So far as the head of that department is concerned, we are going to have a change, and I hope the change will be for the better. It nust be admitted that the immigration schemes of this Government in the. past have been a failure; for all the money that has been spent for that purpose the results are very meagre. According to the statement made to-night by the hon. meniber for Inverness (Mr. Cameron) the people who leave our country, leave it for the countrys goorl.

Mr. CAMERON. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. WATNON. The hon. gentleman said that when these people left Canala those whom they left Iehind them were better off. Then why should this House vote money to bring people here: to take the place of those who have left.

Mr. CAMERON. Because there are new territories to people.

Mr. WATSON. If there are new teritories to people, those who have left our country ought to le kept here to occupy those territories. Then we are told that people leave the east and go to the west.

Mr. CAMERON. You discourage them from going there.

Mr. WATsON. When we take the census we find that penple have leftour country, young men of energy and enterprise, who, as he says, have left the commtry to benetit their condition. I believe they have left the country to benefit their condition, and because they are young and enterprising, and have gone to a foreign country, we must regret it, and we ought to try and keep them at home. I do not believe that all the money you spend on immigration will increase the population of Canada as it should be increased. and the people that you bring in here at a great expense to the public treasury will not replace the men who have left the country. We claim that our young Canadians of enterprise and enersy are the very class of men we ought to keep here, and so far as we are concernerl in Manitoba and the North. West, we know that one good Canadian is worth two or three settlers that you can bring from any country in the world. Now, in regard to these farmers delegates, we know, from the evidence given to-night, that they had some reason for making a report against the fiscal policy of the Giovernment, as they could not advise their friends and relatives to come to this country on account of that policy. Now, while I would like to see a large amount of money voted to bring immigrants to this country -hecause we must do the best we can, we have got to try something to counteract the bad influence of the fiscal policy-we should see to it that the right class of people are brought here. We have a glorious heritage in our Canadian NorthWest : it is the backbone of Canada, so far as her credit is concerned. But the fiscal policy of the Government is against that country, and tends to discourage immigrants from coning here from other parts of the world. I do hope that the evidence that has been offered here to-night, especially that letter signed hy the Jeputy Minister of Agriculture which was intended to show a man who had published a pamphlet the means whereby he could defraud the Government, will be taken cognizance of. If that Deputy Minister has leen guilty of such an act, it certainly ought to be an excuse for getting rid of him. I do not know what particular ties exist between that gentlentan and the Government, but 1 am satisfied that we cannot expect to have a proper system of immigration to Canala while we have such a man controlling the departinent. I have expressed myself on this matter before the Committee on Immigration and Colonization and in this House. I think that the memlers of this House who are members of that committee and have heard the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, who takes longer to ssy less than any man I ever heard speak, make his annual statements, will come to the conclusion that he is not a proper person to direct the immigration depart ment of this country, and have under his control the expenditure of a large sum of money, after the evidence we have had here to-night over his own signature, that he showed a man how to defraud the treasury. I trust that when this immigration department is transferrel to another department of the fiovernment, that the men who mate such a miserable failure of our immigration policy for the last ten years will lee supplanted by abler and more active and more energetic men.

Mr. McNCLLEN. I earnestly hope that the discussion to-night will have a beneficial effect. I ams sure that the Minister in charge of the department will appreciate the discussion and will bring about a letter condition of things during the next ten years than in the past. Weare willing to spend money to bring people here if we can keep them here when they come, but it is a sad fact that the census shous that all we have brought here have left us. The Minister of War said to-night, that if the report by the delegates reffected on the general condition of Canada, he would have no hesitation in suppressing it at once. I agree with that to a certain extent, but if these men in their wisdom felt it their duty to draw the attention of the people in the old country to the fact that the policy of protection militated against the prosperity of the people here, these delegates would not have discharged their duty if they had not made known fully any oljections they had to the fiscal policy of Canarla. They felt it their duty to do that, and the Minister of Agriculture appears to have thought it his duty to prevent that report being laid before Parliannent, and here turned it to the High Commissioner. The Auditor General's Report shows. in the amounts paid to men for trying to bring immigrants here, and for trying to locate them and repatriating those who have gone to the United States, that a great deal of this money has been wasted. You find that one W. A. Welster whom you can meet in every constituency in this country where there is a bye-election, and who is nothing but an electioneering agent, has drawn Si, 928 last year as immigration agent. It is undoubtedly a inisappropriation of public money to keep a man of that stamp in such a position and to charge his expenses on the country as an alleged immigration agent. The letter which has been referred to tonight, and which from the evidence on its face has undoubtelly leen written by the Deputy Minister of Agriculture, is a reflection upon that gentleman and upon the head of the department. A man drawing a salary of $\mathbb{E 3 , 2 0 1}$ who is supposed to guarl the best interests of the people, who woull lend himself to the writing of such a document showing a person how he could extort money out of the people of this country is not fit to hold his office. All these things go to show the recklessness with which our inmigration system has been conducted within the past ten years. Hon. gentlemen remember the case of Têtu, the immigration agent at Emerson, which came before the committee last year. That man has now passed away, but after all we should be permitted to draw the attention of the House to the irregularities which took place under his management. I may mention that I notice by the Auditor General's Report that he drew his pay up to the 30 th Jume last. It is proved clearly by sworn testimony before the Public Accounts Committee that the Minister had been informed that this man was extracting money out of the public treasury improperly, and that he was charging for his own brother-in-law, a man namel Fournier, sin a month for 11 months as caretaker of the office, while Fournier was away in the States, and that this man hal pocketed the money by endorsing the chejues as drawn by Fournier. That witness stated that he told the Minister of Agriculture in his own office of these irrecularities, but notwithstanding they were allowed to continue for 11 months, and until they came out in the Public AccountsCommittee. All these things show that the management of the whole immigration system has been reckless and extravagant. and without any returns. If on this side of the House we have pointedly criticised this expenditure, it is because we feel it to be our luty to loso in the face of the revelations of the census. It is in the interest of the comentry that we criticise these items, and we earnestly hope that in no future Parliament will the Opposition feel called upon to bring before the House the evidence of the want of care and proper management which have been exposel to-night as well as at other times in this House. Now, I wish to draw the Minister's attention to the payment of $\$ 1.66 \overline{5} .40$ last year as salary to .J. H. Metialfe, besides $\$ 2.50$ a day for living allowance for 112 days. I would like to know who Mr. Metcalfe is? Is he the man who is a member of this House? has he been in the service of the fiovernment as an immigration agent : where did he perform the service. and what did he do:

Mr. CARIING: I think the hon. gentleman knows Mr. Metcalfe as well as I do.

Mr. MoMCLLEN. I do not know him at all
Mr. CARLING: I think the hom. gentleman discussed him last year very fully and freely. Mr. Metcalfe is now the member for Kingston, and he was employed frequently in the North-West, in Dakota and in Ontario.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). While he was a memher?

Mr. CARIINi: No, not while a member: and he did gool service in inducing immigration to the North-West. I think we succeeded last year in bringing two or three thousand people from Dakota; and the seed having been sown, we expect still better results this year.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the hom, gentleman state what particular pualities Mr. Metcalfe possesses to fit him to be an immigration agent? Does he speak French or fiermans?
Mr. CARLING. It is not necessary that he should speak French or German. He is a man like Mr. Weloster, whom I think the hon. gentleman knows.

Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, there is not a byeelection held at which Mr. Webster is not present working for the fovernment.
Mr. CARLING. I think the hon. gentleman knows that Mr. Welster has done good service for the country. I do not know any man who has done more in Dakota than he has in turning the eyes of the people of that state, especially Canadians, to the advantages of our own North-West.

Mr. Metcalfe has leen erually energetic in inducing people from the western states to come to Canala.

Mr. McMLleEN. All I have to say is that I consider it an injustice to keep a man like Mr. Webster 10 go aromind to the bye-elections. I am satisfied that he has not rendered service to this conntry for the money he has taken as an immigration agent. The appearance and adilress of the nan, and everything alout him, are not such as to reflect credit on this country, and I would not take him to be a man who woull make a very active immigration agent. He is capable of talking a good deal in his own way, but 1 do not believe he is at all a success as an immigration agent. With regaril to Mr. Metcalfe, he has heen a memler of the Legislature of Ontario in opposition to Mr. Mowat, and when he has not leen there, this Gorermment has employed him and sent him to Dakota. Is that because he has no other way of living? Now, if the hon. Minister wants to prevent lengthened discussions of items of this kind, let him bring evidences that the money we vote is properly expendel; and if without that he thinks we are going to allow items of this kind to go meriticised he is very much mistaken.
Mr. MaCDONALD (Huron). I made a statement with reference to the sources from which the chiliden I referred to were taken. I stated that a number of them were taken from the reformatories of England. I have here the report of the Minister of Agriculture for $18 \times 8$, and on page 2.2 I tind a table under this healing: "The following statement shows the number of immigrants, chiefly children, brought to Canada under the auspices of charitable societies and individuals during the last six years:-Kingsuoorl Reformatory, Bristol: Dr. Barnario, London; Redhill Refonnatory, Falthham Reformatory, Bedforizhire Reformatory. Suffolk Reformatory, Oxford Reformatory, Rinton Reformatory." From thew were taken. in 18ss, . 99 children who were brought to this comers and on whom we paid $\$ 2$ each. Fifty-nine juvenile criminals taken from England.

An hon. MEMBER. Sot at all.

Mr. MaCIONALD (Haron). No person is put into the reformatory unless for some simple crime. Therefore these children may not be very deeply dyed criminals, still they have the elementeof criminality in them, and they will sow the seeds of crimnality in the country. Ido not think they are a class which ought to be brought out, and I dray the attention of the Minister to it.

Mr. Paterson (Brant). I would vote this item readily if the results were not so disappointing. It is very disappointing that we should have gone for years expending such large sums and then when we take the nation's stock and count our assets find that we are short and have done an unprofitable business. It is a matter of regret to me that we should have to expend money to secure settlers for Manitoba and the North-West, while at the same time we are losing so many of the older settlers of Canada. If there is any way by which we conld induce those who feel impelled by circumstances to leare the prorince in which they live, to go to portions of the Dominion where they wonld have opportunities for bettering their circumstances more favourable than the States, it seems to me

We buchit to emileatone to to 0 . It semas to me that pamphlets listributed anong the farmers of Ontarin and the other provinces, drawing the attention of the great presililities in Manitolsa and the North-West and the many openings for investment and enterprise in British Columbia. that wothd tend to the welfare and benefit of the people and prevent Camadians from going into the Unitel states. It is tole regretted that while we are trying. on the one hand, to induce people to come from the ohder comitries and settle here, on the other hami, the liest of oun perople are consing wer to the Lnited States from some cause or another. I uas only too glad to hear the Minister state that 2.1 Mn (Gamadians had leen brought from Dakota oluring last year. If that be an actuad fact. I.lo not legruige the mones spent in bringing them over. hut it would be money letter spent had it been used in the first instance rop direct their attention to their own country. If tre coull impress on the minds of our people the fate that there are many opportunities for benefiting their condition in Manitehsi, the Worth- West and Pritish Colambia, much greater than the reare on the other sile, and thas turs their steps in that direction, we would be toing a gered work. I do not desire the diovernment to mesettle the ideas of people located in the obler provinces. hut if those who feel impelled to remove by circumstances had their attention turnel in that direction it would be to the lenetit of the whole country: Mr. Dyke says that in the Eniterl states the fact there have leen su many settlers from the oll country who have sent lack money to their friends to loring them out, gives the United States a great advantage over us, and lesides there is a large proportion of foreign population in the United states that we have not in Ganada, and he snggested that a plan shoull he devised by which parties located in Manitosa and the North-West could be granted a sum of umoty to diefray the expenses of some of their particular friends they wanted to bring out from the old country. It is worthy of onnsideration. but I do not endorseit. not having sutficiently thought the matter over. It would be better perhaps that instead of lettin; agents be the means of bringing out immigrants. Ahs those brought out in this way we could rely on renaining here, which we cannot do in the case of those who receive the Sll per head or sis per heal on arriving at Winnipeg which they can use and pass on to British Columbia or Washington Territory. Thisitem no doult will be agreel to by the committee and I hope the Goverament will le more successful than they have been in the past. It is most desirable sonce way should le derised by which we could induce those living in the older provinces to remain within our hordens uhere there is plenty of land and good prospects. I trust we may be favoured in that country with a large crop this year again, and I trust that the rich mineral wealth of British Columbia will be developed more and more and that there will be an increase in the population there, as I believe there has been. I know that many have turned their steps in that direction lately. I trust that employment will be found for them there, that the country will le opened up, and that we may obtain better results in the future. It has been most discouraging, not speaking at all from a party point of view. to find, whaterer the canse may be, that, when we have expanterl so much money for immigration purposes. on increase of population has been so small. The igures of the Agriculture Departnent may be wrong, but certainly there have been some immigrants who have come into the country during the last ten years Even if not one had come, and our own natural increase had stayed with us, we would have had a larger increase to our population than the census returns tell us ue have. It is I think in view of these diserouraging facts that this discussion has arisen, and I think it is the duty of the Canadian Parliament to find out what the cause is for the depopulating of the country. There must he some cause for it, and, if it is in our power to remedy it, it is our bounden duty to alo so, no matter on which side of the House we may sit.

Mr. MILL: (Bothwell). I would ask the Minister of Agriculture how the agent was employed in North Dakota. I can understand how an agent may be employed in Liverpool or in the rural districts of England, going about aslalressing public neetings and so ou, in order to encourage people tos emigrate to this country, but in what way coulit the agent le employed in Dakota? Dil he go to the various farm honses where people were just settling to juchuce them not to settle, or to people who hanl just purchased lands to induce them to abamion the lands and go to Manitobs: In what way did he perform dinties as an agent to induce immigration from bakota into Manitoka and the North-West? I confess that I see a very great deal of difficulty as to how it nould le prossible for that party to go into a new country which was just being settled up and to act as an immigration agent tol bring the people of that country to Canadia. The fiovernment must have a policy in this respect, and I should like to kuow if this party was sent there in grool faith to promote emigration from that territory into Camala?

Mr. OBRIEN. If the hon. gentleman had taken the tromble tar real the statement given by Mr. Welster to the Committee on Immigration and Colonization, I think he would have come to the same conclusion as I dil, and other hon. gentlemen from this side of the House also did, that that gentleman showed a grtat amount of ability and shrewdness, and that his methods were eminently successful. Of course his manner and style did not happen to suit the retined taste of the hon. member for Wellington. We can understand that a man must le very perfect in these particulars in order to come up to the refined stanilard which that gentleman would apply to all the servants of the Crown. As to Mr. Webster being given to talking, perhaps that is a fault with which the hon. menber (Mr. McMallen) might sympathize to a certain extent. Never having seen him: before, I came to the conclusion that the methods he employed were suited to the work he has to do, and that ine was just suited for the work he undertook. I do not think any money has been spent by the Department of Agriculture which was more successful, and attended with better results than that spent on Mr. Webster.

Mr. MLLS (Bothwell). The hon. member may lave been satisfied. I have not been.

Mr. O'BRIEN. You have not read his report.

Mr．MILL；（Bothwell）．The report of Mr． Webster is not the report of Mr．Henry Fneyth or of Mr．Metcalfe．and I have put a question to the Minister of Agriculture as to tine general policy of the Alministration，what instructions were given athl what methods were adopted to oltain immigra－ tion to Manitoha from lakota？

Mr．CARLIN：Perhaps my hon．friend is aware that there are some $\boldsymbol{3}$ ）or al $_{\text {avents }}$ from the Conted states travelling in Ontario and different parts of Canala now，all the time trying to in cince our people to so to the United State．

Mr．CAMPBELL．They are agents of railway ermpanice amb not of the foremment．

Mr．CARIIM：We Ire aware of agents who are sent here with literature to do anything they pnsibly can to persuate our people to leave Cana－ ila andigo to the Linited States．We found that there were a great mumber of people in the west－ em States，atml especially in Dakota，who were not satistied with the country they were in，and most of them were Camadians and people who had come from the old country：We sent Mr．Wehster there to visit that country，and he travellet humireds of miles．He stopped at farm houses． at agricultural fairs，and at places of public； reart．He met the people and found they were ciisenntented and dissatistied，and he pointel out tie aldantages we had to offer to them in the Sorth－West．and zook some of them with hime yuite a number of prominent meu uho lived in the state and in whom the people had contintence －to Manitola and the territories，and showed them what kind of land we had there and what in－ diucements we had to offer，and I am glad to say that mostly all of those who were taken there． went latick and reported favourably of our erountry． We have ly that means induced last year letween $\because(M n)$ and 3 （呗）to go into Manitoka，idd，as I said a short time age，we expect a much larger number from the westenn States next year．That is the kimi of work that Mr．Metcalfe wats employed to ib，and Mr．Welster has leen aiding him，and we have mow 10 or 19 parties who have leen in the western States during the last three or four months， Who are reporting in the most encouraging way as to the movement in the westeris States towards Canada．I do not think，if the hon．gentleman were at the head of the department，he could dos anything letter than we are aloing in showing the people who are dissatistied that we have a country much better than their own．aul that they can ion much better in that comutry．

Mr．MILLS（Bothwell）．The parties to whom the hon．gentlemaus refers，are agents of railuay companies in the western States who are operat－ int in Canada．These parties go to Toronto and other centres of population where they meet large numbers of farmers coming to market on market diays，and they seek an opportunity of distussing these matters with them．

Mr．DALY．Iust what Mr．Weheter does．

Mr．MILL：（Bothwell）．But，at the time the Minister sent Mr．Webster，and Mr．Smith，and Mr．Metcalfe into Dakota，Dakota had no such large centres of population，and affords no such opportunitits of meeting with the people from rural districts as that which is afforiled in the cities and towns of an old settled province like

Ontario．I condi amitrstami how an immigration agent at st．Paul．or Chicage．or Milwankee． night meet large namiers of the agrientural population．

Mr．DALI．N。

Mr．MILL心（Porhwell！Ihes the hon．oremte－ man pretend to sat that if he wantel to see the acriculturists of the comuty of Mililleser，he could dhomet anty hate at farourable as the city of Lomdon？The laryer the city is．the larger the number of the cural fropulation to coune in from the surromming listricts．He has an opportunity of meeting in a day a larger neminer than he would meet in a munth if he went into the conatry where the population hias sperse．is if the western States are to be male a tielit in which immigration ＂perations are to lec caried on．then it is of great conser，uence that the Honse should not simply he whl that there are agents in lyakota，or in Minnesota．or out in the Ihealwoon！country，hut that the Honse should twe informed where ：hese lowalitits are in which these persons ary carrying on their operations．It lowes seem to the that if you undertake to semd ajents into a new conntry where the prpulation is sparse，yon are sendin： agents inte a listrict where there will le the largest amount of lalxour with the least pasible results．

There is plenty of free homestead land here.'
Anil they say at the end :

- In the interest of oar friends and ueizhbriare in Eouth Dakota. we desire thaz this. our report, be printed. and circulated in the Dakotas.anl we sar moer, emphatically thar the statements made by Akents Holmes and Webeter to us in regard to the agricultural resources of Maniteba and the Canadian North-IIest. are trae in evers particolar. as we found evertining better than they represented them to as , and we wish here to tell the farmers of South Dakota shat thes can place confidence in their statementsThen follow the names of the gentlemen whe compose the delegation. There are numerous other reports from other delegrations that went over unler Mr. Welster and the other agents. Now, in regard to the methods alopted by Mr. Webster and his assistants, they merely go to the centres of population in the different comoties in south lakota: they do not $£ 0$ to sit. Paul aml Minneapolis, lecause those cities are not surromided by as large farming districts as are a nomber of small centres of population in south Dakotal They went to Aberdeen and to other county seats in different counties of south Dakota, and saw the farmers there, and no doubt the methons adopted by Mr. Welster were the sime as those adopted by the American immigration agents here. I know that he has done a great deal to direct immigration into Manitoba from Ikakota. He was the pioneer agent there, and, with the others who have acted with him, has beeu alle, as the Minister says, to bring two or three thousind people into our conntry. I think the methowls he has adoptel will bear an inspection in every particular. Every oue of the delegates that have come over to Nanitoba and the NorthWest reported most satisfactorily of our conntry, and have stated that the representations made by Mr. Wehstar nere true in every particular. Now; in reference to another subject which was discussed by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) I may say in reference to the matter suggested by Mr. Drike in the report of the High Commissioner about fanilies sending over money to their friends in the old conntry to bring ont immigrants, that methon has lwen adopted in the United states for a number of years, and no doult the greater numiner of the people from the United Kinglom who hare gone in there, have beeu brought out through means sent home by their friends. Only a short time ago my colleagues and myself met the Premier, the Dinister of Agriculture and Minister of the Interior, and we laid before them our views upon the rery subject the hon. gentleman was discussing, namely, that we thought it a matter worthy of consideration on the part of the Giorernment whether they sbould not afford the assistance that the hon. gentleman has spoken of, namely, to enable the people who are located in Manitoba and the North-West Territories to send aid to their friencis to bring them out hers. If these people desire aid to bring their friends from the old country, it is erident they are satistied with their lot here, and the fact of their being succesful and known to be men of respectable character which it will be necessary for the Gorernment to first ascertain. it is evident that their friends will be as gooml settlers as they are. I hope sincerely that the representations which are made to the Govemment in this partionlar wiil lear weight, and that next year we will asertain from the Ninister when this matter is under discussion again, that the liovernment have anlopted that plan. Now with regarl to the remarks made hy the hon. member from Naryuette (Mr. Watson) as to what I said last might alout Mr. Dyke. I simply suil then. and I repeat it now, that from my knowlerlge of Mr. Deke, and from the knowlelige that a great many other sentlemen in this House have of him. that he is a man well titted for the pesition which he holds. He is a geutleman who as a linguist has very feu equals, being a master of tive langatyes which he can speak, real and write. He has inmmense experience in immigration, and I repeat what I said about that gentleman being able to instract me in reference to the North-Vest and British Columbiannl Manitoka. Although 4 had luen living in that conntry 9 yeturs, when I tirst saw that gentleman and conversed with him, he was able totell meagreat many thiugsabont that comentry that I diel not know. But of course I camnot place myself in the same category as the hon. wember for Marquette (Mr. Watson) who will wever, at all events apparently. learn anythingI wish to tell that hon. gentleman that he ean be taught a great many things he does not kuow abont that conntry by jeople who have been iv. Nenitoba only one sea: I ams prepared and williag to learn at all time:. Of course 1 have not the allantage of the hon. gentleman opposite, axd some of his friemis who adiress this Honse in such grammatical language so frepuently. I have a lityle boy of 7 ors years of age whe can teach them. great deal. I viant to inform thens that there is a great deal for any man to leam about this great' (anada of ous, ansi there is a great deal for gentlemen on the opposite sile to learm. I have luen living in the conntry (Manitola) for 11 years and 1 have a great deal to learuabout it. and there are a great many gentlemen on the other sitle of the House who havelived therea great deal longer than I have apparently and I do not think they know they live in one of the grandest countries in the world. They always try to deride our eountry, and to rum it down, and to make us believe that if we have not the population in this country that we shoull have it is on acconnt of our tisial policy. They say that those people uho are alleged to have left Canada with a tariff of ?per cent taking it all romul, have, forsooth. gone to a country with a tariff 45 per cent and 50 per cent. Conld anything le more absurl ? It is not our tisul policy that has given our country awayIf hon. gentlemen opposite were in power to-morrow there woull le the same influx of people into the Linitel states from Cimada. We have people coming from the States here and so it will continue.

Nz: MILLS (Bothwell). That is not what your friends send in 15is.

Mr. DALI. No, heanse they hal reason thea to say the conntry was in min. Have we seen a soup Eitchen in the country for the last fourteen years?

Mr. MILLN(Pothrell). Lots of them.

Mr. DALS. You and your frients have been in the somp ever sinctaul modoubt yon feel the effects of it.

Mr. LIsTER. Von are rery impertinent, Mr. lady. Whenever you get ou your feet you do sme know what you say.

Mr. DALI. I hey your pardon, Nir.
Mr. LISTER. lou are impertinent.
Mr. DALE: I ifo mot wish to eross suonls with the hon. exeutleman from Launhton (Nr. Lister) but if there is one gentleman in this Honse who can be impertinent, and who las leen impertinent, it is that hon. fentleman. I know him of oldi, ant I knew mo grentlenam in this Honse who an be as impertiment as he is.

Mr. LISTFR. Ner one cau surpasis you, Mr. lady, in that revpect.

Mr. DALI. Ion take the anke, you are almare me in that. Now, to come liack to the subject. I do net lelieve that our fisal polity has anything to do with our people groings to the other side of the line. Hon. sentemen opposite said the same thing in $15 x$. 15 and and 150 , and in 1591 the people answered them, amd during the last hye tlections the people have amswered them agsin by returning the tionerument by an immense majority. If they are not satistied with this expression on the part of the peaple they cammot understambianythingThey sive us to understand that if they were on this sile of the Honse provto change, everything wonkl le locely and we would have the population Honding in from lireat britain and the old comery: and they would remain here. I would like io know what was the extent of the exmbin between 15.t ame 18 sis when they were in power.

Mr. DALI. No amount of talk from hon semtemen opposite will conrince any reasonable mimeterk man in Camada that the fiseal poliey of this Cowemment has had anything to do with the perple goinge to the States

Mr. MeMLLLEN. I mant to let the House know what that report which the hon. gentleman has real to the House has cost the country. A. F. Holumes, served for 10 months and drew setting up that repurt and securing the signatures of these men. li. H. Camplell served half a year and he frew for his services $\mathbf{S N}_{2},(\mathrm{ta})$ for alrawing up that little pamphlet.

Mr: DAI.I: He exurnet his money.

Mr. MeNULI.EN. The pamphlet which my hon. friend has real to the Hernse cost the country S, (mis). These are the two men that he trots out to-night as evillence of the emigration that is going from leakota to Manitok. It is simply hersuse they are paill large sums and they hace to show the Minister of Agriculture they alid something. so they corne lack with glowing accomuts of what they atcomplished and the Minister of Agriculture pays them ont $i, (u) of the people's money.

Mr. Melllllan (Huron). I have hearl a great deal abont this Mr. Welster, I never met him before I met him at the Agriculture Committee and the first year he appeared there he gave us some very plausible reports The second year he made statements that a large nomiler of peopple were leaving lakota and coming to Manitoba, ami when he was cornered andi asked to give the manes of any he tanew, he gave the manes of turo men whon were goingt to leave, and that was all he comblt give. If you examine the reparts: of the Agrientture Committer yon will ind that that statement is correct. These are noth the reports of these sentlemen themselves hut the reparts that were mave hy the agents aund signed hy these intivinuals Let me make a statement mon nith respere to what I know to be the case in cespert to the Provinct of Ontario. amel thite is, that lefore yout spend lagge smms of money tom hoinge imimigrants inte that province gint monst make the commtry a cheap country on hive in. I state fearles ly: that the tiseal polity of the liotermment has made Canatia a comutry in whebs preaple cannot prombuce theaply: Twity years actex I had a visitor from tilasgow. a semlemsin at the head of the sant itary arringements of that city. He remaineal some six or eisht netks in Camatia, ami alise risited? the Cnited States After he went home I had a letter from him, in which he colll me that if he could le the means of preventing any person coming to Comada be would do it. letallse he siond the fistal poliey of the liovernment was ketping the farmers in actual bondage, and they vere not gertime more than twothirds the value of their hakour, as it was taken from them by the polity of the Ciovernorent and put into the peokets of comhines aud rings a snall portion groing into the tressury. I have a friend who evmes to this eomentry every year to de businessant who in the whementry is a strong Conservative, and the last time he was bere lee sind tom met that as long as the poliey of the foremment was smoh as it was we nefinever expect immigrants from the ohicountry to come to Canaila. A large mmbor of comng men in the ohl comntry lave come into the Pronime of Ontario and have remained there one or two years, ame then their fremeds in the United States writing tom them have inducel them to leave Canada aum join them. I say that the frised policy of the coremment is the sole canse. I agree with the hom. me:nher for selkirk that we have in Ontario one of the finest countries under the sea:but the resson immagrants do not come there is becanse it is a dear country to live in and promince in, aud labauring people do nat get the full rewand of their labonr. The High Commissioner in his report even strikes in a distinct manner at some of the causes why Cuarlis is not settled. He mentions the exonhis to the United States, and though he states that it is too much spoken of, he admits that it has some effect. He alsossys that the immitrants from the old conntry are very ensily led. The class of immigrauts re want to obtain in Canada is a class who examine ererything closely before they leare, and the statements that have been sent abromal, that this conntry is rulefi by rings and combines, that large sums of money are taken frome the people that do not go into the treasury, and that nomy are leaving aul going to the Unitel States, are the canses why they io not come. There is amother canse uentioniel by the High Commissioner, who says :

[^75]The people from other countries would naturally encuire, what is the case of such a small increase in the population in Canata?" If the Government will not adopt a policy of making this a cheaper country tolive in and to produce in, they need never expect that all the money they may spend for immigration purposes will loring large numbers of settlers to this country.
Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I was pleased to hear the hon. member for Selkirk say that there Was a prospect of many Canadians from Dakota going into Manitoba, and I hope that the gool work will goon. In ten or fifteen days Manitoba is to receive another car load of immigrants who are coming from the far east, and after I have stated to what class they belong, I do not think the hon. gentleman will say that they are very desirable settlers. I wish to corrohorate the statement I made as to the children, by reading an opinion expressed in London, England, in a cablegram which came to one of the leading papers a day or two ago. It is as follows :--
"Lonoos, April 23.-Fifty stalwart lads, whose ages range from thirteen to seventeen years. have just started for Camada under the auspices of the Children's Aid Society, which defrays the cost of clothing and passage. amounting to about $\pm 13$ for each boy. The majority of the youths will go direct to Winnipeg, whence they will be listributed, it is uuderstood, throughoit the NorthWest provinces. Cynics predict, however, that the most of them will speedily find their way to the large cities of Canada and the United States, where they will be likely to resume the kind of life that has indirectly led to their expatriation. Nearly all the boys have been inmates of industrial schools. as a consequence either of crime or marental neglect. Critics of this sort of assisted immigration insist that Canada is entitled to have a better class of persons sent out from the mother country. They nlso complain that nobody thinks of helping lads of stainless character to get homes in the new world, the effirts of the charitable in this respect being almost exclusively lavished on persons from whom it is unreasonable to expect good results."

Mr. IVATSON. I just wish to say a word and give the Government credit, where credit is due. No doubt a large number of immigrants have been induced to come from Dakota to the NorthWest during the past year. I hope that good work will continue. I have always clained that we have better idlvantages to offer intending settlers from the old country, better natural adrantages than they uan find in Dakota. Unfortunately the Government policy was such that a great number of people from eastern Canada went to the western States and settled there, and they now find by the delegates who came from the United States to Manitoba, and viewed our land, that we have better advantages in Manitoloa than they have in Dakota, and quite a number of people are coming from Dakota to Manitoba. As there is a large number of Canadians in Dakota, I would suggest that the saune encouragement should lee offered young Canadians who have gone to Dakota to come to Manitoba that are offered English settlers. They are a more desirable- class of people, and I think that this gift to Furopean enigrants of $$ 10$ apiece to actual settlers in Manitoba, to fathers of families, and 5 a head for the children, should be given Canalians who return from Dakota. There is no doubt a great many of the European emigrants assisted in this way find their way into the United States, and the money paid them will be an entire loss. I would suggest, as I did last year, that the Government should work in harmony with the Government of Manitoba, as the latter could do more, being close at hand, and could put to practical use any grant under the supervision of the Local and Dominion Government. Much better work could be done that way by sending our fiovernment agents out to that section. It is well known there is a number of immigration agents from the United States operating in Canada. I do not believe the United States (iovermment pay any agents to operate in Canada, but the railway companies do. A few rlays ago I saw a gentleman who used to he very energetic in bringing the people from the old country to our Canadian North West, Mr. Whilhelms, wholbrought a large colony to the county I have the honour to represent, in the vicinity of Rapid City. But for some reasons best known to himself he has gone to Dakota and is now immig:ation agent, taking people from eastern Cinada to the western States. He told me that since the first of March he had taken some fifteen humdred people, adults and children, from eastern Canada to the western Stites.

Mr. DALI: ${ }^{\text {V }}$ hat part?

Mr. WATSON. From the vicinity of Ottawe, the Eastern Townships; some from the vicinity of Toronto, and all through Ontario, taking them over the Northern Railway. The hon. member from Selkirk said he thought I could be informed by Mr. Dyke on the requirements and necessities of Manitoba. I am not prepared to admit that I could be informed by Mr. Dyke on that subject, but 1 am not surprised at that hon. gentleman saying so, because any man coming from Manitoba and supporting the fiscal policy of the Government cannot be considered as very enlightened-
Mr. DALY. I had a majority of 45.
Mr. WATSON - and could be enlightenenl by information from a gentleman who visited our country for a few weeks. Our people did leave this country for the United States during the Mackenzie regime at the rate of $23,(0) 0$ a year, bat during the present Administration they have left at the rate of 100,000 a year. People will move about, of course, but there is an immense loss, as the census shows, over what we suffered during the Mackenzie regime. After the census, taken in 188.7, when it was clearly shown that the number of immigrants reported by the Agriculture Committee to have gone into Manitoba and the North-West were not there, the hon. member for Selkirk gave as an excuse that the people had left our country on account of the frost.
Mr. DALY. I never said anything of the kind.
Mr. W.ATSON. I expected contradiction and I have the Hansard. On page 742, 2nd June, 1887, it will be found that when he made that statement, I called the attention of the House to the fact that frosts had not heen the means of driving the people from Manitoba, and he said : We had frosts for two yeurs and the hon. gentleman cannot deny it.

Mr. DALY. That does not say that frosts drove the people out. What the hon. gentleman says was that I had declared it was on account of the frosts that people were driven out of the country.

Mr. WATSON. The delate was on immigration and the Opposition challenged the Government for not having the people in the North-West. We pointed out that in five years 175,000 people were reported to have gone into the country and were not there, when we took the census, and this was the reason the hon. gentleman gave why the people were not there.

Mr. DALY. I never gave the reason. Read the words.

Mr. WATSON. I have real them. The hon. gentleman gave other reasons, such as that the enumerators who had counted the people, had counted in navies, railway employés and people who had gone to the coast, io British Columbia or Washington Territory, and anong other reasons he stated that we had had frosts. That was not a patriotic reason to give, and I was sorry he made that statement. We have one of the greatest agricultural countries in the world. We believe we have a much better country than the Dakotas. We know that the people who have gone to Dakota are now coming back to Manitoba, and we have had a large number of people who have come in there last year, whether through the influence of Mr. Webster or any one else. We want those people to be brought into Manitoba, and I do not object. to the money leing spent by the Government for that purpose. We are doing a charitable thing in bringing these people to Manitobr, hecause they have failed to get crops in Dakota, and we are free from those cyclones that trouble them there. We grow the largest number of bushels of wheat to the acre grown in the world, and the finest wheat in the world, and having all these natural advantages, there must be something, even outside of the immigration, work which prevents the people settling in that province. I hope the Goverument will work in harmony with the Manitoba Government, who could bring these people back to the province and see that they get proper locations when they come back. I believe that, by working in harmony with the North-West Council and the Manitoba Government, our moneys can he much better spent than by placing them in the hands of the agents of this Government. I hope this discussion will be of benefit, and that we may have better results in the future, so that, when we take the next census, it will be shown that the population is increasing not only in Manitolua but in other parts of the Dominion.

Mr. McNuLLEN. Can the Minister state the names of the 12 or 14 people who he told us were operating in Minnesota and Dakota with a view to the repatriation of the people?

Mr. CARLING. I cannot now.
Mr. MoMULLEN. Will he give the names and the allowances at a future stage?
Mr. CARLING. I will.
Mr. CAMPBELL. I hope the Minister of Agriculture will recollect a little experience he had with Mr. Henry Smyth in Dakota, where $$ 1,800$ was paid for him to induce immigrants to come to the NorthWest, and it was shown that not one farthing's worth of benefit had accrued to the country, but in fact that, while Mr. Snyyth was sending glowing reports from the west, he was actually in the western part of Ontario. If we are to believe the statements which have been made for a number. of years by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly), we would come to the conclusion that the whole North.West is filled up with people and Dakota was depopulated, whereas we find we have only a bare 54,000 people in the whole of Manitoba.

Mr. DALY. 1.it, MOK). Try and be correct for once.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The Minister of Justice said $\mathbf{5 4 , 0 ( O )}$ to-day. He must hate been wrong, but we find that lokota is increasing its population three or four times as fast as the North-West, and yet there are so many people said to be going to the North-West from Dakota. I believe a number of these reports are pure nonsense, and without foundation, and I think the accounts of Mr. W'ebster and others should be carefully audited, and it should be seen that the work is done which is alleged to have been done.

Committee rose and reported the resolutions.
Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to ;and House adjourneal at 2.05 a. in. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Monday, 2nd May, 1892.
The Sipakik took the Chair at Three oidock.
Prayers.

FIRET READING.

Bill (No. 77 ) to revive and amend the Act incorporating the Ottawa, Morrisburg and New York Railway Company, and to change the name thereof to the Canadian American Railway Company. (Mr. Taylor.)

DUTY ON CRUDE PETROLEUM.

Mr. INAES asked, Whether it is the intention of the Government to lower the duty on crude petroleum or gas oil used in the manufacture of gas?

Mr. FOSTER. The Govermment is not yet in a position to indicate its inteution on that subject.

NORTH-WEST TERRITORIES RANCHING COMPANIES.

Mr. LANDERKIN (for Mr. McMullex) asked, Whether any arrangement has been come to $w$ ith the ranching companies of the North. West Territories, whereby lands fit for cultivation may be entered on and occupied for farming purposes? Will the persons ejected by the Waldron Ranch Company be permitted to re-enter and occupy their lands? Will lands fit for cultivation in the Waldron Ranch Company's leased territory be henceforth open to settlement for farming purposes?

Mr. DEWDNEY. Negotiations between the Government and the ranching companies in the North-West Territories are now in progrees. I am not aware that any person has been ejected by the Waldron Ranch Company. The negotiations above referred to include the Wialdron Ranch Company, and as they are not yet concluded it would not be possible to enswer this question more definitely at present.

THE DEPUTY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. LAURIER. I would ask the Minister of Agriculture if he has made the enquiry which he promised as to the letter of the Deputy Minister of Agriculture which was brought down by the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville), and if he is prepared to make any statement in regard to that matter to-day?
Mr. CARLING. I am not prepared to do that to-day, because I thought it would come up when the House went again into Committee of Supply, which will be to-morrow:

RAILWAY COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

Mr. McCAR'THY moved for :

Statement of all applications or complaints made to the Railway Committee of the Privy Conncil respecting the matters or things referred to in sub-sections ( $k$ ), ( $(l)$, $(m),(n)$ and ( $n$ ) of clause eleven of the Railway Act.
2. By or against whom such complaints were made.
3. The manner in which the same were dealt with or disposed of:
He said: The clauses of the Railway Act to which reference is malle in the notice are as follows:-
"The Railway Committee shall have power to enquire into, hear and determine any application, complaint or dispute respecting tolls and rates for the transportation of passengers and freight, the adjustment of such tollsand rates between companies, running powers or haulage, traffic arrangements, unjust preferences, discrimination or extortion."
I desire to see whether any such applications have been made since the Act was passed in the year 1888, and, if such applications were made, I desire to know how they were disposed of. It will be in the recollection of the House that some years ago a Royal Commission was appointed after an agitation had been carried on for some years with a view to appointing a permanent Commission. That Royal Commission made a report contained in the Sessional Papers of 1888 and formed a basis for the amendment maxle in the Bill passed during that year. The Commission reported, with a good deal of hesitation and doubt, as follows:-
" That the powers of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council be enlarged so far as to enable them to administer the proposed law, providing-
" 1 . That the committee shall itself hear and determine all disputes arising between railway companies, with power to appoint proper officers to take evidence locally.
"2. That the committee shall itzelf decide all guestions of classification of freight, tariff and uniform railwas returns.
"3. That the committee shall have power to appoint officers in each province to hear and determine all complainte against railway companies, subject to power of reference by such officer of any point to the committee, and also sabject to the right of appeal to the committee itself."
The last provision was not embodied in the Act of Parliament, and no step has been taken in regard to that since the report was made, but I would call attention also to the language of the report. The Commission, having dealt with the evils to which they refer, made the following statement :-
${ }^{4}$ The Commisaien desire to provide by immediate legislation for edmitted evils, with the least possible disturbance to existing methods, only accepting such conclasions as have been tested and proved to be beneficial. They wish to avoid the hasty creation of any system of Which experience in the United Statee, Eagland and Canads may eoon require serious modification. They Mr. Dewdener.
think it better to test the working of the proposed law by temporary provision for the execution, and after full experience of the results of the Interstate Railway Commission and of our own legislation to consider whether such system should be made permanent."
Now, for my part, I do not accept the conclusion except in that temporary sense at which this Commission arrived. I was not convinced then, and I am not convinced now, that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council is by any means the best tribunal for determining matters of this kind. I desire to draw the attention of the House to it, so that if that is the opinion entertained, either in the House or in the country, some change may be made by the Government, not in this, but in another session of Parliament. When we look at the enormons powers of the Railway Committee, and when those who have had something to do with it see how those powers are carried out, judicial powers, deciding matters between individuals and railuay companies of the greatest magnitude, I think we must all see that it is not in accordance with the general view which we entertain, that where judicial powers are exercised it should be by a body wholly free from political influence. Then there are matters of detail, and I think the Minister of Railways will probably agree that his office is sufficiently burdensome, as it is, with its ordinary functions, without his being called upon to interfere with matters of this character. I do not know, and therefore I move for returns, whether any objections have been made respecting traffic, against charges, unjust preferences and discrimination, or what is called in the Bill, extortion. If no such charges have been made, it may, perhaps, be reasonably contended that there is no complaint; on the other hand, it may be that charges are not made because those which are interested do not believe that they would receive the justice, perhaps, which their merits demand. There may be, of course, opposite views taken with regard to that, but so faras my information goes the public are not any more satisfied now with the management of railways and the charges which they make, tariffs and so on, than they were several years ago, when there wias a good deal of agitation on the subject. In that, however, my information may not, of course, be accurate, but that is the information I have. My main object in moving this and the following resolution which stands in my name, is that we may have the returns and the information, and that if it be, as I think it will be found, that the Railway Committee does not and cannot do justice between parties which the people have a right to expect, the Government perhaps will find a more simple and convenient means where these cases may be settled by a tribunal more in accordance with our judicial system. The one matter which I have observed, which I dare say other gentlemen have observed, is this : Where, for instance, the committee is composed of a certain number of Ministers, as the present law provides:
"It shall consist of the Minister of Railways, who shall be ohairman thereof, of the Minister of Justice, and of two or more of the other members of the Queen's Privy Council of Canada, to be from time to time appointed by the Governor in Council, three of whom shall form a quorum ; and such committee shall have the powers and perform the duties assigned to it by the Act.'
Now, I have known cases in which four or five hon. gentlemen are sitting to hear a matter of complaint between railway companies, or between a municipality and a railway company. The case stands adjourned, and the next time the committee meet, perhaps half of the original members may not be present, and others may have taken their places; finally, a third meeting will take place composed partly of still other gentlemen, on each case there being a quorum, but not by any means a quorum of the same gentlemen who heard the conplaint in the first instance. That does appear to be a shocking state of things, that in the end this matter has to be determined by those members of the conmittee whe happen to sit on the last occasion, although they may not have heard any of the facts of the case, and only know of it from reading the notes of the shorthand writer of the evidence that was offered in the earlier part of the enquiry. For this reason, I beg to move the resolution which stands in my name.

Mr. HAGiGiART. There can be no possible objection to the motion moved by my hon. friend. In reference to the cases which he mentions under sections $(k),(l),(m),(11)$ and $(p)$, that is, conceming traffic arrangements between different companies, there have been only a couple of cases appealed to the Railway Committee, which was for the purpose, partially, of determining the rate of freight that one railway has to pay to another, and the traffic arrangements between them; these two cases have been satisfactorily disposed of. The other cases which come before the committee are not judicial cases at all, they are mostly cases in reference to the crossing of railways, public highways, construction of branches. As the hon. gentleman says, there have been a number of cases before the courts, I suppose about 60 each year in all, and I think we have managed to dispose of them very satisfactorily. There can be no possible objection to bringing down the returns and giving the information the hou. gentleman mentions. The class of cases which may be brought before the Railway Committee are entirely different from those brought before the Commission in England. The Commission in England is composed of one member for England, one for Scotland, one for Ireland, and one of the judges of the Superior Court is the chairman of the Commission. The class of cases which come up before that Commision are mostly legal and judicial questions, whereas questions of that nature very seldom come upbefore the Railway Committee of the Privy Council here. They are, as I said, mostly cases relating to tariffs, as to the manner in which one railway shan cross another, the manner in which a bridge should be built, and the crossing of a street over a line of railway, &c. All these cases, I think, have been satisfactorily and quickly dealt with by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council as at present constituted. Very few cases have come before that committee of the class which the hon. gentleman mentions in the latter part of his resolution, as to the traffic arrangements, as to whether a particular locality is discriminated against, as to whether individuals have been discriminated against, or as to what tratfic arrangements shonld be made between different railways; in fact, only two or three cases of this kind have come up, and these were merely for the purpose of making traffic arrangements between two companies. I had full information upon the subject a day or two ago, but I have not got the papers here at present.

Mr. LAURIER. This is a very important subject, and I gather from the words just uttered by the Minister of Railways, that he sees no reason to alter the law, and apparently the Government is satisfied with the system which now exists. For my part, I have always thought there was a goorl deal to be said in favour of the opinion which, if I remember rightly, was expressed a few years ago by the hon. member for simeoe, to the effect that the present system was not satisfactory, and that the whole subject had better be referred to an independent tribunal. However, I do not express any opinion to-day upon it, but when the papers have been brought down, perhaps the subject may be gone into again.

Mr. McCARTHY moved for :
Return stating for the last year (1891): -1 . The number of applications which were made to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council for an adjudication, order, or direction, respecting any of the matters or things which, under the provisions of the Railway Act, the Rail way Committee had power or authority to deal with: 2. Showing in general terms the nature of the application; 3. The names of the members of the Honourable the Prisy Council who (a.) Heard each of the applications; (b.) Who were present at any one or more adjourned hearings thereof, and at the final adjudication thereff: (c.) In cases in Which adjournments took place, the dates of hearing, and subsequent adjournment or adjournments of final adjudication. 4. Statement showing how each of said applications was disposed of, viz.:-Granted or refused or partially granted.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I wish to say a few words as regards one of the branches of the enquiry referred to in these resolutions, and which was commented upon by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), that is, with respect to members of the Pailuay Committee of the Priry Council joining in decisions of cases which they have not fully heard. I think the hon. gentleman is entirely mistaken, or rather that his information is erroneous which leads him to the conclusion that this has been in any sense the practice. I think I might almost say that I anr confident such a case never occurred. I would not trouble the House even with this explanation at this moment if the return brought down would remove that impression from the mind of the hon. gentleman; but it would not do so. At nearly every meeting of the Railway Committee - and I have attended every meeting since I took office except twothere are cases adjourned, and very likely it will appear that some members were not present when adjourned cases were decided. But they are not cuses partially heard and. decided at subsequent meetings; they are cases in which the parties were found not to lee ready, and at the very opening of the case it. was adjourned to a more convenient day for the parties or one of them. But in every case where the matter had been entered upon, the enquiry was recommenced in order that the members present might hear the case in full, and I think it will be found that no casea have been decided by members who have not heard the evidence from the beginning to the end.

A CANADIAN REPRESENTATIVE AT WASHINGTON.

Mr. McCARTHY moved :

That, in the opinion of this House; in view of the vast commercial interests existing betwoon the United States of America and Canada, and of the political questions from time to time requiring adjustment between the Dominion and the neighbouring Republic, it would tond to the advancement of those interests and the promotion of $a$ beter understanding bet ween the two countries were a representative appointed by the Government of the Dominion, subject to the approval of Her Majesty's Imperial Advisers, and attached to the staff of Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, specially charged to watch, gusrd and represent the interests of Canadr.
He said: Mr. Speaker, I desire to bring to the notice of the Honse a matter which appears to me to be of some very considerable practical importance. The House this session has already considered the question which was mooted by the hon. member for Bothweli (Mr. Mills) with respect to the power of making treaties, and a very interesting discussion-I had not the good fortune to be present, but I have read the debate since-took place on that occasion, in which the views entertained by hon. gentlemen opposite and those entertained by hon. members supporting the Government were very fully and prominently brought forward. I do not in the least desire to quarrel with the conclusion at which the House then arrived. I think, looking at the history of this country for the last few years, we ought to be well satisfied, and I for my part feel that we have had substantial justice done to us in the way in which treaties which have interested Canada or have been of moment to this Dominion have been dealt with by the Imperial authorities. We have had a very great enlargement of our powers luring those years. There was a time, no doubt, when the making of the old treaties with respect to this country was not participated in by any person who represented the Dominion, or rather the then old Province of Canada; but of recent years the policy of the home Government has been in the opposite direction, and we have not only been invited to take part in such negotiations, but on one occasion the leading Minister of the Crown here was appointed one of the Commissioners to negotiate the treaty which became known as the Washington Treaty. Although I realize the practical impossibility of the country making treaties irrespective of the Imperial power and of the Imperial authority, I do not see why we should not have a representative, not in any sense independent of, but acting in conjunction with, the representative of the Crown at Washington, who would be specially charged to watch over and guard Canadian interests. That appears to me as a practical step, a matter which should meet the concurrence, and I hope will meet with the concurrence of members on both sides of the House. We have enormous interests at Washington. We have larger interests with the United States than with any other power except the Imperial authorities in London. Whether we look upon it from a commercial point of view, when we find that nearly onehalf of our whole trade is done with the United States, or whether we look at it.from the point of view of international rights and privileges, we find difficulties are arising constantly between us and the Government of the United States. We are more or less affected by the Treaty of 1818, our interests are involved in the Washington Treaty, our rights are constantly being invaded and brought into question on both sides of the Dominion, and in addition questions are constantly arising in regard to our trading and bonding privileges and interests affecting our railways, and in point of fact it is difficult to enumerate the various matters which from time to time are brought in question between this country and the great republic to the south of us. When we look back a few years we shall find that our powers in connection with treatymaking and matters of that kind with respect to foreign states have been very much enlarged. Commencing as far back as 1865, I find that at that time Sir Frederick Bruce, then Minister at Washington, was instructed to place himself in communication with the Canadian Government and directed to act in connection with matters more especially affecting Canada under the instructions of His Excellency the Governor General. That was the first time in which, so far as I know, there was any recognition of the peculiar position and interests of Canarla as between us and the Imperial power. In 1869, however, upon our delegates going from Canada to, Fingland they made representations that no steps should le taken in regard to the renewal of the reciprocity treaty without previous communication being had with the Canadian Government; and our views in that respect also were accerled to. In 1871 the late Sir John Macdonald was appointed a men-ler of the Joint High Commission, and although he was, of course, acting in that capacity as a representative of Her Majesty the Queen and under the lirection of the Ministers of Great Britain, nevertheless he was there to point out, and I have no doubt he did point out, how the interests of Canada were affected, and he did what he could to have those interests protected and safeguarded. Then, in 1874, a still stronger statement was made by our Government, which was not objected to ly the Imperial authorities, and appears to have been acquiesced in. A claim was then made, that it was impossille for a British Minister to understand questions involving the negotiations of a treaty, and upon that representation the Hon. George Brown was appointed as Inperial Commissioner on behalf of the Canadian Government. In 1879, Sir Alexander Galt was commissioned to ast on behalf of the Canadian Government in connection with the English Minister in both France and Spain, and in that same year, I think it was, a very important statement was made by our Government. It will be found in the corresponilence that led up to the appointment of our High Commissioner at London, and there I find this statement made :
"It is further submitted (by Canada) that the very large and rapidly augmenting commerce of Canada and increasing extent of her trade with foreign nations is proving the absolute need of direct negotiations with them for the oroper protection of her interests. In most of the treaties of commerce entered into by England, reference has only been had to their effect on the United Kingdom; and the colonies are excluded from their operation, a fact Which has been attended with most uufortunate results to Canada as relates to France. * The Canadian Government, therefore, submit that when needs occasion snch negotiations to be undertaken, Her Majesty's Government should advise Her Majesty specially to accredit the representative of Canada to the foreign Court, by association, for the special object, with the resident Minister or other Imperial negotiator."
There it will be seen that the principle of my re: solution was contended for so long ago as 1879 , and that upon that representation the Camadian Government did appoint a Canadian to represent the Queen of course, but still as a special Minister or delegate or representative from Canada. Now, looking at the interests involved between this Dominion and the United States, looking at the difficulties which are continually arising, looking at the misunderstandings that will from time to time crop up between countries having the rival interests which these countries have in various matters, it does appear to me to be a reasonable and highly proper thing that a gentleman coming from Cinada acting with, and under the direction, of course, of the British Minister, but still to be in direct communication with this Government, would be an appoiutment of a most beneficial character, and tend in every way to prevent misunderstandings and to promote goodwill and peace between us and our neighlours. It is certainly in the interests of all parties that there should le that good-will and good understanding between the people of the United States and the people of this country. It may be said-I dare say it will be said, if any gentlemen think proper to take part in the discussion,-that my argument goes further than simply the appointment of a resident agent, and that if pushed to its legitimate and losical conclusion as far perhaps as my hon friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills) desired the House to go when he moved in favour of a treaty-making power,-I ame not going to discuss that, because it seems to me to le foreign to the present question, but I think it will be seen that if there is no practical difficulty, if there is no insuperable difficulty ina gentlemanappointed by Canada acting with the British Minister at Washington, that all parties in this comentry would be glad to see such an ofticial representing us there. If that he so, $\mathrm{Sir}, \mathrm{I}$ trust that if the House approves of the resolution, the Government will see its way to endeavour to give effect to it. I do not mean to say that the Government will not meet with difficulties, I do not mean to say that they will not meet with some objections from the Foreign Office; I dare say the staff of the Foreign Office will put forward many reasons why a novelty of this kind should not be introduced, but, nevertheless, that has not been the spirit with which our applications for advanced charge of our own affairs has been met with in recent years, and I have no doubt that the (fovernment of Great Britain will yield to anything that is practical and will yield to any representation that ismade from this side, moreespecially if it is backed up by the concurrent opinion of the great loody of the members of this House. After the lengthy discussions that have taken place on the trade question this session, I do not propose to do more now than to make these few observations. I bring it to the notice of the House, and more especially to the notice of gentlemen responsible for the conduct of the affairs of the House and of the country, that it would certainly be in the interests of Canada, and a proper representation of this country, and a proper advancement in our political rights if we could so look upon it, to have a representative in Washington, in the same way that we now have a High Commissioner at London. I, therefore, beg to move this motion, seconded by the hon. menber for Albert (Mr. Weldon).

Mr. FOSTER. Mr. Speaker, I was waiting to hear the remarks of the hon. gentleman who was mentioned as the seconder of this motion, before making any remarks upon the question itself. I may say at the outset, that after the long and somewhat thorough discussion the question with reference to commercial treaties has received at the hands of this House, it does not appear to be necessary to take up much time in referring to this matter at very great length. I sympathize altogether with my hon. friend who has moved this resolution, in so far as it evinces a desire to carry on, so far as it can be legitimately and properly done, the extension of Canada's pwers in regard to the management of her own affairs; her powers and influence in regard to the direction of her affairs outside of this country as well as in it. The hon. gentleman has very truly remarked in his brief but accurate history of the gradual development of Canadian powers in this direction, that the Government of Great Britain have met our demands in a kindly and friendly spirit: and a review of ten or fifteen years history of this country will show a very great advance indeed in the powers that Canala, a colony of Great Britain, has obtained in reference to the full and thorough representation of her interests.as they are dealt with in foreign countries, ly the Government of Great Britain. The contrast between this recent period and twenty years ago is very marked indeed in that respect, and as I took occasion to affirm in the course of the debate which happened here not many days ago, Canada has to-day about all the powers in that respect that she can ask for consistent with the relations which exist between her, ats a colony, and the mother country as an integreal part of the Empire. The resolution which my hon. friend has moved contemplates more than a commercial agency, it seems to me, and somewhat less than the staths of an independent power. It asks that owing to guestions which arise for adjustment between the Dominion and the United States :

Abstract

"It would tend to the adrancement of those interests and the promotion of a better understanding between the two countries were a representative appointed by the Government of the Dominion, subject to the approral of Her Majesty's Imperial Advisers, and attached to the staff of Her Majesty's Minister at Washington, specially charged, to watch, guard and represent the interests of Cansda."

So that I think my analysis of the resolution is correct, that it contemplates less than the status of an independent power and something more than a commercial agency. Now, so far as commercial agencies are concerned, I think that the Canadian Government, as it has been doing, may still further press its lines out in that direction, aiming ultimately at having at every important trade centre in countries with which we have large business relations, some one to represent this country in a commercial trade way, much the same as in the consular system which is in vogue in all commercial countries; and any proposition looking in that direction has not only the cordial sympathy of the Government, but its cordial co-operation. I may say that the Government has already made a commencement in the direction of establishing such a system of commercial agencies. The High Commisioner in London, outside of all other duties which he has to undertake. and which he performs so well, has the duty of guarding and looking after the commercial interests of Canada in relation to those of the mother country, and of reporting his observations continuously and clearly to the Dominion Government. Sir Charles Tupper's duties have largely turned in that lirection, and he has made numerous and very important reports to this Government, which have been very helpful and which in the future I hope may be turned to still more practical account. We have also in Paris today an agent, Mr. Hector Fabre, who outside of a general supervision of immigration matters in France, has been chargel, not specially heretofore, but within the last year and specially by my own departnent, with looking after the commercial interests of Camala in so far as they are related to or affected ly legislation or the tremi of business in France. In the West India Islands there have been within the last six months a half dozen or so of commercial agents appointed at the principal centres. whose duty will be carefully to olserve the current of trate, the legislation, and whatever else may take place which would in any way affect Canalian commercial interests, and to report fully and carefully on those matters to the Dominion fovermment, to the end that their olservations and information may be known not only to the Canalian Govermment, hut, by me:us which shall be allopted, may become known to the commercial lualies of this country as well, so that benetit may accrue to the general trade and business of the country. With the United States of America, as my hon. friend has remarkel, our commerce is very large and our commercial interests correspondingly important. There is, however, this difference with regard to the United States system of Government and that of most other comitries, that in almost every other country the tariffs, which affect so largely the business relations of different countries with each other, have their origin with the Govermment; and representations made to the Fiovernment and negotiations carried on with the Government in purely fiscal matters, have their influence, and if favourably looked upon by the Government involved, may be directly carried out in tariff regulations made under the direction of the Government and be presented to the legislature; whereas in the United States the Cabinet is altogether outside of Congress. There the Cabinet as a Cabinet has nothing to do with the initiation or the carrying throngh of tarifi and fiscal regulations. These mattersare in the hands of a commirtee of the House and are solely within the powers of the House itself. so that the difficulties in the way of influencing tariff legislation through the Government are greater in the United States than they are in most other countries with which we have commer: cial relations. Now, when we contemplate what is proposed here, the question arises as to what greater power a representative from Canada would have as an attache to the staff of the British ambassador in Washington, in the sense of guarding the commercial interests of Canada and keeping the Dominion Government thoroughly informed as to the trend of seutiment, and as to the initiation of measures which may have an effect upon the trade and commerce of Canada, than he would have as a simple commercial agent whose duty it would be to keep himself en rapport with the tendencies in these respects in the United States, and to keep the Government of Canaila fully informed in relation thereto. If he is given a position as an attaché of the British ambassador at Washington, then the practical difficulties arise of which my hon. friend spoke, and which we must all acknowledge. What shall be his powers? He will, of course, have to be subordinate to the British Minister. It would not be possible that he should act of his own motion in matters relating to general Inuperial policy. He must act under the instructions of the British ambassador; and the difficulty arises as to what would be the practicalnature of hisposition, and as to whether an alvantage would be gained by having a Canadian attached in that subordinate way to the staff of the British ambassador at Washington alove such adrantages as we have at present. Any one who has followed the course of events knows that a major part of the work of the British ambassador at the court of the United States has to do in one way or another with Canalian interests, as is the case with no other country in the world, and, perforce, the British ambassador at Washington has to make himself acquainted, and does make himself acquainted with Canadian affairs. He has the interest of Canadian affairs at heart, and it is his duty, as it has leen his practice, to keep the fiovernor General and the Covernment of this country thoroughly informed with reference to any transactions which affert Cimada in any of her interests. so that with this peculiar position of the English ambassallor at Washington, having to do so mach with Camadian affairs, amis with the quick means of communication we have with Washington, it is a fact that at present nothing goes on in which Canadian interests are involved, and with reference to which information ought to be given to the Canalian dioverument, in which such infornation is not given, and the clearest observations, so far as these things affect Canada, brought to the notice, and that speedily, of the Dominion (iovernment. Among the difficulties in the way of having an attache of our own at Westminster in comnection with the embassy, is the practical difficulty as to what powers he would have and what greater alvantages would be gained in that respect than are gained at present, and over and alove what might be gained by having an intelligent agent at Wishington, ani if the idea is that we should have such an agent there, that is a policy which would demand carrying out, not only with reference to Washington, but all important countries with which we have trade relations. So far as the question stands at present, without going any further into it, I see the practical difticulties which surround the question, and whilst I sympathize with the spirit and endeavour of my hom. friend to have the powers of Canada, which have been so extensively developed within the last 1 is years, still further developed and exteuded, in so far as that extension can be useful to Canada and practically carried out, I yet see many practical difficulties in the way, which it would be necessary to very carefully consider before we take a decisive step. The hon. gentleman has brought his resolution before the House, and it will no doubt be discussed by the House, and the Government will listen attentively to the discussion and carefully note the observations made on either side, with the view of profiting by these observations and this discussion towards extending as far as it can le consistently and properly done, in conjunction with the home Government, the powers which Canada already possesses in a large degree, and which it is the olject of my hon. friend to still further extend and develop.
Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). We are still in the clouds.

Mr. LAURIER. I am very sorry, for my part, that the very clear and forcible, though concise, argument of the hou. member for Simeoe has failed to convince the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. That hon. gentleman has pointed out the advantages and the disadrantages arising out of the proposed policy, and I have not been able to gather from anything he has said that, letween the adrantage on the one side and the disadrantage on the other side, he was able to form an opinion for himself. He has not shown us whether he is fish or flesh. He may he both, but he has not shown us that he is either. For my part, I hail with great pleasure the motion of the hon. member for simcoe. It seems to me that his proposition, though it does not go so far as I would wish, would still he of great adrantage to the people of Canadia at large, and a great improvement on the present state of things. It is manifest, and it luust become more and more ohvions, that the interests of Canada and the interests of Great Britain are of necessity on account of their respective positions, distinct and separate upon many things. Their commercial policies diffier. One is free trade and the other protection ; and the very fact that Canada, and the Conservative party especially has chosen deliberately toadopt the policy of protection, while by instinct and by tradition, it seems to me, we should have faroured the other policy, is most conclusive evidence that the interests of loth countries cannot be servel equally hy the same policy. I hope the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. McNeill) will take a note of this motion of the hon. member for Simcoe. That hon. gentleman rather lectured me the other day for having repeated the opinion I had expressed on a former occasion, that the interests of Canada anll fireat Britain could not be served by the same economic policy. I could not have prevailed upon him, I am sure, to go back ever so little on the opinions he expressed; but I hope the colbwebs which obscured his judgment, usually clear in other matters, will be brushed away by the argunents of the hon. member for North Simece. As 1 have said, the proposition of the hon. gentleman is not perhaps as broad as I would desire, but I recognize the great difficulty which stands in the way. We are a colony of Great Britain, and it is impossilbe for us to have anything better than what is propmed. The Minister of Finance would prefer a commercial agen tat Washingtou. I do not say that a commercial agent at $W$ ashington would not be of great advantage on many occasions; but olviously the power of a commercial agent, in so far especially as international relations are concerned, must be very limited, and there would be, even if we had a commercial agent at Washington, numerous guestions upon which from the very limited nature of his functions, his powers would scarcely be of any benefit at all to Canada. I would prefer if possible to have a diplomatic rather than a commercial agent at Washington, hut how are you to have a diplomatic agent at Washington? What is the suggested remedy? The hon. gentleman suggests that there should be a Canadian attache to the British embassy. The experiment is worth trying. I do not know how far it will work, but for my part I say that a good many of the difticulties which narked our relations in the past with the United States would be obviously overcome if we had such an agent. Let us go back to the evil days of 1888 when commercial war was in sight between Canada and the United States, when we were threatened not only with commercial war but with all the evils of war itself, because if we had come to this unfortunate state when possibly commercial intercourse would cease between Canada and the United States, the door being thus opened, the results must have been very serions and there is no saying where it would have ended. The hon. gentleman said that the British ambassador always took a practical interest in the affairs of Canala. I do not altogether agree with him. On the contrary, I charge British diplomacy with having been on all occasions indifferent to Canadian interests and with having sacrificed Canadian interests wherever the interests of Canala came in contact with British interests. In those very days of 1888, when commercial war was within sight, I frankly avow that the British ambassador at Washington was taking some interest in what was going on before his eyes, but from the very necessity of the case, from the fact that he had to report directly to London and that from London his communications had to come to Canada, war might have been declarel, non-intercourse proclaimed, before the results of his efforts hall lecome at all available. Under such circumstances it was lucky for Canada-and in so saying I have the words of Sir Charles Tupper-that a Canadian gentleman who resides in the United States. Mr. Wiman, constituted himself the ambassador of Canada at Washington, interviewed Mr. Rayard, then Secretary of State, and procured an interview between him and Sir Charles Tupper, an interview which at once brought up negotiations which afterwards brought on the Treaty of Washington, a treaty which I am sorry to say was abortive, but which at all events removed the clouds which threatened the amicable relations between the two countries. Perhaps it is not out of place here, after giving the authority of Sir Charles Tupper as to what Canada owes to the action of Mr. Wiman, to quote the language of Mr. Bayard, in a letter which he addressed to Sir Charles Tupper as follows:-
"Washisgtos, D. C., May 31, 1888.
"Mr dear Sit Charles,-The delay in writing you has been unaroidable. In the very short interview afforded by your visit I referred to the embarrassment arising out of the gradual practical emancipation of Canada from the control of the mother country, and the consequent assumption by that community of attributes of autonomous and separate sovereignty, not, however, distinct from the Empire of Great Britain. The awkwardness of this imperfectly developed sovereignty is felt most strongly by the United States, which cannot have formal relations with Canada except directly and as a colonial dependency of the British Crown, and nothing coull better illustrate the embarrassment arising from this amornhous condition of things than by the volume of correspondence pablished severally this year relating to the fisheries by the United States. Great Britain, and the Government of the Dominion. The time lost in this circumlocution, although of ten most regrettable, was the least part of the dificuits, and the indirectness of appeal and reply was the most serious feature, ending, as it did, very uneatisfactorily:"
I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the ending of this letter :
"The time lost in the circumlocution was the least part of the difficulty, and the indirectness of appeal and reply was the most gerious feature, ending, as it did, very unastisfactorily.'
Now, let us suppose that at that time the plan proposed by the hon. gentleman had been in operation and that we had a Canadian attaché at the legation in Washington, I would believe that he would have to report concurrently to both Imperial and Canadian Governments.

Mr. McCARTHY. Hear, hear.
Mr. LiURIER. He should communicate. through the ambassador, to the fiovernment of Fingland ame to the Govermment of C'anada, and if that were done through the British emlassy, the indirectness of the reply would be avoided.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Partially
Mr. LAURIER. No, not only partially but completely, because all matters would have to be commminicated simultaneonsly to the British and Ganalian fiovernments, and the Canadian (iovernment would then act at once, and the very difficulties which on that occasion occurred would have heen in a larger measure obviated. It seems to me that the language used by Mr. Bayard gives one of the best reasons for the inotion of the hon. gentleman. I agree with the hon. gentleman that the question is one of very great difficulty. I am sure that this arrangement would not work as satisfactorily as I would wish it possible for it to work, but, as long as Canada continues to be a dependency of the British Crown, I can think of no better methol than that which is suggested here of Canada conducting her affairs in regard to our relations with the American people. Situated as we are, the remerly the hon. gentleman proposes will certainly have my support, and I think my friends on this side are prepared to give it their cordial support.

Mr. WELDON. Seeing that the leader of the Opposition has come to such a sound conclusion, we can scarcely object to the statement he made when he commenced his speech, that the interests of Canada and the interestsof England were separate and distinct. The hon. gentleman's speech proves that he is not a perfect Bourbon, but that he can learn something. In 1888, he spoke in a most di.sparaging way of the Washington Treaty, and he has to-day expressed himself as being sorry that the Fisheries Treaty of 1888 was abortive. I think his remarks show that the position of a British ambassador in Washington is not adeyuate to meet the needs of Canada. He illustrated his remarks by referring to the representations which Sir Charles Tupper made in 1888 when he returned from Washington, which showed that there was, in fishery matters, an intense degree of irritation in the Uniced States. The Minister of Finance expressed his opinion more in favour of a commercial agency at Washington, and the leader of the Opposition saysthat, while that would be good, a diplomatic agency would be better. He has expressed my view in that regard. He has stated that British diplomacy has sometimes endangered the interests of Canada, and I think that is true. If we were to go over the treaties of many years since the commencement of this century, we wonld find the truth of that, commencing with the Ashbourne Treaty and going through the others, the principal reason for which was that the British plenipotentiaries were imperfectly informed as to the facts, and as to the effect those treaties would have on the interests of Canada. The motion which has been made by my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is to the effect that we desire to have the plenipotentiaries better informed as to the facts in regard to Canadian interests. I need not multiply instances in support of this motion. Some of them were given by the Minister of Finance, and it appears that, to-day, England has laid down the rule that, where the interests of Canada are to be affected by British iliplomacy, no conclusion shall be arrived at unless Canada has been consulted in regard to the state of affairs. In a speech quoted this session, which gave some pleasure to hon. gentlemen on the other side and some pain to my hon. friend from North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) and others on this side, Nir NichaelHicks-Beach inale a rlistinct declaration on the part of the Imperial Government in this regard. I have not the worils in my memory, but from my reading of the speech I believe he said this in effect: Nowhere will you find a more distinct statement of the rule that England would take the colonies into her confidence, and would not treat for them so as to bind them withont their concurrence. The case in fatour of this has been so clearly and so well stated by the mover and by the leader of the Opposition, that I may not dwell upon it. I very heartily support the motion : I think it is capable of doing much good : I think that it is very likely to bring alout a better understanding between our own people and the American people. As was said ly Mr. Bayard, in the negotiations four years ago, "God made us neighbours, and common sense should make us fiends." He is an unwise public man, either in the counsels of that nation to the south of us, or in this Chamler, who uses words of acerbity or bitterness.

Mr. CASEI. The hon. member who has just sat down dissents from the view of my lealer that the interests of Canada and those of (ireat Britain are distinct. He has failed to show any reason for that dissent. I must call his attention to the fact that the statement that those interests are distinct, does not always mean that they are antagonistic ; it may mean that, and it may not. The fact that Great Britain is not directly interested in most of the questions that oecur letween the United States and ourselves, shows that those interests are distinct ; it does not follow, of course, that they are antagonistic, but it may easily follow from the circumstances arising out of a particular case. Let me quote the fishery question in the east and the question of the seal fisheries, as instances in which they might easily become antagonistic. England has no concern in the prosperity of our fishermen in the Maritime Provinces, England has no concern with the question of who kills the fur seals in the North Pacific ocean; but it does matter to Canada who shall fish in our eastern waters ; it does matter to Canala very much whether she has a right to kill seals on the high seas. I would instance.this last particularly, as a case where the interests appear to be antagonistic to a certain extent. Although Canarla has been consulted in this matter, and ourinterestshave been ably represented, England has dictated the policy that the question of killing seals on the high seas shall be an open question; she has agreed to go to arbitration on the question as to whether seals should be killed on the high seas. Now, it would be to the interest of Canada in this matter to have maintained the proposition that since the United States have admittedly no jurisdiction over those open waters, the question should not be open at all of putting restrictions upon the killing of seals in those seas. Now, another proposition of my hon. friend was that England had admitted the principle that Canada should always be consulted, and that she should enter into no treaties or no legislation binding upon the colonies withont such consultation. The hon. gentleman has put that much too broadly. In the treaties hetween the United States and Great Britain affectingCanada, Canadalad representation, but we were made rather rudely aware the other day of the fact that other British treaties did affect the colonies, and that Great Britain was unwilling, as stated by Lord Knutsford in his despatch which has been laid before the House, to make any changes in the existing treaties whatever at the request of Canada or any other colony. It was laid down very distinctly ly the Colonial Secretary that the interests of the colonies were not to be taken into consideration in regard to those treaties, that we would just have to put up with whatever effect those treaties might have on our commerce. I am not discussing whether that should lie so or not, but I am pointing ont to the hon. gentleman that such is the case, that in regaril to treaties England does not undertake to consiller the interest of the colonies except where the treaty is one specially referring to the particular colony in question. Now, as to the usefulness of this agent at Washington, there is no doubt he would le much more useful if we hal the power of making our own commercial treaties. I am satisfied that if this House had the courage, and had the knowledge of its own interests to induce it to ask for that power, there would be very little difficulty in ohtaining it. I do not see why England should not be willing to give us power to make our own treaties with foreign countries, just as she has given us power to make our own tariffs, levying taxes upon importel gools, English as well as foreign. Now, it is the Government and their supporters who have seen tit not to ask for this power. They have refused the suggestion made from this side of the House that we should ask for the power to make our own commercial treaties, a request which, I believe, would have been granted. It is naturally, therefore, awkwarel for them, specially for the Minister of Finance, to give any countenance to a proposition which, if it has any tendency, will certainly tend in the direction of more independent governmental action of Canada towarls the United States, in regard to treaties. It is awkward to the Minister to sanction any such proposition, and he, therefore, proposes the sulstitution of a commercial agent. Hefaited to point out what commercial agents could do for us in regard to a diplomatic matter. He has equally failed to see how a diplomatic agent attached to the Imperial consulate could be of any use to us. I do not agree with him there; I think a Canadian attaché would lee of some use to ns. But I would point out further that this agent would have no powers of negotiation in himself, he would bave to do everything concerning actual negotiations through the consulate, and with the authority of the Imperial Government. But this much he could do, so far as treating with the UnitedStatesisconcerned: he coull conduct preliminary proceedings, could arrive at such conditionsas the United States and Canada were nutually willing to agree to, and at that point only need the assistance of the Imperial Gorernment be invoked. Everything could be settled between the United States and Canadian representatives before the advice of Great Britain was asked in the matter. I think in that way he might be extremely useful. But it remains to be asked whether our agent need lee attached at all to the Imperial staff at Washing. ton. His duties would le necessarily the daties of an adviser merely; he could fulfil those duties equally well if he were not attached, if he were merely a diplomatic agent of Canada at Washington for the purpose of adrising with the British representatives on all necessary occasions, but noi a member of his staff, anl not necessarily under his direct control. He could send us information of what is passing at Washington, he could sound the leaders of Congress as to what could possibly be arranged in the way of treaty, and he could give this information to this Government and to the British Government equally well whether he were attached to the staff or not. On the other hand, his attachment to the staff might in many ways hamper his action. I think all our experience has gone to show that a representative of Canada directly, has hetter facilities for negotiation with the American officials, than a representative of Great Britain. It has always been the case when we send delegates there directly from this country, that they have got along better in negotiations with the United States, the United States have spoken a little more freely than they would to the direct representative of Britain alone. I think this agent not attached to the Imperial staff would be more useful than if he were attacherl, and on other groumis I think there would be a greater fiell of usefulness open to him. However, taking the motion as it is, although there would be difficulties in the way of such a representative, I feel with my leader that the experiment is one well worth trying, that no harm could result and some good might lee accomplished by appointing an agent even with such limited powers and under the supervision of the mother country, as the hon. member for East Simeoe (Mr. McCarthy) asks to have appointed. For that reason, if no letter proposition is submitteal on the other side of the House, $I$ am inclined to support the motion.

Mr. COCKBURN. As one of the representatives of the city of Toronto, whose imports sad exports during last year exceeded $\$ 23,000,000$, a laige portion of whose trade is with the Enited States, I naturally feel an interest in the guestion which has been brought before the House by the hon. gentleman for North Simene (Mr. McCarthy). At the sane time I must say that I was somewhat astonished at the remarks of the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Casey) when he told the House 'hat Canala and England were antagonistic in their views, that England had manifested no concern whatever in the fisheriesquestion, and that she had no interest in it. Surely it must be within the recollection of the hon. gentleman that only a few years ago, owing to the deep interest which she took in our fishery question, Canada was awarded over $\mathbf{S 5}, 010,000$; and surely he must recollect the despatch, not more than a month old, of the present Premier of England, in which he gave the United States clearly to understand that if Canadian rights in our seal fisheries were infringed, they would le protected by the whole force and power of the Empire. I think it was alssurd, therefore, on the part of the hon. gentleman to use the tone he did use in speaking of the negotiations of treaties, when he knows that every leading English statesman for several years past has given the colonies to unders tand, and has particularly given Canada to understand, that no treaty will be consummated with any power affecting the interests of Canada without the voice of Canadia having been tirst heard and duly weighen. The question which has lewen brought up, as to, whether we should hatre a resident agent in Washington to protect our interests, is indeed a vital question. We have alreatly estahlished Canarlian agents, inasmuch as we have in Lomdon Sir Charles Tupper ; and I think the experience we have had of the mamer in which those luties have been performed, and the protit which has acerued to this country from the performance of those duties should strongly encourage us to establish a similar office in the city of Washington.

Some hon. MFMPERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. COCKBCRN. Hon. gentlemen opposite siy " hear, hear." They are always ready to make an outery when dollarsand cents are concerned: but let me call to their remembrance the simple fact that only a few years atoo Sir Charles Tupper. being in Lombon as our representative, was able by the immerliate action he took to prevent our (anadian cattle heing scherduled, and to sive millions of dollars to our farmers, enough money to defray the expenses of the office for a ${ }^{\text {unarter }}$ of a century.

An hon. MFMBER. That is oll.

Mr. COCKBURN. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not like old truths to be brunght to their remembrance. I trust this oftice will he established at Washington, aml that due prower will be given to the Canadian representative to protect our interests there. We have in Paris an agrent whose duty it is to protect our interests, and who, if he has not had the same opportunity to distinguish himself as Sir Charles Tupper has possessed, has heen, no doubt, of great service to this country. I myself in my experience in Toronto have again and agein had oceasion to observe the complications which are apt to arise letween the United States and ourselves on commercial matters; and again and again, as 1 know, merchants of that city are olliged to go to $\mathrm{W}^{\text {ashington }}$ or elsewhere to have mistakes and misumberstandings rectitiet. It is not simply the immediate results of the establishment of such an office to which we are losking, but the very presence of a Camadian agent would prevent many misumlerstandings arising anl many acts culminating which could not le recalled. If we hat such an agent there many ditioculties would be aroided and many misumderstamdingrs prevented. The duestion as to whether he should be a commercial agent, a mere consul, so to speak, or whether he should be attached to the diplomatic service, is another question. From my own experience, and from the time I spent in Wiashington, I am led to the conclusion. by the general tenor of conversation, that the interests of Canada were not looked afteras carefully as they would have been had we possessel there a gentleman qualitied on every occasion to represent the views of Canada to the Government of the day. It is true they have not at Washington a Cabinet as we have here, and therefore there is not the same direct mote of influencing the opinion of the Govermment, but, at the same time, Mr. Blaine, and other members of the Cabinet, although they have no seats in the House of Representatives, possess great influence, and are consulted by leading members of the House, and, therefore, if we had a commercial agent there, or some gentleman attached to the British Minister, he would be able, in the course of the year, to serve Canada intinitely letter than this country can be servel without some such representative. I trust, therefore, the proposal male by the hon. member for North Simcre (Mr. McCarthy) will receive líve consideration from the diovernment, and that they may see their way to estalblish some officer there who woulit carefully guard the interests of Canarla and he in full accord with the 1 kominion fiovernment here.

Mr. MLLS (Bothwell). It is mretty clear that hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches have mate some progress since they diselussed the motion relating to commercial treaties a few weeks ago. The Minister of Finance with respect io that motion was of the opinion that it would necessarily lead to the separation of Canada from the Enited Kinglom. The hon. gentleman, in speaking for the Alministration, did not tell us the (iovermment were prepared to support this motion, but he did tells us that the fiovermment might go so far as to do for Canala as regards the Enited States what they have done six times over with respect to the West Iulian Islands. Our commerce with the West Indies is of the value of $S_{2}($ (NO), (OM) a year and the fiovernment have six commercial agents there, and so where our commerce is something more than twenty times that of the West Indies, the hon. fentleman does not, although he sees very great litticulty in the way, think but that the (iosernment might, in the interests of the commerce of Canarla with the Enited States. establish a commercial agent at Washington. Well, Sir, I may say this with respect to the hon. gentleman's proposition, that 1 do not think a commercial agent at Washington woill mean very much in the interest of (ianaia. The people of Canada might jerhaps to some extent be better served hy having commercial agents in the Lnited States, hut no more at Washington thanat other points amd certainly not so much at Viashington as at Poston or New York. Sir, it is the political duties which would largely devolve upona representative of Canama at $\mathrm{W}^{2}$ ashing:ton that would make the appointment of an atfor-he: at Washington important, and the appointment of a commercial agent would be the appointment of a person who would have none of those important functions which it is necessary that ah agent of Canada should bave who has to deal with the relations of this country and the neighbouring Republic. I was somewhat amazed at the olservations adilresseal to the House by the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockluurn). The hon. gentleman did not inform us, any more than the Finance Minister did, whether he faroured a commercial agent or a diplomatic agent. The hon. gentleman was in the clouds during his remarks and he never came down from the clouds. His opinions were as vague, and the House was left in doubt as to what they were at the conclusion of his speech as it was at the beginning. The hon. gentleman complained of the observation made from this sitle of the Honse, that our interests were not alway: itentical, or felt to be identical, with the interests of the Unitel Kinglom, and that, therefore, the interests of Canada were not always safficiently regarded in the negotiations that took place between the neighbouring Republic and the Fortign Office. The bon. gentleman repudiated that, and yet before he hal done he informed the House that the interests of Canada were not closely looked after by the embassy at Washington.

Mr. Сockbers.

Mr. Cockbers. No.
Mr. MLLs: (Bothwell). I understood these to be the words used by the hon. member.

Mr. COCKBCRN. I said they were not so closely and zealously looked after as they might le if we hall an agent there acting with the British ambessalor.
Mr. MILL.: (Bothwell). I will acept the hon. sentleman's pualitication of the worls I have attributed to him. I said that the hon. gentleman had stated that our interests werenot closely looked after, and the hon. gentleman says that I left out the comjunction. and that the words he used were $\because$ not so closely lowked after. I aceept his qualitication, and to the extent which it minimizes the statement accordingly. But, Sir, after all the hom. entleman admits that our interests are so far distinct from those of the Cnited Kingdom that the Government of Eugland sends a representative who dioes not so closely regard, and does not extend torour intereststhat watchful care that a representative of camala would do. Whenthe hon. gentleman makesthat admission, I think he makes all the admission necessary touphohl and support the proposition of the hon member for North Simeoe (Mr. Mc(arthy). Now, sir, whatever may the the views of political economists who think that in the highest amol most ateurate sense the interests of nations are never antagonistic to each other on questions of trade and commerce, that is not the view taken by the hon. memiker for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cinckburn), or. so faras I know, by any hon. gentleman on that side of the House: and whatever views may be entertained on the subject of trade and commerce, there are certain other relations affecting the territory and the sovereignty of this country, in which the feelings of the people of Camabia are not ader uately represented by any one from the other side of the Atlantic. We know that it does not matter vers much to the fiovermment of the Cnited Kinglom whether our rights in the Athantic tisheries are maintained actording to our contention. or wheiher they are surrembered to the extent of the American contention. It matters very little to the Corernment of the United Kinglom whether the seals in Behring Nea are regarded as American property stmyed away from home, or whether they are regarded as the property of mamkind generally: There are other interests represented by the English Foreign Otfice which attract the attention of Pritish statesmen and which are considered paramount, anl so in regard to all these matters which are of vital concern to us, and which are necessary to the building up of a nationality in this part of the North American continent which have very little interest for anys:orermment in the Enited Kinglom. It is true that the Foreign Otfice does take some interest in our affairs. So long as it has charge of these affains, the Foreign Otice must feel that it is necessary not to disgracefully akandon the just claims of Canala; but in so far as they can pursuade us to abaudon them for the sake of a peaceful settlenent they feel that they may in the interests of the Empire properly do so. The Inperial Government is much more concerned with the maintenance of their sovereignty in India, and witk the holding of Russian ambition in check in Central Asia, than it is in holding in check American aggression on the North American continent, and so I say that the sovereign interests of the Empire whichs specially atfeet Canada on this continent are much more likely to be properly caren for, and much more likely to be aderpately guarled by a person responsible to the Parliament and to the Government here, than by one responsible to the Parliament and Covermment at Westminster. I do not think that there tan ine any doubt on this. lecause everything that has trainspired proves it. I need not refer to anything more than the Fenian raids to show this. What was there in the claim of the Cinited States with regaral to the Alahama, that was not eynally strong against the Enitel States amil in faveur of Gamala on the subject of the Fenian rails? Is there any hon. gentleman on that side of the Homse who will for one moment pretent that the dinemment of the Cnited states were to lo excused for permitting men to arm ami to drill aml fit themselves out in a warlike mamer aml to enter upon Canadian territory with a view of committing hostilities? Was not the Govemment of the Lintel states more responsible for what transpired in reference to these raids, than was the coovernment of the Cuited Kingolom respomsilhe for the rainls committed be the Alarama amil the shrmembonh and the Florith and other resells sailing from Fnglam? to commit deprelations upon the commerce of the American Republic? sir, with regard to these matters our interests were sulnerdinated to what the Imperial (iovernment felt to be the interests of the Empire. The Ciovernment of Cireat Britain was steking to hold Russia in chech, was amxious to aroid quarrels with the Cnited states and was ready to make sacritices for the purpose of reconciliation in reference to the Enited states that were perhaps in the interests of the Cnited Kingdom but certainly were not in the interests of Camala. I combld mention other illnstations, hut that one of the Fenian raids is sutficient to show that the interests of Canala and the interests of mother comitry in our diplomatic relations with the neighbouring Repullic are not always ilentical. Therefore the interests of Canalia. if they are to the allequately cared for and properly protected, must he under the control and jurisiliction of Cumada. I do not know, but it dires not seem to Ire that there are the difficulties in the way of working out this question that have been sugseste by some hon. gentlemen in the discussion that took place earlier in the sesion. I hase printed out lefore that the tembency at the present time, the evolution. if I may le allowed the expression, of our constitutional system, shows that the exercise of executive authoity with reference to external relations camot always he continuedi in the hamls of those who resile at Westminster: and when the interests of any important colony are paramount, when it is the colony which is chiefly concernet, then it is the responsible (Governm:ent of the colony, and not that of the United Kingdom, which should control the negotiations for the settlement of the question. Now, it is because that is the case with Canada that I favour the proposition of the hon. gentleman. I do not siyy that as worded it is in all respects such as would oceur to my mind : but I accept it generally as a first step necessary for the establishuent of our control for the securing of a substantial voice in the management of our external affairs. I do not ask that this shall be done in all matters; but I say that in those cases in which we are the parties chiefly affecterl, we,
and not the Cioverument at Westminster, should devile how the question shoulid be settleti. That being so, I think it is important that the proposition embraced in the resolution of the hon. member for Worth simeoe should receive the samction of the Honse. It was said ifty years ago that responsible sovernment for domestic purposes was incompatible with the maintenance of our comection with the mother conntry. It is said now that the gramting of this proposition is incompatible with the mamtenance of those relations. Experience has shown that the first contention was altogether erroneous. I believe experience will show that the contention with regard to this proposition is equallyerroneons: and that it is pasible to establish this relation. and to work out this policy of giving to the important colonies a voice in the manasenent of their external relations, without in any way weakening the comnection letween the colonies and the mother country. On the contrary, in my opinion. it would rather tenl to strengthen that comnection, because it would give us the pasition of eypals and not the position of subordinates which we have up to this moment ocupied, in reference to external affaits in which we are deeply interested.
Mr. MeNEILL I would like to ask my hou. friend which proposition he atheres to-the proposition that in matters mainly affecting one of the colonits of the Empire, the colony should have the sontrol of the negotiations, or the other proposition, which he stated immediately afterwards, that the colonies should have a substantial voice in the negotiations. betause the two propositions are very lifferent from each other.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I suppose that the colony would have a sulstantial voice if it exercised a controlling influence.

Mr. M $\cdot$ NFILL. Weli, I would like to know which proposition the hon geitleman wishes to athere to. I do not think that was really a very candid reply on the part of an hon. gentleman of my hon. friend's standing in the House. He knows very well that he has not answered the yuestion.
Mr. MIILS (Bothwell). I do not propose to enter into a discussion of the question the bon. gentleman has put to me. I amprepared to do so wheneter a proper motion for the diseusion of that question is lefore the Honse. I did disenss it a few days agn. I think that the extent to which any depentiences should have a voice in the management of the interests which concern itself will depent altogether on the extent to which that interest is exclusive. or paramome, or co-orlinate.

Mr. MeNEILL. I am sure that the House $i^{\text {s }}$ very much enlightened as to the views of the hongentleman in the reply he has made. My honfriend is not in the clouds, at all events. However. I am glad to tind that my hein. friend, although he has given us a treatise on this subject, does not himself feel that it is one so very easily dealt with as one would have supposed at one time from his remarks. The truth of the uatter is that when he comes down to a detinition my hon. friend is as vague as any one can very well be. He lays down the proposition that the colonies under certain circumstances should have the control of the negotiations, and in the next breath he modifies that proposition by the statenient that they should have a sulstantial voice in the negotiations Now. Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to oceupy the time of the House further than just to say that from my point of riew 1 am heartizy in accord with the resolution which my hon. frienil has presented to the House. It does seem to me that it would be of very great advantage, both to Camada and to the representative of the mother country at Washington, if we had there some one thoroughly familiar with affairs in Canala, who from his intinate knowledge of our affairs. would be able to inform the representative of of Her Majesty as to the best course to follow in the interest of the Iominion. For my own part, I dionot see-it may be simply because I do not take a sutticiently accurate view of the case-why we should anticipate anymore frictionin that case than we have experienced from the establishment of the Parliament which we hare in Canada. If it be posible to establish a Parliament such as exists in Cimata. and to give to our people the rights that they possess to-day, and if that can le done without friction, and workel harmoniously as it has been, and as it is being from year to year more harmoniously workel, I do not see why any danget shouli be anticipatel from the appointment by us of a gentleman to be placed as am atrache on the staff of the representation of Her Majesty at Washington. I do not set why we need anticipate any friction. If the gentleman were not so attacher. if he were sent there to negotiate treaties for Camada irrespective of the mother country altogether, 1 do think that we should very soon find that there would be friction, amd friction of is very serious description too. I camot imagine, formy part, auything better calculatel to force this Empire asiuder, or to set the rarious members of this Fmpire at each other's throats, than to give them power to negotiate treaties irrespective of one another or of the central authority. This, however, appears to me to the a very different proposition, and one which in no way threatens the danger which would accompany the arrangement propuset a slort time ago hy the hon. member for Bothwell (Nr. Mills). That hon. genteman has to-day, however, madea remark in which I locoincide -sonietimes my hon. friend and myself do coincide in our views, bit not as often as I should wishwhen he said that the Imperial anthorities had not treated Camada in reference to the Fenian raid claims as Canada ought to have been treated. I agree with my hon. friend. I am very far from siying that the Imperial authorities have always actel towards either England, Ireland, or Scotland or Canada just as they ought to have actel, and I think they did not act in reference to Camada on that oceasion as they ought to have acted.

Mr. McNEILL. But when iny hon. friend says that at that time the Ciovernment of Great Britain were acting towarls Cawada as they lid, because their minds were centred on India, and hecause they were watching Russia and were annious to check Russian ambition there, I think my hon. friend is very, very wide of the mark. I think my hon. frieud is just as far wide of the mark as he can very well be. The truth of the matter is it was not any such spirit that actuated the British Government of that day at that time. The truth of the matter is that the spirit which actuated the British Gov:
emment in that day was the spirit which hat contined England and English politics to the silver streak. The truth of the matter is that the spirit which act nated the British Ciovernment of that lay was the spirit which actuates the gentleman Who is a clisgrace to this country, and who is, from his residence in Toronto, penming letters in American magazines to injure this country-I mean Mr. Giohlwin smith. The spirit which actuatel the mother conntry, or rather the liovernment of the mother country at that time was the spirit of the Manchester school. My hon. friend (Mr. Davies) shakes his heal. but it is the fact. That was the spirit which actuated those who held power in the mother country at that time, and 1 can assure my hom. friend there were a great many people in the mother conntry who would agree with his remark in reference to that matter, who were very mach ashamed of the pasition in which Fagland wasplacel. as reganls the enforement of the rights of the colonies. simply heratuse of the presure of those who dominatel to a large extent the press of Englami at that time - I mean the Nanchester sehoml. When my hom. friemi siys that the dovernisent of Faglamiare more concerneal with questions connectel with English polities than they are with the tishery question on the Athutic or the seal troubles on the Pacitic. I suppose that to some extent my hom. friend is correet. I presume a local Tiovernment is generally more concemed with loxal attaits in one sense. I presume that local affairs are more present to the minds of an English lowal fiovermment than more distant affairs, but I think it was a little ungenerous of my hon. friemd to refer to the British (iovermment as not having acted towatrls Canala with respect to our fishery chaims on the Athantic as they should havedone. I think my hon. friend should recollect that the British Cobtrmment mate our claims their clams with rezam to the fishery treaty: that they sent over here an agent whese sole desire was to tind out the vishes of the representatives of Canada in 11 ashington at the time and give effect to those wishes.

Mr. MILLA (Bothwell). Did the Treaty of lisis Give effect to our wishes with regard to land-lowkel fiayson our crists. and was the same rule adopted as the Amerians hoid with regaril to land-locked hats an their ceasts?

Mr. Me.NEILL. That is not a question affeeting in any degree what I have been siying.

Mr. MILLs (Bothwell). Ves it affeets it alrosether:

Mr. M. IEILLL. I woull like to ask my hon. friemi if he thinks that every treaty which is arranged is io lee arranget just according to the lieus of one side eoncerned in the treaty. I woull like to ask him whether he does not expeet that when we enter into negotiations with the Unitei States, either with regaral to fishery treaties or anything else, a certain amount of comipromise on the one side or the other will probshly le wise ? I think, at all events, that the treaty which was then negotiatel, had it been carried into effect. wouh have been a good treaty for Canada. As my hon. friend the Minister of Finauce says, hon. gentlemen opposite considered it a good treaty: at all events they supported it. As I was alout to say, I think the course my hon. friend took was most ungenerous with regand to the tishery treaty, amd I think it was especially ungenerons when he referred to the Behring sea tronble. He knows perfectly well that hat it not beren for the interest the mother commery took in the Canalian rights amd privileses in the Behring Sea, we wouh have leen mable to maintain our position there at all. He knows perfectly well that if the British liovermment han gone the length of forcing war letween the Empire ant the Enited States, Camala woull have been the main sutferer in any such tmuble. He knows perfecty well that is the case. I most suy I am very sorry my hon. friemd shoulh have treated the Honse to swh remarks as he has treated us to with reference to this matter. I do not think it lies very well in the mouth of amy member of Her Najestys loyal Opprasition to east afpersions on the Imperial cionernment concerning matters as to whether they have been doing their utmost worther our interests, as they have loen. Woth with regand to the fisheries and the Beloring sea question.

Mr. DATIES (P.E.I.) Why are you supmort. ing this resolution if that is the case s

Mr. Mi-NEILL. 1 am cery gial my hon. friend has put that question. It is perfectly fair, amblam prepareal to answer it. I suppert this resolution betanse 1 believe it will assist the lmperial tiovernment rery much in the kuowledge that is necesiary to enable them pmperly to defemi and uphoh one interests 1 say that in must cabses, in ahmest every case which canle pointed out, except perlaps the the ease of the fenian raids, where our interests were not guanled as they ought to have been by the Imperial Givrernment, it is becamse the Imperial disvernment has leten deticient in information. This is true luath with regand to the loumdaries amelalmost every other puestion we can refer to. Amil sive that the propaial of my hon. friend will have the effect of informing the British Govermment or representatives in a way in which they would oherwise not lee informet. I do net wish to teke up the time of the House further, but ams ghal to say that I think the resolution of mi hom. frient is one worthy of the suppert of the House and, further, from my point of view, and I should imagine, from the point of view also of those who astree, with me as to the future of the Empire, it has 1 think this atramtage, that it will temd to the lenetit not only of Camadia but of the Empire as a whole.
Sir JOHS THONPMON. The very yreat importance of this yuestion is indicated by the range of the dehate, luratuse members whe have diserased it, without indeed. I must admit, departing rery much from the principle of the resolution. have diseussed ath the rebatiens of Camada to the Empire. We have had a little delnate about the puliey of Great Britain in so far as Canada is concerned: we have had allusions to the history of British diplomaer in so far as it affected (amada, and especially as ailministereal at Washington. I albait, as I have said before, that these subjects are somewhat tonched upon by this resolution. I refer to the extent of the interests which it does touch, for the purpase of callimg the attention of the Honse to the necessity of the greatest care before pronomucing a detinite opinion upon this question. I mean as ro the details of the resolution it may adopt. Now, in all the argmuent that has taken place upon the subject this aftemoon, it seemsto me that the reasoning has not hada tendenty tosupport the resointionitself. In the reasoning we have had from illustrations taken from British history in regard to her action ats to Coanala ant her diplomacy as to Canala, and especially the illustrations of recent date in Which it did seem that her policy somewhat disregarled the interests of Camalia, we have hal argaments in favour of our having an agent at Wiashingtom either of at commereial or of a diphom. atic character, hat the terms of the resolution are distinct and look not so much to the appointment of all agent at Wiashington as of all ofticer attiacheal tio the statf of the British Minister there, who, in me humble julgment, would he of a lifferent $\mathrm{p}^{\prime}$ sition altogether, from that comtemplaten be the hom. gentemen who have supported the resohution. Let us see whether the argmment of the hom. rentlemen opposite are not open to the answer of the Minister of Finance, thongh the "pposition may be just in their eriticism in regard th the term "commercial agent "ats used hy him. What was the argument of the leater of the Op, position himself: It was that an ofticer of this kind would be useful to looth (iovermments, and that he ought to report to both liovermments. The hon. gentleman, in that argment, distinetly put the officer in the position of ann agent of this comatry appointed with the assent of Her Majestys Govermment and having obligations both to the british foremment amil to the (amalian fiovermment, because lee must report to looth. There is a great deal to be said in farom of that view, amd 1 suppose that is the light in which the Minister of Fintance framed his statements. There is a great deal to lie said in farour of the appoint. ment at Washington of an agent--let us drop the term "commercial agent." anil say simply" agent" -who would have the rlaty that a consul has in foreign conntries, and would have the powers of such ath official where there is not a full sliplomatic argent. The importance of that may be seen in the instinnes. which were adduced this afternoon. While I am not able to agree with all the learler of the 0pposition saill as to what took plate in 1588, what has taken place since has shown that persomal intercourse with a fiovermment with which we have intemational relations, such as we have with the United States, is of areat importance with a view to removing uncertainty and misunderstanding on various matters. That was the principal value of the negotiations of Risis, though they did not result in a treaty, they did result in a better unlerstanding letween the two (iovermments, amb our experience in regarl to commercial and other. affairs shows that, ats to foremments as well as to individuals, personal commonications are inetter than any which have to go through the long circuit through which the orrlinary otficial communications between Canada amd Washington have to go. Thercfore, a great deal is to be saill in facour of the establishment of an ageney of that kind. I agree with my hom. friems on this side who deny the desire of Cimata to have an agent there with full cliphomatic relations. I agree that the practice of arranging that some person recommented hy the fovernment of Canala should act with the plenipotentiary on behalf of Her Majesty has been satisfactory in the negotiation of treaties of late years. For many reasons which it would be unnecessary for me to discuss this erening, I think that the criticism on the part of our friends on this side is wise, and that we ought to rest satisfied with the arguments in favour of an arency estallishen there, as in other parts of the United States, such as the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) indicated in his remarks. But whether we shall oltain the same advantage from an officer attached to the staff of the British Dinister is another question. I think there is a wide distinction there. In my judgment, not ouly would it not lee the duty of the officer to report to both liovermments, but it would not he his right or his cluty to report to either. He would lie simply the servant, and the contilential servint of the British Minister himself. I admit that there would he some value in havin:s such an officer there because he could afford information to the Minister on ('anadian atfiairs, which would le more correct than the ambassador could get from other sources, hit he wonl be powerless to commmanate with us. What would come mules his observation from time to time would he within the contidente of his master, ant he would not he at liberty to report to us any circumstances whatever withont the permission of his master. As far as that is concernen, we wonh have no advantage at all, hecause now, when the british Minister thinks circumstances have arisen which the (inatlian (iovermment should he male aware of, it is his claty and his instruction to communicate them directly to us. Therefore, what the affarhe would do in commmicating with us is done now: We can conceive of many cases in which it would be most important that we should know what is procecting letween the two diovernments, and the retferha: might know of that and still be powerless to comminnicate with us upon it. For these reasons, I thiak it is undesirable that we should commit ourselves to a proposition in favour of appointing in officer who would simply le attachen to the British Dinister's staff. I think the time is approaching when it may be desinable for us to have all agent at Washington as well ats at other points in the Linted States, an acent appointed with the consent of the british Covernment, not clothed with plenipotentiary powers, hat with such powers as a commercial agent is clothend with, and that, with the sanction of the British Ministry, he should be at liberty to commonicate to ns any difficulties he may apprehom, any emergencies he may foresee, which an atmorlie of the British Minister could not ilo unler the seal of secredy which would be attached to the position he worlid hohl on that staff. The subject is of such importance that I think the House should lee very careful in committing itself even to the terms of the resolution. I think, if any agent shoulil he apprinted there, he should not be more subordinate to the British Minister than any consulat agent would he. For the purpose of seeing whether I have correctly understood that the arguments allvanced in favour of the scheme point rather to the appointment of an agent than to the appointment of an otficer attached to the statf, let us apply some of the illustrations we have had this afternorm; let us ask ourselves in regarl to one of the questions in relation to which it is said that fireat Britain has not conserved the rights and interests of Canada, how much leetter these wouh have been treated if there had been a Canalian attached to the staff of the British Minister at Washington. Would we have hal any more facourable consideration of our claims arising out of the Fenian raids from the mere fact of our having an atforlhe there? That question was dealt with, I suppose, by the secretary of State for Foreign Affairs himself, as a part of the policy of the british (iovenment. If we take up any other of the illustrations we have had this atternoon, we find in not one of these casps could sur position have been improved by an otficer surromaled hy the embarrassments which a mere contidential servant of the British Minister would le in. I urge upon the Honse again that if we are to tike the very inpertant step of having a representative there, or in any other foreign country, we ought to insist that so far as confilence is concerned he should be independent of the British Minister having a right to approach him daily and to receive communications from him, and the Minister should be charged with the duty of giving him subh information as cam be properly given in the interest of Canada; but that we should not have him in such close relations that he most obtain therssent of the Minister himself before he can make any communication to this Govermment. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) says that that would be a matter of arrangement. He will see at once, I think, that any arrangements which would make an rttarhe independent of the Minister would le utterly incompatible with such a position. From the fact of his close association with the Minister, from the fact of his being attached to his staff, he must learn many things which only a person in the confidence of a Minister cam learn, hut he is not at liberty to communicate them under any arrangement which can be made without ohtaining the approval of that Minister himself; and even if he shatl have procured information elsewhere than in the Minister's office, as to events which lie may have heard of from other sources, he is not at liberty to communicate them to us without acting inconsistently with the terms which exist between an atfaricic and the Minister. For these reasons. I repeat that I think the House, in dealing with interests of such great importance, shouli deliberate very carefully upon the kind of policy which we wish adoptel, or which we wish to recommend: and for that reason I move that the debate upun this resolution be now adjourned.

Mr. WELDON. I would like to ald a word before this debate is closed, and that is a remark that eseapeed my memory when I was on my feet before, with reference to the omission of the Fenian raid claim which was submitted, is my hon. friend from bothwell said a few moments ago, to the Joint Sigh Commission at Washington. I think that circumstance affords the strongest proof in the whole disenssion in favour of the motion of the hom. member for North Simeoe. I think that my recollection of that matter is correct, that when the negotiations had been rumning in the autumn of 1870 during the month of Novemier and early in December, a prelininary agreement was come to by the British Minister aml by the American Secretary of State, setting forth a memorandum of the subjects on which the two nations were to arbitrate, these being, first, the damages wroughtby the Alahame and other Confederate cruisers; second, the bonding privileges; third, the Oregon boundary ; fourth, freedomof the St. Lawrence; and sixth, the Atlantic fisheries, and one or two minor matters. I have no doult whatever, from my recollection, that the question of the Fenian raids at that early stage in the month of November, was omittel from that order of reference for the simple reasom that the British embassy was not sufficiently in touch with Canadian feeling, and did not know the magnitude of this guestion from the Conadian point of view. I have no doubt they meant to press the Canadian claims, but when it was distovered, some months later, that the oriler of reference had heen by this preliminary arrangement fixed, and when it came to the knowledge of Canadia that the Fenian raid question was not incorporated, and when our people pressed for a consideration of their claims, the answer was: It is too late. My point is that if, in the carly months of those negotiations, if in the months of Octolier or November; 1s70, there had been a Canadian cttrele at Washingtom, in tonch with Canalian feeling, realing the Canalian newspapers, and knowing how strongly Canadians felt in this regarl, that matter woull have been put in a much better position.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) 1 followed the argament of the leanler of the House carefully, and was sonry to observe the conclusion at which he arrived. We frankly almit that if the statements he made are to be acceptel as the only conditions umler which this ofticial could le appointed, his appointment would be of very little use. He has correctly stated that the relations existing between Canala and the states are so intricate, and the interests involved are so great, that all leading men acknowledge that the present fashion of making communication hetween the two comutrics is exceedingly cumbrsome ; wealladmit that. We all remember when the Washington Treaty of 1888 was disenssed, and when the correspondence which led up to that treaty was laid lefore the House; and the cirvmlocution that existed in exchanging despatches between the (iovernment of Canala and the hovernment at Washingtom, and in getting a reply, was sufficient to convince everybuly who studied the question that some escape from thic existing difficulty must be foumb. We found on that occasion, for instance, that a despatch on a vital yuestion at which the two fovernments were at variance, and in which there existed the possilility, to saly nothing more, of war, that it took nearly seven months for a despatch sent from the Canadian (iovernment to the Washington Government and to have a reply. There was, perhaps, some excusilhle delay ; I do not know where the fault oceured, perhaps both sides were to blame ; but nolooly could justify the existence of a system which permitted seven months to elapse between a despatch going from Canada and receiving a reply from the Government at Washington. Now, we all saw that if practical common sense had been applied to the negotiations, a despatch might have leeen forwanded and a reply received within six weeks, giving both parties time to consider the issues involvel. The hon. gentleman suggests that we can escape from the clitficulty by appointing what he calls an agent, what is practically a consul. I can see no grod reason why the appointment of a consul camot coincide with the appointment of a diplomatic agent. Their duties are altogether different. I should suppose if you did appoint a consul, or a gentleman who fills the duties which a consul usually does, that Washington is about the last place to which he should be sent. New York, being the great emporium of the.

United states, or Boston, the city with which we do the largest business, or Chicago, would lie the centres to which you would send such a gentleman as the leader of the House suggests. It does not appear to me that he would fill the bill at all. The difficulty is to have the special views of the Canadian fovermment upon fuestions especially affecting Canadian interests, pressed upon the Administration at Washington. The difficulty is to have somelooly there fully cognizant with Canadian interests, and capable of dealing with Canarlian interests in the Washington Congress and reporting on them to the Government here. Now, that cannot be met ly the appointment of a consular agent. The hon.gentleman hegins with this statement, that if you do appoint such a diplomatic agent he will not be permitted to report, as he necessarily ought to do, and necessarily must edo, jointly to this Government and to the Imperial Government. Why not? The hon. gentleman sees we are suggesting a condition of things for which there is no parallel. We are evolving out of the old colonial status into something a little higher, for which there has been no precerlent. He will see that the old hard and fast rules, which governel the diplomatic service of Great Britain in its dealings with foreign powers, cannot be applied to the new condition of affairs where one of her colonies is permitted to appoint a special aftache to the embassy, charged with care over Canadian interests. It necessarily must follow that that special attaché so appointed and so charged, must nake a report to those who charged him. If he is to go there simply as a Canadian, not having any further commmication with us, not receiving instructions from us, and no more in contact with the people of Canada after he goes there, than an affache from England, what benefit would he be? None whatever. He must be in touch with the Canadian people, and he must receive communications and advice from the Canadian Government ; he must report to them from time to time jointly with such a report as he may make to the Imperial Govermment. But it is not for us to lay down the conditions and limitations that should attach to this appointment. The experience of the Foreign Otfice will no doulst do that successfully and well. What we have to bear in mind is the great point we have in view : the difficulties that exist, and the means of meeting them. The suggestion which the hon. gentleman makes. not as a final solution but as a tentative measure which would at all events remove existing difficulties, is an experiment which might be tried, and we might ascertain how it would work. I have every confidence that the Home Office, recognizing the principle underlying this resolution, recognizing the fact that we have special interests which require a Canadian appointee to guard, will le prepared to go as far as is necessary in order to make this officer when appointed an effective one. It will not do for me or for the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Mc(arthy) to attempt to lay down those limitations which it might be necessary to set out in respect to this appointment, but I have no doubt it will be a step in the right direction and that very great good will result from it. If the appointee were simply a commercial agent, he would have nothing to do with diplomatic matters. He would have no right to communicate either with the British Minister or with Mr. Blaine.

Mr. Davies (P.E.I.)

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I did not speak of a commercial agent only; I spoke of something between a commercial agent and a diplomatic agent.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) A kind of hybrid, so far as is known to the diplomatic service at the present time. In order to be effective, he must be attached to the British embassy, because all communications are made between Great Britain and the United States through the embassy, and all Canadian representations are communicated to the United States through the embassy after going throngh the Foreign Otfice. He must, therefore, necessarily be attached to the embassy and work in unison with the embassy. Although I see difticulties in the way, I see no insuperable difficulties, and the exercise of a little common sense would remove them, and as I see no objection to the proposal of my hon. friend from East Nimeoe, I am prepared to support his motion.

Mr. LAURIER. I am sorry the hon. gentleman has moved the adjournment of the debate. I would see no objection to this course being taken under different circumstances, but, in view of the remarks made by the two Ministers, I cannot but regard the proposed adjournment with feelings of diffidence. The two hon. memlers on the Treasury benches who have spoken on the question to-day have not spoken in a manner farouring the resolution. On the contrary, both hon. gentlemen who addressed the House slowed conclusively that they dil not favour the resolution of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), but that they would farour something else. Now, what is this something else which those hon. gentlemen favour insteal of the proposal of the hon. member for Simcoe? They do not propose a commercial agent, hut they propose an agent of some kind, and so far as I understoud the Minister of Justice, what he would propose would he an agent at Washington who would report confidentially to the Government. Well, this seems to be very objectionable to my mind. First, as the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) has stated, we have to face a new state of affairs in this country. We are now a colony of $\mathrm{i}, \mathbf{0}(0,000$ people, in many respects a semi-inlependent people; we are already a nation, and we claim to be a nation; yet so long as we are a dependency of the British Crown, it is impossible we can have any accredited representative to a foreign country. With our neighbours, with whom we share the continent, it is inevitable that we must have, I will not say difficulties, but international relations. The best way to meet them would be, according to the tenets of international law, through our own embassy at Washington. The hon. nember for Simcoe (Mr. Mc(Carthy) has suggested the very best plan under the circumstances; that we should have, so far as we are able to acquire it under present circumstances, an embassy of our own at Washington in the manner he has suggesten, an attache to the British embassy, reporting not only to the British Government, but to the Canadian Govermment as well. But what does the Minister of Justice propose? He proposes that Canada should have an agent at Washington. Of course, he would not be au accredited agent who could be recognized by the American Govermment. They could not treat with him ; he could not approuch the Secretary of State and have official relations with him. Of course, he could have confidential relations; he conld commmicate confidentially with the secretary of State, if the Secretary of State chose to see him. He could report confidentially to this iovernment; but certainly that would be the most oljectionable of all forms of diplomatic relations. It would tee practically the introduction here of a secret service which has too often been the bane of European diplomacy. For my part, the proposal of the hon. Minister is inost objectionable for all purposes, because there would be nothing open, but everything would be secret and contidential. This Parliament could not ask for the information which had been receivel, because, it heing confidential, the Govermment could keep it to themselves. Hon. menbers should not favour a proposal of that kind. We have recognition of this fact that after all we have distinct interests from the British Government and the British people, that those interests are to be served in some way, and so long as we have nothing better suggested than this proposition of the hon. member for Simcoe, I, for iny part, will abide by it. Hon. gentlemen opposite propose the adjournment of the delate. What does that mean at this stage of the session? It means simply that this question is to be shelved and is to have no solution during the present session. This is too important a question to he treated in this manner, and for my part I shall oppose the adjourument of the debate.
Mr. McCARTHY. I think on the whole I have no reason to be discouraged at the reception which my motion has met with on both sides of the House. There seems to be, at all events, a feeling, if not from the most couservative point of view, that we should have some kind of representative to the great country to the south of us. I have felt for many years, and the longer I am in public life the more strongly do I feel, that it is impossible for this great country to thwart the natural development and the process of evolution which is going on. We must remember that we are a great nation; we are recognized in that capacity, although we have not yet the full powers of nationality. I am not at all one of those who think that our interests are diverse from those of the British Government and that they must inevitably lead to separation between the Dominion of Canada and the Empire. In that I know I differ from hon. gentlemen opposite.
Some hon. MFMBERS. No, no.
Mr. McCARTHY. I am glad to hear that expression of dissent; I thought that was the view taken by hon. gentlemen opposite. I believe the interests of this country and the interests of the great Empire, of which we form no insiguficant part, are not antagonistic. I cannot, for my part, believe the people of this country will be satisfied unless we are leading on, unless the development of a great country like this advances; and I helieve further, that we have only to ask, in any reasonable way, the mother country to receive at the hands of the great statesmen who guide her destinies, that recognition of the growing power of the Dominion of Canala to which we are entitled. It is one of the glories of the British constitution, it is one of the things that distinguishes it from all other systems of government-the power of expansion, the power from time to time to meet the growing wants, whether those of the growing democracy on the native soil, or the developments, in other ways, of the dependencies which belong to the empire of (ireat Britain ; and I feel satisfied that when attention is drawn to this subject, when the close intercourse and intimate trade relations which exist letween Canadr and the United States are recognized, the reasonable proposition that we should be at liberty to have our oun representative at Washington, will not be denied to us. I do not understand the leader of the Honse to dis. sent altogether from that view. The Minister of Finance rather farourel the appointment of a commercial agent. But that does not meet the point I desire to present, while at the same time 1 do not mean to say that that is not important. I have long recognized the unfortunate position the commercial people of this country lalour under in having no agent to report to us the special wants of the country, wants which we possibly would be able to fill. But we have other interests, interests which are more or less embroiling us with the people on the other side of the line : greater, far greater than the interests-except in a commercial point of view, -that the mother comutry has with the people of the United States. I am not wedded to any former words of my own or pimed down to any particular course or to any particular policy, hut I want to know, consistent with our position as a dependency of the British (iovermment, how can we have that representation in international matters except in the way that I suggest: My hon. friend who has just spoken has pointer out that we could not appoint an agent there. As we are not an independent power our agent would not be received at Washington except under the authority of Her Majesty's Minister. Well, surely my proposition is more reasonable than that Her Majesty should delegate a British Minister to represent England, and a Camadian Minister to represent specially Canadian interests, the one independent of the other. It does appear to me that the reasonable way of carrying out this proposal is that we should ask that we should have the liberty of appointing a gentleman responsible to the Foreign Office at home, a gentleman who would be under the control of the British Minister at Washington, but a gentleman who would be authorized to report to our Government. If that could be arrangel, and it is a subject of arrangement, the difficulty which my hon. friend the Minister of Justice seems to find would at once disappear. Granted now that no atfache of the British Government could report except on the authority of the British Minister, granted that everything he knows and acquires he is bound to hold under the seal of secrecy, of course that leaves matters as they are to-day. But if this proposition which I venture to present to the House is acceded to, a way and a means must be found by which the Minister will permit, not in a hostile spirit, but will permit communications between the Governor General here, who is the head of our Executive, and the representative we send to Washington. Now, I do not know where this may lead, but I have the greatest confidence that it will not lead in any way which will be injurious to the interest which binds us now so happily to the mother land. I have the greatest confidence that the recognition of our great 1.ight and power will be all in favour of union, and all in favour of the permanency of existing arrangements, but it is impossible for me to doubt that the great interest of this country has with the people of the United States ought not to be permitted to receive direct representation at Washington. I forlear, Sir, to go into any controversial matter which has been raised in the course of this discussion. I am not going to take up any of the illustrations and point them as tending to one conclusion or the other. I desire that this should not assume a party aspect or be treated as a party question. It seems to me it is a question which is common to the iaterests under which for onse at least we may sink our differences on party questions, and join together. Therefore it is that I aine glad it has on the whole been so temperately and fairly discussed. With regard to the motion for aljourment, I would ask my hon. friend the learler of the Opposition not to press the Honse to aditision against the opinion of the Government in that respect. I do not at all fear that the matter will not he raised again, and I think it would be perhaps best for the interests we all have at heart if the Government were permitted a fitting opportunity to reconsider, or to come down with some detinite proposition, if they have a definite proposition to make. At present, I do not quite understand I must confess, the riews that they entertain. If I had to vote on this question, as proposing it, I should certainly do so, and if I have to vote against the adjournment in the belief that the aljournment would shelve the question I would vote against the adjourmment; but I do not quite understand that the adjournment of this debate will shelve this question for the session. It will go on Public liills and Orders and would be reached on Wednesday week as I understand it. With that expression of opinion, in which of course my hon. friend on the opposite side is as well competent to deal as I am, I think on the whole that the Government not having given this matter full consideration, the House should understand exactly what alternative they propose and then we would be in a position to say that we either accept the alternative proposition of the Government or adopt the one which I have ventured to suggest. I can only say in conclusion, that the only means I can see of our having a representative is in the manner suggested by my resolution. At the same time, the members of the Government are much more familiar with the actual practical working of Government matters than I can pretend to be, and I shall listei with very great attention and care to any proposal or counter proposal that may be made. But I certainly would not be willing to accept as adequate by any means a proposition that would substitute a mere consular agent for the wider and larger sonpe which I think our agent should hold at Washington.
Mr. LAURIER. The hou. gentleman has more confidence as a rule in the Government than I have and in the hope that deliberation will produce a change for the letter in their ideas as expressed to-day ; we will agree to accept the adjourmment.
Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

CANADA AND GREAT BRITAIN.

On the Order being called for the motion of Mr. Fauvel, with reference to commerce between Canada and Great Britain ;
Mr. LAURIER. I would ask the Minister of Justice to allow this motion to stand.

Mr. McCakthy.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I have no objection as regards the absence of the hon. gentleman whose name it appears in: but I would like the hon. gentleman to consider, whether the motion could he moved or not? It seems to me to be the same Ifuestion that was disposed of the other night.
Mr. LAURIER. That may be, hut I ask this favour especially because Mr. Fauvel on one or two occasions was ready to proceed and could not. There is some force in what the hon. gentleman says. The hon. member is absent, however, and I would not like that any step be taken in his alsence.
sir John thompson. Very well, we will allow it to stand.

COCKBURN ISLANI-LOCATION TICKETS.

Mr. LINTER movel for:

Copy of location ticket granted to John Alexander McLellan, of Cockburn Island, for lot 15 in the jth concession, Cockburn Island. Also, copy of all affidavits or declarations, letters and other papers from any person or persons to the department, or any officer of the depart ment, in auy way relating to said lot or the cancellation of the said ticket. Also, cony of any order made for the cancellation of said ticket.
He said: Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. Minister of the Interior that I bronght the suljectmatter of this motion to his attention last session, and I now hring it hefore the House in the shape of a motion for the purpose of getting the information which he then refused to give. If the facts in my possession are correct, the department has acted in a most extraordinary manner in refusing to give Mr. McLellan the information which he has songht, not only in the House, but by letters to the department. Mr. McLellan was the locatee on lot lis in the 5th concession of Cockhum Island. He hat received his location ticket, and that location ticket was cancelled by the department without, so far as he has been able to learn, any reason whatever. Mr. McLellan applied to Mr. Ross, who is the agent of the department on Cockburn Island, and he was told lyy Mr. Ross that his location had been cancelled and that his right to the property had been taken away from him. Mr. Ross refused to give any information as to why the location ticket had been cancelled; he simply told Mr. McLellan that declarations had been filed with the Department of the Interior, and upon these declarations this land, to which he claimed he had a legal right, had been taken away. The agent at Cock burn Island refused to give him copies of the aftidavits, refused to give him the name of the person or persons who made them, refused to give him the grounds upon which the department had based its judgment that he should be deprived of his land, refused to give him any information about the matter at all. During the last session of Parliament I asked the Minister the reasons for the cancellation of this location ticket, and he said that the matter was a private and confidential one and could not be made public. Now, Sir, it is astound ing that in this country and in this age a man who has properly acquired the right to a parcel of land, and who is to all intents and purposes the owner of that land, subject only to the performance of the settlement duties, should be deprived of his land and his rights in it, and that the Government of the country should refuse to tell him for what reason he has been deprived of his property. Now, I present this motion to the House for the purpose of seeing once more if it is not possible to extort from the Minister the reason why this land has been taken away from the settler. As we all know, (ockbum Island was opened for settlement, and it was the right of any individual to go there and locate land for settlement. This man located his land, and received a location ticket from the proper authority; he was as much entitled to that land as any gentleman in this House is entitled to his land, until he made default in the performance of his settlement cluties. He says that he lill not make default, but that he was informed by the agent on the island that the land was taken away from him, and that the fiovernment had deciled that he should not get the patent for it ; and it was taken away and given to other people. Now, I ask the Minister to lay on the Table all atfidavits presented to the department on which the repartment hasacted in cancelling this location ticket. It is incredible that a man should be deprived of the property to which he is justly entitled without being informed of the reasons, the pretensions or the claims which were made against him as to the ownership of the lami, and that he shomhi not lee allowed an opportunity of presenting retsons why his rights should not lie taken away from him. Fet this man says, and I lelieve his statement, that he has been deprived of his rights, that he is ignorant of what evilence was produced before the department, and that he had no opportunity of controverting any statements made against him to the department ; and if his statement is true, it is an arbitrary and tyramical act, disgraceful to the department.

It being six oclock, the Speaker left the (hair.

After Recess.

Mr. DEWDNEI. Before you left the Chair at sis oclock, Mr. Speaker, I wis about making a few remarks on the motion of the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister). I should not hive made any remark had it not been for a few words which fell from the hon. member indicating that he had asked for papers last year and that they had leeen refused. My recollection was rlifferent from that, and since recess I have endeavoured to find out the true facts of the case. Looking at Hansarrl, I find that the hola. gentleman last session asked a question somewhat similar to what appears to-day in his motion, and I replied to the question, but no papers were asked for. If, up to the time the hon. gentleman made his motion this afternoon, there was any objection to giving this information I am not aware of it. I will add tor the information of the hon. gentleman what I had given me with regard to this matter which occurred before I took charge of the depirtment :
"Lot 15, con. 5 , Cockburn Island, was sold to Mr. John Alexander McLellan on the 12th of December, 1887. Evidence was furnished the department by Agent Ross showing that this lot was taken up for the purpose of stripping it of its timber. The conditions of sale of the lot were not fulfilled, and the sale was accordingly cancelled on the 3rd of July, 1888. The lot is still unsold and is covered, as it was when sold to McLellsn, by the timber license of Hitchcock & Foster."
That is the position I believe of this lot, about which the hon. gentleman requested information. With reference to the subseruent motion with regard to another lot, lot 16, in the 4th concession, Cockburn Island, which appears to have been sold to Thomas Smith aml by him assigned to Peter McLellan, upon evidence being furnished that he was taking the timber off the lot covered by a timber license to another party, the sale was cancelled. That is all the iufromation I have on the subject, and there is no reason why these papers should not be laid on the Table.

Mr. LISTER, Sofar as the statement of the hon. gentleman is concerned as to what took place last year. I tind, on referring to Hansarol, that he correctly stated the position of the matter then. All that I dial last session was to put a question upon the paper. I asked:
"Was John Alexander McLellan entitled to lot 15 in 5th concession of Cockburn Island under location ticket, either granted or assigned to him? Has the ticket been cancelled? If so, when, and for what reason? Has any person. since such cancellation, acquired any right or interest in the lot from the Government? If so, the name and address of such person."
That question was asked in June, 1891, and the answer was as follows :-
" Lot 15, concession 5 , Cockburn Island, was sold to John Alexander Mclellan. The sale of this lot was cancelled on the 3rd of July, 1883, under section th of the Indian Act, for non-fulfilment of the conditions of sale. No return has as yet been made to the department by the local agent of the resale of this lut.'
I stated a moment ago that when aldressing the House this afternoon, I was under the impression that the Minister had stated that the papers were confidential and could not he produced. I tind that that was not his answer, and I was led astray by a portion of a letter which I receivel concerning this matter in which it is stated :

"I hare applied to Mr. Ross and the Indian Department for information and the only answer I can get is that certain affidarits were filed"which caused the cancellation. I cannot learn the contents of the affidavits or who made them, the department taking the ground, a very peculiar, one it seems to me, that these affidavita are confidential."

In speaking this afternoon, I had in my mind the letter in my possession. I have just a few words to and. The Minister says there can be no objection to now prolucing all the papers and affidavits and every docmment under which the department acted in cancelling these sales. So far, so well. I am aware that the present Minister of the Interior is not to blame, if there is any blame attaching to any person, as the transiction occurred before he took office. This sale appears to have been cancelled on the 3rd of Jaly, 1888. Since that time up to the present moment-for the last letter I have upon this snbject is dated only a few days ago-the legal advisers of Mr. McLellan have been unable to ascertain from the department or their agent on Cockburn Island the causes which led the Government to cancel these location tickets. They were informed from outside quarters that the evidence produced lefore the department, which induced the department to act, was certain statutory declarations made by parties whose names they could not find out. I do not know whether this information is correct or not, but will know when the papers are on the Table. It is somewhat extraordinary, however, that this man should have acquired a right, whatever it might be under that location ticket, to purchase land upon certain terms, and should have had that right cancelled without any notice being given them, and without submitting to them the evilence upon which the department acted, or without calling upon them to show cause why their ticket should not be cancelled. That seems to me a very extraordinary proceeding. It seems to me the denial of a trial to which the humblest citizen of the country is entitled. The Minister of the Interior tells us that the right to cut the timber upon these lots has been sold to Messrs. Hitcheock & Foster, of the city of Chicago. They are I believe men who take out cedar posts which they manufacture into paving material and with which they pare the streets of the United States. My information is that they were at the lottom of the whole transaction, through their agent, Mr. Davis, who lives on the Island. They wanted the timber on these two lots, at all events on one lot, and my information is on the two, and their agent on the Island manipulated the matter, as I am credibly informed, through the Government agent so as to have these licenses cancelled, and the timber upon the lands was at once soll by the department to Hitchcock & Foster, of Chicago. And I am told that the affidarits put into the department were put in at the instance of Davis and forwarded by the local agent to the department. I will take the liberty of reading a letter I have on this subject. and if the facts stated in it are at all true, there has been a very grievons wrong done these men :
"T was the owner under a location ticket which had been transferred to me of lot 16 , 4th concession, Cockburn Island, and my brother Jobn Alexander McLellan, was the locatee of lot 15 in 5th concession. These are Indian lands and are under the management of Mr. B. W. Ross, the Indian agent on Cockburn Island. The location rights of myself and my brother were cancelled, and I cannot nnderstand the reason why. My own land was cancelled within six months from the time the location ticket was issued. I have applied to Mr. Ross and to the Indian Department for information, and the only answer I can get is that certain affidavits were filed which caused the cancellation. I cannot learn the contents of these affidavits, or who made them, the department taking the ground, a very peculiar one it seems to me, that these affidavits are confidential. It is strange that a man's rights can be taken away from him without his being heard, and without his knowing anything of the reasons why. It happens that Hitchcock & Foster, a Chicago firm which deals in telegraph poles, cedar posts, ties, dc., were instrumental in procuring the cancellation. They have been operating on the Island for some time and have a depot there."
There is thestatement madeby this man as to the circumstances connected with the cancellation of these licenses, and he has never been informed why his license was taken away from him ; he has never had an opportunity of showing that these statements were true. I think in all fairness the department owes it to these men to give them an opportunity of showing that the statements made in these affidavits are not true, if such is the case, and if their lands have been improperly taken from them and their license has been improperly cancelled, then I am sure the hon. gentleman who presides over the department will not be unwilling to see that justice is done to these men. If as citizens of this country, they have acquired rights, as they claim they had, it is their privilege and their certain right, before their property is taken from them, to have an opportunity of showing why it should not be taken. That is among the rights accorded to every citizen, and this right should not be elenied in the Department of the Interior. In bringing this matter before the attention of the Minister, I have done what thesepeople who feel aggrieved have asked me to do, and I ask from the Minister, for them, that this matter shall be again opened up and properly investigated by the department; for it does seem to ne that these unfortunate men have suffered for the purpose of helping on other people who were desirous of getting what they had received from the department. I am not blaming the department except in this that I think it was the duty of the department to have notified these people that application was made to cancel their license, and to have given them an opportunity of presenting their claims to the denartment, and to show why the license should not be cancellet.
Mr. DEWDNEY. So far as I have information it appears that Mr. McLellan and Mr. Smith, who sulserfuently sold one of the lots to McLellan, purchased those lots, subject to the license which Hitchoock & Foster had at that time, and that McLellan and his agents were cutting timber on land for which Hitchcock & Foster hall a license; and for that reason I umlerstool the license was cancelled.

Mr. LISTER. These men were not given any opportunity of having their side of the case hearil.

Mr. DEWDNEY. I shall take an opportunity of looking into the matter, and will bring down these papers at the earliest moment.

Mr. LAURIER. I would call the attention of the Minister to the fact that, from the statement he has just made, it is obvious these men have been very harshly treated. If it was reported to the department that they were cutting timber where they had no right, that is no reason why their location ticket should be cancelled and why all their own rights should be forfeited. It may have been a case of trespass, but because they were trespassing, and invading property that was not their own, that is no reason why their own property should be contiscated. It seemis to me from the facts, as stated, that there can be no possible reason why these men should be treated in that manner. They took their location in 1887, and about two years afteruards their location ticket was cancelled, and they were deprived of all the rights they had acquired inder those tickets; not only that, but they were so dealt with without any notice to them. If the agent makes a report, I understand that the department may feel justified in acting upon that report, but it is a very harsh course for the Governnent to take to cancel the location ticket of these men without allowing them an opportunity to speak for themselves, and to show cause why they should not be treated in this manner.

ACCOMMODATION OF GOVERNMENT RAIL. WAYS.

Mr. McMULLEN moved for:

Keturn showing the amount of additional property purchased on or adjacent to Government railways for increased accommodation or other purposes; the quantity purchased or paid for with in the period from the 1st of July, 1891 , to the let of April, 1892 ; the party from whom purchased ; the price paid; the purpose for which the property is used or is to be used.

Mr. HAGGART. The first part of the return is not very clear, because that would mean all the purchases made since the commencement on the Intercolonial Railway, the Cape Breton Railway and the different branches, and the Grand Trunk Railway. Does the hon. gentleman mean to contine it only to purchases made between 1891 and 1892 ?

Mr. McMULLEN. My object is to get a return of the amount of property purchased from the 1st July, 1891, to the lst April, 1892, not to refer to any property anterior to that date.

POSTMASTER OF MCINTYRE.

Mr. LANDERKIN moved for:

Return giving all papers, letters, petitions, applications, and every other document relating to the dismissal of the postmaster of McIntyre, and the appointment of his successor.
He said: In moving for this return I may state that I am informed that the postmaster of Mc Intyre was appointed some 17 years ago, and since that tinie he has never kept the office, but it was kept by a young man who was deformed and who was disqualified for performing ordinary labour. I understand that he performed the duties of the office in a mauner very acceptable to the people there: Lately, I understand, the postmaster has been dismissed, and the post office has been taken away from the charge of this young man, in order to give it to a supporter of the Government, and without any charge being made against the postmaster, as I am informed, although I have no personal knowledge of the matter. I am informed by letter that the postmaster never occupied the office, that the office has been kept in the same place ever since it was established, and by this same family. So far as I can learn no charge has been made of any serious character against the postmaster, but the office was transferred from this young man who is deformed, in order, as I said before, to give it to a Government supporter.

Motion agreed to.

POSTMASTER OF EUGENIA.

Mr. LANDERKIN moved for:

Return giving all papers, letters, petitions, applications and every other document relating to the dismissal of the postmaster of Eugenia and the appointment of his successor.
He said: Mr. Purdy has been the postmaster at this place for about 30 years, and, as I unilerstand, has performed the duties of the oftice in a very acceptable manner. Lately, the office has been kept by a Mr. Hogg, and I understand that there is no objection to the management of the office by Mr. Hogg. A short time ago, I am informed that Mr. Purdy was dismissed, and that the office has been given to another person whose name I do not know just now, but who is a supporter of the Government. I understand that the party appointed has not yet taken charge, and that the post office is still under the charge of Mr. Purdy or Mr. Hogy, his deputy. I, therefore, move for this return.

YAMASKA RIVER DAMAGES.

Mr. LAURIER moved for :

Copies of report of any enqniry held under the authority of the Department of Public Works with a view to estimate the losses inflicted on proprietors of the Commane of Yampaliz, by the efection of a dam in the Yamaska River.

He said : I would call the attention of the present Minister of Public Works, as 1 did call the attention of the late Minister of Public Works, two or three sessions ago, to the great damages which have been caused to the proprietors on the river Yamaska by the erection of a dam. The Minister of Public Works then promised me that he would enquire into the matter, as to any damages which might have occurred and to what extent. I do not know whether anything has been doue since, but I have been given to understand that the promise was made of an immediate enquiry. In fact, I was shown a telegram from an engineer of the Public Works Department just lefore the late election to the effect that an investigation would tre made at an early date. I would like to learn if any enquiry has been made.

Mr. OUIMET. I have enguired from the department as to whether anything has been done in connection with this matter, and I am told that no such enquiry has ever been held. I am not aware myself, nor can I find out from any of my oticers, that any such promise was made as that to which the hon. gentleman refers.

PONTLAC COUNTY RAILWAY IEBT.

Mr. MURRAY moved for :
Copies of all correspondence, memorials, and documents exchanged between the Government, or any member thereof and any persons companies or corporations as to the propriety or advisability of relieving or recouping the Country of Pontiac of its railway indebtedness.
He said: Before I had the honour of representing the County of Pontiac, I understood that applications of that nature were made to the Government, and in faet I was one of a deputation which last session interviewed the late Premier in reference to this particular matter. I have also written to the present Minister of Railways on the subject, and I have also sent a copy of my letter to the present Premier. It may be considered an extraordinary thing for me to ask the Government to come to the relief of the County of Pontiac, but I think the position of that county is very exceptional. A large deputation waited on the late Premier last session asking to be recouped for bonuses which had been voted in the Province of Ontario, and while, for my part, I was prepared to concede all justice to the counties whose cases were similar to that of Pontiac, I think those counties obtained their railways and participated in all the alvantages. No doubt those railways were intended to increase the prosperity of the districts and create commercial centres, and the increase of the growth of such places in that way benefited individuals and enabled them to make money. They represented very wealthy agricultural counties as a rule, and they paid large sums and did not feel the burden. But I am sorry to say the condition of Pontiac is quite different. The people voted in $1881 $ 100,000$ for the Pontiac and Pacific Junction Railway, a company that has not been able to carry out the original intentions as regards the construction of the road. For some reason or other the people were sorry immediately after they had voted the money that they had done so, and endeavoured to prevent the warden signing the debentures. He resigned rather than sign them and they were signed by his successor.

The guestion as to the legality of the delentures arose, and the county went into litigation with the bondholders and carried the case from court to court until it finally reached the Privy Council. The conseruence is, as the House will readily understand, that the county is not only liable for the original amount, but also for all the law costs and interest that has accrued since; in fact the whole debt amounts to $81 i 5,000$. The question might naturally be asked, why should the County of Pontiac ask relief from the (Government? We contend that Pontiac is a colonization county, that this is a colonization railway and interprovincial and international in its character, that such railways have received liberal aid from the Government of Canada. Take the Northern Railway that extends from Toronto to North Bay. it received $\$ 12,000$ per mile for 110 miles, or $\$ 1,300,000$ by way of subsidies. I do not believe that the municipalities through which the road passed were asked to contribute one dollar. This road is going northward, and Pontiac is one of the most western portions of the Province of Quebec, and it can fairly be considered as a colonizing railway. Moreover, it is intemled to intersect with the Canadian Pacific Railway at Pembroke. So, considering the large sulsidies given. as in the case of the Northern Railway, and consilering that Pembroke has been relieved of its indeltedness of $\$ 75,(000)$, which was given to the old Canada Central Railway, and no doubt the town was relieved from that indebteduess for just reasons, the request of the County of Pontiac should be granted. Then take the County of Ottawa. It granted $\$ 200,000$ to the North Shore Railway; but the people escaped payment of their indebtedness through some techicality, or at all events they did not pay it. The Dominion Government have authorizel the treasury to pay to the Province of Quebec $\$ 12,000$ a mile to that railway from Montreal to Oitawa. Considering all these circumstances, and that Pontiac is so near to these places that have been relieved, and considering the history of bonuses given to railways since Confederation, consiciering further that municipalities which borrowed under the old municipal doan fund both in Ontario and Quebec were able to make a favourable settlement of all such bonuses, and that non-borrowing nunicipalities were conipensated in proportion, this concession should be granted to the County of Pontiac. I am sorry to say that Pontiac did not participate in any arrangement uuder this Act to which I have referred, and did not receive any compensation in lieu of noney advanced under the municipal Act. Then I wish to point out the present condition of Pontiac so far as this debt affects the prosperity of the people of the county. During the last ten years the population has not increased in that county. That it is altogether due to this cause or to other causes combined, I am not prepared to say, but this burden of delt had had a great deal to do with crippling the growth of the county. In 1881 the population was 19,989; in 1891 it has increased 229 , not including the new settlement at the head of Lake Temiscamingue of 1,966 souls. In Ottawa County in 1881 the population was 49,432; in 1891 it had increased 16,000. Right across the river from Pontiac there is the County of Renfrew, with a population of 38,166 in 1881, and in 1891 it showed an increase of $\mathbf{8 , 8 1 1}$. If all the Dominion of Canada had increased in proportion the census would show a much more happy state of things. The Nipissing district had only a population of 1,959 in 1881, but last year the population was 13,000 . The population of Ottawa County was of course largely increased. Why should not the population of Pontiac have grown in like proportion as compared with the adjacent counties? The county las fairly good agricultural advantages and many advantages equally possessed by adjacent counties, and there is no reason why the population should not have grown except that this burden of debt which not only prevents people coming in but drives people away. Settlers are leaving the county, not to go to the Canadian North-West, but in too many cases to the United States. I know that from ny own personal knowledge, and they state as a reason that there is no eucouragement to live in a county so long as this large dèt is hanging over the heads of the people. Parliament is voting large sums of noney for inmigration purposes, and yet we are driving the people out of the County of Pontiac, where they possess many advantages, and surely it is not the policy of the Dominion Government that this state of affairs should continue to exist. I have conceived it to be my duty to lring this matter before the House. True, I was elected as an opponent of the present Government, but I have sufficient faith in the Government to believe they will do an act of simple justice to the county. I do not hesitate to ask for the rights of the people, and I have some hope that the Government will see the desirability, in the general interests of the country, to do justice to Pontiac. If that railway were once completed, matters would not be in such a serious condition, although the people then would not derive all the advantages they expected, as it was to be a continuation of the North Shore Railway and to be extended to the mouth of the Deep River, whereas it is now contemplated to carry it 20 miles east of that to Pembroke. If it should be completed to Pembroke it would shorten the distance from Ottawa to that point by 12 miles as compared with the present route by the Canadian Pacific Railway. That is one reason anong others why the Government should, I think, come to the relief of the county, and release it from the payment of this indebtedness. Besides, if that road were completed as proposed, the fine water power at Allumette and other rapids, which is almost equal to the water power at the Chaudiere, could be utilized. Hon. gentlemen opposite talk of the National Policy increasing our manufacturing industries, and yet there is a place where 50 factories could spring up at once. If the road was completed to Pembroke, it would be the means of utilizing that water privilege for manufacturing purposes. Now, Sir, speaking of nyself being here as an opponent of the Governneent, in 1878 of course the people were led to believe that great things would follow if they would adopt the National Policy. I do not wish to enter into that question now, but I will say that if $I$ am here to-day as an opponent of the Government it is because the National Policy has done nothing for the people of my county, and there is not in that county any direct evidence of any good coming from it, because we have no manufactories there at all: The largest incorporated village we have in the county has a population of only some seven hundred odd souls, and although the County of Pontiac is 80 near the capital of the country, yet the people are isolated, and they have no proper home markets in which to sell their produce. They are in an unfortunate position, and I do trust that this question will receive fair and due consideration at the hands of the Government not only in the interest of the county alone, bnt in the general interests of the Dominion, lecause I contend that when one county is in a depressed condition it reflects on the whole Dominion. I do not wish to occupy the attention of the House at any great length, but I do express the earnest hope that the Government will look at this matter in a business-like way as I believe they will, and that they will withont delay make some provision by which the people of Pontiac will be relievel from that great iucubus of a railway deht.

Mr. HAGiGiART. Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. gentleman I have to say there are no petitions, memorials or documents in possession of the department asking that the County of Pontiac be relieved fromi its indebterlness on account of what has been given to the Pontiac Railway Company, except the petition which I to-day received from the hon. gentlenian himself. The hon. gentleman complained of the action the Govermment have taken in this matter, but as this railway is not an undertaking connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway, us it is not one of those great undertakings for the purpose of connecting the centres of commerce in the country. I can say that there is no railway system in the country which has receicel in proportion a more generous support from the fovernment than has the Pontiac Railway. They received from the lominion Government a subsidy of $\$ 3,2010$ a mile, and from, the Provincial Government a subsidy of $\mathbf{S 6 , 0 0 0}$ a mile. Ithink the object of the road is to complete it io the town of Pembroke. There is a subsidy yet unearned for 24 miles, which the Government has promised to assist to the extent of $\$ 3,200$ a mile, and for that portion of the road there is yet to be obtained from the Provincial Government a subsidy of $\mathrm{E} 6,(000)$ per mile. The hon. gentleman states that the com $\begin{gathered}\text { did not receive the benefit from the rail- }\end{gathered}$ way which they expected to receive. I presume they made their own bargain with the railway company, and under that hargain they were obliged to pay, because the company, I suppose, have performed the conditions of it. As I understand, the arrangement made with the railway company was that they were to build 20 miles of railway within the County of Pontiac, and upon doing that they were to receive $\$ 100,000$. The hon. gentleman states that the County of Ottawa was relieved of its indebtedness by some error in the grant, and that the County of Pontiac wished to be relieved in a similar manner but were not successful. He states that this section of the country received no benefit from the National Policy, that the people were being driven away in great numbers from the county, and that a similar state of affairs does not occur in the County of Renfrew on the opposite side of the river. The fact of the matter is, that the $\$ 100,000$ voted by the County of Pontiac for the purpose of assisting this railway could have no effect on emigration there, because the people of the county hare not paid one cent towards the railway which they had promised to assist to the extent of $\$ 100,000$. The hon. gentleman says that the counties on the other side of the Ottawa River were relieved from their indebtedness, hut that is true only to a certain extent. They were relieved because they had a mortgage on the Brockville and Ottawa Railway Company, and one of the conditions of the mortgage was that the railway company was to repay them the amount. The railway company had an arrangement with the Provincial Government by which they were to receive a certain amount of land, and by relieving the Ontario (iovernment from their obligations to pay that amount to them, they were relieved partially from the amount of their indebtedness. Besides, under the arrangement these counties were entitled to a certain amount of the mubicipal loan fund indebtedness. They were deprived of the whole amount to which they were entitled from the Provincial Government on account of indebted. ness to the Government, because of advances to the railway. While other municipalities receivel their share of that money, the Counties of Lanark and Renfrew received none. In fact they paid the full amount of indebtedness to the Government, either by the claim they had against the Brockrille ant! Ottawa Railway, or by their not receiving their share of the mianicipal loan fund indebtedness. If we were to relieve the honi. gentleman's county, or to pay the amount of $8175,(100)$ towards this railway, the effect would be that every municipality throughout the Dominion of Canada, which has contributed any thing to wards hailding roads, would le in as gool a position as Pontiac County to ask this Government to relieve them of the amounts they advanced towards railuays. It would be a dangerous precedent for this (iovernment to set, ingranting any sum of money for the purpose of relieving the County of Pontiac of the indeltedness they entered into in order to construct that railroad. The Dominion Government have done all they could in furthering the enterprise which they considered a lenefit in opening up that section of the country. They have contributed the usual sum of money towards the portion of the road that is built, and they offer a further sum of $\$ 3,200$ per mile to the remaining portion of the line when it is completed. I say that the only documents, petitions or anything else which the department have in their possession is the simple petition which was presented by the hon. gentleman to myself, which I shall have no objection to bring down at any time.

Mr. MURRAY. Hou does the hon. Minister justify the relief given to the town of Pembroke?

Mr. HAGGART, I understood that the portion of the road built through the town of Pembroke was part of the Canada Central, and was in the interest of the Dominion generally, haring been built for the purpose of making connection between this section of the country and the city of Montreal, and with the main artery of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that the town of Pembroke had contributedacertain sum of money towards that object ; and that as the Government of the day has assumed the responsibility of assisting largely in the construction of that road, the town ought to be relieved. On these grounds the Government of the day felt perfectly justified in taking that course, and I believe that the leader of the Opposition at that time, Mr. Blake, telegraphed to the hon. gentleman who was running in the constituency at the time, that he thought the town of Pembroke should be relieved of the indebtedness.

Mr. DEVILIN. I am only too happy to add a few words to what has already been so well and so ably said by my hon. friend from Pontiac. I know very well that the reply which has just been given by the hou. Minister of Railways and Canals pretty much settles the question. The reason why I take some interest in this matter is that the road passes through a portion of the county which I represent - some 24 or 2.5 miles, I believe. Unlike the County of Pontiac, the County of Ottawa did uot think proper to vote a bonus in favour of this road, and we have all the benefits of the railway, which are certainly considerable, without being obliged to pay towards its construction; and we can appreciate those adrantages, for the road is unguestionally one of the most important in the Province of Quebec. Now, the farmers of the County of Pontiac have every reason to view with considerable apprehension the tax which is about to be levied on them on account of the payment of this bonus. If I understool the hon. Minister correctly, he sain that they had not yet paid one cent. That is true, but the execution is now in the hands of the sheriff and may be issued at any moment. I do not think it is so much assistance to the Pontiac and Pacific Junction Railway Company that the hon. member for Pontiac is asking, as relief to the county which has voted this bonus. The hon. Minister finds fault with the County of Pontiac for asting to be relieved of this bonus of $$ 1(1),(000$; but I venture to say that if the County of Lanark had had to pay for the construction of the Tay Canal, the hon. gentleman would not offer an objection if it were proposed that the Government should relieve the county from the payment of the $$ 400,000$ or $$ 500,-$ 00 which that canal cost. He found no fault whatever with the Government of the day when they thought proper to expend half a million dollars on that work, which is of far less value or importance to the country generally than the Pontiac and Pacific Junction Railway. Not a word did he szy against it; but if I remember rightly he spoke very eloquently on behalf of it. He has had his own reason for doing so, perhaps four or five hundred thousand reasons. However, I think it is quite right for the County of Pontiac to ask to be relieved from the payment of this bonus. Let it be borne in mind that when the people of that county voted the bonus, they were under the impression that they would eventually be released from this severe obligation. It is true, the County of Ottawa voted $$ 200,000$ in favour of the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway, as was pointed out, but the warden of the county at that time did not think proper to sign the bonds, and though I believe he was sued, the county contested the suit and won it; so that the County of Ottawa has all the alvantages of the road and has been relieved of the bonus by the action of the warden. It was not so with Pontiac, and I think a great deal of consideration should be shown to this demand. The hon. member pointed out, what is perfectly true, that the County of Pontiac has not prospered as a county adjoining the capital should prosper.

Bear in mind that this road is not contined simply to the County of Pontiac. The hon. Minister says that it is not a great inter-provincial road. When completed it will be an inter-provincial road. It will start from the Province of Ontario, cross the Ottawa, pass through the County of Pontiac and also through the County of Ottawa, and connect again at Ottawa city with the Province of Ontario. It will be a great freight carrying roall, and will be of important assistance to the Canadian Pacific Railway ; it will be especially of assistance to the Counties of Pontiac and Ottawa, and as such will be a benefit to a very important portion of the country. Now, Mr. Speaker, when I say that the County of Pontiac is not exactly as prosperous as it might be, I do not wish to say that this is due solely to the fact that the farmers are in dread of the tax that will be levied upon them. Still, that fact exists, and it is well known that many a man is not anxious to-day to take up farm lanii in that comnty lecause of this impending tax. The olligation has been disputed by the county, anil the guestion has gone through court after court, has been carried to the Privy Council, and has been decided against the county. This is unfortunate. If the hon. Minister has not memorials or petitions-and I believe he has not, the only person who sent him a memorial being I believe the bon. member for Pontiac sitting in the House to day-he knows well that deputations have come repeatedly from the County of Pontiac and pressed their claim upon the covemment and also brought it under the notice of the country. Sir, I am glay to le able to second this motion, and I trust that the hon. Minister of Railuays and his colleagues in the Government will yet give this question more serious consideration than they have given it this evening.

Mr. PERRY. This appears to me to be rather a hard case against the settlers in the County of Pontiac. I understand that that company who have built a portion of this road through a part of the County of Ottawa and through the County of Pontiac have already been granted an extension of time and they are now applying for a further extension of time without giving any guarantee whatever that even at the end of five years they will have the road built. Now, we must bear in mind that only a very sinall portion of the people of Pontiac have the benefit of this road, and that if it is not completed as contemplated two-thirds of the people of that county will have uo benefit whatever in return for the amount of money which they roted and which I suppose is to be sollected from them if we are fo julge from the speech of the hon. Minister of Railways to-night. I contend that this is a very hard case. If this $\$ 175,000$ is to be collected from the people of Pontiac, it will be equal to 89 a head on every man, woman and child in that county. Now, if the Governnent mean to encourage immigration, why do they not build that portion of the road? Why not come to the relief of the County of Pontiac, andnotonly that, but grant a furthersubsidy sufficient to ensure the completion of theroad through the county, and in that way encourage immigration? It will be better for the Government to take a portion of the $\$ 300,000$ which they had mis-spent in humbugging and bringing immigrants here and making a present to Pontiac, and keep the population of the county. I would like to know what benefit the people of Canada has from the Tay Canal, on which $\$ 200,000$ or $\$ 300,000$ have been spent? What lenefit do the people of the County of Renfrew derive from the building of that canal? That is only another instance of the wasteful policy of the Government. They will squander away money in this way, but when a member rises who has a case which deserves to be heard and to be done justice to, they refuse to listen. There was no guarantee in the first instance, and the consequence is that the road has not been completed. There may he gentlemen connected with the railway who are in high positions, and who, I suppose, will have influence enough to get a Bill through giving further extension, but, in the meantime, the poor people of Pontiac, who are not now receiving any lenefit out of the $\leqslant 1 ; \overline{3},(00)$ which they are called on to pay lefore the road is completed, and without any guarantee that it will be built, will have to suffer. Is the sheriff to be sent like a wolf on to their lauds to seize everything? These people have a right to be indemnified, and they have a right to a guarantee that the road will be finished hefore leing called upon to pay the last instalment of

Mr. MULOCK. I understood the Minister of Railways to say that there had never been a petition asking for relief from this railway subsidy by the County of Pontiac. Well, this is not the first time we have heard of the question. Year after year, we have heard allusions to the proposed scheme for giving relief to this county; and at last we learn that there has never been a petition to the Government asking for relief, and we learn now that the decision of the Government is that there shall be no relief. To that extent, at all events, the discussion has not been profitless. It has given us the (iovernment's final decision in the matter, and the people of Pontiac will know that they have nothing further to expect. I wish, however, to correct the Ninister of Railways in one point. He saill that the Pontiac Railway had been treated as generously as any other railway in Canada. I would remind him of two exceptions. One was the Lake St. John Railway. I think you will find that the aid which that railway has received, Dominion, provincial and municipal, far exceeds that which this railway has received. The railway in question, the Pontiac Railuay, is admitted to be for the general interests of Canada, and is destined to connect ultimately with the Canadian Pacitic Railway. It is not only interprovincial, connecting the two provinces, connecting the capital of Canada with the back country, but it is also destined to connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway. It has not received, if the figures are correct, equal to what was received by the Lake St. John Railway. There is another railway, the Northern Pacific Junction, extending from Gravenharst to North Bay, which has received in cash from the Dominion treasury, $$ 12,000$ per mile for 110 miles. It cannot be argued that the location of the Northern Junction was for Dominion purposes, because it has been located wholly in the interests of a locality, and not at all in the interests of through traffic. . It is so far easterly, so far out of the line of the shortest a vailable route to the North-West, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company hasdeterminedat the earliest possible moment to build an independent line from the provizicial system up through the Algoma District to monnect with the Canadian Pacific Railway, so thai in the case of the Northern Pacific Junction the Govizament gave a bonus of 812,000 cash per mile for a railway to serve locai purposes only. I am not aware whether the country served by the Northern Pacific is less able to bear the cost of railway construction than the territory represented by the hon. member for Pontiac, but it does seem to me unfortunate that there is so fixed principle in granting this aid, and that it seems to depend upon the whim of the Giovernment or the degree of pressure that may be brought to bear upon them from time to time. However, I understand the Government have given this question a quietus. They have given their answer to the people of Pontiac, and I suppose the answer is that the people of Pontiac can pay this debt or suffer under it as best they may. Would it not be better, if the Government desired to avoid abuse, to have a fixed policy under which aid would be given enterprises of this character, regardless of political influence? Instead of that, there being no fixed policy except one of buying aid and patronage and political support, these questions are continually coming up. However, the Government have accepted the situation, and have told the people of Pontiac to expect nothing. At the same time, the hon. member for Pontiac has certainly done his duty. He has brought to light a curious state of affairs. For years the people have been told that great pressure was brought to bear on the Administration to grant relief, and now we learn that the whole thing was a sham, that the people have been misled and played with, and now we are told there never has been a solicitation offered up on their behalf in this matter.

Mr. BOWFLL. The members who have represented Ontario for some years past will be rather surprisel at the remark which fell from the hon. member for North York, that $$ 12,000$ per mile was granted in aid of the Northern Pacific Junction Railway for local purposes only.

Mr. MULOCK. That is not the statement I used.

Mr. BOWELL. I took down the hon. gentleman's words. The statement he made was that the Government gave $$ 12,(000)$ per mile to this road for local purposes only.
Mr. MULOCK. I said nothing of the kind.
Mr. BOWELL. I do not propose to handy words with the hou.gentleman and to throw the lie auross the House.
Mr. MULOCK. It is incorrect. I stated that the grant was made for the purpose ostensibly of connecting the Ontario system with the Pacific Railway with the purpose of connecting the old Ontario system with the transcontinental railway, and that the Government did not take steps to see that the road was properly located, and that they allowed the connection between Gravenhurst and North Bay to be made at the eastern end of Lake Nipissing so that the railway was, located out of its proper position for connecting with the NorthWest, and that it practically became a local road for local purposes only.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman has made another speech explanatory of what he said before, and the remarks which he made could give no other idea to the Holse or to the country than that the Guvernment had granted this boums to the road for local purposes only.
Mr. MCLOCK. That is the effect of it.
Mr. BOWELL. It is true that afterwards the hon. gentleman said the road was not located in the proper position, and he says now that the Pacific Railway, by which I suppose he means the Canadian Pacific Railway, has decided that that is not the correct route, and that they have surveyed another. Any one who knows the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the management of the road from Callendar to North Bay, knows that that is not the reason why the Canalian Pacitic Railway has taken the steps which it has of late. It is lecause the road has fallen under the control and management of the cirand Trunk and camot be utilizel by the Camadian Pacific Railway as originally intended.

Mr. MCLOCK. That is not the reason.
Mr. BOWI ELL. I am speaking, I think, from some knowledge that I have in reference to the construction of that road, having had something to do with the granting of $$ 12,(10 x)$ a mile originally: That grant was matie for the sole purpose of enabling the mercantile commmity, and those interested in trade, particularly in Ontario, to have a western connection with the Canadian Pacitic Railway. Before the construction of that line of commmication with the North-West, they hat to send their goonls either mia the lakes to Port Arthur, or by coming eastward to Carleton Place and then taking the roall to the west. The road had been locateliand surveyed, and had leen agitated for years before any aid was given by the Canalian Covernnent to construct it, and the aid was given for the sole purpose of giving to the Province of Ontario as direct communication as possible with the great tramscontinental road. Whether the location was correct or not, I am not going to say, but the Act giving the grant stated that the road was not to be in the hands of one company or the other, that it was to le a neutral road; but, subsequently, the Grand Trunk Railway obtained possession of the Northern Railway, which had immediate conuection with the Northern Pacific Junction Railway, and has been managed and controllel by them since. Hence the advantages which would otherwise have accrued to the Canadian Pacitic Railway have not resulted. Whether that has been detrimental to the interests of Ontario or not, I will not now discuss, but it was not for local purposes, but for provincial purposes, that the large grant of $$ 12,000$ a mile was made in aid of this road. The people of Ontario complained very reasonably that they were not derivingany advantages from the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway except by the circuitous route they had to take in order to reach it; and, though a large portion of the road ran through Ontario, it was only opening up the northern portion of the province, while the front, the settled portion, the part of the province where the great population was and where commerce came from, had no advantages whatever. My colleagues from, the other provinces, recognizing the just demand of Ontario for that immediate connection, readily consented to give large aid towards the building of that road. In reference to the St. John Railway, there is no analogy at all between the boussing of that roand from Quebec to Lake St.

John and the railway in the County of Pontiac or any other railway with which I have any acquaintance. The part of the country around Chicoutimi and aronnd Lake St. Jobn, which is a very tine country, was inaccessible to any one. Farmers might be there for centuries, but there was no means of getting their produce to market except by bringing it down by the siguenay or other waters comected with the St. Lawrence. I coufess I looked with suspicion. or rather 1 looked not farourably, upon this project until I ascertained from personal observation that the large section of country there was of great value, capable of sustaining thousands of people who would otherwise leave the Province of Quebee and yo to the United States or our own North. West: and I believe that any one from the Province of Ontario, no matter how prejudiced he might be. if he visited that region, would come to the conclusion which the Govermment came to, that it was a wise policy to grant large aid to that road. The policy which has been ably adrocated ly the member for Pontiac (Mr. Murray), opens up a very wide question. a question much wider than is involved in the sion.(ONO to which the hon. gentleman hats referred. He gave the House no reason, to my mini, certainly no reason that could not be advanced by any county in the Province of Ontario, and I suppose by any county in the Province of Quebec, for being relieved of the amount they had contributed to railway aid. I know that in my own county the city of Belleville is indebted for $\$ 150,000$ given to railways. and one or two townships in my riding are indebtel for a large amonnt of money, which they voted for the construction of railways: When this question was before the country and when it was urged upon the Govermment that they should relieve these municipalities, I told my constituents that it should not le done, and that, if it were to le done, it would cost from ten to twelve millions of dollars. The hon. gentleman spoke of the success of the County of Ottawa in relieving itself from the payment of the amount promised. It think the city of Ottawa did precisely the same thing to the extent of $\mathrm{s}(\mathrm{O}),(000)$ in connection with the Camadian Pacific Railway. Had they had as pliant a Lecal Legislature in the Province of Quebec as they had in the Procince of Ontario, probably they might not have been relieved. I know that the city of Belleville contested the question with the Grand Junction Railway to the extent of S00,000; it was in court, they would not fultil the condition upou which the grant was made, but the Legislature of the Province of Ontario stepped in and took it out of the court, legalized the by-law and compelled us to pay it. Now, if there is any municipality in the Dominion placed in a similar position, they would have a better claim, for if they had been allowed to remain in the courts of the province, I have not the slightest doubt that they would have been relieved of the payment; but the Legislature said: You obtained the railway for which you originally voteri a bonus, true, they may not have complied with all the conditions of the by-law granting the aid, but as you obtained that for which you gave the vote, you ought to pay it, and they compelleel us to pay it. If my hon. friend's county was in that position he would have some cause of complaint, but as intimated by the Minister of Railways, his county tried to do that which the County of Ottawa did, and which I believe the city of Ottawa diik, which got relieved from payment through some tecknicality, to use his own worls. Vinder the circumstanc, cousidering the amount of money involved in the adoption of the principle, which the hon gentlemam has laid down. I do not think the country is prepared to atopt it. It may sound viory well, and it may be a capital. I was going to say, plank, to use a familiar word, upon which to go to the people, and tell them: that the hon. gentleman tried to get this amount, and that he lat the support of one of the influential members of the Opposition. I fancy if the hon. gentleman from North York (Mr. Mulock) ever came to ceupy the responsible position of adviser to the ('rown as to the morle in which the revenues of this country should be expendet, he would be the last to give his consent to the relief of the Comenty of Pontiac of this $\mathbf{s} 150,000$, unless he incladed all the other mumicipalities in the Dominion, especially in the Province of Ontario. If he did, even with his large majority, and in the political complexion of the Comity of North York, I question whether he would ever come lack to this Honse again.

Mr. MULOCK. I would have a hanl task to undo all your mischief, I admit.
Mr. Bowell. I am much inclined to think that he would not attempt to molo such mischief. But it is convenient for politicians of a certain class to advonate measures, not directly, but by innuendo and insimation, so that they may be used in an approaching election. Having said this moch in reference to the Northern Pacitic Railway, and upon the general principle of relieving the mumicipalities, I will close by saying that I think neither the comutry nor this House are prepared to atopt the principle advocated by the member for Pontiac.
Mr. MURRAI. I must sy that $I$ an very much surprised at the speech delivered by the Minister of Railways. I did expect that he would at least consider the matter further and would not at once decide adversely to the claims I advanced on behalf of my constituents. I thought, at least, he would confer with his colleagues lefore taking this vers important step and peremptorly refusing our claim. Perbips he may have done so, I do not know. At all events, we are told now, in plain words, that Pontiac has nothing to expect from the present Gorernment in the way of getting relief from its unfortumate position. Now, the Minister says that during my remarks I stated that the people were dissatistied with the National Policy: I made some reference to the National Policy; I said that some of the promises made in 1878 by the supporters of the National Policy were not realized, and that the people were disappointed.

Mr. HAGGART. What I said was that the hon. gentleman said that they had received no benetit from the National Policy.
Mr. MURRAY. I said they had received no direct benefit from the National Policy. Now, it is all very well for the hon. gentleman to say that it would be establishing a precedent. We know there are exceptions to all rules. I do not get up from my seat in this House to speak for the purpose of making a plank to be used at some future time for election purposes; I get up to speak in the interest of my constituents in order to ask for them what I believe to be their rights. Referring to the history of bonuses and the Government relief of mumicipalities. Pembroke has been mentioner. What position did the liovermment take with reganl to that honus: Why, Sir, 1 , as a resident of the town of Pembmoke, put my name to a memorial asking the Government to give the mumicipality relief for the reasons that. we set forth. kecause after that moner was granted to the Canada Central Railway, it subsequently lecame a link in the Coundiam Pacinc Ratway. What action did the Ciovernment takes If it was right to recoup the town, why was it not done at once? There was no action taken on that memorial for three years, mutil the election, when I was myself a candidate against the foremment camdidate. The liovernment then passelian Order in Council promising relief to Pembroke subject to the ratification of Parliament. The impression was that it was not done simply as a matter of right, but through fear of losing the constitueney. The iovernment may say to the prople of Pontiac: Coumade a mistake, you should have leen wiser, you should have protected yourselves, you shonld mot have voted this money until you got what was promised and the agreement was cirried out. They may say to the people of Pontiac: We have constructed the Canadim Pacitic Rallway to the North-West, we have siven Sl2. (nno a mile to that road to be buit bit sudhury westwand and if you do not like the combition of things it is your own fault. gou hate brought it on youseltes you can leate lontiad and go to the Sirth-IVest or to the western States. That is what the cowerment are virtualiy telling the people of Pontiac in the reply they gate to my motion this evening. That is the effect it will priduce. Let the present tocernment take the consequence. I have done my plain duty ami the omas rests upon them. It will take but a very short time to concince the fovernment that motwithstanding all that has leen sain, they shomb make an exception in the case of Pontiac: I do not care whether there is any precelent or not. I sisy the condition and position of Pontiae are sueh that it has a claim upon the fatourable constideration of the (invernment, and that the doverament ought to come to the relief of the people.
Motion agreed to.

CUSTOMS COLLECTOR AT ST. THOMAS.

Mr. CASEY moved for :

Correspondence concerving the appoiniment of Mr. W. H. Ingram asCollector of Customs at St. Thomas, Oatario. He said : The ottice of collector of customs at st. Thomas had remained vacant for at very long time until a comparatively late date, since the bye-lection in the Riding of East Elgin. During all this time there was naturally a great deal of cancassing and discussion amongst the leaders of the Conserrative party in that city and riding as to who should receive the honour and emolument of this position. There were many who had claims. There was a gentleman who had been an active and intluential supporter of the Conservative party for over 40 years, who had been frequently mayor of the town of St. Thomas, when it was a town, and who had sat for a term in this Parliament. There were several other gentlemen whose claims were somewhat similar. There were a couple of ex-mayors of the city and the present mayor of the city, whose names were canrassed freely by their party frienls and those who did not belong to that party. It is admitted on all hands that one or other of those gentlemen, whose names I need not give to the House, had a right to the position. The appointment of any of them would have satistied the general feeling that some one of the long tried servants of the party shoull obtain this valuable post. Some of us had our favourites. But after all this long waiting, after all the presentation of claims on the part of those gentlemen, the brother of the member of the riding has been appointed to thisplace. The hon. gentleman( Mr. Ingram) hasbeen successful in regard to patronage, for I have been informed that not only has this brother been appointed to the customs at Sit. Thomas, but that since his appointment, another brother has leeen appointel to some position in the North-West-che position I do not at present know. There was a time in the history of constitutional govermment in this comtry, when it was not thoughe the proper thing to appoint members of ones own immediate fanily to public positions of emolument. There was a time when I had nccasion to interview a leading member of the late Atministration, of which I was a supporter, in respect to the appointment of a gentleman in London. I urged the gentleman's claims on the Minister, and I was not contradicted as to the man's fitness to the position and as to his claims on the fiovernment : hut the Minister said: " Do you not know, my dear Casey, that he is a second cousin of mine, and I dare not recommend him to an y thing?" We do not hear that given as an excuse now for not appointing a man to ottice, as it has become the recognized thing that Ministers and members should appoint their brothers, sons, and sons-inlaw and their connections in all degrees so far as the extent of the family and the number of offices vacant will permit. There are several families in this House, or lately represented in the Cabinet, whose names are proverbial for the extent to which this family provision has taken place. But it was hardly expected in Elgin that the new member for the East Riding would follow the bad example set him by previous politicians who have gone in the old groove. The member for East Elgin owes his place in politics and his power of appointing men to positions of emolunent, not so much to friemels of the party to which he belongs as to mem. hers of the other party who supported him principally on account of personal sympathy. He owes his introluction to politics chiefly to his connection with the labouring classes. A large number of labourers of st. Thomas voted forhim because he had been a lelouring man himself. His friends on the railway supported him because he was their comrade and chum, and they wished to see him elected no natter what his politics were. They supported him not on party grounds, but owing to his connection with the labour movement and from private friendships, and they did not expect his position would be made the source of money or advantage to himself and family. I doubt whether they will take those appointments in good part. The brother whom he has placed in this position in the customs was at one time a resident of St. Thomas and employed in the railway service, but for some time, I helieve, he had joined the exodus and started business for himself in Buffialo. It was only a short time before the general election that he returned home, and began to take an active part in politics.

I do not know whether he had gone so far as to declare his intention of becoming an American citizen or not, for many Canarlians hesitate a long time before they do so. All the old party workers were passed over for this comparatively new aspirant, whose only qualification was his relationship to the member for the riding. But on further enquiry it appears he had another claim. The hon. gentleman told us in the House about it the other night. He pointed out that during the revision this gentleman took an active part. You, Mr. Speaker, have called my attention to the fact that I am referring to a previous deloate. I am merely calling attention to a state of facts applicable to the present case, and I do not desire to debate the question. I think under these circomstances I am entitled to puote from the remarks of a previous debate.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman may quote by way of illustration, but he must not refer to the matter of discussion or sulject of debate.

Mr. CASEY. I merely wish to quote by way of illustrating the manner in which the voters list was revised, as it affects his brother now appointed to a certain office. The hon. gentleman said:
"The revising officer, when he received the proof-sheets from the Printing Bureau, called ny brother who represented me and called also the representative of my opponent, and they both went deliberately over the list. My brother, in my interests ard that of the party I represented, took care that none of our friends were omitted, as it was his right and his duty to do. But the gentleman on the other side, not having attended the revision, as my brother had, from the commencement to the end, hut having, on the other band, sent a certain representative to one court and another to another, thus rendering themselves unable to say truthfully that such a name should be left off and such another one should be put on, were at a disadrantage in this respect."

Mr. SPEAKER. How does the hon. gentleman propose to read from a previous delate during this session by way of illustration? It is entirely contrary to the rule.

Mr. CASEX. Then I will state, as is well known, that the hon. gentleman's brother elid atteml with the judge during the whole of the revision of the list, that he was called in hy the julge to assist in comparing the proof sheets from the Printing Burean with the revised lists that were sent down by the judge to the Irinting Bureau. The hon. gentleman has stated, and it is well hinuwn, that on that occasion his brother olstained changes on the list and in the proofs as they came back from the Printing Bureau. The hon. member stated that his brother took care to see that if the printer by any accident or misprint had omitted a name that should have been on, or put on a name that should he off, that that was corrected on the final revised proof by the judge, and he has pointed out to us on different occasions that as his brother had been present at all courts of revision, and as the other side was not represented, his brother had the advantage of securing these corrections on the revised proofs, and he availed himself of the advantage to secure such corrections. The responsibility for this course of conduct rests largely with the revising officer, but I doubt very much whether he was within his rights in asking any one to sit with him to compare the printer's proof with the copy. He certainly was not within his powers when he made any changes whatever from the copy which he sent down to the Queen's Printer, because in so doing he virtually opened up the whole case again, and was holding a new revision court. But Sir, the fact to which I wish to call particular attention is that the hon. gentleman's brother took advantage of this laxity on the part of the revising otficer, and did secure changes according to the hon. gentleman's own statement as I could understand it.
Mr. SPEAKFR. I hope my hon. friend sees the relerancy of this to the motion, because I do not.
Mr. CASEI. I am pointing out, Mr. Speaker, the claim this gentleman had for appointment to the office, and the adrantages which he had over the other competitors. This is one of his claims that he had heen able to assist in gerrymandering the voters' list for the city of St. Thomas and the adjoining townships. Still further it appears that this gentleman was employed in delicate work outside of the county, for we have a letter published in the newspapers written by him in the town of St. Mary's to a friend in St. Thomas ; it says :
"Dear Sir,- Your telegram to hand this afternoon and am glad to hear from you. Things were quite dull until to-night and mayhav to-morrow it mas be all 0 . K. Hold yourself in readiness at any time. I will write you when to come if 0 . K., if not I will write you 'no good.' Mr. R. Bir............is not here yet ; keep patient."
I see a part of the letter is omitted from the copy I have before me as compared with the copy I first saw. This gentleman stated in the letter as I saw it at first, that the parties who had the influence had not yet arriverl at the scene of action, and what the "influence" was, must le left to politicians to guess. We know what sort of influence is alluded to. especially when coupled with the name of the organizer of the party as alout to be present upon the scene. Now, Sir, this active attention to the voters' lists, this rather peculiar re-revising of the voters' lists, and this connection with the distribution of "influence" in other ridings as well as East Elgin, seem to have been the reasons, in addition to the question of relationship, why this gentleman was elected to this office. If I am mistaken in that supposition probably the papers for which I move will correct ne.
Mr. INGRAM. Mr. Speaker, before that motion is put I would like to say a few words. The hon. gentleman from West Elgin (Mr. Casey) has taken this oceasion to make a personal attack upon my career and conduct since I became the representative of the riding of East Elgin. The uotion is a very small one indeed, and I think that a very few words from the mover would have obtained the papers for him to examine. Now, in respect to my success in Elgin County, which the hon. gentleman has referred to, I desire to say that when I first received the nomination for the Local Legislature in West Elgin, the county which the hon. gentleman has the pleasure of representing in this Hulse, I accepted the nomination for that constituency from the Liberal-Conservative Association of West Elgin, and I did not receive it as a labour candidate, though as a labouring man I succeeded in redeeming that county which was lost to the Conservative party for 17 years. Representing the people for four years in the Local Legislature of this province, during that time I learned from the tactics of the leader of the Government of Ontario, who appointed his son as sheriff of Toronto, and I succeeded so well in learning from the tactics of that gentleman, that I recognized the services of my brother to the Conservative party in Elgin County, and in consequence of that 1 appointed him Collector of Customs.

Mr. MULOCK. His Excellency had nothing to do with it at all?
Mr. INGRAM. I will tell you about the exodus after a while. I shonld have sain I recommended my brother for appointment. With reference to the remarks of the member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) in regard to my brother in the North-West Territories, 1 think the hon. gentleman must have been reading the St. Thomas Journal, a paper that has never shown very much respect or consideration for me, and which has never missed an opportunity of alusing me from every standpoint; but notwithstanding all its abuse I always managed to come out on the top of the heap just the same. I desire to correct the hon. memher for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) in hisstatement about my brother moving away from this country to Buffalo. My brother did not leave st. Thomas for gool, but on the contrary he has been a resident of st. Thomas for 20 years in so far as keeping his furniture and his home there goes. It is true he went to Buffalo and leased a place there for a short time. But he did not move away his furniture and therefore the hon. gentleman is incorrect in that respect. Again, with reference to the statement of the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey) that I had secured an appointment for my lrother in the North-West I have again to deny that. My brother is not looking for an appointment, and would not accept one if it were offered to him, so that in that statement the hon. gentleman is also wrong.
Mr. CASEY. I was misinformed then.
Mr. INGRAM. The hon. gentleman says that my brother did a great deal of work in connection with the voters' list. That is quite true, but I can remind my hon. friend from West Elgin (Mr. Casey) that when he consulted the judge and after the judge had explained to him the manner in which the list was revised, that hon." gentleman told the judge that he was perfectly satisfied with the manner in which the revision had been conducted. I have also in my possession, and can produce it to the House in a very few moments if necessary, a document signed by five of the leading Reformers of the County of Elgin,testifying that the judgeas revising ofticer of the County of Elgin did his duty and his duty only as laid down in the law. Now, so far as the statement of the member for West Elgin goes, that I clained in this House the other evening that my brother had added names to the list after the court of revision had sat, or taken names away from the list after the court of revision, I have also to state that the hon. gentleman is quite wrong there. If I did not make myself plain on that occasion, I desire to make myself plain now, and I distinctly wish to state to the hon. gentleman and to the House, that not one name was added to that list nor not one name was taken away from that list; after the court of revision had completed its work. With respect to the letter from South Perth which the hon. gentleman has referred to, I wish him to understand that there is a protest now pending against the hon. gentleman who represents the county (Mr. Pridham), and when that trial does take place, hon. gentlemen will see where the influence came from. They will see the reason, and they will find out to their own discredit why that letter was written, and if hon. gentlemen opposite will haveno cause to complain after the results of the proceedingsin that court, Iamquitesure that the Conservative party in this country will have no canse to complain either. That letter will be shown up, and will be shown up in grand style, and when it is, it will not be to the advantage of hon. gentlemen opposite. That is all I wish to say in respect to the remarks of the hon. gentleman. I think it is pretty near time now that he and a number of others in the County of Elgin who have fared so very badly within the last five or six years, should quit using the tactics of casting reflections on a humble nember like myself, which they have been doing more or less ever since I have had anything to do with politics in the County of Elgin. I think my couluct and career have been as creditable to me and to the party I belong to as the conduct and career of the hon. gentleman have bee:i to him or his party, and it ill becomes him to cast reflections on me in the manner he has done. I have fought the hon. gentleman and his party in Elgin County for five or six years, and so long as I live and breathe I am prepared to fight them still ; and any thing that I hare done in doing that has been honourable and above board. I am prepared to continue that course in the future as 1 have done it in the past, and I have no doubt that the majority of the electors of East Elgin will give me their support.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman is exceedingly mistaken if he thinks that I am insinuating anything against his character. I am criticizing his public conduct as a member of Parliament and a dispenser of patronage. So far from attacking his character, I have always spoken very highly of him as an imlividual, and have defended his character when it has been attacked, and I expect the same courtesy from him. He evidently intended to sneer at me in some respect by some remarks hemade ; but that isnot the course which I have followed towards him, and I do not intend to follow any different course. The hon. member said he had redeemed West Elgin, which had been held by Liberals for seventeen years before. That is all a mistake. The hon. member never sat for the West Riding of Elgin which had been represented by Liberals for seventeen years up to that time; but he sat for a new riding which was composed of what had been the West Riding of Elgin with the city of st. Thomas adder on. In the old riding of West Elgin there was a majority of over 400 against him. His majority was made up altogether in the city of St. Thomas, and principally from among the very worthy class of men to whom I have referred, who allowed their personal feelings to overbalance any party leanings which they may have had; a great many have none at all. The hon. gentleman says that I assured Judge Hughes after the lists were revised that I was satisfied with the way in which they had been revised. I never saw or spoke to Judge Hughes on the subject, after the matters with which I found fault had occurred, after the final revision of the proofs, and after, as I understood the hon. member to inform us, irregularitics had taken place. I never saw him after that, and expressed no opinion to him whatever. I do not renember before that time having expressed my complete satisfaction with the manner in which he conducted the revision. I may have expressed a modified satisfaction with the manner in which he had managed it, but I never did express complete satisfaction with the way in which the list was revised. I am not complaining now of the revision of the list, but of changes which took place after it had been revised, and when nothing was to le done but to see that the proofs which were returned from the Printing Bureau corresponded with the copy sent down. I saw the hon. gentleman's own statement to that effect made in a previous debate; and now he says that no name was added or removed. I am unable, on account of your ruling, Mr. Speaker, to confront him with his statement and to show how inconsistent it is with what he says now; but there may be another opportunity of doing so.
Mr. INGRAM. If I am not trespassing, I would like to real this letter.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman cannot speak again, except by the courtesy of the House, and even then I think it should not be allowed. I think the House ought to sustain me in maintaining the rules.
Mr. McKAY. In respect to the appointment of Mr. Ingram as collector of customs at St. Thomas, I think the menher for the county has a perfect right to recommend to the patronage of the Government any person he chooses. In reference to the subject before the House, I would like to real the following letter :-
" Dfar Sir.-That the lists upon which the recent election for East Elgin was held were adverse to Liberals goes without saying. and some feel inclined to lay all the blame therefor upon Judge Hughes, the revising officer. The difficulty rather arises from the fact that under the Franchise Act a revision becomes an expensive matter to either party, and that Reformers are without the means which seem to be accessible to our Conservative friends. Electors must also, while the Franchise Act remains in force, learu that only their individual attention to the matter can at all ensure their names appearing upon the lists. We, who attended the revising officer's court, were treated with courtesy and fairuess, and we think it only fair to Judge Iugher to say that such is so.
"W. E. STEVENS
"N MADONALD,
"JUNUSBRADLEY,
"F. HUNT
"R. MILLER."
This letter expresses the opinion of leading Reformers of East Elgin in regard to the conduct of the revising officer in revising the voters' list of that county, and their opinion will le endorsed by all the menbers ou this side of the House, and I have no doubt on the other sile as well.

PRINCE EDWARI ISLAND RAILWAY.

Mr. PERRY moved for :

Return showing the names of all employés on the Prince Edward Igland Railway who have been dismissed gince the 1st day of July, 1887, and the reason for such dismissal.
He said: In making this motion I desire to say that a number of employes have been dismissed from the Prince Edward Island Railway during the last few' years, and it is a matter of great importance to some of them to find out the reason why they were dismissed. In fact, the country has a right to know whether these men neglected their duty or not. We see it is stated in the papers that great alt erations are to be made in the management of the railway, that several employes are to be dismissed and several stations closer, and I want to know the reason why. I am not aware that the people of Prince Edward Island have too much aucommorlation. They have too little. If the Government think it is right to keep the country from having the benefit of the railway which they built themselves and paid for, if they think it is wise and sound policy to prevent the people having the benefit they ought to have from their road, I think it is a step in the wrong direction. It is commencing to economize at the wrong end. I think they might find some other place to economize in besides the Island of Prince Edward, and I hope the Minister of Railways will lee magnanimous enough to see that the people of the Island have the accommodation they ought to have. I would like to have some information about these dismissals which are going to take place. If it is because the officials are incompetent and neglectful of their duty it is all right, but if it is on the score of econony the (iovermment should be careful that efficiency is not satcrificed to economy. I hear that the trackmaster, who has been in the service 17 or 18 years, is to le dismissed. Is he to be superammuated? I believe not. He is young enough to work and willing to work, and I would like to know why he is going to be dismissel. I ams sure one man is not sufficient to look after the whole road as trackmaster, and if the fovermment are going to neglect the management of the road they had better bear in $n$ ind what happened some years ago, through the mismanagement and penuriousness of the department, when the Govemment had to pay a large amount as compensation for damages.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I would invite the Min. ister of Railways, before this motion is carried, to state to the House, if he can, the number of those who have been dismissed under recent regulations. I understand that, in view of the policy of trying to make looth ends meet, it has been determined to make large reductions in the staff of the Island Railway as well as of the Intercolonial. I do not propose to discuas that question, because I have not the data on which to discuss it properly, but I would like to have sotne information, and the House is entitled to know to what extent this reduction is to be made. In that connection, I would say a word on behalf of one gentleman whose name has been mentioned in the Island pap. crs as about to be dismissed. He is a man of very great railway experience, a very exceptional man in every way, of the very highest character, and I believe the hon. gentleman will find that the chief engineer of railways, who knows him well, will speak of him in the highest possible terms. I refer to trackmaster John McPherson. He has been on the railway as trackmaster over the western section of the roarl, and has had under his charge 70 or 80 miles or more for the last 18 years. Hecame there with a very large railway experience and is an exceedingly prudent, careful man, who has always given the utmost satisfaction to those in whose employ he has been. He is a most economical and conscientious man, and I am sure there has never been an attempt made to retrench on the part of the powers that be of that road, which did not meet, so far as his department is concerned, his concurrence. In addition to that, he has tine advantage of always being a very good Tory, and I suppose will continue so until the end of his days. However, apart from all politics, he is one of those rare men you find in communities who are respected by every one and who bring to the discharge of their duties faithfulness, integrity and a desire to serve the public. Although I an under no compliment to him because he has always done what he could against me, I have yet no complaint to make against him, as he is entitled to his convictions, but, knowing him so intimately, and having had so many opportunities of secing the excellent character of the work he does, I take this opportunity of saying a word on his behalf. I an quite sure the hon. gentleman will find every word I have said lome out by the chief engineer.

Mr. HAGi(ART. I am not prepared at present to state what course the (iovernment intend to take with reference to the reductions, if any, they intend to make in Prince Edward Island. There has been a recommendation by the engineer-inchief which has a tendency towarls economy in the management of that road, and I helieve some potices have been given in that direction, but the Government have not yet decided what course they will pursue in the matter. I shath have the papers brought down.

FIRST READING.

Bill (No. 80) respecting the Manitoba and NorthWestern Railway Company of Canaida.-(Mr. Coatsworth.)

THE INLAND REVENUE ACT.

Mr. CUSTIGAN moved second reading of Bill (No. 71 ) further to amend the Inland Revenue Act.

Mr. LAURIFR. The hon. gentleman has stated that the Bill is to apply the Inland Revenue Act to the North-West Territories, but he has giren no reason whaterer for the changes he proposes.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I thought I explained the powers of the Bill, and stated that it was to extend the Act to the North-West Territories. The explanation I gave before with respect io the provision making the law operative in the North-West Territories is all I can give now. The law as at present, without the amendments I propose, is not applicable to the North-West Territories or to the District of Keewatin. By this amendment the law is made applicable to the North. West Territories, but not to the District of Keewatin. On account of the changes which have taken place, it is necessary that the Inland Revenue Act should be in force in those Territories.

Mr. LAURIER. The Bill which is now introduced by the hon. gentleman is far broader in its scope than the hon. gentleman seems to comprehend. The hon. gentleman simply says that this measure provides for the introduction of the provisions of the Inland Revenue Act in the NorthWest Territories ; in other words, that the restrictions which have hitherto applied to the NorthWest Territories with respect to the manufacture and sale of liquor are to be removed.

Mr. COSTIC:AN. That is not what it means.
Mr. LAURIER. What does it mean?
Mr. COSTIGAN. It applies the Inland Revenue Act to the North-West Territories.

Mr. LAURIER. There is a question as to Whether the restriction as to the sale of liguor has been renewed or not. For my part, I am not prepared to answer the question in the affirmative, for I am not aware of any measure that has removed the prohibition hitherto existing in the North. West Territories with respect to the manufacture of liquor. If the restriction as to the sale of liquor has been removed, it can only have been done according to the Act of last year, by which the same powers now enjoyed by the provinces are also conferred on the Legislature of the North-West Territories. For instance, theLegislature of the NorthWest Territories is empovered to issue licenses for shops, saloons, taverns and other places in order to raise a revenue for territorial and municipal purposes. I am not arare that, when this provision was introduced last year, Parliament ever contemplated removing the prohibition which has existed to the sale of liguor in the North.West Territories. If the legislation of last year has had that effect, Parliament never had such idea until this moment. The time may have come for the removal of the restrictions which have hitherto applied to those T'erritories, but I am not sure the time has arrived. That is a subject to which I invite the attention of the hon. gentleman. If we adopt this Bill we are taking a new depurture as regards the policy hitherto pursued in the North-West Territories, and a very serious departure, and one which deserves more attention at the hands of the House than the hon. gentleman is prepared to give to it.

Mr. Haggart.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman, I think, has not been well served by his recollection of the provisions of the Act of last year. Speaking from memory, I may say there is a distinct provision in the Act that the North-West Assembly may repeal the prohibitory clanses of the North-West Territories Act as contained in the Revised Statutes, and over and above that power is given to them to grant licenses. They have passed an ordinance repealing the provisions of the North-West Territories Act and they have sulbstituted a license system in their stead. So all that has been done.

Mr. LAURIER. I am not aware of the provision of which the hon. Minister speaks. But as to the other provision, it is a general clause found in the British North America Act giving nower to provinces to issue liceuses to shops and saloons for the purpose of levying a revenue, and for no other purpose. This raises the question whether in such a clause the power of prohibition which was implied in its enactments was removed hy such a disposition.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Section 19 of the Act of last session contains this provision :
"Notwithstanding anything in this Act or the said Act contained, the Legislative Assembly may by ordinance, repeal the provisions of section- 26 to 40 , both inclusive."
These are the prohibitory enactments-
"And also in so far as they apply to the Territories comprising the several electoral divisions mentioned in the schedule to this Act. the provisions of 22 to 100 , also both inclusive, of the said Act, together with all amendments thereto, and may re-enact the said, provisions or substitute other provisions in lieu thereof."
Under that provision the Assembly passed the ordinance.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee and reported.

WITNESSES AND EVIDENCE.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved second reading of Bill (No. 69) respecting Witnesses and Evidence. Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time. Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved that the Bill be referred to the Select Joint Committee to which was referred Bill (No. 7) respecting the Criminal Law. Motion agreed to.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I wish to enquire of the Minister, in the first place, where that sample book is which he promised to lay on the Table of the House?

Mr. CARLING. I will lay it on the Table in a few minutes.

Sir RICHAR1) CARTWRIGHT. I want to enquire, in the second place, whether the hon. gentleman has examined into the letter read by my hou. friend from North Brant (Mr. Somerville) and purporting to be written by the Deputy Minister and received by Mr. Casper Hett, and what explanation he has to give to the House in connection with it ?

Mr. CARLING. I have made enquiry and I have a memorandum from the deputy of my department, which, if the House would like, I will read, or lay on the Table.

" Departafent of Agriccletere,

" My Imar Sir, - With the sanction of the Minister of Agriculture I enclose to you, herewith, a copy of a memorandum which I have written in relation to a payment to Mr. Casper Hett, of - Berlin, Ont., for copyright of a German pamphlet, in 188 i. I am moved to do this from reading in the Hansarl of $29 t h$ April, in an official report of your speech, the following words:-
"'If the Government paid for the writing of that pamphlet then the copyright belonged to the Government.'
"The context shows that you were moved to express this supposition on the very positive but equally incorrect allegations which had been previously made in the debate.
"The point is so important that the whole matter in question is rested upon it; and it is, therefore, that I pray you to consider it by the light of the indubitable statements of fact in my memorandum herewith.
$\because$ I have an intimate conviction that no reference of this kind can be made in vain to your sense of justice and honour.
"Believe me, de.,
" Yours truly,

"JOHN LOWE,

"To the Hon.
" Deputy Minister of Agriculture.
"Mr. Mackenzie Bowell, M.P.
" Minister of Militia, &c."
" Memurandem for the honourable the Minister of Agricelture:
" In reference to a letter of mine to Mr. Casper Hett, German publisher, of Berlin, Ont., written on 26 th January, 1887, I have to make to you the following remarks; a copy of which, with your sanction, $I$ communicate to the Hon. Mr. Mackenzie Bowell.
"It is true that I wrote to Mr. Hett the letter read by Mr. Somerville in the House on Friday night, not as insinuated and alleged to enable him to obtain an undue payment not allowed by the audit of the Queen's Printer, but as an act of common honesty, to enable him to obtain a payment for authorship. which was his property, which the department had used, and in accordance with the established practice in such cases. I had no personal nor any reason to favour Mr. Hett. He was to me an utter strynger.
"The facts simply are : that on your ministerial authorization I ordered the printing of a German pamplilet at the office of Mr. Hett, in Berlin, Ont., in the early part of the year 1886.
"We had then no pamphlet which we deemed advisable to publish adapted to the special information of Germans. Mr. Hett volunteered to have one written and secured the services of Mr. J. Y. Shantz for that purpose. This was accepted. Mr. Shantz was well known to the department. He had been largely instrumental in the bringing and settlement of the Mennonites in Ontario. Mr. Hett further offered to obtain for publication in the pamphlet testimonials from the Russian-German Mennonite settlers in Manitoba, even at the cost of Mr. Shantz going personally and specially to that province to obtain that information. "Mr. Hett sent in his bill for printing 50,000 copies of this pamphlet in thefierman language,containing 32 pages, for an amount of 8751.60 ; but this amount, on the audit of the Queen's Printer, on the special tariff of rates of which all pamphlets printed by the department were audited, was cut down to $434.74; that is, for printing charges only.
"Mr. Hett represented that a payment of this amount for his work would land him in actual loss. He told me that the prices charged in the bill he had sent in were only the ordinary commercial rates for printing which were usual in his establistment.
${ }^{6}$ I sam that he had not made any charge for authorship, which was his property, and not that of the department; and I ascertained that he was not aware it was the invariable practice of the department in respect to all pamphlete used by it, for which it had given no consideration, written by persons outside, that authorship be paid for, at a fair price, either in the form of purchase of copyright, or a royalty for the use of it.
I I did not consider that the amount by which his bill had been cut down, in order to bring it within the printing tariff above referred to, would be improper or unfair to pay for the copyright of this pamphlet, with the electrotypes in addition, from which it was printed. In other words, making the cost of the whole work done by Mr. Hett, for authorship containing special and valuable information furnished, printing and presswork, with the electro-plates thrown in, of a pamphlet of 32 pages, about a cent and a Eallia copy; or with the paper added, which cost about three-fifths of a cent, the total cost of this pamphlet, including all the considerations stated, would be a very small fraction over two cents a copy.
"When the account for printing this pamphlet was sent in the usual course to the Auditor General, he wrote a letter under date 2 th April, 1887 , in which he desired to be informed as to the basis on which the value of copyright was ascertained, and in reply in my official letter dated $23 t h$ April, I furnished him with a statement of tho facts. I repeat my adherence to that statement; and respecting which I may point out that the Auditor passed it without further remarks. The determination of all such values must rest on the particular facts in each case. In that of Mr. Hett, I thought at the time, and I think still. that an amount at least equivalent to the difference between his own commercial printing charges and the amount by which his bill had been cut down by the audit of the Queen's Printer, would be fair and just.

- I accordingly made representations in this sense to you. and I was authorized to make a settlement with Mr. Hett on the basis stated.
"I do not think that anything less than this would have been even honest ; and while I feel that it is my first duty to protect the department, in so far as lies in my power from any undue charges, I camnot see that the performance of such duty in any way called on me to take advantage of the ignorance of any one. On the contrary, I amsure my duty was not to do so. And I cannot see why I should not have frankly pointed out, by letter or otherwise, any error which I saw that any one had committed to his diadvantage : nor could I believe any Government would justify any other course. Had I not done so in this case the net practical result would have been that the Dominiun would have been $$ 316.81$ the richer, at the cost of a suppression of truth by an official taking an undue advantage of one with whom the Government had dealings:- that is if the party should not at some date in the then future have discorered the fact of difference between copyright and printing, and have demanded his rights aceordingly.
I subjoin the correspondence with the Auditor General, above referred to.

" Department of Agriculture,

Ottaw a, 29 th April, 1887.
" Sir,-I have to acknowledge your letter of the 27th inst., in which you ask to be told the basis upon which the value of copyright is determined in the cases cited by you. There cannot of course be any fixed standard on which the value of a copyright is determined, but I may state that the considerations for the department have always relation to the extent of the work and the value of the labour, which, on the face, would be necessary for the production, coupled in some cases with considerations of expense which may be incurred in obtaining the information contained in the work.
"The German pamphlet to which you refer, for which copyright was paid to Mr. C, Hett included the transfer to the department of the plates from which the work was printed, and also the cost of obtaining certain information from the Mennonites of Manitoba.
"The same kind of considerations came with respect to the items of copyright (referred to in your letter) to Le Cultigateur, for an English and French edition of "Gaspesia," and to La Liherté for a copyright of the pamphlet intituled "Nord-Ouest," with the exception that, in these cases, there was no transfer of plates to the department.

- I hare no doubt that the values paid by the department in all these cases were just and reasonable.
"I have, de.,
(Sgd.) "JOHN LOWE,
"Acting Deputy Minister of Agriculture.
" To the Auditor General.'
On the letter in answer to the Auditor (ieneral from Mr. Lowe, the Auditor General paid the account.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I think the correspondence is not complete, because we ought to have the correspondence which led up to the making of this contract with Mr. Casper Hett for the writing of this pamphlet. As it stands, the matter is incomplete, and it is difficult to arrive at a proper conclusion. I think the Minister will almit that we are entitled to the correspondence which led to the bargain being made with Mr. Casper Hett.

Mr. CARLING. So far as I am aware at present, the arrangements were marle hy the department for printing the pamphlet.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Were these plates purchased from Mr. Casper Hett ever used afterwards: Was a second edition of the pamphlet printell:

Mr. CARLING. No, I do not think so. At that time we were anxious to get a German panphlet. The Germans in the County of Waterloo joined together and becane security to the Govermment for a loan of $$ 100,000$ some years previous, and Mr. Schantz was the man who was responsible for getting sufficient security to the Government for the $$ 100,000$ to lring out Mennonites. Mr. Schantz resiles in Berlin, Waterloo, and be secured, prepared or assisted in preparing matter:s in this pamphlet, as he had a great deal of experience with the Germans and Mennonites, and these pamphlets were for distribution among them, so that they could send them to their friends in the old country. Many were distributed also among other German settlements and sent to the old courtry for distribution by our agents at Liierpool and on the continent among German people.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I will call the attention of the committee to the fact that the Government suggested this, because it appeared that the Minister is responsible for the action taken by Mr. Lowe in regard to this matter. As I heard the letter read, I think Mr. Lowe said he was instructed by the Minister to write this letter to Mr. Casper Hett.

Mr. CARLING. No, he asked me for my approval of having a German pamphlet printed, and on his memo. paper he marked this.'
Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. If I followed the hon. gentleman when he was reading the pamphlet, Mr. Lowe certainly said that the peculiar mode of payment arrived at was approved by the Minister who was anthorized to carry it out.

Mr. CARLING: He says in his report that when the Queen's Printer had produced this lill, he reported to him that it wolld be fair to allow for the manuscript and for the electro-plates, and that it would lee reasonable that amount should be allowed. It has been the practice in the Department of Agriculture, ever since Mr. Lowe has been there and during the time my hon. friend was in the Government. It had then been the rule in the department, and there is nothing unusual in paying for the manuscript and paying for the plates of this German pamphlet.
Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose you have a copy?

Mr. CARLING. I have not one by mie.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I suppose you have a copy that you can get, and I would like to see a copy if you will send for it.
Mr. CARLIN(i. I shall he glat to do so.
Sir RICHARD (EARTWRIGHT. One question is whether this $$ 300$ was a reasonalle allowance for the pamphlet, and we might form some idea in regard to that by seeing the pamphlet itself.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The suggestion made in the letter of Mr. Lowe was that the amount of 3316.86 would le a little high for that pamphet. No doubt Mr. Lowe is correct in that. I understand from the Minister that it was a 32 -page pamphlet, and a 32 -page pamphlet would not cost more than S16 to reset the whole pamphlet.

Mr. CARLING. Does it not cost more for fierman type than for any other?

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Not any more. German type can be set as cheaply as English type, and it would not cost more than $\$ 16$ to do that, and we are allowing \$316.86. It is true that it is supposed that some of this is paid for writing the pamphlet, but it appears that this man did not write it, and it is apparent on the face of the statement that the price paid for the writing of the pamphlet was an outrageous price, and was not intended as a just payment at all, but was intended to make up a payment to this man for work which he did not perform. Any ordinary writer could write a 32 page pamphlet in a day. This man Schantz had heen out to Manitoba and knew the Mennonite settlement. He knew all he had to write ahout perfectly well, and Casper Hett was paid $\mathbf{8} 300$ for this copyright which he was not entitled to at all, because the deputy told him he might assume the copyright to be his. I do not think the explanation of the Minister makes this any letter than it was before. The Auditor fieneral saw that it was an exorbitant amount, and he cut it down, and then the Minister or his deputy came to the relief of Mr. Casper Hett, and paid for what was worth certainly no more than $\$ 30$ to the Government, if it was of any value at all, the amount of $\$ 300$. It appears that has been the practice all through, as I am informed, in the printing of these immigration pamphlets. Formerly it went to such an extent that, as I proved before the House and before the Public Accounts Committee, 14 prices were paid, 14 times more than the Governmeni contractors would have done the work for, and in many cases these outside persons Mr. Carling.
were also paid for the copyright. It is only another way of putting money into the pockets of these people which they did not earn, and I do not see how the Government can justify the action of Mr. Lowe, though now he has turned the responsibility over to the Minister of Agriculture himself. I should like to know if the Minister of Militia has changed his mind since he said the other night that this conduct on the part of a deputy head should be punished. Is he now prepared to say that the Deputy Minister should not be punizhed, or is he prepared to carry out what he said when he condemued the action of the Deputy Minister and said that he should be punished, or, when the Minister assumes the responsibility, is he prepared to say that the Minister should be punished for this action which he has condemned?

Mr. LISTER. It is clear that, if Mr. Casper Hett had received $$ 756$, the sum he charged against the Government, we would never have heard anything about the copyright. Now, it becomes very important to find what was the arrangement made with this Casper Hett as to the printing of this pamphlet, because it is evident that it was an aftertho:ght that Mr. Casper Hett should le paid for the copyright and the electrotype. I suppose, when this was given out, it was well understood that the price would he fixed and audited by the Auditor (ieneral, and it is perfectly clear from the correspondence that nothing was said about payment for the copyright or the electrotype. I would like to know by what anthority the Deputy Minister or the secretary of the department, as he was at that time, undertook to make this arrangement. I think the Minister of Agriculture told us the other night that he knew nothing about the matter, that it was not done ly his authority.

Mr. CARLING. I said it happened six or seven years ago, and I did not remember alout it, but I wonll enquire into it, and report to the House.

Mr. LISTER. It is clear that no arrangement was made with this mim for the purchase of the copyright or the electrotype, and it is also clear that if he hat been paid the siab we would have heard nothing further ajout the copyright; but it is also clear chat the department suggested to him the purchase of the copyright which he did not own, hecause certain proceedings had to be gone through before he could own the copyright, and as a matter of fact the copyright was not of any value at all. The Minister says this was six or seren years ago, and consequently this payment of $$ 300$ was made to this man to cover the original account he put in, which was reduced by the Auditor. So flagrant did this matter appear, so utterly unjustifiable was it to the House when the matter was up before-and I venture to say that the explanation we had to-day is not satisfactory and does not explain the transaction--that the Minister of Militia stoorl up and said :
"I do not know what I might do. Iam very much inclined to think that if the bon. gentleman wrote me a report I might do as the member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) did, I might not have the time, or not think it worth reading. Referring to this letter, which $I$ have not seen before, I fally agree with the remarks made in reference to it. It is an inproper letter for any deputy head to write, and $I$ am satisfied that the Minister of Agriculture and the Government of which he forms a part. will see that the deputies do not write letters of that kind, or if they do that they will reciive what they ought to receive after they are made public. If the Government paid for the writing of that pamphlet, then the copyright belonged to the Government, and I do not hesitate to say that. having been made public-how my hon. friend obtained it I do not know-I think I can safely say to this committee and to the public that steps will be taken to ascertain why a deputy head of a department would write a letter of that kind in order to extract moneys from the coffers of the country which should never have been paid."
Now, there is the statement of the Minister of Militia who heard the letter the other night, and spose upon the sulject. The matter is a small transaction, but I think it is only one of a great many others which, if made public, would show that some of the deputy heads in the departments of the Government are not acting solely and simply in the interest of the Government.

Mr. BOWELL. The remarks of the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville) are, I am sorry to say, of the usual character, and not exactly fair or candid. He has a happy faculty, or an unhappy one, rather, of stating just half the truth and then stopping. I leave the commitiee to judge how far that is fair in dealing with a public officer, or even in dealing with a political opponent. We hear that mode of argument very often on the stump, but here, among members of Parliament, where each one is supposed to know at least something of the sulject on which he speaks, I am inclined to think another course had better be pursued. The hon. gentleman, in referring to this letter of Mr. Hett, quoted only a portion of it, and that portion was in reference to the purchase of the copyright. The hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister) says that Mr. Hett was not the owner of that copyright ; that I do not know. The correspondence, however, shows that he procured the writing of the pamphlet, and if he procured the writing of the pamphlet, and Mr. Schantz gave him the benefit of his brains and intellect, and allowed him to print it and charge for it, I suppose he would he the owner of it. However, that is not the point particularly at issue. The hon. gentle. man for North Brant says this pamphlet could be reset. for $16. Well, probably he may have seen it ; I have not ; if that be true, then it must be an exceedingly small pamphlet, and printed in very large type. I think the hon. gentleman's practical knowlenge would lead him to a different conclusion. If there is but one thousand ems per page in each of the 32 pages, and that could be set up and a profit given to the proprietor, certainly it could not be done for less than 50 cents per thousand-I am using now the technical terms of printers; but I question very much whether a pamphlet of that character, unless it was set up in what the printers term pica. or somewhat larger type, would not contain a greater quantity of ens than would justify the statement made by the hon. gentleman. Now, to my mind, there must have been over two thousand ems per page rather than one thousand. If it was set in smaller type than the type in which Ihaveseen these pamphlets printed, there would be a still greater quantity. The hon. gentleman knows what I mean when I speak of the different sizes of type, and when I speak of the quantity of matter that is contained in an ordinary pamphlet, say, perhaps, the size of the Estimates, or a fittle smaller.
Mr. SOMERVILLE. Supposing there were two thousand in it how much would it be worth each page?

Mr. BOW ELL. That would double your estimate; if there were 32 pages, it would make it $$ 32$ instead of $$ 16$.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Not at all, hecause 30 cents per thousand would be enough for the comprosition.

Mr. BOWFLLL. No, they pay more than that for ordinary newspaper work.

Mr. somerville. Not in Berlin.

Mr. BOWELIL. Perhaps the hon. member thinks Berlin an out of the way part of the world where work is done for nothing. However, I do not know any place in Canadia where they do work of that kind for so small a sum. I know that in an ordinary newspaper office at the present lay, and for some years past, they pay 35 or 40 cents per thousamd, and even as high as $4 \geq$ cents. Then the profit of the publisher must be adrled to that. So much for that point. It must be borne in mind, also. that the Queen's Printer audited this account. I suppose he had sufficient knowledge of the value of the composition, that is, the setting up of the type, to use a printer's phrase, to know what it was worth. Adding the value of the presswork and other work in connection with it, he valued it at orer $S 400$. But that is not particularly what I rose to discuss. I might say, however, to the hon. member for Lambton (Mr. Lister), that the first portion of the remarks that he read of what I said the other night, referred to another subject altogether, and not to this letter. What I said, and what I adhere to at the present moment, was that if this letter had been written to suggest to Mr. Hett the obtaining of money for the copyright, or for the writing of a pamphlet which had previously been paid for by the Government, then he would have been censurable, and so would every one connected with it. It was upon that view of the matter that I made my statement the other uight. As to the propriety of writing the letter at all, I am not prepared at this moment to say that I would even justify that, but the explanation given by Mr. Lowe, I consider, fully exonerates him from any attempt to extract from the coffers-using the words I did the other night-money improperly. He states, in his letter to the Auditor Cieneral, and in his explanatory letter, that they hal paid for the writing of what he terms one English copy of the "Giaspesia," $\$ 90$, and for the French copy, $\$ 90$ also ; they paid for the copyright of a pamphlet entitled " Nord-Ouest,"'and upon that hasis he suggested to Mr. Hett the propriety of charg. ing for the writing, or the copyright of this work, and he justifies that upon the ground that such had been the practice of the department ever since he had had anything to do with it, and that to do other than to pay him for the copyright, or for the writing of the pamphlet in addition to mechanical work, would be doing Mr. Hett an injustice. I am of the opinion that Mr. Lowe's explanation, taking into account the practice which prevailed at the time concerning the payment of copyrights-whether the sum paid was too much or not, I shall give no opinion-justifies him in the course he took. I am not as really a writer as my hon. friend opposite, but I do not think he will find many men who are able to sit down and write a pamphlet of 32 pages in 10 hours, supposing it to contain the amount of matter I have indicated, about 64,000 ems of ordinary type. It requires a good deal of study to enable any person to write a pamphlet which is fit for circulation. It is not like sitting down and dashing off a column of matter for a newspaper upon current subje'ts of the day; he must have been clucated, he must have educated himself in order to obtain the information which was necessary for the production of a pamphlet which any department would be justified in sending forth to the world. It is also a fact that the plates are still in possession of the Government as well as the copyright, ilthough Iam not giving an opinion as to whether they are of any value. But should the work be consitered of sutficient value to be circulated among Germans in (iermany or other parts of the world in order to induce immigrants to come from that country to Canada, it can be made available at any time for that purpose. It is evident the Aulitor General desired an explanation of these payments, and not only in connection with the German painphlet but in commection with the others. That explanation having been given, he came to the conclusion that the work had been properly paid for, and he passed the account without further objection. Why this correspondence was not published at the time by the Auditor General as is the custom now, I do not know, except it he that he confines himself to publishing correspondence between the heads or deputy heads of departments when he does not agree with the conclusions at which they arrive, and he leaves Parliannent to consider as to whether he is correct or the department with which he has had the correspondenee. If that conclusion be correct, I take it for granted that the Auditor (ieneral must have been satistied with that explanation, and consequently passed the account. With respect to the hon. gentleman's remark, that it would not be worth $\$ 10$ or $\$ 1 . \bar{t}$ to write a pamphlet of that kind, I must leave it for him to judge.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Do you think it is worth $$ 300$ ?

Mr. BOWELL. I should like to see the pamphlet first, and to know what information it contains, and further ascertain how much labour was entailed, and how much time was expended to acquire the knowledge necessary, and whether the statement made hy Mr. Hett tos Mr. Lowe that Mr. Schantz went to the North-West in order to olvain the certificates of the Mennonites and (ierman settlers in that country is correct or not. If that be correct, I can easily understand that the writing of the pamphlet would be worth $$ 300$ or $$ 400$. I am very glad, after the long acyuaintance I have had with Mr. Lowe, to acguit him of having written a letter to obtain money for work which harl previously been paid for, and it was because the letter was open to that interpretation I made those remarks. I am not going into the general question referred to by the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville) as to printing in the past. We have discussed that subject over and over again, both in the Public Accounts Committee, during the existence of the present Government, and also very fully during the reign of the hon. gentleman's friends. That has been a prolific source of debate, particularly by those who have any practical knowledge of the work. I believe that in the future the system which had prevailed in regard to these pamphlets and the extent to which they have been circulated will not be curried out to the extent it has been in the past.

Mr. LIsTER, I want to ask the Minister of Agriculture if I understood him correctly to say the other evening that this pamphlet has been prepared or uritten and printed by order of the de. partment?

Mr. CARLING. Ves.

Mr. LISTER. Is it not the rule of the elepartment, where those pamphlets are printed by order of the department, that the copyright belongs to the department without charge?

Mr. CARLING: No. It has been the custom of the department for twenty-one years to pay for copyright.

Mr. LISTER. Fiom information I have receiverl, I understand that where a parnphlet is printed by order of the department, then the copyright belongs to the department. The price paid for the pamphlet covers not only the composition and the printing, but all copynight interest in it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant.) That was the view of the matter stated to the House by the Minister of Militia, who is a practical man. His statement was that if the Government paid for writing the pamphlet, then the copyright belonged to the Government.

Mr. CARLING. He had not been paid for the writing of it, when the work was given to him to do. He was paid for the copyright after the writing was done.

Mr. PatERSON (Brant). The Govermment simply paid for the printing?

Nr. CARLING: $$ 400$ was simply for the printing.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What was pail for the writing?

Mr. CARLING. He was paid $$ 400$ for the printing, and his account was taxed by the Queen's Printer.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How much was he paid for writing the pamphlet?

Mr. BOWELL. The Auditor General's Report shows it. I would infer that, taking the account of Mr. Hett, it includes the whole work in connec. tion with writing, copyright-if he thought of such a thing at the time-and printing the pamphlet. When the account was laid before the Queen's Printer he checked it so far as regards the printing. Then that having been passed, Mr. Lowe said that Mr. Hett was entitled to be paid for the writing or copyright, whichever it may be called, and for the plates.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If we take that view' the Minister was under a misapprehensiou as regards the rule of the department.

Mr. BOWELL. When I made that statement, I was under the impression that the department had paid for it, and then the letter would be highly improper, because it would le exacting money twice.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). So far as the slepartment is concerned, it is not aquestion with the deputy now, but it is a question with the head of the department, because heauthorized the preparation of the pamphlet. I do not quite understand the position of the Minister of Militia to-day in view of his explanation, because it was not on statements made hy the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville), or other members on this side of the House, that the Minister formed his opinion of this natter. He had the letter in his hands, and it was after realing that he came to the conclusion that there was only one inference to be drawn from it, and it was the inference drawn by the hon. member for North Brant, that it was a dishonourable and dishonest transaction which the deputy forced on the department. The conclusion at which the Minister arrived is shown to have been reached under circumstances I have stated, because he said :
"Referring to this letter, which I hare not seen before, I fully agree with the remarks made in reference to it."
It would appear from the letter that there hal been correspondence previous to this, because the writer goes on to say :
"As regards copsyight and the reference to the letter, which I received to-duy, I do not see it is necessary to make an actual registration of copyright, but sou might still assume it to be your property, and we inight'purchaze it from you."
So that there would seem to have leen previous correspondence. I should judge from this that Mr. Hett had been asking: If I am to assume that the copyright is mine it will be necessary for me to register it, will it not? And the reply to him was in effect: You need not actually register it; you can assume it to be yours, that will answer our purpose, we won't want to be assured that you are the anthor of it through registration or anything of that kind. The letter says :
"As respects the conyright, and referring to your letter which I received to-day, I do not gee that it is necessary to make an actual registration of the copyright, but you might still assame it to be your property, and we purchase it from you. You mention also that you would sell us the eleetrotypes of the entire German pamphlet. Would you kindly inform meat what price you ralue these? I ask this question because the amount of your account Was originally $$ 750.60$ while the audit of the Queen's Printer did not allow you more than 3434.74 . making a difference of $$ 316.86$, which is the amount I wish to pay you. Perbaps the electrotypes and the copyright night be included in this amount. $$ 313.86$ would be a little high for the copyright alone of that pamphlet. Please write me by retarn of post, and I will endentour to have the matter settled with you as soon as possible.

(Sgd.) "JOHN LOWE."

I think every one will agree with the Minister of Militia, who reads that letter for himself as he di.l, that that was an improper letter, and that any Deputy Minister who would write it should be dealt with. The rleputy who did write it has been dealt with and his answer to the House has been : I did write it, but the Minister instructed me to do so. The question, then, is with the Minister. Is that the way our departments are managed here, that when accounts are sent in and audited by the proper person, Ministers should instruct their deputies to write back and say to these individuals: "I think you might get nearly double the amount of what is proper to pay you, if you would only follow out some suggestions which I make to you. There is the copyright, we will not say anything about the right of the Government to have it, but if you assume that you are not paid for it, and you need not go to the trouble of registering it so as to make sure that we have something of value. but assi:me it to be yours, and we are desirous of paying you $\$ 316$ more than the proper officer says you are entitled to. It may seem too much for the copyright alone, but cannot you throw in the electro-plates as well, as they will not be of any use to you and perhaps looth together will sound a little better." So it would sound better, because, according to the explanation given by the deputy to the Auditor General, in onesimilar case we have $\$ 90$ paid and in another $\$ 100$ paid, and in the case in question S316 paid. As the deputy himself points out, the only value received from this gentleman more than the others was the matter of the electro-plates. I cannot julge of the value of these myself, but my friend from North Brant (Mr. Somerville), who is familiar with the business, says they are worth about 8 cents a pound, and there might be, perhaps, ten or twelve pounds of them. We can see that the difference between $\mathbf{S} 90$ as paid to the others, assuming it was right to pay them in their case which the Minister of Militia was not sure about, and \$316.86 is a very marked difference indeed. But the letter itself, the fact that the suggestion should come from the Minister that this man should take the course he did, is not, I think, justified even by the deputy when he attempts to do so. The deputy takes the ground that it was his duty, seeing that Mr. Hett had made a mistake, to point out the mistake to him : and he thinks it would have been very wrong if he had not done so. He says:
" IfI had not done so, the net practical result would have been that the Dominion would have been $$ 316.86$ the richer at the cost of the esppression of truth, by an official taking an undue advantage of one with whom the Government had dealings, that is if the party had not at some date in the near future discorered the fact of the difference between copyright and printing and have demanded bis rights accordingly."
If he did not want to take advantage of Mr. Hett why did he not point out this to him before the account was audited by the proper officer, and how did it conte that he simply pointed this out to him after the account had been audited and it was found that it was $16 more than it should be? If the proper officer hed passed the whole account of $700, would the truth have been suppressed then, or would the deputy, on the instructions of the Minister, have suggested to him that there were 316, which he could claim for the copyright and electro-plates? I think not. The whole letter bears upon the face of it this construction: This gentleman wanted to have more money than it was proper for him to receive for the printing of this pamphlet, and the way was very plainly suggested to him, in such a manner that when a gentleman reading as the Minister of Militia did, not by any outside remarks or consideration, but judging the letter of itollf, could only come to the one conclusion, that it was a letter written with a view as he states:
"To write s letter of that kind in order to extract mone from the cofters of the country which should never have been paid."
That is the only construction that could be put upon the letter by the Minister of Militia at that time, speaking with all the knowledge of a Minister and also as one conversant with this kind of work. It is a transaction on which the Minister of Agriculture should give further explanations than we have before us now. He should bring down the correspondence which took place prior to this letter and the correspondence which may have followed it, because it is pointed out by the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville) that we find from the Auditor Genera's Report that this very sum of $316.86 was paid, although it was three times the amount that was ever paid to any one else before, so far as we have any record of it, under the plea of paying him for his copyright.
Mr. SOMERVILLE. I would like to ask the Minister if he will bring down any correspondence in the department leading up to this letter which was written by the Deputy Minister? I think we are entitled to that, and we will be better able to understand the matter if we inse the whole of the correspondence.
Mr. CAPLING. I cannot say what correspondence may have taken place, but if I have any correspondence I will bring it down to the House.

Mr. McMULLEN. Would the Minister leable to say whether there is any minute in the department with regard to the arrangement that was made by this mau with the department? The Minister says it was not by correspondence that the arrangement was made, but would there lhe any memo. in the department setting forth the arrangement before the pamphlet was printed?

Mr. CARLING. The arrangement was that 50,000 German pamphlets were ordered to be printed by Mr. Casper Hett, and after the account was rendered the correspondence spoken of here was brought before me, and it was shown to me that it was the custom of the department to purchase the copyright or manuscript and also the electro-plates, and I certified to the payment of the account.
Mr. McMULLEN. Had Mr. Hett the manuscript with lim at the time these pamphlets were ordered :

Mr. CARLING. I do not remember. The Deputy Minister brought the matter before me as to the printing of German pamphlets. We have had a great many demands for German literature from different parts of the continent and from Great Britain, and also from the Gierman population of the North-West who wanted pamphlets to send to their friends in the old country. We were very glad, indeed, to encourage that kind of thing, as there are no better immigration agents than those who have recently come to the country and are doing well, and who write to their friends inviting them to come and sending pamphlets giving a description of the country.

Mr. McMULLEN. Can the hon. gentleman say whether the manuscript was read over by any person in the department and sanctioned by the department before it went to press?

Mr. CARLING. I am confident that it was so, though I would not say positively, because we have a German in the department who looks over all German correspondence and other matter. I feel quice satisfied that it would be looked over and reported to the deputy and approved of.

Mr. MULOCK. Would the Minister be good enough to say what was covered by the original account of $$ 7.51 .50$ ? 'Did it include printing, paper and composition?

Mr. CARLING. It did not include paper ; it included printing. That was the account that was rendered to the department, and that was the account submitted to the Queen's Printer, who allowed him $$ 400$ for the printing only.

Mr. MULOCK. Would the Ministersay whether it is correct, as stated in the report of the deputy, that the gentleman who wrote the manuscript went to the North-West to get information? I understool from the report that Mr. Hett had leen selected to do this printing because of the interest which he had taken in bringing out the Mennonites and settling them in Manitoba.

Mr. Carling. No. I think the hon. gentleman must have misunderstood me. I said that Mr. Schantz, who was a resident of Berlin and who took a very active part in bringing out the Mennonites and settling them in the North-West, for which the Government loaned him $$ 100,000$, which has all been paid with interest, took a great interest in having a German pamphlet published, and volunteered to help in any way he could in the way of getting information and obtaining certificates from people who lived in the country.
Mr. MULOCK. If you strike out Mr. Hett's name frora my remarks and put in Mr. Schantz's, my remarks stand. I understood the Deputy Minister to say that this allowance was made, not for the mere labour of compiling the pamphlet, but to defray the expenses of Mr. Schantz going to the Mennonite settlement and getting information from which to write it. Is it correct that he went there for that purpose or not ?
Mr. CARLING. I cannot say that he went there.
Mr. MULOCK. The amount in dispute, 8316.86, is apparently given without any examination as to what would be fair and right ; because for similar work done in French, a very much smaller sum was paid. For one in French $$ 90$ was allowed, and for another on the North-West in the French language $$ 100$ was allowed, while for some extraordinary reason the authorship of this German pamphlet is valued at 8316 .

Mr. CARLING. No, there were the plates also.
Mr. MULOCK. Their value is only nominal. I understood from the hon. member for North Brant that they are worth only a dollar or two as old metal. They are of no other value, because you never used them again. There was no second edition. They were simply paid for to afford some foundation for paying the account. That is admitted. The deputy seemed to be desirons of affording some excuse or apology for this demand on the treasury, and so these plates, which were of no more value than old metal-

Mr. CARLING. We might have used them.
Mr. MULOCK. But there was no intention of using them at that time.

Mr. CARLING. Yes, there was.
Mr. MULOCK. Well, the plates have been of no practical use, and Mr. Lowe says that he is willing that $316 should be allowed, not simply for the labour of authorship, assuming that a man would sit down and with the information at hand prepare the pamphlet, but he professes to allow this very large sum on the theory that Mr. Schantz in the preparation of this pamphlet had gone to the NorthWest to inform himself. Now, the facts are wholly inconsistent with that. The Minister himself hasgiven a denial of that. He has told us that Mr. Schantz superintended the bringing out of these settlers, accompanied them to their district, planted them there, borrowed a large sum from the Government and paid it back, and generally knew all about the settlement-knew the geography of the country where they were settled, and was in communication with them, and did not require to make a special trip to the North-West in order to write this pamphlet. But the deputy has asserted that this large sum is so large because of the expense of the author in making this trip to the North-West to get the necessary information. Now, it is clear that he did not make a trip for any such purpose, and did not make it at all. He had been there for some purpose and had this information. If, therefore, we strike out the supposed allowance for the trip which he did not make, and the reference to which is a mistake on the part of Mr. Lowe, how mach ought the true account to le?
Mr. CARLING. I think it must lee known to the hou. gentleman that any one writing a pamphlet of 32 pages must gather information. He cannot sit down and write a pamphlet out of his fancy without procuring information.
Mr. LISTER. He had all that information be. fore.

Mr. CARLING. In what way did he have it before?

Mr. LISTER. He bad been with the immigrants and knew all about the country.
Mr. Carling. He had been with the Mennonites and knew the general advantages of Canada, and the nature of our policy; but we have in this pamphlet special information, as we have in other pamphlets prepared for distribution, and I think it must be admitted that to gather information not only with regard to the Mennonite settlement, but with regard to British Columbia, the North-West and the advantages offered in Manitobay and the older provinces, involves a great deal of time and trouble. I know that Professor Fream came out to this country and travelled through the North-West and wrote a book on Canada. Professor Tanner wrote another, and when able writers have written on the resources of Canada, and we have published and distributed in all parts of Canada and Europe their writings, I think that you will admit that they deserve compensation for all they have done.
Mr. MULOCK. The hou. gentleman does not answer the point at all. This statement shows that Mr. Schantz was selected to do this because he had been to the North-West and because he had all the information before him.

Mr. CARLING. He had the information with regard to the men in our settlement, in which he took a particular interest, but not information with regard to the whole country.

Mr. MULOCK. The Minister cannot say nowif he cau, let him say it-that after the order was given Mr. Schantz to prepare the report, Mr. Schantz went to the North-West to get the necessary information to write it.

Mr. CARLING. All I can say is that the order was given to Mr. Hett to get Mr. Schantz to prepare the report.

Mr. MULOCK. Thereport laid on the Tablestates, and we have it in evidence, that the authorship is worth $$ 90$ or $$ 100$ because that is what has been paid all along the line by the Government for similar work: and for what reason is this large sum, three or four times that amount, paid Mr. Schantz? The report purports to say it was paid because he made a special trip to the North-West to instruct himself, and now we have it he did nothing of the kinl. He had the information in his head, and sitting in Berlin, he writes it for the Government contractors. So that the transaction is a fraud on the fate of it: and now we have on the face of that clocument, a misstatement made by the Deputy Minister, because he is suggesting that Mr. Schantz made a special trip to the North-West to get the information to write a pamphlet. The Minister has cut that gronnd away because he has shown that Mr. Schantz had all the information in his head and did not reguire to goont of his own house.

Mr. BOWELL. I will read the report, and perhaps the hon. gentleman will see he is attributing statements to the Minister of Agriculture which he certainly did not make. Mr. Lowe says:

[^76] Hett further offered to obtain for publication in the pamphlet testimonials from the Russian(ierman Mennonite settlers in Manitobis, even at the cost of Mr. Schantz going personally and specially to that province to obtain the information. He does not say that he went, but he says that he would obtain this information even at the expense of sending Mr. Schantz to Manitoba and the North-West to obtain it, for the purpose of including testimonials in the pamphlet for the information of those who may desire to come out to the country. I am not aware, and I have listened attentively to the debate, that the Minister of Agriculture has said one word bey ond what Mr. Lowe says in this memo. I do not know-and I take it from what the Minister of Agriculture has said that he does not know--whether Mr. Schantz went to Manitoba or not, but that was a part of the bargain made with Mr. Hett by the department, that this information should be obtained even at the expense of going to Manitoba. My oun interpretation of the account -I am not discussing whether it was too large or too small-is that Mr. Hett charged $$ 730$ to cover all his expenses in counection with the preparing and the printing of the pamphlet. When the account was cut down by the Queen's Printer to the amount allowed by the department for such work, Mr. Lowe suggested he ought to be paid for the authorship and what other expense he had been put to. That is borne out by the remarks of the hon. member for North Brant when he first referred to the subject, because he says that, "on referring to the Auditor General's Report, he finds an account, which I presume is the account I speak of because the figures are exactly ulike-from the Berlin Gazette for 50,000 German pamphlets, and I find that the copyright and the electro-plates were paid for at the price mentioned in this letter, a total of 3750 . The original account rendered by Mr. Hett was paid in full." That would imply the hon. gentleman took the same view of the question as I did, that Mr. Hett in rendering his account, rendered it for all services remelered, including the preparation of the pamphlet and printing and whatever other work had been done, but it had been cut down by the Queen's Printer to the actual cost of printing as allowed by the printing establishment and Mr. Hett was paid an additional S300 for suthorship, &c., and no doubt at the suggestion of the Minister.

Mr. LISTER. How do you know it was the actual cost of the printing?

Mr. BOWELL. I say the actual cost as allowed loy the department in Ottawa. If I were doing a job of that kind myself, I would, as my hon. frient would, charge a profit over and above the actual cost ; and judging from law yers accounts, we know very well it is the study of the law and the number of years they have applied in acquiring information which enables them to give milvice they charge for in addition to the actual labour performed at the moment. If it were not, lawyers would not be as rich as thej; are torlay.

Mr. LISTER. I do not know about the riches of lawyers, but they do not get the start of Government printers. The Minister of Agriculture has said that it has always been the custom to pay for the copyright. I have it from the copyright branch of the department, that where an order is given for a pamphlet such as this, the copyright belongs to the Government and is the property of the Government without any payment for the copyright at all. I have it direct from the department, that where a pamphlet is written by oriler of the department the author has no right to a copyright.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I would like to ask the hon. member if he is aware that information with regard to the whole country was published in the pamphlet as well as information with regarl to Manitoba? He led us to believe that Mr. Schantz not only wrote with regarl to the North-West, but also gave information with regard to the oller provinces and British Columhia.

Mr. CARLING. I understand the pamphlet speaks of the whole country as suitable for immigrants.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Has the hom. gentleman read the pamphlet?

Mr. CARLING. J do not understand German.
Mr. SOMERVILLE. We should hive a copy of that pamphlet brought down.

Mr. CARLING. I think I can procure one for the hon. gentleman, and will be glad to bring it down.

Mr. SOMFRVILLE. I think it would be alvisable to have the electrotypes laid on the Table as well. I see that Mr. Lowe says :
"We had then no pamphlet which we deemed advisable to publish adapted to the special information of Germans."
That is rather an extraordinary statement for the Deputy Minister to make. It was not more than one or two years previous to this that the Government paid a man named Bennett, an English printer down in Prescott, who hal no German type, some $\$ 7,000$ or $\$ 8,000$ for printing a (ierman pamphlet, and this man Bennett purchased the German type and started a German printing office in Prescott where there are no Germans at all. They pail this man Bennett enormons sums of money for printing German pamphlets, and then we have a statement that the (iovernment had no German pamphlets for the information of Germans. Why, they practically started a German printing oftice in Prescott, and they gave this man named Bemett enough protit to enalule him to establish that otfice. and yet the Minister says they had no German pamphlets to inform the (ierman people. I think. before we are through with this investigation, we ought to have the whole matter referred to the Puilic Accounts Committee in order to receive information under oath in regard to it. It was a gross piece of extravagance and favouritism on the part of the Government and it must be manifest to any one who reads this letter of Mr. Lowe that the offier he made to Mr. Casper Yett was an attempt to defraud this country of $\mathbf{2 3 1 6}$, becanse the (iovernment obtained no value for it. I think that, lefore this money is voterl. we should have the pamphlet itself laid on the Table.

Mr. LANDERKIN. In the town of Berlin, in the Province of Ontario, there is a large printing attice which has been long established and is well eyuipperl, capable of doing all this work, an othice where they understand fierman and have all the facilities for getting out German pamphlets. That is the otfice of the Jowrwal. Then in Stratford there is the Kodomist, and in the town of Walkerton we have the Glockr. They have the material to do all that work, and I think it would le better for the diovernment to give that work to people who are doing a legitimate business among the dierman people, who are gualified to revise and supervise the publication of pamphlets of this character and get them to meet the views of the (iovermment, than to act as they have in commection with this transaction which is now before the House. This transaction is most objectionable and utterly indefensible. I am not surprised that the Minister of Dilitia camot swallow this, though he has, as a rule, a great power of swallowing.

Quamantine-Grosse Isle

Mr. MoMULLEN. I think we ought to have some explanation why the man in charge here received such a large amount last year as $\mathbf{3 4 , 6 0 9 9}$. His salary is $33,(000$ : and then we have, additional services, 1879, $\mathcal{S G O L O}^{(0)}$ : arrears of increased pay, S220: allowance for horse and livery, 1890 , $\operatorname{si2} 100^{\circ}$; ditto, ditto for 1891, $\mathbf{3 2 0 0}$ : ration chllowance 30. days, $\mathbf{3 3 0}$; living allowance, 37 days at 33.20 . slom.in ; and so on. We should have some explanation as to how this man draws such an enormous amount of money.

Mr. CAKLIN(i. The salary of Dr. Montizam bert is 53,000 , and he is allowed what should have been paid the previous year to hring his salary up to this amount.

Mr. MeMULLEN. Ioes the Minister mean to sty that he did not get his salary the previous year?

Mr. CARLING. Not his full salary.

Mr. MosULLEN. What was the portion not paid?

Mr. CARLIN(i. $=3225$.

Mr. MeMULLEN. What is this amount of SG00 for-additional services?

Mr. CARLING. That includes this.

Mr. Mo.MULLEN. No: it says: "Adilitional serrices, 1889, EBMO." That cammot be the arrears of salary.

Mr. CARLIN(: It is not in aldition to the S3,(XO) but in adlition to the saliry he had heen receiving, making it up to the $\mathbf{3} \mathbf{3},(0 \mathrm{OH}$.

Mr. LISTER. It says for additional services. What are his serrices, anyway?

Mr. CARLINI: I said the amome was for anditional services for the previous vear. That is the fact. He was paid stinc) for alilitional services, that is for his salary for the previous year.

Mr. MeMCLLEN. If the hon. gentleman will turn up the page of the Auditor Cieneral's Report. he will fiml "arrears of increased pay, 320.0 What is that?

Mr. CARLIN(: The two payments of Sixto aml S22.i to Dr. Montizambert are for extra services arising out of the guarantine regulations, from the lst danary, 1889, to dume, ISOM. Then there is the increase of salary made by the Order in Commcil.

Mr. LINTER. When was the salary increased:
Mr. ('ARLIN(: lst Jamuary, lss?. liefore that date it was $S 2, f(x)$.

Mr. LISTEK. The Stim had nothing to do with the silary?

Mr. CARLIN(i. It was an adlition to his salary. He had heen receiving $\mathbf{S}^{2}, \not(\not(x)$.

Mr. LINTER. That cannot be. The item says "alditional services," not an aldition to his salary. The item appears to be for services over and above the services he was to perform as an otficer.

Mr. C.ARLIN: I have only to say to my hon. friend that the statement I have made is correct, however it is entered in the book.

Mr. LINTER. What does this item mean" arrears of increased pay, $\mathbf{8} 2 \mathbf{2}$ ) ?"
Mr. CARLIN(i. It was for the time that he wias entitled to his pay. S22i made up the amount that he should have had.

Mr. LINTER. Then did you date back the increase of salary y because it is an astonishing thing that if his salary was increased in the usuat way, he should have drawn increased pay.

Mr. CARLING. It was from the lst Jamary 1839.

Mr. LISTER. It appears that this man's salary was increased. That increase would date from it certain time. Did the Order in Council relate to back time that had pussed?

Mr. CARIING: I am not prepared to say that, but this was for the salary that was agreeil to the given to him from a certain date. I lo not know the date.

Mr. MCMULLEN. I think we should have the information the committee asks for in connection with this item before it passes. I would suggest that the hon. gentleman let the matter stand until after six oclock, and bring down the information.

Mr. LISTER. I do not think the Minister really understands the true position of this matter. The deputy, no doubt, does, and if the matter was allowed to stand until after dinner, the informa. tion could le obtained in the meantime. It does seem to me that this man is drawing a very large salary indeed; he may have a great deal of work to do. He has been drawing a salary of $\mathbf{$ 3 , 0 0 0}$, and for additional services a sum which the Minister says is alditional to his salary, although it is not so entered in the book. It does look as if this sti(n) was paid for extra additional services over and alove the service he is supposed to perform as superintemlent. Then there is $$ 25$ for arrears of increasel pay. Now, I think the House has a perfect right to know what that means: when that increase of pay was tirst given, what time he was entitled to draw that increase of pay, and what were the reasons that induced the fiovernment to give him increased pay at all: Was it for increased work, or was it becanse his efficiency in his profession entitled him to it? Then I see he is allowed for a horse and livery. That is an astonishing item tor. If he is allowed for a horse, he should not have a livery. If it is livery hire, we ought to know it. If he owns a horse and charges it to the country as a livery stahle keeper would, then he has no right to get that money at all. He would only be entitied for what the keeping of the horse would cost. This gentleman seems to be favoured by the Minister.
Mr. CARLING. Oh, mo.
sir RICHARI) (ARTWRICHT. Will the Minister inform us exactly what Dr. Montizambert's duties are, inow many monthes services he has to put in?
Mr. CARLING. From the opening of navigation to the close. He generally goes down about the latter part of April, and does not leave until November.
sir RICHARI) CARTWRIGHT. During the other part of the year does he practice his profession?
Mr. CARLING. I suppose he does. I think he lives in Quebec.
Mr. somerville. The receipts of this gentleman are not confined to the amount on page $227-\mathrm{B}$; if you turn to $230-\mathrm{B}$ we find he got $\$ 159.8 .5$ for making a trip to Charleston, South Carolina.
Mr. CARLING. That was for attending a Pub. lic Health Convention, and, of course, it was important that he, as the head of the quarantine of Canada, should attend a meeting of the guarantine otticers of the United States. It was for the benefit of our quarantine.
Mr. soMERVILLE. Did he make a report to the Government of that trip:
Mr. Carling. Yes, it is to be found in the report of the Department of Agriculture.
Mr. LISTER. Then I see there is a ration allowance for 305 days ; how is that? He gets $$ 3,000$ a year, $$ 600$ for additional services, $$ 225$ for arrears of increased pry, allowance for horse livery, $$ 200$, and he gets a rational allowance for 305 days, but he only works six months in the year. Then he gets a living allowance of $$ 129.50$. He will be charging us for his boots and socks after this.
Mr. CARLIN(: That living allowance is only when he is travelling.

Mr. LISTER. He could not travel a great deal, because he is only in the service of the Government as superintendent about six months in the year.

Mr. Linter.

Mr. CARLING. His time is taken up during fully eight months in the year in connection with Government duties at quarantine.
Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. How comes it that this ofticer has receivel rations for 305 days? This is a very unusual amount for an officer to receive with this salary.
Mr. CARLIN(i. It may cover more than one year. These otficers are allowed $1 per day for rations during the time they are employed by the Government.
Mr. somerville. How can the amount of one year be placed in the accounts for another year:
Mr. CARLING. That may very easily ocem. The June rations might run into July.

Mr. McMullen. We desire to obtain some information with respect to horse-hire.
Mr. CARLING. The Island is four or five miles long, and the ofticer has to visit the hospital and other places in comnection with quarantine. He is allowed to hire a horse to enable him to take those journeys on the Island.

Mr. LIsTER. Does he keep a horse, or does he hire one?
Mr. CARLING. I understand that the arrangement at present is that the Goverument allow $$ 2(N)$, and the otficer can either hire or keep a horse.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is the same system in regard to vaccination pursued now as formerly? We have had a system hitherto in operation on vessels carrying passengers under which only steerage passengers are vaccinated, the passengers in the intermediate and stlonn not being subject to vaccination. This question is at the present time of some importance, as there are rumours abroad of small-pox breaking out in different parts of the United States, and it is desirable the Government should exercise every precaution in order to prevent the spreal of that most contagious disease.

Mr. CARLING. I understand the passengers are not vaccinated at present, if a satisfactory statement is obtained by the health officer regarding the health of the passengers. Of course if there is small-pox on board the passengers will be vaccinated. The practice in this regard is not the same as it was when the small-pox epidemic prevailed.

Mr. LANDERKIN. so you do not compel steerage passengers to be vaccinatel if they can show vaccination marks on their arms?

Mr. Carling. No.
Mr. LANDERKIN. Do you apply the same rule to intermediate and saloon passengers?

Mr. CARLING. At the present time we do not insist on vaccinating the passengers, as we did a few years ago. Of course if small-pox was on board ship, the doctor would insist on vaccinating the passengers. I think the vaccination would be confined, however, to the steerage and intermediate passengers.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Was it not formerly a portion of the duty of the doctor at quarantine station to vaccinate the passengers who arrived?

Mr. Carling. Yes.

Mr. LANDFRKIN. If that duty is taken away, should not the officer's salary be less instead of more :

Mr. CARLING. . The amount of work is steadily increasing, because the number of vessels coming up the St. Lawrence is larger than it was two or three years ago, and all the vessels have to be inspected whether they come up night or day.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I) I understand that the rule now is that the Government compel only those in the steerage to be vaccinated, if they cannot produce certificates or give evilence that they have been vaccinated, or does this rule apply to the intermediate and cabin passengers as well? Is there any distinction made?

Mr. CARLING. I believe the distinction is calused by the adoption of the system adopted in the United States, under which saloon passengers are not vaccinated. If we were to insist on saloon passengers leing vaccinated, it would drive travel from our steamers coming up the St. Lawrence to New York.

Mr. LANDFRKIN. If that is thought to be a healthy regulation, I do not see why it should not apply to saloon passengers, because they are not less liable to take small-pox than are steerage passengers. I do not understand why a distinction should be made, for in reality the contagion would be just as bad in one part of the ship as in another. I do not think any class is exempt from small-pox, or that any locality is exempt from the disease. If we are going to act in this matter from policy, following the example of the United States, we should nake a broad and general rule and allow it to be applied to the intermediate and saloon as well as to the steerage passengers. Do not compel passengers to be vaccinated if they have been vaccinated, for such is a barbarous practice. I knew a young man, who although he had been vaccinated, was compelled to be revaccinated, which brought on a serious illness from blood-poisoning following vaccination. There was no necessity for this revaccination, because he was already eujoying the immunity that vaccine virus could have given him. What was really done was the infiction of a lissecting wound, which endangered his life. It is right to accept certificates of examination, and let the marks be evidence of vaccination, and then we should apply a general rule to all passengers in vessels.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). It is necessary that we should take the utmost precaution in order to secure the vaccination of immigrants who come to this country. I understand that by the rules of the department they have no control over the pussengers who embark from the old country to conpel them to produce evidence of their having been vaccinated previous to their departure. I learn that the vaccination on board vessels takes place about the last days of the voyage, and very frequently after the ship enters the St. Lawrence River. The reason given by the ship's surgeons for this is that sea-sickness occurs almost imme.liately after the departure from the port, and that the passengers are in such a condition of health that it is not wise to add to their discomfort by vaccination. The consequence is that the vac: cination is delayed almost to the very last day before arrival. What is the result of that?

The vaccinal protection incubation period is about eight days; while the incubation period of small-pox is about fourteen days. Suppose a person were exposed to the small-pox virus in England he could cross the ocean and pass to the place of destination without any indication that he had the disease, and as the vaccinal protection would take eight days to develop, the result will be that the small-pox would develop before the protective effects of the vaccine operated. Dr. Montizambert points this out very plainly in his report, and he says it is one of the most important steps the Government could take that they should secure vaccination previous to embarkation, and reçuire a certificate of the immigrants previous to going or: board ship that they were vaccinated within the previous seven years. If this were done the protective effect of vaccination would be fully established in the system when they arrive here. Any hon. members who have read the report of Dr. Montizambert will find that two years ago smallpox developed among settlers as far west as Minnesota, from exposure in Norway. When the immigrants in that case passed through guarantine there were no indications of disease, but, nevertheless, small-pox developed in Minnesota, it having been brought from Norway in the manner 1 have described. Dr. Montizambert says himself :
"That the doctors on board ship are not to be trustedThey are not appointed by the Government, are in no way responsible to the Government, and they try to ,pass the thing as quietly through their hands as possible."
He gives this illustration. He says :
"I have gone on board at Rimouski and I found the doctor gave a certificate under oath that all the parties on board were either vaccinated to his own knowledge or had marks of vaccination on them. I have gone on that ship from that place to Grosse Isle and I found during my voyage of ten hours that I had to vaccinate 318 of those who were on board. Therefore if I had taken the statement of the doctor these 318 would have passed through the quarantine without being vaccinated at all."
He impresses upon the Government the importance of seeking to secure some methods by which these persons will be vaccinated either on the first of the voyage or previous to the voyage taking place. There is, 1 believe, a law on the English Statute-book, which makes provision that no diseased person can be accepted on board ship while so diseased, as it is supposed that that diseased immigrant would spread infection among those who are on board. That disease is visible, but a man may be diseased by exposure to smallpox virus, and contain within his system a centre of disease which is not recognizable, and therefore it should be required that these persons should be vaccinated before they go on board ship. Now in regard to quarantine. It may be said that although the Government spend a large sum of money, yet, if it is properly and honestly spent, it cannot be spent to a letter purpose, in my opinion. It is the duty of this Government to protect the people of this country from possible infection by immigrants, and I understand that the upparatus used on Grosse Isle for the purpose of the quarantine is not up to the requirements of the service. We find that the doctor is annually complaining that he is unable to carry out the provisions of the law properly with the present appliances which he has at his command. It is known to all those who have given the matter any attention at all, that the quarantine officers have to go out sometimes in the middle of the night and more frequently during the day, to meet the ship that is coming into port, for the purpose of fumigating it. The apparatus or appliances have to be carried on the Hyyteia or other small boats, and it is stated ly those who know that, in stormy weather, it is very difficult to get the tug or steamboit containing the appliances sufficiently near to the ship, so that the result is that the fumigation of the vessel is far from being perfect. If that is the case, I think the Govermment would do well to see that proper appliances are supplied there. The suggestion is made that a deep-water wharf should lee constructed which would accommodate vessels drawing 22 feet so that the vessels will be brought to the wharf and upon that wharf the necessary apparatus could be fixed permanently. The appliances required for this service are a fan for the purpose of blowing out the impure air from the vessel and for blowing in the disinfected air, and also a large tank containing corrosive sublimate, a solution used for the purpose of disinfection. I press upon the attention of the fovernment theimportance of placing the medical officer in a position whereby he can properly look after the health of the immigrants so as to prevent those who carry contagious disease settling in the country unknown to the quarantine service. I think it is the duty of the Government to save money in other ways, and to place proper appliances at these quarantine stations so as to prevent inmigrants from lecoming centres of contagion and disease throughout the country, and to protect the health of the inhalitanis already here. Although I believe that large sums of money are unnecessarily spent l,y this Government, yet I helieve also that it would pay this country to spend sufficient money to place the quarantine service in an efficient condition, and to supply the appliances known to science to-lay. My object in placing this before the Government is to draw their attention to this matter, because there is no more important matter than the health of our jeoople. In counteracting and preventing the importation of disease from abroad I think we should not le stingy in regard to spending a few dollars to give the advantages and facilities which are necessary, provided these few dollars are properly and honestly expended.

Mr. McMULLEN, The Minister stated that the doctor received for horse-hire and livery $$ 200$ per year. Turning up the Auditor General's Report for 1890 I see that he got $$ 200$ for horse and livery, and in 1891 he got sinc. How does the Minister explain this?

Mr. CARLING It is explained by the accountant of the department, that that was payment for two years.

Mr. McMULLEN. But the hon. gentleman must notice' that the Auditor General's Report for 1890 shows that he was paid $$ 200$ for that year, and the report for 1891 shows that he was paid $$ 400$ for that year. How does the hon. gentleman explain that?
Mr. CARLING. The only way I can explain it is that the accountant informs me that the years sometimes run into one another, but he only gets $$ 200$ per annum.
Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that for the year ending 30th June, 1889, he was also paid for travelling and horse-hire, 8142.43. I could understand the hon. Minister's explanation if the Auditor General's Report for 1890 did not contain the item of $$ 200$ in addition to the item of $$ 400$ in the report for 1891.

Mr. CARLING. The payment may relate to another year. The Auditor General looks after those matters very carefully, and he has never questioned this allowance and I am satisfied that this quarantine officer receives only $$ 200$ a year, although the accounts for one year may have run into another year.

Mr. Mcmulen. It appears to me that this man is a very expensive otticer. I notice that besides his salary he gets $$ 600$ for services and expenses for studying steam disinfectants. I think the hon. Minister might fairly bring down the particulars of this item with the others after six o'clock.

Mr. CARLING. We will allow this item to stand.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I notice a statement in one of the newspapers that it was the intention of the Governinent that quarantine should be attached to the Department of Marine. Is that correct?

Mr. CARLING. I am not responsible for what appears in the newspapers.

Quarantine-St. John.
$$ 2,500$
Mr. McMULLEN. I notice that there is an allowance for boat service of $$ 6(1)$ to W. S. Harding, the inspector, who receives 81,200 a year. What is this?

Mr. CARLING. It is an allowance made for the hire of boats and men to go out to meet vessels. Instead of paying so much per day or per month, we make this allowance.
Mr. McMULLEN. Does the officer keep a boat of his own?
Mr. Carling. Yes.
Mr. McMULLEN. It is quite clear that this man is getting $$ 1,800$ a year in place of $$ 1,200$. We pay him the salary of $$ 1,200$ and also $$ 600$, I fancy, to keep a pleasure boat to ride arouud in. I would like to know what kind of a boat it is and everything about it. It may be another Joe.

Mr. CARLING. I can only say that it is a sailboat and also a row-boat, and he has to hire a man to look after it, sometimes two men. This amount has been allowed to the officers at St. John and Halifax for a great many years.

\text { Quarantine-Halifax..... ............... } £ 3,000

Mr. McMULLEN. There is a boat service here also, for which Dr. Wickwire is allowed $$ 600$. I would like to know what kind of a boat this is?

Mr. Cakling. Dr. Wickwire hires a boat because he has no boat of his own.
Quarantine-Victoria, B.C......... ..... $5,000

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What do you want $$ 3,000$ more for? Please explain.

Mr. CARLING. The increase is owing to the fact that at Albert Head Quarantine Station, there have been many patients with small-pox, and we have had to spend a large amount of money in improving the accommodation. There is a large number of vessels besides, with Chinese and Japanese, which have to be quarantined.

Mr. McMULLEN. I find an item for horse and luggy-hire, $14.). Can the Minister explain that?

Mr. CARLING: The hospital is over thirteen miles from Victoria, and the quarantine officer has to drive to and from the hospital.

Committee rose, and it being six o'clook the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee of supply.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. McMULLEN. Hes the hon. gentleman any details about charges for rations at cirosse Isle?

Mr. CARIING. The quarantine year begins with the lst of April and ends the 30th November, in all 244 days. In P888-89 Dr. Montizambert receivel rations allowance for 214 days. In 1889.90 he received rations allowance for 213 rlays. In 18:N)-91 he received rations allowance for 305 days, making an average of 244 days for the three years. I understand this is clue to the fact that the amount lapses over from one year to another, and possibly we may have run a little short of the year's expenses and have taken it out of the next year, and an average may be struck in that way.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The conclusion one would naturally draw is that in the years he drew pay for less days than 244 , that would be the actual number of days he drew rations.

Mr. CARLIN(:. They are paid for eight months, or 244 days.

Quarantine-Port Hawkeshury. . ......... . $$ 300$

Mr. McMULI.EN. What is the explaination of this small amome?

Mr. CARLING. Vessels passing through the Giut of Canso have to be inspected frequently, and it was felt important we should have some one there at a small salary to look after it.

Cattle Quarantine  $$ 15,000$

Mr. LISTER. There is a charge in the Auditor (ieneral's Report of 81,500 ) to Dr. McEachran, veterinary surgeon. Whert is his office?

Mr. CARLING. In Montreal.
Mr. LISTER. What are his cluties?
Mr. CARLING: He is chief quarantine officer, and he supervises all the cattle that are shipped to the old country. All the cattle are inspected by hin or his assistants.

Mr. LANGELIER. I was under the impression that Dr. Couture was the chief quarantine officer for cattle. He is in charge of the quarantine station at Levis, which is the only one in the Dominion. I know Dr. MeFachran is a most distinguished veterinary surgeon, perhaps the most distinguished in the Dominion, but he lives in Montreal and the quarantine station is in Quebec, and Dr. Couture has always been the quarantine superintendent.

Mr. CARLING. Dr. Couture is kept at Quebec and Dr. McEachran goes to all parts of the Dominion to look after the inspection of cattle.

Mr. FEATHERSTON. Dr. McEachran is the inspector for the export trade under whose inspection cattle are marked. They are marked with a large V. R. in oil and paint. They have letters large enough to cover the back of a sheep all the way from the shoulders. It looks very bad on both cattle and sheep, especially those that go to pasture or go to le fed when they arrive in Europe. The dealers have been complaining a good deal in regard to this marining, and we would like the Government to change the marking and give the animals some other mark than has been adopted. I think the inspection is a good thing, and the more rigid it is the hetter for our trade, but we do not want to have these animals marked in such a way as to make it detrimental to the sale of cattle and sheep in the English market. Probally they could adopt some plan lyy which it might be shown that the animals had leen inspected while at the same time it would not be detrimental to their sale on the other side.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. I see that lir. Me Eachran not only received the salary of $\$ 1,000$, but he also received for special service to the United States, November 1 to 21 , 21 days at $\$ 20$, less salary for same time, $\mathbf{8 8 7 . 5 0}, \mathbf{5 3 3 2 . 0 0}$; fares, $\$ 110.05$; pullmans, $\$ 29.25$; cabs, $\$ 48.511$; board, \$196.10, making an additional amount of \$244.(i). It appears to le a strange thing, if Dr. McFachran receives a salary of $\$ 1,500$, that he shoulh he allowed \$332.in extra, besides his travelling expenses and hotel expenses, and I think it should be explained why he gets this ardition to his salary.

Mr. CARLING: In. Me Earhtan's salary is nothing at all for a professional man, and he would not think of accepting that if he had to give us his whole time, but, when we require his services on some special work, or to go to the United States and make some special report, we have to pay him something additional as a professional man besides his travelling expenses. I presume that would have to be done with any one.

Mr. SOMERVIILLF. What did he go to report on?

Mr. CARLING: He went to report on the cattle disease in the United States. Pleuro-pneumonia was said to exist there, and it was very important that we should have a report on the sulb. ject. We hall a correspondence with the authorities in Great Britain, through the High Commissioner, and an endeavour was made to have our cattle scheduled, while, at the same time, they were trying to get their cattle in without being scheduled. We were anxious to ascertain to what extent pleuro-pneumonia existed in the United States. It was really a conficlential visit which Dr. McEachran made to various parts of the United States.
Mr. SOMERVILLE. If his report was confidential, I suppose it is not published in the official report.

Mr. CARLING. No; it is not published, but we gave as much information as we could to the High Conmissioner.

Mr. LISTER. Then I understand that this gentleman gets this salary of $$ 1,500$, but the Government is not entitled to all his time.

Mr. CARLING. He gets 81,500 and has full charge of the quarantine station there. If anything occurs in any part of the Dominion, in Nova Scotia or the North.West, or any other part which requires a clever man, we select Dr. McEachran and pay him for his visits.
Mr. LISTER. When his duties call him to any part of Canada outside of Montreal, does hissalary of $$ 1,500$ cover his pay, or does he get $$ 20$ a day besides, as it appears he did while in the United States?
Mr. CARLIN(. I think his expenses in the United States were special, and probably it was necessary that we should pay him more than we would for an ordinary service in Canada.
Mr. LIster. Then you do not pay him anything extra in Canada?
Mr. CARLING. Except when he goes away from Montreal. Then we have to pay him extra.
Mr. LIster. Then in Montreal he receives S1,:00 a year, which is about $3 a day, but whenever he goes away from Montreal he is to receive in addition to that salary about $$ 20$ a day, in uddition to his travelling expenses.
Mr. CARLING. I am informed that this was the only time we paid him anything extra.
Mr. LISTER. Can the hon. gentleman state, or does he know, that Dr. McEachran is the manager of the Waldron Ranch Company in the NorthWest Territories?
Mr. CARLING. I cannot say that, lint I know he is connected with one of the ranch companies.
Mr. LISTER. The Waldron Ranch Company is one of the largest ranch companies in the Territories, and I am told that Dr. MeEachran speids a large portion of his time in looking after the interests of that company, and, that being the case, I think it is incompatible with the performance of his duties as an officer of the Government. He should be either called upon to resign his position of manager of this ranch company or to resign his position as an ofticer of the Government. I think the Minister will find that the greater portion of Dr. Mc Eachran's time is devoted to the ranch company in which he is interested not only as a stockholder but as manager under a large salary, and it seems to me to be an extraordinary thing for the Government to allow him to divide his time, a large portion of it being spent in a place other than that to which his duty calls him.
Mr. CARLING. I do not think that we could expect Dr. McEachran to give his whole time for the salary we pay hiu. His reputation in Canada and in England stands very high, and I think we are very much indebted to him for his efforts in preventing our cattle from being scheduled. He does not think that he is paid anything at all like his services are worth. I do not think we could ufford to give him a salary that would secure his whole time.
Mr. LISTER. I have no doubt that his services are of considerable value, but I do not admit they are indispensable. If he died to-morrow no doubt some other gentleman could be found who would discharge the duties of the office guite as efficiently as Dr. McEachran. The salary the Government gives to a veterinary surgeon in Montreal is a very liberal salary indeed, and I have no doubt that if the Governmient so desired; they could get a gentleman of equal qualifications to give his whole time for the same salary. The hon. gentleman must not forget that in this Dominiou our medical schools are turning out many professional men thoroughly qualified to discharge every duty that Dr. McEachran could possibly be called upon to discharge. I do not think the Government ought to permit their officer to engage in any enterprise which, of necessity, compels him to be away from his official business for a great portion of the year. I cannot help feeling that this cry ubout scheduling our cattle is considerable of a bugaiso held up to frighten people. No doubt if our cattle happened to le diseased they would be scheduled, and the fact that Dr. McEachran is a veterinary officer of the Government does not prevent diseases from attacking our cattle, and consequently does not prevent our cattle from being scheduled.
Mr. DAVIN. I can speak from knowledge in the North-West of the value of Dr. McEachran's services. My hon. friend speaks of the number of clever men turned out of our institutions yearly : but he is greatly mistaken if he supposes that turning out clever students will give you men that can with certainty diagnose the sultite diseases to which cattle are liable.
Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.
Mr. DAVIN. You know, Mr. Chairman, what Oliver Goldsmith says: "The loud laugh spenks the vacant mind" ; and the loud laugh of my hon. friends around me shows how completely vacant are their minds on all questions that affect cattle and cattle diseases. We had cases in the NorthWest where cattle were supposed by a very clever veterinary surgeon to be infected with pleuro-pneumonia, and Ir. McEachran has come there and examined the cattle, and he has declared authoritatively that those cattle suffered from no infectious disease whatever; although a very clever young man, such as my hon. iriend from West Lambton (Mr. Lister) wants the Government to employ, declared that they were so affected. Why, a clever young man might land Canada, and land the Government. and land the great interests of the North-West Territories, in confusion, by giving up his whole time to the country at $$ 1,500$ a yeur. What we want is the highest skill we can have at the least price, and the only way you can attain that end is by employing a great professional man to give you all the time that is necessary in Montrenl to deal with the issue placed before him. I will take an illustration from my hou. friend's profession. What would be thought of $a$ man that will rise up and argue, as my hon. friend does, about the vast fees that are given to some lawyers. He might say : Why, we are turning out from our universities, and from Osgoode Hall, very able men, barristers learned in the law, and a complaisant Government in Toronto will make them Queen's Counsels for you, and you could get the services of any of these young men for a $$ 20, $ 30$ or $$ 50$ fee, whereas you give to some eminent man a fee of $$ 1,000$ or $$ 2,000$, and yet the W2,000 lawyer does not give up his whole time. What you want is all the time of the $$ 2,000$ man necessary to win your case. What we want from Dr. McEachran is all the time necessary to attend with consunmate skill, as he does, to the veterinary business the Government has for him to do in Montreal.
Mr. SOMERVILLE. We are to understand from the explanation of the Minister that this sum of $$ 1,000$ is not a salary at all, but it is a retaining fee that the Government gives Dr. McFachran. If it is a retaining fee, then it ought so to be stated in the Aurlitor Geueral's Report.

Mr. SPROULE. I would like to ask the Minister if he has considered the advisability of establishing a quarantine at Fort Macleod? In that part of the country, I am told, there are a great many cattle crossing the line, and the cattle trade at that centre is a great one at the present time. Great numbers of horses are brought in from the other side, and cattle are brought in in many places without any inspection whatever. I see from the Minister's return that the cattle are inspected, but I do not think that an ordinary inspection is sufficient to detect or prevent danger. The number of cattle in that locality is very large, and if cattle infected with pleuro-pucumonia were brought in from the other side, as they may be at any time, it would cause great loss to the country. I fully agree with the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) that it is importint to have a professional man in charge of this business whose reputation extends even beyond Canada, becanse it is a guarantee that this special matter is looked after, and it will go a long way towards satisfying the people in the old country that there is no danger in buying cattle from Canada. Nor do I think that paying him a reasonable salary is objectionable. If I understand the matter correctly, the man would naturally be ohliged to attend to different lines of professional work in different parts of the country. It would lee impossible to be in several places at once, and he would be occasionally obliged to employ others in connection with the work, and the payment of a larger salary was therefore necessary. Some portions of the work can be done by assistants, but in detecting disease no better man can be found than the one whom we have there. Has the Minister considered the desirability of establishing a guarantine station at Macleod, or in that district?

Mr. CARLING. Cattle are not coming in now from the United States, as they have been coming in for a number of years. We are enforcing the same quarantine regulations in regard to the western portions of the North-West Territories and British Columbia that we have enforced in Ontario and the eastern provinces. Only a short time ago cattle were brought in from British Columbia for slaughtering purposes, and now that we are enforcing the regulations cattle are not coming in so freely. We have now in the North. West sufficient cattle for our own requirements and for sale, and we do not expect under the quarantine regulations that cattle will be brought in from the United States, as they were some years ago. We have quite sufficient in our own country, and cattle will only be allowed to be brought in for improving our breeds, as is the case in Ontario, Quebec and other provinces.

Mr. SPROULE. I find the importation into the Dominion during 1891, by land, was as follows :Ontario (Point Edward) cattle, 51 ; swine, 26. Emerson, Man., cattle, 1,022; sheep, 123 ; swine, 275 ; horses, 1,767. Manitou, Man., cattle, 320 ; swine, 10 ; mules, 8 ; horses 362. Deloraine, Man., cattle, 179 ; sheep, 21 ; swine, 2 ;mules 5 ; horses, 147. Fort Macleod, N.W.T., cattle, 945 ; sheep, 4,004; horses, 817. It thus appears that a considerable number of aninials are coming into the country.

Mr. CARLING. Settlers' stock is allowed to come in without ${ }^{\text {quarantine, and the cattle arriv- }}$ ing at Emerson and other points were, no doubt, so brought in by settlers, after inspection. They have been brought in at Macleol hecause we are only now enforcing the regulations of the older provinces there.

Mr. GIBSON. I think the case so ably defented by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) must have been somewhat defective, as I find Mr. Dyke has been paid $$ 335$ for travelling ie cattle in Englanrl. If Dr. McEachran's services are of such value, why is it necessary to pay Mr. Dyke for looking after these cattle after they have arrived? I notice that gentleman received $$ 1,507$ for travel in Liverpool and $$ 2,10$ for services, also $$ 2,319$ for the distribution of pamphlets, or a total of $$ 6,319$. Then the rent of the office is $$ 1,226$, taxes $$ 268$. or a total of $$ 7,804$. The total expenses of the office at Liverpool last yeur were $$ 10,699$. I desire to ask the Minister if he can explain why Mr. Dyke was required to travel re cattle after they had been thoroughly examined by Dr. McEachian in Montreal?
Mr. CARLING: The expenses to which the hon. gentleman has referred are not all in connection with Mr. Dyke's salary. Some are expenses for publishing pamphlets, for postage, rent of office, fuel and other expenses.

Mr. GIBSON. I find I an quite correct in the figures I have given, because there is an amount for continental postage of $$ 167$; postage amil translating reports of farm clelegates, $$ 499$. I find that the expense of the pamphlets printed in the High Commissioner's office in London amounts to $$ 13,000$. I claim that any man could go from Land's End to John O'Groats and deliver them in person at the rate of $$ 100$ a week, and that there is no reason why this sum of 35,200 should have teen paid. There is an item of $$ 6010$ for postage of pamphlets, in addition to the amount of $$ 2,317$ to which I have referred.

Mr. LISTER. I wish to say to the Minister with regard to this wonderful Dr. McFachran, so lauded by the member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin)-who is a very alle man no doubt, but is nothing like so able a man as he thinks himself to be-that all the work done in Montreal is done by his brother, C. McEachran. While he is out in the North-West looking after the Waldron Ranch in that country, while he is lecturing in the college, of which I believe he is the head, his brother, $C$. McEachran, is doing the work in Montreal, assisted by Mr. Baker. It is very well to laud some particular individual, and make it appear that our whole safety depends on his knowledge and qualifications; but I apprehend that if the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec were canvassed, there would be found other men in the veterinary profession, including professors in the veterinary college, who had as sound judgment as Dr. McEachran, and who, I believe, would be prepared to give their whole time to this business. It is simply ridiculous to employ this gentleman and to allow him to engage two other persons to discharge all the work in his otfice. The Waldron Ranch is a large institution. There are 600 or 700 horses on it, a large amount of money is invested in it, and Dr. McEachran is very deeply interested, and most of his time is, I am told, spent in the North. West looking after his personal interests. If it is neeessary to have such a skilled gentleman constantly on the scene to watch for the dire disease which we all talk about so much, how can the Government spare this man from Montreal for months at a time and leave the work to some one else not nearly so skilled? One of two conclusions must be drawn, either that this person is not necessary in Montreal, or that other men are sutficiently skilled to discharge all the duties of the office.

Mr. MciriRegor. In regard to Dr. McEachran, with whom I am acquainted, I think the Government do well to have such a man in their employ. He is one of the most able veterinary surgeons in Canada to-day, he is one of the very best we have, and as a consulting veterinary surgeon he is firstclass. His brother, Chas. McEachran, is also a good veterinary surgeon, and I know him very well.

Mr. LIster. He is one of the very best.
Mr. McGREGOR. He is a very good one. I know further, that the time given ly Dr. NcFachran to the North.W est is not for any very great perion, his duties lying principally in Montreal. In regard to diagnosis of disease, I am certain we have no better veterinary surgeon than Dr. D. McEachran. We have also his brother Charles there, and I am satistied the work wil! ie thoroughly well done. It is true we might get others to do the work as well, but there would be no great object in changing when we can geta man soeminent as Dr. McEachran. If I did not know the two gentlemen well I would not speak so highly of them. I know then asgentlemen who are first-class veterinary surgeons, and men who are anxious to do their duty to their country.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Did I not understand the member for Cast Grey (Mr. Sproule) to say that he was aware a large number of cattle and sheep were being smuggled into the North-West from the United States?

Mr. SPROULE. I do not know what the hon. gentleman understood, as I am not responsible for his understanding, but I stid that I was informed that such was the case.
Mr. SOMERVILLE. Then I was right in understanding it that way.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman is putting a wrong construction on what I said. I was not aware from my own knowledge, but I said I was informed of it.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Then if the non. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) was informed of it he must have been informed of it some time ago, and he should have told the Government so that the officers would put a stop to it.

Mr. SPROULE. That is what I ann doing now.
Mr. SOMERVILLE. It is late in the day.
Mr. SPROULE. It only lately came to my notice.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The hou. gentleman was lax in discharging his duty, in my opinion. of course neither he nor any of the members on the opposite side of the House believe in smuggling, and it seems to me that he should have informed the Government of this earlier so that he might put a stop to it. It is well known that the cattle in the United States are scheduled, and if disense is smuggled into the country with the cattle, what safety is there for Canadian exporters? Even such an eminent man as Dr. McEachran could not prevent us from being scheduled if disease were smuggled into the country in this way. I see that Mr. J. Lowe was paid for some travel in connection with quarantine. I was not aware that the Deputy Minister of Agriculture was an expert in this matter, and perhaps the Minister can explain what duties he performed.
Mr. SPROULE. I think the hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville) was unfair to me in what he said. I did not say the cattle were smuggled across, but I understood they were driven across-
Mr. LaNDERKIN. Hear, hear.
Mr. SPROULE. I do not know what is the matier with the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) to-night. I wonder is it because that he thinks that noone shouldattempt to say anything on behalf of the farmers or cattle trade except himself. The hon. member for North Brant (Mr. Somerville) says the members on this side are against smuggling, and I presume we are to infer the gentlemen on the other side are in favour of smuggling. I think I did my duty in this matter as any member of this House should do. When it came to my knowledge I informed the Minister of Agriculture. It was only recently that I got the information, and I repeated it again to-night at what I think was a proper opportunity when this subject was unler discussion. I was discharging my duty and I do not think I should be subjected to the unfair criticism levelled at me for so doing.
Mr. SOMERVILLE. It appears to me the hom. member for East (Grey (Mr. Sproule) has not improved his position. He says that the cattle were not smuggled hut driven across, and surely he does not suppose that any oue in this country would for a moment suppose that the Yankees who are smaggling the cattle would carry them across? Certainly they were driven across, but when they were driven across they were smuggled across. Does he suppose they would bring them across in a carpet hag or a Saratoga trunk ?
Mr. SPROULE. I think some of the hon. members opposite could le carried across in a carpet lag.
Mr. BOWELL. My hon. friend from North Brant (Mr. Somerville) need have no fears as to the action the Government hate taken in looking after the smugglers in the North.West. If my hon. friend will apply to the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) he may find out that some people think there is a little too much vigilance there, and that it gives him a great deal of trouble in protecting what he believes to be the interest of the settlers when they cross into Canada. The Government have been alive to the necessity of watching that frontier very closely, and to such an extent that instead of appointing local officers to watch a frontier of some thousands of miles, the Mounted Police have beenstationed from the Rocky Mountains down to Ennerson, and that section of the frontier is patrolled daily by the Police. When cattle are brought across they can usually track them through the prairie grass, and they are either sent back, or, if amuggled, seized and handed over to the customs officers. Everything has been done that can be done in order not only to protect the revenue against this kind of depredation, but in order to prevent the introluction of cattle that might be supposed to be altticted with disease. Whetker they are brought in at the outports, or to the south of Fort Macleod on the St. Mary's River, ani also at Coutt's, a station on the Galt roall, where it connects with the Montana road, officers are there, and no cattle are allowed to come into the country either for settlers or for ranching purposes until they have been thoroughly inspecterl either by a veterinary surgeon or by the collectors at these ports. Every precaution has heen taken by the utilizing of the Mounted Police and the custmms officers, to prevent that which. my hon. friend from East Grey (Mr. Sproule) fears has heen in existence for some years.

IIr. MILLS' (Bothwell). Mr. Chairman, I do not think that the Minister of Militia is quite fair to the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Daly) because he intimates that the hon. member for Selkirk if appealed to would be ready to complain of the vigilance of the customs officers along the frontier. Surely one who is so devoted to the system of protection as the hon. member for Selkirk would not complain of the vigilance of the customs officers? The hon. gentleman has certainly far too much faith in the principles of protection, and the vigilant enforcement of the customs laws to complain of anything in that direction. I could not help noticing the extraordinary defence which the hon. meniber for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) made for the very large payment to Dr. 11. Eachran as veterinary surgeon. The hon. gentleman says that the doctor's services were requirea in the North. West, and he told us of the very great calamity that would befall the inhabitants of this country if there was not one possessing the skill, the vigilance and the devotion of Dr. McEuchran to visit the North-West to prevent diseased cattle being imported from the United States into Canada; yet the Minister of Agriculture spoiled the defence of the hon. gentleman by saying that no cattle were being brought in. The Minister of Agriculture says that Dr. McEachran's services are required at Montreal, and not in the North-West Territories, as there is another party stationed at Fort Macleod, who receives a salary of $$ 1,400$ for the inspection of the cattle that are no longer brought into the country. Dr. Mc Eachran received something like $$ \mathbf{2}, 400$ from the public treasury last year, of which 1 suppose onethird must be for travelling expenses, because we are informed that his salary was about $$ 1,500$ a year. Now, so far as we can learn, Dr. McEachran loes not visit the North-West country except as a member of a certain ranch company and one of its managers, and on this account his services to the company are rejuired, not in Montreal, but in the North-West Territories. Now, has the Minister of Agriculture proposed to the doctor the choice letween his services to the public and his services to the company? Not at all. The Minister intimates that he will not compel the doctor to make that choice ; and yet it is perfectly clear to my mind that the public interest requires that the doctor should either give his time to the discharge of his duties at the point where he is called upon to perform those duties, or he should abandon them altogether and devote himself to the company with which he is associated. I think it was last year that we had complaint made in this House with reference to the conduct of Dr. Mce Eachran in conmection with this ranch company. If I remember rightly, he was charged with violently tearing down the houses of some of the settlers in that district. Is not this the same Dr. McEachran who was so accused? I think it was pretty well established that he attacked the houses of parties who were settled within the limits of the ranch, and who had acyuired interests in the property which they occupied, and did serious injury to those people who had settled there under the anthority of the Government. This conduct on his part goes a long way to show that his devotion to the company is much greater than his devotion to the public service; and if the hon. member for Fast Grey had referred to these dttacks by the doctor upon settlers in that district and had shown the injury which ohe hall done to them and the extent to which he was impeding the settlement of the comutry by spreading insecurity abroad amoug the settlers, he would have done a good deal more towards elucidating the interest of Dr. McEachran' in the North-West than he did by attempting to show that the doctor went there for the purpose of preventing diseased American attle from coming into the country, which the Minister of Agriculture assures us are not coming in. We have the evidence of the Auditor General's Report that another party, anl not Dr. McEachran, is paid for the discharge of that daty in the Territories; and it does seem to me that the House ought to insist on Dr. McEachran making choice between the public duties that devolve upon him at Montreal and the private duties that devolve upon him as a member of the ranch company in the North-West Territories. These two points are too widely separated from each other to admit of the doctor discharging his duties properly in both places. When required in Montreal he may be in the North-West Territories, and when required in the North-West Territories he may be in Montreal. It is pretty clear that the public interest in this matter is likely to suffer from his retention in the post which he now occupies. Certainly, his conduct in attacking the settlers in that particular district shows that he is much more devoted to the interest of the ranch company than he can be to the public interest.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for Buthwell is even more unfair to Dr. McEachran than he is towards the memler for East Grey. He starts first by misrepresenting what the member for East Grey said, and afterwards minimizes the important work which Dr. McEachran has done. I did not say that Dr. McEachran made any trips to the North-West, for the simple reason that I did not know whether or not he was in the habit of going to that ranch, nor did I know whether or not he had any interest in it. But I think the hon. member for Bothwell discloses why he and his friends object so much to Dr. McEachran. There seems to be a sore spot somewhere on account of the work he has been doing in the NorthWest Territories. The hon. member for West Lambton spoke of him trying to keep out of the country a certain infectious disease, I suppose pleuro-pneumonia. If that were the only disease to which animals are liable his duties might be confined to that; but it is well known that animals are liable to almost as many diseases as human flesh is, and therefore the doctor's duties would be as numerous as those of any doctor in his professional practice. But the hon. member misrepresented me in this. I said, in defence of the apparently large salary which Dr. McEachran wasgetting, that it might be that others were employed to do a portion of the work that he was supposed to do. Diseases may break out at the sume time in different parts of the country, and it is impossible for Dr. McEachran to attend to them all ; and, therefore, I presume he must employ others to do his work. Dr. MeEachran is expected to go to any part of the country where diseases break out among animials. I remember his going to Essex to investigate a disease which broke out among the swine, and he has been employed several times in the Maritime Provinces in a similar capacity. I also remember when he was obliged to go to the North-West to examine into diseases supposed to exist in that country. He did his work faithfully and well, and his ability was shown by the result of his investigations and his diagnoses which were correct in every particular. Therefore, he is a suitable man for the work he is doing, and if we do pay him a large salary he is entitled to it.

Mr. IVATSON. Do the Government inspectors pay any attention to diseased animals except those crossing the boundary line?

Mr. CARLING. They do not make inspections except when called upon to do so. But if there is any disease breaking sut, they are at once called upon to make a report to the slepartment, and if the disease has broken out to any great extent we send Dr. McEachran to visit the section of the country himself and consult with the officers there.

Mr. WATSON. A little over a year ago the Manitoba Government passed an Act taking power to appoint local inspectors for Manitoba. Hon. gentlemen opposite have admitted that animals in the North-West Territories are subject to disease. We have found that such is the case. Occisiotiaily there is a car load of horses shipped from British Columbia and the North. West Territories into Manitoba which have carried in disease, and the Manitoba Govemment felt it necessary to pass an Act to take power to appoint local inspectors who would not interfere with the Dominion inspectors. That Act was disallowed by the Dominion Government. Was the Minister of Agriculture consulted in the matter?

Mr. CARIING. I do not think I was consulted, and I do not think I would be in a matter of that kind which is a question of law and policy of the Government.
Mr. WATSON. It appeared to the people of Manitoba that it was very necessary to have such local inspectors because, not only from the west but occasionally from the east-although glanders are not prevalent in Ontario-that disease was imported into the country. It was thought necessary to make a thorough inspection of all animals imported cither from east or west or the international boundary line : and the people of Manitolas thought it was not right that the Government should inter. fere with the Act passed by them for the purpose of protecting the health of the animals. Of course hon. gentlemen know that the disease of glanders springs up very rapidly, and we think the Local Government should be allowed to appoint local inspectors who would have power to inspect all animals coming into the prosince and who would not interfere with the Dominion inspectors.
Mr. DEWVNEE. I do not recollect the Act the hon. gentleman refers to, and I can hardly helieve, if it had leen a question simply of a contagious disease Act passed by the Local Government, that it would have been disallowed, because in the NorthWest Territories they have suchan Act in operation. Only a few days ago I had a letter from one of my constituents stating that four or five horses had leen destroyed under the Act and asking compensation of the Dominion (jovernment.

Mr. WATSON. It was disullowed.
Mr. BOWELL. How long ago :
Mr. WATsON. I think it was disallowed some six months ago. We had an Act there some years ago, but there was an Act passed of recent clate:and disallowed. I do not know whether the Act contained anything more except to provide for the appointment of veterinary surgeons or inspectors, but the Act was disallowed, aud I think that the explanation given by correspondence from the chief veterinary surgeon of that province, Mr. Charles Liddell, who was one of the inspecturs and who corresponded with the Justice Department, was that he thought it necessury such an Act should be in existence in Manitobis.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. We have heard the Minister of Agriculture explain the duties of Dr. McEachran, and the hon. member for East Grey has declared that he is called upon to travel all over the country to perform these duties. By looking at the Auditor (ieneral's Report, the committee will find that Dr. McEachran only paid $$ 59.10$ railway fures during the past year. Now, it must be admitted that if he travelled very much he must have paid a great deal more in railway fares than that. It is therefore evident he travelled very little in Canada last year, and is not entitled to receive all the credit given to him by the hon. Minister to-night and by the hon. member for East Grey, because the Minister has admitted that when he travels on Government work he charges the Government for his fares.

Mr. FLINT. The matter was brought up last session with regard to the gentleman who occupies that office. When I brought up that question last session with regard to the conduct of Dr. McEachran in the matter of the difficulties between the Waldron Ranch Company, of which he is president, and a large number of settlers whose lands were taken away by that company, I was not aware he was then an official of the Government, supposed to be located at Montreal. I produced last session the :nost convincing proofs that the Waldron Ranch Company, or rather Dr. McEachran, its president, who has acted almost solely as the company, had in their treatment of a number of settlers so conducted themselves as to damage the Gorernment of this country in the minds of the settlers, and had shown a disposition which I consider as nothing short of tyrannical and arbitrary in the highest degree. So strong was the case on its own merits that, without any extra difficulty in presenting it to the Minister of the Interior, he very courteously promised that the matters which were then complained of would be looked into ; and, if I understood him correctly early in the session, he informed my hou. friend from North. Wellington(Mr. McMullen) that these matters were in course of adjustmentand that the Government would consider the claims of these unfortunate settlers. I hope that he will be able to settle these mattersso as to undo the unjust, harsh, cruel and arbitrary treatment of these settlers by the Waldron Ranch Company. I would be glad to read some letters which I have received, which have moved my indignation to a high degree. A few poor settlers locating in that distant portion of the country are placed at a great disadvantage in fighting, either in the courts or by petition to the Government, the powerful Waldron Ranch Company, of which Dr. McEachran is president. The tenor of the letters which I have had has given me a very disagreeable opinion of the te:nper and style of this Dr. McEachran, though I do not know him personally. I will read one letter and a portion of another, which will show that he occupies a position of antagonism to some 30 or 40 settlers whom the Government has pronised to indemnify for the injustice they have received at his hands, and I think it is highly uubecoming that this same man should be an otificial of the Dominion Government receiving a large salary. The first letter I have is from Fort Macleol, dated the 3th March, 1892, and signed by Mr. Harry H. Dumbar. He says:

"I wish to make a statement to you of my grievances with the Government and the Waldron Ranch Company, so that, through your kind ness, they may be laid before the House, and probably aid to open the eyes of a now blinded people to the tyranny and corruption of our present Government."
I am prepared to say that the attack of this gentleman on the Government is caused ly the harshness and cruelty of the Waldron Ranch Company, or, in other words, of the man whose case we are now considering, and, if it is in the mind of this man and others that the Giovernment is responsible for their treatment, the Government has only to thank its own official who has instilled this feeling into these people because of the losses and the distress they have been compelled by him to undergo.-
> "In September, 1889, I made application to the land office at Lethbridge to homestead south-east quarter of gection 20 , township 9 , range 28 , slso to purchsse southwest quarter of section 21 , township 9 , range 28 , on which was a suitable place to build. Receiving no reply, I concluded from what information my brothers had received at the land office at Lethbridge that there would be no hindrance to actual settlement. I put up a house on stone foundation, but heard nothing from the land apent till McEachran. in company with Pearce, land commiseioner, came and ordered me with many threats to cease operations. I then in the following July gtarted to cut has, but was forbidden to do 90 by. MicEachran, and as others had been served with injunctions of restraint I knew that I should be likewise dealt with. I was thus obliged to cuit the place. Thoroughly disgusted with this usage, I left the country and went to Washington, United States, and my house was afterwards thrown down by McEschran, returning at the end of a year to find the same state of affairs still existing. Hoping that you and your party may be able to awaken the people to a true knowledge of the settlers'grievances in this township, > "I remain, yours obediently,
> "HARRY H. DUNBAR."
> I am not putting this forward as an absolutely conclusive answer to all that might be said from a strictly legal standpoint on the part of the Waldron Ranch Company, but these are the conclusions come to by an honest, hardworking, laborious and industrious settler as to the way in which he was treated. Hon. gentlemen who were here, and I sappose there are few of them here now, will recollect the circumstances under which this man and his brothers were driven off the land they had taken in 1882. They will recollect that, after the land office had granted them a certificate and they had entered into possession, had dug ditches, erected fences, sown seed, and were seeking to obtain the result of long years of labour, their homestead entry was cancelled at the land office at Lethbridge and they found themselves involved in a lawsuit and in an enormous bill of costs, and under that situation they were compelled to throw themselves entirely upon the mercy of the Government. The Government promised to consider their hard situation and to give them lands elsewhere in lien of the lands they had, which had been granted over their heads tothe Waldron Rancls Company. Iam not seeking to enter into the legal or equitable learings of the dispute between these people and the Waldron Ranch Company, but I think it is improper that a man occupying the position of president or manager of that company should le continued in the position of an officer of the Government when he is in direct antagonism to a large number of settlers. Last year we quoted extracts from two newspapers published at or near Fort Macleod, which generally support the Government, but which oljected to the Waldron Ranch Company and their dealings with the settlers. They contended, as I do now, that that company's dealings with the settlers has disturbed the minds of those settlers as to their safety in settling on their lands after they had taken all the steps which they were expected to take, and when some of them were driven from their land, had their houses torn down and were unable to obtain any redress. I have another letter in my possession from one of these complainants, and, as it is more formal than the one I have read, I will read a few passages of it for the information of the committee. This letter is signed by Anthony Dixon, and is dated Porcnpine Hill, 4th February, 1892 :
"Learning you are taking an interest in this Waldron business and glad to know that we have a friend who will try and protect the grieved settlers, I will let you know m. grievances.
. I have been in this country ten years this spring and living within twenty miles of Macleod ever since I came. I left my father's house on the 25th of March, 1882, and was engaged for two years to work in the Indian Department in the North. West ; it was the Superintendent of Indian Afrairs whom I engaged with. There were twenty of us came out at the same time all engaged for the same purpose. My father settled in the County of lork, in the township of Etobicoke, over forty years ago. He was a farmer, he had seven sons, they all have the same occupation at present in that locality except myself. My father died in 1882, four months after I left home. My mother still lives on the old homestead within six miles of Toronto. (My father came from England aged seventytwo Fears). My ranch was taken up in 1889 and has been continuously oocupied ever since. I purchased it from the Rev. McKay in the spring of 1885 for the sum of $$ 500$ and occupied it ever since undisturbed until July last. I have about 100 bead of atock to provide for, principally cattle. I will write $30 u$ a copy of what I sent to Jas. McMullen, M. P. and I also sent one to the Minister of the Interior as follows:-
"I am and have been a settler on the Waldron lease for the past six years, and have held in undisturbed possession thereon 320 acres of land until July last, when I was served, at the instance of Dr. McEachran, the manager of the Waldron lesse, with a writ of injunction regtraining me from ant enjoy nents of aaid land. This injunction has been the mean's of putting me to serious loss and inconvenience in the following manner: (1.) That I hare been prevented from improving my land by fenciog, I having, at the tiane, my fields in crop and only half fenced when the injanction was served, therebs causing considerable loss ty my crop owing to the cattle getting in and partially destiosing it. (2.) That I could not cut hay on what I considered, and do now consider my own land, thereby causing me extra trouble and expense in procuring the same for my cattle during the winter. If it had not been formy cousin haring a ranch about two and a third miles from me, and being able to buy hay from him. I should either have had to sell my stoek or else get hay about twenty miles from my ranch which would have been utterly impossible for me to do, owing to want of means. (3.) I have lost very seriously sofar this winter, and the cattle, especially calves, have suffered greatly for the want of more buildings which I intended building last fall, for the calves have to be taken up and fed and properly housed during the cold weather. (4.) That I hare, on previous occasions, gone to Macleod ( 60 miles each time) in connection with this injunction, and that Dr. McEachran failed to appear, causing me a loss of money and time, and leaving me in a bad position, as I am completely tied down and cannot do anything. Dr. McEachran and Mr. Pearce, the Government surveyor, called at my ranch a year ago last summer and looked at my stakes. I asked Mr. Pearce at the time, in the presence of Dr. McEachran, how many acres of land I conld hold, and he told me 320 acres. Mr. Pearce then asked Dr. McEachran if he had anything to say, and hedistinctly answered no. And everything was very satisfactory to all parties at that time. In my opinion, the main cause of that writ of injunction being served on me, was simply owing to the fact of my haring refused to comply with his wishes regarding a piece of fencing which I was going to put up on my own land as a protection to my own crop and hay. I consider what loss and damage I have sustained through this injunction being serred on me up to the present time to be about $$ 1,20$. Trusting you will give this your attention and kind consideration." Now, I am not going to enlarge upon this matter, but I had no other opportumity to bring it forward unless I did so on some formal resolution. I have done so in the interests of these settlers, and I shall rely upon the promise nade by the Minister of the Interior that their grievances, and their losses and injuries will be looken into and considered, and that the Government will give them that indemnity which their case demands for the unfortunate position they have been placed in, owing to the negotiations letween the Giovernment and the Valdron Ranch Company, of which Dr. McEachran is president. I think the whole story shows that that gentleman camot be very actively employed in the duties of his office in Montreal or Quebec, and that he has abundant time, it appears, to manage the affairs of a large and wealthy corporation, as well as attending to ton much litigation in connection with the difficulties letween the ranch and the settlers. I trust this discussion will induce the (iovernment, or the proper department, to take a deeper interest in this matter than they appear to have done in the past, and that out of it all some measure of justice may be vouchsafed to those poor settlers.

Mr. SPROULE. I want to say a word in reference to what the hon. gentleman said about Dr. McEachran's travelling. He said he could not have travelled much if he only drew $\$ 59$ for travelling expenses. If he will look on page $B-231$ he. will see charges: Pullmans, $\$ 10$; cabs, 83. . Go over to the next page and he will find there : fares, $3110 .\left({ }^{-}\right)$; pullmans, $\$ 29.25$; cabs, $\$ 48.50$, so that the hon. member was not exactly correct.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. The item that I mentioned was for travel in the United States when he went there on special business in November, 21 days at $$ 20$ a day.

Mr. SPROULE. Less his salary.

Mr. SOMERVILLE. Then in addition are the items the hon. gentleman has mentioned, and also the items of board, $$ 196.10$, and telegrams, 4) cents. When 1 referred to his travelling, I was discussing a matter that had been discussed by the Minister of Agriculture and the member for East Grey as to the duties which Dr. McFachran performed in Canada, not with reference to the duties which he performed in making this visit to the United States, which was a special visit and for which he was paid specially, 8332.50 more than his salary of $$ 1, \overline{0}(1)$ which he received, and he was paid hesides all his travelling expenses, pullnancurs, cab-hire, board, &c., amounting to $$ 196.10$. The hon. member for (irey will see that I was perfectly consistent in saying that Dr. McEachran only travelled to the extent of $$ 59.10$ for fares in Canatla. The hon. gentleman can verify my statement by referring to page 231-B of the Auditor (ieneral's Report.

Mr. DALY. I wish to reply to a remark of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Watson), and to give some information to that hon. gentleman and to the Honse. I will simply confine myself to the question of the disallowance by the Dominion Government of an Act of the Local Legislature in reference to the diseases of animals. In 1890 the Manitoba Legislature passel an Act respecting the diseases of animals, and the reasons of the Dominion fiovernment. I presume, for disallowing that Act, were that it contravened the British North Americia Act, as the subject of quarantine is exclusively within the jurisdiction of the Dominion Government under sub-section 11 of section 91 of that Act. My recollection is that the disallowance of that Act was solely on account of its contravention of that provision, guarantine being elearly without the jurisdiction of the Dominiun (iovernment. In reference to the inspection of animals I may say the Govermment of Manitoba have a thorough system, and a thorough organization for the inspection of animals. In every elistrict, or every county, there is an official for that purpose, and they have taken every possible means to stamp out any disease that may occur. I am sure that so far as the Dominion fiovernment is concerned, in their disallowance of this Act, they had no desire to interfere with any matter that was clearly within the juriseliction of the Iegislature of Manitoba. But when that Iegislature sought to legislate in regard to quarantine and interfere with the jurisdiction of the Dominion Parliament, the Act necessarily had to be disallowed.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. member stated that we had a system of inspection in Manitoba, but that it was done by veterinary surgeons who could only be obtained occasionally; when they are required. The Local Government undertook to appoint provincial inspectors, to attend to the inspection of all animals coming into the province. They had to visit every point on the Canarlian Pacific Railway where cattle crossed the boundary line going into the North.West Territories, and certain points east of Winnipeg. The member for Selkirk must agree that, whether this enactment was within the jurisdiction of the Province of Manitoba or not, and whether it was necessary for the Dominion (iovernment to disallow it because it was ultra cirex, it was a wise protection on the part of the Manitolua Government to pass such a measure and to enforce such inspection, and it would have been well if the Act could have been kept in force.

Mr. DALY. The Act has been re-enacted with the objectionable clause left out. The provision for district veterinary surgeons is still in force.

Unorganizerl Quarantine service.. ..... 32,000
Mr. SOMERVILLE. The expenditure under this rote last year was 832.40. How does it occur that $\mathbf{S O}_{2}^{2},(001$ is asked?

Mr. CARLIN(: It is to have funds with which to adopt protective measures in case of any disease breaking out.

Mr. LANDERKIN. How many immates are there in the lazaretto at Tracadie?

Mr. CARLING. Twenty-two.
Mr. LANDERKIN. Are there less than last year?

Mr. CARLING. During the year there have been three or four admissions, and three or four leaths have occurred, and the number remains abont the same.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Is this the only grant given to the institution:

Mr. CARLING: Yes, st, a 0 on .
Mr. LANDERKIN. Is any aid given by the Local Government:

Mr. CARLING. No.
Mr. ILANDERKIN. Who has charge of the institution?

Mr. CARLING. The Sisters of Sit. Joseph; there is also a physician and a chaplain in connection with it.

Lachine Canal. . 8175,000
sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is being done in regard to the Lachine Canal, aul for what purpose is this rote intended :

Mr. HAGGART. This amount is for locks and bridges and works to secure the depth required for ressels drawing 14 feet of water, whereas at present the canal is only adapted for 12 feet navigation. In order to complete the enlargement to 14 feet, the deepening of the canal will be required for six and one-half miles. This will involve the purchase of land on which the excavated material can be deposited, and in order to avoid claims for damages owing to the low-lying land in the neighbourhood of the canal being inundated, for which in the past the Government has paill heary compensation, it is desirable there should be an open drain constructed at the foot of the canal slope to carry off the water. It will carry the water to River St. Pierre, which will communicate with the St. Lawrence. The River St. Pierre will require to be deepened to the St. Lawrence. The land for the drain has to be purchased. For the purpose of constructing the canal entrance, the town of Lachine has been cut off, and the adjacent lands have been subjucted to flooding from the river. To carry off the water and afford a regular discharge, a covered sewer 6,000 feet long is to be built from Lachine to the proposed canal, the land being furnished at the cost of the town. Wellington street at Montreal is crossed by two bridges, one a highway bridge, and the other a railway britge. The opening for the passage of yessels is only 46 feet wide, while the navigable depth is 15 feet. It is proposed to replace those bridges and build a highway bridge with four carriage tracks and two sidewalks, and increase the width to 60 teet for the passage of vessels, and make it navigable to a depth of 18 feet. The sum of $$ 175,000$ is necessary for the purpose of carrying out these works.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Did I understand the Minister to say that there would be 18 feet depth of water in the basin:

Mr. HAGGART. From Wellington basin to Montreal harbour.

Sir RICHARI) CARTWRICHHT. What amount of land do you propose to icçuire for dumping purposes?

Mr. HAG(iART. It is for land on which to pile material taken out of the canal to a depth of 14 feet, and for the ditching.

Sir RICHARI) CARTWRIGHT. How much land will he reguired for the purpose, and what price are the Government going to pay for it.

Mr. HA(iliART. About 30 acres will be taken for the ditching.

Sir RICHARI) CARTWRIGHT. And for the mere purpose of dumping.

Mr. HAGGART. It will include the dumping.
Sir RICHARD CARTURIGHT. What will be the price paid:

Mr. HAGiGAR'T. The cost of the land will be over $\mathbf{3} 36,000$.

Lake St. Louis $\qquad$ . 335 , 1 (xi)
Mr. HAG(iART. This is forteepening thechannel between the shoals above and below the lighthouse, to give 14 feet depth of water.

Soulanges Canal
Sir RICHARD CARTIVRIGHT. For what is this sum to be expended?

Mr. HAGGiART. It is for the purpose of constructing the canal that will take the place of the old Beauharnois Camal. The estimated expenditure is $5,7: 00,000$. The expenditure alrealy male is $$ 11,304$. The estimated expenditure up to the 30th June will be about $\mathbf{$ 8 8 , 0 0 0}$.

Mr. GIBSON. Have any of the contracts been awarded on this canal?

Mr. HAGGART? Yes, two of them. One to O'Brien & Co. of Montreal, and the other section to Mr. (ioodwin, of Ottawa. They were the lowest teuderers in loth cases.

Mr. DEVLIN. How many tenders were received, might I ask?

Mr. HAGGART. Eighteen tenders were received for both of them.

Mr. GIBSON. Would you be kind enough to tell us the number of that section that went to Goodwin, and the number that went to $O^{\circ}$ Brieu?

Mr. HAGGART. Goolwin's is the lowest section, I think, No. 11, and O'Brien's section is the one next to that in which the guard lock is proposed to be.

Mr. McMULLEN. What is the length of this canal?

Mr. HAGGART. About thirteen miles, I think.
Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). What is the length of the Beauharnois Canal?

Mr. HAGGART. About the same length, I think.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It does seem to me rery extraorlinary that we should begin to build a camal on the north side of the river when there is one already on the other side, and that we should incur an expenditure of upwards of $\mathbf{S} 4,($ (MO) ,(NO), which will simply le to do what is already done by the existing canal. One would think that were the subject fully considered before the camal was located in the first instance, and a very large sum expended on that camal, that looking at the amount of shipping on the st. Lawrence that passes there, there will be nothing in the alrantage, whatever it may lee on the north side of the river, in the new camal, to compensate for this very large expenditure of money. Certainly if we were ont of deht and quite free from taxation, and in a very prosperens condition, the expenditure of so large a sum of money for such in undertaking might be justified. hut when we look at the amount of commerce upon the St. Lawrence and the little difference there can be hetween these two camals for commercial purposes, it iloes seems to me a great waste of public money, and I do not think the public opinion of this lominion at the present time, considering our very high rate of taxation, will justify this expenditure. It is to be regretted that this expenditure should be commenced now. I need not repeat what has been said a dozen times this session with reference to our losing our population, but the fact stares us in the face that we are losing not ouly all the immigration that is coming here, but more than half our natural increase of population lesides. I do not see how the devermnent can expect to retain the pupulation of this country when such heary burdens are imposed upon the people for enterprises which are really so profitless in themselves. If we were without a means of water commmication altogether, and the question was at the present time. Whether there shomh lee a canal or no canal at all, then the expenditure might be warranted, but when you have an existing chamel of commanication adequate for our present purposes, it does seem to me a great waste of public money and a very unwise comrse to pursue at this moment.

Mr. MoMCLIEFS. I think it would be well that we should consider this whole matter. It is to be regretted that this work should have been commenced at all until its necessity was fully and clearly decided upon. It is well known two-thirds of the grain shipped from the west is unloaded at Kingstom, aud put into harges, and run down through the canals to Montreal to be there transferred to ocem-going vessels. If we should be able to ship grain at Port Arthur and send it direct to Liverponl, it would lee necessary that we should have an improved service so as to accommodate ocean-going ressels, but I do not think it is the intention to adopt that system of transport in the near future. When we consider that railways are now constructedin all parts and operated so cheaply, and that the canal service is growing less in every country of the world, even in the United States where it is ouly kept open for the sake of competition to railways, we must come to the conclusion that this is a very unwise expenditure now. If we could deepen the old canal I think it would be much better. There may be engineering ditficulties in the way of this, but this beginning of the new canal with an anticipated expenditure of an enormous amount of money, looks to me as an unnecessary and imprudent undertaking in our present financial condition.

Mr. HAGGART. The polity of deepening the canals was decided upon a number of years ago, and in furtherance of that policy there has been an expenditure in the neighbourhood of $\$ 27,040,0 \mathrm{MM}$. In orter to complete the st. Lawrence canal system, so as to give a depth of 14 feet, length of lock $2 \bar{\circ}$ feet, and $4 . \bar{f}$ feet wide, to accommolate vesseis of $1, \bar{\sigma}(x)$ or $1,8(0)$ tons, it will require $S(10,-$ (NA),(MO). The reason for selecting the north shore was, that the deepening of the canal on the south shore to 14 feet would require a greater expenditure than it would to build a new canal on the north shore. The estimated cost of increased expenditure for deepening the ohd canal and making it as efficient as the new camal would be a million dollars more than the construction of the new canal.
Sir RICHARD CARTWRIt:HT.• Who supplied these estimates?

Mr. HagGaRT. Mr. Mumo, the engineer, ame his staff. I have a comparison here of the cost of enlarging the eld canal on the sonth shore, and the construction of the new canal on the north shore and 1 will read it if the hon. gentleman wishes. On the north shore the estimated cost of a seven-lock line from Valleytield is Sis, $(x)$,(w) 0 . Another plan on the south side is for a seven-lock line with its terminus at Kuight's Point, at at total cost of Sī, 4.00, (MM).
Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Does that follow the bed of the ohd canal?

Mr. HAGliART. One follows the hed of the old canal with its entrance at Valleyfield, and the other has its entrance at Knigit's Point, a couple of miles above Valleytield. The estimated cost of the north shore camal, inclucling the cost of right of way, is $5, \pi, \pi, 0000$.

Mr. Momullen. Has the right of way been purchased for the entire line?

Mr. HAG(iART. There is only a portion purchased yet, as the expenditure on the canal, last year, was only $$ 11,000$ or $$ 12,010$.

Mr. MeMULLEN. Has the hon. gentlemam any inlea of what the right of way is going to cost per acre:

Mr. HagliaRt. I cannot say exactly, but the estimate is in the neighbourhood of $5=10$ an acre.
Mr. gibson. While I an opposed to this expenditure generally speaking, I think it is better to build a new canal than to enlarge the old one. There are a good many ditticulties in the way of deepening the old canal. Its construction was a political mistake in the first place, and there is no reason why the (iovermment should continue that mistake. Moreover, we find from the estimates of the engineers that this new canal will be built for some 3550,000 less, to say nothing of the impracticability of increasing the depth of the old canal.
Mr. SCRIVER. It is very easy for the hon. gentleman and the hon. Minister of Railways to say that the construction of a canai on the south shore in the first place was a political mistake. My memory goes back to the time when that selection was made, and I state unhesitatingly and withont fear of coutradiction that the selection was made as the result of a careful engineering examination of both sides of the river. I am sorry that the hon. memler for Beanharnois (Mr. Bergeron) is not in his place to-night to discuss this matter a little further. His constituents are much more interested than mine ; but I must say that many of the statements he made on a previous occasion, which were the result of careful study and investigation of the guestion, were not satisfactorily answered by the how. Nimister of Railways. It has not been shown that the existing canal on the south shore is not amply adequate to supply all the demands made ly the trade of the country, and we have no reason to suppose that it will not be adequate to meet those demands for some time to come. There is a general disposition to assume that the people on the south shore of the river are satistied with the policy of the Government with regard to this matter. They are not satistied that the engineer who was chatged with the examination of the alleged ditticulties in the way of deepening the camal on the south shore made that careful and thorough examination which the circumstances required. and the action of the Covernment with regard to this matter will canse intense dissatisfaction to all the people on the south shore of the St. Lawrence in that part of the Province of Quebec.

Curnwall Canal

sir RICHARI) CARTWRIGHT. What is this rote for?

Mr. HAgi(iART. With the exception of the superstracture of three roal bridges and other small works, all is reguired to finish the deepening of the camal to 14 feet. This amount is required to pay for the works under contract to be executed during the years 1892 and 1893 .

Nir RICHARD CARTURIGHT. How much has been expemied up to date?

Mr. HAGliART. The estimated cost of the whole is $\mathbf{S},(1 \times n,(0) M$. The total expenditure to date is $5,9,2, s, 5$; and the amount required to complete is $32.04 \%, 1+2$.

Mr. Gilbson. Can the Minister say how much of this is going towarts blasting the chamnel?

Mr. HAGOART. The alvisability of abandoning the blasting, which is being done by Gilbert & Sons, and substituting a dam at Sheiks"s Island in place thereof, is under the consideration of the department. We are taking a vote of 8100,000 for that purpose in case the engineering staff should think it preferable.

Sir RICHARI) CARTWRI(iHT. I would like to know about what will the deepening of the St. Lawrence Canals cost altogether:
Mr. HAdiGART. The deepening of the river will cost $\mathrm{S}^{-}(0),(0) 0$. The Galops Canal and the Rapide Plat will cost $\$ 1,700,000, \$ 1,600,000, \$ 30$,$0(0)$ and $8(600,0(0)$. That iucludes the Gialops Canal and the rapids outside, the Rapide Plat Canal, and the river above Farran's Point Canal, and the Farran's Point Canal. The estimated cost of the Cornwall Canal is $\$ 4,000,(100)$, the St. Lawrence Camal $84,-500,000$, and the Lachine Canal $87,800,000$; altogether close on $320,000,000$. There has heen expended on the Galops Canal and Rapide Plat, Farran's Point, $81,350,04$; on the Cornwall Canal $\$ 2,19{ }^{-},-$ 900 ; on the soulanges Cianal about $\mathbf{E l 0 0}, 000$ : on the Lachine Canal $8(6,549,2(1)$. I will give you the total estimaterl cost from Lake Superior down to Montreal. The total estimated cost of all these improvements, including the Sault Canal, will be $343,000,0000$, the amount expended on which is 327 ,465,(00), leaving the completing of the St. Lawrence and the Siult Ginal in the neightourhood of S 15, , OOO, (MO).

Rapide Plat

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Where is that?
Mr. HAGGiART. Just below the Galops Camal at Morrisbarg.

Sir RICHARI) CARTWRIGHT. In that a very large proportion is revote. What works are to be carried ont there?

Mr. HAGGART. $8230,0(0)$ is required to pay for the works to le executed luring the year 1sor-9:. The appropriation of $1891-92$ was $亡(4)(N),(A X)$, the amount expended is $\mathrm{S} 2(1), O(N)$ and the amount required to finish is 8200,0 on). There are two docks. The one at the upper end is completed.

St. Lawrence River Canal.......... S $\sin 0,1 \mathrm{nn}$

Sir RICHARD CARTWRICHT. How is this to be expended and where?

Mr. HAGGART. This work consists in the formation of a chamnel 33 feet long and $2(x)$ feet winle. of it sufticient depth to allow ressels drawing 14 feet of water to pass safely. The contractors are Gilbert & Sons. The sum of Sl(O), (MN) will be required for work done in the new chamel, including settlement with the contractors. It is right opposite the dialops Camal and is the alternate plan proposed by Mr. Page, it cut in the river itself.

Nir RICHARD CARTWRIAHT. Is that the particular section in which there was some statement to the effect that the rocks had been dumped back:

Mr. HAG(iARTT. Yes. The information I have from the engineer is that some parts of the chamel were not to the depth they were formerly reported to be. It was alleged by the contractor that some of the material he was ordered to spoil in a particular place was washed in again, and I ordered a new servey to be made to timd out the facts of the case. The contractors wete (iillert di Sons of Montreal.

Murray Canal  S60, (004)

Sir RICHARI) CARTIWRIGHT. What is this for?

Mr. HAGGART. To settle with the contractor who built the stone hasin, and to buikl i bridgetender's house and wharves and mooring posts, and also for stone masonry and rip-rapping, and 57,000 for contingencies.

Sir RICHARD CARTIWRICHT. What report has the hon. gentleman as to the position of that?

Mr. HAGGART. The report is that it has worked very well. There are 11 feet of water there now, and the arerage depth is 11 feet unless at extreme low water, when it is $10 . t$ feet.
Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Any trouble with slides:
Mr. HagGart. No.

Sir RICHARI CARTWRIGHT. What were the receipts for tolls on that canal last year"

Mr. HA(i(iART. I think the hon. gentleman will find that in the Auditor Generals Report.

Sir RICHARD GARTIVRICHTT. Is there any alteration in the tariff for the appointment of bridgekeepers and others on that canal or does that remain unaltered: What is the expense of keeping this canal up.
 repairs.

Sir RICHARD (ARTIVRI(HT. I find the tolls received amounted to 5796.52 . Does the hon. gentleman expect any considerable increase in the tolls: Because to expend $$ 12, \mathrm{~B}(\mathrm{~K})$ on maintenance able investment.

Mr. HAGiGART. I do not think the Government want to he recouped in a direct mamer from the canals. The adrantages are all indirect.

Sir RICHARI) CARTIVRIGHT. But that seems an excessively small return.

Trent Canal.... ........................... $374,0(1)$
Sir RlCHARD CARTWRIGHT. I think we ought to know what the hon. gentleman is groing to do with this rote, and what he is going to do with the Trent system altogether.

Mr. HAriraART. The $$ 74,(K)$ is to be spent on a lock hetween Lakefield and Balsam Lake.

Mr. DAWSON. I should like to know what duties Mr. A. F. Wool performed during the 69 days he was emploved by the department apparently in raluing damages on this canal. I find here his services for 69 days at $$ 10$; living allow. ance, 11 days at 83 , and 61 days at $$ 3.50$, and $I$ find that the amount of ramages paid only came to $$ 2.556$, although the cost of valuating amounted to $51,092.73$, and the legal expenses to $$ 819$. The cost of valuing appears to have been $$ 1,912$, while the damages assessed were only $$ 2,556$. I would like to know how many lots were ralued, and whether any more work was done by Mr. Wood than the valuation of the lands owned by persons whose names appear on page C-89 of the Auditor General's Report. I should also like to know if this Mr. A. F. Wood is the member representing North Hastings in the Provincial Legislature.

Mr. HAGGART. I think he is the same gentleman. I suppose the reason for the arbitrator's fees and the legal expenses being so large is the great number of claims that were put in which were not large in amount. There might be one for $$ 8$ or $$ 10$, or for $$ 0$ or $$ 60$, and no doubt the legal expenses would almost come to a half of the amount of the damages awarded.

Mr. DAWSON. Does Mr. Wood render any statement of his disbursement for living expenses, because $$ 3.50$ a clay is rather excessive?

Mr. HAGGART. That is the regular allowance.

Mr. DAWSON. l)oes he render a statement of his travelling expenses?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.
Mr. DAWSON. I also see that he received 591.75 in connection with the Tay Canal, and that the damages awarded there amounted to $$ 189$. He is evidently a favourite.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I sinould like to hear what policy the hon. gentleman intends to pursue in regatel to the construction of this Trent Camal. All kinds of statements have been made in regard to it, but, if 1 can judge by the estimates now put before us, the hon. gentlemen do not propose to go on with the construction of the Trent Camal at all, hecause it is absurd to suppose that Sit, (OM) is sufficient to enable them to go on with the work of the character which was stated to us a few years ago. I think it is abont time that the Minister told us the intention of the Government in regard to this camal, becanse it is clear that these sums of 500,010 . $860,(0)$ or $570,(M N$, if they are not absolutely thrown away, cammot be turned to practical account in the way of carrying out this seheme of navigation.

Mr. HAGiGAR'T. The policy of the (iwemment is the same as it always was in regard to this work. The reason why a larger anome is not asked for now is that the revenuc of the country is not such as to justify the (iovernment in asking for anthority to expend more money on this work at present, but the Govermment hopes to have a better opportunity in the future in that respect.

Sir RICHARD) CARTWRIGHT. That is not rery satisfactory. This has lieen groing on for eleven years. There have been half a dozen com. missions appointed and there have been a dozen promises made whenever an election was coming on, and it :ppears to me that the only reason for this small expenditure being asked now is to enable the Govemment still to hold out this as a bait before the three or four constituencies that are supposed to be interested in the Trent Valley Camal. The Government stated that they had a rather extensive report on this canal made by some gentlemen who were employed three or foul years ago to report in reference to it, anl, if now all the Govemment can say is that they take this vote in order to dangle the bait again before the eyes of the constituencies, I think the electors will he even more gullible than usual if they place any more faith in the Trent Valley Canal.

Mr. GIBSON. On what basis were the damages awarded by Mr. Wood? I find the expenses amounted to $51,092.73$, and the whole of the damages amounted to only $\leqslant 2,5 \% 1$. It seems to me that the expenses of this man are out of all proportion to the work he did.

Mr. HAGGiAR'T. The only explanation I can give to the hon. gentleman is the one I gave a short time ago, that these damages, in a great many cases, would be comparatively trifling ; and the cost of assessing them: and the legal extenses incurrerl to find out whether the party is entitled to the amount, may, as the hon. gentleman said, amount to nearly one-half the amount of damages.

Mr. GIBSON. There were twenty-two persons awarded damages, and it took him 69 days, or a little over three days for each person to make the enquiry, and his expenses in connection with the adjudication of these cases came to just about half the amount of the damages.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman forgets that there may be four or five times as many cases examined as are reported upon by Mr. Wood, and Mr. Haggart.
these claims may remain umpail. He gets his pay for the work that he does and when his work is done. The titles hare to lee enguired into and reported upon ly legal authority, and many of these people who were claiming dimages may not have received them.

Mr. GIBson. The Minister must have overlorked the fact that in allition to Mr. Wool's charges for valuation, there were some $s 8(0)$ paid for legal expenses for looking into these titles. Then Mr. Wooll was paid sl, itis in addition to the legal expenses.

Mr. DAlision. I would like to ask what the Trent Valley Commission are doing:

Mr. HAlidiART. They were appointed 3 years aso. I suppose their report has leen mate to the department. and full information has heen laid hefore the Honse 2 or 3 years ago.

Mr. DAWson. The Minister ought to be in a pasition to give some information with reference to such at large expenditure.

Mr. HAlifiART. I have not even had time to real the report yet.

Mr. DAWNON. What is the object of the emmmissiom: What are they engaged in doing now"

Mr. HAGidART. They are not doing anything; their commission has expired.

Mr. PATERNON (Brant). (am the Minister state what length of navigation they have in that Trent Valley canal altogether now:
IIr. HAtiliART. ise miles.
Mr. PATERsON (Bramt). What is the total expenditure on this work? What depth of water is there in that canal?

Mr. HAlidiART. It is intended for a five foot and a half navigation. The appropriation for 1891 92 is $\leq i t$, onn. The total expenditure up to the 30th June, 1891, has been Si68, 139, which toes not inclurle the appropriation of the $5,4,(n)$ ) for 1891 ? 2 . Of this there has been expended only S , (MKO. sid, (NA) is a revote.
sir RICHARI) CARTWRIGHT. Practically, all work has been suspended on it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How much of that is constructed work, and is in canal!

Mr. HACi(iART. It is not likely there is any constructed canal. The reaches between the different places are filled with water by putting dams across and raising the depth of the water. I do not think any sections of it are quite completed yet. The expenditure has been principally for land damages, and for erecting dans to cause the depth of water, and for locks.

Sir RICHARD CARTURIGHT. What is the expenditure on the canal?

Mr. HAG(iART. $s+$, M( $)$ for staff, and $$ 3,0 \times 0$ for repairs. This is for capital expenditure alone, and it is new work proposed to be built, an extension of the system.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How much of an extension does the Minister expect to accomplish ly this amount?

Mr. HAG:GART. A good deal of work is done hetween Lakefield and Palsam Lake, but there are some dans to be put in, and the length of navigation which it makes is $17 \frac{3}{4}$ miles.

Sir RICHARI)(ARTWRIGHT. This 58 miles, is it all in one piece, and where does it extend from?
Mr. HAgidaRT. It extends from Trenton to Frankford. There is a section from Frankford to Hoard's Creek; another section from Hoard's Creek to Heeleys Falls : another section from Heeley's Falls to Peterlorough ; another from Peterborough to Lakefield: another from Lakefield to Balsam Lake : another from Balsam Lake to Lake Simcoe : another from Lake simcoe to Couchiching; and another from that point to Machedash Bay. The narigable portions of it are from Frankford to Hoard's Creek, from Helecy's Falls to Peterborough, and from Laketield to Balsam Lake.
Sir RICHARD ('ARTIWRICHT. Sone of these are together. How many miles of continuous navigation is there in any one place, apart from Lake sime ese"
Mr. HAMiliART. Fifteen miles is the longest piece narigable.
Sir RICHAR1) CARTIVRIGHT. What is the total length of the whole camal, and what will he the cost when it is completed so as to give a five foot navigation:
Mr. HAFigart. One estimate by Mr. Page is Sa.(nN), (OK), and there is another ly Mr. Rubidge of $\Delta x, \dot{O}(x),(M K)$. We remember that the hon. gentleman who represented North Victoria last session criticised these figures severely, and said the work could he done for about one-half these figures.
Sir PICHARI CARTWRII:HT. I understand
 Stan), (wo have been expended. Is that what the hon. gentleman says?

Mr. HAGGART. Sia.omm.

sir RICHARI) CARTWRIGHT. In all prohability at equal speed in the course of a(x) years the Trent Valley navigation will he completed. Could not the dovermment hurry up this work a little? It appears to me that this Trent Valley undertaking has become a regular farce, and when we find that $\mathrm{B},(10 \mathrm{~N})$ is the total amount expended in one year, and that the longest stretch of narigation is ifteen miles, it is time for some policy to le decided upon, either that the amount shall disappear from the Fstimates and the annomeement be made that it is not the intention of the Govermment to build the canal, or that the Government shall proceed with the work and carry it out, if it he a work of public utility.
Mr. (AMPBELL. I see ly the Auditor (ieneral's Report that this commission has been a very expensive body. Eath commissioner receives $$ 2{ }^{2} 1$ per day and a living allowance of $$ 3$ to S. per day and travelling expenses. Have the commissioners finally completed their labours, and have they reported:

Mr. HAGiGART. The report was presented six months ago : it is printed and distributel.
Mr. CAMPBELLL. What has been the total cost of the commission and report:
Mr. Hagigakt. The whole evidence has not yet been rereived.
Sir RICHARI) CARTWRIGHT. How many miles above Trenton does navigation begin?

Mr. hatigart. it miles.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then there is a stretch of how many miles:

Mr. HAGGART. 103 miles to Campbellford.
sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Then how much remains unimproved?

Mr. HAGGART. About is miles that are not navigable.

Mr. PATERNON (Brant). Is this amount to be expended in getting towards the outlet in order that we may have through tratfic on the canal:

Mr. HAGGART. It is to be expended between Lakefield and Balsam Lake.
Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do you mean to start to push the work at one end, as this is intended to be a through route? Is it intended to start near Trenton with this money anl work so as to have a complete system, and construct a through waterway $\because$ At present it is being built in sections inland. Is this expenditure to be made at one end ?

Mr. HAGGART. I could not tell the hon. gentleman.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). When is it the intention to begin at one end of the work ?

Mr. HAGGART. It is not decided yet.
Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This work has been going on many years, and if it is in the pulb. lic interest it should be taken hold of in a business-like manner and pushed forward. The hon. Minister will admit that a great public work like this should not lie used for ulterior purposes at election times. It should either be prosecuted if in the interest of the cotntry, or it should be dropped. If it is to be pushed forward work should le commenced at one end in order that some beneficial results may be derived from it. What is the nature of the traffic on the completed portion and what good purpose is at present served by the canal?

Mr. HUGHES. I may perhaps explain this matter, as I am thoroughly acquainted with the route. Between Balsam Lake and Cameron Lake there is a lock. Between Cameron and Sturgeon there is a lock. Het ween Sturgeon and Pigeon there is a lock. Through Pigeon and Buckhorn there is a water stretch. Then there is a lock between Buckhorn and Deer, another between Deer and Lovesick, and locks between Lovesick and Stony Lake. Then there is a water stretch through Stony and Clear to Young's Point, where there is a lock. Then the river is navigable to Lakefield, in all a direct navigable stretch upwards of 75 miles, or, including all the lakes, upwards of 150 miles. A canal will have to lee constructed connecting Lakefield with Peterhorough. At the present time steainers can run from Peterborough to Heeley's Falis above Campbellford. The river is navigable with locks, one being a couple of miles below Peterborongh. There is a stretch through Otonabee River and Rice Lake to Hastings. There is a lock at Hastings. The river is again navigable to Heeley's, between which point and Campbellford, a distance of about $\bar{j}$ miles, the river is not navigable. Some time ago a deputation waited on the Minister of Railways and Canals, and although the Government had not yet completed their plan of construction, we were led to believe that the portion between Rice Lake or Peterborough and Lakefield would receive attention. Then there is astretch of navigable water to Frankforl, with one lock at Chisholm's Rapids. Between Campbellford and Heeley's Falls two or three locks will be required. A work will have to be constructed to secure communication between Lakefield and Peterborongh, a distance of 6 or 7 miles. The distance from Frankford to Trenton is nearly 8 miles down the rapids. Were these works completed it would give us communication from the inland counties to the seaboard. The Government has given us to unierstand that they are going to do this work gradually from year to year, and in my opinion it would be very foolish to undertake it in any other way.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I understand it a a little better now, , but I wish to know when do the Government intend to undertake the construction of that work from Frankford to the Bay of Quinte:

Mr. HAGCiART. I answered the hon. gentleman that I was not prepared to state.

Mr. PATERBSON (Brant). Would not that be the most important part of the work so as to make available what is constructed already.

Mr. HAGGART. They think the work at present being constructerl, and that has leen constructed, the most necessary for the amount of money expenderl.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It would have an outlet to the bay if you had the portion constructed from Frankford out. What would be the cost of that particular work?

Mr. HAGixART. It would cost from Trenton to Frankford $31,218, \% \div 0$.

Mr. HUGHES. There are a large number of lakes which are connected with this canal and along these lakes and rivers are a great many various kinds of wood products. At the present time a large number of steaners are annually engaged in towing this lumber to market. They tow it to the nearest railroad station and there is a good deal of local traffic at the present time. If the canal were constructed from Trenton to Frankford it would open up only a little bit of navigable water from Camplellford to Frankford where there is no timber, and where the Central and Ontario Railway, and the Grand Junction Railway now accommodate the farmers in sending their produce to the market. I think the Govermment has properly decided to construct the canal so as to connect these large lakes and thus afford the timber produce an outlet to the market.

Mr. PATERRSON (Brant). I understood from the gentleman who preceded the sitting member in the representation of that county that this was a very important work, and that all these counties interested were anxious to have the work proceeded with rapidly. The hon. gentleman for North Victoria( Mr. Hughes) now says that he is quite satisfied with the progress made and that it would be wrong for the fovernment to make any greater haste. If he represents the views of the people of these counties in that way, it is a little clifferent from what has been represented here before. I have no desire to see any undue expenditure, but I think that if the importance of this Trent Valley Canal depended upon the representation of the former member for North Victoria and other gentlemen in this House, it would be a fair question.

for us to emguire, if we are to duplicate canals, and build a canal on one side of the St. Lawrence when we have one already constructed on the other side, whether the immediate construction of the Trent Canal would not be of equal importance aud equally justified? Of course the Government will feel relieved when the representatives from these counties assure them that the Trent Canal is not a work of such importance that it needs to be hurried on any faster that it has been.

Mr. HUGHES. I regret exceedingly that the hon. memher for Brant (Mr Paterson) should be misled by the representative who preceded me from North Victoria. I regret that he was not betteracyuainted with that gentleman than to listen to anything that he would tell him.

Mr. McMULLEN. Take it back.

Mr. HUCHESS I will take nothing hack. However, what the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) says about us not being anxious to have the canal pushed forward to completion is entirely wide of the mark. We are anxious to have the canal pushed forward and to have all the money expended that the Government can properly expend. But we want it expended judiciously and where it will give us the most benefit. We believe that ly building these comecting links, and in following the same plan as the late former leader of the Liberal Government followed, in the construction between Port Arthur and Winnipeg, that it would give us who represent that locality, more immediate service and would benefit the whole Dominion just as much. Just as soon as we can get this inter-lake communication complete, then we will press for the terminal links. We want the money expended, and we do not sare our eloquence in pressing for it upon the floor of this House. We have already for the last two or three months been pressing this matter on the attention of the Government, and $I$ am glad to he able to say that we have received very satisfactory encouragement.

Mr. BENNETT. Representing as I do a constituency greatly interested in this work, I would wish to make a few remarks in reference to this subject. In the first place the question of the Trent Valley Canal is by no means a new one before the pulific of Ontario. For a great many years the proposition has been on foot, to connect the waters of the (ieorgian Bay with the waters of Lake Ontario, and for a great many years I may say that proposition was formulated in advance by Mr. Capreol, of Toronto, and other gentlemen equally interested in it. However, I think it has been demonstrated and proved that the expense that would be necessitated by the route proposed, namely a canal scheme from the waters of the Georgian Bay to the waters of Lake simcoe would be too expensive in that regard, and from there to the waters of Lake Ontario at some point near Toronto. Of late years a proposition has come before the public, and I think it is meeting with considerable approval, that there should be utilized all these water stretches which rum through the northern pait of Ontario. There, as hon. gentlemen doubtless know, by reference to the map, are a great many large rivers and large lakes which can be utilized. It is true, however, I regret to say, that there are also there some costly and expensive pieces of canal to le constructed ; howerer, a considerable portion of the work has been done, and a large expenditure will be necessitated to complete it. Now, as I understand it there are four or five obstructions in several portions of the work and as these have been gone over by the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes), I will not detain the House with any lenghty reference to them. Hom. gentlemen on the opposite side of the House wish to be facetions, or I had better saly wish to be sarcastic, at the expense of the hon. meniber for North Victoria, and they point to the fact that the gentleman who preceded him in the representation of that county was much more deeply interested in the work than the present member. All I can say to that is, that the verdict of the people of North Victoria has not been at all to the effect that they thought that Mr. Barron's remarks or actions in reference to this canal, were very sincere or very honest, but they believed that they were adranced with the one object alone of making political capital against the present Administration. I propose to speak of the work as a great national enterprise more tham as a local project, aithough as a local project it is fraught with the greatest possible import to the constituencies along the route. We know that at present the export grain from the great North-W est has been so enormous that, in the past year, the Ganadian Pacific Railway have been forced not only to carry it to the Atlantic seaboard but also to the Pacific. As a result of the increasing trade which must eventually grow, it must le patent to every person that another means of transport in aldition to the railway must be had. We know that it has been established for many yeurs past that no carriage is cheaper than carriage by water, which has been proved conclusively in the case of the Erie Canal, which is only comparatively speaking a ditch compared with what this water scheme, if carried into effect, would be. And yet we know as a matter of fact that millions of bushels of wheat are carried over the Erie Canal in preference to being carried by the mialroads. The general public, despite all the croakings of hon. gentlemen opposite, have still faith in the country, and if this work can be completed, and I think it can, at an expenditure of SJ,O(O),(OOO), it is not such a work is should appal the electorate of the 1 )ominion. The people of the Province of Ontario have I think to a major extent contributed to the revenue of the Dominion.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) No, not per head.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, there are so few people down there that probally that is the case. But I say that the large Province of Ontario has contributed to the greatest extent, while it has not had the benefit of great public works to an equal extent with other portions of the Dominion. It is true that indirectly we have derived great benefits from the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Welland and other canals; but these works benefited the Dominion as a whole. The Province of Ontario alone has not had the expenditure to which I lelieve it is entitled ín consideration of the large amount of revenue it contributes to the general exchequer. This work is not ouly a local work, although from that point of view it should be considered, in view of the revenue derived from the Province of Ontario ; but I contend that it is a work of the very greatest national importance. I believe that once completed it would beeome one of the greatest national routes for the carriage of grain to the seabrard. At the town whereIlive, Midland, we have seen vessels carrying 100,040 bushels of grain from Chicago and Port Arthur; and if this canal were finished from one lake to the other, the result would be that many such vessels would carry grain from Port Arthur to that point to be transhipped in barges carrying 10,0000 or 12,000 bushels, which would be carried through the canal to Montreal, where, by means of floating elevators, the grain would be transferred to the ocean steamers, and in return large guantities of merchandise would be carrie, llack laving for its destination the NorthWest. Therefore, from a national standpoint, this work should be encouraged. I regret that the Ministers have not seen fit to put a larger amount in the Estimates this year ; but I am satisfied from the assurances given by the Ministers that the work will receive pronpt action in the coming fall.
sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I hardly think that the hon. gentleman heard the Minister quite correctly.

Mr. BENNETTT. I am not referring to what the Minister of Railways has stated in the Honse. I am referring to what he and some other Ministers stated to a deputation who interviewed them.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT. Hon. gentlemen langh. Perhaps they do not know that the loud laugh sometimes lespeaks the vacant mind. I think it is vacancy on this question in the minds of the hon. gentlemen that prompts them to laugh so. However, I do trust that the Ministry will during the coming summer have a thorough survey made of the canal, and I hope that in the estimates of next year a sutficiently large amount will be placed to complete one of the links along the line. I, representing the constituency which J do,am not to a great extent hampered as to which portion of the canal should be at once put under contract. However, I can say this, that I have sutficient contidence in the wisdon of the Minister of Railways and Canals and the other Ministers to believe that they will do what is right in the prenises. As the constituency of North Victoria has seen fit to send here a member who is really honest in his desire to see this work go on, so I think it will be recognized that my efforts in that behalf are honest and not like those of my predecessor in this House. It is said that next year the canal will be under contract; and hon. gentlemen opposite may have the mortification of seeing more public works in progress, even though they should have the effect of sending more members to support the Government and keeping those hon. gentlemen in the position they seem to fit so admitably, the cold shades of Opposition.
Mr. LaNDERKIN. The hon. Minister of Railways will have some difficulty, I presume, in the construction of this important artery connecting the Georgian Bay with Lake Ontario, in reconciling his supporters on the subject. The hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) wants this canal built gradually, very gradually, slowly ; a work that was commenced lefore he was born he wants completed about a thousand years after he dies.' That is his honesty. I think he said his opponent was not houest.

Mr. HUGHES. I did not say so, but if yon have a mind to say so, I would endorse the statement.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I do not think the endorsement would le received in any bank where the hon. gentleman is known.

Mr. HUGHES. The people of North Victoria receivel it, and received you tor, doctor.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The Government, I think, will meet the wishes of the hon. member and build the canal very gradually, very slowly.

Mr. HUGHES. Hear, hear; that is what we want.

Mr. LANDERKIN. In place of affording access to the free water stretches, we find the Government patching away in the middle. Sometimes the water overflows, but they still patch away in the middle, and the great alvantages which the people would gain by having an outlet to the lake so as to get to Montreal, are not gi ven to them. I cannot find any record of the beginning of the construction of this canal. though I have searched for it in the archives. They started away up in the interior. It appears that the canal goes throagh several constituencies, and all of the members representing these constituencies, with one exception, want the work done gradually. The hon. member for East simene (Mr. Bemett) wants it done a little faster, and the hon. member for Sorth Victoria wants it done a little slower. I presime he wants it to last during his political carcer in the House. That hon. gentleman has, perhaps, receivel some consolation from this scheme in his short political career, and he is afraid, if it were expeditel, that perkaps the leverage which gave him his honest record might be taken away. I have looked at the report of the engineer in reference to this great highway which is to comect the Georgian Bay with Lake Ontario, and I am surprisel at the hom. member for North Victoria leing satistied with it. Speaking of Fenelon Falls, the engineer says:
"A breach was made by ice in the side dam leading from the main dam. This was repaired, as it-allowed the water to fall below the normal level.
"At Bobcaygeon a workshop was built at the dry dock for the conrenience of those using the dock. At Buckhorn a large guantity of gravel was washed down the canal into the lock chamber. This was removed."
It is very gratifying to know that was done. That is quite enough for the fogey member for North Victoria. At Burleigh the report says:
"The dams here were thoroughly gravelled. It was found that a much greater quantity was required to make a thorough job than was at first thought necessary. The dnms are now tight, and there has been no trouble since in keeping the water at its normal height. The apron of one of the sluices was taken out by saw logs. This was repaired."
That is very gratifying indeed. At Young's Point :
"A boat slide for the passage of small boats orer the dam was constructed at a small expenditure. This has been greatly appreciated by the owners of small boats who are continually passing up and down."
That is very gratifying. It is the great high way between Georgian Bay and Lake Ontario, and they will allow small boats to go over the dam. That will be useful for the canoe association up there. At Lakefield, which is the great highway, one in which the people have taken a deep interest and have elected members to support this policy of going slow :

Mr. Bennett.
"A top was built on one of the old piers at the Narrows, so as to form an ice-break. Protision was also made for the placing of a light on it.,'
That is very gratifying. At Peterborough :
"A landing pier was built at the south end of the town, extending from the north side of Wolf street to the Canadian Pacific Railway track. The want of sufficient landing space has long been felt. The landing pier was placed in its present position at the solicitation of the street and bridge committee of the town. The ice did considerable damage to the sluice piers, which were repaired."
Now if the Minister of Railways would make an opening into Lake Ontario, would not that obviate the dangers and difficulties of the ice? He keeps a dam in order to flood these places, and then I see by the report he is paying thousands of dollars for land damages by the overflow. At Hastings, when the ohl wooden swing bridge was removed, it was foum that a considerable portion of the pivot pier had to be rebuilt in order to get a good foundation tos set the new iron swing bridge on. It rotted down and had to be replaced by iron and the hon. memleer for North Victoria will probably find out by this how long it has been built.-

[^77]That is the work done on this canal last year. That is the great work they took such a deep interest in and which is so entirely satisfactory to the members who support the Government after they got in. They are pleased with the progress. I fancy the policy of the Government with regaral to this is slow enough to satisfy the most fossilized Tory that ever existed. Well, if they are sitistied it is all right. It is wonderful just lefore the elections, you will find a large estimate made for the building of this canal it little faster than it has been going on. As to the observations made with regarid to the gentleman (Mr. Barron) who formerly represented Victoria so ably and well, and made himself a nane and fame, who will he known long after the present member leaves this House, and who will have a glorious resurrection and be in this House again enjoying the contidence of the people, who in a moment of frenzy and a desire to get the canal lonilt set him aside for a supporter of the Goverument who promised to build the canal a little slower, it would be well for the hom. member for North Victoria were he alle to put on the shoes of that gentleman and wear them so well and so worthily. If there is any benefit in this canal, I would like to see it completed. I do not want to see it pushed the way it is being at present, putting in a bridge here and a workshop there, tearing up old work that has become rotten, but I want to see it constructed and not be used for all time as an engine of corruption. If it is to be of any advantage, it should be pushed aliead without delay. If the fiovernment are in earnest, let them put something in the Estimates worthy of the enterprise which is to connect the two great waters. If it is not to be of any advantage, let the Government drop it and not fritter away the people's money in this way. Let them go at it like business men or abandon it altogether. It is a singular thing that the people along the line are satisfied with the progress made. It is a wonder they are not lissatisfied.

Mr. Paterson (Brant). Does the Minister know how much of this $57 \%$, (h(K) has leen expended in surveys and commissions and other expenses not connected with the actual construction of the work?
Mr. HAGGART. None has been expended on commissions. That is not included in the amount.
Mr. PATERSON (Brant). How much has leen expented on surveys and commissions:
Mr. HagGart. I have nu idea. It does not appear in my department at all and to find out the amount we would have to go through the public accounts.
Mr. Paterson (Brant). This being a work of such importance that the Minister promised the hon. member for East simese privately that it would le pushed on very lively, we should have some details. The hon. member for simeoe congratulates himself and the hon. memher for North Victoria that they are honest chaupions of this work and have every confilence in the Government, and they declare that their predecessors were dishonest in their adrocacy of this work. I would like to know whether the hon. member for East Simeoe, while he thinks his predecessor was dishonest in this matter, when he finds the Minister of Canals purting $\Xi(69,(00)$ in the Estimates for the prosecution of this work, after telling him privately he was going to push the work, thinks the Minister of Canals is particularly honest or not. That would be yuite as pertinent as casting reflections on a gentleman not present now. They were not able to discover from anything said by the predecessor of those hom. gentlemen that they were not sincere but they did not toady to the Government, but spoke from the belief that the work they were advocating was in the interest of Canada. They did not assume any humblc, cringing, begging, apologetic tone towards the Minister, but pointed out why they did comsider this work should be proceeded with more rapidly. I suppose it may be satisfying to the Minister to find gentlemen now representing the constituency commend him for the slow progress he has made. But a work of this kind ought not to he kept and used as a means for politicaladvantage for the party in power. That that is the case, that it is so viewed, may he fairly inferred from the closing remarks of the hon. member for East Simeoe (Mr. Bennett), who said he hoped the Government would go on and expend money on this canal and on other pullic works eren at a slow rate, even if it should result in bringing more supporters to the Govermment from the different constituencies. A more open acknowledgment that the public works of this country are used by the Government for the purpose of corrupting the constituencies was nerer made, and I think it was a shameful statement to be made by any one in the Canadian Parliament.
Mr. McMULLEN. Can the Minister state the amount of tolls collected on this canal last year?
Mr. HAGGART. It appears in the Auditor General's Report.
Mr. MeMULLEN. I see that the amount was $756. Can the hon. gentleman say what the wages bill was?
Mr. HAGGART. The amount asked for the staff is $$ 4,510$, and for repairs $$ 3,000$.

Mr. Memulden. It is suite clear that this is a very considerable loss to the country every year. It may contribute to the advantage of a certain class, but it cannot be saill to be a work for the general alvantage of Camada. I think it would be leater to change the name from the Trent Valley Canal to the Tory Canal.

Mr. BENXETT. With righteous indignation, most of which I think is affectell, the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) thought fit to refer to me as a champion of bribery and corruption. What I said was that I hoped this work would lee completen liy the preseft Aiministration, and I trusted that the people along the route of that canal would acknowledge the work as a national enterprise, and also the fact that if this fovernment carried it out, they would return supporters to this or any other conservative Allministration that might follow. It ill becomes the hosi. gentleman to refer to the erection of public works for the purpose of biating the electorate. Let me tell you what was done in my own riding ly the Local fovernment.
some hom. MEMBERS. Order.
Mr. BENNETTS. I am not going to refer to Quehec. Gentlemen opposite do not like to hear anything alout that province. In consequence of the conservative character of the city of Toronto, the Ontario (iovernment erected in the East Riding of simeoe an immense idiot asylum, and the result is that the idiots, of whom unfortmately there are too many in the country, are carried from all over the province at an immense expense, not to the centre of the province hat to this asylum in the East Riding of Simeoe. That building was put up there for no purpose other than to keep it safe for Mr. Drury, who was a member of the Administration.
Mr. WATSON. The Tories are all in the asyimm.
Mr. BENNETT. My hon. friend is safe from the asylum at the distance at which he lives. I attackel the hon. member for North Victoria of last session for a ring of insincerity which I saw in his advocacy of this scheme. As far as the hon. member for East Simcoe was concerned, when a large deputation cane down to place the construction of this cinal before the Government, he would not come, and why? Recause he could not get a pass, because he had not his expenses paid. Afterwards, when we applied to him as the representative of the riding, and asked him if he would favour a grant of public money, he said he could not say until he found out what Mr. Laurier was going to do ahout it. He thought that the party interests must be servel first and those of the country afterwarcls. I trust that the Government will go on with the work as speedily as possible, and I trust that a large section will le completed next year, and that not only the constituencies along the route of the canal will approve of the work being undertaken and return members to support the Government, but that all parts of the province and of the Dominion, recognizing the importance of the work, will support the Govermment in making any large grants they may propose in order to secure the consummation of the work.
Mr. FOSTER. The discussion of this matter promises to be as tedious as the construction of the Trent Valley Canal. We have a long day ahead of us to-morrow, and I propose, if hon. gentlemen opposite consent, that we might pass this and the two succeeding small items, and then adjourn. so as to give us a season of rest in preparation for tomorrow.

Committee rose and reported the resolutions.

CHARGES AIAANST NIR ADOLPHE CARON.

House resmend aljoumed debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Edyar: That certain charges of corruption against sir Adolphe $P$. Caron be referred to the select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. Bowell. Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to enter at length into the question before the Honse. It is a matter of very grave importance not only to the body of which we form a part, but more particularly to the member of the ciovernment who has lieen charged with a grave dereliction of duty. When the motion was moved by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Elgar) anil the reply made ly the leader of the House, the Minister of Justice, it was then indicated that if any definite charges were made, involving the honour or the ministerial conduct of the Postmaster (ieneral, the Government would not be a party to preventing an investigation into any charges which might be so made. It was very clearly and distinctly pointed out by the Minister of Justice, in the remarks made by him at that time, that these charges were not of that distinct character they should be where a man's reputation was involvel, more particularly one holding the responsille position of a Minister of the Crown and a Privy Councillor, that the resolution was not of that definite characte: it should be to justify its acceptance. It was then stated that any definite charges made against the Postmaster General, or against any other member of the Administration, would receive not only attention but that it would be the duty of the Government to have the fullest investigation made into such charges. It was also statel by the Postmaster (ieneral himself before leaving the House that he was quite prepared, not only to meet any charges which might be made against him, but that he was anxious to have an investigation into his conduct so far as the charges related to his action as a Minister of the Crown: and in his comection with the parties with whom it wassaid he was associated in the construction of a railway and the subsidies granted in aid thereof. Since that time, much more definite and printed charges have been made by hon. gentlemen opposite during the discussion. The hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright) made statements which, had they been included in the resolution would have at once been accepted as good reason for immediately proceeding with the investigation. These were supplemented ly the hon. member for lothwell (Mr. Mills), who, on two or three occasions during the debate, made positive and distinct statements as to the malfeasance of office and improper conduct on the part of the Postmaster (iencral. The hon. gentleman, as is his wont, shakes his heal, but when 1 read these extracts, perhaps he will give me credit for not misinterpreting the langnage which he usell, or the interpretation which can lee properly and legitimately placed upon his statemerits. In adidion to that, the member for West Ontario (Mr. Elgar), the gentleman who first fulminated the charges in the resolution which he proposed, in explaining what he meant, made the charges much more pointed and distinct, giving in addition to what was already stated in the resolution, sufficient ground to warrant the (iovernment in asking this House to take such steps as will lead to a proper amd thorough investigation into the allegations which have been made, such as they are, by insinuation and innuendo, not only in the resolution, but more pointedly and distinctly by the member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), the member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills) and the member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), in the speeches which they made. The Government has no desire to screen any malfeasance of oftice on the part of any of its members. nor do the members of the dovernment individually desire to shirk any responsibility in connection with an investigation which involves their character as men, or their reputation as Ministers of the Crown. Having said this much, and without entering into or combatting any of the statements made by the hon. gentlemen opposite who have addressed the House on this subject, although there is ample room to show that their statements in many respects are not warranted by the facts, nor justified by the remarks made by the Minister of Justice;-I say that although there is ample room not only to combat but to show the unfairness with which a charge of so grave a character as this has been made, I do not propose to enter at all at the present moment into that cuestion, I shall simply contine myself, under the circumstances, to moving an amendment to the motion which has been proposed by the member for West Ontario (Mr. Elgar), an amendment which I think will meet the approval not only of the House of Commons but of the people of this country. I shall, therefore, move, seconded by Mr. Foster, that all the words after "That" in the main motion be struck out and the following substituted therefor :-

James D. Edgar, the member representing the Electoral District of the West Riiling of the County of Ontario in this House, having stated from his phec in this House. that he is credibly informed and believes that he can establish by satisfactory eridence:

1. That during each of the years 1882 to 1891 inclusive. the Quebec and Lake St. Johu Lailwas Company received by way of bonus from the Dominion of Canadia, subsidies amounting in the aggregate to upwards of ule million dollars, which subsidies were yoted by Parliament on the recommendation of the Ministers of the Crown.
2. That arrangements were entered into by the said railway company whereby the expenditure of said subsidies was made by a construction company through or in conjunction with one H . J. Beemer, a contractur-and the said Beemer and those who assisted him in financing for the said ruilway works, receired the lenefit of the satid subsidics.
3. That during the whole of the said period from 18s2 to 1891, the llonourable Sir Adolphe P. Caron wals and still is. a member of the House of Commons of Camada, a member, of the Canadian Giovernment and one of lier Majesty's Privy Councillors for Canada.
4. That the said Sir A. P. Carm wns, during the whole, or the greater nart of the said period, one of the members of the said construction company, and thus had means of knowledge of. and did know of the dealings with the said subsidies and their destination after they were paid over by the Government to the said railray company.
5. That during the said period and while the sidid railway was being constructed in part by means of satid subsidies, the said Sir A. P? Caron corruptly reecived large sums of money out of the said subsidies, and from moness raised upon the credit of the same, and from parties beneficially interested in the same.
6. That during the said period out of said subsidies, and out of moness raised upon the credit of the same, and from parties bencficially interested in the same, large sums of money were trom time to time corruptly paid and contributed, at the request and with the knowledge of said Sir A. P. Caron, for election purposes, and to atid in the clection to the House of Commons of the said sir A. P.Caron. and other members and supporters of the Government of which he was a member. and that after some of such last-mentioned corrupt payments and contributions were made, further and other subsidies were gr:mted and paid to the said railway company by the Gorermment of wrich Sir A. P. Caron was a member.
7. That the Temiscounta Railwny Company was siven incorporation by Letters Patent issued by the Canidian Government on ith Oetober, 1885 , and since that date the said railway company has received from the Dominion ot Canada subsidies to the extent of $$ 649,210$-which subsidies were voted by Parliament on the recommendation of Ministers of the Crown.
8. That since the hith (October, 1885 , and while the said Temiscouata Railway was being constructed in part by means of the said subsidies, the said Sir A. P. Caron corruptly received large sums of mone from the persong who from time to time controlled the said Temiscouata Railway Company and the said subsidies, or who were benefictally interested in the stid subsidies.
9. That also since the said 6 th 0 ctober, 1885 . the persons who frote time to time controlled the said Temiscounta Railway Company and the said subsidies, or who were beneficially interested in the said sibsidies, paid and contributed large sums at the refuest, a;ad with the knowledge of the said Sir A. P. Caron, for ele tion purposes to aid in the election to the House of Comians of the said Sir A. P. Caron, and other nembers and supporters of the Goverminent of which he was a member, and that after some of such last-mentioned corrupt payments and contributions were made, further and other subsidies were granted and paid to the said ruilway company by the Goverument of which the said Sir A. P. Caron was a member.
That in the course of the debate arising on the resolution based on such statements of the said Mr. Edgar, it was sated by the Hon. Mr. Mills, the member representing the electoral district of Bothwell, as follows:-

So when the leader of the Governinent and his colleague undertake to seriously argue that this House is denuded of all its power to enquireinto the misappropriation of public mones for the purpose of corrupting the electors of this country, because the trial of election petitions has been referred to the courts, I take issue with those hon. gentlemen on that ground. The trial of election petitions is one thing. The use of public money for deliberate corruption of the electors by a member of the Administration is a proper matter for enquiry by this Honse, and it is not in the smallest degree restricted in any way bs reason of the trial of election petitions having been referred to the courts."

That it was further stated by the said Mr. Mills:
"These charges point to a member of this House in his official capacity as a member of the Administration, rather than to his conduct as a member of this House. What, in effert, are the charges here made? They point to the fact that the Crown was advised to appropriate large sums of money for particular purposes, and that these moneys were diverted from these public purposes and placed in the hands of a Minister of the Crown for the purpose of corrupting the electorate in certain portions of the Dominion of Canada.'
That it was further stated by the said Mr. Mills :
"There is a statement made here that this hon. gentleman, the Postmaster Gencral, is the Minister of the Crown who advised these subsidies being appropriated to aid these companies. There is a charge that he obtmined a portion of the subsidy so voted, or its equivalent, from these companies, and used it for his oun purpose in his own election, and in the elections in twenty-three constituencies in this Dominion. That charge is specific and clear enough. It is also stated that after some of these moneys were received by him this same gentleman advised the Crown to grant other subsidies to other parties, and that from these other subsidies, moneys were also obtained."
That it was further stated by the said Mr. Mills as follows:-

- If he advised the Crown to make these appropriations, and had an understanding with one of the railway companies participating in them that these moneys, or a portion of them, should go, to him, we ought to know it ; we are entitled to know it."
That it was stated in the said debate by Sir Richard Cartwright, the member representing the electoral district of the South Riding of Oxford, re ferring to the said churges of the said Mr. Edgar, ats follows:-
"What in the name of wonder is it that my hon. friend beside me has charged the Postmaster General with ? He has charged him in no vague language, but in terms, with being guilty of the most corrupt conspiracy, for the purpuse of destroying the electoral liberties of the people of Canada, of which any adviser of the Crown can be found gnilty."
It was stated in the said debate by Mr. Edgar aforesaid, as follows:-
"4 Those railways which are involved in this charge, were aided by the Dominion and Provincial Government:, and what I complain of is the appropriation of Dominion subsidies by the Postmaster (ieneral."

And again:

"The Minister of Marine drew a nice point when he said that I did not, as I should have done, charge his colleague with public robbers. Well, I did not put it in those words but in words which I certainly intended to mean robbing the public. If it is not public robbery for a member to take moneys out of pulbic subsidies, I would like to know What is." And again:
-so $I$ think if $I$ get a chance to go on and prove these charges there will be what is, under the law, a most abominable conspiracy."
That from the aforesnid statements made by the said J. D. Edgar, and from comments and arguments thereon by the said David Mills and Sir Richard Cartwright and the said James D. Edgar from their places in this House, it appears that it was the intention of the said J. D. Edgar by siid statement to charge Sir A. P. Caron, a member of this House, and of the Hunourable the Priry Council of Canada, with grave offences and derelictions of duty, notwithstanding that the said statement of the said J. D. Edgar, first above cited, did not make any definite or precise charge against him.
That the following charges and allegations are indicated by the said statement made by the said J. D. Edgar, and by the commenta and urguments of the aforesaid other members of this House and by his own comments therean as intended to be made in the said statement, against the said Sir A. P. Caron, namely:

1. That, during each of the years 1882 to 1891 inclusive. the Quebec and Lake St. John Rail way Company received by way of bonus from the Domiaion of Canada, subsidies amounting in the aggregate to upwards of a million of dollars, which subsidies were voted by Parliament on the recommendation of Ministers of the Crown.
2. That, during the whole of the said period from 1882 to 1891, the Honourable Sir A. P. Caron was, and still is, a member, of the Canadian Government, and one of Her Majesty's Privy Councillors for Canada, and was also a member of the House of Commons in each Parliament which has been elected since the year 1882.
3. That, during the said period, and while the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway was being constructed in part by means of said subsidies, the said Sir A. P. Caron knowingly aided and participated in direrting the said subsidies from the purpose for which they were granted, by receiving, for election purpozes, from the said railway company, or from a construction company formed for the construction of the said railway, or from one II. J. Beemer, as manager thereof, or contractor of the said railway, large sums of money out of the said subsidies. and out of moneys raised upon the credit of the same; und also, during the said period, did further knowingly 80 aid and participate by obtaining from the said companies or one of them, the payment out of said subsidies, and out of moneys raised by the said companies, or one of them, on the credit of the same, of large sums of money for election purposes. and to aid in the election to the House of Commons of the said Sir A. P. Caron, and other nembers and supporters of the Government of which he was a member.
4. That. after some of the last-mentioned maments were so obtained and made, the said Sir A. P. Caron, in consideration thereof, corruptly aided and assisted the said company to obtain further and other subsidies from the Dominion Parliament.
5. That, since the lith of October, 1885, the said Temiscouata Railway Company recived various subsidies from the Dominion of Canada, amounting in all to about $649,200 and that the said Sir. A. P. Caron knowingly aided and participated in diverting the said subsidies from the purposes for which they were granted, by receiving from the said company large sums of money out of the said subsidies, or out of monevs raised on the credit of the same, and also by obtaining the payment by the said company, out of the said subsidies, or out of muneys raised on the credit of the same, of large sums of money to aid in his election as a member of the Honse of Commons. and to the election of other persons as member: of the House.
6. That after some of the last-mentioned pasments were so obtained and made, the said Sir A. P. Caron, in eonsideration thereof, corruptly aided and assisted the zail company to olltain further aud other subsidies from the Dominion of Parliament.
T. That the said Sir A. P. Caron misappropriated public money for the purpose of corrupting the electors of Canada, to wit, a portion of the moneys voted as subsidies as hereinbefore stated.
7. That the Crown having been advised to appropriate large sums of money for public purposes, to wit, the said subgidies, such moness, or a portion of then, were diverted from the purposes for which they were so approprinted. and placed in the hands of sir - . P. Caron for the purpose of corrupting the electorate in certain portions of Canada.
8. That the said Sir A. P. Caron hadan understanding. when the said subsidics or some of them were voted or recommended. with one or more of the railway companies participating in said appropriations, or with a person or persons interested in said appropriations, that the moneys so appropriated by Parliament, or portions of them, should go to him.
9. That the said SirA. P. Caron. by virtue of the fact so alleged, entered into a corrupt conspiracy with the said companies, or one or more of them.
That, in the opinion of this House, it is expedient that enquiry should be made as to the truth or falsity of the allegations and charges last nentioned, and numbered respectively $1,2,3.4,5,6,7,8,9$ and 10 (being the allegations and charges included in the original statement of the said James D. Edgar, and those made in the course of the debate thereon), and that for that purpose the House deems it proper and convenient that the evidence relating to such allegations and charges should be taken by one or more commissioners to be appointed under chapter 114 of the Revised Statutes of Canada and having all the powers mentioned in said chapter, and that such avidence should be laid before this House when completed.

Mr. BOWFLL. The conclusion at which the Government has arrived in connection with this matter seems to have furnishel the Opposition with a cause for apparent amusement. I am rather inclined to think their derisive cheers are just what they woull have given, no matter what course might have been taken or suggested by the Government. I believe that the country will concur in the course and approve of the policy adopted by the Government in this matter. I believe the country will be better satisfied that the truth can be arrived at much better by a commission of one or more independent gentlemen, whose duty it will be to discriminate and hear the evidence and discuss it, than by a boly of politicians who compose the Committee on Privileges and Elections. It must be borne in mind that the Govermment do not propose in this resolution to ask for any opinion on the part of the commissioners who may hold this investigation. They ask, not to have their finding, but the evidence, which will be taken under oath and laid before Parliament to deal with. I could understand the derisive cheers of hom. gentlemen opposite if we had asked to have the matter referrel to a commission and for that commission to report their opinion, and then fall back upon the opinion which they might give as to the falsity or the truth of the charges formulated against the Postmaster Gieneral. But in this case we ask an independent loody, if I may term it so, or an independent individual, to take whatever evidence may be produced by the mover of the original resolution and report that evidence to this House; and then it will be for the members of the Commons of Canalia to say whether the Postmaster General is guilty of dereliction of duty and malfeasance of office and the corrupt practices alleged against him. I am convincel that the members of the Opposition do not desire an investigation.
Mr. LISTER. (iive us a committee.
Mr. BOWELL. Would hon. gentlemen like to stay here until next spring. I could point to hon. gentlemen on that side and draw a line of circamstantial evidence which I think they would not like to have promnlgated in a resolution. Were I to commence with some acts which I could trace, from the robbery of a provincial treasiry, down to an clection fund, which I believe I could prove, hon. gentlemen opposite would very justly say to the member for Hastings: You had better say you believe they are true before yon try to blacken the reputation of any one.
Mr. LANDERKIN. We would give you a committee of the House at once.
Mr. BOWELL. We have had some little experience of committees in the past.

Some hom. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.
Mr. BOWELL. We have had some little experience of committees of this House as well as where geutlemen on the Opposition had the majority in a province, and we know what the results hare been. It is not necessary that I should point to the result of the investigation which has lately taken place in a sister province. It is not necessary that I should go back to the time when charges were made against Ministers of the Crown in the Province of Ontario, and where the Minister himself changed the resolution so as to make it distinct and positive against himself, and refused an investigation in the manner demanded by hon. gentlemen opposite.
Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Against unnamed parties?

Mr. BOW ELL. No, but against the whole Gorernment. I cannot be led away by either the sophistries or the legal acumen of the hon. member for Prince Edward Island. I know his great aptitude for diverting the attention of the House from the points at issue. I have given reasons which I believe should actuate every fair-minded man in Canada in considering that this investigation should be clear and positive; and that the evidence should be taken ly gentlemen not influenced either by poitical considerations or by any other considerations except those of arriving at the truth; believing that, and believing that the truth can be obtained mach letter by the evidence heing taken as suggested in the amendment; and that that evidence should be referred to this House to deal with in the future, I believe that this course is infinitely better than referring the questiou either to a special committee or to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I may add that the hon. the Postmaster (ieneral occupies precisely the same position which he occupied when he made his statement to the House, that is, that he is anxious that a fair and impartial enquiry shall be made into his conduct with regard to these charges.

Mr. FLINT. I think the Minister of Militia will agree with me that perhaps it is somewhat unfortunate that he has not waited till the conclusion of the debate before preparing and presenting his amendment, because, in all probability, by that time he would have hal several more paragraphs which he would have foum it advisable to include in his anendment.

Mr. BOWELL. I shall have no objection to add them afterwards.

Mr. FLINT. Those who will follow me will touch on many important matters which I shall not have time to discuss, and which it is advisable that a Royal Commission should investigate. If those statements are correct, and if they deal properly with all the charges, then I think they also should be fully considered. It would seem, sir, that since we closed this discussion the other evening a new light has dawned upon the occupants of the Treasury benches, and that they have seen that it was advisable to take at all events a portion of the advice tendered them by some of their supporters; advice tendered to them, no doubt, to the effect that in addition to the matters then before the House there were so many other subjects for consideration as should have heen worthy of presentation either to a committee of the Honse or to a commission to be appointed in conserquence of this resolution. There are so many new facts elucidated by the amendment, that, although they have been repeated in our presence by the mover of the resolution, and by yourself, Mr. Speaker, and have been so eloquently and ably translated by our assistant Clerk of the House, I would not venture to refer to them, because I have not had an opportunity of going over them seriation and studying their bearing carefully in connection with the original charges made by the hon. member for West Ontario(Mr. Elgar), I may say, however, that the position which I take is, that the charges which are now presented to the House are not the original charges which were brought for our consideration, nor is the tribunal to which it is proposed to refer them the tribunal which was selected by the member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), and which has been selected by the genius of British institutions to try matters of this kind, almost from the earliest periods of constitutional history down to the present time. I contend that the Parliament of the Dominion, as also the English Parliament, although I agree with my friend from Cumberland (Mr. Dickey) it is not, strictly speaking, a court of justice, yet it is the high court of inguisition of the nation-is the proper place in which to try this matter. It is the court of Parliament, not bound by the strict technical rules of the courts of justice; it is the court selected by the people in constitutional form to try the responsible Ministers of the Crown for all higi crimes and misdemeanours which may be conmitted against the people of this country. We are not discussing, nor do we propose to discuss under the charges which have been brought here, offences cognizalbe by the courts of the land; but we have asked, if these charges are true, to cause an inguest to be made, through the powers committed to us by the constitution, into constitutional offences. We maintain that this Parliament is the only court which has the power and the jurisdiction to try these charges. Now, we are met by several objections, and we are met with a long list of precedents, the only olject of which is, in my humble opinion, to narrow down the scope of this enquiry and to minimize the character of these charges which were brought before us. Hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are now seeking to so becloud these charges, and to so mix them up and confuse them in the public mind, that the real gravamen and the weight of them will be lost in the confusion that must result from any attempt to bring their discussion fairly before the people. I think that these charges should be discussed from another staudpoint, and that they should be looked at from abroader basis. Therecan benodoubt that throughout this country eversince the days of the celebrated Pacific scandal, there has existed in the public mind --whether well-founded or ill-founded it is not for me to say-a strong impression that the great powers and the enormons funds placed at the disposal of the Dominion Administration have been used in an unwarrantable, unconstitutional and dishonest manner, in order to exercise an improper influence on the electors of the country at the polls during the periods of general and bye-elections. When charges are made bringing to bonk a responsible officer of the Crown, saying that he, by his influence in Parliament and in the Govermment, has been a go-between bet ween the dispensers of party fumds and the public treasury, then I think that we should waive aside all of these narrow technicalities which are perfectly proper and consistent in a court of law, but which are not proper in dealing with matters of this hind in the House of Commons. The hon. Minister of Justice, in opening the discussion upon this question the other evening, very carcfully retraced one or two of the steps which he had taken in comection with former investigations or former charges made in this House. It will be in the recollection of hon. gentlemen that, during the last session, I had the honour to bring charges of not so serious a character as these, in regard to a fellow-member, and which I did with much regret, lut as a pullic duty. I was met, almost at the outset, by the statement of the Minister of Justice, that the member for Yarmouth took his official position in this House and his privileges as a representative in his hands when he made these charges. The only inference I could draw from that was, that if the charges were made without any evidence whatever, that the House under the guilance of the Minister would be justified in expelling the member who brought these charges. Although I differed from the Minister at that time, and although the covert threat had no influence on my mind, because I felt that if I had discharged to the best of my abilities

the duties I felt imposed upon me as a member of this House, my constituents would rise above all considerations of these threats and would reward me for attempting to carry out my duty by a re-election ; yet I felt the Minister of Justice was laying down a principle which I never met with before in my readings in connection with parliamentary governmeit. However, in the opening of this present discussion the Minister of Justice frankly stated that charges of this or a similar character made by an hon. member of this House which were not substantiated and were shown to be absolutely groundless, subjected the hon. member merely to the censure of the House, and then he could take whatever course seemed fit to him when such censure had been passed. At the outset of the charges made by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), we were met withia few leading objections quite familiar to those who practice in the courts of law, objections, in the first place, to the juristiction of this House, or through a committee of this House, totry charges of this character. We were met by theoljection thateven if this House has juristiction, that there are other courts, orother powersin the country which have jurisdiction of a similar character, and that it would beadvisahle torefer charges of this kind to some other jurisdiction. We were also met with the objection that even if we have the jurisdiction, or even if there is another jurisdiction equally powerful to sift the evidence and to punish offenders, yet that these charges, even if admitted, did not amount to a constitutional offence; and throughout the whole of the speeches of the Minister of Justice and of gentlemen on the other side of the House who followed him, we find the charges continually referred to as if they were against the Postmaster General as a member of this House. I do not so read the charges. I read the charges to apply to the Postmaster General partly as a member of this Honse, but largely, however, as an adviser of the Crown, and principally as a member of the (iovernment dealing with the public funds. From that standpoint, I find very little reference to his position ly any of the speakers who have opposed the adoption of the resolution as presented by the member for West Ontario (Mr. Elgar). Then, again, in addition to the objection made to the jurisdiction of the House, and to the conclusion which would be derived from the wording of these charges if sulstantially proved, I find that there are political objections urged, notably by my hon. friend from Cumberland (Mr. Dickey). Although he frankly admitted that probably these considerations ought not to have the same weight as strictly technical objections, yet he dragged into the consideration of this question, as other hon. members have, political considerations as an offset to the charges which have been made. Now, I contend that no matter what charges may be made against any hon. gentleman on this side of the Honse, no matter how they may have conducterl themselves as politicians, no matter how strongly they may have been condemned for anything that has been proved against them, either in elections for this House or for any of the Local Legislatures, that forms no answer to the charges made here against the Postmaster General, and those who are charged with being associated with him in improperly using the public money for the purpose of corrupting the electorate of the country. My hon. friend from Cumberland quoted with considerable gusto from that great constitutional orator and thinker, Elmund Burke, in his desire to prove that parliament was not the proper body to consider charges of thiskind; and his referenceseened to me to have so little hearing upon this case, or at any rate to have so little weight when contrasted with other statements and with the whole course of life of that distinguished man, that I will beg pardon for alluding to it somewhat at length. Quoting from the Life of Burke by Morley, he proven or contended that Parliament was not a court of justice. This we are perfectly willing to admit. There were attempts made in ancient times to set up the court of Parliament as a court of justice, and to hale hefore it offemlers against the general laws of the land, and punish them by the exercise of the powers of l'arliament. Those efforts frilel, and it was sub. serguently held by constitutional writers and thinkers and liy great jurists that Parliament was not a coiurt of justice to try and punish offenders who could ie puished by the ordinary procedure of the courts of common law. But we have here an offence which, so far as $I$ am able to real it, is not an offence against any statute law or against the common law : l, it it is an offence against what is recognized as the moral law, an oftence against the constitutional rights of the people, and in offence against this Parliament as the dispenser of public money. Burke referred to the matter of enguiries before Parliament, of which he was a champion; and any student of his great speeches will discover in them all that he was a lealer during his political existence in enguiries into almses of power on the part of the administrators of the Government, aud on the part of those exercising the power of England beyond the seas. Many of the getatest enguiries ever entered upon liv the British Yarliament, notably those in comection with the East India Company, in connection with the troubles in Ireland, in comnection with the wars in America, in connection with the Crown's disposal of public money, in connection with the Hastings case, were either instigated or powerfully supported by Edmund Burke. In bringing before the House in 176 s his motion for an enquiry int, the military trouble which arose, some of his olserrations are so pointe: 1 and seem to apply so clearly to cases of this nature that I will yoote them for the benefit of hom. gentlemen :
" Burke brought the matter before the House in a motion tor a conninittee of enquiry, supportedby one of the most lucid and able of his minor speeches. If ever the time should come,' he concluded. 'when this House shall he found prompt to execute and siow to enquire : ready to punish the excesses of the people, and slow to listen to their grievances; ready to grant supplies and slow to examine the account ; ready to enrest magistrates with large powers. and slow to inquire into the exercise of them : ready to entertaiia notions of the military power is incurporated with the constitution-when you learn this in,the nir of St . James's, then the business is done; then the House of Commons will change that character which it receives from the people onls.,"
This wats a powerful vindication of the principle which the preamble of these resolutions asserts, that this House has granted large sums of money for useful public purposes, and that a certain hon. gentleman, occupying a high position in this House and in the Government of the country, which enabled him to exercise his influence in regard to appropriations ly the House and in regard to their expenditure afterwards, has conspired with those who have been the recipients of this public money, to share with him, in the handling of these funds, and to use a portion of the proceeds voted for pullic purposes in order to corrupt the electorate, and thus strengthen himself and his colleagues in power. My hon. friend from Cumberland, referring to the duties and power of Parliament, also quotel from Hallam’s Constitutional History ; and although he made no particular reference to any particular chapter, he spoke of the whole tenor of Hallam's observations and comments on the powers of Parliament as supporting the position he assumed, namely, that this was not among the range of questions that Parliament could investigate, and that the form of the indictment or charge was not such as to invite this Parliament to appoint a committee to consider it. Now, let us see what Hallam says in a brief passage, and almost the only passage on the sulject of an inquiry by the House of Commons, and see if that position is sustaned :
" In June, 1699, a special committee was appointed to enguire into the misearriages of the war in Irelind, especially as to the delay in relieving Londonderry. A similar committee was appointed in the Lords."
Here let me olserve that I tow the opportunity of looking up the report of this committee in the Commons Journals of 16sis, and I find that the resolution asking for this committee of enuuiry is very brief. It does not make any statement as to the grounds of the belief entertained by the member moving for the committee of enquiry, hom does it charge or at all indicate any particular persons or any specified times or places as those which are solely and necessarily hound up in the scope of the enquiry. The resolution is so brief that I will quote it :
"Resolved, that a committee be appointed to enquire who has been the occusion of the delays in sending reliet over into Ireland, and particularly into Londonderry."
A short resolution of four lines, which leal to such important consequences, lel to the indictment and ruin of several important military officers, led to important legislation and important astion on the part of the British (:overnment in comection with attiairs in Irelaml. The report of the committee was made alout six months after its appointment, and the evilence taken by the committee was exceedingly lengthy: upon the result of that evidence presented to the House, after notice given to the persons who were charged with the delays and losses and sutferings in Ireland, wherehy the British power was abnsed and the people injured. Colonel Cumningham was put upon his trial, and many other officers foumt themselves defending themselves in the courts of law. Referring to this enquiry, Hallam says :
"The former reported severely against Colonel Lunday, gorernor of that cety; and the House addressed the King that he might be sent orer to be tried for the treason laid to his charge. I do not think there is anys eurlier preee-dent in the Journals for so specific an encuiryinto the conduct of a public officer, especially one in military command. It marks, therefre, very distinctly the ehange of spirit which I have so frequently mentioned."
Thns we see the introduction of the new spirit by which the Commons insist upon their rights, as the Grand Inquisition of the Realm, bound by their duty to the Crown and their duty to the people to enquire into the injuries intlicted upon the people and the ciolation of the laws of the land, by means of commissioners of their own. -

[^78]records, paners, enforced by the strong arm of parliamentary privilege."

And he says further :

" It is hardly necessary to enumerate later instances of exercising a right which had become indisputable, and, even before it rested on the basis of precedent, could not reasonably be denied to those who might advise, remonstrate and impeach."
So we find that it has been the halit to elude this, a habit which, no doubt, will he contimed as long as Parliament exists, because the line of defence which has heen indicated here is as old almost as the history of law, and will continue as long as public men are charged with any offences. There will always be a denial of jurisdietion ; there will always be, probahly, demurrers to the gravity of the charge ; and there will, probably, always be a desire to mix up a large number of collateral non-important questions with the charge, in the effort to confuse the public mind and becloud the charges, and deceive those who are to pronounce judgment. Referring again to Burke's position with regard to matters of this kind as among the precedents which have been quoted, I would call the attention of the House to the famous case in 17.0 wherein a motion was made for a committee to enguire into the allministration of eriminal justice and the proceedings of the juiges in Westminster in cases relating to the liberty of the press. Now, every speaker who has addressed the Howse on the other side, although supporting the hon. gentlemen who oppose this enquiry, allege that the charges mate by the hom. member for West Ontario are vague and indefinite, and upon this groumd they ask that they he thrown out of court as not amomating to sufficient to place a Minister of the Crown upon his trial or to demand an investigat tion at the hamds of the representatives of the perple. Let us see how that great statesman, Fimmul Burke, treated a yuestion of a far more important character, reflecting on the ahninistration of justice. One woull suppose that if the judge or a number of judges of the bench at Westminster Hall were publicly attacked in the House of Commons, their defenders there would insist that the charges de specific. One would suppose that in such it case all the technicalities and precedents, if any, which could he quoted favourable to the pretension of hon. gentlemen opposite, would be found in a resolution brought before the House of Commons in connection with charges against the julges of the land. The motion was:
"That a committee be apprinted to enquire into the administration of criminal justice and the proceedinge of judges in Westminster Hall, in cases relating to the liberty of the press and the power and duties of juries."
Mr. Burke said :
"The learned gentleman who introduced it. boidly arraigns the general conduct of our courts of justice, and the hon, gentleman who seconded him, as boldly arraigns the conduct of a particular judge."
Now we find no particular judge charged in the resolution, yet we find in the speech of the seconder of the resolution an attack on a particular judge and a severe arraignment of him.-

He then goes on to say :

Mr. Flint.
"My sole object in supporting the proposed enquiry is the public welfare and, the acquittal of the judges.
Although a friend of the judges, although a believer in their integrity, their learning, and their impartiality, he supported this resolution, in which no particular judge is named, on the ground that the enyuiry was for the public welfare, and for the olject of acguitting the juilges. So I think that those who believe in their hearts that the persons accused of the offences named in these charges will be acyuitted, should support the enquiry on that gromul as well as on the ground of the public benefit which will arise from the investigation into the expenditure of the public subsidies to the two malways mentioned.
"I am sutisfied," he says again, "that an acquittal will be the consequence. In acting thus. I think myself their best friend, becanse no other plan will clear their character. Till this step is taken, in vain do the pretend to superior sanctity: in vain do some gentlemen tread their halls as holy ground, or reverence their courts as the temples of the Divinity."
And so he continues, on the line I hive mentioned, to support an enguiry into the comluct of the judges. But our hon. friends, having faile in their encuiry into precedents, even precedents supporting the position taken hy the hon. Minister of Instice at the outset, have brought us down to modern times and have drawn the proverbial red herring across the trail, hy referring to so-called precedents of a recent date well known to this Honse. We have hat the affair in Quebec referred to: we have had quoted with great grasto the morement in the Gntario House when the Hon. E. H. Wool was charged with certain political offences: and we find the investigation of last session referred to, as leaning aratinst the hom. member for West Ontario and those who support him in this House. The Minister of Militia, in concluding his speech, referred to the Ontario case of Wood as a precedent supporting him in the amendment he has moved to-day. Now, I will call the attention of the House to that case. and ask their candid consideration of it, to see if it bears out the contention made by one of the members for Montreal and the Minister of Militia as at all parallel, as at all supporting the position they have assumed in connection with this matter. The general charge against Mr. Wood was malle by Mr. Cameron, and he moved:
" For a committee to enquire whetherany, and what, corrupt inducement or offer was made to the Hon. E. B. Wood, a member of this House to induce him to resign his positionas Treasurer of the Province of Ontario, by the Hon. E. Blake or any other nember of the present Administration while, members of the Opposition in the Legislative Assembly."
Mr. Blake took exception to the phrase "any other member of the present Administration," ant contended that that was too wite and general to place inciefinitely before the House charges against the present Administration, and he moved in ameniment :

[^80]Whole of the Government. But the hon, gentleman must name those whom he charges, before Parliament is called on to grant him a committee.
" Mr. CAMERON. The charge is that the Hon. E. B. Wood received a corrupt consideration, and that it came from the Hon. E. Blake. I believe that some of the Government had nothing to do with the matter."
The motion which was made in amendment to the charge of Mr. Cameron was to the effect that he should make his charge correspond with his motion. While his charge mentioned other memleers in that vague and general way, the motion mentioned only one member, and the amendment which was carried in the House was conched in. these terms:
-" Resolved. that the Hon. M. C. Cameron, member of this House, having stated in his place that a corrupt inlueement or offer was made to the Hon. E. B. Wood, a uember of this House, to induce him to resign his position as Treasurer of the Province of Ontario, by the Hon. E. Blake, while a member of the Opposition in the Legislative Assembly, a select committee be appointed to enquire whether any, and, if any, what corrupt inducement or offer was made to the Hon. E. B. Wood, a member of this House, to induce him to resign his position as Treasurer of the Province of Ontario, by the Hon. $E$. Blake, while a member of the Opposition in the Legislative Assembly."
Consequently the House will see that all the observations made during that disenssion, in which greater definiteness was demanded, centred in the point as to whether it was fair to charge other members of the Administration with being parties to an improper transaction unless their names were mentioned. I think we will all have to agree, that, if there were in the charges of the member for West Ontario (Mr. Edyar) an allusion to " other members of the Administration" in those words, the Government would be correct in insisting that those members of the Administration who were charged should be named or that the whole Ciovernment as a body should be named, or the charge should be strnek out as unfair and indefinite ; but in this case we have all the reguisites that can bring home an offence of this character to the individuals who are charged. Let us take the case of the Pacific scandal, one so notorious, so generally canvassed, so thoroughly discussed in almost every phase and bearing it had on the public affiairs of the country and the public men of that time, one involving such vast consequences to the reputation of public men and the stability of parties in this country, and let us follow the character of the charges which were made in that case and compare it with the character and form of the charges made in this case, and see if the charges made in this case do not bear a favourable comparison with the charges made in 1872. You are all aware that Mr. Huatington's charges were very brief. He rose in his place and stated :

[^81]should receive the contract for the construction of the railway,
"That accordingly Sir Hugh Allan did advance a large sum of money for the purpose mentioned, and at the solicitation, and under the pressing instances of the Xinisters -
"That part of the moneys expended by Sir Hugh Allan in connection with the obtaining of the Act of incorporation and charter were paid to him by the said United States capitalists under the agreement with him,-it is Ordered, That a committee of seven members be appointed to enquire into all the circumstances connected with the negotiations for the construction of the Pacific Railway-with the legislation of last session on the subject, and with the granting of the charter to Sir Hugh Allan and others: with power to send for persons, papers and records, and with instructions to report in full the evidence taken before, and all proceedings of said committee."

Now, in what particular are these charges more specific or more full and detailed than those which are now before the House? I do not allude to the amendment, but I mean the charges which have been brought before the House by the member for West Ontario (Mr. Eidgar). They are almost precisely alike in their essential features, but how were they met on that occasion by the Govermment of that day? Did sir John Macdonald or his able colleagues rise in their plates and contend, as has been contemded in this disulusiom, that the clanges were cague and indefinite, that this was not the court before which they should be tried, that there were other tribunals where they could be better investigateci, and that the charges were not properly formulated for the consideration of the House? Not at all. Relying upon their majority, which was quite large, relying upon the belief that Parliament would not deal further wirh the matter, they roted the motion down without discussion or debate. Public opinion then rose to such a height that the Govermment began to feel, as in this case, that something more must be done, and from the representations coming in from all parts of the country that they were not dealing rightly in flouting such important charges affecting the character of statesmen and injuring the creclit of the country at lome and abroal, they had to alopt another course, and a few days afterwarls the Prime Minister was compelled to bring in, what? A resolution making the statement more specitic or duelling upon newspaper reports as in this case? Not at all. but he virtually acceptel the charges made by Mr. Huntington as the basis of the enquiry, because, on the 8th April we find that :
"On motion of the Right Honourable Sir John A. Macdonald a select committee of five members (of which committee the mover shall not be one) was appointed by this Hoase to enquire into and report upon the several matters contained and stated in a resolution moved on Wednesday, the 2nd of April instant, by the hon. Mr. Huntington, member for the County of Shefford, relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway, with power to send for persons, papers and records."
So that powerful Government, when its position was at stake, accepted the charges as made by Mr. Huntington, without alteration of form or extension of detail, as the basis for a committee of enquiry, and they were prepared to place themselves before that committee on the Huntington resolutions. The result of this transaction, although so injurious to the credit of large numbers of public men, although so alarming in its revelations of immorality of public life at that time, that result was the downfall of the Government of the day and the installation of a new Administration in its place. But the point I wish to make is that the charges upon which, and out of which, the succeeding events grew which overthrew the Macdonald Aidministration, were by no means as full, and as explicit, and as detailed as the charges now before the House. We are, then, called upon to consider the (uneleec charges, we are called upon to consider the history of the transactions which led to the overthrow of the Mercier Administration the other day in the Province of Quebec. I am certain if an instance is sought of any great public transaction wherein men strongly entrenched in power were overthrown, where public opinion was brought to lear upon what we all must realize as corruption in high places, hon. gentlemen are very unfortunate in citing the empuiry into the Mercier matter in the Province of Quebec. How was that brought to public attention? Was it in consequence of elaborate, detailed, complete and formal charges in any Legislature? That matter came up, as we are aware, almost accidentally, in the discussion on the passage of a Bill through another House. I am not saying that was not the proper manner in which to Iring that matter forward. I do not see how, if a Bill is before a committee of this House, if a company come hefore this House, or a corporation asks for an amendment to its charter, 1 am not prepared to say that the committee is not empowered and justified in enquiring into the hond fides of the corporators, into the genuineness of the transaction which they wish to have legalized. But at any rate the enguiry arose out of charges made without any names whatsoever. In the charge brought by the solicitor of the Ontario Bank before a committee of the Senate, neither Mr. Mercier nor any of his colleagues were at all involved. The committee of the Senate merely investigated, without reference to individuals, the circumstances surrounding this charter and the projosed ameadment, and as a result of the evidence brought out, public opinion in the neighlouring province was aroused and was brought to bear against those who appeared to be convicterl of improper dealing with public funds, and a great party went down in the elections that followed. This was not a fair trial from the standpoint of the hon. gentleman. This was not a fair manner in which to bring a public man or his colleagues to book for alleged malfeasance in office, but at the same time hon. gentlemen are never weary of rejoicingin this Honse and elsewhere, and of expressing their congratulations as to the result that followed those investigations, and as to the publicopinion which was aroused by them. Had the objection taken by hon. gentlemen opposite been successfully taken by those whose guilt was implied, we would not have had an inrestigation, we would not have had the rousing of public opinion, we would not have had the condemnation of those transactions in the Prorince of Quebec which appeared to the people of that province to be improper. We had last session a lengthy enluuiry into charges made against a Minister of the Crown, and against a member of this House, and the ground was not taken here or elsewhere that has been taken in opposition to the charges made by the memberfor WestOntario (Mr. Edgar). Now, placing all those charges together, those at Queber, those in theTarte-McGreery case, thosein the Pacific scandal in 1872 , they stand urion all-fours as regards their formalities, as regards the details given upon which to base an enguiry; they all stand upon the same footing. In the Tarte-McGreevy case we find there were subsidies appropriated by this House for great public works; there were subsidies appropriated to assist railway construction: In these charges we find there were subsidies appropriated hy this House to assist railway construction; in the other case the charge was that these subsidies were improperly made use of, were paid to contractors with an understanding that part of it should be remitted for political purposes. In this case we find there is a construction company of which a Minister of the Crown is accused of being a shareholder, and that those funds went to this construction company; in the other case they went to the contractors, and by the construction company a portion of them were handed back again to the Minister or to his friends for political purposes. The only difference in the two cases is the difference in name; in the one case it was a railvay, in the other case it may be a great public duck or a public harlour. In the one case it may be the Minister of Public Works, in the other case it may be the Postmaster General. In the one case the distributors of the money or the go-betweens, were public contractors, in the other case it was the construction company chartered by this Legislature. Now, there has been an effort made, in fact it has been broadly stated that even admitting these charges to be true, they are not such as ought to merit an enquiry at the hands of Parliament, if Parliament has the power. If it is true that $$ 1,000,000$ were voted by Parlianent for the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, that a construction company, of which a Minister of the Crown was a nember, was to expend these moneys in building that railway, that the Minister who recommended these sums to Parliament, who was a member of the construction company, corruptly received large sums of money out of these subsidies and moneys raised upon credit of the same, I ask this House, I ask any hon. gentleman, if that is not an offence which should be investigated by the representatives of this Legislature? If it is not true, as the person incriminated has stated, would they not be doing their duty by him, as Edmund Burke claimed he would be doing his duty by the judges incriminated in 1770, to give him an opportunity to prove his innocence, and to bring forward such evidence as would result in his acquittal? If it is true that during that period the subsidies were improperly paid and contributed for improper purposes with the knowledge of the Minister, and used for election purposes, isit not the duty of this Legislature to pass some resolution in connection with it, to ask for some legislation which may prevent a similar abuse in the future, and thus protect the people of this country from that misuse of public funds? Ancient precedents may be very useful, yet I contend in dealing with great moral and constitutional questions like this, every Legislature must, from the very necessities of the case, emancipate itself to a large degree from the narrow constructions of ancient precedents. From time to time Parliaments have always enancipated themselves from the precedents of the past, but unless it can be shown that it is opposed to the public interests, that it is repugnant to the fairest and broadest principles of justice, then hon. gentlemen are not justified in refusing to investigate these charges as made by the hon. member for WestOnturio (Mr. Edgar). The same charge is made, in almost the same terms, in regard to the subsidy voted in aid of the Temiscouata Railway, that a Minister of the Crown coiruptly received large sums of money from the persons who controlled the construction of the road, and that, after those corrupt payments were made, other and further subsidies were granted, and that those sums so contributed by public contractors were dishonestly expended, with the knowledge of the Minister charged, in lavishand corruptamounts for the purpose of influencing the electors, I cannot imagine why thereshould be this constant lteration, that this is necessarily and solely a charge against the Minister as a member of this House, that it necessarily involves, and solely involves, an attack upon him. Indirectly it may do so, but it is only the assertion of the right of this House to follow the public moneys voted ly this Parliament out of the taxation taken from the people. The gist of the resolution is in the enquiry, and not in the other part of the resolution. I contend that Parliament should not divest itself of this duty cast upon it of making an enguiry into the dispossl and distribution of these public funds. It is notorious, it is asserted with scarcely any contradiction, that enormous sums of money are used at general elections throughout this country. From the day of the Pacific scandal down to the present day large portions of the electorate are houestly of the belief that their rights have been overthrown by the corrupt use of moneys spent among those of the electors who are immoral and who take a low and degraded view of the franchise. A large majority of the electors are honest and straightforward and look upon the franchise as a sacred trust, and use it free from improper influences; but it is well known that a moderate percentage of corrupt voters, 10 , 15 or 20 per cent, have no principles in comnection with public questions, and do not look upon the receipt of money as a bribe, certainly not as an unpatriotic bribe, and it is, unfortunately, well known that the destinies of the country are to a large extent controlled by this weak, immoral and dishonourable vote. If this Parliament can, by throwing aside any mere technicalities, ascertain the means by which vast sums of money are taken from the public treasury and diverted from their proper objects and brought to hear on this percentage of weak and immoral voters, who thus shape the destinies of the country in spite of the views, consciences and wishes of the great majority of the honest elecitors, it is our duty to do so, no matter who may be hurt by the course of the in vestigation. These charges are made from time to time against both political parties. I do not preteud to say that the members of the Jiberal party in some particulars may not make improper use of their own funds in controlling elections, but I do mein to say that it is impossible from the very nature of the case, they leing out of office and having no control or influence over public funds, that they can be charged with improperly using public moneys either directly or indirectly in furthering the private ambitions of any individual members of the party. Bad as it may be to corrupt the electors or any portion of them by the expenditure of private money, it is infinitely worse to corrupt them with money voted by the representatives of the people for public purposes; and I repeat, that bad as it is to corrupt these electors by the use of party funds, it is nothing like so degrading as to use public moneys for the purpose, degrading and immoral as these actions nust be both to those furnishing the money and those receiving it. We have the taunt thrown across the House, and we must receive it as pleasantly as possible, that the election courts show that Liberal candidates and Liberal representatives have violated the law. But any hon. gentleman who knows anything of the courts and their pro. ceedings is aware that the investigation into general corruption by the election courts proves nothing whatever. It is well known that an election may be a very corrupt one, that there may have been a large amount of money expendel on one side or the other in the constituency, and yet the election trial goes off on some minor point. There is no full and real investigation into the extent of the corruption and the guilt of the various parties, or as to the details of the expenditure of any corruption fund on either side, by means of the election courts. Take a case such as frequently occurs in a ccustituency, where large sums of money have been improperly spent, yet the hon. member is unseated in consequence of some triffing violation of the law, either because the controlling parties choose to select it as the ground on which the seat shall he vacated, or because of the difficulty experienced in proving some of the more flagrant cases. I contend that an investigation of this kind should be pursued by a committee of Parliament, a committee made up of hon. members on both sides of the House ; an investigation pursued and based on charges of this kind would be able to follow these publie moneys, and it is only in that respect we have a right to investigate the matter, and to show the methods by which large constituencies have been improperly influenced in the exercise of their franchise; and it is the duty of Parliament, following precedents acting upon constitutional grounds, to accept the resolution moved by the hon. member for West Ontario and to agree to its reference to the select standing committee, or if that committee is considered too large, to a smaller committee for investigation. I will not at the present time discuss the advantages and disadvantages of a Royal Commission. I must say I think it exceedingly strange that the leaders of the House should affirm that Parliament is not competent to investigate charges of this kind, that our power, as exercised, by the Imperial Parliamentof Great Britain, hascompletely broken down and collapsed under the stress of modern emergencies, and hon. gentlemen are going to hand over to a partisan commission, necessarily partisan, because appointed ly the very persons charged with the offence, and not appointed by the people of the country, the investigation bf this case. It is derogatory to the power, privileges, and dignity of the House that such a proposition should be accepted. If the member charged should resign his place as one of those appointing this commission, if he should stand aloof while the whole evidence is leing taken, and appear before the commission simply as one of those charged, perhaps something more might be said in favour of this proposal. But as a representative of the people in this House, I do object to a Minister of the Crown, charged with improperly using public money, appointing his own court to try himself or to iuvestigate the circumstances under which an improper use of money has been exercised. Hon. gentlemen, it seems to me, are belittling the inportance of this matter. During the last session we had formal charges laid aside on the ground that the matters were old, that the charge was indefinite, and that even if it were true, that it was not sufficiently important-for that was the substance of the discussion upon the other side of the House-to cause an enquiry. Again, we find charges of an important charaster involving the reputation of a leading member of the Administration, involving the disposal of enormous sums of public money, involving the very stability of our electoral institutions, thrown out of this House, aind vague, general assertions, extracts from speeches of hon. members upon this side of the House, brought in to confuse the issue. I think the people of this country are looking with more interest than hon. gentlemen opposite imagine as to the result of this matter. They are expecting that Parliament will assert itself, that Parliament will insist upon its rights and its privileges, and 1 believe that the charges alrearly formulated are sufficiently explicit and sutficiently important to require an investiga. tion at the hauls of a committee of this Honse. The hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Dickey) insisted that this was purely a legal , uestion, and that it should be dealt with upon the strictest principles of the courts of justice. Now, taking it from that stanlpoint alone, I think he will find that the charges made by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) conform to the strictest measure of an indictment for an offence in a court of law. This is not an offence indictable in a court of law. It is not an offence triable in any court of which we are atware, and it is not fair to say that the courts are open to those who object to the electoral corruption of the comnties which are referred to in the closing paragraphs of this resolution. Corruption at an election is a specific offence which can only be tried by carrying out the strictest construction of the Controverted Elections Act. Once let the forty days pass in which you can tile a petition, once make any error in the service of the papers upon the person chargen, once make any error in form throughout the whole of these proceedings, and all opportunity for an investigation in the courts of law is over. We know what occurred in the Province of Nova Scotia within the past few months. Gentlemen upon both sides of this House were petitioned against upon the ground that there was electoral corruption by which they became members of this House. The petitions were in due form, they were duly served with all the accompanying documents, the courts met, the dates of trial were arranged, and it was hoped and expected by those who brought these charges and deposited their money in order to meet expenses, that the details of these improper expenditures would have been brought to light. It was hoped that not only would their opponents be unseated but that such a flood of light would be thrown on the methods used, as to lead to the reformation of electoral habits in these localities. But what occurred? Were these matters investigated, did they ever reach trial? No, they were thrown out upon technicalities, andin one of the courts of Nova Scotia, upon identically the same statement of facts under different judges, in one case the petition against an hon. member was dismissed, and in another case the petition was sustained and the hon. member must go to trial. I only allude to this to show the difficulties in many instances that are in the way of proving electoral corruption, even on a limited scale, under the Controverted Flections Act. Let us assume for the sake of argument that after the time at which election petitions could be presented, it was discovered, by a sincere public-spirited man, that the most un-heard-of corruption had existed, that large sums of money had leeen improperly used in corrupting voters, that threats and intimidations of the grossest character had been brought to bear in order to carry the election in favour of the successful candidate; is it not quite apparent that all their efforts would be in vain to reach the root of these evils.unless Parliament came to the rescue and granted such relief as the importance and merits of the case demanded? I fancy that in a large degree this may be one of the reasons why Parliament, although having relegateal the trial of controverted elections to the courts, has not entirely surrendered it to the courts, but still holds in its own hands the right and duty and privilege of still further investigating charges which under the Controverted Elections Act cannot be reached. This is precisely one of the cases now under review. It details a constitutional offence which no court can reach, and which Parliament alone has the power and the right and the luty to investigate, and if necessary to adequately punish. Suppose a Minister of the Crown, suppose the whole Govermment should refuse, after an adverse vote in this Parliament, to carry out the constitutional duty imposed on them, and refuse to carry out the instructions of Parliament and refuse to resign, what court in this comntry would have jurisdiction in this case? The only power that could le brought to bear to compel the most powerful combination in this country to oley the constitutional law is the High Court of Parlianent, and it is to that court we now appeal and not to a commission appointed by the agency or through the power of any of these charged with the offence, but to the High Court of Parliament, to the representatives of the people of this country, to investigate the expenditures of their money, and to trace to their termination the funds which a member standing in his place in this House alleges that he has satisfactory evidence in his possession to prove have been used to corrupt the people of this country. I have not had an opportunity of reading or considering the amendment moved by the Minister of Militia, but if it beclouds the issue or minimizes its importance, I hope that it will be rejected and that the House will come down to theissue brought befort it by the member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), and will insist that justice be done as asked for by him from his place in this House. Thus I believe it would contribute, not merely to the dignity of Purliament, but to the welfare of the people. If we can by any means remove this corrupting influence from our elections we will have taken a higher and nobler position than can be attained in any other way. Let the people of this country be called upon to condemn or support the Ministry, but let them do it apart from the inflaence of public funds used to corrupt a small percentage of the people, and they the least important of the community. I believe, Sir, that even those who are most sincerely of opinion that the Minister has not been guilty, will be doing him a service by giving him an opportunity of proving his innocence before the people of this country, and if he is guilty they will be consulting the dignity of Parliament and the welfare of the people by saying that all offences against the constitutional and unwritten law shall be punished as they deserve.

Mr. Funt.

Mr. DAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I echo the words used by the hon. memler (Mr. Flint) at the close of his speech ; I think it is most important, for the sake of the hon. Minister and for the sake of the dignity of Parliament, that the charges made on the floor of this House by the hon. memher for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) and supplemented as they were, glossed as they were, explained as they were, by the speeches of the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), by the speech of the leader of the Opposition, by the remarkable speech of the hou. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright), and by a speech subsequently made by the hon. member for West Ontario him-self-I think it is most important that these charges should be siftel to the lottom, should be thoronghly enquired into ; that every means should le used to get at the truth or otherwise of these charges impugning the honour and position of a Minister of the Crown ; and, Sir, the hon. member for Yarmouth (Mr. Flint), who has just addressell the House, seems to me to have taken a very curious position, hecause he says that if we take what is certainly a vague charge, made by the hon. member for West Ontario, we can have a very thorough and sifting investigation; but if we take that charge, amplified, extended, enlarged as it has been by the speeches of the hon. member for Bothwell, and especially by the speech of the hon. member for West Ontario, he seems to imply that we cannot have a full investigation. Now, Sir, his assertion that we cannot have a full investigation if chis amendment is carried, cannot be based upon the form of that amendment, save in this one respect, that insteal of referring the issue to a committee of this House, it constitutes a Royal Commission to take evidence from whonsoever may go hefore it, directed and guided as may be, by any counsel he may think fit to choose, and reporting that evidence to this Honse. He asserts that that cannot be a thorough, a sifting, a complete enupuiry.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.
Mr. DAVIN. The hon. member for Bothwellsays "hear, hear," and in the course of his speech he spoke against the appointment of a Royal Commission ; but the Royal Commission which the hon. member for Bothwell had in his mind was a very different one from that proposed by the hon. Minister of Militia. The hon. member for Bothwell spoke of julges. This commission will not be a judge. This commission will have the powers of a court of record to compel witnesses to come before it, to examineand hear fully any evidence that may be placed before it ; but it will not devolve upon the commission to pronounce on that evidence. That is still in the possession of the House, and the House can declare on the evidence. If the House is dissatisfied in the least degree with the way in which the evidence has been taken, it is open to it to have the whole matter referred to a committec, giving its reasons, showing that there has been some unfairness on the part of the commission, or that the commission has been wanting in its duty in some way in hearing the evidence, and then the country will be as ready to support hon. gentlemen, I suppose, as it is now when they say, as they pretend has leen the case, that this commission has been suggested, not for the purpose of making the enquiry thorough, full and complete, but in some way for the purpose of limiting and burking that enquiry. I am afraid, Mr. Speaker, if I may make such a remark in passing, that our friends are profoundly disappointed at the course taken by the ministerial side. I um afraid that they are very sorry that this amendment, so wide, so extensive, so fundamental, has been proposed, and that they expected that instead of that course being taken, the monster majority, as they call it, would be induced to vote down the original motion as it stood. Nohody supposes that 1 am ready to come here at the bidding of any party to cloak any man charged-

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, no.

Mr. DAVIN. Well, if these incredulous people around me do not believe it, the public know my character. The people know that I could not be brought here to rote to screen a man seriously charged. But, Sir, if this amendment, or an amendment something like it, had not been proposed, if an amendment, as i expected, had not come from the Opposition side of the House, embodying the definite charges that I have read in the speeches of the hon. gentlemen referred to, I do not know how any man having regard to the dignity of this House, having regard to common fairness, having regard to the independence and the liberty of the members of this House, could do other than vote down that original motion.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Mir. DAVIN. The hon. member for Bothwell, who says "hear, hear," was in his speech, as he always is, very learned on the constitutional position of this Honse : and the hon. member for Yamouth, who is a lawyer, and who has been quoting Hallam to us, is also very learned on the constitutional position of this House : and the changes have been rung on the High Court of Parliament as though this Parliament of Camada bore a strict amalogy to the High Court of Parliament as described hy that phrase in constitutional history. Sir, the High Court of Parliament as spoken of by that same writer Hallam and other constitutional writers, is not the House of Commons at all. It is the House of Lords and the House of Commons of England ; the House of Commons of England is the great inquest of the High Court of Parliament, and the reason for this is founded in constitutional principles and in principles of justice. The reason why the Commons could not be properly the High Court of Parliament is very clear, because since the system of impeachment came into existence, the court to try such cases has been the House of Lorils. The court which first enquired into the case was the House of Commons, and I think Hallam lays it down-I am speaking now from memory, but if not Hallam, it is some constitational writer of authority-that the House of Commons could not sit as a High Court of Parliament for this renson : that then you would have the julge and the prosecutor one and the same person; so that when my hon. friend rings the changes on the High Court of Parliament-I do not know whether he misled himself or whether it is the hon. member for Bothwell who has misled him-he is using a phrase calculated, as he uses it, to mislead the community and this House.

Mr. FLINT. I said the House of Commons.

Mr. DAVIN. At the conclusion of my hon. friend's speech, he spoke of bringing these charges before the High Court of Parliament, and he justified this technical constitutional criticism of mine by that statement. This trial by committee is not at all as ancient as my hon. friend from Bothwell would make out. Why, the committees of the House of Commons in Fngland did not get the power to hrar evidence under oath until early in the eighteenulh century; and the position taken by the hon. gentleman, that the House of Commons is the only borly which can constitutionally try a charge of this kind, is not a tenable one at all. It so happens, although my hon. friend from Bothwell says that no precellent or no illustration to the contrary exists in English history, that we have in recent times in England a very remarkable illustration of the opinion which the greatest Parliament in the world holds as to the incompetence of a committee of the House of Commons for hearing certain charges. It will he rememberel that out of the Irish political discussions, a case arose of O'Donnell against Walter. In the course of that case most violent charges were made against Mr. Parnell and others by Mr. Webster, the Attorney General and the counsel for the defence : and Sir Wilfrell Lawson, on 9th July, 1888, asked the First Lord of the Treasury, Mr. Smith, whether, in view of the serious charges recently made against the hon. member for Cork, the Goverument would consent to the appointment of a select committee to enguire into the truth of those charges. Mr. Parnell himself then called for an enquiry. The First Lord of the Treasury said in reply :
"Mr. Speaker, I received the notice of the hon. baronet as I entered the House, but I have no hesitation in at once replying to the question which he addressed to me. I may say, Sir, that myview remains precisely the same as it was last year. This House is absolutely incompetent to deal with the grave charges to which the hon. baronet refers, or be at any time a tribunal of the character indicated. I have less hesitation in saying this, as there exists tribunals in this country on whose competence and absolute impartiality no doubt whatsoever can possibly be thrown."
On the 12th July, 1888, Mr. Parnell himself asked the First Lord of the Treasury whether he would afford facilities for enabling the judgment of the House to be taken on a motion for a select cominittee standing in the name of the hon. member for Cork. The First Lord of the Treasury, Mr. Smith, said:
"Mr. Speaker, the Government retain the opinion they have expressed, and in which the House concurred by $\Omega$ large majority last year, that the proposed tribunal is ultogether unft to deal with the question-limited as it is in scope and character - (mark these words)-which the in scope member proposes to reier to it. but they are willing to. propose to parliament to pass an Act appointing a commistion, which should consist only or mainly of judges, with fall powers 8 an in the case of other statatory commissions to enuuire into the allegationg and charges made against members of Partiament by the defendants in the recent action of $0^{\prime}$ Donnell $p \pi$. Walter and another.' It has always appeared to the Government that the proper conyse for hon. membera concerned was to appeal to the courts of law for a complete examination of those charges."
What was the result? A very remarkable proceeding took place, unique in English history. An Act was passed appointing a commission of jurlges to enquire into this matter. What did the judges do? They did precisely what the Government has done with regard to this appointment. They were not content to take the charges as stated by those who were opposed to the men whose characters were impliuated. They actually took the speech which the Attorney General, Mr. Webster, made in the case of O'Ionnell against Walter. They took all his violent language, and they formulated from that speech, and from the articles that appeared in the Times" headed "Parnellism and Crime," a series of charges against Mr. Parnell and the Parnellites, or rather they insisted on having the gentlemen who had made such charges formulate them. But that did not suit Sir Charles Russell, and he added other charges, and the consequence was that before that high court, one of the most august that ever sat in England, whether you take the character of the judges or the genius of the men who appeared before it, or the prominence of the men who were to be tried, or the issues at stake-you had at that commission which not even the court that tried Warren Hastings can throw into the shade as a great and august tribunal, precisely what has taken place in Parliament to-day. You had not the charges such as the Attorney Gieneral, Webster, wished them to remain as against Parnell and his followers, but you had charges made out of the speeches of Mr. Webster and out of the articles in the Times; you had these charges formulatel, and you haul, therefore, the full and complete issue. I say that that is a very remarkable illustration of the print I make, and that point is this: It is quite clear that, to begin with, we are not here in this Parliament what is called a High Court of Parliament in the constitutional history of England ; it is further evident that it has even dawned upon hon. gentlemen and right hon. gentlemen in England that the efficiency of a committee of the House, as a machinery for taking evidence even, but, above all, its efficiency as a machinery for obtaining judgment, is very doubtful, to say the least of it. Now, the speech of my hon. friend, the member for Yarmouth -and I wassorry to hearit from him because he is a man for whom I have very great respect-had, after all, in it all the characteristics of pure talk in court to a jury, just for effect. He spoke abrout technicalities. He said that the result of having this Royal Commission would be that we should be bounded in by technicalities, and he told us that the result of these technicalities would be that we might not have that full investigation proper to a High Court of Parliament. What is the meaning of technicalities? What are the technicalities to which he refers? They are the laws of evidence, which you will tind in three large volumes of Taylor. It is the law of evidence that the man charged with petty larceny can have the protection of, if he goes into court. Yet here you make charges against a man occupying one of the highest positions in the country, charges aiming at his political life and honour, and you are afraid that the judges who may take the evidence will have their judgment biassed by conducting the enquiry in accordance with the rules which the experience of centuries has shown to be good. What the hon. gentleman wanted was not a fair and full enquiry, but some kind of tribunal where, owing to the incompetence, perhaps, of the chairman --and I hope the chairmen of our committees will not be offended with me for saying so, though every chairman may be perfect in all respects as a member of Parliament-he may permit of a rambling license in a committee which, instead of furthering the efficiency of Parliament and showing the utility of committees and reflecting dignity on this House, strikes at all the efficiency which has been supposed to attach to these things and brings the House and the committees into contempt. My hon. friend from Yarmouth (Mr. Flint) also spoke of narrowiag down the scope of the enquiry. To use the elegant and classical language of the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard Cartwright): "in the name of wonder" what is the meaning of narrowing down the scope of the enquiry? How is it narrowed down? You have the same charge which the member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) made.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Not at all.

Mr. DAVIN. You have the same charge, amplified by the words of the hon. member who shakes his tistappointed head, amplified by the extravagant, gross, wild charges made by the hon. member for South Oxford, and what the Government sayI do not know what the Postmaster General saysis come not only with one or two little arrows, one or two antagonists, against us, but the Government takes the position of one of Scott's heroes, and says with James Fitz-James:

> "Come one, come all, this rock shall fly
> From its firm base as soon as I."

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE-THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 22) respecting the London and Port Stanley Railway Company.-(Mr. Moncrieff.)
Bill (No. 23) to incorporate the High River and Sheep Creek Irrigation and Water Power Company. -(Mr. Davis.)
Bill (No. 50) respecting the Ontario Pacific Railway Company.-(Mr. Bergin.)
Bill (No. $\mathbf{5 6}$ ) to confirm an agreement between the Tobique Valley Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.-(Mr. Skinner.)

Bill (No. 63) respecting the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company.-(Mr. Murray.)
Bill (No. 77) to revive and amend the Act to incorporate the Ottawa, Morrisburg and New York Railway Company, and to change the name thereof to "The Canadian-American Railway Company." --(Mr. Taylor.)

SECOND READINGS.

Bill (No. 78) for the relief of James Albert Manning Aikins.-(Mr. Taylor.)
Bill (No. 79) for the relief of Ada Donigan.--(Mr. Taylor.)

Bill (No. 80) respecting the Manitoba and NorthWestern Railway Company of Canada. -(Mr. Wallace.)

RELIEF OF HERBERT RLMMINGTON MEAD.

Mr. TAYLOR moved second reading of Bill (No. 81) for the relief of Herbert Rimmington Mead.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We are in the habit of taking a vote on these Bills. Am I to understand that the vote is postponed until the Bill comes back from the committee?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think that would be the better course. I have examined the evidence, and it seems to be in the usual course, and I thought it would be better that the Bill should have an opportunity of going before the committee. In fact, I must admit that I was under the impression that it was after that investigation that the vote was taken. I think it would be convenient to let it go to the committee first.
Motion agreed to on division.

CHARGES AGAINST SIR ADOLPHE C.IRON.

House resumed consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Edgar : That certain charges of corruption against sir Adolphe ${ }^{\mathrm{P}}$. Caron be referred to the Select Standing Conmittee on Privileges and Elections; and theamendment of Mr. Bowell thereto.
Mr. DAVIN. Before dinner I had referred to the Parnell case as one illustration of the principle on which we are called upon by the amendment of my hon. friend the Minister of Militia, to act. Now, I wish to call the attention of the House to the state of opinion in England just prior to the issuance of that commission, and for this reason: My hon. friends of the Opposition, I regret to saty, have been guilty of giving us the evil precedent of showing a distrust of the judiciary of Canada. Sir, I have heard a great deal from hostile lips against the late illustrious leader of the Conservative party, but I never heard one word in disparagement of the manner in which he filled up the judiciary of Canada. I have heard from men that could not breathe one fair word in respect to his political life eulogies of the manner in which he selected men to adorn the bench. Sir, I need not enlarge on the great advantage, the priceless heritage to a people to have a judiciary that is above suspicion. Although the position of a Superior Court judge in Canada is not so distinguished from a social point of view as that of a judge in the old country, yet, so far as I have heard, we have had a long line of judges in every province of Canada not unworthy to sit side by side with the men who have distinguished the bench in England. Therefore, if there could be any ground of argunent in the tone of disparagement we heard in respect to the tribunal to which the issue with which we are now concerned is to be referred, there would be the same ground in respect to a tribunal of the same kind precisely established by either Royal Commission or Act of Parliament in England. I happened to be in England in 1887, and those who were not there will yet be familiar with what I found. I found that one of the greatest managers of men that ever played the part of a parliamentary lealer, was held to have been ruined by the attacks of the Timex on his character. Mr. Parnell in 1887 was under a cloud, and it was supposed that he was destroyed. I will tell this House further, that the very man-one of the men at any rate -who was writing these articles "Parnellisn and Crime," one of the most distinguished studente ever turned out of the university of which I happen to be an unworthy clumuux, did me the honour to invite me to dinner at the Reform Club to meet some old literary friends; and he spoke of Mr. Parnell as destroyed, and destroyed by these articles. I said to him : "I do not know him, I never saw him, I know nothing of him except what I have read; butcan you supposefrom thecharacterwe know him to be, a leader of men, that he is guilty of the crime that is laid at his door by these articles?" He said, "I have him-he is a destroyed man." Now, what was the charge? The charge that was laid at the door of himself and his friends, and which made him, at the time, probably the most lespised man among the masses of the English people, was that, when, on certain occasions, they thought it politic to denounce, and did clenounce certain crimes in public, they afterwards led their supporters to believe such denunciations were not sincere. Mr. Parnell was accusel of being implicated in the Phonix Park murder. And, as I have said, he was supposed to be a destroyel man. Three judges, Mr. Justice Hannen, an Englishman, Mr. Justice Day, I do not know what countryman he is, and Mr. Justice Smith, an Englishman, formed a commission to try the charges which the leader of the House of Commons refused to submit to a parliamentary committec. What happener! " These men, so far as judges with superior minds and learning could, shared the prejudices and passions of their environment. The trial went on. Public opinion was strongly against the accused. Yet what happened? Did that happen which hon. gentlemen hint here would happen if we had a similar tribunal ! This is the finding: "We find that the charge 'when on certain occasions they thought it politic to denounce, and did denounce, certain crimes in public they afterwards led their supporters to believe such denunciations were not sincere,' is not estab). lished; we entirely exonerate Mr. Parnell and the other respondents of the charge of insincerity in their denunciations of the Phonix Park murder, and find that the far simile letter on which this charge was chiefly based against Mr. Parnell was a forgery." The House will remember that Mr. Parnell went into court against the Times and got exemplary damages. From that moment, Mr. Parnell's character as a public man rose higher than ever. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), who is an authority on constitutional law, dealt with the Minister of Justice in the course of his very erndite speech, and I will compliment him on the tone of patronage with which he dealt with the hon. and learned leader of the House. In criticising the Minister of Justice, he said :
"Why, Sir, from the days of Edward III down to the present hour, the Government and the Parliament of England have adhered strongly to the principle, and have maintained the right of Parliament to investigate such matters, and they have held that the House of Commons is the sole body that has the right to conduct those investigations."
That is as to investigation in regard to charges such as these before the House. I suppose when the hon. member for Bothwell goes back to the time of Edward III he is referring to Latimer's case. That was an impeachment. Was the hon. gentleman referring to Latimer's case?

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I will tell the hon. gentleman by and by.

Mr. DAVIN. What the hon. gentleman means is this, that the kind of trial he wants to give to the Postmaster General is the trial that from the time of Edward III has been time-honoured in England. Either his words meant that or they were absurd nonsense. The hon. member might as well tell us whether they meant that or not. The hon. gentleman said:

Mr. Davin.
"And they have held that the House of Commons is the sole body that has a right to conduct these investigations." This is of the character of an impeachment. The hon. gentleman means investigation of a judicial character ; he does not mean the enyuiries that take place in Parliament by reason of its inquisitorial character. I will say this for the hon. gentleman, who poses in this House not merely as a constitutional authority but as a logician, that throughout the whole of his speech we find the fallacy: if I will not be thonght pedantic in saying so, of using the principal term of his argument in a dubious sense. He again aind again confounds the character of Parliament as a court, to use his own phrase "the High Court of Parliament," and the character of Parliament as an inquisitorial body. As an inquisitorial body there is no limit to our power to enyuire into anything any man holding official power can do, from the conduct of the Prime Minister, or the conduct of the commanding officer, down to the most humble postmaster in any country village. Anything that affects the public we can enguire minutely into, and in committee we constantly exercise that inquisitorial character. But when you come to dead with Parliament as a court it is a different matter, and our powers are by constitutional usage and in the interests of the public. in the interests even of the liberty of the subject, as the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Curran) pointed out, and as was shown in a quotation from a speech made by Mr. Blake in the Ontario House, our powers are in all these instances strictly limited, although as an inquisitorial body our powers have hardly a limit. If the words of the hon. gentleman mean anything, and he repeats them in the language of his speech, he lays down the principle that from the time of Elward III, the mamer in which charges of that sort which are made against Sir Adolphe Caron have been tried in Fngland, is before a parliamentary committee. I say here, and I defy him to contradict it, that he cannot show a single instance where a charge of this character was ever tried in England before a parliamentary committee. I have here the record of a very remarkable trial, the trial of Lord Melville, the last impeachment that took place in England, and supposing I could only give this one case, the universal proposition laid down by my hon. friend would le destroyed. He laid down the universal proposition that in no case has the usage been departed from, from the time of Edward III; that the mode of trial of offences of the class he alleges against Sir Adolphe Caron, was to refer them to a committee of Parliament, or, in his own language, to try them before the House of Commons. Was the case of Lord Melville tried before a parliamentary committee? Let us see. I may say here, in passing, that if these charges which affected the honour of Lord Melville are looked at, you will see that they are specific charges, and that they state specifically the actual things with which Lord Melville was charged, so that he knew what he had to reply to. Now, when Mr. Whitbred moved the resolution charging Lord Melville, what was done by Mr. Pitt, who was then (hancellor of the Exchequer and leader of the House of Commons, and who was then Prime Minister of England and the most powerful Minister that ever swayed the British House of Commons? He got up in his place and he moved that these charges be referred to a committee of the House of Commons.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIN. My hon. friend says "hear, hear," but let him wait awhile. What did the British House of Commons do? The Imperial House of Commons actually voted down the proposition of their own leader, and the result was, after several efforts to bring Lord Melville to justice, he was impeached before the High Court of Parliament, in the only mamer known to English constitutional history : and a prosecating body went up from the Commons of England to the House of Lords. When I read and heard the speech of my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Mills), I thought that he was astray in stating that it was the invariable rule in England to try offences in the manner in which he wants to have the Postmaster (ieneral tried now, for I could not recall a single instance of such a thing. I went to the Library and I took down various books, amongst others "The Institutions of the English Government," by Cos, and the very first charge mentioned therealthough the hon. gentleman is afraid to admit itis evidently the charge that he is thinking of when he refers to the time of Edward III. The charge was that against William Latimer and othets for mistealings with the public revenue, and the record says that Latimer was impeached and accused by voice of the Commons before the Lords. He was comlemned liy the Lords in full Parliament to fine and imprisonment. The impeachment fell into disuse for some time, but it was again revived in the time of James I, when the impeachment was again conducted before the Lords, and so on down to the time of Lord Melville. I may mention to the House the familiar case of Warren Hastings as another instance of this. I call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the remarkable case of Lord Melville in which the Prime Minister of England wanted to refer certain charges, very analogons in character to the charges we are now considering, to a committee of the House of Commons, and the House of commons actually voted down its own leader. I an afraid, devoutly believing as I used to in the authority of $m y$ hon. friend from Bothwell, that my faith in his constitutional law is somewhat shaken. Sir, a good deal has been said about the privilege of Parliament. I want to say something absout the privilege of members of Parlianent, and I say here that no higher crime and no greater misdemeanour can be committed by a menber of Parliament, than to abuse his privilege of Parliament in aspersing the character of another member of Parliament, or any man outside ${ }_{i}$ Parliament either ; and for a man like my hon. friend from West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) to come to Parliament with such rague charges as these, without any particulars, and to try to asperse the character of a Minister of the Crown, or any member of Parliament; and for any hon. gentlemen to get up and make the gross and grave and drealful statements they made founded on this vicious and cowardly charge-
Some hon. MEMbERS. Hear, hear.
Mr. DAVIN. Yes, this mountebankish chargefor the object clearly was not to bring the Postmaster General to justice, but to throw a vague cloud of suspicions alout his character, and about the Ministry. I say that hon. gentlemen who make such statements in this House without the fear of being brought to book, abuse the privilege of Parliament to the bamboozlement of the public, and the injury of the character of a Minister. Now, Sir, what is this charge? As they are in love with it. what is it? It is a kind of bat, which partakes of a dual character; it is an indictment improperly drawn, and it is a belated election petition multiplied about twenty-two fold, and as an election petition it is simply monstrous, absurd and impudent. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition is more engaged in law than I have been for many years, and there are other hon. gentlemen who are daily in the practice of the law ; but, though I am not. I know this, that the essence of au election petition is that particulars shall be given.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. DAVIN. I say you must give particulars in an election petition at thatstage of ripeness when the charge is properly made. Are particulars given here? If you look at clause 6 of these charges, and at the phrase "other members," you will see that this bat might have spread its wings over half a continent, but when you look at the charges against the hon. Minister, why, it is a very small monse indeed, and when you look at that little mouse, at the timidity in the eye, the ferocity in the jaw and in the claws, and at the general character of the whiskers, you can see that it bears a remarkable similarity to its parent from West Ontario. I say that this charge of the hon. member is a kind of bat which would fain spread its filmy and flimsy wings as an election petition over half the continent, and at the same time fix its venomous claws and teeth upon the character and standing of the hon. Postmaster General without giving him an inkling of what he had to reply to.
Mr. CASEF. It is more like a battery, perhaps.
Mr. DAVIN. Well, if it is, it is so far like the mover of this motion and like my hon. friend that it is a silenced battery. Well, sir, the hon. member for West Ontario is as weak on his reasoning pins as some of his leaders. He thus deals with one of the leaders of the Govermnent:
"The Minister of Marine drew a nice point when he said I had not, as 1 should have. charged his colleague with public robbery. Well, I did not put it in those words, bat in words, which I certainly intended to mean robbing the public."
If he intended to mean robbing the public, why did he not say it? He goes on:
" If it is not public robbery for a member to take money out of public subsidies, I would like to know what is: Then the Minister of Publio Works drew another beautiful defence. He said that I had failed to set out conspiracy, that conspiracy was not shown in terms in my charge; and therefore it should fail. The hon. gentleman is a lawyer. Does he not know the law of conspiracy? Let him read up his Russell on Crimes, and he will see it is there declared that 'an unlawful, conspiracy is to be inferred from the acts of the parties.' And I have tried to make clear what the acts of his hon. colleague were, and does not Russell go on to say that, not once in a thousand times can it be otherwise proved?' So, I think, thousand times can it ge otherwise proved chance to go on and prove these charges, there Fill be what is under the law, unless the Minister of Justice should change it in his new criminal code, a most abominable conspiracy."
Now, you see the reasoning of the hon. qentleman there. The hon. Minister of Public Works says : You should have set out the charge of conspiracy. The hon. gentleman replies: I do not get out the charge of conspiracy, but I want you to direct your attention to this. What, if he had been logical, would he have directed attention to? He should have directed attention to some authority which would show that if you charge a man in court with conspiracy, you need not lay the charge; that would be the logical answer. Instead of that, he goes on to show how you should prove conspiracy. Suppose he went into a court before a judge hinting at conspiracy in some vague and shadowy way, and the judge said to him: There is no charge here; what do you intend to prove? If it looks like anything, it looks like conspiracy, and if you can prove that, why don't you lay the charge? The hon. member replies: Well, if you will allow ne to go on, my lord, I think I may prove the case ly the evidence. Would not the judge say to him, you must lay the charge or leave the court? And now, what are the hon. gentleman's friends arguing: When he runs into court and hints at conspiracy and misconduct on the part of the Minister, he and others say in heated speechesspeeches all wanting in julicial tone-which they are afraid to put into the charge; and the friends and colleagues of the hon. Postmaster General come forward and say, but that is what you want to prove-is it not"-and we will put it into the charge; we will not turn you out of court ; we will make the charge and give you an opportunity of proving it. Then these hon. gentlemen come and whine and press their ridiculons bat-like resolution, instead of being realy, honestly and sincerely, if they have the facts, to prove them, and blessing Gool and blessing the Government for the opportunity which has been given them to do so. Now, the hon. member for South Oxford went further, I think went further than any other member in this House in what he said. Part of his language was quoted by the hon. Minister of Militia. But, Sir, the full language, the atrocious language, of the hon. member was not fully set out. He said-and mark the words of this hon. gentleman who would have to be one of the judges of the hon. Postmaster General:
"That during the whole of that time, if I understand the charge aright"
Is it possible that the hon. member for West Ontario laid such a serious charge on the Table of this House and never consulted the Gamaliel of modesty and decency of speech who comes from South Oxford? This hon. gentleman, who wants the Parliament of Canada to take action on this charge practically says: The charge is this, if $I$ understand it aright, but the language is so vague that I really do not know whether I understand it aright or not. He says :
"If I understand the charge aright, that hon. gentleman was actively engaged in, and profting more or less from, the reoeipt of these larre subsidies, which he, as Minister of the Crown, had adised to be granted to these railmays, that, besidee, he had corrraplly asada a large proportion of the subsidies granted by Pariament or the parpose of debauching the electors in a large number of counties. Nom, I want the House to underratand that if these charges be proved, the Minitter beyond all question stands guilty of ocinspiracy and embesziement. He stands gnilty of more. He stands guilty of haviige com mitted this embesslement for political parposes, that being one of the gravest ofiences that can be committed against parlismentary government. The charse that is made againet the Postmaster General is in terms the charge of treason against this commonwealth."
But that is the very charge which is not in terms. Sir, those gentlemen are guilty of an abuse of the privileges of Parliament to such an extent that they put on the Table a charge which no honest man can read, and say with certainty that even corruption, as properly understood, is charged against the Postmaster General at all. He is charged with having corruptly received moneys. What would that nean? It might mean that he received moneys corruptly, as defined by the amendment ; it might mean that he actually conspired with those men to get subsidies in order to get profits out of them either for elections or for himself; or it might merely mean that some contractor, some railway magnate, had given subscriptious to an election, and that we are to infer these subscriptions had heen spent corruptly. . It might mean one or the other; and I ask you whether it is a creditable thing to those gentlemen to be capable of stating in their speerhes that the Postmaster (General is guilty of embezzlement, is guilty of conspiracy, is guilty of public rolbery, and yet, when they come to make a solemn charge, to be only capable of putting it in such it vague language that you camot seize the meaning. I say that a graver abuse of the privileges of Parliament has never been coumitted. The hon member for West Ontario, considering his lung experience in this House, has set a very bad example indeed in this matter. Now, I wish to sity one word about the character of the debate. Wehadia speech from the Minister of Justice, in which he deelared twice explicitly that if any definite charges are made, they shall be enquired into. He stated it twice, and yet, although he thus stated it, we had the leader of the Opposition, from whom, to ase the language of the hon. member for South Ontario, we might have expected better things, saying:

"When the hon. gentleman was before the people of this country, and when the Governnent of which he was a meinber wasassailed for bribery and corruption, for winning elections by vicious practices, the hon. gentleman was brave, and he stated that he was willing to give a hearing to every man who made a charge against the Governinent or any of its members; that he was welcome to make that charge and to have it investigated, that the Government was afraid of nothing.'
And he goes on to say that now the Minister of Justice draws back from that. What did the Minister of Justice say? His words were still ringing in this assembly when the leader of the Opposition spoke. He said :
"I have already assured the House that if any charges are framed which do come within that category, they will be entertained, and there will be no opposition on this side to an investigation."
And again and again throughout the debate, it was sought to be sent forth to the country that the Minister of Justice had on the public platform said one thing and had in this House said another, whereas the fact is that what he said here was that there are no charges on which issue can be joined ; that this was not a charge on which we can join issue. Make your charges, he said, as men ought to make them; make them clefinite, and they shall be entertained. It is discreditable to Parliament, it is discreditable to that great party, the Reform party, the Opposition in this House, that charges should be made in that way, and that misrepresentation of opponents shoulil be sent broadcast to the country, and no means whatever of getting at a large portion of the people to undeceive them. I say such a procedure is discreditable and a dishonour to the House. I say: we are here discussing an issue about as serious as anything that could occupy the attention of this House. It affects the honour of the House, it affects the honour of a gentleman who has long had a seat in this House. If these charges are trie, they can be proved hefore the tribunal proposed by the Government to receive the evidence. If they are not true, the evidence no doubt will fail to establish them, and the hon. the Postmaster General will have his honour sustained ; and I should not like to describe the position of dishonour in which, in such case, the members of the Opposition will stand. I say that the character of our public men as regards honour, public honesty, and intellectual eminence, is one that affects the foundation of our prosperity ; and we ought to le jealous to see that we have on the Opposition benches men of the highest public character and men of eminent abilities and attainments. But I say this also, that whether a member of this House sits on the front benches or be the humblest member of it, we should, in the interests of the House, and of each one of us, and of the conntry, have a strict regard for justice, and take heed that we do not try, in order to catch a petty party victory, to lay down principles which would strike at the root of our independence, impair our etticiency and destroy our dignity.

Mr. BRODECR. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Asoiziaiboia (Mr. Darin) will no donbt parton me if I take the liberty of answering him in a language which may not be very familiar to him. As I fear that the debate might prove somewhat tiresome, both for the House and - for myself, if I should undertake to use a language which is foreign to me, I prefer to speak in my native tongue, which is French. If I understand clearly the question which is before the House, it is whether we are to have a sham encuiry or a serious investigation into the charges made before the House by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar). For my part, I consider that the scheme proposed by the hon. Minister of Militia in his amendment, will never lead to a knowledge of the truth or fulsity of those accusations. Mr. Speaker, we have had, in the Province of Quebec, an opportunity of learning what good is to be expected from enquiries conducted by commissioners. We have been able to find out what measure of light such enquiries can lring to bear upon the matters to be investigated. I remember that, in 1882, an extremely grave accusation was formulated by a member of the Quebec Legislature, an accusation which involved a large number of members, and endangered their seats in the Assembly. Instead of referring the matter to a serious tribunal, instead of referring it to a committee of the Assembly, the Government appointed a Royal Commissioner, Hon. Judge Routhier, to enquire into it. I have nothing to sey against the character of this distinguished magistrate, but as he alone had the carrying out of the enquiry, without the help of a counsel for the accusing party, and as he naturally did not know where the guilt rested, nor what witnesses could eulighten him, he simply called a few witnesses designated by public rumour, and there was the end of it. We see by that the uselessness of having such enquiries made by Royal Commissioners, beyond the control of Parliament, and before whom witnesses cannot be heard which should be heard. Now, the hon. member for Assiniboia has drawn upon the stock of English precedents to show that the appointment of Royal Commissions was the practice followed in England. But, Mr. Speaker, is there any necessity to look for English precedents. Have we not one here, hardly a year old, which may show that such matters may be referred not to Royal Commissioners, but to committees of this House? Last year, when the ex-member for Montmorency (Mr. Tarte) made his accusations before the House, why was the matter referred to a committee of the House: While the ex-Minister of Public Works, now the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin), was submitted to so serions, so important, an investigation, why is such an investigation now refused in the case of the hon. Postmaster General? Why was the hon. member for Northumberlium East (Mr. Cochrane) sent before a committee of the House, when to-day such a committee is denied in this case? The reason is that those enquiries, controlled by the House, have brought about monstrous revelations, as black as could be brought to light, and now it is the intention that the truth as to similar accusations must be kept from the public gaze. Such is the only reason, Mr. Speaker, why in effort is now made to refer these charges not to a committee controlled by the House, not to a responsible committee, but to a single person who will deal with the matter as he will think fit, who will hear the witnesses he will chooge to, and from whom the House or the country cannot expect justice full and complete. The hon. member has argued that the charges made ly the hon. member for West Ontario were vague and insufficient, and that consequently a committee of investigation should not be granted for such accusations. If, however, they are carefully examined, they will be found to contain four counts of indictment, four grave, definite charges. Let us take up the first. The hon. nember for West Ontario charges the hon. Postmaster General with having, in 1882 and later, been a member of a company interested in a contract with the Government, receiving subsidies from the latter from time to time, according to the progress of work done by it. I am extremely surprised to fiud that in the amendment proposed by the hon. Minister of Militia, it is declared that the charges preferred, and into which the Government asks for an investigation, are similar to those formulated by the hon. member for Weat Ontario. Here is the last part of the amendment, to which I have just referred. It reads as follows :-

" That in the opinion of this House it is expedient tha ${ }^{t}$ enquiry should be made, as to the truth or falsity of the allegations and charges last mentioned and numbered respectively $1,2,3,4,5,6,7,8,9$ and 10 (being the allegations and charges included in the original statement of the said James D. Edgar.)"
I regret exceedingly to see that the charges as enumerated by the hon. Minister of Militia in the latter part of his amendment, are not at all in accord with the charges made by the hon. member for West Ontario, and that, among other discrepancies, they do not mention that the hon. Postmaster General was a member of a company interested in a contract with the Government. So that when the Government claim that they want to have an investigation on the same charges as those preferred by the hon. member for West Ontario, they misstate the facts, and shamefully try to deceive the public. Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the import of a charge like this? 1 say that not only is this charge extremely serious, but that it is well defined, and that if it were proven the hon. Postmaster General would not be worthy a seat in this House, and should consequently le expelled. It is sufficient, Mr. Speaker, to read the statute concerning the Independence of Parliament, to acquire the conviction. This charge made by the hon. member for West Ontario is extremely serious, and that even alone should be more than sufficient to warrant an investigation. This is how I find this charge formulated by the hon. member:
" 4 . That the said Sir A. P. Caron was, during the whole or the greater purt of said period, one of the members of said construction company, and thus had means of knowledge, or did know of the dealings with the suid subsidies. and their destination after they were paid by the Gorernment by the said railway company."
Therefore, Mr. Speaker, here is an exceedingly serious charge in which a member of this House is aceused of being interested in a construction company, the said company having a contract with the Government by which it was to derive some profits from tine to time according to the progress of its work. Now, what is the import of a charge like this? If we turn to chapter 11 of the Revised Statutes of Camada, we find sections 12 and 13 as follows:-
"If any member of the House of Commons accepts any office or commission or is concerned or interested in ans contract, agreement, service or work, which by the ninth or tenth section of this Act, renders a candidate incapable of being elected to, or of sitting or roting in the House of Commons, or knowingly sells any goods, wares or merchandise to, or performs any service for the Government of Canada, or for any offices of the Ciovernment of Canada. for which any public money of Canada is paid or to be paid, whether such contract, agrement or sale is expressed or implied, and whether the transaction is single or continuous, the seat of such member shall thereby be vacated, and his election shall thenceforth be null atia void.
"13. If any person disqualified or declared incapable of being elected to, or of sitting or voting in the House of Commons, by the ninth or tenth section of this Act, or if any person duly elected, who has become disqualified to continue a member or to sit or vote, under the next preceding section of this Act, nevertheless sits or votes, or continues to sit or vote therein, he shall thereby forfeit the sum of two hundred dollars for each and every day on which he so sits or votes: and such sum shall be recoverable from him by any person who sues for the same in any court of competent civil jurisdiction in Canada."
So, Mr. Speaker, in the paragraph which I have just quoted from the declaration of the hon. member for West Ontario, the hon. Postmaster General is charged with having heen a member of a construction company having a contract with the Government, and according to the sections 12 and 13 of the law which I have just read, a member in surch a case is not only to be expelled from the House, but also liable to a penalty. Can it be claimed, in view of a charge as precise as this, as to which no pretext of ambiguity could be found, that the charges made by the hon. member for West Ontario are not serious and definite. Those who say so, are not serious themselves, and seek to prevent the truth from being known. Let us now consider the second charge. It is to the effect that the hon. Postmaster General has received money from subsidies granted by the Government to this construction company. For my part, Mr. Speaker, if there were only this charge before us, it would appear to me sutticient to call for an investigation, because it would mean. that subsidies granted for the building of a railway, instead of being applied to that object, have been illegally spent and handed over to a nember of this House, to a member of the Government, who had voted for the granting of these subsidies. We all remember that the hon. members of the right, not so very long ago-barely a few months ago-covered their faces and talked of honesty, when it was a question of bringing before the Senate certain acts of the Quehec Government. We all remember that this honest people's party submitted Hou. Mr. Mercier to an investigation before the Senate, not because he had received noneys from the subsidies voted by the Provincial Parliament, but because one of his friends, who was not even a member of the Quehec Assembly, had received subsidies. The hon. members hid their faces and pretended they were scandalizel. How virtuous they were! To-lay a member of the Government is charged with the same offence as was alleged against Pacaud, and the Government approve him, shield him with their protection, and declare that the charges brought against him are too vague. When the question was to saddle the Mercier Government with the respmsibility of Pacaud's acts, these gentlemen were scandializen, these virtuous men hid their faces, but when one of their own is accused, when the Pacand of the Conservative party is accused of taking money from the public chest, hy diverting sulsidies from their object, as with one voice they cry: Oh, that's all right ! Let him do it again, and we will protect him. But more than that, the hon. member from West Ontario charges the hon. Postmaster lieneral of haring "corruptly" received these subsidies. What is, under the circumstances, the meaning of this word "corruptly"? It means that these sub,: sidies were given him as a recompense for services remdered this company, as a payment for what he had done for it. Now, I ask, if such a charge is not precise enough, not definite enough? Now, Mr. Speaker, is it not remembered that the (iorermment enployé, the valet of the Federal Government who lives at Spencer Wood, ordered the Hon. Mr. Mercier to have an investigation, not on charges as serious or as definite as those now before the House, but simply saying: I order you to have an investigation made of all that preceded, followed and accompanied the Baie des Chaleurs transaction. Did the Conservatives then argue that this investigation was ordered on vague and ill-defined charges? On the contrary they strongly justified the Lieutenant Governor in his action, and found just and proper that there should be an investigation without any precise charge having been made ; but now when charges as categorical as those contained in the motion of the hon. member for West Ontario are formulated, they are not found definite enough. The third charge is certainly as serious and as important as those which I have mentioned. The question is to establish that the hon. Postmaster (ieneral corruptly received subsidies for his own election and the elections of other persons. These charges are loid down in paragraphs 6 and 9. Paragraph 6 reads as follows:-

"6. That during the said period, out of said subsidies, and out of moneys raised upon the credit of the same, and from partics beneficially interested in the same, large sums of money were from time to time corruptly paid and conitributed at the request and with the knowledge of said Sir A. P. Caron, for election purposes and to aid in the election to the House of Commons of the said Sir A. P. Caron and other members and supporters of the Government, of which he was a member.'

Paragraph 9 is as follows :-

[^82]and contributed large sums at the request and with the knowledge of the said Sir A. P. Caron, for election purposes to aid in the election to the House of Commons of the said Sir A. P. Caron, and other members and supporters of the diovernment, of which he was a member." So, Mr. Speaker, I helieve that if these two paragraphs are seriously examined they will be fouml to mean, that during the period therein mentioned the election of Sir A. P. Caron, as well as the elections of certain members of this House in 1887 and 1891, were carried by corruption. There cannot be any doubt as to the import of such a charge. Will any one pretend that these charges are so ill-defined that it would be impossible to make an investigation thereof? But it is said, as by the speech of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Ouimet) the other day: "We would willingly grant you an investigation, but you will compromise the $w$ ole Conservative party." So honest, that party! "We would fain allow you to come and pry into our papers, but you will put our seats in danger, and therefore we could not grant an enguiry." And yet it was this very Minister of Public Works who was posing for virtue on the hustings only a few months ago, during the provincial elections, this same Minister who to-day quakes at the prospect of his party being subjected to an investigation. And was there, forsooth, so much money spent and so much corruption practised, that an enguiry be refused as to what took place during the elections? The hon. Minister of Justice said that this matter should have been referred to the courts of justice. Does the hon. Minister forget what he did last year? Does he forget that he allowed an enquiry into the charges brought by Mr. Tarte against the hon. member for Three Rivers (Sir Hector Langevin) and against the member for Queliec West (Mr. McGreevy)? Does he forget that those accusations could have also been referred to the tribumals? There is at this very monent a case against Mr. McGreevy in the courts of justice. Why then did he not do last year what he does to-day? Why did he not say: "You bring charges against the member for Three Rivers, and the member for Quebec West; well these accusations can be referred to the courts of justice, therefore I refuse an investigation." No cloubt they could be referred to the courts of justice, since the hon. Minister has even entered proceedings before the tribunals. But why did he not last year adopt the same course that he does to-day, to protect the ex-Minister of Public Works? Why did he not do the same thing for the ex-member for Quehec West? What was wanted then was to get rid of the ex-Minister of Public Works. There was a conspiracy to put olstacles in the way of that Minister, and this means was resorted to to destroy him and remove him from the political stage. The conduct of the Government, Mr. Speaker, could not be interpreterl otherwise. But, says the hon. Minister of Public Works, how do you expect an enquiry to be made? You do not state in your charge that this money was paid under a previous understanding by which the money was to return to the Postmaster Geepral. Well, I will answer this to the hon. the Minister of Public Works: It is a strange moral which you are preaching there; and I believe that the House will understand as I do, that if such a doctrine were to be adopted, grosser immorality could hardly be sanctioned. The hon. Minister of Public Works has twenty.
five or thirty millions of dollars to spend annual!y. Let us suppose that this money be returned to him in the shape of testimonials or subseriptions from contractors. Then should the honourableness of his conduct be guestioned, he could say: Why, you have no right to bring charges against me if you do not state that the money was given with the understanding that it should come back to me. You do not establish between the contractors who had received it, and myself, $\Omega$ corrupt understanding ; and the hon. Minister of Public Works with a satisfied conscience would pocket the twenty-five millions he had given out, and the Conservative party would say, "What an honest man!"
Mr. OUIMET. (Translation.) Hal I twentyfive millions I would share them.

Mr. BRODEUR. (Translation.) les; the hon. Minister would perhaps share with his friends, but the crime would be the same. Well, this claim of the Minister of Public Works to the effect that a corrupt understanding shoull have been alleged, is surely very flimsy. But however adrantageous such morality may be for his party, as it has been in $1888^{7}$ and 1891, it is not such as shouhd be preached, nor be accepted by the House and the country. The fourth charge against the hon. Postmaster General aims to establish that after having received this money from this company he cansed new sums of money to be voted to the same company. It reads as follows :-
"That after some of such last mentioned corrupt payments and contributions were made, further and other subsidies were granted and paid to the said railway company by the Goyernment of which the said Sir A. P. Caron was a member."
This is to be found at the end of the ninth paragraph. I think, Mr. Speaker, that there can be no doubt that the charge such as formulated, has nothing ambiguous in it, and cannot be considered as too vague. It is expressly charged that after having received these subsidies from the construction company, the hon. Postmaster General has again voted, and caused to be voted, ne: subsidies to this company. Well, Mr. Speaker, I ask myself if the hon. Minister was disinterested, if he was in a pusition honestly, equitably and justly to cause such subsidies to be voted. Was he in such a position as a member of this House must always be, in view of such things? It is not allowable for us to be paid money, and to vote new subsidies to the companies or parties who paid it. I say that such a thing must not be done in this country, and that the hon. Postmaster General has certainly derogated from the dignity of a member of Parliament. He has violated the rules of the House, and thereby become liable to be judged by the House, and be punished by it, if the charges brought against him are proven. We have no doubt, Mr. Speaker, that they can be proven. No other proof is needed than what has been published in the Toronto Globe where, after having declared in his election account, published by his agent, that he had only spent from $$ 900$ to $$ 1,000$ in his election, the hon. Postmaster General is shown, by papers bearing his own signature, to have acknowledged the receipt of sums from ten to twenty times larger than that. Therefore, in placing this account in the hands of the returning officer, it must have been an untruth that he was stating. He was deceiving the country, and, therefore, after having been false to the laws of the land, in this public matter, this Minister becomes liable to be judged hy this House, and an enquiry should be made into his conduct. And why is there in the statute a clause obliging the judges sitting in election trials to make a report to this House stating to what extent money was used in the election, and to what extent frauds and illegal practices were resorted to? Why this clause, if not for the information of this House, in order that, if there be occasion it may institute enquiries to determine whether such frauds have really been committed, to find out the guilty, and to punish them. Since the law provides for this report from the judges, and since the House has been deceived ly reports placed in the hands of the returning ofticer, as the thing is now proven with regard to the hon. Postmaster General, I sity that this House must protect itself against such frauds committed liy the hon. Postmaster Gieneral. If the House is well convinced that an attempt has been made to thwart justice and deceive the electorate by pablishing false election accounts, I say that it is its duty to protect itself. I believe, Mr Speaker, that there is no necessity of further dwelling upon this point. If there is in the country an honest people's party, it is certainly not composed of the hon. nembers on the other side of the House, who have not the courage to face such grave charges brought against one of the Ministers, and to allow a serious enquiry to be made into charges so explicit. It is plain that the charges are not considered as rague as has been said, since the Government does not dare to review them in the amendment proposed to this House by the hon. Minister of Militia. Therefore, I say in conclusion, why are not these charges referred to a committee of enquiry? It is because it is feared that all the turpitudes that have been committed will come to light. It is feared that there are still too many honest men ready to make an enquiry as searching as possible. It is feared that there would be found among the friends of the Government, forming a part of the investigating committee members disinterested enough to say: Weg are not ready to swallow everything; we must dismiss the hon. Minister ; he must be punished. Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Goverument has been afraid to have the truth known, they have been afraid of the revelation of turpitudes such as came to light during the late investigations. They prefer appointing some safe man as a commissioner, shut him inside of four walls, and let him sham an investigation out of reach of the press and the public so that nothing can be known. But I am confident that the honesty of this House will not permit it to be so, that the Liberal party will find the support of truly honest men, and that the amendment of the hon. Minister of Militia will be rejected by a large majority.

Mr. DESJARDINS (L'Islet). (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, my hon. friends who speak French in this House will be good enough to excuse me if I use the English language this evening, since the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Brodeur) who has just taken his seat furnishes me with an opportunity to recall a bit of the political history of the Province of Quelec. I wish to speak in English in order to better inform the House. I presume that the hon. member for Rouville and his friends do not desire that what i have to say be not understood by a large number of the members of this House. As I wish to be well understood I will use a language less familiar to me perhaps, but I hope, however, to sacceed in conveying my meaning.
The hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Brodeur), in the speesh which we have just heard in support of the motion presented to the House by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), and in opposition to the amendment of the hon. the Minister of Militia, has thought proper to commence his remarks by some comments on what has taken place in the Province of Quehec during the last $f \in \mathbf{w}$ years. I sincerely thank the hon. memler for Rouville in having thus taken the initiative and furnished me with the opportunity of giving to this House a little piece of political history in regard to the Province of Quebec, during the time I had the honour of sitting in the Provincial Legislature and since I have left it to come here. The hon. member for Rourille takes strong ground against the proposition of the Minister of Militia to refer the enquiry into the charges made by the member for West Ontario (Mi. Edgar) to a Royal Commission, and he points to what has taken place in Quebec lately with reference to enquiries held by Royal Commissions with a result which is known in this House and all over the country, and happily so. If the hou. member for Rouville had had the kindness to go a little further lanck and, before speaking of the investigations which took place in the Province of Quelec before Royal Commissions during the last few months, he had also given some information as to enguiries held in that province before parliamentary committees, he would have fulfilled his duty in telling this House when partisanship or partisan spirit runs very high, what you can expect from parliamentary committees. As he has not thought fit to relate this part of the story, it is my bounden duty to do so. Unfortumately, in the Province of Quebec, for the last few years, many investigations have taken place-I say unfortunately for the good name of our good province investigations have taken place -before parliamentary committees, and several investigations have taken place before Royal Commissions. The political history of the Province of Quebec for the last few years offers to us the possibility of making a comparison between the investigations held by these two different bodies-parlianentary committees and Royal Commissions. Before entering into the narrative of these investigations, which I will make as short as possible, trecause I want to return to the question before the House as soon as I can, I will call the attention of the hon. member for Rouville to a few very important errors which he has made in his remarks. In order to convince this House that it cannot expect a satisfactory investigation by a Royal Commission, he has, with very little courtesy indeed, alluded to the investigation made in the Province of Quebec by the Hon. Judge Routhier, who is an ornament to the bench not only of the Province of Quebec but of the whole Dominiou of Canada, a man of unsullied honour, and of character beyond suspicion.

Au hon. MEMBER. Question.

Mr. DESJARDINS (L'Islet). The hon. gentlenam who calls question had better let me go on and say what I have to say. I had the honour of a seat in the Legislative Assembly in Quebec at that time, and I remember exaculy under what circumstances this investigation was ordered, but first, I would call attention to this point, which is of considerable importance in view of the discussion which is now going on. Some charges had been made against the Ministers of the Crown in the Province of Quebee, with regard to the well known question of the sale of the North Shore Railway. The following Government thought proper to propose to the House that an investigation should take place, and the Government proposed that this investigation should be made by a Royal Commission, and it is a surprise to me to-night to hear from hon. gentlemen opposite their denunciation of investigations made by Royal Commission, when I remember very well that, sitting in the House in Quelrec, the proposition made by the then Government was carried unanimously by the House, every one having full confidence in a Royal Commission to make the investigation. The ground for the attack which the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Brodeur) has made upon Judge Routhier is that this investigation was only a sham, that witnesses were called almost in secrecy in a private chamber, and that the judge did only what he thought it was prudent to do under the circumstances, in order not to hurt those who were supposed to be his political friends. The hon. gentleman is altogether astray. Judge Routhier, before commencing his investigation, advertised in the papers and asked any one in the Proyince of Quebec, or in the Dominion of Canada, or in the wide world who could give him information, to come forwarl and give that information. He summoned almost all the members of the Legislative Assembly. I myself had the honour to appear before that commission. All the members of the Provincial Legislature who had made strong charges against the previous Government in reference to this railway were summoned, and we were surprised to learn at last that many of these violent denunciators in the House and on the platform were very reticent before the commission. Some of them, I believe, went away, but some mustered up courage to appear, and I will read a list of the witnesses belonging to the hon. gentleman's own party who did appear. The Hon. Mr. Mercier himself was one, and his evidence, in the report of the judge of the Royal Commission, takes ahout 48 pages. There was not much secrecy in that. Then there was also the Hon. Mr. Irvine, and the Hon. Mr. Bresse, a Legislative Councillor, who died recently. There was also Mr. Bernatchez, and there was Mr. Boyer who has since been a Minister without portfolio. The Hon. Francois Langelier also appeared, and his brother the Hon. Charles Langelier. Then there was the Hon. Félix Marchand, since the Speaker of the House, who was almost selected the other day as the leader of the Opposition in that Legislature.

Mr. Brodeur.
Mr. LANGELIER. Every one who knew nothing abont the charges was called as a witness, but those who knew anything about them were not called.
Mr. DESJARDINS (L'Islet). I would ask the hon. member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier) to inform the House whether he was called as a witness and if he appeared as a witness.
Mr. LANGELIER. Yes.
Mr. DESJARDINS (L'Islet). The hon. gentleman says "yes." Then he was one of those who knew nothing about the charges, and yet he was called. 1 ask the hon. gentleman in that case how it was I heard him at least 50 times all over the Province of Quebec denouncing the sale of the North Shore Railway as a most corrupt bargain, while now he says he was called as a witness because he knew nothing about it, and that as a matter of fact, it was true he knew nothing and had nothing to say.
Mr. BRODEUR. The charges were made against Conservative members, not against Liberals.

Mr. DESJARIINS (L'Islet). Well, I am sure the Hon. Judge Routhier did not require this vindication of his character from me, but I thought it was my duty to say this much on the question brought before the House by the hon. member for Kouville. Now, if the House will allow me, I will cite a few more precedents in Quebec, where investigations were ordered to be made by Royal Commissions. One day a charge was made in the House loy the then leader of the Opposition, who was Mr. Mercier himself. He charged the former Prime Minister of the Province of Quebec, the Hon. Judge Mousseau, with having sold the contract for the parliament buildings in Quebec, and he asked for the appointiment of a select committee to enquire into the charge. A committee was granted. I was then a member of the Honse, and was named a member of the committee. Remember that this took place near the end of the session, when we had nearly completed our parliamentary work, and when everybody expecteci to go home. The select committee met the day following, and I had the honour of being elected chairman of that committee. We went to work at once, and ascertained that the investigation would take a long time, and we thought it was our duty to report to the House that if the House maintained the order they had given us to proceed with the investigation, it would likely take several weeks, and, of course, it was for the House to decide whether the members who had no more parliamentary work to do, were to remain there waiting until the investigation was over. Moreover, a second charge was brought against Mr. Mercier himself, who was then leader of the Opposition, charging him with having sold his election contestation against the Prime Minister in the County of Jacques Cartier. The House ordered a select committee to investigate that charge, and I was appointed a niember of that conmittee likewise, and also appointed chairman. We discovered that the enquiry would be a long one, and we reported that fact the same day to the House. Well, the House was reasonable enough not to decide to remain there for two or three months at the public expense, and the House unanimously decided that prorogation should take place, and that the membors of the committee should be organized into a Royel Commission to sit after the session. We did so, and the enguiry tcok place. Both parties were agreed to the proposition. Now, I said awhile ago that we were able to judge of the usefulness of Royal Conmissions in the great and responsible duty of making investigations into charges of that kind. I will give a few more illustrations taken from the Province of Quebec. Iater on I was on the Opposition side of the House, and from the very first year we could easily perceive that a system of organized corruption and of organized robbery was being establishen, which culminated, after four years of practice, in the great Baie des Chaleurs scandal, and in the subsequent dovinfall of the rascals who were robbing the Province of Quebec. Now, Mr. Speaker, we tried to hold enquiries on the opposite side of the House. Charges were formally laid, and we tried to have investigations male before the Committee on Public Accounts, and I suppose hon. gentlemen in this House would hardly believe what 1 am going to say if it was not it matter of fact known to every person who was acquainted with affairs in Quebec at that time. When the Public Accounts Committee were trying to investigate charges of wrong-doing against the Nercier Government, we often saw witnesses refuse to answer the question that was put to them, and we even saw Ministers of the Crown, in that committee, rising up, raising all sorts of questions of order, and telling the witness: Now, do not speak, thus shutting the mouth of the witness. To illustrate what I am now saying, I will relate one instance, which is very characteristic indeed. One rlay we had a witness before the Public Accounts Committee. He was being hard pressed, hut was very reticent, and at last the question was put directly to him. It so happened that the friends of the Mercier Government had been a little over-confident that day, and the parties were just equally divided on the committee. Consequently it devolved upon the chairman to give the casting rote, and to our satisfaction and to the satisfaction of every honest man, he voted to oblige the witness to answer the question. We thought at last we had one case which we could report to the House, and which would go before the country, but we were sadly deceived. As hon. members know, it is a part of parliamentary procedure that when a parliamentary committee is making an enquiry and a witness refuses to answer a question upon being ordered by the committee, he is then reported by the committer to the House, and it is the duty of the House to sustain the action of the committee, and to bring the witness to the bar to answer the question. That is what took place last year in an investigation ordered by this House when a witness refused to answer. If we consult the records of the House we will find that there have been other instances of this nature in our history. But in the Province of Quebec, when the report of the committee was taken up in the House, the Government itself asked the House to vote down the report and order that the witness should not answer the question that had been put to him. Now, I ask you, Mr. Speaker, if it was not very unwise for the hon. member for Rouville to bring up this question before the House, and to cite as precedents against Royal Commissions and in fevour of parliamentary committees to investigate charges of that kind, the instances that have occurred in the Province of Quebec during the last few years. I deeply regret, I must say, and I think the hon. member for Rouville, ufter he has sobered down a little from his wild excitement and his partisan fanaticism, will also regret the allision he made in this connection. The hon. gentleman made a severe attack against the person of the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Quebec, who there represents the Queen of England, and the words he used were that he was le valet du gouvernement fédéral-the humble servant of the Federal Government. Words of that kind should never have fallen from the lips of any hon. member of this House. They will not affect the feelings of the Lieutenant Governor of Quebec, because he is far above such denunciations, and his chariuter is ahove such attacks. But there was this consolation for him, at all events, that in the stand he took during the crisis in the Province of Quebec he has been sustained by an immense majority of the electors, and by a majority of over 25 to 30 to support the new Government who have assumed responsibility for the action of the Lieutenant (iovemor lefore the Legislature and the province. I have been obliged, in consequence of the remarks which fell from the lips of the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Brodeur), to wander : litcle from the path which I proposed to travel in discussing this question, bitio I will return to it. I have been somewhat surprisel, since the debate opened, to find that hon. gentlemen opposite, from their leader downward, ha rediscussed this question, not from the constitutional point as to the right of Parliament toinstitute an encuiry, not as to the duty of this House to orderan investigation, but they have spoken so as to prove that the Postmaster General is really guilty. The charges have been made, but no evidence has been taken, and no investigation has been instituted, and yet those hon. gentlemen have advanced so far as to find the Minister guilty and have so referred to him in their speeches, although they have not had the courage to make that declaration in the motion. The hon. member for Rouville went further, and with a frankness, for which I will not congratulate him, but which calls for mention, declared that the object was to have a general investigation for election purposes, that they wanted nothing else, and that this was their prime object. He admitted that they desired an enquiry as to the manner in which elections had been carried on by hon. members on this side of the House. It is very easy to answer the hon. member for Rouville on that point. I am sure of one thing, and I voice the feelings of all hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, that we are ready to challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to a general investigation of election affairs, and we are contidentas to the party which will come out the victors. We have only to recall their misfortunes of the last six months in order to induce hon. gentlemen opposite to suppress their enthusiasmand boastfulness. Another remark offered by the hon. member for Rouville I will deal with later on. With respect to the motion and amendment before the House, it is clear to every one who has given thought to the matter that we are face to face with two important duties, what I may call a double responsibility. Of course, the duty of this House towards the country is to vindicate its honour. But, on a question like this, we must not be actuated either by favour or antipathy, either by personal feeling or by personal hostility. If we owe it to the country, for the public good, that wrong wherever found and against whomsoever proved must be condemned, it is our duty also to do justice to the accused. For this double purpose the functions of Parliament are well defined. I need not read long extracts from constitutional authorities on the matter. No one denies the right of Parliament to enquire within the proper limits of its jurisdiction and when charges are properly and directly made before the House. Of course, in all matters relating to the administration of public affairs, as was so well explained by the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), the House has a right to investigate and enguire. The House, when it considers it its duty to do so, can visit with censure a memler or a Ninister of the Crown or the Government as a whole. When charges are brought against a Minister or against a member, for dereliction of duty as such, the Honse has a right to make an enquiry, if it comes to the conclusion that the charge is of ia special nature and made in such a way that investigation should be granted. We need not discuss that point further, but I agree with many hon. gentlemen who have addressel the House that the motion as moved hy the hon. member fior West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) is not drafted in such a way that it can be entertained by the House. But assuming their responsibility of the government of the country: one of the Ministers of the Crown has moved an amendment, enlarging the charges so made by the member for West Ontario, after the speeches which the hon. gentlemen opposite have male, and proposing that the whole subject be referred to a Royal Commission. But after this pruposal has heen made, hon. gentlemen opposite are no more satistied. When I read the amendment of the Minister of Militia I felt sure that the leader of the Opposition would at once rise and thank the Government for the position they had taken, for the manly courage which they had shown in determining to investigate the matter, and state that he would ask his friends to vote in favour of the amentment. On the contrary, we have seen hon. gentlemen opposite manifest expressions of disappointment. Why? Because their motion has been made for party objects. For party objects the resolution camnot be considered by the House. They were sorely disappointer because their expectations and hopes have not been realized, that the Government would merely ask their friends to vote down the motion, and then hon. gentlemen opposite would raise the cry all over the country that the Government had not had the courage to face an enguiry, and that the supporters of the (iovernment were weak enough to sustain it in that position and vote down the charges and refuse all investigations into them. They are so disappointed becanse the matter is to he referred to a Royal Commission, or rather because an investigation is to take place. In deciding on this question, we are not to consider whether we should please hon. gentlemen opposite, but we are lonad to do our duty, whatever they may think, of whatever kind of howl they may raise in the country. I contend that the motion of the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) should not be entertained by this House, and my remarks will be very short on this point, for I will only say this: That the motion, as drafted by that hon. gentleman, is saturated with partisun hostility. I am sorry to say that in my lumble opinion the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) has certainly not approached this guestion with a due sense of his responsibility. He has set a very bad example to his political friends in this House, and I regret to say that they have followed that bad example in their speeches. It is easy to see, and we have ascertained it from the speeshes of hon. gentlemen on the other side, that they are not at all guided by a judicial spirit in this matter, but by the sheerest partisin hostilitg. Now, Mr. Speaker, why is the charge to be referred to a Royal'Commission, instead of being investigated by a parliamentary committce ? I will speak my mind openly on this matter. Sir, I know what is the right of Parliament, and I know what is the duty of Parliament, but the actions of men in the world must also be guided hy experience, and the experience I have had of these investigations held by parliamentary committees in the Province of Quebec; and I will go further and say that the experience I have had of the investigation male here last year by the Conmittee on Privileges and Elections, has forced the conclusion on my mind that a parliamentary committee, when partisanship and party fanaticism run high, is not a very safe ground where enguiry can be made with a view of giving full justice to the accused and full justice to the country. There is not the slightest doubt in my mind, with regard to the investigation held last year, that over six weeks of the time of this House was absolutely lost for nothing, and that the evidence could have lieen taken just as well and perhaps better if there had been less partisanship in the committee. If I had seen from the motion made by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edyar), or if I had ascertained from the speeches of hon. gentlemen opposite that we could safely rely or that the country could safely rely upon a fair and impartial anl just investigation before a parliamentry committee, I would have been in favour of that course being taken. But, Mr. Speaker, I will say frankly and without hesitation, that from the speeches 1 have heard, it is my belief that hon. gentlemen opposite are not animated by a judicial spirit and are not fit to be trusted as julges. I say they are not to be trusted as judges because of their fanatical partisanship. They are not to be trusted, and why: Because they are preachers of purity and practitioners of corruption. They are not to be trusted, because they are philosophers of right and doers of wrons. They are not to be trusted, because they are bold and violent traducers of supposed offenders, and lenient and meek condoners of proven guilt and shame. I say, Mr. Speaker, that they are not to be trusted as fair judges on account of their fanatical partisanship, and need I illustrate my proposition otherwise than by calling attention to the speeches we have heard from them: when in these speeches they have been debating for hours and hours, not that the hon. Postmaster (ieneral should be submitted to his trial, but that he wasactually found guilty of these charges. Every one knows that if a man is called to be a juror, and if it is well known that he has given his opinion beforehand that the man to be tried was guilty, that juror would be challenged and would not be admitted on the jury at all. Now, following the same gool practice of law and evidence, it would be our duty, and the accused, I think, would have the right, to challenge all these hon. gentlemen opposite and to say that they ought not to be ailmitted as judges, because, beforehand and without hearing one word of evidence, they have pronounced him guilty before this House and before the country. I have stid, Sir, that these gentlemen are not to be trusted as judges, hecause they are preachers of purity and practitioners of corruption, and I am right in so saying. From the ist of January to the 31 st of December in each year, every time the occasion offers, we hear these hon. gentleman preaching how honest, how innocent, how above suspicion, and how wonderfully pure they are, and when their deeds and actions are submitted to the courts of justice in election trials, one by one we see them falling to the ground, found guilty of the grossest kind of corruption. I have said also that they were not to he trusted as judges, because they are philosophers of right and doers of wrong. We have the honour to be treated here, almost two or three times a week, to philosophical teachings from hon. gentlemen opposite, but I regret, and the country regrets that their actions and deeds are very little in accord with their philosophical teachings. I have sail morenver, Mr. Speaker, that they are not to be trusted as julges, because they are bold and violent traducers of supposed offenders. and lenient and meek condoners of proven gnilt and shanne, and I am also right in saying that. We have heard clenunciations made against certain supposed offenders in this House, when, ass a matter of fact, these denunciations came from the same men who obeyed meekly, and who submitted themselves to be the partisans and instruments of the gang and the clique which has dishonoured the Province of Quebec for so many years. I thought, Mr. Speaker, that the party recomi of these hom. gentlemen was already had enough : but the more I hear them the more I am contincel that their extreme partisanship is such as to elisqualify them from acting as judges in a matter of this kind, after displaying that unfairness and want of judicial spirit which they have manifested in this House. Now, I must not conclude my remarks without saying a word in answer to a charge male in the speech of the hon. member for South Oxford, and adilressed generally to hon. members of this House helonging to the party to which I have the honour to belong. It appears, according to the hon. gentleman, that from the Prime Minister down to his humblest supporter, we are all together what he called an organized corruption. Well. Mr. Speaker, of course human nature is to be found everywhere. I will not pretend that the Conservative party and the friends of the Conservative party have always done during the last thirty or forty years what has been for the lest interest of the country. Mistakes may have been made; errors may have been committed: but on the whole we ran claim the merit as a great political party of having worked in earnest, with intelligence and patriotism, for the grood of the country. And this charge of an organized corruption thrown from the other side of the House hy the hon. member for South Oxford I hurl back to him; and I will add this, that if there is in the history of Canada something worse than an organized corruption, it is the organized corruption of hon. gentlemen opposite, combined and doubled with their organized hypocrisy. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to detain the House any longer. I will conclude by saying that in my humble opinion, in deciding to refer the charges made by the hon. member for West Ontario, but as explained and umplified by the amendment of the hon. Minister of Militia, this House will not abdicate its right to investigate the matter. It is only delegating one part of its power to a Royal Commission, to do that part of the work for the House, and to report the evidence to this House without comment, and without giving a judgment thereon. The evidence will be taken, and the whole thing will be brought back to this House; the report will be lairl on the Table. Every member will have an opportunity of reading it and forming his own judgment upon it ; and then the House will exercise its power of investigation in that part which is the most import-ant-in rendering the judgment in the case.

Mr. MLLS (Bothwell). Who is to judge?
Mr. DESJARDINS (I;Islet). The House, of course.

Mr. MILLS (Buothwell). The hon. gentleman said the House was not fit.

Mr. DEs.JARI)INS (L'Islet). I have not said anything of the kind. There is a difference between making the investigations ourselves in this House, where all the passions and the fanaticism of members can be brought into play, and rendering judgment. Even though the same passions and fanaticism may be bronght into play when we render julgment, I am confident that there will he on the part of the majority of this House a sutficient sense of responsibility to render a fair and just judgment, and to put down fanaticism. Besides the reasons which I have given for referring the question to a Royal Commission, there is another very important one-that of convenience. The session is pretty well advanced : we are on the eve of summer, and it would be against the public interest to detain the whole Parliament here at a great cost, for perhaps two or three months, wher the same duties can be performed just as well and better, as I conceive, by a Royal Commission. Then we will take the matter up when it comes lefore the House in another session. Under the circumstances, and for these reasons, I think it is my duty as a member of this House to support the amendment of the hon. Minister of Militia, to refer this charge to a Royal Commission. Before resuming my seat, I will only say this in reply to a remark of the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Brocieur) in which he appealed to this Honse and also appealed in sounding phrases to the country, to support the party of honest men. Well, Mr. Speaker, I need not vefer again to what has taken place in the Province of Quebec. But I think, all things considered, and without disparagement of my hon. friend from Rouville or of any of his friends in this Honse, that any of us sitting on this side of the House and supporting the Ministry which is now enjoying the confidence of the Crown, the contidence of a large majority in this House, and the confidence of a large majority of the people. can claim that we are just as good, just as honest, just as true, and just as patriotic men as any of the hon. members sitting on the other side of the House.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that the hon. member for L'Islet should prefer to speak English on this occasion, for if he had spoken French we could immediately have had his speech distributed to his electors. And it would show him in glaring contradiction with what was said on the hustings of the Province of Quebec during the local elections.

Mr. DESJARDINS (L'Islet). (Translation.) I will save the hon. member the trouble, as I intend to have it distributed myself.
:Ir. CHOQUETTE (Translation.) The hon. member has done so much pirouetting around his chair, that it is hard to know what position he occupied on this question, as is generally the case on the questions which bring him to his feet. When the hon. member touches questions of provincial politics, he gets mixed up, and sees everything through a mirage which makes truth very hard to recognize. It is true that for a long time he has hoped for the position of Treasurer, and that he has not got it, and will not likely get it for some time. Perhaps this might be consilered as unfortunate, for if floods of words could do anything towards filling the Quebec chest, he would easily fill it. But not only does the hon. member contradict himself, but he also contradicts hischiefs, the Minister of. Instice and the Prime Minister. For in at speech delivered in Halifas on the leth January last, hy the hon. leader of the Honse, a report of which I find in the Empire, I read the following worls:-

- Mr. Desjardins (L'Islet).
" He repeated the invitation made elsewhere, that if uny one has any evidence of wrong-doing against any official or member of Parliament, be he private nember or Minister, he pledged his bonour that the fullestinvestigation should be made and the inforination used in the prosecution and punishment of the guilty party. Mr. Abbott's Government was fully determined and pledged to investigate, root out and punish wrong-doing wherever they foundit."
It is true that the hon. member for L'Islet can say to himself that he is in good company in the matter of contradiction. He is in the company of his chief in the Senate. the Hon. Mr. Abbott, and of the leader of the Honse, Sir John Thompson, but his position is not the better for that. Such are the promises which were made in Halifax on the hustings and in the County of LIslet, and the same promises were repeated by Hon. Mr. Ablowt in the senate. He askel all men of good will, Lilerals as well is Conservatives, to formulate accusations in the Horise, and promised that a committee would be appointed to enquire into the charges. Here is the solemn dectaration made by Hou. Mr. Abbott hefore the senate:
"I would ask the hon. gentlemen opposite to join with $u$ in trying to find out what the facts are about this alleged rascality. We ask them to gire us the benefit of their experience in this enquiry, to assist us in ascertaining the facts and placing them before the public, in order that they may be deilt $\begin{gathered}\text { ith p properly, and , if found guilts, } \\ \text {, }\end{gathered}$ that suinmary rengeance may be exercised upon those who are found guilty of appropriating public money-stealing-be they high or low. That is the determination of this (rovernment and this side of the House."
Well, what is to-riay the answer which we hear to this: First, a refusal pure and simple of an investigation. One thing surprised me particularly. It is the solicitude evinced by the hon. members of the right for the hon. member for West Ontario with regard to his seat. They quote precelents to show that the hon. member for West Ontario need not fear losing his seat, even should the charges he made remain unproven. The hon. member knows that he stakes his seat. We feel on this side of the House that a member who from his place in the House formulates such grave, such serious charges against a colleague, against a Minister of the Crown, puts his seat at stake, and I for one consider that if he did not prove his allegations, he would have to resign his mandate. Therefore I say that on this point the position of our hon. friends is not tenable. But such is not the reason. It is understool that the charges can easily le proved, and it is feared that they will be. I hold in my hand written proofs of the charges which have been made. I will state that the words of the hon. Minister of Justice on the hustings, ani of the Conservative press, during the last elections, went to say that an investigation would be made before the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I will not quote opinions from the Opposition papers, for they might loe suspected; but I will read from papers of the Government party. La Presise, which I understand to be the organ of the hon. Minister of Customs, said on ath April :
" Lat Presse will make it its duty to publish a faithful report of the developments of this, "ffair before the Conmittee on Privileges and Elections."
It was so well understood that the charge would be considered by the House, that is, by the Coinmittee on Privileges and Elections, and that the House would have to deal with it, that the organs of the Goverument loudly repeated it. Le Matin, a paper recently founded by the honest Government of the Province of Quebec, a Govermment which owes its existence to charges which never were proven, spoke as follows:-
" A Minieter endell Accesation.
"One of the lieutenants of the Opposition, Mr. Edgar. has tinally brought forth his little complaint against the Postmaster General. This indictment which was intended to be made terrible. is nothing but a résumé of the virulent articles published by L'Electeur against Sir A. P. Caron during the last three or four nopuths.
"However, the evidence in support of the accusations made Ly Mr. Edgar will be heard before Parliament, and we will soon know the real calue of these charges."
Here are Government newspapers which stinl reiterate the promises made before the electors:
" You will be granted an enquiry."
What does Le. Moult say, the organ, I believe, of the ex-Minister of Public Works, and of the hom. Postmaster (ieneral, aceording to public rumour?
" At last the Opposition, by the yoice of Mr. Edgar, has formulated charges against the hon. Postmaster Genera!.
- Last night Mr. Edgar accused Sir A. P. Carou of having been a member of the Lake St. John and the Temiscouata Railway Companies, having faroured these two companies, and of having received from them, in $1: 57$, $$ 1100.010)$ for electoral purposes.
:Sir A. P. Caron will meet his accusers before the Committee on Privileges and Elections.
"It is uscless to prejudge the question.
"The wiser course is to wait for the eridence. It eannot be long coming norr."
Another organ of the Government which declares that the evidence will be taken lefore the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and when the matter comes up in the Honse, it is altogether another answer which is given to the reguest for an enquiry ; and I must say, to the shame of these newspapers and the Conservative press of Quebec, that they are ready to take back their words, as the hon. member for L'Islet is in the habit of taking his back. There is another important Conservative newspaper from which I will read for the edification of this House-the paper which spoke of an allegen episcopal charge directed against the prevaricators of the Province of Quelec, during the last general local elections-Lee Triftucien, on the Gth April, publishel a letter from Mr. Scott, secretary of the Lake St. Jolm Railuay Company, in which this gentleman denies having paid any money to the hon. Postmaster General. This sheet says:
"If the enemics of Sir A. P. Caron are not satisfied with this denial, all there remains for them to do is to get a member of the Opposition to ask the House of Commons for an enquiry, and without being in the secrets of the gods, we are couvinced that Sir A. P. Caron will be first to accede to the request. Now, then, gentlemen accusers, come forward. This is the time for proving your, allegacome forward. This is the time tor proring your, al?
Mr. Speaker, is it possible to find in the Government organs a more complete ratification of the words pronounced hefore the Senate and before the electors of the Province of Quebec last year, and by the hon. Minister of Justice at Halifax: We thought that these words were sincere, and that as soon ats a categorical and precise accusation should be made these gentlemen would be only too glad to furnish us with the occasion of proving it, an.l that Lo Trifturi,t was right in saying that if we drew back we should le taken forliars. We have come forwarl. wehavelorought forth well-rlefinedaccusations. These gentlemen had promised that they would accept the challenge, that at the first opportunity they would grant an enduiry and now with shame in the heart, they are forced to quiet down, and stop their hravadoes. Another reason alleged for the refusal of an enquity, is that the charges are too vague. When the hon. Postmaster General is concerned, we are told that the charges are ton ratue : when it is the hom. Minister of Railways, they are too stale. When shall we meet the wishes of these gentlemen: When the question was to carry elections, when there were numerons byeelections to be secured in Ontario, these gentlemen had their mouths full of promises ; they were ready to submit ministers, members and even simple prevaricating employes, to investigation. They were realy to suhmit to the Committee on Privileges and Elections anything calculated to bring out the truth. What do we see to-day? Now that we have accused them, and that they have been urged hy their own newspapers to grant an enguiry and fultil positive promises, these gentlemen offer us a Royal Commission to lure their supporters in the House into dacile voting. They will probalby find a servile majority ready to support their scheme of a Royal Commission which the hon. member for Rouville (.Mr. Brocleur) has so eloguently dealt with.

Mr. DFEAULNIERS. (Translation.) Irise to a print of orler. The hon member has no right to say that the ministerial majority is servile.

Mr. CHOQLETTE. (Translation.) I will withdraw the expression, but I have a full right to hold the view it expresses. besides, I may say that I was not referring to the hon. member for St. Manrice, for I know that the hom. member is very in-dependent--that when opportunity presents itself, which is not often, he rotes against the foicernment. However, it is not important.

Mr. IESACLNIERS. (Translation.) Quite as important as the answer which the Bishop of Three Rivers marle to the hon. member for Montmagny.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. (Translation.) Now, it is said the charges are too vague. I am going to try and show the House that this would-be reason is no reason at all. I think they are perfectly precise and well-defined. The English independent papers which have lealt with this question. and even the organs of the Government, heve understood perfectly the import of these aceusations, and they have declared that the Government could not deny the enquiry. The Witness of ith April, says:

- The charges against Sir A. P. Caron are of the very gravest character, and they are formally preferred in the impressive way by a responsible meriber of Parliament." The Siur of the 7th, 8th and 9th April says that the charges are precise, formal, and that the Government cannot refuse an enquiry. But, more than this, La Minerce itself, of 6th April, publishes an article, or rather a letter, written hy the Hon. Joseph Tasse, senator, in which I find the following:-
"We have alrcady spoken of the charges of the Globe against Sir A. P. Caron. Mr. Edgar has just assumed the responsibility of these charges in the House, and asked that they be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.
"The Postmaster General is accused of having receired from the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, as well as from the Temiscouata Railway Company. large sums of money taken from the subsidics roted by the Federal Parliament.
- He is also aecused of ha ring spent. during the general elections of 1837 , more than $\leq 100,000$ to corrupt the electors of Si. Maurice. Champlain, Lévis and many other counties in the Province of Quebec.

The Government itself is implicated i: lae accusattions preferred by Mr. Edgar. who eharges fie Administration of a full knowledge of the alleged $i:$ :cegal doings of Sir Adolphe Caron.
"W ben the Postmaster General read, in February last. the charses made by the Glolu, we know that he lost no time in denying then most emphatically. No duubt that he will know how to vindicate himself to the entire satisfaction of all his friends, and that the Liberals will come off with the costs of their suits and enquiry."
Mr. Speaker, is there not in all this the most positive proof that this point raiseri, as to the ragueness of the charges, could not stand a monent of serious discussion, when we see newspapers like the star and the IVitness, and even the virtnous Minerore state that they umberstamd the charges as precise and formal, and that the Postmaster (ieneral must he the first to ask for an enguiry for his vindication: Now, the most interested man in pleading that he does not understand the charges brought agrainst him, is the accused himself. Well, let us see his answer. Dill the hom. Postmaster fieneral say that he did not understami the charge: Did he answer that he did not know what defonce he should offer: No, not at all. He answered:
"I take this the first opportunity which has been given me to state to the House that in every particular the charges made by the hon. gentleman are false."
Therefore, since he was ready to plear guilty or not guilty, without asking for a delay of aday, to prepare his defence, it shows that he was ready to meet his accuser, and that he understood the charge. Is it very becoming for these hon. gentlemen to say for him that he withdraws his plea of not guilty, that he pieads extenuating circumstances, or again that the charges are so vague that he canaot understand them: The hon. Minister of Marine stater that such vague charges would not be countenanced by any tribunal. It will be sutficient tos refer to the Criminal Cole, sections 58, 48, 111, 112, ch. 174 of R. S. C. to show that an information or a complaint brought hefore the grand jurors would not be rejected on account of 1 fifects in form. This will show that the charges as formulated would not be rejected by a tribunal, and that much less should an objection for defect in form be countenanced so as to put aside in this House a charge made in accordance with the law and the preceleits. This charge is much more explicit than that brought by Mr. Tarte against the ex-Minister of Public Works, which was referred to the Conmittee on Privileges ran! Elections, with the consegnence that ve know. But have not the Conservatives, or rather the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Quebec, a man just as pure as they, who would not be guilty of an injustice against even the Liberals to promote the end of those who appointed him, has not this naan taken advantage of a charge made lefore the senate and much more vague than the chargeformulaten before this House: Has not this man, prompted by his Ottawa friends, taken his inspiration from what tramspireal in another House, to ask for an incestigation and put his Lileral Ministry under aecusation, in spite of the constitution? Nevertheless, the Conservatives have said that Mr. Angers is a great man, that he saved the Province of Quebee : but when the guestion is to arcuse one of their friends in this House, when a tinger is liftel against one of these gentlemen, they seek refuge behind a guestion of a defeet in form to ward of the charges and refuse an investigation. These charges are well-foumlen, and would be easy to prove. It is enough to recall what took place in the County of Nontmagny for instance, in $185 \%$. The hom. Postmaster General, in an interview with a reporter of the (iavitt, said that he had indech spent a few dollars to help moneyless cab:lidates. In lisso, my opponent was Mr. Landry, now a senator, a rich man. This is what happenecl. I hohd in uy hand far ximilr of papers signed by Mr. Hubert Hebert, the present revising ofticer, learins the date th of Felmary, and those who know Mr. Helnerts signature may easily satisfy themselves that these fiac-simily were taken fromgenuine docoments. This gentleman received from Mr. Madireesy on 4th and 10th Felmary, 185", the sum of Si , (gh), which was paid him on sir A. P. Carons order alone. It is, therefore, proven that in my county, Mr. Laudry received of Mr. Murireery the sum of $s=($ (nx) on the order of the hon. Postmaster cieneral. But do you know how much he spent? Here is the account filed by his agent. and fond in the report of the returning ofticer. He spent $$ 1+10.12$. Now, here is a man who receives $$ 2$, , (MA) for legal expenses, in order that he may come in Montmagny and endeavour to defeat a poor camlidate, who fights for a good cause in opposing the nefarions policy of the Government. Aml this man who received si,(0)N, now reclares under his signature that he only spent $$ 140.1 \div$. If he ouly spent this, then he mast have robbed Mr. Mcireery : and if he spent $$ \mathbf{S}$, (hen how could he declare that he had only spent $$ 140.12 \%$ Now, Mr. speaker, it seems to me that when one gres into court with proofs hy writing and official decenments, it is easy to get a decision. I must say that the hon. member for L'Islet gave a poror certificate to the memiers of this House. He stated that they are not fit to hold this trial. He stated that the hon. members lacked, if not intelligence, at least impartiality enough, to render a judgment. As to us we are in no way affected by what the hon. member for Lİslet may say : but it is a poor certificate for him to give his friends who, as they did last year, form the majority of the committee. For if we had an investigation before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the Government would be sure to control it by its majority. Moreover, there will be present the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Amyot) who always keeps a jealous eye over the enquiries, and I am convinced that he will do his duty on this occasion as he did last year. I protest on behalf of the majority of the Conservatives on the Committee on Privileges and Elections, against the insinuations made by the hon. member for L'Islet. But, whatever the hon. member may say, shall we not be the final judges in the matter in any event? Does not the anmendment read so? It says that there shall be a RoyalCommission which will report to the Honse, and the latter will pronounce finally. Now, if we are not competent this year. why should we be more so next? I conceive that the hon. member for L'Islet dues not expect to be called upon to pass judgment over this afflair, for, from what I hear. it appears that he is looking to a position in Quebec. Is that because he would not like to pronounce on this question? Therefore, this last contention, that the House is not sufficiently impartial, that the committee would not be composed of impartial julges, surely cannot stand, since we have in any event to pronomece finally. And if we are not competent to settle the question this year, how should we he more so next?" I protest with all my strength against a Royal Commission as unjust and useless. I am here in the House to plead the cause of the majority of the electors of my county, who want an investigation, and I oppose this amembent. Without vainly loasting I think Iam intelligent enough tovote on this duestion before it has passed through a Royal Commission, especially when the Rayal Commissions-as were those recently appointed. particularly that against Hon. Mr. Mercier--are composed of political friends of the hom. gentlemen of the right. Such Royal Commissions will again lee appointerl when there will be some political rancour to sttisfy against the Liberals, some atesount.s to he paill for; or in order to bring alont the reimbursement of some lost deposit. I say, then, that the Honse must keep the control aid hear the trial of its own members. I am absolutely against this amenlment, and say that if we hate to sit here for another six months, I am ready in order to claim our rights, and above all to avenge public morality aml protect the treasury against onganized plunder in Canandi.
Mr. DEPONT. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, I have heart with astonishment the violent speeches promonncel hy some of our colleagues from the Province of Guelec against the hon. Postmaster General. I thought first that these lion. gentlemen. who belong to the Liberal party in this Honse, after having taken the precaution of causing the charges against the hon. Postmaster lieneral to $^{\text {a }}$ be male by a member from the Province of Ontario, had intended to alstain on this oncasion, and to try and act as impartial judges in the case of one of their French colleagues from their province. Mr. Speaker, the nature of Mr. Pacaud's nurslings smon asserted itself. The nature of the disciples of the Mercier Government could not be kept from breaking out, and the House of Commons is now treated to the violence of speech indulged in hy these hon. members during the last election campaign against the Conservative party. The mode suggested ly the Government to carry out the inrestigation into the charges brought against the hon. Postmaster Ceneral is a very wise one. First it will save the House the annoyance of spending again the whole summer in the city of Ottawa. It will relieve the memhers from the very trying ordeal oi spending here the summer season, and perhaps the season of the fall, in order to allow the lawyers hostile to the hon. Postmaster General to wage war against him before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, to wage against him an unwarrantable war, to submit witnesses to all kinds of irrelecant questions, as was done last year during the investigation against the ex-Minister of Public Works and his department; for it is almitted to-day by everyborly, eren the hom. members of the left-and it is enrough to read the evidence to have a proof of itthat ont of several thousand pages of evidence about four humbrel pages only are relevant and Have any bearing on the charges brought against the hom. ex-Minister. These enguiries before the Committee on I'rivileges and Elections, cost the conntry and the meminers more labour and money than an enuuiry lefore a Royal commission or beiore a comperent and an impartial juige cond cost. The hon. members want the comitry and this House to believe, that the Conservative party of the lrowince of Gueloce dread the charges hronght against the hon. Postmaster (ienemal, amd want at all cost to burke this enguiry into the charges male ly the hom. member for West Ontario. Mr. Speaker, we do not want to burke this ellpuiry as the hon. member for Montmagny satil. We are the majority in the Committee on Privileges amd Flections. We want to sive fairpiay to the hon. Minister before an impartial judige who has mothing more to do with polities. We want io give fair-play to the hom. members of the left, so that they maty proive their accusations. When this entuiry shall have leetn done, a report shall he made to the Honse, and the House will juige, the House will not hate to complain that the committee composed of a Conservative majonity has stifled pertinent investigation and suppressed questions put to the witnesses in the conrse of the enpuiry. On the contrary it will have. within the strict limit of procelure, the right to put all pertinent questions bearing on the accusations hrought against the hom. Postmaster (ieneral. But, Mr. Speaker, hefore trying an individual an investigation is manle. If last year the diovernment had listenen to all the complaints manle by the hon. memikers of the left, either igainst the Ministers or the (iovernment, or against members of the Conservative party, that session would not yet be over. The hon. meniners comblat he exhansted. They would incessiantly have new charges to make, after a five or six months empuiry, against a Minister. New charges would only have to be made, and the House woulal he kept at work permanently. I know that the hon. members of the Upposition go before the people and llame the diovernment for spending the public money. They, nevertheless, find the means to cause humireds of thousanils of dollars to be spent, either in useless investigations or in cleleates egually futile in this House. Well, the fiovernment has shown wistom in saving the House and the members the annoyance of spending the summer here, and insaving the country the expenditure of several handred thousand dollars which have been spent to satisfy the spite of the left. I have the hope that the enyuiry into the charges made by the hon. member for West Ontario will be full and complete before the commission which will he chosen by the Government. And in the meanwhile the House will proceed with the legislation, and when the encuiry is finished-if it is not this session it will be for the next-the hon. members of the Opposition will have the opportunity to discuss the report of the Royal Commission. But if the evilence which shall he brought before the Royal Commission is not satisfactory, I do not see how the hon. members of the left, who have such damaging proofs in their hands, could make them good before the Committee on Privileges and Flections. For, as one of the hon. members of the Opposition said, this committee is largely composed of political opponents. The hon. member for Montmagny declared awhile igo, that he was confident that a great number of Conservative members were honest enough to juige with impartiality the case of the Postmaster (ieneral. I regret, Mr. Speaker, not to be able to return the compliment, for, if he has contidence in his pelitical opponents he should have still more in a trihanal which has nothing to do with polities. Mr. Speaker, I wonld have been sorry if the Government hal refusel an investigation, although the charge male by the hon. member for West Ontario, be not precise in its terms. The hon. members who want an investigation manle hefore the Committee on Privileges and Elections. speak of the hom. Postmaster (ieneral as of a man alrealy convicted and condemned. Had these memhers the slightest notion of justice amd im-partiality-that sum of justice and impartiality which they hope to meet with in their oppmentsthey wonll exhilit less violence, since they have the certitude of establishing their charges by mimpeathalle prorfs. Mr. Speaker, I will leate unnoticed the provocations of the hon. members for Rouville and Montmagny, and their attacks upon our party. These memlers derisively designate us under the name of "the honest pergipes party." The same comblat be said of their party, for. neither rerisively or otheruise, will it ever be called the homest people's party. Cnder this style never will the Liberal party be elesignated. The rerdict rendered at the last general election in the Province of Guebec, shows what alegree of confidence the people have in the honesty of the calise of those who have been the nurslings and the disciples of the Mercier (iovernment, of that (iovernnent which has exhatinsted all the resources of the province to return men who would support the hon. lealer of the Opposition and carry him into power, in orler that, together, they may lee in a position to sack the public treasury, as they haul that of the Province of Quelec. Mr. Niwaker, my fear is not that they will reach power for awhile, if they connt on the Province of Quelsec to give them a majority. That province has hal enongh of the mishleeds of the Mercier (iovernment, supported? 'y the friemls of the Liberals in this House. That province has had enough of the allies of the gentlemen of the Opposition. The Province of Quelac has hail enongh of these men so easily scandalized ly the faults, alleged or real, of their political opponents, and who have no reprotch for the guilty in their own ranks. It has had tow much of them to ever give anew its confidence to the nurslings and disciples of the regime which it has diviven out. of power.

Mr. CARROLL. The gentleman who has precedel me has introduced into this debate a number of considerations wholly foreign to the guestion actually sulmitted to this House. I do not intend to follow hine on that ground and will simply say to him: If you have any accusations to make against any member on this side, take the responsibility of them like a man of courage, and I am certain that in such a case we will not have recourse to the special pleadingindulgedin by the speakers supporting the Government. Much has been said alout Mr. Mercier and to hear the gentlemen of the other side, one would think that it was not the Postmaster fieveral who was aceused, but rather the ex-First Minister of the Province of Quebec. Sir, the acts of Mr. Mercier do not come within the jurisdiction of this Parliament. What concerns the Parliament of Canadia is sufficient for us to consider, without attending to the provinces which can take care of themselves. I will call the attention of our opponents to the impropriety of attacking men who are not here to defeml themselves, and who to-day are disarmed. Do they imagine that hy using such means of defence they cam alter public opinion: I accuse Peter of a political crime. They answer, Paul is enuilty to the same extent, and they resume their stats proud of the magnificent reply. What we hate to ask ourselves to day, is, whether if the acelnsation male against the Postmaster general is grave enough to call for an investigation, anc whether the dovermment is justified in refusing: such in investigation on the original charge? What is the accusation: The member for West Ontario charges the Postmaster General with having drawn for election purposes, subsidies voted to the Lake st. John and the Temiscouata Railways-suhsiclies roted while he was a Minister of the Crown, and which he afterwards caused the companies in question to return to him to corrupt the electorate of the district of Quebec. The charges state:
"That during the elections of 1887 the sum of $$ 1100,000$ of the subsidies to the Lake St. John Railroad was obtained at the request and with the knowledge of the said Sir A. P. Caron, and fraudulently expended in twents-two counties in the Province of Quebee, and the accuser takes upun himself to prove that this system has been in oper:ation since 1882 , and that it was continued and at work until the general elections of 1891 ."
The gravity of the charge and its preciseness is at once seen. The Postmaster General has leen a Minister since 1882. During this perion, the companies already referred to applied to the Government for a grant of subsidies; the Minister uses his influence to obtain them, they are granted, and a part of the money thus granted finds its way into the hands of the Minister who distributes it to corrupt the electorate. The charge does not state that thePostmasterGeneralstole the money, it is true. It allows that he gave it to his friends, who, in return for services renderel, gave him back a part of it. The accusation means this, or it means nothing, and drawn up as it is, it charges an abuse of confidence which is criminal from a legal and moral standpoint. The Postmaster General has denied the charge. Of course the accused pleads not guilty, but that plea is always acceptel subject to verification, and I do not believe the accused Minister should be made an exception to the general rule. The charge is clear, precise, and leaves no opening for any subterfuge, yet the Government, through the Minister of Justice, refuses to investigate the original charge and substitutes a resolution of its own, on the pretext that it is too vague, and pretending that the crime, if crime there be, does not reach the Postnaster General in his quality as member of this Honse; that the Privileges and Elections Committee is a tribunal which is too partial ; that the charge is too old; the Minister of Justice pleads an exception to the form to which he would not subscribe in a court of justice, and to which, indeed, a third class lawyer would not subscrive. The charge is ton rague. Such is not the opinion of one of the Ministers who declared that it tendel to dishonour his colleague; and such is not the opinion of ministerial papers, such as the Montreal Star, the Quebec C'hronicle, the Evenement, of Quelec, which proclaim its gravity and demand the enguiry. The charge is too old and does not reach the accused as a member of this Honse: I do not know what the !ate member for Quelec West and the hon. member for Three Rivers must think of this declaration. If we notice the charge made hy Mr. Tarte last year, we see that the ex-member for Quebec West is accusel as far back as the year 1882 till 1890, as is shown by the concluding paragraph of the different charges, which is as follows:That from the year 1883 to 1890 , both inclusive, the said Thomas Mctireevy received from Larkin, Comolly & Co., and from his hrother, R. H. Me Greevy, for the considerations alove indicated a would have leen as easy last session to reply to Mr. Tarte that his charge did nos reach the hon. member for Quebee West, since Parliament, having dissolved in 1591, he was by the fact absolved of the political crintes which have driven him to private life, and I ask why the (iovermment did not last year take the gromal which it takes now? Is it by chance that there are in the Calinet, Ministers who possess secrets which must be kept inviolate, and which it would le dangerous to reveal, and others whofare not in possession of any secrets: All appearances go towards conveying that impression. The virtue of satrifice is evidently not the Postmaster (icneral's and he appears letermined not to allow himself to ise immolated as his other colleague was-I do not blame him for defending his character, but what must be said of the Govermment which makes itself answerable for the faults of the Minister. Yet fine promises were made, and he must have been touching the Minister of Justice at the great Halifax meeting when he declared that Mr. Abbot's (iovernment was determined to pumish evil where evil would le found to exist, that the guilty, great or small, would receive the chastisement deserved. I can imagine the astonishment of his audience, if instead of speaking thus, he had pleaded, as he has done in this House. The public in face of the fact that its property had been stolen, would not have been satisfied with arguments over legal technicalities. But, then, several bye-elections were to be held, and it was necessary to convince the public that the Government into which new blood had been infused, this strong Giovernment which had just been formed, was more virtuous than that which had preceded it, and that the First Minister who had organized and put through the Pacific affair had ione penance for his old sin, and had been completely converted in his old age. But the elections are over, a new mandate has been confirmed for four years, and when we will accuse the Government of having compounded with prevaricating Ministers, we shall be answered that we are wanting in loyalty because we oppose the diverting of railway subsidies from their destination by Ministers of the Crown. For this past fourteen years, governments have used railway subsidies to make up election funds, those indispensable sinews of war, so secms to think one of the Ministers. We have seen parties entirely impecunious, float companies, apply to Parlianent, ohtain charters and construct railrouls, parties who did not sulsscribe one cent of capital, getting appointed to the presilency of companies some tine day selling out their charter and retiring from hasiness, after having secured incomes out of the pullic funds, and having given nothing to the public in retum. This policy has caused the loss to the country of millions which have been absorled hig such companies as I have desoribed, and which have also server to strengthen the faltering faith of a momber of electors in this l ominion. We have heon able to learn something of these operations only when the friends have quarelled among themselice, and yet, thongh in that way but a small corner of the veil has been lifted, it has been given us to get a glimpse of the gigantic corruption which has ravaged the country for a momber of years. When we discover any of these fratuds and ask for the help of those in anthority we are answered hy arguments which are an insult to the intellect of this Honse. It is pretended hy the leader of the Honse that lecatuse of violent political struggles it is ahost impossible for a committee such as that of Privileges and Elections to render an impartial julgment. I almit that it is lifficult to canse the disappearance of party spirit, hut I ask who is to protit hy the partiality complained of in this case: Certainly not the hon. gentleman who has made the charge. The majority of the committee will he comprosed of fridinis of the accused Minister, who, as everybuly knows, will do all they can to free him of the accusations mate against him, and the accused shouhd he happe to be judged by his own friends and not ly a more impartial tribunal. For my part, 1 am opposed, though tor our disadvantage, perhaps, I am npposen to the inlea ennuciated of transferring to a Rayal Commission con:posed of juiges, for instance, the investigation into charges against a member of this Honse. Parliament is the natural guardian of its own homour, and to it belongs the right to decide who has a right to sit in it and who hats mot. I am opposed to P'arlament depriving itself of a right which helongs to it absolutely. The members themselves are the natural judges Where questions affecting the homour of the House are concernel. Moreover, as has unhappily been shown. judies acting in such cases, depart from their functions, and by meddling with our political disputes. lose the prestige of impartiality which is necessary to them. Besides, julges appointed by the exceutive are umler the control of the execontive and shonh not le callen upon to juige the acts of those who compose the executive. Their functions are detined-let us not make them depart from these functions. The authority which appoints juiges is that which grants or refuses the advancement, which is the aim of the functionaries of the judiciary as well as of the administration. This is sutficient for a judge, unless he be proof against all suggestions which individual interest may inspire, to feel that he is not completely indepentent, and to allow himself sometimes to render services, when judgments inspired by justice alone should be rendered. For these reasons, I am opposed unless under extraordinary circumstances which some particular case might justify, to the submitting of such enquiries to Royal Commissions composed of judges. A very singular theory has been advauced by one of the Ministers, the Minister of Public Works. It is that to justify the injury, on the charges as drawn up by the member for West Ontario (Mr. Ellgarj, it would have been necessary for the memler making the accusation to have charged the l'ostmaster General with conspiracy to favou: the companies referred to. But the hon. gentleman must know that ronspiracy can seldom he shown hy formal proof. It has never entered into the mind of any one that parties who conspire to defrand either draw up authenticated statements of their crime, or leave hehind them incriminating evidence. This is so much the case that the authorities who have treated this subject of criminal law, say that "conspiracy is inferred from facts proven and from circumstances." It would be practically impossible to otherwise prove conspiacy. The same hon. gentleman is unwilling to allow the holling of the trial of the Comservative party with reference to the general elections of 18s.". This admission is so aimirably framk that it is important to note it, but I do not see in that a very strong argument to prevent the enpuiry. Our adrersaries often boast that they have made the country what it is. We believe if Camala has progressed during the past quarter of a century. it hats done so withont the aid of diovermments amb since our ofponents have governed almost without interruption and corruption exists. to themparticularly is due the fact that our population is inoceulatell with it. It is useless tolwell on the past, and not withstamding my comict ion that the gentle. men on the other side are the great simers, they should in future, if they hate not in the past, try to stamp out that great social ranger and try to avoid the political corruption in the future which has existed in the past. Political emruption has this which is peculiar to itself. It purchases with money sutfrages which shonht be acomaled to confidence alone, and as a means to achieve its emts, it sells in the same way for money pub. lic appointments and contracts which merit and ability alone shonld obtain. The conseguence is that we have no longer the free expression of the opinion of the majority of the electors. Our (iovernment is no longer that of the majority, but that of the minority; the comstitution is tiolated. The election of a represent ative in many counties resembles more a hargain than a free choice. If the evil continues to grow in the same proportion, soon principles and discussion will be out of the question. A candidate will not be asked if he porsesses the necessary qualifications, but if his purse is well filled and if he has an open hand. The lay of dollars will he the 1 am with which all donss will le broken in and consciences stormed. Deep research is not necessary to show that such a condition of things constitutes an imminent langer to our institutions. It is the very negation of representative govermment. For all these reasons it is proper to ask that those trattickers be driven from public life who would make of politics a bazaar and of our country a mart.

Mr. DESAULNIERs. (Translation.) Mr. Speaker, in the motion of the hon. member for West Ontario, mention is made of the County of St. Maurice. I wish to state from my place in the House, that at no time when I was a candidate for election, either in 188\% or 1891, did I receive either directly or indirectly, a single cent from the hon. Postmaster General. This statement may have its importance under the circumstances, since my county is mentioned in the motion offered by the hon. memher for West Untario. The hon. member fir Montmagny made a comical reference to the me. bers from the district of Three Rivers. This tios trict. Mr. Speaker, is represented in this Honse by three Conservatives and two Liberals. The fatter are the members for Maskinonget and Nicolet : the Conservatives, Nir Hector Langevin, Mr. Carignan and myself. I may ald that when I have the honour of addressing this House. I do so under a mandate entrusted to me by as intelligent a county as there is in the Province of Quethec: that the electors of this county are as honest as those who retwonel the hon. member for Montmagny. I will also ahlil. Mr. speaker, that my electors do not like the light of the hon. member for Montmagny: and the reason for it is rery simple. for his light is nor hetter than that which comes from chsewhere.
 is sominto he smuffer out.

Mr. DENALLNIERs. (Translation.) If my commty goes out of existence. it will mot he he the act of the electors, but hy effect of the Bill now hefore the Honst, the dierrgmandering Bill.

Some hom. MFMBERS. Hear. hear.
Mr. DFNACLNIKRS. (Translation.) I think, MrSpatier. it would he an injustice to put an end to the existerace of the (ounty of Sit. Manrice, and to reallece to four members the representation of the distriet of Three Rivers. If the county is preserved, I ann sure to come back to the Honse, and to he entrusted with the manlate of the electors hy as latse a majority as I hat lefore. Mention was maile of the religious lights shining from Three Pivers. All I have to say is that such light is well worth the light that comes from leboi Quebec. The motion of the hon. member for West Ontario is out of the question, for shoull it be alopted hy the Honse we would have to spemi the whole simmer here. The House will rememiner what took place last year. In the Tarte-Mchreery matter. the accuser has not had the courage to lie a candidate again in his connty, aml an honest man against whom nothing could tee proven was made to suffer. The gentlemen of the Opposition who to-liay are so adverse to Royal Commissions have not always been of the same mind. They all approved the Royal (ommission which was appointed to drive out from the Legislative (ouncil of Quebec the Legislative Councillor Mr. Lavallee. On that occasion, the Liberals did not go to the Legislative Council for an enguiry into the matter.

Mr. LANifiLIER. (Translation.) Mr. Lavallée hat resigned.

Mr. DEsAULNIERs. (Translation.) I know all alsout that would-lee resignation, which was signed in a lar room at Joliette.

Mr. CHOQUETTE. (Translation.) A dubious compliment to Mr. Lavallée.

Mr. DENAULNIERS. (Translation.) When these gentlemen are in the Opposition their shouts are loud against the extravagance of their opponents ; they do their best to scare the people into giving them the power, and promise to lo better than their predecessors. We have heard these gentlemen cry against the squanderings of the Conservatives. The people gave them a chance to fultil their promises, and what did we see, Mr. Speiker? We have seen them, to the shame of the Province of Quelrec, drag into the mire the prestige of the province. We have seen these men trade in public contracts, speculate on everything. The perple drove them out of power, and to-day they come and throw mud on a French Canalian Minister. They were successful against one Minister last year, and this year they want to do the same with another. Should an enguiry be granted, they would be at the same game again next year. The hon. Minister of Public Works would perhaps have his turn. The pullic would end hy saying that the Conservatives in ()ttawa resemble the Liberals in the lrovince of quehee.

Mr. FR.ANER movel the alljomment of the delate.

Mr. BoWbLL. surely the hon. member camot he in eanest in desiring to aljoum the debate at this time of night, males he proposes to keep it up for a number of days. I am sure if there ate any others who ilesire to speak, the House will listen to them very attentively and patiently. But that we should atijourn before it is 10 oclock is something unusual on a yuestion of this hind.

Mr. LAURIER. What loes the leader of the House say to this proposition?

Sir JOHN THOMPNON. I am afmail we camot agree to it. It would be inconvenient to a latre number of members.
Mr. FRANER. I hall hoped that the motion would prevail. becaluse I was anxious to hear from our friends opposite some further reason why the course of procedure they have proposed shoulithe assented to hiy this House. I think the speeches delivered upon this subject by the Ministers will make nice realing, in view of the further proceedings in this Honse, of the speeches delivered on the amemhment mored by the Minister of Militia: I am sure this reading will glalden the hearts of all true Conserratives in this country. I congratulate the fiovermment very much that they have hani to fall back on the reloubtable Minister of $W$ ar, who, when he found the (iovernment in the last diteh, bohlly, like the Napoleonic captain that he is, come to their relief and moved this amembment to get them out of the rifticulty. It was what might he expected of such a gentleman. His previous training in that office, if only for a short time, male him feel that it was necessary in the interest of his party that he should leal the forlom hope by such a resolution. Now, sir, it is very strange that we should have this amendment made by the Government. I must say that I am in full sympathy with the remarks made hy the hon. member for Kamouraska (Mr. Carroll). It strikes me as somewhat remarkable tha thon. gentlemen opposite are so anxious for a vote. Where are the men Who have prided themselves on having the instincts of true Conservatives as to what ought to lee done in this country to put down the wrongs that exist? Where was the voice of the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Cockburn)? Where was he when this brase battle was being fought? Did he rise, as every man in the country expected he would, and as I lielieve the beatings of his own manly heart prompted him to do, and stand up once for all to see that justice was done to this country? Now, I lay it down, first, that this Parliament should give to no tribunal that which rightly belongs to itself. The question of a man's character does not concern this Parliament. That matter must le decided by his comstituents alone. But his comluct as a member of Parliament, and everything he does in connection with the trust contided in hin: by inis constituents, is a matter which concerns this Parliament, and of which no other power can take cognisance. We are asked to give to men who are nameless, so far as this parliament is comeerned, the care of the dignity and honour of this Honse. When these charges were made by a responsible menber of this House, was the hom. Minister against whom they are made afraid of an investigation : Wouhl not we expect that the hom. member would rise in his place and say : You cau pursue these charges as far as you like, prove them as deeply as you may, for so firmly entrencheal is my nume in honour, that nothing this Parliament can investigate will cast any bot on it. But that is not the position the hom. member has taken. Is it to he said that any meminer of Parliament is going to conceal himself behind a Royal Commission when Parliament says that these charges should be inrestigated in the light of lay? I was waiting with some imxiety to hear from other gentlemen opposite: I was waiting to hear the aged members speak and give their experience of past Parliaments. I was anxious to hear that hon. member who sits next to the Minister of Justice (Mr. McCarthy). I expected he would rise and give us the great benefit of his legal experience as to what ought to le done. We are in this country very unhappy in the position in which our knights are found. Why was not this thought of last winter, when the charges were made against that hon. gentleman who sits now lefore me (Sir Hector Langevin): Why was it not thought that a Royal Commission was the fitting method of investigating his shortcomings: Why was he suljected to the strain of a parliamentary enguiry and, according to the argument of hon. sentlemen opposite, an unfair enyuiry, at that time? It appears to me that it is rather unfortunate for a man to be a knight in this parliament. Whether or not the mere fact that a man becomes a knight puts him in a position to do that which he ought not to do, I know not ; whether he has acquired this distinctive privilege, of making night dark, Iknow not ; whether he hasacquired his virtues before he is knightel, I know not ; but this much I do know, that those upon whom Her Majesty has conferred these favours seem to have become beknighted afterwards. It only remains for the leader of this Housenow, whois not in hisplace, whoseemsto be the standing counsel for his brother knights when they get into difficulties, to say that this Parliament shall be prevented from making that enquiry. Now, is this, after all, a matter of proper enquiry? Are the charges specific ; would they be subject-and I appeal to gentlemen who are of the same profession ens myelf-wouid they be subject to denurrer in a court? Would they be such a statement of facts in an ordinary case as would compel a defendant to answer? Surely we are not going to stand upon the method of our going in Parlianent; surely hon. gentlemen will not say that we are to be debarred from proceeding on account of the method proposed. Surely this country, from one end to the other, has heard enough already about the methods that prevail in Parliament. Are we still further to give the electorate of this Dominion to muderstand that matters that are considered wrong among honest men outside, matters that an hon. member outside wonll not commit except with shame, shall find not only defenders in Parliament, but those who will say that the charges are not worthy of investigation? I hold that the method proposed of sending this matter to a Royal Commission is simply one the Government have taken for the time being in order to avoil investigation, in the hope that finally they will escape it altogether, and in the hope that they will le able to make the people believe they are honest men. There is only one way of meeting a difficulty like this, and that is hy having it probed to the bottom by Parliament. Do hom. gentlemen think that all the facts elicited last winter would have heen brought to light if the methorl now proposed had been pursued? Couhl the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mlr. Amyot) have discovered the entity of Bancroft by the methol now proposed: I repeat there is only one methol of dealing with a question of this kind. When an hon. member rises in his place and makes a statement such as the hon. memher for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) made, surely Parliament is not going to feel it to be unworthy of its dignity to enguire into the character of its members \% A small matter indeed : Although hon. gentlemen talkel at the outset that the charges were not specitic enough-and it will be remembered that this was the only defence offered in the first place-now they consider then specific enough, after omitting two or three statements. This is a very stramge position for hon. gentlemen to opposite to take. If the Minister of Justice considered the charge not sufticiently specific, what can be thought of the action of the Minister of Militia, when in the amendment he has proposel with the approval of his party, he almits that the charges are suthiciently specific to warrant the appointment of a Royal Conmission ? It will not be forgoten that such an investigation will proceed on the assumption that the Govermment has discovered, not that this Parliament has discovered, that this was a matter that should be sent to a Royal Conmission, for the very chapter under which this proceeding is taken says that Government makes the enguiry, not Parliament. I am not realy to give the Government or any other body the privilege of enguiring into that which we have a right to enguire into, and at some time, if we forget what is the proper action in this matter, we shall find our power usurped. Will any hon. member fear an investigation by Parliament! Not if he is innocent. Let it not be forgotten that Parliament is now in session. The act under which we are now asked to proceed gives power to the Government, if amything wrong oceurs during recess or in the administration of government, to order an enquiry to be held, and the matters investigated fully ; but this does not apply to a matter like the present one, which oecurs on the floor of the House, is not related to the government of the country, but to the character of a member of this House and the methods pursued during the election. It is not even suggested that the Act was framed for any such purpose. Does any man think Parliament ever dreamed of giving to any commission, and that a nameless commission, such power? I am sure we would not grant such power. Much more than that, it must not be forgotten that Parliament has in the past enguired into these questions here. I cannot place too much stress on the fact of the investigations which took place last winter. Does it follow, as I think it must follow, that hon. gentlemen opposite, having allowed the investigations last year, have discovered that it was a dangerous experiment, because they did not wish the light of day to be thrown on their conduct. and accordingly they are determined that the light of day shall not be thrown on their conlact now: and are determinel to prevent an investigation that will reveal them in the same light as last year? Are they afraid that the people are beginning to feel that nothing but the fullest investigation should take place, and that they will le able to bring the people to believe that by proposing the method of a Royal Commission they hate shown themselves to be desirous of ferreting ont wrong? I olserved in an illustrated paper at cartoon, which I am sure anticipated the action of the Government to-day. It representerd the Premier sitting as judge, the Minister of Justice acting as prosecuting attorney: the men who last year were found to be guilty of crimes for which, if committed in private life, they would have been sent to goal, were the jury, and a poor loy not much higher than this desk was standing in the criminal box and was the only criminal prosecuted. Did this cartoon anticipate the action of the (iovernment and indicate the spirit in which the (iovernment has acied? I am appealing to hon. members who in their inmost soul feel this is not the right way to prosecute the enquiry. I commisserate some hon. gentlemen opposite, who with their high-toned ideas of public and private life, would freely condemn such an act if it occurred in private life; yet such are the depths of party feeling that men who would scorn in private life to protect any offender are ready to protect some man or men here in Parliament to-day. There are hon. gentlemen who I suppose would vote for this amedment to whom we could entrust our honour, whose word would tee groul, who would do no dishonourable action, and yet they are forced by party exigencies to support the methods proposed ly the Government, fearing that their party friends would have to suffer if an investigation were instituted as proposed. Parliament has no right to lay aside its own conscience in trying the conduct of members or their acts as public servants or as trustees of the people who sent them here. Nor will it be forgotten that this change of base is brought about without any regard for such cases as that covered by the resolution. I am sure all hon. gentlemen were very much surprised when the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) made the statements, to observe the manner in which it was discussed on the Treasury benches; they will remember the ringing cheers which greeted the Minister of Justice as he rose and amounced that the charges were not sutficiently specific, and in order to strengthen his position he mentioned that for some indefinite period of time the hon. gentleman did not happen to be a member of this House, because he was seeking re-election. Those same hon. gentlemen opposite cheered lustily when the Minister of Militia announced that there was sufficient in the statement with which to institute a Royal Commission. A few days ago there was not sufficient in the statement to cause it to receive any attention, and yet we are now informed that the Government are ready to appoint a Royal Commission to make en-quiry-the last refuge of parliamentarians-an investigation which might besmireh their reputation and expuse a Minister, as others have heen exposed in this House. I contend that we should follow the methosls pursued by this Parliament. Perhaps the House will permit me to refer again to the investigations of last year. No one would suppose the results that have occurred would occur. Why? Because hom. gentlemen rose and denied the charges, said there was nothing in then, and could not be supported by evidence. Those hon. gentlemen thought the investigation would not prove that which subsequently it did prove. Now, sir, if that method was proper when pursued in regard to one knight ; it ought to bee equally proper in regard to the other, nor will the denial of the Postmaster (ieneral, who is not in his place, and rightly so, to-night, suffice to lead this comtry to believe that there is no foundation for the charges. I am sure that hon. gentlemen will understand from what happened here last year that the court appointed by Parliament was not only a competent court, but that it was the very best court to investigate sucin matters. As was very well said ly one of the hom. gentlemen who preceded, what have hon. gentlemen opposite to fear from a majority of their own friends, with five (iovernment supporters to three Reformers, or a like proportion in a larger number? What has the hon. gentleman who has to be tried to fear? The hon. gentlemen opposite say you camot have a fair trial from a parliamentary committee. but I fear that some of these hon. centlemen themselves be. lieve that the evidence woulit he of such a character that they themselves would stand in an menviable light hefore the country unless they opposed this motion. They, therefore, want to shirk the unwholesome responsibility, so far as they are concerned, by thowing it upon other shoulders, so that they will not have to meet the difticulty. I claim that this is not the method that should he pursued in this case. My hom. friem from Assiniboia (Mr. Darin). sail that the gentlemen on this side of the Honse were disippointed. There is mo doult about it that we are disapprinted, but we are not disappointed in the same sense as he would have us understand. We had rainly hoped that the statements made by the Premier and by other Ministers, that this country was going to lee rid of the evil which is eating into the very vitals of the body politic, were true in fact. We had hoperl that the promises in these orations, made perhaps under the influence of a large crowl, whom they expected to gain, were going to be carried into effect when Parliament met. But, sir, are we come to this now, that when a Minister of the Crown makes as statement to the effect that if any person has any charge to make, and which he is prepareal to prove, the matter would be investigated, that we are to suppose the Minister never meant it? Are we not bound to suppose that they were honest in their statements? Did ever any man think that these Ministers would have not only to eat their own words, but to eat themselves? We accepted in good faith the statements they made, and we came here anxious to assist them in this good work, and the very statements these Ministers made acknowledged the fact that wrongs did exist. They themselves, from the investigation that was inade last year, were forced to conclude that wrongs did exist in the public service, and are they not ready now to carry out the promises they mate? Do they fear enquiry ? Ah, Mr. Speaker, that is just the ditficulty. The light thrown by Parliament upon the methods pursued by their friends is not just the light they want. I am sure, however, that if my hon. friend the Minister of Militia was left to his own guidance in this matter he would saty: Though it shouhl strike my nearest friend, let us have this investigation: though it shouhd strike my follower, whom I love most dearly, let the empuiry be made. I can umlerstand if hom. entlemen opposite said that all questions of this Fime should he submitter to a stated tribunal already in existence, hut as was suggester, rather playfully perhaps hy the member for south Grey (Mr. Lamilerkin), what if the Gosermment shoulit appoint a man on this commission in whom some people in this comntry are wicked enough not to have confidence, for instance, the County Court julge for London : or. What if they should appoint some prospective judge, some follower of their own who expects to be raised to the bench: Is it to be thought that this person would be altogether unclouderl when sitting on the bench investigating this matter: Does any man suppose that hon. gentlemen opposite who shirk the responsibility now are going to be very particular about the appointment they make to this tribunal? Do you think these gentlemen, when they know that it is the only methon hy which they can escape an investigation, and realizing as they do the results that will follow; do yousuppose that they will be very nice as to whom they will apperint on this Royal Commission: Does any one suppose that they will seek a gentleman who will he above suspicion? I do not believe that after the exhibition here to-night any one would be simple enough to believe that. Mr. Speaker, there is another point to which I wish to call the attention of the House. It was attempted to be shown that in the case of Parnell a simil:u course was pursuen as is now suggested from the Treasury henches, but I would not insult the intelligence of this Honse by saying that there was any similarity between these two cases. The matter referred to in the Parnell case was a statement made in the conducting of the case, and as nice questions of law arose as to how far a counsel conld go in the conlucting of the case, the whole question arose there. I will call the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to the fact that in England such a course as is proposed here would never have heen pursued. One hon. gentleman on the other side of the House asked us for a similar case that happened in England, and the answer eame that no such case chald exist in England. Only the other day a member of the Imperial Parliament in his private capacity as a solicitor treated some trust funds in a manner that did not bring the return they ought to bring to the owners, and did Parliament send that ciase to the courts? That was the proper place for it, I suppose, if the arguments of the Government and their supporters here to-night are correct. Did Parliament tell the accusers to proceed and get a julgment against thisman? Not at all. Parliament of its own motion took the question up and they expelled the member.

An hon. MEMBER. There was a judgment of the court.

Mr. FRASER. Certainly the matter went into the court, but Parliament did not let it rest there, and they took cognizance of the fact that the man was dealing as a solicitor in a way that he should not. Will it be said that the taking of $$ 100,(0) 0$ if the charge is correct, and I am assuming for the present that it is-and the using of this money of the people in debanching the electors of this comtry, is a matter into which we can have no investigation, or if we do have an investigation that it should be before a tribunal of which Parliament and the people of this comntry know absolutely nothing". I am certain that the very st:itements manle ly the Ministers, to the effect that in their righteons indiguation they were rising to parge this comitry from the evils to which it hat been exposed. did more than anything else to lead the people to believe that they were in eamest, and calused them to strengthen the hands of government that they might have a strong majority in purging this Govermment of the excrescences that have grown upon it. How have the Government to-night answered the loyal response of the people of this country" In the first instance, they have answered it by simply stating that they would not have any enruiry into this matter at all, and? in the second place, that they would consent to a trial by a Royal Commission instenl of a trial before the representatives of the people. If I do not misjudge the people of this country that willnot suffice for them. I believe that our people are thoroughly in carnest about having honest govermment, and despite all the athorities produced by Government supporters here, they will not take such a proposition as an answer to their demand, and they will not assume the fact that a Royal Commission which is going to he appointed some time in the future will be of any more henefit towards purging the comitry of these evils than will be the appointment of the Royal Commission in bringing about prohibition. Reference to Royal Commissions are a well-known method of shelving questions that are disagreeable to gentlemen who happen to occupy the Treasury benches, and I contend that the suggestion of the Govermment was not a proper way in which to meet these serions charges, nor is it proper, so far as our own individual dignity is concerned, or so far as the best inferests of the country are conreerned. It will not do for hon. gentlemen opposite to shirk their duty by naming a Royal Commission, and if I mistake not the people of Canala, they will not accept such a move on the part of the Govermment as satisfactory. If we place side ly side the speeches marle ly the members of the Government a few days ago and the speeches made to-day we see at once their change of front in this matter. I would like to hear from hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches who spoke ou this question before some remarks now on this amendment. I know their well-known ability to tack to the wimd as closely as possible. Let it not be forgotten that the Government are not treating the question in this manner because they think it right. The indignation of this country; aroused by the fact that they were trying to burke this enquiry, has brought the Government to their senses, even so far as to induce them to move this amendment. I believe we would not have even this, but that they saw from the utterances of the press, the utterances of prominent mien, and I have no doubt also from the number of letters they received, that something had to be done; and I have no doubt that in this good work some hon. gentlemen who sit at their backs had some part. I have no doubt that conscientious contictions dawned in upon a number of gentlemen on the other side. I have no donbt that the force which compelied the fiovernment to act in this way came from such high-spirited gentlemen as the hon. member for Toronto and others, who felt that, whatever happenen, they could not be brought down to the common level of saying there should he no investigation. What would the loyal people of Untarios say if the champion of their rights condoned the fanlts of sir Adolphe Caron? Bethinks that the gentle tap of that hon. gentleman upon the shoulder of the Minister of Justice, and that silvery voice of his brought them to their senses, as from the well-spring of his great soul he warned them of the country's desire. I stated a little while ago that I regretted very much that these thumblerbolts from a clear shy always fell on a kuight. I would like if we had the luxury of a commoner struck sometimes, because it would show that after all we are mortal, like the knights. But when a matter of this kind is to be empuired into, it is the duty of larliament to carry on the enuniry in a constitutional manner. Whatever the result of this matter may he, I am sure that the hon. gentlemen who are now leading the Honse in the way they are doing wili regret it, and I am sure that when the history of Parliament comes to he written the fact that they have not alopted the best method of trying this case will be set down against them. fifter all, this is not misspent time. We talk of tariffs, of railways, of the business of the comutry. Shall it he said that the fact that men do wrong with public money, using it for hriling constituencies, is not a greater question than all these questions combined? What is groing to exalt any nation but righteousness:

Some hon. MFMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. FRASER. I am glad that a response comes from hon. gentlemen opposite. I know that their lives and conduct are in harmony with that sentiment. Are we going to build this country upon a foundation of this kind!. Are we going to huikl it upon the investment of public money in purchasiag votes? Are we going to make this comatry strong by making its electorate weak" Are we going to have a manly electorate in this comntry. citizens of whom any country might be proud, by bribing them with the rery money extorted from them by the tariff now in existence? It is harl enongh for them to have to pay more for everything they have to use in conseguence of the tariff; hut when, adided to. that, their very porerty is male sport of with the money taken from them, surely hon. gentlemen will not say that they are buidding solid and deep the foundations of this country. Fou may talk of loyalty. The only loyalty the people want is loyalty to what is right and good: and all the buncombe loyalty of all the so-called loyalists in this country will not make this country strong if its foundations are not laid in principles of right and good. We have adopted not only the methods of taxation but the villainous system of bribing the electorate which follows natually in the wake of the system of protection prevailing in the United States, and I have heard men say umblushingly that this is all right. Why, Sir, last session, at a conmittee meeting, I heard a Privy Councillor rise and state that from contractors and those who profited from the tariff he would ask for money for election purposes, on the ground that the Govermment had helped them. We shall never get out of this slough except in one way, by investigating in Parliament matters of this kind-not in a room where this man or that man may go, where this or that reporter may be present, hut here before the members of this House, sent here to see that the government of the country is carried on by righteous methods, before men sent here to report for the press in all parts of the Dominion, and where Parliament can see that honest methods are adopted. I have no doult that hon. gentlemen opposite themselves feel that the method they propose is not the correct methon. Now, I am not going to clatain the House longer, except to say that I regret very much that the Govermment have taken their present course. I am not here by any means to saty that. I desire that everything contained in these charges shall be proven correct. For myself, I would much prefer that it should be proved there is no truth in them. I am sure that every man with a desire to see this country not only stand well in the hearts of its own citizens, but gain credit abroal, must want to see the fovernment adopt honest methods. I am sure that no true Camadian will want to see these charges proved to he true. Surely we have received enough chastisement. Surely our name has gone alroad, not with the greatest possible praise: and I for my part would much prefer that these charges should turn out to be unfoundel. But the very fact that the beginning of the investigation is met in this manner compels me to feel that there must be much more in these charges than the hon. gentleman would like to almit. I cannot help thinking that this method of shelving them is the very lest proof that there is fear somewhere that they are groing to strike not only the hon. Minister himself, but others with him. What of it? Is it not better that we should have it understood that whenever a matter of this kind comes before Parliament it shall be investigated? All honest men should join and say, we must make a new departure. Are old methods to continue? Or are we going to let our people understand that such things must now coms to an end: Yon may mock at these things until the people come after a time to think that they are right, ant the sneer and the laugh at those who want this country to be estal. lished on the best foundations is the reply that we shall get. Why, I read of a gentleman stating that he was rmming for Parliament, and that he was elected by simply boasting that the whole in vestigation last year did not affect a single vote in his constituency. God help a constituency that is not affected by wrong-doing. It is well represented by a man who would boast that nothing of that kind would affect it. Are we to stand up and condone these offences: I am sure that there are hon. gentlemen opposite who would not, but who are forced to do it. For my part, I am going to vote against this amendınent.
Some hon. MEMPERS. Hear, hear.
Mr. FRASER. Hon. gentlemen say "hear, hear." I may say "hear, hear," when they vote for it. I am ready to have my vote against it canvassed while the hon. gentlemen vote for it. I ams ready that, not only before the people of this country now, but any time hereafter, it shall be said I voted against this resolution. Let hon. gentlemen opposite take the glory of voting in favour of it. Let them think that the "hear, hear" of the present is going to absolve them from the rightems conseruences of their act-they are weleome to it. I can understand the policy that brings ont their " hear, hears" of the present, but in their cooler moments they may regret the course they have taken. We ought to rote against this amendment, because it is derogatory to Parliament that this matter should be investigated in any other method than by a committee of this House. I shall vote against it, because it is in the interests of the people that the money collected from them should be used honestly. I shall rote against it in the interests of the hon. gentleman himself who is charged, because 1 want to see a fair trial : and here, surrounded by his own friends, he camot help having a fair trial. I want to see him make good his statement, if he can, that there is no truth in the charges. For all these reasons, I am going to vote against the anendment, and I trust, not looking at the matter in any individual spirit, not looking at it in the light of to-night or in the light of the Government that now exists, but in the light of the future of the country, we may here now say that if wrong exists this Parliament is independent enough to put it down, whether we strike high or low, and show the people that this Parliament knows no distinction, except that distinction of keeping our conduct in such matters in line with that of the great Parliament of the mother country. There it never entered the brain of Liberal or Tory to do that which would bring disgrace on their pariamentary institutions. During the recess an hon. Minister attempted to say that they were just as corrupt in England as they are here. Perhaps so, but they do not at least think so themselves, and it is no answer to these charges that we are not more corrupt than they. It is a poor method of defence to shield ourselves behind the backs of others in wrong doing. For ourselves, there is a straight line before us, which we should follow; and it would be well, if such things exist in England, and I do not believe they do, that we should lead them in progress in the right direction; and I am sure we shall best do that by voting down this amendment, by applying ourselves, as men sent here in the best interests of the people, to see that in this country nothing unjust exists without bringing to speedy trial the wronguloer, whether he be in high or low places, whether he be in the Government or the Opposition ranks, so that the people will understand we are pleading their cause and acting in the best interests of all that is honourable and noble in this country.

Mr. COCKBURN. The hon. member for Guysborough has twice, in the course of his eloquent stump speech, been kind enough to ask me if I would guide him in his blindness and give him my riews on the question before this House. At the same time, he has been so good as to say that he has great confidence in my integrity and honesty of purpose. I may say that, for the first time in our lives, the member for Guysborough and myself are united on the question of unrestricted reciprocity, as whatever kindly feelings he eutertains towards me 1 reciprocate in the most unqualified manner. At the same time, he will allow that there may be difference of opinion in this matter. I may tell him that I consider that the charges preferred by the hom. member for West Ontario are indeed of a most serious character, and deserve the mature consideration of this House, whether that consideration he given directly by the House in the shape of a parliamentary Committee on Privileges and Elections, or whether the House may adopt another method leading to the same result. At the same time, I may state that I consider such enquiries, unless they are absolutely required by the public welfare, are doubly injurious to the public interests, as they tend to lessen the dignity of every member of this House, and tend, at the same time, to dull and blunt, and ultimately destroy, the moral sense of the electorate itself ; and what may appear to hom. gentlemen on the other side as perhaps still worse, they inflict serions injury on our financial credit in the European market.

Mr. LANDERKIN. They should be investigated in the Senate, too.
Mr. COCKBURN. I will come to the Semate, and give the hon. gentleman the result hefore I am done with this matter. The denial made by the Postmaster General, his statement that these charges are false in every particular, is such adenial as would he accepted ly all his. friends and all those who know the gentleman best. His disclaimer, plain and mequivocal as it has heen, while satisfactory to his friends, has apparently not been accepted by hon. gentlemen opposite ; and in fact the hon. member for duyshorough went out of his way to cast an insult on the Postmaster General by stating, in his peculiar manner, that he for one was not preparell to receive any such declaration. Well, Sir, hon. gentlemen opposite are not only not prepared to accept the statement of the Postmaster (ieneral, mut are prepared to press this charge to its final issue, and to take full advantage, as they have a right to do, of the offer made publicly by the leader of this House during the lyeelections, that into whatever charges of wrong doing which might be brought against any ofticial or any member of Parliament the fullest investigation should be marle, and the information used for the prosecution and punishment of the guilty. His words did credit to the hon. gentleman, and I think that we may at least be honest enough to almit that, from what we know of that gentle. man, it is his desire and determination to carry out the promise thus made. The hon. member for West Ontario has stated from his seat in the House that he has assumed the great responsibility of making charges against one of his fellow members. I do not for a moment deny his right to do so. It is a right which every member enjoys, but he must distinctly understand that he does sn at his own peril.
Mr. LAURIER. The Minister of Justice says "no."
Mr. COCK PURN. I am astonished to hear the leader of Her Majesty's Opposition say "hear, hear" when I say that the hon. member for West Ontariomakes those chargesat his own peril, because if he is unable to show that in making them he had grod ground, then, in the words of his leader, he is not fit to associate with gentlemen, and he is a person who ought to be expelled from this House.
Mr. EDGAR. That is right.

Mr. COCK BURN. Sir, mostly all the charges made by the hon. member for West Ontario are, I must say, to my mind, sufficiently clear and specific to entitle him to demand an enquiry, cither by the standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, or, if possible, by some other body more competent or at leastequally competent. But I must confess, that when I came to paragraph 10 of these charges, and satw the cool proposal made that we should wade through twenty-two elections in the Province of Quelec in the year 1882, twenty-two elections in 1587. and twenty-two elections in 1891. or that we should try a total of sixty-six elections, together with the fifteen bye-elections which took place there, making a total collection of eighty-one elections that the hon. gentleman was kind enough to hand over to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, the conclusion was forced on my mind that knowing as he did from his long parliamentary experience that no representative body with any respect for itself would grant such an enquiry, he was riding all the time for a fall, and was merely trying to force the Government to throw out these charges, simply because it was unable to accept them in bulk. When we reflect upon the powers of Parlimment it ought to fill every member with a determination to live up to the powers entrusted to us. The powers of Parliament are transcendent and supreme. There is no fear of those powers being diminished. They are now embodied in Acts which are the results of long struggles. Parliament, it may be said, has power over everything. It had power during the reign of Henry VIII to alter the succession or to revise it, especially in reference to his children, Filward, Mary and Elizabeth. It had power to alter it again in the case of William and Mary. It has power to alter the constitution itself, as we see in the Act of Union, and also in regard to the triennial and septennial parliaments. As Delohne says: It has power to do anything except to make a man a woman or a womanaman. In fact, Queen Victoria herself, however much we may love and venerate her, has only a parliamentary title and reigns by virtue of a parliamentary statute. If these are the power: which Parliament possesses, we should be rery careful how we exercise them, and therefore I cordially reciprocate the statement made ly the leader of the Opposition the other day that, if these charges were lightly made, the man who made them should be expelled from the House. That was a sound doctrine, and one which should always be helf. We are told that the charges are not specific. My friend from Guyslorough (Mr: Fraser) sitys the specific charges hare been omitted. Well, as far as I can see, it is the specific charges that have been retained, and it is this general fishing experlition which has been omittel. The hon. gentleman has kindly referred to the part I took in the baite des Chaleurs enguiry. I will read to him the chatrge made in reference to that, and perhaps the hon. gentleman may be able to induce the member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) to model his intictment upon it. It is honest, simple and straightforward, and, being honest, simple and straightforward, ithas been attended wich great and glorious results. It has revivified a province, and, if I had been tempted to take adrantage of the course proposed by the member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), I could have brought up evidence to make the cheeksof gentlemen opposite pale before me; but I thought it my duty to confine nuyself to the sum of Sl 5,000 which I said had been turned aside from the purpose for which it was intended ; and although, in the enquiry, il came across any amount of evidence, I did not think it was my duty to convert Parliament into a moral sink or a moral sewer, but rather to leave it as a place where gentlemen could meet together and converse as gentlemen. I therefore refrained from bringing charges which I might have brought. If, however, our custons are to be changed, if this is no longer to he an assembly of gentlemen, but a place where we are to meet in order to bullyrag one another, I am quite willing to open up again the question of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, and, if I do, some gentlemen on the other sille, before I have done with them, will be in such a condition that their hest friends will not know then.. I said I would read the charge made before the committee which was entrusted with the investigation into the Baie des Chaleurs matter :

"That out of certain moneys, amounting to $$ 280,000$. authorized by the fiorernment of the Province of Quebec to be paid to the company on account of the subsidies granted by the Legislature of the Province of Quebec in consideration of the construction and completion of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway, a sum of money amounting to 3175,000 had been improperly retained and improperiy applied to purposes other thatn the construction and completion, of the said road and having no connection therewith."

Mr. EDGiAR. By whom?

Mr. COCKBURN. These were the words of the charge, and I think my hon. friends opposite will admit that the investigation was conducted, as far as its ends were concerned, most successfully. Perhaps I ought to have added a rider to the motion asking what was done with this money in certain constituencies in Lower Canala. I knew of this money having been sent to certain counties, but I refrained from doing that. In this enquiry we have nothing to deal with leyond the main guestion. If it can be established that Sir Adolphe Caron, being a Minister of the Crown, was at the same time a member of a construction company or a contractor, and was assisting to divert public money from its proper purposes, that is quite enough. It is the right of Parliament to vote supplies, and it only olstained that privilege after great struggles, resulting in the execution of one of our English kings. All we have to do now is to punish those who are reported to have neglected their duty in guarding these supplies. But that we should go and institute an invostigation into $\mathbf{6 6}$ elections, with the knowledge beforchand that we camot change one single seat, with the knowledge, too, that many of those who took part in these elections are gone over to the silent majority, and many others have abandoned political life, is a proposition that cannot be entertained. What, we ask, in the name of common sense, are we going to gain by this movement, which is sprung upon us from a desire of mud-slinging, a desire, if possible, to gain some petty party advantage? Above such considerations the Liberal party ought to rise. It has men as learlers who have bigger souls than that, and I am more than astonished that they ever allowed a rider of this kind to be annexed to the motion or charge. I do not know if my hon. friend from Guysborough wishes any further information. I may tell him, however, that so far from the Royal Commission being what he supposes it will be-when he says there were Royal Commissions attended with bad results-there was a Royal Commission in Quebec, and there was a Royal Commission appointed in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway scandal. Py the 114th clause of the Revised Statutes of Canada Royal Commissions are instituted whenever the Governor General in Council deems it expedient to cause an enquiry to be made into any matter concerning the goorl government of Cimata, or the conluct of any part of the business thereof. Under the statute the commission may summon and enforce attendance of wituesses, who may be examined under oath. I find in Bourinot this foot note referring to the Canadian Pacitic Railway investigation:
" The commissioners in this trying ease simply reported the eridence they had taken, and stated no conclusion. on the ground that the execution of their function should not in any way prejudice, whaterer proceedings Parliament might desire to take."
Now, you have there the gist of the whole thing. This Royal Commission that is proposel "camot prejudice whatever proceedings Parliament might lesire to take." The evidence is given to us, not in the way, perhaps, some gentlemen might desire. I was astonished to hear the eminent comsel from Guysborough getting up and condemning commissions, and the way in which they take evidence. I am no lawyer, but so far as I understand it, the laws of evidence by which courts are guided, are the crystallizel legal experience of twenty or thirty generations. They have heen found ly long experience to be the hest methords of eliciting the truth, and I am sure that my hon. friend from Guyshorough would be the last man who would try to elicit a lie, or by any inmuendo try to cover up a truth. Now, if the duties of a Royal Commission are as they are reported to be in this extract I have read, it is in our power, when this report comes to us, to throw it aside. We can demand a further investigation, or a new investigation, or we may refer it to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.
Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Anything to postpone it.
Mr. COCKBURN. No, Sir, I think it is most unfair to say there is desire on the part of the Government to postpone it. Sir, we have nothing to fear. Look it the late elections. My hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, entered this House two years ago with 90 stalwart men hehind him ; 30 of them fell when the hand of justice was stretched out. No, Sir, we have nothing to fear. Our hands are so far pure and clean.

Some hon. MEMBERs. Oh, oh.
Mr. COCKBURN. Yours may be clean now, but there are 33 per cent of your members that have been washed out. It was a long washing and a hard washing, but you needed to wash a whole province, in a mamer, before you were able to stand forth in your glory.
Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will address the Chair.
Mr. COCKBURN. Ishalluot follow my hon. friend from Guysborough in offering insults to the beuch, nor do I think it necessary to follow him in his allusions to a gentleman who was expelled from the British House of Cominons after he had been convicted there by the court. I hope he does not go the length of saying that aftera man hasbeen convicted of felony or murder, because he happens to be a member of Parliament therefore he should retain his seat. I Parliament therefore do not know that I have any further information to give that hon gentleman. I know he has an ardent love for infornation, and I know how difticult it is for hom. gentlemen over there, some times, to find out the truth; I know that, beclouded as that hon. gentleman is, he would be unable to peer through the deep mists of error that have surrounded his party for the last $1: 3$ or 14 years. Day afte: day they seem to get deeper and deeper into the internal abyss. Theremay beamultitude of counsellorsin their party, but there is precious little wislom. When an offer is made to facilitate enguiry into charges which are made, insteal of meeting it in the spirit in which it should be met, instead of aiding the fovermment in their desire to secure an impartial trilunal, every obstacle is thrown in the way, every step is taken that can retard justice. Sir, we are determined that roitt que ronte we shall mete out justice to every one, be he high or low. We are trusted by the country. We have the confilence of the people; lut when hon. gentlemen opposite. ask us to try sl elections over again they are perpetrating an absurdity that lee must apparent, almost, to the weakest understanding anows the electorate. Why, Sir, life is short, parliamentary life is unfor tunately still shorter. I do not think, looking at. all the chances, that if we were to grant the vequest of gentlemen opposite and put in paragraph in and send it to the Committee on Privileges and Flections, we shombld le able to leave this House within the next twelve months.
Sir RICHARI CARTWRI(iHT. I think, under the circumstances, the hon. gentleman might reconsider his decision, hecause it is almost impossible. that we should finish this delate to-night. It cim go on to-morrow, and might lee concluded to-morrow by mutual consent, I presume.
Sir JOHS THOMPSON. I should like very much to oblige our friend, but I im informed that it would be a great inconvenience to a large number of members if the debate were not closed tonight.
Mr. MILLS' (Bothwell). I have three volumes of Han:ard to read liy way of illustration.
Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. As I have already spoken on the main motion, I do not propose to speak at length on this occasion. At the same time I am not disposel to allow the remarks of the Minister of Militia to pass without a few comments from myself, more particularly as he has referred to my own language on the occasion of the introduction of the motion of my hon. friend from West Ontario (Mr. Ealgar). I think, also, it is extremely important that the proposition which is now before us, should be clearly and distinctly placed before the comntry as well as before the House. I may ald that it is a most remarkable proceeding on the part of the Govermment to formulate a set of charges, 10 in number, and expect this House to pronounce an intelligent judgment upon them before we have had an opportunity of seeing them in print. It is a very extraordinary proceeding, and one which I think under the ordinary practice of a court of justice could scarcely be tolerated or recog. nized. One thing is very clear, at all events, and that is the pitiable position to which Ministers have been reduced on the present occasion. It is perfectly plain and obvious that those hon. gentle. men would balk the investigation if they dare.

They made that perfectly clear and evident in the speech of the Minister of Justice and his colleagues on the occasion when ny hon. friend's motion uas presented. Since that time they have found, perhaps through pressure from their supporters, much more probibly from the evidence of the mode in which the country was regarding the attempt to suppress all examination into these charges, and because their political existence and that of their followers, too, would be imperilled by the refusal, and to that, and not to any new-born desire on their part to aid my hon. friend in his investigation, is due the change of front which we witnessed this afternoon. What is the proposal which hon. gentlemen have nade to us? I propose to consider it very briefly; I propose also to consider the objections which lie to it in the matter of principle, and oljections in the way of practice and convenience, and in the last place, I desire to call the special attention of members on both sides to the extent to which the past estahished rights and privileges of Parliament are proposed to be violated by the proposal. Sir, this proposal made to us is a very remarkable one, and a very curions sample of the new evolutions of doctrine at which the Minister of Justice hais been gradually arriving. I think this is the tirst time in which it has been gravely proposed by an hon. gentleman who once sat on the bench of Canada that the accused party should be allowed to draw the indictment against himself and select his own judge. It is a most extraordinary development, and if the hon. gentleman's name lives for nothing else it will be owing to the fact that he was the first judge whodeemed it right and proper that the man who is accused should at his own will and pleasure substitutean entirely new set of charges from those originally preferred against him. Sir, I must say that I think this would be held as a new gospel, as tidings of great joy by the criminal classes generally if the Minister of Justice proposed that it should apply in the ordinary course of law. I doubt whether any of those unfortunate and misguided people who now inhabit the Dominion penitentiaries would have found their way there if the same privileges had leen accorded to them, if they had been allowed to select their own judges, and even their own prosecutor, because that is one of the incidents which, as I shall presently show, will probably result from the adoption of this proposition. The conduct of the hon. gentleman and of his colleagues remind me exceedingly of that well-known Irish delinquent, who on one occasiou being promised a fair trial, replied that a fair trial was the very thing he did not want. I do not pretend to say that I have always the very extremest respect. for the precedents that may have been established at various times. I do not pretend to say that no occasion can arise when Parliament may not proceed to make a precedent for itself; but as a mere matter of curiosity, as a mere matter of general information, I should like to know from our exceedingly well-informed friend from 'Toronto, or from the Minister of Justice himself, where in British history, where, in our own history, he will find a single precedent for the extraordinary course which the Minister of Militia has recommended to this House? Where will he find ${ }_{5} /$ precedent for the accused party changing the verbiage and meaning of every charge brought against him, and then as I have said, selecting his own judge to troot "Mr. Speaker, I camnot conceive any proposition which is more utterly contrary to common sense, natural justice, law and equity than the proposal now submitted to us. I do not want to biunt the natural and wholesome feeling of indignation which not only every honest man in this House must feel, and but for party tranmels would feel, at the monstrous innovation, but which every honest man throughout Canada will feel when the intelligence reaches them to morrow of the mode in which hon. gentlemen opposite propose to comply with the denanil made by my hon. frienil for an investigation. I will place before the Honse hefore I sit down the thing in a few clear and hroad words on which hon. gentlemen shall have an opportunity of passing sentence. The only case at all of similar importance in which any proceeding in the slightest degree resembling this was had recourse to in our Parliament, was on the memorable occasion when Mr. Huntington in his place formulated certain charges against Sir John A. Macdonald, and it is well remembered by all who had seats in the House at that time that Sir John A. Macdonald aithough he refused the committee asked by Mr. Huntington, immediately thereafter of his own motion, or of his own alleged motion, granted a committee, and did not attempt in the slightest degree to tary or alter the charges made by Mr. Huntington. Nor even at a later date, when the matter was referred to a Royal Commission, did isir John Macdonald vary the charges formulated by Mr. Huntington in his place. That commission proceetled to investigate the charges as they were presented; and if hon. gentlemen here desire to shield themselves under that example, the very least they could have done, although as I shall show even that would not have been sitisfactory, would have been to have taken the charges precisely, literally and verbatim as they were preferred. Let us understand the practicul results of this proposal. As to the principle, I have shown how utterly and entirely erroneous it is of necessity. But let us consider what are the practical results. Is the commission going to sit while the House is in session!" Is it proposed that a commission should le appointed, forsooth, and members of the House be required to desert their proper duties in this Honse to appear before a commission appointed by the Government of the day? Or, is it proposed that we shall wait months until this House has risen, and that then this commisson is to sit, and then my hon. friend and other hon. gentlemen, at their own proper cast and charges, at great expenditure of money, for the purpose of securing witnesses and evidence, are to be called upon at the close of this session to dance attendance at the beck and call of a conmission appointed by hon. gentlemen opposite! Sir, it is perfectly clear if that kind of thing is adopted, the delay and confusion will be simply intolerable. What right have hon. gentlemen opposite to dare to call any hon. member to account before their nominees, before a commission appointed by the Governor on the recommendation of those hon. gentlemen? Whai right have they to call them to account for anything that we may choose to say or do in this House: The members in this House speaking in their places in Parliament are responsible to this House and are responsible to this House alone. That, Sir, is the well understood and thoroughly estahlished parliamentary practice for 300 years in the mother country, and we, I trust, are not going to be the first to interfere with it. It is perfecily clear that wholly and entirely apart from the utter change which has heen made in the charges preferred hy my hom. friend, it is perfectly plain that the inrestigation would be crippled at all points. It is not true at all that that investigation could be conducted with as free a hand or as thoroughly lefore a (iovermment Commission, as it could be in this House? The tribunal my hon. friend proposes to appeal to is one before which he can summon witnesses and require them to appear and give evidence withont involving himself in all the intolerahle toil, and delay, and expense, which would be conserfuent upon its proceedings if he were olliged to appear lefore a commission such as the Minister of Nilitia proposes. But, Sir, hefore and above all that there comes up the question of the rights and privileges of this House. I repeat, Sir, are we to account to the nominee of this Govermment, are we to account to the nominee of the Privy Council for our doings and sayings here? I will tell the hon. gentleman that I for one utterly and entirely refuse, as our friends on the occasion of Mr. Huntington's charges entirely refused. to recognize the authority of any such Royal Commission or to appear lefore it. It is for my hon. friend here to say what course he will take, but so far as I can see and judge, I do not think that he would be justified either, in appearing before any commission to answer for one word which has lueen stated by him in his place in Parliament. I cannot believe, sir-although we have seen a great deal which might lead us to think that the hon. gentlemen have measured too well the sycophancy of their followers and the servility of a great number of their supporters in the countryI cannot for my part believe that the people of Cannda have sunk solow or that they are so entirely false to all the traditions of parliamentary government well known and well established for hundreds of years, that they will support such an outrageous interference with the prerogatives of the representatives of the peopleas is proposed in the motion of the Minister of Militia. But, Mr. Speaker, that there shall be no mistake, that these hon. gentlemen shall not be allowed to shirk the direct issue, I propose to move an amenilinent to this amendment, and I will do it in the following words:-
That all the words of the amendment be left out and the following words be added to the original motion :-
That this House refuses to allow the investigation That this House refuses to allow the investigation into the charges preferred by Mr. J. D. Edgar, a member of this House, in his place in the House against Sir Adolphe Caron, also a memiker thereof, to be removed from the control of Parliament, and to be committed to one or more commissioners appointed on the recommendation of the seid Sir Adolphe Caron and his colleagues.
That this House views with repugnance the proposition to permit the person accused to vary and alter the charges preferred against him, and instead the reof to substitute a new set of charges drawn up by himself or his colleagues; and that such a demand not less than the proposal that the said charges should likewise be investigated by persons to be appointed by himself, and his colleagues, is entirely unprecedented and is opposed to parliamentary law and usage as settled by the practice of the mother country; is a violation of the privileges of the members of this House, and is designed to elude and defeat the ends of justice.

Mr. EDGAR. I was prepared for a good many curious results of this discussion, but I certainly was hardly prepared to hear the resolution as moved by the Minister of Militia to-day. I thought it was possible that the (iovernment night undertake tos refer the charges I had made to a Royal Conimission. That would have been a course exceedingly ohjectionable on nany grounds, but they have, to a certain extent, a precerlent for that in this House on it former occasion. In the Huntington case, the charges mude by Mr. Huntington, which, I think, were not nearly as definite as these, were referred to a Royal Conmission for investigation, but only on certain grounds which I willstate. As you, Mr. Speaker, will remember, the charges were referred to a parliamentary committee first; that parliamentary committee held its meetings and decided that it was desirable to examine witnesses umiler oath, and it was necessary to obtain an Imperial Act of Parlianent to grant that power to the committees of this House. Very well, Sir. These charges were vely serious indeed, and the Governor General, under the advice of his Ministers, decinled that, in order to have them investigated under oath, a Royal Commission should be appointed for that purpose, and there was no other excuse attempten to begiven for the appointment of a Royal Commission in that case except the one I have mentionell, namely, that parliamentary committees hai no power to take evilence under oath. Well, sir, that power has since been invested in the committees of this Parliament. It is contin:adly exercised by committees of this Parliament. I propose to refer this resolution of mine to the most important committee of this Parliament to investigate it uncler oath--a committee composed two to one of the supporters and followers of the Ministry; and yet, Sir, they are afraid to face that tribunal with these charges. Not only do they take this investigation out of the hands of Parliament-a Minister afraid to meet his peers and to be tried by his peers-but they have taken my charges and emasculated them, weakened them and destroyed them, and marle them just to suit the views of the accused Minister himself. I am not in the confidence of the Ministers; but I would almost le suspected of being in their confidence, because at week ago. I told the House exactly what the accused Minister would like to have done in this case, and I will quote to the House the language I used. I said:
" Perbaps I had better allow the Postmaster General to draw up these charges himself and let him have them just as he would like them to be. I do not know how else I can satisfy hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House. I dare say if the Postmaster General had the drawing of these charges he would limit them for instance, to the charge that he received from the Lake St. Joln Railway Company so much money out of the subsidies, and another charge, that he received from the Temiscouata Railway Company so much money out of the subsidies; and then he would valiantly disprove those charges. I imagine that these are the charges he would like to see there, from the fact that although there is not a syllable of allegation in the charge from beginning to end that he received money from either of these corporations as corporations, still, when he got up be told us with a great flourish of trumpets that he had voluntarily received telegrams or letters from the managers of those two companies saying that he had never received any moneys from those companies. Why. Mr. Speaker, nobody said he did. Does he imagine that anybody would think or believe that a railway corporation like that of the Lake St. John Railway, with a board formed, for instance, of representatives of the city of Quebec, would calmly sit down at their board meeting and pass a formal resolution, or that a meeting of shareholders would pass a resolution to pay so much money ont of their subsidy to the hon. Postmaster General for himself or his elections? No, Sir, it is absurd, and the hon. Postmaster General when he made that declaration was simply, setting up a man of straw and knocking him down again."

Sir Richard Cartwright.

Why, iir, I was prophetic on that occasion. They have done exactly what I anticipated, hut hardly helieved would ever be possible. I have examined carefully the amendment moved by the hon. Minister of Militia, although, of course, I am sure he did not draw it. I suppose it was drawn by the Minister of Justice and the Postmaster (ieneral. What have they done with my charges? In the first place, in the recital of what my charges are, they unfairly omit entirely clanse 10. They do not even state on the face of the docmment that I have made that charge, hut drop it out absolutely and entirely. Why is that? Are they so afraid of that charge? Is it not one of great i:mportance" Why, Sir, they know that I can prove that charge. The Postmaster General must have told the Minister of Justice that I could prove that charge, andithatis why he ignores it alisolutely, even in the recital. I do not consider that this is treating Parliament fairly. I do not think it is making the parliamentary record fair, that record that will he appealed to as a matter of precerlent and law in future years. I was amused at the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockhurn) with his gravity, his wisilom and his stentorian voice. He legan lis siyying that in clause 10, I was going into the trial of twenty-two elections; then he got the number up to sixty-six, and lefore he sat down he got it up to eighty-one election cases which I was going to try. Why, sir, the hon. gentleman camot have real this amemiment at all, from the way he talked about it. If he has read this section 10-anil I would recommend him to read it before he speaks again-does he not know that in clanse 10 I propose to try only the Postmaster General? In that charge I siy :

[^83]Mr. COCKPURN. That is trying an election.
Mr. EDCiAR. The hon. gentleman said he was a simple layman. Well, he is a very simple layman indeed if he says that that is trying an election. As he is a simple layman, I will let him off, and will not try to get that into his head. What else have they done" In their reference to the Royal Commission, they have absolutely omitted clause 2 and clause 4 , which incolve matters of considerable importance. For instance, the hon. member for Cen're Toronto told us just now that the charge that the Postmaster General was a member of the Constraction Company which received subsidies was a very mpportant one. Why, Sir, I know that the hon. gentleman had not read the charges, because both of these charges have been struck out absolutely by the Goverument. Every word relating to the Construction Company in these two charges has been struck out.
Mr. COCKBURN. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to explain? I am a laymen, but the hon. gentleman will perhaps understand that I was dealing with his charges, the charges which I have lefore me, and therefore I deal with paragraph 10, and all the crudities in it, and also with the other paragraphs. I was not dealing with the matter which was brought lefore us to-lay hy the Government : but I was dealing with the charges which the hon. member for West Ontario brought up, and showing the absurdity of them.

Mr. EDGAR. The hon. gentleman evidently armits that he did not know anything about the new charges of the hon. Minister of Militia. He was only dealing with my charges, and he thought it important that the connection of the Postmaster General with the Construction Company should be tried ; but I tell him now that that is not to be tried at all. It is absolutely struck out in the amemirient. Let him refect over that, and see how he will like it and how his constituents will like it after his speech. I would also draw his attention to something else that perhaps he is not aware of. There is a charge 5 in my charges, and I hope he has considered that there is something serions in that charge. And what is that charge?

Abstract

"That during the said period and while the said railway was being constructed in part by means of said subsidies, the said Sir A. P. Caron corruptly received large sums of money out of the said subsidies and frou moneys raised upan the credit of the same, and from parties beneficially interested in the same."They have quietly left that out ton in their reference to the Royal Commission. What does the hon. member for Centre Toronto think of that in his calm monents when he knows it for the first time? Then how do they treat the rest of it? They go on, and in their clause No. 3, which seems to he intended to take the place of No. 6 in my charge, what do they do? Just as I sitid a week ago they would. They charged that these moneys were recived from the said railway companies, the Lake St. John Railway Company, or from the Construction Company, neither of which was charged in my charge, because I knew, as I explained a week ago. that that was not a charge which could be sustained or proved. So, of course, especially after I had explained that a week ago, they take great care to make that the greatest and most important of their charges. I find that in the latter purt of that charge they speak again of the receipts being from the said companies or one of then. Well, I dare say they will be able to prove that there were no receipts from those companies or one of them. Then another clanse, new, clause $\bar{i}$, seems to embrace clauses $\overline{6}, 8$ and part of 9 in my charges. They also say that these payments were from the said companies or made by the company and so on, until we come to the final wind-up of their charge 10, to which I will draw the attention of the hon. member for Centre Toronto. The wind-up of the whole charge is this:"That the said A. P. Caron, by virtue of the fact so alleged, entered into a corrupt conspiracy "-with whom, Mr. Speaker-" with the said companies, or one or more of them." Why, of course, that is the only charge for a Minister of Justice, as the guardian and responsible trustee for the administration of justice, to put forward against his colleague. But he knows perfectly well, when he makes that charge, as everyboly in the House and the country knows, that it is not a proper administration of justice. but is tampering, with justice on behalf of his colleagues. And they suppose I am going to be dragged before a commission of their appointment to sustain such a trifling charge as that. No; I would be lost to all respect for myself as a member of this House and a citizen of Canala if $I$ would do so. That is just the position they want. I see the hon. Minister of Railways pleasimtly smiling. He thinks it is a neater way of getting out of a scrape than the way he got out last session. They affect a little anxiety to investigate matters, and then, after altering the charge and taking it away from the committee of the House, they get the person who makes the charge to say that he will not go on with it in the shape they put it. It is very clever, but it is too thin and the people will understand it. The members of this House before very long will understand it. I am glad to see the hom. memher for Centre Torme conferred with the hon. memlers for Albert and St. Jolm, and I hope before the cote that they will find out how they have been lamboozlen, as the hom. member for Assiniboia in his blatant and turgid elopuence stated earlier in the day. The Minister of Militia to diay, and the hon. member for Montreal the other day, quoted a precedent for this course of action, not as to the reference to a commission, lut as to the changing charges in the House. They quote the case of Mr. E. B. Woom in the Ontario Legislature in 18i.2. Now, Sir, that case was one which I wish they had followed here. I would not have found the slightest fault if they had. I tried to follow it myself, and I think I did follow it in the amended form, as amended by Mr. Blake. What was the original charge?" What was the amendment? Did Mr. Cameron make a charge? No; he took no responsibility as a member of the House of making a charge, but he started a distinct fishing expedition, without making any charge. That is not what $J$ propose to do here, and it is not what I would ever do, I hope. I take the responsibility, whatever it may be. Mr. Cameron moved that a select committee be appointed to euguire whether any, and if any, what corrupt inducements had lieen offered Mr. E. B. Wood to leave the Ministry. An amendment was naturally proposed to that as follows :-

"That a member of this House, baving stated in bis place, that a corrupt inducement or, offer was made to $\mathbf{E}$. B. Wood, it should be investigated."

And that is what I did. I stated it in my place, and I got a motion brought forward based on that, with a great deal of ditticulty, and in the face of every oljection that could possibly be thrown in the way by the gentlemen on the Treasury benches. Then what else did Mr. Blake propose to amend in that? Why, the charge was this:
"That a committee be appointed to enquire whether the Hon. E. Blake orany other member of the present Administration made these corrupt offers.,
Well, the amendment was to enquire whether the Hon. E. Blake made these corrupt offers. No other name was mentioned, and, therefore, the other members of the Administration were struck out. Why, if I had made no charges at all but simply moved for a committee to enquire. whether any improper couduct had been indulged in or not, and if I had got up and said that Sir Adolphe Caron or some other members of the Administration had done so and so, I would have been liable to be checked and correctel, but I did not say that. I took the responsibility myself of making the charges, and I named the Minister who, I claim, was responsible; and that is exactly what Mr. Blake did by his amendment in the case referrelto. Even then, with such a slight change as that, such a change as to bring it in conformity with the plan I have adopted, even in the face of that, was there not a great deal of objaction male by Mr. Cameron! The leader of the Conservative party said he must oppose the amendment with his utmost endeavour lnecause it did not provide for a full enquiry, and he charged the mover with being desirons to stifle enguiry. 1 am not going to detain the House any longer. I have no douht the discussion may le continued a little further. This question is so important that I am surprised we did not hear from any members on the Treasury benches. We have not heard anything in defence of the rather weak statement, if he will permit me to say so, of the Minister of Militia, and we have heard nothing in reply to the amendment movel by the hon. member for South Oxford (Sir Richard (artwright). If the other side are satisfied, I think we ought to be satistied from a political point of view, and I desire to repeat in my place in the House that, if 1 am given a committee of this House, I am prepared absolutely to prove under oath every word that I alleged in that charge, and, if the Ministers of the Crown take the responsibility of refusing that, it is not my fanlt.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). This is an important guestion lecause it involves the character of one of the members of the (iovernment. It is an important question, because it incolles the expenditure of a large sum of money helonging to the perple of this country, and, therefore, I think it is the duty of every hon. gentleman to look this question fairly in the face. Iknow it is a serious thing to hring at charge against an hon. member in this Honse, and the gentleman who does it assumes a great responsibility in so doing, and nothing short of the pablic interest could induce any man to bring a charge against a fellow member. I am sure that the memler for West Ontario did not bring this motion before the House in order to gratify any personal interest, but simply in the interest of the people who are said to have lost a large sum of money through the action of this jarticular individual, the Postmaster (ieneral. I think this motion has been brought in largely in the interests of the Postmaster General himself, for, if he is innocent, he should be the first to urge, yea, to demand, an opportunity of defending himself before a committee. He has stated from his place that he is innocent, that he never received one dollar of the money he is said to have received nor did he spend one dollar of that money he is suid by the inember for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) to have received; therefore, he camnot neglect for a moment to urge upon the Government that the charges against him should be investigated. It appears to me, however, that he has pressed on the Government that they should refuse to grant a committee to investigate those charges, for, otherwise, they would not have refused. This motion is not only in the interests of the Minister, but also in the interests of the Gorernment. No Government can afford to have within its ranks a member who is alleged to have received public moneys and spent them for election purposes. When we consider the statements which have been made ly various members through the country and on the floor of Parliament, we are led to suppose that they hal clecided to purge the Government and the Civil Service of offences of this character. Last year the Premier in the Senate invited the assistance of the Opposition in cleaning out dishonest otficials in the various departments of Government as well as the Government itself, and I will read the words used by the Premier on that oceasion.

Some hom. MEMBERS. Dispense.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). The hom. gentlemen opposite would like to dispense because they do not like to hear the statements of the Premier. as they are alont to vote in direct contradiction of the statements he marle. The following was the statement of the Premier :--
" I would ask the hon. gentlemen opposite to join with us in trying to find out what the facts are about this alleged rascality. We ask them to give us the benefit of their experience in this enquiry, to assist us in ascertaining the facts and placing them before the public, in order that they may be dealt with properly, and, if found guilty, that summars vengeance may be exercised on those who are found guilty of approprinting public money, stealing. whether high or low. That is the determination of the Government."
If it was the determination of the Govermment to tind out where any misappropriation of public money or stealing had taken place, they should accept this motion when it is made on the responsilility of a member of this House who has stated positively that he has evidence to establish every charge he has made. The charge is very detinite in my opinion. I would not like to have a charge brought against me for dishonesty so detinite as that. The hon. member charges the Postnaster (ieneral with receiving moneys out of the subsilies granted for the Quelrec and Lake St. John Railway Company, not only as a member of the Construction Company, hut corruptly. Then there must be an arrangement between him and the party who gave him the money, and they both must act together. But not only did the hon. gentleman receive money corruptly, but he is said to have expended the money corruptly. It was stated the other night that the hon. gentleman realized no personal adrantage, but the charge says he dill, because he used a portion of this money in carrying his own election, so that he received lirect personal advantage from the use of this money. It must he remembered by the Government that, as soon as they roted sub) sidies to railways, if they discharge their duty properly, they must see that the money is not diverted from the purposes for which it was soted. Their responsibility does not cease when they have voted the subsidies. The Minister told us the other night that, if we had any fault to find with the voting of the subsidies, we should bring on our charges. We have no fault to find with the voting of the subsidies, but what we tind fault with is the diversion of the money to other purposes than those for which they were roted. The public moneys helonged to the people of the country, and it was the duty of the Gisernment to see that they were spent in the construction of the work for which they were voted. And if a charge is brought against a member of the House or a member of the Government that he received those subsidies so voted and used them for his own personal ad vantage, or for corrupting the electorate, I say the Government is stainding in their' own light and against the interest of this country when they refuse the Opposition an opportunity to bring home the charge to the party if he is guilty, or allow him an opportunity to vindicate his character if he is innocent. The Minister of Justice will remember that last fall he and seven or eight others went up to the town of Perth, and the Minister of Justice there discussed the scandals and said that the policy of the Opposition at that time was mudthrowing. Now, he knows very well that the scandals which were investigated last summer ilid not originate by the Opposition ; the information upon which those investigations were basell came from a triend of their own party, a man who had worked for them for a number of years, who had conlucted a Conservative newspaper for many years, and who miderstool the secrets of their operations; I say that the country helieve to-day that he was justified in bringing that charge, and the evidence was so strong against the parties accused that the late Minister of Public Works actually felt that he was no longer of any use in the Ciovernment, and he resigned; and another mem her of Parliament was expelled. But what dia the Minister of Justice say in Perth in regard to these scandals? Let me read what he sail as he is reportell by the Empire:
"The Government's policy in regard to irregularities and improprieties in the public service, was to root out those committing them. The best proof of this had been given by the Government's action last session. In purifying public life the Gorernment was not only willing to submit to, but asked the aid of, every religious teacher in the cuuntry. In the discharge of the duty which had fallen on the Government; they were reads to submit their action to the keenest criticisms of the press, the pulrit and the plat form, but in saying this he asked the elergy and others to judge fairly and not condemn without reading the evidence.'
So he not only invited the members of the Opposition, but he incited the pulpit, the press and the platform to criticise and to assist chem in vindicating the position they had taken, and to assist them to punish every one that was guilty of any irregularity. Now, Mr. speaker, we are here for the purpose of accepting his invitation; we are here for the purpose of pledging ourselves that we are in possession of evidence that will show that within their own ranks, the 13 or 14 members constituting the Government, there is a man who should not be there if the charges alleged against him are true ; and the hon. member for West Ontario has pledged his honour that he will, if that opportunity is given him, prove conclusively to the people of this country that the Postmaster General is unfit to hold the seat he occupies.: Now, in answer to the invitation of the Minister of Justice the pulpit has spoken, and I will read from an address of a prominent minister of this country who belongs to the party of hon. gentlemen opposite. Let me read what Dean Carmichael, of Montreal, has said:
" Was there no need to-day to rise to a higher idea of our duty to God and to our country? Had not recent events brought the blush of shame to every cheek of every honest and God-fearing lorer of his country? We need to strike out afresh and take as the ruling principle that the laws of God must be respected. Government by party we must have, but away with those that tolerated boastful chicanery and the plundering of the public purse. He was not thero as the agent or spokesman of any parts. but what could be said of those who pleaded: ' I did not uxe one coin of money for myself, it all went for political purposes.' What an insolt to the magnificent freedom the mother land has given us to govern ourselves; what an example to the uprising zeneration. But the sins of pablic men were not the sins of the nation. if the nation disowned them for their wrong-doing. As long as the country recognized the need of a healthy public opinion. there was hope. The cry must be, and was, he believed for further probing into the iniquities, for more justice and greater punishments upon the criminal, and that cry must be prolonged until the purest body is the gorerning power. Surel. the day had not gone by tor such a change."

Now, Sir, that is the opinion expressed by one of the ministers upon whom the Minister of Justice had called to criticise theaction of the Government. I would confirm his cry for more investigation into the corruption and dishonesty that have characterized the public affairs of this country for many years; for all must know that there has been corruption in high places, as well as in low places, in the Conservative party during the last ten or twelve years, that has become a by-word and a reproach to this country, and has given to Canada a lower moral stamlard than that occupied by many other comutries. Now, I say that the resolution brought before the House this afternoon was a perfect humbug. As has been pointed out by the member for West Ontario, it leparts entirely from the charges made ly him. The idea that the party accused is to fomulate the charges against himself in the way most favourable to him, and then ask Palliament to appoint a commission favourable to himself for the purpose of trying him on those charges-why, the thing is utterly preposterous. and no sensible person in this country, looking at the whole matter, in view of the political influences and the political bias, will for one moment come to the conclusion that the Govermment is acting just in the interest of the country. It is time to bestir ourselves when we know that on the right and on the left of us, thousands and millions of public money have been squandered by dishonest politicians, and the Government, for their own reputation and their own standing in this country, ought to accept the proposition made from this side of the House, and appoint a committee before which this trial may take place. What has the accused to fear? If he goes before the Committee on Privileges and Elections, does he stand there before a majority of men who are opposed to him? No; two-thirds of that committee are friends of his own, and when they report the case back to this House it is adjudicated upon by a House containing sixty of a majority of hisown friemds. Why, then, should he fear to go before a committee of that kind? sir, he knows very well there is evidence behind: he knows very well, no doubt, in his own mind, that if an opportunity were given the nember for West Ontario to prove his charges, he would be condemned before the eyes, not only of the committee, but of the country at large, and the verdict would go abroad that he was unfit to associate with the other gentlemen of the Government, and he would have to leave public life and retire as his predecessor did. Now, the matter has been discussed proand con for the last few days from carious standpoints, and I am satisfied that the Goverument will suffer at the hands of the electorate if they do not permit this matter to le fully and efficiently examined before a proper tribunal. I tell them as sure as they are sitting there to-night, that when the electorate get an opportunity of expressing an opinion on this matter at the polls, they will do so in such a way as will give these gentlenten to understand that they are going too far in playing with the interesis of the people, in giving an opportunity to their friends of stealing from the public funds and appropriating the money to their own private ends. Rest assured, therefore, the day of reckoning is coming, when the people of this country will bring such a tormado of influence upon hon. gentlemen opposite that will sweep them from power, and allow other and hetter men to occupy the pesition in which they are to guide the affairs of this country in a more honest, upright, candid and more prosperous way than the hon. gentlemen opposite have done during the last 12 years they have been in power.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) 1 ask the hom. lealer of the House whether, in view of the statement made by the hon. memher for West Ontario (Mr. Eilgar) and in view of the complicated character of the resolution, the amendment which has been moved, and the rast importance of the issue incolved in it, whether it will not be in the interests of both sides of the House and of justice itself, that the delate should be adjourned until to-morrow, and then proceeded with, when all parties will have an opportunity of seeing the amendments in print and of juiging whether the serious charges made by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) as to the changes made are torrect or mot. Many hom. members have not had an opportunity of examining the amendment cery closely, and I would suggest that at this hour ( $\because \mathrm{a} . \mathrm{m}$. .) it would be prudent and reasonable that an adjournment should le taken until to-morrow when the debate comil proceed and close.
sir JOHN THOMPSON. This matter has been lefore the House for weeks, and if the matter is to be proceeded with at all, it is time it was disposed of. I do not think the observations of the hon. member for West Ontario with respect to suggestel alterations in the charges are entitled to any weight. I do not agree with him that the charges have been alterel.

Mr. DAVIES (P. F. I.) Nothing but the very serions nature of the charges before the Honse would justify me at this late hour in rising to say one worl on this matter ; but I cannot allow the question to be put without recalling the attention of hon. members to the extraordinary and anomalous position in which we stanl here to-night. It is acknowledged by all that the charges made by the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) are so grave and serious in their character that, if they should le sustained, the Postmaster General would have not only to resign his position from the Government, but would probably lose his seat in. this Honse. At all events, that is acknowledged tonight : it was not acknowledged the other night. We are standing entirely on new ground ; that is to say, the Government have taken an entirely new departureon thismatter. We would le prepared to discuss and vote upon the resolution proposel from this side of the House, and discussed by the leader of the House and his supporters before. But the matter has very materially changed, and those hon. gentlemen who the other day contended that this matter should not be referred to a committee on two grounds, now turn round and say it should be referred to some tribunal, but not to a committee of this House. A charge has been made by the hon. nember for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar), that while hon. members opposite have withdrawn from their original position and are willing to have an investigation, they have deliberately and shamefully emasculated and destroyed the character of his charges, and they are now about to deceive the Honse and the country by pretending to refer to a tribunal which they themselves have constituted, charges which they will leave the people to imagine were preferred ly the member for Ontario, when as a matter of truth and fact they are charges entirely diffe:ent. We understand that the Ministers are not responsible collectively for the malfeasance of one of their number, proviled always when that member is charged with a malfeasance, they repudiate his conduct and dissever themselves from him. But if they refuse to dissever themselves from the Minister charged with malfeasance and endorse his conduct, they themselves are directly responsible. What do we find to-night? First, is few words as to whether the matter should be referred to a committee, and then a few words as to what I consider to be a foul outrage, if the statements of the hon. gentleman be true, which is about to be committed on this House and the country. With respect to the right of this House to consider charges of malfeasance against any of its members, I desire to say that the hon. yentlenain in question is not only a member of the House, but a member of a committee of the House, which constitutes the Government. If there is one right of the House that should be preserved intact and inviolate, it is the right to retain control over the moneys of the country, expended by Government. I think the House must have degracked very much from the House which preceded it, if we are prepared to surrender rights which our predecessors held sacred--the right to control the expenditure of money, the right to control the manner of that expenditure, the right to enquire whether the expenditure has been misapplied or misappropriated. The hom. Minister of Justice has :amounced that the (iovernment will not refer the charge to a committee of this House, hut he is willing to refer it to gentlemen to be appointed by the Government. I will not repeat what has leen so well sain, that as this tribunal is to be appointed by the man who is incriminated, it is on its face an unjust and unfair proposal. Is it constitutional? If we are to take the authority of Todd we find it is unconstitutional to refer to a Royal Commission subjects connected with the ordinary duties of the Executive Government and with its relations to Parliament ; that it is unconstitutional to refer to a Royal Commission an enquiry as to theacts of misconduct which may have been committed by a judge or by a Minister of State. That is the law as laid down by Todd, to whose authority there has been no exception taken heretofore. Yet, hon. gentlemen are asking their followers to adopt the course which is distinctly laid down as an unconstitutional course, in order that they may evale, and, if possible, postpone, to a future day, an exposure which, ii allowed to go to a committee, they feel is inevitsble. The hon. gentleman came before uslast year in the character of a public moralist and as a vindicator of public justice, and he declared that he was prepared to investigate every charge made against a linister of the Crown or a private member, be he high or low. The hon. gentleman went through the provinces. He weut down to Nova Scotia, he had his own organ publish his challenge to the people to come forward with their charges, and his juurnal announced in bold heading that the Minister was prepared to push any charges against private members or Ministers. Then the hon.

Minister, after his organ had published these headlines, had a notice issued that if anybody had any charge to make against any member of Parliament, or Minister of the Crown, of boodling in regard to public works, or with the money voted by Parliament, he should bring it forwaril. He pledged his public honour to his constituents and to the people of Halifax that he would have them fully investigated. Now, Nir, the hom. gentleman stands charged to day ly the member for West Ontaric. (Mr. E.lgar) with violating that pledge, with deliberately penning an amendment to prevent the charge heing investigated either here or elsewhere : and when he is solemnly charged by that member with twisting and destroying and perverting the resolution, so that the substantial charges in it will never loe investigated by any commission, the hon. lealer of the House in the face of this pledge remains dumb and has not a word to say. He heard the statement made here that the charges the hon. gentlemam for West Ontario (Mr. Elgar) had preferred and whish he was prepared to prove, have been deliberately and designedly emasculated for the purpose of preventing the conduct of the associate of the hon. gentleman, from being enguired into. The Minister, therefore, stands to-day charged with almost as serious an offence as the Postmaster General. Sir, he stated here the other day that he opposed this resolation being referied to a committee at all and that there were no charges in it. He induced numbers of his followers to believe that the charges were too rague. He said the charge of misconduct against the Postmaster (ieneral was not made against him in his character as a member, and that there was no allegation of public money having been misappropriated or maladministered. The hon. gentlenam found that even his own followers behind him wruld not stand that argument. He foumd that when he could not catch a division on the spur of the monent, and when the more indepeadent members cane to read the charge they foumd that his construction of that resolution would not bear a moment's consideration, and then he brings in this new resolution which $\mathbf{I}$ am bound to say the Minister of Militia had the decency to move almost without a word of comment. Let me call the attention of the hon. gentleman for one moment to the charge which he said was so vague that it ought not to be investigated. Here is the charge :
"That during certain periods certain moneys had been voted to certain railway companies. That arrangements were entered into by the said railway company whereby the expenditure of said subsidies was made by a construction company through, or in conjunction with, one $\mathbf{H}$. J. Beemer, a contractor-and the said Beener and those who assisted him in financing for the said, railway works, received the benefit of the said subsidies."
Now, Sir, that charge, which was made and framed in a legal and proper way, has designedly and deliberately lreen omitted from the amendment. Why, and for what purpose? Does the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Cocklurn) say that he desires this investigated: He said so to-night. He stid he had read the charges and came to the conclusion that they were not rague, but were perfectly clear and straight, and should be, aud ought to be, investigated. Is the hon. gentleman prepared to support a resolution leaving out that important charge in section 2?
Mr. McMULLEN. Yes, he is prepared.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) He may be, but I want to call his attention to the fact that my hon. friend from West Untario (Mr. Edgar) hats alrearly stated that the entire charge male in sub-section 2 of the resolution has been omitted in the amendment, and designerly omittel. The hon. member from West Ontario (Mr. Elgar) was careful to charge that this corruption and this diversion of public funds from the purposes for which Parliament had voted them. (1) private and corrupt purposes, was not made ly either the original company to which it was voted or be the Construction Company which hand the expenditure of the money. The men whe were parties to this gross frand upon the public were too shrewd to have, as he said, the moness roted in a formal way by the original company or liy the Construction Conpany, bat they had it voted in an underhand way and the hon member for West Ontanio (Mr. Ehgar) explains how and why, and gave the name of the man through whom this money was paid. But the anembeh resolution which the Government propose to refer to a commission of their own nominating. deliberately ami for the purpose of burking that enguiry, omits that clanse of the charge" Then, sir, it refers to a conmission to enguire whether moneys were not corruptly paid to the Postmaster General by the Lake it. .lohn or Temisconata Railway Company, or ly the construction companies formed umier them, when no man ever chargel that such moneys were pail by either the original company or the Construction Company. If that commission sits with this charge and this indictment under the judge's mose, and the hon. gentleman chooses to go before it with the evilence which he says he has to prove that the Postmaster (ieneral having roted these moneys here in the House corruptly bargainerl and obtained a large portion of them for private purposes, what will he be met with? He will be toll: Unless you can prove that they were paid ly one of these twocompanies Icamot hear yourevidence. The hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Elgar) never said that they were paid by the companies. He anticipated in his speech something of this kind. He pointed out carefully and clearly that this had been done in an underhand way, not by the company, but through parties then beneficially interested in the subsidies. Yet the hon. gentleman opposite not only leaves out section 2 of the charges, not only directly inserts the words "charging two companies" as having pail the money but deliberately and for the purpose of defeating enquiry mits the words that they were paid by parties beneficially interested in the subsidies. Therefore every clause of the charge which my hon. friend from West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) made, and which he was preparel to prove, as he says, hy evidence which could not be resisted, even by a committee of this House composed of a large majority of the Postmaster (;eneral's own friends, has been designedly omitted from this resolution and we are going before a commission to try what ? Who is the father or the sponsor of the charges contained in the amendment moved by the Minister of Nilitia? Is the Minister of Militia going to prove these charges? Noboly else ever nade them ; the member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) never made them ; he cannot prove them. He says he cannot prove them, he told you a week ago that he could not prove such charges; he told ago that he could not prov
Mr. Davies (P.E.I.)
you he did not make them in that form lecause he was aware of the morlu* operandi when this frandulent appropriation was made, and he carefully aroided stating that the money was paid by or through either of the companies. He stated they were paid either out of the subsidies or out of money raist upon the subsidies. Does it matter to the hon. member for Toronto (Mr. Cockhurn) whether this was done by a sleight-of-hand trick, if substantially the public moneys of this comutry have been stolen and diverted from the purpose for which this House roted them? Sir, I say that the action of the Postmaster General in taking these moneys from the company has been defended by the Minister of Public Works as right; but wrong as it is in my opinion, and wrong as it is in the opinion of mist hom. members in their hearts, it is no worse than the action of the (iovermment in attempting to foist a false resolution upon the House, attempting to refer charges as if they were the charges of the hon. member when they are different charges altogether: referring charges which the hou. gentleman siys he never matle, which he camot prove and does not intend to prove, and then going out to the comntry, and saying that he has kept his plighted word and honsur that any man who brought a charge arainst a Minister of the Crown would have it investigated. Sir. the Ministry stamd charged to-night lefore this House and this country with deliberately burking an enu niry because they know that we can prove what we charge. There is no escape from this position. When these charges were made, the Postnaster (ieneral came before the Honse and he dill not say that they were rague. He acknowledged that they were specific enough. They charged him with corruptly receiving out of the moneys roted by Parliament for the construction of the Lake St. John Railway a portion of those moneys and appropriating them in two ways. One of these charges amomited to this, that he hat got the money for his personal use; at any rate, it did not say what becanse of it. One of the charges was:
"That the said Sir A. P. Caron was, during the whole, or the greater part of the said period, one of the members of the said construction conpany, and thus had means of knowledge of, and did know of the dealings with the saia subsidies and their destination atter they were paid over hy the troperyment to the said railway company.
"That during the said period ind while the sinit railway whs heing constructed in part by means of said subsidies, the said Sir A. P. Caron corruptly received larre sums of money out of the said subsidies, and from moneys raised upon the credit of the same, and from parties beneficially interested in the same."
There is nothing here alout elections. It is simply a charge that it Minister of the Crown, haring recommended His Excellency that certain grants should be recommended to Parliament and be passed by Parliament, and having succeeded in getting those grants through Parliament, became a member of the Construction Company receiving them, and succeeded in obtaining a portion of those subsidies. The charge was specific, and from my experience as a lawyer I would defy the Minister of Justice or anybody else on that side of the House to draw an indictment couched in more specific, clear or distinct terms. Nothing was wanted, the corrupt motive, the payment of the moneys, the parties by whom they were paid, the source from which they came, the person to whom they were paid ; every essential ingredient to prove a corrupt receipt of public moneys voted for a public purpose was set out in llack and white. After that was done, another charge was made that, in addition to these moneys, the Minister received other moneys which went for electoral purposes. Did the Postmaster (ieneral say that these charges were ton rague: Did he siy that as they did not charge him as a member of the House with having receivel them, he was not responsible to the House: No. Sir; the Postmaster General came before the He:se amb said that in every particular the charges male liy the hon. member were false. So a distinet issue was raised. A distinct charge was male, a distinet denial was given; a distinct issue was before the country. Who was telling the truth! Where do the facts lie? Have public moneys heen misappropriated, been stolen, been diverted from the purpose for which Parliament votel then and this by it Minister of the (rown, or have they not : The hon. Minister of Justice was askel to refer the trial of the issue to a committee composed of his own supporters. He refusel the challenge, am in doing so he didnot scruple to shelter himself behind one of the most contemptille quibhles ever used by a public man, His own followers were ashamed of it. He argned that the hon. Postmaster (ieneral was not a member of Parliament during the whele time ; there was a particular space of time, he said, when Parliament was n:st in session, during which the Postmaster General was not a member of Parliament; and the hon. sentleman sheltering himself behind that quibible, denied that Parliament had the constitutimal right to enquire into the misappropriation of pullic moneys voted for a specific purpose. But when the influence of some independent members atound him drove him from a position which was untenalle, he turned around and drew a resolution referring, not to the charge, hatanother charge which he makes himself, which he knows will not he sustained, which was not made on this side of the Honse. which he knows is not true ; and he tries to foist this on the country as a fultiment of the simple pletlge of his honour which he gave to the House and country last session. Dial anybody ever see a Government placed in a more pitiable or contemptible position than this Govermment is in today: In trying to shelter their colleague they are prepareal to rote down a specific charge made, and when their indepenlent followers will not allow that, when the pill is too large for them to swallow, they turn around and recast the charge, omitting from it all those clements and facts which the hon. member for West Ontario could prove, and substituting others which he camot prove, and then saying, we are realy to leave this to a columission. As the hon. gentleman says, it would be bad enough if they withdrew from Parliament the control of charges made by an hon. menner here on his responsibility. That would be constitutionally improper; but to refer not the charges made, but other charges which were not made, is an act of indecency seldom if ever witnessed in this House. Sir, I remember last year when the hon. member for North Simeoe (Mr. MeCarthy) was closing the speech he made in this House, he said: "If ever this young country is to be snatched from the maelstrom of corruption into which it appears to be drifting, it must be by the votes and roice of the independent members, free from the trammels of party, and by young men coming forward and showing that party ties, are not too strong to destroy public patriotism." Nir, is the hom. gentleman, holding the high legal position which he holds in this country, prepared to accept this elabomate amendment which has neither father nor sponsor? Is he prepared to adopt this course ann recommend his followers in this House to adopt it? No one in this House has a shrewder and more acute mind than he has. He knows well that by twisting and turning the phatseology of this resolution, by contining the payments to the companics, by omitting the words stating that the payments have been made by those beneficially interestel in the companies, the whole gist of the charges has; been destroyel, and that if the hon. member for West Ontario went before the commission, he would be tolii that his proofs did not come within the words of the indictment. I fear that the hon. member will have todo yet what he promised he would do if his original resolution were roted down. He will have to appeal to at fairer tribunal than this House-a tribunal not controlled by the tammels of party to the extent that hon gentlemen opposite are. He will have to appeal the peess of the conuntry and the electorite of the comotry, and if he cannot susceed in getting a committee here to receive the evidence Which he is prepared to offer in proof of his charges, he will have to lay them hefore the electorate of the country throngh the recognizel press of the country.

some hon. MENPERS. Question.

Mr. CAsEY. I think the Honse is not ready for the guestion yet : and until the real author of the amemment which was first proposed to the motion of my hon. friend from West Ontario has had the conrage to come before the Homse and defend that which he has drawn and askel somehody else to move the Honse is not ready for the question; but the cowards on the Ministerial benches will not defend with argunent what they have laid before the Honse without arguments. The Minister of Militia has mored the resolution in fuestion, but there is in that hon. gentleman something which prevented him from urging argument.s in favomr of the amendment lee was compellen by circumstances to propose. The amendment, the whole course of the debate on the other side previous to the anemdment, baare one character. The trail of the Minister of Justice is over it all. The quasi defence, the defence so calleal. for I camot eall it a real defence of the Postmaster (ieneral, has heen committed to his attorney who holds the brief. It has been a defence by a man who holds a brief for somebody else. It has not been such a defence as slomid be put forward ly a Minister of the Crown on the flow of this House. The Minister of Justice, when he was discovered ly the late leader of the Conservative party and introduced to this House, was unknown to the most of us. For a time he succeeded in impressing, not only his own side but many on this side, with the opinion that his judicial mamer of speaking was a true index to his sentiments and to his individuality. But since the latter end of last session, we have discovered that this hon. gentleman, so much prized by his own side of the House, so much esteemed for a time by those who do not belong to that party, is really a man with a mask. We have discovered that his face is his fortme. Nobody could possilly look more honest, more impartial, more judicial than the Minister of Justice.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I wish I could retum the compliment.

Mr. CAsifl. The hom genteman evidently frels hurt hy the assertion that his face ami manner are judicial, and says he wishes he could return the compliment. I never pretended to have a judicial mamer:and face or judicial way of speaking. I never pretendel to have anything more than what evers body knows I have, but the hon. gentlemin has been par cacellonee the man put forward as the judicial, impartial, non-partisan eritic of the other side of the Honse. And yet his conduct has been such as I cannot describe in parliamentary language. Nobody could look more impartial, more honest, more calm, more uniartisan than he, and nobolly could act mosi in the opposite direction. I say that the whole ronduct of the defence in this diebate has been inspired and dictated under his anspices. In the tirst place, the disloyal, false pretension was put forward that these charges were not specific and not sufticiently particularized. There is no need to inform the House now that these are specific and particularized. There is no need to say the charges formulated in the amemoment moved by the Minister of Militia, to take the place of the actual charges made on a member's responsibility, are still more vague, still less particularized than those brought before the House. The point was taken that we were invading the sphere of election courts. Everyboly must know how little that pretension has to support it. We are not proposing to usurp the functions of the election courts. Nolooly pretends to helieve that we were proposing to put in jeopardy the seat of any member whose election had been carried by the corrupt expenditure of money. We know that is out of our sphere, and nolody proposed anything of the sort. But we were impeaching a Minister, we were charging that a member of the Cabinet, a member of the Prixy Council, had been untrue to his charge, mitrue to his oath, had violated his trust to the country by corrupt political dealings with those to whom sulsidies harl been granted on the advice of the Ministry to which he belonged. The hom. Minister of Justice comes lefore us, and acting as the defendant's attorney, takes alvantage of all his legal sultlety, the possession of which we do not deny, takes advantage of his inexpressive countenance, takes adrantage of the limberness of his lacklone and the slipperiness of his conscience, to back up the shallow defence put up against these charges. In what respect are these charges less particularized than those to the investigation of which he gave his consent last year" Are they more vague than the charges against the Minister of Public Works and against the late member for Quelec West (Mr. Mc(ireevy) which were referredto a committee last year, and which resulted in the dismissal of the one from the Cabinet and in the expulsion of the other from the House? These charges are more particularized, more specific, less vague than those I have just referred to, which were referred to a committee last year. Why should the late Minister of Public Works have been subjected to the inquisition of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, when the Postmaster General is to be free from that inquisition? Why should Thomas Mcfireevy, Rykert, and the member for Fast Northumberlind (Mr. Cochrane) have leen subjected to an enquiry last year when this particular Minister must lie exempted from enquiry lefore that committee? Why was there no ohjection to an inquisition held in the Pa!hic Accomuts Comnittee in connection with the Langevin Block: Why was it that a charge made in the latter end of last session against the Minister of Railways was not inrestigated: We have the answer in the unfortunate words of the Minister of Militia when in moving this resolution this afternoon, he said : We have had enough of enquiries before committees of Parliament. The Minister of Justice found that out before the end of last session. I do him the justice to believe that he would prefer to do what is right and constitutional, hut he found out before the end of last session that that did not pay ; and when it came to a question as to whether the present Minister of Railways was interested as a partner in the contract for section B of the Canadian Pacific Railway, he had to go down and eat that proverlial peck of dirt which everybody is supposel to cat some time ina lifetime. The Minister of Justice eats his peek of dirt. I do not think he likes it but he has got to eat it. He began on the oecasion to which I refer, and it does not seem to cost him much at present to take another roll in the mud and cover himself with it. It is all very well for the Minister to laugh. Ministers in his posision have laughed hefore and have afterwards had to langh on the wrong side of their moaths. It is all rery well for the Ilinister to get a large vote on this question, but he has supporters behind him who have memories, and he has supporters in the country who have memories. There is the member for Montreal West(Sir Donald smith) who is now a supporter of the hon. gentlenam, and he remembers in enquiry of a nature no more grave than the one now lefore the House. he remembers the making of the charges, the reference of those charges to it committee, and the reasons why those charges had to be referred ultimately to a Royal Commission. He remembers the course he took in consequence of the finding of that Royal Commission and what language he had to endure, what language was addressed to him in the corridors of this House by the then leader of that side of the House, and the abuse he received from the Conservative press throughout the country, but he had the uprightness and the honour to stand by his con rictions and rote according to his opinions after hearing the report of that commission. There are many more of the supporters of the Minister of Justice who have consciences not completely made of India rubber as some people's consciences seem to be, who will reflect on this matter afterwards. It is quite umecessary, after all that has been said, to go into detail to prove that the proposed action is unconstitutional. If you will take your May on Constitutional Government in Eagland, or your Tould on Constitutional Government in the Colonies, or your Bourinot, any work you like ou constitutional government, you will find nowhere a precedent for the reference to a Royal Commission of any charge against a Minister or a member of the House, which the House or its committees. were capable of empuiring into. The only seeming exception is the one to which 1 have referred, the Pacific Scandal, winich was not really an exception, because the House had not then the power to examine into that matter under oath. It is laid down in these books that it is a gross breach of the privileges of Parliament to take any enquiry of this kind out of its hands. As I heard the amendment this afternoon, I understood that it referred to the statute in reference to the appointment of Royal Commissions, and that it proposes that this commission siall be appointed under that statute. There is no statute of this House proriding for royal commissions to investigate charges against Ministers or members of the House. There could be none limiting the powers of this House. This House has, and the (iovernor General has not the power to entuire into matters of this nature. The course which the hon. Minister, nominally of Justice, proposes is one directiy opposed to the constitution of the country. But there is something worse to it than that. We have heard a great deal of talk on the other sile of the House about speeches we made on this side which they criticised as blue ruin speeches. I charge that this one transaction, this one resolution, contains more of the nature of blue-ruin than all the pessimistic speeches that could be made, but have not been made, by anybody else in the country. There is nothing that indicates so much the utter ruin, the decalence, the rottennes of the country, as to find that he who is supposed to be the guardian of public morality and of justice in this country is willing, without any ground which he is able to defendon the floor of this House, to refuse to properly investigate a charge of rottenness and corruption on the part of a Minister of the Crown. I do not say that the accused Minister was guilty of rottennessand corruption, hecause it is only a charge so far, and we only ask the opportunity to prove it, but the charges are such that, if they should be found to be true, the Minister has been guilty of rottenness rind corruption, and practically of treason to that country for whose interests and for whose moneys he has been a trustee for so many years. I say that the Minister of Justice has given the aid of his versatile conscience and his legal subtlety to burke that enquiry. What will be the result with the country: Will it sare them with the country" Will it save the reputation of the Postmaster (ieneral:

Mr. STEVENSON. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. I hear an hon. gentleman who lives in Peterborough say, "Yes,"and I am sorry for the lack of acumen he displays in that respect. If the hon. gentleman who now leads this House, when he sat on the bench, had an accused man brought before him who said ; I will not be tried on that indictment, I will not adinit that you mean what your charges signify when yon say I have done so and so because you mean that I have done something else. I will not be tried on that indictment nor will I be tried by you, my lord. I will choose my own judge and frame my own indictment, and after hearing the counsel for the prosecution and finding out what they have to say, I will frame the indictment against myself and I will so frame it that it shall contain nothing which they say they can prove-if a criminal had come before Judge Thompson and had spoken in that way, he would have been set down as a lunatic. It would have been utterly incomprehensible that an accusel person should be allowed to frame the indictment against himself, to choose the judge to try him, to pay the judge who tried him, to say what evidence should beadmitted against him, and to control the whole affairs of the prosecution; and yet that is the course which the hon. gentleman, who was .Julge Thompson, is taking before the country. He says: "We will not stand a trial on the accusations made against us. We know from what the prosecutor has said that he thinks he can prove certain things, and is not sure that he can prove other things. We will only be tried on what you say you cannot prove, and we will choose the men who are to try us." It might be Judge Elliott, or dear knows who. It was a commission of County Court judges who tried Sir John Machonald at the time of the Pacific Scandal, and this might be another commission of County Court julges.

An hon. MEMBFR. No.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman who says "no" harl hetter look up what no doulst to him is ancient history. It may be a commission of a county judge, it may be a commission by Judge Elliott, it may be a commission of dear knows who. The amendment does not say it shall be composed of julges at all. They may choose anybody they please according to the terms of the amendment. I do not know whether they have the cheek to do that. Some people have cheek enough for anything. Certainly one of the members for Toronto who sits at the present moment in the front bench (Mr.Coatsworth), and the Minister of Justice, are not hehind in that respect. But I say they have left themselves free to choose their own judge: and you may depend upon it that he, if there is to be only one judge, will not be a man unfriendly to the Government, he will not be a man impartial between the (xovermment and the accused. If they choose one commissioner only, he will, as a matter of certainty, be known for his favour towards the Government. But they may do as they like; the country will know by their refusal to be tried on the charges laid liefore the House, by the unheard-of and unprecedented refusal to accept a trial on the charges made on the responsibility of a member-the comntry will know that they confess their guilt. As I saill before, if a man accused of crime came before the jurlge and wished to frame his own indictment, and choose his own julge it would he a confession of guilt. This is a confession of guilt, a cowardly confession of guilt ; I will say a doubly cowardly confession of guilt, and I will tell you why. They were afraid, in the first place, of trial on the charges presented to the House. The Minister of Justice made a speech which meant that they refused to be tried on any charges of this kind. Subsequently he found that he had to be afraid of his own followers also, having first been afraid of the Opposition; he had reason to fear a revolt on the part of his own followers, and he has patched up an unconstitutional compromise which he asks the House to accept. I was astonished at the attitude of the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Cockburn) in regard to this. He has been saying for some time back that there in-ust be an investigation into the charges brought forward by the nember for West Ontario; he has said that to members of the Opposition as well as to his own friends, and he has tonight given assent by his speech to a proposal which means that there shall not be an enquiry into those charges, that there shall be an enguiry into cooked charges. cooked by the Minister of Justice and put in the mouth of the Minister of Militia. That hon. member for Toronto last year was the chief mover in securing an enquiry in another place in regard to a question which was not before that legislative body at all, an euquiry into alleged political corruption, in the course of the discussion of a private Bill. The hon. member for Centre Toronto, in the alleged interests of a bank, was the chief mover in an enquiry into an alleged political corruption in the case of a provincial legislature, lefore a committee which had nothing to do with it in the world. He insisted that that committee should enguire into the expenditure of provincial sulsidies, and as to whether pro:incial Ministers had not had a share of those subsidies; now he comes before this House and refuses to enquire as to whether a Minister of this House has corruptly shared in the distribution of sulisidies granted hy this House, although the charge is made upon the responsibility of it member of the House. It will be a difficult task for the member for Centre Toronto to reconcile his present action and his late action lefore the electors of his consti. tuency. Their conclusion will undoubtedly be that to which the whole country must come, in view of the course of the Government throughont this dehate. The conclusion will be that they refuse an enguiry into certain specific charges male by the member for West Ontario because they knew those charges were true, and they dare not have them proved. We all know that the particular Minister charged is not the most popular Minister on that side of the House; we all know that if it were a mere question of his head falling, perhaps all this discussion might not have taken place at all. But we do not know, and the Minister of Justice does not know, if an enquiry legan here, where it might end, and therefore the committee is refused. The Gevernment have gerymandered the charges against the accused Minister, and are asking power to refer them to a partial commission of their own choosing. The report of the commission will have no weight whatever with the country. The plea of guilty practically entered by their action in the matter will be believed by the whole country, and I warn the Govermment that in this case, as in a former case, the verdict of the country will be the same as it was after the Pacific Scandal of $18 ; 3$.

Mr. McMULLEN. We have patiently waited to hear some interesting speeches from some hon. gentlemen opposite who have not yet favoured the House with their views on this all-important question. I refer more particularly to the menber for North Sincoe (Mr. McCarthy), who has oceupied a very prominent position in this country for a great many years, both as a constitutional law yer and as a member of Parliament; and surely the House and the country have a right to get the beinefit of his opinion on this important issue. We cau remember when that hon. gentleman was known as the brains of the Conservative party. He was called that by the leader who is now no more, but he appears to have lest that position since the Minister of Justice has taken the place that he now occupies. He is no more credited with being the brains of the party, and he appears to be willing to follow the lead of the Minister of Justice, and is willing to-night to accept the amendment proposed to the motion now before the House. Now, I was rather amused at the remarks that dropped from the Minister of War. He said the Opposition did not want an investigation. Nou, I do not think the Opposition could express their desireforaninvestigation in any plainer way than by the resolution offered by the nember for West Ontario. He has clearly and explicitly declared his readiness to go before a committee of this House and prove the charges he has presented. Hon. gentlemen opposite are not prepared to give him an opportunity of proving those charges lefore a committee of the House, but they want to appoint a Royal Commission in order to deprive this House of the right of investigating this important charge. Last year we had an opportunity of investigating charges before a committee of this House, anil acting upon past experience the Government deent it imprudent to sulject themselves to more investigation. After the investigation that took place last year a member of the (iovernment had to resign his position, and is now obliged to oceupy the humble position of a simple member of this House. It is rather amusing to take the history of hon. gentlemen opposite from the time of the Pacitic Scandal down to the present time. One perion after another has been characterized by acts of political corruption. During the last few years we may fairly say, considering not only the members of the Government but a great many of their friends, that the political head is sick and the heart faint ; from the crown of the head to the sole of the foot they have shown evidence of corruption. We all remember the introduction of the system of railway subsidies, and these sulsides were introduced for a purpose. Sir Charles Tupper brought into existence the plan by which grants were given to local railways in different provinces, and from the inception of that scheme subsidies to local railways have been utilized in that way, but the men who held the charters and carried through the schemes have contributed unguestionably to the support of and political existence of hon. gentlemen opposite. It will be remembered that we had an exposure with respect to the Caraquet Railway, which was controlled by a member of the House. We had the representative of the Cape Breton Railway stating that the road would not pay running expenses the first year.

Mr. Cameron. No.

Mr. Mcmullfin. The whole of the transactions with respect to subsidizing railways have been used directly or indirectly for political purposes, and it has been clearly shown that corruption is rife in all directions. I do not know why we are not permitted to investigate these matters. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not want us to obtain a roving or fishing commission. I do not wonder, because a very fishy lot of men have been connected with the railway subsidies. If we had commenced with investigating railways some years ago we should have had some remarkable revelations. We all remember the Northern Pacific Junction Railway. That scheme received $$ 12,000$ per mile, and bonds were issued for $$ 20,000$ per mile, or $$ 32,000$ altogether ; but it never cost over $$ 20,000$ per mile, and over $$ 12,000$ per mile went into somelody's pocket. Some hon. members of this House could explain where the money went. That was the commencement, but the whole scheme in connection with railway subsidies went into effect later. Why did not the Senate ask the appointment of a Royal Commission, or even the member for Toronto, respecting the Baie des Chaleurs matter? but it went before a committee of the Senate. The evidence that has been shown by the silence of hon. gentlemen opposite, particularly some men who occupy prominent positions in the ranks of the party, clearly demonstrates that they are getting sick and tired of the whole exhibition made by the Government on this matter.

MESSAGE FROM HIS F.XCELLENCY.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message as follows:-

Stanley of Preston.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, a copy of a despatch from the Right Honourable Her Majesty's Principal Secretary of State for the Colonies, dated 11th April, 1892, respecting the Addresses of sympathy from the Senste and Honse of Commons of Canada pathy from the senate and honse of commons of canada the death of His Royal Highness the Duke of Clarence and A vondale.

PRINTING COMMITTEE.

Mr. PERGIN moved :
That the Fifth Report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliansent be amended as follows:-
2nd paragraph, line 2.-Leare out the words "or a cabinet."
3 rd paragraph, line 3 -Leare out the words " to the Clerk of this Committee, and."
3rd paragraph, line 11 .-lease out the words "from time to time,", and also the words "as has been the custom hitherto."
Leave out the whole of the fourth paragraph.
Mr. EDGAR. Perhaps the hon. member will explain to the House what the effect of his amendment will be. We cannot possibly understand it from hearing it read.

Mr. BERGIN. It merely strikes out the words, "or a cabinet"-not this cabinet.

Report, as amended, concurred in.

ROUND HILL SHEAR DAM.

Mr. MILLS (Annapolis) asked, Who tendered for the construction of the shear dam at Round Hill, Annapolis County, N. S.? What was the amount of each tender? Who is the contractor?

Mr. OUIMET. The following gentlemen tendered for the said work: William J. Loughran, Ottawa, 84,ī̃0; J. H. Healy and IV. M. Baily, Round Hill, $\$ 5,200$; John T. McKinnon, New Glasgow, 86,200 ; Ralph Jones, Ottawa, $5 \overline{3}, 200$ : Heney \& Smith, Ottawa, $\$ 7,851$; and W. J. Bell, Dighy, $\$ 4,650$. The lowest tender was from W.J. Bell, namely, $\$ 4,6 \overline{0} 0$. His tender was only received in the department on the 23 r d of November, and the date for receiving the same was the 20 th . The next lowest, that of $\mathrm{W}, \mathrm{J}$. Loughran, was awirded the contract.

LOCK IN THE RIVER YAMASKA.

Mr. MONETTE (for Mr. Mignault) (Translation) asked, How many steamboats, or other vessels, have passed through the lock in the River Yamaska, from the time of its construction until the closing of savigation in the year 1891? Has the Government received tolls for the use of the said lock? If so, what is the ammal amount collected therefrom?

Mr. OUIMET. (Translation.) The lock in the River Famaska was completed in 1886. From April; 1886, to the end of May, 1889, the lock was opened 1,310 times to allow ressels to pass. The figures are not in for 1890 and 1891. No toll was charged for the use of the lock. The intention is to collect toll in the future.

COMMISSION ON THE LIQUOR TRAFFIC.

Mr. CHARLTON asked, Who are the members of the Royal Commission appointed to investigate "The Effects of the Liguor Traffic upon all interests affected by it in Canarla," &c., under authority of the vote of this House of 24 th Jume, $1891 ? 2$. Who is the chairman of the said commis. sion? 3. What length of time has the said commission been engaged in prosecuting its investigations, and has it visited foreign countries for that purpose? 4. Has the Government information as to when the report of the said commission is likely to le made?

Mr. FOSTER. The members of tine Royal Commission appointed to investigate the effects of the liquor traffic upon all interests affected by it in Canada, &c., are Sir Joseph Hickson, Montreal: E. F. Clarke, Esq., Toronto; Julge McDonald, Brockville ; Rev. Dr. McLeod, Fredericton, N. B. ; and George J. Gigault, Esc., Rouville, Que. The chairman of the said commission is Sir Joseph Hickson. The commission has hat two meetings of short duration. Its third meeting is to take place in May. It has not risited foreign countries. The fovermment has no information as to when the report of the said commission is likely to be made.

FNQUIRIES FOR RETURRNS.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I enquired the other day as to when the return I moved for as to the number of Royal Commissions issued since Confederation will be brought down. I would like to know when I may expect that return?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I will enguire and inform the hon. gentleman later.
Mi. EDGAR. About a month ago a motion was carried, which I moved, for a return of papers granting letters patent to two cotton companies. I do not think it should have taken a whole month to get those papers ready. I should be glad to know when they will be brought down.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I think the return is ready. Both these matters are in charge of the Secretary of State, and I will send it to him.

REPORT.

Summary Report of the Geological Survey Department, for the year 1891.-(Mr. Dewdney.)

THE FISHERIES ACT.

Mr. TUPPER moved that the Hruse resolve it self ints Committee on Bill (No. 9) further to amend the Fisheries Act. He said : The main provisions of the Bill have to do with lobster fishing. It has been deemed necessary to make regulations concerning this most inportant industry on many occasions in the last ten or fifteen years. It was thougit at the outset that by taking a close season covering a pericd when lobsters were spawning, or in the condition known as berried, the species would be preserved, and the industry be made a permanent one in Canada. Various close seasons were adopted, but with very little effect. The injury to the fisheries lecame apparent by the very best sign, and that is the decrease in the size of the lohsters caught each season. A conmission way appointed some years back, which made an extensive enguiry into the matter ; and on their report, the present districts were established, with close seasons and regulations as to the size limit. I may say, to give the Honse some idea of the importance of this industry, that the number of lolisters preserved in cans or sold alive during the season of 1890 amounted to $11,566,732 \mathrm{lbs}$. weight, representing a value of $\$ 1,648,344$. It might seem a very healthy sigi in comnection with the fishery, that twenty years ago it producel nothing at all in comparison with what it does now; but while ten years ago two or three lobsters were sufficient to till a can, six or seven are reguired at present, showing how the fish have decreased in size. I may, as this is very important, refer to the investigation 1,y the commission appointed in 1886 . A large amount of evidence was taken, and I particularly refer to the evidence taken in Prince Edward Island, where there is, perhaps, is more noticeable falling off in size in certain districts than in most of the other districts in Canada; but even there at that time, lobster packers and men engaged in the business favoured a regulation size of lobsters as high as ten and a half inches. Various witnesses were called by the commission, who mentioned that as aloout the legal standard of size which they would not object to. I may refer to the evidence of Mr. Grant, a lobster packer of Charlottetown, and to that of Mr. Lance who is still in the business, and who stated he would not object if the legal standard of size were raised to ten and a half inches. And Mr. Prowse, now, I believe, a member of the Senate, and conversant with this business, stated he was conrinced that the closing of all the factories in the Dominion for at least three years was necessary to put the fisheries on a good footing. I wish to call attention also to the opinion of a predecessor of mine in the Iepartment of MarineandFisheries, who was very conversant with the requirements of this industry, and who introduced practically into Canada this regulation as to size as far back as 18;9, when the regulation wasadopted by Order in Council, upon his report, making the standard size nine inches, and also providing for a close season. It also provided against lobsters leing taken in their berry condition. After this enquiry l,y the commission, the season was limited to a very briei period, in the face of litter complaint on the part of the fishermen, who considered that the Government were unduly interfering with their means of livelihood, and in the face of bitter opprsition by many packers who thought it would work to their detriment. But it is satisfactory to know to day that these regulations are practically unimpeached or not attacked in any serious degree in any of the localities in Canada. On the contrary, representations from Prince Edward Island, to which I again allude lecause there the subject has been very much discussed and there the reports seem to show that the lohsters are of a smaller size to-day, are to the effect that the result of that long close season limit has been so beneficial that the department asked the Government that Parliament should stop there and allow the fisheries to he operated unembarrassed by other regulations, and suggested a regulation prohibiting the catch of lobsters under nine inches as at present, the regulation having been lowered from what it was a year or so back, nine and a half inches. I think that these hon. gentlemen should look into the facts and into the statements and into the recommendations and regulations, and they will see that the statement I started out with is correct, that there has been a serious diminution in the size of lobsters canght on the coasts of Canada, and that is to all fishery experts or authorities a sure sign of a failing fishery. I will call the attention of the House to some statistics showing the condition of the trale in this respect for some years back and now, and it will be observed that, while a large amount of lolsters are still camnel, the attack on that industry has been carried on with greater vigour than ever, because, when the fisherman or the packer found his time for taking these lobsters was limitel, he at once proceeded to doulle up the gear, increase the traps and attack that fishery with far more vigour than before. And there is very good reason for this on the part of the fisherman and the packer, becanse it is notorious throughout the worl that the lobster species are being exterminated in many places, and that the catch has been largely depleted in others. Consequently, the prices for good lobsters are very good indeen, and inducements are held out for too many men to go into the business who had not given it a thought in previous days, and so make in a limited periol more than was made in the longer period that once obtained. In order to show the necessity of restricting further the fishery, of safeguarding it, I may say that in 1888, in lrince Edward Island, there were 79 canneries in existence, while in 1891 they had risen to 142 cameries, and $I \mathrm{am}$ told, I imagine on good authority, that this season will see a larger increase in the number of canneries in Prince Edward Island. In New Brunswick in 1883, there were 75 canneries, and in 1891, there were 143 cammeries. In Quebec the number rose from 38 in 1888 to 46 in 1891. The figures are not now before me in regard to Nova Scotia, but there is this to be said, that the interests of the fishery there are such that, on a large portion of the coast, there is not the same raid made upon the lobsters as is made elsewhere, for the export of large lobsters engages a great deal of the attention of the people of these districts, and, their market leing in the United States where the limit is 10 inches or $10 \frac{1}{2}$ inches, they are required to get large lobsters; so that the American regulations practically protect the interest of the tishery in Nova scotia. Then take the number of traps. In 1888, there were in New Brunswick, 34,000 traps. In 1891, there were 140,000 traps. Then, if we take the yield and value of the lobster fishery as a whole, we find that in 1 sis9 it amounted to 61,000 pounds of the value of S15,000, in 1874 it had risen to $8,000,000$ pounds. with a value of $\$ 2,000,(00)$, and in 1891 there was a yiell of $26.000,000$ pounds, the value, however, being very little different from that in 1874. There are many reasons for that, and I do not wish to rest on the argument that it is simply because of the decrease in size, though I think much might he stid on that soore, that a great many of the lohsters cannel and put on the market cannot bring the ralue which the lobsters did when the run was admittedly so much longer, and the camer or packer did not gain a benefit from putting in a poor article. That a porr article is now packed and canned is ton true, and that affects the trade very largely and very seriously in the English market, the moment the character of these gooms is depreciated in that way. Another comparison I might take is the statement showiug the value and yield of lolsters in Prince Edward Island. In 1881, $6,00 \mathrm{ON} . \mathrm{cKN})$ onepound cans brought over $\$ 1,000,000$, whereas in 1s91, they had $3,006,000$ one-pound cans which represented a value of 513,000 . The House will be interested in hating a statement corroborative of that made by me as to the decrease of this fishery every where in consequence of the tremendous drain upon it. I saw a few days ago in the Fishing riazeftr. a paper which is published in New York in the interest of the fish and oyster trades, a reference to this effect. The ellitor states :
" During the past ten years there has been a great falling off in the supply of lobsters, until the price has increased fully $1(14)$ per cent. This applies alike to the New York market, to the waterg along the New England cosst and in Canada and Newfoundland. where lobster fishing and canning is an important industry."
And the head of the fishery bureau or department in Washington, who is now the head of the United States Fish Commission, Marshall MeDonald, says:
"I have almays felt that the maintenance of the lobster fishery rested more essentially upon proper regulation of the matter by the states than upon aus efforts in the way of artificial propagation. The most usual regulation is that prohibiting the sule of lobsters below certain dimensions; the minimum limit, though varying with the different states, being smallest in Massachusetts. In Maine, wiere the law is enforced and the minimum fixed. I beliere, at ten inches, the result has been a marked improvement in the lobster fisheries during the recent sears."

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Can the hon. gentleman tell me when that waschanged, because, in looking up the matter, I discovered that the regulation in Maine by the law of 1884 referred to less than nine inches ?

Mr. TUPPER. I have here the statute of 1887, and there it is ten inches.

Mr. BOWERS. I think it is ten and a half inches.

Mr. TUPPER. I think the hon. member for Dighy (Mr. Bowers) is right, but we know that the Legislatures of the States of Maine and Massachusetts unfortunately introduced that drastic legislation after their fishery was practically ruined, but fortunately in Canada this Parliament has interfered with some success, notwithstanding what I have said with reference to the diminution in size, before the fishery was ruinetl. Taking the reports that come before me and the statements which are made by those conversant with the business, I am led to the opinion that our regulations are not what they should be, and that there is room for marked improvement, and I recognize the difficulty we all have to meet with in making these regulations. We come in contact with an enormous boly of population in the Maritime Provinces which have a very hard time indeed to earn their livelihood and I would interfere as little as possible with them when dealing with the business ont of which they earn so much of their annual income. But while I approach that duty with great difficulty, I none the less think that it is necessary in thieir interest to interfere. Now, although we may have to come into collision with them, to an extent, 1 helieve the result will be, in all probability, in the future, that we shall not only secure their welfare, but oltain their gratitude. I mentioned that the packers themselves are fiercely opposed to the egulations touching the close season, and sent in statement after statement to my officers and to the department not to make amy relaxation. Indeed, the hom. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) will recollect that he censured the (iovermment and censured myself, last year, for having extended the season, and not hating adhered to it. He knows that no one, a few years before, would have objected in any part of Canada to an extension of that season for a few months. But they appreciate that, and I think in Prince Edward Island where this subject has been entirely canvassed and discussed in meetings, they have put themselves on record in support of the policy of the department sofar as the close season is concerned, and there they ask as to stop. I do not think, and I amendeavouring to show why, we can stop there. I would ask the House to grant me some indulgence from the fact that on this subject only a portion of Parliament are actually or directly interested, as the lobster fishery, unfortunately, does not concern all the various pertions of this great country. To show the result of over-fishing, I have mentioned that not only is a sign of it in Canada, but in other countries, that is equally true. In Scotland there are distinguished marine biologists who are employed by the Government to study this question, and Professor Ewing, for instance, of Edinburgh, recommends the closure of the lobster fishery for a season, as the only thing that can put that fishery in a good condition, stating that the regulations as to the close season have been a failure. Now that I mention by the way, and I would like to give the House some further evidence as to the signs of a diminution in the fishery, notwithstanding the very large and valuable catch that was made last year. But let me point out to the House why it is that in the face of some healthy signs in the lobster fishery now, owing to the close season, I am asking Parliament to make these careful regulations restricting to some extent that fishery ; it is for that reason, and those from the districts concernel will understand it, that when the fishery failed, asit undoubtedly did tosome extent, there was such a falling off that it became umremunerative for many packers to continue business. When we started out with this close season they went out of the business, and the statistics will show a sudden falling off of the canneries then in operation. Now, the danger isthis, that having seen the wants of commerce and observing the prices in the general market, they are going into the business again. I make that statement with absolute certainty of its correctness. My officers tell me that even in Prince Edward Island, there will be

this season a larger number of anneries in operation than ever before in the history of the Island. Now, that is the danger. Provided that a certain number of men and a certain number of traps only had been kept in the business, much might be said for a close season; but we cannot say to one man that he may go into the business, and that some other enterprising man shall be kept out. We cannot take that course, no one adrocates it. I think we are doubly bound to make such provisions that, while allowing all who care to go into the husiness, to do so, will throw the lest possible stfeguards around that industry. Some ten or twelve years ago it would take, as I have already said, two or three lobsters to fill a can. Now it requires six or seven, and some of my otticers even report that it will take eight to fill a can. I have known myself as to what packers will do; I have known of several hundred lobsters taken and put in the boilers for the purpose of caming, and they are only four inches from the tip of the leak to the middle end of the last flipper of the tail : and any man from the lobster district will know that that lobster had very little meat in it, ainl that any meat that could be got from a lobster of that size was absolutely worthless. I mention that, therefore, to show that regulations certainly are necessary, not merely as to a close season, but also touching the size. Taking several hundreds of thonsands of those, it will be apparent at once what an enormons injury is done to the whole species when not one of them have had a chance of reproducing, and when each lobster is capable, if it is given an opportunity of reproducing hut once, of reproducing thousands upon thousinds of its species. Before going on with some anthorities in support of my position, I would also point out that it is admitted by stadents of this question, even bv Professor Ewing himself, that one great reason for the necessity of protection of the lobster species, is that the lobster is not a migratory fish, in this sense, that while he can travel quickly and travel a good deal, he is confined to zones, and the Island packers evidently have ascertained that, because they speak ronstantly of there heing a run of a smaller lobster in the district in its best condition, than in many other districts of Canala. But, nevertheless, their experience is in accordance with the statements of scientists who point out the ease with which men can destroy that fishery in a particular district, and have destroyed it, as I have shown, in other districts of the world. They say that the lobster is contined to a certain zome, and when that zone is orer-fished, the lobster lisappears entirely and none others come to take his place. Now, we have the reports of our officers from (iloucester and Kent Counties in New Brunswick, for instance, and from the counties on the Northumberland Straits, showing that the lobsters are getting scarcer and snialler from this extraordinary increase in the number of traps, statistics of which I have given the House. They also support the statement as to the larger number now reguired to fill these one-pound cans. So we have much evidence from packers who admit that, and for that reason are all the more anxious that at least this close season shall be strictly adhered to. The reports of inspectors of tisheries for England and Wales for 1886-87, for instance, speak of an alarming decrease in the size of lobsters in Great Britain. So the official reports of the fisheries and fishing.interests in the United States in 1887 show that the fishing grounds on the coast of Maine are now completely exhausted, that there are no fish, and that the grounds are not worth fishing over. I• again remind the House that this occurred before these regulations were adopted, that are now spoken of, and that is one reason for entertaining the belief that it will take a very long time before these grounds are recuperated. The decrease in the United States is most marked on the New England coast ; but there it is due, as every one knows, to over-fishing. One of the United States commissioners reports:
"Cape Cod used to be a famous fishing ground ; a large trade was started with New York. Each lobster pot caught 100 to 20 every night. Since 1885 a rapid decrease has been noticed. In 1880 only eight men were engaged in this fishing, and although they used the most improved appliances, their annual gross earnings did not exceed $$ 60$ each."
That is in a district where at one time there was most remunerative fishing carried on.-
"On the coast of Maine, although this fishing is of much more recent date, it has already exhibited alarming signs of decay, while the arerace size of individuals is generally decreasing. The shore fisheries are completoly exhausted and fishermen are compelled to resort todistant grounds.; The commissioner mentioned ,lifferent districts, which it is unnecessary for me to enumerate. He speaks of New Hampshire, where the decrease for the last 20 years is said to have been from 50 to 75 per cent ; and he also speaks of Rhode Island and Connecticut, where there has already been a considerable falling off in the number and size. Coming to Canada, I will refer at the outset to the Baie des Chaleurs. Dr. Lavoie, then in command of the Gulf Fishing Divisions, reported in 1875 to the Government that:
"The apprehensions entertained in $18 \%$ from the result of previous excessive fishing will fully reach last season, so far as Baie des Chaleurs is concerned, where barely 9,315 pounds of lobsters were prepared aguinst 210,432 pounds last year."
In his report of 1876 he also says :
"The ruin of the lobster fishery on the shores of the United States ought to warn and at the same time teach us a lesson, which we should take advantage of ; that is to regulate, with as little delas as possible, the mode of carrying on this fishery; if we would not Euffer the same resultsas are already experienced at Carleton and Maria and other places on the shores of Baie des Chaleurs. The fishing grounds of Maria, Carleton and New Richmond will require several years rest before they will become as valuable as formerly."
Dr. Wakeham, his successor, draws attention to the tremendous drain annually made on this fishery and the signs of diminution in size, and, therefore, diminution of the species in so many places. The inspector at Prince Edward Island has always held a very strong position on this point, and, notwithstanding that he has been in constant communication with those interested in the business, who insist on a close season, he has been most persistent in his arguments in support of the absolate necessity of restricting packers and fishermenfrom taking immature lobsters or lobsters of a size below that at which they are supposed to be capable of reproducing themselves. He has advised, under the present regulations, the adoption of the 9 -inch limitation regulation. He reported, in 1887, that lobsters were so small and scarce that year that several packers had to close their factories early in the season and not a few of them were driven into bankruptcy. This part of the case naturally brings me to a consideration of what is a proper size limit, if a regulation is necessary, as $I$ believe it is, in addition to the close season. The late Hon. Mr. Pope, who was familiar, I take it, with the condition of the fisheries in Pr:nce Edward Island, was of that opinion as far lack as 1879. He then adrocated the limit of nine inches. The commissioners to whose report I have referred, recommended, I think, nine and a half or ten inches, I forget which, certainly overnine, and the witnesses who gave testimony on that point expressed various opinions, all, I think, in favour of aregulation of nine inches. In England and in Scotland a regulation prevails as tothesizeat which lobstersshall be taken, or rather under which lobsters shall not be taken. In Demmark and Norway, from which countries there is an enormous export of lolsters to the English market, they have also a size limit. In those regulations, except in England and scotland, where the limit is below nine inches, the limit is over nine inches.
Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The hon. gentleman does not mean to say that in Norway the limit is below nine inches?
Mr. TUPPER. What I should say is that all countries on this side of the ocean have no limit as low as the one in Canada; we have at present the shortest limit, nine inches. In Newfoundland the linit is ten inches in one part and ten and a half in another, and in the United States there is no size limit under ten inches. But it is admitted that in Europe the lobster in its normal condition is nuch smaller than in this country, and in England it is smaller than in Scotland, and so the limit in England is seven inches and in scotland eight inches. As there is much argument used to the fact that we are needlessly hampering the lobster business by paying attention to the size at whichalobster should be caught, I will refer to one of the best known authorities on the subject, the late Professor Buckland, who was chief commissioner of fisheries in England, up to the time of his death. He made a special investigation into this yuestion when examining into the fisheries of Norfolk in 1975 . I suppose that will be about the date at which the size regulation was made in England, but I am not aware of that point.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It was in 1878 .

Mr. TUPPER. In 1875 Professor Buckland made a very interesting report on this sulject, and it will be found in the reports of the commissioners for $18 \%$, vol. 17 , page 175 . He speaks on this subject that interests us in considering the lobster guestion, and I will briefly refer to some of his observations. He called attention to the reason of the scarcity of the lobsters on that coast, the object of his mission being to ascertain the cause of the falling off and to make recommendations as to the best manner in which the fisheries could be resuscitated. He says:
"The lobsters on the abore-mentioned grounds have been getting rery scarce during the last ten or twelve years; the avcrage size has also been very much diminished."
In a foot-note he mentioned that Mr. Bayfield writes:
"Lobsters are very scarce now. No lobsters should be sold under eight inches and they ought to have a proper time in spawning season."
Professor Buckland goes on to say:
Mr. Tupper.
"That lobsters carrying spawn when caught, are sold spawn and all, and that lobsters of all sizes are sent to market for the last ten years: numbers of lobsters as small as three inches are sent to the market. Lobster are sold by the pound ; the proposed legal lobsters shonld be seven inches or three to the pound.
Apparently the lolster: which it refers to are larger lobsters than ours as threc of these will go to the pound. He gives them the line sive of the lohster of 6 inches, and I find on examination that for the purpose of comparison their measurement is the same as the measurement adopted in Canada, measuring, for iustance, from the end of the tail, as he calls it, to the tip of the beak. The regulation in England even under this report, or afterwards, did not, I admit, contain as wise a provision as the existing regulations in Canada do, because our season is, I fancy, shorter than the seasons in any of the places to which I refer, and there is a great difficulty experienced from that. I will not weary the House just now with many of the authorities I could give, or the extracts from reports showing that I have not drawn tho alarming a condition of the fisheries in Canada, but those who care to look through the fishery reports will see that there is a great manimity of opinion on the part of those who are not in the husiness, but who are watching it, and who havenoreason toembarrassin any way this industry. Now, aprope of thatand having these variousreports before me, I had convened a meeting of the inspectors of the Department of Fishieries sometime ago, and they drew up a scheme for the better protection of the fisheries and a scheme which was considered not to unduly interfere with the operations of the fishermen. I went over that scheme and drafted the proposed regulations a copy of which were laid on the Table of the House, and I endeavored to ascertain to what extent I could expect the co-operation of those engaged practically in the business, if I attempted to carry out the proposil which found its existence in the minds of the various fishery officers. I was disappointed in this to some extent, thongh, as I stated to the House in introducing the Bill, which in its first form was the result of their deliberations, I had sutticient evidence to show that the outline of these regulations would be acceptable to a large portion of the people interested in the business. However, it was represented most strongly to me by various gentlemen in the House who are far more conversant with the actual working of these methods than I am,', that the proposal was too radical and entirely too severe upon the people who make a livelihood to some extent out of the industry, and after frequent consultations with many of these hou. gentlemen who discussed the subject with me I remodelled the Bill and put it in its present shape. The people of Newfoundland have had occasion to pay a great deal of attention to this subject. It is a most valuable industry to them, it has been even a greater industry there than it is at present, and having had the advantage of the services of a very eminent man, Mr. Neilsen, who is an expert in fishery matters, he has gone into the question, and his report, which I also laid on the Table, goes to show that some new regulations are necessary on that island. I have taken advantage of his opinions in the consideration of this Bill, and 1 have largely, if not altogether, adopted the principle which he advocates in his report. That is, not merely a proper close season, but, perhaps, more than to anything else he attaches a great deal of importance to the size limit, and he has concluded that our regulation and the regulation of Newfoundland in that connection are faulty on account of the difficulty, if not the impossibility, of a general enforcement of it. At present we say that to ascertain the size, the lobster shall be measured, and the law says that the fishermen must put back the lobsters which are under 9 inches in length. In practice, however, this is not done, and Mr. Neilsen, and Professor Beck, of Norway, are anthorities to show that it is impossible to expect that that regulation can be carried out. Nevertheless, they adhere to the principle of it, but they say that we must olptain the correct size somewhat in the way we guard the taking of other fish by nets, and that is, to adopt the principle of limitation of the size of the mesh. Mr. Neilsen has suggested a scheme which, 1 am sure, will be universally popular in Canada. It is said that it is already popular after being tried one season in Newfoundland, and I am quite satisfied that our own fishermen will much prefer it to the present regulation for ascertaining the size. That scheme is: to regulate the space or distance that should le between the laths of the traps in which the lobster is taken, so that the small or immature lol,sters will he able to get out and the large lobsters be retained. I have discussed that subject with hon. gentlemen, notably again from Prince Edward Island, and my freguent reference to that island is that the chief objection to our regulations comes from that quarter owing to the admitted decrease in the size of lohsters. Whether they were or were not originally smaller, it is certain that any regulation touching the size limit affects that district more severely than any other place. Mr. Neilsen made some experiments in the presence of the Hon. Mr. Harvey, chairman of the commission and a member of the Neufoundland Government, as to the distance letween these laths in the traps, and on pages 76 and 77 of the report he gives the result of his enquiry. Therefore, I provided in the present Bill that the width between the two lowest laths or slats should be $1 \frac{3}{\frac{3}{2}}$ inches apart. Some hon. gentlemen from Prince Fdward Island expressed the opinion that Mr. Neilsen's experiment would not be verified by experiments on our lobsterswhy, they did not know, or did not undertake to say. But having made an experiment with a dead lobster in this city, they were conficlent that that space would be too great, and would allow a larger lobster than he had supposed to pass through. Consequently I had that matter enquired into on the spot, and I am of opinion that what they say is largely the case, whether it is on account of the difference letween the lobster taken in the straits and the lobster in Newfoundland I do not care to enquire. But I am willing to accept their statement and to adopt the result of the experiment in our own country, and we find that $1 \frac{1}{2}$ instead of $1 \frac{3}{4}$ inches space will stop un 8 -inch lobster. That is a considerable concession to the views of those who think that the size limit in Canada at present, 9 inches, is too large. Now, to show that I an not departing from the principle which I believe to be of such great importance, I want to point out that though the. Nuction in size is made, we are giving up a regulation which, while beneficial, is only effective at a certain portion of the season in the main ; that is to say, while we now impose penalties for catching lobsters under 9 inches, we know as a matter of fact that that regulation is violated time and again, that there is an uneven administration of the penalties, that many escape, and that even those fined willingly pay the fine for the privilege they get during the larger portion of the season for taking lobsters. I mentioned the case where 300 ) lohsters were found in one factory only four inches long. It was a positive crime that chose lobsters should have been killed and kept. At any rate that regulation is more honoured in the breach than in the observance. But we adhere to it for this reason, that with our present machinery it is absolutely necessary, because at the end of the season in the month of July, there comes so small a run of lobsters that even with the laws in force it does not pay the packer to run the risk. Therefore, although the regulation has been proluctive of a limited amount of good, we can safely come down to $1 \frac{1}{2}$ inches, stopping at a length of 8 inches, in view of that slow season, which is longer, I believe, with us than with any of the other countries to which I have referred. Then, I have a justification from the evidence as to when a lobster does mature. I have given some authorities to show the idea that was in the minds of many of the officers who studied the subject. But to come down to that very question, it is the experience of $\mathbf{D r}$. Wakcham, an officer who has been up and down the gulf for many years in charge of the Canadian fishery service, that a lobster under $8 \frac{2}{2}$ inches was seldom found capable of reproducing. But I had an opportunity of speaking to him recently, and he confines that opinion largely to the medium waters with which he is most familiar. He admits that with regard to the waters of the Straits of Northumberland that would not be a correct statement, hut that there the size would be somewhat smaller. Mr. Wilmot, in a limited time, made some experiments in the Straits of Northumberland when at Picton, and the result of his enquiries is contained in his report of 1890 , page 25. He concludes that a lobster capable of reproducing would be, on the average, about $8 \pm$ inches long, though smaller lobsters are found with eggs. Mrs Neilsen's experiments show that they are seldom found under 8 inches capable of reproducing, and that in Newfoundland they are more oftev over 8 inches than under. I have alluded to Professor Buckland's report on that point. Prof. Beck in Norway is of opinion that lobsters are capable of spawning when they are three years old and reach the length of 8 inches; lobsters less than 8 inches long are seldom found with ova. Mr. Ogden, who has had a great deal of experience on the Atlantic coast, and who was engaged in business not only on the Canadian coast but in the Uuited States when packing was carried on there, has followed this question very carefully, and he reports that in the Northumberland Straits 90 per cent of 8 -inch lobsters are capable of reproducing, and he has noticed exuded eggs on smaller lobsters, even on some under 7 inches. Mr. Johnson, who has lectured on this subject, and who is, I believe, an authority in the States, expresses the opinion that $10 \frac{1}{2}$ inches was necessary under the Massachusetts regulations, because that was the size at which the lobsters there became capable of reproducing. I did not lay Mr. Ogden's report on the Table the other day, becsuse I wished to ascertain more definitely than he stated how his measurements were made, because it conflicted with those made by Mr. Neilsen ; and I have ascertained since that they were made just as Mr. Neilsen's were, from the beak to the end of the middle flipper of the tail : so that there must be some difference in the shape of the lobsters to account for the ease with which the larger ones pass through these laths. On that point again there is this advantage, possibly this danger, to the packer, who wishes to take a smaller lobster than we contemplate, namely, that every time a trap is picked up, at that particular moment the smallest lobster in the trap must be caught, hecause the force of the water and the rapidity with which the trap is pulled up prevents it going through the bars. There is another advantage, that the ballast of the trap will cover a great deal of space at the bottom, where the lobsters are foumd. Put, notwithstanding that, I yield to the force of the arguments which have been put lefore me, in coming to the conclusion that while to that extent there will be many small lobsters taken, there will not be half so many as are now taken in spite of the regulation. This regulation was extremely unpopular in certain districts, and umpopular for another reason that it is almost impossible for an honest packer to comply with it. The quickness of despatch required in taking lobsters from the bed and putting them into the boiling pots prevents that careful sorting necessary to strictly ohey such a regulation. Again, the adrantages will be that we will be proceeding on, perhaps, a more correct principle in forming checks or preventives against the catching of immature fish, and I think in that connection it is not necessary for me to say anything more. In one section of the Island, it has been representel that even one and a half inch reduction there, limiting the size practically to eight inches, will embarrass the business, so as to make it almost unprofitable for the fisheries in that particular section. I will not make any stipulation with reference to that particular district, but will say that while we gain so much from this limited fishing season, if it is more agreeable to the people concerned in that district, if we can get their co-operation and accomplish our purpose working in unison with them instead of against them, as to a large extent we do to-day,-if they will give up, say, ten days at the end of the present open season, I would recommend the passing of an Order in Council, under the Fisheries Act, to reduce that to a one and a quarter space. Speaking from Mr. Ogden's report, that will stop lobsters of seven and a half inches. I have taken rather long time in referring to this question, but 1 believed it was absolutely necessary that I should do it, and I have referred to these authorities in order to convince the House that these regulations are made eminently in the interests of the fishermen, and I believe they will be popular, and that is a great point with most of those engaged in the industry. I have not alluded to another and a very important point, and that is the proposal made in this Bill that every packer or every person who preserves or cures lobsters shall take out a license. On the Atlantic coast, the license system does not generally prevail as it does in the interior, and there has not been the same reason for its extension, because in most of the sea fisheries it is the general theory that the lack of this system does very little harm to the different species of fish compared with what may be done on limited or inland waters; but in connection with the lobster fishery, I have shown that it is alimited fishery, that the lobsters are confined to certain districts, and in the interests of the honest packer and of those who wish to put up a good article and carry on the business on a systematic basis, as well as in the interest of a uniform administration of the law, the license system is, in my opinion, absolutely necessary. The fee proposed is nominal, and for that fee we give back full value. In the opinion of many packers, the certificate of the officer or the stencilling will be of considerable commercial value; but whether it be or not, my experience in these regulations has been that a great deal of complaint has come from the bulk of those engaged in the business because when they ohey the rules and close their factories, they find, to their detriment and the injury of the fisheries, that all over the coast little canneries or something of the kind spring up. With this license system, our police can more effectively control persons, and see that the regulations are complied with. That advantage we have in riew, and making the fee nominal, as we do, I think the regulation will be a wise and also a popular one. There is an amendment I womld ask to be made by the Committee in connnittee to 10 a or the second clanse. It has not been printed but is in my draft. It is not proposer that the fishermen shall take out a license, or that fishermen who keep them alive in ponds or other places dhwing the open season, as one would imagine in the first place, shall take out the license that is provided in section 10. Where vessels cone down to some parts of the coast to collect lobsters, they do not take the lobsters from the pots but from pouls where the lobsters are kept after being taken out of the pots ly the fishermen. 1 do not propose that those people shall take out it license : but they may, if they wish, keep them during the close season in ponds, which is quite a business, for instance in liarmouth, the lobsters being caught in the open season and kept in ponds antil the markets in the states are favourable for shipment. That would not lead to an abuse, as it easily would if there was no license and no check of that kind on parties taking lobsters in close as well as open seasons.

Mr. PERRY. What, did the hon. gentleman say with reference to space between the laths:

Mr. TUPPER. The regulation in general under that clanse will be that there must be a space of 13 inches between the two lourest slats on the side of every trap, box or cage. I stated that I wished the House to understand that in conseguence of representations made touching certain districts, that where the fisheries are in so bad a condition that the run will become so small as to prevent their carrying on the business, rather than prohibit the fishery there altogether, which we do not propose to do, and which is the alternative which has been suggested in Scotland, if those districts will give up the ten days of the season, as I understand one district is willing to. do, and that is why I allude to Prince Edward Island, I would rather change the season for them. Discovering that, I would by Order in Council change the season for that district and change the regulations for it. That is the proposal I make, and, if that does not meet with general acceptation, it can be reconsidered. I give in this way to two 'districts the benefit of 1 or 1 ? inches.

Mr. MeLEAN. 1 have no doubt that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in framing this Bill has hat at heart the best interests of those engaged in the lobster business, and the Bill as now presented to the House does not call for that objection on my part that it would have done if it had been introduced in its first form, or according to the existing regulations. It is necessary, in regard to the lobster indiustry, to make a distinction between the fishery in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and that of the Atlantic coast and of the coast of Newfoumtland. I might at first correct a misapprehension the Minister of Marine is under regarding the law in the State of Maine. I have taken from the American fisheries report of the year 1887, an extract of the state laws for the different states of the Union, and I find that the law in the State of Maine in 18.9 prohibited the camning and preserving of lobsters and the capture and sale of individual lobsters under $10 \frac{1}{2}$ inches long, between the list Iugust and the lst April, but no restrictions were placed on the fishery between the 1st April and the 1st August. In 1883, that law was amented so that the close season extended from the inth August to the lith November, and the capture or sale of females with spawn and of lobsters under nine inshes long was prohibited from the list April to the list August.

Mr. TUPPER. What clause was that :
Mr. MeLEAN. That was in the law of 1 s83. I did not take the number of the clanse.

Mr. TUPPER. Section $\bar{i}$ of the law of liss; says it shall be unlawful to buy, sell or possess any female, of any lohster less than $10 \underline{1}$ inches.

Mr. MeLEAN. In this Act the taking of lohsters over 9 inches long, except females with spawn, is permitted in the camning season. I call the attention of the House to this because in the New England States the fishing is very much overdone, for two reasons. In addition to the canning season, lobsters are taken there nearly the whole year round, whereas, as far as the Gulf of St. Lawrence is concerned, though we hate by law from the Ist lannary to the linth July, still in reality, owing to the fact that the Gulf is frozen over for a great portion of that time, the actual fishing season is from about the 15 th or the 20 th May to the 15th July, or about 45 days in the year is all the time that the lobster fishing is carried on in the Gulf of the st. Lawrence, taking ont stormy days when the fishermen cannot go out, ind holidays and Sundays. This year the lobster fishing season commenced about the list of Nay, which is the earliest season I have knownsince I engaged in the fishery fourteen years ago. As to the statement that lobsters are scarcer now than they were when the factories were first started, it is true to a certain extent, but the actual value of the fish taken last year was pretty nearly equal to that in the best season we ever had, which was either 1882 or 1883 . If we refer to the reports of the inspectors, we will find that in 1883 lobsters were about $\$ 4$ a case, and 130,000 cases, representing a value of $\$ 520,000$, had been taken, $\$ 1$ representing the value of the case and the cans; whereas last year, though not so many lobsters were taken, and not so many cases were packed, they represented a value of 3950,000 , or about $\$ 7.20$ it case. Deducting $\$ 130,000$ for the cases leaves the value of the lobsters packed in 1883, $\mathrm{S3} 90,0 \mathrm{~N})$. Last season 100,001 ) cases were packed. Delucting $\boldsymbol{S} 1(0),(0)$ for cases, we have the actual value of the lobsters packed, 8600,000 . So I take it that the value of the lobster fishery in Prince Edward Island, though the quantity taken may not have been so large, was as valuable as in any other season. The reports do not showthese particulars, hecause the inspectors put about the same value on the lobster from season to season. As regards the change proposed by the Minister of Marine as to the wilths between the slats in the traps, I may say that the regulations as proposed or which were in force umler the Order in Council have been admitted by the inspectors and by Commander (iondon to be impracticable and impossible to carry out, if the imlustry was to be profitable. I will read Commander Giodon's report upon this gllestion, in regated to which no man is more competent to speak. He says:

[^84]That was the state of affiairs at that time, and that has continued, notwithstanding any reports to the contrary male by the inspectors that the law was complied with. I know Commander Gordon. He called upon me when he got his commission for the protection of the lobster fisheries, and after he was sworn in he told me he was going to carry ont the regulations to the letter. I told him that in that case he had hetter tine every factory as he went along because it was impossible to carry out the regulations. We had to close up, and, ats a matter of fact, every factory that he did visit was fined. I contend now, and I have always contended, that the actual close season has never been fairly tested. From one season to another there have been extensions of time which have mate the close seasons practically untested up to the present time. I would like, myself, to see the close season strictly alhered to, and, if it was necessary for further protection for the lobster business, that the time should be shortened. I may say that my colleague and myself waited upon the Alinister with reference to having these slats from the traps put closer together, especially as regards Prince Edward Island. I am speaking of Prince Edward Island aloue, but I think what suits that Islaud will suit all parts of the Giulf of St. Lawreuce, with the exception of a small portion of the Straits of Northumberland. We suggested to the Minister that from Cape Traverse pier, around south to Cape Bear, and around East Point to North Cape, the traps be allowed to be $1 \nmid$ inches between the slats, and in consideration of his extending that favour, we would be willing to allow a shortening of the season until the 5th July. But owing to the fact that on Egmont Bay and in certain portions of the western part of the Island, the lobsters do not strike in as early as in some other portions, we suggestel that from Cape Traverse pier to North Cape, the time be made from the 1st May till the loth July. I think that while a great many fishermen will object to that regulation altogether, still, if it is found necessary by the department that further protection than the close season affords should be had, taking that part of the Island from Fast Point and around the North Sile up as far in the Straits of Northumberland as Cape Traverse, if the regulation was male of $1 \ddagger$ inches between the slats, and the time shortenel to the ath July, the fishermen would be fairly well satistied, better satisfied than they would be if the slats were retained $1 \ddagger$ inches apart, although the time was allowed to remain up to the loth July as at present. I might say that I think it is unfair to make a comparison of the Straits of Northumberland and the Culf of St. Lawrence with the coast of Newfoundland, or the Atlantic coast, or eren the coasts of cireat Britain and of Norway and Sweden. We know that for $\because l$ years, I think it is now, the lobster industry has been prosecuted in Prince Edward Island, and the fact has been quoted that people have become bankrupt and that the fishing industry is not as profitable as it appears to be. But the business varies. In some years, after a great scarcity of lobsters, we will have an abundant catch. That was the case last year, and on that account this year, and owing to the high prices of lobsters last year, a great many men have gone into the industry, and I have no doubt a great many will overdo the business. But the business will regulate itself becanse next year there will not be so many men going into it. The Straits of Northumberland and the Gulf of St. Lawrence are lookel upon as being the actual breeding ground for the lobsters, more so than either the Atlantic coast or that of Newfoundland, and in proof thereof, if the Ninister of liarine wants proof, $I$ have only to yuote this fact, which will be borne out hy every member from Prince Edward Island, that five or six years ago, when the Hon. Daniel Davies went to great expense and removed some lobster factories to the coast of Newfoundland, after four years he had exhausted that fishery and came lack and put his plant where he had been tishing ois Prince Edward Island for 20 years before ; and last year I understand that in each of his factories he put up 1,600 or 1,700 cases of lobsters. I attribute that to the fact that we find in all rocky bottoms, say, for instance, at East Point on Prince Elwaril Island, at the North Cape, and at all other places where there are rocky bottoms, the lobsters are larger in size and scarcer than on the great level parts of the Islancl. I think, also, that the coast of Newfoundland is not a breeding ground for lobsters at all, owing to the fact of the water being so very deep and the space of ground they have to fish over is very much less than it is elsewhere, because on the coasts of Prince Edward Island or the Magdalen Islands there are not over eight or ten fathoms of water. The lobsters, I believe, are extending all over that coast, and just move in at certain seasons. So far as shortening the season is concerned, I have found in my experience that lobsters do not commence to fall off in size until about the lst or ath of July, when we have an ordinary season. Now, take this season, when the lolster season commences about the lst of May : if we should have a warm summer the probability is that we would have a great many small lobsters, perhaps soft-shell lobsters, about the Ist of July. I know thatthe fishermen on the Island would rather make a concession in the way of shortening the season than to have any restrictions which would make the business unprofitable for the time in which they are fishing. To show that I am not alone in this opinion, that Prince Edward Island and the Gulf of St. Lawrence are differently situatel, so far as fishing and the means of exhausting fisheries are concerned, I will just read a report from the fisheries of Great Britain, and it is taken out of the report of the Fishery Commission of the Unitel States. It reads as follows :-
"The Fishery Commissioners in England in the years 1805 and $186{ }^{6}$ made th thorongh inspection of the crab and lobster fisheries of the English and Scottish cousts. All the principal fishing stations were visited, and from personal observations and the testimony of fishermen and dealers a very elaborate report, embodying every detail of their incestigations, was prepared and published in 187. The conclusions at which they arrived regarding the state of the fishery, and the suggestions made for its improvement are contained in the following extract from their report."
It goes on to speak of the lifferent sections, and the condition of the fish in the different sections. It says:
$\because$ It is no eass matter, therefore to compare the results of the fishing now with those which were experienced fifty or twenty-five vears ago. The take now is divided a mong a greater number of fishermen. The area of the fishery has been greatly extended. On the whole, however, we believe that we are in the right in concluding that in small fisheries, or fisheries in confined areas, there has been in every case a marked decrease of fish : while in large and exposed fisheries there has been no decrease whatever. Take, for examnle, the tisheries of the Land's End, the Lizurd and the Start. All these fisheries comprise large areas of sea bottom, all of them in exposed situations, and the powers of man have been hitherto incapable of exhausting them. But there are other fisheries in an exactly opposite position. A description will be found, for instance, in the evidence which we received at Wembury, relating to a small fishery off the Eddystone Rocks. The fish $r$ ry is contained in a few acres, and, although the situation is exposed, the area is so small that the fishermen hare been able to exhaust it. The same conclusion is true of the fisheries which are situated in confined bays, such, for instance, as that at Falmouth. The fishermen there, exposed to no bad weather, are able to pursue the fishery at every season of the year. High prices have induced them to increase the efficiency of their gear, and the gradual decay of the fishery, which over-fishing has occasioned, has compelled them to fish harder and harder to earn a livelihood."
I claim that this goes to prove that in considering a coust like that of Newfoundland the Minister of Marine and Fisherics should be very careful before he accepts even an expert's testimony on the subject, when the conditions are altogether different than those which prevailed in the Ginlf of St. Lawrence. That is why I have no faith in Mr. Neilsen's report, for although his remarks may be perfectly correct as regards Newfoundland, they do not apply to the Gulf. If there had been in Newfoundland during the past twenty years the same number of traps on the coast as there have been at Prince Edward Island and other places on the Gulf, lobster fishing in Newfoundland wonld have ceased altogether. This matter comnected with the lobster fishing industry is of very great importance to the people of Prince Edward Island, and, as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has stated, it has received a great deal of attention from them, and no regulations can be issued by the department without eliciting great interest among the people.

Mr. Mclbas.

The industry possesses as much interest to Prince Edward Island as one involving $\$ 30,000,000$ would to the whole Dominion, and the House will readily umlerstand that any action taken by the department is closely watched by our people. When the Bill was first introduced I , and those interested in this industry, strongly protested against it, because we felt that the industry could not le prosecuted with protit any longer; and when the House comes to consider the ralue of an industry amounting to $\mathbf{5 7 0 0 , ( 1 0 0 )}$ ammally to a small province like Prince Edwarl Island, it is obvious that any measure that would make it moprofitable for packers and fishermen to continue the industry would be doing serious injustice to the parties, especially if the ciovermment regulations proposed were not such as were in the interest of the business. When the report came that Mr. Neilsen hat ascertained that a lobster of 10 inches could get through a trap $\frac{21}{4}$ inches in width between the bats, we were surpriset, and my own experience has not fully carried out this view. But not having testel the matter I could not state positively at the time, and accordingly I reguested the Minister to allow the matter to stamd over until a test could be made. I found on purchasing a dead loboter in the city that a $9 \frac{1}{2}$ inch lobster could go out of a trap with slats $1+$ inches in width: that is to say, it could he pushed through such spaces. I claim that a live lohster will fo through : smaller space than you can press a dead one through. When a great many lohsters get into a trap, the large ones chrive the small ones out. I am not athe to say that the results of the tests with live lobsters are as statel, although I understam they have been carried out hy Mr. Ogden.

Mr. TUPPER. I stated to the contrary. Mr. Neilsen's tests were not borne out.

Mr. Molean. Mr. Ogilen's tests bore out what I was saying. If the Minister would say that he is prepared to establish for the Island the size $1_{\frac{1}{4}}$ inches letween the hars, taking the section I spoke of, I think the tishermen would meet him half way; and if the Minister would make the regulation now so as to meet the approbation of the fishermen and packers, it would be strictly enforcenl, and they would adhere rigidly to the close season. They always have been anxious that the Minister should make it imperative that the close season should he adhered to. That is a matter which the packers and all those engaged in the factories have been anxious should he carried out for the last four or tive years. I might go on to show that the close season is of great benefit to the lobster fishery, and that the very months we have the close season are the months which, in my opinion, are the best for lobsters to be protectell, that is to say from 15th July, in an ordinary season, to lst October. In all countries theyare protected at that time. That being the case, and the lobster packers and fishermen knowing that in July lobsters cast their shells, and that this is the principal breeiing season, and that during this periool the lobsters on the coast are smaller and fall off in 'fuality, they are satistied to even shorten the season to secure the other concessions. If the Minister makes the trap $1 \frac{1}{2}$ inches between the lower bars, so as to allow 8 -inch lobsters to escape, I do not think the industry can be carried on at a profit during our present short season, especially in view of the fact that the reports of the factories in the Guli, as well is in Prince Edward Island show that $\overline{\mathrm{D}} \mathrm{D}$ per :ent of the lobsters taken for the factories were 9 inches and under. So if you take 30 per cent off the receipts of the factory, which would be the case if 8 -inch lobsters were allowed to escape, the factory being in operation about 45 days in a year, the business would become unprofitable, and when it hecame unprofitable to the packers, it would certainly he umprofitable to the fishermen. I might also point out, as regards the fishing in the Giulf, that, owing to the absence of a market for fresh lobsters, it is impossible to exhaust the supply in that section. It must be remembered that no factories can be run unless $4,(1) K O$ lobsters are landed daily, and when the supply falls lelow that number, the factory must be closed. This wonld afford a groundwork for the department to build up the industry by stopping packing altogether, and allowing the fishery to increase from year to year until it has become profitable again. It is different where freel? fishing is carried out all the year round. We have two months in the year during which lobsters are packed, but in Maine fresh fishing goes on during the bilance of the year, and for that fishing the largest and best lobsters are taken to market. I believe these departmental regulations, if carried out in the way I hate indicated, will le satisfactory, while at the same time the packers and fishermen believe that nothing but a shortening of the season is necessary. Coming now to the yuestion of those engageal in this business being obliged to take out licenses, I may say that much dissatisfaction was expressed at the meeting of packers held in Charlottetown last spring, when they learned that they would have to pay for licenses to catch lolsters, for in their opinion lolster-fishing should be as open as any other fishing. Of course the license fee being so small, if the other concessions were made, I do not think that the packers or the fishermen would sery strongly object. I wish to point out some suggestions to the Minister with reference to the label. What the hon. gentleman expects to do by having a label is to detect those who pack out of season, and that no man would le furnished with labels to put on his cases who packs after the l巨th July. While it may serve that purpose I believe it will he an injury in another way. At present every man who has been packing lobsters for any length of time has his brand pretty well established either in the American or English market, and now when these labels will be put on all these cases in the future, tealers on the other side will look upon it that these lobsters have been packed under the inspection of the Dominion Covernment, and they will all be put in the same category and all be judged alike. I do not wish to detain the House longer now, but I will have something to say on the Bill in committee.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Before the House goes into committee on this Bill I wish to say a few words. I listenel to the statement of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries very carefully, and he gave us some very interesting information, and so far as some portions of his Bill are concerned I think they will meet with universal approval. So far as other portions are concerned 1 wish to submit to him that, perhaps, we are legislating unwisely, and we are certainly legislating somewhat in the dark.

His proposition is based, in the first piace, upon the assumption that the lohster fisheries are being depleted in the Maritime Provinces and that they recuire the protection which is proposel, the system of licenses and the close season. Of course it is necessary for us to ascertain whether that fact is correct. The hom. gentleman was kind enough to lay some statistics on the Table showing the sieht of lobsters, and my hon. friend from King's (Mr. McLean) referred to the yield so far as Prince Edward Island is concerned. I did not understand, however, that he referred to the yield of 1891. As a matter of fact I find that for the last five or six years, the year 1891 hats shown a larger take than any of the previons five years in the whole Maritime Prorinces. And speaking with special reference to Prince Edward Island, I find that there were in the year 1891, 3,600,006 one-pound cans packed at a value of $\mathbf{S . 3 1 3 , ( \mathrm { KK } ) \text { , which was }}$ larger than for the years $1890,1889,1888$, $155^{\circ}$ and 1886, and as large as in the years 1884 and 1883. Therefore, taking that period from 1883 to 18:1) the returns go to show that the fisheries there are not being depleted, and the same would appar from the total yield of the provinces. If we take the total yield in calue of the lolster fisheriessince 188 , we find that in 1891 the number of pounds of lobsters taken was $27 .(1000,0 \% 0$. valued at $82.2020,0 \%$, which was larger than in the year 1890, 1859 or 188s. The eatch in ! 85.5 was about the same as in 1891. There are nothing in the figures from 185.7 to 1891 , so far as the yieh of the whole Maritime Provinces, or the special yieh of Prince Edward Island is concernel, to show that the tishery is being in any way depleted. If that is the fact I wish to impress up, the hon. gentleman this point: In my humble opinion, we should interfere just as little with this trade ats is absolutely necessiary. Leave the trade alone, it will regulate itself, those who have the money invested in it will take care not to use their fishery in such a way as to destroy the goose that lays the gollen ege. It is only when yon establish the position that the fishery is depleted that you justify legislative interference with this industry.

Mr. Tupper. Hear, hear.
Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That being the case let us see what the remedy has been. The hom. gentleman sees that in Prince Edward Island greater attention is paid to this question than in, perhaps, any other province.

Mr. TUPPER. I would like to know whether the hom. gentleman wrould go further than these figures he has quoted and say, that in his own opinion there was no depletion of the lobster fishery and that it is in as gooll condition to-day as ever:

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.). There has been, but as my hon. friend from Kings (Mr. McLean) points out, there is no tixed depletion from year to year. Some years they increase, and other years they are less. It depends upon circumstances which the hon. gentleman does not know, and which the scientists have not yet discovered. I will acknowledge, however, that the size of the lobsters has decreased very much. As regards the close season the hon. gentleman knows that in no part of the Dominion is there such a consensus of opinion in farour of the close season as in Prince Edward Island. The people there have been asking for it for years, and the contention they have submitted to the Minister year after year is this: That the elastic close season which enables the Minister from time to time to extend it a week or a fortnight or 20 days has been the curse of the fisheries. The people of Prince Edward Island are at one with him in his proposition to have a close season, and to have an arbitrary time fixed which the discretion of the Minister shall not enlarge or diminish. So far as the Bill lays down that arbitrary time we are in perfect unison with the Minister. Personally, I camot speak as to the dates mentioned in the Bill, but I helieve that they commend themselves to those interested in the business. That being the case, I want to submit to the consideration of the hon. gentleman the following facts. Mr. Neilsen is a gentleman who is giving his time and attention to this husiness and whose opinions are worthy of very great weight. But neither Mr. Neilsen nor anybody else has yet been able to master this subject on that his conclusion should he embodied in an Act of Parliament. The fishermen thenselves camot tell yon what is the reason of the increase or decrease from year to year. We are now only in the experimental stage of this science, and 1 submit that we should be very careful in our legis. lation, and not leyislate beyond our knowledge. I sulmit to the hon. gentleman that if he passes his law this year in enacting an arbitrary close season, and gives that a chance, and sees what the result of that arbittary close scason will he ; if he fimes that at the end of one or two seasons it is not sutficient, that the lobsters are being destroyed, aud that further legislation is necessary, if he comes down to the Honse 1 am sure there will be a manimous desire to strengthen his handis in any proper direction. I do not think it is desirable that this industry should be hampered hy those engagei in it heing obliged to take out licenses and being placed more or less in the hamls of local ofticers, and liable to fine and penalty, and having their business interfered with in the mamer suggested, until the Minister or his officers have so mastered the sulject that we will know exactly what we are legislating about. The hon. gentleman was kind enough to give us the opinions of some scientific men in other parts of the world on this sulject. He real us theopinion of that eminent pisciculturist, Prof. Buckliand, of England, who was appointed a commissioner on the crab) and lobster fisheries of Norway in 1885. The hon, gentleman will remember that the same gentlenan was appointed, in 188 -, to enquire into the lobster fisheries of Norway and England. Associated with him was Spencer Walpole, Esy., and they submitted a joint report. in which they held that while the landlock bays and harbours were depleted by overfishing, there was no evidence to show that the sea coast fisheries were being depleted at all. At page 11 of this report, they say :

> "The whole of the Cornish evidence may, in fact, be summed up in the sentence that the fisheries in bays require protection, but that the large fisheries off headlands or in deep water need no protection from the legisiature."

Then, on page 12, the report goes on :

[^85]Which railway: hare afforded for bringing the fish to market, have attracted more fishermen to the pursuit, and have induced them to follow the crabs and lobsters into much deeper water than formerly. It is no very easy matter, therefore, to compare the results of the fishing now with those which were experienced 50 or 25 years ago. The take now is divided among a greater number of fishermen. The urea of the fishery has been largely extended. On the whole, howerer, we belisve that we srein the right in concluding that in small fisheries, or fisheries in confined areas, there has been in every case a marked decrease of fish: while in large and exposed fisheries there has been no decrease whatever. Take, for example, the fisheries off the Land's End, the Lizard, and the Start. All these fisheries comprise large areas of sea bottom, all of them are in exposed situations, and the powers of man have been hitherto incapable of exhausting them.'
This report is from one of the most distinguished men in this branch of piscienlture, and it is made after a great deal of labour and the taking of a great deal of evidence. He shows that, while it is tasy to fish out the small bays or harbours in two or three seasons, the shoals of lobsters come from deep water, and it does not seem probable at all that they can be exinausted. He goes on to speak of suggestions for improvement, and, at page 13, says:
"As regards the lobster fishery, three suggestions have been made to us for its improvement, viz., the institution of a gauge, the enactment of a close season, and the prohibition of the sale of berried lobsters, but the suggestion which has found most universal favour is the institution of a gauge. In Cornwall and Devonshire. in Yorkshire and Northumberland, the fishermen have, almost without exception. suggested that no lobster should be sold under a length of about 8 incles. The same recommendation was made to us by the great fish merchants who are established at Hamble and by the great salesmen in Billingagate market. The lobster, it must be stated, is not measured in the same way in all parts of the country. On the northeast coast it is usual to measure it from the tip of the beak to the end of the body or 'barrel.' At Billingsgate, at Hamble and on the whole of the coasts of Devonshire and Cornvall the lobster is measured from the tip of the beak to the end of the tail. On the north-east coast of England it was suggested to us that no lobster should be taken under 4 inches in the barrel. In the rest of England the almost unanimous recommendation was that no lobster should be takea under 3 inches in length."
He speaks of the canses which in some parts of Fingland have led to a decrease in the fisheries, and points out what these cuases are, none of which exist in Canarla. Large quantities of the ova of lobsters are used there for culinary purposes, and of course nothing of that kind exists in Canada. Leaving the lobster fisheries of England, he turns his attention to those of Norway; and let us see what has been the course of legislation in that country. On page 15 he says:
"The matter, in fact, has been before the Norwegian Parliament for three years running. 'During the last session of the Storthing', Mr. Jones writes, 'a royal proposition was laid before it,' that it should 'be unlawful at any time to possess, sell, bus or receive lobsters under 8 inches in length, as well as lobsters in spawn.' The rejection of this amendment was, however, recommended by the committee appointed to report upon it, on the ground that those best acquainted with the subject failed to recognize its necessity, and, further, that the enforcement of the provisions of the proposed amendment would be attended with much difficulty; that from the statistical facts before the committee there was no evidence of a diminution of the supply of lobsters of late, and that consequently the circumstances did not warrant the adoption of the extraordinary regulation proposed, which would be jugtifiable only when there was a prospect that without such zestrictions the fishery in question would materially suffer."
I think that is a very good conclusion, and it is based on very good reasons; and if the same facts exist here, I think we would be justified in coming to the same conclusion. The report concludes by recommending the adoption of the 8 -inch gange, and the result of this recommendation was that an Act was passed in England.

Mr. TUPPER. That is practically the sugges. tion here.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) But they did not recommend that the lobster fisheries of Fingland should he placed under license. They said that would he resisted by the fishermen as an umecessary interference with their trade and hasines.s.

Mr. TUPI'ER. That is the law to day, the 8 inch gauge.

Mr. D.AVIFS (P.E.I.) The gathge was enacted by Parliament. The Imperial statute provided substantially that $x$ inches in length, measured from the end of the beak to the tip of the tail when the lobster is pressed out flat, should be the gauge. That is the only regulation the British Parliament alopted. They left the fisheries entirely free, becanse the evidence showed that the fisheries along the deep-sea coasts were not depleted, and that the powers of man could not exheust them; and they agreed with the conclusion of the Norway commission that imless you can prove that these fisheries are in langer of heing destroyed, you are not justified in hampering those engaged in them with chose umnecessary regulations. Isulmit that the hon. gentleman has not heen able to show by experience, what size of lolisters will go through the 11 inch space between the slats.

Mr. TLPPPER. We have.
Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Sou have Mr. Neilsen's opinion ohtained in Newfoundland. I donot accept that. The hom. member for King s has shown from an experiment of his own that Mr. Neilsen's opinion is erroneons: and before you enact a hard and fast regulation of this kind, which may prejudicially affect the industry, you must he absolutely sure of your facts: there can be no reason for legislating in a hurry here. We all agree that close season should be had. Fishermen, legislators and everybody are agreed on that point, and let us adopt that, and see what its adoption will result in. But let us interfere as little with the hasiness as possible, for business men know hetter how to regulate their business than do legislators. I will not discuss the details of the Bill, but the hon. gentleman must see that if he issues this license it will work very awkwardly. It places the whole industry in the hands, not of the department, because there would not le perhaps so much complaint about that, but in the hands of the local ofticials and sulordinates who can harass, worry and amoy at their sweet will; and there is nothing a man engaged in business, and whose husiness is limited to a few days, rislikes so much as to be: hurried and annoyed by the unnecessary interference of some petty jack in office. He wants to be left alone and ought to be left alone, except in so far as the necessities of the case alsolutely reguire and justify the interference of Parliament. It is agreed that we should interfere to the extent of having a close season, hut there is no consensus of opinion that we should interfere further. On the contrary, the large majority of business men wish to le left alone except in that one respect. I would urge on the hon. gentleman, particularly as he does not propose to bring that clanse into force this year, not to press it now, but to take this season for the purpose of experimenting and ascertaining with certainty just what length and size of fish will go through the space he proposes for these laths. Wie are asked to legislate on insufficient data. If the fishermen have notice of the hon. gentleman's intention to legislate in this direction at some future time, they can try experiments, and the otficers of the department can try experiments during the coming summer, and then we will be in a better position to legislate next session. I would ask him not to-impose these licenses, but to confine his Bill to an arbitrany close season.
Mr. KENNY. If I justly appreciate the argument of the hon. gentleman, he is satistied with all the provisions of the bill except that one which relates to a license. In fact, he congratulated the Minister upon the success which has attended his individual efforts, and those of his ofticers to protect this important industry. The license, the hon. gentleman must remember, does not concern the fishermen but the packers, and in the course of his remarks he pointed out to us that in his opinion there is no necessity for this legislation for the protection of the lobster fishery, becanse in the Island of Prince Edward, which is so much concerned in this matter, there has been no diminution of the fishery.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the hon. gentleman will allow me to correct him, I said that last year's catch showed there had had been no depletion of the fishery because it was larger than the previous five years.

Mr. KENNY. The hon. gentleman went further than that. He gave us in proof of that statement the condition of the fisheries from 1883 to 1891. I desire to point out to the House that if that is the opinion which the hon. gentleman holds to-day, it was not his opinion in 1887, when the lobster fishery question was before the House. He has advised us that we should le absolutely certain alout our facts before we deal with this question. I tind on lonking back to the Hansered of 1887, that Mr. Flym, who then represented the County of Richmond, Nova Scotia, moved for certain correspondence comnected with the lobster fisheries in the Province of Nova Scotia ; and, as was very natural when any reference was made to the lobster fishery, the representatives of Prince Edward Island generaily took part in that debate. The junior member for Queen's-I mention this to show how different the riews which hon. gentlemen entertain to-lay are to the opinions they entertained in 1887-is reported to have said :

[^86]Mr. KENNY. That does not change the fact that 1887 was one of the years the hon. gentleman selected when he quoter the whole period from 1883 to 1891. Let me read what the hon. gentleman himself stated. He stid :
"I am glad the hon. gentleman has brought this matter to the notice of the House as it is a very important one to the Maritime Provinces. I am very glad to learn from bim that the fishery is maintained as well as it is in his province, and wish I could say the same for my province. The lobster fishery in my province which is very valuable, is gradually becoming diminished. The lobsters are beconing smaller to such an extent that some of the manuffacturers do not think it worth while to keep open at all."
Yet the hon. gentleman has made the statement here this afternoon that there is no danger of a depletion of this important industry in his own prorince, because the statistics from 1883 to 1891 , which inclute the very period to which I have referred, show that there is no diminution. I remember another debate which took place on this industry in the sessions of 1889-90. I remember distinctly that there was a great conflict of opinion among the representatives of the different sections of the Maritime Irovinces, and I think we came to the conclusion pretty manimously that the regulations laid down by the department, even at that day, were in the general interests of the imlustry. The hon. gentleman seems to drawia distinction between the position of the packers and that of the fishermen. The fisherman is charged no license to-day. The license of sis per ammm is to be imposed on the packers, and I am bound to say, from the information which has reached me, the Act of last year, in so far as it concerned the packers, was satisfactory, and they do not desire any special change in the legislation. That is the opinion I have derived from those engaged in the business.
Mr. IAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman speak of the regulations proposed last December as being the last?

Mr. KENNY. No: I speak of the Act of last year. No change in legislation has really been asked by the packers, so far as I am informed. Now, referring to that delate of past years it was shown conclusively that a close season was necessary, that it should be strictly enforced, that the slightest deviation from it should be pmished, that it was a guestion whether we should give the Minister in charge of the department any discretionary power, that the more strictly the regulations were adhered to, the better it would be and the more it would be in the interests of loth the fishermen and the packers. I think in one of these debates it was pointed out that, in Prince Edward Island, the indications were that the fishery was diminishing, and I am glad indeed to hear such is not the case, but I think it is largely due to the fact that the regulations which were imposed by the department have been strictly and closely adhered to, and I am glad to find this afternoon that on a Bill of so much importance there is a very general consensus of opinion that it is in the interests of the fishery and of those engaged in it. The only fault which might be found with the Bill is in regard to the matter of insisting that the packers shall be subjected to a license. I am glad that the Bill receives such general assent.

Mr. WELSH. The hon. gentleman has referred to some words that I uttered in this House in 1887 in reference to this lobster business. Every word I stated in 1887 was correct, and the hon. gentleman approved of it at the time, oir at all events he never contradicted it.

Mr. TUPPER. He says it is correct now.

Mr. WELSH. It required that a close season should be strictly enforced and that has been done, and, by the returns, we find the lobster fishery is increasing and not being depleted, and until there is some evidence that the fishery is growing less I should object to any interference with the trade of the lobster packers. My hon. friend the member for King's (Mr. McLean) is fully posted in this matter, and any statement he makes on the floor of this House I an prepired to stand by. He has a great deal of experience in it, and I also agree with the remarks that have fallen from my colleague for Queen's (Mr. Davies), and would oppose any interference with the rights of the lobster packers excepting in enforcing this close season. I think the proposal to impose a license is an interference with the rights of the fishermen; and then, as to the Stamp Act, we know what has happenel through stamp Acts leeing enforced on the people before this. If you are going to bring that in again on our mercantile people, it will le rather dangerons. It has a tendency also to misrepresent the facts. You puta stamp on these packages, and it goes abroad at once that these lobsters wert packed under the inspection of the (iovernment of Canada and that they were all good. That is a very dangerous and a very wrong principle. If the lobster packers are to be gualitied with a s. license fee I will not object, but yet I think the Government should not impose that tax. I think the foverument is quite right in euforcing the close season, but I think the heary fine of $$ 400$ for placing the laths at 13 inches distance requires more consideration. I agree with my colleague that it would be well to let this matter stand over for another year that it might be better considered.
Mr. PERRY. I think the lobster industry in the lower provinces is of such importance that the House can profitably spend g few hours in discussing it. I was surprised to hear the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Kenny) declare that the senior member for Queen's County (Mr. Davies) had made a serious mistake when he spoke in 1887 in one strain in regard to the lobster fishery in Prince Edward Island and had now spoken in a different strain. I deny that. My hon. friend was quite correct. The year 1887 was the last year that showed a depletion of the lobster catch around the shores of Prince Edward Islaud, and since that the catch has increasel, because the regulations have been enforced. As far as the fishermen themselves and the packers have been able since 1887 , they have enforced the regulations which were not enforced before, and the number of lobsters caught around the shores of Prince Edward Island have consequently increased. I an not going to repeat what has been so well expressed ly the member for King's County (Mr. McI.ean), and the member for Queen's County (Mr. Davies). The member for King's County is an expert in this matter. He thinks that an inch between these laths is sufficient, but the Minister thinks it should be an inch and a half. My opinion is that people who have hundreds of thousands of dollars invested in this industry should be the best judges. I suppose the Minister himself never went fishing for lobsters and knows nothing about it except what other people tell him. His information is gained at second hand, and is not to be compared with knowledge possessed by my hon. friend from Queen's County. There is a strong decermination on the part of the packers of Prince Edward Island in favour of maintaining a close season. I do not know why there should be a difference made between the lireaith of the laths on one side and on the other. I contend that the lobsters are all about the same size, so that a lobster under 9 inches on the north side of the island is no stouter and no smaller than a lobster of the same measurement on the east side of the island. I do not see the necessity for making a difference between the two, though I think they strike earlier the part of the Island from Miminegash down than they do on the east side from West Point to Cape Traverse. I think it was a step in the right direction to extend the time there. There is no comparison between the catching of small lobsters in bays and rivers and the catching of small lobsters along the Gulf shores. In bays and rivers they are in smooth water, and there is no hurry to get away irom a storm, and they have time to take out any small lobster that they find in the trap and put it back in the water. There is a wide difference between that and the fishermen who are fishing on the Gulf shore. We have been told here by men of experience, we have been told by the member for King's County (Mr. Lean), we have been told by other gentlemen, that out of the two months now allowed to fish by the regulations, that is from the 15th May to the 15th July. there are only about 40 fishing days. Taking out the Sundays and the holidays, the stormy days must he included to make up the 60 days. I can tell you that on many occasions these fishermen risk their lives to go out and catch a few lobsters ; they are obliged to do it, for they have no other way of living. When the boat pitches in the waves and the wind blows hard, they have $n$ time to watch and see whether the lolster is shorter or smaller than the size prescribed. I believe that taking everything into account the fishermen have carried out the regulations, so far as size is concerned, as well as could be reasonably expected ly the Government or by the lepartment; and having done that, I think they rather deserve credit and protection than to be embarrassed by such regulations as they will not be able to carry out. Now, the fishermen are not rowdies, they are not men inclined to break the law, in fact they are a very civil class of people and they would be standing in their own light if they broke the rules or regulatious. Why do you want to pass such rules and regulations as will drive the ten thousand people on the Prince Edward shore engaged in the fishing industry and helping to swell the population of this country-why do you want to shut them out and send them off to the United States? Keep them there, and the way to keep them there is to give them a chance of earning a living. Now, with respect to this license, I do not object to the amount of $$ 5$; I would not even object to $$ 50$, so far as the fee is concerned, but I object to the principle of the license. The Minister has not shown this House any reason why this fee should be paid. He wants to reserve to himself the power of saying who shall have a right to fish and who shall not. If I am not a friend of the Government, if I am not a friend of the Minister, I may not get a license, I am altogether in his hands. Is that the way to encourage the fishing industry? I do not understand why the Minister has not shown reasons why this license should be given. Let me tell him that it requires the whole winter for a man to prepare limself to carry on the lobster fishery around those shores. Supposing he begins in January to get ready, in April has completed his sails, looats and traps, and has, perhaps, inrested 85,000 or $$ 10,100$ in this industry; he then applies to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries: the Minister may know nothing about him, but somebody on the shore, somebody else of jealous spirit, will write to the department and say: Don't give this gentleman a license, he is a nuisance, he canrassed strongly against the Government on election days. Now, these things have been done; I know they have heen carried out in a different shape, but they will be carried out in this shape. They have been carriad out in the matter of the fishing bounties. I know in my own clistrict, in the township where I live, there are 12 or 15 fishermen who made application to the department for their bounty for last year, and they have been refused, and they are all Liberals. I am not aware of one Conservative who was refused. Is that not carrying the powers given to the department a little too far? They will be carried out in the same way under this license regulation. Instead of compelling men to carry out this license regulation and throwing impediments in the way of the fishermen opening out channels that will enable them to pursue an honest livelihood, the Government ought to make their lot easier. I am totally opposed to the principle of the license. The Ninister might as well ask me to pay a license for farming so niany acres of land.
Mr. TUPPER. The Bill does not propose anything of the kind. We do not propose to ask the fishermen to pay $$ 1$; it is the packer.
Mr. PERRI: If the packer does not invest his money in that industry, the fisherman will not engage in fishing. I understand that well ; perhaps the Minister understands it too, but he does not wish to say so. That fee of sis must come out of the fishermen. The stamps that the packer has to pay for to put on the lox, must also come out of the fishermen in the end. That is no guarantee that the lobster is of good fuality, it merely goes to show that the lobster has been caught in a lawful way.
It being six oclock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. PERRI. When the House rose I was offering some remarks with respect to the license which the Minister of Mariue and Fisheries proposes to impose on lobster packers. I am totally opposed to the license system, not so much as to the anount of the fee but as to the principle involved. I to not know what the hon. gentleman expects to gain by imposing licenses on packers, and I observe from the Bill that these licenses will have to be renewed from year to year. I fail to see the sense of establishing these licenses. If the hon. Minister expects to limit the number of those who will obtain permits to pack lobsters, then there will be injustice done. A person may be prepared to invest $$ 10,000$ capital in the packing business, and the Minister may come to the conclusion that there is no room for him and may refuse hinr a license. Surely in that case injustice would be done. If the hon. gentleman does not intend to limit the number of packers, what is the use of the license? We have not yet learned who is the person to be charged with issuing these licenses. It may be a fishery guardian or a special officer to be appointed. At all events, this Bill gives absolute power respecting fishery regulations to the Minister, or his deputy, or his ofticers, as to the parties who shall oltain licenses for lolster fishing. A man might be prepared to go into the business and have both boats built, stages erected, three sets of boilers, and other apparatus secured, and when all these preparations have been completed the (iovernment might refuse him a license. The applicant could do nothing, and there would be a hardship com. mitted. If the Minister is of the opinion that it is necessary to issue licenses in order that the number of packers might not become too numerous, he is mistaken. The people of our provinces who engage in that industry are not willing to invest capital in it with the prospect of loss, and are well aware that when the business becomes over-crowded it will be conducted at a loss. As I am a free trader in every sense of the term, I am a free trader in this matter. Instead of harassing packers by adopting a license system, we should encourage every man, who possesses courage and capital to invest his money in developing the fisheries. We know it is a risky business. We are aware that storms may sweep along the coast and destroy valuable property, including the traps and other appliances used in fishing operations. The license fee of $$ \mathbf{s}$ is payable every year. It must ultimately come out of the pockets of the producers, the men who catch the fish, because he will receive so much less per hundred for the lobsters than they would receive if this penalty or license fee were not imposed on the packers for whom they were fisting. Then there is to be a license fee of 2 cents on every case holding 48 one. pound tans of lobsters. The certificate to be placed on the can does not show the quality of the lobster, whether 1st, End or 3rd, but it only shows that the lobster was caught lawfully. But it is well kuown that if the tish is not taken lawfully, the law is violated and the offender is liable to a penalty. It is useless to issue a certificate to show that it was caught lawfully and not contrary to the law. The license says:

> "Such licenses shall only be granted after an applica-: tion in writing has been filed with the nearest fishery offeer, or collector of customs, by ihe owner of the traps, nets or other devices, setting forth then number and description of such traps, nets or otherdevices, and after the issue of the license has, been authorized by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries."
> This license states positively the number of traps which the man receiving the license is permitted to use. Suppose a man got a license for a thousand traps, and he subsequently had one over that number, he would be violating the regulations and would be liable to a penalty.
> Mr. TUPPER. The license has nothing to do with the traps.

Mr. PERRY. I see it so stated in the Bill.

Mr. TUPPER. Not in the reprinted Bill, and the first Bill has been considerably amended. The hom. gentleman will take the statement from me that the license only applies to packers and not to traps.

Mr. PERRY. I have only one Bill before me, and if the bill has been reprinted it should he distributed to members. I am not in favour of the proposed license. It is not required, it will remedy no evil, and I believe it is objectionable, because it places special powers in the hands of the Minister and his department. The provision that a certificate of the value of two cents is to le placed on every box of lobsters is a farce, and can do no service. I repeat that this certificate will not be any guide as to the quality, and the penalty imposed for taking fish out of season is in itself sufficient protection. 1 am aware that when the lobster packers met in Charlottetown last winter, they unanimonsly passed strongly worded resolutions, and no people can know the requirements of the business better than those men who have their money invested therein. They were unanimously opposed to the license system, but they were earnestly in favour of a close stason. Since the Minister has relaved certain provisions of the regulations our people are carrying out strictly the close season, and since that time it has beenclearly established that the guantity of lolsters has been increased and that the catch last year was better than the catch five years ago. This yoestoshow that instead of the packers destroying the Iohster fisheries they areacting inamannertoprotect them. Having done that, I say they ought to get the protection which the Govermment is entitled to give them, and they ought to be encouraged and supported and every facility afforled to them, instead of having every obstacle thrown in their way. I am favourable to the close season. I believe our packers and fishernen are willing to stick closely to the regulations of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in that respect. They have tried to carry out the close season as far as they could, but I think it is wrong and unjust and unfair to impose upon them rules and regulations and penalties which they are not able to comply with. I say that the license fee, small as it is, is a penalty which inflicts a hardship upon the petckers, and ultimately on the catchers of the fish. I say it is not required, hecause under a license system the Minister shall have power to say who may engage in the industry, and he will be able to say Peter shall have a license but Paul shall not. That is an injustice, and I do not see any other object to it than to add to the number of the staff who are already representing the Govermnent welfare there, and who are prepared to dance attendance on them at every beck. I do not say that that is the intention of the Minister, but I merely point out that these things can be done. There should be no restriction which will prevent people who wish to invest their capital in an important industry in this country. If a man is willing to invest $$ 10,060$ capital in this industry and is ready to feed two or three hundred fishermen along the shores of the Lower Provinces, he should have every facility to do so and should not neel to seek a license. We know, Sir, that the lobster fishery is not even so well protected as either the cod or mackerel fishery. We know that few of the appliances which they need to carry on this industry come here duty free. They are met in the United States with a heavy duty on the can, when for want of a market elsewhere they are obliged to send their lobsters across the line. That being the case

I say that if the Govermment is patriotic and takes a proper view of the case they will place no further obstacles in the way of the men who have their capital invested, and the hard working fishermen to make a living out of this industry. On the contrary it should be the effort of the Government to give every facility for the business and to show themselves anxious to encourage trade into this country. I contend that these regulations are an instance of another restriction which they are placing on trade, and the Bill introlucel here last year to prevent seining by our people within three miles of the shore was another example. The Minister drove the thin end of the welge in then, and now he is putting the whole wedge in and clinching it on the other side with a mallet. In my opinion, if this legislation is carried into operation a great many of the lobster packers will have to close up.

Mr. BURNS. Mr. Speaker, any measure that has for its object the protection of such an important industry as the lolster fishery is one that should receive, and no doubt will receive, every consideration at the hands of this Honse. I have formed a very favourable opinion of the Bill as proposed to be amended, from the explanations given by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I think that it has not only for its object the protection of the lobster industry, but that it also has within it the elements that will give protection to the fishermen. The opinions that I had formed of the Bill have not been in any way changed by the observations addressed to the House by the gentlemen who have spoken on the other side. What are the main features of this Bill: First, there is a proposition to license the factories, then to tix the space between the laths of the lohster traps, and next the imposition of a fee of $\mathbf{8 5}$. Now Sir, to my mind the placing of this fishery, so far as the packers are concerned, under a license system, will go a long way towards providing for proper supervision of the packing. The fee which it is proposed to impose is a nominal one. It is a mere trifle and camnot be regarded, as was stated by the hon. gentleman who has last spoken, in any way as a tax. Neither can the fee which it is proposed to impose for the stamp, or for stencilling the case, be considered as a tax ; rather it can be said that the payment of this nominal amount will tend to enhance the value of the products of the packers. I think it must be apparent to every person who has given the trade any thought whatever, that the calue of the lobsters packed will be considerably enhanced in the markets to which they may be sent, by reason of this stamp, which will go to show that the lobsters were packed under Government supervision. The advantage which certainly would be derived, would far more than compensate for the mere nominal outlay that would be required from the packers. My hon. friend from Prince (Mr. Perry) said, or he led me to suppose, that he believed there was a duty on the tin that was used by the packers. My knowledge of the tariff leads ine to say that not only is the tin free, but the twine that is used in the construction of the traps is free, so that my hon. friend's argument on this score has no foundation whatever. As regards the second feature of the Bill, the proposition to regulate the space between the laths, as a matter of fact
' $t$ is proposed to make very little if any alteration n the regulations already in force. The present regulation-at all events if not established by regulation it is established by practice-is to leave $1+$ inches space which is the width of the lath.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) There is no regulation on that.

Mr. BURNS. I say that the actual practice is to leave a space of 17 inches which is the space of the lath. It is not proposed to interfere in any way with that practice by this Bill, except to the extent that if the fishermen choose to adhere to that practice they must, as stated by the hon. Minister, consent to a reduction of ten days in the time of fishing. But if, on the other hanl, they wish to adopt the space provided ly the Bill, that is, $1 \frac{1}{2}$ inches, then they can have the full period allowerl for fishing under the present regulations. so that I do not see that any evil results whatever can follow from the operation of the Bill in this particular. As regards the falling off of the fishery, from my knowlerlge of the trade-and I speak from a New Brunswick standpoint-it is quite evident that a very serious falling offi, indeed, took place for many years. Take the statistics read by the hon. Minister to the House this afternoon, and what do you find: In 1883, the number of lobster traps was something like 53,000 , the eatch of which was $4,000,000$ cans $:$ in 1884 , the number of thaps was $105,(000$, with a catch of $5,(060,000$ cans ; in 1885 there were $127,0(0)$ traps, with a catch of about $5,000,000$ cans. The record of those three years goes to show that the arerage produce of each trap was about 50 cans. In 1886, with a larger number of traps, 139,000. there was a decreased output amounting to only $4,600,000$ cans. In $1887^{7}$ there were 118,000 traps, while the output was decreased to $2,000,000$ cans. In 1888, with 84,000 traps, it had decreased to $1,3+3,000$ cans. Now, institute a comparison letween 1883 and 1888 , and you find that with practically the same number of traps in the 2 years, 52,000 in 1883 , caught $4,(1000,000$ cans, whereas 84,000 traps in 1888 canght $1,800,000$ cans. In 1889 the number of traps had risen to 93,000 , while the catch amounted to only $1,800,000$ cans. In 1890 with 118,000 traps, the catch was $2,365,000$ cans. In 1891, with 140,000 traps, the catch was $3,130,000$ cans.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Hear, hear.

Mr. BURNS. I will tell the hon. gentleman from my knowledge of the trade the cause of the increase in 1890 and 1891. It was due to the fact that in $188{ }^{\circ}$ and 1888 and previous years the fishery had hecome so unproductive by reason of the falling off in the catch that many people abandoned the business, and the department were under the necessity of more strictly enforcing the regulations as to close time.
Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) On the contrary, they enlarged the time last year.
Mr. BURNS. That was only in one district.
Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) In Prince Edward Island.
Mr. BURNS. The hon. gentleman must not suppose for a moment that Prince Edward Island has a monopoly of the whole lobster business. The lobster output in the Province of New Brunswick will compare very favourably, I think, with that of Mr. Berrs.

Prince Edward Island. Now, Sir, if owing to the increased catch and owing to the greater profitableness of the business the number of factories will be increased to the same extent as before, we shall find that unless something is done such as is now proposed, the same state of affairs that existed a number of years ago will return. The falling off of the fishery was due not only to over-fishing and to the extended open time, but also largely to the fact that small lobsters in immense numbers and also berried lolsters were caught. I do not see that this Bill will impose any ha:dship at all on those engaged in the industry, while it will tend to protection which is very important, and also to make the business more profitable; therefore I will support the measure. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has, I am pleased to say, shown every disposition to meet the riews of those who are interested in the trade, and who spoke for the constituencies more particularly interested. As a result of the representations made to him and of the interviews had with him, he has reduced the fee of 550 , at first proposed, to the nominal sum of 5. He has also made other important changes, and on the whole, speaking from at New Brunswick standpoint and from my knowledge of the trade, I am sure that this Bill, on going into operation, will be productive of very good results indeed to the lobster fishery.

Mr. WHITE (Shellurne). I desire to express my approval of the present Bill, or at all events of the lolster clanses of it, and my appreciation of the care that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has taken in meeting the views of the fishermen as nearly as he possibly could, consistently with the protection of this very important industry. The hon. Ninister stated that the value of the lobsters caught during the year 1890 was $\$ 1,648,344$, which was $\$ 163,856$ greater than the value of the catch in the previous year. But we also find from the reports which have been circulated by the Department of Fisheries that during that year, 1890 , no less than 554, e 41 traps were used in the catching of these lobsters, and that the persons employed in the business of lobster fishing and canning numbered $21,44 \overline{5}$, without taking into consideration the persons who built the boats and the cameries and who prepared the traps and the cases for the lobsters. So that you will see that this is a very important industry, and one which should not be interfered with unnecessarily, and which should at the same time le protected from destruction. Now it strikes me that there cannot le very much doubt that the lobster fishery is being depleted. We find at all events that on the coast of the United States it is almost entirely destroyed, and I think that the statistics which have been presented to the House ly the hon. member for Gloucester go very strongly to prove that the lobster fishery in New Brunswick, and the other provinces, are also very considerably diminished. The hon. members for Queen's (Messrs. Davies and Welsh) who appear at present to think that the lobster fishery is not being depleted, argued in 1887 exactly the contrary, and gave as evidence the fact that the lobsters were very much smaller than they had been. That was the only argument they put forward at that time to show the probable destruction of the tishery, and if it was good then it is good now. I think that the increase in the catch of the lobsters is not at all owing to the increased guantity of the lobsters, but to the increase in the number of people employed in catching them. We must remember that the price has increased, and conserquently there is a greater inducement to catch them. Hon. gentlemen hare discussed this matter as if there were no regulations at all at present. I maintain that the regulations which this Act proposes to put in force are really more farourable to the lolister tishermen than those at present imposer and that they also will be more effective. The objects which this Bill aims at accomplishing and which are necessary for the protection of the fisheries are three in number. They are, first the size of the lobster, then the protection of the berried lobster, and lastly the close season. After reading the various statements sent in here by the fishery officers, by the loloster fishermen, and by the packers, it is quite clear that the present regulations with regard to the size of the lobsters have not been put in force. It is quite clear that it has heen almost impossible to prevent the constant and continued violations of these regulations, and almost every speaker who suppoited the Bill has stated the fact that in all the districts these regulations have been set at naught. I think the suggestion made ly Mr. Neilsen that the distance between the slats in the traps should he made larger so as to enalsle the small lohisters to escape is, perhaps, the only effective way ley which we can prevent fishermen catching lolsters which are too small. With regard to the berried lobster, the present regulations. I think, impose a fine for the catching of the berried lohsters. It has leen found that that regulation has been of no avail whatever. The fishermen are in the habit of scraping off the eggs from the lobster, and then carrying it to the factory, and it is almost impossible, without looking very closely, to discover whether it was a berried lobster or not. I believe, however, the Minister of Marine intends to provide that incubators shall lee kept at the vaious establishments and that the eggs or spawn shall be preservel. Now we come to the question of a close season. In the county I have the honour to represent there is a great deal of discussion with regard to the close season. Very many maintain that a close season as contemplated by this Bill is exactly what we ought to have. In that place there are a great many lobsters caught and shipped alive to the United States, and the consequence is that the interests of those people who ship these lohsters alive and ship them during the winter is somewhat antagonistic to the interests of the packer. We find that many of the lobster fishermen are opposed to the winter fishing, while the fishermen who go to the banks and are at home during the winter are very anxious they should be allowed the privilege of catching lobsters in the winter and sending them off to the United States. There is so much difference of opinion on the subject, and that opinion is governed so much by the wishes of the different classes of fishermen engaged in the fisheries, that I think it is better the regulations should stand as they are, as embodied in this Bill. I may say that, like my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island, I have had a large number of letters and telegrams on this subject, but am able to state that most of the persons engaged in the lobster fisheries as well as the packers are satisfied with the provisions of the present Act. The lobster packer expresses no objection to a license fee nor to the reguirement of the cases being stamped, becanse the cases being stamper will show that the lobsters were canght in season, and they are much better than those caught out of season and much more healthy, and therefore it is a certificate of their good character ; and I have no doubt it will enable them to get a better price in the markets of the world.

Mr. FORBES. It does seem strange that the Minister of Marine should introduce a Blll to wipe out the regulations which have been governing the lobster fisheries for the past years, and propose to enact regulations which will satisfy both packers as well as fishers. Those gentlenen who preceded me, have one and all on that side stated that the Bill as proposed is favourable to the packers as well as to the trappers. Now, the fact is that the proposition by this Bill is to do away with the regulation size of lobsters, which is now 9 inches, and to substitute a clanse describing that every trap shall be constructed in such a way that it shall have between the slats a space of $1 \frac{1}{2}$ and in some cases $1 \neq$ inches. The Minister has also told us that this will permit, in the case of the $1 \frac{1}{2}$-inch slabs, only 8 -inch lohsters to pass through. It, therefore, in the interests of the trapper, will allow a smaller lobster to be caught, and in the case of the packer it will probably supply him with a smaller fish and a large quantity of smaller fish, thus tending to the depletion of the great lobster fishing industry. I fail to see how it is that any hon. gentlemen who support the Minister should advise that this Bill become law for the protection of the fisheries in one breath, and in the next breath support it because it is proposell by the Governmerit, and that it tends to allow smaller fish to be caught. From the nature of the Bill, it cannot be accepted hy those who are anxious to preserve the fisheries for future use, nor can it be said to be honest and fair to the lobster packers themselves, who thereby will be burning the candle at both ends. The Minister took pains to show us by the conclusive evilence of reports that the lobster fisheries are being depleted around our shores. He quoted a large number of authorities to show that, where it took two or three formerly to fill a one-pound can, it now takes six or seven, showing a diminution in the size of the lobster, which is a sure sign of a fulling oft in the catch. He went on to quote that there is great necessity for the imposition of new regulations to prevent this exhaustion of that industry, and he wound up by proposing a law which enables smaller lobsters to be caught, although they should be directly under his guidance and protection, and not allowed to be wasted as this Bill will allow them to le. The Minister must know that the statements he has made are directly at variance with those made by his own fishery inspector. We have in the report of Mr. Bertram, the inspector of tisheries for District No. 1, the following statement. I may say here by way of contradiction of the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Burns) that the decrease in this industry of packing lobsters is not due, as he says, to the using up of the fisheries by the catching and packing of small lobsters. Mr. Bertram says:
" The marked increase of 21,344 cans of lobsters orer the pack of last season is the most noticeable feature of the year's fishery. The increase is due to three causes; the large number of these crustaceans found on our coast during the season. the extension of ten days fishing cranted by the department, and the increase in the nuinber of lobster factories in operation. The increase in prices was of great adrantage to large dealers more than to the fishermen, as prices advanced at the close of the season. There is a prerailing impression that this fishery is overdone to an extent which threatens its extinction: but so far as this district is concerned, and from past seasons' experience, the increased quantity taken points $t 0$ an opposite conclusion. The fact that competition is increasing, consequent on an advance in prices, and that cash is phid by nearly all canners on delivery, tend to lure fishermen from other branches of fishery to that of the lobster. Having dealt with this subject in previous reports, I do not deem it necessary to discuss it here at Ereater leugth."
We have also the report of Mr. Tilton that :
"Lobsters show a slight increase, especially in fish shipped fresh alive. This increase is ascribed to farourable reather in some localities and a general improvement in the fishery."
We have further the report of the inspector for the south shore of Nora Scotia, including Shelburne and Queen's counties. He says:
"In canned lobsters there is a decrease in the output, not due to scarcity of fish but to the fact that some packers became frighteved into a closer compliance with the regulations. The export of live lobsters proved a remunerative business and there are indications that this branch of trade will be prosecuted on a still larger scale next season. The lobster regulations were not well observed: the high prices obtained proving too sirong a temptation to the average fishermen and packers. How to remed this evil is a difficult problem to solve. I am inclined to suggest that the limit in size be reduced to 9 inches."
The Minister jroposes to reduce it to 8 inches. So it will be seen by the Ministers own reports that the tisheries are not being depleted in consequence of the present use of them, and, unless the Dinister can show some other reason, we must conclude that the lobster fishery is not heing depleted, and I know that is the opinion of all those on the south shore. The hon. member for Shelburne (Mr. White) seems to agree whith the hon. member for Gloncester (Mr. Burns) that the fishing industry is lepleted becanse of the increased catch of lobsters. The Minister has told us that on certain portions of the shore of Prince Edward Island he adopted a measurement of $1 \ddagger$ inches between these laths. Will the Minister give me his attention for a moment. I should like to know why it is proposed to give that advantage to a certain portion of Prince Edward Island and not to Nova Scotia at all. We claim that we have as much right to exercise this fishery as Prince Edward Island has. In 1890 we had 133 factories, which put up $\$ 252,480$ worth and in 1891 though we had a larger number of factories, the value of what we put up was less, leing $\$ 213,511$. The yield has grown from 1869 to 1891, as follows:--In 1869 it was 61,100 pounds, of the value of $\$ 15,275$. In 1891, the yield was $26,909,157$ pounds, of the value of $\$ 2,252,421$. That output has increased in a greater proportion in the Province of Nova Scotia than in any other province of the Dominion. The provisions of this Bill will operate against the small factories in Nova Scotia and in favour of the larger factories, because the tax which is imposed will operate very greatly to the disadrantage of the small factory, and, if the large factory controls the monopoly of the purchase, it will give a smaller price for the work in canning the lobsters than the smaller factories would. The smaller factories are induced to go into the canning business by reason of the large prices which are offered by the purchasers in Halifax, in England and in the United States. There are three clauses in this Bill which will operate directly against the smaller factories. Clause 10a prescribes a tax directly on the small factories. Clause 5 and also subsection (a) of section io impose a tax on the small factories, and section 6 is also a tax on them. Many of these factories are only able to make a fair amount by way of good wages during the season. If these small factories are croweled ont, the large factories in the hands of English or other capitalists will reluce that amount that is paid to the fisher or the trapper of the fish, so that the trapper will be heivily manacled by this legislation. It is, therefore, in the interest of the larger packer and against the small packer that this legislation is directed. The lobster industry around the south shore of Nova Notia is to a great extent carried on in regard to the delivery of fresh lobsters alive in the United States. Lolster smacks come from the United States along the south shore and get the lobsters from the trappers, who preserve them in cars or hoxes alive until those smacks come along, and then they are transshipped alive to the American market. Shipneuts have been made of ten, and ten and a half inch lobsters to the United States, amd they have realized, all expenses paid, $11 \frac{1}{2}$ and 12 cents. This is an industry which is not touched, I am glad to ssy, by the enactments of this Bill. The first Bill proposed by the Minister did directly tax that industry, but he has seen the error of his intention and has heen forced to withdraw the Bill. He now proposes one that is, to a great extent, and in certain ways, perfectly harmless, although it contains the vicions principle of allowing the Minister to control the industry by license. There is nothing which prevents the Minister from raising that fee to $\$ 30$ or 8100 . Every tax he puts upon the industry falls upon the small packers in the interest of the larger packers. We; therefore, deem it our duty, those of us who come from the fishing counties of Nova Scotia, carefully to watch every attack that may be made upon this industry by the Minister of Marine. We know he is anxions to encroach upon the rights of every class of people in order that he may have them, as it were, under his control. The Government claim a right to limit and restrict the right of the farmer to buy where he wishes, of the fishermen to sell where he wishes, and now, of the lobster-trapper to catch where he will. It is this principle which we, on this side of the House, particularly rebel against. I am glad to see that the Minister has thought fit to withdraw the obnoxious principle upon which his first Bill was based ; but there are certain things in this Bill which, in committee, I trust we will be able to point out clearly enough to him to induce him to amend in the interest of the fishermen. The right to extend the close season at the will of the Minister is an obnoxious one, and I am glad it has been removed from the power of the Governor in Council. The size of the fish, as regards the provision of this Bill, is one of the features to which I object. It cannot be said by the Minister that he is honestly intending to preserve this fishing industry when he is permitting smaller sized tish to be caught by the provision for making the trap which this Act allows.

Mr. Forbes.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) As this question is one in which the people of the Maritime Provinces are very much interested, I will take the liberty of saying a word upon it. The importance of this industry is shown by the number of people that are employed in it, amounting to about 22,000 . This industry has been built up within a few years, but owing to the excessive fishing that has taken place, the fishery is said to have become exhausted. However, I am myself of a different opinion. I camnot sce that the fishing shows very much depletion. I am lmorne out in that view by the report of the gentlemen connected with the inspection of fisheries in the different provinces, in the reports they have sent to the department. I have always contended that all that was necessary to keep this fishery from being depleted was a strict enforcement of the close season, and I think that the result shows that my contention was correct. The fishery is steadily holding its own : the quantities caught are yearly increasing, and the only protection, as shown ly the reports of the fishery officers of the department, has been the enforcement of the close season. Of course, we all know that there has been a regulation as to the size of the fish that are to be caught, but I think I can show that that regulation has not been carried out. My colleague and myself came here with the full intention of opposing the regulations that were brought forward by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, which regulations were sent down for the inspection and report of the packers in Prince Edward Island. The regulation then sent out met with the disapproval of the packers of Prince Edward Island, and we came here determined to oppose it. However, knowing that the Minister of Marine had the same object in view as the packers and fishernen, that is, the preservation of this valuable industry, we thought it our duty to lay our views lefore him, which we did in a letter addressed to the Minister of Marine some time ago. As it is not very long, I will take the likerty of reading it to the House: " Hos. C. H. 'Tupprar, Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

$\because$ Sir.-Referring to our letter to you of 12 th March. re $^{\text {a }}$ proposed Lobster Fishery Bill, we desire to submit the following suggestion for your consideration:-
-The license fee (although we object to the principle of license) to be made mereis nominal, and licenses to be granted to all applicants who will agree to comply with the law. The provisions of the Bill regarding labelling and marking, to remain. The regulation as to size and sex to be entirely removed, and fishing under license to be allowed for a term of three years, from lst May to 15 th of July in each year, in the Gulf'of St. Lawrence. This close season to be strictly adhered to, and no license to be renewed to any packer detected in the violation of it. If. at the end of three years, this is found to afford sufficient protection, the system to be continued;if, on the contrary, the lobster fishing is found to be seriously impaired from overfishing, all the factories to be closed for one or more years. If these sugrestions are accepted, the one or more yearss provisions of the Bill, as thus amended, to apply to this season's fishing.
"We have the honour to be, Sir,

- Your obedient servants,
"A. C.MACDONALD.
" March 18th, 1892."
Now, finding that it was the intention of the Minister to bring in legislation respecting thisindustry we thought it our duty to put the matter before him in a way we believed would be acceptable to the fishermen and packers in Prince Edward Island. We were met by the Minister in the most friendly waly, and he appeared anxious to come to an arrangement that would be generally acceptable to the fishermen and packers in our province, and in the Maritime Provinces generally. Finding that he was actuated by the same spirit, that of preserving this valuable industry, we thought it our duty to put our views before him as strongly as possible. The next stage of the proceedings was the Bill sub. mitted to this House in which the Minister proposed introducing a regulation trap which was to be one and three-quarter inches between the slats. The people of our procince heretofore have entirely objected to any regulation of that kimi, but finding that it was the determination of the Government to enforce a regulation trap, we thought it our duty to make a concession with that end in view, to get the most liberal measure in the interest of the fishermen, brought in by the Minister. We consented to have the distance betwcen the slats in the regulation trap, made an inch and a-quarter apart, and he agreed to accept such a proposition. I must say that the Minister showed a desire at all times to meet our views in a most friendly way, having in view at the same time the preservation of this important industry ; and finally he consented to make the regulations one and aquarter inch on the understanding that any section of our fisheries that would aceept the regulation would le curtailed in their fishing season by ten days. We thought this was a proper and reasonable concession to make in the interest of the fisheries and the fishermen, and in order to meet the views of the Minister we consented to that proposition, and I thisk that the present proposial of the Minister is a reasonable one. The present Bill proposes a license. It seems the determination of the Goverument to enforce a license. While opposed to the principle of license on this industry, I think that as the fee as now laid down is a nominal one, it camot be a great hardship. At the saine time. I am only expressing the opinion of the fishermen generally when I say that even if the license were higher, if the Minister would only take into consideration the very great advantage that would accrue to the fisheries generally by taking steps to save the lolsters that now go into the boilers, to have incubators provided by which the eggs of the berried lobsters would he hatched out, that would solve the whole difficulty in commection with the depletion of our fisheries. We find on looking at the report of Mr. Neilsen, who is looked upon as an authority in regard to this industry, and in regard to the propagation of lobsters in Newfommland, that he has met with extraordinary success in the propagation of cod fish and lobsters, and more particularly lolsters. I see in his report of March, 1892, that, speaking of the propagation of lobsters he says:
"Owing to the great scarcity of lobsters this year in Trinity Bay, only one factory near Dildo was in operation, and this closed about the midale of June. The only fnctory from which lobster ova could be obtained was in Long Harbour, Placentia Bay, and to bring them thence involved a carriage of nearly 20 miles, resulting in many of the ova perishing. This factors, too, closed on 15 th July The total number of lobster ova obtained was 18,500, 6000 : and of these $10,274,300$ were hatched and planted. Last year (1890) the total collection of lobster ova at Dildo hatchery was $20,927.200$; of which 72 per cent, or $15,000,830$, were hatched and planted.
*The propagation of lobsters in floating incubators was oarried on in this venr at nineteen different stations. Last year there were fourteen gtacions. In Notre Dame Bey this year, $130,494,600$ lobsters were hatched, as against 31,398, ,00 in 1890 . The only place in which there was any falling off in the supply of ova was Burges, Fox

Island and Sound Island. The cause of the decline here was the prevalence of "la grippe," which prevented the fishernen from attending to the traps for a considerable time.
-These figures show that $541,190,580$ lobsters have been hatched and planted at the various stations in the bays of Newfoundland, against 390,934504 the previous year, or an excess uver last season of $150,261,000$. To produce this gmount of young lobsters the ova from 23,369 lobsters have been taken and preserved, which otherwise would have been destroyed in the various factories, if these incubators had not been invented and used in bringing them to life. If we add the lobsters hatched at Dildo, we obtain the grand total of $551,469,800$ brought to life artificially and planted in our waters. The cost of the production of these lobsters has been only 1 cent for every 0,760 lobsters. It is needless to dwell upon the beneficial effect of these operations in sustaining the stock of lobsters, and averting the deterioration or total destruction of this valuable fishery. If combined with proper protective measures, there is every reason to believe that the future of our lobster fishery is assured. If we take the very low estimate that only 10 per cent of the number of lobsters planted this season in the waters of Newfoundland should survive and come to maturity, the value of these at 8 cents per hundred, would be 3441,176 ."
I will not detain this House by realing at greater length from the very instructive report prepared by Mr. Neilsen. Sutfice it is to say that he has met with unparalleled success at very small cost. The 150 inculators only cost $\$ 800$, while the working expenses of these floating inculators for hatching $7 \mathrm{Ta}^{0},(000,(0 \times)$ of young lobsters only ainounted to $\mathrm{E} 3,0 \mathrm{MO}$. It seems to me that we could not do better than impress on the Minister of Marine and Fisheries the importance of giving attention to this particular hranch of the fisheries. For my part I think Mr. Neilsen has solved the question of keeping up the supply of lobsters, and if the Minister will spend a few thousand dollars on satring the eggs of the berried lobsters that now go into the boilers of the factories, and hatching the eggs, we would more than comiterbalance any depletion that could possilby take place under the most exhaustive fishing during the present very short season. If the Minister would turn his attention to this matter, even if he was necessitated to impose a much larger fee than 35 a year, the packers generally would fall into line with his views and do everything possible to assist the department in saving what now goes to destruction. With respect to the small fee of two cents proposed to be placed on each lobster case by the department, I think it will have a goorl effect. It will show the buyer that the lobsters have been caught in proper season and at a time when they are lest fitted for food, and in that way, the fee leing small. it will he more than compensated by the standard of quality introduced for our lohsters. The only protection this industry has had in the past has been the short season. I am borne out in that statement by Lieutenant Gordon, who, in his reports to the department, states that from hsi own experience he believes that the size regulation that has been enforced for many years past hias not in any instance been carried out, and if it were carried out for one season it would close every factory ; or words to that effect. I have always contended that the short season is all that is necessary. It must be borne in mind that our season is shorter than any season I have been able to find set forth by any country in any regulation; and seeing that we have adopted this short season before our fisheries have altogether been clepleted, I am satisfied that it is all that is necessary to keep our fisheries from being fished out. . While I do not agree with some of the regulations proposed by the hon. Minister, yet I lelieve that he has the best interests of the fisheries at heart, as have the the packers and fishermen themselves. I think, on the whole, that possibly the regulations that are now before the House, with a little amendment that may le made to them before they get through the committee, will meet with the approval of the packers and fishermen through the country generally, and will tend to build up and preserve this important industry.

Mr. BOWERS. Mr. Speaker, as this Bill now brought before the House by the hon. Minister is so much better than the previous one submitted by him, I must congratulate him upon it. I may say that I find no particular fault with the measure, except in so far as regards sub-section 4 of section 10, which regulates the space between the laths of the trap. In proviling a space of $1 \frac{1}{2}$ inches between the laths he is taking away the only preservative to the lohsters, because, in my opinion, it would he much better if the space were fixed at $1 \frac{3}{4}$ inches. This regulation is, I believe, not in the interests of the preservation of the lobster fisheries. I was in hopes that he would leave it at $1 ?$ inches, as I am fully convinced it must take fally that space to save the ten-inch lobsters, and that anything less than that is injurious to the lobster fishery. With reference to sub-section 3, of sec. tion 10, wherein it is proposed to make unlawful the fishing for lobsters between the lat day of July and the 3lst day of December, I hast say that this is a hard law to apply to the comnty which I represent, and, above all other counties in the Maritime Provinces, Digby is placed in a bad position by this proposal. At present, the people of my county. on the Bay of Fundy shore, have not ia chance to catch lobsters before the midale of May, and by making the close season on the lst of July, it will be a great hardship on our fishermen. I would ask the hon. Minister to endeavonr to change this provision so as to allow the people on the southeru shore of the Bay of Fundy to fish until the listh July. A petition is now in circulation in Digby county, which will arrive here in a few clays, asking the Minister to make that change in the existing law. I had a letter only last week from a constituent of mine which gives his receipts and expenditure in lobster fishing last winter." His receipts were $\$ 50$ and his expenditure $\$ 40$, so that this shows how much money is made in the lobster fishery in that part of Dighy county. He says in his letter :
"I was firuring up my receipts and expenditures for the winter's lobster fishing and the expenditures overbalance receipts: $$ 50$ expenses, receipts $$ 4$ ). Through the roughness of the weather we cannot work at the business, the number of traps lost will exceed fifteen hundred at the least calculation, valued at $$ 1.000$. The only chance there is to favour the poor man is to give him two more months in the summer season, and as far as protection of the lobster fishing is concerned there is none. They are allowed to sell all nine inches in length, and under that size in length are eaten by fishermen, so there is no protection whaterer. I have fished all months in the yerr and find there is just as many gpawn lobsters in the month of January as any month in the year. All the protection the lobster wants is to throw away all small lobsters."
Section $10 a$ says that no one shall keep lobsters alive in ponds except uncer license from the Minister of Marine. I would ask the Minister ef Marine and Fisheries if a man who catches the lobsters and keeps them over for a week or ten days during the close season will be reguired to pay a fee of $$ \overline{5}$.

Mr. Macdonald (King's, P.E.I.)

Mr. TUPPER. The proposition is that during the open season no owner of a pond for lobsters requires any license. If, lowever, he desires to catch the lohsters in the open season and keep them during the close season, he will he required to take ont a license.

Mr. BOWERS. Why should he pay a license if he catches these lobsters in the open season and keeps them in his own car without rlisposing of them?

Mr. TUPPER. Simply to prevent the abuses which would follow. It would be almost impossible to letect whether the lobsters were taken in the open or close season.

Mr. BOWFRS. The fishery overseers will take care that the traps are taken up on the lst or listh of July, or whichever time is fixed, and how could there be anything wrong in keeping these lolsters which are canght in the ropen season:
Mr. TUPPER. By putting down another trap.
Mr. BOIVERS. But the overseer will be on the gromad anl he would see that the lobster traps were not allowed to he put down under a heary penalty.

Mr. TLPPPR. It is done, nevertheless.
Mr. BoWERS. Now, Mr. Speaker, I hope the Minister, if he keeps to the space at $1 \frac{1}{2}$ inches, and allows the people of Prince Edward Island by putting laths at an inch ond a quarter to curtail the close season, that he will allow the people of Dighy to have ten or fifteen days extra by enlarging the space to $1: 3$ inches.

Mr. TUPPER. That is not the proposition.
Mr. BOWERS. That is a proposition that will preserve the lolster tisheries, lecause these small lobsters which are caught below 9 or 10 inches only bring from $1 \pm$ to 2 cents apiece; while in the course of a few months when they grow to $10 \frac{1}{2}$ inches and are allowed into the Boston market, they will bring from 8 to 10 cents, and as high as 1.i ipiece. It would be a great financial gatin to the country in every way if the lobsters were not allowed to be handled under 10, or 102 inches. We find that the lobsters around our shores are growing smaller year after year, and we think that one of the great reasons of it is the catching of small lolsters. I would ask, in the interests of my constituents, that the time should be extended from the lst July to the lath July for the southern shore of the Bay of Fundy, as our people have no better chance of fishing at certain seasons of the year, than have the people of Prince Edward Island and other parts of the Province of New Brunswick.
Mr. YEO. This question has leen very fully discussed, and I am sure that the hon. members who are not specially interested in it must be pretty tired of it ; still, as it is a matter in which the people whom I have the homour to represent are leeply interested, I will, with the permission of the House, make a few remarks. In Prince Edward Island this is one of the most important industries that we have, and, therefore, I think the less frequently the regulations in regard to it are changed, and the less frequently legislation is adopted which tends to interfere with the industry in any way, the better. With us in Prince Edward Island there is a large amount of money invested in this industry, and very naturally the men engaged in it will not do anything calculated to destroy it. They have invested in buildings, boats, traps, and various other things which are necessary to carry on the industry, and which are altogether useless, or nearly so, for any other business. If the lobster industry is destroyed, these outfits will be a total loss to their owners, so that they will therefore do nothing which would tend to destroy it.

Mr. TUPPER. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether the packers on the New England coast maintained that principle?

Mr. IEO. If I am correctly informed, the sale of lobsters along the New England coast is confined principally to live lobsters. The close season there is a very short one, so that the fishermen catch lobsters nearly all the year round.

Mr. TUPPER. I do not think the hon. gentleman apprehended my point. It is this: The hon. gentleman silys that the packers will in their own interest fish carefully, and I mention for his consideration the fact that notwithstanding that many of the packers on our coasts packed formerly on the New England coasts, and were there interested in carryingout that principle, they fished out those districts before they came to Prince Edward Islamd and Nova Scotia.

Mr. IEO. Well, I suppose, for the very reason I have given, that there the close season is a very short one, and the catch would be very much larger than with us. With us on Prince Edward Island, I think, perhaps forty or forty-five days each year is the fuli extent of our fishing season. I know that on the north side of Prince Edward Island, particularly, our fishermen very often do not put their traps out until the latter end of May, and they are obliged to take them up on the lith of July, which makes a very short season. As I said before, I think this trade will regulate itself. Last year, I believe, the business in the Maritime Provinces was a fairly paying one, although some parties lost money. This year, there are, perhaps, more people engaged in the business than there were last, and the prohabilities are that this year may be an unsuccessful one. Prices may be low, and there are many reasons why those engaged in the business may not- do nearly as well as they did in the previous year: and if that is so, prolahly the next and some years following, there will be a great falling off in the number engaged in this business. If I understand the hon. Minister of Marine aright, it is intended that the regulation with regard to size which now obtains, is to he done away with. I think this is quite right. Anybody who is at all acquainted with this business, knows that it is impossible to carry out the law in this respectthat it is violated in every factory a number of times each day. I quite agree that $i t$ is very rise to repeal this regulation. One of the provisions proposed ty the Bill is that the space between the lower laths shall be $\frac{13}{4}$ inches. I think the hon. Minister of Marine says that he intends to change that to $1 \frac{1}{2}$ inches. At present the space is $1 \frac{1}{4}$ inches, and from all I have learned from those engaged in the business, I believe they consider the space of $1 \ddagger$ inches quite sufficient: and I think the hon. Minister must be pretty well convinced of this himself, because he has said that he will consent to make the space $1 \frac{1}{4}$ inches as it is at present. I did not quite understand whether this applies to the whole coast or only to a particular part.

Mr. TUPPER. The whole coast. The Bill is general.

Mr. IEO. I hope he will emborly that provision in the Bill. making the space $1 \ddagger$ inches where the lobster packers eonsent to forego the 10 days fishing in the season. This will not apply to all parts of Prince Edward Island. On some parts of the west and sonth-west coast of Prince Edward Island the lolisters do not strike in until late in the year, and there the fishermen may be anxious to have the time extended to the 1.ith of duly. On the north side they may think it an advantage to have the 14 inch space and forego the 10 days. The hom. Minister of Marine very kindly favomed us with some quotations from a report male by Mr. Neilsen, who is at present in Newfommland, and I have no doubt they are very valuable. But if my information is conrect Mr. Neilsen is a Norwegian, and I moterstand that many of the sugcestions which he makes as to the preservation of lolisters in this country, have not been alopted in Norway. 1 am not positive whether or not this is the case, but it struck me as strange that he should propose regulations for this country which have not leeen carried ont in his own. I have no doulst that the information he gives is valuable and worth the consilleration of this House; but for my own part 1 wonld be guided much more by the opinions of one like the hon. janior member for King's (Mr. McLean), who has had practical experience in this business, and knows all about it, amf I know that he would not adrance any argument here which would tend in any way to injure this valuable industry. So that whilst Mr. Deilsen's opinion may be very valuable, I would prefer taking the opinion of such as the hon. memlier for King's. Now, with regard to the lobsters being depleted on the coast of Prince Eilward Island. I do not know where this information comes from. I think it is something over twentyone years since this industry was begun, and although the lobsters are not as large as they were in the beginning, still I do not know that there are any signs of depletion at all. I believe the catches are quite equal to what they were many years ago, and I do not think there is any great decrease in guantity. While there is not a great deal in this Bill to be found fault with, there is one part I am decidedly opposed to, ind that is the provision with regarl to the issuing of licenses. I do not see why those who are engaged in the packing of lobsters shoull have this license imposed upon them. It is true the fee asked is not a very large one. It is only Si , but it appears to me to be the entering of the thin end of the werlge. In the first Bill, it was proposed to impose it fee of 550 ; and although the Minister of Marine may he very generous and well disposed towards the people engaged in this industry, we do not know who may come after him. The hon. gentleman will leave this department some time, and somebody less liberally disposen? towards the tishermen may take his place, and a larger fee may be imposed. I clo not see why those engaged in this industry should be taxed to even this small extent while others engaged in other fish industries are not. There is no check in any way put upon other fishernien, and I do not see why this fee should be imposed on the lobster packers. If they got any adrantage from this license, it would be worthy of consideration, but Ecamnot unterstand how they will he benefited in any way. It is just a license fee leing imposed without anything being given in return, and I think it is calculated to bring about an increase in the fee which will bear harshly on some of the pickers. There are many people who have invested their all in this industry, and if at any time in the near future a large fee should he exacted it would bear very hard on them, and. therefore, I am opposed to this proposition. Again I do not see the advantage of putting on this stamp. It is quite true the fee in this case is also small, but it seems unnecessary, and only putting on a restriction form which no possible groml can arise. It is not going to enhance the value of camed goonls. One hon. gentleman satil it would show that the lohsters were caught in the proper season. Well, there is a great deal more than that necesary in the canning of lobsters. To have good camed lolsters, it is necessaly they shouhd le well put up and properly inspected. If anything in the shape of inspection were intenled, then the stamp would be worth something, but I Jo not think that is the intention of the Minister, so that the label can be of no possible value. I have heard some hon. gentlemen say that in their correspondence with their constituents, who are engared in this industry, their constituents are all in favour of the bill. I cammot say as much for the people with whom I have heen in communication, for they are opposed entirely th this license fee amd also to the fee for the stamp. I do not say this in a spirit of opposition becanse the Bill is intronluced by the diovermment, for the loloster fishery is a branch of industiy which we camot be too anxious to assist the Minister of Marine in protecting and improving. but I lo not think protection of this kimd is at all necessury. I believe the trade will regulate itself, and that the people engagen in it will not do anything that is likely to destroy this husiness in a very short time. People do not like these mnecessary restrictions leeing placel upon them. It has been said that this is not at all calculated to interfere with the fishermen, but we all know that anything which interferes with the packers must also interfere with the fishermen. Anything which injures the one will injure the other, and anything which will help the business, so far as packing is concerned, will also benctit the fishermen. I am sorry I cannot support the Bill, but I camot see any good results which will flow from it. It will give rise to a lot of trouble withont any eorresponding benefit.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2 ,
Mr. TUIPleR. I propose to alter this clanse so as to make it read:
"No one shall in sing season can, preserve, or cure lobsters, or during close season keep them alive in ponds or other places, except under license from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in form A to the schedule of this Act."
Mr. FLINTI. I have been unable to understand what public wenefit the Minister expected to arise from this license. Most of his speech was taken up in reference to the diminution in the size of the lobster, but he has not tonched upon this point.

Mr. YEu.

Mr. TCPPPR. This is principally for the pur,ose of alministration. In administering any of these regulitions, we are necessarily embarrassed by the extent of the tervitories over which these cameries extend. The extent of coast line makes it almost impossible, without an enormous grant from Parliament, for us to police these points, so that we are compelled to make periodical visits, and within the last year or two this has occurred, which is to the letriment of the regular packers, that, luring the close season, the small packers will secretly and in secret places start a small looiler, sometimes in a glen or in a back building, and will put up in a rough kind of way the lobsters which they cure and pack themselves, putting them up in tins and that kind of thing so that supervision was beconing all the more ditficult. Under a license system we have this protection that we can follow the violators more easily and detect the riolations of the law more easily, and it is in the interests of all to have a more even administration of the law. Every licensee will be all the more careful to co-operate with the department and not at violate the law as to packing, because, if a packer persisted in extending his operations and keeping his factory open after the season, it would be possible to refuse him a renewal of his license. I think this is one of the lest features of the bill with a view to secure a uniform observance of the clause which has received almost miversal support, that is, the clause in reference to the strict olserrance of the close season.
Mr. FLINT. I can appreciate the argment in fatour of a license as a matter of rontine observance, and I suppose the fee of 8 is not very large because the profits are supposel to be large ; but I think it is establishing a principle which a large number of people in the comntry will look upon with great disfarour. It places any parties who make a slight infraction of the law under the power, I will not say of the department, but of those who enforce the law in the various commmities. It may be more serious to have a license suspented or refusen than it would be to impose a fine, becmuse a license withhell, in the opinion of the man himself arhitrarily, would result in practically ruining his husiness, whereas a high tine which might be imposed for the violation of the law might leave the chance to argue the matter out with the department and often to get it reduced or remitteri as the case might be. This is a terrible power to accord to the department over those who exercise the powers of the department. I would call the attention of the committee to the formi which the license is to take, and I think that should be amended if the committee insists on having a license at all.

Mr. TUPPER. I propose to change that, but we had better wait until we reach it.
Mr. FLINT. The Bill has been so largely reduced from the original form that a great deal of the anniety which was felt will no doubt be somewhat allayed.
Mr. TUPPER. I have not received a single objection, though I was in communication with those interested, to the Bill and its present form. Many of $m y$ correspondents, though they were all strangers to me, objected very strongly to the first proposition, but I think the Bill in the main has been very well received hy those concerned.

Mr. FLINT. I to not see here to whom the appiication is to be made for the license.
Mr. TUPPER. There will be no trouble in that respect, just as now the applications are made for trap licenses and they come to the fishery officers and are forwarded in due course and acted upon.
Mr. FLINT. They are not issued locally, but by the Fisheries Department :

Mr. TUPPER. Yes.
Mr. FRASER. I should like very well if there were no fee at all. I am opposed on principle to charging the fishermen any fee whatever.
Mr. TUPPER. No fisherman has to pay a fee.
Mr. FRAsER. There are a number of fishermen who engage in caming ; two or three neighbours in some place work together, and have a camery, so it is the fisherman after all who pays. I object to it on principle. I think when these men are only allowed to can lobsters for two short months in the year, it is too hard to charge them S. When that section is taken in comnection with sub-section $\overline{5}$ and section $a$ of 5 , it will be seen that it is quite a tax on the people. This Act does not provide for inspection. If there was an inspection, I conid understand the imposition of a fee, but there is no inspection at all of these camneries. This fee is collected simply for the purpose of paying the man who goes there to get the fee. Once upon a time we hat a system of inspecting fish in Nova scotia, but that is largely, if not altogether, done away with now. Now, why should not these persons lie treated like persons in any other industry? Why should not the particular brand of a particular canner he sutticient". Yon are now going to send an otticial there to see. small as is this fee, it is as was well sail by an hon. member from Prince Edward Island, the entering of the thin end of the wedge. Now I believe that yon ought not to put any tas whatever upon an industry that is of necessity contineal to a short time in the year. A man works on his farm all the year round ; mamfacturers work all the year round making clothing, boots and shoes that are needed in summer and winter ; but here is a business in which a man can only work two months in a year, and you are going to exact is fee from that man. That is not treating him as you treat men in other businesses. If the purpose was to make a thorough inspection and to see that before any lobsters were canned for sale they should be inspected by an oftiver of the Government, then I could understand it ; but this is simply a mode of levying a tas upon these men of sit, he the cannery ever so small. In my own county there are a number of cases where a fanily of three or four hoys and three or four girls go with the father and have a small camery, and they do a fair business in the markets of the world, if their article is a good one. This matter ought to be judged, not from the amount a man puts up, but simply from the point of view of the character of the goods he produces. These men are restricted already, and rightly enough ; in the interest of the fisheries and in their own interest there should be restrictions as to time; but when that is done, I do not think you should charge any fee.

Mr. JONCAS. I am a little surprised at the opposition of the hon. memberfor Guyslorough(Mr.

Fraser) against the license fee. The Bill as it is framed, seems to be acceptable to those engaged in the business. The hon. member forgets that the lobster fishery is not the only one that is subject to a license fee. Take the salmon fishery, that is subject to a fee ; so is the mackerel fishery, and so is the cod tishery with traps-all are subject to a license fee. In our counties on the gulf of st. Lawrence where we used to have the richest fishcries in the world, and where we still have, I think, the richest fisheries in the world, I think it is time for the covernment to impose some fee by means of which the Department of Fisheries will be in a position to regulate those fisheries. This fee of $$$ is only a nominal fee, after all ; the fisherman will not suffer by it. I represent a county where we have, perhaps, $2(0)$ canneries, and I know very well that the packer alone will pay the fees, the tishermen will not suffer by it. The hon. member for quysloreughsipeaks of small cameries. I think that this fee should he applied also to small cumneries, because the small cameries have no reputation at stake, whereas the large packers, who have a reputation will take care that the goors they put on the mavere are of a gooel guality.
Mr. DAVIEs (P.E.I.) Will aso fee ensure that the small packers will put better goods on the market:

Mr. JONCAS. No, but I say that a Sisee will sulject the small cameries to an inspection by an officer of the dovermment.

Mr. FRAsER. Not at all. There is no inspection.

Mr. TUPPER. There is no inspection as to quality, but there is inspection as to the time at which these lobsters are caught, whether they are caught at the season of the year when it is generally admitted that they are in their lest condition, or whether they are caught illegally at a time when they are not in good condition. That question is settled by the certificate. I am told by men who are in the business that the inspection clause, while useful to the department for another purpose, will be in the interest of packers, becanse every bit of that license fee, and the inspection fee itself, will temd to give their goods a certificate that will be of greater value to them than the s , and the grated two cents nominal fee on the cases.

Mr. FORBES. I fail to understand the remarks of the hon. member from (iastes (Mr. Joncas) when he say: that this is not a tax upon the fishermen. All along the shores of Nova Scotia, and I dare say along the shores of Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick also, there are men catching these fish in what are called cages, from which they are transferred to boses which, under this Act, are going to be called traps. That practice is followed by fishermen, and this tax of sill be directly imposed on them.

Some hon. MEMBERs. How ?

Mr. FORBES. For every box, which will hold a cage of 12 or 20 lobsters, the Minister will charge a tax of $$ 5$.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman should read the Bill before he indulges in a criticism of that kind. The fee for the license will be $$ 5$ a year ; the other tax is only 2 cents for each case containing 4 dozen 1 -pound cans, and 1 cent for each case containing 2 dozen 1 -pound cans, according to the nature of the case.
Mr. FORBES. Under section 10 it is provided:
" No person shall, in any senson. can. preserve, or cure lobsters, or keep them alive in ponds or other places. except under license from tae Minister of Marine and Fisheries in the form A in the schedule to this Act.

A fee of five dollars shallbe paid for each such license." During the period when fish can be caught, as well as during the close season. the fishermen come together and catch fish in traps and transfer them to ponds and other places.
Mr. TUPPER. It is a custom well known to be followed by these men during the open season, and during that time vessels come along the coast and take the lobsters to the factories. We do not interfere with these operations in any respect. They did not require any license. As the Act now stands it does not affect them in the slightest degree. There is growing up another custom, notally near Yarmouth, where fishermen operating for the United States market, catch more lohsters during the open season than they can profitably dispose of, and they wish to keep them in ponls and pounds during the close season. The department, observing this close season, camnot permit those operations to proceed withont some check being exercised : but as it is a legitimate operation if properly guarded, we intend to compel these parties to take out a license so that we can prevent abouses arising that would otherwise oceur from fishermen keeping fish in poods, without any officer being present, during the close season.
Mr. FORBES. I quite agree with the principle of inposing as license fee. There is tather practice growing up in the Conaties of Queen's and Shelburne too which I wish to call the Minister's attention. The fishermen do not keep the lobsters in large ponds, for which he is going to compel the parties to take out a license, but in much smaller pounds callei " cars." This "car" is a little larger than the ordinary cage in which the lobsters are caught. After they have been taken from the oriz:. inal trap or box, they are transferred to a "car," and are kept a few days awaiting the arrival of a sailing smack or steamer.
Mr. TUPPER. We do not interfere with those fishermen.
Mr. JONCAS. Thehon. gentleman has forgotten that a little while ago, in the committee, we amended section 10 so as to read :
"No one shall fish for, catch, kill, can, preserve or cure lobsters or keep them alive in pondsorother places, during the close geason, except, under license from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries."
The difference lies in the words " during the close season."

Mr. FORBES. Is there anything in the Bill or proposed regulations to prevent the lobsters from those "cars"being transferred out of season"

Mr. TUPPER. No.

Mr. BOWERS. Suppose a man has a thousand lobsters in one of these "cars" on the last day of the fishing season, two or three days may clapse before the vessel which is taking them away, comes round. Has he to take out a license for those two or three days?

Mr. TUPPER. That man is lialle to a fine now. That is one of the frequent ways in which the regulations are evaded, by fishermen pretending that the lobsters in the "cars" were caught cluring the open season.

Mr. BOWER.S. A fisherman would be liable to a fine if those lobsters were in the "cars" 24 hours after the termination of the open season.

Mr. JONCAS. The hon. gentleman forgets that the season for packers ends on a certain day. The fishermen know they have no right to keep lobsters after that time, and that it is no use to keep them in "cars."

Mr. BOWWERS. I am referring to fishermen who keep lobsters fresh for the United States. At the close of the season these men may have two or three hundred lolsters fresh on hand. What are they going to do? They should he allowed a few days during which to get rid of theni.

Mr. TUPPER. If a fisherman has such a large stock on hand, and is waiting for a change in the market. he will have to come under the general rule applied for the protection of the fisheries, so that we may know exactly where lolisters are being kept during the close season, and prevent the stock being kept up by lobsters taken during the close season.

Mr. STAIRS. The hon. member for Digby (Mr. Bowers) has raised a difficulty which, he says, will occur under the present Bill. How de fishermen under those circumstances act at present?

Mr. BOWERS. At the present time the Minister, through his overseers, gives the fishermen four or tive days, or a week, to get clear of the lobsters they have on hand.

Mr. TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman tell me the name of any overseer who gave that permission?

Mr. BOWERS. I do not like to say.
Mr. TUPPER. I am not providing for breaches of the law.

Mr. BOW ERS. If a fisherman has some lobsters on hand during the last day of the open season, has he got to throw them away? At present the overseer gives three or four days to allow him to get rid of them.

Mr. TUPPER. We do not propose to change the overseer.

Mr. GILLMOR. My hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Bowers) here understands this question about as well as any gentleman in this House, and I think if the Minister understands it he will see the great propriety of the suggestion made by him. 1 know that the suggestion made by the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Bowers) is a reasonable one, and I believe if the Minister appreciated it he would try to provide for just such a case as has been mentioned. This has nothing to do with the canneries at all, but it has to do with the lobsters that are sold alive, and there must be always a small stock of lobsters in these "cars" immediately after the date when the close season commences. Now, I am sure the Minister does not wish to compel these persons to take out a license who may have a few lobsters in these " cars" at the close of the season. My hon. friend from Digby suggests that they should not lee fined for having these lobsters there two or three days after the fishing season, and I believe that his suggestion is a proper one and ought to be adopted. I know that the Minister does not want to oppress or annoy or tax the fishermen, but he will do a great injustice to that class of persons if he does not provide that they shall have time to get rid of their stock without compelling them to pay a license.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon, gentleman is of course a free trader in everything, and I know he will admit that he has very little sympathy for any of the regulations touching the fishermen. The question raised by the hon. member for Dighy (Mr. Bowers) is a vital one and whaterer there is in it is contrary to the spirit of a close season. Most hon. gentlemen in the committee are in favour of a close season, but the minute you allow any nibbling at the dates of the close season you interfere with the most vital principle of it. The difficulty must always remain of finding out whether these lobsters in the "cars" were canght just in the last days of the open season, or were caught during the close season. W'e know that lolisters have been taken during the close season, and if this is allowed it will be impossible to prevent the practice. It is most .litficult to detect the illegal fishing, and I helieve it must be provided that if any lolssters are left on hand, they shall cone under the regulation.

Mr. GILLMOR. I think the Minister is treating the people very harshly indeed in this matter. These lobsters are taken for food and the people are allowed by law to take them up to a certain time, and won't you allow them to keep them there and eat them without paying a fee: I think that the motives of the Minister are good, but I think he is mistaken in his zeal, and his zeal is not accordr ing to knowle lge in reference to this matter. With regard to iny leeing a free trater I may say that I do not think it is good for the business to restrict and hamper it in this sort of waty. Neither do I believe that the source from which the Minister gets his information on these matters is perhaps the most correct, becanse these officers want to find something to do and they interfere with the men catching fish. I appreciate the Minister's motives in trying to protect these tisheries, but they have not yet become exhausted. I think, however, that he is justified in legislating so that they shall not become exhausted, but I believe that he should not hamper the business hy making people to pay for a license to catch lobsters.

Mr. BoWERS. I have no objection to the principle of the Minister charging a license to keep these lobsters alive in "cars." If any one should wish to speculate in lobsters and buy them for the purpose of keeping them alive in close season, I am perfectly willing that a fee should be charged. The Minister must remember, however, that cluring the last three or four days of the season, the tishermen are employed in removing their traps and bringing them ashore. Suppose there has not been a vessel around to buy these lobsters for one week before the season closes, what are the fishermen to do? These lobsters arebought alive and put into smacks, and if the smack has gone to Yarmouth, or Boston, or Portland, and is not around to buy the lobsters, does the Minister want the fishermen to throw the lobsters away? I want the Minister to give some guaruntee to the fishermen that if they put these lobsters into their "cars," they will not have to pay a license fee of for fimply keeping them until they can dispose of them.

Mr. FIINT. I think there is considerable in What hats heen said by the hon. member for Dighy (Mr. Bowersi. I do not think that there is any reasonable objection to the license fee in reference to the pomis. A great deal must be conceded to the arministrative departments and the fee is not very much, and provided that the licenses cannot be mate too powerful an engine for exerting pressure on those who hoh them, I do not think there can be any very great objection. In regard to those who are in the position so well described hy the hon. member for Dighy (Mr. Bowers) I think there might be some proviso made in the law to corer the few days that they may have a greater or smaller number of lobsters in these "cars" awaiting disposal. As a matter of fact those who have charge of this matter have heen very moderate, I am aware, in exercising the powers which the law now gives them, and I think that they do so properly, because circumstances over which neither the overseer, nor the person having these fish, call possibly have control might prevent their disposing of them during the tirst few days of the close season, and as a matter of fact I think we must admit that the strict powers of the law have not been enforced against these people. But it might possilly he advisalle if a few words were inserted as a proviso which would protect these people, and at the same time not leave the overseers open to the charge of winking at an open violation of the law. Before the Bill is finally passed, I think the Minister might devise some proviso to cover a week or so of the tirst part of the close season : so that these parties will not be compelled to take out a regular license.

Mr. BOW ERS. I would like the hon. Minister to give us a little satisfaction on this point.

Mr. TUPPER. I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by satisfaction. I have given my opinion three or four times.
Mr. BOWERS. I wish the hon. Minister to enact a law that will not press too hardly on th fishermen. They have hard work enough now to make a living. They go out in storms and gales and all kimls of weather pursuing their occupation. Fou are going to charge them a license for keeping the very lolosters which yon empower them to catch. The hon. member for Shelburne, the hon. member for Queen's, the hon. member for larmouth, and the hon. member for Annapolis are all interested in this matter. The fishermen along their shores are placed in the same situation as those of Digby County, and I think the hon. Minister might put a clause in this Bill that would make it more easy upon them.

Mr. FLINT. Conld not the Minister allow about three days without the necossity of taking out a license?

Mr. TUPPER. I think the hon. gentlemen are borrowing trouble. You cannot fix a limit without incurring some difficulty. It is a very rare case in which the bond fide lobster fisherman is caught in the predicament of having the lolsters, and wanting to get rid of them in the close season. To adopt the suggestion would practically be to extend the open season and the opportunities for abuse ; and as we are making no change in that regard whatever, the particular cases to which the hon.
gentleman has referred are so few that they have not come up. Practically, I do not think there is any troulle.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I have not intervened in the discussion of that particular part of the subject with regard to keeping lolssters in ponds cluring the close season, lecause it is not a matter of which I have any practical knowledge. But if the hon. gentleman persists in keeping this principle in his Bill, after the discussion which has taken place on the second reading, it is possible that at a future stage I may test the opinion of the House as to the propriety of taking out a license at all. In the Bill which the hon. gentleman first introduced, he provided for the manner in which the licenses mast be obtained : and I will say frankly that the mamer in which they can be olitained is a great deal more serious than the granting of the licenses or the fee chargen. The object of the hon. gentleman, I umilerstand, is to keep the loloster tishery more under the control of the department. So far as the department and the superior ofticers. are concerned, I do not see that very much evil can result ; hut I wish to know whether these little petty jacks-in-otfice, who harass every Liberal engaged in the business in Prince Edward Island, are to have any control over these licenses or not:

Mr. TUPPFR. None whaterer.
Mr. D.AVIES (P. F.I.) Becaluse I may tell the hon. gentleman that we have no contidence whatever in his officials. If the license came from the department, I would he satisfied that every justice would he done to the packers, and no enquiry would be made whether a man was a Liberal or not ; but these little jacks-in-office harass and worry every Liberal engaged in the business as far as they can to show their athority. I speak now from what I know, for I have fifty or sixty letters here from those engaged in the business, and many of them speak in this direction. Is an application to be made for these licenses? If so, how is it to be made, and what length of time must elapse before it can be olotained? What red tape is required in order to ohtain it? The hon gentleman professerl to frame this Bill somewhat on the lines suggested by Mr. Neilsen in Newfoundland; but Mr. Neilsen proposed that these licenses shoull be granted free, and that any justice of the peace or sub-collector or fishery warten should be able to grant them. The object was to keep the business under the control of the department, and ensure that every honest, homa fide packer would get the license without any red-tape. I want to kuow in what manner these licenses shall be applied for, and what restrictions shall be possible in the way of any man applying for a license.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I must rise to protest against the aspersion which the hon. member for Queen's has passed upon the fishery overseers of Prince Edward Island. He has no right to cast any such aspersions upon them. When the packers of Prince Edward Island were fined there were as many Couservatives fined as Liberals, and when the fishery officers had to do with the giving of the bounty, as many Conservatives had to complain of not getting their bounty as Liberals.

Mr. PERRY. It is not so.
Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) I can assure the hon. gentleman that it is so, and I can show him a list of dozens of Conservatives who complainel. We see these gentlemen getting up time and again and making assertions that are not borne out by the facts. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries can find returns in his office, and I can name dozens of men in my county, Conservatives as well as Liberals, who have not received the bounty because of informalities. It is all very well for the hon. members for Queen's and Prince to get up here and make assertions which are not borne out by the facts, but I could not allow them to do it without contradicting them. With respect to the clause before the House, this tu'penny ha'penny "car" business down in the western part of Nova Scotia, there is more time wasted about it than the whole thing is worth. The fact of the matter is the probabilities are that not one of these little "cars," which are very little ligger than a lobster trap. had more than fifty lobsters in it, and even if it had a hundred it is a very suall trifle, and they might take the chance of letting them loose and catching them an ther time.

Mr. TUPPFR. I have not hat any serious charges with reference to the partiality of the fishery ofticers in the Island, buc the hon. gentleman must know, for he has had great experience, that whether the Government in power be Liberal or Conservative, when a party gets into troulle with a fishery inspector he immediately jumps to the conclusion that it is because of his political leanings. But Iam sure that not more in Prince Edward Istaml than in any other place has partiality been shown hy the fishery ofticers. I can tell the hon. gentleman, if it will be any comfort to him, that I am individually as unpopular with the Conservatives in the Island as with the Liberals, so far as I have come in contact with them in connection with these penal laws, which are very unpleasant laws to alminister. It is certainly my intention to grant every application for a canning license. I left out that clause, and the hon. gentleman naturally supposed there was an object in dropping it.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I did not suppose anything.

Mr. TUPPER. I will explain why I did so. The clause was more essential in connection with the regulation originally drafted, but which was foum, after thorough discussion, to be impracticable and unnecessary, becanse of so much detail being required. There will be no discrimination made in granting the licenses.

Mr. DAVIEs (P.E.I.) How is this to be obtained? How is a camer to get his license?

Mr. TUPPER. Just as they do all over Canada, on application. In Prince Edward Island there will be no difficulty whatever.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) To whom will they apply ?

Mr. TUPPER. Application naturally would go to the department, just as we get applications for all the trap net licenses issued. They apply long in advance, and there has been no trouble in connection with the issue of those. If a man wished, he could send his application to the inspector. It is for him to apply to the inspector or the head office. If the hon. gentleman thinks it wise to give direction in the Bill, I have no oljection to publish in it where the application should be male.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Will the hon. gentleman furnish blank forms to all the collectors of customs and fishery otticers with instructions to give them to every applicant on payment of a fee? The hon. gentleman wants the canners of the Island to go to the inspector of fisheries. They have not that confidence in him, and he may live on one part of the Island and the applicant in another.

Mr. TUPPER. He need not move about.
Mr. DAVIEs (P.E.I.) I will accept the hon. gentleman's assurance if he will tell me that these blanks will be supplied to the collectors of customs and that all applicants can ohtain them from the collector or the agent of the department. How is an applicant in King's County to get to the inspector at Tignish ?

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is making unnecessary troulle. No such trouble has oceurred in the administering of the license system all over Canala. Most of the packers can read and write, and they can communicate with the department at Ottawa, without cost, from any point in the Island and have the answer back in a short time. If the applicant wishes to go to the inspector, he can do so, and forward his application through him. When the Bill was Irafted, I supposed that, naturally, applications would go straight to the department.

Mr. BOWERS. Could the hon. gentleman not put in the Bill a clause compelling only those who keep live lolsters in "cars" containing over five hundred each or over to take out a license? A clanse like that would prevent parties who have a few lobsters on hand leing fined.

Mr. Davies (P. E. I.) I understand the hon. gentleman to assure the committee that any application made will be granted without any reference to the inspector.

Mr. TUPPER. I do not make any such pledgeIt would not be right for me to do so. I don't know what the hon. gentleman has against the inspector.

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) I am saying nothing against him.

Mr. TUPPER. Either the inspector is fit for his otfice or he is not. I believe he is.: I believe he performs his duty well, and I will make no pledge as to whether $I$ will refer to one ofticer or another. In connection with the administration of ny duties, I will refer to any officer in my department in the Island or any part of Canada whenever I see fit to do so.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) That is just what I feared, that a man is not to have the right to get a license when he applies for it, and I say that the intention was he should have the right.

Mr. TUPPER. I have said nothing to the contrary.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I only want the hon. gentleman's assurance that on applying to the department every applicant shall have the right to have the license.

Mr. TCPPER. I tell the hon. gentleman that was the intention. We do not intend to discriminate. That is not part of the Bill. We intend to grant licenses to every man who is a canner and has a factory. That is straight and clear. But I will not say that I shall not refer to Mr. Hackett on any subject. On the contrary, having confidence in him I may very often have to refer to him.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I want to have an assurance that every applicant on forwarding his fee to the office shall have his license.

Mr. TUPPER. I have stated that several times.

Mr. DAVIEs (P.E.I.) There is a good deal of reservation about that.

Mr. TUPPER. There is no mental reservation.
Mr. PERRY. I see that this is to be signed by "A.B.," and I should like to know where he is to be found. There is no provision in that Bill showing in what way the applicant is to get his license, and my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies) says that all he wants is to find out how the applicant is to get his license. It would only require a short clause to show by what means the parties applying for licenses shall get them.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Does the hon. gentleman intend to provide that the application is to be comtersigned by the overseer of the district?

Mr. TUPPER. There is not a packer in the Dominion of Canada who would not know where to apply. If there was any question, he would write to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, but there is nothing to prevent a canner applying to in overseer and having his application forwarded. There is no objection at present to an applicant for traps applying in that way, but, naturally, they know that the applications go to the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. BOWERS. Many applications have heen made from Digby County to the fishery overseer: but the trouble is that on the southern shore of the Bay of Fundy it is very rough and they cannot fish there before the middle of May, as many traps are destroyed if they try to fish earlier. Why should not they have the right to tish up to the loth July as well as the people of Prince Edward Island or those on the north shore of New Brunswick? The stormy weather of the early part of the season precludes the fishermen on the south shore of the Bay of Fundy from making a paying season unless they can go to the 15th July.

Mr. TUPPER. One of the best answers I can give to the hon. gentleman is to refer to the remarks he made early in the evening, when he represented that, in regard to the laths, there was a diminution in the size and in the rum of lobsters in his district, and he hoped the regulation would be made more strict.

Mr. Bowers. Hear, hear.
Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentle:nan says " hear, hear," and that statement of his affords the best reason for not extending the season. The sense of the whole committee is evidently against him in that matter, because it is felt that the close season is the best protection we can have.

Mr. BOWERS. Elsewhere they can fish much earlier than in the Bay of Fundy, and I think the season should be extended to the 15th July.

Mr. TUPPER. It would be difficult here at this stage to discuss the metes and bounds of districts. They have stood various tests and have been carefully drawn, and it would be an unending task to attempt to change them now.
Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). It seems to me that the hou. gentleman's Bill does not make provision for the issue of the license as a matter of course. If the hon. gentleman were to provide that, upon the payment of a certain fee by a person applying for a license to the fishery overseer, he should give a license or a receipt, and provide for his punishment if he refused, and that the application should be forwarded to the department and the license sent back by the department, then there would be no question of possible delay. As far as I can see, if a party were to make an application to an overseer, and the overseer delayed to forward it, the season might be over hefore the license wonld be received, and there should be some provision by which the applicant could go on with his fishing without waiting for the receipt, if his application was somewhat late. It seems to me that there is no adequate provision for the enforcement of the duties which should devolve upon the officer.

Mr. TUPPER. That affects the whole alministration of the department, and it is a novel suggestion on the part of the hon. member that the officials of the Marine and Fisheries Department should be held under heavy penalties if they neglect their duties.
Mr. MILL.S (Bothwell). So they should be everywhere.

Mr. TUPPER. Until that is made general, there are many objections to its being adopted in the Marine and Fisheries Department. I do not think a case has been made out, in our experience of the working of the license system elsewhere, to warrant Parliament in taking that course.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The hon. gentleman will see this is not a liceinse that operates orer the entire year, and there is necessity for great promptness.

Mr. TUPPER. Certainly, the officer would be responsible. I would be responsible, I take it. constitutionally, if, through neglect of the officers, this business was embarrassed by inattention to the applications for license.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). That responsibility is very remote, and would be practically of no value. The.otticer upon whom the duty immediately devolves and out of whose negligence the wrong might arise, is the party who would be made responsible.

Mr. TUPPER. In the provinces where camning is carried on, practical eperations begin about the 1st of May. There is all winter, therefore, after the last season, to forward these applications forlicenses. If the hon. gentleman had any experience with fishermen, he would know that the department is reminded very quickly if applications of that kind are not promptly attended to. I will not ask the committee to sit any longer, and $I_{2}$ therefore, move that the cominittee rise and report progress, and ask leave to sit again.

Committee rose and reported progress.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and House adjourned at 11.20 p.m.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. MURRAY. Before the Orders of the Day are proceedell with, I desire to rise to a question of privilege. An article has been published in the Ottawa Citizen of the 4th instant which reflects on my conduct as a member of this House, and I would claim the attention of the House for a few moments while I refer to it. That paper has made some comments on my conduct in connection with the Pontiac and Pacitic Junction Railway Bill, of which I had charge. It says :
"Mr. Murras, the member for Pontiac, cut a sorry figure before the Railway Conmittee yesterday. As sponsor for the Bill authorizing an extension of time for the completion of the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway, he is evidently acting in direct cont ravention of his reprosentative obligations, and so was obliged to acknowledge to the committee that the sentiment of the county is in ravour of limiting the time for finishing the road to three years. To complete his humiliation, a resolution of the country council of Pontiac was read opposing the application foran extension of time to the railway company, and refecting upon Mr. Murray's conduct in fathering the Bill. The council considered it a pity that Pontiac had not a member in the House qualified to voice the views of the electorate, and appointed Mr. S. MoNally and Mr. J. Bryson, ex-M. P., to represent the council before the committee. Mr. Bryson justified the confidence of the council by supporting their contention in a strong and practical address. Mr. Beemer pointed out that the county's repudiation of its obligation had delayed the construction of the railway. The Bill was, however. amended to compel the company to build to Allumette Island within three sears, to commence the work within one year, and to build the bridge across to Pembroke within five years."
Now, Mr. Speaker, I would appeal to the members of the Railway Committee who were present at the time this Bill was before that committee, to say whether this newspaper, which is supposed to be the organ of one of the political parties in this country, and to have some regard for veracity and truth and fair play, has fairly represented me. I appeared before that committee in charge of the Bill, and I stated distinctly that the sentiment of the people of the county was favourable to limiting the extension of the charter to two years, and not five years. I said that in the beginning. The council had seen fit to appoint a delegation to attend the meeting, and that delegation was present. The vice-president of the road, Mr. Beemer, was there also, and gave satisfactory reasons for the further extension of time. I was disposed, though in charge of the Bill. to limit the time to two years. The chairman will bear me out that I contended for two years, though we finally compromised at three years : and Mr. Bryson, who followed me in addressing the committee, concurred in my opinion. I do not think that any member of the present Government, whatever opinion I may have as to their political sins-I suppose they do not claim perfec-tion-or any Conservative member of this House, would wish to see me placed in a false position as a member of this House. I am sure that I would be sorry to countenance anything of this kind reflecting on the chararter or reputation of any member of Parliament. With these few observations, I will not further take up the time of the Honse.

THE FISHERIES ACT.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 9) further to anend the Fisheries Act.-. (Mr. Tupper.)

(In the Committee.)

On section 2 , paragraph 4,

Mr. FLINT. Do I understand that the Orderin Council or legislation referring to the length of the fish is abrogated? Does that also stand as part of the law, together with this clanse?
Mr. TUPPER. No. When this Act comes into force, all the regulations and Orders in Council as to the size of the various lobsters are repealed absolutely.

On section 2, paragraph 5,

Mr. TUPPER. I want to amend that a little. Since that was in the Bill, it has been brought to my notice that there is no provision to prevent the defeat of the object of that clause in this way : Lobsters from other countries coming into Canadian ports would not be, perhaps, ssbject to the provisions of this Bill, and therefore the very check we wish to have imposed on illicit packing would be defated; and I propose to make that clear in this way so as to make the clanse read as follows :--
" Every case of lobsters, canned, preserved or oured in Canada, shall be marked, labelled or stamped in such manner and by such person or persons as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries may from time to time direct ; and such mark, label or stamp shall state that the lobsters packed in the case so marked, labe!led or stamped hare been legally caught and packed; and cases of lobsters imported into Canada from other countries shall also be marked. labelled or stamped in such manner as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries may from time to time direct; and such cases so marked. Iabelled and stamped shall state that the lobsters packed in the cases so marked, labelled or stamped are the product of the country of origin."
In that respect we will guard against the abuse of our own stamp, preventing the danger we are trying to guard against of catching lobsters in our country out of season.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When lobsters are caught at a cannery and put up and then sold by the canner to a dealer in the city, the said lobsters not being marked or stamped at the time, does the hon. gentleman propose that that shall be illegal ? Does he propose that there shall be no sale or transfer of any unmarked cans, and that the mere fact of having them in possession shall be a breach of the section, or cloes he mean to limit it in this way, that no lobsters shall be exported without a stamp being on the case? Supposing one humdred thousand cans were caught at any station, and a dealer in Charlottetown bought them at that time when they are not stamped, would lie lee liable to have them confiscated ?

Mr. TUPPER. We will know in the department exactly where there is a legal cannery, and we will then take measures so that we shall have an officer available to attend to the stamping and marking, and the case mentioned by the hon. gentleman would be an infraction of the regulationis We want to prevent the sale in Canada and export from a factory of unmarked cases.

Mr. IDAVIES (P.E.I.) Suppose a canner, who had cases of lobsters ready for export and not stamped, sold them to a dealer in the city, would he thereby break the law?

Mr. TUPPER. That is just where we are defeated. This is the trouble. In the close season there are constanty lobsters exhibited for sale. We get notice that there is a great deal of illicit packing going on in certain districts. We endearour to watch that, but when we get the cases and have every reason to believe they were packed in the close season, we are met ly the difficulty of proving that the lobsters were not caught in the regular season. The parties having them say they were calught in the regular season; and if an innocent party gets hold of them, it is all the harder becanse he says he did not know anything about when they were caught. What we do now is really to punish the innocent party, whereas the object of this stamping is that every person will know what he is handling, and we will be able to know if there has been any violation of the law.

Mr. FRASER. Who is going to do this work, because if the stamp is to loe lought, as likely it will be, each individual packer will buy a lot and can use them to stamp cases of lobsters caught out of season ". If the Government appointed an inspector under whose inspection every can would be packed, there would be security, but otherwise there will be none.

Mr. TUPPER. We do not propose to distribute the stamps. The department will look to that. There are many ways in which that difficulty can be met. We have the example of the Inland Revenue Law in regard to stamps, but for the convenience of the trade in this particular-and that is one of the reasons why the small fee is put onthe department will be enabled to keep a check on the export from the factory by the attendance of an officer:

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) The camer may have a thousand lobster cans in the factory for a fortnight without their being labelled. Is it intended to compel him to stamp them before they are sent out?

Mr. TUPPER. That is not the intention. It is only before they are removed.

Mr. STAIRs. Should they not be stamped leefore the commencement of the close season? It would not do to allow the packer to keep lobsters stored a month after the end of the open season without being stamped, because others might he put in all the time.

Mr. MoALISTER. I know sonie difficulty may arise in consequence of a packer having several establishments along the coast and canning the lobsters in one factory and sending them to another to be put up in the cases.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) It is necessary to fix with certainty the time when the camner knows that be cannot touch these lobsters without being stamped.

Mr. WELSH. I know a small factory near Where I live where the man simply cans the lobsters and does not put them in cases at all.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I see that it is the cases that are to be stamped and not the cans, so that will meet the difficulty suggested by the hon. member for Restigouche (Mr. McAlister).

Mr. McLEAN. In some cases in Prince Edward Island the shippers buy the lobsters unlabelled, and reopen the cases and put on their own labels. I do not see how this will be covered under this Bill unless the stamp is put on so as to prevent the case being opened.

Mr. TUPPER. There may be several contingencies of that kind, and that is why I proposed in clause 5 to leave several details of the working out of the measure to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The general danger I had in view is pretty well guarded against in the Act, though there are cases which may arise which I have not contemplated, and 1 admit that is one of them. What we want to stop is the most general illicit traffic known to the department and, I think, to the trade, that is, where the lobsters are packed in secret and shipped to the different cities and put on the market. I think such cuses as the hon. gentleman (Mr. McLean) has suggested could be covered by the regulations to lee made as to manner and mode, but we might insert the words "before being removed from factory" in this section.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I really think we ought to try here in the Honse to make it definite. If we cannot do it here where there is a lot of gentlemen who understand the matter thoroughly, it will be ditficult for the Minister to frame regulations afterwards. If you propose that no case shall leave the camnery without keing stamped, then say so in so many words ; and if you propose that it shall be ant offence to transfer cans from a marked case to another one, say so in so many words. There is no offence provided in the Bill for opening a stamped case and transferring the cans to another case.

Mr. TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will see that my section covers what I have in view. The hon. gentleman's suggestion is to make the Bill more stringent than $I$ proposed, and he may be right. That might be an additional guard to the packer. But I was aiming at the chief and most important purpose. The rehandling of a case would be an exception. This, unfortunately, is a very general practice; I want to stop that. and the provision I have there will stop it. I admit it would not stop the other, and against that I am not much concerned to guard.

Mr. STAIRS. I do not think the Minister need be much concerned about the point raised by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies). I think I understood him to say that he was in doubt whether it was provided that cans cannot be removed from a stamped case and packerl up in a case which is not stamped. Would that be possible under the law? If they removed cans out of cases that had been stamped and put them in unstamped cases, they would then be liable to a penalty ; they conld not put them on the market for sale. Now, there is no provision in this Act under which they could be restamped.

Mr. WHITE (Shellurne). I understand the hon. member for King's to say that there are some small packers who sell their goods to shippers and the shippers are anxious to take these cans out of the boxes, label them, and repack them afterwards. But it appears to me that is easily obviated by the shipper sending these labels to the packer and letting the packer put the labels on the can.

Mr. TUPPER. If the committeeare of the opinion that we should guard against all these various possibilities of abuses, I shall have to recast this clause materially. I would state, however, that I accomplish my olject by the present clause. Now, the hon. gentlemen suggest several other considerations of great importance, and they are to be worked out in some detail, that is, guarding against other abonses which I had not in mind. I think the committee would be saring time if it rose now in order to enable me carefully to recast the regulations in the direction of the suggestions that have been made ; lecause it would be very difficult for us to do this on the spur of the moment. But I am, persomally, content to stop with the present provision of this clause.

Mr. Melean. The Minister can see, I think. that the illegal packing takes place, as a general thing, with the smaller packers. Their factories are not large enough to enable them to get labels, hecause it costs more to get a small quantity, and they are the very parties, I understand, the Bill was aimed against.

Mr. TUPPER. I think the hon. gentleman is under a misapprehension. There will be no cost for laleels, nor any other cost except that $&$ cent case, and the 2 cents.

Mr. Molean. I mean the labels of the lob. sters, not the stamps.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Before the committee rises I would make another suggestion. As the Bill now stands the provisions seem very stringent, aml, I think, may be made to operate most unjustly. It siys here: "In all cases not so marked, the label or stamp shall be liable to seizure, and upon seizure shall thereby he confiscated;" so that the mere act of seizing would confiscate the property, and it may be there was no wilful offence committed at all. I think the hon. gentleman should provile in some way that they may be liable to seizure if foumd unstamped, and where found unstamped he must prosecute before some tribunal, and let the tribunal confiscate. It would never do to let an officer go in and seize four or five hundred cases of lobsters and have them confiscated by the mere fact of the seizure.

Mr. TUPPER. If the facts do not exist that entitle the officer to seize, then there would be no confiscation.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) How could you tell?
Mr. TUPPER. By the facts.
Mir. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If they are not labelled they will be seized. But if the officer seizes before the actual contiscation takes place, the man is deprived of his property. There ought to be a judicial determination somewhere.

Committee rose and reported progress.

SUPPLY-COPYRIGHT.

Mr. FOSTER moved that the Houseagain resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. EDGAR. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of the House to the present unsatisfactory condition, as I understand it, of the copyright laws. In May, 1888, an Act was passed ly this House making important and adrantageous changes in the copyright law. Although more than three years have passed since that statute was assented to, it is not in operation. There was a provision in that statute, as you will recollect, that it should not go into force until a proclamation was issued by the Governor in Comncil. Well, that proclamation, as I understand it, has not yet been issued, that statute has not been disallowed by the Queen, and, therefore, that statute cannot be disallowed by the English Government under our constitution. I would like to know from the lealer of the House what particularly gool reason he could give why that statute, which has become law, and has not been disallowed within the two years provided by the constitution for that purpose, should not be brought into force. Nobody in the House has spoken more strongly of the necessity of the Act of 1889 than the Minister of Justice himself. I know that the Government are willing, we know from published correspondence that the Government here were pressing the Home Government to either assent voluntarily to our law going into operation, or else, if they thought they could not do so legally, to cause to be enacted by the Imperial Parliament such legislation as would enable them to assent to our Aet of 1889. That went on for some time. The Government were pressed upon this side of the House several times every session almut it. Towards the end of last session the Govermment iutroduced and had passel an Address to the Crown, asking the English Government to take steps to have Imperial legislation on the subject, if they considered it necessary, and also to take steps to denounce the Berne Convention as to copyright in so far as it was necessary to do so to leave Canada out of its operation. We have heard nothing since as to the fate of that Aldress from the Minister of Justice, whose words on that occasion were unexceptional, whose statement of the position that Canada should occupy in the controversy with Downing Street was certainly unobjectionable. . That has gone along a little too far. Some fruit should come from those words. I should like to have some action now. I should like the Minister of Justice to act according to his undoubted aud often expressed conviction on the subject, I should like to know why he does not bring this controversy to a point by issuing a prochanation bringing that. Act into force. We know that under the law as it stands Canadian publishers cannot reprint an English copyright book. The public have the benefit of the American reprints of Enylish copyright works under the present law. It is true that does the public some good, but it does no good to the Canadian printer and publisher. One of the main objects of the legislation of 1889 was to enable Canadian publishers to reprint by license, British copyright works unless they were copyrighted here and published here within one taonth after the copyright in England. But I need not point out that the operation of the American Copyright Act, which came into force last year, is injurious to the Canadian public without doing any good to the Canadian publisher. Now, English authors can copyright their hooks in the United States, and when they do that, there can, of course, be no cheap American reprints of those copyright looks. They cannot be reprinted in Canada under the law as it stands; and, therefore, the Cainadian public cannot obtain such books at all. So we are suffering more than ever, both publisher and public, in that respect, and it is all the greater reason why some action of a decided character should be taken by the Government in respect to this legislation. So much, very briefly, for our relations with the mother country on the subject of copyright, about which I hope we shall have interesting explanations from the Minister of Justice. Then, as regards our relations with the United States on the copyright question, I should like a little explanation too. I have seen by the press that there is a feeling, I do not know how far it has taken form officially, but there is a feeling evidently in the press against some rulings and decisions of the Minister of Justice in connection with the taking out of copyright in Canada by American citizeus. Under the American Copyright Act, which allows foreigners to take ont copyright in the United States, under certain couditions, there is the privilege granted that if the copyright book is set up from type and printed in the United States, foreigners may take out copyright there, provided "that this Act shall only apply to a citizen of a foreign state or nation when such foreign state or nation permits to citizens of the United States of America the benefit of copyright on substantially the same basis as its own citizens." I camot understand what cause of difference should exist. I suppose Canada has been included in some way or other within the operations of this United States Act by a proclamation of the Presirent or otherwise, and if so, I suppose Canadians have taken out copyright under these provisions in the United States. In fact, I have szen it stated in the press that Canadians have done so, and that every facility has heen given them in that direction at Washington. I suppose that an American citizen can come here, and if he complies with the Canadian law, just as a Canadian himself would have to comply with it, he can get copyright here. He would have to be domiciled here more or less to comply with the law, as a Canadian has to be domiciled, and it is necessary that the look should be published and printed here under our law for a Canadian, and therefore the same rule woull apply to a citizen of the United States. So far as I can see, our laws do not discriminate against the citizens of the United States in favour of Canadians. Perhaps they do; at all events, it would be very interesting if the Minister of Justice would tell us what clains have been made in the United States, if any, on that subject. It is a little curious, of course, that in Canada, in order to get a copyright, the party should be obliged both to print and publish in Canada. In England they only require that the work should be published there simultaneously with pub. lication in any other country, and in the United States they reyuire only that it should be printed there; they do not require publication, but we require both pulbication and printing, and probably that may strike the American people as being unfair to them, but still I fancy it is the same to thein as it is to our citizens. On these different points I would like to hear the opinion of the Government, and I hope sincerely that they will be able to report some distinct progress after the three years that have elapsed since the passage of the Act in 1889.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to know from the observations which the hon. gentleman has just made that we are still in harmony upon this question. I have not in any way receded from any of the positions I have taken with regard to it, and my views as to what ought to be done have not changed in the least. I can give the hon. gentleman but a very short answer as to the reasons why the proclamation has not issued, and one that I am afraid will not convey very much information to him. The proclamation has not issued for the very reason why it was required ly the Act of 1889 . It was incumbent upon us to insert in the Act a suspensory clause for the reason that the legislation affected questions in relation to which the mother country had a dis. tinet policy and to some extent concerned her international relations. We were obliged, therefore, to insert the clause suspending the Act until Her Majesty's pleasure should be known in regard to it, or suspending the operation of the Act until it should be proclaimed, which practically amounted to the same thing, because the object in suspending it at all was to enalle the policy of Her Majesty's Gorernment to be made known to us. The proclamation of an Act of that character is not a matter entirely within the discretion of the Executive of the Dominion, and Her Majesty's Government had to be commumicated with for the purpose of ascertaining whether objection existed on their part to the Act being put into force. The proclamation has not been issued by us for the simple reason that Her Majesty's Government have not withdrawn the objections which they had to the Act being put into force. List year loth Houses of this Parliament passel an Address to Her Majesty to have any objections withdrawn, or else to haye an Act passed in the Imperial Parliament ratifying the Act of this Parlia,ment. That Address has not heen definitely replied to yet by any communication which I am at liberty to lay on the Table of this Hense. In fact I am sorry to have to say that what has transpired since is not of a character which I am at liberty to disclose. But I have to say this: that no effort has been wanting on the part of this Government to press this matter upon the attention of Her Majesty's Government, feeling as we do, what the hon. gentleman has expressed this afternoon with reference to the wants of the Canadian trade, and the wants of the Canadian public too. As I stated to the House last session, I think that the passage of the American Act upon the sub. ject makes our claim much stronger to have our Act of 1889 put in force; and it removes at one stroke a series of objections which were taken on the part of Her Majesty's Government to legislation of that kind down to 1889 . It was always anticipated by those who advised Her Majesty's Government with regard to this particular question that there was a probability of a most liberal copyright law being passed in the United States, and we, on the other hand, represented that in all probability when such an Act. would be passed it would be found to be an Act containing the very clause which we inserted in ours, with regard to printing in our own country. The result has justified our predictions. The American Act contains the home production clause, or what is known in the United States as the type-setting clause. I shall be very glad if I am able to state fully to the House what the most recent communication is upon this subject with Her Majesty's Govermment. With regard to the question which has arisen as regards reciprocity with the United States, I have only to say that our own Act upon the subject seemed to me to be so clear, that 1 was not at liberty to give any qualification at all to it by interpretation. A complaint has been made, however, on the part of the Government of the United States that reciprocity has not been extended with regard to copyright. The communication made to Her Majesty's Government has been forwarded here, and I think has not been replied to yet but will be in due course. The matter is receiving the attention of the officers of the Department of Agriculture for the purpose of giving some details, but the prorision of our statute to which I refer, and in connection with which my opinion was given, was simply one which only permits the privileges which have been claimed, and the refusal of which have been made a subject of complaint, to be given to authors or publishers in a country having a treaty arrangement with the United Kinglom.

Mr. FIDGAR. There is no treaty with the United states.
Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No. It was claimed on the part of the United States that some conversation which had taken place between Lord Salisbury and the American Minister at London amountel to a treaty arrangement, but there was ob-iously no foundation for that claim at all. It was a mere statement of Lord Salisbury of what his riew was of the law with regard to copyright, and inasmuch as our own statute was evidently in force and Her Majesty's Govermment would not dispute its validity there would seem to be no claim on the part of the United States in this direction : and I thonght the Department of Agriculture was not at liberty to reciprocate without changing the law which says:
"Anyperson domiciled in Canada, or in any part of the British possessions, or any citizen of any country which has an international copyright treaty with the United Kingdom who is the author of any book, map, clart, itc.,, shall have the sole and exclueive right of publishing.'
I saw afterwards by the comments which took place in the United States upon the sulject, anll which were the best informed, that there could be no doubt that there was no claim on the part of the United States to demand an extension of copyright privileges under our law as it stomi. I have not been disposed to alter that, or, imdeed, to make any change in the copyright law until the fate of our Act of 1889 is determined, and until the negotiations with the Home (iovernment are concluded. There are some changes which Her Majesty's Government desire with regard to the collections of imposts on foreign reprints, &c., and the answer which was returned from here substantially was that we would be disposed to consider that question in due time, but we would only consider it as an amendment to the Copyright Act of 1889, and would only consent to sach antendments coming into operation when the Act of 1889 came into force. I think it is quite likely that before the close of the session I may be ahle to give an answer which will convey more information than $I$ am in a position to give this afternoon.

Mr. EDGAR. I would like to ask the Minister of Justice if the claim made by the American Government was, that they should get a patent for publishing here?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. No, I fancy not. I think they are willing to comply with these conditions, but they clain that as a result of the negotiations with Lord Salishury they are entitled to be in the same position as if there were a treaty airangement.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.

Mr. DEVLIN. I would like to call the attention of the Gorermment to a subject of considerable importance to a large and deserving class of the residents of Ottawa and the surrounding country. Last year, as is well known, public attention was directed to certain irregularities in the Civil Service by the investigations of the Public Accounts Committee, and I have no doubt that much gool has resulted from those investigations. It is claimed now, however, that too much severity is exercised against a certain portion of the employés in the pablic service, and I would like to call the attention of the Government to a statement which is made, I know not how correctly, in a communication to a newspaper, that when certain employés in the public service fall sick their payment is stopped. The statement is as follows :-
"The Government, not satisfied with stopping extra clerks' holidays. 'de., now that la grippe has gripped many of them and laid them on beds of sickness, when they are prostrate and helpless, when doctor's bills have to be paid: when their pay is most needed, our paternal Gorernment steps in and on 'husiness principles' stops their pay."
There are a gond many other statements in this letter, but they are of a rather severe character, and may perhaps be unwarranted; I do not propose to refer to them. However, I think that as is matter of justice to those gentlemen who may be thus attlicted, out of consideration for themselves and their families, they should be allowed their pay. I hope that the Government uill investigate the matter and see that justice is doue to these gentlemen who have been struck down by sickness.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The statement which the hon. gentleman has read from the paper is too sweeping. With regard to the stoppage of pay on account of illness, that must be to a great extent left to the discretion of the heads of departments ; but it is true that in many cases where persons have been employed by the day, they have lost their pay on account of absence through illness. The practice requires the deputy head to certify only for the number of days' work done by persons who are employed by the day, and he does not feel himself in a position in these cases to certify for a day's work which has not been performed. The more permanent employés do receive pay while absent through illness.

Mr. DEVLIN. The hon. gentleman will see that in the special cases mentioned la grippe was the ailment, and the parties were perhaps detained many days.

ASSENT OF LIEUTENANT GOVERNORS.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I desire to bring to the attention of the Government a matter of some constitutional importance which has come to my notice within the last hour or two. At the last meeting of the Legislature of Prince Edward Island, a Bill was passed altering the constitution of that province, doing away with the two Houses of the Legislature, and constituting one House instead. That Bill was clearly within the purview of the powers granted by the British North Americia Act to the Legislature of the province. There is not a shadow of doubt about that, and the Legislature passed it by a good majority. Insteal of giving his assent to the Bill, the Lientenant fovernor has reserved it for the consideration of the fiovernor General. The right of a Lieutenant liovernor to reserve Bills which are within the competence of the Legislature to pass, has been time and again under the consideration of the Hepartment of Justice, and the Department of Justice has laid down the rules from time to time which shomld guide the conduct of Lientenant diovernors, and which are so dear and distinct, that no Lieutenant (iovernor ought to go astray. In. Bourinot, in his book, says on this subject :
"Section ${ }^{-5}$ of the British North America Act now applies expressly to the provinces of the Dominion, and eonsequently in reserving, or withholding the assent from Bills theLieutenantGovernorsare to act not merely on their own 'diseretion,'but 'subject to instructions' which must necessarily emanate from the Governor General in Council. since these high officials now occupy the same relation towards the Dowinion Government that the Governor General occupies towards the Imperial authorities. In the absence of these instructions they are thrown on their own discretion and forced to come to a conclusion on such matters with the assistance of any advice that their Ministry may give them under the circumstances."
Now, in the case which I am bringing to the notice of the House, the Bill was introluced by the (iovernment, and passed by the diovermment, and they are responsible for it. The Lieutenant Governor was alvised by them to assent to the Bill. He would not assent to it, but reserved it for the consileration of the Governor dieneral. In 18, 3 , ia similiar course was taken by the Lieutenant Governor of the Province of Ontario. The matter was referred to the late Sir John Macdonald, who was then Minister of Justice, and he marle his report upon that Bill-it was an Act to incorporate the Loyal Orange Association of Eastern Untario,--in the following words :-- " That these Acts purport to incornorate two provincial associations. That the only object of these associations appearing on the face of the Acts. is the holding of property. real and personal. That this being a provincial object. the Acts are within the competence and jurisdiction of the Provincial Legishature.
"Such being the case. in the opinion of the undersigned, the Licutenant Governor of Ontario ought not to have reserred these Acts for Your Excellency's assent, but should have given his assent to them as Lieutenant Gorernor.
"Under the system of government that obtains in England as well as in the Dominion and its several provinces, it is the duty of the advisers of the Executive to recommend every measure that has passed the Legislature for the executive assent.
*: The provision in the British North America Act, 1867, - That Your Excellency may reserve a Bill for the signifi:cation of Her Majesty's pleasure,' was solely made with a view to protection of Imperial interests, and the maintenance of Imperial policy, and in case Your Excellency should exercise the power of reservation conferred on you, you would do so in your capacity as an Imperial officer and under royal instructions.
"So in any province the Lieutenant Governor should only reserve a bill in his capacity as an officer of the Doininion and under instructions from the Governor General."
The correctness of that rule was brought under review in the year 1882 when the present Chief Justice of Novia Scotia filled the position of Minister of Justice, and he adoptell the language of Sir John Macdonald, and recommended that a Bill which had been reserved for the assent of the Governor General should be returned to the Lientenant Governor, with the quatation which I have made, showing that he had been acting beyond his duty in reserving any Bill for the assent of the Governor General, except under instructions from the Governor General. In all these cases, the rule laid down by the department and acted on ever since, has been followed by the Lientenant Governors, and it would be a very serious matter, indeed, if the Lieutenant Governor of any province should attempt to exercise personal discretion against the adrice of his constitutional advisers, and withhold or reserve Bills for the signification of the (iovernor General's assent at Ottawa. It would give rise to very serious complications; it would introduce into this House miatters which should be left entirely to the Provincial Legislatures, and result in very grave incomvenience. I, therefore, lesire, at the present time, not so much to discuss the whole matter as to call the attention of the Govermment to it, and to ask whether general instructions have been issued from the department for the gridance of Lieutenant, Governors, whether any special instructions have been given to the Lieutenant Governor in this case, or whether, so far as the hom. Minister of Justi:e knows, the Lieutenant liovernor of Prince Edward Island has acted unconstitutionally on his own discretion and against the advice of his Ministers in the course he has taken with respect to this Bill?
Sir JOHN THOMPSON. The hon. gentleman has asked me three questions, and if I caja remember them consecutively, I will answer them so. I think the first question was whether any general instructions are given to Lieutenant Governors. I reply that under the system which was adopted three or four years ago, instructions are ammexed to the commissions of Lieutenant Governors. I would not like io say positively what the text of those instructions is on the subject of the Royal assent being given to the Bills, but I am sure they are not in contlict with the doctrines laid lown hy Sir John A. Macdonald and Mr. James Macdonald, when Ministers of Justice. That doctrine I adhere to. I think the second question was whether instructions were given the Lientenant Governor of Prince Edward Island with regard to this particular Bill. I beg to reply that no instructions were given. I have hall no communication with the Lieutenant Governor on the subject, and am confident that no member of the Government has had, because I had no intimation that the Bill had leen reserved, or was likely to le reserved, until the hon. gentleman mentioned it in his place a moment ago. With regarl to the constitutionality of the conduct of the Lieutenant Governor, if the hon. gentleman's information is correct as to the Bill having been reserved, I can only say that I cannot think he was correctly informed in being informed that His Honour had ilone anything contrary to the advice, or without the advice, of his executive council ; and I presume, and certainly will presume until the contrary is made apparent, that whatever he has done with regard to any Bill has been with the advice of his executive officers.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) My information is a telegram received from the Attorney Gieneral himself.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I am sure the Attorney General would not state what advice he had given to His Honour. I presume it is a matter of inference from the Attorney General'squestion, and I can only repeat that no instructions have been given.

Mr. LAURIER. I am not surprised, but, at the same time, an very glad to hear the language of the hon. gentleman on this guestion. I an glad to hear that he adheres to the doctrine lad down many years ago as to the duties of Lieutenant forernors, that they are to act strictly in conformity with the alvice given them by their constitutional advisers, and I expected this from the well-known views of the hon. gentleman, but if the statement made hy my hon. friem is correet, that the Licutenamt Governor has chosen to refuse his sanction to a Bill passed by two hanches of the Legislature of his province, the guestion is a very serious one and one which will have to engage our very serions at tention at an early day.
sir RICHARDCARTWRIGHT. Will the Minister of Justice, without further notice, lay on the Table a copy of the instructions accompanying the commission?

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. Yes.

Motion agreed toand House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Sault Ste. Maric Canal..............s40, (min

sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT: I would be glad to have from the Minister of Canals a somewhat full statement as to the position of these works and as to the sum likely to be expemded on their completion, and when they will lee completed. If I remember aright there has been a good deal of discussion in this House on the various suljects comected with the camal, and in particular with respect to the size of the locks which have been altered. I think, two or three times over. I want to know exactly what position the whole work is in just now.

Mr. HAgGART. The estimated cost of the sault Canal is $\$ 4,(X N), O(N)$. The total expenditure up to the 30 th June, 1889 , is 554 , (068, leaving $\$ 3$,$4 \div 5,922$ to be expended. There was expented down to the 31 st of lecember, 1891, $\$ 173,336$, the estimated expenditure to the 30th Jume. 1892 , from the Ist of Jinnary, 1891 , is $\$ 327,269$, making a total to be voted from the amount appropriated last year, which was s935, 430 . That is the amount we ask for next year. The work on the Sault Canal comprises three sections:-The lower entrance, Hugh Ryan \& Co., contractors ; the canal and lock, that is the secoml section, Hugh Ryan \& Co., contractors : and the upper eutrance, Allan \& Fieming, contractors. The plans on which these contracts were let provided for a 16 feet navigation with a lock 6010 ly 85 but only 60 feet wide at gates. The cost of this work, including lock gates, machinery, \&e., was estimated at $\$ 3,000,000$. There was a full statement of that at the time it was introduced in the House by Sir John Macdonald. The contract with Hugh Ryan \& Co., for the second section, the canal and lock, has been twice modified loy changing the dimensions of the lock, which, as now proposed, is to be 900 hy 60 feet and the same width throughout. The depth of water on the sills is the same as that adopted now for the new Americanlock, 21 feet at medium low water, $20 \neq$ at extrene low water. No arrangement has been male as yet to increase the depth of the camal and the approaches to a greater depth than stated at the time the contracts were let. The total cost of complating the camal and approaches to the same depth as the new American camal is estimated at $\$ \mathbf{\$}$, (нN), (KんO, so from the increaseal cost caused by the alteration from 16 feet to 20 feet at lowest water is estimated at $\$ 1,(\boldsymbol{M N}, 00 \%$. The Sault Camal has been divided into three sections, the lower entrance, the upper entance, and the canal and lift lock. Lower entanace section, the entrance was let, No. 96i+3, the 30th of June, 1889. It comprises dredring, pier work, atud a beacon, and was awarded to Hugh Ryan \& Co., to be empleted 10th of April, 1892. The contract price was $\$ 299,813$. That of course contemplates 16 feet narigation. The apper entrance section, contract No. 9664., compriseld dreying, pier work and a beacon, and was awarded to Allan Fleming wa the 2 ith March, 1889. to he completed loth April, 1892, and the amount of the contract is S.3e-. 920 .

The United States Government is now excavating a ${ }^{0}$ ) feet ehannel (largely in their own territory). This channel when finished could be used by Canadian ressels, but if at any time it should be desirable to improve the North (Canadian) channel of the River Ste. Marie between the Canal and Lake Iluron so as to have a navigation of 20 feet in Canadian waters throughout, the cost of this improvement as estimated by Mr. W. (i. Thompson (from Capt. Baytield's survey) would be.
To complete the scheme of establishing it $\omega_{0}$ fect navigation it ronld be necessary to decpen Port Arthur ant Owen Sumnd. Mr. Thompson gives the following approximate estimate of the cust of these improvements:-
Deepening harbour of Port Arthur. $\quad 3$ ni, inn do do Owen Sound. $2(x),(\mathrm{yH})$ $\$ 1,2 \pi \overline{0}, 1 \mathrm{MO}$
The hon. grentleman has asked for the details of the three different changes in the dimensions of the lock. On the enth Norember, 1588 , a contract Was entered into with Hugh Ryan & Co. for the construction of a lock and cianal at Sianlt Ne. Nanie. The dimensions of the lock were:

| Lenfth of chamber. | CO |
| :---: | :---: |
| Width of chamber | 55 |
| Gate width | ف |
| Depth of wateron | 19: |

By an agreement dated 19th.June, 1891 , the dinensions of the lock were changen to the following:-.

|  |
| :---: |
|  |  |
|  |  |
|  |  |

By a further arreement the plan of the lock was :Ggiain changerl, and the dimensions now adopted are as follows:-

On the American sinle a new lock is being built of the following dimensions:-

> Gate width....................................... . . 101

Sir RICHART) CAR'TWRIGHT. If I followed the hon. gentleman correctly, in the first place the width was 8 : feet, then it was increased to 100 feet and finally was diminished to 60 feet. That seems to be a very wide deviation from the original plan, and a width of $\vec{z}^{2}$ feet for a lock of $(M)$ feet length seems disproportionately narrow. What were the reasons for these changes?

Mr. HACriART. Originally it was intended that ressels should lie side by side in the lock as they do on the American side, but afterwards it was thought that it would delay locking and that the present dimensions are sufficient to accommodate all the vessels.

Mr. Haggart.

Sir RICHARI) CARTWRIGHT. How eloes it affect the expenditure, lengrthening it and reducingr the brealth:

Mr. HAGGART. I have given the figures.
sir RICHARD CARTWRI(iH'T. What I mean is, when you construct a lock of (9M) feet by $60, I$ presume that the cost is very consinlerably in excess of one of 6.00 feet hy $1(M)$. But it looks a little curious that at so late as the 19 th . Tune, lS91, the engineers should have advised the construction of a lock of 6 bib 0 by 1 (KI, and then should have suddenly wheeled around and altered their plan to one of own lig 6o. I think we ought to have some explanation of the reason.

Mr. HAligART. I am following the American engineers. The first lock which was contemplated was an exact copy of the one they had on the American side ; the second one, I think, was a copy of a eontemplated American lock, and I think the American engineers changed their plan, and ours followed.

Sir RICHARI) (GARIWRIGHT. Without any particular enfluiry, other that the Americans hat changel!

Mr. HAli(i:Al'T. The thimi change wis not exately the same as the American engineers. Theirs is a lock of s(x) feet long amd l(x) feet winle ; ours is one of $g(x)$ feet long and (i) feet wiele. ahout onehallf the dimensions of the American lock.

Sir RICHARDCARTWRIT;HT. What strikes one as curious is that within so very short a time the engineers should have vitally altered the scheme of constructiom. If I took lown the hon. gentlemans tigures correctly, this first contract was eriven on the ooth Noveminer, $1 \times 8 \times$ : on the 17 th Jume, 1891 , it was molified to a lock of (6.0) by low feet. On the 30th March following they entirely reverse their previous a lecision, and go for a lock of $3(H)$ feet hy (io. Were the parties whoreported, the same:

Mr. HAlifiART. No, I think not.
sir RICHAPI) (AP'TWMICHTE. Inamatter of this conseruence, involving an expenditure of four millions, it certainly does shake ones fath in the engineers employed hy the (iovermment, to find so extrandinary a change made in so very short it time. My recollection of this matter is that the miginal cost was estimated at a good deal less than the hon. gentleman has stated. I myself helieved it would cost a grool cleal more, buit I think the original statement made to us was that the cost would be about one million and a half, or one million and a quarter. But I amspeaking fromrecollection, and if the statement before the Dinister is that the original estinate was three millions, I suppose that is correct. still, I remember a discussion which took place in this Honse in which the late member. for (ilengarry (Mr. Purcell) took part, and in which he pointed out that the estimate laid before us was vastly below what the cost of the work would probably come to. It is quite clear that Mr. Purcell has been proved to be correct.

Mr. HAGGiART. The Minister was then speaking entirely of the cost of the lock, which he thought would be about $$ 1, \mathrm{i}(M),(000$. As a fact, the contract was let for $$ 1,209,0 \times N$. He stater afterwards what the total cost would be-I think it was three millions; he stated that in a lebate in the House. But the lock itself, at contract price, was about 0250,000 less than what was stated at the time, one million and a half. All the rest comes in in the channel above and helow.

Nir RICHARD (ARTIVRIGHT. What length above and below do you require to deepen?

Mr. HAGGART. The total length of the camal and approaches is $18,1(N)$ feet.

Sir RICHARI) CARTWRI(iHT. How much below and how much alove?

Mr. HAGidART. The report does not say. But from the amount of work to be done on the approaches ahove and below, if there was an equal depth to be excavater, it would le $$ 2 y 9,313$ for debouching into the lock lolow ; above, it is S32..,(n)O. The work to be completed above and helow is very nearly alike.

Sir RICHARJ) CARTWRICHHT. Is that the estimate of the total cost for the 18,100 feet ?

Mr. HAGBART. The actual contract price of H. Ryan & Co., for the part below, is se99,313; the amount of the other section is S32., 933. Of conase that is exclusive of superintendence and engineering, ant it only contemplates a depth of 16 feet of water in the chamnel.

Sir RICHARI) CARTWRI(iHT. That would ant a quarter for the first contract?

Mr. HA(iliART. Ies.
Sir RICHARI) (ARTWRIAHT. If I umlerstamd correctly, the original contract first let for the lock was Sl, 27! (MO)"

Mr. HAG(iART, $\quad \Xi 1,209,040$.
Sir RICHARD (CARTWRIGHT. $$ 1,2(0),(\mu x)$ in round numbers. Then the cost of the approaches

Mr. HACiliART. Then there are $$ 33,0$ (100 for engineering and contingencies, inchading such items as the electric light, and all the machinery and apparatus for working.

Nir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Now, this four millions estimate-is that supposed to provide for the whole work, or is there to be a further addition mate to that for the extra deepening from 16 feet to $\because 0$ ?

Mr. HAlifiART. That inchules the whole work. That includes H . Kyan \& Co.s contract, the deepening of the approaches, the short distance above and below the lock, which would nake $\leqslant 2,168,767$. Then that inclules an extra amount for decpening from 16 to 20 feet, of $\$ 192,000$; that is on H. Ryan \& Co. s lower contract : and an extra amount to Allan \& Fleming for deepening to ? feet above, sön, ok , and it includes engineering and contingencies, $\$ 3 \pi^{\circ}, 000$. That makes $\$ 4$, $(A K), 000$ exactly.
sir RICHARI) CARTWPIGHT. It will not be completed until 189.5.

Mr. HAGGART. December 31st, 1894, as at present contemplated.

Sir RICHARD CARTITRIGHT. That is, of course, independent of any work that may hereafter be undertaken for the purpose of giving us a 20 foot chamnel in St. Mary's River ?

Mr. HAGGART. Yes.
Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. That, I suppose, will be unnecessary under any circumstances, because, unless I am entirely in error, a considera-be portion of the channel now used liy the Americans on the St. Clair flats is umdoubtedly within our territory, and they are not likely to interfere with our use of the chamel unless we interfere with their use of the St. Clair chamel, I presume. Hiss any correspontence been going on with the authorities at Washington as respects these channels :

Mr. HAGGART. No, none that $I$ am avare of.

Sir RICHARI) CARTIVRIGHT. I do not know whether any of the Ministers are aware of the fact; possibly the late Minister of Customs might know.

Mr. HAGGART. A long time ago there was correspondence in regard to excavations near the lime kilns on the st. Clair flats.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHTS. I should like to know if there is any sort of risk of this navigittion heing interfered with. I should imagine there would be very little ditticulty in coming to an understanding with the authorities at $W_{\text {ashington : }}$ they would, no doubt, give us free access to the chimmel there if we gave them free alecess to the chammel in Detroit River: bat it would be very desirable to have this matter looked into and attended to. If there is any risk of our having to spend nearly $\leqslant 1,0$ ors,000, and perhaps more, hecaluse estimates of engineers are generally exceeded, in deepening out chamel below sault Ste. Marie, itis clesirable that we shonh know it.

Mr. Morirenalor. The camal at sit. Clair flats was placed in Canulian waters at the time of huiding, but an agreement was come to between the two Govermments that there shonle be nothingsaidabout it at the time. Some time afterwarls the Dominion (iovermment deciled to take out a certain portion of the rock in the Detroit Piver at the lime kilns. Then the United states (iovermment appropriated S2:, (on) to assist in taking the boullers out of the river, and afterwards they alded to the amomet half a million dollats ame then a million dollars, matil now we have the depth increased from 14 feet to $0(0)$ fect. It is $3(1)$ feet wide hy $s(n)$ fect long, and hoth Govemments bave the use of that cut free. It is very nearly on the (ianadian shore, and is a long distance from the American side and entire? $\begin{gathered}\text { out of American waters. That }\end{gathered}$ being the case, if our neighbours will not act with us in regard to st. Mary River, we should have the adrantage in respect to this cut on which they have expended something over 8 ? (0), (ON) The American Govermment are also deepening the sit. Clair Lake to a depth of 18 feet. Last year ressels were terribly obstructed by shallow water, the depth being if feet or $1+3$ feet : indeed, the water during the last two years has been much lower than formerly, and has caused great diftirulty in sit. Mary River as well. There is another question which I think it proper to mention at this time. While we are speaking of lengthening the canal to 900 feet and placing its width at 60 feet, would it not be well for the engineers to consider whether it would not be well to make the width 100 feet, as has been done by ou: neighbours across the line? Of course this additional width would cost a great deal of money, but that important branch of industry, the carrying trade, has increased more rapidly than any other industry in America, and cheap freights, would reduce the cost of bringing grain from the great west to the great east. The halk of grain, iron ore and humier is carried by liuge steam vessels, each of which draws from one to five harges, and these proceed down the lakes. The whole tow is phaced in one lock. because it is very important that they slould lee piassed through yuickly in orpler to save time : the lock is bow fect loug by 300 wide, or rather (io feet wide at present. In making so large an expenditure on our proposed canal it is desirable to consider the advantage of making it wider. The principal difference in expense would be the removal of earth and rock; the cost of the gates would not he much more, the cost of mitre sills wouh the the same, and the expense connected with lighting and management would be the same on a smath as compared with a larger lock. It wonll, therefore, le weil. as we are alont to malertake this larger expenditure, to consider whether it would not be andrisable to expend a little more money and construct the lock of the same width ats the Ameritan lock: on the other side of the line.
Mr. HaficiAET. The system comtemplated will greatly inerease the locking acconnorlation of the canal. Plans are proposed for lighting the chamel with electric light, so that vessels can be pat through the lock day and night. With the additional facilities provided, the capacity for trale will he five or six times that at present. The louk as proposed, together with the lock on the American side, will suffice for the trabe of the country, taking the most extravagant ideas of the increase, for a large number of years to come. The Government contemplited widening the lock ant placing in ressels double, as is being done on the dmerican side: but the hon member for South Oxforl (Sir Richard (artwright) will remember that one of his own friends suggested the advisaliility of increasing the length of the look and unking its wilth just suthicient for any vessel, either built or emmemplated, for like narigation. We took into consideration the sugerestion of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Gibsonl), which wat a correct one, and we had the lock altered in accorlance with his suggestion.
Mr. DEVLIN. I believe there are considerable rapids at sault ste. Marie; what is the height of the fall of water there:

Mr. Hatigakt. The fall is is feet.
Mr. DEVLIN. And there will be only one lock:

Mr. Hag(iart. les.
Mr. DEVLIN. Then the fall is is feet from the level of Lake Superior to the level of Lake Huron:

Mr. HagGart. I suppose there will lee a slightly increased fall to the level of Lake Huron, perhaps one or two feet.

Mr. INEVLIN. How far into Lake Superior will the approach to the upper end of the canal go:

Mr. HAGGART. That is the exact guestion asked by the hon. member from South Oxford (Sir Richard Carturight), and I told him I did not kuow exactly, I understand from the officer here that one section is about 9,000 feet, and the other 5,000 ; the shorter section is the one below.

Mr. McGiregor.

Mr. DEVLIN. Does the hon. gentleman know whether the approaches are longer or shorter on the Ganulian canal than on the Americian camal?
Mr. HAGGART. They must he ahout the same, and the excavation would be ahout the same distance for loth looks. It is nearly all rock cutting.
Mr. DEVLIN. What is the depth of the camal?
Mr. HAcicalt'. At present the depth is 16 feet of water in the mism, hat the contenphatenl depth -although we have no contract for it, hat we intent, at some future perion, to ask for comtracts for the excaration-. is is feet, with 20 feet on the mitre sill of the lock.
Mr. DETLIN. Was there much town property expropriated in order to constract this canal?
Mr. HAGBAAPT. No; it was all dovermment property.

Sir RICHARI) (ARTVRIGHT. I would like to know whether the Minister or the fiovermment genceally, propose to have any kind of understanding with the United states authorities touching this guestion of at cinal in their waters: It secms to me it would be just as well to have some distinct and definite agreement made with them; and that the opportunity is a very geon one, when we are hoth eonstructing these expensive canals at sant Ste. Marie, and when they are, as 1 maderstand, going to expend a very latge additional smon in our waters in the Sc. Clair hats. It may satse hereafter a grom deal of tromble if we utilize the present opportunity to hate a distinct comemtion with them on the sulbject, aml I do mot think there would he much trouble in coming to it : there ought not as lectween two husiness communities.
Mr. HAdidART. 1 will draw the attention of the Comeil to the hom. gentleman's suggestion.

Mr. ARMSTRONG: I wish to draw the Ministers attention to the fact that at unestion was raised some time ago as to whether the changes in the size of the loek causes any increase in the total cost of the work:

Mr. HAGi(adRT. In some cases I think it does ential increase in the particular items, and that is a sulject I wats very careful about. I hat the matter examined carefully, and reports made by engineers outside the department, and I was fully convincel hefore any changes were recommended to Council that the contractor was fairly entitlen to a change from some circumstances or peculiarities in the work.

Mr. ARMSTRON(: The reason I draw attention to this is, that our experience in the past was that payments of exteas on account of changes in public works have not been of a very assuring kiml. In estimating for the construction of public works, or in the planning of them, it is always well that the original plan should be adhered to. The next best thing when a change must be made is to see that it is dome at the least possible cost, and to see that, unless the change involvics extra cost to the contractor, there shall be no extra cost put on the work. The question I asked was: Does the change made in the dimensions of the lock add to the total cost of the work?
Mr. HAGGART. The original cost of the work as let according to the original plan would be $\$ 1,209,86 \%$. Then there was a change of the plar. which of course entailed increased quantities and increased depths, and that involved an extra cost of S 219 ,(0) ( $)$. Then the plans were changed again, to a $9(0)$ feet long and it (i) feet wide lock, and that entailed an increasel expenditure over the secomel plan of $\mathbf{3 B 3} 39,(\mathrm{OM}$, which makes the price which the lock is likely to cost now $\$ 1,7$ ass, 26, as compared with the original estimate on the ohl plan of $\$ 1,209,815$.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The increased cost is simething over half a million dollars.
Mr. HAGGART: Yes, Sinion,(on) ode.
Mr. MoGREGOR. As we are on the print of making some arraugement with our neightours aeross the line with reference to the free use of both rivers and canals, this would be a gool time for the (iovermment to bring up this matter. The American fovernment have expented something like $\mathbb{S} . \mathrm{FON},(\mathrm{KK})$ at the Lime kiln Crossing, and they are mow exponting a large amount on Lake st. Cliir, which brings them into the Canadian channel. They will also come into the St. Clair Hats, which are also in Canalian waters. Now, it is improsible for our ressels to come down the sault Piver without using the American shore, and before a depth of 20 feet can be used a very large amont of money mast be expented in deepening and widening the chamel in that river. Our neighibours are doing that and doing it guickly, while we give them all the alvantages of our rivers and waterways. At Amhersthiurg, a very large amount of money is expended in lighting the const. They enjoe so many adrantages given by us that they wonld be glad to reciprocate. if the matter were properly placed before them. They would possibly be getting more from us in our waterways than we would be getting from them, though it is true they have expended a great deal of money in our waters. Therefore I would urge on the Govermment at noce to seek a settlement that would be agreable and adrantageoss to both countries. It must le remembered that there is no country growing as rapilly as that around the shores of Lake superior. The carrying of iron ore to day is greater than was the carrying capacity of all the vessels on our waters ten years itgo, showing the growth of that indistry alone, and it is only an infant yet.

Mr. DETLIN. The channel is to he excavated to a certain extent beyond the approaches?

Mr. HAGGiART. In the chamel below the American locks there has been a large expenditure to iacrease the depth to 20 feet to connect the canal with Lake Hwon. We dill not contenplate making a chamel for ourselves. We contemplated the use of the channel which the Americuns have drealged out in the Sault Ste. Marie River down to Lake Huron.

Mr. DEVLIN. At the present moment what toll is paid ly Americum vessels passing through the American canal?

Mr. HAGGART. They are free.
Mr. ARMSTRONG. Has the hou. gentleman heard anything abont the Americans imposing tolls on Canadian vessels going throngh their canal?
Mr. HAGGART. I saw that in the papers ; that is all I know of it.

> Lachine Canal - Building eight pair of inare gates tor old and new locks....................

Mr. CAsES. I would like to reciall to the hom. Minister's memory some returns which were moved for by the hon. member for Pontiac on 4th April, and which will be nevessary before we can tinish the discussion of these rotes for camals. Does the hom. Minister know if they are nearly ready:
Mr. HAdidART. These returns have been prepared, and they will he brought down to-morrow.

> Taking down and rebuilding lock walls of the old lock. No. 1, both siles.
> including chanber, upper and lower > wing walls...... ......... ..... ...... 337,300

Mr. CASEI. In eonsequence of what is this rebuilhing necessaty ${ }^{\text {y }}$

Mr. HAg(idPT. It has become very ohd and dilapidated and not safe to use.
Mr. DETLIN. Is this work to be done ly the staff:

Mr. HAgGART. Yes; loy the repair statf. There is an engineer in charge of the canal, and he hires wo:kmen just as they are required.
Mr. CASEI. I think the Minister will agree with me it is latilly the most economical mane ${ }^{\text {b }}$ to carry on a work of this extent and do it ly day work.

Mr. HAgiaRT. You will see at once why it is not done liy contract. Vim do not know how mach of the lowk has/to be taken down and camot estimate exactly the amount of repairs repuired, si that $y$ yon could not deseribe it sufficiently to incite temers. It is the repairing of old work.

Mr. CAsES. This is an ite:n for taking down and rebuilding walls of old lock No. 1, both sides, comprising the chamber and upper and lower wing walls. The work is elearly enough deseribed in the estimates to invite temiers : imlas this work has not yet heen done, I will call on the Dinister to ask for temders before the money is expender.

Mr. HAmidiART. It is describell here as taking down and rebuilding the lock walls of ohl look No. I, both siles; hut some portions of it need not he taken down at all. The description, of comse, is in excess of what may be required.

Mr. CASEY. It coold be done by letting the contract by quantities and no: in the lump.

Mr. Devini. What is the lowest depth of the Lachine Camal:
Mr. HAGiaRT. Fourteen feet on the mitre sills.

Rebuilding the old regulating weir at Laciine and improvement of the present drainage system on the south side of the canal.............................00
Mr. CASEI. That is another item guite large enough to be made a matter of contract, and the same remarks would apply to that.

Building six stationary bridges. $$ 5350$

Mr. CASEX. Are these new briages?

Mr. HAGGART. No, there are twenty five stationary bridges on the canal, and these are the ones that require to be rebuilt.

Mr. CASEY. Also by day work?

Mr. Hagiant. les.

Mr. CASEY. Here is something like over Si-i,OM, all to be done ly day's work. In the neigh hourhood expecially of a large town like Montreal. the expenditure of such a large amount of money ly days work certainly gives opening for the exercise of a little favouritism here and there, and tempts to an umecessary expenditure of public money. Men are out of work, and their friends want to hare them at work, and the Dinister shomld see that this is done ly contract.

Mr. Macionenel (Algoma). The hon. genteman who has just spoken on three different items under discussion is evidently not a practical workman himself, or he would kuow perfectly well that the remarks he has made are nothing but atter bosh. In the first place, before you let a contract or call for tenders, you have to give a certain anmme of quantity in the work. In these items under discussion, the quantities could not possibly he given. The foumbitions are doubtful, they may he guicksand, and there nay he coffier dams reruirel. For that reason it is very much better for the Government to do such work as this by day work. They know then exactly what it costs. there are no extras; and when it is done loy the superintendent in charge of the work, that finishes it. A common indea prevails in Ontario that all work to be done by the Local (iovermment should be done by day's labour, but in this House it is not satisfactory to hon. gentlemen opposite that similar work should be done by day's laloons. But the work is entirely different. In the one case, it is the construction of roads where you can figure out the exact quantity of yards to be thrown in to construct the highway, while in this case the engineers cannot tell exactly the number of yards to le excavated and cannot tell what is necessary to le put in until a certain amome of excatation has taken place. A criticism on the Govermment in this case is most unfair, hecause any practical man will tell yon, if he speaks fairly, that the Govermitent has let that work in the hest possible way.

Mr. CASEI. I am sure the Minister of RailWays must be deeply obliged to his hom. friend who came to his assistance in explaining this matter. It appearel to me that the Minister had given a pretty clear statement with regard to the question I askell him. I was sitistied with the clearness of the statement, though not with the proposil to do this work by day's labour, but the hon. member for Algoma (Mr. Mitcdonell) evidently did not think so, because he tried to make the matter clearer, and he made it as clear as mud. In the first place he told us that the engineer in charge of the department could not say what quantity had to be excavated before this work could be done. Seeing that I was speaking in regard to the rebuilding of lock walls where no exceration was needed, I do not think the member for Algoma had any idea of what I was talking ahout. I was also talking about the rebuilding of a weir which does not require any excavation, and 1 also referred to stationary bridges, which are not excavated, as a rule, but are superstructures, and not dug out of the ground. My hon. friend from Algoma is quite conficlent that you cannot do this work by contract because you cannot estimate the actual yuantity to he excavated. I understood the Minister to say he thought it was possible to estimate the amount of work to be done, and he rather approved of the idea and would take it into his consideration. Now his supporter objects to the adoption of the contract system, unless quantities can be exactly estimated, and I might ask how a contract for dredging can be let when you cammot tell the amount of work to be done. Pefore the hon. gentlemen was a member of this House, I understand he had a contract for dredging at so much a yard. I do not see why the same plan should not he adopted either in regart to the building of masomry in a lock, or in regard to the excaration that might be required in any public work. On the other hamd, the gentleman contends that the Ontario siovernment built coloniation roals by day's work which could he more conveniently done ly contract. I camnot assume that he does not know what he is talking about when he speaks of colonization roads, lecause he must have seen such once in a while, but he is not talking in a rational way when he says a colonization road can be more easily let by contract than the constraction of a liok or a brilge, because it is impossible to tell when you are starting to luild a roal through the hush, how much timber yon will have to cat, how many stunps you will have to extract, how many stumps you can cover with carth, where you will get the filling, &c., and it would be innpossible with any degree of aceuracy to let the huilding of a colonization road by contract. Whereas, in the old settlect portions of the country where our camals are situated, it is quite possible to estimate the amomit of the contract, and even the bridges might he louilt by day's work because of the uncertainty of obtaining supplies of timber and other things, and I think the hon. gentleman will admit that these bridges have been built as cheaply under the say work system as they could he muler any other system. I know some of the men who have carried on that work up there, and I know that the work has been done as cheaply as it could he.

> Bridge over old lock No. 2, Welland Canal.................................... $.500 ~$

Mr. HAlid:ART. The old brilge has been condemmed as unsafe.

Mr. DEVLIN. Where is lock No. 2 ?

Mr. HAGGART. At St. Catharines.

Mr. DEVLIN. Is it proposed to build an extra bridge over the canal in the town of Welland? I heard something ahout that when I was in the County of Welland last week.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRI(;HT. Perhaps that was contingent on certain conditions being carrie, out. What did the hon. gentleman hear in Welland?

Mr. DEVLIN. I heard that a new bridge would probably be built across the canal in comection with a great many other important public works through out the county. The lriige which is there now does very good service, but two or three years ago it was proposed to construct a new bridge on a line with the main street which the present bridge is not. I was seriously asking the Minister what he intended to do in this matter, not on account of pledges made during the election, but as a case of urgency which is felt in that town, and no doubt this bridge would be of great assistance to the tratfic and an ornament to the town.

Mr. HAGGiAR'T. I never heard of the building of that bridge before. My attention has never been called to it before.

Mr. DEVLIN. I believe this measure has been advocated very earnestly by the Welland Telarouph during the last month, not at all in connection with the election, hat as a matter of necessity. I was on a visit to the town of Welland, having been invited there ly a few friemds, and I saw that the present bridge was not in the most advantageous spot, but if the new bringe were placed where it was supposed it would be, the site would be well chosen. I thought proper to call attention to this subject, lecause the gentleman who has been retmond for that riding is not yet in his seat, or, no doubt, he wonll himself call attention to it. I know his opponent intended to do so.

Mr. HAGGART. The So $2,(6 n)$ asked for is for the reconstruction of the superstructure of the pier.

Mr. CASEY. How is it to be done?
Mr. HAdiciART. I think it ought to be done by contract.
Sir RICHARI) (ARTWRIEHT. Do I umlerstand the Minister to say that he thought it would be done by contract: Hats he no information on the sulpject:

Mr. HAGGART. I have no information on the subject. If it can be clone by contract, it will he.

To repair banks damaged by hich water and storm of 9th February, 1889........ $$ 3$,6im

Mr. CANES. How is it that this bank has got along for so many years, if it was damaged in 1589\%
Mr. HAGCART. This is a revote. They are finishing.

Towards the construction of the culvert  at Strounness............................... 57,560

Mr. HAG(iART. The culvert is to provide for alditional drainage at strommess, the original culvert being insutficient. The culvert can only le constructed during the winter season when natigation is closed. Therefore, no portion of the appropriation will he required till july, 1892. None of the work is commenced yet. It has been let by contract.

Towa rds const ructing a new swing bridge between Stromness and Buffalo and Brantford Railway crossing............ s. $2,0 \mathrm{k})$
Mr. HAG(iAR'T. That is an additional bridge between Strommess and the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. DEVLIN. Have temlers been invited for the building of this bridge"

Mr. HAGi iART. It is really done now. Some work has been done by the department.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Does that take the place of an oll one?

Mr. HAGGART. It was commenced about a week ago.

Restoring outlet for drainage, west side of canal at Port Colborne.............. $$ 5,000$

Mr. CASEY. How did it get blocked up?
Mr. HAGGART. By the banks tumbling dowu and falling in.

Mr. DEVLIN. Does that interfere with the depth of the canal:

Mr. HAGGART. No.
Removing shoal at north of Chippawa River........................................ $83,(000$
Mr. DEVLIN. Is this shoal in the camal or is it in the river proper:

Mr. HAGGiART. It is a feeder to the Welland Canal.

Mr. IDEVLIN. Does it interfere with navigation through the Welland Canal:

Mr. HAGGART. Vessels come in that way.
Mr. DEVLIN. Is there considerable traffic from the Chippawa River into the canal:

Mr. HAGGART'. There is considerable tratfic for small boats.

Mr. DFVLIN. What is the depth of the Chippawa Canal:

Mr. HAGi;ART. Abont the depth of the old canal, 9 to 10 fect.

Committee rose, and it being six oclock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

ALBERTA RALIVAY AND (OAL COMPANY.

Mr. CAMERON (for Mr. CrkriN) movel that the Honse resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 3!) respecting the Alberta Failway and Coal Company.

Mr. EIMGAR. Before the House resolves itself into committee on this Bill I should like to drall the attention of the House to the fact that this Bill and the one next on the Order Pipper (Canada Atlantic Railway Company) have sonse peculiar features, and we shond understand how far the committees of the House proceed on that line. In the report of the Railway Committee, which was presented vesterday by the chairman, and alopted by the House it was distinctly stated that in this Bill, for instance, a number of important clauses were introduced and alopterl by the committee and reported to the House, of which no notice hat been given, and which were not even mentioned in the petition and which had not heen passed lo the Standing Orders Committee. The notice is often dispensed with, as we know, by the Standing Orders Committee, but a practice has arisen this session by which, in many cases, the Standing Committees on Railways and on Banking and Commerce, too, passed clanses which have not been reported upon eren by the Standing Orders Committee. We all know there are exceptions made very often by the Committee on Standing Orders in favour of clauses of which notice has not been given; but, when it comes to the Standing Orders Committee being passed over altogether, and the application made in the first instance to the Standing Committee on Railways, I really think something should be said to prevent its recurrence too often. I do not wish to raise any objection here. Possibly in these cases the reasons would have been sutticient if advanced before the Standing Orders Committee, but I think we should endeavour to impress on the committees that they should leave that part of their business to the Standing Orders Committee.

Mr. WOOl) (Brockville). The subject brought up hy the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Eilgaty) is one which has more than once engraged the attention of the House on reports presented by the chaiman of the Standing Orders Committee and hy the chairmen of other committees. The rule adopted liy the Standing Orlers Committee is this : where it appears from the petition which came before the committee that the power sought was one which did not appear in the notice published in accorlance with the requirements of the lawnot in accordance with the rule laid down ly the Standing Orders Committee, hut accorrling to the law-the rule is that if pul). lic interests do not in any way suffer, if there is no opposition to the particular clanse or power sought in the petition, although it does not appear in the notice, then a aliscretion is left to the committee, which it has always exercised in favour of the petition and in farour of the further power asken for. But in such cases the report of the Standing Orders Committee mentions particularly absence of notice, and leaves it for the House to adopt the report, and thas take the responsibility. During the past session and during every session the Railway Commitee as well as the Committee on Banking and Commerce have almost invariably been confronted by Bills referred to them hy this House containing clauses as to which the petition on which the Bill was based was silent. The question before the Railway Committee was this : sliall we strike out this particular clanse, or shall we refer it to the House and let the House retain it if it sees fit. During the present session in the deliberations of the Railway Committee the very same course has been adopted with respect to retaining any such clanses as were adopted in the case of the Standing Orders Committee, where a power or privilege was askerl which does not appear in the notice. Where there is no opposition to the insertion of that particular clause before the committee, where it does not appear to be antagonistic to the public interest, and where in order to make the Bill work. able that power should be given, then the committee adopt the only course that it could fairly arlopt, and that is, mention the fact in the report of the Pailway Committee to the House so that the House may pass upon it. I presented the committee's report on this particular Bill, the Bill for the Alberta Railway and Coal Company, where power as to irrigation was sought, in regard to which a lengthy discussion occurred in the committee. It is quite true that no power was asked for in the petition on which the Bill was based, lut the Postmaster General explained that it was the intention of the Govermment during the present session to introduce a general clause in the Land Act dealing with the subject of this particular legislation, to which I will not say the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edgar) objected, but to which he alluded. This clause was passed by that committee in anticipation of legislation on that sulbject at a very early date; but in that particular case the cominittee was very careful to state particularly in the report that the power had not been asked for in the petition, and they left the responsibility for passing the report to the House itself.
submit that it was the duty of my learned hon. friend to have seized that opportunity when the guestion was before the House as to whether it should arlopt that report or not, to hare then brought the question before the attention of the House.

Sir JOHN THOMPSON. I presumie the course which the Railway Committee have taken is the correct one umler the circumstabices. The other matter is one which is left for the Committee on Standing Orders to deal with, and for the Honse finally to deal with. I agree, however, with the hon. member for West Ontario (Mr. Edriar) with respect to the importance, as a general rule, of alhering more strictly to our rules on the subject of private Bills. When these Bills came before the Railway Committee they contained clauses which were of great importance amd might affect great public and private interests, and they authorized interference with public rivers in the North-West Territories, and therehy, perhaps, enabled a diversion of streams upon which the fertility of vast regions might depend. I think it was a matter -I say it with all deference to other committees - with which great public and private interests were concerned. Having reached this stage, the House having referred the bill to the Committee on Railways and Telegraph Lines, all the committee had to do was what it did, see that every clause was very carefully guariled and report the matter to the Hrouse. In regard to what was done with this particular Bill, no exception can le taken, but I, as one member of the House would feel gratified if, as regards every private Bill. our rales were more strictly athered to, as regards the introluction aid the reguirements of notice and everything of that kind. I think it is very desirable, and I hope we will all agree to it, that in future sessions the rules shall be bure strictly adhered to. Against that course there is the weight of a great many precedents which have been estah. lished by general concurrence on the part of the House, partly from sympathy and partly from indifference. I think in taking a new departure and in agreeing to alhere more strictly to the rules, every one of which is intended to protect both public and private rights, we shall have to disregard precedents altogether, and strike out a new course, unless we find an insistence of the rules would be a mere technical matter and that no right can possibly be infringed by the waiving of the rules. I think we should throw every presumption against perssons who ask the suspension of the rules of the Honse as regards a private Bill, and it is very desirable we should follow that course in fisture sessions.

Bill considered in committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

Chambly Canai-Taking down and rebuilding east chamber wall of lock No. 5

Mr. LISTER. What is this?
Mr. HAgifiaRT. It forms part of the improvements which have leen in progress on the Chambly Canal during the last ten years, and this vote is expecterd to complete them.

Mr. LISTER. Has the work been done by comtract?

Mr. HAGGART. No, never. It consists in taking down old locks and repairing them.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I notice that the superintendent on this camal receives a salary of $$ 1.500$ a year, and is also allowed su(x) a year for a ponse. Is that usual?

Mr. HAfidiART. Each superintendent is allowell a honse. In this case there is no house, and he is allowed house-rent.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the mame of the superintendent?

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Benoit.
Mr. CAMPBELLL. Is he employed at any other work:

Mr. HAGiGART. No.
Chambly Cunal-Fenes on canal front-nare of landz alongide of tornpath on Iste Ste. Therese....................5n
Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the nature of this work:

Mr. HAGGART. It is to fence $$ \ddagger$ miles on each sile of the canal. It is an obligation which the Goverment had to undertake. It was fenced lefore, but the fences have fallen into decay, and wire fences are to be put up.

> Chambly Canal-Building dry rubble protection Wall between Bridge No. 3 and Langelier Bridge................... $$ 4,000$

Mr. CAMPBELL. How is this work done?
Mr. HAciciART. By day's labour. Landslides have taken place, especially last year, along the high banks at this point, and at places there is danger to life and property.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I notice that on this canal a great many supplies are bought. Are these supplies, such as nails, spikes, lumber, &c., bought by contract?

Mr. HAGGART. All supplies, except the most minor ones, are bought by tender.

Mr. LISTER. I suppose there are no advertisements put in the papers calling for tenders?

Mr. HAGGART. I understand from the officer that requests are sent out to different parties asking them to send in tenders.

Sir RICHARD CARTIVRIGHT. How many?
Mr. HAGGART. Eight or ten.
Mr. CAMPBELL. I notice a charge for 831 feet of rock elin amounting to 8581.70 . It seems to me that is a pretty good price.

Mr. EDGAR. There must be a great many smaller supplies called for in the same way by invitation to individuals, and I think we ought to know what is the list the Govermment has, to whom they seml notices asking for supplies.
Mr. HAGGART. I have ordered the officer to prepare a list of those whom he asks for supplies, and I will furnish it to the Honse.

Mr. LISTER. There are other items besides nails and spikes. There is lumber; I suppose that is done in the same way.

Mr. Hag(iART. It seems to be a very small quantity, 831 feet, and it may he a very large size. I do not think the price is high at ii) cents per cubic foot for square rock elm.
Mr. CAMPBELL. On the top of the page, there is a charge for tanarack, $1,94.7$ feet, 8933.52 . That seems a large price.
Mr. HAciGART. I do not think so. It may be special sizes, and perhaps i or $s$ cents above the price. Forty cents would be paid for goodsized tamarack by the raft.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I notice that the erlinder oil is all charged at s.e2per gallon. I have been in the halit of laying cylinder oil for a number of years, and you can get the hest quality for 70 to $-\overline{0}$ cents per gallom. Sou can get Kellogg's oil, New York, which is considered the best cylinter oil made, and we do not pay any more than io to sil cents.
Mr. SPEAKER. In this part of the comentry, you camnt buy Kelloggs sil for lese that $$ 1$ per wine gallon, and then you have to pay freight.

Mr. CAMPBELL. During the past year, the price has heen reduced, and you can buy the best Canadian oil at 90 cents. Wits all this oil bought by contract or by tender?

Mr. HA(idiAPT. I do not know whether these particular items were or were not, hut 1 understand the system was introduced into the department last year of purchasing all these articles by tender.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Harlwate and sundries, S844.43. No items are given to show what these are at all.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the articles were so small that the Auditor cenctal did not think it worth while to extend them out in his account.
Sir RICHABI) CARTWRIGHT. There are some rathercurious items. On C-94 thereis in item for breaking stone for maculam which is put at 120 toise at 812 per toise. It appears to me that is a very large figure.

Mr. HAGGART'. I think, if the hon. gentleman enquires, he will tind that price is sery low.
Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. I have known of stone frequently broken for a very much lower price.
Mr. HAGGART. In a stone region, I suppose it would cost $$ 3$ to $$ 4$ before it is broken.
Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Not by any manner of means. My recollection is that broken stone for macadamizing purposes is furnishen fre. quently at $$ 4$ to $$ 5$ per toise.
Mr. HAGGART. I have had experience and it costs more than that to cart it.
Sir RICHARI) CARTURIGHT. I have had that done by contract at $$ 5$ per toise, and I do not think I got it any cheaper than anybody else.

Mr. HAGGiART. From S5 to 86 per toise is the price for breaking it.

Sir RICHAR1) CARTWRIGHT. Why should we pay Sll or Sl3?

Mr. HAficiART. You have to add the stone and the delivery of it. That is the breaking of it alone.

Sir RICHARD CARTURIGHT. How far had you to convey it? Usually speaking, in these places the stone is accessible very close.

Mr. Witson. In this item of rock elm, Fo cents per cubic foot is $\mathbf{S o} 0$ a thousand; that appears to he a rery high price, because we find wak in smaller quantities just below is charged at 30 cents per cabic foot.

Mr. HAG(iART. It depends altogether on the size of the elm, whether it is a small or a large piece. This was very likely required for lock gates, for the portion under water.

Mr. WATSON. It does strike me that 70 cents per cubic foot, or 50 per thousand feet, is an extravagtant price for rock elm. Does it strike Mr. speaker, who has some knowledge of timber himself, in that way?

Mr. CAMPBELL. What himd of coal oil is it, native or American oil :

Mr. HAi:(iART. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman.

Tomards the settlement of Lamourens Bros.' claim......... .... ............ $$ 1.600$ sir RICHARI) (ARTWRICHT. How comes it that these claims are all left over:
Mi. HAlifiART. This is in anticination of what the moount may be. It is at present before the Justice Departiment for decision.

Sir RICHARI) (ARTWRIGHT Last year we were toll that this claim had been settied.

Mr. HAGGART. I am informed that it awaits the clecision of the Minister of Justice and is now before that department.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand this is for compensation to Mr. Lamoureux for land which was expropriated. What is the trouble?

Mr. HAGGAR'T. He refusesto take theamount awardel, and it was sent to the Justice Department, I suppose, to allow him to appeal to the Excheguer Court or to have it settled in some way or other.

Mr. LAURIER. Is it before the Minister of Justice to settle what proceedings are to be taken, because. if a man refuses to accept the amount offered him, there is nothing to do except to expropriate the property.

Mr. HAGGART. The Government may take the property without anything being awarded.

Mr. LISTER. What is the amount of the award:

Mr. HAGGART. I think it was $\equiv 1,2(2)$.
Mr. LISTER. Was it a matter of investigation by the official arbitrators?

Mr. HAGGART. By the official valuators in the Province of Quebec.

Mr. LIster. Has the Minister any reason to suppose that these gentlemen will not take the amount placed in the estimates?

Sir Richaid Cartwhight.

Mr. HAGGAR'T. I cannot answer that.

Towards the settlement of the Yule Estate claim and incidental expenses.... $$ 1,200$
Mr. HAGiAART. That is in a similar position to the other and is at present before the Department of Justice.

Mr. PERRY. I see that 160 mask rats have been killed, and I should like to know who killed them and what became of the skins. Certainly the skins would be worth something, and I shoulil like to know whether we have received credit for the sale of them. This is a valuable fur, and I do not know if the department should be praised for destroying these amimals. At all events they should account for them in some shape. I understood there was a bounty given for the killing of wild animals such as hears, but I did not know there was any for the killing of valuable animals like muskatas.

Mr. HAliaidRT. I never heard of this hefore, but I suppose they were killed because they were likely to do a great deal of damage to the banks of the camals.
St. Amn's Lock-Earth exeavation and puddling behind walls of old lock .............. .................... s5,00n

Mr. (AMPlBELL. What is this for?
Mr. HAGi, AKT. Fo work was done upon this last summer, and further examination has shown that the damare has attained greater proportions than we supposed.

Carillonamd Srenville Canal-Towards rebuilding masomry in main walfs above euard lock, Grenville.......... 514,000
Mr. DFVLIN. The item is down for two years. Hats the work been commenced on the Carillon and lirenville Canal ?
Mr. HAGiAAKT. Not yet, I believe.
Mr. DFVLIN. Is this work to be done by the department, or will it be let by contract?

Mr. HAGiGART. I believe it is to be done by day’s work. It is pulling down and rebuilding oli walls and putting in coffer dams.

Mr. DEVLIN. Have the fiovermment a special staff to do this kind of work:

Mr. HAG(iART. They employ their own foremen, and the foremen get labourers wherever they can.

Mr. DEVLIN. Could the Minister tell me what is the ammal revenue derived from this canal?

Mr. HAGGART. You will find it in the Anditor General's Report.

Mr. DEVLIN. The revenue does not seem to amount altogether to $$ 20,000)$ a year. I observe, however, that the expenditure connected with the staff ainounts to $\mathbf{$ 2 1 , 2 2 0} \mathbf{2}$.
Mr. HAGliART. The wages are $\sin , 967$ for the year on the Carillon and Grenville Canal.
Mr. DEVLIN. Of course there is a certain amount to be deducted from this $$ 21,220$, owing to the investigation which was held last year and the year before. Deducting that, I presume that the expenditure connected with the staff would be at least $$ 20,000$. Is that not rather a large expenditure to collect $$ 18,000$ ?

Mr. HAGi(idRT. You will find that the staft on the Carillon amd Grenville cost $$ 14,22 ;$ ).

Sir PICHAR1) CARTWRIGHT. If the hon. gentleman will look at the Estimates which have been submitted to us, the details for 1892-93 for the Carillon and Grenville Canal, under the head of staff, are put down as $\$ 23,1000$. I do not quite understand the statement that the staff is only Si.i.(M). On page 80, in our own Estimates, you will tind $\mathrm{S} 2 \boldsymbol{3}, \mathrm{MN}(\mathrm{m}$ put down as the cost of staffi on (arillon and Grenville.

Mr. HAGigiART. That inclules a grool many other things.

Mr. DEVLIN. Is Mr. Starke, engineer, an officer on that canal?

Mr. HAdiciART. He has left the service for wer a year. He was given a year's gratuity.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It seems to me that a large nomber of articles used in these camals might loe purchased at a great deal less than they are purchased. On every canal there is an enormons quantity of cond oil, nails, spikes, lumber and such things purchased. I should think that if a person required such a large puantity of these articles they couhl le furnished at a much less price than they are. Cobl oil, for instance, at 29 and 30 cents, is out of all proportion.
 cents, 84 gallons at 21 cents, 290 grallons at 17.3 cents and 40 gallons at 17 cents.

Mr. WATNON. How does the Ministeraccount for the difference in the price of coal oil:

Mr. HAliliART. I suppose the 299 gallons and the st gallons were purchased at wholesale.

Mr. BOWELLL. I suppose the same principle applies here that applies in connection with the purchase of coal oil for the lighting of the barracts and grounds in the military school. I find that the high priced oil was of a quality that had to be nsed in lighting the grounds, and cost double the amonat of the ordinary illuminating oil burned in houses.

Triwards strengthening and repairing dam.. .................................. $$ 15,000$
Mr. CAMPBELL. What is the nature of this work:

Mr. HAGB(iART. It has leen ascertained that a portion of the work has given away, and this amount is required for repairs.

Mr. C'AMPBELL. How is the work to be done:

Mr. HAGi(iAR?'. By day's work.
To pay land damages and services of valiators.......................................000
Mr. LISTER. What are these land damages?
Mr. HAG:GAR'T. $s 900$ of this amount is a revote. The waier overflowed and damages were done to the adjoining lands, and vahators had to he employed.

> Kebuilding dry retaining walls, approaches to Lock No. 6, (irenville Canal

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. The sum total of these amounts chargeable to income is becoming an excessively heary item. Altogether, I see the hon. gentleman requires this year $\$ 296,000$ almost entirely for cauals. When youadd the item for staff and repairs, amounting to 5551,000 , it will be foind that these eanals are going to cost 8800,000 or $\mathbf{S O ( H ) , ( O M )}$ a year, against a total revenue of less than $\$ 320,000$. This Carillon and firenville Canal was reconstructed if few years ago, and surely we should not lee called on to defraty a heary expenditure for rebuilding. if the work was properly done. I think only last year there were very heavy claims from the contractors who built the work some years ago. Is there any special catuse why these walls require to be rebuilt:

Mr. HAGGART. This expenditure is necessary to prevent the dry retaining walls at the approaches to the lock tumbling lown. It is proposed to build them with a different quality of stone, and in a different manner.
Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. By the worls "lry retaining walls" the hom. gentleman does not mean that the walls were built withont mortar?

Mr. HAdiGilit. Jes, they were just dry rublle walls.

Mr. INEVLIN. I suppose this work will he given out as day work. Would it mot he hetter to give it out by contract, mather than place it in the hamds of a superintement to diveout as he pleased? He may have hisown favonates am he may give all the work to them, while others who were more competent were realy to ilo it. The pullic money might also be saved by arlopting this course.

Mr. HAGiART. It would be impossible in this case to do anything of the kimh. Wherever possible the work should be given out by contract. The Carillondanwas, however, sobally constructed that there was danger of the work heins carried away. The damage is more than was expected, and it is not known in detail as to what repairs will be requiren.

Sir RICEARD CARTIVRIGHT. Who is the original contractor?

Mr. HAGGAR'T. I think Mr. McNamee was the contractor for the Carillon dam.
sir RICHARI) (ARTWRIGHT. What did it cost?

Mr. HAfiliART. I in not remember, but it was a very large sum.

Mr. DEVLIN. Was there not a large expenditure a year ago?

Mr. HAGGART. There was an expencliture of 813,(roo) last year. It was in the course of that expenditure that it was fomel that further repairs were absolutely necessary in order to prevent the dam being carried away.

Sir RICHARI) (ARTWRIGHT. So you have had an appropriation of 815,600 , and you ask for a further appropriation of $\leqslant(5),(000$, and you have spent $\$ 13,(1) 00$.

Mr. HAG(iART. $$ 15,001$ were roted in 1892, of which $$ 13,0$ an were spent, and $$ 15,000$ more are wanted for this year.

Trent Vallev Canal-Towards construction of a dredge. ..................... $\leqslant 6,100$

Sir RICHARI) CARTWRIGHT. What kind of a dredge are you going to get for $\mathbf{3 6 , 0 ( M O )}$ ?

Mr. HAGGART. A small dredge with a bcom that dips down only six feet. I think the water on the mitre sills there is only $\bar{a}+\frac{1}{2}$ feet.

Mr. LINTEF. Where is it to be built?

Mr. HAriliART. I think we will have to build it on the Trent River, becanse there is no exit or entrance to the c:anal there.

Rebuilding Heeley's Falls Dam. . . . . . . . 55,900

Sir RIC'HARI) (ARTWRI(iHT. Where is that?

Mr. HAliliAR'T. Absut 1.5 miles from the village of Hastings. The dam has been hailt for about io years and reguites relnililing.

Mr. SOMERVILLEF. Is this work to be clone hy day's labour or hy contract:

Mr. HAliaidRT. The material will be got hy tender, and I umberstand the erihwork is to le done umiter the superintentence of the officer in charge of the canal.

> St. Peter's Camal-Reeonstructing west wall ............. .........................sit, ion

Mr. H.ABAiAR'T. An appropriation of Bizank was granted last year and this balance is reguired.
Sir RICHARD ('ARTWRIGHT. This seems to be a very large expeniiture for reconstructing the west wall of a single canal.

M:. HACifiART. It is hardly a wall. I think it is rock excavation. It was a heary clay bank or hill on the side of the camal, as I understand it, and it was facei with eribwork. It was forcing into the canal. and this rote is for the purpose of eutting down the carth slopes and refacing the lower part of it with eribwork.

Culbute Camal-Settling of claims and  $$
\text { removal of obstructions. . . . . . ........ } $ 5, \text {,ion }

Sir RIt HARI) (AR'JWRIGH'S. What are titese claims:

Mr. HACiliART. There were dams erecten on both sides of Allamette Isliand for the purpose of mising water for the lock of the Culhute ('anal. This, I hope, will be the emd of the damages claimed by parties who allege that they were injured hy these dams.

Mr. DENLIN. Is it the intention of the (iovermment to deepen this canal:

Mr. HAtiaidle'T. No: it is the intention of the Govemment at present to abimion the canal.

Mr. DEVLIN. What, then. is to become of the Ottawa River Ship (anal! I had hoped that the (iovernment would have an announcement to make in regard to that work. There is no doubt that it would prove one of the most important cunuls of the country. As I umierstand; it would shorten the distance very mach between Lake Superior and the port of Montreal, pass through a very fine comotry, and be of immense benefit to the whole of Canala. I will not slwell upon this sul). ject now, but I trust next session, after I am put in possession of all the papers which I have asked for, to place the question wore fully before the House.

To meet salaries of officers not on the Civil Service List. . ........................ 312,300

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Explain the oljject and meaning of this vote?

Mr. Hageart.

Mr. HAliliART. Eugineers and clerks are sometimes employed at the heal otfice, and their salaries have been charged to the particular work on which they have been engaged. I think the Auditor (ieneral has interpreterl the Act to mean that their salaries camot be charged to a particular work unless they are employed in the province where the work is groing on; so that the new method alopted is to take a vote for their salaries. There are similar cotes for the Puhlic Works Department and for the Marine lepartment.

Sir RICHARI CARTWRI;H'T. I observe here a very eomsiderable reluction. How do you come to be able to make it:

Mr. HA(iliAR'T. There is mot so many railways heing constructerl now, and there is not so much reguired.

Camadian Pacific Railway-comstruction. $\mathbf{S i}_{2}^{2}, 160$
Mr. HAGifiAFTT. This is required to pity the salaries and expenses of engineers supervising the expentiture matle for the Camalian Facitic Railway on the section of the railway letween lemory's Bar and Navona's Ferry, in aceordane with the award of the arbitrator:.

Intercolonial Railu:ay-Increased ac-

Sir RICHARI) CAPTIVRIGHT. What is this wanted for, ami is it really wanted at all :

Mr. HAlidiAR'I. This is a sum recommemed for terminal facilities at Halifax.

Nir PI('HARD (.ARTWRI:HT. There can be very little urgency for this. as it is a revote, and we have expenled a really frightful sum for inereased accommolation at Halifax : and, ats everybooly knows, the Intercolonial Railway is not in a condition to give us much return for our money at present.

Mr. HAtiliAR'T. The report of my rlepartment states that increased accommondation is repuired at Halifax, that the sheds are pretty well tilled with freight, and the estimate for the proposed accom. monlation comes to a very large sum. 1 am taking this vote at present, hut do not intend to make any expenditure on it as $I$ ann new in the department, and I want to make an enguiry on the spot myself as to what the increased acemmorlation will be. There are two proposed plans, either of which will require an expenditure of between sis(l),(XX) and $\operatorname{sif}(0),(X)$; and under those circumstances, I think I would be justified, before making any expencliture, in making a thorough enduiry as to the requirements and probable cost.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) Then the hon. gentleman's proposition is to take $$ 152,(X K)$, though he has not made up his mind as to what extension, if any, he will make, and the amount he will expend.

Mr. HAGiciART. The $$ 102,000$ will be required in any event, and perhaps a much larger sum, but I cannot speak authoritatively on the subject.

Sir RICHARI) CARTWRIGHT. How long will the hon. gentleman require to consider the statement?

Mr. HACiriART. I intend to go down immediately after the session and look over the gromm. I do not know what time that will be, but I suppose alout December or January next.
Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) If the hom. gentleman proposes to expend even such a sum as $$ 152,(0)(x)$, he must have made up his mind for what purpose it is to be expenden. It is only a few years ago since we spent a very large sum in Halifax in extending the railway and building a new station. He now asks parliament to wote sios, (M) and I assume he must have made up his mind in some direetion to that extent anyway. In what direetion are you going to make the extension, because you may matke an extension which, perforce, will compel you to expend a very mach larger sum afterwaids: Before we take the initiatory step, which necessarily must involve the expentiture of a very large suin of money, we ought to le informent.

Mr. TCPPER. We han guite an extended discursion on this item last session, and from the statement of the Minister of Railways I mulerstand we are practically in the position we were then. Parlimumendiscussen at considerable length the propriety of roting an amendment before the Government stateil detinitely which plan they proposed to take. The committee was informed then that there were two proposals, one incolving the expropriation of a block of land or houses and the other heing an extension down along the wharves. With reference to this proposition, some co-operation on the part of the city was required, and lefore coming to at conclusion it is proposed to make an investigation on the spot.

Mr. DAVIEN(P.E.I.) That is hardly husinesslike. The department have unt made up their minds as to whether there will be any extension: and it is umreasonable to ask as to rote such a sum ans this until the Minister has made up his mind after examining the gromml. He may then fiml, anl his report may meet with general approval. that the extension will involve the expenditure of committee should not commit itself, for if we vote slow, (CXN and use it in an extension which in the long ran may cost sin(N),(N)O, it will he too late for us to draw hack.

Mr. TLPPER. The point that prevailed with the comimittee last session was this, that there is allsolute necessity for increasel accommolation. This amount of money would give us a great deal of accommolation on the property owned by the Intercolonial Railway, further away from the present terminus at Halifax, lout instead of making this improvement on the Intercolonial property proper and further away from the city, we might posisibly come into the city and meet the wishes of the business people there. But, in any event, increased accommolation is absolutely required.

Mr. DAVIES (P.F.I.) It might be as well to leave this item stand.

Mr. TUPPER. We can go back to this subject on the other item which is allowed to stand.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I am speaking my own personal views, and I think it is indiscreet to ask this sum until the hon. gentleman has decided what the extension will be.

Mr. HAGGART. I understand from the officers that this amount will be absolntely necessary, but the city authorities objected to our making the expenditure even on the property we have there, as so much better acemmnolation can be obtaned in the city; and if afterwards we decided on that, the expenditure would he made on the new property. Under those circumstances, we refuse to make expenditure on our property, hoping that some arrangement may be made by which far better terminal facilities may le iffordeil.

Mr. FORBES. I would suggest that that item stand. I know there is a dispute hetween two bodies of merchants as to where the extension shall be. There is a proposition, which I trust will be aceeptalle to the (iovernment, to bring the two clashing interests together liy means of a medium route down Wiater strect over the electric railway; which it is proposed to lay along that street. The freight shechs on the wharves along that route will he easy of access from this proposed line, and the sim required from the dowernment by way of bomus, which will be to the great extent recouped to them from the freight along this line, will he a much less sum tham is reguired to be voted here. The Nowia sontia lower (oo has today the right to ${ }^{\prime \prime}$, along certain streets. inclanling Wiater street. They propose to hinild along that strect. Which is about being pared ly the citizens of Halifax, tia aceommondate the merchants along the water frome, aml carry their freight up and down byeans of theirelectric road or as stean dummy. They will have hepots at seteral stations atomg the line from the Intercolonial Railway, und will rive ampleacemmondation to all the freight and passenger tratic. This can be done by it grant mach less than that askell for here in this item, prohably rme-fifth or one-sisth of this amount: and, if the proprosition will beaceeptable to the covernment, I know it will he aceeptable to many of the citizens of Halifax. and I trust an arsugement can be arrived at wherely it will be accepted by Parliament.

Mr. TUPIPER. 1ho you propose to realnce that vote:

Mr. FORBES. Yes.

Mr. TCPPER. By how much:
Mr. FORBFS. Probally one-fifth or one-sixth, if the scheme is carried through. I know that. hy the scheme that I speak of, ample accommonation can be given to the citizens thereby. I suggest that this item should be allowed to stamd unless the Minister will sty that it is necessary for the building of sheds to hold freight.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) I was disappointed in not seeing any reference in the report of the Railway Denartment to the proprosed extensions in Halifas or St. John. As there must he a long debate in reference to the Intercolonial Railway, and it will be expected that the Minister will lay down such new propositions as he will have to sumbit to the House for the future government of the railway, and as it is expected, whether rightly or not, that there will be some drastic reforms in regaril to the management of the road in the future, and the House will expect to be placed in possession of the policy of the (iovernment in reference to the whole road, I would suggest whether it would not be as well to allow this item to stand. Last year the member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) submitted a proposition in reference to these Government railways being placed in the hands of a commission, but that was not acceptel by the (iovernment. Then we understood that the Minister of Railways who is now the Minister of Militia, when he visited the Maritime Provinces formed some conclusions from what he olserved, and that steps have been taken to carry out some suggestions male by him. I think, after one general disenssion of this Intercolonial Railway question, the probabilities are that the several items will not occupy mach time in passing.

Mr. MILLLs (Bothwell). We ought to have a statement of the policy of the (iovernment as to the management and comduct of the romi, the number of men employed in various parts of the service in connection with the roal, what changes are intended to be made and in what respects the staff is to be reducel, so that we may have before us in intelligible scheme. I moderstam that the cost of printing in connection with this road is eight or ten times as great as that in connection with the (irand Trunk, and almost as much in comparison with that of the Canadian Pacitic Railway. These are serious blots on the management of the road, and in all these particulars we should have brought before us very clearly the contemplated reforms in this department.
Mr. BOW ELLL. I would suggest that this item might stand, and the next might be passed, and we might have the general discussion when the yuestion comes up again on Tuestlay, and that, as suggested ly the hon. member for Gueens, P. E.I. (Mr. Davies), the individual items might then pass without much discussion. No doubt the longest disctission will take place in regard to the general management of the railway, and what is proposeal to be done and also in reference to the extensions in Halifax anl st. John.

Mr. LaURIER. And the St. (harles Branch.
Mr. BOWEILL. I think that is alout done with, except in regarll to the claims, and I am aftaid, they will take to the emi of the world.

Mr. HAZFN. The lion. member for Bathwell (Mr. Mills) hats made a statement in regard to the advertising on the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). I said nothing about the advertising.
Mr. H.VZNS. Well, then, to the printing. Has he any figures to support his statement?

Mr. MILLS: (Bothwell). I simply mate the statement for the information of the linister who I understoon was alout to give us the plan of the management of the road in the future, and I called his attention to it so that he would be prepared to discuss the subject, but not with a riew of discussing it this evening, hecanse I understool from both sides of the House that the discussion was to stand over.
Mr. HAGGART. At the next meeting I will be prepared to give as full a report as I can as to the reduction of the number of employes, the train mileage, and so on, and I will have such general information as will give the hon. gentlemen all they desire. I think the hon. gentleman must be mistaken as to the cost of printing, as will be shown by the figures in regard to that matter which I will bring down on Tuesday next. I am informed that the cost of printing for the (irand Trunk exceeds that of the Intercolonial Railway. Committee rose and reported the resolutions.
Sir JOHN THOMPSON movel the aljournment of the Honse.

Motion agreed to; and House aljourned at 10. 1. p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Movidy, Oth May, ISO2.

The sienker took the Chair at Three oclock.

Prayers.

INSTRLCTIONS TO LIELTENANT governors.

Nir JOHN THOMPSON. I was asked to lay on the Table the instructions appended to the (ommissioms to Lieutenant Governors.

Mr. SPEAKFR. I would call the attention of the House to the rule, also, in regard to the presentation of documents. In 1sss, Mr. Speaker Blanchet laid down the rule, which is also the rule in England, that no papers can be laid hefore Parliament except umler the authority of a statute, in aldress, or an order of the House, and I think it would be well to have this rule followed in the future, so that these papers may appear on the Journals of the House. In Englaid the custom has been that, where a paper is askel for, a motion may be made, if it is unopposisel and it is desirable to have the return hought down when motions are calleel, or a motion may be male by the Minister himself when he lays the papers on the Table.
Sir JoHN THOMPSON. In respect of any paper of this kind being asked for by a memher, I unierstand that I submit it here for his perusal and it is not supposed to go on the records at all. If it is desired that any document of this kind should be made part of the records, a motion should le mate, but I think this was submitted formally to the House before, and is probably already on the recorils.

Mr. LAURIER moved for:
Copy of the instructions appended to commission of the Lieutenant Governors of the Provinces of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

CASCUMPEQUE HARBOLR, P.E.I.

Mr. PERRY moved for:
Copy of the report of the engineer having in charge the blusting of rock in Cescumpeque harbour, P.E.I: also a statement showing the quantity of rock blasted, and the total amount expended in connection therewith.
He said: The Ciascumperjue hitrour has a sand bar at the outside and there is a soft red stone rock on the inside. In 1885, the Department of Pubhe Works commenced operations there by blasting that rock, but they allowed a great portion of the rock to fall back into the water and did not clear it as it went. The result is that the stones accumulated on the sand bar. In 1890 they sent a dredge there which, in eleven days, removed 1,146 cubic yards of stone from the cutting. A large amount of money has heen expended with poor results. They should have the dredge there to drelge out as the blasting goes on. The fiovernment should understand that it is absolutely necessary that the stone should be dredged out as soon as it is blaster. This is one of the most important harbours of refuge on the northern side of Prince Edward Island, and therefore it is necessary to have this harbour kept clear enough for vessels drawing nine or ten feet of water. During storms, nambers of ressels from Nova Soutia and New Brunswick, and also from the Cnited States, have to find refuge in that harbour, and sometimes, through there heing not waterenough there, they have to shy the harbour and go somewhere else, ruming the risk of being lost luetween the North Cape and New London. I believe the return will show that there has been spent ahout § 16 ,(KNO improperly, as the stones which were blasted were allowed to remain in the bottom, with the exception of 1,1 iso odd cubic feet taken out in 1890. It is the balance remaining there which causes the obstruction. Blasting is of no use unless the stomes are dredged ont accordingly as they are hasted. I hope the department will goon blasting, and in the meantime have the stones dredged out.

Motion agreed to.

PCBLIC LANI) (iRANTS TO RAILIATS.

Mr. CHARLTON moved for:

Return showing: 1. The total number of acres of public lands gramed in Manitoba and the Canadian North-West in aid of railway construction, up to 26 th April, 1 s9?. 2. The mane of each railway company or line to which a land grant has been made: the lengit of each line thus ailed by iand grant, and the number of acres granted to each company or line. 3. The total number of acres ot land in Manitoba and the Camadian Narth-West which have been earned up to 26 th April, 1892, under provisions of grants through completion of lines or portions of lines to which land grants have been made. 4. The name of each railway company or line which has earned the whole or a portion of its land grant, with the number of arres e:arned by each of such lines.
He said: We are engaged in the development of a new regiom in this Dominion, and this matter ought to receive our earnest consideration as to the proper methols to be adopted to secure, with the least expense to the public treasury and the least cost to our public resources, the result aimed at. It is almost miversally the case that where dovermments have dealt with enormons areas of wild land, a certain degree of recklessness characterizes their managenent of this trust, at least in the earlier stages : and if we dispassionately consider the course which has been pursued by the Dominion Govermment with regard to the public domain in the North-West, we will find that this Government bas been reckless in its management of this trast. Of course it is difficult to realize the vast possibilities of the future. When the Cnited States first attained their independence and the nation consisted of thirteen states with a population of $3,000,010$ souls, the public men in that country, in-dealing with their rast domain, failed to realize that within 100 years there would be $\overline{50}$ additional millions of population, that the country, which was then a howling wilderness, would have large cities, 30 or 40 in number, one of them with a million inhabitants and nearly a score with over one hundred thousand inhalitants, and that trade and conmerce would have made the immense progress it has in that perion. In the same way we stand at the threshold of vast developments in this country. We are dealing with a public domain of enormous extent and ahnost inexhaustible resources, and we are dealing with it, in many respects, in a way not characterized by prudence, forethought and proper consileration of what lies before us. The Minister of the Interior last year furnished us with a statement with regard to grants of lands made in the North-West for the purpose of aiding railway construction, and I was forced to the conclusion that our policy in this regard had been a reckless one, and that our grants for the purpose of aiding railways had been very far in advance of the requirements, and very far in excess of what would le a prudent limit. The Minister of the Interior, by a statement submitted to the House, informed the country that the grants at that time, including the grants to the Canadian Pacitic Road, amounted to 42,132 , (AK) acres. Now, that is an area granted in a comery which at that time had scarcely $2(0)$ ) ( 4 () $)$ inhabitints. It was a provision made to aid railways to the extent of 210 atres for every man, woman and child in that country, a provision to the extent of 1,0.0 acres for every family of tive in that country. It strikes me that the bare statement of these figures is sufticient to carry combiction that the grants have been recklessly large.

The example of the United states in this matter, from whom we copied in ading rallway construction by lamd grants, should be instructive to us, and we should hot be above taking a lesson from their experience. I tind in referring to the statistics regarding Cuited states lami grants, that great is the evil in that comntry was-and it was almittedly an evil, every public man in the United states to-day will acknowledge that the grants made in adid of railway construction were excessively large, in a great many cases unnecessary-yet the grants in that country were small in comparison with the grants made by the covermment in this comatry, if we take into accom the relative population of the two comntries. I find that the number of acres certified and patented up to 30 h lume, 1882 , in aid of railway construction in the United States, was $46,526,0$, 10 atres. Since that time there have been selected by railways, certified and patented, land grants to the amount of $3+, 0,5,2,(n 6)$, acres, making a total in the entire Unitedstates of $80,50,5,(\varphi)()$ acres. Now, that is, estimated upon the basis of the population in the region in which these roads were constructerl, a fraction over three acres granted for tach inhabitant, as compared with the grant of $2(1)$ per inhalitiant in our own Cimadian NorthWest. As I have intimater, this policy has been admitten to have been an unecessary policy, and an extra vagant policy, and the system has been entirely abandoned in the United States: land grants for the purpose of promoting the construction of railways in that country are no longer made. The country in which these grants were inade comprised twenty-six states and territories; the country in which our own grants, amounting to more than half the total grant in the United States, have been made, comprised one province and four territories. The country in which these grants have been made, in the UnitedStates, contained a population in 1880, of $24,960,000$ souls; and in this count:y, before an acre had been granted, before the policy had been inaugurated, hefore the first step had been taken in the direction of promoting railway construction, the country in which these grants were afterwards made, contained in rommi numbers a population of
 we must. I think, arrive at the conclusion that if their policy was objectionathe, if their policy was extraviant, if their policy was monecessary, as every public man of reputation in the United states will to-day ahmit was the case, then our polics is doubly mnecessary, and reckless and monustitiable.

Now, there is one particular evil it strikes me that characterizes the policy this Govermment is pursuine, and that is this: The dovermment is chagaged in the hasiness of promoting private speculation: the dovermment is engaged in the husimess of errantins speculative charters to men of straw. to eompanies composed of men of straw : and in the great majority of ases hitherto these :ailway charters could not have been based on legitimatelsisiness. They havebeencharacterizedbe the same features as those which chamacterized a railway charter sranted here some years ago, when one of the prommers of that charter then mate use of the celehrated salying that "something must be saved out of the transaction for the boy ${ }^{*}$ "aml in the great majority of cases these charters have been granterl, not only for the purpose of saving something out of the concern for the "boy," but had leen gramed for the benetit of the "hoy" from beriming to end : and the policy has simply anounted to this, that the diovermment has comsented to act as the agent of speculative parties for the purpose of giving them control of franchise, for the purpose of locking up great sections of land until these men coulif sell their charters, could make smme arrangement by which they could make all that wats to be inate ont of this transaction, and retire from the speculation. I presume that in a great number of instances, if not in a majority of instances, this feature has characterized the operations of granting charters, so far ats the applicants themselves were concerned, in the North. West, and I do helieve that the Govermment has not exercied that degree of camtion and scrutiny that it ought to have exercisen in this matter. I was struck by an observation made by the Minister of Militia on one occasion in this House, when, in referring to the proposition to assume the grants made by municipalities in Ontario for the promotion of railway eonstruction, that hon. grentleman informed the House and the country that this was simply a proposition for adding millions of dollars to the public debt. Well, Sir, in the same sense every charter carrying with it a land grant, is a proposition to subtract from the public domain vast areas of land, and this policy has resulted in subtracting from that area necessary-and it may be necessary, I do not deny that there may be circumstances that would justify the granting of land for the construction of a railway; I do not deny that a Government that pursues this policy judiciously, may be fostering and promoting public interest-but even if this policy were in any sense necessary, there can be no doult whatever that the whole system has been grossly abused in this country. There was the case of the coal lands in Vancouver Island-I remember protesting against that grant at the time. There was a little line of raiiway-I passed over since-running along the sea from Victoria to Ninaimo, a distance of 70 miles, the construction of which was scarcely necessary : and to promote the construction of that railway nearly all the coal lands of the Island of Vancouver were granted to a syndicate, the greater proportion of the capital heing held in San Francisco by Southern Pacific Railway magnates. I pointel out this fact at the time, but the lobby influences here, the lacking here, were too strong, the grant was made, the coal lands have gone, and the other day we were informerl, in discussing the militia estimates, that the reason coal was so high when purchased in Vancouver Islamel, was that there was a monopoly, and we ourselves created that monopoly by this grant to the Namamo Railway Company.
Now, I have not the slightest doult that many branch lines have been bonused with lam grants, that would have been constracted, anyway, as soon as the country refuired them, lines that the great railway artery that passes though that cumntry requires for the clevelopment of its own husiness: and we have been giving millions of acres of land to promote the construction of hrameh lines that wond be constructed, and must be constructen, and that it will he protitable to construct for the main line to which they act as feeders. My opinion is that we should wait before granting the chat ter, before making a land grant in connection with that charter, until that roal was wanted; that we should consider whether it was not prohatble that the road would be built without public aid, and if the probability was not that it would be constructed within the time the road was wanted by the public, and when the capital would le forthcoming. The question arises whether we are properly discharging our daties to the people if we permit a charter far in alvance of the time it is required to be granted, and a land grant of $6,4(H)$ acres per mile to be made to accompany that charter. We have railway charters rumbing to Peace River, we have railways projected to Alaska, we have railways projected in every direction running back into the wilderness, and year by year in advance of the time where these roids are wanted companies are chartered and land grants made, and in every one of these instances we are simply fostering speculative enterprise, we are putting into the hands of speculators who secure those charters the power to control those undertakings and shut out legitimate enterprise and legitimate capital. When the time comes that capital is ready to construct ihe road these men, like the dog in the manger, stand in the way; they are in possession of the charter and the land grant and terms must be made with them, although they probably have not put $$ 1$ of capital into the work of construction. What does it mean that over $40,000,(K X)$ acres of land in the North. Westhave been granted to railway enterprises in a country with a population of lessthan 250,000 , or 1,00 )acres for every family ? It strikes me that the policy we have been pursuing is a reckless policy, that we have been going too fast, that we must call a sharp halt in dealing with that great trust which is placed in our hands, that enormous country in the North. West, which is to be the home of future millions of people. We want to hold it, we want to keep the speculators from coming between the Government and the people, and we can most effectively carry out that great trust by seeing that, except under circumstances which render the necessity of taking of the step in obvious one, the fovermment shall hold the land until they cam pass it from their hands to settlers who will actually cultivate the soil. I nake this motion for the purpose of calling attention to this matter. I do not know that I wish to be understood as lenomeing very savagely the policy of the diovernment, hecause the policy they have pursued under the circumstances is a natural one. They have been actuated by a desire to develop the rast region that is now undeveloped: but they have heen going too fast and acting withont due exereise of julgment, so we had better now take stock and see how far we have gone and what action it may be necessary to take in future, and govern ourselves, not ly the clamours of charter brokers, not by the clamumes of men who want to get control and possession of the public domain in the North-West, but to govern ourselves by the necessities of the case and to promote the construction of railroads When they are wanted, and deal with the question in a business-like manner and grant aid in the construction of the railroads to the extent and at the time it is requested--that and no more.

Mr. PELVDNEI. There will be no objection to bringiag down the return asked by the hon. gentleman, and I may adl that since a similar return was hrought down last year my information is that no other land grants have been given. This sulject has been brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), I think, every year I have hal the honour of sitting in this House. It has been the same story, and the hon. gentleman has enunciaterl the same views. Before I came to this House I read the reports of the hon. gentleman's speeches madeduring the previous years, but they were of a very different charactel from those he has deliyered since I became a member of this Honse. 1 have not the Hansard with me, but I can easily procure a copy, and it will be foum that in his speeches the hon. gentleman favoured land grants and was pronounced in his views as to the construction of railways and as to how they should he built. The hon. gentleman during those early years, 1876 or 1874, not only held that land grants should be given for the comstruction of railways, but that they should be built prior to settlement: that we should not wait. as he suggests to-day, until the country is supposed to be in a condition to warrant expenditure on railway construction. If necessary I cansend for the Debates and read the hon. gentleman's speechea which are, I chink, utterly at variance with the views he now expresses on this suljoect. The hon. gentleman has heen very harsh in regard to the charters which have been granted, and he has stated that more than two-thirds have heen speculative charters. I hold a list of the charters granted. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he considers the Camadian Pacific Railway charter a speculative charter : Then there is the charter to the Manitoba and North-Westem Railway. That company has carried out its obligations with the Government faithfully: it has built the road, and it has carried out its obligations better; perhaps, than any other corporation builling railways in the North-West. Then there is the charter to the Hudson Bay Railway. That mondertaking, as hon. gentlemen know, is in a fair way of going on, and it is in the hands of responsible men, and I lo, not think it can be classed as a speculative charter. Then there is the Alberta Railway and Coal Company. The road has been completed, the company have received the land grant, and the comotry has received benetit from its construction. Then there is the Calgary and Elmonton Railway, which is now about completed. That travels through a fairly settled comtry, butsince itsconstruction it hasadded immensely to the wealth and importance of that section, and to-day setulers are flocking in from all directions. Then there is the Manitoba and southEastern Company, which road is now in a fair way of heing constructed. Then there is the Red Deer Valley Railuay, the constraction of which we authorized last year, an! 1 suppose it will he completed this year. The Wood Momatain and (qu'Appelle Railway has not yet heen started, although the company has for some years possessed a charter. Altogether the acreage of lamp voted by Parliament amounts to $\$ 2,000,000$. The hon. gentleman asks for information in regard to the gnantities that have ahrealy been earned. As I have that information at hand 1 might as well give it now. The puantity of lamd alrealy earned by railways completed, including $19,(1 \mu),(M(x)$ to the Cimatian Pacitic Railway is 2,218, (nom). My impression is that several railway companies will not earn their land grants, and I think that the acres added, will he what I expect that the (iovermment up to the present will really feel that they are bound for.
Mr. CHARLTON. Then some $12,(\mu),(N 0$ acres will lapse :
Mr. DEWDNFT. That is my impression. With regard to the policy adopted, I must say that I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman, and I am sure that the people who are interested and who are living in the North-West would not agree with his statements either. Of course it is well known that in this eastern country railways have been built, in a great measure, by subsidies: and the hon. gentleman will himself almit that railways must he built in that western country before settlement will go there. I hold the views that the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) did in 1876: I still hold the view that it was a necessity to luilt railways in the west ahead of settlement and for the purpose of inducing settlement to go there. We have constructed the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, we have the Manitoba and North-Western Railway with some 230 miles rumning into the territories from Wimipeg. we have the Calgary and Eilmonton Railway, 190 miles rumning north, and the roal from Calgary ruming south 120 miles which is nearly hailt. This road is completed to Ednonton, and all but some 10 or 15 miles of the southern portion is ilso constracted. Then we have the roal rumning from Regina to Prince Albert 225 miles, and settlers are now taking advantage of these railways to go there. In fact if it hat not been for the construction of these lines the settlers who are now comiag in, especially from Dakota and the United states, would not have been induced to go into the North Saskatchewan country. My information is that most of them are tending that way. A large number of them are coming in on the Manitola and the North-Western, and a large namber are also settling along the ('algary and bimonton road. I think it was stated at the time these charters were granted, or when the stihsidies were given, that with the completion of the main line of the Canadian lacitic Railway and these two branches, and also the branch ruming from Winnipeg, which will he built to the head of Lake Wimniperosis: it was thought that the eomentry wonh be rery well supplied with railways for sume time to come. I an muler that impression, and I believe there will be no necessity in the near future for any other charters or any other land grants towards the comstruction of railways. That is my impression. so far as we have gone, I think that the land which has heengiven hats hrought us in a good returna and I believe the hom. gentieman would think so himself if he paid a visit to that ceruntre.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). The Minister of the Inte:ion satys that if he hat hefore him the spetches made 1 g the hone member for North Norfolk (Mr. (harlton) in $187 \%$. thast it would he found that the hom. gentleinan expressed at that time riews altugether at variance with thase which he hat ex. pressel llaring the period which the Minister of the Interion has heen a member of the dovernment. If the Minister examines the speeches of my hom friend from North Norfolk, I think he will find that his statement is mot strictly acemate. The hon. Minister emfoumls objections to land grants altogether. with , ,fections to lame grants; mader the pulicy pursuad by the present Aluministation. Whe hon. senteman made a statement to the Hoose which shows that land grimts have alrealy been eamed bey ralway companies which would furnish farms to 1 ge. (1ne fanilies, and grants have been made which would furnish fatme to 20, (riw familices. Well, sir, the oljection which I make to the policy of the hon gentleman is mot at all that land is given in ad of railways: hat it is that land is given ia aid of railway eompanies without restrictions and in an inprovilent manner which has serionsly ahled to the expense of setting the North-West Territorics. The hom. gentleman ought is know that when grants are made to half a dozen railway corporations for the construction of rouls extending in varions directions throngh a territory nearly as harge as Russia in Europe, that the effect is to scatter a few thousian people over a conntry vastly greater than they should oecupy, and that it adels to the expense of govermment, and aulds to the cost of subsistenes in the Territories. The hon. gentleman knows that if he hat the people now in the North-West Territories within the limits of a single county-anl they could be brought so together, and not even then have a denser population than is found in one of the western counties of Ontario-there would be far less expense for the maintenance of schook, for the maintenance of roarls and bridges, and for the maintenance of churches. There are a score of ways in which the cost of living to the people would be largely diminished if the settlenent was more dense. I would like to know what the country has gained in the way of settlement by the construction of so large a mileage of railways within the North-West Territories? A road of 100 miles in length which furnishes an opportunity for a few thousand families settling, is just as gool as a roar 1,000 miles in length so long as there is room for settlement within accessible distances.

In fact it is infinitely better than a road 1,000 miles long, for the longer the road is the greater effect it has of scattering the population over an unneces. strily large territory. What I complain of in the policy which the (iovernment have pursued, and of which the hon. gentleman is in this matter the exponent, is, that they have umecessarily expended a large sum of money and pledged a large area of the public domain for the constraction of railways beyond what the public interest requires. The Minister must know, that if you had a railway constructed in any portion of that comitry well suited for settlement, opening the comutry amd making it accessible to the promation that goes there. the people would not sodintedistant portions lar away from a railway as long as there were lants tit for settlement within a reasomande distance, and when that settlement was once established there would be little littieulty in securing the settlement of other contigums districts without plenging any portion of the public lames for railway cemstruction. A secomal objection to the camse pursuen by the dovermant is that limels hate been plenged for milway comstuction in adrane of settlement, whers, if seltlenent hal been permitted to go on in the vicinity of the railways limited to the actual replimements of the comatry, a pledge would hate ineen altogether unnecessary: the lands coulat have been hell free for the ase of the public amb ats atoree oif pulbie revenue. In this improvident pledere of the public lands for the censtraction of ralways wer a vast territeng beyond what will he settled for tifty years to conae, the (inverment has limited the price of thense lands th the settlers in wo way whitever. The railway company may ask Sll of sild or sin an acre. It may hold lams for an increase in price, thinking that will be more ahbantageons to the company. especially where they are at a considerable distance from the railway constructed, than it would be to put them on the market at once: amb so, insteal of having an early settlement of the territory which wouli mot he immediately profitable to the railway ats at source of tratfic, the company holds it uinsettled for an indefinite perion of time. If the coremment had reguired that once the lamd reached a particular value, all the increment beyond that ralue should be public- revenue instead of income to the railway company, railway companies would have had an interest in selling the lands not exceeding at maximum price. They would have haid no inducement or motive to hold on to the lands for an increased price. But the rule of the (iovernment has been to put these lands in the hands of companies, and to leave them perfectly free to deal with them precisely as a private individual deals with property which he has bought and paid for. I think that rule should not be applied to mailway corporations receiving public aid in this way. The Government incorporate the company, and give it aid in the public interest solely, and therefore it is the business of Parliament and of the Government to see that proper restrictions are put upon the company so as to secure the settlement of these lands at the earliest possible moment. Now, that has not been done, asd in this respect the policy of the Administration has been objectionable. The hon. gentleman tells us that some of these railway companies will prove abortive-that they will not undertake the construction of the roads which they have been chartered to construct. What sort of commentary is that upon the policy of the Administration in placing a large area of the public domain at the disposal of men who are not capable of constructing the roads which they have undertaken to build? Were those roarls necessary in the public interest: Did the public interest at that particular time require their construction? Why were the companies incorporated, and why was aid promised to them if they were not? The statement of the hon. gentleman goes to show that there was no pressing necessity for their incorporation, that it was not in the public interest, and that these were speculative enterprises entered upon in the interest of private parties, perhaps with a view of having a charter to sell at a profit in Lomen or New York. Now, Sir, I think that the course pursued by the Arministration with reference to the orrants of public lands in the aid of railways has heen an improvident comse--that it has not contributed to the settlement of the country. On the contrary, it has temed to retard settlement in conseguence of the facilities afforded the companies for demanding a high price for these lands: it has damaged the country by scattering the population over a territory far larger than should have been opened for settlement : and it has further operated agoinst the public interest hy adding largely to the const of living in the North-Weat country, owing to the extra expenses imposed upon the population for the mainter ance of schools, chmoches, coats, bridges, amb everytling else necessary to their progress and their confort.

Mr. Watson. It is probably a little late in the ray to discuss this question now, as the Minister has told us that he does not consider that it will be necessary to give land grants to railways in future. It wonld have been interesting if the hon. Minister had told us, as I think he could have done honestly, that there are no more lands in Manitoha or the North. West to grant to railway companies. I think that all the lamis available as grants to ralway companies in the North-West have already been granter. However, when these corporations apply to this House for an extension of time, I think this House shond demand some guarantee from them for the completion of the road for which they hold the land grant within a certain time. It is well known that large tracts of land have been held for years ly railway corporations for speculation. It has alwiays heen contemed on this side of the Honse that a maximum prite should have been fixed on lands held by railway corporations, so that the settler would know that they were open for settlement, and the terms on which they could be obtained. I know from my experience in the North-West that settlers have gone into certain districts where railways have been chaitered and grants of land given ; and these people have lived there for years at great disiedrantage to themselvss, expecting year after year to see the railways built. Siome of these ilistricts have heen settiled for the last twelve or fiftecn years, the people waiting patiently for railway accomnodation, but in vain, because men of straw have held the charter. In the meantime the settlers make improvements, build schools and churches, and construct roads and bridges, which improve the value of the lands held by the railway corporation ; and when the corporation sees fit, or when it considers that it is going to be benefited it builds the road and sells its land all the way from $$ 4$ to $$ 10$ an acre. This shows the profitableness of building a railway in a prairie country with a land grant of 6,400 acres per mile. It should be remembered that the land grantel to the Pacific Railway branches mast be land fairly fit for settlement, which means that the company has its choice of the land: and I have no hesitation in saying that the Govermment have granted to railway corporations over half the land fit for settlement in the North- West and Manitoba. The hon. Minister mentioned a number of railways that had received land grants, and the number that had earned land grants. One mentioned was the Wood Mountain and Qu'Appelle Railway Company. The Minister himself is. I think, fairly well acquainterl with the gentlemen who have promoted that railway. They have held the charter for a number of years, and I have uo hesitation in saying. judging from their past efforts to construct that roal, that they are men of straw. They asked for a renewal of the charter this year, which was granted, and they have practically done nothing. They have held the land grant for 8 or ! years, and the Railway Committee granted them an extension of the charter for the commencement and completion of that road. They are allowed to hold land grants, although they have only bilt some 130 ond miles in some is or it years. With the comutry settling up, I do not think this Hoase should grant any railwaty corporation these extemed powers and this extension of time for the construction of a railway. I believe when companics come to this (iovernment amd ask for a land grant or any assistanee they should be in a position to give some guarantee of good faith that they will construct the romb. We have a notable instance where that was necessary in the Great North. West Central. The hon. dentleman who moved for this return referred to that company and the famous telegram about wanting a little boodle for the boy, and we know what disgraceful dis. closures were maleincomectionwith the land grant given to men who absolutely hadnointention of constructing a mile of mad, and whohed the grant locked ip for years. The charter of that company was granted in 157 s or 1879 and has been held ever since. It has gone into different hands, but to-day only some an miles of that roal are built, while this company holds a land grant for some $6(N)$ miles of that road. This is unfair to the people who have land along the proposed line of railway, and some of whom hive been living there 12 or 14 years, expecting railway accommolation. I am not prepared to blame the present company who hold the charter, because I believe they forwarded a plan of survey for the extension of the road some months ago to the Government, but were not allowed to proceed with the construction of the road lecause the Government did not approve of the plan. Whatever interests are at variance with the construction of the road I know not, but the company cannot go on constructing beyond the 50 miles completed, until the Govemment approve of their plan. I do not suppose we will have the opportunity of opposing land grants being given to other railways in the North-West, because the member has told us, from what he knows of this country, that all the valuable lands that could be given to railway corporations has been given away alrearly; but what we should consinler is whether we should renew charters helal hy specalators and rencw a land giant to these people unless they put up some deposit and give some gatrantee of their gool faith to complete the railway within the time specified in the charter.

Mr. DFWDNEI. If I might be allowed to say a worl with reference to a remark which fell from the hom. member for Marquette, I may say that althongh he believes, from what I have said, that there is mo more lamel left for railway companies, he is mistaken. There is a good deal left arailable for milway companies.

Mr. WATSON. After all the grants made now are given :

Mr. DFWIDNEI. Ies. In different parts of the North-West. The hon. gentleman will recollect arailahle for homestead, odd and even numbered sertions.

Mr. WATSON. After the Canalian lacific Railway collect their land grant, which is land to he fairly fit for settlement. I think $I$ am right in stating that half the land fit for settlement in Manitola and the North-West has heen granted to ratway corporations.

Mr. INEWDNEY. I donot think so. Neither the hon. member for Bothwell nor the hon. member for Norfolk marle any remarks with reference to what I said regaroling the policy which they enum. ciated in 1878.

Mr. MILIS (Bothwell). Ves, I did.

Mr. DFWDNEF. The hon. member for Bothwell stated this :
"It was largely by the const ruction of railways that the lands of the North-West were to be made valuable; their value depended upon the fucilities afforded for the transport of the products of the settler. By constructing railways through the North-West, reaching to every fertile point where a colony could be established, we would largely cont ribute to increase the traffic and travel over that railroad which must, for many years to come be is single line from Winnipeg eastward to the shores of Lake Superior."
The hon. gentleman stated he proposed to build railways to every fertile point where a colony could le established.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). Hear, hear.
Mr. DEWDNEI. He now finds fault with the Giovernment for huiling railways in those very directions.
Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). No, I do not object to the Government proposing to build railways for the purpose of securing the settlement of the country ; lut I am pointing out to the hon. gentleman that he has proposed to open up, at once, a comtry as large as Russia and capable of holding $20,000,000$ or $30,(000,000$ of people, and he scatters the population over that entire country. What it is proper to do ly a succession of charters, separated by intervals of years, is a wholly different thing from a proposal to simultaneously undertake the construction of railways over the entire country.

Mr. DEWDNEY. The hon. gentlenan will mderstand, with regard to the two points, for the purpose of building a railway to which we have given a subsidy, Edmonton district and Prince Albert, very large settlements had gone into that country before we indicated we were going to lonild a lailway there at all : and we not only subsidized a company to build these lines for the convenience of settlers at those points, but also to help opening up the country along the line. The hon. member for Norfolk spoke much stronger in this sense in 187s, because he stated:
"It was useless to think of opening up and settling this comery without furnishing it with railway facilities. Now, it had been said that the American railways were subsidized to 2 greater extent than necessary $\mathfrak{i}$ perhaps that had. in some instances. been the case. Reference had heen made to the Illinois Central Railway. At the time that road was projected nearly the whole interior portion of the state was a wildernes: faruersliving 50 miles from Chicago were in the habit of teaming whent to the market. often. when the roads were bad, at a cost of one-half the value of the wheat. The country had a few struggling settlements in the interior, but there was no extent of population. The country would never have been opened and settled as it has been but for the construction of a sretem of mailways of which the Central was the chief. That raiiway had populated the vast prairie region in the centre of the state and had contributed, in an important degree, to make lllinois the third state in the American Lnion, with a population of over 3 ,(h)! $1,0(4)$. He recollected paying a visit to towa about years ago. Then it had but a few miles of railway and but a sparse population. chiefly located along the line of the Mississipni, yet, by means of a liberal railway policy, bs subsidizing several lines crossing the state from eatit to west, it hall suddenly risen into an important state, with a population of nearly, if not quite. 1,50,000. Some of the railways had, perhaps, been ubsidized more than was necessary, perhaps more land had been given than was advisable : but cupitalists would not embark their money unless they had a prospect of a fair return, and it was folly to hargle with them about an unimportant difference when important interests were at stake.'
Farther on, he adds:
"Nuw. in the North-W'est there were untold millions of aeres of land. They were told by the hon. member for Northumberland that this was the heritage of Canada, that it had been bought by the people's money ; but, in its present shape, of what yalue was this great. wild, lone land to us? The question was how that land should be utilized, and, for that purpose, the Minister of the Interior had devised a Bill which, in its concention, was admirable, and which, in his opinion. would, if carried out, attain the object of populating this vast country."
What was that Bill: It was, as far as I recollect, far more liberal with regard to land grants than anything we proposed. If I recollect aright, it was to grant land to railways, aceording to their location, varying from 25, , Ho acres per mile down to $10,(0)$ or $12,(N K)$ aeres. Hon. gentlemen, I think: at that time took a much more liberal view than we have ever taken with regard to railway comstruction. I might read still further sentiments in the same direction of hon. gentlemen opposite, sentiments which, to a very great extent, I endorse. I helieve that to develop the country we must have railways, and I think this Government has taken the most veasonable plan in encouraging the building of railways in our western country.

Mr. ARMSTRONG. The only objection I have to the motion is that it does not go quite far enough. I am sorry the mover has also included the lands locked up in the hands of speculators. The fact of the matter, as it appears to me, is that the method of the Government in dealing with the lands in the North-West has been a wrong method from beginning to end. I need not tell you, Mr. Speaker, who understand the matter of settling up new countries, that the best evidence of prosperity is the number of industrious settlers who settle in a country, and that nothing conduces to the prosperity or the wealth of a country so much as to have that country settled up by an intelligent and industrious population. This being the case, the plain duty of the Govermment was to adopt such means as would best le calculated to attain this end, to afforl to those intending to settle the lest opportunities to make a settlement, in other words, to see that the lands were kept for the setthers, or, if they were parten with at all, they shoth only have been parted with on such ternis as would make them awailahle for settlers at a fair, reasonable price. What we complain of i.s that this plan was not alopter, that that methon was not followed, that the lands in the North. West at the time the great bown took phace there were largely locked up in the hamls of colonization companies and projected railway companies, and a large puantity of them have gone into the hanls of private speculators. Those who were members of the Committee on Immigration and Colmization during the years 1883, ls8t and 1ss.j. will remember the glowing accomets which the Deputy Minister of Agriculture used to give to the committee of the himadreds of thonsands of setthers who were going into that comntry. I believe that so far that gentleman was right. I leelieve that large numbers went into that country with the intention of settling there and I believe that these men are not there to day. We know that for a fact. Now, I believe the principal reason why these men are not there to diay as prosperons and industrions farmers, is that the lamd was in such a state that they could not fimi suitalle locations for settling, that the land was locked up in the hamls of colonization companies who were not prepared or had not male arrangements for the settlement of the lauds, that it was locked up in the hands of speculators who wanted a larger price than the settlers would give, and that it was locked up in the hands of rallway corpmations who had not made the properarrangements for settlement and probahly held these lands for a ligher price ; so that the result was that these intending settlers, tens aur humbeds of thousimals in mumber, left the comutry in disgust. The object of the Government should lave heen to aulopt the means best suited to bring in the best of hardy, industrious settlers, in order to till up the waste lands. I am partially inclined to agree with the Minister of the Interior and to disigree with my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charltom), that railways should go aheai of settlement, that mothing tends to induce colnization more than easy means of tramsport. That is another matter from ruming thousands of miles of railway through a country which is not likely to be settlei for miny years to come, locking up the lands in the hands of these railway corporations. I have always taken the ground that building railways by laml grants is a wrong method. I know it is claimed that the people in the United states adopted that method, but I believe that. with the experience they have had, if the United states had the thing to do over again, they would not grant is single acre to any of these companies. The fact is that they adopted an excellent method of settling their wild lands at an early day. They would not give their lands into the hands of speculators at all. They adopted a fixed rule that lands should be sold to the settlers at Si.2a per acre, but only a certain quantity to each settler, and they would give a preemption right to hold the land for a year without paying the money. The result was that the people knew, wherever there were Government lands, or wild lands, they could go in and choose the land that suited them best without any trouble. With regard to building railways by land grants, it might be done, perhaps, if a proper system were adopted, that is the system of fixing a maximum price above which these lands must not be sold liy these corporations. We have tried to have this adopted in this Honse, and we have failed. These lands which have been referred to to-day, lands which are larger than all the cultivated lams in the whole Dominion, have been handed over to railway corporations without the slightest restriction as to the price at which they may be sold, and not omly that but alditional grants have been made to colonization companies in commutation of their claims in aldition to the lands which have leen handed over to private speculators. How has this system worked? We were toll, when the Canatian Pacific Railway Company received their charter, that this was one of the great reasons for giving that company such great powers, that they would really be at colonization company, that it would be in their interest to have these lands settlel up as rapidly as possible, and the natural result wonh he that they would be immigration agencies, that they would have their agents in the old conutry inducing the people to settle up our Northlitest lands. How have events justified the predictions then made? They have done absolutely nothing. They have held these lands for purposes of sale at the highest price they can wring fromintemding settlers. And not only that, you may say that it is to their interest to sell those lands as soon as possible, but they have an alternative poliey. These lands can be mortgaged, and railway companies have been mortgaging their lands, and it becomes a question whether they wrould rather pay: the rate of interest on the mortgage of their lamls than sell the lamls, whether they would not rather keep the land for a rise in the price and make moner by the transaction. For example: if they can borrow money on their land at a low rate of interest, amd have the prospect of doubling or trebling the value of that land in ten years, the question is whether it is not hetter for them to pay the low rate of interest than to sell the land now, and they will adopt the plan by which they will make the most money. I sity that the system of giving these lands into the hands of mailway corporations without fixing a price at which they are compellen to sell them, has been one of the greatest hinderances to the settlement of the North-West, and it seems to be a matter which this country camot readily remedy. The only way I can see is that the people who have muncipal institutions in those countries shall tax these lands at the highest rates the law will allow. It has heen pointed out to-day that this system has had disastrous effects upon settlement. We have been told again and again that there are lands yet ungranted, free to intending settlers. But where are those lands" Are they anywhere within reasonable distance of railways? When a man goes into a new country the first consideration is to get good land to settle upon: the next consideration is, are there railway facilities for getting the produce to market, are there facilities for schools and churches, are there facilities for good neighlourhood : But all these inducements to settle a country are wanting when the lands are given over to speculators who may hold them ten, twenty or thirty years, in pursuance of a plan which they think will bring them the most money. I am glad the member for North Norfolk has brought this resolution forward, because I believe it will be the means of drawing public attention to the fact that enormons quantities of land have heen lockerl up from settlement; and I hope the resolution will le the means of bringing public opinion to bear upon the Government so that in the future the lands that yet remain will not he locked up in the same way, and that some means will he alopted to have these lands opened for settlement.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before the motion is pat to the House I may be permitted a few moments to reply to some of the points made ly my hon. friend the Minister of the fiterior. I doult whether the hon. gentleman was justitied in assuming that my position with regard to this matter was one of utter hostility to laml grants of any character or to any extent whatever. The drift of my argament, I think, was to show that the grants made for the purpose of promoting the construction of railways in the North-West, hal been excessively large, that the (Govermment had not exereised due caution in this matter, and had made land grants far in alluance of the wante of the country, hand made land grants to speculative companies, and made these grants to an extent which was likely to prove, in many respects, disastrons to the interests of that comutry. Now, I think the admission made by that hon. gentlemm himself goes far to prove the position I took in this matter, when he informs the Honse that 12,000, , (10) acres of ham grants made to roads in that comity will lapse. If that is the case, certainly we are warranted in assuming that the (oovernment has made lami grants to railway companies to the extent of 12 ,. (NO), (KW) acres and has not enguired with sutticient care into the character of each company, and has actually male grauts to companies of straw, who are not likely to carry out their stipulations with the Government, or to construct the road for which these grants were made.
The hon. Minister refers to a speech made ly myself, I muderstood him to say, in 1878. The occasion upon which that speech was made was the introduction of a Bill by my hon. friend the present member for Bothwell (Mr. Mills), then Minister of the Interior. That hom. gentle man introduced a Bill of a general character for the purpose of promoting railway construction in the North-West, which of course was then a new comntry and had not been reached by railway at all. The line from Lake Superior to the Red? River was not constracted, and that commery had no railway outlet. Now, the character of that Bill was briefly this: The hon. member made general provisions for the aid of railway lines; the maximum grant of land, I think, was 12.800 acres per mile in remote districts; but in the Red River district the grant was to be 6,400 acres per mile. The Bill had this feature which commended it to me and which made it infinitely preferable to any Bill that the Government has presented, in that it limited the price that railway companies receiving these land grants were permitted to ask for their lands; the price was limited, if my memory serves me, to $$ 2$ per acre, and if lands were sold in excess of that price, such excess went into the treasury of the country.

The Government of that day also reserved certain powers to themselves with reference to acting as trustee over these lands. and the utmost care was taken to guard the public interest, and to prevent railwaysfrom receiving returns from the land grants in excess of the amoment reguired to render aid sufficient to enable them to construct their lines. Now, I have nothing to retract in what I may have said at that time about the propriety or the necessity of fostering the construction of railway lines. I have not said anything to-lay that would warrant the assumption that I am utterly opposed to railway grants. What I have said, and what I reiterate now, is that the (iovernment, in voting aid to railways, should act in the spirit of prudence, should examine the standing of the companies proposing toconstruct sectionsof roads, shouht satisfy themselves as to the lomi fides of the proposials, should satisfy themselves that the company had husiness responsibilities amla business standing and business methods, and intendel toproceed with the hasiness of the constraction of theroad: and the cioverment having satistied themselves on these points, would then be warranted in making grants to such an extent as was necessary and prudent. I was aiming my criticisms largely to a condemnation of the policy of fostering companies of straw, of making grants far in alrance of the requirements of the country, of tying up enormous areas of land ly covering them with charters for roads that it should le known to the Government would not be constructed for many years. I also made allusion to the granting of lamels in aid of the construction of hanch lines, and that was a point. so far as I noticed, that the Minister of the Interior dill not refer to. I made the assertion that grants haul been marle to branch lines that would ineritably be constructed without any aid whatever, hy the main trunk line, which would constract them ats feeders just as soon as their business required it. Now, we had a discussion here last session where it was shown that a company had received a grant by Order in Council for biii miles of road that was actually built; they had gone on and huilt that 100 miles of road lecause their interests required that they should reach certain coal fields, and after building their line they made application for this land, and a grant for 60 miles of road was made to them. Now, I hold that many of these branch lines required no aid whatever, and that the Government inpursuing the policy it has in making grants to an enormous extent, in locking up t2, (KNO, (OMO acres of land in the North-West, in granting over a thonsand acres for every family in that country to provide means for that family to have ingress and egress. has grone toc far, has gone too fast; and the prime object of my motion was to call attention to this fact and to exhort the Government, to implore the fovernment to be more careful of the great interests placed in their hands, to realize that the management of millions of acres in the North-West was a trust of immense importance, that that was a country yet to teem with population, that its resources were to le developed, that it was the heart of the nation, and that mismanagement now might be fatal to the interests of that comatry in the future when population poured in there and the resources were developed. I was simply asking them $t_{i}$ ) build wisely and to lay the foundations properly, to guard the interests of this country with jealous care, and not to pass into the hands of cormorant corporations and trusts lanis that they ought to keep and to guard for the people. I hope that the Government will be animated by that spirit in dealing with this question, and when these $12,000,000$ acres of land now granterl shall lapse, I trust the Government will exercise the utmost care as to the manner in which they will grant any portion of those lands again to corporations to aifl in the construction of railways. We shall have no fault to find with the fovernment, we shall have no complaint to make, if their policy in this regardis a prudent policy, if they proceed as fast as prudence requires, if they make grants to the extent that the interests of the comntry require-if they do this it will he well. But I think 42, (MO), (KM ateres of ham have heen granted in that comintry to promote the construction of railooals, when there are only a quarter of a million of inhahitants there, a duantity one-half ats large as that granted in the Cnited States tw develop a region with a population of over tation of the assertion that the policy of the (iovermment has been justified in every respect. I hope that the discussion of this question, and I dinl not intenil to discuss it except in a spirit of farmess and candour, will hear good fruit, and we maty realize more fully than we have done the importance of dealing with our public domaini in the North- West with care and prolence am! in the interest of the people.

I. C. R.-LIVE STOCK RATES.

Mr: WOOl) (Westmoreland) moved for :

Return showing: 1. Tarifis in force on live stock on the Iutereolonial Railway, amball changes in ame during the last fivegeas ; 2.2 Number of cattle shipped from sackrille, Nappan, Au Late and Amherst stations each year, with destination, distinguishing between car load lots and lese than car luad lots.
He said : some very important changes were made in the Interenonial freight tariff on live stock some two or three years ago. I put a puestion on the Oriler Paper some weeks ago, asking for the last changes which were male in the tariff. The answer given me was that the tariff went into forec on the -th April, 1890 . The changes, however, marle in that were very slight and mimportant, and do not inchurle the nore important changes which I presume were made some time previously, and which was the information I desired to obtain. In the first part of this motion I have asked for the changes that have taken place during the last five years, and they no loubt will include the more important changes and the information sought for. Since these important changes were male we have had very frequent complaints in the Comnty of Westmoreland from those engaged in the cattle trade, and also fromi á similar class of persons so engaged in the County of Cumberland. The claim is that these changes have operated very much to the disalvantage of small shippers. It is said that the changes are very considerable, that the increase in rates on single animals or on animals shipped in less lots than by the car loal was from 75 to 10 ) per cent, while the rates on car load lots were changed very slightly. The effect, they claim, has been to very seriously injure the trate of the farmers and small dealers in those localities. Before those changes were made farmers were in the habit of clealing directly with the butchers in the large cities, such as St. John and Halifax. They were able, in dealing in that waty directly, to obtain better prices for their stock and to ship them at convenient times. They claim now that the increase in the tariff has taken away any adrantages which they had from this mode of carrying on their business, and that it has, indeed, placed the whole business in the hands of the drovers. It is clamed too that the business which was formerly done with the small towns has heen very seriously affecterl, particularly with the towns of Chatham and Newcastle on the Niramichi. The markets in those places are limited. The dealers are not able to sell adrantageonsly by car load lots, and the trade which was formerly done has been, they claim, largely interfered with and very much lessenen hy those changes in rates. It is also said that the effect has mot been to the advantage of the Intercolonial. On this point I am not in a position at present to express an opinion: hut the claim set up hy those in the trate is that the receipts of the ralway since those changes were made are less than they were lefore. I have before me freight rates between sackville fand some of the points which I have mentioned. I find that the car load rate from Sackville to Halifax is s.0, that the mate for a single animal over the same distance is 53.30 . A car carries from 15 to 15 animals. Taking the small mmiber, lis, this makes the rite on small lots just double the car loal rate, and where a larer number are placed in the car, as is often the anse in those localities, where the cattle are not very large, the proportion is increased from l(M) to bof per cent. Ife do not claim, of course. that single animals or smail lots should be catried at the same rates as anmals are carried by the car load, but it appears to some of us, at all events, that the disproportion is too great It will be secn that it costs a small shipper, who ships his animats singly, as much to convey eight amimals from sackville to the phace I have named. as it wonlda large shipper to convey a car loarl. This gives the lange st ipper as against the small one an alvantage of free carriage of eight or ten cattle on every car loud. In the motion which I had placed on the Paper I limiten the statement of places from which cattle are shipped to Sackville and Nippan: I shouhll like to inclade Au Late and Amherst. These four stations will embrace the principal shipping districts in those two counties. My object in moving the motion is to get the information necessary in orter to enable us to form a correct julgment as to whether there is any ground for these rates to be changed, and to show just what has lieen the effect on the cattle trade, and upon the interests of the Intercolonial Railway, of the changes in the tariff which were made.

THE CASE OF P. D. IOODS.

Mr. CURRAN moved for:

Papers in connection with the case of P. D. Dods, and reports on loss of glaziers diamonds in the customs wa rehouse at Montreal.
He said : I am glad that my hon. friend the present Minister of Militia, who wis formerly the Minister of Customs, is here, as I wish to direct his attention to the facts of this ciase. I am satisfied that when he and the Minister of Justice will have taken cognizance of what has transpired in the matter, justice will he done to this firm. The facts are very few. It appears that the firm of P. D. Dools 8 ( $\mathrm{CO}_{0}$. imported to Montreal, from lyugland, a hox cons taining glaziers diamonds. The arrival of the goons was reported in Montreal, aml lools \& (\% went to the customs house and there paid the cluty on the diamomis imported. The customs carter fave a receipt for the goods at the Grand Trumk Railway station and brought them to the customs warehouse. The amount of money pait hy lools $\mathbb{E}$ Co. Was siot duty on about $\$ 350$ worth of their diamonds. They asked for the delivery of their goods, hint they were told they couhl pot have them until they had been examined. For three days the firm called upon the authomities and asked for these goods, but on the thind day they were informed that the how hal heen just opened and it was foum to be empty. The departarent was tommunic:ated with and an enyuiry was ondered umber the superintendence of the late Mr. Lewis. survegor of the prort of Montreal. He took avilence on the matter and came to the conclasion that the foons hatl been stolen from the warebonse. Thit, it appears, didnot satisfy the department, and another enguiry wats molered, and the surveyor came to the same conclusion as before. They were not necessarily stolen by any of the employ's there, the warehouse being open at all hours of the day it was quite possible for a stranger to have gone in there and to have taken these grools. At all events, one of the reasens given by the surveyor of the port that the goods had been stolen. Was, that from the state which the bos which was supposed to contain these diamonts, was in, it hating a nail projecting from the side, it was perfectly evident that it box in that condition wouh never have been accepted by the foremment carter as being in gool order, and that it must have been in goorl order at the time it was received at the warehouse. We mate an application to the department for reimbursement, and it was thonght only reasonable that, if the goons were uot paid for, at all events the $5100^{\circ}$ which had been paid as duty upon the goods should be reimbursed. But it was all in vain, and we took a suit against the department. His Honour Mr. Justice Burbinge held that these gools. having been imported into the country, were liable for duty, that the money had been properly collected, and that under the law the forermment were not responsible for the loss of the goods in any of the fiovermment warehouses. The result was that the importer not only lost his gools, amounting to about S 350 , hat lost his $\$ 10^{\circ}$ paid for duty, and was mulcted in the costs, anounting to $\$ 30$ more. That decision it was impossible to appeal from, owing to the amount at stake being less than S5( K . In any case I appear before Parliament to ask that the Government, now that the facts of the case are known, will take it into their consideration whether this firm should not be paid lack their money under the peculiar circumstances of hardship which 1 have narrated. The customs law is extremely rigid. Any goods brought into the country are taken possession of by the authorities for the protection of the revenue, and under the 36 th section of the Customs Act it is proviled:
" Culess the goods are to be warehoused in the manner by this Act provided. the importer shall, at the same time, pay duwn or catuse to be so paid, all duties upon all goods entered inwards: and the collector or other proper otficer shall, immediately thereupon, grant his warrant for the unlading of such goods, and grant a permit for the conveyance of such goods further into Canada, if so required by the importer.'
Section 37 provides:
" In default of suoh entry and landing, or production of the goods, or payment of duty, the officer of customs may conver the goods to a customs warehouse, or some secure place appointed by the eollector for zuch purpose, there to be kept at the risk and charge of the owner."
So that the law provides distinctly and clearly that where the duty has not been paid the gools shall lee taken possession of and kept at the warehouse or some secure place at the risk and cost of the owner. There is no such provision mate where the duty has heen paid, and the inference would natually be that where the goods are taken possession of in such cases, it shonld be at the risk and cost of the (iovermment. The authorities have not only the right to take the goonls, but if they allow the grods to goont of their possession, and at any sulserguent time a suspicion arises that the duties have not leen paid, or that goods have been smmggled in cases containing other gools on which Thuties have been paid, the packages can be taken to the custom house and there examined, and if everything is found right, they are repacked at the cost of the Govermment and returned to the importer while on the other ham, if everything is not foum exactly correct, the groods are contiscated and penalties inposed. If we take for granted that this harsh decision, which has heen enforeed hy the Excherger Comet, is really the law of the land, we know that in a great many cases, where for instance procedings havebeen instituted against the Government for damages on atecont of accidents on (iovernment ralways, andothercases where the forermment. was mot technically responsible but where the circumstances were peculiarly hard in their nature, the forernment took that hardship into consideration and paid the parties the damages they had incurred. Sow, I do not suppose thit in 95 years such a ciase as the present one would likely oceur again. In view of the uncertainty of the law, in view of the fact that this man imported these goons and paid the duty in grool faith, and waited for three days until those in charge had an opportanity of examining the box containing the diamonds, in view of all the circomstances that I have related, I am satisfied that my hon. friend will recommend that the money be reimhursed to the importer, and that substantial justice will be done. There is no erguity whatever on the side of the Govermment in this matter. It is a case of the very greatest hard. ship, and I am sure my hom. friend who resisted this application was not aware of all that had taken place, or he would not have ordered the payment of these moneys. This matter has come up before the Boarid of Trule of Montreal, I believe, and I hare been requested to liring it under the notice of the (iovermment, and I am sure that I shall not have done so in rain.

Mr. BUWELL. There are no objections that I am aware of to these papers being laid before the House. This case illustrates one of the difficulties that arise in enforcing any customs law. I do not know that Canada is singular in that respect. All bonded goods are known to be held at the risk of the owner, and consequently, neither in Canada or elsewhere, has responsibility ever been assumed for the loss, whether in warehouse or in transmission from the vessel in which they are brought to the country, or from the railway station to the warehonse; and I think the House will readily under. stand that if any Government were to become responsible for the loss of goods unler such circumstances, it would open the door to very great fraud and that there would be no end to the demands which wounl he marle on the public exchequer on account of goouls that may or may not have come into the country. If all that has been laid down by my hon. frient were to he carried out, all that it would he necessary for a rogue to do would be to pretend to import into the comitry very valuable goonls and semd them to the warehouse, and then, upon the examination of the package, if they are not found to he there, to claim. at onee, compensation for the value of the gools. This principle has never been questioned. The practice that prevaled in the past. and which prevails now, is simply this : dionds are bromeht into the eountry, invoices are presented to the computing clerks, the rates of luty upon the varions articles are checked, and the invoices then sent to the examining warehonses where the goonls are exammed. It may be quite true, for on that point I have no information. that it took thee days to have them examiner, but I think commercial men will readily understand that in many catses goods are necessanily kept much longer than thre days in the warehonse before they can be examined. In a large port like Nontreal, for instance, where the rluties collected amount to importation is principally contined to the spring and the fall, it wonld be ntterly impossible, unless we had four or five times the accommodation that now exists in that largecity, where the warehonse accommodation is pretty large as it is, we couldnot deliver the goonls immenliately upon their arrival. Certain delays must of necessity occur : and having made some empuiry into this particular branch of the subject. Which has been discussed a goond deal ly boards of tande. I find that in Canada there is less delay in delivery of goonls than in any other country of which I have received information, and the facilities for obtaining goods in Canalaare fourfoll greater than in the neighbouring Republic where the restrictions with reference to examination and delivery are much greater. If on the receipt of the invoices, upon which the rate of luty hats heen fixed by the apmaiser or those whose dity it is to examine the goots, they find the goods are not there, they at once report : and then if, as is usual when the entry is made, the duty has been paid, the parties apply for a refund and a refund is made. Now, I have made enguiry as to whether an application had ever been male in this case for a refund of the daty. I understime the hon. member for Montreal says it was, hat I hare been informed by the commissioner, not an hour ago, that none had been made. I asked if these groods were not in the parcel when it was examined, and was informed they were not. The presumption, therefore, is that they never wese importen, or if they were, they must have been stolen prior to being sent to the examining warehouse. I enquired why the same principle was not acted upon, as is followed in cases where the goods are not in accoglance with the order, and where goonls are returned, or where there is a less quantity in the parcel than appears in the invoice, a refund of the duty being made in each case. The answer to that was, that the case had been taken to court at once, not for the purpose of obtaining a refund of the duty, but for the purpose of compelling the government to pay the ralue of the diamonds alleged to have been in this hox. I quite agree that if there was evilence of the grools having actually been imported hut stolen. no matter where, it was the duty of the Government to collect the amount paid as duty: but atcting upon the principle that the diamonds did not erme into Camala a recommendation was marle some time ago to the Treasury board for the refunding of the amount of duty paid, upon the presumption, not that the gools were stolen when in our possession or in transit from the ressel to the customs warehouse, but upon the presumption that the goons never were imported. As the judie properly said, if the goods were imported, the duty was legally and properly collected. If they never were importerl, or sere stolen on board ship or in tramsit from the ressel to the warehouse, the (iovernment equitably ought not to retain the amome of duty paid. Acting upon that principle, the recommendation has lieen made for the refunting of the amome of duty paid. How the amount value of the diamomels were only $\mathrm{Si}(\mathrm{N})$ or S 3 om . hecanse if they came in the rongh they would be free, and if they came in manufactured or set the duty would he from 20 to 3.7 per cent. I am quite satistied from the practical experience I have had, that to change the law in the direction indicated hy the homal of trale would not be practical : and I am inclined to think they mate their representatioms to the department withont a full knowledge of all the facts. To change the law in the direction asked wonld be to place the diovermment in the position of heing mulcted in very large sums of money upnongools never brought into the comitry. The whole system of homling goonls is for the benetit of the merchents. The principle upon which all customs laws is founded is that dinty should be collecterl at once on the arrival of the gools : and it is in order to facilitate trate amb assist the merchants hy not compelling them to pay large sums in duty for goonls which they do not reyuire to put on the market for some time, that the system of bonding warehomses was established. I hope that the action of the department in making this recommemlation to remit the duty will he looked upon favomably by the Governor in Council.

Mr. CURRAN. What about the costs?

Mr. BOWELL. We will let the lawyers settle that among them. We will try to do justice to the importer, acting on the presumption that these goorls never came into the country, and he may setile with his lawgers who alvised him to go into court in this matter. He or they must be the safferers.

Mr. CURRAN. In reply to my hon. friend, I would just direct his attention to the English Act, section 8.5 :
"If any goods shall be taken out of any warehouse without due entry, the occupier of such warehouge shall forthwith pay the duties due upon such goods ; and every person taking out uny goods from any warehouse without payment of duty, or who shall aid, assist, or be concerned therein, and every person who shall destroy or embezzle ally goods duly warehoused, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanour and shall, upon conviction, suffer the punishment by lnw inflicted in cases of misdemeanour : but if such person shall be an officer of customs or excise not acting in the due execution of bis duty, and shall be prosecuted to conviction by the importer, consignee or proprietor of such goods, no duty shall be payable for or in respect of such goods and the damage occasioned by such destruction or embezzlement shall, with the sanction of the commissioners of the treasury, be repaid or made good to such importer. eonsignce or proprietor by the Commissioner of Customs."
My hom. friend has suggested that it would be a very dangerons thing for the public: at large to make any change with regard to the stringency of our remblations, and he says that any person might make a fictitiouscontry of goods which had not leen imported at all, and the (iovermment would be liable through his dishonest acts. That is all very well in regard to the case of rogucs, bat in the case of a firm oecupying a respectable position in the commercial world it would not happen, and it is quite competent for the authorities to make empuries as to the stamding of a particular person who may have a clam against the forernment as P. D. Dools hat in this case. I think the finvernment incurs very little danger indealing with people of known responsibility. My hon. friem has stated that there is mothing in the deparment to show that any application was mate for a refund of that duty. If there are no papers there, I have a recollection of soing there twenty-five or thinty times to get the matter settlen before action was finally taken, but no offer was made to refmad the duty which I think was improperly exacted. Two investigations took phace at the instance of the department. and the matter was again brought before the notice of my hon. friend. I am sory that my hon. friemd. whostates be is gring to recommeni that the sho: shoula be restored to the pocket of my constitnent, has mot also throght it comsistent with his magnatimens disposition to reimburse the costs which have leen pain, which would lee only fair. I am satistied that when this comes before the Minister of Justice, whomberstands these things thoroughly, he will see that the matter has been dealt with majustly, and that it is unfair that this respectable. merchant should lee mulct, especially as the department is mot likely to be troubled with anything of the same kind for a quarter of a century to come.

Mr. BOWVLL. I did not state that there were no papers in the department, hut that I was informed, just hefore coming to the House, that no application hal been mate for a refund of the rluties that were paid. I would also call the attention of the House to the extract from the English statute which was read by my hon. friend, in which there was nothing which would conflict with our own law.

Mr. (URRAN. The only thing proven was that the goods were stolen-..I lo not gay by any one in the department-but that they were stolen from the warehonse department. I know most of the men there, and I believe them to be honest men, lant two reports gave the opinion that they were so taken.

Mr. BOW ELL. The surveyor's report was, that after examining the case. he had come to the conclusion that it had not been shown whether the goods were taken from the case after or before their arrival. There was not a particle of evidence to-show that the contents of the packages were interfered with after they came to the department.

LORDS DAY OBSERVANCE.

House resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No.2) to secure the better olservance of the Lorids Day, commonly called Sunday.--(Mr. Charlton.)
(In the Committee.)
Mr. TISDALE. I have a few remarks to offer in comection with this Bill which I shall conchate with a motion. We have had the hon. gentleman introntucing a Bill of a similar sort every session since I hate hat the honour of sitting in this Parliament or the last Parliament. It is true that the Bill as now introluced is much smaller than it was in the first place. But I do not think there is any clanse in this Bill that should ocoupy the attention or receive the assent of this House. Every provision of the Bill except two items has alrealy heen resulated by the Provincial Legisiature of Ontario. I bate not examined the other provincial laws, hat I apprehend there has also been legislation in the same respect in the other prorinces. The hon. gentleman who introduces this Bill is a very strong adrocate of provincial rights upou many questions. I have had the pleasure of listening to him many times in my province, ant sometimes at great length in provincial elections, and I have never found a greater alvocate of provincial rights. I am also an adrocate of provincial rights within proper lomuls. I deprecate any interference by this (iovermenent or this Legislature with the Local Legislature within proper bomuls, and I think it is to be deprecated that, in these matters where no party politics is concernen, any gentleman should interfere or try to induce the Honse to interfere with matters of provincial rigints, and more especially when these matters are an interference with what may be called moral rights, such as the regulation of the Sabbath day. I clam liberty of conscience in all matters. I have ahways in public or in private endeavoured to get penple to mulerstam that, while I have views of my own, I am willing that all others shall exercise their views as they see fit. In this Bill, except in regard to the management of the canals and the Ginemment railways, there is not an item which any gentleman who has paid the slightest attention to the legislative powers of the provinces and of the Legislature will not say the Provincial Legislatures have the power to deal with. I have examined the law in every particular that this Bill pretends to affect, and I wish to repeat that the Province of Ontario has already passed laws in respect to those questions. Now, I say it would be an unwise, I do not think it would he too strong a term to say, it would be a deplorable thing, if this House, even if we have jurisitiction. were to interfere with the view's of the Provincial Legislatures as expressed by them or as mav be expressed by them; it would be a deplopable thing, in my opinion, if this Honse were for one moment to entertain such a proposition. As to the question of juristiction there are, no doubt, differences of opinion. I do not propose to argue one way or the other upon that, because I think the inembers of this committee and the members of this House will agree with the proposition that us to matters where Provincial Legislatures have juris. diction, we should leqve them to be regulated according to the sentiment, and the feeling, and the conscience of the different provinces having control over them. Now, with regard to the management of the camals and the fovernment railways, I an satisfied to leave it in the hands of whatever Gorernment way be in power. If hon. gentlemen op. posite were in power, I would he quite satisfied to leave in their hames the control and management of these public works on the Sahbath day, in such a manner as they might deem proper. I sty it is a reflection upon the ciovernment, it is a reflection upon the parties. I care not which party may he in power, to say that it is necessary to ast this House to pass a Bill compelling the Govermment of the day to follow a certain line of conduet in reference to the public service on the Sahbathday. I Leg, therefore, without further remarks, to move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. CHARLTON. The Bill which is now under the consideration of the committer, as the hon. member for South Korfolk (Mr. Tisitale) very truly says, is a Bill that I have presenteal to the Honse on two creations lefore this, or : Bill of a similar character. This, howeser, is the first action taken by the House of Commons on this Bill. The Bill as now presented was rejortel by a select committee last session, and that select committee, with all deference to my hom. friend from South Norfolk, took a riew of this matter yuite different from his own. The committee eliminaterd from the bill every portion of it that came within the purview of provincial legislation, and retained only such features as, in their opinion, pertained to Dominion lesislation. There were six sections of the Bill eliminated, there were four sections retained, and the fowr sections retained by that committec are the sections now mider the consideration of this House. The first of these sections is that with reference to the publication of Sumday newspapers. Now, my hon. friend, the Minister of Justice, while not agreeing with me as to the propriety of making this provision with regard to the publication of sumlay newspapers, did agree that it was within the jurisdiction of this House and of this Govermment to make the provision that this Bill asks shall be made. With regard to the canals, of course, it is not necessary to inform my hon. friend that the Provincial Legislatures of this Dominion have no jurishliction whatever in the matter: aml when he says he considers it a reflection upon the foverument that the House of Commons should define what the Govermment is at liberty to do with regard to the canals, I quite disagree with the hon. gentleman. I think that this House is chargel with certain functions, that it is not necessary to delegate its functions to the Ministry, and that it is no reflection upon the Ministry, no reflection upon the Government of the day, to discnss the question temperately, and after discussion to arrive at a decision, as representatives of the people, as to what policy the Govermment shall follow with regard to the management of the canals. Now, the Minister of Justice was kind enough to indicate to me same days ago the action he proposed to take with regard to the second section of the Bill referring to the cauals, and while the proposition of that hon. gentleman does not go so far as I could wish, while it comes short of what I believe to be the proper reguirements of Divine law and a proper regard for the welfare of the subject in securing to him his ser euth day's rest, yet 1 shall be ghal to accept his proposition if I camot get more. I intented, when this Bill wits referred to the committee, to accept the suggestion of my hon. frient the Ninister of Justice, and having accepted that suggestion and secured what he was willing to grant, if I could get no more. I would perforce, have been satistied with that. Now, I do not think the hon. member for Wruth Norfolk, in taking the position he ches upon this Bill, will commend himself very stronfly the christain sentiment of this country.

An hrm. MEMBER, Vah:
Mr. CHARLTON. I hear a lerisive yah: The Dominion of (anatia is a part of the British Empire, aml the British limpire is a christian, natiom, amb the Gueen of : his Empire is lecelared to be the Queen aml befender of the faith by the grace of 1 iond: and there are laws upon the statute-book of every british eolong there are laws upon the statute book of tireat britain. providing for the ohservance of the ford's biay: and to assert sravely in this Honse that it is derogatory to the dignity of the foremment of this country, and a piece of inter. ferente on the part of this Dominion legislature with the rights of the perople, to make provision whin our juristiction for the proper observance of the Lond's bay as a day of rest, amb to act in consomance with legislation of the Empire, is a position 1 am surprised to see the hon. gentleman take. The hom, rentleman allules with some facetionsness to ny Want of suceess in presenting this bill. sir, I an atcenstomed to that kini of raillery. I intro. duced a bill into this House some yeans ago and it was honted out of the Honse. I introluced it again, and it was treater with a little less disrespect and contumely: I introdneed it a third time, and it secured a small measure of respect: I introduced it the fourth time, and it passed, but it was thrown out by the Senate; I introduced it the fifth time, and it passed here and the senate treaterl it with some measure of regard: 1 introduced it the sixth time, aml it passed this House and passed the semate ; and the lealer of this House, the Minister of Justice, has since approved of the features of that Bill amd has eren rone further than the Bill at first asked the House of Commons to go, although the Bill was at first scouted out of this Honse. Now, the Bill I present today is a Bill of more importance than that; it is a Bill that commends itself as thoroughly to the christian and moral sentiment of this country as that Bill did. Hon. geutlemen in this House who are opposed to this kind of legislation, may rise and cast discredit upon the sentiment that backs the Bill, but if Gonl spares my life, if that Bill is thrown out today, it will come in here again, it will come in as long as 1 have the honour to sit in this House, until that bill becomes law. In introducing this Bill I am sustained by the christian sentiment of Canada, by the worth of Canada, and I can inform the hon. member for South Norfolk ( Mr . Tisclale), and I can informother members of this House, that it would be well for them at least to treat this matter with respect and to give to men who have convictions upon this subject the benefit of supposing they are acting honestly in pursuing their convictions and are worthy of fair treatment liy this House. Of course at this stage of the matter, the Bill is in the hands of this committec. I do not know what course the lealer of the dowermment intends to take, whether he intends to implement his promise to me, emboried in the memoramhum I hold in niy hand, which covers the amembment he proposes to make to section ?. or not. (If contse, I an in his hamels. If he proposes to withoraw from that arrangoment, and if he declines to carry it ont. and if the majority of the committee choose to rise, the Bill is lost. I rest the matter there: I rest it, first, on the decision of the Minister of Justace: and, secont, on the decision of the committee as to what shonhi be clone.
Sir TOHN゚ THOMPSON. No far as I am (oncerned I mast answer the reference which the hon. sentleman has mate to we at this moment. I heg to say to him that so far as our understanding is comeernel. I athere to it. The umberstanding wats simply this: I was disposed to accept, and am still disposed to accept, a provision similar in principle to that embodied in the second sectime of his Bill. lat to make an amendment which the hon. gentleman holis in his hamis. Persomally I an unfaromalle to the wher sections of the bill. the reasons for this I expressed when the bill was before the Honse last session, not hecause the Bill is beyom one powers, for I think it is not heyond our powers, hat becatuse the sulijects which are legislated upon here can be likewise legislated upon hy the Provincial Paliaments, aml can be leqislated upon liy them with more effer and with more knowledge of the local circumstances than we possess. If we take the first section, we have an illustration of what I means. There is no Sumbay newspaper pablished in any part of Gamada, except one in British Columbia, I am toll. The Bill will prevent the publishing of any smmay newspaper. I think it is more within the duty of the Legislature of British ( olumbia to say whether that paper should he suppressed or not. I think it is more competent for the l'ovincial Legislatures in other sections of the comntry to say wheiher sumday nuwspapers ought to be originated or not. So far as $I$ am concor $n e d, I$ am argainst the publishing of Sumblay newspapers : but I do not think it wise for this Parliament to legislate on this subject, and if it were left to my choice, I would prefer sery much that several of these provisions should be left to the l'rovincial Legislatures to:chopt, if they please, for when they were adopted by those Legislatures they would be alopted from considerations of policy, of which they are hetter judges than we. But as regards the second section of the Bill, $I$ stand to my promise to the hon. gentleman, and if he will accept my amembment $I$ am in faroat of the clause emborlying that principle.
Mr. CHARLTON. I am willing to atopt the amendment of the Minister of Justice in regard to the second section.
Mr. TISDALE. I cannot allow the lecture which the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) saw fit to aldress to me to pass unnoticed. I leave it to the intelligence and fair-play of the House to decide whether during his whole remarks he did not endeavour to place me in a false position before the public. Did I say anything that any fair-minded man conld distort into the idea that I did not treat the measure with respect?

Mr. Cuaritos.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No.

Mr. TIsDALE. I think not. Did I say anything of a hoastful nature ?
some hon. MEMBERs. No.
Mr. TIsidALE. I say no. I did not treat the measure with disrespect. On the contrary, I showed the insinerrity of the hon. geutleman, either here or when he aseends the platform ia the ridings of the county, from which we both come. If I am correct in the principle I advocate, that the Promincial Legislatures should deal with this matter, it is extremely unfair upon a matter on which public feeling is so strong, and properly so, namely, Sablath whservance, to attempt to place me in a false position. But was there any want of respect when I took the highest possible gromms that can be taken on any guestion of legislation in this coontry, that where subjects are properly relegated to the provinces, the question of dealing with them should he.left to the provinces? When the hom. gentleman assumes to speak for the christian sentiment of this conntry, for what does he speak? The hon. gentleman placed himself in a most inconsistent position with regard to christian sentiment of this combtry when he endeationed to force on the people, whose religious feelings were different from his own, action which they did not think fair to themselves. So long ago as when the Separate school guestion was brought up in the Province of Ontario the hon. gentleman was one of those who joined with his assoriates in bitterly attacking the Separate school system. I am a Protestant as he is, but I believe, under the circumstances, that the Catholics are entitled to Separate schooks, and I never was sorry for hating supported them. When the hou. gentleman rises here, and when he declares that I am attacking the christian sentiment of the country, I ask what is the christian sentiment for which he speaks? christian sentiment does not belong to any kiml of man or to any legislation, but it is that hroad right that our thoughts and feelings, on moral questions, should be free and should not be yuestioned. Didid question them? On the contrary ; and if christian sentiment is not broad enough to cover this siew, then I do not agree with it. I said that all the people in the provinces should have the right to regulate their own affairs in regard to this chiristian sentiment. That camot be gainsaid. I have mot loasted of my christian achievements. The Bill to which the hoin. gentleman has referred may have been, in his opinion, an excellent bill, but there was nothing in it that attacked thie fommations of the constitution as hetween the Provincial and the Dominion Legislatures, and I do not umderstand it to be christian sentiment to inluce people to follow sentiments which they do net accept. At all events, if it is christian sentiment which has been presented to us, I have never heen able to embrace that sort of christianity, although I claim to be a christian equally with the hon. member. The hon. gentleman declares he will keep on introducing the bill each year. Let him do so. If it is wrong the people's representatives will keep on throwing out the measure every year. Hon. members of the House are sufficiently indepenilent, aithough party ties are so strong, to unite on moral guestions and reject such a measure as that now under consideration, and unless proper justification can be adduced for it by the hon. gentleman, he may bring in his Bill as many times as we sit here and it will be rejected. A word as to his last point. The hon. gentleman claims that this Parliament has the right to regulate the ruming of Govermment railways and to control operations on the camals on sumday. I agree with him that we have the right to do so: but I say that not only as regards this fovermment, but the dovermment controllel hy hom. zentlemen opposite, it would he a reflection to paiss such a measure, for there is no cause or complaint to be remediel, and hoth the (Government of Mr. Mackenzie and the present dovernment so controlled the canals that no canse of complaint existed. If this Parhament tied down the (iovermment by a strict set of rules, an oectasion migh! arise when the restrictions would appear to the monstrons, and when there would be no discreion left to the dovernment. We have not perhaps, that hon gentleman's sentiment of christimity, we nay mot have his peculiar tencts on this question, hint I am satisfied that we have, among the lealers of the great political parties, sulficient of that sentiment to ghatrd all that should he guarded. The hon. gentleman endeavoured to place me in a false position. I am quite prepared to leave this cuestion with the liberal-minded christian people, if it is explained to them in a proper way so that they will momerstand it, and I believe they will not thank the hom. gentleman for trying to force on other people his views. Or if they shouht, they onght to he checked, hecause I believe that each province should have within itself the control over the me matters. I also helieve that the leaders of looth political parties in this country are sutficiently (ionl-fearing and sutficiently upright to see that the sahbath day is not degraded in the management of our public works.
Mr. BOWELL. Mr. Chaimam, I was mater the impression that the question of Sablath observance had loeen fully dealt with by the Legislature of the Prorince of Ontario. I remember that after the guestion hal been cliscussed in this House, a somewhat similar Bill to the one brought hefore this Parliament but more restrictive in its provisions, was introluced in the Ontario Legislatme and after some amendments became law. The contention there was, that it should be the duty of cach province to cuforee, so far as it was considered in accord with the comsciences of the people, and its practicability, the olservance of the Lords Day. I am very strongly in favour, and I have always been in favour of preventing the carrying on of business on the Sabbath, and more especially am I against sunday newspapers and their circulation throughout the comitry. I cannot understand, however, that it would be any more wicked for me or any other printer to begin work at is oclock in order to print the Monday morning's paper, than if work was commenced only at 9 o'clock at night. I do not know, as we understand the Sabath, whether it is more wicked for a man to begin worl: immediately after church or in the morning, than it is if he begins work at 9 oclock at night and works untii 12; or, in other words, that he is to be religious for 21 hours of the 24 , which are supposed to constitute the Sablath, and as wicked as he pleases during the three hours between 9 and 12 o'clock. However, to my mind, this Bill seems to be of a sort of hermaphrodite character; it is.
ncithor one thing nor the other. You provide by it that a man shall have to observe the sabbath during certain portions of the day, and you allow him to violate it cluring the remaining hours. The Bill provides also that one milk train may be run on the Sabbath. Well, is a milk cart to be prohibited: If it is necessary that the people residing in a city should have the milk brought to them on a train on the Nabath ray. is it any more wicker that a farmer living immediately adjacent to the city shombl hring in a supply of milk in his cart to the dowrs of the consumers? Then I find no provision in the bill for the closing of post offices or telegraph oftices on the Sibbath diay, thongh they ate open now during certain hours. My principal object in rising wis to point out one or two ohjections to the bill, and to congratulate the hon. Member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) on the $\overline{0}$ th clanse. He has evidently beeome a comvert to the principle which in the past be has comlemmed most vigomonsly in this Homse. The moiety system of distrihuting fines and penalties atmong informers is one for which the doverninent. and more expecially the ( $u$ atoms lopartment, hate heen most severely censured abd condemmed by the hom. dentleman. However, he has now camperl that principle a little further in this Bill than the (iovermment have ever gone. While he whlemms the distribution of the penalties imposed for violat. ines the Customs Aet by giving the informers onethind, and therely creating an ine inform, anl to become, as they have heen repeatedy deserihed by hon. gentlemen opposite spies upon the lonsiness people of this comatry : the hem. sentleman provides in his bill that the infomer in the case of a riolation of this law shall have one-half the penalty. The hongentleman has camied the moiety principle mach further than the former forermment or the present dovermment ever attempter. If it be wrong to provide an incentive to people to inform on violators of the law, in espect to the Cnstoms Department, surely it must be equally wrong to compensate informers in respect to this law. At least, I am mable to discover where the virtue is in informing ipon a man who happened to reliver a pomm of meat on the sibhath day, or sell a newspiper, and give the informer one-half the penalty, while it is sail to be wrong to give one-third of the penalty to the informer on a man who hat violated the law hy smuggling goots into the country on any day, whether it be a Sumlay or a week day. However, in this, as in most things, I am afraid some gentlemen in this Honse, as well as out of it, are too apt to argue the principle inrolved in this clanse, more for the purpose of timding fatult with the (iovermment of the diy than for the purpose of expressing an opinion against the principle itself. If it is wrong in one case, it is wrong in the other. However, I am of the opinion that it is quite right, if this Bill should become law, that there should be an incentire to those who desire to have it enforced by informing upon the law: breakers. If this Bill is to become law, let us have it a little more stringent than it is now, or throw it out altogether.

Committee rose, and it being six oclock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

House again resolved itself into Committee. Mr. Bowell.

Mr. CHFINTIE. I was much pleased when the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) tirst introduced his Bill list session, because I helieved it was a good Bill. The aim of the Bill was not to interfere with any man's religious convictions, he they what they may: neitherdid it aim at compelling any man to observe the Lord's Day. The chief aim of the Bill, I think, was to secure to the employes of the Govermment, on railways and canals, in the lost Office Department and in the public service generally, the whole sumday rest. It has been contemded that this Bill was mnecessary, that it encroached upon provincial rights: hut if this question is to he lealt. with, so far as it relates to our rallways, our post otfices and our canals, it must he dealt with hy this House and this dovermment. If the Bill as originally introduced had been enacted, I have no douht it would have been a great boon to thonsands of fiovermment emploves who are now robbed of their sumbay rest. that rest which is so essential to their physical wellbeing. and deprived of all opportunity of attending Divine worship and receiving religions instraction. Dany of these employes have been lone andimsly. lowking for the relief promised hy this Bill. They know ly sald experience that a continued romol of coil ami drudgery. Withont a smalay rest, is not only disistrons th their physical well-heing, impairing their health and shortening their lises, bout is demomalizing in all its temblencies, and deprives them of many comforts amd blessings which would otherwise brighten their lives and mate them better and purer. Now, with this Bill as amenten, and as proposed to be amended, I mast say I have rery litule sympathy. If it is to be cut down to section $\xrightarrow{2}$. the itle of the bill hecones a misnomer. It loes nothing whatever for the employes, but leaves them exactly where they were before. As I understand, the cimals are now closed during a portion of the lords Dity, umber an Order in Council. ant this Bill will simp! p poride for closing the canals sluring a purtion of the day, and keeping them open during another portion. It does nothing to alvance or promote the interests of Sablath observance, amil what is worse, it completely igmores the Suniay lahour and sumday desecration which is carried on now on our railways and in other departments of the public service. My contention is simply this, that it is our cluty to see that the employes of the fiovernment are protected in the enjoyment of a eomplete sumlay rest, and I think we shoulal beWare how we ighore or trample under foot the Divine law by depriving our fellow men, so many of them, of that dia's rest which (iod has given them.

Mr. OBRIEN. This question may be viewed from one of two aspects, the aspect of christianity and the aspect of secial economy. So far it has been almost entirely discussed from the aspect of christianity. While I hope the lay may never come when the teachings of christianity will cease to be the ruling spirit in both Govermment and the people of the British Eimpire, at the same time I may point out to the hon. Minister of Militia that there is no principle from which, if pushed to unreasonable lengths, a reductio and abourdum may not be drawn. His argiament may be illustrated in this way. He himself, I am sure, would not allow those in his employ in private life to do uny unnecessary work on Sunday; but at the same time he would not think it wrong that they should cook his dimmer or make his hed or perform any of the other functions necessary to civilizell life. The same argument would apply to the newspapers to which the hom. gentleman has alludet. Logically and strictly it may perhaps be as much a breach of Sunday to work after 9 o'clock in the evening as lefore 12 oclock in the morning; but to apply the same rule in both cases would not be reasomable. Even this Bill admits it to be necessary that a newspaper employe should work after 9 oclock on sumlay evening if he is required to do so, and exempts him from any legal consequences for doing so ; but it the same time it secures for him the enjoyment of the day ats well as any other class of employes. But the great object of the Bill, so far as I am inclined tos support it, lies in this, that there are a certain class of employes who repuire the protection of the law, hecause in no other way can they possibly oltain protection. It is an old saying that we must deal with corporations on a different principle from individuals, liecause corporations have neither a boniy to be kicked nor a soul to be saved; and while we give them great powers and privileges, it is necessary that there should be some limits to their powers and privileges. I allude especially to the case of railways. Dow, the railways in this comutry enjoy many extraorlinary powers and privileges. In fact, it is sometimes hard to say who giverns this comatry, whether the gentlemen sitting on the right of the speaker or a great railway corpmation. But at all events, we are bound to protect the employes of those corprations by law, hecause they are at present umable to olltain protection in any other way. Now, I am satisfied from my own observations, that the railway companies impose upon their employés a great deal of Sumbay lalon that is not necessary, ime that is the reasun why $I$ will rote against the motion that the committec rise. Where I live I constantly see trains passing on Sunday, which I know are not neesessury, and the sending of which involves a large amount of labour from which the employes shoulh be protected. I trust that this Bill may go to the committee, and that the clase in regard to railways may le adopted in sonie form or other, for ay one who knows anything of the sublject knows how ditticult it is for any employés of the railway companies to oltain reilress if they are calleil on to work. They are perfectly helpless; there is no way in which they can oltain redress unless from the strong hamuls of the law. It is all very tine to talk about religious liberty and all that sort of thing ; hut at the same tim: the olject of our legislation is to give equal rights to all classes of the community, whether they are employes of private individuals or of great corporations; and I speak chiefly in the interest of the employes of great corporations who are not and will not be liable to those influences which control the actions of private individuals. Farmers are not allowed to send their employés into the fields on Sunday, though we can think of circumstances in which it is reasonable that they should do so; but railway corporations have a control over their men such as no private empioyer has, and, therefore, the law should step in and give these men that protection which they would not otherwise have. I shall vote against the motion that the committee rise, because

I think, with regard to a measure of this kind, some step ought to he taken to prevent what is an abuse on the part of railway corporations, who compel their men, under circumstances, which would not be tolerated in the case of any private individual, to work on sumlays.

Mr. CHARLTON. I wish to say a few words, Mr. Chairman, hefore you put that motion. The hon. member for south Norfolk, in moving that the committee do now rise, did not perhaps realize that he proposed ignominiously to kick out of this High Court of Parlianent a measure which interests a large portion of sery respectable class of the people, and that in making this motion he seeks to cast contumely anci reproach upon a class of people whom, upon consideration, he might be disposed to treat with nore courtesy. The hon. gentleman has it very great regard to-night for provincial rights. I quite sympathize with him in that sentiment, and I certainly would ilesire to refrain from adrancing or attempting to adrance any legislation in this House which would he an infringement on the rights of any person in this Dominion : and the Bill now lefore the committee is a Bill from which, as I have sail already, every feature was climinated that pertained in any sense to the jurisdiction of Provincial Legislatures, with the single exception of the Sumlay newspaper: amd I will explain briefly in a monent why that feature was maintainer. I presume the hon. gentleman will not venture to assert in this Honse that Provincial Legislatures have jurisdiction wer the canals belonging to this Dominion or our railway tratfic, or that this Honse, in making provision with reference to the management of canals which are Dominion property or with reference to the management of railways and the trattic upon then, which are of a mational character, is in any way infringing upon provincial rights. The hon. gentleman would hardly ie guilty of so great an alsurdity as to make snch an assertion There is but one feature of this. Bill that cau be said to pertain to legislation within the purview of provincial legislatures, and that is the feature with regard to sunday newspapers. We have been informed by the Minister of Iustice that this Parliament has jurisdiction in that respect, that it is perfectly competent for this House to deal with that guestion, and I may inform the i:on. gentlemam that the committee to which was referreal this Bill, in considering the question as to the propriety of retaining the section with regard le ©uatioy newspapers, took this view of the case. First, they hell that it was desirable that there should be a miformity of law throughout the Dominion with regard :" that matter, for the reason that the Government of this country has control of the copyright laws and the transmission of printed matter through the mails, and has control of the introduction of literature into this country through the customs. For these and other reasonsnot necessary tomention, they felt it was in the highest degree desirable that the law with regard to Sunday newspapers should be a uniform law, and I am happy to hear the declaration of the Minister of Justice that, so far as his sympathies and his own private views are concerned, he is opposed to the publication of Sunday newspapers ; and I take this occasion of expressing my obligations to that hon. gentleman for fair treatment and courtesy in all cases where I have had anything to ins which has bronght me into contact with him. The lrovincial Legislature or Covernment of Ontario have not met this case. They have male no provisions with regard to the publication of sumday newspaper. I hold in my hand a simalay inewspaper pulbished in the city of Tormen by the conservative candidate for East York, the Sinnlcuy W'orll of Toronto, the harbinger of an evil swarm of foul birds which may follow in its wake. I rememiler when the first Sunday newspaper was pullished in the United States, which Horace Greeley, the elitor of the Tribum, characterized as a sreial denon. When one newspaper ottice pullishes a Sumday newspaper. others are forced to follow suit : and if the Shandry Wionll is continued in Toronto. the day is not distant when every newspaper in that city will have its sumday edition. If we are to deal with this matter, we most deal withit now, and as a Tominion matter, just as we would with the copyright guestion, the introduction of immonal literature or its transmission through the mails. The hon. gentleman inhis remarks withresprect toprovincial jurisdiction, did not touch upon the case at all, hecause we are dealine with matters now exclusively pertaining to the jurisiliction of the Dominion. IVhen the lim. gentleman igmominiously proposes to kiek this Bill out of court, does he know whom he is insulting by this summary treatment of the measure? Perhaps he thought he was affecting ouly the interests of one poor firit on this side ; but there are others interested in preventing Sunday desecration. Every church court. synol, general assembly, couference or preshytery, and the Catholic prelates, Archbishop Fabre and Cardinal Tascherean, have expressed themselves in favour of sunday observance and Pope Leo XIII is also on record in its farour. I coull enumerate minsters, bishopss, cardinals, archlishops, jurists, stat smen, lalour movement leaders, all over the world, who farcour it law such ats the one we have under discussion. yet the hom. gentleman moves that the committee do now rise and treat this Bill with the utmost ignominy and contempt. He asks that the committee refuse to consider a single provision embolised in this bill, and that we should say to every church court, synod, general assembiy, conference and other church hoolies, that in adivecating a sumday observance law, in senaling their petitions and passing their resolutions in its farour, they were not acting in a way worthy of the notice of Parliament. He asks that we should treat all their fulminations. petitions, expressions of sentiment, with the utmost unconcern, and refuse to consider for one moment any provision in this Bill which has re:eivel their suction. That is the position that the hon. member for South Norfolk takes. It is one I hardly supposerd a gentleman of his acuteness would have voluntarily taken. I a:n sorry he has done so, anil I hardly believe the House will concur with him and treat this Bill as he asks that it should he treated. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman's course will meet with approval in his constituency. I am sure some of his constituentshavedeeply at heart thepassage of a measure such as that now proposerl. A few words with reference to the remarks of the hon. Minister of Militia. That hon. gentleman has criticised this Bill as hermaphrodite measure, as being neither fish, flesh, nor good red herring in his estimation. It saurifices, he says, the principles of Salbath olserrance ; it is not stringent enough; if he went in for : Sabbath Observance Bill, he would give us something stronger. 1 am quite willing to second the hom. gentleman's views in any respect in this regard. The Bill itself is not such a one in all respects as I would desire, bui in arranging a measure of this kind, yon have to conciliate divergent views. you have to compromise your own views, or you cannot get the Bill reported ly the special committee or secure the sumport of the majority of the House of Commons. Some provisions have to be made which perople in farour of strict olservance would not be likely to approve. Such is the provision with regari to labour on newspapers on Nunday evenings after 9 oclock, and also with regard to milk lelivery traius. As the hon. member for Muskoka says, we have to take various circumstances into consideration. We camot adopt the strict old lewish method of keeping the Sablath. We have to decide what constitutes a work of necessity and mercy, hecause under the cliristian dispensition, works of necessity and merey are always evceptel, and it nay be that a little work, two or three hours of a sunlay evening, is a work of necessity. It may be that the sending of milk trains to the city, where the supply of fresh milk is necessary to the welfare and health of the people, is a work of necessity. I think it is. There are various other things which some strict Sabuathterians might not deem properly a work of necessity, and the bill to-night is hroal and liberal in its provisions, not going so far as strict salb,hatherians would like, a bill not insuring strict religious olservance at all, but designed to secure to the labourer his civil right of enjoying one day's rest in the seven and to protect him from the exactions of the employer and the calpitalist. The hon. Minister of Militia drew attention to the feature of the Bill with regard to the moiety of fines, and refering to some remarks made by myself on a former occasion about the custom-house system of making seizures and allowing officials to share in the tines imposed. That is a matter not pertinent to the consideration of the liill : and although I might casily show that the two cases are not parallel, I will not stop to do so. But he goes on to make various criticisms as to the details of the Bill in other respects. All I have to say about that matter is this: The proper time to cliscuss the different clauses is when we are in committee. The Pill is not presented as a perfect measure, and every clanse may be amendel at the discretion if the House. But it does not follow lecause an hon. member may consiler this or that section incomplete or refuiring amendinent, that the Bill should not be considered at all, but if there is anything in this Bill worthy of the consideration of this House, if the amendment the Minister of Justice proposes is worthy our consideration, or if anything whatever in it is worthy of consideration, let the Bill be considered in committee, let the Bill stand upon its merits in the committee, let each sertion of the Bill be adopted or rejected, as the case may le, in the committee, but do not refuse the Bill that regree of courtesy which entitles it to the consicleration of the committee. Do not ignominiously throw the Bill out and in that way flout every man in the Dominion who believes, either for civil or religious reasons, in a Sabbath day's rest being secured for the toiler. I present these reasons and submit the Bill to this committee, trusting it will not be treated in the humiliating and ignominious mamer proposed ly the hom. member for South Norfolk, hut that it will receive the consideration of the committee. If there is anything in the measure worthy of consideration, alopt it. If not, reject it, but at least give it the courtesy of consideration.

Committee rose.

COMPLANT AGALAT JUDGE ELLIOTT.

House resumed consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Lister :
That a convo of the petition laid upon the Table of this House from Thomas Hobbs and others, complaining of the conduct of William Elliott. Esquire, county judge of Middlesex. in relation to the revision of the voters' list for the Electoral District of the City of London, be forthwith furmished him for his information, and to enable him to make such statement or answer to the charges therein contained as he may deem proper, and that the said petition and any such answer as the said judge may make be referred to a special committee of this House, to ennuire into the truth of the sereral allegations therein, with a view of finding whether such charges should be investigated by a commission.

Mr. MCLOCK. The petition which was laid upon the Table of this Honse on the 30th of Narch last, contains certain grave charges reflecting upon the conduct of a dignitary in the service of this country, the judge of the County Court of the County of Middlesex, not strictly in his capacity as a County Court judge but in his capacity as a judqe interpreting the Frunchise Act. That petition received due publicity through the journals of this country. It was endeavoureal at an early date to bring it to the attention of this Honse in order that the serious charges involvel in it might at the earliest possible moment receive that consideration which they demanded ; but for certain reasons, which appear to justify the Aclministration in taking the course they did, or in consequence of a ruling which hardly seemed to be in harmony with precedent, but to which the House not withstandinglowed submissively, the consideration of the petition was not given that priority to which its importance entitled it, and through the tedious process of postponement, which the rules of this House require, it is now approaching almost the close of the session hefore one of the most serious charges that could be brought before Parliament is investigated. The Government is responsible in this regard. The Government had it in its own power, by acquiescence, to allow this motion to be entertained at an earlier date, and after succeeding in laving it postponed to this late hour, I would not be surprisell to find them complain that the lateness of the session is a sutficient reason for dismissing the application. I am surprised that up to this moment, notwithstanding the great pullicity that has been given to this petition, and the charges involved, not one person in this House, or out of it, has been found courageous or rash enough to give a denial to the charges. They stand before the country to-day uncontradicted by any one in the House or out of it; and if ever there was a confession of weakuess it was furnished by the hon. gentleman on the other side of the House who has ventured to defend the action of the juige, and who, I suppose, ransacked all possible resources of ingenuity in order to discover reasons for denying this application.

His defences were very similar to those that cropped up on another important oceasion to which the rules of this Honse will not allow me more particalarly to refer ; but when I heard the exceptions taken that the charges were too rague, that they were not upecific, that the petitioners were not respectable, and sion, I was very much reminded of the excuses offered when a motion was mate on a certain occasion to investigate charges against the Postmaster General. Mr. Speaker, what are the charges made against this judicial otticer, and how did the member for East Lambiton (Mr. Moncrieff) endeavour to controvert them : Without guoting at this stage the exact language of the petition, it is sufficient to say that the petition was presented to this House under the signature of a large number of respectalle citizens of the city of London, a petition which contained on its face the most specitic charges that could be very well framed. I fail to unlerstand how the English language could supply more apt terms for the description of the offences. The offences set forth in that petition are, that this judge was partisan in the discharge of his duties, and acted in a partisan mamer, that he publicly denounced is certain political party in the city of London, that he publicly stated that means would be found for seating Mr. Carling; that this judge peniling the determination of this question, pending the election, and prior to his giving julgment, wrote intlammatory or partisan articles and published them in the press of the city of London; that all these things were done by him whilst he was seized of this question in his judicial capacity, and bound as a man of honour to administer justice inpartially between the two parties, and so far as any action on his part went, to keep his mind judicially unbiassed, and in an unprejuliced condition. That is the simple statement contained in the petition, those are the charges that are made against this ofticial; and I suppose the hon. memher for Fast Lambton, being the one, perhaps, of all others in this House, most deeply concerned in presenting the best face of the case on behalf of the judge, has advanced the best arguments yossible why there should not be an enquiry ar I would remind the hon. gentleman and this souse that the petition in question loes not ask that the julge be convicted at this stage; the motion asks nothing of that kind. The motion in question is couched in the most temperate language, and I think presents a very fair proposition to this House; that motion is that in view of these charges made in this House, accreditel, as they are ly the petitioners in yuestion, these charges are of that serious character that the House would not be justified in passing them by in silence, but should call upon the official in guestion to make answer to them, if an answer he can make. That is a fair proposition, and that is one of the least of the duties that this House can discharge under the circumstances. Now, what were the objections offered by the hon. member for East Lambton? He stated that in connection with the London election the only disgraceful thing he could discover was the action of the Liheral press. Instead of confining himself to defending the accused, he endeavours, I presume from tactical motives, to carry the war into Africa, to raise some irrelevant issue, with a view to diverting attention from the motion itself. I am not aware that the conduct of the Liberal press, be it upright and straightforward or the opposite, would, in the slightest degree, interfere with the merits of this issue, which is a wholly different one altogether. We are not now trying the Liberal press; we are now considering the case of an official of the Crown: therefore, I fail to understand what the action of the Lileral press of Mildlesex or elsewhere hail to do with the alleged crime of Judge Elliott. I may say that the Chief Justice of the Prosince of Ontario will not thank the hon. member for East Lambton, nor will those other law officers to whom he alluiled. when he endeavoured to protect the position of Julge Elliott by classifying him with them. He attacked the standing. he said. of some of the petitioners. He said it was right that Judge Elliott should know who his accusers were, and as if that were a defence, as if it were a reason for not considering the conduct of Judge Elliott who is said to have committed a crime, the hom. gentleman proceels to attack the petitioners who harl not committed a crime. He sought todiscredit the first and the last of the petitioners : I have not comoted the momber, hat there are at least twenty or thirty prominent citizens. As to the first of these petitioners he says, he is not to he lelieved, he is not to be considerel in this Honse, because, forsonth, he took part in a previous election case, aul because on one occasion he har partaken freely of pige feet, and on another oceasion had strengthened his weary nature with lager beer, and for these reasons the first petitioner was not to be considered a credible witness against the julge. Then he made some passing allusions to the last petitioner and because he could make these rumning comments upon a comple of the petitioners, he asks this House to ignore the charges that these responsible men have made, male openly and manfully over their hands. and presented to this House in the only constitutional course open to them. I fail to see how the status of the petitioners has been so shaken byything that has fallen from the hom. member for East Lambton, as not to entitle their statements, given in this petition, to what credence that ought to be given to any given number of men who, up to this moment, must be considered as respectable citizens. It is well co bear in mind that the member for East Lambton was specially guarded in denying nothing. I presume if he could have given a denial to one of these charges, he would have done so, but as an astute lawyer he knew it would be better for him not to commit himself to such a position, and he simply took the ground: Prove your case if you can; in the mean time I will not commit myself by saying these charges are unfoumled. But one of the most extraordinary reasons that was ever assigned for a judge refusing to follow the decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, was that the decision was not in writing, that lecause the Queen's Bench did not choose to reason out their decision but gave it immediately after the argument, orally from the bench, that that was a sufficient reason for their decision and their pronouncement of the law being disregarded. I am sure there is no member of the bar, no man of common sense, I care not what his calling may be, that will not see the fallacy of such a reason as that. He said that Judge Elliott was warranted in disregarding the decision of the Court of Appeal because the court had only given an opinion. Why, they had given a decision based on argument. The very point in issue was argued by learned counsel on ioth sides before the Court of Appeal, and although that court at one stage, in giving julgment held that it was not necessary for them to deal with the one point, yet when pressed by counsel on both sides. they proceeded to deal with it. They did unt deal with it as a point that had not been argued before them. The judgment of the court, or what the hon. gentleman calls their opinion, was on the point on which the case had lreen taken to the Court of Appeal. It was the main point in the argument in the case before the court, and although the juligeschose tosiy: "Thiscase may go off on annther print and it is not necessary for us to deliver julgment on the particular question as to the validity of the notice. yet as both counsel ask us to give julgment, and as we have made up our minds, we are prepared to deliver judgment :" they gave judgment on loth points., hoth prints being decidea against the contention of Judge Elliott. But one point wonld have been sufficient to have detemnined what future action should be taken. The hon. gentleman said that although those two courts had given those julgments aidversely to. Julge Elliotts opininn, Judge Elliott in reversing judgment hat at no stage undertaken to follow the judgment of the superior Court. Is that not an extraorlinary proposition? A julge who is trying a case, which ly eertain process gets into appeal. satys to counsel: "I reserve my julgment until the Superior Court, where the appeal is now carried, delivers judgment." On what principle does he reserve julgnent, if he is not to be governed by the decision of the superior Court: Was he performing an empty and hollow sham when he saill: "I will reserve julgment to see what the superior Court thinks, to ascertain what, in that court's opinion the law is," if after that court has stated what the law is, he is going to ignore the law ? The very fact that he reserved julgment until the Court of Appeal gave julgnent was an implied mulertaking that he was going to act as every upright juilge would ace. he governed as regards the law hy the opinion laid down by his superiors. Yet we are toll that because he did not give an umlertaking that he wonld follow the law, he was. therely warranted indisregarding the law. Then the hom. yentleman, iustead of having the courage to say that the clause in the petition which charges Juige Elliott with having inserted partisan articles in the press, and with having taken a partisan attitude, in talking to his neighbours in the city of London, was incorrect, instead of denying the accuracy of those statements, if he could, what is his defence? It is a defence which goes to the very foundation of the very judiciary of the country. He says, is it to be the case that when a man takes a position on the bench, his mouth is to le thereby closed on political questions? What does he mean by the expression? The first thing that happens to a man who takes a position on the bench is that he loses his qualifications to be an elector. What is the meaning of that feature in the law? We cannot prevent a judge entertaining opinions. We all have our opinions, and I have no doubt that judges, who take office, politicians as they may be, and as most prominent men in Canada are, as a rule lay aside, so far as may be, their political views once they accept the ermine. I venture to say there is not another case on record, I can recollect none at all events, and I am certain there has not been a case in the last 40 years, where a judge on the bench has taken part, as this judge has been accused of having taken part, in a political contest of this kinl. Is it because the man is on the bench, because he occupies a position so far above his brethren, that he can do acts that unfit him for the proper discharge of his duties? I want to know what can more disfualify a judge from giving an impartial consileration on matters political, when they come lefore him in his judicial capacity, than the circumstance that he is allying himself actively ass an agent to promote the candidature of one candidate or another, for the success of one political party or another. And therefore whilst the juiges may be allowed to have their political opinions, while it is impossible for them to strip themselves of their political riews, I think no one will say that they are warranted in saying that they may, after taking the ermine, either in the press,on the strect, or on the platform, manifest party bias for one political party or another. I therefore say the hon. centleman has wholly mistaken the issue if he supposes these charges simply aceuse Judge Elliott of having political opinions. They are much more serions. They charge him with being an active political party man, nothing more nor less than a party heeler, and that, at the time when he had it in his judicial power to seat one candidate or the other, and which power we say he has exercised in the way in which his party leanings went. I will not controvert, at this stage, the statement made by the hon. gentleman, that Juige Ellintt is one of the purest of judges that ever adorned the Canadian fench. I think it will he better to reserve an expression of that kind until his particular conduct in question is investigated, and if these charges are foundationless, I shall rejoice, as all honourable men ought to rejoice, in his being exculpated: but the friends of Judge Elliott, if they believe in his innocence. should be the first mento ask Parliament to carry this motion and have his conduct investigated, and when I find, on the floor of this House, efforts made to prevent enquiry, I certainly am compelled to arrive at the conclusion that hon. gentlemen opposite do not believe that Judge Filiott's conduct is of the purest of the pure. The hon. gentleman said that nothing improper could le implied from anything that .Julge Elliott has said or written. He did not venture to say that Judge Elliott did not write any of these articles; Judge Elliott did not venture to instruct him to that extent, I venture to warrant. Judge Elliott has never, up to this moment; denied writing these articles.

An hon. MEMBER. What articles?

Mr. MULOCK. Before 1 am through, hon. gentlemen will have the adrantage of knowing what the articles are. I have them before me. The hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) did not care to read these articles. He proposed to lay this case before Parliament to allow the judge, as he ought to have done, to come before Parliament in a manly way and give his answer at an early stage. Hon. gentlenien opposite did not deny the existence of these articles, further than to say that nobody could point to anything improper, but before I take my seat I will refer to some of those articles and $I$ will leare it to the hon. gentlemen to say whether their contents are proper or not. Now, Nir, what did Julge Elliott do? There is a good deal that is controversial in his conduct, but there is a good deal which depends upon proceedings that have taken place and about which there is no controversy. There is the following in evidence alsout which there is no controversy. On the 20th November Judge Elliott held that he had no power to overrule the revising officer who decided that he had power to amend and to adjourn his court to permit an amemiment. As the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Moncreiff) said, at this stage Judge Elliott did not know whether or not there would be another clection, because the seat was not vacant. Assuming that to he the case, I am inclined to attach a great leal more importance to his decision then, than to his decision later on, when it was clear that his judgment was going to have a great influence on the representation of that constituency. From the decision of the revising officer there was an appeal to the Court of Queen's Bench, and it is not in doult at all that when the election was over, and when it depended upon overruling the decision of the revising officer whether Mr. Carling should take his seat or not, Judge Ellintt then proceeded to deal with this matter, and he did deal with it in favour of Mr. Carling. But in order to seat Mr. Carling what did he have to do: In orver to seat Mr. Carling, who did not get a majority of the qualified voters, he hacl, in the first instance, to find in fasour of the qualitication of 12 s voters who had been held by the revising officer to have no rote. To that extent he orerruled the tintings in fact and law of the revising officer. He further hat to overrule the unanimons decision of the Court of Queen's Bench, and in order to explain why he did this he says that the Court of Queen's Bench had not given a jurlgment with reasons. It is true they alecirled the law, but they lid not give those reasons that commended themselves todulge Elliott. That court seemed to know what the law was, it was so plain to them that they did not, I presume, deem it necessary to deliver an elaborate julgment, but assumen, as they had a right to assume, that their judgment, without giving reasons, should be accepted as an honest and correct julgment. Judge Elliott hal to overmule that julgment 1oo. He did so, and he says that in doing so, he supposes he would cover himself with oblorpay. I think he has well prophesied the result. But he had to go further, and to overrule the decision of the Court of Appeal. The three juilges of the Court of Appeal who gave judgment unanimously decided in favour of the decision of the revising ofticer, and they supported the decision of Judge Flliott himself in the first instance. They decided in the same way as the Court of Queen's Bench, and it, therefore, became necessary for Iudge Elliott to overrule the decision of the Court of Appeal. How did he do that? His contention was that these judges of the Court of Appeal did not know what they were about, that though they had delivered judg. ment on a point that had been threshed out before them by able counsel on both sides, Judge Elliott chose to place the construction upon that judgment, that it was not necessary to be given in oriler to determine the case. And so the junior judge overruled the decision of the Supreme Court, the highest court in the Province of Ontario. But he had also to overrule another judgment.

Before Julge Elliott knew that his decision was necessary inorder to seat Mr. Carling, he haddeeided that the revising ofticer was perfectly withinthe law in allowing the amendments and adjounning the court. and having so decided, he had decided also that the revising officer was perfectly within the law when on his court reassembling he had disallowed the $12 s$ wotes which Judge Elliott afterwards allowed. But. when after the election, these les votes had foumd their way into the ballot box, and it hecame necessary to have them counted in order to seat Mr. Carling. Julge Elliott not only hat to overrule the superior Court. but he also had to orerrule himself, amd he whorn the enth November had decided that there was no appeal to him from the revising harrister, who had allowed the amendments, and threw ont these facot votes: afterwards, on the !th of March, a couple of weeks after the election, he decided in favour of Mr. Carling and recinlell against himself. Sow, Nir, how comes it that his mimi underwent such a change? Wis he throughout these whole proceedings, so conducting himself that he was able to deliver am impartial julgment, and in this connection I shall treat of the newspaper articles. In the city of Londion is published a daily newspaper called the Free Piess the Conservative organ there. This bye-election commenced aloout the month of January, when I understand Mr. Hyman was unseated, and on the Sth day of February there appeared in the London Fous Pros the following item:-

" Reasons for Voting for Carling.

"1. Carling is a Cabinet Minister and is powerfnlwith the (iovernment to help in promoting the prosperity of London.
Lon.! He asserts that to surrender our tariff system to the States, is bostile to our position, as part of the British Empire, and must inevitably lead to political annexation."
I think we have heard a certain political party in this House, and out of the House. advance similar arguments against another party.

Mr. MONCPIEFF. Do you know that Julge Elliott wrote that?

Mr. MULOCK. I am sure that Julge Flliott wrote this article.

Mr. MONCRIFFF. That is not what I asked you.

Mr. MULOCK. I was told so : and I am reating this article as Judge Elliott's.

Mr. TCPPER. You were told so.
Mr. MULOCK. Yes, told so, and I believe so, and I have sworn evidence that it is so. I am not a witness now. I am a menzler of this House, and I am stating what I lelieve to be true; and if any hon. gentleman does not believe it to be true, why does he not take the chance of lisproving it? I accuse Judge Flliott of having written it.

Mr. TUPPER. That is another thing.
Mr. MULOCK. My hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Lister) has assured me that Judge Elliott has written these articles which I am about to quote, and I have in my possession sworn testimony shat he did write these articles. It is said that so particular was he that there should be no errors in these articles that he corrected the proofs with his own hand, and that the manuscript of every one of these articles was in his own handwriting, and was delivered in his own handwriting to the London Free Pors: : and if hon. gentlemen think that he dial not write these articles and can prove that he dial not, will they not place those who Saty he did in a nice prosition? He is accusel on the floor of this Honse of having written these articles: and now perhaps the inon. gentlemen having recosered from their excitement, will allow me to proceed with my yuotations from this nice bit of literature. The hon. meminer for Eatst Lamhton (Mr. Moncrieff) invited me to do, this, and I suppose he will regatid me ats merting his riews. I go on to quote the reasons which .Iulge Elliott adranced for voting against Mr. Hyman:
"First. he has neither ability nor power to help the city.
That is a petriotic. a julicial sentiment. -

- Mis want of ability is shown by his silly conduct by which the city lost the car-work s. ?nd. He is for surrendering our fiscal policy to the states, yet profesing to go against poitical annexation which Mr. Blake has announced must inevitably fillow.:
Well, aboat the same time, on the $\overline{\text { at }}$, of February last, there hegan a series of articles in the same paper, the London Fres. Pres. which hon. gentlemen will find under the heading, " Questions by a Liberal Voter and Answers: " and I may say that this series of articles will le fouml in the issues of that paper of the following days: the ith of Fel,ruary, the Gth of February, the sth of February, and the Sth of February. Julge Elliott, as the author of these articles, has purported to represent a Liberal questioning him upon the political issues of the clay. Perhaps he can show that there was a Liberal who put these questions to him, or perhaps he was personating a Liberal and putting guestions in order to answer them. 1 allu sure that no hon. gentleman would desire me to read these various columns of articles.

Some hon. MEMPFRs. Feal.

Mr. MULOCK. I have siven the fates, and hon. gentlemen can read them for themselves. They are questions and answers lealing with the great political issues of the day, principally the great trade question. Hon. yentlemen ask me to read them. The first question is :
"Hare you seen Mr. Gibbons's addrese on the trade ques-tion?-Yes."
So it goes on, and the last yuestion is :
$\because$ There are some other points to which I would like to refer, but not ai present- I should be happy to hear you, and I think I have seen no argument urged on behalf of the Liberal party in furtherance of their scheme of commercial or political union with the States which cannot be refuted."
There we aceuse Jurge Elliott of having insinuated that the Liberal party is in favour of political union with the United States. I will not quote the article of the 6 th of February, hut will leave that pleasure for hon. gentlemen opposite. The one on the 8th appears to le a little over a column in length and is made up of questions and answers of the same kiad containing arguments against the Liberal party, the regular stock arguments used by the Conservative party in the campaign. For example, this imagi. nary Liberal is supposed to have put this question :
"But, do you say there is not justice in the assertion that the Liberal party are for free trade?-I sny that when they assert free trade is their object in seeking to bave the American tariff to rule, they talk the verist nonsense. I must say that it is a dishonest cry, and those who ask for such an assimilation of tariffs and say it is for free trade, must lnow that the ery is unfounded and dishonest."

[^87]I think hon. gentlemen will admit that that question has something to do with politics. The iast of this series appeared on the !th of February, and the questions are very much of the same character as the others. For instance, I find the following: -

- I have read not moly Mr. Gibbons's pamphlet, but also the rarions speeches on: this side of the question. and so far ars I ean make wat, ther all blame this protective system tor what they regaril as the unprogressive state of Canadia, anil yei. as I have said, with matchless ineonsi-tency they advocate the andonion of the bipher duties of the Enited Siates This is a fatal blow on their prescription for prosperity
- D", you regari Mr. Blake s separation from the Liberal party it an aci prompted by sincere moive:?-We have no right to itupute any notive int an honourable one to Mr. Bhake : and I atfirm that neither Mr. Gibbons morany uther man ean effectively answer Mr. Blake's le:ter on his remanciation of the poliey of the Liberal party on this quesian.
At another place he goes on to say :
* Now. having alvanced in thiseliseussion so far. I would like to ask you, asone of the hiberal party, what poilec wou promee io allop in relation to the trade of inis comutry? Well, my feeling is this, that Canada is in such a condition that some great change is necesary for lier requperation, and I don't womler that Mr. Siors. Mr. (iibhoms and others are diseuraged and devondent. Answer-les. there it is. These gentlemen and ot hers who are politically asociated with them are for ever depreciating the country. Ther say: Behohd how the fuphation sagnates? Ece how propre is appreciating in value. Soe how our railways are badly managed. See how everything, in fact, in woing on desiruction. It seems to pire them wratitication to fird fault, and to disparage the conntry: Everyihing in the States is so exce!!ent. The firmers there are so fourishing, property is so yatual, manufactures are so probitable. Dut all this landation of the States and depreciation of Canada is miserable poliey. Is it wot the las: resouree of disilpmointed office humters? Differences of opinion we shallalnay have but when paris rancour is carricel so far as to find satisfaction on repreEming the country in an mutarourabie lightand :han discourage immigration and create a orejudice atrains: the mother country. I say when these thinge are done. at we know they are. it is time to ats Canadians to unite in their lenunciaion of a policy so unworthy ant Et, unpatriotic."
The little narative stopped at this stace. The Liberal did not appear to have asked any more questions. The juige had succeerled. in his own mincl, in answering these questions satisfactorily. Sirw, on the 1sthof Fehruary, the Court of Apperal delivered the jurlgment to which 1 have referred. and up to that time Judge Flliot had some chance of a decision being in his favour, enalling him to decide in farour of the allowance of these lial votes. But on the listh of February the julgenent of the Court of Appeal was given, which, so far ats that court coulil $g$, cut away from him that very last chance: and on the following day there appeared the following article in the London From Press, which article we also charge having leen written by Judge Elliott, in proof of which I have sworn evillence.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) When his judgment was penting:

Mr. MULOCK. The Court of Appeal hat delivered julgment, but he bad inot. His julgment had been reserved, and it was not delivered until 15 or 20 days afterwards. On the 19 th Febramy, bowever, the pen that subsequently wrote the jurlgment seating Mr. Carling, wrote this articie :

[^88]he surpasised all others in that assembly. And good looks are not to be despised are an index to character. Bui Sir John went deeper than external appearance. He saw that there was a Young man not only of a winning aspect, but that hic qualities of mind and hear: were well represented by his countenance and demeanour, and he at once put his trust in him. and up to the last moment of the old warrior's life he mever fatiered in his confidence in John Carling. Aud why hal lie and others such confilence in John Carling? Becanve they found in him that gern solid sense, judgment and tact. and that plain, unfailing integrity which among metn is often more potent than the most briatiant talent. Every une posessed of any sameity must see that Mr. farling mise ises faculties which constituie an cssential element in cementing and influencing a paris. and in promeing the interests of his constituents. He has been well tried in the fire of experience and not a particle af conifidence ilat has heen bestowed upon him haserer heen betrayed, and his influence is searcely excecrea in the case of any one who can be menfioned in securing far his consituenis all that they an by any presibie tairaes be entited to. But where are Mr. Ixman's quabifeatims" There is no brillianee about him. that is ecertain. He has a few semiences about trade Whica he has learni hy heari. But any one ara easily yick wut ion gouna men as gified as he. Then.. where is his talent for lealing with atad matmaging men.
He conld mot manare the julyer. evislently. -
" He has passed ilurugh no ordeal like Mr. Carling. Ile is a new experiment. He has shown no porer io influence men or titn their confile:ace : Mr. Caringr has done He can play a groul yane of temnis wih some nice little girls.and ean sib his giassut wine pleasamtly in their company. But where there is that masouline. Itrong. common sthse and tact of judgnent which give an in mense afrantage in whtaininy such benefts ats a consianency lushs for in fanmess and equity? It is ridicuinus to compare the iwo men in eapacity to accomplish adramtage for a comstituence.

Now. if Mr. Ciaring were not a Cibinet Minister. the comparison wonld the mosi aner,ual. Hut when wr: consider that Mr Carling ocenpies that position, and under a victorions majority in Parliament.any combar rison in a persomal sense is ahourd. So much for a persemal comparison. Ln a political sense, there is sumething yei to e said.
The attidavit I have deses mot eover further extracts than these, but I am told that the Fioe Prese of that month. prior to the election, was teeming with similar articles emanating from the same pen. Sow, Sir. I presume there is no hon. genteman here who would say it would be a decent or a proper thing ion a ju!ge, whether he has to deal with anything connected with an election or not. to appear on a political platform either in connection with that or any other election. I cannot conceive of any justification nor of its leing possible in any way to jalliate the action of a juilge in appearing on one sille or the other in a public gathering and manifesting an active party interest. If that would be a somil proposition, much more I think should this particular julge have heen goarded in his conduct, considering that he was likely in a few days to be called upon to determine to whom the seat went, and if it is wrong if it is indefensible for a judge to go on the plat form ind utter a political speech, to give expres. sion to political sentiments, much more most is he wrong if he aldresses the electorate through is newspaper. In adhressing an audience, his worls may but reach the ears of a few humited people, bur, when he writes in a newspaper, the autience is much greater and the influence is greater. and umler all the circumstances I am unable to understand how any hon. gentleman can for one moment umder the circumstances of the case refuse to. Judge Elliott, if he be innocent, an opportunity of answering the petition. or, if he be guilty of enabling this High Court of Parliament to deal with him as this motion proposes. I think the motion is a fair one in every sense. It does not prejulge or accuse, but it simply asks as follows:-

- That a contr of the petirion laid npon the Table of this House from Thomas Ilable and others, counplaining of the conduct of William Elliott, Esquire, County Judge of Middlesex. in relation io the revision of the roter's list for the Elecioral Distriet of the City of London, he forthwith furnished him for his information and to enable him to make such statement or answer to the charges therein contained as he may decm proper, and that the said petition and any such answer ats ine said judge may makt be referred to a special conmittee of this House. toinquire inity the truth of the several allegations therein. with a riet of finding whether such charges should be invertirated by a cominission.
That preliminary investigation I think it was the luty of l'arliament to make. Hon. aentlemen. perhaps. wond like me to present them with the atfilavit verifying the extracts I hate read. I do wot intend to doso. I donot intend at this stage t" give them that lit of information. I and willing. howerer. if it is desired, to place the atfindavit and the information in retratel to this evidence in the hambls of Mr. Speaker to le retaineal loy him in a confilential wag. I Welieve in the alssilute eruth of the eharges in question as to Indge Flliott having written these articles in the press. My hon. frieml from Fatst Latmiton (Mr. Monerieffi) said that these charges were vague. Let me again read them for the information of the House, and it will then le for the House and the country to say whether if these charges were not sutficiently definite to enable Iulge Flliott to know what he was accused of. I think they must he sutficiently explicit for every member of this Honse to understand, except my hon. friend from Eatst Lambion (Mr. Moncrieff), who thinks them vague and not specitic. Paragraphs 17. 1s, and 19are as follows:-
* 17. The saill Willian Elliots, during the sail election and while the said appeals were penditg before him.comtributed editorially and also under an assumed name is and partisan character bearing upon the said revision of the votere ${ }^{-1 i s t ~ a n d ~ p o l i t i c a l ~ q u e s t i o n s ~ o f ~ t h e ~ d a s, ~ a n i l ~ p a r-~}$ ficularly umon the said election for the said electoral district and in support of the candidature of the said Carling and against the gaid hyman.
- 1 s. After the zaid etection and before deciding said appeats the said William Ellioti in s:rong and violent languase denome the said Hyman and his supporters and stated io several elecior of the said city that thesid Caring would ceriainly tet the seat in the House of Commons for the aid electural distrier.
- 19. That the conduct of the said William Ellintt. in writing the said newspaper articles pendins the said appeals, and in masking the said oral deelarations ard in atterwards carrying out the piri: of such articles and declarations by overruling the judgment of the said Queen's Bench Division and the express decision of the satid judges of the Court of A ppeal, show him to be a riolent politucal partisan incapable of piring an honest or unhiassed judguent on the subject-inatter of such appeals."
I think that language is plain enough to lee unclerstoorl. J donot think any persons who desires to know the meaning of the charges camot gratify his desires by reading that section of the petition. There you find plain. serious and outspoken langaage which demands the serious consilleration of this House.

Mr. TISDALE. I confess I am somewhat at a loss, taking the latter part of the hon. gentleman's adiress, to decide as to what he means or what he intends the House to deal with. If he intends or contends for a moment that these newspaper articles which he has read have anything to do with this discussion, I must totally disagree with him, and I shall decline to discuss them, because the only thing I can say in regard to them is that it is the highest compliment the hon. gentleman call pay to the hon. member for Fast Lambion (Mr. Doncrieff) whose argument the other day he attempted to disparage, because, if he means that these are the charges now under discussion, he must admit beyond contradiction that his friends have abamioned the untion which is now lnefore the House. He cammot contemi that these articles have anything to do with the matter at all. What we have to vote upon and decide here is the petition and the charges contained in that petition. I apprehend that there can be no two apinions alonut that in the position in which we stamol. If the hom. gentleman proposes to found a charge on those papers. let him do, so. hut let us not waste time in lliselnsing them on this motion. If he stys, we ahandon the petition, iet him do ser. Hon. gentlemen may smile, hut let us eret at sense athl propriety and at some menes in the riscassion of these matters. I mierstami the motion now is not t., sem these newspaper articlesor anything ermetered with them to a committec. but thit this petition is unler discussion amd. in the worrls of the hom. erentleman himself, we petition makes maceasation and no charge.

Mr. MCIOCK. I heg the hom. gentleman's parlon. I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. TISIDLE. He said it contans grave matter which shoul: he consilered, but it contained no charge against the juelge.

Mr. MULOCK. I wid the petition makes grave charges against the julge.

Mr. TISDAI.F. Then lie repeats the hath charges against the julge and he sail, in sulnstance, that it was not a matter of accusation aratinst the julye, hat simply somethine to put himon a preliminary enpuiry. I proposenow todiscuss thematter lefore the House. I must confess that I am disappointed with my hom. friend. if he means that he has a charge to bring, and that these newspaper articles are sufticient tole dealt with to the Honse. We are not dealing with that part of the question now. Let some person who is responsible, such as the hom. gentleman himself, make the charge and it will te lealt with. I wish to make one correction of a statement of the hon. gentleman before taking up the time I intend to take in connection with the matter lreiore the House. The hon. gentleman was cither mot fully anlvised of Julge Ellionts decision on the enth Dovemiser, or he nisinformed the Honse in regarl to it. I wish in correct him on that peint, or let him correct me. What Julge Ellintt decisled was not only what the hon. genteman said, lut a great deal nore. The hon. Lentleman says that, when the matter first came lefore him. the judge decided that the revisingefficer was within the law, and that was all he Stich.

Mr. MULOCK. I did not say that.

Mr. TISDALE. What Judge Elliott decided comprised two things. The tirst was in reference to the power of the revising oficer to make an amendment, and, that being a matter of procedure, he decided that he had no jurisdiction; but he decidell then and there that the notice was lad, and the hon. gentleman said that Judge Elliott's seconil julgment went back and contradicted his first.

Mr. MULOCK. No it did.

Mr. Tlinalf. The hon. member for West Lambon (Mr. Lister) real the statement in the first place that the judge said he had no juristiction in regerd to that matter.

Mr. MCLOCK. If you will permit me for a moment. I will siy that on the enth November. 1sin. Jadere Filiont hed that he conll not interfere with an amemhent made be the revisint officer. Which amendment amd adjournment of the court conseguent upm it led this revising officer to try all tiest cases. aml the result was that the revising otficer lisallowed the cotes in question. On the ! th Deceminer, the julge decided that the rerising officer was wrong in doing that, ambl restored these votes io the verters list.

Mr. Thslallf. At the same time. on the enth Sorember. the judye decided that the motice was barl. As to procedure. he coult not decile. hat when it came before him ly way of appeal, he held that the vortes were had. and he dial the same thing the second time the patestion came before hime. That is one point I want to emphasize and the onily print. Incanse witat the hon. gentlenan atsented was urt the fact. that Julye Filhott decibled agrimst himself. But it is a fact that the notice of appeal was deridea! tole latel on the tinst excasion, anl on the secomb oncasion he deciled the same way. Sow. I popper tu lonk a litale "atsinde of the legal propesition. and try to fimont the cire umstances surrombling this whole matter. A great deal has leen saind ontside of this House and somerhing insile of this House. alorut a conspiatay $\mathrm{F}_{\mathrm{k}} \mathrm{tween}$. Whige Elbort: ani Mr. Carling to ileprive Lonlon of its proper representative at the last elecetion. Now. a more uncalled for, a more unjust, and a mere impulent perversion of facts, never was mate in this country nor in any other. I say the fact is just the contrary: I agree with them that there was a conispiracy to defrand Lomion of its proper reptesentation. at conspiraty conceived in inionity and brought forth in sin. conceiverl hy the political heelers aml wite-pullers of Mr. Hyman amd his machine in the city of Lomion to deprive that city of its proper representation. and hronght forth by in organized system of frami, of force. of persomation and corription when the election cane on. that has sthiom heen equalled in an election in this of ang other ermaty and followed by a deliberate attempt to force a judge. astainst whom up to that fine not a word had leen whispered. to give a julgment that wonll suit them or destroy his character. Sou. Mr. speaker, these are strong words, but I think 1 will tee alle to justify them and to show that they are even weaker than the facts warrant. Nos, in arriving at conclasions, the motives of men and the surroumfing circumstances often throw a stronger light than the ats themselves. Let us look at the political history of the city of London. (io hack to lsio. What has been its political history: From that time down to the present it has always been largely Conservative. and on a fair rote still is largely Conservative: and more than that, from that time down to the present, except during two sessions of Parliament: a Conservative member has always been returned, and with tao exceptions, that constituency has returned the hon. Mr. Carling daring $3 \overline{5}$ jears.

Look at the reconl of the two parties during that time. Never during all that time has even a charge been mate in court against Mr. Carling or the Conservative party that they ever attemptel to carry the election liy corrupt pactices, their opponents never dare! to, file a protest. Nor, what is the recorn of the Reform party, and how came they to hold the seat two sessions? In list a gentleman named lohn Walker carried the city of Inhilon. He sat one sesion. There was a protest, amd what happened then? I will read the julgnent of the court, after the trial. to show what happenerl:
*That thruaghut the coniest the agente of the respundent. acting on hit behaltin promoting his election. were impresed with the stroug conriction that in order io ensure the respondent: election it wonli be necessary io expend a very considerable sum of money bribing some roters to rote for resmendent, athi in bribiux others not to rote for his opponent: and that the respondent himself was impresed with the sume contiction. (2) That infine need hy the preseure ethis consiction. lozens of these agents of the respomlents did cominit acts of bribery umen a rery exzensire seale. with the koowledge and consent of the respondeat. for the purpose of promoting his election although the reipendent may have been amp very probably wis. kept in ignorance of each single particular insiance of such acts of hritery. That corraption shonid have prerailed and that brihery couhl have been committed upon the extensive scale, and in the ofen manur whieh the evidence diedoese throughat the whoiecomest, and that the mroneys with which this leribery anl curruption were consummatedshonhlitare been alnest all dishured at the resmondent sown headquarters. and that he should have been contanty in am out of these healquarters and canvasing: as be sars throughout the city. night and day, and ber ignorant that aets of bribery in his imere:-acts from which be alone eonhd ierise any benetit - were ixeing constandy committed by his agents, is tomy mind utterly incredible. 1 do noi seck fur any reporied case to support the prineiple upon which I proced. It re.pnires only the honest application of the common sense of a conscientious iuror. te. lead me to a conchasion upon the matter snbmitted to me in this case. i can readils beliere it musible for the responlent to have been immersedin the lake and to be taken wut dry, as that the acts of b, ribery which the eridence diseloee to hare heen commitied on his behalf. almost under his eves, in hif daily path. with means of corruption proceeding from his own headghar ters, and from the hamle of his entifential arents there, could hare been committed viherrise than with his knew ledge aml equseut.
He gres on then to disqualify Mr. Wither prersonally, and in another clause of the juldment. he finds no less than 19 parties that he names eviley of cormpe practices. -

- And further, that corrup: practices have extensirely prevailed at the said election.
Now, it took the Lileral party Ia years to reconer from that lhow, and in lsol Mr. Hyman was electen. He wit one session. amb a propest was entered. What happened then: The hone member for Fast Lambon (Mr. Moncrieti) the other day gave us some idea of what happened then: he gave us some of the reasons why Mr. Hyman was unseated. Take the history of the three meatings that he mentioned. We tind that at one meeting called they consumed half a harrel of heer and ab lot of crackers ani cheese. At another meeting, where Mr. Hyman was present, a large uncovered basket was brought into the meeting containing several dozen bottles of ale. At another mectins, known as the coloured meeting, upon the very platform from which Mr. Hyman adilressed the electors, there was a whole barrel of heer. Mureover at that very meeting a subscription list was passed around anl gentlemen signed their names but put down noamounts, and Mr. Hyman made the remark. "I cannot have anything to do with that now, but I may afterwards." What does that mean? That was a hint for the boys: "Put your names down, you won't be called upon for any amounts, but I will take care of it afterwards." At that celebraterl meeting, according to the witness, the order of proceedings was : the chair was taken at 10 ; at 11 there were pigs' feet passed around ; at 11.30, Mr. Hyman, and it 12 the beer was tapped. They had a band, speeches with music, pigs' feet and beer at intervals, "a feast of rearon and a flow of soul" for this pure candidate who is now whining because he was defeated, and who is now endeavoturing to disgrace a judge.

Mr. LISTER. Was Judge Elliott there?
Mr. TISDALE. Judge Flliott was not there, Judge Elliott does not attend this sort of thing. These meetings are reserved for those who take pleasure in that sort of thing, and who attempt to destroy a man's character, if they camot reach their end in any other way.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I presume jealousy arose becanse the beer was not Carling's?
Mr. TISDALE. Probably you think so. You are a very good judge of some things, Doctor. I dare say your heart would have swelled with joy if you had been there.

An hon. MEMBER. With beer.

Mr. TISDALE. Then there was another lit of evidence given. There was a collector of election funds engaged and he collected $$ 2,(000$. That is a very small sum compared with what must have been expended. Now, does any sensible man think that a candidate wants $$ 2,000$ to pay the legitimate expenses of an election campaign "

Mr. DAVIES (P. E. I.) Yes.
Mr. TISIDALE. At all events we would think it a great deal up in the Province of Ontario. Down by the sea you have different methorls.

An hon. MEMBER. Carling's election cost $$ 10,06 \%$.

Mr. TISDALE. Some gentlemen know a great deal about expenses, I have no doubt. Over in Welland there is another place where large sums were said to have been expencled.

Mr. LIST'ER. What about the railroad ?
Mr. TISDALE. Wheu the hon. gentleman was speaking the other clay 1 allowed him to purste his remarks without any undue interruption.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You did not gerrymander him in his speech.

Mr. TISDALE. If some of you would gerrymander the parts of your body that you talk with, I might get on a little faster.

Mr. SPEAKER. Hon. gentlemen will please not interrupt, and the hon. gentleman will please address the Chair.

Mr. TISDALE. Now, there was another significant thing according to this evidence, in comnection with this gentleman who collected the funds, and that was that he kept no account. He had no memory, he could not remember what he did with any of the money. Further than that, when he found there was a protest, he destroyed all the books and papers so that if the case ever came into court, there would be no papers to expose him. What was the result of that trial? Many other diswas the result of closures were made, and the result was that Mr. Hyman finally consentel to accept unseating on the eridence, to agree not to appeal, and to pay the costs. This was accepted on the other side rather than go on with personal disurualification and allow him to appeal and hold the seat much longer. I have no doubt from the disclosures made that Mr. Hyman would have gone the way of John Walker even then, if this compromise had not been arrived at. This brings us to 1892 , and it is in regard to thiselection thatall the row has been kicked up. To my mind it hasbeen entirely brought about to cover the disgraceful tactics resorted to by Mr. Hyman and his committee and to draw public atiention away from them, and those gentlemen have vented their disappointment by attacking the judge and seeking to compel him either to give a judgment to suit them or else they would try and ruin his character. I would say nothing about what happened at this election if Mr. Hyman had acter, as the Conservatives did in London both times they were defeated, filed a petition and brought forward disclosures, if there were any, and subject himself to the cross-fire of a petition. But, I will mention some matters that were of public notoriety in London, in order to give hon. members in this House, who do not know London, and did not follow the papers in that connection, some information. The tirst thing they did was to openly declare that Mr. Hyman was to be electerl at all hazarils, no matter what means had to be resorter to or what it might cost. This alarmed our party, I do not deny. What next happened? They established an organized hetting ring, that wagered tens of thousands of dollars on the result of the election, and out of this hetting fund they expended large sums in corrupting and delauching the electors. They circulated a bogus circular anong the employes of one of the largest corporations in Lomion, employing $5(4)$ or 600 voters, and by that means they tried to make the employés of that corporation beliere that the head otficiels of it were in farour of Mr. Hyman, though in the offices and shops of the corporation a circular was issued by the general manager stating that in this election they were to vote as they pleased and the management was entirely neutral. In the third place they organized a body of ruttians -I use the word advisedly-to traverse the streets of London and attack and maltreat in the nighttime different supporters of Mr. Carling. They went so far as to attack Mr. Meredith, the leader of the Opposition in the Ontario Legislature, who went to a house, and if he had not been well known as a man of great physical capacity he would have been injured. These are facts which the citizens of London well know. On polling day scores of voters were hired to leave Lonton for the lay withont voting. Down the river, about four miles, they hired a summer hotel, which happened to be racant, and a large number of men were made drunk and taken down there and kept drunk until after the poll had closet. An army of personators invader the city. These are facts which are notorious in London; they are some of the means resorted to, comnected with the conspiracy which I charge was attempted to wrest London from Mr. Carling and the Conservative party. When they found their machinations fail and their schemes were in vain, then, in their anger, what did they do? Did they do what the Conservative party had done at previous elections when they were defeated? Did they file a petition and go to the courts? It is ridiculous to talk about Conservatives entering into a conspiracy to wrest that strongholl of the Conservatives from the Reform party, to which it never beionged. The records of the courts show that it never belonged to them, they show that fact in the case of John Walker, and if the personal charges had been pushed against Mr. Hyman it would have shown the same result. I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite on that point, because they had the chance to protest the election and they dare not protest it ; and when I come to the legal part of my argument I will have some remarks to offer on this subject, because it will have a strong hearing on the case. No, they lost their money, they lost their honour, and they lost the eiection, and something must be done. They dare not go into the courts. They knew their candidate coulh not stanl the light of an investigation and a cross-petition. What did they do? They said: "We will compel the Judge of the County Court, who had not given julgment in regard to the disputed votes, either to give judgment in our farour or we will try to ruin and disgrace him." Am I justified in making this statement? I think I am by what followed. What dill follow? Who was the judge they harl ventured to attack? He is a venerable man of 70 years of age, who during a yuarter of a century has presided over the hundred thousand people who live in London and the county, who is respected and admired personally ly every person who knows him, who is well known in the city, and the country round, as well as in the province, as an honest, straiglitforward, kindly cluristian gentleman in private life. He is reverel ond respected for his uprightness, impartiality and wisdom us a judge, and loved for his kindness of heart. This old man, against whom not a breath of suspicion hard ever even been whispered either as to his juldicinl or private life, which the hon. member for Lamb). ton (Mr. Lister) will no cloubt admit, is the man and the juilge whom they resolvel to attack. I say shame upon the cause and shame upon the men who resort to such an expeliency when their political passions are excited. I an not following up the legal features of the case as closely as some hon. members who have preceled me have done, and some who may perhaps follow will do, but I am dwelling more particularly on the position of the julge. What were the circumstances? Let us give them fairly, in order to see where we stand. The House well knows that London has a revising ofticer, who is not the county judge, and he proceeded with the work of revision. Then there is an appeal, under certain circumstances, from the revising officer to the county juige. We know that it camnot be gainsaild that on the 20 th November, this appeal came to him; it was the first time in which the untice was in dispute, and he decided that the notice was bad. It is important that there should be no question about that fact. I dill not suppose any doubter it.

Mr. MILLS (Bothwell). He expressed an opinion, but at the same time he said he had not jurisdiction.
Mr. TISDALE. No. Now here is Mr. Lister's own statement of it, that is the judgment of Judge Elliott on the 20th November :
" I am of ovinion that under the 33rd section my power is confined to the action of the revising officer in dealing with the list ; that is to sisy, ns to proper admission of names or the exclusion of them being as to something which is or should be in the list or which ought not to be in it. It is not said that there is an appaal to the county judge as to the proceedings of the revising ofticer, which would be $n$ comprehensive term, such as is used in section 26. I consider that I have no authority to interfere with the action of the revising officer in anendiog or adjourning the court to a future time. Whatever may bet the importance of my ruling as to the question whether the notice in question is unsufficient or invalid and null and void, as I au pressed to decide $I$ do so, and rule as $I$ have said, that it is invalid under the Act and so far the appeal is sustained, but in respect to my authority to interfere with the revising officer's power to order amendment or to adjourn the court, I do not entertain the appeal."
Now that is plain. He entertained the appeal so far as the notice of appeal was concerned and held it bal, and what happened subsequently showell that he was quite consistent. When the revising otficer went on afterwards and struck off some of the names because of his allowing them to be amender, then a sulbsernuent appeal was taken to the judge to restore them under his ruling that the notice was invalid, he the judge ordered them to be restored to the list as he had a perfect right to do. Therefore both of his julgments so far as that part of the case is concerned were consistent with each other. At the time of the election Julge Ellintt had held that the notice was not valid, and by the proceerlings against the revising ofticer, the Queen's Bench had held that the notice was valid. The Court of Appeal declined to give a judgment, but upou pressure as has been stated, three of the juiges expressen an opinion, the other judges declining to express any opinion that the notices were valid. An appeal was taken to the Supreme Court from the Court of Appeal, so that as far as that culuestion goes, there has been no final judg. ment yet. What else happened? The Court of Chancery, a court of equal jurisuliction with the Court of Queen's Bench which the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) fuotell, decilled that in such cases no Superior Court hal any jurisdiction to interfere with the juilge at all. That was the position at the time of the election. Let me summarize it. The Court of Queen's Bench had given a julgment. It was appealed to the Court of Appeal which gave no judgment, but ouly expressell an opinion, and their decision stood appealed to the supreme Court, and the Court of Chancery had decided in another case, but on the same principle, contrary to what the Court of Queen's Bench decided, and that was not appealed from. That was the way it stood at the time of Mr. Carling's election which is now in dispute. Then what happened, and who cansel it to happen, and that is an important point in my opinion. What happened was caused by the Hymun party. It was not the voluntary action of Judge Elliott that he gave any decision after the further appeal had leen made to him, but it was the Hyman party that insisterl on his going on and deciding it. Let me show the hardship of that, and let me put that as a strong point justifying the line I am taking, and unanswerably justifying it in my opinion nuder these circumstances. Hal the Hyman party left Judge Elliott alone, he would have pronounced no julgment. It is claimed that a lot of these rotes should bave been left off the list, and were clepending on the validity of the notice of appeal. There was not ouly a question as to whether the notice of appeal was valid or not, but there was the question of the jurisdiction of the higher court. Let me say here, and no lawyer can gainsay it, that if there is no jurisdiction, I do not care if ten Superior Courts gave judgments or opinions, it relieves no judge from the responsibility on his oath of giving his own judgnent. It is a principle which not even a third-rate lawyer dare gainsay, that if a court prouounced judgment without jurisdiction it is totally void and is not quotable as an authority in another court. There was, therefore, two questions involved, the question of jurisdiction and the valility of the notice of appeal. It was Mr. Hyman's friends who insisted upon.Judge Elliott giving judgment. Why did they not wait to file their protest, and then all questions of law and fact could have been raised and if advisable in the opinion of either party carried to the Supreme Court, and Judge Elliott never would have been put into the position they forced him? That is in my opinion a strong point. They forced him into this position, and what did they do before he gave julginent? Their party newspapers threatened him about his judgment, and an hon. member of this House so far forgot himself, the day before it was rendered, that he got up here and spoke of what would happen with regard to the judgiment, and had to be called to orderby theSpeaker and made to with. lraw. This shows a strong organized feeling which is most unjust and unfair to the judge in regard to this matter. Mr. Hyman's friends said that he must go on and give his decision, and that was the way they treated him for complying with that request. Let me read from what happened in the court to show how strong was the insistence upon Judge Elliott giving his judgment. Mr. Aylesworth, a counsel from Toronto, went up to London on behalf of Mr. Hyman, and he said:
"We ask that judgment may be given now on the appeals that were hefore Your Honour in December last. As to what the position of matters was in December I understand that on the appeals which are now in questionsome $2 \div 9$ in number-coming before Your Honour, and it appearing that the only point in guestion was the sufficiency of the notices of objections to the votes that had been given by Mr. Lilley, it was pointed out to Your Honour that an appeal was pending before the Court of Appeal at Toronto, and it was thought by Your Honour that it would be well to await the decision of the Court of Appeal before any judgment was pronounced. It was, therefore, postponed. That decision has now been had, and it is submitted on behalf of Mr. Lilley that this fact and the facts shown in Mr. Magee's affidavit as a reason why there should not be any further waiting for the decision of any other court. I need not point out that the judgment of the Court of Appeal, of the High Court, or the Supreme Court, are judgments that are useful only in interpreting the law in the opinion of the learned judges on any particular point upon the decision of Your Honour. But as a matter of respect that one court would pay to another court Your Honour would be governed very much by these expressions of opinion. We are justified, we think, in asking you not to delay longer the disposing of this question which has now become of so much importance. We urge upon your consideration the vital consequence to the city and people of the whole country that this case should be settled. All the parties are interested in having it settled, and the man who is the choice of the majority of the duly qualified electors shall be returned, and shall hold the seat. So much depends on Your Honour's decision iu this case that we've taken this somewhat unusual course, and with Your Honour's permission presented our reasons to you. The question of the validity of the notices hasalready been passed on-not that I argue it as binding on Your Honour-but I draw your attention to that."
Mr. Hellmuth, representing the other side of the question, spoke as follows:-
"I contended upon that application, and I opposed any settlement of what is really the first question to be decided in these appeals. That is, as to the sufficiency of the notice, until after the Supreme Court, to whom an appeal had been taken, was decided.

"I showed Your Honour the notice of appeal that had been served upon my learned friend, and 1 had an affidavit of the service of that notice, rdmission having been refused. But my learned friend did not, at the time, pretend to say that he had not been served with that notice of appeal to the Supreme Court
" Your Honour then asked me: Is it your bona fide intention to prosecute an appeal to the Supreme Court? And to that I answered, yes. And I have yet to learn that when I make an assertion in my capacity as counsel for appellants that $I$, having a bona fide intention to appeal to another court, that assertion is to be doubted or controverted in any way. I still make that assertion, and I decline absolutely to answer the affidavit which my learned friend, Mr Aylesworth, must know, would form no ground whatever for the dismissal of the appeal to the Supreme Court, and it is only on such ground that he could come to Your Honour ind practically ask that you should cut off this appeal to the Supreme Court.
"Now there is a statement that they arevery anxious for a decision in the Supreme Court. Now, I will undertake, if my learned friend will give me assistance, to expedite this appeal to the Supreme Court, so that it shall be heard at the next sitting. And it could not, under any possibility under the rules of the Supreme Court, be heard before the next sittings in May."
That was the insistence of these gentlemen that the judge should go on and give his judgment. Well, what did he do and what were the circumstances? Mr. Aylesworth, you will notice, did not pretend to argue that the opinions of these courts were binding on the julge. The hon. member for West Lambton also, in his argument the other day, said :
"One would have thought, under the circumstances, that the learned judge of the County Court would have had no hesitation in following the dicta of the Court of Appeal and the High Court of Justice. Although I do not contend that he was bound to do so; because I recognize that the judgment of the County Court would be, in a proper matter of appeal, a final judgment."
Now, neither the counsel for Mr. Hyman nor the hon. gentlenan in charge of the motion contend that the opinion of that court is bincling upon him ; and I reassert, and I am satisfied that no lawyer will disagree with this, that if there was no jurisdiction in the Superior Courts, their judgment ;unounted to nothing. Now, a julge is supposed to be a great lawyer ; but some men at the bar are in my opinion greater lawyers than some of our judges; but from how many of them would you accept opinions, and expect a judge to pay attention to them? He would laugh at them. Further, there was no decision given by either the Court of Queen's Bench or the Court of Appeal that amounterl to a decision. Suppose the question had been allowed to go on to the Supreme Court. Hon. gentlemen may laugh, but there are too many good lawyers among them to disagree with this proposition ; and suppose the Supreme Court had said that the notice was gool. Would hon. gentlemen claim that the Supreme Court was wrong? Suppose they said the notice was bad, would the hon. gentlemen claim that this judge was bad in his law? We know that it is a rule that until the court finally decides, if a judge has a strong opinion, he should follow it. Hon. gentlemen forget also that the English courts had decided on all fours with Judge Elliott in several cases, that the notices of appeal were insufficient. Hon. gentlemen may shake their heads, but they certainly do not like the decision, and they have not attempted to answer and cannot answer that. The only charge against Juclge Elliott, so far as his legal conduct is concerned, is not that he recided wrongfully or even contrary to law, but that he would not follow the opinions, not the completed decisions, of certain courts, though another court of egual jurisdiction had decided the other way; and the English decision, in the opinion of our Supreme Court judges, rank higher than their own decisions, although they do not always follow them. You might as well say that where there is an English decision and our courts, though not bound by them, do not follow them they onght to be impeachel, as to say that Julge Elliott ought to be impeached on that branch of the case. Now, what dirl the judge do, and what was his position? For these are pertinent matters for the laymen of the House who do not understand the law. Let us look at this matter in a manly, fair minded, non-partisan spirit, with a sense of the high duty imposed upon us of protecting the jurges of the land, while they act honestly and faicly and in accordance with their oath. It is of the greatest possible importance to this comntry that a judge who acts fairly in a proper case should have the protection of Parliament. What was his position? Challenged by the partisan press of London before he gave judgment and by the language of the hon. nember of this House to whom I have alluded to dare to pronounce julgment in the same way as he had done before; and confronted with the conflicting decisions of our Superior Courts and by the decisions of the English courts, what did he do? He did what an honest man and an upright judge would do. They would not allow the case to go on to the Supreme Court ; and remember, at this time the time for the protest was not up. They insisted on having judgment there and then ; and with this uncompleted appeal, which could have gone to the Supreme Court where the whole guestion could have been decider by our highest tribunal, Judge Elliott said: I have to act on my own responsibility, here are these conflicting decisions; I have sworn to give judgment honestly according to my conscience; the responsibility is thrown upon me; I will hear your arguments and decide ; and by a well-reasoned judgment he decided in consonance with his previous decision. I say all honour to the man who in the face of threats, in the face of these conflicting recisions, did is he did, gave a well-reasoned judgnient in the case. Another significant matter in counection with this case has not been lrought out, a matter showing whether there has been anything like fair-play towards Mr. Carling or his friends in reference to the conduct of this judge. l)uring the time they were pressing the judge to give judgment, Mr. Hellmuth, who was acting for Mr. Carling, came forward with a proposition to Mr. Aylesworth. What was the proposition? Mr. Hyman claimed that he ought to have 22 majority if all the disputed votes were struck off. Do not forget this fact, which has not been fully under-stond-let me impress it upon the hon. members of this Honse-that of the 125 or 126 of these people whose disputed votes were recorded, nearly all of them had never been heard upon the merits whether they were entitled to vote or not. They had declined to appear before the revising officer, because their counsel hadadvised them that they had mo occasion to appear on the notice they received. Mr. Hellmuth came forward and sai 1 : 40 or 50 of these men reside in or about London, but have never been heard; I propose, if Your Honour will hear them, and if Mr. Aylesworth will consent, to produce them immediately. I will say nothing but this. If you will abandon the technicalities, if you will not say that not having appeared and therefore you have lost the right to be heard, I will guarantee to bring these here; and out of those 50 we will establish more than 22 votes. And what was the answer of the counsel of the Hyman party? It was: "No," he wanted the technicality of the law applied against us, but he did not want it applied when it was in our favour; and he declined the offer which would have settled the matter on its merits. That brings me down to the matter of the petition before the House. What is the first charge? There are three charges, and any hon. gentleman who is a lawyer, at all events, and the hon. gentleman who last addressed the House is one, know very well what is meant by a charge. He was very careful not to define anything himself, which might be considered a charge sufficient to put any one on his trial. The first clause substantially is this, that Judge Elliott, under the circumstances, with the conflicting decisions of the different courts upon the subject, ventured toexpress an opinion that did not agree with all these courts. The petitioners do nut say his decision was wrong, they do not say in their petition, in any shape or manner, that he decided contrary to law, even the hon. member for North York did not pretend to say it was wrong. The law is in a mixed condition, and the question cannot be finally decided until it goes to the Supreme Court where they might have let it gone if they had seen fit. He simply gave his decision contrary to some of the other judges of the Superior Court. The very people who argued the point before this judge did not, for one moment, contend that it was binding upon them. Now this is no charge at all. No one knows better than the hon. member for West Lambton and the hon member for North York that they must charge the decision was wilfully corrupt and wrong to make it a charge at all. How would it be in this or any country, if a judge is to be held up to contumely by the press and Parliament, simply because he might make a mistake in the law? How would it be if the high privileges of Parliament were to be invoked in such a case? No judge would dare administer the law. What are the two other charges :
"The said William Elliott, during the said election and while the said appeals were pending betore him, contributed editorially and also under an assumed name to the London Free Pregs nemspaper, articles of a violent and partisan character bearing upon the said revision of the voters' list and political questions of the day and particularly upon the said election for the said electoral district and in support of the candidature of the said Carling and against the said Hyman.
${ }^{\text {and }}$ After the said election and before deciding snid appeals, the said William Elliott, in strong and violent language, denounced the said Hyman and his supporters language, denounced the said Hyman and his supporters and stated to several electors of the satid city, that the said Carling would certainly get the seat in the House of Commons for the said electoral district."
Now those gentlemen know well that those are not charges. They know that no county magistrate would commit the meanest citizen in this country for trial unless they produced, in a case where a written paper was in question, the paper before him containing the article or proved it was lost or destroyerl, and in that case proved its contents by other evidence. That is a clear rule of law. No fair-minded lawyer who knows anything about law or practice can gainsay it. Secondly, where it is spoken words which are in question, they must give the words or the substance of them, the time, place and circumstances under which they were spoken anc the name of the person who attered them, so that the acensed may have fair chance to answer or else the julge will not put hins on trial. For that reason, the petition does not, in sulstime. anmunt iony charge that a man should plead to or answer. I was a liztle surprised to hear the way the hom. member for lork spoke of the respectable citizens of Lomblon who signed this petition. How many do you think sighed it? Forty-five persoms out of the one humbred thomsand over whom Julge Elliott hats presidel for twenty-five years in the comity and in the city of Lomdon the district his court covers. And who are these men who signel the petition " sixteen of them are irresponsible clerks, whose employers would nut sign. as mentioned ly the hon. memher for Eatst Lambion. Seventem are merchants ant small dealers, strong partisans, and hon. gentiemen from Ontario, will understand how strong partisans they are. hy the explanation that every one of them furnishes the London Asylun with supplies. Hon members for Ontario know what that means, hut I will explain it to other hon. gentlemen. Culer the Reform Government in Ontario, we have the same individuals, year after year, supplying our different public institutions, which are unler the control of our Loual House, with humbreds of thonsands of donlars worth of supplies: and in mo case are these contracts pat up to public tender despite the frequent protests of the Opposition in the Lacal House. And so it comes there serenteen faromred gentlemen, thus encemaged liy public contracts, had no hesitation in signing this petition. Who else signed it? Four liquor dealers. I do not blame these poom fellows for they have mother resource In Ontario we have not the secret hallot. No, they will not give, us, compt Tories, the secret ballot. A mark is put on every hallot and although these ballots are seated up, when the election is over, they are in the control of the people in power. and they either open them afterwarts or else they tell fatisthoons in the matter, hecallse they have toh people in my riding that they knew how they woted. It is in their power to know how, and they cither exercise that pwer or atany rate threaten people with its exercise. What has happened: There was a time when we used to have some municipal control. The glory of Ontario was her municipal institutions, and the ohd Refortacrs who helped to get them for us deserved as much credit as, and perhaps a little more, than the Conservatives, but the people now pu power in Ontario have restricted those mumicipal rights. The municipal comecils ased to decide who should have liguor licenses, but now this pure Government which runs Ontario took that power away into their own hands, and the greater part of the money pail for them also which used to go to the monicipalities. They appoint license commissioners ami an inspector, the latter generally heing a political heeler for the riding, and who goes aromal earning the salary the pullic pay him by looking after the elections and looking after the lists of voters, and as a result, every hotel keepei almost is now a Grit. There used to be a large majority of them Conservatives in Ontario, but to day you camot find one Conservative in ten. Hon. gentlemen opposite may laugh, but what I tell them is true, and I can prove it. The hotel keeper has either to rote straight under the coercion of this ballot, which is not secrct, or he cannot get a license. Four of them have signed the petition. Who else? Two license commissioners, aml last, but not least, the three witnesses my hon. friend referred to. Who are these three witnesses. One is the man who collected so , (MA) for election expenses, who kept no actounts, destroyed the looks, and hat me memory. The others are conreners of meetings of electors to be aldressed hy Mr. Hyman, at which speeches, cigars, beer and music were furnished at intervals. That is the class of men who signel this petition. Mr. Hyman had ton much sense of self-respect himself to sign it. Mr. (iiblons, the great lawyer in London, of whom the hon. member for North look spoke dare not sign it. There is not a lawyer, a doetor, a clergyman or a professional man, or any citizen ever known or heard of ten miles from the city of Lombon, who could be got to sign it. More than that, there is not an afthidavit commected with it. There is no athimation of any person, and it contains mothing for which any comenty magistrate would send up the meanest ditizen for trial. What is the object? We all know that there are men, beings in the form of men, who are so foul that they will si, arome telling scamblals about innoceat women. So matter how inmocent a woman may he when this necurs. when these reptiles once whisper their tales abont her, tee she ever so immocent, she cannot recover from the insinmations male against her: We an know the system of backmail is relaced to a science in some of the latece cities of the continent, and every lay we hear of innocent and most estimable, moral and christian men who, rather than face the pullic scambal amb the talk which wouh result, become the prey of these vampires, and the more innocent they are and the more godly they are, the more they tremble at heing atcusel of vicious courses, and we sometimes even see themdriven to suicile when they are made the subjects of such charges though preffectly imocent. Sos it is when a judge is put on his trial. In one of the large citics of this continent since, the commencenent of this discussion, an eniment divine preached on this subject, and, with the permission of the House, I will give a few extracts from what he said:

[^89]Now, that is the olject : They wish to put this judge upon his trial here. They have not charged him, but still they wish to put him on his trial. I ask any fair-minded man to say if a judge, once put upon his trial, is not subject to disgrace and indignity, and those who come after him also. I say the indepentent members of this House shonld not allow themselves to be made the " lashonhara" or "evil tongue" of disappointed partisans. I think we should stand ip here and should not allow the high privileges of this: Parliament to be distorted to such partisan ends. At all events, we should say : You shall not put any judge of this land upon his trial unless sou make an acensation for such a matter aml in such a way as would put the meanest citizen of this lamd on inis trial. That is but simple justice and British fair-play, and I appeal to hon. memhers of this House to uphold that proposition and rote down this resolution.
Mr. FRASER. It is certainly an edifying sight to listen to the hom. gentleman's peroration where he talked about cursed reptiles and hackmailins, where he went into all the purlieus of scamdial and spoke of partisan scandal, while the musical tones of his vaice has not ceased to ring in the ears of hon. members when he tried to blacken the names of the 47 petitioners. He did not scorn to say that these men should not be listened to because 1 万 of them were clerks, a few were tailors, 4 were licensed dealers, and the rest were miserable mechanics.
Mr. TISDALE. The hom. gentleman is wrong. I said nothing about " miserable mechanics." I satid " werchants and small traders."

Mr. FPASER. I beg thehon. gentleman's pardon if he did not say "meihanics."
Mr. SPROCLE. He sidl "mechanics," but not " miserable mechanics."
Mr. FRASER. He tried to show how disreputable they were by showing that there were no lawyers or doctors among them. I have known clerks and merchants and tailors and liguor dealers ats respectahle as some lawyers and doctors and clergymen, and I will venture to say that there are anong these men those who would not do what Judge Elliott did. It was very easy to get up a sympathy against 47 men who are as respectable as the hon. gentleman or myself. The fact they are clerks or merchants supplying a certain asylum would not shat them out from their rights, or there are thonsunds of merchants who supply the Dominion Government who would be shat out. As to the liguor dealers, they must le in close atfinity with the present member for Lonclon (Mr. Carling) who is in that business himself. Then the hon. gentleman indulged in a tirade, as usnal, against the Mowat (iovernment. I am not here to defend the Mowat (iovernment and they need no defence. I observe that they seem to have been working into the heart of the strong Conservative con stituencies in Ontario, and the people of Toronto must have gone mad, according to the hon. gentleman or they would not support so bad a Government. The hon. gentleman, in trying to make a case, had wandered away from the point under discussion, which is, whether Judge Elliott has so misconducted himself that an investigation should be demanded into his conduct. It will not do for the hon. gentleman to get wrathy at the sins of others, and to call down the imprecations of Hearen upon their heads, and then say that these charges should not be listened to here. If these petitioners have given us a case worthy of attention, we should not refuse to hear them, and the hon. gentleman should be the last man to insinuate anything against the characters of these perple. Surely he is not going to show their want of character liy stating what their employment is. He is like a good many hon. gentlemen on that side of the House who believe that only the faroured few are entitled to he heard, but that these men should not lee listened to becanse they are poor clerks or tail,ses. The hon. gentleman would le a nice looking object in this House if he could not find a tailor. I sulmit that the chatacters of thene people should not be julged according to their employment. Now, he was good enongh, first, to speak upon the points of the law, then upon points of morals, and finally he wound up, by speaking on a guestion of divinity. Let us see what he has to say upon the points of law? Are we liere to discuss whether' London has been Conservative for so many years? Or does his argument mean that hecause it has been Conservative so long, it should never be anything else, or that the electors of London have no right to elect any one else but a Conservative? That seems to be the hon. gentleman's idea. But I think the young men of London have got something to say upon the question as to who shall represent that city. The hon. gentleman and his frients think the constitueney belongs to them, it is a hive. it is a preserve that has always lelonged to Mr. Carling, and he is founding an argunent upon that fact to show that London being Conserrative, it could not possibly have been won by the Liberals. What have we to do just now with this barrel of heer, this basket of ate, this coloured meeting, these pigs feet, this bogus circular, these rutfians who attacked Mr. Meredith: Did they affect the judgment of the court: Are they matters that ouglit to le taken into consideration in an enguiry as to whethe: that petition is sufficient for this Honse to accept as a basis upon which to order an enquiry: Does it make any difference whether the people of London feed upon the finest beef or upon pigss feet". Does it make any difference to us whether they drink ale. leeer, or wine. or anything else: The hon. gentleman likes to deal with questions of this kind, and he puts them into the scale in discussing the question as to whether the judge has done that which is right in his judicial capacity. Sir, we are here to look into the question as to whether the member who now sits for London, is here by the judgment of an unbiassed julge, who gave such a judgment as he ought to have given in that instance. I see the hon. member for South Norfolk has left his seat ; unfortunately for his argument, the judge and he does not agree. He says the judge was right in disregarding the judgment that was given by the higher court because it was not a court in which the case could be entertained. Now, the judge himself did not think that. Here is a very nice tinted little pamphlet that was sent, I suppose, to all the members, containing the full text of Judge Flliott's judginent. Iv will be noticed that Judge Elliott does not pretend to say that that court had no jurisdiction and that he disregarded it for that reason. Here is the reason the jndge gives :

[^90]ing io their expression of opinion. But it is evident from the language used by these learned judges, or at least by some of them. that they were rather reluctantly drawn into any expression of opinion on the subject, and one of them described any opinion expressed by the court to be simply an obiter dictum."
The judge says that the reason why he will not follow their judgment is that they were drawn into giving their julgment, and hence it must have been a hasty julgment that he did not like to follow because he had give the question more mature consideration. The hon. member sail he had a right to disregard the julgment because it was given by a court in a case where there was no jurishliction. The judge himself did not seem to think so. He says that his julgment is letter than that of the three judges of the Court of Appeal for this reason: that, tirst of all, they were drawn into giving the judgment, and next, one of the judges said any opinion expressed liy the court, was an oliter dirtmm. The two points the judge makes were these: If it was a judgment it was wrongly given, and one of the judges went so far as to say that the julgment of the other two judges was an obitar dicfom, and every lawyer knows very well that a juilge does not feel himself hound to follow oliter dictum. Now, that was the strange decision for the judge to give upon that one point. I need not enter into the case as far as the learned gentleman has done who preceded me. It certainly must be a new doctrine to this House that the opinions of such eminent judges as sat on this cuase ought not to be followed hy Judge Elliott. It would appear from the argument of Jurge Elliott that he had the English authority, and he was bound to follow it rather than the Canadian athority, and that the Canadian julges whogare a julgment had no English authority at all. I always thought that judges of the Court of Appeal in Ontario hal the English decisions at hand. We know that our judges in the Lower Provinces always consult English decisions; they not only know that such julgments exist, but they have fully read those judgenents in a particular case. More than that, it will be remembered that the rery men who were arguing the case before Judge Elliott went before this Court of Appeal. Did they not mention these cases that strengthened! Jurge Elliott in giving his decision, the English cases on which the hon. gentleman said the judge ought to have acted as being better law than the law of the Court of Appeal? Did they forget to show that it was necessary that this judge himself should in the first place find out those cases? Now, it is very laughable to find him strengthening his julgment hy giving a quotation from one of the judges. He quotes from Hartly $\because$. Halse, 22 Q. B. Div., where Colerilge, C.J., said:
" Where a statute directs that a particular form shall be used, and a form is used which omits some essential element in the statutory form, the use of the defective form invalidates the proceeding.'
That is one of the judgments upon which Judge Elliott based his decision. If there had been a form of notice in our statute, and that form had not been given but a different one had been given, I could understand how it would strengthen the judgment, but no such form prevails. But the learned judge comes into conflict with all these decisions that are given. Now, no man has a right in this place to impugn the motives of a judge. All I say is this : I subnit that a County Court judge who has read the decision given by the judges of the Court of Appeal, in the province in which he lives, and gives contrary judgment, does not act as I would expect a judge of the Supreme Court to act. But when it is taken into consideration that from his juigment there could be no appeal, eren if he did not accept the judgment of the Court of Appeal, it can be well understool, if he had partisan ideas. if he was kindly disposel towards the Minister, when his judgment could never be attacked except in this Parliament, how easy it was for him to give the juigment that he did. That is only one of the many things that have happened from this miserable Act, which is framed in the interests of men who may use it for their own purposes. Fow, when Judge Elliott gave his decision, did he have any idea of what he wanted done : I find in this pamphlet that he states that in November last an appeal was heard lefore him as to the validity of a notice under the Dominion Fianchise Act, and he says:

- I then expressed my opinion that this notice ras invalid for the reason that it did not conform with the requirements of the Dominion Franchise Act."
" Had this expression of opinion been carried into practical effect. the name of Allan and others simitarly situated would have been retained on the roters' list unaffected."
He means by that statement that if his expressed opinion in November hat been taken by those parties, those men would have lieen on the list, amd he would have been safe in giving this other judg. ment. Did it not look at the time he was giving the judement in November, when he gave that expression of opinion, that he was looking forward to the same thing happening again: I do not say he was, bat taking that expression of opinion in connection with the other umatter, it appears that he understool from the begiming what he was going to do. Does a judge do what he likes in retaining those names on the list and declaring they have a ritht to vote? I take it that the revising barrister had just as good an inlea of what rotes should heon the list, particularly a revising officer appointerl by the present Govermment, as any other man, and no evilence that could be given would lead him to do that which was against the interest of Mr. Carling and his party. This, to my mind, is a very important point, that the revising officer himself found that over 200 names were not entitled to vote because they did not possess the franchise. The hon. gentleman who last adilressed the House spoke of the fairness shown in the statement of Mr. Hellmuth that he would take a number of those votes and would show that they bad a right to be on the list: that is to say, he would go before Judge Elliott and would prove that, although they were left out by the revising officer, they were entitled to vote according to the decision of Judge Elliott. That was not a great stretch of generosity, for if the judge was so much of a partisan as to allow himself to do in his judicial capacity that which he ought not to do, it was easy to get those names placed on the list. It must not be forgotten in the discussion of this question that the conduct of Judge Elliott had the effect of returning the member to this House who now sits here, not as the representative of London but as the representative of Judge Elliott. If the position taken by the petitioners is correct, namely, that these names had no right to be on the list and that the revising barrister hal so decided, then the judgment of Judge Ellintt made these voters good which the revising barrister decided to be bad. Consegaently the member returned has no legal majority. It strikes me in this connection as strange that the hon. gentleman shoull sit here, that a man in regard to whom it was a question as to whether he had obtained a majority, shall not go again to the same electors. There is such a thing as a man throwing down the gauntlet and succeeding, and nothing in this world receives the approbation of homourable men, like the action of a man who, on being accused of unfairness, declares he is ready to again appeal to the same people, who returned him previously. Is it fair, on the other hand, that the candidate receiving a majority of the qualified rotes shoulh, owing to the conduct of Julge Ellintt, be deprived of his seat? The hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) treated very lightly the accusation that the judge wrote political articles, and it seemed to be the height of the ribliculous when he said that there should be an atfidavit proluced to show that this was true. Fancy a petition coming into this House with an attilavit of its truthfulness attached? How would such a petition be dealt with here? Whoever heard of pleadings in a court being sworn to before evidence was given. At certain steps this must le done and in certain kinds of action, but this is not the kind of subject in which it is called for. I can understand also, if these men are maworthy of credence, why we should not proceed: lout if 40 petitioners declare that Julge Elliott did write the articles for the newspapers, then I care not whether he gave a wrong judgnent knowingly or not, the fact that he wrote political articles unfitted him to be a judge. It is very well to talk about this old christian geitleman and about his great virtues, but if a man has no more respect for the bench, before whom the parties may come, who have their political views, before whom as he knew these very parties would come of whom he was writing, then during the heat of an election contest to write for a newspaper on one side is to unfit him to sit in the poorest court in the land. Is this fact whe or not? Is it worthy of being investigated or not? If enquired into, what would he done? It seems to me that is the whole point. I can very well understand how a legal argument can be made in regard to this judgment and an argument andacel to show that it should not be disturbed, but if behind the judgment there is a julge, who at that time was writing political articles, then he was untitted to give that judgment or any other. I do not believe there is another judge who would act in this manner, but if there should be such a one, the most wholesome action we could take with respect to Judge Elliott was to have an investigation in order that there may not he a repetition of such an occurrence. Have we come to this point, that judges can write political articles and Parliament should not enquire into the matter? I admit it is a grave matter for Parliament to investigate the conduct of any judge, and except for the fact that many men had made statements detailing the actions of the judge, I would have some difficulty in coming to the conclusion that Parliament should enquire into the matter. If these statements were true there should be no difficulty in making an investigation. I have never known any judge, with whom I have come in contact, so act. I know judges who were heated partisans in the arena of politics, I know men in Nova Scotia, on the bench to-day, who held high positions here, and whose prilitical leanings, in the different cases, have been, if anything, against the party with whom they were originally associated, lest it should be considered that, as they were Dartisans at one time, this fact would give them leanings in a certain direction. But this old christian gentleman, grey-haired in the service of Gool, as he was represented by the member for North Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale), after all these days was removed from the political turmoil of his years, presiding with judicial dignity over a hundred thousand people-what a large place that must be over which he presides-how that he so far forgot himself as to write political articles is a remarkatle circumstance. He was prepared to help his political friends. Is that true or is it not: Does the fact that 40 respectalle people say it is true, form a sufficient groum for parliamentary action: If not, then I can understand the position taken, but if it has to le verified by an attidavit I cannot understand it. If the fact that these people are clerks or merchants or tailors is to delar them from petitioning Parliament to enguire into the conduct of a judge or anybody else, then I say that this Parliament has come to he a farce. If the only groum that the hon gentleman urges as to their character is because of their associations, I do not believe that that is any reason against their petition being heard. The fact that a clerk has a yard stick in his hand and measure cotton or hroad cloth, or sells groceries or that a tailor either with his own needle or a new sewing machine makes a coat, does not delar them from petitioning Parliament. If that were the case it would be for Parliment to lay down a rule as to the character of the petitioners that will be heard; it would be for hom. gentlemen opposite to have an index expme!atoris of all these characters so that none of them can enter larliament to, petition, and it would be for those hou. gentlemen to have the effirontery to say that becanse men are clerks or tailors we shall pay no heed to them. I thought that any man's position in this country, so long as he was an honest man, entitled him to theear of Parliament. I have been vainly dreaming that in this country we were building up a nation where class distinction could not prevail, hut I see I am mistaken. The hon. member for Sonth Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) has dispelled the illusion, and he has discovered that the character of these people is such as not to entitle them to petition. Well, I do not believe that. If all that is contained in this charge is true, it is the duty of the Government to enquire into it and to ascertain the conduct of the juige previously with regard to political partisunship. If the Government do not enduire into this matter, we will soon have a new word coined in this country, and when a man ly force takes away his neighbour's goods and keeps them we shall say, not that he stole them, but that he "Elliottized" them. It is our duty to proceed with this enquiry, first, in order that we may bring down on these people the just retribution which should fall upon any men who attack a judge if they cannot prove what they said, and secondly, if the charges are true, to show a man who now occupies a place on the bench, that when he gives judgment he must remember that he ceases to be a partisan, and that the bench is only for men who can lay aside their feelings in such matters. Now, Mr. Speaker, that lreing the guestion I shall wote that this matter be emuired intr. and if we adopt that course we shall tirst of all do Judge Flliott justice, if it is found to be incorrect : and we will do him justice if it is found to be correct, becatise he himself will understami that it is better he should be brought to justice now than that he shonld be allowed to so on in the same course and do worse

Mr. McDONALD (Victoria). Mr. Speaker, I think that the hon. member for West Lamliton (Mr. Lister) aml the hon. member for Sorth York (Mr. Mulock) might le excused for the remarks they have made, because they had taken an active part in the election in prestion, and they were no coult greatly disappointed at the result. and want in some way to lay the hane of their defeat on Judge Ellioti on aceonnt of the decision which he has given. I thought that the hon. member for (:uysiorough (Mr. Fraser) coming as he dree from the sea. would be somewhat colder and would alvance ns some arguments upon this point in order that those who are willing to deal fairly in this matter would he enabled to rote intelligently on the guestion lefore the Honse. If there was anythiag wanted to show to the members of this House that this motion should not be entertainel, the address which we have listenel to from the member for (iuyshorough (Mr. Fraser) would have furnished it. The hom. gentleman of course told us that the olject of this petition was not to discuss the characters of the parties who signed it, nor of the great moral guestion which he ays has been brought forwart ly the nember for North Norfolk (Mr. Tisilale), but simply that the question was to see whether or not by the decision of this judge, a member was sitting in this House who had no right to sit here : that is, if the decision of Judge Elliott gave a certain number of votes to persons who had voted for Mr. Carling, then of course the matter must be pressed. I am sure that any persion listening to the hon. gentleman most have come to the conclusion that this is what he meant. Then the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Fraser) told us that the judges in Nova Scotia were so pure that they would not give a decision in favour of the Conservatives, but would rather lean towarls the Lilerals. I have not that opinion of the judges in Nova Scotia, nor do I believe that any person practising before the bar of that province ever thought that any of the judges in any manner whatever undertook to give a decision against his friends in order to win a reputation of being considered impartial.

Mr. FRASER. I wish to correct the hon. gentleman. What I sitid was that I knew them to be so particularly careful that if there was any leaning it was considered to be on the side of their own political friends. I did not saly anything in reference to their giving judgment.

Mr. McloNALD (Victoria). The hon. gentleman may qualify his statement now, and I am quite willing to accept that as what he meant to say. I am sure he would not wish to misrepresent the juiges in that way. Coming back to the question before the House, I really cannot understand how gentlemen opposite seem to mix up the facts in regard to it. I believe it was some time in November or October that Mr. Lilley, of London, had underMr. Fraser.
taken to give notices olbjecting to $\mathbf{5 0}$ or $\mathbf{f} \mathbf{6}(\mathrm{N})$ names on the voters lists. In sending out his notices the only oljection that he made to the parties on the list was simply the words " not qualifierl," and when they appeared before the revising larrister, oljection was taken to the form, and the revising harrister allowed him to ameml. I wish to draw attention to the amemdments which were male, and which were simply to state $\cdot$ no income within the statute," not "owner within the Act," or "not tenant within the Act." These were the amended notices which were sent on to these carions parties. The matter was then brought hefore Julge Elliott, and I think every one in the House will agree that it was brought up rather immaturely. There was no decision given as to whether the names should remain on the list or nre, and I helieve that in realing the statute every person must come to the conclusion that Judge Ellintthad no power to decide with regard to anything the revising ofticer had lone, either in reference to amending the notices or extending the day for hearing. Judge Flliott then so reciden, but he intimated strongly that he believed that the notices were incalid and were not capable of being amenleal. The judge clearly says this, and in so far as the derision went, it was in farour of those who appealed from the revising officer, but he believed that he had no power at that time to deal with the matter. The judge gave his decision and it was the same as he gave afterwards, and from which he did not recele in any way from begiming to end. These proceedings as the House is well aware came before the Court of Queen's Bench by a motion for a mandamusto conpel the revisingofficer toproceed. I believe that in the mean time the revising officer acting upon the suggestion or hint thrown out by the County Court judge, declined to proceed any further with these names or to pay any attention to theamending notices which he hadordered to be given himself. Now, I find that a mandamus wasapplied for. I have the Ontario report, and there was no written iecision. The judge simply sid that the notice was sufficient, and no appeal is given by the Act from the County Court julge. The Court of Queen's Bench decided in the stine way. But when we come to the decision that was given by Chief Justice Hagarty, I think we shall find that the revising harrister, the Cominty Court judge and the chief justice were not so very far apart; and I helieve that following the lecision of Chief Justice Hagarty and Mr. Justice Burton, a large number of those names that were struck off by the revising barrister would still have remained on the list, and the original notices and the amended notices would never have touched them. Chief Justice Hagarty, in his decision, says :
"We cannot obtain much assistance from English authority as to the requirements of a notice of obiection. The statutes differ much from ours in this respect."
Further on he says:
"The notice to him merely stated that it was objected to, his name being retained on the list of roters for the south-west division of the County of Lancaster. That was held by the court to be insufficient, as the column of the list on which the objection was grounded was not named, which specially referred to county voters un a new, franchise. The generil Act had also to be considered."
Then he goes on to say :
"OurAct does not draw this distinction, and I do not think we can hold these amended notices insufficient. They specially attack the voter's interest, that is his position as owner or tenant, and his right to that character as defined in the Franchise Act. Under such a notice he would not I conceive be liable to attack on a merely personal ground, as post office or customs official, &c., &c." Chief Justice Hagarty goes on to say that he does not think they would be allowed to go into any objection except as to the qualifications. Mr. Justice Burton says :
"As to the suggestion that the revising officer could under it enter apon the consideration of another and distinct ground of disqualificstion, my inclinstion is against it, althougb it is unnecessary to venture a final opinion: but, to call in aid again the old ssstem of pleading and the reasoning by analogy upon it, I think it would hare assumed the shape of a plea in confession and avoid-ance-thus: we admit yoii are apparently qualified as a landlord, but we set up that yoviare disqualified as an alien or as one of the parties disgualified under the Aot, and possibly without such an affirmative statement the objection would not be open."
Now, when hon. gentlemen charge Judge Elliott with having it in his mind to allow these voters to remain on the list with the object of giving the seat to Mr. Carling, I say that if he had that intention he could easily have carried it out and at the same time have appeared the fairest possible man. He had there the decisions of Chief Justice Hagarty and Mr. Chief Justice Burton, and some of the other judges I think went nearly as far, who said he could go on to consider the qualifications, but could not enguire into other things. He could not enquire whether a person was of age, whether he was a British subject, whether he had resided one year in the locality, whether his income was derived in the Dominion or outside, whether he was a farmer's son or an owner's son. Now, a list of the parties struck off is given here by the revising otficer. Take the first name on the list, Lewis Allan. Evidence was given to satisfy the recising officer that he did not reside in London. But umler the amended notices, according to the decision of the judges, he would not be permitted to enquire whether he resided in London or not. The next case was that of R. J. B. Moore, who lives in South London, according to the testimony of his brother. He could have enquired into that case, even under the amended notice. Of course, the judge decided that the revising officer could not have gone on and heard these cases, but limited the matters into which he could enquire. I think there were $\overline{75}$ names struck off this list, for the simple reason that the parties were not living at the time or had not a sufficient residence within the electoral district of London to qualify them to vote. There was nothing to show that they had not the necessary income or were not of age or British subjects. The simple fact was that they did not reside for the specified number of months previous to their applications in London. These are the objections which are not covered by the notice given; and so Judge Elliott, if he were plotting and scheming as parties on the other side say he was, conld have gone into these cases and with the most apparent fairness have decided that these $\overline{75}$ names should remain on the list, whereas the revising officer strnck them off; and he could have done that under the judgment delivered by the Court of Appeal. How can any person say that Judke Elliott, for the purpose of returning the Hon. Mr. Carling to this House as the member for London, would undertake without good reasons to give a decision contrary to those of the Court of Appeal, and the Court of Queen's Bench, when he could have decided quite as effectively and given a decision on other grounds and in accordance with the decision of the majority of the Court of Appeal? Now, in the petition the County Court judge is not attacked for doing anything wrong. It does not set forth that he has done anything wrong in regard to the revision of these lists. The solicitor who appeared on behalf of the parties objecting said that he was not bound by the decision of the Court of Appeal ; and even if he were bound, there is nothing to show from the evidence taken before the revising officer that more than twenty or thirty of those who voted in the election should have been struck off, and I understood that in other cases, in the case of twenty-three, on one side or on the other, the County Court judge had accepted evidence that was given before the revising officer. In this case he might have done the same thing, and have retained is of those who had voted for Mr. Carling on the list, and have come within the judgment delivered by the Court of Appeal. I say, then, that I think this shows a considerable amount of fairness on the part of Judge Elliott. It shows at least that in the judgment he gave he must have been convinced he was right, when he could have resortel to another matter if he had been so disposed. If he was anxious to have the hon. member for London returned, he could have come within the Act and within the judgment of the Court of Appeal. With regard to the writing in the newspaper, I do not think we are bound to take any notice of this. I have no doubt but what members on the other side would judge very differently from members on this side as to what constituted violent language at the time of an election. I have no doubt that Judge Elliott expressed himself in favour of Mr. Carling as a better representative, and in this be was in accord with the people of London. Hon. gentlemen opposite would characterize his expression of opinion no doubt as very violent language. One of the first essentials in an indictment is that the words must be distinctly set forth. I know of one celebrated case which came under an old statute against swearing. A man was brought before the magistrate for having used 30 oaths, but the magistrate refused to entertain the complaint until the party complaining set out the words which he considered as constituted swearing; and on his setting them out, the magistrate found that they did not amount to an offence. I have no doubt that hon. gentlemen opposite would consider as violent language at the London election what this side would consider as very moderate. I believe, in the first place, that the decision of Judge Elliott was strictly in accordance with the provisions of the Franchise Act, and, in the second place, I do not see that there is anything in the petition which Judge Elliott should be called on to answer. I believe a judge of a County Court or even of any of the inferior courts should not be afraid of rendering justice, and we ought to allow the judges full liberty to dispense justice without any fear of being brought before the courts of Parliament or any other courts. I believe it would be an injury to Judge Elliott that he should be called upon to answer a vague, indefinite charge of this kind, which, even if true, he should not be called upon to answer, at least until he was furnished with the very words, the very language he is accused of having spoken during the London election.

Mr. WELION. I would not at this time of the night rise to speak were I not possessed strongly of the opinion that the procedure which the hon. member for West Lambton asks this House to take is an unsound procedure and one which it would be unwise for this House, in the best interests of this country, to follow. The House of Commons can do sumething to preserve the dignity of justice by the tone of its discussion in matters of this kind. It is a fair subject of complaint and remonstrance that more than one member of this House, in adilressing himself to this question, has forgotten the nature of the question to which he was speaking; and I fully endorse the scathing rebuke which the hon. member for South Norfolk administered to the hon. member for North York concerning the remarks made by that hon. gentleman with a view tos coercing Judge Elliott a few days before his judgment was delivered. I speak without heat and passion, I hope, when I say that in the six sessions during which I have had the honour of having a seat in this Parliament, that speech stands without rival or parallel in our parliamentary record. It is one which should bave called out a strong rebuke, coming from a layman, but coming from a barrister it merits a still stronger rebuke. Not only can this House do something to preserve the dignity of justice by the sobriety and mokleration witle which hon. members discuss questions affecting the administration of justice, but we can do still more by laying down a safe procedure for dealing with charges of misbehaviour against one of the judges of the lani. I object, in the strongest way, to the procedure which the hon. member for the ll est Riding of Lambton has asked this House to adopt in his motion upon the Paper. I object to it for the reason that it is adverse to the public interest, that it runs counter to a usage which is well established, that it is in conflict with an Act which Parliament, ten years ago, in its wisdom, chose to pass for our guidance in matters of this kind. And, furthermore, I would urge that it is in conflict with the sound constitutional rule laid down, I think, in one of the sections of the British North America Act. In the first place, we are asked to take a copy of the petition which has been iaid upon the Table of this House, complaining of the conduct of a county judge :
"And to furnish that petition to that judge for his information and enable him to make such statement or answer to the charge therein contained as he may deem proper, and that the said petition and any such answer as the gaid judge may make be referred to a special committee of this House to enquire into the truth of the several allegations therein, with a riew of finding whether such charges should be investigated by a commission."
Now, the practice which we are asked to adopt in this debate is not the practice which has been pursued in this country for a number of years. I submit that the hon. member for West Lambton has been misled by the reading which he made from Bourinot's book on the Practice and Procedure of Parliament, and which is found on page 35. I need not read that quotation, but 1 would suggest to the hon. member that if he would take that reading and follow out the Canadian cases mentioned in it, and the English cases cited in the foot-note, and then look up in the English Hansard the comments on these cases, he will find he is not well warranted in asking this House to adopt the procedure he proposes. The procedure open to us to adopt is this: That if a member has reason to complain of misbehaviour on the part of a County Court judge, his duty is to put those facts before the Government, and it is the duty of the Government, pursuant to an Act which I will quote in a moment, if, in the opinion of the Governinent the charges are of a character so grave that, if true, they will call for further enquiry, to put those charges before the judge, and then what comes next? What comes next is the issue of a Royal Commission, should the Government think fit to do so. My hon. friend from East Lambton, who has spoken so clearly and so convincingly twice on this question, says, we cannot be too careful in this House in trying to maintain public respect for our courts of justice. Let me remind the House that one of the wisest law reformers of the Finglish race said that it was of supreme importance to a free commonwealth that it should have the highest confidence in its courts of justice, so much so that he believed it was better that the people should believe they were getting pure law from the courts of justice when they were not than the contrary. I refer, of course, to Jeremy Bentham, whose works have largely affected the jurisprudence of some forty English-speaking commonwealths. If we would be guided by the constitution, if we would be guided by the old practice in the mother country as well as in this, even if we were making a new practice, we should take care that, in the early stages of an attack upon a judge, the charges were grave. I have indicated what is the established usage, and I have shown that the quotation from May, which my hon. friend from West Lambton (Mr. Lister) relied on, will, if he examines the authorities in regard to it, bring him to a different conclusion from that which he has enunciated. I have shown that the usage we have followed in Canala in regard to County Court judges for ten years has been that the complaint should be put before the Administration and that they must take the responsibility of dealing with it. Ten years ago, the Parliament of Canada passed an Act dealing with cases of this kind. It is found in the Revised Statutes, chapter 18. Section 2 of that statute provides that judges of the County Court shall hold office during good behaviour. Then sub-section 2 of that section provides that:

"A judge of a county court may be remored from office by the Governor in Council for misbehaviour, or for incapacity or for insbility to perform his duties properly, on account of old age, ill-health or any other cause: if - ( (a). The circumstances respecting the misbehaviour, incapacity or inability are first enquired into: and-
© (b). Such judge is given reasonable notice of the time and place appointed for the enquiry, and is afforded an opportanity, by himself or his counsel, of being heard thereat, and of cross-examining the witnesses and adducing evidence on his own behalf;

- 3. If any such judge is removed from office for any of such reasons, the Order in Council providing for such remoral, and all reports, evidence and correspondence relating thereto, shall be laid before Parliament within the first fifteen days of the next ensuins sescion.

4. The Givernor General in Council may, for the purpose of making enquiry into the circumstances respecting the misbehaviour, inability or incapacity of such judse, issue a commisgion to one or more judges of the Supreme Court of Canads, or to any one or more judges of any Buperior Court in any provinoe of Canada, empowering him or them to make such enquiry and to report, and may, by such commission, confer upon the person or dereons appointed full power to summon before him or them any pereons or witneeses, and to require them to give evidence on oath, orally or in writing or on soleman afirmation, if they are persons entitled to affirm in civil matters, and to produce such documents and things as the commissioner or commissioners deem requisite to the full incestigation of the matters into which they are appointed to enquire." Now, when Parliament has deliberately chosen a way which may be adopted in trying a County Court juilge for mislehariour, and when ten years of usage have indicated the elementary stages of that procedure, what good reason is there for departing from this usage and here and now dragging the name of a judge before Parliament and leading Parliament into an acrimonious discussion which, as I said at the outset, does little to maintain the dignity of Parliament, and may do much to lower the dignity of justice? The existence of such a statute indicates the deliberate intention of Parliament that such matters should be enquired into outside of Parliament. The third sub-section that I have quoted clearly does not contemplate this being done by Parliament at all, because the fact that all the evidence and papers are to be laid before Parliament early in the next session, indicates that this must be done, as it were, lehind the back of Parliament. So I say that the existence of the Act, and the rearling of the third sub-section indicate that the trial of County Court judges should be had in another way, and that the preliminary enguiries should be conducted in some more guarded and quiet manuer than can be expected in a discussion in this House. Further, we find that, when our constitution was drafted, there was put in a section which is numbered 99 , which says:
" The judges of the Superior Courts shall hold office during good behaviour, but shall be removable by the Gorernor General on address of the Senate and House of Commons."
It is noticeable that, in that section, the judges of the County Courts are not named, and, when we remember that this Imperial statute was only the crystallization of the regulations which were drafted by Canadian public men, the omission is more significant. To make that more apparent, I would call attention to the fact that the Quebec resolutions which were the precursor of the British North America Act, contained this provision in the same words. Article 37 of the Quebec resolutions uses the same language :
"The judges of the Superior Courte chatl Lold their offices during good behaviour, and shall be removable only on the address of both Houses of Parliament."
At the union of the provinces County Courts were established in at least two provinces. The framers of the Quebec resolutions were familiar with these facts. The distinction between County Courts and Superior Courts was well established and commonly observed. Therefore it was the purpose of the British North America Act, to distinguish letween the Superior Court judges and the County Court judges. Parliament took control of the Superior Court judges, or rather the Senate and the House of Commons took control of them, and the Imperial Parliament guaranteed them a tenure of their offices during good behaviour, subject to an address by the Houses of the Canadian Parliament. But it did not give power to the Senate and House of Commons to remove the county judges. As to whether the power to remove a Suparior Court judge involves the power to remove a County Court judge, there is at least much doubt. If you say that the omission of the words "County Court" in Section 99 of the Constitution Act is insignificant or is an accident, I would answer, the burden rests on him who takes that point to prove it. I would now direct the House to another aspect of the case. I would call attention to the fact that in the mother country, where Parliament has power to remove the judges by address, the greatest care has been taken to protect the judge in the preliminary proceeding, and to see that no injustice is done him, and that neither his reputation nor his cause is prejudiced in any way, I will read a case from the English Hansard bearing on the one we have before us, the case of Sir James Scarlett, who was then, I think, Lord Abinger, who was tried on a charge of having used intemperate political language in addressing both the grand jury and the petit jury in reference to a case before him. He was accused of having used the language of an extreme Tory, and his conduct came under revieu before the English House of Commons. Lord John Russell spoke on the subject of that judge's conduct, and I will read what he said in that lehate. The case is reported in Hausaral, Vol. 66, page 10-1. Now, take note, the juige was charged with having on the bench used the language of a violent political partisan. The attack was made by Mr. Thomas Duncembe, a famous man at that time, some 40 years ago. He said that Lord Abinger had spoken from the beuch in terms that were more appropriate to a politician than to a judge. The Attorney-General, Sir F. Pollock, defended the conduct of the judge, and said:
"It is in fact an admitted principle that no Government should support a motion for an enquiry into the conduct of a jadge, unless they hare first made an investigation, and are prepared to say that they think it a fit case to be followed up by an address for his dismissal."
There was a case where a charge was brought before Parliament, and where the English Parliament undoubtedly had pouer to remove a superior judge by an address from the Lords and Commons, and in that case so cautious was the English Parliament that the Liberal leader, although stung by the conduct of the judge, nevertheless saw fit to lay down that rule that I have read. Again, in the same debate, Lord John Russell objected, "that Lord Abinger had spoken both as a politiciar and as a lawyer, when he should have spoken as a judge ;" but nevertheless he said :
"He regarded t'e independence of the judges to be so sacred that nothing but the most imperious necessity should induce the House to adopt a course that might tend to weaken their standing or endanger their authority.'
Now, I would be content to stop here and say that these statutes, and these decisions, and these judg. ments are at least some reason for supporting the position I took up at the beginning, that the better practice for us to pursue was the old practice, and that the better way for the hon. meniber for West Lambton would be to put his charges in the hands of the Minister of Justice and ask him to put these before a commission with the result that whether the charges were proved true or not, the case will again come later on before Parliament. The hon. member ior West Lambton cannot say that this is giving him no chance, that the Ministry of the day will be guided by partisan considerations. If they are, they are blameworthy, and if they have not discharged their duty under oath, their conduct must come before this House for criticism, and the member then has not only his right, but it is his bounden duty to make his statement. While on my feet I would like to say a word, not making any new argument at all, but endorsing heartily the capital statement made by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisdale) a few moments ago, as wo the duty of the judge of the County Court who, if I understand the law aright. was a judge who gave a final judgment from which there was no appeal. There was no constitutional duty cast upon Judge Elliott, as I understand it, to obey and accept $\epsilon x$ cathedra the law of the judges of the High Court of Justice, even if they had given a well reasoned judgment, seeing that he was by law the final julge. The judgment of the High Court of Justice was no more obligatory upon.Judge Elliott than was the julgment of the Supreme Court of the United States. It was a judgment of able lawyers who had heard argument and were therefore able to give a valuable legal opinion to which every prudent man sitting in a court of lower rank, would give due consideration, and that is all. But how absurd to impeach a judge in that regard and to argue that his law was bad. It is no ground for holding that he should be impeached, even if his law was bad. even if he has misreal those cases that he cites, if he has misconstrued them, if he has misunderstood the English statute, if he is wrong in his law from top to bottom, that is no reason in the world for dragging his name with censure before this House. But I say that, in my opinion-and I have real that judgment carefully and have taken the trouble to look up the law reports, and the English election laws and compared them with our own-the judge cannot be censured for the position he took. I have had my attention called to a few cases which are not cited here, but which seem to be very apposite and to confirm the judgment of Judge Eiliott, and I will take the responsibility of saying that in my opinion the judgment of the County Court judge seems to be a carefully reasoned judgment. If you follow the English cases, if you follow the spirit of the English decisions, it seems to me that they can leave no doubt as to the correctness of the position he has taken. If I had time I would like to cite some other English judgments much more technical than ours, and if you go by the light of these English cases, you can with difficulty come to any other conclusion. Let me refer to one case very much in point, a case reported in Vol. 12, Queen's Bench Division. No case could be stronger to show that the English judges are severely technical in construing their franchise Acts. I might quote from Lord Coleridge and Lord Esher to show that the position of a voter who is on the list is stronger than that of the man who attacks it. Lord Esher shows furthermore that the voter whose name is on the list and attacked can only hold his position as against the attacking party by being prepared to resist some seven distinct allegations of non-qualification. If, therefore, you go by the law of reason. You see how unfair it is to say that in a doubtful case the voter on this list is bound to be ready to defend himself against attacks from seven different quarters rather than that the man objecting shall specifically make one challenge. Here is a case to show how extremely stringent and technical the English courts have been recently in interpreting their English laws. Hon. members have had it alrealy explained to them that the English Act differs from ours in that the objections to names on the list are first sent to overseers. There was a case where an objection was given to the overseers and by them sent on, as the law requires, to the claimant. The notice of objection given to the orerseers was in the orlinary form, but ended thus: " bated this eighteenth day of August, one thousand eight hundred and eighty

The year was 1883 , but the word "three" was omitted. Then the name of the party follows. The overseers duly published a list of persons objected to, including the name of the claimant. The claimant objected that the notice given to the overseers was insutficient on account of this omission, but the revising barrister himself stated in his judgment that, as a fact, the claimant had not been inconvenienced or misled. The court decided that the notice was bad, and their judgment may be found in Vol. 12, Queen's Bench Division, page 373 . If Judge Flliott had given a ruling so technical as that, the hon. member for North lork (Mr. Mulock) would have made all Canada ring in denunciation of Judge Eliiott's action. Now, on the point that the julge wrote political articles, I do not know whether he did or not. I have heard. gentlemen who claimed 10 know, and who have denied that statement, that say that my hon. friend is all wrong in his affidavits, and that this will be found out when the case goes on to enguiry. These references that I have made show that is the mother country judges have sometimes used injudicions language, and when it was attempted to make such the basis of a parliamentary enguiry, Ministers of the Crown simply stopped the thing there and then. Now, let us remember when we are arguing that the judges should have consideration, that we are not arguing so much for them, we are not so much concerned in this case as to the feelings of one old man, whether he be a blameless and worthy gentleman, as our friends say, or on the contrary, a heated and unwise partisan: we, as public men, are trying to protect him, not for his sake, but for our own sake, and for the good of the commonwealth. Judge Elliott did not seek his jurisdiction, we put it upon him ; and I think re ought to be exceptionally careful in Parliament when we pass Acts, as we did some years ago, divesting ourselves of the trial of controverted elections, and throwing that unwelcome duty upon the judges, not afterwards to scold and lecture them. We cast this duty upon them, it is not of their seeking. I will take my seat by saying that for the reasons I have given, in the light of the statute I have cited, of the opinions I have referred to, of this English debate at which I have glanced, I think Julge Elliott gave a sound decision, and, furthermore, that this House had better promptly and flatly vote down the motion of the hon. member for W est Lambton.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) has evidently given this matter a good deal of attention, but I do not think that so far as the authorities are concerned as to the constitutional mode of procedure he has thrown very much light on the subject, or given us any information that we did not possess before. When this matter was first brought lefore the House I undertook to state the various modes in which judges, who had been guilty of corrupt practices, had heretofore been tried by Parliament. I pointed out that under our statutes the proper way to proceed against County Court judges was before the Governor in Council where a regular trial took place. I then pointed out that the Consolidated Statutes provided a court of punishment for County Court judges, but that statute was repealed, and that we have in its place, the Revised Statutes, chap. 138, which provided that a County Court judge might le tried, for improper conduct, by a commission appointed ly the Governor in Council. Now, I admit frankly so far as the actual trial of a juige is concerned, that that would be the proper course to pursue, but I submit that we are not seeking to impeach Judge Elliott in this House ; but certain residents and residents of this country have petitioned this House, representingand setting forth certain wrong-doings on the part of Judge Elliott, and asking this House to investigate the facts, and if they are sustained to have Judge Elliont tried by the proper tribunal. That we have a perfect right to entertain that petition and to act upon it is beyond question. So far as the allegation that a mistake has been caused by reading Bourinot's work. I desire to say there has been no mistake at all. There never was a mistake. The proceedings taken have been taken after due delil,eration and a consideration of Pourinot's work and all other works on the subject. After showing how Superior Court judges may be impeached ly adhresses to both Houses of Parliament, speaking of the British North America Act, Bourinot in his "Constitution and History of Canala" uses these words:

" B. N. A. Act of 185", Section (9). This section does not apply to Countr Court judges, Whose remoral for sufficient cause is provided for by to Victoria, chap. 12 . It is, however. xlways competent for the House to address the Giverernor General for the remoral of such judicial officers. and the procedure in Parliament should be as in the case of Superior Court judge:"
Bourinot lays down the plain principle in unmistakable language, that it is competent for this House, if it thinks proper, to investigate the conduct of a County Court juige in the same way as the conduct of a Sisperior Court judge can he investigated by this House, But the hon. member for Albert (Xr. Weldon) says: "Oh, you may bring Superior Court julges before Parliament, you may lacerate their feelings as much as you like, you may charge them with high crimes and nistemeanours, but you must not touch a County Court judge ; he is more sacred than a Superior Court judge, and his conduct cannot be investigated by the High Court of Parliament. There is no pleasing the supporters of the Government, do what you will: whatever proposition you make, hon. gentlemen opposite will not he pleased. Nake a charge against a member of the Government in the plainest English you can possibly put on paper, and the Giovernment will say the charge is too vague, that we cannot investigate it on account of its vagueness. Charge a judge, if you please, with high crimes against the people and an hon. gentleman with the responsibility of the hon. member for Albert, who is always spoken of as such a fair-minded man, arises and declares that this is not right procedure, that we should have proceeded in some other way in order to get at this judge. And what does lie propose? He says that we ought, instead of bring. ing this matter before the House, to present it to the Govermment. Present it to the Government ! This old man they talk about has deprived a citizen of his right to sit ir this House. We are asked to present a charge to the Government, one of the members of which is the man whom he placed in this House. That is the tribunal which hon. gentlemen ask the citizens of London to appeal to. If justice is not done here, let me tell hon. gentlemen that a petition will le sent to the Governor General of this country in order that it may be seen if something camot be done. If Parliament and the representatives of the people refuse to accord to those petitioners that what is their right, an investigation into these charges, then it will be for them to consider whether their duty is not to place before the Goveruor General, not lefore the men who adrise him, the wrongs under which they are suffering and which they claim to have remedied. What is the positions A returning officer, appointed by the Goremment, has decided that 131 votes polled at that election were had. He has decided that they had not the right to vote. He struck them from the list. They had no right, according to his judgment, and he had the evidence and tried the case, to be on the list. The effect of the judgment of Julge Elliott was to keep them there, and those votes elected Mr. Carling, whom I must call the hon. member for the city of London. Without those votes, which the returning officer declares to le lated, which six judges of this country decided had no right to appear, the hon. member for London could not have been returned, and he sits here to-lay by virtue of those bad votes, and in defiance of the majority of 22 gool votes for Mr. Hyman. Hare the people of this country no rights? Hon. gent lemen opposite talk about this ohl man. Has Parliament no right to investigate this cases Has Mr. Hyman no rights? 1 say, Sir, that it is essentially and eminently a proper case for Parliament to investigate. I say that when a julye can, by citing authorities such as my hon. friem speaks of : English authorities based upon statutes different from our statutes, and decides in the face of a judgment of six judges given upnour own statutes, I say that it is prima farit evidence that the judge was acting corruptly. Judge Elliott, the friend of the hon. member for London (Mr. Carling), the man who owes his position to the hon. member for London, his tried friend for forty years is that nothing? Have we not the right to infer in the face of all these facts that Judge Elliott was leaning a little more than straight, that he was leaning a little towards the hon. member for the city of London? We need not go into a discussion as to whether this judgment was right or urong. There is the plain fact of the matter that our courts decided that the revising officer had power to hear these appeals, there is the undisputed fact that the revising officer did hear these appeals, and there is the judgment of six judges of the Province of Ontario deciding that the revising ofticer had a right to hear them and instructing him to hear them.

Mr. DAVIFS (P.E.I.) And deciding that the notices were good.

Mr. LISTER. As my hon. friend says: and deciding that the notice was good, and it followed as a matter of course that he had to hear them. Then why try to rake up English decisions? Why try to bolster up the conduct of this judge by English decisions baving no bearing upon this case: decisions on the law of another country in no sense like the statute under which we are proceeding here. My hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. McDonald) did not seem to know very much about the case. He evidently did not give it very much consideration so far as the facts are concernel. He says that Judge Elliott had no power to hear the appeal at all in the first place. Judge Elliott himself. 1 beliere, admits that he had no power, although it was not contended by the hon. member for South Norfolk (Mr. Tisiale) that that was the julgment. There can be no doubt at all that so far the tirst decision of Judge Elliott is concerned it was a mere expression of opinion. and that he himself was conscious that he had not power to entertain an appeal on a matter of that kind from the revising officer. Then, Sir, we come to the second judgment. I say, that after having had this matter argued before him and all the cases that my hon. friend speaks of cited, Julge Elliott himself places upon record this statement:
-" The decision of the Court of Queen's Bench is nom, it aprears, appeaied arninst, and an appeal is now yending before the proper appellate court. In this situation of the matter $I$ reserve judgment on the question which is now bronght before me as to the revision or remoral of $t$ heir names, until the resuit of this appeal shall be known."
So. sir, there is the evidence in Juage Elliott's own handuriting that he reserved his decision until the judgment of the court of appeal had been given, I have stated before, and I state it now in iuldition to what is written there, that Julge Elliott had statel that he would be lomn:l by the judgment of the Court of Appeal. It was believed that the decision of the Court of Appeal would be allerse to the Liberal party : that was the belief in the city of London ; at least it was so thought, and there is no doubt whatever, that Juilge Elliott at the time he penmed that statement intended to follow the decision of the Court of Appeal. When that decision was given he was asked to render judgment upon it. The counsel for the Conservatives at once gave a notice of appeal to the Supreme Court, not with any foma fide intention of carrying out the appeal, but with the intention of hanging up the judgment of Judge Elliottuntil after theelection, to see how the vote went. That is what their object was I have no doubt. And after the decision was given Mr. Hyman's friends, believing that the judg. ment given by the Court of Appeal, or the dirta given by the Court of Appeal would be respected by Judge Flliott, asked him to give julgment, and he gave the judgment which is now the subjeet of investigation. Sir, I admit that the julgment of the county judge was a final judgment, but I say, lonking at the fact that six juiges had decided that the notice of appeal was goorl, taking the fact that Judge Elliott was a contributor to a party newspaper of party political articles, taking the statement that he made before his judgment, I say that all these together show that Judge Elliott was animated and actuated hy corrupt motives in giving that judgment. While I say that if it were simply a mistake as to the realing of the decision or a mistake as to the law, hut an honest judgment, his judgment could not he questioned here, yet at the same time I say, taking all the facts connected with this matter from first to last; the fact of his judgment being given as it were in the face of the judgment of six judges, his whole conduct during the bye-election in writing articles, political and otherwise in tavour of the present member for the city of London (Mr. Carling) and against Mr. Hyman, his pnblic utterances as between the two candidates ; taking all together, they make such a strong case as to lead to the almost resistless conriction that Judge Flliott, while he may have thought he was acting right, was acting in the interests of Mr. Carling and was not carrying out the law as understoon in this country. The hoo. gentleman from South Norfolk (Mr. Tislale) was very unfortunate in the statement he nade to-night. In his speech he jumped from Dan to Beersheba. He tried to belittle, so far as lay in his power. the gentlemen who have signed that petition. He described them as insignificant individuals, individuals whose petition ought not to receive the attention of this angust assembly. sir, the time may come when that hon. gentleman will have to answer elsewhere for the statement he has made here to-night. When a charge was made against a judge he thought it was a proper defence to say that in election proceedings certain of the candidates had been guilty of corrupt practices, and I think most unfortunately for himself he went back to 184, and brought in the name of Col. Walker in connection with an election which took place between Col. Wialker and the present member for the city of London (Mr. Carling). He ought to have told all the story, because John Carling, so-called "Honest John," in justice to him ought to have it all told. The hon. gentleman did not tell the House that Mr. Walker contested the election with John Carling and that it was proven that while a Minister of the Crown and an alviser of Her Majesty, the Hon. John Carling was a secret partner in the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, and so much did the people feel it that they resented the impropriety by rejecting Mr. Carling, and they electel Major Walker, whose election was after set aside. But John Carling was afraid to go back to the electors, and James H. Fraser appeared before them as a candidate; and Mr. Fraser is now the revising otticer. Five short years passed away, the public condoued this great offence, and the Hon. Mr. Carling was again returned for the city of I.ondon. The hon. gentleman talks abvot voters lists and corruption. Why does he not tell this House that for fifteen years the city of London was under the complete control of the Conservative party, which appointel the assessors and every public officer in the city, and the conseruence was that the voters lists of that city for all those long years, had been so stuffed that the Conservatives have come to look upon the city of London as their particular preserve, and they resent and become angry at any zerson who undertakes to interfere with them. The bon. gentleman talks about ruffians patrolling the streets. Why, Sir, it was necessary to patrol the streets. Menlers of the Conservative party were going from house to house, as the Liberals believel, bribing everybody whom they could bribe, and it was necessary to follow those men up and enter every house they entered to see that the funds known to be in their possession were not expended in bribery. That is the reason these things were done. Hon. gentlemen ask: Why did not Mr. Hyman go into the courts? Mr. Hyman did not go into the courts because the judgment of Jndge Elliott was final ; and with 130 bad votes on the list, what could Mr. Hyman hope by a new election? But if these names had been removel, a petition would have been filed against Mr. Carling, and he would have been brought before the courts to answer for what took place during the last election in the city of London. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have nothing more to add. It is not necessary that this debate should take up a very great length of time, because the facts involved are not numerous. I repeat what I stated when introlucing this resolution, that I state here on my responsibility as a member of this House, that I believe I can extablish-I am sure I can establish-that His Honour Judge Elliott contributed political articles during that campaign. I believe I can show that he used words and language undignitied on the part of a judge during sueh a time. We have a right- to expect of the judiciary of this country, that the moment they are appointel to that position, they shall lift themselves above party politics, shall hold the scales of justice evenly between all parties, in orler that the people who have to appear lefore them will feel that only eyual and exact justice will le metel out to them. sir, when we tind a partiean occupying that position, how can we avoid feeling that political considerations will enter into his deeision of the matters coming lefore hims The moment a judge shows himself to le a partision that moment he becomes untit for his duty and should be removed. Sir, this is an important matter in many respects, as showing the inferior judges in this country that they must act with as much equity as the judges of the Court of Appeal--that they must discharge their duties thoroughly and equally and in a mamer that will gain the approval of the people of this country. That is the tribunal to which they must answer. It is in the interest of the people themselves, because we know that unless the liberties which we have are well protected, it may not be long before we lose them. It is in the interest of the people, in the interest of the judiciary, and in the interest of the community at large, that the improper acts charged against Judge Elliott should be investigatel, and I repeat that if the charges statel in that petition are true, Juige Flliott is untit to till the position of a judge of this lamd.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not think it is necessary to prolong this debate: but I desire to call the attention of the House to a very grave error into which the hon. me:mber for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) fell. I understooxl hium to say that when Mr. Carling contested the city of Loncion with Mr. Walker, he was then a member of the (iovernment of Canada, and at the same time a secret partner in the corporation then being formed for the purpose of constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that Mr. Carling did not become a member of the Government of Canada until 1882, and had nothing whatever to do with advising His Excellency in the awarding of the contract.
Mr. LISTER. Was he not a member of Parliament?
Mr. BOWELL That was not what the hon. gentleman said. He was a member of Parliament, but that was quite a different thing from being an adviser of the Crown.
Sir JOHN THOMPSON. While the debate was progressing, I felt that all the questions involved in it, and they are principally questions of law, were so fully dealt with by others that it was unnecessary for me to say a word on the subject at all. The hon. member for Albert (Mr. Weldon) tonight put the position which I think this House ought to adopt in relation to a resolution of this

Lind, better and more formbly than I conld do ; and I would have remainet silent, even at this late stage of the debate, if I did not think that the hon. member for West Lambton has entirely misapprehenderl sonce of the very strong points which my hon. friend from Albert put before the House. The hon. gentleman's remarks with reference to those points might possibly have the effect of olsturing the jutgment of the Honse on this question. or olsiuring the juigment of thase who may review the action of the House itself. For my part. I take entirely the view that my hou. friend from Albert did, that nothing is more to be deprecated than for this House to undertake an enquiry of this kind unless necessity compels it to do so. In the few remarks which I will make on the subject, I will leave out of consideration entirely the political arguments which have been put forward-statements made with regard to the election contest which ended with the decision of Juige Elliott, and the dizussions of past elections in the city of London. I think the pocition assumed by the hon. member for Allert was perfeetly sonid-the position referred to by the hom. member for West Lambion just now-that this Honse should not enter inte an enyuiry of this kind in reference to County Court julges. The hon. member for West Lambion siys that it is alsurd to say that petitions may le laid on the Table of this House, atracking the character of superior Court judges, that they are to be subjectel to the indignity of diselusion and delate over the purity of their motives and to every scrutiny and enquiry that Parliament can adopt, while a judge of a County Court is a sacred thins. I submit to the hon. gentleman himself that he, unconsciously I am bound to assume, entirely misrepresented the argument which was so forcibly stated by the hon. member for Albert. in putting it in that way. The law makes it obligatory on this House, for very wise reasons, to deal with charges laid before it affecting the character and dignity of a Superior Court judge: the constitution provides that a julge of a Superior Court shall hold his otice by such an independent temure that the action of the Executire cannot remove him, until an address shall be pussed by both Honses of Parliament. It is therefore necessary, for the purpose of securing the independence of the bench, that, in the case of that class of judges, the complaint shall come here and be adjudicated upon by this House lefore it shall go to the Executive. But will any one say that this is a task which we ought to assume if the law or the constitution provides another remedy ? Does any one preteud to argue that because in the casse of the superior Court judges the constitution compels us to exercise that furetion, we should therefore grasp the juristiction and exercise it in regarit to other judges in reference to whom the same reason does not exist ? With reference to County Court judges, Parliament has provided a method of trial by a commission issued to one of the higher judges, and has made provision as to the morle of conducting that trial ; and if the constitution had made like prorisions with regarl to the trial of Superior Court judges, I take it that this House would never desire to enter on the enquiry, but would desire that it should be pursued in that course. Now, the authority my hon. friend from Albert referred to, and on which the hon. member for Lambton rested as an authority in favour of his po sition. is this: that the House probably has and that both Houses probably have the same authority and the same powrers with regard to a County Court juige as with regarit to a Superior Conrt judge. I do not propose to controvert that prasition nor did my hon. friemi from Albert controvert it: hut the position we take is this, that while the Honse may have the power. there is a better tribunal establishe? by law, one having greater convenience for trial aind ample jurisaliction, and that the law should take its counse with regard to this matter. instead of Parliament undertaking to assert its authority: Now, the answer which is made to that by the hon. member for West Lambion (Mr. Lister), and which was surgested by an interpolation in the dehate by some other hon. member, was this: "Are these persons. who have a grievance against Indge Flliott in respect of an improper judgment which he gave in the interest of a member of the Executive, to le told that they must go to the Executive where that member sits. and ask relress for their grievance ?" That sounds plausible, but let us see what the resolution of the hon. member for Lambton is. It is distinctly a resolution that a special committee of this Honseshall be appointed "for the purpose of enquiring into the truth of the several allegations contained in the petition, with the view of findiug out whether such charges shoulh le investigaterl by a commission." So that after this committee, if it shouhi lue appointel, has done its work, the report is to lee whether or not these petitioners ought to go to the Executive to have a commission appointed after all. With regarl to that, will any one tell me what the lifference is, the practical ditference, between letting these persons, who have to state their grievances, go to the Executive at cace, and having them go to a committee of this House, to see whether they should go to the Execntive or not. Any one I suppose can tell me what the difference is. The difference is illustrated by some of the phases of the discussion we have had to-day. The difference is that, while, as a matter of course, the member of the Executive concerned would not interfere or vote in Council on this subject any more than he woull sitting upon a committee here for the purpose of trying this case, in the debate in this House we have this judge assailed, not only in strong terms for having doue what the petition alleges he did, but for having done many other thinge which these petitioners, whether they be high or low, have not rentured to say he did. We have him, for instance, accused by the hon. gentleman who movel the resolution with haring "perpetrated one of the greatest wrougs that a judge conld perpetrate." We have him accused of having "deprived a member of his seat and sent a man here who has no more right to sit than the messenger at the door "-and not a word of that said in the petition on which we are to try Judge Elliott. We have that statement made to supplement a petition which does not eren allege that the decision of the judge is a wrong one; and any one who knows anything of the subject knows that we have to do a great deal more, when we undertake to impeach a judge. than to say he has given a wrong decision. We have to show also that he was actuated by a corrupt motive. In this case the hon. gentleman, who is to be one of his judges, has accused him of things which these forty odd petitioners have not ventured to assert in their accusation.

Indge Flliott is assailer on the floor of this House by extracts from what is called the independent press, ant a little later on in the debate another of these, his woull be judges risesand says: "Xell, if it does not appear from the petition what these partisan artieles are that the juelge is charged with having written. I will read smae of them tio this House, and he, in the position of in accuser. with ten times the acrimony of the petitioners, milertakes to assail the character of Indge Flliott aud to read anomimons articles, and to assert that the judge is the anthor of those articles, not on his own respensibility, not on his own wori, ami not on his own infomation, but on the strength of an atfilavit, which he refuses either to real or submit to the House and vill only consent to put in the hamis of the Speaker. provided the Speaker pats it in his paeket and agrees to kept it secret. I should think if anything illustrated the wishom of the statute passed ten years ago to provide another nay of trying comity julges, the progress of this debate would do so To the assertion that it is unreasomable that these petitiones shoull lee sent to the Executive for realress, it is an :mswer that the statute preseribes that course. It is an answer and a conclusive answer which the hon. wember for tllert gave when he said: "If the Executive refuse to do these people justice, the Executive will be answerable to this House, and you will not be assailing a judge whose character and position and claim to respeet we must all preserve, becanse of the great value which an indepentent bench gives to the community at large : you will not be assailing the lench hint the Executive for an act for which they are distinetly responsible." Let me call the attention of the Honse again to a point which the hon. member for Albert took with regard to the way in which these matters are viewedia other Parliaments. We have had fortmately hat little experience here in dealing with charges agrainst members of the bench: hut in the reports of the British Honse of Commons we find that-I was going to say scores-but at least very many of the juiges of the land-some of them the very highest in eminence of those who ever have sat in Westminster Hall have been made the subject of charges before the House of Commons and the House of Lords and investigation has been asked into their conduct. They have been accused-some of the greatest of them-of wrong decisions, wrong decisions influenced by partiality and corruption. Surely then, with the reverence which sonse gentlemen in this House attach to British practiceand precedents, we may safely look there for guiliauce as to how these matters should be treated. How are charges there brought? Are they brought in the shape of assanlts on persanal character? Are they brought by political attacks, by the reading of anonymous articles which are not even alleged in the petitions to hare been uritten by the juige? Ererywhere in those discussions we find expressions such as this: "That the investigation into the conduct of a judge is the most grave function that the Honse can exercise; " that "it is one that the House will never enter upon uithont the most imperative necessity." Sir, when the hon. member for West Lambion told the House that this was not an imperchment of the judge, that this was not an address for the remoral of a judge, I had recalled to my mind another passage from a speech of a very eminent man, in the course of one of these disenssions, who laid doun this principle, that unless it be necessary for the impeachment of judge, a petition against a junge ought not to le entertameti. so reluctant is that House, so relaetant are both Honses of Parliament in the United Finghom to enter into an enyuiry which will in the least degree appear to limit the independence of the bench or lower the digmity and reputation of the juiges, that umless for the exercise of aniuevitaible function, mamely: for the passime of an abliress by way of an impeachment, they will not entertain any petition or eqmplaint agraizst a jendge. but the Honse here is tohl that one reasom for this motion is that it is not a metion for impenthment or for passingan athiress at all. Iet mecall the attention of the House to some of the olsertations in reyrant to the independence of the heach which have orverred in the imvestigations whieh have taken place in Englami. The imdependence of the lench is always spoken of in terms which I shall retel in a fell moments lis such high authorities as were cited by my hon, friend from Aliert (Mr. Welion), such as Lond Joha Russell, Sir Rolert leel amd others Loni Chief Justice Holt, when he was talleal to the lat of the Finglish House of Commons for hacing given a llecisim which was suppensel to have infringet upan the rights of the House of Commons, male the noble answer which was afterwands reiterated and entonsed by somse of the greatest statesmen. He saill:
"I hold an authority independent of yours I gare my reasens for the judgnemt I delivered in that place in which I mas swom te administer instice. By this house. I fowk to be protectet and nut to be arraiguet. aud I will nut asigne, the reasons here on which I founded nuy judgruent."
In oure of these diseussions it was suid to le a principie well establisher that "enquiry should not le instituted otherwise than with a view to alliressing the Throne in onder to remove a juther, ant if any other principle were atopted the intepentence of the leonch nould be a moekery:" sir Robert Pee? said on another accasion:
"To exercise the function of enfuiring into the comduct and the character of a iulge for ans other purpoee than remoring him from the beneh on erounde which would justify an impeachment would be simpls to hang a label armum the nets of the judge so that be mould be held in contempt by the countre:"
And he further swid that "by doing that "--hy apponinting such a committee as we are asked now to appoint-" yon evale the law which requires that yon shomild take action ly an alliress for the julge's removal." Let me refer also to the remarks which were quoted by my hon. friend from Allert (Mr. Wedion) at the begiming of his address, which were made by Land John Rusvell, on Zlst February, iSti, when he said he "reganted the imitepemience of the juiges to be so sacred that nothing but the most imperious nevessity should intace the House to adopt a course whieh might by any means imply that the julyes were to depend for the future, not on the sanction of an Act of Parliament-not on that temure which had protected them as long is they were not guilty of any crime, but on the particular views of a particular portion of their fellow countrymen." To apply that at present, if any judge gives a judgment in faveur of some one in political life, or against him, that is to be a subject of debate and investigation by a committee, though the law provides another morle of investigation and though the procet-ings are uat in the way of an adtiress to the frown to have the juige removed, lant are simpuly designeri to hong it label round his neck. The judges will then no loager be imdepmentens and will mo longror hold their othice on the tenure which Parliament has preseriberl, and the independente of the bench then bevomes a monchers and a matter depemient on the whims ar motions if one section of the joblages fellow comutrymen. Let us consiter the garge this disconsion has taken as imbincating the aecessity of atopting another comese, if it can be donke. The petition does mot evenallegte a wrongful decision. The statements liave been made that certain artiotes which have been prom duced in the Honse and which were pubhished in a nemspaper were written by the gendate. Thuos statements have heen manle oas no anthonity whaterer hut simply by way of attack. hy way of invective against the jubte-and revenseful invective tomand ye have herani the time of the Honse taken up hour after herar-hy the member for linysberongh (Mr. Fraser) for instance-in reviewing the devision of Judte Ellintt, in iecharinge that it was hat live, in holting up to ribicule the kimet of law which he administereql in keeping Mr. Hyman ont of his seat, as if this Homse viere se extert on appeal from the county junge of Nimblestex. That is the pasicion the Hotsie will lee in if it adopes what the hon. stentleman sugrests, ami this resoludion does stop short of that heeatse it looks to the than investisation by a Royal Conimasion, amd the indetisation whieh wmeth take place betore a committee of the Hense is to be a sexomit triad etomluctel for no purpoes that it is pasisile to conceive. If that incestigation takes place, if it is facourable to furtherpracertings, the petitioners are directed to pursue those further proceeting: I have endeacoured to refrain, and I shall enteavour to refraim. from saving auything as to what might le the result of an applieation to the Einerutive, beramse it may come to that in the fature. I simply express myself in regrand to the policy of this Honse dealing with so impartant a question in this way, dealingr with matter invaling the indepentence of the beeth when the law provitles another tribunal for the purpose, Which Parliament ten years ago thought a better tribunal, ani a tribuncal which has exercised its functions in three or four cases since, and which may evercise its functions now if the petitioners chonse to exencise their rights in the direction pointerl out to them.

Mr. DAVIEN (P.E.I.) To many of the propnoitious of the hon. gentleman I take no objection, but to some of them I certainly to take exteption. and I think it will be apparent to those who folloued the hon. gentleman in his speech te-night that, if his argument is carried to its logieal conclusion, there is no passible conntuct which any Cematy Court judge could take which conld come muder the animadrersion of this Honse. That is the result of his reasoniug. I take exception to the hom. gentlemai's statement in that rezanh, ame, when we come to book at the pasition the Comuty Court judges hold, and at the statute defining their temure of attice, we must cone to the comelusion that not only is it opea and proper for this House to take the initiatory step in advising the Governor in Council to proceed under the statute we have passed, hut this House would be neglecting its plain and direct duty if, when a plain and proper case is laid before it, it refrained from pursuing that duty. This House forms part of the great council of the state, established for the purpose of advising the Crown as to the course it ought to pursue. The Goremor (ieneral is the Exentive officer, he executes according to the direction of this House, practically, under the constitution ; and Parliament has vested certain powers in the Governor in Council, under certain circumstances, to direct an enquiry into the conduct of a public functionary, and the tribunal alove all others, I should surmise, which ought to lee in a position to determine whether the time has come, and whether the acts justify the issue of an inquisition, is the House of Commons and the Parliament of Canada. Sir, if any hon. gentleman will look at the statutes he will find that every judge of the County Court shall hold his office during good behaviour, that a judge of a County Court may be removed from ottice by the fiovernor in Council for misbehaviour. How are the initiatory steps to be taken? Who is to alvise the Executive in the first instance? Who is to control the Executive: Is the Executive Conacil of His Excellency to stand a body removed from Parliament, not amenable to Parliament, and not to take the advice of Parliament: The ching is preposterous. Hon. gentlemen, therefore, will see that the argument of the Minister of Justice, when followed to its logical conclusion, removes from this House matters of great public concern with respect to the administration of justice, for which this House cannot relieve itself of responsibility, and for which, when the facts are brought properly before it, they are lownd to take the responsibility of advising one way or the other. Now, let us see what position these judges occupy. I am one of those who feel disposed to pay all proper respect and deference to County Court judges or Superior Court judges : but I draw a broal distinction hetween the manly respect which I entertain for the bench, and the cringing servility that we very often see exhibited towards it. These are merely men of like passions with ourselves, and I regret to say that I camot join in the expression which has fallen from hon. gentlemen on both sidus, my experience does not justify me in joining in the opinion that when these gentlemen go on the bench they leave their politics behind them. Sir, I submit to this House as a proposition of so grave a nature that it should not be cast to one side, that when the conduct of a County Court judge is alleged by 47 petitioners, voters of full age, British sub) jects, conmpetent to rote for members of this House -when they allege with particularity that the conduct of a particular County Court juige ina matter affecting the election of one of its members, has been such that if the fucts were proved his removal from the bench must follow, the House ought not to hesitate for one moment as to what course it should take. This is a proposition which hon. members should bear in mind. Admitting every fact alleged in the petition to be true, is it possible that Judge Elliott could with self-respect, or with credit to himself, or to the state. remain any longer upon a County Court bench! If he can, it is no use going on with the enquiry. If this House of Commons determines that pending a judicial enguiry before a judge of the land, it is competent and proper for the judge to rush to the party press, to write editorial articles of a violent partisan character, and, to use the words of the petition, to write letters to the public under an assumed name, violently attacking a litigant whose case is before him for judgment; if this House determines that a judge can decide with judicial impartiality who writes violent and bitter diatribes against the man whose case he is deciding, then I tell them to vote against the enquiry. Let the public know that a man can be a judge, not as an English judge is understood to be, but a violent political party hack and a judge at the same time. But I do not think that is the rule this Parliament is going to take. These judges occupy positions which make them differ from all other public functionaries. No action will lie against them for any judicial act; even if that act is alleged to be done maliciously and corruptly, the courts of the land are closed and you have no redress; I would almost go so far as to say that if a judge expressed that his judgment was malicions and corrupt, you have no remedy in the courts of the land. And where are you drifting? From time inmemorial there has been a high court to which every subject having a grievance can appeal. That high court is in session now, that high court has before it the petition of electors in London who say that the constituency to which they belong has been wronged by a julge who forgot the position he occupiedmind you, my argument is entirely based upon the admission that these statements can be provedwho failed to remember that he occupied a position which precluded him from becoming a political partisan ; and that being the case, they call upon us to do justice in the premises. Sir, we have had it called in question whether this Parliament has a right to interfere in matters where the administration of justice is concerned. I will not rely upon my own opinion, but like the Minister of Justice, I would ask the House to real and reflect upon the decisions given by the high court of Parliament of Great Britain and the opinions given to that Parliament by some of its most eminent men. Some years ago a resolution was brought into the House of Commons condemning Baron Smith, one of the barons of the Exchequer of Ireland, because he had forgotten hiniself so far in his addresses to the grand juries of some counties as to import strong political matter into these addresses. A resolution was proposed based not in a petition from electors, but emanating from a member of the House, on his responsibility as a member. That resolution condemning Baron Smith, was, in the first instance, carried by a majority of the members of the House of Commons and afterwards reversed by a small minority. Upon that occasion a very eminent man, the late Lord Derby, who was for some years Prime Minister of Great Britain, laid down what the law was in his opinion upon these matters-and I am now speaking upon the one point whether it is proper or inproper for Parliament to interfere at all in these matters, or whether they are to be left to some other tribunal. He says:
" The propriety of the administration of justice is one of interest and importance to all persons in the country, and being so it is a subject that, without false delicacy as without unnecessary interference, this House is bound to watch over as that which is dearest to the country."
Sir, that was the opinion of the most distinguished statesman of Great Britain, and I call upon the Commons of Canada to adopt that opinion in the present case. Here is a case where the propriety of the adininistration of justice has been challenged; here is a case which, above all others, we are called upon, to use the words of that eminent statesman, "to watch over that which is dearest to the country ;" here is a case in which not only the petty pounds, shillings and pence of John Simiths and John Browns are involved, but as to whether the people of a large and important constituency have been cheated outof their rights, one of the most important questions that could engage the attention of Parliament at any time. What do we find in that debate laid down as the proper rule which should guide Parliament in receiving matters of this kind? We find no less an authority than the late Sir Robert Peel laying down the rule which I hold to be clear and explicit. He laid it down in terms which I ain prepared to adopt and which I am prepared to recommend this House to adopt. He said in the same debate :
"We ought to ask ourselves the preliminary question: Is the question a grave one? Does it so far affect the impartiality, the interrity or the moral character of the judges that, if proved, it will justify an appeal to the Crown for his removal?"
I am prepared to adopt that as the rule in this House, and I ask hon. members whether the charge submitted in this petition is a grave one? Do they think the charge, that this constituency has been robbed of its rights (we are not talking as to whether it can le proved, but as to the charge itself, the proof will come afterwards) a grave one: Is the charge that this man sitting here as London's representative has no more right, if the facts stated are true, to sit in this House than has the messenger at the door; that this man is sitting in this House, joining in making the laws, a sworn member of the Privy Council, a member of the Executive Council advising His Excellency the Governor General, a grave one? Is it true that the constitution has been violated, that the judge trying the case has prostituted his judicial position and tainted the ermine? Is the charge a grave one? If so, it comes within the first proposition Sir Robert Peel lays down. Then he asks:
"Does it so far affect the impartiality, the integrity or the moral character of the judge, that if proved it will justify an appeal to the Crown for his removal?"
The question need only to be asked in the British House of Commons to answer itself. Do you think any judge in the United Kingdom would be found guilty of such charges as these laid at the door of Judge Elliott? I do not know whether they are true; I am not assuming they are true. I ani asking that in the case of these grave charges, made by forty-seven representative men, a committe of enguiry should le appointed to see whether there are sufficient grounds for the issue of a commission to try the truth of the charges. I find the charges as follows :-

[^91]And the petitioners went on to express their opinion on the judge's conduct, I care not what their opinion is ; I want to know what is the opinion of the high court of Parliament. Have we fallen so low in this House of Commons, have our party feuds and fights become so bitter, that we are prepared to declare affirmatively in this House that conduct such as is described in this petition, does not merit even enquiry? Great heavens, what can we hope for the country if the Parliament of Canada determine, as it will determine if this motion is voted down, that such a prostitution of the julicial position does not deserve even enquiry at the hands of this court? Arguments need go no further. If you say this judge is right in sneaking into a newspaper office and under an assunted name attacking violently, as this petition says he did, one of the men whose case he had in hand judicially to determine, if you say he was right in trying to excite popular passion and popular prejudice against one of these litigants, if you say he was right in denouncing the man as unworthy and unfit to occupy his seat about which he was to give his judicial determination in a day or two, say so and let the whole County Court judges tliroughont the Dominion know it. Let them know that if they serve one party, the party in power, no enguiry will be permitted into their conduct. You may do that, but you will almost prostitute your position as badly here as Judge Elliott prostituted his position. Are we treating Judge Elliott himself properly : Charges have been made of a very serious character, and if you do not intend to investigate them yon should never have allowed that petition to have gone on file. That petition charges him with conduct which in any other country would not only drive him into ohscurity but cover him with disgrace. You have received the petition. You have placed it on the records of this country. How are you going to treat Judge Elliott? Are you not going to give him any chance to reply? Are you going to say that this charge shall remain on the records of Parliament and this record shall go down to tine immemorial unanswered! You have received the petition and placel it on file, and published it to the world, and you are gring to refuse this man an opportunity of saying whether the charge is true. Talk about age. He will be disgracei. Talk about infamy. Of course he will he considered infamous. The result cannot be anything else, if the charge is true, so long as uprightness and honesty distinguish the bench. When we find the opposite qualities prevail, when we find qualities which would disgrace a western justice of the peace distinguishing a County Court judge of the great Dominion of Canada, and the declaration is made that Parliament should not interfere, are we doing justice in the case? Let me read what a great and distinguished man, the late Lord Derby said, on an occasion of this kind when Parliament had received charges of a serious nature against a judge. He said :
" If not being a member of this House and not having an opportunity of making statements before this House an accosation were preferred agsinst me here, which on the face of it should lead the House to think that they ought to enquire into the conduct. which I had pursued, go. ar from deprecating that enquiry I should implore to be allowed to meet it and I shonld entreat that the House would not leave me under a half expressed rote of censure without a possibility of justification or rindication on my part. Sir, this is the course which I should adopt, and which I think would be adopted by every honourable and high-minded gentleman."
Your ideas of what is right and wrong may differ from those of Lord Derby and the gentlemen who were associated with him, but he laid down a principle which gentlemen, at all events, are in the habit of being guided by. That principle is one underlying the whole course of British justice, that if a charge is made against a man he should have an opportunity of replying to it. You have made yourselves parties to this by receiving the petition and putting it upon your file, and you are bound to give the man implicated an opportunity to reply if you believe in his immocence. But, Sir, I doubt very much whether some hon. gentlemen opposite do believe in his innocence. What a spectacle did we see presented here to-night! A few days ago the hon. gentleman from East Lambton (Mr. Moncrieff) held this House by the half hour denouncing his colleague from West Lambton (Mr. Lister) because he presented this petition and made a speech in support of it, without reading the evidence on which he hoped to support some of the charges. "How dare you," he said, "s speak insupport of your resolution without reading the evidence." Where are your newspaper articles, why do you not read them, and helooked triumphantly when headded "because you have not got any." Now, to-night, when his demand was gratifiel, when what he asked was done, when a few of the articles were real, the Minister of Justice rises, and, with well simulated anger, denounces in the most violent, and I would almost say, unbecoming terms, my hon. friend from North York (Mr. Mulock) for having ventured to take the course which the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Moncrieff) demanded should be taken. I never heard the Minister of Justice speak more severely of an hon. member of this House than he did of the hon. member for York (Mr. Mulock), for having done what the member for East Lambton (Mr. Moucrieff) demanded should be done, or failing which that the case should be thrown out of court. Now, Sir, you have got the petition and these articles read to-night, some of the articles which will be produced in support of the charges which, in my mind, are the most grave and the most serious, and in the face of tisat, if the Government choose to say: we will vote down an enquiry, they will have to do it under the miserable sultelfuge that Parliament has delegated the control over this matter to the Governor in Council, and has no control itself. Sir, if we were impeaching a Superior Court judge, we would do what the hon. gentleman with irony attempted to say to-night the hon. members were doing here ; we would beassailing the judge whom we were going to try. We are not assailing the man we are going to try; we contend for the great coustitutional right of the Commons of Canada to advise the Crown. We say that Parliament has given the Governor in Council the power of instituting an enquiry into the conduct of a County Court judge when he is accused of mishehaviour, and we say that the tribunal above all others that is qualified to advise the Governor General as to whether there is a proper case on which an enquiry should be based, is the House of Commons. We do not say that the charges are true, but we ask for a committee to find out if they are true. If they are not true, let us proclaim it to the world, with the same publicity that we have given to the charge, that we find the charge failed, and let the old man of whom you speak with his seventy years on his shoulders, before he goes to his grave, get the verdict of the House of Commons that he is innocent. But if he has forgotten himself, if he has soiled the ermine, if he has deregarded his position on the bench, if he has sent here a man whom the people did not send, and kept back one whom they did send; then I say whether he is 70 or 79 years let him be punished. I say, Sir, he is a political cowarl, no matter on what side of the House he is, who will shirk from doing his duty in this matter. I say that we are called upon on this occasion to rise above party, and to show that there are some crimes committed against the commonwealth which we will shake hands across the House and unite in punishing. I say that one of these crimes is the prostitution of his office by a judge, I care not whether he is a judge of the Superior or a judge of the County Court. I will not go into the question of whether the julgment of Judge Elliott was right or wrong. I have my own opinion on it and it is not necessiry to express it. I dare say if the judge had given his judg!ent, and had refrained from prostituting his position ly giving to the press and public denunciations of the man against whom he was to give the judgment, he inight have escaped impeachment in this House. But whether his judgment itself was bad or good, it was in defianee of the judgment of the Queen's Bench of Ontario and the Court of Appeal of Ontario, and that in itself would be enough to invite the attention of the House to it. I pronounce ne opinion, but I believe from all the charges mbde against this judge, that we cannot refrain without loss of self respect from asking that an enguiry be instituted.

Mr. Davies (P.E.I.)

[^2]:    " Rude and inacoessilule as is the "sea of mountains" of south-eastern Alaska and furbidding ats it mas appear for ordinars burposes of inland sertlement, it shonhl be remembered that it is a mineral-hearimg resion, the geolugical coutimuation of the sohd ame silver helt of California and Nevala, and may at any time spring into an importance not now calculahle. It is of evident adrantage to bith eountries to asper apon some boundary line capable of survey at a reasonable cust. yet so precisely and bratedeally deseribed, that in ease of need any piven point therenn mis be readily determined in mivatere of a genersl surver, ind to do this, while the whole puestion of lucal values is in aberyance.
    Therefore it is sery important for the two comstries that this question he settled withour furtier delay, in order that we may not have to deal with ditticulties that may later arrise and in order to avoid conticts of individual interests, or contlicts of jurisiliction which may result in retarding or embarrassing the lonating of the line. President Gimat. in his message th (imgress on the bud of Devemher, 1sio. said:

[^3]:    "If these cases of undecided appeals should not appear in some way on the face of the list of voters, the only way the returning officer could have knowledge of them would be by certitying in each polling division a list of the undecided appeals for that division. Do the Franchise and the Election Acts endorse these modes of procedure? I call your attention to these matters so that no responsi bility may rest with me in case of a mistake. As there are 220 unmes appealed, it would be a very serions matter if any mistake should arise, and I would like very much if it were submitted to the Minister of Justice before you proceed to the printing of the lists."

[^4]:    "Such list, after the publication of the last mentioned notice in the Comedre Geqe:tt, shall apply to every election, for such electoral district or purtion of electoral district, taking phace before such appeal has been disposed of and, the result thereof communieated to the revising officer, subject to the provisious of the Dominion Elections Act with respect to the counting of the ballot of any voter whose right to have his name registered as a voter upon any such list and to vote, or the exclusion of whose name from any such list as a voter is the subject of an undecided "ppeal."
    I take it that this provision merely contemplates that when there is an appeal pending as to one's right to rote, he has the right, mitil that appeal is determined, to have his name appear on the list, because both this Act and the Elections Act clearly establish that he has the right to vote while the appeal is pending.

[^5]:    "And the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery shall forthwith correct the same accordingly.'
    Then, if the hon. gentleman is right in his arguments that these $\mathbf{2} 20$ names ought never to have appeared on the list, and Julge Elliott had decided otherwise, how is thislist ever to be corrected, so as to be effectual for the purposes of the election?

[^6]:    " If any such appeal in respect of any person whose name is entered on the poll book as having voted at such election is not decided before the expiration of the said four days allowed for the making of an application for a recount, the time for the making of such application for a recount on the ground of the result of the decision of any appeal shall be extended for and until the expiration of siz days after the decision of any such appeal."
    Why, Sir, if you were to put any other construction on the Act, you would leave a party in an important aase without a remedy, except by the active Mr. Mhas (Bothwell).

The socalled National Policy has been pursued in heroic defiance of all the natural laws that governed the situation. Five millions of Canadians are scattered along 4,000 miles of boundary line. Nearly all of them live within a few miles of that line. A nation of $65,000,000$ of people is on the other side of the artificial barrier. The $5,000,000$ can thrive only in such degree as they can enter freely into the commercial system of their own continent. If the trade barriers were removed, men und capital would frecly flow into the great undeveloped north. So long as the barriers are maintained Canada will drive away her best blood instead of stimulating growth and industrial derelopment."

[^20]:    "We are, however, entering upon a new and increased engagement involving a verg large sum of money. We are entering upon work-we have already done so-which Fill require a large increase of our debt. We have $$ 10,000,000$ to spend on the Intercolonial Railway. We hare $$ 30,000,000$ for the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the canal system which has been accepted by the Government will involve un expenditure of $$ 20,000,000$. These are serious matters inasmuch as they add $$ 60,000,000$ to our existing debt."
    You will notice from that paragraph of Sir Leonard Tilley's speech that the Government of the day was about entering upon laige expenditures of public works; not only "was abont to enter," but, as Sir Leonard said, "had already entered." Now, the expenditure which took place under the Liberal Government afterwards was largely owing to engagements entered into ly Sir John Macdonald previous to the Liberal Administration taking office. The Hon. A. Mackenzie spent during his administration the following sums on the public works portrayed by Sir Leonard Tilley, namely: $$ 17,469,-$ 000 on the canals, $$ 11,000,000$ on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and $$ 5,283,000$ on the Intercolonial RailMr. Macdonald (Huron).

That sum, considering its opportunities in the field of legalized robbery is now regarded as being short of actual requirements. It is to be grently exceeded this. year, and to that end the price of twine for the coming season has been adranced from 3 to 4 cents. Competition has been shat out by the duty, and this is the secret of the trast's unholy raid on the pockets of the wheat growers of the west. But what are the farmers going to do about it? Knowing that the protection afforded the trust by the Government makes the robbery complained of possible, do they intend to vote for a continuance of the fiscal policy that bears so heavily upon them? That is the question. They can easily hreak the trust and similar appendages of a paternal Government by using their franchise in their own interest."
    This is the case in the United States, and, if the statement is correct, that the cordage companies in Canada have been bought out by the large cordage companies in the United States, it will be the duty of the Giovernment to see to this matter. When a

    Now, then they went on to propomil their ileas: it was on the basis of the old reciprocity. Mr. Blaine stid to them:

He proposes that the per capita grant should go into the regimental fund in the case of city corps, who should be in the nature of volunteers, and that the grant to rural corps should go to the men, who should be in the nature of militia. Does the hon. Minister agree with the General in that particular: Is that the policy he is going to adopt? When the McKinley Bill finally passed, it was discovered that its provisions with respect to the reduction of humber duties did not embrace spruce lumber. This difference between proceedings in Parliament and in the ordinary courts has been established upon grounds of public policy and is considered to be fundamentally essential to the efficacy of a parliamentary enquiry, but while the law of Parliament thus demands the disclosure of the evidence, it recognizes to the fullest extent the principle upon which the witness is excused from making such disclosure in the ordinary courts of justice and protects him from the consequence which might otherwise result from his testimony, the rule of Parliament being that no evidence given in either House can be used against

[^55]:    " We have avoided the use of the word 'malice' throughout the draft code, because there is a considerable difference between its popular and its legal meaning. For example, the expression 'malice aforethought' in reference to murder has received judicial interpretation which makes its use positive! y misleading."
    It detines murder, and in cases of rloubt settles what murder is. With that view it defines provocation, which may reduce a homicide from murder to manslanghter. It deals with the offence of higamy, principally for the purpose of removing the doubts which exist now as to the actual state of the law with regard to the periond during which lelief of the decease of the other party to the original marriage may be an exoneration. Questions always arise as to the homen ficles of the helief of that decease by the person who hats acted on the presumption that the decease has occurred; and, following the principle recommended by the Royal Commission, in order to relieve from the crime of ligamy, it makes the decease of the husband or wife of the first marriage absolutely necessary.     Then thearticle goes on and outlines the operations of the combine, and expresses the great satisfaction with which the president of this institution has made his annual statement to this combination. Now, I earnestly hope the Government will, notwithstanding the fact that the resolution was moved as an amendment to the motion to go into Committee of Supply accept the resolution of my Mr McMullen.

Consequently, the profits shown by the financial director's report merely renresent the profits of the mills formerly owned by the company, whereas now its manufacturing capacity has been very largely increased and its earnings should be increased correspondingly.'

[^65]:    "What is the actual cost, including the duty of the American article? We had to import a large quantity for the North-West last year. We could not get it in Canada. We laid it down in Manitoba at about the price we had to pay in Nova Scotia, and daty added. It cost us about the duty extra. The ground of complaint is that although the Americans are paying a duty on it they can afford to offer it to us at less than the Canadian figures. I have been in correspondence with large dealers and they tell us they haye been buying it at the same rates as those who sell to us."
    I sty, Mr. Speaker, that nothing could be clearer than Mr. Masseg's evidence that the Canadian combine had the effect of increasing the price of binder twine, and that he complained of that increase, and that the result of that combine was pre judicial to the interests of the Canadian farmer. I do not quote the eviderice of a man who says "I think" as my hon. friend did with respect to Mr. Morris's statement, that binder twine was cheaper in Canada than on the American side. The interests of Canada demand that we shall have unrestricted reciprocity with the United States. We can only get that by taxing the goods of every nation on the face of the earth except the United States. That is undoubtedly our policy."
    Then also, the New York Tribune, the organ of the Republican party, pointed out, and the extract was republished in Canada, that that was the cardinal feature of any reciprocity treaty that would be possible between the two countries, and the report of the Minister of Finance showed that the two statements, the statement of the member for South Oxford and the statement of the organ of the Republican Administration published in New York, were on a par with, and showed exactly the views of Mr. Blaine and of the Administration of the United States, Now, the hon.

    $\therefore$ The human ear ind mind seem to be especially adapted for the reception of 'evil reports.' For the good we demand proofs many and strong, and unless favourably predisposed remain seeptical in spite of them. Why should it lie so hard for us to think well of others and so easy to believe evil? Is it because we shrink from confessing ourselves inferiors? Is it because the admission implies a reproach? How is it that gnod actions are uninterestine. while failings and wrong-doings carry with them a spice that makes them palatable? Certain it is that evil reports'spread like wildfire through the lenget and breadth of our gussiping society, while the best deeds and noblest efiorts find sofew to do them homage.
    "The rabbis of old denied paradise to those who refrained not from backbiting, and held it better for man to throw himself into a tiery furnace than to commit the sin of lashonhara'-i.e., the evil tongue-and Schiller says in "Don Carlos" that tale-bearers have caused more suffering in the world than poison or dagger in the wurderer's hands."

[^90]:    "In the Court of Appeal to which the case was carried no judgment or costs were given, but three of the judges expressed an opinion that the notices given were sufficient. I entertain an unfeigned respect for opinions expressed by learned judges of that court, and 1 would gladly, if I could, shelter myself from inevitable odiam by conform-

[^91]:    "The said William Elliott, during the said election and while the said appeals were pending before him, contributed editorially and also under an assumed name to the London Free Press newspaper, saticles of a violent and partisan character bearing upon the gaid revision of the voters' list and political questions of the day, and particularly upon the said election of the said electoral district and in support of the cardidature of the said Carling and against the said Hyman.

    After the gaid election and before deciding said appeals the said W:lliam Flliott in strong and violent language denounced the said Hyman and his sapporters and stated to several electors of the said city that the said Carling would certainly get the geat in the House of Commons for the said electoral district."

[^92]:    "See " Collection of Revenues."
