House of Commons Debates.

FOURTH SESSION—EIGHTH PARLIAMENT.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 18th May, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 123) further to amend the Adulteration Act.—(Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière.)

Bill (No. 124) to amend the Inland Revenue Act.—(Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière.)

Bill (No. 125) to amend the Act respecting canned goods.—(Mr. Ellis.)

ADMISSION TO MILITARY SCHOOL, FREDERICTON, N.B.

Mr. McDOUGALL (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

What commanding officer recommended the admission for instruction at the Military School at Fredericton, New Brunswick, of the following persons from the county of Cape Breton : Archibald J. McDougall, Dan. J. McDougall, Hugh P. McKinnon and Francis H. McKenzie ? To what volunteer companies did they belong and how long have they been members of such company ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The information has not been received yet.

MR. D. C. F. BLISS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. What is the position, or what are the positions held by Mr. D. C. F. Bliss in the public service and when was he appointed to it or them?
2. What positions has he held, if any, in the Yukon district ? (a) What, if any, positions does he now hold there ? (b) What salary has been paid him and at what rate in connection therewith ?

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister answered part of this question yesterday, but subsection (b) and section 3, as to what amount of salary has been paid Mr. Bliss since holding a position in the Yukon district and what amount of travelling expenses, he has not answered.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). In addition to the information given yesterday, I may say : That Major Bliss was paid up to June 30th last his salary as second-class clerk at the rate of $1,400 per year. In addition he was paid for the two months, May and June, his pay as major at $115 per month, equal to $230. Since the 30th June last, his salary as second-class clerk has been discontinued and his name removed from the civil service list, and he has been paid by the day at double pay of his rank, equal to $7.80 per day, amounting to $2,371.20. I am unable to give the travelling expenses as there is no separate account in the department, and there will be no separate account for his expenses, except those of his recent trip made to Ottawa, the account for which will come in later on. I will be very glad to give the particulars.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is it possible that that part of the question could be answered by giving the allowance ? Something might have been allowed him for which he would have to account.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I did not observe that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will let the question go, so far as I am concerned. Perhaps the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) can give the information across the floor of the House at some future time.

POLES FOR ST. LAWRENCE TELE-GRAPH LINE.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Is the Government getting out cedar posts for the telegraph line on the north shore of the St. Lawrence ?
2. If so, who has the contract and what is the price per post, and where deliverable ?
3. Were tenders called for ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. Yes. 2. Mr. L. P. DeCourval, of Arthabaska, P.Q., at 85 cents per pole, deliverable at Chicoutimi, St. Alphonse, Grande Baie, St. Alexis, Anse St. Jean, Tadousac or Bergeronnes. 3. Tenders were called for. Four were received, the lowest of which was that of Mr. DeCourval for $1.15 per pole, but the Minister considering the price too high succeeded in having it reduced to 85 cents per pole as stated above.

W. T. O'DONAHUE, OF ROBerval.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Is it true that the Government is paying, or has paid a salary to one W. T. O'Donahue, of Roberval, in the county of Chicoutimi, as caretaker of the dredge in winter quarters at that place
2. If so, what is the amount per day, or per month, paid to that person ?
3. How much has the care of the said vessel cost to date ?
4. Who recommended O'Donahue to the Government for that service ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. Yes. 2. $20 per month. 3. $20. 4. Mr. P. V. Savard, M.P.

CLAIMS OF J. A. CLAREAU.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

Has J. A. Clareau, hotel-keeper, of Chicoutimi, presented, since June, 1896, to the Department of Public Works, through the intervention of J. C. Blais, engineer, claims for timber and other material furnished by him for the construction or repairing of the wharf at Chicoutimi or at Ste. Anne ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Mr. J. A. Clareau has been paid the following sums for timber supplied to the work at Chicoutimi:—1896-97, $246.50 ; 1897-98, $78.50 ; 1898-99, so far, $325.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

timi:—1896-97, $246.50 ; 1897-98, $78.50 ; 1898-99, so far, $325.

LEONCE P. BILODEAU, OF ROBerval.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Has one Léonce P. Bilodeau, of Roberval, been employed by J. C. Blais, superintendent of the construction of wharfs in Chicoutimi, as a carter or otherwise, since June, 1896 ?
2. If so, what sums has he received for his services as a carter, and how much has been paid to him for other services ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. It does not appear that Mr. Léonce P. Bilodeau, of Roberval, has been employed in any capacity.

DR. J. A. DUCHESNE.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Has Dr. J. A. Duchesne, veterinary surgeon, of Chicoutimi, solicited, directly or through others, the work of inspecting cattle for tuberculosis in the county of Chicoutimi, since June, 1896 ?
2. Is it true that he has complained of the fact that Dr. Hall was appointed to do the work in his district ?
3. If so, what were the reasons given to Dr. Duchesne for refusing him the said work ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I may say, Mr. Speaker, that there is a considerable correspondence on this subject in the department which cannot be properly represented by a categorical answer to this question. Therefore, I must ask the hon. gentleman to make a motion for the papers, and I will bring them down at once.

DR. HALL, OF QUEBEC.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Has Dr. Hall, veterinary surgeon, of Quebec, been appointed to inspect cattle for the discovery of tuberculosis, at Hébertville, and elsewhere, in the county of Chicoutimi ?
2. If so, who authorized him to act, and on whose recommendation ?
3. How many herds has he examined ?
4. Is it true that he has been replaced in the work of inspection by one of his brothers ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I must answer this question in the same way as I did the one that immediately preceded it.

WHARFS AT PERIBONKA AND RIVIERE-A-LA-PIPE.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Is it true that P. Pednault, Thos. Tremblay and two others, day labourers, of the town of Chicoutimi, now are or have been employed since the 1st January, 1899, at the construction of the wharfs at Péribonka and Rivière-à-la-Pipe, in Lake St. John district ?

2. If so, what is the price per day paid to each of them, and how much are they paid for travelling expenses and board ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. The department has no means of ascertaining whether any of the men employed on these works come from Chicoutimi. The name of Thomas Tremblay appears for twenty-five days at Péribonka in March, 1899. 2. Twenty-five days at $1.50 ; total, $37.50—no board and no travelling expenses. The name of P. Pednault does not appear.

P. PEDNAULT, OF CHICOUTIMI.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Has Mr. P. Pednault, of Chicoutimi, been employed by the Government since June, 1896, at the construction of wharfs at Chicoutimi, or otherwise ?

2. If so, what amount of money has been paid to him since that date, and what for ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The vouchers in the department do not contain the name of P. Pednault in connection with construction of wharfs at Chicoutimi or otherwise.

NAVIGABILITY OF HUDSON STRAITS.

Mr. ROCHE asked :

1. What was the cost of the expedition sent by this Government to test the navigability of the Hudson Straits ?

2. What action does the Government propose to take on the strength of information obtained by the expedition ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. The cost was $40,141.98. 2. No action is at present contemplated.

PERSONAL EXPLANATIONS—MR. FRED PETERS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Picou). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I regret to say I am obliged to trouble the House, but only for a moment, in regard to a personal matter. I desire to call attention to a misrepresentation of myself and of a gentleman who happens to be connected with me in the profession of law, by a return laid on the Table of the House. I do not remember ever having occasion to refer to a newspaper article before, and the "Globe" correspondent, in regard to matters before the House, I can safely say, so far as I know, has been singularly fair in statements of fact. But, in connection with a return of correspondence about liquor permits with Mr. Frederick Peters, a return was brought down to this House in which, notwithstanding that the House ordered copies of all letters and all telegrams, there was, on the first page of the return, in regard to the most important document that had been discussed in debate, merely a memorandum saying "A private telegram in cipher had been received from Mr. Frederick Peters by Sir Louis Davies"—no date and no particulars—"the answer was as follows"—then follows a telegram without a date. Consequently, the "Globe" is able to infer :

A return placed on the Table of the House this afternoon shows some interesting correspondence that took place between Hon. F. Peters, of Victoria, who is Sir Hibbert Tupper's law partner, and the Federal Government. A private telegram in cipher from Mr. Peters solicited permission for a client to take in a quantity of whisky. To this despatch Sir Louis Davies, to whom it was addressed, answered—

Now, not so much in my own defence, but in justice to Mr. Peters, who happens to be, I suppose, as good a Liberal as there is on the Government side, I desire to say that that statement is false on the representation of Mr. Peters to me, to whom I have spoken on the matter. He could not honourably have had a client at that time. He was not then a partner of mine. I know no more of the matter than this—the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) sent to borrow my personal cipher with Mr. Peters, who, with me, was waiting for a call to the bar of British Columbia. I never was shown either by Mr. Peters or by the Minister a line of that cipher telegram. I never asked as to its contents and never knew as to its contents, whether it was a request for a permit or what it was. It was no more my business than it was the business of any hon. member in this House.

If the insinuation in the "Globe" newspaper was right, Mr. Peters had no right to be called to the bar of the province of British Columbia, as he was not permitted, when waiting for a call, to have clients or deal professionally with matters of that kind. While I am on my feet, and in justice to him, in view of this statement, I may add that having heard what was said in regard to his application, I asked him about it, after the statement was made in this House, and he told me that he had written or communicated that telegram to his old friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries in a purely personal and non-business way, that he had not an interest of a dollar, or a sixpence, let alone being concerned with me in any way, shape or form. Under these circumstances, I again call the attention of the Government to the matter, as I did yesterday, before this misleading statement was put in the paper. I call their attention to it in order to have the return at the earliest possible date. I do not ask to have the contents of that cipher, though I am perfectly ready to have them put with the returns before the House, and, from Mr. Peters' statement to me, there is not a word of that telegram that cannot see the light of day. But the dates are important, for he was not my partner until July, 1898, and these telegrams were sent in February, while I was here attending to my business in the House, and he was at Victoria, B.C. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have done everything I could. I moved in my place for returns, and I have called attention to them across the floor of the House. I handed the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) a memorandum of those that I am urgently in need of for the preparation of very important work to be brought to the attention of the House of Commons; and I have to say, that I shall regret exceedingly, if it becomes my duty, to-morrow or any subsequent day when the House is moved into Supply, to take up considerable time in discussing the nature of all these requests and all these motions, and the reasons at large why I want them.

QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. McMULLEN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I think the House would like to learn from the Government, as early as possible what they intend to do with regard to the adjournment for Queen's birthday, next Wednesday. Probably, the members would like to know in order that they may make their arrangements. Monday is private members' day, and I notice that a large portion of the notices of motion have been run over two or three times. Tuesday is Government day, and, of course, if there was an adjournment given, say from Friday night till Thursday, we might, if the Government were disposed, take the following Saturday in place of Tuesday. That would give the members an opportunity of going home. Of course, if we took the following Saturday in place of Tuesday, no time would be lost. I think it would be well that we should learn the intention of the Government on this point as early as possible.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I would like to say, that there is a great deal of force in what the hon. gentleman has said. The Government would lose no time; the only day that would be lost would be a private day, and, as private business is pretty well advanced, we would probably be on Saturday quite as far advanced without putting members on both sides of the House to the inconvenience that would naturally follow a meeting for a single day.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). This is a matter as to which the Government would be disposed to yield largely to the views of the House. At the present time I must say, that I had not contemplated any such step, and I have just given notice of the usual holiday on the Queen's birthday. But members can think it over, and, if our friends in the Opposition can give us some assurance that we will proceed with the business, we might agree to the proposition.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Assuming that the return will be brought down.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am afraid that no returns will satisfy my hon. friend. At all events, we will let the matter stand until eight o'clock.

THE INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION.

Mr. N. C. WALLACE (West York). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call the attention of the hon. the Prime Minister to a despatch appearing in to-day's Montreal "Gazette," with reference to the meetings and the proceedings of the International Commission. I will read a brief extract or two :

It can be stated that if the commission re-convenes it will only do so upon a complete abandonment of the old basis, which proved to be unsuitable to the erection of a complete agreement, and the United States Government will have some sort of assurance in advance of the nature and degree of the concessions that may be expected from the other side, the lack of which, it is said, caused the failure of the first negotiations. The negotiations have taken a new turn by the suggestion that the Alaskan boundary question be submitted to arbitration, independent of the other issues involved, thus leaving the commission free to resume its work on the many other pending questions.

Then, I read, in another despatch :

It has now been ascertained that when the commission adjourned, Sir Julian Pauncefote, the British Ambassador at Washington, and Secretary of State Hay had a conference at which it was decided that the topics under consideration by the commission should form the subject of private negotiations between the Ambassador and the Secretary, with the understanding that if a settlement was reached its details should be communicated to the commission, and formally promulgated as the official conclusion of its members. The negotiations have progressed steadily, and since Sir Julian Pauncefote's return to London, have made unusual rapid headway, as the Ambassador is able to consult daily with Lord Salisbury and Mr. Chamberlain concerning all questions of interest to the Foreign and Colonial Offices.

I would like to ask the First Minister, if it is true, that arrangements have been made for a commission to be appointed to settle the Alaskan boundary, and if the statements made in this despatch are correct.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have to say to my hon. friend, that the Montreal "Gazette" is evidently astray. The question is to-day in the same position that we left it at Washington. When we left it at Washington, as it has been stated on the floor of the House, and I can repeat now, substantial progress had been made upon most of the questions submitted to the commission, with the single exception of the Alaskan boundary. On that question, as the House knows, we could not come to an agreement, we could not agree to accept the terms which were laid down by our American fellow-commissioners, and we referred the matter to the two Governments interested, which have had it in hand ever since.

THE CASE OF MR. CHRISTIE.

Mr. ROCHE. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I move :

That all the papers brought down to the House relating to the case of Mr. Christie, lately an officer in the Inland Revenue Department at Winnipeg, be referred to the Committee on Public Accounts.

Mr. SPEAKER. This motion should be made under the head of motions.

Mr. FOSTER. That is true, but the committee are very eagerly waiting to be called together, and this business will be taken up at the first meeting.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have no objection ; but this is not the proper time.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is only by consent.

Motion agreed to.

FRIENDLY SOCIETY INSURANCE.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Two or three weeks ago, the Minister of Finance introduced a Bill dealing with the question of friendly society insurance. Since that time, we notice in the public press that the Canadian Fraternal Association, which represents all these societies, have made certain representations to the department over which the hon. gentleman presides. It has also been stated in the public press that the local Government of the province of Ontario have made representations, presumably upon the question of the powers of this Parliament to deal with the question referred to in the Bill. These matters have, no doubt, been under the consideration of the Government. The matter is of considerable importance to a great number of these societies, and, if the Bill is to be pressed, they desire to call their members together, and I should like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding), whether the Government have yet formed a policy upon this question, as to whether they intend to proceed this year with the Bill or not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to avail myself of the hon. gentleman's question to make a statement upon the subject. It is correct, as the hon. gentleman has said, that I was waited upon by a deputation representing fraternal organizations, who stated to me that before further action on the Bill they desired an opportunity of calling their various bodies together to consider its provisions. It was represented that the calling of special meetings of these societies would entail considerable expense. In consideration of that I have decided not to proceed with the Bill during the current year. An announcement will be sent to-day to the gentleman at the head of the deputation which did me the honour to wait on me upon the subject. As to the second question of my hon. friend, I may say that the Government of Ontario did make representations on the subject touching the constitutionality of the measure. I think that they have some erroneous impression as to the aim and intention of the Bill. However, as we are not to proceed with it this session, no good purpose could be served by going into that question.

ST. LAWRENCE CHANNEL.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnois). Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to call the attention of the Government to a matter of very great importance. We saw by the papers the other day that the steamer "Gallia," belonging to the Allan Line, has already gone ashore, and although I have no doubt, from the report I have seen, that it is not the fault of the buoys or the channel, still, I think it is about time to find out from the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), whether he has come to any agreement with the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), as to which department the work of protecting this channel belongs—the Department of Marine and Fisheries or the Department of Public Works. I understand that it has been under the management of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I do not want, at this present moment, to remind my hon. friend that the contract seems to have been carried out better in years gone by than it was last year, but the only point that I now wish to bring to his notice is as to whether he has come to arrangement or an agreement with the hon. Minister of Public Works as to the future way of giving that contract. Last year was a most disastrous year for the trade between Montreal and Quebec. I think about fourteen vessels went ashore or went astray due to the placing of buoys in bad places.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). No, not due to the placing of the buoys.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). The ships drew too much water.

Mr. BERGERON. This remark has nothing to do with the "Gallia," I think. I am only drawing my hon. friend's attention to the matter, because the trade of Montreal has been much interested in it. Last year was a most disastrous one, and when the trouble has commenced so early this year it is time that my hon. friend, or his department, should consider whether his department or the Department of Public Works are responsible for seeing that such disasters do not occur again.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I cannot see that disasters will not occur again. All I can see is that everything is done, so far as the Department of Marine and Fisheries is concerned, to make the best use of these aids to navigation. The "Gallia" is ashore very far away from the channel, altogether out of her course, and I am sorry to say, from the report I received this morning, that the prospects of her getting off are not as good as I had hoped they would have been. The water is falling, and there are a very few feet of water at her prow. How she got so far out of her course I cannot understand. No inquiry has been made, but it is alleged by the pilot that the vessel would not answer her helm, and it is alleged by others, according to the officer, whose report I have received, that the steering gear would not work. Efforts were made yesterday to get her off and they are being repeated to-day by a number of tugs and other boats. As to the buoying of the St. Lawrence channels there is no dispute, nor has there been, between the Public Works Department and the Department of Marine and Fisheries. The work was let last year, and although many complaints have been forwarded—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. To the old contractors?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is a pity.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I called for tenders, and, of course, I had to accept the lowest tender.

Mr. BERGERON. You are not bound to do it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The discrepancy between the tender I accepted and that of the old contractors was large. Sincennes & McNaughton were the old contractors, and Mr. Kane, of Quebec, was the contractor for last year. Although there was a good deal of talk in the newspaper press as to the manner in which he carried out his contract, my officers are not able to state very serious grounds of complaint. The commercial body of Montreal did not seem satisfied unless the contract was taken hold of by the department, and, as we are anxious to comply with their wishes, the work this year will be carried out by the department, and under the direct supervision and responsibility of the officers of the department.

Mr. BERGERON. Which department?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Marine and Fisheries Department. Effective measures are being taken to ensure the buoys being laid down properly so that there will be no ground of complaint at all. I have not heard any complaints this year. The officer who was in the employ of Sincennes & McNaughton will be engaged in this work. A steamer was built last year, specially for the purpose, which I propose to purchase from Mr. Kane, of Quebec, and I will ask for a grant to enable me to pay for it. Col. Anderson will have direct charge of the work, which will be carried on under Mr. Fraser, the engineer. We have also the officer who for years has done the practical part of the work, and whose services we are retaining.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is the estimated cost of the work?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We do not assume that the cost of the work will be greater than it was before, but there will be some extra expense for the reason that the anchors used for anchoring the buoys were said to be dangerous to ships, and we are substituting new and improved anchors. There will also be a number of new buoys, erected at the request of the Montreal commercial and insurance bodies. In point of fact, I may say, everything is being done which they desired to be done, in regard to new lights and new buoys being put wherever they desired them, and everything that possibly can be done. There is nothing reasonable that they think we should supply that is not supplied.

Mr. BERGERON. I am glad to hear that, because, I think, it is the best economy. It is better to spend some money and see that these disasters are avoided.

I. C. R.—EXTENSION TO MONTREAL

The House went into committee to consider a certain resolution respecting the Drummond County Railway.—(Mr. Blair.)

(In the Committee.)

Mr. J. G. HAGGART (South Lanark). Mr. Chairman, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) in introducing this resolution, the other day, spoke of the policy of the Government in reference to this extension, and in support of that policy referred to some remarks which I had made some time ago in the House, and also to my evidence before the committee that was appointed to inquire into this expenditure. At first I intend to spend a few moments for the purpose of considering this policy. As I stated before, in the House, in 1894, I ordered inquiries to be made by my department to find out what the cost would be of the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. My reasons, as I stated then in the House at that time, for doing this, were that, on account of the difficulties which I had continually with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and with the Grand Trunk Railway Company on account of the want of connections between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Intercolonial Railway at Point Lévis, the state of affairs was becoming intolerable, and I thought it would be in the interest of the country that means should be taken for the purpose of remedying it.

Before going into that question it may be well to consider the arrangement we had with the Canadian Pacific Railway. The Minister (Mr. Blair) declared the other night, that it was, perhaps, the most infamous arrangement that ever was entered into by a Government. He did not hold me exactly responsible, because the arrangement was made by Sir John Macdonald when Minister of Railways in 1890, but as the successor of that gentleman, I adopted the policy and became responsible for it. Mr. Speaker, I may state to this House that I am responsible for it in every respect, and the statement made by the Minister of Railways cannot be borne out by the document which I have at present in my hand. I intend to dwell particularly on that point, as, perhaps, that arrangement was one of the reasons which entered into the consideration of the policy of extending the road. The hon. Minister (Mr. Blair), in speaking of that arrangement, said, as reported in "Hansard":

There was one provision under which the Government of Canada or the Department of Railways solemnly and firmly bound itself to observe, through its officers and employees: absolute neutrality between the Canadian Pacific Railway and its own line.

I need not tell you that there is not a word of that in the agreement.

Under that contract the Canadian Pacific Railway had the right to go into Intercolonial Railway territory anywhere from St. John to Halifax, or along that branch of the line and its connections, to send its agents and employees to solicit business for that line.

The Intercolonial Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway, or any other railway on the continent of America, has that right. That is no extraordinary power at all. I asked the Minister:

Mr. HAGGART. Can you not do that to-day? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) said:

I will tell the hon. gentleman before I get through just what can be done to-day. The Canadian Pacific Railway had the right under that contract to send their agents to solicit that business for the Canadian Pacific Railway short line from St. John to Montreal in preference to its going by the Intercolonial Railway via Moncton and Lévis, and under this agreement the Government of Canada solemnly bound itself with the Canadian Pacific Railway so that the employees of the Government could not solicit business.

I gave the most emphatic denial to any such statement, and said:

Mr. HAGGART. There is nothing of this kind in the agreement.

Nor is there, Mr. Speaker. However, the Minister said:

I do not think it would be possible to imagine any more humiliating position for the Government or our railway to be in than that which I have depicted. Just imagine the employees, our paid agents, who would naturally have an interest in seeing us do the business, in seeing the business come over our own road, the long haul to Montreal, rather than leave it at Moncton to then take the Canadian Pacific Railway to the west, not caring to make an appeal to the patrons of our road to send their business over it, but being compelled to stand by and allow our road to be run down and all sorts of representations to be made derogatory to it without being allowed to open their mouths in dissent, under the penalty of being charged with violating the compact entered into.

And there is a lot more talk to that effect. Let me read the agreement which bears upon that particular point, and let us see how much support that agreement gives to the observations made by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair). Here is the part of the agreement which refers particularly to that :

The Minister of Railways and Canals shall use every endeavour to cause the station agents or local ticket and freight agents at stations on the line of the Intercolonial Railway east of St. John, excepting St. John, except as hereinafter provided, to be strictly neutral as between the Canadian Pacific Railway via St. John, N.B., and other lines competing with it, and to way-bill freight and sell tickets by such of these routes as may be indicated by shippers or passengers.

A subsequent clause says :

Either party shall be free to employ such canvassing agents as it may see fit, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall be free to establish such agencies at points on the Intercolonial Railway east of St. John as its interests may require ; provided, however, that should it establish agencies for the sale of tickets and canvassing for freight at points on the Intercolonial Railway east of St. John where other lines of railway competing with the Canadian Pacific Railway, via Point Lévis or Chaudière Junction, have not established similar agencies, the preceding clause as to neutrality shall not apply to such points ; but if the Government or any railway company competing with the Canadian Pacific Railway via Point Lévis or Chaudière Junction, shall likewise establish such agencies at the same points the conditions as to neutrality shall be observed by the station agents, local ticket and freight agents of the Intercolonial Railway at such stations.

This agreement was made in 1890. It was the policy of the Conservative Government at that time to draw as much traffic as they could to Halifax. Their object was to give close connection to the Grand Trunk Railway, and to induce the Canadian Pacific Railway to make its terminal point at Halifax to the sea-coast. In order to do that the Canadian Pacific Railway said : What is the use of us looking for freight at the points were Nova Scotia and New Brunswick ; and transatlantic freights. The Government said to them : We will maintain our own rates for freight and passengers, and the control of them both local and otherwise over our own line, and any arrangements which you can make for freight, taking it over the road on these conditions, we are perfectly agreeable to. We made such freight and passenger arrangements with the Canadian Pacific Railway—and the Grand Trunk Railway had a contract similar at the same time—that I hope the hon. gentleman's present traffic arrangements will be at least equal to them. If they are they will be satisfactory. Now, as to the statement made by the hon. Minister (Mr. Blair). I wonder how he could come to make such a statement when he has an interpretation of these two clauses, and an opinion upon these two clauses in his own department, from the then Minister of Justice, Sir John Thompson, as to the liability of the Intercolonial Railway, as to what the Intercolonial Railway employees had a right to do under the circumstances. What we stated was simply this : That when two railway companies, the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, had established agencies at any point on the Intercolonial Railway, that the Intercolonial Railway authorities should be perfectly neutral between them ; and that if the Grand Trunk Railway should not establish agencies on the Intercolonial Railway in opposition to the Canadian Pacific Railway, we had the right to establish agencies ourselves for the purpose of taking passengers over our long route. What is there, then, to complain about ? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) had an opportunity of terminating that agreement. The agreement lasted only for seven years, and he has given a year's notice, and why does he not at the end of the year, when the notice has expired, put a termination to this agreement. I will tell you why, Mr. Speaker, it is because it is not possible for him to make with the Canadian Pacific Railway, or any other railway company, a better arrangement. He will be obliged, in the interests of Nova Scotia, and of the eastern provinces, to see that communication is kept up with St. John and Halifax.

If he does not accede to the traffic arrangement which Sir John Macdonald entered into in 1890, he will not be able to make terms with the Canadian Pacific Railway for carrying on business ; and, if he terminates that agreement, he will run the risk that the traffic now carried to St. John by the Canadian Pacific Railway will find a port of exit outside of our own country, and the hon. gentleman and this House will find, when they come to consider this question at the next meeting of Parliament, that no more favourable arrangement can be made with the Canadian Pacific Railway than at present exists.

Now, as to the policy which I adopted, which the hon. gentleman cites in support of his scheme, let me say a word. I had continual trouble with the connections made with the Grand Trunk Railway. They did not seem to care a bit about their connections with the Intercolonial. Passengers arriving at Lévis found themselves delayed for an hour, perhaps, before the Grand Trunk train would start for Montreal. The Grand Trunk Railway Company had not agents in Nova Scotia or New Brunswick looking after freight. The Canadian Pacific Railway agents were far more intelligent, industrious and active, and the consequence was that freight was being diverted around by St. John instead of being sent over our own road. Efforts were made to obtain better arrangements with the Grand Trunk Railway, but they appeared utterly indifferent. If the Grand Trunk Railway had had its present active management, there would have been no necessity for those efforts or for making the connection. For some time I considered the matter. I ordered my deputy to inquire what would be the cost of making the connection. I got figures from him; but, after considering the question for a couple of years, I abandoned the project. I will say for my colleagues that I only consulted one or two—I think the Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster), who was greatly opposed to it, and Mr. Ives, who was favourable to it. I never had even a consultation with the rest of the Cabinet on the subject. So that, however much I am bound by the policy of the present Minister of Railways in regard to an extension of some kind to Montreal from Lévis, the late Government were in no way bound to it.

What was open to the hon. gentleman, then, when he decided on making a connection with Montreal? There were three or four routes open to him. There was the Grand Trunk via Richmond to Point Lévis. There was the road he has adopted via Ste. Rosalie to Chaudière Junction. There was the South Shore road, with the connection from Montreal to Sorel, on which subsidies have been paid, and on a part of the line from Sorel to Point Lévis. There was also the connection of the North Shore road when it was finished, and when we have the bridge across the St. Lawrence at Quebec, which I suppose we may look for in the near future, if these hon. gentlemen keep the promises they made on that subject when in Opposition. We have also the promise of the Minister of Public Works and the hon. member for Nicolet (Mr. Leduc), that subsidies will be granted to the South Shore road; and the Minister of Public Works says: "My promise, gentlemen, is as good as gold, and the Government will give assistance for the extension of that road from Sorel to Lévis." I am glad the Government did not consider the connection by the Grand Trunk via Richmond to Point Lévis, because if we had to pay for that in proportion to what we have to pay for the line from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal, the Grand Trunk would have received a sum of money that would have built two Grand Trunk railways of that length. The hon. gentleman has adopted the route from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal; and of all the bargains that a Parliament of this country ever considered, to use the hon. Minister's own language, the two most vile and infamous ones were that made for the lease of the Drummond County Railway and that for the use of the Grand Trunk line from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal. Let me deal with regard to the bargain made for the lease of the Drummond County Railway. Let me read the two bargains which the hon. gentleman made at different times, and let us compare the one with the other. Here is the lease and agreement made on the 15th day of May, in the year 1897, between Mr. J. N. Greenshields, the President of the Drummond County Railway, and Andrew G. Blair, Minister of Railways and Canals. This is one of the provisions:

That the company, for the consideration aforesaid, will build and finish, according to the Intercolonial Railway standard, the uncompleted portion of its main line at or near Forestdale—

The distance between Ste. Rosalie Junction and Chaudière Bridge is 115 miles, and the distance from Chaudière to a place called Moose Park is 43 miles, but the contract is for eight miles more, or 51 miles, which was to be the new portion of the road.

—to the western side of the Chaudière River, subject to the satisfaction and approval of the Government railway engineer, on or before the 1st day of November, 1897, and will lay the road-bed of the said uncompleted portion of its line hereby agreed to be constructed with new steel rails of not less than 70 pounds weight per yard for the same distance, and as part of such construction will make all proper and necessary connections with the main line of the Grand Trunk Railway at or near the west end of the Chaudière Bridge to the like satisfaction of the Engineer of Government Railways, and will, in connection with the said construction, construct and finish all proper and necessary station buildings, stations, sidings, switches, tanks, buildings, coal sheds, cattle guards, crossings and other necessary appurtenances, as required by the Minister, and to the satisfaction of the Engineer of Government Railways, and according to such plans as shall be furnished on the request of the company by the Department of Railways and Canals.

With regard to the uncompleted portion, this is the agreement:

That the company will, in the construction of the uncompleted portion of its line, construct the same to the satisfaction of the Government engineer and with a uniform grade of 52·80 per mile, and in addition on the line already constructed will reduce the grades at Carmel Hill and at the St. Francis River to a maximum grade of 52·80 per mile.

The part of the road from Forestdale to Chaudière was to be constructed up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway, and the constructed portion from Ste. Rosalie to Forestdale was to be left as it was, except that these two gradients were to be changed. There is not a word about the $1,600,000; there is not a word in that agreement about the deduction of the money which was given in the form of a subsidy for the completion of the road; there is not a word of the expenditure on that completed portion for the purpose of bringing it up to what the officers of the department thought was then the required standard. Let me make a contrast between the two agreements. Here is the subsequent agreement which we had such difficulty in obtaining, and which we have not yet all produced before the House, but only the extracts that appeared before the Railway Committee.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The whole agreement was before that committee.

An hon. MEMBER. Where is it now ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was handed in to the committee.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It has not been printed and distributed.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister said last session that the agreement had been put before the committee. It was to all intents and purposes. All the clauses which were necessary to include in the report were included.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that only a certain portion of the clauses of that contract were furnished to the committee last year.

Mr. HAGGART. No, what I said, or intended to say, was this, that a copy of the agreement was before the Committee of Inquiry last year ; and in the report of the evidence all the important clauses that were worth printing are printed. But the hon. gentleman, that same session, promised to lay the agreement upon the Table. We wanted to see the original, because when we saw the original of the agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway last year, we found that the hon. gentleman had made no agreement at all. He put in the word "east" instead of "west" and maintained in the House that that was correct ; but when he went back to the department he found he was entirely wrong. It has always hitherto been the custom of the House, when these matters are discussed, to have not copies of the agreements but the originals themselves on the Table. Let me, anyway, show the distinction and difference between the two contracts, in order to justify, from the hon. gentleman's own words and documents, the action of this House, not only with regard to this particular arrangement, but the more infamous arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway :

That Her Majesty shall and will ask Her Parliament of Canada, at the present session thereof, for an appropriation sufficient to enable Her Majesty to continue this lease for a year from the 30th day of June next, upon the same terms, provisos and conditions as are herein contained. That it is agreed by the said company that it shall be optional with Her Majesty, her successors and assigns, subject to the ratification of Parliament, at any time during the term hereby granted, or any renewal or continuation thereof, to purchase the said line and branch lines, and the said other rights, interests and property (not including rolling stock), absolutely and free from all incumbrance, at and for the price and sum of one million six hundred thousand dollars ($1,600,000), from which sum is to be deducted all amounts paid or entitled to be paid under the Subsidy Act, 60-61 Vic., chap. 4, and all amounts remaining unexpended or unpaid by the company in improving the said railway upon the works hereafter specified.

The third clause states :

That the company shall and will immediately, as soon hereafter as the season will admit thereof, lay out and expend a sum of money amounting to not less than one hundred thousand dollars ($100,000) upon such portions of the said line of railway and upon such works.

Look at the difference between the two of these. Capitalize the payments which were to be made under the agreements of 1897, and they amount to nearly $2,100,000, but under this agreement the hon. gentleman asks for $1,600,000 and besides deducts from that amount the subsidies that he is paying to this road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether, in making the criticism he is now making, it is at all material to know that there was no subsidy promised, arranged or contemplated until after that agreement was defeated by Parliament ?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not know that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I know it.

Mr. HAGGART. I want to show the difference between the two. He was to complete the road for a certain annual allowance.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How could you deduct the subsidy when one was not promised ?

Mr. HAGGART. We had an agreement to give it anyway in 1897. It might have been afterwards that it was granted.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Certainly it was.

Mr. HAGGART. I think a subsidy was likewise granted for a portion before 1897. I am sure of it, because I read it in the Subsidy Act myself.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It was not in force. It had expired.

Mr. HAGGART. Then they only renewed the subsidy. There was also a subsidy granted by the local government, which had not expired, but which the local government had legislated itself out of. Not only does the hon. gentleman pay $400,000 less under this agreement, but he deducts the subsidy and we cannot find out what amount of subsidy has been paid. He says it is all paid. Whether it is $100,000 or $123,000 I do not know. But the amount, whatever it is, is to be deducted, also the amount to be expended on the completed portion of the road, according to his engineer's estimates, in order to bring up the standard of the road that is under contract to the specification of the Intercolonial. It required $35,000 to do that, and that left $65,000 to be expended on the completed portion of the road. The bargain which he has made at present is better than the former one by $400,000, and also by the amount of subsidy he has paid, plus the $65,000, which he has not to expend on the completed portion of the road. Could there be a greater justification for the opposition by this Parliament to the scheme, for the rejection of it by the Senate, than he has presented himself. He said quite naively and innocently, in introducing his Bill: We calculated the interest on the amount of subsidy at a basis of 4 per cent and that would only realize $1,600,000. But we got Mr. Fitzgerald to calculate it, as we were paying the money, and what was the value he put on it? By the estimate made by the Department of Finance, the value was $2,100,000. Yet the hon. gentleman asks us to accept the value estimated by the company itself. He said: Oh, this is merely an interpretation of the old arrangement, of the arrangement of last year, but here is the value that the company itself puts upon the payments made to it.

Those are the simple facts of the case. I have here the agreement as it was in 1897, and as it was in 1898, and there is another part of it of which we have not had any information. We are proceeding in this debate without the contract or specifications being brought down, without the report of the engineer as to whether the road is finished, as to whether the subsidized portion of it is finished or not, or as to what standard it has been completed. There is no report brought down to this House of the expenditure of this $100,000 upon the road. Nor do we know the amount of subsidy that has been paid by the hon. gentleman in this transaction. We are voting entirely in the dark. Just fancy a road, nearly 80 miles of which was completed in 1890, an option upon which was hawked from one end of the country to the other, for $500,000, and that included what the hon. Minister has not got in his bargain, the rolling stock, which the engineers of his department estimated at a value of $45,000, which was included in the offer of $500,000. The road was offered to me for $500,000, and it was offered to others for a far less sum. I have an agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway in my possession which shows that it was offered to that company for 35 per cent of the earnings of the road—and that would not have realized one-third of the amount which the hon. Minister has given. It is notorious that this railway was virtually a bankrupt concern, that it was indebted to the Eastern Townships Bank for $156,000, and to others in different parts of the country, $20,000, making a total liability of $176,000. And the owners, I believe, would be glad to have taken the sum of, say, $50,000, or say, $75,000, or say, $100,000, which they never expected to realize, and not one tithe of which they ever put into the road. The hon. gentleman says we have the sworn testimony before the commission as to the expenditure of over $2,000,000 on the road. What was the expenditure? Mr. Fee, Mr. Church and Mr. Mitchell, we are told, subscribed $133,000, or a total of $400,000, which was the capital in the first place. Is there a person in this country, except the Minister of Railways and Canals, so innocent as to suppose that these gentlemen put up $133,000 in cash? If there is such a man in this country, I do not think there is one in this House. Any one acquainted with modern railway building knows that they never did any such thing. With great difficulty we got from the book-keeper the statement that before they could proceed, under the law, $40,000 in cash had to be paid up, and he says he thinks he is positive that the $40,000 in cash was paid up. It calls for a considerable amount of faith on the part of any one acquainted with railway promotion to believe that even $40,000 in cash was put up by the parties who built the road. The fact of the matter is that the road now handed over to the Government, had been built out of the subsidies from the Dominion and provincial Governments and municipalities, and the balance showed the amount of credit, $176,000, which they had managed to obtain. No person who is acquainted with railroad building would suppose that Mr. Church put $133,000 in cash into this undertaking, or that Mr. Fee, or Mr. Mitchell did it either. But the calculation of the hon. Minister is founded upon the assumption that they did. According to the hon. Minister, this road cost $2,000,000, and even if you deduct the amount of bonuses, you take away only $400,000. And he says it is not right to deduct these bonuses, that there may be something in it, but that they should not be deducted altogether. Why, then, did he consider it in his new bargain and make it one of the conditions that the bonuses these gentlemen had received for building the road should be returned to the Government? Look at the nice time they had in the extension of the road. I have not found out from the Minister yet whether the amount due to them for subsidies was taken from the amount expended in the repairs of the road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The hon. gentleman has not found that out, because he has not taken the trouble to ask.

Mr. HAGGART. I think we should have it before the House. Let us hear the facts.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have been endeavouring to furnish, as far as I possibly could anticipate his wants, the information that the hon. gentleman would require. But my limited capabilities has not suggested to me that he was going to ask a question of that kind.

An hon. MEMBER. You do not know, then?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister cannot tell.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) will tell me what he wants to know, I shall be glad to get him the information.

Mr. HAGGART. There is an amount of subsidies paid in the four months up to the end of 1898, and the amount of subsidies paid since then; and we do not know whether they were paid beside the bonus of $123,000 and the $100,000 expended in building the road. These gentlemen have entered into a contract for the extension of the road from Forestdale to Chaudière Junction. Though they had an agreement with the Government they were by no means certain that such an infamous agreement would pass the Parliament of the country. They wanted to know that they would have some money for the extension of the road. Under the first agreement they entered into, in 1897, they got, I suppose, the subsidies—for I have heard no denial—they got $123,000 in bonuses and the Minister comes to their relief with the expenditure of $100,000. Thus they have at least $223,000 at the hands of the Government, because that is the advance to them by the Government of the country for the purpose of carrying out the Drummond Railway arrangement. These are the principal features of the transaction.

This 115 miles of road is built over a comparatively level country from Ste. Rosalie to the Chaudière Junction, passing, as the Minister tells us, through a populous country well settled the whole way. But one of the witnesses before the committee, when asked what the character of the road was and whether it was equal to the Intercolonial Railway, said the fencing was not as good. When asked in what respect the fencing was not up to the standard, he said there were twenty miles along the road where there was no fencing at all. The Minister of Railways and Canals put it to the witness: Do you know that that is a country in which there is not a single settler, a wooded country? And yet, in introducing his resolution he told us that there was a magnificent country along the whole road.

The Minister makes a comparison between the purchase of this road and the purchase made by my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, the present leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), of the road from Rivière du Loup to Point Lévis. He states that the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) paid $14,000 a mile for that road, while he got this road for less than that. He says that the road purchased by the present leader of the Opposition was in a degraded state; that the country had to spend large sums to bring it up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway. But he forgot to mention—and he knew it—that the object in taking over that road from the Grand Trunk Railway was not merely to secure connection with Quebec, but that one of the conditions was that the money obtained was to be used to build a connection for the Grand Trunk from Detroit to Chicago, and to double the track between Toronto and Montreal. The hon. gentleman says that that was not in the arrangement. If he will look to the Grand Trunk Act of 1884, one of the conditions of the arrangement related to the securities of the Grand Trunk Railway. A certain set of the securities were to be applied towards doubling the track between Montreal and Toronto. I heard the debates in the House. I heard my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition introducing the resolution into the House, and stating that these two conditions were the conditions of the purchase of that road, and comparing the road, such as it is from Rivière du Loup to Point Lévis, with the portion of the road from Ste. Rosalie to Forestdale, built under a subsidy contract, but not finished up to the subsidy contract. The only difference the hon. gentleman made in the contract was, that the two grades were to be reduced to 52 feet, as embodied in every subsidy contract, and the part to be finished was to be finished under a subsidy contract with the Government, plus this arrangement that was afterwards to be worked up to the standard of the Intercolonial. That is the contract that he made in reference to this road.

Now, there are some very suspicious circumstances about the sale of this road. The negotiations for this road were made in January, 1897; the contract was virtually completed in February, 1897; the Order in Council was passed by the Government in March, 1897. Let me draw your attention to some peculiar occurrences that took place in February, 1897. A debate took place in the House on June 26th in reference to the cheque which was received by the Minister of Public Works. The Minister of Public Works is not in the House, and I will not discuss the matter, but only read his statement before the committee. I will also read the affidavit of Mr. Greenshields in reference to it, and let the House and the country draw their inference. This is what the Minister of Public Works said, as reported on page 5302 of the Debates, June 26th, 1897:

I arranged that Mr. Greenshields, who was my lawyer in many other cases, should act as the purchaser of "La Patrie," as the lawyer of the party. They speak of a cheque which Mr. Greenshields gave. There is no secret about it. Mr. Greenshields had a cheque in his hands, not of his own money, but of the money of the party, and he paid that cheque. Let an inquiry take place, and all this shall be proved. Every private act of ours is scrutinized; our private affairs are no longer private. We are treated as if we were thieves and knaves.

Mr. Greenshields gave evidence in reference to that before the committee. He said:

I think the first official interview I had for the sale of this road with the present Government or any—because I had no interview with the other Government—was one time when Mr. Hays, Mr. Wainwright and I came to Ottawa, after the return of Mr. Blair from the coast. I conducted the negotiations for the leasing of this road with Mr. Blair alone. I did not discuss the terms of the matter with any other Minister of the Crown. It has been stated that Mr. Tarte had to do with it. He had nothing to do with it. No part in these negotiations were between Mr. Tarte and myself.

Mr. Greenshields, in his evidence before the committee, stated that he had contributed funds for the party, that he had advanced his cheque, that $5,000 of it was given one day, and the other $15,000 was given the next day. The Minister of Public Works also gave evidence before the committee, in which he said :

You say that Mr. Greenshields had a cheque in his hands, not that he gave you an accommodation cheque, but that he had a cheque in his hands, not of his own money, but of the money of the party?—A. My answer is that I did not think it proper to say everything in the House—

He was not making a breast of it in the House.

—then, because Parliament was just closing, and I knew right well that if I had said that Mr. Greenshields had given his own cheque, and it was paid the next day, that the Tory press would have lied just as much as they would have been able to. I said what was true, but I did not give out the whole thing. It is perfectly true that he loaned his cheque, that he paid that cheque, and that it was not his money.

Now, the Minister of Public Works is perfectly aware of the transactions between the Government and the Drummond County Railway Company. All the negotiations occurred in January, 1897, this cheque business occurred in February, and the deal was closed and the Order in Council was passed in the beginning of March, in the same year. It is a curious train of circumstances. The Minister of Public Works ought to have been very careful, even though Mr. Greenshields was his attorney. This Mr. Greenshields purchased the bonds of the company about this time, or before the arrangement was made by the Government. Mr. Greenshields' relations with the Government were notorious; the whole of the transactions in reference to that road prove the statement that I made in the House, namely, that, at least, this affair savoured of corruption. The road could have been bought, and built, and extended, for a much less sum than the Minister of Railways and Canals paid for it. He was so ashamed of his own transaction that he made in 1897, that he had to make a further agreement, which was better for this country to the extent of $700,000. The facts prove it. The hon. gentleman made a quibble, and said: Oh, but the $1,600,000 only represents $40,000 a year. Yet the country knew that for $64,000 a year for ninety-nine years they could get value in the neighbourhood of $2,100,000. We were buying it, we were paying the money, and we could have got it for that sum. Besides that, there is the $123,000 of the subsidy which the hon. gentleman said that, under the first agreement, he could not control. They purchased the road altogether, as he says, for $2,100,000. What is the argument worth, that he passed the Subsidy Act afterwards to give that $100,000? The transaction, on the face of it, bears the mark of corruption. There are only two horns to the dilemma: either the set of men entering into this agreement for the purpose of constructing this road, or taking it over, were a set of fools, or they made it for a consideration.

The country may draw either inference it likes. I will deal with this subject perhaps a little further again, but first of all, I want to draw your attention to another subject which is possibly worse than the one to which I have drawn attention at the present moment. At the same time there was an agreement made with the Grand Trunk Railway for the purpose of getting a connection between Ste. Rosalie station over the Victoria bridge, and for obtaining the use of the terminals in the city of Montreal. Under the first arrangement the Government was to pay $140,000 for that consideration. They were to pay for half of the improvements which were to be made. The Grand Trunk Railway Company had the right to receive from the Government the promise of that amount, plus 5 per cent per annum interest on it. Every one knows that the bond of this Government, bearing 5 per cent interest, would readily sell at a large premium in the money markets of the world. So they were not only to be paid for half of the improvements made, but they were to be paid in debentures or securities that bore 5 per cent interest. The arrangement was made then that we were to be half owners of the road from Ste. Rosalie to St. Lambert, thirty-two miles in length, and we were to have the use of the Victoria bridge, and, what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) calls, the user of the terminals of the Grand Trunk Railway from the end of the bridge to Montreal. Now, what is the change that has been made in the agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company? We pay a certain sum per year for the use of the property which I described before. We are only to pay for the use of terminals in the city of Montreal, and the improvements that are made on those terminals on the basis of user or wheelage. We do not pay one-twentieth of the terminals of the Grand Trunk Railway; under the old arrangement we were to pay for one-half. We were to pay 5 per cent interest. Under the new arrangement we pay 4 per cent interest, and have no option for cash. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair), besides that, says that he has got an important addition, in obtaining a connection between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway at a place called Jacques Cartier Junction. Now, I want to read to you the different agreements entered into by the hon. gentleman. Those of you who are lawyers in the House will be amused by the drafting of the documents. They appear not to have passed through the hands of the hon. Minister of Justice. No first-class lawyers would ever be responsible for any document of that kind. If there is any legal gentleman in the House who can tell me where a conveyance of properties is mentioned, I would like to hear it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). If it is of any interest to the hon. gentleman to know, I can tell him that it did go through the hands of the Department of Justice.

Mr. HAGGART. So much the worse for the Department of Justice.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. And I think it will be found pretty nearly right.

Mr. HAGGART. Well, it may be; we will criticise it a little further anyway, and I am prepared to put my opinion against that of the hon. the Minister. The particular section that I want to draw your attention to in the agreement which was made in 1897 is this:

That Her Majesty shall and will pay to the company a share of the cost of maintenance of this railway between and including Ste. Rosalie and Point St. Charles and Chaudière Bridge and connections, including tracks,—

And so on.

—such share of the cost of maintenance to be in the proportion that the combined engine and car mileage of the Intercolonial Railway trains running over the above mentioned sections of railway bears to the total combined engine and car mileage over the above mentioned sections of railway during each month,—

That refers, of course, to that particular section of road which was owned by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, which was a part of this contract, which was made by the Drummond County Railway in connection with six miles of road running into Point Lévis.

—every engine, passenger and freight car, counting each as one car, and from Point St. Charles and west to Bonaventure station, including the yards, such share of the cost of maintenance as aforesaid to be in the proportion that the combined engine and car mileage of the Intercolonial Railway trains running over the above last mentioned railway section and yards bears to the total combined engine and car mileage running over the above last mentioned section of the railway during each month; but notwithstanding anything herein mentioned, the cost of maintenance of the Victoria bridge shall not include the cost of maintaining any part or portion thereof except that which shall be used by the Intercolonial

Mr. HAGGART.

Railway and the company, and for that class of railway purpose, which cost of maintenance shall be apportioned as aforesaid.

Now, we will get the 35th section:

That if at any time hereafter the business or traffic shall, in the opinion of the parties hereto necessitate or warrant the laying of double tracks between and including Ste. Rosalie and St. Lambert, or the making of more extensive yard improvements at Point St. Charles or intermediate points between that point and Bonaventure station, or the laying of additional tracks between such points, or shall warrant or necessitate any further expenditure for the proper and efficient conduct of its business, and the company shall lay the said tracks or make the said improvements or make the said expenditure, Her Majesty may have the full and unlimited use of all or any such work in the same manner and to the same extent as if the said work had been included in the premises hereby leased, the right, use or privilege in which are demised hereby, and if Her Majesty should determine to use any such works or improvements, and the Minister should so declare, such works and improvements are hereby understood and agreed to form part of the leased premises, and Her Majesty shall pay annually for the use of any such works and improvements five per cent upon one-half of the actual cost to the company of the construction of said works and improvements; but in case of all betterments or of additional works on such joint sections which the company may be required to make under the provision of any statute or of any order of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, or other competent authority, Her Majesty shall pay the interest upon one-half the cost thereof at the rate aforesaid.

For all the improvements that were to be made over the terminals and connections, from Point St. Charles to Montreal, they were to pay for half, and that was calculated on the basis of 5 per cent per annum that the Grand Trunk Railway Company had the right to pay.

Now, under this agreement of 1897, the Intercolonial Railway took over one-half the undivided interests from Ste. Rosalie to St. Lambert, the right of running over the Grand Trunk Railway bridge and the user to the extent of one-half, I suppose—although there is no mention to what extent the user is on that portion of the line from the Grand Trunk Railway bridge to the terminal in Montreal. We pay one-half the price of the cost of the terminals in Montreal, and we receive none of the rent or profits accruing to the company from that. We pay for half of the road from Ste. Rosalie to St. Lambert, and we will receive half of the profits that the Grand Trunk Railway get from the other companies for the use of that. So we were confined to the simple user of what we purchased, from the end of the Intercolonial Railway to the station at Montreal (whatever use the Intercolonial Railway made of that station), paying to the Grand Trunk Railway for all the staff they used on that a proportion of the wages according to wheelage basis arrived at between the two companies. Under the new agreement we do the same in reference to the portion of the road from Ste. Rosalie to St. Lambert. As to the Victoria bridge, it is precisely the same, but as to the payment we have for improvements upon the terminals at Montreal, we only pay to the Grand Trunk Railway according to our user on a wheelage basis, and at the rate of 4 per cent a year, or we have the right of making the payment in cash. That is a distinction, and it makes an immense difference between the two contracts. Besides that we have the right, according to the statement of the hon. gentleman as to the user—but whether we get it at all we do not know—of the connection between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway. Let me read the last agreement. I draw the attention of the Minister of Railways to this, and the attention also of legal gentlemen of the House to this; I draw their attention to the wording and drafting of this arrangement:

Now this indenture witnesseth that the expression "Montreal joint section,"—

As I interpret this, it gives a meaning of what the Montreal joint section is:

—wherever used in this indenture, shall mean the company's line in connection at Ste. Rosalie and the whole line and branches and appurtenances hereby demised from Ste. Rosalie to St. Lambert and the Victoria bridge, together with the terminals at Bonaventure station in the city of Montreal, and at Point St. Charles, St. Henri, and between Point St. Charles and the Bonaventure station, and also—

What does "also" mean?

—and also with the Canadian Pacific Railway via Jacques Cartier Junction; and the expression "Chaudière joint section" shall mean the Chaudière bridge and connections, except when the meaning shall conflict with the context or otherwise plainly expressed terms of the clause in which the same is used.

Look at the demise. In the demise there is not a single mention of this connection between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Jacques Cartier junction road.

That the said company, in consideration of the rents, covenants, conditions and agreements hereinafter contained and reserved, granted, demised and leased, and by these presents doth give, grant, demise and lease unto Her Majesty, her successors and assigns, all undivided one-half share, interest, right and title to all the company's line of railway, road-bed and property from and including Ste. Rosalie station, in the county of Bagot,—

See how plainly the section between Ste. Rosalie and the bridge is conveyed:

—in the province of Quebec, to the Victoria Bridge, and also the undivided one-half right, share, title or interest in the company's line of railway from a point on the western side of the Chaudière Bridge, at the proposed junction of the Drummond County Railway, with the company's line and including the Chaudière Bridge, and to and including the switch at the westerly side of the Chaudière Curve station, being the said rights and privileges agreed to be leased to the Drummond County Railway by the company,—

There can be no doubt as to these two points.

—with the full and unlimited right and privileges, such as the company itself enjoys, of running the engines, vehicles, rolling stock and trains of the said Intercolonial Railway, either separately or combined, and as frequently and at such times as its business and traffic may require, and in both directions over any and every portion of the said company's railway between and including the said points aforesaid, and the use of the Victoria bridge across the River St. Lawrence, as it at present exists or as it may at any time during the subsistence of this lease be improved, reconstructed, enlarged or extended, and over the company's line and lines of railway over the said Victoria bridge.

You see, it does not give them a half interest in it, but only gives them the right of passing over the company's line of railway:

Over the said Victoria bridge and into the Bonaventure station in the city of Montreal, and the other terminal points, junctions and connections of the company hereinbefore more particularly described.

Where is the conveyance of that section of the road between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway? If it is conveyed, or if it is included in the reference to "Montreal joint section," why does it not mention it? It does not refer to it at all. Where is the conveyance even of the terminals? There is not a word of conveyance. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) may laugh, but if it is not included in the word "connections," what are the connections and in what terms have you the right of user? Is it free or is it on terms arranged between the Grand Trunk Railway and you. The Canadian Pacific Railway has the right of user and a lease over that section of the road. I say that my interpretation of that clause is that there is no conveyance. I remember the definition given by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) of the word "connection" in a former discussion, and I want to know if it means the same thing here. Does it mean a line of railway? Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) say in this House that that conveys the line of railway between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway? I say it does not. If it refers to the section above, the most it conveys is a connection. I am glad that the Minister says that he is not responsible for this piece of drafting.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I am not saying I am not responsible for it.

Mr. HAGGART. You said it was drawn over in the Justice Department.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do not misunderstand me on that point.

Mr. HAGGART. I do not think the Minister of Justice will accept the responsibility for any such drafting as that. Whether it conveys the meaning the hon. gentleman intended it to convey or not, the drafting is a disgrace to any department. Look at it again and see where is the conveyance of the side track, and where is the conveyance of that portion of the road between Montreal and the station.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You have made up your mind that it is not there.

Mr. HAGGART. It is very indefinite, to say the least of it. It appears from the deed that you can construct the stations, tracks and siding afterwards if they do not let you use them. Here is the conveyance :

And over the company's line and lines of railway over the said Victoria bridge and into the Bonaventure station in the city of Montreal, and the other terminal points, junctions and connections of the company.

Does that convey the right of the use of the siding? Does it convey that section of the road between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway?

Now, look at the benefit which accrues to the country from the change in the contract which the hon. gentleman made between 1897 and 1898. You have not to pay half the expenditures at the stations at Montreal. You have not to pay at the rate of 5 per cent per annum for these facilities. You got them on the user basis, and you have the use of that portion of the road between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway. That alone was sufficient justification for our refusing to pass the contract. The Minister comes with an entirely different contract, which is a complete justification of the Senate's action in throwing out the Bill. In order to make connection with the Jacques Cartier branch, you have to run eight or nine miles on the main line of the Grand Trunk above Montreal. Where is the conveyance of that, or the right to use it, to the Intercolonial Railway? The hon. gentleman's colleague in the Senate, Sir Oliver Mowat, when introducing the resolution there, said :

I believe the object is this, that hon. members having doubt, or more than doubt, whether the business to be done would warrant the expenditure, it was felt desirable that there should be an opportunity to all of us to know by actual experiment how that would be.

And yet what did the hon. Minister of Railways state in this House the other day? He made a statement which every man belonging to a railway company in this or any other country in the world knows cannot possibly be correct. He stated that the officers of the department were unable to furnish information as to the earnings of the railway, or as to the effect of extending it from Point Lévis to Montreal. Does he not know—and, if he does not, I will tell him; and, if his officers tell him anything different, they tell him what is untrue—that the accounts of every railway in the country are kept in such a fashion that, with very little trouble, the earnings of every section of the road can be stated? What is the reason he put that statement into the mouth of Sir Oliver Mowat, the leader of the Government in the Senate, unless he was aware of that? Sir Oliver Mowat, when he asked the Senate to pass the grant, said he would be able to give the House information which would justify the expenditure, or which might justify another bargain being made. Yet the hon. Minister of Railways is unable to furnish the information to this House. We are asked to pass these resolutions without the information, which he should be able to bring down at any moment, as to the amount of the expenditure in the improvement of the road, or as to the present state of the road. No Minister of the Crown ever before had the presumption or daring to introduce into this House a resolution of this kind without being prepared to lay on the Table of the House every necessary document and the fullest information, and without even an apology for the statement of his colleague in the Senate, that the earnings of the road would be made known. Have the members of the Ministry ever considered the amount they are giving for this Grand Trunk Railway connection? Do they know what $140,000 a year means to the people of this country? It means a capital of over $5,000,000. Do they know what $5,000,000 would build? Did the hon. Minister of Railways ever inquire what the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge across the St. Lawrence cost? If not, I will tell him, that the whole bridge and its approaches were built for $1,400,000; I got the information from the contractors. I have a letter from the parties who paid for the building of the bridge, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, stating that the bridge and its approaches were built for less than $1,500,000. Have they ever calculated the distance between Chaudière Junction and St. Lambert? I will tell them: the distance is 147 miles. My hon. friend from Glengarry (Mr. McLennan), the other day, estimated that a new double-track railway could be built for $30,000 a mile.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You can build it a good deal cheaper on paper than you can after you get to work, judging from past experience.

Mr. FOSTER. According to who has charge of it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, judging from the last fifteen or seventeen years.

Mr. FOSTER. We need not go further back than a year and a half.

Mr. HAGGART. The calculation of the officers of the department is, that that portion of the road from Ste. Rosalie towards Moose Park was built for between $13,000 and $14,000 a mile, and that the Grand Trunk Railway extension could be built for between $11,000 and $12,000 a mile. You have no faith in the officers of your own department; you have no faith in their calculations. I will take $30,000 a mile as the cost of a double-track railway through a country the easiest on the continent of America to build a railway in, except, perhaps, a few portions of the prairie; and at $30,000 a mile, you could build a double-track railway from Point Lévis to St. Lambert station for $4,410,000, and you could build a bridge of your own across the St. Lawrence at the amount expended by the Canadian Pacific Railway for the building of their bridge. You could build it for $200,000 less—yes, $300,000 less—than the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge cost when it was built. But take the full amount which they state their bridge and its approaches cost—$1,500,000—and that would make the cost of a double-track railway from Point Lévis to the end of the bridge and a bridge across the St. Lawrence, $5,910,000. You would then have to expend on your terminals in Montreal, $1,481,540. You would own the railway the whole way, you would own the bridge, you could build the terminals for half the amount, and you could double-track, because the Government have the best entrance to the city of Montreal possessed by any railway entering that city. They could come down along the bank of the Lachine Canal; for the right to do which, application after application has been made to the Department of Railways. They could go round their own property, and have $1,500,000 for the purpose of erecting a station. That is the popular view of the question. Now, can the hon. gentleman blame the people of this country for suspecting the honesty of such a transaction? Can they blame the people or the Opposition for scenting corruption in it? Do they expect the people to believe that any set of men, honestly looking to the interest of the country, would be so neglectful of these interests as to expend an immense sum for the purpose of getting through a job of this kind?

The hon. gentleman compares the cost of this road with the building of the road at Point Lévis, but the construction of the road at Point Lévis was cheap enough. We, however, got into the courts with the owners of property, and the expenditure on this little line of road in consequence became an enormous amount. But the hon. gentleman and his friends could have looked to railway construction all over the continent of America, the cost of which can be now estimated to a fine point, and could have made calculations to show the cost of this road. They never, however, made a calculation, and we have never had information whether the deputy head of the department went over the road or not to examine it. When he was before the committee, he had never seen the road, but he made a calculation. What a hurry they were in to build it. There seems to have been great necessity to hurry through this legislation.

Mr. BERGERON. The Quebec elections were to take place in May.

Mr. HAGGART. That, no doubt, was the reason. Why, it was necessary the arrangements should be completed in March. But the hon. Minister says that by the sworn evidence, the expenditure to complete this road was $2,000,000. I have referred already to the extraordinary way in which the paid-up stock was subscribed by these three gentlemen I have mentioned to the extent of $133,000 each. He says that we had the books of the company before the committee, and the right of thorough inquiry into them. I ventured to state, when he was making that assertion, that we had not the books. An hon. gentleman who was on the committee, rose and contradicted me, and said we had. Let me tell you what books were before the committee. We had a set of books, the first entry in which was a transfer from some other books of $729,000. We had not the details of this expenditure, and we wanted to get the construction books which contained these details, but never could get them. The information never was before the department at all. What was this construction company? There was an arrangement entered into by these parties, who had secured subsidies from the Dominion and provincial Governments, with themselves for the purpose of carrying on the undertaking. The Minister of Railways told us that each of them paid in $133,000 to this construction company, and then he argued that it was in the interests of those parties who owned the road to build it as cheaply as possible. Why, Mr. Speaker, their interest was to get as high a price as possible for the construction of the road, in order that this subscription of $133,000 each would be swallowed and covered up. That never struck the Minister of Railways, but he contended the bargain he had made was a perfectly good one to pay this $1,600,000 or $2,000,000, because these gentlemen had expended $2,000,000 on that road. Does he expect us to accept any such contention? The first item in the account is an entry of $729,000, but we never could get the books of the construction company in order to ascertain whether any such amount had ever been expended or not, and there is not a man living in that section of the country, who knows the standing of the three parties, who were the proprietors and owners of that road, who would not scout as an absurdity the statement that they had ever made arrangements with any bank by which they could be advanced $133,000 each to put into this company.

Then, the hon. gentleman was asked why did he not get back the subsidies we had paid, and he replied that he does. But he deducts from the $2,000,000 only $400,000, which is $250,000 short of the actual subsidies received from the Dominion and provincial Governments. He says he doubts the logic of subtracting the subsidies from the amount of the real purchase. But what is the reason we give a subsidy? It is because, on account of a road being built in a new country, those who build it are not likely to get back the interest on the full amount expended. Therefore, we pay them a certain sum to enable them to do without that interest for a certain time, trusting that, in the course of years, the increase in immigration and trade will recoup them. But what kind of a road was this? It was a road built by a couple of lumber firms into a lumber section for the purpose of taking lumber out of a section of the country which is not settled at all—that portion between Moose Park and Chaudière Junction. The lumber became exhausted, and these parties found themselves with a useless undertaking on their hands. Owing to the political services which a certain party, who is closely connected with the hon. gentlemen opposite, who is a leader and organizer of his party, and in order to recoup him—for we can come to no other logical conclusion—this party received money for this road largely in excess of what it could be bought for by any person who wished to acquire it as a commercial undertaking. They ask us to make specific charges and prove them before the House. The chairman of the committee addressed me, and said: What charges do you make? I made no charges; the charges were ringing throughout the country, and these hon. gentlemen appointed a committee to clear them in the eyes of the country. That committee was presided over by a gentleman who, at the very moment, I believe, had the promise of a judgeship in his pocket. He received that judgeship, I believe, before the proceedings of the committee had terminated. I thought that the first thing we should have a discussion upon this session would be a motion for the adoption of the report of the committee, but no such motion has ever been made. The Premier and the members of the Government, last session were very anxious that that motion should be made. They were anxious to override the rules of the House in order to have such a motion brought forward—no doubt desiring the benefit of the extraordinary ability of the gentleman who had acted as chairman, to excuse and apologize for one of the most disgraceful transactions ever known in the history of this country.

You will notice, Mr. Speaker, the peculiarity of the speech of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals in introducing this resolution. He wandered off to a consideration of the Intercolonial Railway and took the opportunity of discussing my management of the road a number of years back. He said I had been living upon a reputation I had gained in the management of the road, but that the credit was not due to me, but to my predecessor, Sir Mackenzie Bowell, who for a short time was acting Minister. I have no desire to detract from the ability displayed by that hon. gentleman in the management of the road. He was and is entitled to credit. I asked the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) who told him that, and he replied that it was a gentleman who had been in intimate communication with him for a number of years. Now, if a gentleman who had been in intimate communication with him for a number of years, informed him of that, he should be careful not to mention it. I know the relation of the permanent to the evanescent in this matter. And I will tell the hon. gentleman that when he departs from office—and I hope it will not be long before then, it will be pretty sure to follow an appeal to the people—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). It looks very like it.

Mr. HAGGART. Very like it. I can tell the hon. Minister that when he has departed from office, these gentlemen who gave him the information will not offer him a word of consolation, but their whole time will be taken up with congratulation to his successor upon his appointment to office. They will congratulate that successor upon replacing a person who is little adapted to the work he undertook and they will enlarge upon the trouble they had in carrying on affairs under him. That is the air they assume over the evanescent.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Is the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) the evanescent?

Mr. HAGGART. I was the evanescent, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) is now. There is a distinction between those who are appointed permanently and who have a knowledge which permanency and experience give. The hon. gentleman, with all his assumption of knowledge, can be nothing but the political head of the department. It is impossible for him to have the technical knowledge for the management of a railway. And when he poses and assumes the role of a judge of locomotives and passenger cars and assumes to decide what is necessary for the Intercolonial Railway in regard to these matters, he is assuming a role which was never intended and which he cannot fill to advantage. That role he should leave to the permanent officials of the department. And he should be careful about taking evidence against his predecessor in office. The hon. gentleman says that the prosperity of the Intercolonial Railway was not due to myself. I never took the credit for it. I laid down a general political policy, and instructed the officers, within certain bounds, what they were to do. They carried out that policy faithfully. My only credit was in giving them a free hand, leaving them free to do what they deemed best in the management of the road, and protecting them in doing it. When they reported to me that there were nine or ten thousand useless hands on the Intercolonial Railway, I gave instructions to reduce the staff to what was absolutely necessary.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Who put them there?

Mr. HAGGART. Most of them were remnants from a regime that lasted from 1873 to 1878. However, they were there.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. When did my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) put them out?

Mr. HAGGART. I put them out when I had the power and found that they were unnecessary. However, it does not matter. I will have an opportunity when the Estimates of the Intercolonial Railway come up to discuss this matter with my hon. friend the Minister of Railways and Canals. We have now only to deal with this Drummond road and to deal with it on the evidence before the House. The hon. gentleman states that we are going to have an era of prosperity. I hope that is so. I hope that era of prosperity has struck the maritime provinces. I hope that in a year from now his prophecy will be fulfilled and that we shall have a larger surplus on the Intercolonial Railway than all the surpluses that have ever been known in the history of that road. But it was not necessary for the hon. gentleman to prophesy about it. We are now in the month of May. We have the expenditure up to April. If affairs in the office are conducted as they were during that time, he has his estimates from his officers of what the expenditure will be for the month of May. Generally the estimate is a little in excess of the real expenditure. Then he had eleven-twelfths of the year, he had only to guess for the month of June. If the hon. gentleman had brought down, up to the 1st of May, what the real state of affairs was, and the estimate of his officials for the month of May, then this House and himself would have been on a par, and we would know exactly the expenditure for the whole of the year. But we can only judge of the year from the information that we have at present. I notice that there has been a deficit on the Intercolonial this year of $209,978, and there has been an expenditure on capital account of $252,756 on that island which has been so much neglected in carrying out the terms of confederation, which called for proper railway communication.

An hon. MEMBER. What about the tunnel?

Mr. HAGGART. We do not hear much about that. There is an expenditure on capital account of $17,541, and on revenue account of $72,468, notwithstanding the improvements which have been urged upon the Minister of Railways and Canals and the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), the shortening of the line of the Prince Edward Island road, improving the gradients and shortening the curves. While I was listening to my return, I noticed a smile on the face of the Minister of Railways and Canals when he answered the questions in reference to the particular part of the Intercolonial Railway where there had been an expenditure in the neighbourhood of $20,000 that shortened the line 2,000 feet.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). No.

Mr. FOSTER. Was it not as much as that?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. A different railway altogether.

Mr. HAGGART. My hon. friend tells me it was 3,000 feet, and they raised the present gradients from eighty-three feet, as they were before, to 103 feet, as they are at present. The Minister has promised that when the expenditure is completed the road will be levelled down to the maximum gradient of the Intercolonial Railway, and a running gradient of fifty-two feet. The curvature has been changed about 1-10th of a degree. I think the largest curvature before was eight degrees, and it is now 8.40. Notwithstanding these improvements on the Prince Edward Island road, I am sorry to see that the expenditure over the revenue has been $72,468, or an expenditure altogether on the Intercolonial Railway system in excess of the revenues of $552,000. Although it added to the expenditure which we are making on that Drummond County Railway for the purpose of getting into Montreal, he would have had at least the gratification of saying to our friends in the maritime provinces that the people of Canada were at least generous; for, after spending a large amount in building the road for which they have no return in the shape of interest on the capital, the people of Canada are generous enough besides to give the sum of $552,000. But that is nothing to what the hon. gentleman proposed. I suppose he intends to take it out of capital expenditure. I see that he asks for an expenditure of over $980,000 on capital account next year, for straightening out more curves on the Intercolonial Railway, and reducing gradients, and an expenditure of $440,000 for the purpose of better terminal facilities at St. John. When I was Minister of Railways and Canals, I was hounded by the Opposition for the enormous and corrupt expenditure—I would be afraid to use similar language concerning the present Minister of Railways and Canals—I was denounced for making a corrupt expenditure in the purchase of the Harris property at St. John for the purpose of affording better accommodation at that port. But my iniquities pale in comparison with those of the Minister of Railways and Canals. He is looking out for his friends, he is looking out for his pets in St. John. He is going to carry the grain and produce of the western country round by Moncton, down to St. John; he is going to enter into competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway, who already have an elevator in the western part of the harbour, and are to-day doing all the business in the grain trade from Montreal to St. John. The hon. gentleman is going to enter into competition with them and carry freight and grain round by Moncton, 254 miles further. How is he going to do it? Where is he going to get his grain? Is he going to get it from the Grand Trunk Railway? All the interests of the Grand Trunk Railway lie in carrying grain to Portland. What a beautiful traffic arrangement he has made! He is going to get grain and through traffic at Montreal for the purpose of shipment to St. John and Halifax, and the hon. gentleman allows them a difference of 400 miles in mileage between Halifax and Montreal. This is the excellent arrangement he has made with them. This reminds me of the calculations that the hon. gentleman presented to this House in reference to the profits which were to accrue to this road. He entered into elaborate calculations, he had gone over them carefully with his deputy, and where are they? At least, you would expect to find them in the "Hansard." The hon. gentleman, in the revised edition of the "Hansard," has cut them all out; there is not a single portion of them there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Will the hon. gentleman pardon me? I did not catch the last statement that he made.

Mr. HAGGART. What I say is that the hon. gentleman went into elaborate calculations as to the results which would accrue from the building of the road from Point Lévis to Montreal, showed the calculations made, either by himself or his deputy, of the increase of freight and increase of passengers. I remember perfectly well that he made these calculations in the House, but in looking over his speeches I do not see anything of them in the "Hansard" now.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I can assure the hon. gentleman that if they are not there, I am not responsible for the omission.

Mr. HAGGART. I am only telling the hon. gentleman the facts in reference to it. Perhaps the hon. gentleman forgot to give his figures to the "Hansard." There has been something done. We would like to have the figures for the purpose of comparing them with the results. There is an expenditure of $440,000 for the purpose of erecting an elevator at the port of St. John. I ask the hon. gentleman, where he is going to get his grain? The Canadian Pacific Railway have an elevator of their own there, and they have no use for it. Does he really expect the Grand Trunk Railway, who have their terminal at Portland, who have their own arrangements for the purpose of carrying grain over to Europe, are going to give him any grain to carry over his road? Is he going to erect a monument in the shape of an elevator there, something like what we had at Halifax? I must say that at one time, perhaps, I was a sinner myself in that respect. We were carrying grain to that elevator at a price that would not pay for the oiling of the wheels on the local railway. Is it for the fun of carrying it round that way to St. John that the hon. gentleman is going to spend $440,000?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And 250 miles further.

Mr. HAGGART. 250 miles further for the purpose of building an elevator at St. John.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It is exactly the same distance as it always has been.

Mr. HAGGART. That is all very well. If the Intercolonial Railway was receiving a surplus from the people of the maritime provinces, I would go as far as any hon. gentleman in this House in advocating that that surplus should be expended for the purpose of bettering the Intercolonial Railway, and that it should be expended among the people of those provinces. Because we, the people of Ontario and the rest of the Dominion, have long ago come to this idea, that the perfect management of the Intercolonial Railway is to make the receipts and expenditures balance. We have no wish to put into the treasury of this country any receipts or any moneys taken out of the people of the maritime provinces; but, when it comes that the people of this country are asked, on capital account, for an expenditure of $990,000 for the present year, it is time that the people should cry, "Halt." The people of this Dominion are not willing that such an expenditure as that should be made. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), in his place there, a supporter of the Government, protested against expenditures of that kind, and I, as a member from Ontario, state that the Ontario members, or the members of any party, are not willing that $1,000,000 should be taken out of the people of the country for the purpose of any such expenditure as is proposed in this particular undertaking. I think I have a knowledge of the Intercolonial Railway, as well as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) has, in reference to the facts of the case, and I will take the opportunity, when the Estimates come up, of discussing fully with him the management of the road during the time when I was in charge of it, and when he was in charge of it. I will tell the hon. gentleman that the reference which he made to me, the other evening, was quite uncalled for, when he said that, when I was in charge of the department, in order to make a surplus for that year, the expenditure that ought to have taken place before the 1st of July, was deferred until a later period, and that, when the hon. gentleman came into power, he had to put it into its normal condition, and that accounts for the enormous difference between his expenditure, as compared with the expenditure during the year of my management of the railway. The hon. gentleman might as well, with equal truth, say, that he is making all the expenditures on the repairs for the present year and charging everything he can to capital account, caring nothing whatever for any deficit this year, in order that he may have a favourable statement to show the people of the country when he goes to the elections, in a year or two from now. He does not care: he can stand all these charges against himself of raising the rates on the Intercolonial Railway; he does not mind how much is expended on capital or revenue account, provided that, when the time comes that an appeal is made to the country, he can show a surplus greater than all of the surpluses that ever occurred on the Intercolonial Railway. That is a system that I cannot understand in reference to the expenditures. Surely, the expenditure accrues in the next year; that was borne in the beginning of the year he mentioned. The receipts for the two years following the year he mentioned show that the revenue was greater than the expenditure for these two or three years at least, so that the hon. gentleman could have no fault to find. What the hon. gentleman seems to say is, that the expenditure in the first year should have been in a particular portion of the year, and he justified his expenditure by saying that in the first year he restored it to its normal condition by making the expenditure at the proper time. I doubt that. I gave no instructions to any officer of the Intercolonial, while I was managing the road, to do any such thing as the hon. gentleman has stated. My instructions to the officers of the Intercolonial Railway were, to keep up the standard of efficiency in the best possible manner, to see that the rolling stock and the road did not degenerate, and that the road was equipped in the most efficient manner. I am astonished at the lavish expenditure for cars which is now going on, in view of the fact that, when I was in the department, the officers informed me that they were not necessary at all. The officers of my department told me that, if arrangements were made for the purchase of the Drummond County Railway for the purpose of getting into the city of Montreal, there was such a big surplus of rolling stock on the Intercolonial that we would not need to buy one single passenger car or locomotive. It was on this ground that I made the statement before the committee, that I did not expect to make an expenditure for establishing that connection of more than $1,500,000. I never would have thought of giving $5,000,000 for that connection from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal. Why did not the hon. gentleman do as other railways do that are travelling into Montreal—secure the user of the Grand Trunk Railway for the Intercolonial, and get the terminals on a wheelage basis, or a basis of user? Would not that have been a proper arrangement? Do not other railways adopt that system? The Grand Trunk Railway Company were willing to arrange with him on that basis. I could have made an arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company on the basis of user, and we could have found out from the Delaware and Hudson, the Central Vermont and other lines of railway that are running into Montreal, what they pay. Every one of them pays on a basis of user, or wheelage, for the right of going into the station. The same thing obtains in every part of America, and the hon. Minister could easily have found out what the cost would be. Have the officers of the Government made an estimate of the amount of the user that the Intercolonial would make of the terminals of the bridge and of the road to St. Lambert? They could have told the hon. gentleman within a few thousands of dollars what he would have had to pay.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Will the hon. gentleman be surprised, when I inform him that such an examination was made, such an estimate was made, and such figures were put in my hands, and, if my recollection serves me, they were furnished to the committee of investigation?

Mr. HAGGART. I am not surprised, in view of the figures, when I remember that one of the estimates of the value of the Victoria bridge was $10,000,000 to $12,000,000, and that we were to pay for the user of that bridge, for the half user—no, not for the half user, but for the fiftieth user—three or four million dollars.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman is not doing himself justice now. I was not speaking about the estimate of the cost of the Victoria bridge, nor was he. I was speaking of the estimate of the terminals.

Mr. HAGGART. I was.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman will see that he is quite in error. He was speaking of the Government procuring an estimate in reference to the probable cost, upon a wheelage basis, of running the Intercolonial into the city of Montreal. I have stated to the hon. gentleman, and I think his own recollection will corroborate what I have said, that such an estimate was procured, that it was placed in my hands by my officers, and that, if my memory serves me, such an estimate was placed before the investigating committee. If the hon. gentleman remembers the figures, the cost would be in excess of the cost of the permanent arrangement entered into at last.

Mr. HAGGART. Here is the cost, as estimated :

Cost of Drummond County Railway..	$1,535,500
Ste. Rosalie to Drummondville.....	291,500
Drummondville to St. Léonard.....	304,000
St. Léonard to Chaudière Bridge....	770,000
Nicolet Branch	170,000

The other calculation was not on the basis of that estimate at all. According to the other calculation, the hon. gentleman intended to pay one-half of the road from Ste. Rosalie to St. Lambert, and half of the terminals in the city of Montreal. The calculation which was handed to him was, that the Victoria bridge had cost the Grand Trunk Railway in the neighbourhood of $12,000,000, and the estimated value of it then was from $8,000,000 to $10,000,000. Then, I am to infer that the basis upon which he paid the Grand Trunk Railway Company, was the calculation of the value that was put upon it by the officers of the department. The officers of his department knew that a bridge for all the purposes of the Intercolonial Railway, and ten times over, could be built across the St. Lawrence for $1,500,000. The hon. gentleman knows that the calculation was made upon the basis—if I remember aright, and I will have the details after dinner, for I intend to go specially into the subject—the calculation was made upon the basis of from eight to ten million dollars.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) must know that there were various calculations and various estimates of every possible kind made by the officers of the department, and what I am trying to point out to him is, that the particular kind of estimate which he said I could have got, I did get, and the figures are furnished to the committee.

Mr. HAGGART. Here is the sworn evidence of the hon. gentleman before the committee, exhibit 16, page 13 :

The cost of the construction of the bridge was, I think, $10,000,000 ; it could now be completed for $6,000,000.

That is Mr. Blair's sworn evidence before the committee.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What does that prove ?

Mr. HAGGART. It proves, as I say, that the evidence that was before you upon which you based your calculation of payment of the subsidy for each year to the Grand Trunk Railway, was based on some figures like that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Does the hon. gentleman suggest that was all the evidence that was before me ?

Mr. HAGGART. I do not say anything of the kind. I should judge from the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) some time ago, to the effect that there was no evidence of any kind, that he was taking a leap in the dark.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If you understood that, your mind was not working.

Mr. HAGGART. The evidence that was adduced before the Minister (Mr. Blair), and the only evidence that I know of that he gave before the committee in reference to the value of the bridge across the St. Lawrence, was a statement which is now in the office of Mr. Panet, clerk of the committee, that the bridge cost in the neighbourhood of $10,000,000, and that it could probably be built now for $6,000,000. Mr. Schreiber, the Deputy Minister, knows perfectly well that for one-fourth of this estimate a bridge could be built there. He knew that he had the evidence that the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge cost only $1,500,000, and he knew that such a bridge could be built at the present day for $1,200,000. Yet the Minister led the committee to believe that the basis of his calculation was a bridge that cost $10,000,000, which could now be built for $6,000,000. He would need a better basis than that, and more enormous figures for the payment of $5,000,000 for the purpose of building into Montreal. I have stated before—and we must have this information before concurrence, and before this bridge Bill becomes law the information in reference to it—I have stated here, that I have information from nearly every railway throughout the country, and I make the bold statement now, that the books of the Intercolonial Railway are kept in such a manner that the Minister can bring down to this House the receipts and expenditure on every section of the road. That is done on the Grand Trunk Railway.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Done everywhere.

Mr. HAGGART. It is done on the Canadian Pacific Railway ; it is done on the Canada Atlantic Railway, and it is done on the Intercolonial Railway. When the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) was correcting and contradicting the statements that were made by the Montreal "Star," the leader of the Opposition told him that the accounts on the Intercolonial Railway were so prepared. Is it not more probable that the statement of the leader of the Opposition is correct, the statement of the Minister of Railways to the contrary.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I must correct my hon. friend. What I said was that I could name officials in the department who could establish the fact that it was perfectly practicable to give such information as the House required. I may say that I had no information from any official, but the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) immediately turned around and intimated that he would very soon take off any official's head who gave such evidence.

Mr. HAGGART. That is the inference I drew from the remarks of the hon. leader of the Opposition.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to interrupt him so that I may set the hon. leader of the Opposition right. What the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) did say was, that if the Government would give him a committee he could hold an investigation which would establish the fact that such information could be procured.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He invited me to give him a committee, but I thought that the result of the committees which the hon. gentleman was having lately had been so unfavourable to him, that it was not necessary to give him another one.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What about the committee you promised to decapitate the officials?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I said we would give him an investigating committee as to the officials who were furnishing false information.

Mr. HAGGART. The information which we now require was promised to Parliament and the country, and it was on the faith of our getting that information that the vote was got from this House and the Senate. Why did the hon. gentleman allow the Minister of Justice to promise in another Chamber, that if they voted the amount asked, there would be sufficient evidence produced in another year to show them whether they should continue the vote to the Drummond County Railway, or whether they should make arrangements with the other two companies. We ought to have that information now. The Minister (Mr. Blair) knows that the Drummond Railway was completed under a subsidy contract, and we have no information from the department as to whether that subsidy has been earned, the amount paid, or the report of an engineer upon it. We have not a report from the department as to what was the difference of expenditure between the subsidy contract and bringing it up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway. We are fighting this question to a great extent in the dark.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think you are, but that is not our fault.

Mr. TAYLOR. You promised the information.

Mr. HAGGART. The Minister made a statement in this House that it was impracticable to furnish the information in reference to the receipts and expenditures of this line.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. So I say still.

Mr. HAGGART. Tell it to any railway man in this country, that the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway are kept so that the receipts and expenditures cannot be given on any independent section of the road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) must not mistake what I said. The hon. gentleman knows that what is desired by the other side of the House, if they desire anything in this connection, is that a statement should be furnished of what the proportionate earnings and expenditures on the Drummond County Railway was.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As compared with the whole of the Intercolonial Railway.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is it exactly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is not what the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) said.

Mr. HAGGART. That is exactly what I said.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not at all. What has just dropped from the mouth of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) is what I have stated, that upon the Intercolonial Railway there is no statement kept, no memo. or account of the receipts upon any section or the expenditure upon any section. That is not at all correct. I say we keep an account of every dollar of receipts that comes from every station on the Intercolonial Railway, and we know what amount of money we actually expend on each section and on each station of the Intercolonial Railway—not only on the 130 miles that compose the Drummond County road, but on every section of three miles; but we cannot tell what the proportionate receipts and expenditure on the Drummond County Railway have been, as compared with those on the whole line.

An hon. MEMBER. Why?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Because it is utterly impossible to do it. I said in the committee the other day, and I will repeat it in the face of any railroad man whom the hon. gentleman will produce, that you can only do that on estimate and conjecture largely; and I defy any hon. gentleman to get a responsible railway man to contradict my statement. If I come here with estimates, it is only another way of postponing the condemnation which these hon. gentlemen will pass. They will say, why did you not estimate a great deal more?

Mr. MONTAGUE. How about the statement made in the Senate?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not responsible for what was said in the Senate.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY ADJOURNMENT.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Before my hon. friend proceeds with his speech, I would like to have the attention of the House for one moment. The suggestion was made this afternoon that the House should adjourn from tomorrow evening till next Thursday. After considering it, we will agree to this. Therefore, to-morrow afternoon I will move that when the House adjourns to-morrow evening it shall stand adjourned until Thursday next, and then when it adjourns on the following Friday it shall stand adjourned until the following Saturday; so that we shall sit on Saturday.

I. C. R.—EXTENSION TO MONTREAL.

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Chairman, at six o'clock I had about concluded my remarks in reference to the resolutions at present under consideration. I had intended to summarize them, but I may have an opportunity to do so at another stage of the Bill. In the further remarks I have to make to-night, I will simply amplify some of my observations in reference to this contract with the Drummond County Railway Company. I stated that there was an option of $500,000 given to Mr. Farwell of the Eastern Townships Bank, presented by Mr. Hugh Ryan. I forgot to mention that Mr. Greenshields in his evidence before the committee stated that there was a concurrent agreement in writing with Mr. Ryan. We asked him in whose possession that agreement was. He said it was in the possession of Mr. Farwell. Mr. Farwell, in his examination, stated that there was no agreement in writing, but that there was a verbal understanding with Mr. Hugh Ryan that certain other terms were to be entered into with the contractor and the Government under this option of $500,000. Mr. Hugh Ryan, in his evidence before the committee, said he never heard of any such thing, that the only condition attached to the offer was the payment of the $500,000 to the company. Certainly I never heard of the agreement.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). If my memory serves me, the line was to be built and completed.

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Greenshields said that there was a concurrent agreement with Mr. Hugh Ryan, in which it was provided that the line should be completed and some other things besides the $500,000 were to be given.

Mr. MORRISON. Would the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? In what part of Mr. Ryan's evidence does he state that which the hon. member now says?

Mr. HAGGART. On page 146:

Q. What was the price they were to sell the road for?—A. The price they talked about was this $500,000; but I had never seen the road, and never was over it.

Then, in speaking of the last agreement with the Grand Trunk, I pointed out that under it the connections with the Canadian Pacific Railway were not conveyed. That is a question for the legal gentlemen; but I would like to draw the attention of the House to the fact that there is no connection conveyed to the Intercolonial Railway between the end of the bridge and the Canadian Pacific Railway, according to the most literal interpretation of the agreement. There is no conveyance of the main line to the Grand Trunk Railway from the end of Victoria bridge to this Government, and the whole document, if I am a judge of the matter, makes no conveyance at all of that right of connection between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

One of the principal reasons which the Minister gave for the purpose of showing that this was a far better agreement than the old one—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I never said it was a far better agreement than the old one.

Mr. HAGGART. You will find by the evidence of Mr. Wainwright, before the committee, that one of the most strenuous objections of the Grand Trunk Railway was, that it was an important link in connection with their road, and they nearly split upon the conveyance to the Government of that connection between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I thought you were attributing a certain statement to me personally, but now, it appears, it was made by somebody else.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. Minister said, before the committee, that the Government had not only made a satisfactory agreement, but had made an arrangement for a connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Quite so; but the hon. gentleman said, that I stated it was a very much better agreement than the other. I never said that.

Mr. HAGGART. Then, it is not?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Whether it is or not, is another question; but you said, that I said so.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman was drawing the attention of the committee to the more advantageous arrangements he had made in a new agreement than in the old one, and that was one of them, and it is a much more advantageous arrangement than the old one, especially with regard to the terminals and the amount we had to pay for them, and thereby constitutes a sufficient justification for the action of the Senate in throwing out the old agreement.

The hon. Minister, just before recess, stated to this House that he was not responsible for the statement made by a Minister of the Crown in the Senate, in the introduction of the resolutions last session—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I said it in this sense. It was stated that I had instructed, or authorized, the statement to be made by some gentleman in the Senate, which I entirely deny. But, of course, every member of the Government is responsible for what his colleagues may say on the matter.

Mr. HAGGART. I was not arguing in that direction, but I was stating that a Minister of the Crown had declared in the Senate, on his responsibility as a Minister, that we would be furnished with an account of the earnings of that branch of the Drummond Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway combined from Lévis to Montreal. Now, the hon. Minister said that it was impossible for him to furnish that statement. I here state boldly that he could do it on every section of the road with a little trouble. There is not a leased line along any railway in Canada or the United States on which the receipts and earnings are not kept separate; and the proposition for the leasing of this line from the Grand Trunk Railway was, that they were to pay a percentage of the total receipts of the road. How would it be possible for them to pay a percentage of the total receipts, unless an account were kept of the gross receipts? I was emphasizing this, when I said that the promise was made by the responsible leader of the Government in the Senate that such an account would be furnished to the country. Then the hon. gentleman replied: I am not responsible for any statement that was made in another House. That is a new idea of the duties of a Minister of the Crown, given expression to by a Minister of the Crown, that, when a Minister who represents the Government in the Senate, makes a statement in that body in order to induce them to confirm the bargain, the Minister in this House is not responsible for that statement. Let me say, that in the manner in which the accounts are kept at present on the Intercolonial, it is quite easy for the Government to give us the gross earnings and the gross expenditure and the net receipts upon that section. We were promised that, and what I complain of is, that the Government come down here with a set of resolutions, and give us no information.

The hon. gentleman did not say a single word about the Grand Trunk Railway arrangement. I would like to know, whether the Government intend to carry it out or not. I would like to know, whether it is their intention to complete the arrangement which they exhibited to this House last session and the session before, for the purpose of carrying the Intercolonial traffic over the Grand Trunk Railway into Montreal. Where am I to get that information? I look at the public accounts, I look at the Auditor General's Report, and I do not see the payment of one cent to the Grand Trunk Railway. I would like to know from the hon. Minister, as he was using that road, and paid a subsidy to the Drummond Railway Company for four months of the financial year ending July last, whether he has paid to the Grand Trunk Railway any portion of the subsidy.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

Mr. HAGGART. Would the Minister be kind enough to answer me that?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He is engaged in private conversation on another subject altogether.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you paid to the Grand Trunk Railway any portion of the subsidy promised them under the resolutions introduced last year?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). You mean the subsidy on the bridge.

Mr. HAGGART. On the connection between Ste. Rosalie and the city of Montreal.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You mean the rent? We paid all the rent.

Mr. HAGGART. Why does it not appear on the public accounts?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does.

Mr. HAGGART. I cannot find it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman has not looked.

Mr. HAGGART. There is no entry in the Auditor General's Report of any payment, and I naturally drew the inference that perhaps the Government have changed their mind with reference to that. The hon. Minister, who dealt so clearly and explicitly with Intercolonial matters, never said a word about this important connection.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The hon. gentleman must have lost his hearing entirely.

Mr. HAGGART. I may be entirely mistaken; but I took a great deal of trouble to look for it, and could not find it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I stated, as emphatically and as distinctly as I could, that, up to the 1st July, 1898, the rentals, maintenance, and so on—our proportion of all these charges—had been paid in full. If the hon. gentleman will look at the report of my department, he will see that the sum of $70,000 is added to the deficit, as shown in the ordinary running accounts, making the amount $209,000, in place of $139,000.

Mr. HAGGART. That is not included in the first account I saw in the hon. gentleman's report. I looked at the receipts and expenditures, and, after a great deal of trouble, I found in a back part of the volume that an amount was paid, not to the Grand Trunk Railway, as I understood it, but to the Drummond Railway Company. However, it does not appear in the public accounts or in the Auditor General's Report, and it looks, even from the hon. gentleman's own report, as if the payment of this amount was something subsequent. However, I may be entirely mistaken, and the hon. Minister may be entirely right, and I will look into the matter more carefully. I only draw his attention to the difficulty of discussing this subject without the proper information before the House. And, as I said before, I may have an opportunity, and I intend to have an opportunity, of summarizing my remarks of this evening and discussing this Bill in full, after I have heard the objections and criticisms to the remarks I have made.

Mr. AULAY MORRISON (New Westminster). Mr. Chairman, I think it goes without saying that there is no division of opinion worth considering as to the soundness of the policy of extending the Intercolonial Railway into the city of Montreal. That being so, the question before the House in connection with the Drummond County Railway resolves itself into a problem of business details. And, if it is found that these business details are unconnected with any wrongful business method, then, I think, all that can be said as to the question is that it is open to fair discussion and criticism. Beyond that, I think it is not permissible or honourable for hon. gentlemen opposite to go. Now, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), upon assuming office, was confronted with a certain condition, which would be supposed to be an elementary condition in railway affairs, a condition which, I am safe in saying, could not continue to exist in the case of a private corporation, because as soon as it arose it would be grappled with. It goes without saying that the affairs of the Intercolonial Railway would be one of the very first matters pressed upon the Minister's urgent attention on taking office. He found that the great Intercolonial Railway system, costing somewhere from $40,000 to $50,000 a mile, or, on the whole, about $55,000,000, with one of its termini at a small town some 170 miles from the great commercial metropolis of the country, the city of Montreal; the converging point of every road of any consequence in this Dominion; the point to reach which such great systems as the Canadian Pacific, the Grand Trunk, the New York Central, the Wabash, and numbers of others, have been regardless of expense; the point at which the Government have spent and are spending large sums of money to improve the trade facilities to meet the present exigencies as well as to be prepared for the great volume of trade which is bound to come to that very important point. I suppose there is not a gentleman in this House or in the country who for one moment considers this question of transportation through this country but would admit that Montreal is destined to be the point to which particularly the vast grain fields of the west will look for an outpost in the east. The city of Montreal is the entrepot, I may say, of three continents—I may be modest enough to say—the Vancouver of the east; the point to which all avenues of trade of this continent, at any rate, converge and to which all are tributary; a point to reach which under the old regime the present Intercolonial Railway system was obliged to compete with a very strong rival, traversing this same distance of 170 miles. The Intercolonial Railway was entirely at the mercy of this rival and of several rivals under the old state of affairs. The hon. Minister, on taking office, also found the Intercolonial Railway encumbered with deficits as many as there had been years of its existence. It was badly and expensively managed, and, as I have said, at several points was completely at the mercy of other systems of railway. I am sure hon. gentlemen will agree with me that the conditions, as the hon. Minister found them, could not be worse. He determined that they should be remedied, and he has set about and remedied them; and I trust he has remedied them for all time. In setting about a solution of this problem, a problem simple in itself, no doubt, but one which gentlemen opposite shirked for the years during which they had an opportunity of doing something to improve the lamentable condition in which this railway had fallen. The Minister of Railways and Canals has set gentlemen opposite to scolding and figuring. Those who could not or would not scold, started to figure, and those who could not or would not figure, started to scold. And, between these two characteristics, it is no marvel that they should come to such diverse and mixed-up conclusions as we have seen to-day and on previous occasions when this matter has been up for discussion. Those who attempted to figure in this matter have illustrated the old saying that while it is true that figures cannot lie, those who use them frequently do. A very few examples will suffice to illustrate that. By referring to the "Hansard" of 1897, when this matter was being discussed somewhat briefly, it will be seen that the ex-Minister of Finance (Mr. Foster) stated that the Drummond County people had received subsidies to the amount of $782,000. That he stated categorically. Almost immediately afterwards, or as soon as he could get occasion to express himself, the ex-Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace), in the most positive way, affirmed that the amount of subsidies was $603,000. The ex-Minister of Finance further stated that the company had expended $720,000 on this piece of road. He does not state the date up to which that amount was spent, or whether upon the forty-two miles of road or upon the whole 132 miles, or whatever it is. The ex-Controller of Customs again comes out, and in a more conservative way, but with equal positiveness, states that the amount expended was $360,000. Then the "Mail and Empire," inspired doubtless by hon. gentlemen opposite, stated that the cost to the owners of this road—again they do not state the date or the extent of road—was only $749,000, and that the profit to the owners, in consequence of some dealings of this road, amounted to $714,356. But the minority report makes the profit $1,209,548. Now, taking all these deliberate statements, made by gentlemen who pretend to be men of repute, where do we find ourselves? Which is the true statement and which is not? For they cannot all be true. That is a sample of the result of some of the figuring of hon. gentlemen opposite in regard to this important matter; and I will give further illustrations as I proceed. Now, they start out, as I said, by scolding and figuring; and, as in the case of all gossipers, the older the gossip, the more vile, misleading and unfounded the gossip. Scandal, of course, was evolved, and must be investigated. As hon. gentlemen opposite did not seem to be sufficiently matured to grapple with the question, they passed it on to the other House, and the hon. gentlemen of the Senate made a giddy pretense of dealing with the matter. I may say, without wishing at all to use the language of the street, that they made quite a bluff at an investigation; they dilly-dallied from day to day until this House and the Government got tired waiting, and the Government took hold and forced an investigation. However, these matters are historic. The Government proceeded with an investigation, a committee was appointed, the committee sat from day to day, and elicited all the available information. Evidence was taken even from such remote countries as Mexico, and everything that gentlemen opposite suggested should be produced in the shape of evidence, was produced, at the expense of the ratepayers of this country. Every opportunity was given to gentlemen opposite to come forward and produce any evidence which might be pertinent to the question at issue. In fact, the investigation could have been closed some days sooner than it was, had the majority of the committee elected by the Government chosen to close it. At one sitting, notwithstanding that the amplest notice was given of the sitting, not a single gentleman representing the Opposition appeared, and, at the request of Mr. Greenshields, one of the men who, above all others, is blackguarded and slandered in this connection, suggested a postponement of the investigation, and it was postponed in order to give the Opposition absolutely no ground to say that there was any disposition to stifle or curtail any evidence they had to adduce. The evidence adduced at that committee, evidence which has not been impeached and which cannot be impeached or controverted, is now before this House and the country. Every hon. gentleman in this House may have a copy of that evidence if he wishes, indeed, I am sure that every member of the House, on both sides, has a copy of it. It is not often, in discussing any question in this House, that we have before us so explicitly and clearly all the available and pertinent facts in relation to it. Hon. gentlemen cannot go behind these facts, they cannot escape from the conclusion to which the evidence points, and in producing which they had full swing.

Now, based upon that evidence two reports were made, a majority and a minority report. The majority report was based on the facts produced at that investigation; the minority report, I am sorry to say, was not based upon the facts or evidence produced at that investigation, and I think I will be able to satisfy the House that I am correct in saying so. Those are the two judgments delivered upon the evidence taken on that occasion; and I venture to say that among gentlemen, reading all that evidence, there can be only one opinion derived from it, and that is, that the arrangement made by the Government through the Minister of Railways and Canals, is not only the best arrangement that could be made at the time, but the very best possible arrangement that could be made at any time in the past up to the present date. To any one who gives the matter a moment's consideration, the question will occur: Why did gentlemen opposite allow the affairs of the Intercolonial Railway to exist in the shape in which they were found when the present Government took the reins of power? To me, knowing, perhaps, as little about it as any gentleman in this House, it is utterly inexplicable that they should have allowed matters to drift as they did. I ask hon. gentlemen opposite to attempt to explain, if they can, their conduct up to the year 1896. It is now too late for the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, or any gentleman opposite, to come here and criticise this arrangement and say what could have been done or what ought to have been done. The fact remains staring us in the face that nothing was done by the Conservative Government, notwithstanding that the ex-Minister, of all the Ministers in the Cabinet of that day, and whose duty it was to have the courage of his convictions and to have pressed them upon his colleagues, sat dumbly by, and though thoroughly convinced that the very best that could be done for the Intercolonial Railway was to extend it into the city of Montreal, he sat idly by and, on his own sworn statement, alleges that he did not even broach the matter to the Cabinet. They did not attempt in any practical way to remedy the state of affairs, they simply drifted. Now, I do not wish to reflect upon the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals by saying that he tried to do his best, because he was of the opinion that the proper thing to do was to extend that road into Montreal. He did not do his best by simply sitting idle and entertaining an opinion that that was the best thing to do; he did not do the best he could, and to that extent he is culpable. It does not lie in his mouth now to criticise the fair, business proposition made by the Minister of Railways and Canals to remedy the state of affairs which he admits should be remedied. He was not alone in the opinion on that side of the House, that the road should be extended to Montreal. The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Ives) was of the same opinion, and is of the same opinion still; the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope) was of the same opinion, and is of the same opinion still. At the investigation, the hon. member for Compton gave evidence, and I will read a portion of it, as found on page 141 of the report:

I was always favourable to the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, and, my friends being interested in the Drummond County, and believing it to be as good an extension as could be got, I was always at the disposal of the Drummond County Railway people, in any way that I possessed any influence, to assist them in the disposal of that road.

For the purpose of extending the system into Montreal. That being so, the Minister of Railways and Canals cannot be blamed for entertaining the same opinion. Entertaining that opinion, he began to consider what was the best means of remedying the state of affairs then existing on the Intercolonial Railway, and how best to carry into effect the extension of the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal. In order to reach Montreal, then, it was agreed, both by the Minister of Railways and Canals and the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, that one of three routes was available, namely, the Drummond County Railway, which had a mileage of 157.37, the Grand Trunk Railway, which had a mileage of 173.73, and the South Shore, with a mileage of 159.39.

Now, the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals referred to the South Shore Railway in such a manner as to lead a person taking a superficial view of the three routes to believe that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals should have in preference to the Drummond County Railway selected the South Shore, but we find in the sworn statement what it cost per mile to build railways, and the cost of the South Shore, if built by the Government, or anybody else, would have been $23,000 per mile, whereas the Drummond County Railway would have cost some $16,000 a mile to build, and, I may say, parenthetically, that the Government have succeeded in acquiring that road for $12,000 a mile. It goes without saying that we must be confined to these three possible, available, practicable routes. The question of the Government building into Montreal, I think, need not be considered for a moment. We need only recall the experience of hon. gentlemen opposite in building railways to come to a conclusion, that it will be impossible to controvert the position that the Government could not have seriously entertained the proposition of building. Therefore, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals saw these conditions existing, these cardinal conditions. I may call them, and these same conditions, perhaps to a greater extent, existed during the incumbency in office of the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals. I think it would be a matter of considerable interest to the House, because it was a matter of considerable interest to myself, as well as a matter of curiosity, to notice how the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals approached this question, and how the present hon. Minister of Railways and Canals approached it. To show you the absolute difference of methods of these two hon. gentlemen, in transacting the business of the country, I will begin by reading extracts from the evidence of the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals. He gave his evidence at that investigation. He felt it incumbent upon himself, at the last stage of the investigation to come forward and put himself under oath and testify, one of the most solemn positions in which any human being can place himself. He was questioned as to the negotiations in regard to the acquirement of this extension of the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal, and this is what he says. I would like hon. gentlemen to carefully note the method in which the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals gives his testimony and the way in which he swears to what he did, or attempted to do, or what he did not do on this occasion:

In reference to this matter, the first that I remember about it is a conversation that, I think,—

—I had with Mr. Ives in 1894.

He is not positive about that, but he thinks he had a conversation, in 1894, with Mr. Ives :

The result of a little conversation we had between ourselves in reference to the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal.

It was simply a little conversation between these gentlemen about this important question out of which hon. gentlemen are now attempting to make so much capital. This is a question which, in 1899, has grown to such tremendous proportions, such vast magnitude, which was made the subject of a little conversation between the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals and Mr. Ives.

He was a colleague of mine. I entertained favourably at that time an opinion of the extension of the road, for a good many reasons.

He entertained an opinion for a good many reasons. I may anticipate and say that he did not give these reasons and, doubtless, he had reasons for not doing so.

We had trouble making connections with the Grand Trunk Railway, we had a great deal of trouble with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I thought that it was in the interest of the country that the road should be extended to Montreal.

Why, in heaven's name, he did not extend that road into Montreal, or do something whereby that road could be extended, when he swears that he was of the opinion that it was in the interest of the country that the road should be extended to Montreal, is something that it is impossible to understand.

That was my personal idea at that time. Mr. Ives proposed to me, then, the acquisition of the Drummond County Railway.

Mr. Ives could not have been moved by anything of private motives in suggesting to the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals that the proper thing to do would be to extend the road into Montreal. He turned a deaf ear to that.

He told me—or at least I do not know if he told me—

I just want hon. members to note the style of the evidence and the manner of giving the evidence which, if attempted before any judge of any Superior Court in this country would result in the witness's expulsion from the witness stand immediately. There is not a judge from one end of the country to the other but would have asked that witness to step down if he had given his evidence in the way in which the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals gave his evidence in this case :

He told me—or at least I do not know if he told me—I made inquiries about it.

He does not say from whom he made his inquiries.

And I found that the railway could be very cheaply obtained.

If he was of the opinion that it was in the best interest of the country that the road should be extended to Montreal, as he swears, and if the road could be obtained cheaply, why did he not obtain it cheaply and conserve the interests of the people whose interests he was sworn to protect ?

If I remember rightly, the principal indebtedness of the railway at that time was, as I understood it, in the neighbourhood of $170,000, to the Eastern Townships Bank. They had floating liabilities of from $25,000 to $30,000 more. I heard they were anxious to realize, and for a sum, I do not know how much above that, that the railway might be obtained.

At a certain stage he does swear the amount he was offered the road for. He stated today, and I venture to say that there is not an hon. gentleman, on either side of the House, but who would go out of this room and say truthfully and honestly that the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals stated that he could have obtained that road for $500,000, yet, he swears that he does not know for what amount he could have obtained it.

Mr. HAGGART. I am sure the hon. gentleman does not want to misrepresent my evidence.

Mr. MORRISON. I am giving it as it occurred.

Mr. HAGGART. The explanation is entirely different from what the hon. gentleman is giving. This conversation I had with Mr. Ives was prior to the option I got, and that is what I referred to in my evidence.

Mr. MORRISON. But this has no reference to the conversation with Mr. Ives at all.

Mr. HAGGART. It was at that time.

Mr. MORRISON. It is disassociated from the evidence, and in any event it is needless for me to make any further remarks, because the evidence speaks for itself. Does the hon. gentleman deny that he said, more than once, that he might have obtained the railway for $500,000 ? Does the hon. gentleman pretend to deny that ? The words have hardly stopped resounding in this Chamber that this railway could have been obtained for $500,000.

How to get in from the terminus of the railway to Montreal was another matter for consideration. I went down, and I think I saw the then president of the Grand Trunk Railway. I had a conversation with him upon the subject, and although he could not speak authoritatively without consulting his board, I understood from him that there would be no difficulty in making an arrangement to get into Montreal, and for the user of the terminal facilities there on the same terms as he allowed other railways, or on a mileage basis.

The hon. Minister of Railways of to-day not only got these facilities on the same terms as are allowed other railways, but on better terms than are allowed other railways. I will show that to the committee :

There was not much further to be done in the matter, though Mr. Ryan and I had a conversation on the subject. In conversation with Mr. Ryan, he stated to me he had spoken to Mr. Farwell upon the subject, and asked me if I was ready to consider a proposition from him.

I draw the attention of the committee to the statement that follows :—

I told him that I would have nothing to do with it, and advised him to have nothing to do with it.

Notwithstanding that he swore that, in the interest of the country and the interests of the people, the thing should be done, and that he could get it cheap. The ex-Minister (Mr. Haggart) continued :

I may state that I never submitted a proposition to Council—any proposition to Council—but I had a conversation with the Premier,—

Whether it was out on a fishing excursion, or whether it was on the street, or whether in the House, or whether in Council, he does not say.

—I had a conversation with the Premier, I think it was Sir John Thompson, in reference to the matter.

He does not even know who was Premier at the time: whether it was Sir John Thompson, or Sir John Abbott, or Sir Mackenzie Bowell, or Sir Charles Tupper.

I had a conversation with the Premier, I think it was Sir John Thompson, and I think with the Finance Minister (Mr. Foster),—

He thinks; he is not sure of that.

--but the matter never took any form, and never was considered in Council.

I say, in all earnestness, that the people of this country had the right to ask the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), why he did not mention it in Council, why he did not consider the proposition that was made to him, why he did not deal with it, and satisfy himself that he could not make a bargain? He continues :

If I remember rightly, Mr. Ryan spoke to me something in the direction of which he stated to-day, something about his finishing the road, or making some arrangements with them for finishing the road.

A few moments ago, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) stated that he said nothing about finishing the road, but I will refer to Mr. Ryan's evidence later on. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) continued :

I never heard of any proposition for a higher price to be charged for the road than the one named in the option of $500,000, and from information which I had at the time, correctly or not, I understood that other parties had options for the road for a less amount.

Mr. MORRISON.

I want the House to remember distinctly what he states here: That he had never heard of any proposition for a higher price for the road than $500,000. I ask, if any other interpretation can be put on these words, than that the Minister of Railways had the option of buying this road, with all that it means, for $500,000. He continued :

I understood that they had been negotiating for the sale of the road both to the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

That statement is an absolute contradiction of himself. He was not cross-examined to any great extent. It was not a question of being on the stand two or three days, and on the last day being cross-examined as to something he said on the first day, without having an opportunity of having his memory refreshed as to what he did say; it could not be more than five minutes after he swore that he had an opportunity of buying this road for $500,000, that he swears to the following :—

Q. Do you undertake to swear that he gave you to understand the road could be bought for $500,000?—A. Oh, I do not think so.

And then the hon. gentleman further mixes himself and winds himself up, for he goes on to say :

Q. And you knew they were willing to sell out for $500,000?

This is a question put by Mr. Powell, one of his own committee men. Mr. Powell puts this question to him, evidently trying to cover over the slip of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart), that he had an opportunity of buying it, and then saying he did not have that opportunity. Mr. Powell comes back, and says :

Q. And you knew they were willing to sell out for $500,000?—A. Yes, and I said that I knew they had given other options for less, for $100,000 less, and were negotiating with the Grand Trunk Railway and other companies, and I would have nothing more to do with them.

That is categorically denied by the gentleman who would have made the offer, and who knew all about it. I refer to the evidence of Mr. Farwell. Mr. Farwell is the gentleman in reference to whom Mr. Pope, the hon. member for Compton, stated on oath, that he would believe Mr. Farwell on oath, and he would believe anything Mr. Farwell said on oath to be absolutely true. Mr. Farwell gave his evidence with respect to this $400,000, and it was not impeached in any particular. He desposed as follows :—

Q. There were no other options given in connection with this road?—A. I might have had another, but it was simply to me.

Q. I suppose for a similar amount to this?—A. I do not remember; I was under the impression that this was for $400,000, but it is put here at $500,000.

Q. What did you think the other option would be for?—A. The other option would be for $400,000; but I do not know that this is an exact copy. It was not less than $400,000

And again, at the bottom of the page :

Q. It was for the same purpose—to sell to the Government?—A. Yes ; we never offered to sell to anybody for any less than that.

Q. That was for $400,000?—A. For $100,000 rental, or two and a half millions, until this last lease came up.

Q. Was there ever any authority given to anybody to sell for $400,000?—A. Never.

Q. You would not have taken it, I presume?—A. Never.

That is the evidence of Mr. Farwell on oath. I would ask any dispassionate person listening to the evidence of these two people, listening to the evidence of the Minister of Railways, where he contradicts himself, and listening to the evidence of Mr. Farwell—I would ask, would any sensible person hesitate as to which of these two gentlemen he would think was correct? No person with reason would for a moment hesitate to believe Mr. Farwell, who states there is no option for $400,000.

Mr. HAGGART. Why did you not read all the evidence of Mr. Farwell on that point?

Mr. MORRISON. I did.

Mr. HAGGART. Mr. Farwell swore this:

Q. What do you think the other option would be for?—A. The other option would be for $400,000 ; but I do not know if this is an exact copy. It was not less than $400,000.

Mr. MORRISON. I have just read that. I need not refer to Mr. Farwell at all. It makes no difference what Mr. Farwell said or what he did not say. What I am concerned about is, what the Minister of Railways said, and what he has sworn to, and how he has contradicted himself. And, taking the statement of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart), and comparing it with the statements of other gentlemen that were not contradicted, I want the House to be in a position to judge as to which of these two gentlemen it should believe, because either one or the other must be stating that which is not a fact. Take the evidence of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), when he approached this question of the extension of the railway to Montreal. The Hon. Andrew G. Blair appeared also before the committee, and this is what he swore :

Shortly after the session of Parliament in 1896—that is the first session of the new Parliament—I began to turn my attention to the subject of the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. I may say that I did this of my own motion. I was not invited to do so, nor was it suggested to me by any gentleman connected with or interested in any way with the Grand Trunk Railway or the Drummond County Railway.

This is Mr. Blair's sworn statement, and, as I know hon. gentlemen wish to be fair, I would like them, when they attribute, and slanderously attribute, motives to the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) on ex parte statements not on oath—I wish that they should remember this sworn statement.

And I wish them to remember the opportunity they had of cross-examining the Minister (Mr. Blair) on his sworn statement, and of impeaching that evidence, and bringing evidence in rebuttal. Neither of these they did. Mr. Blair continues in his evidence :

I thought it would be in the interests of the Intercolonial Railway, if it could secure a terminal at Montreal.

In that respect, he quite agrees with the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart).

My first purpose, rather my first object, in the matter, was to ascertain how such a policy would commend itself to my colleagues, and I found that they were well disposed towards it, providing that arrangements could be made on satisfactory terms.

Compare that with the attitude of the ex-Minister of Railways, who never broached or attempted to broach the subject to his colleagues.

Without being at all able to speak positively as to the dates between the time that Parliament closed and the middle or latter part of November, I put myself in communication with Mr. Wainwright, of the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

A proper thing to do—

I told Mr. Wainwright what was passing in my mind, that if we could make satisfactory arrangements it would be to our advantage to get into Montreal, and I asked him whether he was in a position to say that the Grand Trunk would be open to negotiations on the subject. He told me he thought they would, but that he would confer with the general manager and let me know later, which he did. Later on, he told me that Mr. Hays, the general manager of the Grand Trunk, would be open to a discussion of the subject, and, if my memory serves me, that was about all the progress made before I left for the Pacific coast, about the middle of last November. I did not return until the first week of January, and on my return I resumed my interviews with Mr. Wainwright. Up to this date I did not—I think up to this date—at all events until after I had been some little time in communication with Mr. Wainwright and the Grand Trunk Railway Company—I did not know who was interested in the Drummond County Railway.

I want hon. gentlemen to remember that also, when considering the unworthy insinuations of hon. gentlemen opposite, that Mr. Greenshields and the Drummond County people had initiated these negotiations with the Government and the Minister of Railways. Then Mr. Powell asked :

Q. That was in January, 1897?—A. Yes ; when I returned from the Pacific coast. I am not positive, I might have known it before I went away, as to who were the owners of the Drummond County Railway. I did not know it before I had spoken to Mr. Wainwright. I am quite sure about that, and I think it was on my suggestion that Mr. Wainwright spoke to the Drummond County people, and I early learned for the first time that Mr. Greenshields was largely interested in that company and road. Nothing of a very definite character transpired until after I returned from the Pacific coast.

Then the Minister proceeds to show the way in which he started to take into consideration the various propositions and problems which he had to face. There is a part of the evidence which it is not quite necessary to read in this connection. I will go on from the middle of page 9 :

In considering this question of the extension to Montreal, I looked with some carefulness into the whole question of possible routes. There were these three routes already spoken of in Parliament and the newspaper press. First, there was the route over the present Grand Trunk Railway, and instead of deflecting from the Grand Trunk at Ste. Rosalie it was open to us, if we chose, to arrange with the Grand Trunk to continue to Richmond on the main Portland line, and further take their Chaudière branch or line, or whatever you would call it. That line is longer, as I think I could show you, and as I think I ascertained, some miles longer than the Drummond County Railway, and it had not the same desirable grades. They were more frequent and heavier, and on the whole the line would not be as desirable a line as the Drummond County Railway.

That evidence is corroborated by railway experts and engineers, whose evidence I will read later on—

Moreover, I remember saying to Mr. Wainwright: "Mr. Wainwright, supposing we concluded to consider this, what would your people want for your line?" "Well," he said, "we talked about two and a half millions—between two and two and a half millions—for that piece of line from Richmond to Chaudière." Then we would have had to lease or acquire rights from the Grand Trunk from Richmond to Ste. Rosalie. We could not have acquired that part of the road, for that is part of their trunk line. This is in the neighbourhood of 35—perhaps a little over 28—miles, and we would have had to pay them rental on that and then to acquire from them about 60—a little over 60—miles, and, I think, from Richmond to Chaudière. That phase of the question did not strike me very favourably, I confess, and I turned my attention to the subject of the South Shore Railway.

Now, throughout the whole course of the evidence of the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), he did not condescend to let us know, and, even when he gave us the opportunity of knowing, he did not show that he went to that extent into the consideration of the matter :

That line had been built to Sorel, and there remained considerable mileage yet to be constructed, and from all the information I could get it would be longer, and moreover a much more expensive line. The line would necessarily cost for bridging a very much larger sum than the Drummond County Railway.

Nobody denied that, and it has not been denied yet—

On the whole, it appeared to me, if we could arrange upon suitable terms to acquire the Drummond County Railway, that that was the best route of the three, and I communicated my tentative view on this subject to Mr. Wainwright. I think it was Mr. Wainwright, the first time I met Mr. Greenshields, who brought Mr. Greenshields to me. In the meanwhile, the Grand Trunk were preparing a memo. of the terms upon which they would let us have the use of their bridge and of their terminals. I received this memorandum either in the latter part of February or March.

At page 58, Mr. Powell examines Mr. Wainwright on this point :

Another matter I do not understand quite, Mr. Wainwright, is about the 15 miles extension to enable the Intercolonial to connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway?—A. We gave them the right to run from Montreal, although it is a piece of railway and not a siding. The department made such a point of making such a connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway that, although it was a disputed point, I admitted it, and Mr. Hays gave way upon it, that they should have the right. It gave them about 15 miles of railway.

Then Mr. Wainwright goes on to show that this was quite an important concession for them to make in the premises. Now, at no stage did the ex-Minister of Railways, at the time he had the opportunity of negotiating, approach the matter in the business-like way in which the present Minister of Railways did. I have read this simply by way of parallel to show you the business-like way in which the present Minister of Railways approached the matter, and the very slovenly, unbusiness-like way in which the ex-Minister of Railways dealt with it. Both gentlemen considered these different routes. The present Minister elicited all the information he could as a basis on which to proceed. The ex-Minister of Railways did not seem to bother his head about it, but let it go, apparently thinking that the thing might adjust itself hap-hazardly, that somebody might die, or that the Government would go out of power, and the responsibility would be shifted upon the shoulders of some one else, which, fortunately for the country, has been the case.

In order to decide whether this is a reasonable business transaction on the part of the Government, certain tests must be applied, as in ordinary business transactions, such as comparing it with similar transactions at other times and under similar circumstances. Fortunately, we are not without abundance of similar conditions under the old régime; and I am not going to make any statement, if I can help it, that is not based on sworn testimony. To give an illustration, I will refer to the evidence of Mr. Wainwright. The Drummond County Railway, which it was determined to use in extending the Intercolonial to Montreal, was organized in 1886, and was constructed under the eye of the Grand Trunk Railway. Mr. Wainwright, at page 50, says :

Had you a favourable opinion of the road and the possibilities of traffic ?

It is hardly necessary, I suppose, for me to tell the House and country who Mr. Wainwright is. He is the assistant superintendent of the Grand Trunk Railway—a gentleman who has been in the country some 40 years, connected with that railway, and known to the people of Canada for that period of time as a man whose integrity and experience nobody will gainsay.

A. Yes, sir, Mr. Church originally undertook the construction of the road in full touch with the G. T. R. Co., and the idea at that time was entertained by the late Sir Joseph Hickson that the Grand Trunk Railway would acquire it. We expected we should be able to secure quite a good traffic off the line, and that was our reason for desiring to retain possession of it.

Now, the Grand Trunk Railway people are not running its railway system for the benefit of their health, but to make dividends, and to cater at the same time to the public by giving it an efficient service, and they had this Drummond line built under its own supervision.

Q. Have you any reason, from your recent experience and knowledge of the business upon that road, to alter your opinion in that regard?—A. No.

Q. Will you kindly state what your view would be with regard to the relative merits now of that road with others that have been spoken of as through lines for the Intercolonial in reaching Montreal?—A. Well, as regards the connection of the Intercolonial with Montreal, the Drummond County Railway, as far as I know from the engineers' reports, is the shortest line and the easiest line to St. Lambert that could be acquired. The distances have already been given, I think, in your evidence, Mr. Blair, and these figures are correct according to my report.

Q. How about the grades?—A. Of course, the Grand Trunk Railway has some longer and has some heavier grades. The South Shore road is a little longer, according to the engineer's reports, and would have a good deal of heavy bridging; therefore, would be very costly and, under the circumstances, I presume, that the Drummond County is about the easiest method of extending the road to Montreal.

Q. The rate at which we acquired it is the cheapest, is it not?—A. I should think so. I think the price agreed upon represents, as far as I remember, about $12,000 a mile, which is certainly a very low price for the railway.

Presently I will read sworn testimony to show that this extension to Montreal did cost all the way from $14,000 to $19,000 per mile. And to show that it is the easiest and best route into Montreal, we are not confined to the testimony of Mr. Wainwright, for we find that the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope), who sits on the other side of the House, in giving his evidence, as reported on page 141 of the report, corroborates that opinion.

Q. You went over the road for the purpose of satisfying yourself?—A. Yes, sir.

Q. What is your judgment as to the character of the road?—A. I think it is a good road.

Q. What do you say as to probable traffic?—A. It has a fair local traffic. It all depends upon the arrangements made by the Government as to the through traffic.

Now, while this line may have a very good local traffic, I go so far as to say that even if it had not, its acquisition was desirable, not on account of its local traffic, but as a link of the Intercolonial, connecting it with our great transcontinental road to the Pacific, and that was the point of view urged for its acquisition.

As to the cost of the road, I would draw your attention to the evidence on page 43, of Mr. Newton, whose evidence is not controverted, and who is a man who knew whereof he was speaking.

Q. Give us the amount this firm passed to you as the amount of construction at that time?—A. The amount paid out to date for building the line and received from the foregoing, as per construction-book, on June 30th, 1890, was $729,314.52.

And later on, he swore that the whole outlay up to 1898 of this company on the line was somewhere about $2,000,000, in round numbers.

Now, as to the cost, I might go into details and refer you to page 89 of the sworn testimony, as against which the bald statement of the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart), or any other hon. gentleman on that side cannot stand for a moment. We find, by the evidence of Mr. Newton, that up to the 28th of February, 1898, the road cost $1,908,271.33, made up as follows: There was expended up to the end of June, 1894, $1,163,970; to the end of June, 1895, that rose to $1,255,076; to the end of June, 1896, the expenditure was $1,366,485; to the end of June, 1897, it amounted to $1,527,437, and in February, 1898, it reached the sum of $1,908,271. Yet that is the road which hon. gentlemen opposite state categorically, but which, none of them, with the exception of the ex-Minister of Railways, dare to state under oath, could have been obtained by them for $500,000. The effrontery and colossal absurdity of such a statement cannot fail to strike us at once. What further proof is necessary? How can these hon. gentlemen for one moment go back on the sworn testimony which they had every opportunity of controverting and did not. Take the evidence of Mr. McLeod, as to the value of the road, to be found on page 111. Mr. McLeod is a gentleman of integrity and experience, whose evidence was not impeached in any respect or attempted to be impeached. Let me draw the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to what he said:

Q. Your valuation of the road, when completed under contract with the Government, what do you estimate its value per mile?—A. It ought to be more than $15,000 for the portion from Moose Park.

Q. How much was it worth from Moose Park to the Chaudière per mile?—A. It would cost about $16,000 to $17,000 per mile.

This is the estimated cost of that road which hon. gentlemen opposite say could have been purchased for $500,000.

Q. That is the new part?—A. Yes. The new part, from Moose Park to Chaudière.

Q. Then the value of the rest of the road from Moose Park to Ste. Rosalie, I think, you said was $15,000 a mile; do you still adhere to that?—A. With the improvements, it would probably cost about $16,000 a mile.

Q. And the other about $17,000 a mile?—A. Yes.

Q. And the total can be figured upon that?—A. Yes.

Q. It is only a few minutes ago that you made an estimate of what you put the value of the road at?—A. That was without these additions that I propose to make.

Q. Read them over again.—A. $17,000 a mile was the estimate I first gave.

Q. Divide it into two sections; now, from Moose Park to Chaudière, how much was that?

Here Mr. Blair interjected: "He told you in addition that for masonry you ought to add $1,000 a mile more."

Q. How much was it from Moose Park to Chaudière?—A. I think it was $17,000 a mile.

Q. And how much from Ste. Rosalie to Moose Park?—A. $15,000 a mile.

Q. Then from Moose Park to Ste. Rosalie would be $16,000 a mile?

Mr. Blair here interjected: "More than that, because there is $100,000 to be spent on the 72 miles."

Q. From Moose Park to Ste. Rosalie is the old part?—A. Yes.

Q. When completed, what will, in your judgment, be the cost—worth per mile or the cost per mile?—A. According to the estimate I have made of $65,000 being expended upon it, that will bring it up to about $16,000 a mile.

Q. Then, from Moose Park, these 42 miles to Chaudière, you say are equal to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway?—A. With these additions.

Q. What will that be worth?—A. About $17,000 per mile.

Q. If you were asked to state whether the price of $12,000 a mile, which the Government agreed to pay, is a reasonable price or not, what would you say?—A. I would say it was a very reasonable price.

Q. What would you say if the Government needed the road that it was a good purchase at that figure?—A. I should say so.

Q. Could any reasonable exception be taken by any reasonable man to the purchase price?—A. No.

That is the evidence of Mr. McLeod. Then, we will take the evidence of Mr. Wainwright at page 148. And I would like hon. members to place it alongside of the bald statement, the irresponsible statement, of the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals:

The point upon which I wish to ask you is this, generally, whether the arrangements were more or less favourable to the Intercolonial Railway? That is the present extension into Montreal.

A. The present arrangement is more favourable.

Q. Much more so?—A. Yes, a good deal more so.

And the evidence also at page 50, which I have already read, that the Drummond County Railway was the best and easiest method of reaching Montreal. We have also the evidence of Mr. Greenshields on the same point. I am reading these quotations at the risk of wearying the House, but the question is a very important one. And, speaking for myself, I feel a great responsibility in rising in my place and contradicting categorically the statement made by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals before this House and before this country. I feel it a tremendous responsibility to stand up and, putting my sentiments in as mild terms as I can, contradicting him—with all that that may mean—in his statements made seriously and with the object and motive no doubt, of having the people believe that he is a man of truth. I say, at the risk of wearying the House, I shall read a few extracts showing that the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals absolutely misled this House, or tried to mislead this House, in the statements he made this afternoon. The evidence of Mr. Greenshields at page 32:

Was that agreement in writing?

This has reference to the option.

A. Yes, this agreement was in writing with Mr. Farwell. Mr. Farwell has copies on the lines which I have just indicated. In other words, if the arrangements had been carried through on the basis of $500,000, and on the provisions I have said, the shareholders of the Drummond County Railway would have received infinitely more for the road than they now propose to receive under the present arrangement with this Government.

That is, this proposition which the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals has distorted and misrepresented, Mr. Greenshields swears—and he has not been contradicted—was infinitely more advantageous to the Government than the other would have been. How can the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals reconcile his statements with the sworn statement of Mr. Greenshields. And again, at page 37:

Q. Now, do I understand you to say, Mr. Greenshields, that the result, if the negotiations had closed with the Government, would have been financially a better one for the Drummond County Railway than the arrangements you have made with the Government to-day?—A. Undoubtedly it would have been.

And again, Mr. Farwell, at page 135, as I before stated. Now, this was the state of affairs presenting itself to the Minister of Railways and Canals. He also had the experience of dealing with other roads almost under similar circumstances. We turn to page 48, Mr. Wainwright's evidence. I will not make the statement myself, but I will read Mr. Wainwright's statement on that point. As to three different instances which the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals had before him and which the Minister of Railways and Canals also had before him, in deciding as to whether these propositions of the Drummond County acquisition was the best available or not.

Q. What would you say the Drummond County Railway was worth per mile as it stands to-day?—A. And Mr. Wainwright answered that question in this fashion:

A. Well, I can answer that question with regard to the construction of roads in the province of Quebec, by giving you the figures of what we have expended in the construction of lines. To give an opinion on the Drummond County Railway, I should require to make some examination of it, and know something about the details. I might say to you that there are three railways in Quebec constructed under my own supervision, namely, the Beauharnois Junction Railway, which was built in accordance with a subsidy contract, with a light rail of 56 lbs., running from the county of Beauharnois, cost the Grand Trunk Railway about $17,000 a mile; the Champlain Junction Railway, with a 65-lb. rail, and built in the same manner, cost the company between $18,000 and $19,000 per mile; the Jacques Cartier Railway, which connects the Grand Trunk Railway with the Canadian Pacific Railway in Jacques Cartier, with a 56-lb. rail only, cost the Grand Trunk $19,000 a mile—a little over. I have been over the Drummond County Railway, and will say this much, that the 43 miles recently built is, in my opinion, far superior in construction to the construction of any of these roads I have named. The other portion of it, of course, is not so good, because it carries a lighter rail; therefore, it is not so expensively constructed.

There were these three samples of roads ranging from $17,000 up to $19,000 a mile. Do not forget, however, that the Minister of Railways and Canals has acquired this road at the rate of $12,000 a mile. Institute a comparison for a moment. But there is more than that. At page 54 Mr. Wainwright gives the instance of the Rivière du Loup extension:

Q. You were saying about the value of railways at the present time, as compared with years ago, do you carry in your mind the value that was agreed upon between the Government and your company for a bare road-bed between Rivière du Loup and Lévis, without rail, without ties, and without the usual equipments?—A. Do I understand that you refer to the purchase of the Rivière du Loup line?

Q. I suppose that would be involved in it. Do you recollect the price paid at that time?—A. Do you mean the amount that was paid?

Q. Yes, if you like.—A. It would be a million and a half dollars.

Q. How many miles was that?—A. Mr. Schreiber will know the distance; I think it was 126—about 126 miles.

Q. That was bought by the Government from the Grand Trunk in what year?—A. In the year 1879, I think.

Q. That was simply the road-bed in the shape it was then in, without rails, sleepers or any equipment?—A. Yes.

Q. How much was paid?—A. $1,500,000, I think was the price paid. The agreement shows.

Then, there was the Lévis to Richmond line, referred to at page 55:

Q. You spoke of a portion of your line from Lévis to Richmond—you estimated that portion at what price?—A. About $2,000,000; between $2,000,000 and $2,500,000.

Q. That is about 80 miles, is it not?—A. More than that; nearly 90. We figured it out at $20,000 or $25,000 a mile.

So, the Minister of Railways and Canals had those examples before him, when he was trying to determine whether the acquisition of this Drummond County Railway at $12,000 a mile was a reasonable business proposition. I ask, if any hon. gentleman on either side of the House will undertake to say, that the acquirement of this road at $12,000 a mile, in view of the sworn testimony as to the price of these other roads, was not a perfectly reasonable and sound business transaction. No man who has any respect for his opinion can undertake to deny it. I say, that any reasonable business man would be quite satisfied with that evidence, and would consider that information sufficient to justify him in proceeding to close the bargain at once.

But the Minister of Railways and Canals had some further matters to look into, some further circumstances to consider. For instance, there was the question of the earning capacity of the road. Now, from the little I know of this business, I am of the opinion that the present, or past, or possible local earning capacity of that link is of no consequence in considering the question of getting the system extended into Montreal. The value of that piece of road, in my opinion, except as a link in a system, would not be so great. However, the Minister of Railways and Canals was a little more particular, and he inquired into the earning capacity of the road, as it then existed; and he found that, for the last two or three years, and up to the time that he undertook negotiations, the net earnings of that road ran from $30,000 to $35,000, which earnings by the way, were applied to improvements of the road. Therefore, any road with a net earning capacity of $30,000 to $35,000, operating under the great difficulties which that road must have been operated under, is no mean piece of road. Certainly, I would say it is not a road that could be acquired for $500,000. A moment's reflection will convince any gentleman that a road earning $30,000 or $35,000 should certainly be worth more than $500,000. However, after ascertaining the cost of the road and its earning capacity, the Minister of Railways and Canals then set about ascertaining what concessions he could get from both these concerns, particularly the Grand Trunk Railway, because the Grand Trunk Railway must be considered in connection with the discussion of this proposition. The first matter that he turned his attention to was, what concessions he could obtain from the Grand Trunk Railway in respect to its main line and the traffic over the Victoria bridge, also as to terminal facilities. Now, the terms which he obtained over the main line and over the Victoria bridge are set out clearly on pages 10 to 14 of the sworn testimony; and I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite, particularly the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, to take time and read the evidence there given, in view of the statements he made here this afternoon. There you will find the estimates of the Grand Trunk Railway people and of Mr. Schreiber, the Deputy Minister of Railways, as to what would be a fair rental for the use of the Victoria bridge. The Grand Trunk Railway people estimated the value of the use of terminals at Point St. Charles, Bonaventure, and use of railways, at $62,500; and Mr. Schreiber estimated them at $61,960. Mr. Schreiber's estimate tallied very closely with the figures of the Grand Trunk Railway people, as you will observe. Then, on pages 12, 13 and 14, will be found, from the evidence of the Minister of Railways and Canals, the result of the negotiations that he had in regard to terminal facilities and the land alone. On page 49, we find Mr. Wainwright's evidence. Now, Mr. Wainwright is the man of all others whose evidence on this point must be considered, and to which absolute credence must be given. What does he say with regard to terminal facilities?

Q. What rights have the Intercolonial Railway in the terminals of Montreal?—A. They have rights in common with the Grand Trunk Railway. I thought this matter might come up, and to show the extent of our terminals, I have here plans showing all the terminals west of the bridge to Jacques Cartier Junction.

Now, I would like hon. gentlemen to listen carefully to what Mr. Wainwright swears regarding the value of these terminals:

Q. What are the value of these terminals?—A. Mr. Chairman, they are invaluable; I do not think you can give them a money value. We have in Point St. Charles about 150 acres of land which to-day I do not think could be bought; well, I cannot give you any figures. We consider our terminals in Montreal worth many million dollars; but it is very difficult to name a cash value. Point St. Charles is now a very thickly populated district, and here the shops and freight sheds are situated, and are invaluable.

Q. And you say that the Intercolonial Railway has a right to use these in common with the Grand Trunk Railway?—A. Yes.

Q. Freight sheds, round houses, tracks, and so forth?—A. Yes, all the sidings; also the right to run to Jacques Cartier Junction to connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway. That was a point we did not like to give, but it was demanded by the Minister, and means running over 15 miles of railway to reach that point, and represents nothing to us but a proportionate payment, and it means in addition to these sidings 15 miles of railway. That is all shown on the plan.

Then, Mr. Wainwright says, with regard to the local traffic:

Q. And was there not another point that we came nearly dropping the whole business upon, and that was in regard to our right of ownership of such traffic as we would have on the Grand Trunk Railway between Montreal and Ste. Rosalie?

Gentlemen who know anything about the old arrangement between the Intercolonial Railway and the companies, know that the Intercolonial Railway was completely under the thumb of the Grand Trunk Railway in regard to its local traffic. This is Mr. Wainwright's answer:

Yes. It would have come to an end if I had had to deal with it.

Mr. Wainwright says, that the Minister of Railways and Canals forced him and drove a hard bargain. He would not have granted the concession, but would have ended the discussion then and there. He goes on to say:

We divided once or twice on that question. We have made a great many trackage arrangements—this between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Government is not the only one—but it is not usual when a railway grants another running powers over its line, either in England or in this country, to allow it to pick up local traffic. We have trackage arrangements with the Canadian Pacific Railway between Hamilton and Toronto and to North Bay, and with the Canada Atlantic Railway between Lacolle and Rouse's Point, but they get no local traffic. The Minister insisted upon it, and it was a considerable time before our general manager would allow it, and he gave way on that point, which he has not done in any other case. They have the right now to secure local traffic between Montreal and St. Hyacinthe.

Now, these hon. gentlemen opposite give no credit to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals for wrenching that concession from the Grand Trunk people, and it is no small concession. Then at page 147, we read the evidence of Mr. Wainwright again:

Q. What are the several roads that enjoy terminal facilities over the Grand Trunk in Montreal?—A. There are no roads that have terminal facilities in Montreal.

I would like hon. gentlemen to listen to this:

Q. Are there any roads that have the right to go into Montreal on your track on any terms whatever?—A. Simply the interchange of cars, on which we get a proportion of the traffic charges. There are no running rights over our tracks similar to the proposed Intercolonial Railway agreement.

No other road running into Montreal has the same favourable terms or ranks as favourably as the Intercolonial Railway, under the arrangement consummated by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals. Then, in addition to that concession, there is the concession of handing over the traffic at Montreal and shutting out the Grand Trunk line to Point Lévis, reference to which is found at page 62. So that, considering the situation as found by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, and the manner in which he sought to negotiate and did negotiate, the result of these negotiations, I think, should satisfy any impartial, any dispassionate, fair-minded gentleman that the very best possible arrangement was made under the circumstances. But hon. gentlemen opposite seem to be blind to all these things. They attempted to bring in the most irrelevant and foreign matters, such as the question of deals in the way of purchasing newspapers and hoodling and dragging the name of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) into it, dragging his son's name into it, dragging Mr. Greenshield's name into it, and trying to draw red herrings of that kind across the track. Hon. gentlemen opposite are trying to hoodwink the people by adopting the line of argument which they are following in this matter. It may be a fair method of discussion, as hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House consider these things, to make false and irrelevant statements about any subject matter that may come up for discussion; but I am surprised that the gentlemen composing the minority of the committee of investigation, should in their report, drag these matters in. But, to that, I will refer later on. The people who composed this Drummond County Railway Company were dragged before the House and placed before the country as being dishonourable men in trying to dispose of this road. Let us see if they are. I would refer hon. gentlemen opposite to the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope), and there is no gentleman, on that side of the House, for whose opinion I have greater respect. I do not say that because, on this question, he had the manhood to stand up and say what he did in a fair way. He is a gentleman who knows more about this matter than any gentleman on the other side of the House, and perhaps more than any hon. gentleman on this side of the House. What does he say about these men, and I will direct the attention of hon. gentlemen opposite to the evidence as given at page 141 of the report, and to his speech, as reported in "Hansard," page 4312 in 1897. Let us see what the hon. member for Compton says about these people composing the Drummond County Railway Company who were boodling and buying up newspapers and prostituting Cabinet Ministers, and all that sort of thing:

I heard some remarks made also with regard to the gentlemen who are connected with the Drummond County Railway. I heard very serious reflections cast upon them, and perhaps it is only natural, in a hot contest, as this promises to be, that such remarks should be made, but being personally acquainted with them for years, I must bear testimony to the honour and uprightness of the gentlemen associated with that road. I have known them for years, and have never known anything dishonourable against them or any institution with which they are connected. It is stated that they are going to make money. Well, suppose they do make money. I am bound to say that they would be a pack of fools if they invested their money in that road, and if they pledged their credit to the extent I know they did, notwithstanding what is said to the contrary in this House, to acquire sufficient funds to carry the road out to satisfactory completion, without expecting a fair remuneration for their enterprise. Out of this transaction I do not believe—it may be a weakness of mine not to be a believer—that the amount of money these gentlemen are going to receive will be, after everything is paid, more than a fair recompense.

That is what Mr. Pope said. I need not go any further as to the standing of these people, but I will refer particularly to the arrangements and dealings with the Drummond County people. If hon. gentlemen will turn to page 16 they will find what dealings the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals had with these Drummond County people, and when he had them. It is insinuated that the whole matter of the acquiring of the Drummond County Railway by the Government was instituted, initiated and suggested by the Drummond County Railway people in secrecy to some Minister of the present Government. This is what the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals says on that point:

The arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company was, as you know, closed on the basis of $140,000, and that contract was not approved by Parliament. The arrangement was made with the Drummond County Railway Company on the basis of $70,000 a year rental. We estimated that the road completed as we would require it to Chaudière would be worth $1,600,000 at least. Interest on that at 4 per cent would be equal to $64,000, and the $6,000 at the Chaudière end made the $70,000. The contract we made with the Drummond County Railway Company, as the papers will show (the papers have been before Parliament; I can produce another copy if you wish it) was to build and complete from Moose Park to Chaudière, in round figures a distance of 43 miles, up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway.

Q. What is the length?—A. 42·60 or ·70 miles, or, in round figures, 43 miles. We required them to lay that portion of the line with rails weighing not less than 70 lbs. to the lineal yard. And we required that they should reduce certain grades and make certain improvements on the old part of the line. All that was stipulated in their contract. A vote was passed authorizing a subsidy to be given to the Drummond County Railway in aid of these 43 miles. They entered into a contract with the Government under the Subsidy Act, and went on to construct their line, and it was during that construction that Mr. Kingsford was superintending or inspecting on behalf of the Government. They prosecuted the work quite vigorously, but they were unable to complete it to our satisfaction; in fact, they had not yet completed it entirely, up to the date when we took the road into our hands or over from them temporarily, and began to run it on the 1st of March. The work which they were required to do was heavy, I presume; at all events, although they worked very vigorously and energetically at it, time did not permit of their completing it entirely to our satisfaction.

Showing that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals took every precaution to watch these people and was most exacting in regard to the work which they were undertaking. At page 19:

Q. You have all the quantities under the contract in the department. They are filed in the department, I suppose, and Mr. Kingsford's report?—A. Well, I think it is likely we have all that, but I do not know whether it would convey an accurate idea of the actual cost. In connection with this temporary contract with the Drummond County Railway, and before entering into it, we came to an arrangement with the Drummond County whereby we have the option from them, whenever Parliament should so authorize us, to purchase for cash the Drummond County line for its entire length from Ste. Rosalie to Chaudière at the valuation which we originally put upon it, and the cost at which it is calculated by the railway, $1,600,000. A good deal has been said about our having made an arrangement for a rental which was excessive, and which, capitalized, represented two or three millions of money. We knew well the Drummond County could not negotiate their line on any such basis as the country could borrow money, and we took for granted that it represented to them $1,600,000.

We figured on that expectation and basis, and, therefore, in order to remove the possibility of an objection on the ground that we were really giving more than we purported to give, we proposed to the Drummond County that they should give us an option, either to lease the road or to purchase it by cash on a basis of $1,600,000. That is in the temporary arrangement we made with them, a copy of which I will leave with the committee.

Again, on page 20, referring to exhibit 17 :

Q. What is the date of that document (Exhibit No. 17)?—A. February 25, 1898. You will observe, gentlemen, that this will show clearly, at all events, what some of the Drummond County people imagined they were getting, supposing they were offering it in a capital sum instead of the lease contract they made with us. The $1,600,000, you will observe, includes the original cost of the line to the company of the 73 miles, includes the cost of construction of the 43 miles which they have made, and includes $100,000 in addition, which is to be expended under our direction. I may be permitted to say that it will be somewhat difficult to find that we bought a road and paid $1,000,000 more than it was worth in the face of such figures as those. With the exception of one statement, that is all I have to say. That statement is this : A good deal has been stated in the public press, and something more or less hinted in Parliament,—

If the witness were speaking to-day he could have said it was not only hinted, but "stated" in Parliament, because it was stated this afternoon :

A good deal has been stated in the public press and something more or less hinted in Parliament, in regard to fraudulent and corrupt transactions carried on with reference to negotiations over this Drummond County Railway.

The ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) got up on the floor of this House to-day, and if he did not categorically say so, he, at least, imputed corruption on the part of the Government in this transaction, notwithstanding that he swore that he did not impute corruption ; that he did not state there was any corruption in this transaction. Notwithstanding that he explicitly withdrew and emphatically denied under oath, that he intended to make such an insinuation of corruption ; to-day he stultified himself by standing up in this House and repeat that insinuation in the presence of gentlemen who heard him make the statement, and swear to it, that he did not impute corruption to the Government.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). On what page of the evidence did the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) swear that ?

Mr. MORRISON. At page 158, when he was under oath. What I say is, that the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart), whilst attending the sittings of that committee, and whilst that committee was sitting was under oath from the first time he kissed that book, whether he was in the witness chair or not ; and, as a matter of fact, when he made that statement he was sitting in the same chair as when he gave his evidence, and anything he said was as much under oath as that which is set out on page 185.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Pardon me ; we might as well settle this matter now. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) would then say, that the counsel who goes on the witness stand and makes a statement on oath, is under oath during the rest of the trial.

Mr. MORRISON. Yes, appertaining to the subject matter of the evidence, and I say this was the subject matter of the evidence. The ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) cannot escape from the position by saying he was not on oath. Even if he had not gone through the form of swearing or taking the oath, I say that as an ex-Cabinet Minister, as a member of this House, his statement should have the same binding effect as an oath, so I care not whether he was sworn or not.

Mr. HAGGART. I suppose the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) does not intend to misrepresent me. The first time my attention was drawn to it I made a statement in the House with reference to it. What I meant, and what I did say was, that I never made a charge in this House in reference to corruption.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). What are you doing to-day ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Your statement was that you never made any charge.

Mr. MORRISON. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart), of course, is trying to shirk the question. The chairman of the committee referred to the imputation—

Mr. HAGGART. Read what the chairman said.

Mr. MORRISON. I shall read it at the request of the hon. gentleman. This is what occurred :

The Chairman spoke as follows :—" I wish to say that I have caused to be brought before the committee every person who might throw any light on the transaction, and before we close the evidence I would ask members of the committee who are here to say whether there is any further evidence which they desire to have brought before the committee. Of course you are aware that in the press and in the House it was charged that the Government collectively, as well as certain individual members of the Government, were guilty of corruption in connection with the purchase of this road. So far as I have been able to see, no evidence of corruption has been adduced, and if my friends on the opposite side of the committee, the Conservative members of the committee, have any evidence at all showing corruption, I ask them now to give the names of these witnesses, and we will have them brought here and examined. If, as Mr. Haggart says, it is a mere matter of policy with which he agrees, the policy of bringing the road into Montreal, then the only difference is as to the price paid, and of course the question of corruption does not arise at all.

Mr. Haggart.—That was my point of view. We never made any charges of corruption.

The Chairman.—I suppose you read what was said in the press.

Mr. Powell.—Candidly, I never heard anything in the House about corruption.

Mr. Haggart.—Sir Louis Davies made a statement in a speech in Toronto that there would be an inquiry into the circumstances of the Drummond County Railway, and I think he said that it would be found after investigation that some of his opponents would be up to the neck in the mire.

And so they are.

The Chairman.—Certainly the press of the country charged the Government with corruption.

Mr. Haggart.—We are not inquiring into newspaper statements; we are confined by order of the House to the inquiry referred to us.

The Chairman.—Then, that closes the evidence, and we will adjourn till Wednesday next the 25th instant, to consider our draft report.

Here we have the statement of the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), that he made no charge of corruption, and he heard no charge of corruption made in the House. He and the ex-Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace), and a number of other responsible or irresponsible gentlemen on that side of the House, in a most direct fashion charged and imputed corruption to the Government in this transaction. They might be excused for doing that before the evidence was adduced before the investigating committee, but there is no excuse for them doing so after the investigation was held. They had an opportunity of coming before the committee and eliciting anything that would show corruption, but they failed to do that. For them to come on the floor of the House and repeat these insinuations after their failure to substantiate them on oath before the committee, is cowardly in the extreme. Since the investigation, the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) is absolutely estopped from making such insinuations. He could have produced his evidence upon which he founded the charge of corruption before that committee, but he did not do so. He did not have any such evidence, and he has not any such evidence now. I challenge him to stand up in this House, and to mention the name or to give to me privately the name of one individual who will undertake to swear, or who will state outside the protection of the privileges of this House, that there was corruption in connection with this transaction between Mr. Greenshields, Mr. Farwell and the Government.

Mr. HAGGART. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) must remember the statement I made in the House and the statement I made before the committee met. I said that this transaction savors of wrong and corruption, and to-day, after the evidence has been taken, I repeat it from my place in the House.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). When you had an opportunity you withdrew the charge.

Mr. HAGGART. That is not a charge. The words I used then were these, that the whole transaction savored of wrong and corruption, and I repeated the words to-day.

Mr. MORRISON. I am not surprised that the hon. gentleman says it. Any hon. gentleman who will stand in his place in the House, or stand up anywhere whilst he has the power of speech, knowing the facts as the hon. gentleman knows them, and make a statement of that kind, is, I will not say capable of saying anything; but I will put it in the way in which Lord Beaconsfield replied to a gentleman whose statements he wished to controvert on the floor of the British Parliament, by telling an anecdote. Circumstances arose similar to those that have arisen here; and Lord Beaconsfield stated that he did not wish to give the lie direct to the gentleman before him; but, addressing the Speaker, he told this anecdote. Sir Robert Peel, I think it was, having replenished his larder with a new wine, afterwards known as dry champagne, invited a number of kindred spirits to test it. Among them was a gentleman named Colonel Jones, a connoisseur in wines, who, after tasting the wine, was asked by Sir Robert, "What do you think of my dry champagne?" Colonel Jones, turning, replied, "Sir Robert, any man who will undertake to tell you he likes dry champagne is capable of saying anything." Turning to the Speaker, Lord Beaconsfield said, "I will not accuse the hon. gentleman of tergiversation; but, upon my soul, he is capable of telling this House that he likes dry champagne." I will not charge the ex-Minister of Railways in this instance with tergiversation, but I will say that he is capable of telling this House that he likes dry champagne. To return to the evidence of Mr. Blair, on page 20 he says:

A good deal has been stated in the public press, and something more or less hinted in Parliament, in regard to fraudulent and corrupt transactions carried on with reference to the negotiations over this Drummond County Railway.

Now, I ask the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, as an honourable man, if he can controvert, and if he can why he did not controvert, this statement of the Minister of Railways, given at an early stage of the investigation:

I want to say that I negotiated the transaction from beginning to end myself. I negotiated it with Mr. Greenshields. I know of nobody else, with the exception of a few minutes' conversation in my office, in the presence of Mr. Greenshields, with Mr. Mitchell, I think. The whole negotiations, from the beginning to the end, the conversations and the negotiations in the transaction, took place with Mr. Greenshields. I do not know of any other member of the Government having had any part in the negotiations. I had, of course, from time to time, repeatedly, in the course of these negotiations, communicated with my colleagues in the Government and conferred with them upon the various phases. The Drummond County Railway Company wanted to be paid $100,000 a year rental. They had reasons. They claimed that when they had completed the new 43 miles, the road would cost them over $2,000,000. I never saw their books, but they brought figures from their books, which Mr. Greenshields stated were correctly transcribed from their books, estimating that the extension would cost in the neighbourhood of $600,000 or $700,000, showing that their outlay would be all of $2,000,000, if not in excess of $2,000,000. These negotiations, from beginning to end, took place between Mr. Greenshields and myself, and at no time, and under no circumstances, from the moment when the Drummond County Railway was first spoken of down to the present time, did Mr. Greenshields say to me, or did I say to him, or to any person else in his presence, one syllable having reference to any contribution for elections, or of any other kind in any shape or form. I do not know, I have no reason to suppose, that anything of the kind took place between Mr. Greenshields or any other member of the Government; but I can say what took place between Mr. Greenshields and myself.

That was Mr. Blair's statement on oath before the investigating committee, and hon. gentlemen opposite had an opportunity of cross-examining him and impeaching that evidence, and calling evidence in rebuttal and completely controverting it if they could; but they never attempted to do so, and they cannot do it. I say, in the face of that, hon. gentlemen opposite ought to be absolutely silent on the subject of corrupt dealings between the Minister of Railways and Mr. Greenshields.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. gentleman allow me a moment? I want to correct a statement which I made during my speech, that certain payments made to the Drummond County Company were not to be found in the Auditor General's accounts. I have since found that they are there, and I wish to correct that.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Is that the only correction the hon. gentleman is going to make now?

Mr. MORRISON. Now, we can go further than the evidence of the Minister of Railways and Canals. We have the evidence of Mr. J. N. Greenshields, of Montreal. Since coming into Parliament, I have thought, and I think now, that it is a somewhat reprehensible proceeding to refer in debate to gentlemen outside of the House, business men particularly. However, it has been done by gentlemen having much more experience in parliamentary matters than I have, and that is my excuse for doing it now. Mr. Greenshields's name has been mentioned in this matter, and imputations have been cast upon him; but I think gentlemen should seriously reflect before casting imputations upon Mr. Greenshields, who is an honourable practitioner in the city of Montreal and a gentleman of repute; and he has been included in the references made to the Drummond County people by the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope). Now, anything that Mr. Greenshields may say, particularly on oath, which cannot be controverted—and it has not been in this instance—cannot be ignored or taken lightly. What does he say in regard to these transactions between himself and the Government? The ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart), the ex-Controller of Customs (Mr. Wallace), and the hon. leader of the Opposition, have all started in and told us in the most solemn way that this piece of road could have been acquired by them for $500,000. I was amazed—I was absolutely disappointed, would be the expression more appropriate for my feelings—at hearing the hon. leader of the Opposition get up on the floor of this House and stand in with the ex-Controller of Customs and the ex-Minister of Railways in that statement. The hon. leader of the Opposition, for whom I have the most unbounded respect, is a gentleman very much my senior, and I have the greatest regard for anything he says, so long as I think it is in line with fact; but I feel that if what he said on that occasion was true, I have no right to be sitting on this side of the House. The other day, in his speech, which is to be found at page 2889 of "Hansard," referring to the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, he said:

Mr. MORRISON.

He said that he had never looked at it from that standpoint at all, but that he had looked at it from the standpoint that he wanted to bring the Intercolonial into Montreal, and he found that a warm and devoted friend of the Government and of the party was willing to sell, for $2,100,000, to the hon. gentleman that which he had been hawking about the country and was willing to sell for $500,000.

I wish hon. gentlemen opposite to remember that statement, in view of the evidence which I will adduce. At another point he repeats the statement. It is not a slip of the tongue, but is said with the greatest deliberation.

I do not hesitate to say that when a Minister of the Crown makes an arrangement with a great party friend to spend $2,100,000 of the public money to obtain possession of a property that that party has been trying to sell for $500,000, it is, to say the least of it, clouded with suspicion, and it is due to the House, to the hon. gentleman's own supporters, to every intelligent man who is called upon to deal with public questions, that full and accurate information shall be had on that question.

Now, the opportunity of obtaining full and accurate information was afforded the hon. gentleman by that committee before which he appeared, and yet he never even touched upon that part of it. I ask why he did not do so; and in view of the fact that he had full opportunity of dealing with it and did not, I ask him in all fairness what he meant by rising in his place in this House and making that statement he did without furnishing the slightest proof of it. I am afraid, Sir, that he did it in order to mislead this House, and the course he followed is one that must cause any categorical statement which this hon. gentleman may make in this House to be viewed with the greatest suspicion.

Mr. Greenshields, at page 31, referred to that option of $500,000, and it is at this juncture that that aspect of the case arises. Mr. Borden, in examining him, put these questions :

Q. Do you remember in 1894 executing a power of attorney, or so-called option, for the sale of this road, about the 16th July, 1894?—A. Have you a copy of it there?

Q. I have.—A. Do you intend to file this, Mr. Borden?

Q. I do propose to file it.—A. All right; I want to have it marked, so that I can identify it.

Now, there is a little circumstance connected with this, which the members of the committee noticed at the time, and which will be fresh in the mind of the hon. member for Halifax, who will correct me if I am wrong. The hon. gentleman had that option in his hand. I think I am fair in saying that he did not intend to make the use of it that was afterwards made. He thought he would catch Mr. Greenshields, but Mr. Greenshields knew a little too much, and would not say anything until the document was marked and filed as an exhibit, so that all parties might have access to it, and thus it was taken beyond the control of the hon. gentleman, who had it in his hand and intended to keep it for his own use.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman was never more mistaken in his life. I intended to put it in, and it was put in that time as Mr. Greenshields requested.

Mr. MORRISON. Because he requested?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). At that time.

Mr. MORRISON. Just so, and I say that the credit for unearthing that option at that time was due to Mr. Greenshields, who had absolutely nothing to conceal. He dragged it out of the hands of the hon. gentleman, and those gentlemen who are lawyers will appreciate the point, when I tell them the circumstances. He had that document and intended to keep it in his hands to the very last moment and have it referred to by the press of the country as the great trump card which he intended to play. But Mr. Greenshields made him produce it there and then, in order that he might have it filed and marked so that he could identify it.

Mr. POWELL. Will the hon. gentleman allow me just to ask him one question? As the hon. gentleman who presumes to know something about law, in criticising the course taken by my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden), I would ask him if the mere fact that Mr. Borden cross-examined Mr. Greenshields on this document did not put it in evidence of itself?

Mr. MORRISON. It would be put in evidence in the way in which the person cross-examining Mr. Greenshields chose to put it, and it might elucidate other evidence in connection with the matter or might prove not pertinent to the issue.

Mr. POWELL. It was put in evidence.

Mr. MORRISON. It was put in evidence, but my point is that this option containing this mare's nest was dragged out of hon. gentlemen opposite by Mr. Greenshields himself, against whom all this vilification was directed. That is my point. It is not necessary for me to go into abstract questions of principles underlying rules of evidence. I speak of this question as a layman. This option was put in evidence at this juncture by Mr. Greenshields, and it contains this clause :

We, and each of us, hereby give to said William Farwell, a thirty days' option in which he may pay to us the round sum of $500,000, for which sum, if paid within thirty days, we agree to sell, transfer and deliver to him or his assigns, the Drummond County Railway, both main line, branches, sidings, rights of way, stations, other buildings, rolling stock, tools, franchises, charters, bonuses, subsidies, and appurtenances whatsoever, exactly as a whole property stands and is.

That is the clause in that option to Mr. Farwell by the shareholders which is put in evidence, and upon which hon. gentlemen opposite based the statement that the Government could have obtained this road for $500,000.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). It was only built to St. Leonard then.

Mr. MORRISON. But apart from that, let us see what this means, in the light of what Mr. Greenshields swore to :

Mr. Farwell called a meeting of the shareholders of the Drummond County Railway Company about the time that this document was signed. He said that he was then negotiating or was about to open negotiations through Mr. Hugh Ryan, with the Conservative Government for the purchase of the Drummond County Railway, and that the negotiations were conducted on the basis of the leasing of the road for $100,000 per annum, to be completed through to a mile. He said : "I must have a complete assignment of the stock of the road, so that it will be entirely controlled by me. This assignment I propose to give to Mr. Hugh Ryan, who is to conduct the negotiations."

You can see how essential it was to Mr. Farwell to have nominally the absolute control, and knowing Mr. Farwell to be an honourable man, the other shareholders had confidence in him and signed the option.

A subsequent agreement was made, by which, if the road was leased for a rental of $100,000, or sold for $17,500 a mile after it was completed through to Chaudière, the cost of the completion was to be deducted out of the difference between $500,000 and the price received and the total amount remaining was to be divided into three portions—one portion to go to Mr. Farwell and two-thirds of the difference to Mr. Hugh Ryan and his friends, and the one-third going to Mr. Farwell was to be added to the $500,000 which was to represent the real purchase price of the road to the shareholders.

There is Mr. Greenshield's sworn statement of what that clause in the option meant.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). How many miles of the road were built then ?

Mr. MORRISON. About 45½. Then Mr. Borden asked :

Q. Was that agreement in writing ?—A. Yes, this agreement is in writing with Mr. Farwell. Mr. Farwell has copies on the lines which I have just indicated. In other words,—

Here is a further elucidation of that option :

—if the arrangement had been carried through on the basis of $500,000 and of the division.

Not "or the division."

As I have said, the shareholders of the Drummond County Railway would have received infinitely more for the road than they now propose to receive under the present arrangement with this Government, because the road was not completed through to Moose Park in 1894. We had only begun the construction, and there were some 28 miles of the road to Moose Park and 42 beyond that, making about 70 miles more, to complete at the time the option was given, than there is now.

Q. Do I understand that the shareholders were to receive nothing more than $500,000 ?—A. Certainly, the shareholders were to receive the difference. For instance, to illustrate, if the road were sold on a cash basis for $2,500,000, which it would bring if you calculated at $17,500 per mile, out of that $2,500,000 was to be deducted the cost of the construction to complete the road through to Chaudière ; and they were to get subsidies from the Conservative Government at Ottawa on the road to Chaudière, which were to be added to the purchase price. From that was to be deducted the cost of construction and the difference, divided into three pieces, one-third to go to the shareholders, in addition to the purchase price of $500,000.

Q. Do you know how much of the 28 miles had been constructed ?—A. No, I could not tell you ; they may have been working all over the line.

Q. Was this $500,000 intended to represent the road as completed to any particular place ?—A. It was intended to represent the road, plus the third which we would get out of the deal when completed as it would exist at the end of the 30 days to which the contract was made.

Q. Between 1894 and 1897, did you have any negotiations for the sale of the road ? A. Oh, yes ; Mr. Farwell continued the negotiations with the Government up to the spring of 1896.

Now, Mr. Haggart at page 151, stated :

I never had any communication with any one of the company, or otherwise, after that date with reference to the road.

That is after July. Mr. Greenshields gave a categorical contradiction, and Mr. Greenshields, from the first syllable to the last, has never been contradicted in any way, nor his evidence been invaded. Not only did the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals contradict himself, but he is contradicted by every other witness in every matter he referred to in his evidence. Then, taking page 54, referring to Mr. Ryan :

There was no bond given to any other railway company. In 1894 the negotiations were not carried through.

Q. There was no option given to any other railway company ?—A. Not in 1894. We had negotiations with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, but that was previous to 1894.

Q. Were those negotiations in writing or oral ?—A. I think they were in writing.

Q. What part of the road was completed then ?—A. The Nicolet and Drummondville, I think.

Q. The negotiations with the Grand Trunk were not carried through ?—A. No.

Q. You say they were in writing ?—A. Yes.

Then, at page 36 :

Q. Well, how long did Mr. Hugh Ryan continue to be the go-between ?—A. I think Mr. Ryan continued to be the go-between the Government and the company till some time in the spring of 1896.

Again contradicting the statement of the ex-Minister, that he had no communications or dealing with these people after July, 1894.

But I may say this further, that at no time had this road ever been offered for $500,000, or anything like it.

Mr. Greenshields swears to that part of the evidence, and I would like the leader of the Opposition to consider that before repeating this statement, that the road had been offered at this figure. Then, at page 36 :

Q. You can offer us an explanation why nominally $500,000 was put in ?—A. Understand that it was Mr. Farwell who came to us and said : "I have got to show something that I have absolute control of this road, and for that purpose I must have the signature of all the shareholders so that no question can be asked beyond me," and we considered that there was no question that it would facilitate the division of the profits if a fixed price was agreed upon.

Q. Between Mr. Farwell and the shareholders ?—A. He said it was absolutely necessary to have a fixed price as a basis in the event of a sale.

Q. Then the $500,000 was first to come out of the profits of the sale to the Government ?—A. The arrangement was this, that if the road was sold by lease to the Government, and the lease realized on, that to that should be added—

Q. To what ?—A. To the price of sale.

Q. That is the $500,000 ?—A. The net price at which the road was sold to the Government. Suppose it was sold for $2,500,000, then to that was to be added the subsidies that would be received on the extension of the line and from that was to be deducted the cost of the construction of the line to Chaudière, and the difference between that and $500,000, the amount of this option, was to be divided in thirds, one-third to go to Mr. Farwell to be added to the $500,000 and divided among the shareholders.

Now, what could be clearer than that to show what was meant by the $500,000 aspect of the case ? And how can hon. gentlemen opposite say this road, at any time, or under any circumstances, or in any shape, was ever offered for $500,000 ? I am completely amazed that gentlemen with any particle of sense, or reason, or honesty, would assert that such was ever the case.

Q. Now, do I understand you to say, Mr. Greenshields, that the amount of the negotiations had closed with the Government, would have been financially a better one for the Drummond County Railway than the arrangements you have made with the Government to-day?—A. Undoubtedly it would have been.

The reference to Mr. Hugh Ryan is also at page 36. Now, Mr. Chairman, I think the gravamen of the attack of gentlemen opposite has been this statement, that the road can be acquired for $500,000. I would ask hon. gentlemen opposite, if they do not care to listen to what has been said, in fairness to themselves as well as to us, to read the evidence contained in that report. And I contend that this evidence should be the basis of consideration of this matter, that we cannot travel outside of it, and that we should not try in any way to avoid it. As I said before, there were two reports, a majority report and a minority report. Now, as I have said, the majority report was based on the facts. It is found at page viii. of the report. I ask hon. gentlemen opposite to read it, and I venture to say, they will find that there is not a statement in it that is not fully borne out by the evidence. The first statement in that report is:

The only difference between parties being the price to be paid for the extension. There was no question of corruption.

The Drummond County Railway, as it exists, consists of a completed line from Ste. Rosalie to Chaudière, a distance of one hundred and fifteen and one-half miles, and the branch known as the "Nicolet Branch," extending from St. Leonard to Nicolet, on Lake St. Peter, a distance of seventeen miles, making a total mileage of one hundred and thirty-two and one-half miles.

That in order to connect the Intercolonial with the city of Montreal, it was necessary that the said road should be extended from Moose Park Station to Chaudière Junction, a distance of about forty-two and one-half miles. That has been done by the owners of the road and the road now has a total mileage, including the Nicolet Branch, of one hundred and thirty-two and one-half miles, as before stated, and has actually cost in its construction upwards of two million one hundred thousand dollars. (See evidence of S. Newton, p. 46.)

Then it goes on to refer to the cost of the road and the negotiations. It is a resumé of the salient parts of the evidence, and it is entirely based upon the evidence.

But contrast the minority report with that for a moment. I venture to say, that there is hardly a line, if there is a line, in that minority report that follows the evidence, and not a statement but is fallacious and unreasonable. I say that advisedly, and I challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to stand up and contradict successfully what I say. I would expect the functions of a committee to be to fairly and dispassionately state their conclusions, and not to draw inferences unless they had facts to support them. It is bad enough to plaster a report over with a lot of inferences, even if you have facts upon which to base them; but, when you have no statements of facts, or, at least, when the inferences are not based on the evidence, then the gentlemen who signed that report misconceived their duties as committee men. The first important point is this:

In 1893 the Drummond County Railway Company unsuccessfully endeavoured to dispose of their railway to the Grand Trunk Railway Company.

There was the first instance they tried to give this "hawking" of the road, as they choose to call it. Then, they make a statement as to the indebtedness of the road, the amount borrowed from the Eastern Townships Bank, and so on, things that, in my opinion, were quite irrelevant and surplusage. Then, they put in the option which I read, the option pertaining to the $500,000. Now, clearly, the object of putting that there was to mislead this House and the country in the way gentlemen of that committee and other responsible gentlemen on that side have tried to mislead them before and since the investigation, by trying to make out that the railway could have been purchased for $500,000. Then, they say:

This option was either extended from time to time or there was an understanding that it might be acted upon at any time to the end of 1894, but as it did not result in the sale of the road, a second option in similar terms was subsequently given by the shareholders to Mr. Farwell at the price of $400,000.

I ask gentlemen opposite to produce categorical evidence upon which they based that statement.

Options were also given to other persons by the company, but without any result.

Where is the evidence for that? There is not a jot or tittle of evidence for it.

The object of granting the first-mentioned option was to induce Mr. Hugh Ryan, a contractor, to undertake the task of completing the road and afterwards selling it on the best terms possible.

If that is true, is it not slightly contradictory to the statement of the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals?

From the amount which he would receive there was to be deducted, in the first place, the amount of the option, $500,000, then the cost incurred by Mr. Ryan in completing the road, and the balance, if any, was to be divided, according to Mr. Farwell, between him and his associates, who were to receive one-third thereof, and Mr. Ryan, who was to receive two-thirds thereof. Mr. Ryan, however, does not remember this feature, but says that he was offered the road for $500,000.

Mr. Hugh Ryan, from one end of his evidence to the other, says nothing of the kind, nothing upon which such a construction could be placed.

In consequence of the unsatisfactory service afforded by the Grand Trunk Railway between Lévis and Montreal, Mr. Haggart, at that time Minister of Railways and Canals, turned his attention, in 1894, to the question of extending the Intercolonial Railway to the latter city.

He "turned his attention," but how? He had a little private conversation with one of his colleagues, he had an opinion of his own, but he did not make any overtures to his colleagues to the end of putting his opinion into effect. That is the way he turned his attention to it, and the gentleman making this report seriously put that statement in to try to make it appear that he was serious. Any way, this herculean effort of the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals proved abortive, for some reason for which he was not responsible.

He caused an estimate to be made of the cost of constructing such a railway as the Drummond County Railway would be when completed, according to the requirements for subsidy, and made inquiry as to the cost of running rights over the Grand Trunk Railway from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal, and of terminal facilities at that city.

What evidence is there of negotiations by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals about terminal facilities? Is there a syllable of his evidence showing any terminal facilities that were available to him at that time? Not a line.

At a later stage, Mr. Ryan opened negotiations with Mr. Haggart for the sale of the Drummond County Railway, but the latter, after making some investigation of the matter, declined to recommend the purchase of the road, and no further negotiations appear to have taken place between the company and any member of the Government until the year 1897.

That is not the fact, because Mr. Farwell and Mr. Greenshields both positively state that they were negotiating, and that Mr. Ryan was a go-between up to 1896. This part of the report is not based upon any evidence or any fact. Now, I want to show the invidious and unworthy nature of this report, and the procedure adopted by the hon. gentleman.

In 1897 the present Minister of Railways and Canals entered into negotiations with Mr. J. N. Greenshields, the president of the Drummond County Railway Company for the acquisition of the road by the Government of Canada. These negotiations were principally carried on between Mr. Greenshields and the Hon. Mr. Blair, but Mr. Greenshields and his associate, Mr. Mitchell, had interviews also upon the subject with the Hon. Mr. Tarte, Minister of Public Works.

Mr. Tarte, at page 120 of his evidence, categorically states that any of the interviews that he had with the Drummond County people were interviews for which he was not responsible, such interviews as he was bound to give any person who choose to come and ask for one. He could not shut the doors on Mr. Mitchell or anybody else, and if they choose to come there and discuss this question with him, he could not refuse to do so. But he says that in no case did these interviews amount to anything that could be termed negotiations. Then they go on to say something that is absolutely extraneous to the point at issue. They drag in "La Patrie" the paper that was acquired by Mr. Tarte's son, but in which Mr. Tarte himself has not a farthing's interest. In the most irrelevant way they refer to Mr. Greenshields acting as solicitor for Mr. Tarte and his sons, and quote Mr. Tarte's statement that Mr. Greenshields gave his cheque for $25,000. Now, the fact is that, according to the evidence of Mr. Greenshields and Mr. Tarte, it was simply an accommodation cheque, no money was passed. No matter what Mr. Tarte said, he might not have used just the right words in stating that it was simply an accommodation. What does it matter in what words we clothe a fact so long as we are able to express the fact? We find that in all these dealings, Mr. Tarte had had nothing to do with these negotiations about the railway, nothing of a substantial nature; that neither Mr. Tarte nor Mr. Greenshields had any idea of this railway when the purchase of "La Patrie" was arranged. Mr. Tarte was only doing the most natural thing in the world, doing nothing but what the leader of the Opposition himself or any other gentleman would do for his own son, or for persons who occupied a less fiduciary relation to him than a son. He simply tried to assist his sons in the acquisition of that paper, and he succeeded in doing so. But that had absolutely nothing to do with the negotiations for the Drummond County Railway. That has been sworn to time and again on oath; still hon. gentlemen will put that reference to the purchase of "La Patrie" by Mr. Tarte's sons into their report. They cannot produce one jot or tittle of evidence to show that there was any connection between the purchase of "La Patrie" and the Drummond County Railway. They do not dare to follow out the insinuation that they make. You would suppose that, after giving place in their report to that reference to the purchase of "La Patrie" they would follow it up, and show a connection between the purchase of "La Patrie" and the purchase of the Drummond County Railway by the Government. Why did they not do so when they had an opportunity of completing the link between the two transactions? But they did not do it, and they did not have the decency to acknowledge that they were unable to accomplish their unworthy effort for the reason that there was no evidence upon which they could do so. These are the same gentlemen who reiterate on oath that there were, forsooth, charges of corruption against the Government. What is the use of stating that if there is no attempt to prove the charges? I will not read the whole of the report, because it is rather long; but I tell you that every syllable of that report proceeds upon a false basis, and is wanting the element of fact upon which to rest. Then, they wind up by saying:

Your committee are satisfied that the rental payable to the Grand Trunk Railway Company under the agreement of 1897 and 1898, is exorbitant.

I ask gentlemen opposite to produce a word of evidence in that volume to substantiate their statement. It does not exist, it cannot be adduced.

That the rental, as well as the payments for betterments and maintenance should all be fixed on the basis of user.

What authority have they for making that categorical statement? Evidence to the contrary has been produced, evidence given by Mr. Schreiber, Mr. Blair, Mr. Newton, Mr. Farwell, Mr. Greenshields and Mr. Wainwright.

And that the payments provided for in those agreements are enormously in excess of what they would be if calculated upon such a basis.

Why did they not, in a single instance, give some statement or fact which would corroborate this conclusion? Why did they not make some reference to the page where such evidence could be found? Simply because it does not exist. That is the point of their report. I will read it again. They state that they are satisfied that the rental payable to the Grand Trunk Railway is exorbitant. Hon. gentlemen opposite did not produce one word of evidence in support of that. They did not state upon what they based that statement, and there could not be one tittle of evidence in support of it.

That the rental as well as the payments for the betterments and the maintenance should all be fixed on the basis of user.

They had the opportunity of producing evidence, but they did not do it, nor did they even controvert the evidence that we put in. They say further :

And that the payments provided for in these agreements are enormously in excess of what they would be if calculated upon such a basis.

I say that the conclusion come to in that report is entirely without support in fact, entirely without any evidence upon which to base it. Now, one of the hon. gentlemen opposite who signs that report, at page 66 of the evidence, lets the cat out of the bag and shows the extent to which he apparently understood this question. He puts the following question to Mr. Schreiber :

By Mr. Powell :

Q. Now, last year when this contract was before Parliament—

That was in 1897.

—the only objection, I think, that was made to the Drummond County in respect to taking it off the hands of the Drummond County Railway, as respected the finished portion, was that the gradient at one or two places was a little high.

This was the conception of the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) of what was then in the way of taking the road over. He states that, and Mr. Schreiber says “Yes,” and confirms it. After that is he not estopped from going into this wild disquisition upon the negotiations between the Government and Drummond County people. He says that it seems to be a matter of gradient, that the grade was a little too high.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I need only refer to the debate that took place in this House, I think, yesterday, if I can recall it correctly, and participated in by the hon. member for East Simcoe (Mr. Bennett), in regard to the transportation facilities of this country, to show the importance to this country of having this road extended to Montreal. It is all very well for us to say that there is already a line from Montreal to the maritime provinces. That line goes through the United States, and what would happen if the bonding privileges which are now accorded to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were withdrawn? What position would the Government be in if this road stopped at Montreal as far as having free connection with other corporations is concerned. I ask hon. gentlemen to consider what would be the position of this country if this bonding privilege were abrogated. I do not dispute that this is within the absolute possibilities. I venture to say that the day has come when this country is absolutely independent of these bonding privileges. I say the people are independent of these bonding privileges to-day, and are as independent of the United States in that respect as they are in any other respect, and I trust the day may not be far distant when we may take the stand of absolutely and completely ignoring the people of the United States in negotiating a transaction of this kind, or of any other kind, as far as the Government of this country is concerned. We are coming to that point that we are independent of the people to the south of us, and we need have no regard to their railway facilities or railway systems, and, in that event, it is necessary for us to have connection with our trade centres, and, in this behalf, the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals did well in extending this road to Montreal. Even if it had cost him very much more than it has he would have been justified in extending it to Montreal. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and this Government would have been justified in paying even more than they did pay for that road. It is not enough to say that some gentlemen may have made money out of the road. If Mr. Greenshields succeeded in making any amount of money out of the road, which he let us have for $12,000 a mile, when the road cost $19,000 a mile, it is very much to his credit; but nobody can say that Mr. Greenshields did what any person should not have done. I trust that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House may be able to make money, and I say that people are mistaken in saying that these genlemen did anything unfair in order to make money out of it. The question is what amount of money did the Government save to the country in acquiring that property. What was the value of it? We have evidence that the road cost $19,000 a mile, and the Government were able to secure it for $12,000. We had the statement put in evidence that we paid $12,000 for a railway which cost $19,000, or at any rate an average of $16,000 a mile. I care not what are the circumstances, so long as they are dissociated from corruption and wrong-doing. I anticipate that some hon. gentlemen opposite will desire to introduce a lot of irrelevant matter, as was done in this investigation. Let them get down to the absolute point, the cost of the road, and try, if they can, to show that the Government paid too high a price for it. For my part, I congratulate the hon. Minister of Railways, I congratulate the Government, and I congratulate the people of the country, upon the acquiring of this connection with Montreal, and stopping this vast question of a deficit-making railway system. I am confident that the days of deficits on the Intercolonial Railway have gone by, and now that we have put it on a business basis, we will have passed the period, at last, of losing money. This Government have started in very creditably in trying to put all their transactions on a business basis, and dealing with the business of the country in the way in which they deal with their own business; the way in which a person would deal with his own private concerns, and the way in which, I believe, the business of the country should be carried on.

Mr. J. ROSS-ROBERTSON (East Toronto). I do not want to weary the House, but I do want to explain, briefly, why I am unable to agree on the question contained in these resolutions, with the hon. gentleman whom I usually follow. I am willing to leave the unravelling and the discussion of the legal evidence, and the other irrelevant matter spoken of by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) to my professional friends on both sides of the House. I wish to speak of this Drummond County Railway proposal as a matter of value for the money that is being paid for it by this country. I do not want to sit in judgment on the conclusions which hon. gentlemen may have reached on this question, and any hon. gentleman who cares to sit in judgment on my conclusions is, of course, at perfect liberty to do so. It rather amused me the other night to hear my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), in starting an avalanche of criticism on this bargain and in referring to the position of the Drummond County Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, say "the mode in which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals proposed to shrivel up Van Horne and Shaughnessey and all these Canadian Pacific magnates who were induced to spend millions of their money in building this line to the west of the city of St. John, where admirable facilities have been provided for doing the business, is to take the traffic from them and carry it for nothing." This, of course, Mr. Chairman, is a ghost story. I am for the first time made aware that Sir William Van Horne or Mr. Shaughnessey ever put a dollar of their own money into the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Indeed, according to all accounts, they have taken out a mighty deal more than they ever put in. Better, I think, that the Minister of Railways should shrivel up Van Horne and Shaughnessey, than that these twin tyrants should shrivel up this country.

I cannot regard this matter of putting the Intercolonial Railway on a commercial basis as a party question. To my mind, it is an issue of national importance, and I am not going to give a vote which can tend to keep the Intercolonial Railway tied up as a sort of milch cow to be run on shares—the country buy the hay, and the Canadian Pacific Railway takes the milk. I have never believed that the Intercolonial Railway should be hung up, like Mahomet's coffin, at one end, without any direct relationship to the originating point of through traffic from the west. To my mind, the spectacle of the Intercolonial Railway becoming an actual factor in the transportation of through freight, and paying its way, would help to educate the people of this country to demand fair-play from the roads that are not owned by the Government. I believe that the best interests of this country demand the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to the city of Montreal, and I cannot reconcile a vote against the principle of this resolution with the position I have always taken in this House on the railway question—a position that I will adhere to both inside and outside this House. Now, while I have approved of the principle, I have not approved of every detail in the proposal of the Minister of Railways, and I did not approve of his failure to lay on the Table of the House the contract and the other details, when he moved these resolutions the other night. Now, however, that he has given us all the details available, the proposition is simply: That the Drummond County Railway shall be bought for $12,000 a mile, or for a sum aggregating, I believe, $1,600,000. This seems like a good deal of money. But I am not an expert, I confess, and hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House, by an overwhelming majority, declared that it was right and reasonable to let the Canadian Pacific Railway Company sell a piece of railway to the bondholders for $35,000 per mile. This Parliament of Canada, in its wisdom, declared, a few nights ago, that the Columbia and Western Railway was worth $35,000 a mile to the bondholders, although I am told that much of that same road could be built for about $8,000 a mile. I can quite see, Mr. Chairman, that the Columbia and Western would probably cost more to build than the Drummond County Railway, but I cannot see how hon. gentlemen on this side of the House who voted in favour of allowing the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to sell a piece of railroad at the rate of $35,000 a mile, can blame the hon. the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) for buying another piece of railroad for $12,000 a mile. I am not, however, entirely at ease in regard to the terms of this bargain. The truth of the matter is this, and I might as well confess it, that I do not know what to make out of the hon. Minister of Railways. I have heard him talk like an archangel in defence of public rights, and I have come away from meetings of the Railway Committee, and from meetings of the Banking and Commerce Committee, rejoicing in the hope that the people had at last found a deliverer, and that he would protect and shield the victims of tyranny. I do not know that the hon. the Minister of Railways has given these people anything more than kind words, so far; but even kind words are more than most members of the present Government will give to persons who have just grievances against the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is possible that the hon. the Minister of Railways might have gotten this Drummond County Railway for less money, and it is possible that he has acted in the party interest. But hon. gentlemen on this side would not listen to a statement made some nights ago in this House, that there was said to be a steal for the Canadian Pacific Railway in the right to sell the Columbia and Western to the bondholders at $35,000 per mile; and how can these same hon. gentlemen expect any independent member to follow them when they suggest and insist that there is a steal for somebody in the right to sell this Drummond County railroad to the country at $12,000 a mile? I fully appreciate the possibilities, and I fully realize also, that whatever faults the hon. the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) may have, he has done more than any of his predecessors, Liberal or Conservative, to make the Intercolonial Railway something better than a mere feeder to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and holding that belief, I cannot do otherwise, Mr. Chairman, than vote for these resolutions.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not know that it will be possible for me to finish to-night, in reply to my hon. friend from Westminster (Mr. Morrison), who has detained the House to the extent of two and a half hours, but I will be willing to proceed until half-past eleven o'clock.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) will go on until twelve o'clock, at any rate.

Mr. BORDEN. Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman from Westminster (Mr. Morrison) has made a very warm address to the House in regard to these resolutions, and, among other things, he has made the somewhat extraordinary statement, that the minority report, which I, together with two other gentlemen on this side of the House, had the honour of signing, was a report not one syllable of which was founded on evidence or on facts. He also made the statement, that the hon. the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) gave his evidence in such a way before the committee that he would have been turned down by any judge and dismissed from the witness-stand. He also made the somewhat extraordinary statement, that the members of the committee from this side of the House made false and irrelevant statements in their report, and did so for the purpose of misleading the House. He lectured gentlemen on this side of the House generally with regard to their conduct on this and other questions, and he even ventured, towards the close of his speech, to put forward the proposition, that my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart), in speaking, as a member of the committee, after he had been discharged as a witness from the witness-stand, was still under oath. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to waste the time of the House with very much of a reply to language of that kind. Such exaggerated statements made by any gentleman in this House—even by a gentleman who has the standing of the hon. member for Westminster—are best dismissed with a few words of contempt. I say to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison), that he cannot point out one word, or one line, in the minority report which is not amply sustained by the evidence, so far as it purports to be a statement of fact. When the hon. gentleman, standing in his place in the House, ventures to say, that that report, signed by three responsible gentlemen on this side of the House, contains not one word, or syllable, that was founded on fact or supported by evidence, he takes a responsibility upon himself which I do not think adds to his credit or standing in this House.

Mr. MORRISON. Will the hon. gentleman proceed to controvert what I said?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will proceed to controvert what the hon. gentleman said, and I would like to know now whether the hon. gentleman, in his sober moments, ventures again to state that not one word or syllable of that minority report is founded on fact or supported by evidence. Does he venture to adhere to that?

Mr. MORRISON. I repeat what I stated, that the minority report is not based on fact or evidence. The hon. gentleman may make what he chooses of that. If he can show that the statements in that minority report are based on fact or evidence adduced at that investigation, I will apologize to him and the House.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The hon. gentleman does not venture to repeat what he stated before.

Mr. MORRISON. That is what I stated.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). And I am glad for his own reputation and credit that he has not the courage to stand up and repeat the statement he made a moment ago; and, not having the courage to repeat that statement, I think it ill-becomes him to lecture the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals for his demeanour on the witness stand. Probably I have had as much experience of witnesses on the stand as my hon. friend, and I venture to say that neither in the language used by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals nor in his demeanour on the witness stand was there anything to justify the very extraordinary and extravagant criticism which the hon. gentleman, for reasons best known to himself, has seen fit to pass upon that hon. gentleman.

Now, I do not intend to deal very much with the matters affecting the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte); but as the hon. gentleman, somewhat badly advised in that connection, has seen fit to bring that hon. gentleman's name before the House and to state that we on this side are seeking to draw the Minister of Public Works and his sons as red herrings across the path—something I do not quite understand—I would like to recall to the House just what did take place in this House and before the committee in connection with the circumstance to which the hon. gentleman has adverted. If the hon. gentleman will turn to "Hansard" of 1897, he will find, at page 5301, that the hon. Minister of Public Works made this statement in the House:

I know that my name has been connected with this transaction, because "La Patrie" newspaper has been bought by the Liberal party, and because Mr. Greenshield's name has been connected with that purchase. I will state frankly what took place.

The hon. gentleman will note that the hon. Minister of Public Works was not only making a statement in the House, but he was making it upon his honour, saying that he was going to be frank, which meant, I suppose, that he was going to tell the whole truth; and before I get through, I think the hon. Minister of Public Works will not thank my hon. friend for drawing attention to this matter, which, in the absence of the hon. Minister, I would not have touched upon at all, except for the way in which the hon. gentleman has dealt with the matter. The hon. Minister of Public Works said further.

I arranged that Mr. Greenshields, who was my lawyer in many other cases, should act as the purchaser of "La Patrie" as the lawyer of the party.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

The hon. gentleman will note that.

They speak of a cheque which Mr. Greenshields gave. There is no secret about it. Mr. Greenshields had a cheque in his hand, not of his own money, but of the money of the party, and he paid that cheque.

Now, Sir, what is the evidence of the Minister of Public Works, which is to be found on pages 118, 119 and 120 of the committee's report? The hon. gentleman told this House that he was going to be frank with it; what does he say when he is put on the witness stand? I put that to him, and what is his answer?

It is perfectly correct. At the time I did not feel any necessity to go into the details, but what I have said is perfectly true. Mr. Greenshields paid it by cheque. It was not his own cash. He gave his cheque, which was simply a matter of accommodation; it was not his money. I simply said that in a vague way, because I knew right well if I said more, I would be accused of having said what was not true, not by you, but by some of the Tory pressmen.

And further down, when it is pointed out to him that his answer is not consistent with what he stated in the House, what does he say?—and I direct the hon. gentleman's attention to this:

My answer is that I did not think it proper to say everything in the House then, because Parliament was just closing and I knew right well that if I had said that Mr. Greenshields had given his own cheque and it was paid the next day that the Tory press would have lied just as much as they would have been able to do. I said what was true, but I did not give out the whole thing.

Now, I do not think the hon. Minister of Public Works will feel very much indebted to my learned and hon. friend for dealing with this matter in the way in which he has seen fit to do. Further, the question is put to him:

Do you mean that you were not quite frank in this statement because you were afraid the Tory press would lie?—A. Yes, they have lied so much about me—not the whole of them, some of them are decent.

Now, does the hon. gentleman think upon reflection that he has assisted the Minister of Public Works very much by again drawing attention to this matter, with which, as I said before, I would not have attempted to deal except for the way in which the hon. gentleman has dealt with it.

Mr. MORRISON. What has that to do with the price of the road?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If it had nothing to do with it, why did my hon. friend see fit to deal with it in his speech?

Mr. MORRISON. Because the hon. member put it in his report. It is utterly irrelevant, but I commented upon it because you made it a subject of report.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It was not made a subject of report. It was incidentally referred to in the report, because the Minister of Public Works came before the committee for the purpose of backing up his statement in the House after Mr. Greenshields had made a statement on the witness stand which was absolutely inconsistent with the statement of the hon. Minister of Public Works in the House.

Mr. MORRISON. Will the hon. gentleman show us in the evidence where that occurs?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I will show it before I conclude, and the hon. gentleman knows where it is just as well as I do. It was brought to the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works on the witness stand by me at the very time he gave the evidence which I have read. Now, this further question is put to the hon. Minister of Public Works:

Q. That is, you did not tell the truth to prevent them lying?—A. I did not say that. I did not divulge all the truth because there was no necessity for making that statement to the House.

The position was this. The Minister rose in his place in the House and said he was going to be frank with the House, and then, on the witness stand, he said: "I did not divulge all the truth because there was no necessity of making that statement to the House."

My hon. friend, the ex-Minister of Railways, made a certain statement in this House with regard to certain suspicions he had, and I venture to suggest to my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) that when a transaction of this kind is of such a nature that the Minister of Public Works cannot, in his place in the House, after stating that he was going to be frank, state the whole truth to the House, there is something in that possibly to excite some suspicion. I would put it to my hon. friend, who is a lawyer and understands how to weigh evidence, that in the case of a circumstance of that kind, if he were addressing a jury he might be inclined, and if he was doing his duty would be inclined, to lay some stress upon it.

My hon. friend dwelt at some length on what was said by the Minister of Railways and Canals at page 8 of the evidence, namely, that without his attention being brought to it at all, he was minded, of his own motion, to make some bargain with the owners of this railway for its acquisition. But I desire to point to my hon. friend from New Westminster the circumstance which he does not seem to have borne in mind, that during the progress of these negotiations, which began in January and continued until March, this very gentleman, Mr. Greenshields, who is practically the owner of this road, was in communication with the Minister of Public Works on the subject, and that the Minister of Public Works was the very gentleman to whom Mr. Greenshields lent his cheque on the occasion I have referred to. Does not my hon. friend think that that is a circumstance which it was proper to bring out in evidence and dwell upon? Does he think it is a circumstance that requires no comment, that Mr. Greenshields, the owner of this road, was in communication on several occasions, according to the evidence of the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), with that gentleman dealing with the acquisition of this road, and that during the progress of these negotiations Mr. Greenshields saw fit to lend his cheque and endorse notes for the purpose of purchasing a paper for the sons of the Minister of Public Works—a paper which the Minister of Public Works, in this House, said was not purchased for his sons but for the Liberal party.

We thought fit to ask the hon. Minister, when on the witness stand, who were the persons that advanced the $50,000 for the purchase of that paper, but did not get much satisfaction. We asked him: Have you any objection to stating the names of the political friends who advanced the money? He told us it was not Mr. Greenshields, and we were bound to accept his statement. But he would not give us the names of the friends in question. He said:

That is my business just as in the past all of you have given notes and endorsed notes in political business.

That was all the information we could get from the hon. gentleman on the subject.

My hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) made one or two other singular remarks. He quoted some evidence of Mr. Farwell, at page 135; and when challenged about it, he said it made no difference what Mr. Farwell said. That seems to be rather an extraordinary view to take of evidence, and I should think that, on the whole, my learned friend would be inclined to withdraw that proposition. He said also: I will not deal with these matters at any length, that it was plain beyond doubt that this road was worth $17,000 or $18,000 or $19,000 a mile. I think he mentioned these different sums at different times, but $19,000 was the largest. Of course, we all sympathise with Mr. Greenshields and his associates, who are giving away this road worth $19,000 a mile to the Government for $12,000 a mile; and particularly do we feel the force of that when we know, as I shall point out further, that Mr. Greenshields got $50,000. I think it was, of that stock for practically nothing—for his influence as a financier or his advice or something of that kind, and very large blocks of stock he got at times at a nominal figure. The stock of the company, whose road was worth $19,000 a mile, was worth only that figure, and the hon. gentleman will also bear in mind that although Mr. Greenshields did buy a portion at par, he bought it at par after he had secured this agreement with the Government. Possibly the hon. gentleman upon reflection might think that this was a circumstance worthy to be dealt with. And, as a matter of fact, that is one of the things in the minority report, which is amply supported by the evidence, although my hon. friend ventured to make the assertion that not one syllable or one word of that minority report is supported by the evidence.

Coming down to the real question before this House, and leaving the hon. gentleman to congratulate himself upon the speech he has made with respect to this matter, if he sees fit to do so, because I shall not trouble myself very much more with him, I want to say now, as I have said before, that on general principles, I am in favour of the Intercolonial Railway obtaining access to the city of Montreal. The hon. gentleman spent about three-quarters of an hour in arguing in favour of that proposition, although he followed the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), who stated, not only here but before the committee, that he always had that view. I well remember that when the Grand Trunk Railway was operating the line between Montreal and Lévis, the service was not very good so far as passengers were concerned, and I can well believe that it was not very good, so far as freights were concerned, and in view of the manner in which that road was operated, I think it would have been a prudent thing to attempt to obtain access to the city of Montreal for the Intercolonial.

The main question, therefore, is whether or not, in the first place, this was the best way to get into Montreal, and, in the second place, whether or not the price which the Government is paying is a fair and reasonable price. It has been suggested by the leader of the Opposition that both this Government and the late Government committed themselves to the project of assisting in the construction of a bridge across the St. Lawrence from Lévis to Quebec. If that bridge should be accomplished, if this Government see fit to give it adequate aid, a much better arrangement might have been made for running powers over the Canadian Pacific Railway from Quebec to Montreal. I may say in passing that the argument which the ex-Minister of Railways has made to the House with regard to the cost of construction of a railway on the one side or the other, has not in any way been answered by the hon. member for New Westminster.

Let us see what would be the state of affairs if such a bridge were constructed. I am assuming that it is the policy of this Government to adequately assist the construction of that bridge. Then you would have about 275 miles from Halifax to St. John over which it is desirable, not only in the interest of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but in the interest of the country as a whole, that the Canadian Pacific Railway should have running powers; and you would have, I believe, about 172 miles from the city of Quebec to the city of Montreal, over which, in that case it would be extremely desirable that the Intercolonial Railway should have running powers. The Minister of Railways and Canals told us the other night that it was monstrous and ridiculous to talk of a project of that kind, for this reason—in the first place, he said the road from Halifax to St. John was very much longer than the other; and, in the second place, it ran through a very much better country. Now, so far as the first is concerned, no one suggests that such an arrangement should be made except on fair and reasonable terms. It might be made on a mileage basis or in half a dozen other ways so as to give to the Government every advantage that they might fairly claim by reason of the fact that this line from Halifax to St. John was a longer line. And, so far as the country through which it runs and the traffic are concerned, all these matters are capable of adjustment; and if the project is carried out, you would have the Intercolonial Railway with running powers into Montreal with terminal facilities there, and you would have the Canadian Pacific, for which the province of Nova Scotia has paid its full share and out of which, up to the present time, it has got very little benefit, with access to the city of Halifax and having that city practically as one of its termini. And I venture to think that if the project of the Quebec bridge is to be carried out, even if there is a reasonable probability of it being carried out, it is not a very wise thing for the Government to bind itself to the acquisition of this Drummond County Railway. It would have been better, for the present, to have dealt with the Drummond County Railway as an experiment, and to ascertain whether or not the proposed bargain was a good bargain.

Well, Sir, assuming that we are for the present to lay aside that suggestion, we have the question of the present proposed bargain with the Drummond County Railway. Now the question of value of this road, as I understand it, ought to be determined by the Government on the basis of its value to the person who owns it. I think that some confusion of thought in regard to that point was expressed in the speech of the Minister of Railways and Canals in dealing with the question of the deduction of these subsidies. I say that the value with which we are to deal, the basis on which this road is to be purchased, is the value of the road to the persons who own it. If the Government were expropriating this road, what would be the basis on which they would have to pay for it? Not on the basis of what it cost or of what it was worth to the Government. Every lawyer knows that it is upon the basis of the value of property to the owner that the Government or any other corporation is to pay for property taken for public use. To such an extent has that been carried out that in one case in England where an ecclesiastical corporation had its property taken by a railway company, the amount paid by the railway company, under the judgment of the court, was practically nominal, because, although the property was immensely valuable to the railway company it was not a profitable property to the owner inasmuch as the owner was restricted by the terms of its title from making profitable use of it. So, the Government were not called upon to pay the Drummond County Railway Company either on the basis of what the road cost or on the basis of the value of that road to the Government, but the fair value of it to the company which owned it, as would be the case if the road were sold by the company to any other person. I do not think my hon. friend from New Westminster would venture to controvert that proposition. I do not think he would say that this Government should purchase that road on any basis other than the basis on which they would pay for it if they expropriated it. It is worth only so much to the Drummond County Railway, and the Government should pay only that to the Drummond County Railway Company for it.

Now, let us see what this road was worth to the Drummond County Railway Company. In the first place, let us observe what the Government propose to pay for it. They proposed to pay a sum which, as capitalized by the expert of the Finance Department at the rate of interest paid by the Government on their last loan, amounted to $2,094,192. And I mention to my hon. friend from New Westminster that that is another fact stated in the minority report which, possibly he will concede is supported by the evidence. Now, Sir, if you will take their bargain this year of $1,600,000 and deduct from that the additional expenditure by the company required by the agreement of 1898 and not by that of 1897, viz., $65,795, you have a balance of $1,534,205, leaving a balance of $559,987 in favour of the bargain of this year. And, as the hon. gentleman from New Westminster is so fond of giving advice and suggestions to us on this side of the House, I would venture to give this advice and make this suggestion to him—that it was not a very wise thing, not a very prudent thing, for him to stand up in his place in this House in 1897 and vote for that bargain which was $559,987 worse to this country than the bargain, which by the interposition of the Senate, the Government were afterwards able to make. I put that not in the lecturing tone which the hon. gentleman adopted, but merely as a mild and humble suggestion from a young member on this side to the hon. member for New Westminster.

Now, I would also call the attention of the hon. gentleman to this. That under section 35 of the Grand Trunk agreement of 1898, the Government are paying for improvements hereafter to be made by the Grand Trunk Railway Company on the basis of user or wheelage, and not in the basis of one-half.

Well, Sir, does not the hon. gentleman know that the user of the Grand Trunk Railway, according to the evidence in this case must be about twenty to one the user of the Intercolonial Railway? Will he stand up in his place and deny that? Why, then, does he venture to ask, as he did to-night, what the question of user has to do with it? I was astonished that any hon. gentleman would stand up in this House and ask what the question of user had to do with it, when he knows that, according to the evidence in this case, user by the Grand Trunk Railway of the terminal facilities at Montreal must be many times any possible user which the Intercolonial Railway can make. Yet the hon. gentleman asks: What has user to do with it? User has this to do with it—I make this as another humble suggestion from this side of the House—that as the Grand Trunk and the Intercolonial are both to use these terminal facilities at Montreal, we should not pay anything but our proportionate actual user of them. If the Grand Trunk Railway, with its enormous traffic with the west, uses those terminals twenty times as much as the Intercolonial Railway, then it is right and just that the Intercolonial Railway, in respect of betterments to be made in future, should pay for, not one-half of these betterments, but one-twentieth of those betterments. Yet the hon. gentleman has repeated over and over again that the question of user or wheelage has nothing at all to do with it. Why, if I adopted the unkind suggestion which the Minister of Railways and Canals was good enough to make the other evening, I would say that the hon. member for New Westminster is the advocate of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. The leader of the Opposition, because he ventured to make a suggestion the other night, was told that he held a retainer for the Canadian Pacific Railway. If the hon. gentleman thinks that under circumstances of that kind the question of user has nothing at all to do with the matter, what shall we think of that hon. gentleman's position with regard to the Grand Trunk Railway? I do not say that the Grand Trunk Railway would not have a very able and a very capable advocate in the hon. gentleman, although I think that they would probably expect him to do a little better justice to their case in court than he has been able to do for their case in this House to-night; and I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman would do much better in court, because I know that he is as capable of making a good point as any hon. gentleman in this House for a client who retains him. The difficulty, as suggested by my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition was not in the matter of ability or competency, but merely the fact that he had not a very good case to argue, and I for one am willing to admit that he made the very best out of a bad case.

Now, I will not go over the other items of this Grand Trunk Railway agreement, which I might go over; I will leave it with that one. I venture to think that my hon. friend from New Westminster, upon consideration and reflection, will come to the conclusion that if the Intercolonial Railway uses these terminals, these betterments, to one-twentieth only of the extent that the Grand Trunk Railway uses them, it is only fair and right that it should pay on the basis of user, and not on a one-half basis. The hon. gentleman will also bear in mind one other thing, that we were to pay interest at the rate of 5 per cent upon the cost of these betterments, and the Grand Trunk Railway Company, with this Government guarantee, would have been able to borrow nearly the whole cost of the betterments with the 5 per cent interest which they were to receive from the Intercolonial on one-half the cost. So that the net result of that agreement, which is so fair and so just according to the argument of the hon. gentleman, would have been that the Grand Trunk Railway, for all time to come, so long as the rate of interest remains as it is at present, would be in a position to make any betterments which the Intercolonial Railway had to use, at the cost of the Intercolonial Railway exclusively and alone.

Now, Sir, coming down to what we are dealing with more particularly, the question of the price of this Drummond road, let us take it first on the basis of these options. My hon. friend, I think, challenged me to give any evidence in support of what is stated in the minority report concerning this option for $400,000. Well, I will give that to my hon. friend. As a matter of fact, he read it himself to-night, but forgot, apparently, that he read it, and stated afterwards that no such evidence existed. I will read to him from the evidence of Mr. Farwell, as found on page 145:

Q. There were no other options given in connection with this road?—A. I may have had another, but it was simply to me.

Q. I suppose for a similar amount to this?—A. I do not remember. I was under the impression that this was for $400,000, but it is put in here at $500,000.

He was referring to the document which he had before him.

Q. What do you think the other option would be for?—A. The other would be for $400,000, but I do not know if this is an exact copy. It was not less than $400,000.

What the witness means by "this" is that he had before him the option for $500,000, or at least a copy of it. He says that there was another option; he says he does not know whether the document before him is an exact copy of the original, but the purport of his evidence is that if that is an exact copy of the original, then the other option was exactly in the same terms except that it was for $400,000. Now, my hon. friend from New Westminster has not gone very much into the details respecting the price of this road or the value of this road, if you work it out on the basis of this option. If you work it out on that basis you have this result: An option was given for $500,000, and $500,000, according to Mr. Farwell's evidence, was the basis on which all the shareholders were to be paid except himself. Does my hon. friend controvert that? I think not. According to Mr. Farwell's evidence, who differs in this from Mr. Greenshields, and who undoubtedly had better knowledge of this than Mr. Greenshields, $500,000 was the price at which the shareholders were to be paid with the exception of Mr. Farwell, who was in the arrangement with Mr. Ryan to make whatever they could out of it, over and above that. Therefore, so far as the main body of the shareholders were concerned, they were to be paid on the basis of $500,000 under the one option, and on the basis of $400,000 under the other option. Now, in the minority report, we worked out as carefully and conscientiously as we could, spending a good deal of time over it, the amount that was expended on that road after the date of these options, and we made it $685,000. I have here an abstract of every item and detail of that road taken from the Government returns, from the time they were first put in, until the end of 1897; and I challenge my hon. friend or any other gentleman on the other side of the House to show that that statement is materially incorrect. I remember the Minister of Railways and Canals putting it the other evening as nearly a million dollars. But I say it can be shown from the sworn returns, and from the evidence in this case, that the amount which you are to add to the amount of that option is in the vicinity of $685,000. Now, what is the result of that? The result is that giving to these people the benefit of every doubt in this case, you come to the conclusion that in 1898, when this road is to be purchased by the Government from this company, it is worth, on the basis of the $500,000 option, $1,115,000, or nearly $500,000 less than the Government pay for it. On the basis of a $400,000 option, it is worth $1,015,000, or nearly $600,000 less than the Government were paying for it. Are these options and the cost of the road subsequently to the company a fair basis upon which to pay the company for this railway? I say, it is more than a fair basis, as I will show to my hon. and learned friend in a moment. Let us take another basis of calculation, the value of the stock. I do not say, that the value of the stock, taken alone, is a fair basis, but I do think, if you take the value of the stock in connection with the floating indebtedness of the company, if any, you can get at a fair value for the road. Mr. Greenshields got $50,000 worth of this stock for practically nothing; he got $80,000 of the stock for $24,000, which he told us he paid for in the equivalent of cash. It was not in cash, but we took his word for it that it was the equivalent of cash. He got $50,000 worth of the stock for his advice and financial assistance, $80,000 worth for $24,000, and the balance of $137,600 he paid for, he tells us, at par. If he did pay for that at par, which I am bound to concede, he paid for it at par by exercising, after this arrangement with the Government, options which he had procured before this arrangement with the Government. Has that circumstance any significance in the sight of my hon. and learned friend? Is it of any importance in the eyes of any hon. gentleman on the other side of the House, that $50,000 of this stock was given to Mr. Greenshields merely for his financial aid and assistance, and that he bought $80,000 worth for $24,000 in cash. let us say, before this arrangement with the Government? He was willing afterwards to pay par for $137,600 worth. Now, Sir, the result of that is, that, for $267,600 out of $400,000 worth of stock, Mr. Greenshields paid $161,600, of which $137,600 was paid by him after he had secured this arrangement with the Government. If you take the floating indebtedness of the company, which was the only indebtedness they had, outside of this, and if you apply it to the value of the stock of this company purchased by Mr. Greenshields, and if you give Mr. Greenshields the benefit of this stock that he purchased at par, you cannot make out the value of the road at the time of its proposed acquisition by the Government as being worth more than $1,000,000, and the minority report shows that the profit Mr. Greenshields will make out of the road is certainly excessive. Upon the basis of the agreement of 1897, Mr. Greenshields would have received upon his investment of $24,000 a net profit of more than $400,000. My hon. friend (Mr. Morrison) says, that he hopes that hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House will make money. I do not exactly know why he should have expressed the hope, for hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House: he might have extended it to this side of the House as well. Certainly, if the political friends of hon. gentlemen opposite are to get bargains like that, it is evident that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House will not stand much of a chance to compete with them. Then, upon the basis of the agreement of 1898, the one that is now being sought to be enforced, Mr. Greenshields's net profit would be $240,000 upon his outlay of $24,000. Does the hon. gentleman venture to deny that portion of the minority report, because I can give him the figures in extenso? That report is founded on fact and supported by evidence.

Another basis of value is the earning power of this road. What was the earning power of this road? The average earning power of this road for the last three years—by which I mean the net earnings—amounted to $33,124.28, and the cost of maintenance, as the hon. member for New Westminster will find by reference to the returns to the Government of other railways, was abnormally low. Therefore, this railway, which, according to the argument of the hon. member for New Westminster, had cost $1,908,000, was yielding, on that investment, the net sum of $33,124. It was not a very paying concern; $33,000 was the net average earnings for the three years before 1897, and $33,000 is a good deal less than 2 per cent on the amount that this road cost these gentlemen, if my hon. friend's argument is correct. The floating debt of the road increased from time to time. It stood at its highest mark in 1897, when it reached the sum of $297,396. That is another circumstance which shows that the road was not a very paying concern. Therefore, when you sum these things up what result do you have? You have, in the first place, this fact, that the owners of this road in 1894 had offered it over and over again to different parties, at a price which would now realize from $1,015,000 to $1,115,000, if you add to what had been expended then, the subsequent cost of construction. Therefore, on that basis, the amount which is being paid by the Government is excessive. You have, in the next place, the purchase of the stock, taken in connection with the floating indebtedness, and on that basis you find two things: First, that you cannot value the road up to $1,000,000 by any process whatever; in the second place, that Mr. Greenshields, who is the person almost wholly interested in the road, would make an enormous profit upon the purchase of his stock before this agreement with the Government was secured, and would make even a very large profit by his purchase of stock, after this agreement was secured. In the third place, you find that the earning power of this road indicates that it was worth no such sum of money as that which the Government are paying. Will my hon. friend venture to assert that a road which has a net earning power of only $33,000, represents a value of $1,600,000? I venture to think not.

Now, there is one further test, and that is the basis on which the whole business before the committee was given, the basis of the cost of this road. I have endeavoured to show you, Sir, that this is not a fair basis on which the value of this road should be computed. I have endeavoured to show that the price of this road should be the value to its owner to-day, and that the basis of cost is not a fair basis. But let us suppose for a moment that the basis of cost is a fair basis, what is the result? The Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals valued this road at $11,000 per mile, which I think, brings its value to $1,565,000. Now, you may say, gentlemen on the other side of the House probably will say, that you should not deal with this company on the basis of value; you should be generous with them and deal with them on the basis of cost. If you deal with them on the basis of cost, I ask any hon. gentleman in this House if it is fair to the Government of this country to include in that cost the subsidies which have been paid. I say it is not. I say that if you are not going to take the legal basis of value—that is, the value to the company—if you are going to be generous with these gentlemen, and say that you wish to take the basis of cost; then, in all fairness, take the basis of actual cost. And, if you deduct from the amount at which Mr. Schreiber, the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, has valued the road; if you deduct from it the subsidies which these gentlemen have got from the Dominion Government and from the provincial Government, and from municipalities, you will find that you bring the value down to about $900,000. If you are going to deal with these gentlemen on the basis of cost, for what possible reason shall you pay to them moneys which they had not expended out of their own pockets. Cost is not the basis on which you deal with a man when you are buying his property; value, to him, is the basis on which you deal with him; at least, if you are expropriating his property. If you are dealing with him on the basis of cost, surely it is right and fair to take what it actually cost him, and not pay over to him subsidies which this Dominion and the province of Quebec have paid him, and thus practically give these subsidies over twice. Now, I would like, if any hon. gentleman on the other side who happens to follow me, would show in what respect my argument in that regard is not a fair and legitimate argument. Summed up, it is simply this: That you deal with a man on the basis of value and not on the basis of cost, but if you do go to him on the basis of cost, go to him on the basis of actual cost, particularly when you yourself have furnished a portion of the money which he is now seeking to get back from you, for the reason, and on the theory that the road has cost him that amount. The subsidies which have been paid to this road are as follows:—

Dominion of Canada subsidy.....	$287,936
Province of Quebec subsidy.....	347,420
Municipality subsidy.....	15,000
Total.....	$650,356

Deduct from that $1,565,000, which I think is the amount at which the road is valued by Mr. Schreiber—and you have a little over $900,000 as the fair amount which you should pay this company, if you deal with them on the basis of cost, and not on the basis of value. As it is approaching 12 o'clock, the hour at which the Minister of

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Marine and Fisheries suggested the adjournment, I take the liberty of moving that the committee rise.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I have no objection.

Motion agreed to, and committee rose.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What business does the Government propose to go on with to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. One or two small Bills; an Act to amend the Railway Act, an Act to amend the Insurance Act, and after that the House will probably go into Supply.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Do I understand the hon. gentleman will not go on with this debate to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was not the intention of the Premier to go on with the debate to-morrow.

Mr. BORDEN. It is not material: I was just asking for the purpose of convenience.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12 o'clock (midnight).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 19th May, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

QUEEN'S BIRTHDAY ADJOURNMENT.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved:

That when this House adjourns this day, it stand adjourned to Thursday next, the 25th instant, and that when it adjourns on Friday next, it stand adjourned to the following Saturday at three o'clock in the afternoon, and that Government Orders have precedence.

Motion agreed to.

REPORT—AGRICULTURE AND COLONIZATION COMMITTEE.

Mr. THOMAS BAIN (South Wentworth) presented the second report of the Select Standing Committee on Agriculture and Colonization, as follows:—

The Committee recommend that the House authorize the printing in the usual numerical proportions of English and French, in the form of advanced sheets of the committee's final report, twenty thousand (20,000) copies of each of the following divisions of the evidence given before the committee in the current session of Parliament on the specific subjects of "The fattening of chickens," "the fundamental principles that underlie the growing of crops," "The Canadian apple trade," and "The making of butter"; and that fifteen thousand (15,000) copies of each of the said advanced sheets be for use of members of Parliament, and five thousand (5,000) of each for the use of the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. BAIN. With the consent of the House, I would like to move the adoption of the report presented from the Committee on Agriculture and Colonization. I may briefly explain that there were two or three matters before the committee that appeared to the members of the committee to be of considerable public interest and such as should reach the community somewhat earlier than our report would under ordinary circumstances. Among these were the evidence given respecting the fundamental principles that underly the growing of crops, the poultry trade and the fattening of poultry, and the apple-shipping trade. It is proposed simply to revise the evidence touching these points and publish them as advance sheets of the report in bulletin form. It is anticipated that if we get the arrangement carried out at once, the printer will be able to complete the work so that the copies will be in the hands of members in the course of a month before prorogation. We ask for 15,000 copies in this form for the use of members of the House and 5,000 copies for the use of the Department of Agriculture, to be printed in the usual proportions of English and French. Of course, I am cognizant of the fact that without the consent of the House I cannot move for the adoption of the report, as it was presented only to-day.

Mr. W. B. IVES (Sherbrooke). I would suggest to the hon. member (Mr. Bain) to consider whether 15,000 copies is large enough edition for the use of members. I have some general knowledge of the subject and the nature of the evidence which has been given, and, to my mind, it will be exceedingly useful to have a pretty general circulation of it. I am quite certain that members on both sides of the House, if they could get copies before the House prorogued, would give this evidence a large circulation. I think that 15,000 copies would be altogether inadequate. In fact, I think we should have two or three hundred copies for every constituency. If the evidence is what I am informed it is, it is of very great importance, and would be very useful to the agricultural interest.

Mr. BAIN. I may explain that the limitations are practically at the Printing Bureau. I was given to understand that we could secure an edition of 20,000 chapters without particular inconvenience with the other work in hand. Beyond that, it would, perhaps, be difficult for us to secure the necessary accommodation there, that if the work was delayed, we should frustrate the object we have in view. It will become a portion of the report of the committee at a later stage, and with the consent of the House, I will ascertain if it is possible to extend that edition somewhat further.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would suggest that my hon. friend might make his motion not to exceed 50,000 or 60,000 copies; then he could obtain what he found necessary.

Mr. BAIN. Then I will amend the motion.

The PRIME MINISTER. I would suggest that this motion be adopted, and that the committee bring in an additional report later on providing for the additional copies.

Mr. BAIN. We might strike out the recommendation as to the numbers, and I will move that at a later date.

Motion agreed to.

REPRESENTATION IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend and colleague, the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock), being unavoidably absent to-day, I have undertaken, with the view of expediting business, and in order not to disappoint the very legitimate impatience of the public with regard to the measure which stands in his name, to present it to the House. I may say at once that the object we have in view in presenting this Bill is not to make a total redistribution of the electoral districts under which the House of Commons is now constituted. We deem that it would not be expedient at this time to do more than undo, so far as we can, the most glaring violations of a principle which we have always held, and which has always been universally held by public opinion in this country, to be the fundamental principle of representation. We think it is a principle which will commend itself universally to public opinion, that the basis of representation in this House should be the municipal county organization. It is in the recollection of all the members of this House that this principle was to a large extent interfered with by the Redistribution Act of 1882. That Act was a violation of the principle which had prevailed up to that time, and had been maintained, not alone by the Liberal party, but by the Conservative party as well. There are many well-known reasons why the municipal county organization should be preserved as the basis of representation; and I cannot do better upon this point than to quote the language of Sir John A. Macdonald, when the first Redistribution Act after confederation was introduced, in 1872. Sir John A. Macdonald, at that time, went over the question very fully, and gave in graphic language, the reasons from which there was no dissent expressed at that time, why the municipal county organization should be laid down as the basis of representation. The language which he made use of on that occasion reads as follows :—

It is desired, as much as possible, to keep the representation within the country so that each county that is a municipality of Ontario should be represented, and if it becomes large enough, that it should be divided into ridings—that principle is carried out in the suggestions I am about to make. That rule was broken in 1867 in three constituencies, namely, Bothwell, Cardwell and Monck ; and I do not think on the whole that the experiment has proved a successful one. I do not think it was unsuccessful as far as the representatives of those new constituencies themselves were concerned, as they are well and ably represented by the gentlemen who now hold seats for the constituencies ; and I hope that if I am returned again to the next Parliament I shall meet those hon. members. But it is obvious that there is a great advantage in having counties elect men whom they know. Our municipal system gives an admirable opportunity to constituencies to select men for their deserts. We all know the process which happily goes on in western Canada. A young man in a county commences his public life by being elected by the neighbours who know him to the township council. If he shows himself possessed of administrative ability he is made reeve or deputy reeve of the county. He becomes a member of the county council, and as his experience increases and his character and abilities become known, he is selected by his people as their representative in Parliament. It is, I think, a grand system that the people of Canada should have the opportunity of choosing for political promotion the men in whom they have most confidence and of whose abilities they are fully assured. All that great advantage is lost by cutting off a portion of two several counties and adding them together for electoral purposes only. Those portions so cut off have no common interest ; they do not meet together, and they have no common feeling except that once in five years they go to the polls in their own township to vote for a man who may be known in one section and not in another. This tends towards the introduction and development of the American system of caucuses, by which wire-pullers take adventurers for their political ability only, and not from any personal respect for them. So that, as much as possible, from any point of view, it is advisable that counties should refuse men whom they do not know, and when the representation is increased it should be by subdividing the counties into ridings.

Now, the wisdom of these remarks nobody will controvert. It is true that the Redistribution Bill of 1882, which was introduced while Sir John A. Macdonald was in office, was not drawn upon these lines ; but while the principle was departed from on modifications which we intend to propose to so far as my memory goes, express any views at all differing from those he had expressed on the previous occasion. I think the country at large will be prepared to come back to the adoption of those views. I may say at once that this is the guiding principle which we have adopted in proposing the modifications which we intend to propose to the Redistribution Act. As I said a moment ago, we do not intend at this time to undo the old representation Act ; we intend to deal with it only so far as is necessary in order to do away with the most glaring violations of the principle which was laid down as a cardinal and guiding principle in 1872.

There is another principle which we think ought to prevail whenever a redistribution of constituencies is to be made. According to the Constitutional Act, it becomes the duty of Parliament, not only the optional, but the obligatory duty of Parliament, after every new census, to make a redistribution. If it were simply an optional duty, there would not be so much force in the contention which I intend to advance ; but as it is a mandatory, an imperative duty, imposed upon Parliament by the constitution itself, it becomes all the more important that we should adhere to the well-known principles hitherto laid down and accepted when it becomes the duty of Parliament to interfere in any way with the representation of the House of Commons. The first principle that we lay down, as I said a moment ago, is, that municipal county organization shall be the basis of representation ; the consequent principle of this is, that county municipal organization should not be interfered with, and that boundary lines should not be interfered with. If the population of a county should become so small, according to the development of the population in other counties, as to no longer justify it to be represented by one member on the floor of the House of Commons, then we hold that that county should not be separated piecemeal, but that it should be annexed to the neighbouring county, as was done in several instances in this House : in Cornwall and Stormont, Niagara and Lincoln, Three Rivers and St. Maurice, Chambly and Verchères, Laprairie and Napierville, and St. John and Iberville. In all of these cases, the people of these counties had the privilege of sending one member to the House of Commons, but the population had become so small, relatively to the population of other counties, that it was thought advisable to deprive them of the privilege that they had up to that time of sending each one member to the House of Commons. In these cases, county lines were not interfered with, but adjoining counties were combined together to form one single electoral district. We have thought that, when such a case arises, this precedent should be followed, as it has already been closely adhered to. This is a case which, I believe, is not likely to arise very often ; a case that is more likely to arise is, where the population of a county may become so large that it will be entitled to more than one representative. Under such circumstances, it is provided that a county may be divided into ridings on the principle we want to lay down, and which we do act upon, which is, that, whenever a county has to be divided into ridings, whenever a county which, up to that time, is entitled to one member, becomes entitled to two or three members, the division should take place by judicial decision and authority. This is the second principle upon which we base the Bill that we introduce to this House now. After these preliminary observations as to the guiding principles upon which we have acted, I will now proceed to give to the House the character of the Bill which we have introduced. I may say, at first, keeping in view the main observations with which I started, that it is not our intention to have a general redistribution, but simply to undo certain wrongs that we think were done to the people, and certain of the more glaring violations which took place in regard to the principle we hold as sacred. It is not the intention to have any disturbance in the following constituencies:—Ottawa, Algoma, Carleton, Addington, Durham, Frontenac, Glengarry, Grenville, Halton, Hastings, Kingston, Lanark, Leeds, Lennox, Dundas, Nipissing, Northumberland, Peterborough, Prince Edward, Renfrew, Russell, Stormont and Cornwall, Victoria and Waterloo. These remain undisturbed. In the remarks which I quoted a moment ago, Sir John Macdonald said, that county lines had been interfered with in three instances at confederation, that is to say, in the cases of Cardwell, Monck, and Bothwell. The House, it seems, agreeing with Sir John Macdonald, has already caused Monck to disappear. It is proposed, on this occasion, that Bothwell, Cardwell and West Ontario shall also disappear. It is proposed, also, that Middlesex, which now returns four members, shall return only three for the four constituencies. These will be replaced by giving representation to the county of Dufferin and to the territorial district of Parry Sound, and by giving two additional members to Kent, Ont.

Mr. BERGERON. That will be three members for Kent.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes; that takes in part of Bothwell. The Bill proposes to restore county lines to the following electoral districts:—

Brant, Bruce, Elgin, Grey, Haldimand, Huron, Kent, Lambton, Lanark, Middlesex, Norfolk, Ontario, Oxford, Peel, Simcoe, Welland, Wellington, Wentworth, and York.

To give these representation the details would have to be as follows, taking the changes which I have just indicated:—

The electoral district of the city of London shall consist of the city of London, and shall return one member.

The electoral district of the city of Hamilton shall consist of the city of Hamilton, and shall return two members.

The electoral district of the city of Toronto shall consist of the city of Toronto, and shall be divided into four electoral districts, each of which shall return one member.

The counties of Dufferin, Haldimand, Lincoln, Peel, Welland and Wentworth, and the territorial district of Muskoka and the territorial district of Parry Sound shall each be an electoral district, and shall each return one member.

The counties of Brant, Elgin, Lambton, Norfolk, Ontario, Oxford and Perth shall each be divided into two electoral districts, and shall each return one member.

The counties of Kent, Huron, Bruce, Grey, Middlesex, Simcoe, Wellington and York shall each be divided into three electoral districts; each of the districts shall return one member.

This is the provision which we have inserted in the Bill in regard to the judicial division of the counties into ridings:

Where, under the foregoing provisions, any county or city is to be divided into more than one electoral district, such divisions shall be made by a board of commissioners, consisting of at least three persons, being judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature for Ontario, who, for that purpose, shall be appointed by letters patent under the Great Seal, and who shall divide the city of Toronto and each such county into the number of electoral districts by this Act assigned to them respectively.

The letters patent appointing the commissioners shall request the commissioners in making the divisions to consider the distribution of population according to the last Dominion census, the public convenience, and such divisions as appear to them best calculated to do substantial justice.

In case of the death or resignation or refusal of any one or more of such commissioners to act, a successor or successors shall in like manner be appointed.

The commissioners shall complete such divisions within a time to be limited by said letters patent, and shall report such divisions to the Secretary of State, making a separate report as to each electoral district so set apart by them, and shall set forth in such report the boundaries of the electoral districts to which such report refers and the municipalities comprised therein, and assign and appropriate designation to the electoral district in question, and upon receipt by the Secretary of State of the reports of the commissioners completing the divisions aforesaid, the respective territories by such respective reports described as constituting the respective electoral districts into which the said city of Toronto and the respective counties shall have been divided as aforesaid, shall, subject to the provisions of section 18 of this Act, become and be electoral districts as if the same had been so set apart and established as such by this Act.

Let me say, that section 18 is simply to provide that this Bill shall not come into force so long as the present Parliament continues, but shall come into force only at the dissolution of this Parliament.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The last portion?

The PRIME MINISTER. The whole of this Bill. This is section 18:

Nothing herein contained shall operate as to change the constitution of the electoral districts as they now exist until the dissolution of the present Parliament.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. But the judicial arrangement applies to this Bill.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes, it is a part of this Bill.

Each report shall be signed by the commissioners, or, in case of disagreement, by a majority of them, and the report of the majority of the commissioners shall be the report of the commissioners.

Each separate report shall be published by the Secretary of State in the "Canada Gazette" forthwith after its receipt thereof by him.

These are all the provisions in regard to this point.

In regard to the province of Quebec, it is not proposed to make any alterations in the representation as it exists to-day, except in so far as it is necessary to bring back the different municipalities which had been transferred in the Redistribution Act of 1892 from one county to another. Thus the parish of Lavaltrie, which for all purposes, municipal, judicial and otherwise, belongs to the county of Berthier, but which by the Act of 1892 was transferred from Berthier to L'Assomption, will be restored to the county of Berthier.

The same applies to the Indian village of Caughnawaga, the Indian village and reserve of Caughnawaga is transferred from the electoral district of Chateauguay to the electoral district of Laprairie and Napierville.

Mr. BERGERON. What about Caughnawaga? Under the new Franchise Act the Indians have no longer the right to vote there.

The PRIME MINISTER. They have no more the right to vote, and I do not think it affects the case one way or another. But in order to be consistent, we place Caughnawaga where it belongs. At present it is immaterial whether it is in Chateauguay or Laprairie or anywhere else, because the Indians have no right to vote.

The parish of Lacolle, together with the islands situated in the River Richelieu, opposite thereto, is transferred from the electoral district of Missisquoi to the electoral district of St. John and Iberville. The parish of Lacolle, for all purposes, municipal and judicial, belongs to the county of St. John, and ought to belong to it.

The parishes of Notre Dame de Stanbridge and Notre Dame des Anges de Stanbridge, together with the islands situated in the River Richelieu, opposite thereto, are transferred from the electoral district of St. John and Iberville to the electoral district of Missisquoi.

The parish of St. Pie is transferred from the electoral district of Rouville to the electoral district of Bagot.

The parish of St. Marcel is transferred from the electoral district of Bagot to the electoral district of Richelieu.

The parish of St. Eugène de Grantham,
Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

now in the electoral district of Bagot, is transferred from that electoral district to the electoral district of Drummond and Arthabaska. It belongs to Drummond County for all purposes, judicial, municipal and otherwise.

The parish of St. Nazaire and Ste. Christine, as municipally constituted, shall be included in the electoral district of Bagot, and that electoral district, as reconstituted, shall consist of the town of Acton, the village of Upton, and the parishes of St. André d'Acton, St. Ephrem, Ste. Hélène, St. Hugues, St. Liboire, St. Pie, Ste. Rosalie, St. Simon, St. Théodore d'Acton, St. Dominique, St. Nazaire and Ste. Christine.

The parishes of St. Guillaume d'Upton and St. Bonaventure d'Upton, are transferred from the electoral district of Drummond and Arthabaska to the electoral district of Yamaska. That is done for the same reason that for all purposes except for federal electoral purposes, they belong to the county of Yamaska.

The parishes of Ste. Eulalie and St. Samuel shall be in and form part of the electoral district of Nicolet.

All that part of the township of Stanfold, to wit: the twelve first lots in the three first ranges of the said township, which form part of the parish of Notre Dame de Lourdes, are transferred from the electoral district of Drummond and Arthabaska, to the electoral district of Megantic. All this for the same reason.

Now, coming to the province of Prince Edward Island, subsection 6, of section 2, of chapter 11, of the statutes of 1892, which refers to Prince Edward Island, are repealed, and the following substituted so as to provide there as elsewhere county lines.

In the province of Prince Edward Island there shall be three electoral districts, designated as follows:—

The electoral district of Prince, which shall consist of the county of Prince, and shall return two members.

The electoral district of Queen's, which shall consist of the county of Queen's, and shall return two members.

The electoral district of King's, which shall consist of the county of King's, and shall return one member.

With regard to the province of New Brunswick, no changes are contemplated with the exception of the city of St. John, which, as everybody in this House knows, is in a peculiar condition. An elector in the city of St. John has two votes. He votes first for a member for the city of St. John, and then he votes for a member for the city and county of St. John. It is proposed to do away with this anomaly, and to have two electoral districts, one for the city of St. John and one for the county and city of St. John.

Section 5 of the statute of 1892, is hereby amended by striking out subsection (b) and substituting the following:—

The electoral district of the county of St. John shall consist of the county of St. John only.

Nothing herein contained shall operate so as to change the constitution of the electoral districts as they now exist, until the dissolution of the present Parliament.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the provisions of the Bill which we intend to propose. I hope they will commend themselves to both sides of this House, and above all to the country, and I therefore move the first reading of this Bill.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's, P.E.I.) Might I ask the leader of the Government if it is the intention to have two members for Prince, P.E.I., and two for Queen's, P.E.I., running together as formerly, and one for King's, P.E.I.?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). It is quite impossible to deal at any length or minuteness with a Bill introduced in this way, and which is presented for the first time to the consideration of the House. I may say at once, I expected that my right hon. friend in introducing this Bill, would have drawn the attention of the House to what I regard as an extremely important feature of the measure. My right hon. friend refers to the constitutional Act providing for a decennial census, and he intimated that it was not proposed, before the arrival of that period, to make any material alterations. I would like to ask my right hon. friend why he resumed his seat without giving to this House, the reason why, for the first time in the history of Canada, this course should be pursued in regard to this measure. The Act of confederation provides under what circumstances a measure of this kind shall be passed. It provides that after every decennial census is taken, and when the result of that census is known, that there shall be a redistribution Bill touching representation in Parliament, as provided for under that Act. But, Sir, it is not usual in a law to provide that certain things shall not be done. The constitution of Canada provides that a redistribution Bill shall be passed at a particular time, and as I understand that constitution, it not only makes no provision for a redistribution at any other time; but, so far as the law can do it, it suggests that the time, and the only time, for dealing with a change in the distribution of the parliamentary seats of Canada, shall be at a particular period and only then.

I say that while the constitution does not expressly state that it cannot be done at any other time, the very fact that that provision is distinctly made as to the time that there shall be, under the constitution of the country, a redistribution Act, leaves the inference that it can only be done after a decennial census, an inference that has been respected by every Government of Canada and by every party in Canada from confederation down to the present hour. There has been no redistribution Bill introduced by any Government or by any party during the more than thirty years of the life of this confederation, and this House had a right to expect from my right hon. friend that before he resumed his seat he would give some reason why this unusual and unprecedented—and as I think a study of the constitution will show—this strictly unconstitutional proceeding of passing a redistribution Act at the present moment.

Is my right hon. friend afraid to go back to the electorate who clothed him with power? He obtained power under very exceptional circumstances. His party obtained power without having obtained a majority of this country upon one single great question at issue between the two parties in this House. It looks very much as if my right hon. friend believed that by converging the power of two Governments upon by-elections in local sections of the country, and with the adoption of the most startling means that this country has ever been a witness to, it looks very much as if my right hon. friend believes that though he is able to carry by-elections in this way, he is unable to face the general verdict of the people as that verdict would be recorded under the present law. I regard this measure as a confession from the right hon. gentleman that he is afraid to go back to the electors of Canada from whom he, under very exceptional circumstances, obtained power. The right hon. gentleman obtained power on the great issue that was put before the people of Canada on the occasion of the last general election, in regard to what was called the coercion of Manitoba. Will my right hon. friend venture to say, that the electorate of this country gave him a majority on that question? He knows that he cannot say so, because he knows that his policy on that question was a Janus-faced policy. The policy propounded on the floor of this House was, that there must be no coercion in Manitoba; and the policy propounded to the French Catholics at St. Roch's, in the province of Quebec, was, that if he did not obtain the fullest and most complete restoration of the rights of the French Catholics in Manitoba, he would resort to the same measure that I resorted to, and ask this Parliament to give him the means of redressing the wrongs under which his fellow-countrymen and co-religionists have suffered. It is to those two policies—one in Ontario declaring that there should be no coercion in Manitoba, and another in Quebec declaring that there should be coercion in Manitoba, if it was necessary, to restore to his fellow-countrymen and co-religionists the fullest and most complete rights they were entitled to under the constitution—that the hon. gentleman owes his position on the Treasury benches to-day. It was by appealing to the passions and prejudices of the people on a question of race and religion—appealing most unjustly and unfairly—and by the grossest misrepresentation of the position of his opponents in the province of Quebec, that he was enabled to obtain the position he now occupies in this House. Then, Sir, take the question of free trade, which he had been agitating for twenty years in this House and out of it. The hon. gentleman will not dare to say, that upon that question he obtained a majority of the electorate of Canada to support him or his views.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). What about the Drummond County Railway?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What does the hon. gentleman mean? Unless it is an impertinent interruption, I will wait to learn what the hon. gentleman means.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is what I want to know. It has as much to do with the question.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I say, the Drummond County Railway has a good deal to do with the question. The Drummond County Railway matter is one of those fraudulent measures by which hon. gentlemen opposite obtained funds in order to corrupt constituencies and carry elections. The hon. gentleman knows that in connection with the Drummond County Railway he has used the public funds of the people of Canada to sustain his party and his views in the province of New Brunswick. That is the answer I have to give to the hon. gentleman on that subject, and I think he will find that the less he says, in this House or out of it, about the Drummond County Railway, except when he is obliged to deal with the question, the better it will be for him and for his party. We find, first, that the leader of the Government has adopted a change in the franchise of the country. What was that change? To deprive this Parliament of the power of establishing the franchise under which the members of this House of Commons should be elected. That was the first move—to adopt the most corrupt, the most indefensible, the most scandalous system of obtaining a majority, by local action, and by action that no Government in this House would dare to sustain, as we have witnessed it in the province of Manitoba and in other sections of the country. We have seen a Government who pledged themselves to this House that they would endeavour to carry out in the lower provinces, under that Franchise Act, the same law that obtained in Ontario, by which there would be an appeal to a judge. The New Brunswick legislature, after being elected, with the view of aiding and supporting hon. gentlemen opposite—for it could have no other object—have struck out of their Bill the appeal to the judges, and handed it over to the sheriffs, who are the creatures of the government of the day. Is that not enough? The hon. gentleman confesses, openly, that he is afraid to face the electorate of this country, as it existed when he obtained power. He is afraid to submit his claims to that tribunal. He first changes the franchise in a manner that is nothing short of an absolute public scandal to any impartial person who chooses to examine into the question. Next, in the by-elections we have public money and public patronage used in a manner the most scandalous and the most disgraceful that has ever been exhibited in the history of Canada. In addition to that, in the election that took place in West Huron, we found that arrangements were made by the Government of the day by which, if the election could not be obtained by fair means, it should be by foul—by which, if there was a close contest, they would be in a position to steal the power to send members to this House. I have under my hand affidavits from 43 respectable men in a polling district in West Huron, that they voted for the Conservative candidate; and there were only 30 ballots found in the poll-box in his favour. I say, it is by means of that kind, Ministers of the Crown associating with the lowest political heelers—a brigade of ruffians sent from one polling district to another throughout the province of Ontario, and headed and generalised by Ministers of the Crown, who ate with them, slept with them, remained with them night and day while the contest was going on—that hon. gentlemen opposite carried that election. And you had the same thing in Brockville the other day. The recount had shown that, if the election was a close one, you were in a position to get the man returned who had not been elected, instead of the man who had been elected, by the same resort to improper and corrupt means. Does the right hon. gentleman not know that one of the deputy returning officers, when he had the ballots sent to him, was waited upon by one of these political heelers and instructed as to what his duty was? And what did he do? He came back with the ballot-box to the returning officer, and said to him: "I have been an honest man up to the present, and, rather than follow these instructions, I refuse to serve." And he threw up his position rather than submit to the degradation which has made these elections at the hands of hon. gentlemen a by-word in the history of this country. Is that not enough? It appears not. Change the franchise; put it in the hands of the local governments, who have so scandalously abused their power in the making up of the lists. That is not enough; supplement that by using public and private funds and every other means to corrupt the elector. That is not enough; and now, before the right hon. gentleman dares to go back and make his appeal to the electorate of Canada, we have to have an act for which there is no authority within the four walls of the constitution of Canada.

The constitution of Canada provides when and how and where such an Act as this can be passed, and that is after the decennial census. Does the hon. gentleman mean to tell me that there is any principle in this Bill which he has introduced? The great sovereign principle recognized by the constitution of Canada, and in its administration down to the present hour, is the principle of representation by population. It does not matter whether an adjoining county or an adjoining polling district be added to another, the great principle that underlies the present redistribution of seats in the whole Dominion is the principle of representation by population. Does the hon. gentleman tell me he has any regard for that in this Bill? Why, what has happened. My hon. friend from West York (Mr. Wallace) tells me that an important feature in that part of the Bill relating to Ontario is the utter abandonment of the principle of representation by population. They take from East and West York about 35,000 of a population and add that to Toronto, and keep Toronto down to four members the same as now.

The hon. gentleman challenged the arrangements that were made by the last Act of redistribution under the Government of the late Sir John Macdonald. But what does he say to the redistribution of Ontario under Sir Oliver Mowat, one of his colleagues? My hon. friend from Glengarry (Mr. McLennan), put in my hand three or four illustrations of constituencies as exhibited under the Redistribution Act of Sir Oliver Mowat; and when the hon. gentleman challenges the present distribution of seats, I ask him what he has to say to the means by which that was entirely thrown into the shade by the gigantic gerrymandering of one of his own colleagues, whom he has since made Lieutenant Governor of Ontario. What now do we find? The Bill does not make any material change in the province of Quebec. The hon. gentleman leaves Quebec pretty much as he found it. Why? Because Quebec gave him an overwhelming majority. But when he turned to Ontario, he tears that to pieces. Why? Because Ontario did not give him a majority at all. Under the circumstances, I am astonished that just on the eve of a decennial census, when, under the constitution of the country, as my right hon. friend knows, a redistribution must take place, he has given no justification for this measure which I regard as a violation of a principle recognized by all governments and their public men down to the present. My right hon. friend, by converging the power of two Governments, by adopting gigantic bribery with public and private money, and by those fraudulent practices which in Ontario now bid fair to make an honest election impossible, has sought to keep himself in power. Take what is going on in West Elgin now. The most gigantic frauds and attacks on the independence of the electorate are being established by the most incontrovertible testimony and brought home to the individuals who perpetrated them. But my hon. friend knows that, despite all his bribery and frauds, that which can be done in a single election cannot be done when the whole electorate of Canada is appealed to. He knows that unless he can resort to some means of juggling with the franchise and the distribution of seats, he will be swept out of power by the overwhelming tide of public indignation that is fast rising and will engulf him and all those who by bribery and corruption, private and public, and in every shape and form, are degrading everything like public life in Canada. My hon. friend knows he must resort to this deplorable, improper and unprecedented means to keep him in power, which he feels is slipping from his hands, and will pass away when the intelligent electorate have an opportunity of passing on the maladministration, the incapacity that has marked not only the career but the position of every member of that Government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Without exception, of course.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sorry to say I do not know where to find an exception.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not think you could.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If my hon. friend will point out to me any person in the present Administration who has not exhibited incapacity and convince me that I am wrong, I will at once withdraw; but so far as I am aware, there is not a man on the Government benches at whose hands the public interests of Canada has not suffered. When the Minister of Railways produces an exception I shall deal with it, but I cannot see any such now. I am only surprised that, under these circumstances, my hon. friend should not have attempted to gloss over this invasion of the constitution of Canada, in the interests of his party and Government, and put some plausible pretext before the House for doing that which was never done before and which I do not believe will ever be attempted again by any Government.

I do not intend to go at length into the various points. Take the county of Prince. P.E.I. My hon. friend hardly waited until the breath was out of the body of its former representative before he appealed to the Chair to issue a writ for a by-election. But in the case of Bagot, we demanded that a writ should issue within a reasonable time after the death of the lamented predecessor of the present member. How were we treated? My right hon. friend was not ready. He had not his machinery ready; he had not his emissaries to bribe and bulldoze and devise measures for the wresting of that constituency, that he knew was Conservative then, and which he knows is Conservative now, from his opponents. The proof is here—he dare not go back to the county of Bagot. By a great struggle, and by such bribery and intimidation as can only be practised at a by-election, he succeeded in getting a supporter here from the electoral district of Bagot. But he knows that at a general election his friend would be swept aside, and that Bagot, like fifty other constituencies now held by people who call themselves Liberals, but who are Liberal in nothing but in providing for themselves and their friends, would be represented by a Conservative. Therefore, Bagot he must lay his hands upon. He knows the means by which, after six months keeping Bagot disfranchised for the purpose of having it purchased from under a Conservative candidate, he was able, by a bare majority, to secure the election of a friend there. But Bagot he dare not face in a general election.

Now, that is the position. I ask my hon. friend if he thinks that the great electorate of Canada, the independent, intelligent people of this Dominion, will not feel that a Prime Minister and a Government that is able to resort to such unworthy, such unconstitutional, such improper means of clinging to power, should be set aside that better men may fill their places. It is not my opinion alone, but the opinion of the Treasury benches and of the men who sit behind them, that after the votes they have been forced to give or induced to give—by judgeships and high offices, the promise of which they had in their pockets session after session while they were giving a slavish support to the Government—the independent electorate of this country are waiting, impatiently waiting, for an opportunity to redress these wrongs and to show that the time has come when the men who obtained power by promises, every one of which they have broken and disregarded, must be denied a longer continuance of the confidence that they have abused. I challenge them, in the face of this House, and I challenge them in the face of this country, to name one single act, one single public principle ever professed as the cardinal principle by that party that they have not trampled under foot since they obtained power. I challenge them to quote one single promise by means of which they thus obtained power to misgovern this country, that they have not violated. I have given that challenge before, and it remains unmet. No attempt has been made to show a single principle that they have professed that they have not utterly violated or a single pledge on which they obtained the confidence of the electorate of Canada, that they have not trampled under their feet.

Of course, we cannot take up this Bill in its present shape. It will be printed and placed in our hands. But I undertake to say that the more closely it is examined, the more palpably will it appear that I have not misunderstood the objects and aims that the hon. gentleman has in view in putting this measure before the House.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) has just told us that he is shocked and horrified at my conduct on this occasion. I tell him very solemnly that I am not shocked or horrified at anything he says, scandalous as it was, as it always is. The hon. gentleman has given proof more than once this session that he is no longer able to discuss, that he is only able to abuse, and to use language so scurrilous as to be unworthy even of Billingsgate. The hon. gentleman says that we obtained power by appeals to prejudice. Does he forget his own history? Who went to Winnipeg in the year 1896 and asked the people of Manitoba not to place power in the hands of a Roman Catholic and French Canadian? This, of course, was not an appeal to race prejudice. The hon. gentleman should be ashamed, if shame could show itself upon his brow, to use such language and try to fasten such charges upon men better than himself.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There was not a word of truth in the statement the hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) made to his friends in Quebec.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am accustomed to that. Whenever a charge is brought against the hon. gentleman we hear from him that there is not a word of truth in it. We have won by-elections by corruption, he says, and by the lavish use of money, private and public. Sir, there have been more than thirty by-elections won by the Liberal Government since the general election of 1896. These hon. gentlemen opposite tell us to-day, when there is no responsibility behind their words, that we have obtained these victories by the lavish use of money, private and public.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. "Hear, hear," again repeats the hon. gentleman. If he speaks his mind in that, how is it that he has not had the courage to bring a single case before the courts. Not a single election has been contested. They have had their opportunities to prove their charges. The courts were open to them to establish their allegation that we had used money wrongfully in the by-elections. But in this, as in other matters, they have failed to act. Charges were made on the floor of this House that certain contracts had been given improperly, and when a committee was given them to make good their words, they drew back and said: We never made any insinuations. To-day the hon. gentleman says that I have used money in the elections. I defy him to bring a case before the courts. But it is evident that he is afraid of courts and judges. He is afraid of this new measure. We do not want a gerrymander; we refer this matter to the judges of the land. But the hon. gentleman does not want to have it dealt with by the judges.

But I have every reason not to exchange abuse with the hon. gentleman, but simply to answer the only question that he has asked me. He asked me if we have power to bring in such a measure, since there has been no census. I answer in words which I hope he will adopt, that, according to the precedents laid down on the floor of this House more than once, we have that power. Redistributions of constituencies have taken place under similar circumstances not only after a census, but during a session when there had been no census. I would call to the hon. gentleman's attention the fact that in 1883 or in 1885, Parliament, at the suggestion of a Conservative Government, brought in a measure to redistribute the counties of Argenteuil and Terrebonne. One or two years later the Government introduced a Bill to reconstitute the constituencies of Terrebonne and Montcalm. If that can be done for one, it can be done for many. There is our power. As to the reason why we bring this measure forward to-day, it is simply to undo the great wrong done by the Conservative Government in 1892 to the electorate of the province of Ontario. That is the justification for our act, and the more it is scanned the more it will be seen there is in it nothing but principle of substantial justice.

The hon. gentleman has referred to Bagot. What are the facts? Two parishes were taken away in 1891, one the Liberal parish of St. Pie, which would give a majority of one hundred, and put into Rouville, as you, Sir, know; and another, St. Martel, which gave a Conservative majority, was taken from Richelieu and was added to Bagot. We end that injustice and bring back Bagot as it was. The hon. gentleman tells us that the people are with him. As I have said, he cannot discuss, but he can abuse. And he can brag. Abuse and brag are the whole stock-in-trade of the hon. gentleman. I tell him at this moment that all we desire is to have a fair appeal to the people, and when the people pronounce, I am willing to leave the victory to the best man.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the motion is adopted, may I ask my hon. friend if he will lay on the Table of the House at an early date a schedule of the population of the districts which he is redistributing, their population, both before and after the redistribution?

The PRIME MINISTER. I think my hon. friend has got that information largely already in a book which was published two years ago, and which contains an atlas of the electoral constituencies of Canada. He will find there the population of the districts as they exist to-day. As to the other districts, I will endeavour to have the information which he wants before the second reading.

Mr. FOSTER. I knew that I could refer to the atlas as well as my hon. friend for what the population was before; but what we want is a chance for comparison.

Mr. McNEILL. I do not quite understand what the right hon. gentleman said with regard to one point. Are we to understand that every county which has more than one member is to be redistributed?

The PRIME MINISTER. No; every county where the county boundaries are restored, and which is entitled to more than one member, and is to be divided into ridings, should be so divided by the judges.

Mr. McNEILL. Not those counties which do not include any part of another county?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Bruce is one; you are all right.

The PRIME MINISTER. There are a certain number of counties as to which county boundaries are restored. All of these counties, I believe, are entitled to more than one member, and the division in their case will take place by the judges.

Mr. MONTAGUE. With regard to these districts which are to be arranged by the judges, when is that to take effect, previous to the next general election or after?

The PRIME MINISTER. It is provided in the Bill that the report of the judges, as soon as it is deposited in the office of the Secretary of State, should become part and parcel of this Bill, but the Bill should not come into force during the present Parliament.

Mr. CLARKE. Might I ask the right hon. gentleman a question respecting the re-arrangement of the city of Toronto? Is it the intention to add to the city of Toronto, as at present constituted, the wards of St. Paul, St. Mark, St. Matthew and St. Albans, and still confine the representation of the city, increased in size as it will be by the addition of these wards, to four members?

The PRIME MINISTER. The intention of the Bill is to give to the city of Toronto, as municipally constituted, four members.

Mr. N. C. WALLACE (West York). Before the motion passes, I would like to draw attention briefly to some of the features of the proposed Bill. A distinguished citizen of the province of Quebec made this threat not many weeks ago as to what would be done in this matter. The Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte), speaking in Brantford on the 28th of April, is reported in the Montreal "Herald" of May 3rd, to have said:

I have no hesitation in saying that, knowing Ontario as I do, when the gerrymander is undone —and we will undo it—when the gerrymander is undone, we are going to take the life out of them in Ontario as we have done in Quebec.

Now, Sir if there ever was a scientific attempt to destroy a political party, it is the Bill now presented to this House. We who live in the province of Ontario know that Sir Oliver Mowat's Government, after two gerrymanders, got up on the scientific principles that this one is, but not equalling it in iniquity, have endeavoured to stifle public opinion in the province of Ontario.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Nonsense.

Mr. WALLACE. Does the hon. member remember that when they could not secure a member for the city of Toronto they adopted the principle of giving three members to Toronto and allowing a citizen to give only two votes, and the minority had the third member for the city of Toronto, in order that in the local legislature Toronto should only have a majority of one Conservative member? They became so ashamed of their course in that respect that they had to repeal that measure. But, Sir, this Bill abounds in iniquities of the same character. What do they propose to do? The Minister of Justice, we are told, prepared this Bill. He has his revenge out of Bothwell, who refused to return him to Parliament, and he wipes Bothwell out of existence.

Mr. FOSTER. Tit for tat.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Bothwell was called after a pirate, and they have abolished it.

Mr. WALLACE. Take the city of Toronto and the county of York. Toronto is a pretty Conservative city. It is true they have only one representative from there now, and their prospects for the future are not good. So they say: We cannot carve a Grit constituency out of the city of Toronto in any way that we know, so we will give the Tories in the city of Toronto. We will take the Conservative element from the two ridings of East York and West York, and we will add them to the city of Toronto. They will take from the west riding of York, probably one-half the constituency, a constituency that has not had its boundaries changed for more than 50 years. They take one-half of that and add it to the city of Toronto. They do practically the same thing with the east riding of York, taking about one-half of it and adding it to the city of Toronto. Toronto to-day has four members. With the additions to be made from the east and west ridings of York, Toronto will have a population estimated at over 200,000, so that Toronto will have four members, each representing about 50,000 of a population. West York, with these portions of it gerrymandered, will have 50,000 or 60,000, or less than 20,000 for each representative in the county of York; while there will be 50,000 for each representative from the city of Toronto. The county of York is Liberal in its tendencies, therefore, every 20,000 people will have a representative. The city of Toronto is Conservative, therefore, it will have only one representative for every 50,000 people. That same principle is carried out through the whole of this Bill. Take the county of Simcoe. According to the last census it had a population of 82,700; with three members, that will give an average of 27,569 to each. The county of Simcoe is a Conservative county, it usually sends three Conservatives to Parliament, and may be depended upon in the future to preserve its record. The unit of population, according to the last census, is 22,900. Kent, with a population of 58,019, is to have three members, or an average of 19,378. Kent is supposed to be a Liberal county, and 19,000 people in Kent being Liberals, are as good as 27,000 people in Simcoe being Conservatives. Wellington, with 59,000 people, is allowed to have three members. That would be 19,840 for each constituency. Wellington is supposed to be a Liberal county and may send three Liberal members to Parliament, as I believe it does to-day. Therefore, every Liberal constituency is to have a small population, and constituencies are to be divided in this way so that the Liberal population will send far more representatives to Parliament than the Conservatives. Brant, with 33,217 people, is to send two members, or with an average of 16,608. Why, Sir, I can remember when the voice of the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) was raised so that you could hear it, I was going to say, from one end of Ontario to the other, in denunciation of those who opposed the principle of representation by population, while here to-day the principle is violated—Toronto, with 50,000 people for each member, and Brant, with one-third of 50,000 people for each member. Is that a fair distribution; is that what the right hon. Prime Minister spoke of a moment ago when he said that we are going to undo the great wrong of 1882, wherein the principle of substantial justice will prevail? Where is the principle of substantial justice in such an iniquity as that? I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister, or any hon. gentleman on that side of the House, to justify such an iniquitous scheme as is proposed in this Bill. So it goes all the way through. The whole of the province of Ontario is to be cut up by a scientific process. Hon. gentlemen have arranged everything as it suits them, and then they go through the farce of saying we are going to call in the judges.

Mr. CLARKE. We had better call in the police.

Mr. WALLACE. They fixed the whole thing up and they attempt to shield themselves behind the judges who can do nothing. What could the judges do with the city of Toronto? There are 200,000 people in Toronto, or more; they will tell them to parcel it out so as to give four members to these 200,000 people. They will say that they did not do it; it is the judges that have done it; and the thing cannot be wrong because here are the impartial judges—Jim Lister, or some others. They are called commissioners. Then we have the county of Brant, which is to have two members, if I understand right. Did I understand the right hon. member correctly?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Mr. WALLACE. Brant is to have two members. There are 33,217 people there. If my figures are correct, and they are to have two members.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to ask him a question? Are there any townships that were put out of Brant County, some few years ago, when the redistribution took place, that are now going back into the county of Brant? They were put out of the county ten or twenty years ago under the two redistributions. Are they going back into the county, and will they not add to the population?

Mr. WALLACE. My figures as I have them here, I think, are correct—

Mr. LANDERKIN. May I ask—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Sit down, sit down.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Excuse me; I am going to ask the hon. gentleman a question. The hon. gentleman is making statements which he will find are not borne out by the facts. I am anxious to keep my hon. friend right. Will these townships come back again into Brant that were taken out, not by the hon. gentleman, but by the Government that he supported a little while before he resigned? He will find that he is wrong, and that he is not borne out by the facts.

Mr. WALLACE. If the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, knew what he was talking about he would scarcely make these remarks. I am giving the figures of the municipal county of Brant, the population of which was 33,217, and on that basis each member would have an average of 16,000 people.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Does that include the city of Brantford?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The city of Brantford has 22,000 of a population.

Mr. WALLACE. I say this, that the judges are told to apportion four members to 200,000 people in the city of Toronto, and they have nothing to do but mark out the divisions to allow 50,000 people to send four representatives to Parliament.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Patterson). Will the hon. gentleman allow me. He is taking the figures from the municipal county of Brant as one of his illustrations from the census of 1891, is he not?

Mr. WALLACE. Yes.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Are you taking the figures for the city of Toronto from the census of 1891?

Mr. WALLACE. No, I am not.

Mr. COWAN. Why not?

Mr. WALLACE. If I took the figures for 1891, we would have 47,000 people, about three times as many as the people of Brant, so that it would not materially alter the figures. I am taking the latest information I have, and the latest information I have is the municipal record of the city of Toronto, wherein they have over 200,000 of a population. If my recollection is correct, the census of 1891 gave 188,000 people for the city of Toronto. Then, the city of Toronto will only have these four members, while the Minister of Customs will represent a constituency in which each member will represent 16,600. The member for Toronto will represent a little more than three times 16,600, or, if you take the last census, in each case, the Minister of Customs will represent 16,600 people, while the member for Toronto will represent 47,000 people. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Customs if he is going to justify that infamous gerrymander? Our judges are to be called in to whitewash this Bill and make a pretense that it is fair by saying that it has been adjudicated upon by the judges. The judges are not fixing the righteousness of this matter; they are not fixing the fact that Brant is to have two members, when, by its population, as compared with that of Toronto, it is not entitled to two members. They tell the people that they are adopting the principle of representation by population, and why should we not? Why should we proclaim to the world that three citizens of the city of Toronto are only equal to one citizen of Brant? This Bill, as it is laid down, and as we will have occasion to point out in full, on several occasions, at a later day, is a more iniquitous gerrymander even than that of Sir Oliver Mowat, when, in two succeeding gerrymanders, he tried to keep Ontario in line with him. This is a more scientific system of robbing the Conservative party of its rights, but I will venture to predict that hon. gentlemen will not succeed in attaining their object.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I would like to ask the right hon. Prime Minister a question in regard to this Bill. Will the judges be instructed to proceed on the basis of population for the purposes of representation, and, if so, what will be the basis for city and country constituencies?

The PRIME MINISTER. My hon. friend knows that in every country in the world where you have representative institutions, that you have not the same proportion of representation in cities as in rural constituencies.

Mr. WALLACE. Why not?

The PRIME MINISTER. For the reason that cities are generally better represented, because you will find a great many men residing in cities representing rural constituencies. The judges, so far as the city of Toronto is concerned, as well as other constituencies, which have to be divided, will divide the municipal city of Toronto into four ridings, taking into consideration the census of 1891, and the convenience of the population, so as to do substantial justice, so far as it is possible to do it.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. I am not asking in regard to Toronto. I want to know what the basis of representation will be. What will be the unit of representation in cities and in country constituencies?

The PRIME MINISTER. The principle which we hold, on this side of the House, is that representation is to be taken upon municipal county organization and city organization, and, therefore, the question of the unit does not come in.

Mr. CLANCY. Does the right hon. gentleman pretend to say, that he will disregard the unit of population in those constituencies, or does he say that the judges are to have instructions on that matter?

The PRIME MINISTER. We have not forgotten that, since the county of Kent is to have three members and the county of Simcoe three members. Some other counties are also to be given three members. The judges have no instructions as to the manner in which they are to proceed, but I suppose without giving instructions we can assume they will try to make a fair division.

Mr. DAVID TISDALE (South Norfolk). As I understand it, Parliament lays out the field and says whether a county shall have one member, two members or three members, and then to make it look fair, the Government ask the judges to come in and divide what cannot be divided in any other way, than to give the Government a political advantage. That is a farce, and nothing else but a farce. After the Government decides upon the counties politically, and which county shall have two members and which counties three members, it will be found on investigation, I venture to say, that the judges cannot divide the counties left to their decision in any other way than to give the Government a political advantage. Consequently the judges are added to give it a respectable appearance; where as they have practically nothing to do with it. The judges may not have their black caps on, but nevertheless they will be there under this Bill for the decapitation of Conservatives. The Government take mighty good care where the county is strongly Reform and where there are two or three members, that the judges cannot help, even if they tried, securing the return of two or three Liberal members. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) was wrong when he said that the right hon. gentleman has not considered population at all. He has considered population because, in the counties which they submitted to the judges, the judges will regard the constitution and in the Reform counties the judges will go by population. It no doubt has been usual to give the city constituencies in a degree a larger population than the rural constituencies, but to say the proportion is to be 16 to 50 is no correct basis at all. The beauty of the thing is that taking some of the counties they do not regard population at all, while where it suits them they do. Take my own county which I know well. There they can afford to do the generous to my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). They add a Conservative township to him, but taking the municipal results he will have a comfortable majority of two or three hundred, even though there is a Conservative majority of 100 added on to his riding. Now the result of that will be that South Norfolk will be a very close constituency. There is a case where the riding will be on the basis of population, and in that sense it is fair enough because they will about equalize the population of the two ridings. They do that where it cannot hurt them and where it is sure to hurt the Conservative party. But, Sir, under this Bill, it is hopeless to divide the county of Brant into two ridings; it is hopeless for a judge or anybody else to do it with any reference to population and not give them two Reform members. That, it seems to me, is the whole principle of the measure.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You mean the want of principle.

Mr. TISDALE. As I understand the constitution, it places population as a basis of representation beyond county boundaries. I am not discussing now the question of who is right or who is wrong in regard to attempts to obtain party advantage, but I am speaking of the highest principles that should guide men in a thing like this. I hold that under our constitution county boundaries as a basis of representation should not override the question of representation by population, and I defy the right hon. gentleman to produce any authority to the contrary. No doubt it is a difficult thing for any political party to distribute ridings and electoral districts without being tempted to take political advantages; but I tell the hon. gentleman, that if he wants to take a political advantage, I would rather see him do it by giving a fair representation by population. I am not saying you can equalize the population, but I say you can make a fair attempt to do so. It is monstrously unfair, that you should give large bodies of people only one member, and give small bodies of people two members under the cry that you are respecting county boundaries. If you are to bring in the judges at all, lay down some principle upon which they can act in a judicial manner, and I am disappointed and surprised the Government have not done that. Say how many people are to be the basis of an electoral district, and then ask the judges to distribute them without reference to county boundaries; that is the fair principle of representation. I tell the right hon. gentleman and I tell the Government, that they have lost a great opportunity to once and for all settle this question of redistribution. They were strong enough in the country to introduce a fair Bill and to follow the English system. When I heard mention of judges in connection with this matter, I had hoped that we would have a system followed which might be taken as a precedent. I am a believer in seeing such things being relegated to the judges, but do not give us the pretense of following the English system while you are departing from it entirely. I tell the Government that if they had been equal to the occasion, it would have strengthened them and weakened my political party, and I am willing that my party should be weakened and the other party strengthened if a just and honest act is performed. Follow the constitutional principle in your Redistribution Bill. Do it if you dare. If you do it, the country will respect you, and if you do not do it, either now or in the days to come the country will punish the parties that trifle with the principles of our constitution. I would rather sit in Opposition a long time and see the Government do a just thing, than be in power and see the Government do what is unjust. I would rather the Government had taken all the responsibility on their own shoulders than resort to the farce of sending such a thing as this before the judges. I say to the Government: Reconsider this matter in your own interests as a party, reconsider it in the interest of this Dominion, and let the judges have full power as to an equal division of the constituencies. We are somewhat wedded to our municipal institutions, and why not submit this measure to the judges so as to give us a fair representation, while at the same time disturbing these municipal institutions as little as possible. Who dare stand up at this period, in any free country, and say, that population shall not form the basis of representation? Mr. Speaker, I shall probably have more to say before this is through, and today I shall not say any more than that I regret exceedingly that this principle, which is so fair and wise, has not been adopted in this measure.

Mr. D. HENDERSON (Halton). I desire to put a question which, I think, the House will be very glad indeed to have answered, if the hon. First Minister will give the information. I understand that it will be the duty of the judges to divide the counties into ridings. In a county entitled, say, to three members, it may be quite impossible for any commission of judges to form three ridings having anything like an equal representation. One riding might have 20,000, another 21,000, and another 30,000, if they strictly adhered to the boundaries of townships. Now, I would like to know, from the First Minister, whether it is the intention to adhere strictly to the boundaries of townships, towns and villages, or will the judges be permitted to divide some of the large townships, so as to give an equal representation to each member representing a portion of a county?

The PRIME MINISTER. The instructions given to the judges, as my hon. friend no doubt knows by this time, are general. It is impossible to divide counties into ridings which will have exactly the same population; but I assume, and I hope also, that it will be the duty of the judges to make the ridings as equal as possible in population. My hon. friend knows that, under the Act that we have at present, though the unit is 21,000 or 22,000, there are many constituencies in which the population is under, and many in which it is above, that number.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think the right hon. First Minister has misunderstood my point. If it is necessary to an equal representation, will the judges be permitted to divide the townships, and put one-half of a township in one riding and the other half in another?

The PRIME MINISTER. I am sorry to say, this is a point which I have not considered. The instructions to the judges are general, and they cannot but be general. I assume, that the duty of the judges is to divide according to the population, as determined by the last census, and according to the convenience of the people. This is the guiding principle which they have been instructed to follow.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). The right hon. gentleman has told us that, in considering this Bill, the Government were guided by some principles. The first principle he mentioned was a regard for county boundaries; and, when the right hon. gentleman opened his address, it seemed apparent to the Parliament, that he and his colleagues had been guided solely by the desire to stick to the municipal county boundaries. But, as the right hon. gentleman proceeded, the members found that the Government had, where it suited them presumably, regarded county boundaries; and, where it did not suit them to do so, they disregarded county boundaries. Now, the right hon. gentleman is in a very communicative mood, and I am sure he desires the House to be in possession of the very fullest information for the future discussion of this Bill. As he has been so ready to tell us the guiding principles by which they have been lighted on their path, I should like to ask, in a very few words, what principle guided him in selecting the constituencies which are returned to county boundaries, and what principle guided him in rejecting those which are not returned to county boundaries? If the principle is good in the counties of Oxford, Brant, Haldimand and Norfolk, I submit, that it is good for the other constituencies in the province of Ontario; and I submit, that the right hon. gentleman owes it as a bounden duty to this Parliament to tell us why, in some constituencies, that principle has been regarded, and why, in other constituencies it has been disregarded entirely. That, Sir, is the pith of the game which the right hon. gentleman is playing upon the sympathies and convictions of the people of the province of Ontario. Why has he not applied the one principle all over the province of Ontario, instead of in a number of constituencies? Then, I think we ought to be told what is to be the future course. Of course, this Parliament cannot bind the Parliament which will discuss and legislate upon this question ten years hence, or two or three years hence, when the result of the decennial census is known. While we cannot bind them, I submit, that, by laying down a general principle, we might guide them; but there is nothing in this Act to guide the Parliament for the future. If the hon. gentleman says, that for all time in the future the judges will be permitted to divide the ridings and make the representation of the various provinces, that is a principle by which Parliament in the future will be guided. But the right hon. gentleman has not done that in the Bill which he has brought down this afternoon. Then, there is another question which I should like to ask the hon. gentleman. Are the judges to be paid for their duties? To know this is essential to a discussion of the question. If so, what are they to be paid? I am not, in any sense, desiring to reflect on the judges of the land. I have always desired in this Parliament to defend them. I am asking this question, therefore, with no sinister motive, but simply for light which I think we ought to have, when we come to discuss the bill in detail.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker,—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Let us have an answer.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Then, if you will permit me to say so, there appears to be no principle in selecting the constituencies to which county boundaries will apply, and those to which they will not apply, except the principle of party gain.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have just this to say to my hon. friend, that, if he wishes, I have no objection to extend it all over the province of Ontario. He has only to signify his wish.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. MONTAGUE.

Mr. CLARKE. If the principle is right, why not carry it out?

Mr. SPROULE. Mr. Speaker, I think the record of this Government will be a notable one in the history of this country, because, since they came to power, they appear to have been turning the hand on the dial of time backward, so far as the constitution is concerned. Their first act was to interfere with the constitution by passing a franchise law under which members should be elected to this Parliament by a different franchise in every province of the Dominion. They destroyed the principle of a Dominion franchise shortly after they came to power. Now they propose to destroy the principle of representation by population, which was fought for so hard and so vigorously for so many years in the province of Ontario. After the basis or unit of representation had been arranged for the province of Quebec, the same principle was extended to the province of Ontario and to other portions of the country. As the unit of representation for the province of Quebec at the last redistribution was between 22,000 and 23,000, the late Government endeavoured to apply the same unit in the province of Ontario, and that province was divided on that basis. The principle of representation by population was carried out in the province of Ontario, not only with regard to the relative strength of the representation of the two provinces, but it was carried even further, and was made to extend to the number of people who should be represented by one member in this House. I have always regarded it as unfair that one member should represent 50,000 or 60,000 people, while another should represent only some 12,000 or 13,000 people. That imposed too much work on the one and too little on the other. It gave the larger number too small a voice in the affairs of the country, and the smaller number too large a voice.

The right hon. gentleman, however, has destroyed the principle of representation by population. That is another bulwark of the constitution which these hon. gentlemen have deliberately overthrown. They have gone further. For 32 years the principle was carried out and recognized that a redistribution of seats should take place after each census. But these hon. gentlemen have destroyed that principle; and when the future historian comes to write the history of this country, he will describe this Parliament as noted chiefly for its violation of the constitutional principle hitherto recognized. The only object of this Bill is to secure the election of as many Reformers as possible. Let me give you an illustration. It may fairly be said that Toronto is a Conservative city. You may say what you like, but if the whole city were given a fair opportunity of deciding, it would not return one Reformer. The population of Toronto is 200,000, and by this Bill it will return four members, or one for each 50,000. But let me pick out such constituencies as Kent, Wellington and Brant, which rarely elect anybody but a Reformer. These three would represent about 200,000 population. But take the same number of population in the city of Toronto, and divide it up according to the unit of population in those constituencies, where Reformers will be purely elected, and you will find that if Toronto got its just rights, it would have nearly nine members instead of four. In other words, the same number of Conservatives send only four members here compared with nine members sent by the Reformers. If there ever was a measure designed to destroy the rights of a political party, it is the one introduced to-day.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Your party went further.

Mr. SPROULE. Not by any means. Our party went further in carrying out the principle of representation by population. It did not apply that to the provinces only, but went further and applied it to the individual representation, so that as nearly as possible, about 23,000 or 25,000 should be the unit of representation. You, however, have made it possible for 200,000 Reformers to send thirteen members to this House, while 200,000 Conservatives can only send four. If that is not unfair, then I do not know what can be regarded as unfair.

You go further and allow the judges to divide up these counties, and I assume they will not cross the municipal boundary lines. They will take, no doubt, their inspiration from hon. gentlemen opposite and will manage so that even less than 16,000 Reformers will send a representative to this House. I venture to say that when this Bill is worked out to its legitimate conclusion, you will find that 10,000 or 11,000 Reformers will send a representative to this House, while 50,000 Conservatives will be required to elect one.

While, at first sight, one would think this a fair measure, because the judges are called in to make a division, the great evil is done by the first division made, in which the judges have no voice whatever. A principle is laid down, within the lines of which the judges must act; and no matter how they may act there will be great injustice done the Conservatives, especially in Ontario. Why did not the hon. gentleman apply this principle to his own province? He dared not, because that would wipe him out. But he saw that Ontario is the strong element in confederation, the largest, the most dangerous province, and, therefore, he muddled that province in such a way as to prevent its having a fair representation in this House. If I know anything of the principles that govern the Conservative party, I am confident that should a Conservative Government be returned to power, it would at once repeal this measure, or it would not be worthy the name of Conservative. Every important measure of this Administration is noticeable chiefly for breaking down some important principle of the constitution, and each succeeding measure appears to be worse than its predecessor. This third and last is the most objectionable and disgraceful yet submitted to us.

Mr. GEO. E. CASEY (West Elgin). My hon. friend closed his remarks by an utterance of undoubted truth. He said that the Conservative Government which would not repeal this law would not be worthy of the name. In that sentiment I thoroughly agree. Conservative Governments have shown us what sort of redistribution law suits them, and we have shown by this measure what principle of redistribution suits us. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that if the Conservative party were to continue faithful to its traditions and ever had the chance to repeal this measure—which my hon. friend assumes correctly enough will go through—it would certainly do so. The hon. gentleman says this is a breach of the constitution, because it assumes to redistribute the seats at a time not immediately following the taking of the census. He totally misunderstands the constitution. The constitution says that we shall redistribute the seats after the census, allowing to each province the number to which it is entitled by the results of the census, but it does not, and could not, say that, in the meantime, any irregularity or impropriety in the distribution of seats in a particular province should not be remedied. There is no constitutional question involved whatever, but there is involved the question of keeping faith with the electorate. When the Liberal party came before the electors in 1896, they promised that if returned to power they would repeal what they called the iniquitous, unjust and unfair distribution of the seats which had been made by the Government then in power. The electorate sent them back with the understanding, gave them the order, when they came into power here, to undo that injustice. They expressed their opinion at the polls that the present redistribution was an injustice, and told their servants, the Ministers of the Crown here to remove that injustice and put things back on a fair basis. The Government are, therefore, only doing what they are obliged to do, in consequence of their pledges and in consequence of the orders given by the majority of the people of Canada, in introducing a Bill of this kind. As to the Bill itself, this is not the time, on the introduction of it, to say very much; but a word or two with regard to the principle may not be out of place. I said on a former occasion in this House that if this Bill, when it came down, bore the appearance of a gerrymander similar in any respect to that passed under the previous Government, I would oppose it by word and vote. I meant it. But I am happy to say that this Bill is not a gerrymander; it is not an attempt to snatch any political advantage in the subdivision of the counties that are to have more than one member, but an attempt to put the redistribution of the seats in these provinces on a fair and equitable basis. So far as can be seen on the Bill, it merits the support of every fair-minded man in this House. The hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) says that the Bill does not observe the principle of representation by population. But the principle of representation by population was never observed in any Redistribution Bill. It is not observed by the present law on that subject, which I could easily show if I took the time to go into details. But, take for instance the case of the ridings in my immediate neighbourhood. East Elgin and West Elgin are very far from being equal in population and they were arranged, not with any view of making them equal in that respect, but to make a safe seat in one end of the county for a Conservative to spoil the seat formerly held by the Hon. David Mills, the constituency of Bothwell, at the other end.

Mr. WALLACE. What are the figures ?

Mr. CASEY. I do not remember the exact figures, nor am I discussing matters of detail at this moment. It had always been our principle in reference to representation, that exact equality of population was not so much a desideratum as the keeping together for political purposes of those who are naturally associated for municipal and other purposes—in other words, to limit constituencies within county boundaries. Now, my hon. friend from East Grey says that in adopting this principle we are preventing justice from being done by the people. I say that in adopting this principle we are adopting the only possible check that can be put upon the power of a Government with a large majority to cut and carve constituencies to suit their own ends. We have seen what can be done in that line in the act of the late Administration. On the other hand, we see this Government refusing to take advantage of its majority, refusing to put forward the excuse of equal representation as a reason for cutting up the country in such a shape as to return the greatest possible number of Liberal members; but tying their own hands, saying to the judges: You are to finally shape the constituencies, but you must not, in shaping the constituencies, go outside of the county boundaries. That is proof, not of an intention to gerrymander the country, but of their willingness to prevent themselves gerrymandering the country. I thought it necessary to say these few words in reply to the insinuation of the hon. member for East Grey: a full discussion must be postponed to the second reading of the Bill, when we shall have had time to consider the measure more fully.

Mr. J. G. H. BERGERON (Beauharnols). When the right hon. the First Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was explaining the Bill, I understood him to say that the dividing of ridings in the province of Ontario would be left to the judges of the Supreme Court of that province. I wish to ask him if such division as may be made in the province of Quebec so as to equalize the population of the different counties, will be made by judges? If the hon. gentleman replies in the affirmative—of course, it is only a matter of detail, still it is one with regard to which accuracy is necessary—he will have to change the wording from “Supreme Court judges,” because we have no such thing in the province of Quebec. And I think the right hon. gentleman will admit that the matter should be left to the judges in Quebec if that is the course to be followed in Ontario. I hope the right hon. gentleman will say whether this is the system to be followed in Quebec.

The PRIME MINISTER. The question of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Bergeron) does not apply. In the province of Quebec there is to be no division of the counties under this Bill. The only thing that is done in the province of Quebec is simply to restore those municipalities that, in 1892, were taken from one county and put into another.

Mr. BERGERON. My reason for speaking as I did, was that, if we are proceeding on the principle of having representation by population, it should apply to Quebec equally with Ontario. It is true, you cannot increase or diminish the representation of Quebec, but you can change the delimitation of counties. The right hon. gentleman represented for many years a very large county, Drummond and Arthabaska, the population of which is over 43,000. The next county to it is Yamaska, the population of which is only 16,000. But if the hon. gentleman said they are not going to use the judges in the province of Quebec, the question I have put falls to the ground. I listened attentively to the right hon. Premier in his answer to the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper). The right hon. gentleman got very much excited, and I was much surprised to see him in that condition. But, as a matter of fact, he did not answer one of the strong arguments put before the House by the hon. leader of the Opposition. In his warmth, he forgot to deal with the charge made by the leader of the Opposition that he had gained power by promising things which, in coming into power he had not carried out. Another thing he forgot was to deal with the question raised by the hon. leader of the Opposition, whether the constitution of the country allowed the passage of such Redistribution Bill as is here proposed. I think this is the most important question that is to be decided before we proceed to deal with the Bill. My right hon. friend, I am sure, will acknowledge that he has forgotten to answer that point.

The PRIME MINISTER. I not only answered it, but I answered it most effectively by quoting your own precedents. I quoted the Bills of 27-28 Victoria, and 32-33 Victoria, where the limits of the counties of Terrebonne, Montcalm and Argenteuil were reorganized by this Parliament.

Mr. BERGERON. But surely my right hon. friend will admit that that is not the same thing. I was in the House when this change took place in the counties of Argenteuil and Two Mountains. As the hon. gentleman remembers, there were two parishes which were taken from the county of Two Mountains and put in the county of Argenteuil. But what was the reason? Argenteuil is looked upon as an English-speaking county, while Two Mountains is a French-speaking one. These two parishes were inhabited by English-speaking electors who desired, and expressed the desire, by petitions to the Government, if I remember well, to be put into the county of Argenteuil, as their municipal affairs were connected with that county. The Government, purely and simply, acceded to their request. It was not a gerrymander; and if you take the figures of population, you will see that it made very little difference, as the two of them, according to the census of 1891 have a population of about 15,000. We are not in a good position to discuss that Bill at present, we can only speak of its general outlines, but there is certainly some gerrymandering in it, since we are obliged to use that word. My hon. friend brings in this Bill, which he thinks will be accepted with enthusiasm by both sides of the House. Speaking of Bagot and Rouville, he says he is going to put them back almost in the same position in which they were before. At first sight one would almost think that was a right thing to do. But my right hon. friend has forgotten one thing. This was done for a purpose. It was not done for the purpose of giving my hon. friend (Mr. Brodeur) an increased majority in a county where he has already about 400 of a majority. It was not done to help our late lamented friend from Bagot (Mr. Dupont), whom the hon. gentleman respected as much as I do. He had always carried his county, whether he had that parish or not. It was done because the county of Bagot has a population of 21,695, and the county of Rouville has only a population of 16,000. Putting the parish of St. Pie in the county of Rouville simply equalized the population. My right hon. friend spoke of the counties of Nicolet and Yamaska. Hon. members may remember that a road called the South Shore Railway crosses those two counties. By-elections have taken place in those two counties, and great promises of subsidies have been made to the people. But if rumour is true, these two counties have manifested in many different ways their disapproval of the policy of the Government in the case of the Drummond County Railway, for instance, because it would deprive them of the subsidies which they should have had. Of course I cannot speak from knowledge, but it seems to me that the object of the Bill is to enable the Government to carry these two counties. I have every reason to believe that the additions that are to be made to Yamaska and Nicolet must be some two or three good Grit parishes of the county of Drummond and Arthabaska.

The PRIME MINISTER. There will be a difference of only about 30 in Nicolet.

Mr. BERGERON. Of course I only say at present that this seems to be the object of the Bill. Now, my right hon. friend has said for the hundredth time that this Government is powerful and has the confidence of the country because they have always carried the by-elections. Well, that contention has been answered time and again in this House. We all know by what means they have been carried. The right hon. gentleman said: If the by-elections have been carried by corruption, why do you not appeal to a court of justice? Mr. Speaker, we are rendering a service to the country by not doing so. In all these by-elections, where does the money come from which is used as a corruption fund? It comes out of the pockets of the people? So the fewer by-elections there are in the country the less money will be spent in corruption, and the less money will come out of the public treasury. The fewer counties that are opened the better it is for the country. It is not because the country has confidence in him that he carries by-elections, but because he has recourse to means which he cannot have recourse to in a general election; and I imagine that this redistribution is made with that end in view.

Mr. GEORGE TAYLOR (South Leeds). I am not at all surprised that the Prime Minister made it convenient for the Postmaster General to be absent to-day so that he might have the pleasure of introducing, with his sunny smile and pleasant voice, this Bill now before the House, thinking that the impression would go to the country on Friday night that it was a fair redistribution, and was going to be made by the judges of the land. That was the impression he tried to convey, and he thought his speech, made on the introduction of the Bill, would be the only speech made. But the hon. leader of the Opposition read between the lines, and he provoked a discussion which has taken nearly all the sunny smile away from the right hon. gentleman, and has shown him up in his true colours. Sir, this thing was foreshadowed on the 3rd of May. The wicked partner of the Prime Minister gave away a Cabinet secret. Speaking on the 3rd of May, of the Conservative party, he said:

They cannot down me. I feel that I am ten times stronger now than I was before.

If he is ten times stronger than he was before, it is because he has ten times, a hundred times, more money behind him than he had before.

I cannot understand why my Conservative friends have treated me as they have done. I parted from them in a very open way. I sent to my late lamented chief, Sir John Macdonald, and said: "Here are the facts and the papers, and if you do not move I will be obliged to move." Still, vituperation will not lead them to the goal. There is no mistake in that. I have no hesitation in saying that, knowing Ontario as I do, when the gerrymander is undone—and we will undo it—when the gerrymander is undone we are going to take the life out of them in Ontario, as we have done in Quebec.

There is the whole thing in a nutshell. The hon. Minister of Public Works says they are going to take the life out of the Conservative party in Ontario by this gerrymander Bill. The Bill carries out the words of the dictator of the Government. But the Prime Minister, with his sunny smile and his eloquent words, tried to have the report go to the country that it was a fair measure, that the judges of the country were going to make the redistribution. But the judges are not to have anything to do with it. The Conservatives are hived by the Bill, and then they set the judges at work. There is the county of Brant, you are dividing that. That county has hitherto sent three members, and they wipe out two Conservative members. The Government define the limits of the counties, and then they say to the judges: You will say who the voters shall be within the limits of the line that we draw. Talk about this being a fair Bill, and talk about the Bill that the Conservative party made as unfair. The Conservatives were obliged to make a Bill, giving representation by population after the census. Why, this is a ten times worse gerrymander than ever that Bill was. It is unconstitutional, and every act of this Government since they came into power, has tended in the same direction. They want to tear up the constitution of this country piece by piece. I say the Opposition in this House would not be discharging their duty if they did not discuss this Bill month after month until the snow flies, before they allow this Government to pass it. I will be one of 20 members on this side of the House to stay till Christmas Day before I will allow the Prime Minister and his followers to tear up the constitution of this country as has been foreshadowed by the wicked partner, the Minister of Public Works, who has threatened to take the life out of the Conservatives of this country.

Mr. W. MCGREGOR (North Essex). The hon. member for Toronto says that Toronto will be partially represented. In looking over this House to-day we find Mr. Ross Robertson, Mr. Osler, Mr. Bertram, Mr. Clarke, Mr. Maclean, Mr. Campbell, Mr. Edgar, Mr. Wallace and Mr. McCarthy from the city of Toronto. Do you want any more representation than that? If there is any question comes up in reference to the city of Toronto, its interests will be properly taken care of in this House.

Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. SPROULE. I was going to ask the hon. gentleman if that applies to Mr. Wallace, who lives sixteen miles away from Toronto?

Mr. MCGREGOR. A portion of Mr. Wallace's constituency is in Toronto.

Mr. SPROULE. It will not be after this.

Mr. MCGREGOR. After this we will have other representatives in this House instead of the hon. member for York, and they will be more near the city of Toronto. In Hamilton we have Mr. Wood, Mr. MacPherson and Dr. Montague. The cities have proper representation. How much does Toronto want? Do they want the whole earth and the fullness thereof?

Mr. BERGERON. They want the Canada Life.

Mr. MCGREGOR. Is Parliament to hold to the principle that is now in force? The present Opposition were elected by a gerrymander by which the constituencies were hived. Is that to continue for ages? No, Sir; we are prepared to deal justly with the Opposition, but we want them to remember that it is fair-play we want and nothing more.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, I certainly have to return thanks to the Government for introducing into this House the Bill they have to-day, inasmuch as I have been relieved of about 150 of an adverse Liberal majority.

Mr. GIBSON. You ought to be satisfied.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They will take it back now.

Mr. BENNETT. They did even worse than that; they did what I have been promised for months past. When the question was first introduced in this House the Prime Minister made so many protestations of innocence that I rather felt uneasy, and when he called on high heaven to witness that we were to have no loaded dice in this game I grew deeply suspicious. I do not think heaven should be invoked to bless this Bill, but I think that all honest and fair-minded men will rather shudder at it. What is it proposed to do? It is proposed to tell the judges: there is certain material upon which you can work, and the judges—poor souls—will be unable to help themselves. For instance, in the riding of Durham they will find 32,400 people, and when they get to Brant they will find 33,200 people. The Government will tell them that it is desired to give two members to each of these counties, and the judges will be under the necessity of carving up these counties in a manner so that each shall have two members. Then you come to Simcoe, which had a population in 1891 of nearly 83,000, and which, I am bound to say, since the census was taken, has increased very considerably. The judges are told that they can only have three members for that county or an average of about, on the basis of the last census, 29,000 in each riding. But the beauty of the whole scheme, as it will work out in the country, will be seen when these judges come to perform their duties. The Prime Minister failed to inform the House how these judges are going to divide the population in that manner that the Bill contemplates. We were told in my riding months ago what was going to be done in this matter. The political wire-pullers announced months ago what was to be done there. There is a township in my riding, the north end of which gives an adverse majority of 200, and the south end of which gives me a favourable majority of 150. I am to be deprived of the Conservative part, but I am to be left with the Liberal part. If that is the principle of this Bill, and this Bill has been framed for nothing except the party advantage, how in the name of all that is fair can the right hon. Prime Minister stand up and justify it and say that Brant, with 33,000 people shall have two members, while Simcoe, with 83,000, shall only have three members? He said that cities should not have as large representation as the rural districts. He must know that Brantford contains nearly half of the population of Brant, and the whole fact of the matter is that they have sitting behind them an hon. gentleman who sometimes turns his guns upon the Government, I refer to the hon. member for North Wentworth and Brant (Mr. Somerville); they are afraid to wipe him out. They are going to let him have a riding with 16,000 people in it, and the hon. Minister of Customs, being afraid to go back to North Grey, is going to seek to hold South Brant, with 16,000 of a population. Yet the Prime Minister says it is a fair Bill, and a few months ago he called high heaven to witness that it would be fair, and that it would be found that we were not going to play with loaded dice. What are they going to do all over the province of Ontario? They are going to call the judges into disrepute. I can tell the representative of the Justice Department, who is sitting here to-day, and the whole Government, as a matter of fact, that a little while ago, in Toronto, an alderman rose up in his place and charged that a certain judge, who had been called in to conduct an investigation, had, when he came to the crucial point, that certain parties were being implicated, stopped the investigation. He further charged that that judge's two relatives were to-day in the employ and held splendid positions under the party in power. I have a respect for the judges of this country, but I say that judges are only human, as we all saw in this House last session, when we saw Justice Lister standing up, using violent language in the Railway Committee, and sitting there in his place on the last day of the session, and throwing across the floor of the House a denial of the statement that he was to be appointed to a position on the bench, when, before the House was a few days older, that gentleman had ascended to the wool-sack. I hope that Judge Lister has forgotten his political predilections, but I can tell hon. gentlemen that this Mr. Lister, who sat there declaring that he had not a promise of a judgeship in his pocket, and the judge who went on the bench at once was one and the same man.

Mr. FRASER (Lambton). I am sure the hon. gentleman does not wish to do any injustice to Judge Lister. I was present on that occasion, and I am quite confident that Mr. Lister made no such statement as the hon. gentleman now attributes to him.

Mr. BENNETT. I have not the "Hansard" in my hand, but I will tell any hon. gentleman that if he will refer to it he will see that my remarks are borne out.

Mr. MCGREGOR. How about Mr. Justice Meredith?

Mr. BENNETT. Justice Meredith will not be on the commission.

Mr. MCGREGOR. I would be quite willing that he should be.

Mr. BERGERON. Justice Meredith did not have a seat in this House; he had no whitewashing to do before going away.

Mr. BENNETT. My recollection is that the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), stated that the chairman of the Drummond County Committee would not be here next session to discuss the matter, and that then the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) stood up and said, "You have no authority for saying that I am going on the bench." This was a point-blank denial of the statement, in effect. What more was seen in this House? We saw that the then hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Lount) was named for a position on the bench; and we saw that it was necessary for the right hon. Prime Minister to write a letter to Toronto to say that he had not promised that gentleman a position. All I can tell the right hon. gentleman is that Mr. Lount's friends do not accept that statement that he had not a promise. Mr. Lount's best friends will tell you that he has been most shamefully treated, and that the promise which was made to him had not been carried out, although if he had had taken the precaution of the then hon. member for Quebec Centre (Mr. Langelier) to secure a promise in writing, he would have had his position long ago.

Mr. MCGREGOR. What about Judge Masson in your own district?

Mr. BENNETT. I have noticed that only two members from Ontario who have risen to say a word on this matter were the hon. member for North Essex (Mr. McGregor) and the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), both of whom have been named for positions.

Mr. BERGERON. Inspector of tobacco.

Mr. BENNETT. The hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) and the hon. member for Wentworth (Mr. Bain), who are rather a heavier class of politicians, may perhaps be able to explain to us upon what principle it shall be right to say that there shall be in the constituency of Simcoe, nearly 30,000 people, while the hon. Minister of Customs gets off with a paltry 16,600. What is to be done? Why, the judges have no choice. If the Government wished to be fair, why should they not turn over the whole province to the judges and say: You divide it as you think is fair. But, Sir, that proposition will meet with a refusal from the Government, because it would not carry out their designs. The county of Lennox with a population of less than 15,000 is not to be interfered with. The county of Prince Edward with less than 19,000 (and I give the figures according to the last census in all these cases) is to have a representative. The county of Frontenac with 16,600 is to have a representative. The county of Haldimand with 18,200 is to have a representative, and the county of Leeds with 20,000 is to have a representative. Now, the county of Kent with 64,000 population is to have three members, giving them a unit of 21,000, and if you cross the concession line into Simcoe, there the Government think it necessary to have a unit of 29,000. Simcoe could have been fairly divided into four constituencies, while each would have given considerably over the average rate of population in the province of Ontario, but the Government saw it would be to their discomfiture to do that, and so they perpetrated this injustice. I have seen the gentlemen from the county of Simcoe here, who were steering the Bill for that county as friends of the Government, and I expected what might follow their presence in Ottawa. I know it is not any good-will of the Government towards me that induced them to relieve me of an adverse majority of 150, but I know they have sized up the whole situation, and I know that the county of Simcoe could have been given four members with an average of about 20,000 in each riding, and that the Government could not possibly carry one of these ridings. Now they tell the judges: Take the county of Simcoe, and you find it with about twenty-five thousand odd for each riding, and divide it up as you may see fit. It is to be regretted that the Government should ask the intervention of the judges in such a matter. Better by far that they should stand or fall by the measure, than they should have dragged the judges down to help them out in their schemes. Sir, I would be surprised if any judge in the province of Ontario, having regard for his high position, would demean himself to have anything to do with this.

Mr. BENNETT.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. BENNETT. On the basis that the Premier now proposes. The Premier says "hear, hear," but I may give him reasons to change his mind on that point. If the judges were asked to take the province of Ontario as it stands, and make an arrangement of that province, something fair might be expected from them, but the Government is not asking that. They say: We are dividing the ridings for you, and then you are to divide them afterwards according to the principle we assign. I understood the Premier to say, in reply to the hon. member for Haldimand (Mr. Montague), that there were to be general instructions to these judges, and I now ask the Prime Minister if these instructions are to be in writing, and if he will lay them before the House?

The PRIME MINISTER. All these instructions are in the Bill.

An hon. MEMBER. Verbal instructions.

Mr. BENNETT. I cannot say as to verbal instructions, but I know the Prime Minister did not deny that there might be, as a ruling principle in the Bill, the splitting up of individual municipalities. I have been told that this is proposed in my own riding, and that a township is to be divided in half, the Liberal half to be left with me, and the Conservative half to be taken from me. If that be the case, it is patent on the face of it, that this is the most palpable gerrymander Bill that could possibly be devised. Wherever a constituency has been interfered with, it has been done for nothing but party gains. For instance, Kent, Ont., with a population of 58,000 would have exactly the same unit of population with two members as Simcoe County would have, namely, 29,000 for each member, but they give Kent County three members. There is nothing to be gained by that except a party advantage, for every one in Ontario knows that Kent is a Liberal county, and that it is represented in the local legislature by two Liberal members. The Government say that in Simcoe the unit of population shall be 29,000, but that in Kent it shall be 19,000, and so they give an extra Liberal member to Kent. The Government holds three ridings of Huron to-day, and they hold the ridings in Wellington County, and why should they change them? In all these counties with a single member, the unit of population is much lower than it is in the county of Simcoe. Let it be understood that this Bill entirely wipes out representation by population in the province of Ontario. It is a Bill simply made for the purpose of gaining party advantage by the Government, and finally let us understand that the whole thing is a piece of hypocrisy to be shrouded around by the supposed intervention of the judges, whoever they may be. I can tell the House that in the province of Ontario to-day, the judges are regarded as mortal men, and the judges who will undertake to make a re-arrangement under this Bill, with the material placed before them, must be very mortal.

An hon. MEMBER. Immortal.

Mr. BENNETT. I will not say immortal, but I will say that in deference to the public opinion of the province of Ontario, they will soon have to be superannuated, and if they are superannuated, it will give an opportunity to a number of gentlemen opposite and their friends who are on the look-out for judgeships in the province of Ontario. So far as I myself am concerned, I gain a personal advantage under this Bill. But, Sir, notwithstanding that, I feel that it is the duty of every man inside and outside of this House to see that justice is done in such a matter as this, and with that view I am going to oppose this Bill. It gives me an advantage, but there is not the slightest doubt, that it works injustice to many of my hon. friends. It is an engine for the destruction of the Conservative party, and I would be untrue to the teachings and principles of that party if I failed in my opposition to such a measure as this. If this proposal of the Government means simply a trial of strength in remaining here until the snow flies, I for one shall do that, notwithstanding that it will incommode me as much as it will incommode hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. MCGREGOR. We will stay with you.

Mr. BENNETT. Very well. I heard an intimation from a gentleman on the other side of the House to-day as to a proposition for an increased indemnity if this session would hold out long enough, so that I suppose some hon. gentlemen opposite expect to stay. That is my answer to the remark of the hon. gentleman (Mr. McGregor). However, I suppose the Bill will go on, but like the Drummond County deal and the Yukon deal it will have to go before that great court of review, the Senate of Canada. And, if the Senate of Canada does what it thinks is right, I believe it will have the endorsement of the people of Canada, as it had in the case of the Drummond County deal and as it had in the case of the Yukon deal. But, as was said by an hon. gentleman this afternoon, it would be better by far, for the Government to withdraw this Bill, and substitute for it a Bill handing over to a commission of judges the whole work of arranging the constituencies, not only for the province of Ontario, but for the other provinces as well. Such a measure would redound much more to the credit of the Government than the iniquitous measure which is now before the House.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). Mr. Speaker, it is a pity that these hon. gentlemen had not entertained the ideas they are now expressing, any time during the preceding thirty years. During that period we have had, not one or two, but half a dozen different Bills introduced by them for the purpose of redistributing the constituencies, and in not one of them has there been the slightest pretense of giving a semblance of fair-play to their opponents. We are not imitating these hon. gentlemen by undertaking to gerrymander the constituencies. We are not obliterating county boundaries for our own advantage. We are simply and solely engaged in the endeavour to undo a wrong—a gross and grievous wrong—perpetrated by their own supporters fourteen or fifteen years ago. If these gentlemen had the faintest ground for saying, that they had at any time paid the slightest regard to the principle of representation by population, there would have been some force in the remarks they have made to-day. I have sat in this House for thirty-three odd years; I have sat here before the present Parliament existed; and never, in any case, have I known the late leader of the Conservative party fail to lay down as a principle, that, while, as between the provinces, it was right that the principle of representation by population should prevail, yet, as regarded the different constituencies of which each province was composed, he was not prepared, on any one occasion, to introduce that principle. Look at what he did in 1882.

Mr. WALLACE. Would the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce permit me to ask him, if he can quote such a declaration as that by Sir John Macdonald?

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. My hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) did quote a declaration to that effect, and I quote what is a great deal better than a declaration; I quote his acts. I quote what he did in 1872, and what he did in 1882. I will believe that in 1882 Sir John Macdonald—who, with all his faults, had some relics of statesmanship about him, which, I regret to say, are most grievously absent in the present leader of the Opposition—was, I believe, dragged and dragooned into a measure which, at heart, he objected to, and would not have proposed, if he had been a free agent at that particular time. But what I point out is, that in 1882, if the so-called principle of representation by population had been attended to, the entire representation from Toronto eastward would have had to be torn up by the roots? Why was it not done? Because that part of the country was a Conservative stronghold at that time; because it would not have suited the then Conservative party to interfere with the unequal representation by population which undoubtedly did exist in 1882 east of Toronto, and which, to a certain extent, exists to-day, but which we do not disturb, because, as my right hon. friend has stated, we do not wish to interfere with more than the glaring instances which have been forced upon our attention. The purpose of the measure of 1882 was perfectly plain to everybody at the time. That purpose, Sir John Macdonald declared time and again, was to hive the Grits, as he did hive them in half a dozen constituencies by the gerrymander of South Oxford, North Oxford, the Brants and the Elgins. Why was it, except for this very reason, that he placed within the limits of some half dozen ridings an electoral vote large enough to have carried sixteen constituencies, if he had left them alone, or allowed them to be properly distributed? If ever there was a case in which a Government was acting directly on the mandate of the people, the present is such a case. On every hustings of Ontario, and, I believe, generally throughout the Dominion, we invariably declared to the public that, if returned to power, we would repeal the gerrymander of 1882; and that is exactly what my right hon. friend is doing to-day, only he is doing it in an infinitely more upright manner than that in which the gerrymander was perpetrated. We have returned to the county boundaries, as we declared we would do. We have abolished the iniquitous Franchise Act, as every man knows we declared we would do. It was the policy announced in the platform of the Liberal party. We have also the mandate of the people for repealing the gerrymander of 1882. There was one objection raised by one or two hon. gentlemen which my right hon. friend has answered, but to which I may repeat the answer, with respect to the representation by population. Every man who has paid any attention to the manner in which the representation of England is divided, knows that in that country, where the divisions to some extent resemble ours, it has always been laid down, for obvious reasons, that to the great masses of population it is not wise or expedient to give as many representatives as are usually assigned to rural constituencies. That principle was admitted and acted upon in 1872, in 1882 and in 1892 by these hon. gentlemen. Unless they have new light, why is it that they are now so anxious to see the urban communities here represented according to the full measure of their population? If in a few years hence it is discovered that these urban populations have increased very largely, then, when we are not redistributing the constituencies, but reappointing the representation between the various provinces, it would be right to consider that matter, and we would be prepared to consider it. But to-day, when our sole object is to undo a greivous wrong which was done in 1882, what reason can be assigned why we should give Toronto more representation than it has to-day? Toronto, as my hon. friend has said, is very amply represented, and it will have full weight in the counsels of the nation, as it deserves to have, whether it is

Mr RICHARD CARTWRIGHT.

Conservative or Liberal. Hon. gentlemen opposite talk of their desire in 1882 to attend to the representation of the counties. I had occasion to contest a constituency in a county adjoining Cardwell at that time, and what was the facts? Before 1882 Cardwell had 16,000 people, and after 1882 it had the same number. Adjoining Cardwell lay the riding of North Wellington, and which had exactly the number which the unit of population required. How did these hon. gentlemen mend this state of things? They added 3,000 souls to North Wellington, and left Cardwell as it was. What did they do with regard to the riding which I now represent? They took away from it two townships, and added them to a county on the west, and they added to my riding two townships which had no earthly connection with it, for the purpose of embarrassing my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson). These are samples of what was going on everywhere. Everywhere they did all the injury they possibly could to county boundaries. What does my hon. friend propose to do? He lays down the principle, that county boundaries are to be respected; and, within these county boundaries, he proposes to strip himself of all power, and to give to the judiciary of Canada, men in whom every man of either party has the utmost confidence, the power to distribute the representation as fairly as they can. We have no power to interfere. If we did attempt to interfere, the judges of Ontario, as hon. gentlemen know right well, would refuse to be interfered with. They will do their duty and make a fair and honourable division, and I must say, if anything could astonish me, on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite, it is the manner in which this proposition, the fairest, with respect to the divisions of counties, that has ever been laid before a Canadian Parliament, has been received this day.

Mr. CLARKE. A remark was made by my hon. friend from East Simcoe respecting the conduct of an inquiry by one of the judges in the city of Toronto, and I would not like to let the opportunity escape me of saying that, so far as that judge is concerned, there is no more honourable, upright man on the bench of Ontario.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Though honourable and upright, he is not above the insults of the hon. member for Simcoe.

Mr. CLARKE. The hon. member for East Simcoe did not insult the judge, so far as I can recollect his remarks; but lest the impression should go abroad that any threat that might have been made against that honourable judge prevented him from doing his full duty, I rise to emphatically protest against any such impression.

An hon. MEMBER. Who is it?

Mr. CLARKE. I refer to Judge McDougall.

Mr. BENNETT. I only repeated what appeared in all the city newspapers of Toronto—the charge made by Ald. Gowanlock, a leading Liberal of the city of Toronto.

The PRIME MINISTER. I hope this will be a lesson which more than one member will profit by, that it is high time we should not take newspaper gossip as a ground for accusing honourable men.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

LA BANQUE DU PEUPLE.

Mr. PREFONTAINE moved third reading of Bill (No. 6) respecting La Banque du Peuple.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I promised the other day my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden) to give an answer to the question he raised as to the costs which may be in suits against the bank. The Bill makes no provision for the payment of costs. I caused an inquiry to be made, and received a statement from the counsel, that in all the suits which have been instituted so far, and on which judgments were rendered or were still pending, the costs had been paid.

Mr. BERGERON. Paid by the bank?

The PRIME MINISTER. It is not stated in the letter, but there are no costs due at this moment, except for an action taken a few days ago for the amount of $120, and which has not yet been returned to the court, but Mr. Archer, the solicitor, says he will see that these costs are paid. This is the letter I have received:

Dear Sir,—As requested by you yesterday, I send you a certified list of the different suits which were entered against La Banque du Peuple since it had closed its doors.

By 60-61 Vic., chap. 75, sec. 3, an extension of two years was granted to the bank to reimburse its creditors and depositors; the recourse of the latter against the directors personally was to be suspended for the lapse of time. Therefore, from the 29th of June, 1897, date of the sanction of the Act granting this extension, no suits were taken against the bank.

In the statement inclosed you will find the different amounts paid to the attorneys representing the plaintiffs in the different cases mentioned. All these costs have been paid.

Since the 1st of May one action has been taken against the bank to recover the sum of $120; this action has not been returned into court. Should it be returned we will see that the costs are paid.

I also send you the original letter which I just received from Mr. Victor Geoffrion, one of the attorneys of the bank.

By section 4 of 60-61 Vic., chap. 75, you will see that the extension of two years given did not apply to the costs, so our costs had to be paid.

Hoping that the above informations will prove satisfactory,

I have the honour to be, sir,

Your devoted servant,

CHS. ARCHER.

Another question was raised as to the jurisdiction of this House, and I promised to obtain the opinion of the Minister of Justice. I have his opinion, and he gave it without hesitation. He referred me to the Cartwright cases on the British North America Act, and the judgment of the Supreme Court in the case of Quirt vs. The Queen.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is that the case the Solicitor General mentioned?

The PRIME MINISTER. One of them:

The power to legislate generally on the subject of bankruptcy and insolvency conferred on the Dominion Parliament includes the right to legislate specially for particular cases arising in connection with bankruptcy proceedings.

This is a case exactly in point.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). It may be, of course, that the case referred to covers every thing in this Bill, and I do not pretend to have investigated the question at all. I only gathered some idea during the discussion that took place the other evening. I thought then that, speaking generally, the ground taken by the right hon. gentleman was probably a good one, and that possibly the jurisdiction of this House might also be sustained upon the ground taken by the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Monk). It is quite clear that this House has, as incident to its power to legislate in many matters, the power to deal with civil rights. In the Criminal Code we have provisions that actions shall not be brought except after certain notice, and that action shall not lie in certain cases for acts done by police officers and constables, and so with regard to the expropriation of land and the provisions of the Banking Act, which provide in what way security should be taken. But there was one matter which occurred to me—I do not know whether there is anything in it—that after a right against this bank has been merged into a judgment, whether or not it is such a matter of civil right as might possibly not be governed by the case to which the right hon. gentleman has referred. To make my meaning a little clearer, I would illustrate—it is quite clear, of course, with respect to banks, for instance, that this Parliament can say that a bank must take its security in a particular way, and if it does not take its security from a customer in a particular way, that security shall be invalid. But now suppose, within the scope of legislation of that kind, a customer had obtained a judgment against a bank or a bank against a customer. Suppose that judgment had been obtained properly within the legislation which has been passed by this Parliament of Canada, that is, there is no legislation of this Parliament that interferes with it, would it be competent, in such a case, for this Parliament to come in and, by an Act, release that judgment or deal with the rights of the parties to it, simply for the reason that the matter with respect to which the judgment had been obtained would have been subject to the legislative power of this Parliament as a matter relating to banks. I do not know that I have made myself very clear, but this is the only matter I had any doubt about, and, on this ground, I still have some doubt as to the right of Parliament to legislate. It may be, however, that it is covered by the case to which the hon. gentleman refers.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I think there is an answer to the suggestions that the hon. gentleman has made, and it is to be found here: There might be doubts as to whether Parliament could properly deal with a single individual case of a judgment creditor, setting that judgment aside especially, under its general legislative authority to deal with matters of insolvency. But that does not appear to me to be a case arising under the present Bill. This Bill purports to deal with all the creditors of this bank—

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). With a class of creditors.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. With all the creditors, and it proposes that their claims shall be extinguished upon the distribution of the estate as it now exists or upon the payment to these creditors of a certain sum declared by Parliament to be the proceeds which the estate realized. It does not distinguish in favour of one creditor and against another, but it disposes of all creditors. This, I think, discriminates the present case from the supposititious case which my hon. friend suggested. But there is another principle which has not been invoked in the discussion and which would apply here, and it is this—Parliament does not always nor does it in the majority of cases, refuse to exercise its jurisdiction because a doubt exists. There are numbers of instances in which it is deemed prudent for Parliament to claim and to exercise the right to legislate and leave it to be determined later whether that legislation was within its legislative competency or not. And more especially is that the rule applied where it is in doubt. If it were abundantly clear that we had no such jurisdiction, that then there would be, no doubt, a consensus of opinion on all sides that legislation should not be passed. But where, to put the strongest view, there is only a doubt of our power, and where it is as clear in the opinion of many that we have that power as it is in the opinion of others that we have not, Parliament would not be justified in refusing to pass legislation merely on the ground that there might be a doubt. That is a principle very properly to be applied in this case. There is another consideration which arises here. I attended the meetings of that committee. The subject matter of this Bill was very fully discussed. It was opposed with a great deal of force and vigour, and the subject of existing claims and even judgments was mentioned. It was claimed by gentlemen who discussed it that suits had been brought and judgments had been recovered, and it was unfair to include them in the general classification and extinguish them by this Bill. But it was not suggested by anybody, even by the lawyers, one of whom, if I am correctly informed, was solicitor in connection with one or more of the suits pending, that there ought to be an exception as to costs. That was not put forward until the Bill was brought up in the House. As the Bill was thoroughly discussed in a very large committee attended by a large proportion of the members, it would not seem to me to be wise for us to refuse the adoption of the Bill, now that it has come before us in this shape with the recommendation of the committee.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am inclined to think that, while there is a very nice question involved here, under all the circumstances of the case and in view of the opinion of the Minister of Justice, there is no reason why the passage of the third reading should be prevented on the question that has been raised. I might point out that a reasoned opinion from the Minister of Justice, if such had been possible, would have been very interesting, for this case of Quirk and the Queen might be distinguished from the one under consideration because there was a different procedure, and the point decided was not altogether the one raised by my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden). The point there was the general power in connection with the winding-up of companies, and in regard to bankruptcy and insolvency, did not prevent this Parliament dealing with special cases, and that therefore this Act that had been passed in 1867, which was a complete winding-up Act for a particular bank, could not be successfully assailed. Hon. gentlemen will see that while going some distance and covering some of the points raised the other night, it does not altogether meet the case here. This is not a Bill to wind up this bank or to deal with all the powers of this bank or any particular bank; but it is a special Act relating to a civil contract, and the point of this case is brought out by Judge Strong, page 471, where he bases the whole reason for his judgment on the point I mentioned—that the general power gave practically the special power. But they were dealing with a complete winding-up Act in regard to a particular bank.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the third time and passed.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 51) to incorporate the Canadian Inland Transportation Company.—(Mr. Bertram.)

Bill (No. 54) respecting the Eastern Trust Company.—(Mr. Borden, Halifax.)

Bill (No. 95) respecting the Lindsay, Haliburton and Mattawa Railway Company.—(Mr. Hughes.)

Bill (No. 83) respecting the Northern Pacific and Manitoba Railway Company.—(Mr. Rutherford.)

Bill (No. 96) respecting the Buffalo and Fort Erie Bridge Company.—(Mr. McCleary.)

Bill (No. 78) respecting the Hamilton Powder Company.—(Mr. Penny, by Mr. Wood.)

RELIEF OF DAVID STOCK.

Mr. McCARTHY (by Mr. Stubbs) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 88) for the relief of David Stock.

Motion agreed to.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. CHARLTON. This is a Bill, I presume, which provides for the sundering of the marriage tie between two parties. The House is called upon in this matter to act in a judicial capacity. I wonder how many members know anything about the merits of this case, or how many members are in the habit of troubling themselves about the merits of any of these divorce cases that are referred to us. There are, of course, a portion of the members of this House who act in all these cases with perfect consistency, and in accordance with a fixed principle, who refuse to grant divorces and vote against them because of a religious belief that it is not the proper thing to do. There are other members of the House who believe that divorce may be granted for proper cause. I suppose our laws define what is a proper cause for the sundering of the marriage ties. But it strikes me, Mr. Chairman, that there is an incongruity in the treatment of these cases in calling upon this House to decide upon matters of so grave a consequence, in the perfunctory manner in which we discharge our duty. I, for one, know nothing about the merits of this case. I believe that divorce is proper for one cause, and for one cause only. I believe that the existence of that cause should be clearly proven, that it should be proven to the satisfaction of the judges. As a member of this House I am placed in the position of a judge in this matter, and I know nothing about it; I am in no position to act upon this case intelligently.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Have you read the evidence?

Mr. CHARLTON. I have not read the evidence. It may be said that I should have done so, but I venture to think there is not one member in this House who has done so, or who reads the evidence in these cases. Now, Sir, the granting of a divorce is a judicial act. If it is proper at all, if relief of that kind should be granted under any circumstances, the aggrieved parties should have an opportunity to secure that relief at a reasonable expense, and in a way that involves less trouble than is involved in the course that they are obliged to pursue under the practice that now prevails. If it is proper to grant a divorce, I hold that these matters should be dealt with judicially, that there should be a divorce court, that before a divorce court established for taking cognizance of this kind of cases, these cases should be tried, that it should be proven to the satisfaction of the court that circumstances exist which under the law are held sufficient to warrant the granting of a divorce, and that such divorce should be granted by a properly constituted divorce court, after examination of the case, after hearing the evidence, and after arriving at a decision in a proper judicial manner.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. This is a very clear case.

Mr. CHARLTON. This may be a clear case, there may be many clear cases. But I do not believe that the way of granting divorces by this Parliament is consonant with the proper principles of administering justice, because if divorce is to be granted, it must be granted for cause, and that cause must be defined by law. The granting of a divorce for a cause defined by law is essentially a judicial act, and should be performed by a duly constituted court. So I raise my voice and protest now, as I have on other occasions, against the method of granting divorces which applies in Canada. I do not propose to oppose the granting of this petition, for I do not know anything about the circumstances, but I assume that they have been examined in the other House, and that the testimony is considered sufficient. But I protest, nevertheless, that in every case where I am called upon to act in a matter of this kind, I am acting in the dark, I am acting against my conscientious scruples, I am acting under the belief that I am obliged to act in a way which I ought not to be called upon to act, and that I am performing this judicial act in the capacity of a judge without having been duly seized of the circumstances, and without having been placed in a position to understand them thoroughly.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I may say to the hon. gentleman that the question to which he invites the consideration of the House is a most important one, but I doubt very much whether this is the exact time and place to discuss it. I would think, perhaps, the hon. gentleman might take another opportunity of inviting the attention of the House to the whole subject, and, perhaps, they might come to a conclusion adverse to the existing system. But I may say that in this case the Bill came before the Miscellaneous Private Bills Committee, who read the evidence carefully, and there is not a shadow of doubt that the relief should be granted.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The case was in the courts.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The case was in the courts. The woman consorted with another man and committed bigamy and married him, and was prosecuted before the stipendiary magistrate of Toronto. The man with whom she went through the form of marriage was also prosecuted; they were both convicted and sentenced to imprisonment. They are living together now as man and wife. The facts are clear, and are beyond the peradventure of a doubt.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. They received a very mild punishment, though.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I believe it is true that we have the anomaly of the existence of a divorce court in some of the provinces, yet we deal here in the House of Commons and the Senate with divorce cases from other provinces. Would it not be well to have a uniform practice in that regard?

Mr. HENDERSON. In case it might go abroad from the statement made by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) that hon. members are so neglectful of their duties as not to read evidence in a matter of this kind, I think that a contradiction should be given to this statement. For my part I may say that I read the evidence from beginning to end, and I doubt very much if there are many members in this House who did not read it. It is generally one of those pieces of literature that men indulge in, whether from a right motive or not I do not know. It is to enable us to give a proper judgment in cases of this kind. I have no hesitation whatever in saying that this is one of the cases where the Bill should pass.

Bill reported, read a third time and passed.

REPRESENTATION OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The House resumed discussion on motion for leave to introduce Bill (No. 123).

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I quite agree with the right hon. gentleman who referred to the judges, and expressed the hope that attacks on the character of the judiciary would not be rashly made in this House. But in administering, apparently, a rebuke to one particular member of Parliament, the right hon. gentleman seemed to have overlooked the attack which, last session, I and some others had occasion to resent, which was not only made by one of the hon. gentlemen behind him, but embodied in the action of the Government itself, whereby they practically withdrew their confidence from certain judges in the province of Quebec, and asked for legislation to prevent these judges from taking too much out of the treasury by way of travelling expenses and so on. There was a very interesting discussion on that occasion with regard to the judges. I think the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) will recollect my successfully having him called to order by the Chair. While the right hon. First Minister was quick to rebuke a gentleman who, he supposed, on this side had attacked a judge in this debate, I call attention to his omission, on that occasion, which is the more remarkable because of his action to-day.

That suggests one of the dangers that appears in the Bill before the House. The right hon. gentleman may know of some legislation by which the judges are brought so directly into the political arena as this proposal will bring them. No doubt, however, he had in his mind the use which is made of judges in England in connection with some legislation of this character. However, a very slight examination will show that this is not in any way a like proposal as that adopted by the British Parliament in utilizing the services of judges with regard to the fixing of the seats or the boundaries for seats for the House of Commons of England. The right hon. gentleman will see that when a purely party measure requires the co-operation of the judges and in which party feeling is naturally aroused, it will be impossible to prevent, as much as has hitherto been possible, attacks upon the judges and suspicions and reflections being cast upon them. This is not a case in which, so far as I have been able to gather from explanations of the right hon. gentleman, the duties of the judges will be judicial. Their duties will be ministerial rather, under the instructions contained in this Bill, and if politicians or candidates in different ridings consider that the judges have determined the lines too much in favour of a Grit section here or a Conservative section there, there will naturally be aroused the very bitterest feeling possible, and one dangerous in connection with the position which the judiciary occupy. I have no doubt that if the Government were looking at all for a precedent where the judges were connected with legislation of this kind, they had in mind some such legislation as obtained in England; but the difference in that case is this, that the judges did not come into this class of legislation at all, nor were they connected with anything so intimately involved with political considerations until the question of the distribution of seats in England became an entirely and absolutely non-political one, by concert between the leaders of the two great parties and the change in feeling with regard to this work due to years of experience and education in that country. It was not, therefore, until all the political aspects had been removed out of legislation of this kind that the services of the judges were invoked.

I think it was in 1884, when Mr. Gladstone and Lord Salisbury removed from the political arena the question of the arrangement of the different counties and boroughs for representation in Parliament, and true to Liberal traditions in that country and in fact to the traditions of both parties in 1884—as I supposed was the feeling in this country until the hon. gentleman made his introductory speech to-day—the principle of representation by population, a Bill was introduced in 1884. Then the scheme was submitted to Lord Salisbury, and after consultation and co-operation by means of committees, at any rate, by these two gentlemen coming together with their help, the original scheme was considerably changed and revised. I notice, for instance, six agricultural boroughs of the Liberal scheme, as proposed, became, under the Gladstone-Salisbury scheme, nineteen boroughs, and various other divisions took place. Macclesfield and Standish, two, became eight, according to the statement in the annual record. Quite a change, at any rate, took place in the Liberal scheme, when it was put on a broader basis, as a matter that should be removed wholly from political considerations, so that Mr. Gladstone, on that occasion, was able to speak to the House with an entire absence of political motives and without harking back to some supposed principle that had been abandoned by his opponents years before; and in explaining his Bill was able to refer to this principle of representation by population—the principal question for which the Liberal party, to which the right hon. gentleman is supposed to belong, fought so strenuously for in this country, bringing at one time the country almost to the verge of open riot. Mr. Gladstone was able to say:

The present reputation of the country gives to the counties one member through the United Kingdom for 78,000 persons, and to the boroughs one member for 41,200 persons. That ratio of borough representation is rendered even more unequal when we come to divide the towns into large towns and small towns. As a rule, the ratio is one member for 54,200 persons over the whole country.

I refer to that passage in the debate simply to call the attention of the House to the evident fairness of that proposal and the principle upon which it was possible for the two parties to come together and settle this matter on a different basis than either party, when dealing with it alone, had ever before in the history of England been able to settle it. So in that speech, Mr. Gladstone says:

We have expressed our profound satisfaction in what was first a surmise, but what has gradually become a belief, that there is no broad or vital difference of opinion on this subject between the several sections of the House. The discussion, when it comes—and probably in the necessities of the case it may be an extended discussion—will, we believe, be a discussion rather of a practical than of a polemical character. We have striven to keep in view all those considerations which equity, which practical needs, which the regard for usage and the general spirit of English legislation commended to our notice.

Now, these are the principles of a gentleman to whose school the right hon. leader of the Government at one time used to pretend to belong, and they are principles remarkable for their absence from the Bill now before the House; because the right hon. gentleman proposes to break down the traditions of this country in regard to the proper time for the question of redistribution to engage the attention of this Parliament. According to the constitution—whether it be to the strict letter of the British North America Act or not is a very interesting question—but viewing our constitution in the way the British constitution is considered as being based on practice and consideration handed down, it is clear that for the first time in the history of confederation an attempt is made to depart from the rule of having a redistribution only after a decennial census. And, consequently, the right hon. gentleman will see that, not only is an interesting legal question involved, but there is a departure from the sound principle that underly the practice in England and that underlay this great reform in Mr. Gladstone's time. Not only that, but where are we to end, if this sort of thing is begun? If this becomes the practice, what pressure will there be upon whomever he may be who succeeds the hon. gentleman as Prime Minister if he should be defeated. How can that pressure be resisted, with the passion of the conflict still strong for a powerful and dominant party, instead of considering the interest of the country and the great question of practical legislation for the benefit of the people, to begin considering ways and means by which they can all the more easily defeat their opponents. We had the Minister of Trade and Commerce referring to old sores and old practices and endeavouring to justify his Bill by pretending that it was on the lines that Sir John Macdonald adopted, not in 1872, but in 1882, and pretending that this is a fair and above-board attempt to enforce the county line system. The explanations the right hon. gentleman read show us, without our having to look at the Bill, that where these county lines suit the exigencies of the Liberal party, they will prevail, and where they do not suit them they will not prevail. There were notable instances mentioned by the right hon. gentleman, and, no doubt, the explanations will be forthcoming. To get rid of an awkward historical fact the Minister of Trade and Commerce suggested the absurd idea that Sir John Macdonald was wedded to the old county line idea, not to the representation by population idea, which was the principle of the last general Redistribution Bill in his hands—that he had been dragged away from his first love. In short the attempt was made to bring to the support of this Bill the weight of Sir John Macdonald's name. In this attempt the hon. gentleman resorted to an argument or statement which is absurd on the face of it. The Minister of Trade and Commerce spoke of having been hived, or of the hive of South Oxford. Sir John Macdonald had been singularly kind to him in this respect and had heaped coals of fire upon his head for all his malignity, for it was that feature of the Bill which alone enabled the Minister of Trade and Commerce to put in an appearance in this Parliament—for it was only from a so-called hive that this hon. gentleman was able to be in this House for the last years that he has sat here. And, then, not contented with that, the right hon. gentleman, as we know, has hived him in the Cabinet, placed him in an easy office, but deprived him of all opportunity to do much one way or the other. The explanation of the right hon. gentleman, followed by the statements of the hon. gentlemen from the province of Ontario, have convinced me that not only is there an entire absence of that sort of fairness and that sort of reform which has prevailed in England and which the Liberal party when in opposition to the Conservatives used to profess to admire, but there is shown in the Bill a fell determination to take advantage, so far as advantage could possibly be taken of the Conservative party, notably in the province of Ontario, and for reasons that have been already gone into to-day and that I need not go over. And, while the hon. gentleman was introducing his Bill, this Bill fraught with such danger, with such unfairness to his opponents, I was thinking of his reputation for sunny smiles. I could not avoid the reflection that a man may smile and smile and be—in the right hon. gentleman's position, the leadership of the Liberal party. I join in the expressions that have been given voice to to-day by hon. gentlemen from the province of Ontario on the Conservative side of the House, who, knowing exactly the situation, have been able to follow the explanation and to be warned of the purpose of this Bill—the real purpose. There must be some malign consideration of that kind in a Bill brought in at this time. There was no occasion for it, no earthly occasion for a measure of this kind. If the right hon. gentleman thinks for a moment that he really possesses the confidence of the country according to the present arrangement of the constituencies as they were in June, 1893, there would be no necessity to make this ruthless attempt to break down a healthy and sound practice. Let us say, for the sake of argument, that there have been attempts by the dominant party to gain advantage over their opponents in Ontario, whether in the local House or here, still it could never be said, no matter what the majority was, small or great, that from 1867 down to the present time an attempt was made to take advantage of opportunities outside of the time contemplated by the British North America Act itself and according to the practice that obtains in the old country and that obtained in Canada itself. I certainly will join those on this side who intimated their intention of watching very narrowly every feature of this measure.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

Mr. SPROULE. Might I ask the First Minister a question? I understood him to say that certain counties where county lines were disturbed by portions being taken out of them, would be dealt with by the judges. But there are certain other counties that he named in which the county lines were not disturbed. Are the judges to deal with the redistribution of seats in those counties as well?

The PRIME MINISTER. No. The judges will be called upon to deal only with such counties where the county lines are restored.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. gentleman to mention the county of Bruce where there is no disturbance of county lines.

The PRIME MINISTER. The county of Bruce is among those that are to be divided by the judges.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

AMENDMENTS TO THE BANKING ACT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 127) to amend the Banking Act. He said: Among the many matters in which Canada has made great progress from year to year may be mentioned the banking business. The banking institutions of Canada have not only distributed themselves over our wide territory, but have also extended their operations abroad. Several of our great banking institutions have established branches in the United States, and one of our enterprising banks in the lower provinces, the Bank of Nova Scotia, has established its business in the Island of Jamaica. Application was made by the Bank of Nova Scotia in a special Bill this session for power to issue notes in the Island of Jamaica, expressed in pounds, that being the currency of the island. They desired to issue a one pound sterling note. This they could not do under our Bank Act, which of course requires the notes to be issued in the currency of Canada. It was thought better to have a general Bill which would enable other banks to extend their operations to other British possessions if they desired to do so, rather than pass a special Bill for the convenience of this particular bank. I therefore requested that my hon. friend the member for Halifax, who has charge of the Bill respecting the Bank of Nova Scotia, to let it stand, and I promised that the Government will present a Bill dealing with the matter. We propose by this Bill, therefore, to facilitate the extension of our banking institutions to any British possession they desire. Under the Act they will have the power to issue notes expressed in the currency of the colony in which they extend their business. These notes will be redeemable in that colony, and will be so expressed upon their face. If at any time the bank should cease to do business within that colony, then its notes become redeemable at any agency of the bank within the Dominion of Canada. I think that that proviso will be found entirely satisfactory to the banks, and will be useful in encouraging the extension of our banks to other colonies, and particularly in the matter of the West India trade. As we all wish to encourage that, I think we are all agreed that we can have no better agency for the extension of the Canadian trade than to have our Canadian banks establish branches in those islands.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose that while the bank is in a solvent state and is doing business, these notes issued anywhere outside the colonies are not redeemable in Canada during that time?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. No, they are only redeemable in the event of the bank ceasing to do business in that colony. They are stamped on their face to be redeemed only in the colony where issued, but if at any time the bank got into difficulties and suspended, the bank's funds are responsible wherever they are found in Canada, and the circulation forms part of the circulation under the general Bank Act, with all the securities which the Bank Act provides.

Mr. FOSTER. If a citizen of Jamaica happened to be here and had those notes in his possession, and wanted them to be honoured by a bank, I suppose, of course, the bank would do that?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have no doubt they would be honoured in such an exceptional case, but it is deemed expedient to make them legally redeemable only in the colony where issued.

Mr. HENDERSON. I would like to ask the Minister what effect this will have on the circulation upon the bank's bills in Canada. Is this to be considered part of the bank's circulation, thereby reducing the amount of the circulation of the bank in the Dominion of Canada?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, it is distinctly declared that this shall not give them any power to enlarge their circulation, subject to all the provisions of the Bank Act.

Mr. HENDERSON. It seems to me it is a little dangerous, it might curtail the circulation too much.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Then they must come and get power to increase it.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I regret that there is no other course left for me than to call attention to the importance of the returns that I have been endeavouring to obtain from the Government. I have sent notes, I have made out slips on separate pieces of paper, I have spoken from my seat in the House on several occasions.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I will suggest to my hon. friend that he mention this matter when we move the House into Committee of Supply, as we shall do in a few minutes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I shall have something else to say on going into Committee of Supply. I suppose one may be pardoned for taking advantage of an opportunity.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. Will the hon. member conclude with a motion?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, on the Orders of the Day I am only calling attention to the returns. But I will conclude with a motion if necessary. No one regrets more than I do that I am compelled to occupy so much time in regard to matters concerning which the only course usually open is to make a motion for the papers, and then to have the pleasure of seeing them brought down. There are some papers that I should not be compelled to wait for at all. Under the rules of this House, when a Minister of the Crown refers to documents, he is bound to lay them on the Table of the House. If he is proceeding with close regard to the rules of the House, he will not refer to these documents unless he is going to lay them on the Table of the House at conclusion of the speech. Some days ago I called the attention of the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) to many phases of his speech where he referred to public documents. I gave him the pages, and I told him I would explain them in particular, if he desired, as I went along. I have not seen these papers yet, they have not been laid on the Table of the House. I refer to pages in the present "Hansard," 852, 856, 857, 858, 861, 872, 873, 874, 875, 876, 877, 880, 885, 888, 889, 896, 904. I refer to the speech of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, page 1642, and to that of the hon. Minister of Finance, pages 1696 and 1879.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. These are not public documents.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman did not make that statement when I questioned him. If the hon. gentleman does not intend to comply with my request I will bring the matter up in another form. I understood from the hon. Minister of the Interior that he was willing to comply with my request and bring down the papers that I expected and that I required. I know of no other course, preliminary to the courses open to me, except to call attention across the floor of this House, but I give the Government warning that unless there is some celerity shown in producing these documents I shall avail myself of the opportunity that I shall have to see that the supplies which are wanted by the Government are not voted too quickly, and I shall deem it my duty to speak a good deal more on various subjects than I otherwise would.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That would rather be an inducement, perhaps, to defer bringing them down if you are going to regale us in that manner.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I accept the compliment, and I know it is sincere from the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, and, if he prefers that I should take that course, I am ready to oblige him.

Mr. McGRIGOR. We will stay with you.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I know the hon. member from Essex (Mr. McGregor) always listens to the speeches that I make, although he is continually saying that I am wasting the time of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would like to remind the hon. gentleman that there should be no discussion at this stage.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, if you would keep hon. gentlemen quiet there would be no discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am trying to do my duty, but I would remind the hon. gentleman that the only permission that can be granted him is to ask a question.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I am calling attention to the fact of these returns not being brought down. I have to call attention to this; it is my duty and it is my right to do so. There was an Order of the House on the 19th of April for a list of employees in the Yukon, which has not been complied with. No comment on that is necessary.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). What does that order comprise? If the hon. gentleman will look at the order he will find that the order comprises a request for the particulars which he has mentioned as well as particulars relating to the expenses which have been paid to all employees in the Yukon district. The hon. gentleman speaks of that as if it were a simple matter. I can assure him that it involves a full two weeks work by the accountant of the department. Every day, since the hon. gentleman began talking about Yukon matters, without exception, I have called the attention of the officers of the department who have charge of this work to the necessity of getting these returns out as quickly as possible, and they are working in order to get them out as rapidly as it is possible to do. It is impossible for anybody to prepare these returns because it can only be done by the officers who are acquainted with the papers and who know their contents. Since the opening of the House I have laid on the Table returns comprising 10,000 pages.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have had some experience in connection with the hon. Minister of the Interior's expedition which makes me not doubt his present statement. It is specific, and I accept it, but I doubt whether he has been active because I asked for very simple information across the floor of the House, and I believe the hon. member for York (Mr. Foster) asked for it in writing—documents that are printed, Orders in Council, and so on. I sent to the department, after having in vain asked for them from the hon. Minister of the Interior, and got them from the deputy; I asked the deputy if he would be good enough to oblige me with them, and in an hour I got them. This should not be a necessary course to have to adopt in reference to public papers. In connection with the removal of Mr. Fawcett there is an order which has not been brought down.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. There is no correspondence in the department and the return can be laid on the Table of the House at any time, but in order to establish the fact that no letters had been written it was necessary to make an examination of something like 700 or 800 pages.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It may be that these returns of papers in connection with these important matters are bulky, but if we are going to govern the country by parliamentary government it is necessary that we should have them. An enormous number of these papers are connected with the administration of that far-away country, the Yukon, and they should have been in course of preparation for Parliament. There are a great many subjects in the different departments in regard to which the departments are only too willing to furnish reports in full. The Minister should not simply pigeon-hole these papers which are not printed. This simply means that we are asked to vote supplies in the dark in the absence of these papers. They say that they are very voluminous; vote the supplies and see the papers next year. I do not propose to follow that course. If they are voluminous and bulky they are important, and extra clerks may be got to copy them. Then the instructions to Mr. Wade were asked for. It is said that these papers do not necessitate a return coming down. It is the usual course where there are no papers to make a return of that fact.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That return was laid on the Table.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Well, I do not find it in the Votes and Proceedings.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. It is in the Votes and Proceedings.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is another return ordered on March 30, 1898. What is the trouble about that?

The PRIME MINISTER. What is the subject of that?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is an order for papers in connection with the prosecutions in Manitoba. That order was passed and the subject has been before one of the committees.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Wade return is there, page 294 of the Votes and Proceedings, 18th of May: "Return to an Order of the House of the 19th of April, 1899, for copies of instructions given to F. C. Wade, &c."

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I accepted the statement of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries as to that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You said that it was not in the Votes and Proceedings; you were wrong in that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I accept the statement of the hon. Minister of the Interior, and I beg his pardon most willingly, but I am now referring to an order of the 30th March, 1898. Is there any excuse for not complying with that after thirteen months have passed, and not a particle of attention has been paid to it?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Will the hon. gentleman give me the form of the order of March 30, 1898. What does it call for?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. For the papers concerning the prosecutions in connection with the election frauds in Manitoba.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Are they in my department?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No, not in terms. They would go to the department where these papers are ultimately sent.

There are two Orders on the 19th of April in regard to liquor permits in the Yukon, and a return has been made in connection with one Order, but the other has, apparently, been overlooked. We have a particularly interesting case, for the papers must have been prepared and submitted to the Justice Department and to the Privy Council in regard to this Stanley Park or Deadman's Island affair, and, although the Order passed on the 1st of May, the papers are not down yet. There is no excuse for keeping this House in the dark in regard to a matter which has already produced a riot, the Riot Act being read in connection with the action of the Government. I have spoken to the Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) privately, and I have asked questions across the floor of the House, but without avail. You have the provincial government, as well as the lessee of this Government making a claim, and you have a profound conviction on the part of many people in Vancouver, regardless of politics, that there has been a most valuable piece of property spirited away for a song. According to reputable persons in the city of Vancouver, men regardless of party, this property is worth $40,000, and it is handed over to Mr. Ludgate, under a lease of twenty-five years, for $500 a year. I admit that a large portion of the labour element in Vancouver are in favour of it, and, from an economical point of view, it may be a good thing for the city, but there are serious questions remaining as to why and how this property was handed over. First, whether this Government had the title, which is in dispute, and secondly, whether it is a proper business transaction for them to make. If these papers are kept back longer, it will be impossible to have a full inquiry into the circumstances this session.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Did the hon. gentleman speak to the Minister of Militia?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes; I told him particularly the reasons for haste, and, as I say, outside of party politics altogether, the leading men in Vancouver are absolutely bewildered as to why the Government has acted in this matter as they have done. There are other questions which I will not refer to now, in order to be brief, for I take it for granted that the Government will show haste in the matter. The Minister of Marine is pressing for his supplies, and I call his attention to an Order with reference to steamboat inspection, which I would ask him to hasten.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). This Order was only passed two days ago, and it has not reached my department yet.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I merely say, that the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) is pressing for his supplies, and will come before the House again shortly, and I remind him that these papers are of great importance, and should be in our possession before his supplies are voted.

The PRIME MINISTER. Next Thursday, when the House meets again, we will make a supreme effort to satisfy the over-fastidiousness of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper).

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is unfair to add that, for I made my remarks short, and accepted the hon. gentleman's promise without reservation.

THE RAILWAY ACT.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 85) further to amend the Railway Act. He said: When introducing this Bill the other day, I explained there was nothing in it of an important character, and that we were merely proposing to incorporate in the general railway law two or three particular clauses that we were in the habit of adding to the special Railway Bills, as they go through the committee. I thought it better that in the future this should be dispensed with, and that we should incorporate them in the general Act. Since then, however, two Bills have been introduced in amendment to the Railway Act by private members, and some questions have arisen in respect to important matters, which I am considering, and which may eventuate in my proposing some further amendments to the railway law. My present purpose is, as soon as this Bill takes its second reading, to ask the House to refer it to the Railway Committee. It is a Government Bill, but I am willing it shall go to that committee for the purpose of considering these other matters to which I have referred, and for the purpose of incorporating the clauses of the other Bills that have been introduced by private members, of course, providing that it shall meet with the approval of the committee.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved that the said Bill be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Motion agreed to.

THE INSURANCE ACT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved second reading of Bill (No. 86) to further amend the Insurance Act. He said: When I introduced this Bill, I mentioned some of its provisions, and I intimated I would propose that it be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, as I believed it could be more conveniently discussed in the committee than in the House. Since that time I have been favoured with a visit from a deputation representing the insurance companies of the Dominion, who have made some suggestions which I think to a very large extent we may find ourselves able to accept. But these matters can much better be dealt with in the committee.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE moved that the said Bill be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY—TIDAL SURVEY.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I attempted to ask some questions the other day, and, according to the rule of the House. I was not able to get the information; but I shall now do my best to give it. It has reference to the question of tidal surveys. In 1896 this Government asked for $15,000 in the Supply Bill to make the usual progress that had been made previously in connection with a very important service in this country. The Minister of Marine, who had just come to his department, then stated in the Committee of Supply, that he had an open mind on this subject, and that he had not come to a conclusion, one way or the other. In 1897 his mind had got down to this question sufficiently far to give the proposition a general endorsement, when, for some reason or other—the only reason I have been able to learn is, that Captain Spain, in some informal way, not by any written report, apparently told the Minister that he had not yet convinced himself of the importance of this question, and that Captain Moore, of the steamship "California," Allan Line, had his mind made up adversely to the importance of this question. From the best inquiries I have been able to make, there is no Captain Moore of the "California." Captain Brown is captain of the "California."

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman must be mistaken. When I came out from California a year ago, Captain Moore was in command.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The statement was that Allan captains had given the hon. gentleman information, and as Allan captains and Dominion Line captains and the leading mariners that go up and down the gulf had been battering at the doors of the Marine Department with petitions and deputations when I was Minister, it struck me with considerable surprise that Allan captains had sneered at this proposition.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not say sneered.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That was the practical effect—that it was not a matter of practical necessity, but merely theoretical. This is a most serious condition of affairs. I can understand the Minister of Marine saying in 1896, notwithstanding the fact that Parliament was then appropriating considerable sums for the service, that his mind was open on the subject, but how could he go on keeping a special officer in the department, and while his mind was kept open, starving that officer with regard to appropriations for the successful carrying out of the work, and then coming before Parliament and intimating that he had not mastered or examined the subject, that he had not taken the trouble to look into the papers that were within his reach? When I recollected the active interest taken by deputations, consisting of the leading underwriters of Montreal, the men who were most anxious that the navigation of the St. Lawrence should be in such a condition that the charges to either coast could be lowered, and when I remembered the pressure from men like these and also from eminent scientists, whose opinions on questions of this kind are of the greatest value to navigators, I was bewildered at not being able to obtain an official reply, to which I think I was entitled, as to whether there were or not the names of practical seamen in the department asking for this survey. I was told by the Minister of Marine that he did not know whether they were practical seamen or not, and that I could have the papers if I moved for them. There was no course left for me then but to do what I propose to do now, to speak the sentiments of some of the best informed men in Canada on a subject of vital importance to the marine interests of this country. With the record in that department of the splendid work done by Commander Gordon, it pained me to hear that because Captain Spain or any other master mariner in his department had, in an off-hand way, told him he had been unable to come to a conclusion that this was a necessary and important work, there was to be a stop in the progress of this work so important, and to which such able men as Captain Gordon had given so much of their time and attention. In the reports of the Marine Department the hon. gentleman will find, as far back as 1894, information, the existence of which he was absolutely ignorant of, or he would not have discussed this subject with me in Supply as he did the other night. It would have been impossible for him to have said, in his light and airy fashion, that there was on the one side the theoretical views of scientists and on the other side practical seamen, and he had yet to hear one practical seaman who was in favour of the survey, and that Allan's captains had told him it was not wanted. He will find information in the blue-books laid before Parliament, on the basis of which I was able to get a large grant, but not so large as I would have desired, and I had to apologize to this House and the country for not being able to obtain a larger amount. I explained to the committee at the time—and no one challenged it even then, though the opposition was very critical—the wisdom of this work, approved as it had been by the very best examples we could have, the example of the English Government in regard to their own coasts, and the example of the Indian Government with regard to the coast of India, and the example of our neighbours to the south, all of whom have put their houses in order and done what they possibly could in this direction so as to give to navigators the information, which, forsooth, the Minister of Marine thinks will be found on Bayfield's charts or some charts he has in the department. There is not a chart in existence in England or the United States that will give him the information that this tidal survey and the survey of the currents will give to Canada and has given to the United States. To our shame be it spoken, on the Pacific coasts with regard to some of this work we have to go to the United States charts where they have not been niggardly in expending moneys to survey parts of the coasts of Canada, and can give you the direction and force of the currents, which we should be able to find on our own charts if we had the national spirit and enterprise that has brought about this assistance to navigators on the English and American coast.

There are men who could not pass the examination, as the papers will show, but who are in the service and are good pilots around our coast, and such men may tell you that this work is of no use to them. If you put into their hands time tables and all the necessary data, they could not work out of them the results that these masters of these other vessels do. We have, however, a great many of our own navigators on the vessels going to the coasts of England, and they have this information as they approach the English coast, but not as they approach our coast. In the St. Lawrence, the force of the currents is such and the direction is such, that they constitute an admitted danger. In speaking of this danger, I am not doing, in any sense, our country an injury, because all navigators are absolutely aware now of these lurking dangers and are anxious to get rid of them. I was speaking by the book in 1896 when I pressed this subject on the attention of the Minister of Marine; I was speaking of the advice of the best informed practical men on this subject, when I pressed him in 1897, and again in 1898, when, to my surprise, the recommendations of his own engineer were not adopted and the vote required was not even asked from Parliament. Now, there is hardly a subject more interesting than this to a large part of the people of Canada, so far as concerns the mercantile marine and the business of the great ports of Montreal, and Quebec, concerning which we are so deeply interested. The Minister will find, that I had not to wait until I gave notice of motion, and until days rolled by and I could move for a return, in order to get the information I sought. I found it in the reports of the department that had been laid before Parliament, and these disclosed how very unfair, to put it mildly, the Minister was, if he had the slightest information that these reports contained, and how very reprehensible it was on his part if he had not the information. For he cannot get rid of the responsibility in any other way than that he attempted. Still, it would be the greatest misfortune if he devoted his abilities and talents to seeking a justification for his inaction by belittling the service—which was, in effect, his defence. That was the reason for this reference to Captain Spain's unpublished report. That was the reason for this reference to two Allan captains, who dwindled afterwards to one, and to a captain who was in the "California," but who is not in the "California" now. Here is the information that the hon. gentleman had before him when he took his position, the report of Mr. W. Bell Dawson, C.E., addressed to W. P. Anderson, C.E., Chief Engineer of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. Before I quote it, I may say that there was a reference by the Minister—and the same tendency is shown by others—suggesting: Oh, that is only Mr. Dawson's report—as though they suggested that, being an enthusiast, and this being his line of business, any one would expect him to say the very best that could be said for this service. Fortunately, this report, though signed by Mr. Dawson, has the advantage for people who do not appreciate him—that is, people who do not know him—that he refers to other authorities outside of the Marine Department altogether. He says:

As long ago as the meeting of the British Association held in Montreal in 1894, the importance of publishing tide tables for Canadian waters, and the necessity of establishing stations for tidal observations was discussed. The association adopted a resolution drawing the attention of the Government of the Dominion to the matter, and also appointed a committee to collect information and make representations to the Government regarding it. The committee consisted of Dr. A. Johnson, chairman,—

That is a professor who was connected for a long time with McGill University and a very eminent man.

—Professor J. G. McGregor, Halifax,—

An equally able man and distinguished scholar, connected with Dalhousie University.

—J. B. Cherriman, of Toronto, H. T. Bovey, of Montreal,—

The head, I think, of the scientific department of McGill University.

—C. Carpmael, director of the Meteorological service.

Now dead, but a most eminent man and great mathematician.

The Montreal Board of Trade were at the same time considering the question independently, and they concurred in addressing a strong memorial on the subject to the Dominion Government. Ship-owners and masters were also practically unanimous as to the pressing need for knowledge on the subject of the tides and currents.

So, there you have the scientists represented by some of their most eminent men and you have the commercial interests also of the great commercial metropolis of Montreal. Now, this gentleman, Mr. Dawson, the Minister will bear me out, whether an enthusiast or not, is singularly careful in any statement of fact he makes, whether in a report or elsewhere. He traces his history down to 1894, when a deputation representing the British Association and the Royal Society of Canada, with representatives in the city of Montreal, waited on my hon.

friend from York (Mr. Foster) and the late Sir John Macdonald. The result of that was a promise to deal with that matter in the near future. We had undertaken very heavy work, as the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will remember. We had the survey of Georgian Bay, that is, the hydrographic survey, requiring a special ship and special officers, including a highly paid officer, loaned by the Admiralty of Great Britain, the expenditure being some $40,000 a year, I think. Then, we had undertaken to build up one of the finest branches in the Marine Department, the nucleus of a hydrographic survey, made up of officers drawn from the Kingston Military College, chosen regardless of politics, being certified by the commandant as to their aptitude for this kind of work. Thus, we finally succeeded in inducing the Government to provide what was, admittedly, a small vote, but it was a beginning—$10,000, afterwards increased to $15,000. He says further:

While admitting that these observations—

Speaking of some preliminary points of tidal stations that Commander Gordon and Mr. Carpmael had been able to provide for at little expense out of the scientific and meteorological vote.

While admitting that these observations were too few in number and too rough in their nature to found any conclusion on, Lieut. Gordon considers that the result certainly strengthens the opinion that the whole question of the determination of tidal constants should be taken up in Canada, and a number of stations established for taking tidal observations, as these would be—

Now, here is the main conclusion, as I referred to it from memory the other night. This is the recommendation of a man whose reputation is established in Prince Edward Island, among the seamen, and also in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, where he has sailed for years and where he was regarded as a man who passed in the royal navy an examination on which he got perfect marks on the subject of navigation, a man who was an enthusiast in his profession. He regarded this as "of the greatest practical value to seamen."

He further points out the special value which this work will have when completed, as it will enable an intelligent shipmaster not only to see at what time the tide will be high or low, but also to see at once how the tidal current is setting his ship, when once the currents are charted for the waters of the gulf.

As Staff Commander Maxwell, R.N., was at that time carrying on the re-survey in the lower St. Lawrence, his attention was called to the memorial of the British Association, and he was asked by the department to state the nature and extent of such tidal observations as he was making.

It was the ordinary hydrographic work done around the coast, begun by Bayfield and paid for half by the Canadian and half by the British Government, for making soundings and depths of shoals in the navigable waters and entering them in the charts.

His attention was called to the memorial of the committee of the British Association, and he was asked by the department to state the nature and extent of such tidal observation as he was making. His reply is to the effect that he was doing what he could to observe the tides and currents with the means at his disposal; but they were confessedly imperfect, and were confined to a limited area, and did not necessarily establish any comparison with any other portion of the river.

To do this work in a comprehensive way, he considers the most trustworthy method to be the establishment of self-registering tide-gauges at various points in the river and gulf of St. Lawrence.

I call attention again to the authority of this officer, in connection with the statements I have made time and again in this House.

With one or more vessels from which to observe day by day the condition of the tidal streams under varying states of wind and weather.

Now, they put the "Lansdowne" in charge of these officers, but they never followed this up; the hon. gentleman says he was never able to spare a ship. I say, in connection with the currents, that this is a work which is required, but he has reduced it down to what a small vote of $5,000 will permit him to do. It is merely a hand-to-mouth business, and does not contemplate anything like a reasonably short time for the conclusion of this work. It is not such work as would enable a ship master to tell the course and the direction of these currents. Further on:

As Lieut. Gordon had spent the summer of 1888 in navigating the waters of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, he addressed a report to the Minister based upon the further information he there gained, after carefully watching the effect of currents on his ship's course.

This is the report, as I told the House the other night, which gives the work in regard to the Gulf of St. Lawrence, where Captain Gordon, with all the assistants he had on a Government ship, with the best appliances the department could give him, took special observations, and, in directing a course somewhere in the vicinity of the island of Anticosti, in twenty-four hours he was 19 or 20 miles out of his course, knowing nothing of the course and direction of those currents, of which there is no survey in existence. Now, Mr. Dawson says:

In this report he expresses the conviction that until we have an exhaustive examination of the whole system of tidal movements, carried out on similar plans to those which have been made on the United States coasts, and on the coasts of Great Britain, we shall always be subject to an annual amount of maritime loss due to the lack of information in regard to tidal currents. He also points out that in the 13 years from 1870 to 1887, the aggregate loss was a little over $50,000,000, or an average of $2,782,000 per annum; and in the same period the loss of life has been 4,308 lives. A certain proportion of this loss of life and property is certainly due to the imperfect knowledge of the currents; and if the number of narrow escapes of vessels from disaster or wreck were known, it would add a powerful argument in favour of proceeding with the work forthwith. He also adds that if we could only get a record of the narrow escapes, the delays, and the errors of position discovered when a fog clears away, no further argument would be required.

We have evidence there, not merely that a number of men have had an opinion as to the value of these surveys, but we have the reasons from a practical and able navigator.

But captains of vessels as a rule dislike to admit that they have been out of position; and danger escaped next voyage, when, if the weather is thick, it may be found that the ship is as far to the north as she was on the previous trip to the south. It is the more difficult under these circumstances to collect evidence on the subject.

That is taking the statement of a commander of what his position was, when he found himself affected by a current.

He is himself convinced, however, of the extreme desirability, if not the absolute necessity of proceeding with this work as soon as possible.

Then, reference is made to the slow progress of the work, in the absence of that boat. In 1889 there was nothing but the same kind of work that is going on now, that is, looking after the establishment of tide-gauges.

At the conclusions of the re-surveys in the lower St. Lawrence with this season, the expenses of which were being shared by the Canadian Government and the British Admiralty, the time was regarded as opportune to make further representations as to the pressing need for information about our tides and currents.

I ask the particular attention of the House to this paragraph of Mr. Dawson's report, bearing on the extraordinary position taken by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries:

Accordingly, in December, 1889, a petition was addressed to the Marine and Fisheries by the committee of the British Association, and the Royal Society of Canada, and was signed by 393 masters and officers of vessels, to the following effect:—

Compare that statement with the lack of information the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had, when he said, that, so far as he was concerned, he had yet to learn of the name of a practical seaman who thought this was a necessary aid to navigation, and the statement against it of the unwritten opinion of Captain Spain and the opinion of some captains on the Allan Line. If my memory serves me right, I think, on this question, instead of the Minister taking a technical position, when I was pressing for information, he could have told from that petition a great deal more than is in this, and could have found there the names of not merely the captains of the Allan Line, and the Dominion Line, and other lines, but he would have found them purporting to be signed by the commanders of the particular ships.

We, the undersigned masters and officers of vessels engaged in the navigation of the Gulf of St. Lawrence and the waters on the Atlantic coast and of Newfoundland, desire earnestly and respectfully to petition the Government and Parliament of Canada, that they would promptly take such steps as they may deem advisable to obtain as thorough a knowledge as possible of the currents in these waters, whether due to the tides or to any other cause, and to distribute amongst mariners the information obtained. We believe that the serious loss of life and property due to shipwrecks attributable to unknown currents during fogs or hazy weather may thus be greatly diminished. In such weather these currents are a cause of great anxiety and danger.

That was, so far as practical seamen were concerned. There is a petition signed by them; yet the Minister of Marine and Fisheries told me across this House, that he did not know whether these men were seamen or not, although the petition purports to be signed by no other persons than masters and officers of vessels.

A further memorial was presented to the Minister by the shipping interest of Montreal, bearing the representative signatures of Messrs. H. & A. Allan, David Torrance & Co., H. E. Murray, Anderson, Mackenzie & Co., and F. W. Henshaw.

Comprising nearly the whole of the owners of the great shipping lines.

This memorial points out the special deficiency in Canada of such information to mariners as is supplied by the Imperial Government in the British tide tables, which show not only the change in the depth of water due to rise and fall of the tide, but also supply very full information about the currents in the waters surrounding the British Islands, whether due to the action of the tides, or influenced by atmospheric causes. The annual wreck list is referred to as showing the urgent need of similar information for Canadian waters, and, as far as ascertained, ship masters were unanimous in their anxious desire for information on the subject.

Yet, in 1898, we have the Minister of Marine and Fisheries telling us, that this is an opinion, only on one side, of scientists and theorists, and that, so far as practical seamen and navigators go, those he has had an opportunity of talking to, are opposed to it, and that Captain Spain has not made up his mind about it.

The need of taking immediate action in the matter is urged, as the necessary observations will occupy some years, and every year before their completion will show its list of preventable wrecks. This memorial was also heartily endorsed by the president of the Quebec Board of Trade.

This memorial was also heartily endorsed by the president of the Quebec Board of Trade, and it was referred to a gentleman who is a good authority on navigation and an authority on our Atlantic coast approaches to Halifax and St. John, a gentleman who is in the service of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that is, Captain Smith. I made the statement, that Captain Smith had strong opinions upon this question, and that he had been commodore of the Allan Line. It was heartily endorsed by the president of the Quebec Board of Trade, by the Board of Trade of Montreal, by the Board of Trade of Quebec, by the owners of ships, by 393 of the masters and officers whose vessels are going up and down the river, and by Captain W. H. Smith, R.N.R., chairman of the Board of Examiners of Masters and Mates, who has had thirty years' experience in the Atlantic service.

And in reply he concurs in recommending that self-registering tide-gauges be placed at all the prominent ports and observations taken by competent persons.

The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries does not concur with Captain Smith or with what Mr. Bell Dawson says there.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I concurred with him.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. These gentlemen would give you the information required.

About the same time a further communication was received from Dr. Johnson—

And, mark you, Mr. Speaker, the information is in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and easily available at any moment. The present Minister, who said, that he had an open mind on this question in 1896, and his mind has apparently become more open since.

About the same time a further communication was received from Dr. Johnson on behalf of the committee of the British Association, which reviews the representations already made by them. Amongst other reasons adduced, the rule of the Imperial Board of Trade is referred to. This requires all masters of ships to obtain a certificate of competency, and for this purpose to pass an examination, which examination, in the case of masters desiring a certificate for the coasting trade, includes a knowledge of the tides and tidal currents. The information enabling them to pass this examination is found in the tide tables published by the Admiralty. This is cited to show the need of obtaining data for Canadian waters on which similar information could be based. The recent re-survey of part of the lower St. Lawrence under Staff Commander Maxwell, is also referred to; and his endeavour, as far as time permitted him, to investigate the tides and currents in the part of the river in which he was at work; although he acknowledges his means to be limited and insufficient to establish comparisons with other points. The opinion of Captain Lackey, R.N.R., is also quoted from his work on "Practical Navigation."

That is a famous work, and that information was available to the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

This work has received the approbation of the naval authorities of Great Britain and of the United States, and is supplied to the fleets of both these countries. In it he gives a list of sixteen books which he says "may be considered absolutely essential to safe navigation in the present day, when the question of speed enters so largely into the calculation." His list includes the Admiralty "Tide Tables" and Galbraith and Houghton's "Manual of the Tides and Tidal Currents" for the waters surrounding the British Islands.

With this review of the work and the progress made, the report concludes. Last year I read to this House the urgent recommendation of the chief engineer of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, which is contained in Appendix No. 3.

Annual Report of the Chief Engineer of the Department of Marine and Fisheries.

It is as follows:—

In consequence of the material reduction of the vote for the tidal and current survey, it was necessary to abandon for the season all work in connection with observations of current.

This is the result of the hon. Minister not knowing anything about this subject. That is not an unfair observation to make, and yet it is a serious one, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries told us frankly, the other night, the position which he was in, that his mind was open. He told us his mind was open in 1896, and he has not made up his mind about it yet, and it is this suggestion that is so alarming to the people in Montreal and in Quebec who are interested in the St. Lawrence having the very best possible name, and who believe that all reasonable expenditure should be made by the Government in regard to these waters and the waters on the Atlantic coast. These people are alarmed, when they find that the hon. gentleman has not taken the trouble to read the information that is in his department, the information to which I have called his attention time and time again, reports from his officers, all these memorials from the boards of trade of Quebec, of Montreal, and from these captains. So, we find the chief engineer, although not wanting a very large amount for the survey, made a report, in which he said, that it was necessary to abandon for the season all work in connection with observations of current—

The sum allotted for the service barely suffices for the maintenance of the seven tide-gauges previously established,—

The whole thing was whittled down to that. This country, with its great coast, its boasted waters and mercantile marine, and all the efforts we are putting forward to advertise our ports and to make them available for the navigators' trade in this manner, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has confessed, that he does not know anything about the subject. Then, this officer proceeds:

—and to utilize the records obtained from them, which are yearly increasing in value, some help will have to be given the engineer in charge, and some additional outlay incurred to pay for computation. It is also important that tidal differences for the regions commanded by these gauges should be determined while they are all in good working order. This would require the placing of temporary gauges during the summer season. A beginning was made at this in 1896. Mr. Dawson spent the summer in visiting and inspecting the several tide-gauge stations. His report of progress for the season is hereto annexed.

I am particularly anxious to have an investigation of the currents between Cape Breton Island and Cape Race undertaken as soon as the necessary funds and a steamer can be allotted for the work.

That is the work that was begun when I was in the department, in 1893 or 1894. We supplied them with the "Lansdowne," not as good a ship as is really required for the work, but we gave Mr. Dawson the "Lansdowne" and carte blanche, within the appropriation, to employ his assistants, because there are reasons for having those who are specially fitted for the work, and here we are with the work practically stopped in 1899. The Government means to comply with the wish of the chief engineer, but the statement was made the other night by the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that Mr. Bell-Dawson's health was broken down. We are all sorry for that, and I regret it the more, because I know what an able man he is. But that service should not depend upon Mr. Bell Dawson. This service, if it is as important as all these people prove it to be, should have been considered by the Minister so that the fact of one officer breaking down would not affect his plans.

I am particularly anxious to have an investigation of the currents between Cape Breton Island and Cape Race undertaken, as soon as the necessary funds and a steamer can be allotted for the work. The large number of wrecks that have occurred on the south-east shore of Newfoundland and the concurrent testimony that there is a strong indraught in that direction emphasize the fact that such an investigation would have eminently practical results.

The Minister in whose department the chief engineer is, tells us that this is not a practical question, that he has yet to get the name of some practical navigator who cares about it, and that it is theory and science on one side and practical seamanship on the other.

The expenditure on the survey of tides and currents to date is given below. In these amounts there is no charge for the steamer used in the survey during three months in the seasons of 1894, 1895 and 1896,—

I thought myself, when I made the statement, that we only had a steamer in 1894, but I find now that it stopped when the hon. gentleman came into office in 1896, and it stopped because he had an open mind, and he now tells us that his mind is in that same unfortunate condition.

—but the anchorage appliances and equipment for the survey are included. The amounts also include the original construction of the principal tidal stations and the recording instruments for them, maintenance and supplies for these stations, salaries for observers, the expense of the observations at the temporary stations during the summer season of 1896, with travelling expenses and incidentals, and also the cost of reducing the results of the observations and calculating tide tables from them, so far as this has yet been done.

I believe that used to be done in England. I do not know whether it is done in England yet.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is done in England yet.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER—

Fiscal year—
1891-1892	$ 711 59
1892-1893	5,099 17
1893-1894	10,187 91
1894-1895	11,507 24
1895-1896	9,627 45
1896-1897	7,134 56

Add to these years the expense of the ship and you will find that there was a reasonable beginning, but for the purpose of comparison, as the ship is not included in any of the other years, this will do. The hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) came into office, and this is the way it goes. We had a vote for $15,000 in the fall session of 1896-97; he spent $7,134, and in 1897-98, all he took, according to his chief engineer, was $2,500, practically giving the whole thing a black eye; and telling us this very year, that he attaches no importance to the subject outside of its being an interesting scientific one. That is his reason for not asking for such an appropriation as would enable him to grapple with this work in a manner that is absolutely essential, if we are to have a useful aid for the safe navigation of our waters. Here is this confession to which I referred a little while ago, corroborated by the chief engineer, as to where we have to go for information about our waters:

Last spring, application was made to the Canadian Government by the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey office for permission to land a party at Seymour Narrows, on the east coast of Vancouver Island, for the purpose of obtaining tide gauge records at this point, in the general interests of commerce and navigation, their Pacific coast tide tables requiring data which could only be conveniently obtained by taking observations in the Narrows for an extended period. I understand that a party has been located at this place during the past year. I also learn that the publishers of the British Columbia Almanac are indebted to the United States Government for the tide tables of British Columbia waters which they issue.

According to Mr. Anderson, we have seven tide gauge stations, and our neighbours to the south are actually doing this work for us in the Pacific waters:

I beg to draw attention to the desirability that tidal observations in British Columbia waters should be made and the records reduced for use by our own service. We have been supplied with two years' records of the tide-gauges maintained by the Department of Public Works at the Fraser River and Victoria, the latter station lately transferred to Esquimalt. If these records could be worked out they would probably give results more accurate than anything yet obtained respecting British Columbia tides, which are very irregular and very interesting.

I think I have established, from the Minister's own report, and from other documents, the absolute necessity of grappling with this subject in a proper manner. I have shown out of his own report, and out of the reports of his department in years gone by, that the reasons the hon. gentleman has advanced this session are not supported by the official records, that the importance of the subject has not been appreciated by him, and that he was in entire ignorance of these representations on the part of practical men—owners of ships and master mariners, 393 masters and officers of ships using Canadian waters. In all fairness, if these were his only reasons, he is bound to take this subject up and represent it again to his colleagues and obtain a sufficient appropriation to put the work on a proper basis.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). It is very much to be regretted that in a matter of this kind, the hon. gentleman should persist, day after day, in trying to make it assume a controversial character. The hon. gentleman knows very well that from the time this question was first introduced to the House, up to the present moment, I have never uttered one word saying that my mind was adverse to the continuance of this proposed system of trying to establish the ocean currents around our coasts.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I complained that you were not in favour of it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I stated in 1897, and I repeat it again to-day, that there is an astonishing lukewarmness with regard to this matter on the part of practical seamen. I consulted a number of them, and I have not found any one enthusiastic about them. I have spoken to my chief engineer, Mr. Anderson, about it, and he admitted a wonderful lukewarmness on the part of practical seamen. Let us understand what we are considering here, because it is most injurious that a wrong impression should go abroad on this subject. My hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) says that Captain Smith, the chairman of the Master and Mates Board, cordially agreed as to the benefit which would be derived from the system of self-regulating gauges. Does he want this House to understand that I have minimized the importance of those gauges? On the contrary, I have established more self-registering gauges than the hon. gentleman ever did. The work is going on from year to year, and it would be lamentable if the impression got abroad that in this matter we were withdrawing our hand. Last year I sent Mr. Bell Dawson down to make an exhaustive examination of the Bay of Fundy. He established seven or eight gauges in that bay this very year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is the hon. gentleman serious? I would like to have the positions.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend, who is such an omniverous reader and can condemn so severely any Minister who has not read every file in his department for the last fifteen years, would, if he would look up Mr. Bell Dawson's report, find the places given there. But he has rushed in without trying to post himself. If he had read Mr. Bell Dawson's report for this year, he would not have displayed such astonishing ignorance. I speak warmly, because I think his speech, if published abroad, is calculated to do a great deal of harm. Not only did we establish these gauges, but Captain Douglas was appointed especially to inspect the established gauges at St. Paul's Island, Belle Isle, Father Point, etc., when Mr. Bell Dawson was in the Bay of Fundy establishing these gauges, at the different points—West Port, Briar Island, Digby, N.S., Campobello—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman's chief engineer says that the vote was barely enough to maintain the seven already established. So, when the hon. gentleman says there are seven more this year, there is no money to maintain them.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman has probably read the report of the year before. I am showing what was done the past year. I am as desirous as he is of doing everything necessary in this connection. I realize as much as he does the vast importance of placing our aids to navigation on the best possible footing. Even if my mind were adverse to the value of tidal current survey—I would, if I found a large number of scientific men in favour of it, appreciate my own ignorance sufficiently to yield my opinion to theirs. When we sent Mr. Bell Dawson down to spend the summer in making a tidal survey of the Bay of Fundy, Captain Bloomfield Douglas was appointed to go round and inspect the other tidal surveys—at Father Point, St. Paul's Island, down in the Straits of Belle Isle, and other places. He did rebuild some of these tidal gauges altogether. Altogether we have placed, so far as the tide gauges are concerned—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. A $25,000 vote.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The other night when the hon. gentleman asked me the cost, I told him it was nearly $5,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have just read from your chief engineer's report.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman is reading from the previous year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I gave the year 1897-98, your own engineer's report, and I gave you the page you asked me for.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The amount voted last year was $4,000. That amount was expended, and we have to take a supplementary vote for this very year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Has the hon. gentleman the year 1897-98?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. In 1897-98, we spent $3,081, and the vote for 1898-99 was $4,000. I have to take a supplementary vote in addition, because I have not only to provide the tide gauges on the Atlantic coast, but on the Pacific coast.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I read this from the chief engineer's report, and I do not think the statement is contradicted by any information read in reply. The vote for 1897-98 was $2,500. Does the hon. gentleman's information show that to be wrong?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, I have read the hon. gentleman the expenditure and have not got the vote. The expenditure was $3,081 in 1897-98, and for 1898-99 the vote taken was $4,000, and I have to take a supplementary vote because I have to supply Mr. Dawson's branch with some additional assistance to work at the tide tables. I have given him two excellent young men and may have to enlarge the staff still more because, as he explains in his elaborate and able report—which you will find in the report of the Marine Department from page 78 to page 114—he requires extra assistance and I at once told him he could have it. So far as Captain Smith's concurrence in the benefit and establishment of these self-registering gauges is concerned, I agreed with him, and gave Mr. Dawson all the assistance he wanted. As far as Captain Spain is concerned, he concurred in the necessity and benefit to be derived from these self-registering gauges. The hon. gentleman was kind enough to say that the captain of an Allan steamer, the "California," whose name I gave him, did not exist. He will remember that the other night I said I had crossed in the "California" with Captain Moore, and had a long conversation with him, and Captain Moore expressed the opinion that practical seamen did not place much reliance on the surveys of ocean currents, but we must draw a distinction between the advantages to be derived from the establishment of tide gauges and the surveys of ocean currents. Captain Moore was the captain of the "California" until last fall, and, if I am correctly informed, Captain Brown only came in the month of January. I said the other day, as I say now, that I have an open mind on the subject, and am willing and anxious to be instructed. A Minister of Marine is not supposed to have a perfect personal knowledge of all these matters himself. He must depend on his nautical advisers, and I have found nothing more than lukewarmness, as far as the surveys of the currents are concerned, on the part of practical men. The only question that remains open is whether we should have continued the surveys of the ocean currents. Now, when I came into power, one of the steamers was entirely disabled, and I had no steamer to put on the service, and I did not consider myself in a position to come down and ask Parliament for a vote of $20,000 to supply a steamer, at a time when no one could tell me what was the value of the surveys of these ocean currents. I shall be very sorry if the hon. gentleman should have the impression that I am either indifferent or not anxious to be thoroughly instructed. The very moment he mentioned Captain Smith, I wrote to Captain Smith, asking him to report to me his opinion as to the value of a survey of ocean currents.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Did you write to Commander Spain too?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I should like to see the reports.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You shall see them, because the letters were official. I asked them to let me know, not only their own opinion, but the opinion of practical seamen with whom they came into contact, as to whether they had derived any benefit from the surveys we had made, and considered them of any value. Are they using the survey? Do they look upon them as of any value? Would they advise me to go on with the survey? Even if there was a doubt, I would give them the benefit of the doubt and go on with the work. I am not anxious to curtail in this matter, but the hon. gentleman knows that a Minister cannot get funds for everything; and where there are doubts, the Minister does not press as strongly as he does for those things concerning which his mind is in a state of certainty. The hon. gentleman must understand that, so far as aids to navigation are concerned, there never was a time in the history of the Dominion when there was so much money spent on them or when they were in as good condition as they are to-day. And I am prepared to prove that statement. But, more than that, I am prepared to ask my colleagues for every necessary dollar for this purpose. When any man can point out an aid to navigation that is necessary, I am ready to ask for the money to provide it. This is not a matter where parsimony should be practiced. I shall be able to show what we have done in this matter, and I think we have done a great deal on which we may fairly be congratulated. And if I find that the opinion of those whom I ought to look up to is that the survey of the ocean currents should be resumed, I shall ask for the money necessary for that service. The hon. gentleman says that the geodetic surveys show both the ocean and the shore currents. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. They show the shore currents, but not the ocean currents. And it is the ocean currents, as I understand, of which he wants a survey made. I should be very sorry if the discussion drifted into anything of a controversial character. It should not be a matter of political controversy, at any rate; and the assurance I have given him, I hope he will accept in the spirit that I offer it. What object have I to put a stop to the expenditure of money that I think to be of advantage to the marine interests? None whatever. I am as anxious as he is to have everything done that should be done, and I hope the hon. gentleman will be satisfied with that assurance.

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). I am sure that my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) is not approaching this question in any controversial spirit, as suggested by the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), but entirely with a desire to increase, if possible, the energies of the Minister in a desirable direction. Now, if any reliance is to be placed on the chief engineer in his report of 1897, it is evident that the service of tidal observation has not been continued as it was previously. While the sum appropriated for this purpose in 1894-95 was $11,507.24, it was reduced in 1897-98 to $2,500.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There was a supplementary vote of $1,500. That made a total vote of $4,000. That year the steamer was not employed in the survey of the ocean currents.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That was not in 1897-98, if my recollection is correct. The $4,000 was voted for 1898-99—a very desirable increase, no doubt, but still not enough to bring the total nearly up to the figures of 1894-95.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to explain that in 1897-98 the sum in the Estimates was $2,500, but there was a supplementary vote of $500, making $3,000 for the year, and the expenditure was $3,081.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is somewhat larger, but still—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Of course, I do not base anything upon the amounts.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of course, it is not large as compared with that for 1894-95. I believe it was not found by the officers in charge of the works adequate for the work to be done. If the hon. Minister will pardon me, I may direct his attention to the report of the chief engineer for 1898, in which his statement made in the previous report is referred to:

In the survey of tides and currents, the further investigation of the currents was again suspended this year for lack of funds, although there are several regions in which a better knowledge of the currents is much required, as pointed out in my last report.

Of course, I do not profess to have any knowledge of this subject at all—much less knowledge than the Minister of Marine and Fisheries possesses, but still that is the official report of the officer who is responsible for this work, and, in his view, it seems to be a matter which would require a much larger appropriation than which has been made. And a little lower down on the same page of the same report he says:

The records from the tide stations are yearly increasing in value; but for want of sufficient means and assistance in the work, nothing further has been done in the analysis of additional record, by which the basis of the tide tables would be extended and their accuracy improved.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have explained that I have supplied that hiatus by furnishing an additional staff.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). We are very glad to know that. Still, this is the last report we have on the subject. Further down the chief engineer refers to the tidal stations on the Bay of Fundy:

During last summer, a series of secondary tidal stations were established at points around the Bay of Fundy, for the purpose of securing tidal differences with reference to the principal station at St. John, N.B., for which tide tables are now issued. These differences in the time of the tide for other ports around the bay will extend the usefulness of the St. John tide tables to this whole region.

Now, I should not suppose there could be very much difference of opinion among persons who have given any attention to the subject as to the value of these tidal stations and the observations obtained. It may be that these observations and the results obtained from them are not used very much by our coasting vessels, but certainly they are used, I should suppose, by large vessels and steamships; and it is with regard to these that so much difficulty has occurred with respect to matters of insurance. We in the maritime provinces feel that we are just as much interested in the Gulf of St. Lawrence as are the people of the upper provinces themselves, because everything that throws discredit upon the aids to navigation in the Gulf of St. Lawrence and leads to such disasters there as sometimes occur, tends to throw the same discredit upon all Canadian waters. I beg, therefore, that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries will not suppose that in directing his attention, however warmly, to this matter, we on this side are doing more than discharging what we conceive to be our duty, and that he will take our remarks in a kindly spirit, and will endeavour to make the appropriation an adequate one, so as to do justice to the service, which seems, at the present time, to be somewhat neglected.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

Lighthouse and coast service—Salaries and allowances of light-keepers..... $217,000

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). This increase of $10,000 is owing to the establishment of thirty-two new lights, and the salaries of light-keepers have to be provided therefor. Of these, six are in Ontario, nine in British Columbia, two in Prince Edward Island, four in Quebec, seven in Nova Scotia, two in Manitoba, one in New Brunswick and one on the Newfoundland coast.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is there not the usual increase for these men?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The salaries and agencies are in this.

Mr. KAULBACH. How many lights on the Newfoundland coast are under the maintenance of the Canadian Government?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Three.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Are you going to increase the salaries of these officers? The second officer is always an important man at these stations. Some of these salaries are small. For instance, take Blanchet at Quebec, I do not think Blanchet has had an increase for some time. Tremaine has been at $950 for a couple of years, he is an active man, and almost indispensable. Mr. Parsons came in over his head. I am certain these officers will show that Tremaine has been a very useful man. Blanchet must be a good officer, too. Gregory has been a long time at the agency there. I suppose a good deal depends on a good second man. I think on general principles the Government lose nothing, where the salary is small and there is a good deal of responsibility, in paying these men well who have a good deal of work, in the summer season particularly. Those men are most obliging and useful in many ways where there is no record of the particulars on the files of the department. I would be glad to see them get some encouragement.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman knows Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

how difficult it is in these matters to make increases. You have not to deal with an individual case, but in relation to a lot of other officers who stand in somewhat the same position. Blanchet and these others are very good men, but if you increase one you have to increase all round. We give only one increase here this year, that is in the New Brunswick agency.

Mr. KAULBACH. Will the Minister inform me of the location of these lights on the Newfoundland coast?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is one at Cape Race, we are building one at Flower Ledge, and one at the mouth of Belle Isle.

Mr. FOSTER. Has the Minister revised his opinion with reference to the dismissal of Mr. Palmer, at Palmer's Point?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have not thought much of Mr. Palmer since.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend, I am sure, does not want to commit any injustice. The subject was thoroughly discussed last year and the year before. Mr. Palmer himself was dismissed without any cause, dismissed against the report of the High Commissioner who was sent out to investigate, but in the end the Minister simply had to confess that he could not stand the pressure of the present member for King's, and that he took his authority rather than the commissioner's authority, and dismissed the man because he happened to be the brother of a man who was in active politics. Now, it was abundantly proved that the man who was really the lighthouse keeper took no interest in politics at all, that is, in political work. He is a quiet man who simply goes about his work and does his work. Politics may come and politics may go, he votes, but that is all he does. Now, does not my hon. friend think that it is the maximum of injustice to take away the salary of a deserving employee simply because he happens to be the brother of a man who took part in politics against the present member and in favour of the old member? I think my hon. friend should at least make the amende honourable and put this man back in the place which he always filled with satisfaction, and from which he was dismissed without any shadow of reason.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will look up the case again.

Mr. TAYLOR. In this vote, does he include the sum of $100 to pay Mr. Samuel McCammon for investigating the case of a lighthouse keeper who was dismissed some years ago? A sum was agreed upon by the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and a letter was written which is in the hands of the Minister, which I handed to him a year or two ago, showing that he was to be paid $100. But the sum was not put in the Estimates, and he has not yet been paid. On behalf of Mr. McCammon, who was the commissioner, and who has a claim against the Government which the late Minister promised to settle, I ask that the sum be now placed in the Estimates, or that permission be given to Mr. McCammon to bring suit against the Government.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I remember the hon. gentleman calling my attention to this case. Of course a special vote will have to be taken. To pay a claim for any year previous to the current year, you have to take a special vote. I will look up the papers concerning this case. But before the supplementaries are brought down, if he asks me, I will tell him what the conclusion is.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is an officer on the Pacific coast, a Mr. Gaudin, who is a very good officer, and is increased from $1,500 to $1,600. He not only serves the district he resides in, but he has to do outside work altogether. I think the hon. Minister will agree with me that $1,700 is not a large salary on the coast, as any one knows, and $1,600 is not a large salary at St. John for a responsible officer. Mr. Gregory has $2,200; he is an old officer, of course; but still, I think, if it is not too late that the hon. gentleman should take that into consideration. He is a good officer, a useful man, and his salary is increased only $100.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The object was to put Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and British Columbia on the same level. The inspector in Nova Scotia receives $1,600, and it was a subject of complaint, that the others were below him. They all get $1,600 now.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That cannot be the reason; it was not to put the others on a par with the British Columbia agent, because he is being increased $100 to reach $1,600.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The British Columbia agent is being raised $100. Mr. Harding is being raised only $200 a year. I recommended Mr. Harding's raise, so as to put him on a level with the Nova Scotia agent, and I did the same thing with the British Columbia man, so that they would all get $1,600 a year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not object to Mr. Harding getting $200 of an increase, and practically making them all $1,600; but it does not bring them up to the Quebec agent. The Minister's reason does not seem fair in that sense. This hard and fast and dogmatic rule will not work out. The hon. Minister says, that he has recommended these increases to put all the agents on the same level, but there is the Quebec agent, who gets $2,200. Of course, I know that we cannot get away from the consideration that Quebec is Quebec. You are putting Nova Scotia and New Brunswick on a par, and that is right. But this officer in British Columbia is to get only $100 of an increase, while Mr. Harding gets $200.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think he is satisfied.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have no doubt he is. I have never had a word with him. I have nothing to say against Mr. Harding's increase, but I think the hon. gentleman should encourage an old officer like Gaudin.

Mr. FOSTER. I remember there was an undertaking to limit and restrict these contingencies and to bring matters down to an economical basis. It was, not to allow these outside agencies to subscribe for newspapers for their offices. I see that my hon. friend has gone back on that, which I think was a good rule. I find subscriptions for newspapers in some of these officers, and not in others. I find, amongst the New Brunswick contingencies, a reference to $5 for newspaper subscription for a paper about which I have nothing to say, whose editor is my hon. friend sitting opposite to me (Mr. Ellis). But the question is, as to whether these subscriptions should be made.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He has to have a paper to know about the ships going and coming.

Mr. FOSTER. Is that the reason?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He ought to have it. The agent ought to be kept au courant of shipping.

Mr. FOSTER. He does not buy that paper for shipping news. He knows the shipping news long before the paper gets out, and I dare say, the paper sends its reporter to him for shipping news.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is only $5.

Mr. FOSTER. It is not what the money amounts to; it is the system of allowing one office to get these papers, and another office does not do it. It had become a great abuse, and we had to draw it down, when we made an arrangement in regard to the expenditure for newspapers in the departments at Ottawa.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to mention a matter that has been brought to my attention, and, I think, to the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, in respect to the loss of the schooner "Zina M," which belonged to Mr. Joseph H. Newcombe. The vessel, while on a voyage from Parrsboro' to St. John, laden with a cargo of coal, when making a harbour at Grindstone Island, Cumberland Bay, and in consequence of the buoys at the entrance at said Grindstone harbour having been placed in the wrong positions, through the fault of Government officials, struck on a ledge at the entrance, resulting in a total loss and the drowning of Mr. Newcombe's son. Mr. Newcombe presented a petition to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, asking that he be at least partially reimbursed. No attention has been paid to it, and he cannot get any satisfaction. I can see that there may be a grave objection to entertaining these claims, from the standpoint of the Government and of the public. In fact, I think he says in his letter that a reason of that kind was assigned to him in the first instance, but still it seems to me to be a pretty hard case, from the standpoint of the man, considering the loss of his vessel and of his son. I do not know whether there is any precedent in the department for any compassionate allowance in cases of this kind, or whether the Government have ever considered, if there is no such precedent, as to whether they would allow a petition of right to be brought, or the matter put in such a position that the person aggrieved might present his claim to the Exchequer Court. I do not disguise from myself the difficulties the hon. Minister and the department may have in entertaining a claim of that kind, but I would like the hon. Minister to state what the view of the Government is in regard to this.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I remember the application that the hon. gentleman refers to, and the general tenor of the reply. In the first place, the Government could not acknowledge liability, because it would be making a tremendous opening for claims to be made against the Government under circumstances where there was no real bona fide claim. In addition to that, there is the general principle, that we could not hold ourselves liable if the buoys were out of place, or, if the facts were disputed, we could not refer that to the courts, because, even if the facts were proved, it would never do for us to acknowledge liability. I have no knowledge of any precedent for allowing a compassionate allowance. However, I shall make inquiries into that.

Mr. BERGERON. I find the name "Paquette" in the Auditor General's Report, in this instance, for $17. It occurs in many cases. Is that the Senator?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think it is possible.

Mr. BERGERON. I find that name in many places.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I consulted my officer, and I find it is not the same.

Mr. FOSTER. How does the Minister get his oil supply?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is Canadian oil, obtained under contract and tender from John Macdonald, of Sarnia. Some Standard oil is used for special purposes.

Mr. J. A. GILLIES (Richmond). Does the Minister remember a lighthouse, situated in my county at a place called Point Jerome, near St. Peters? I suppose the hon. gentleman does not remember who is the keeper of that lighthouse at the present time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not.

Mr. GILLIES. The Minister will recollect, I dare say, that very considerable correspondence took place between himself and some gentlemen in St. Peters with reference to the late keeper of the lighthouse.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Who was the late keeper?

Mr. GILLIES. A man named McNeill, and he was dismissed, and I feel inclined to hold the Minister responsible for that dismissal. I am sorry to have to do so, because it was done in a manner that was most unjustifiable. I got a copy of the evidence furnished the Minister, in a sort of circumambient way; I could not get it direct; and there is not a scintilla of evidence in the report of Captain Douglas pointing to any action that Mr. McNeill took in politics. But pressure, cruel pressure, that was brought to bear upon the Minister of Marine, caused him to succumb to the unreasonable request of parties occupying irresponsible positions in that county, and requests coming from men who do not understand the duties that devolve upon a representative. The Minister will remember distinctly that it was with the greatest possible reluctance that he himself complied with the unreasonable request, the almost brutal request, that was made to him to have this man summarily dismissed in mid-winter, and himself and his family thrown out in the street for no cause whatever. I will have something more to say on this subject when the papers are brought down, and I will ask that the item shall stand until then, so that the House may see upon what evidence this man was so harshly treated by the Department of Marine. If the Minister can find any justification for his conduct in that regard, then he has more ingenuity than I or any one else in the House can give him credit for. I, therefore, ask the item to stand.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will give the hon. gentleman the amplest opportunity of discussing this item on the supplementary Estimates.

Mr. GILLIES. I ask the Minister to bring down the file as it is, with all the papers and letters in that connection, and I hope that none of the letters will be missing from the file.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will not take anything from the file.

Mr. GILLIES. If the Minister promises to bring down all the papers by next Thursday, I will withdraw my request to let the item stand. I want all the letters, and they are just as necessary for the information of the House as the report of Captain Douglas himself.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will bring down all the letters the hon. gentleman is entitled to, just as if he made a motion.

Mr. BERGERON. Why should we pay the Kingston city corporation for attending to the city clock light. I see it set forth in the Auditor General's Report. How does that come about?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is an old story. I tried to withdraw it two years ago, and we had the whole corporation of Kingston down about it, and they contended that it is a beacon light for vessels coming into Kingston harbour.

Mr. BERGERON. It is a bad old habit.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, one of these old habits.

Mr. FOSTER. Charles F. Caron, of Quebec, is entered here for an amount of nearly $5,000. Does the Minister get these articles by tender?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They are not got by tender. As I explained the other night, a list of names is given to the agent with whom he is supposed to deal, and he has to certify to the accounts as being the fair market price of the articles, and he is held responsible for his certificate in more ways than one by the officers here who examine these things very closely.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think the hon. gentleman is wrong about that. He is asked with regard to what forms a very large amount of supplies; it is not for an allowance to lightkeepers, or salaries. There has never been anything changed. Tenders were called for to supply the lights above Montreal and that same system is continued now.

Mr. FOSTER. Is there any good reason why you should not call for tenders below Quebec and in the city of Quebec.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not logically, but Quebec is Quebec.

Mr. FOSTER. That is no answer at all. These are merely all stock articles, which are easily tendered upon, which are kept by all the large merchants; and though I have not made a very close inspection of prices, I would venture to say that these are pretty stiff prices, if I can judge from some of them. The whole item amounts to about $5,000, which is a very large sum. It is a tremendous patronage to put into the hands of a political friend, just on a letter sent down from the department to Mr. Gregory at Quebec, telling him: For all that class of articles you are to deal with Chas. Parent. Mr. Parent, no doubt, is a very good friend of the Administration, and no doubt has paid in good contributions to the party fund, and no doubt as every gallon of oil fiddles out of the tank into the can, Mr. Parent says to himself: I must get back a little of what I gave; and the price will be made more than it is to other customers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If the hon. gentleman could point out any overcharges, he would make a good case.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend knows that it is impossible there should not be overcharges. The only way possible to secure reasonable charges is to ask for tenders. Even if you ask for tenders only among friends of the Administration, that would not be so bad. But the practical way taken is to order Mr. Gregory to buy certain classes of articles from such a man.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is the way.

Mr. FOSTER. And the hon. gentleman confesses that he does it, not because it is a good principle, but because Quebec is Quebec.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is the custom that has always been followed. I am surprised that such an energetic reformer as my hon. friend and his friend beside him did not introduce a reform.

Mr. FOSTER. These reformers who have been going about the country for seventeen years telling the people that if they would turn out the Liberal-Conservatives and put in Reformers the affairs of the country would be administered in a businesslike and economical manner—these reformers, when they get into office, fall into the old holes and conduct business on the same basis. My hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Russell) will not stand up and attack this expenditure.

Mr. RUSSELL. I am just waiting for the Finance Minister to explain why he has the same system now as existed before, and why that distinction exists to-day, as it did in past years. Perhaps the ex-Minister of Fisheries, who has had more experience of this system, will be able to explain the reason.

Mr. FOSTER. Then my hon. friend has no reason for this expenditure, but what he can get from us. He did not say that on the hustings. He did not say to the people: Put me in office and I would do exactly what these Tories have been doing and get them to furnish me with the reason.

Mr. RUSSELL. In regard to Halifax, I know pretty well how things are done there, and I know they are done on a business basis, but I really was struck with the anomaly of the different way of doing things in Quebec and other parts of the Dominion of Canada. I presume that as this has always been the custom, the ex-Minister of Marine will be able to give us the real reason for it.

Mr. FOSTER. Do you not think that as the administration is not now in the hands of the ex-Minister of Marine, but the present Minister of Marine and his friends, a good and faithful public servant should look to them for the explanation of the course of the Government instead of to these old Tories?

Mr. RUSSELL. Everybody knows that those things go by routine, year in and year out, and it may be years before anybody discovers them. I do not think anybody knew until to-night that there was any distinction in the way this matter was conducted at Quebec and other places. But when attention is called to it, surely those who had been continuing the custom for eighteen years must know the reason for it. I thought it would be a rather interesting study for the Minister of Finance to inquire into this matter as one of the most interesting branches of ancient history. I was very dull the last couple of hours, under the soporific influence of the ex-Minister of Marine and the ex-Minister of Finance, but this little antiquarian subject which has been suddenly started, has aroused my interest—not because of the amount expended but because of its interest as a subject of curious and antiquarian research.

Mr. FOSTER. Then my hon. friend is an antiquarian politician. When he was making his canvas before the poor taxpayers and the honest yeomen of his county, did he stand frankly before them, and say: I do not care anything about a pound spent here or a dollar spent there, but I would have great anxiety to understand certain antiquarian problems that I thought might be with interest pursued if you would send me to Ottawa. Send me there, I will not try to lighten your taxes, I will not try to encourage habits of economy in the Administration, but will be a tremendous power in finding out certain antiquarian reasons for certain peculiar things. If I do find out the reason, I will not pledge myself that a pound will be struck off here or a dollar there.

Mr. RUSSELL. I did not say that.

Mr. RUSSELL.

Mr. FOSTER. I will take all my pleasure out of it by pursuing antiquarian researches and getting the answers of Tory Ministers explaining the reasons for these long-dated customs. My hon. friend is a perfect sample of the genus Grit.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is a high compliment.

Mr. FOSTER. He will make the most astounding proposals and allegations before the electorate in order to get into office, but when he once gets there, he does not think he ought to ask his own men for explanations, but whenever a tight place is met by my hon. friend, all he has to do is to gratify his inordinate desire for a research and get a reason from members of the Opposition.

Mr. RUSSELL. In Halifax we hear the complaint that the agency of the department there is not as generous to the friends of the Government as it used to be to those on the other side. Of course, I do not quite say that Mr. Parsons is not fair to them, as he, perhaps, was to the others. I only say that that ground of complaint does, to a certain extent exist. As a rule, in the city of Halifax, the patronage of the department is very carefully administered, indeed, and I do not believe there is a case of overcharge allowed. As to myself, where matters of dollars and cents are concerned in my own constituency, I am very careful to see that every dollar gets a dollar's worth for the Government. I am pretty sure that Mr. Parsons rises every account that comes into the department, and I am sure that there is no overcharge. I have been present when parties were complaining that he was cutting down bills too much.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That complaint is not confined to Halifax.

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course, it is fair and reasonable that he should do so. He has a scale of prices that he has established after very careful inquiry, and, in the main, I think the administration of the department is very economical.

Mr. BERGERON. Can the hon. gentleman tell us how much less is spent now than was spent before?

Mr. RUSSELL. I have not examined the blue-books.

Mr. BERGERON. There is no less. Governments exchange, but expenses do not.

Mr. RUSSELL. I know that Mr. Parsons is a very careful man. If my hon. friend can bring a charge against him that he is not careful and prudent and economical, I know that there are many persons who would ask me to get rid of him.

Mr. BERGERON. Are you looking for a position for some one?

Mr. RUSSELL. No; my hon. colleague (Mr. Borden) knows I am not. There is no difficulty in finding a person who is just as competent as the incumbent to fill the position in Nova Scotia. I feel inclined to defend Mr. Parsons, but I never thought to live to see the day when it would be necessary to defend him against his own friends.

Mr. FOSTER. Perhaps my hon. friend (Mr. Russell) would be accurate enough to say who made the attack.

Mr. RUSSELL. It is not at all necessary. It was made at many points. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) and others attacked him very vigorously a few days ago. I was silent. I feel now that I was doing him an injustice in this; but I hear so many members talking in this House that I feel tempted to keep silent.

Mr. FOSTER. And would the hon. gentleman devote his mind to this anomaly, above Montreal and below.

Mr. RUSSELL. That was driven out of my mind when it was insinuated that I was not careful in the way the pounds, shillings and pence were spent in my constituency. If any one can say what can be done to correct it, I shall be glad, but it is for hon. gentlemen opposite to show how this curious antiquarian anomaly has arisen.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Unless the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) has his curiosity satisfied, I am afraid he will obstruct to an unreasonable length the proceedings of this committee. In regard to this question of the maintenance of lights, I did not know he had reached that subject or I would have been glad to contribute a few remarks to the discussion. It is some time since I was connected with the department—it was in 1894, I think—and, as I stated to the hon. Minister, I am taken by surprise at the statement made, on the information of one of his officers, and, no doubt, in good faith. But I think the hon. Minister is misled. My recollection does not bring before me any such distinction as has been pointed out—a distinction which he is not able to explain. I can conceive of no reason for it. My recollection is that in regard to bulky supplies for the lights, whether above Montreal or below, we laid in supplies, receiving offers by tender, and taking great care to secure the department against abuse by getting supplies and otherwise.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You speak of oil and so on.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. All supplies that could be so treated. We had samples of everything which went into the regular supply ship. A ship was chartered for the lights above Montreal, and below our own ships took the stores. It was on this contract system that all supplies were got, it being the exception where things were supplied otherwise. There were some supplies required for ships that had to be got by the retail system—things that were not kept in store. My understanding was—and if I am wrong, I have been under an erroneous impression for a long time—that the bulk of all the materials were kept in store and were bought by regular competition.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. By public tender?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes. And in the case of other goods, the agent had general instructions to buy from those on a patronage list at not more than certain prices, and they had to certify that what they paid was the market price. But the question is more important than whether I was lax or any predecessor of the present Minister failed to observe proper checks. I could plead guilty, and would not object to do so if it would afford any one pleasure. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries can give no reason for such a condition of things except as it affects Quebec, but that would not be satisfactory to the country at large. So far as my experience goes in the department, I would not be in favour of continuing this system, and I think the sooner it is abolished the better. He is putting a fearful responsibility on the men that does not prevail in any of the ordinary departments. For instance, can the hon. gentleman say how much of the $230,000 required for maintenance and so forth, goes for supplies below Quebec?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oil would be quite an item. I will look into that and see.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to refer to a matter that the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) attacked me for the other day. He charged me with making an attack on Mr. Parsons, of Halifax. I never referred to Mr. Parsons at all.

Mr. RUSSELL. The hon. gentleman referred to the agency at Halifax, and Mr. Parsons was the agent.

Mr. TAYLOR. I referred to no agent; I referred to persons generally who supply the goods at outrageous prices in Halifax, as shown by the Auditor General's Report. The Minister now asks me to point out some articles in this amount which have been overcharged, and he will investigate them. I am going to point him to a few. I say it is an outrage that this department purchased from a political friend in the city of Quebec $4,775 worth of goods without tender, and simply allowed him to charge his own prices for them.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is not correct; he is not allowed to charge his own prices, he is bound to supply the goods at the lowest market prices.

Mr. TAYLOR. I will give my hon. friend a few items, and ask him if they are the lowest market prices. The first item is 100 brick at 4 cents a piece, $40 a thousand for brick; and 1,400 at 3½ cents each. Whoever heard tell of brick being sold at those prices?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). Are they fire brick?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not care if they are gold brick. Then, they had to have some lime to set those brick in, and there are six barrels of lime at $1.25. Every one knows that lime is worth 15 cents a bushel by retail; you can buy it by the wagon load for 10 cents a bushel. There are three bushels to the barrel, and he charges $1.25. Then, there is 523 pounds of putty at $1.85. Who ever heard tell of putty being sold at $1.85 per pound?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That must be by the hundred.

Mr. TAYLOR. Now, we come down to an article that everybody knows the price of, iron.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Where is that?

Mr. TAYLOR. On page K—46, 4,117 pounds of iron at 3½ cents a pound, which, everybody knows, is worth $1.25 a hundred?

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. What kind of iron is it? It may be manufactured iron.

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not know. Then, a keg of nails and spikes at $5.75.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Where are you reading from?

Mr. TAYLOR. K—46. Charles A. Parent, of Quebec, one keg at $5.75, one at $4.50 and 18 kegs at $4, when everybody knows that they are worth $1.75 to $2 retail in the country last year. One pair of scissors at $3.50, and another at $5.75. Five screw-drivers at $5.75. Everybody knows that you can buy screw-drivers at 10 to 15 cents. Nine shovels at $8.50, when you can get iron shovels for 50 cents.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. How does the hon. gentleman know what kind of shovels they were?

Mr. TAYLOR. Shovels are made in Gananoque, and I know that a miner's shovel, or a farmer's shovel sells at 65 cents retail, the best made in the country. Here is a water barrel, $3. Probably it was some old empty oil barrel picked out of a back yard, and he charges $3 for it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What about these shovels? 90 cents is not such a terrible price for a shovel.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. TAYLOR. You can buy them in any store in the country for 60 cents. Then, there are half a dozen wrenchs, $12, $2 each. You can buy a cast iron wrench for 5 cents; even for a large monkey wrench, $2 would be an outrageous price. Sundry hardware $100, we do not know what that is.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You can easily get the vouchers.

Mr. TAYLOR. The late Government purchased these supplies by tender.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, they did not.

Mr. TAYLOR. I heard the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals say that a paint brush was not bought on that entire system unless it was bought by tender.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is an absolute mistake, as any man in the maritime provinces knows with regard to railway supplies. The patronage was given to their political friends; I am not complaining of it if the price was fair. But they did not invite public tenders for their supplies, as everybody knows in the maritime provinces.

Mr. BERGERON. But you always said it was bad, and you promised when you came in that you would do better.

Mr. TAYLOR. The late Government never had a system like this.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, they had the same system.

Mr. TAYLOR. Turn up the Auditor General's Report in 1894 and 1895, and see if you will find the same class of items charged in this way.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Take 1895 and 1896.

Mr. TAYLOR. Lime, $1.25 per barrel, and bricks, 4 cents a piece. There is $4,475 paid for this class of items—iron, 3½ cents a pound; nails and spikes, $5.35 a keg.

Mr. COCHRANE. Three cents a pound.

Mr. TAYLOR. I ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries to stay his hand. Of course, these accounts have been certified by somebody.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They have been certified by the agent, and he has been the agent for many years there.

Mr. TAYLOR. We will have to have these accounts looked into, and, if that agent has certified that these prices are the regular market prices for these goods, he should not be allowed to remain in office. There is in these prices either a commission for the agent or a commission for this Government. Mr. Parent has supplied $4,475 worth of goods, when about $2,000 should have been paid for these goods.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You know that statement is absurd.

Mr. TAYLOR. I know that neither you nor any other hon. member on either side of this House would pay such prices for goods for your private use. Why should we pay double prices for goods, when they are bought in large quantities for the use of the country, simply to help a political supporter? If this system had been conducted in this manner by the late Government, my hon. friend promised to change all this. He promised to run this Government on an economical basis. Is he doing it, when these people are allowed to charge these prices for the goods that I have named, and when, as I will show, on a later occasion, they pay double prices in a third-rate store for goods supplied to Rideau Hall?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you suggest that the Minister should personally supervise all these purchases?

Mr. TAYLOR. No, I do not make any such suggestion, but what I do say is, that the system should be changed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Put in new men.

Mr. TAYLOR. The Government should ask for tenders for supplies, according to samples in the department, so that in every article you will have a standard for the article required. You should call for tenders and purchase the goods from the lowest tenderer, no matter what political party he belongs to, if he can furnish the goods according to sample at the lowest price.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is done in regard to the larger articles, such as coal and oil.

Mr. TAYLOR. You paid for a great many large articles in this amount of $4,475, bought from one man.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Would you ask for tenders for 400 bricks?

Mr. TAYLOR. You could ask for tenders for all the brick required by the department throughout the country. The hon. gentleman would not pay 4 cents a piece for brick to build a chimney.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I do not think that they are common bricks at all.

Mr. TAYLOR. They must be uncommon; they should be gold bricks.

Mr. COCHRANE. Mr. Chairman, I am very much surprised, as an humble member of this House, to see hon. gentlemen lounging in their seats that used to be so energetic when the Conservative party was in power. Is it not a fact that, when we were in power, these hon. gentlemen would get up and say, that these prices were extravagant? Why does the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries take shelter behind some poor Tory official? And the member for Halifax comes forward and says: We will turn these fellows out; there are enough Grits who want these positions.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Would it not be right, if he had certified to a wrong account?

Mr. COCHRANE. Well, turn him out, if he has certified to a wrong account. He is trembling in his boots to-day, and, if he does not follow the instructions which are given him, he will get his walking ticket. I am surprised that an hon. gentleman who never lost an opportunity of denouncing every transaction, when on this side of the House, will sit there, lounging in his chair, supporting such expenditures as these.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not lounging. I am sitting in my chair.

Mr. COCHRANE. I am surprised that hon. gentlemen have gone back on their promises in this way. The hon. Minister of Finance says, that he did not say these things, but at the same time these promises were made by the party he is now supporting. If he did not make these promises, he is supporting the party that did make these promises. I say, it is no justification, and any man in this House who knows anything about a business transaction, knows that the Government can go to any hardware store in Ontario and buy nails for 3 cents a pound by retail. Is it any excuse to say, that the Conservatives did these things when they were in power? We would not have this spectacle, if tenders were asked for—above Quebec and below Quebec every thing given to their friends, because it is Quebec. Is it because Quebec is different from any other part of Canada, or because the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) has got the Government by the throat or because business is business, and you have to do what he tells you?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Perhaps hon. gentlemen are more familiar with what has been said in Ontario than I am. I am not familiar with what may have been said in Ontario, but I am bound to say, that in all discussions of public questions that took place before the elections in Nova Scotia, I never heard anybody refer to these matters. Hon. gentlemen say this was one of the great questions at the general elections.

Mr. COCHRANE. We heard it in this House.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That may be; the hon. gentleman has probably a better knowledge of what took place in this House than I have. But the question is, whether the prices mentioned here are fair and reasonable.

Mr. COCHRANE. They are not.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman has no information upon which to make that statement, because he can form no opinion on the information contained in this book. The details are not given in such a way to enable the hon. gentleman to say whether the price is fair, and whether a shovel is worth so much or not. There is no information in the possession of the hon. gentleman which will enable him to say whether the prices are excessive or not, but if the hon. gentleman can prove that they are, before the Public Accounts Committee, we will deal with that matter. The hon. gentleman had no ground for attacking Mr. Parsons as he did by representing that that gentleman had certified to excessive accounts. I have had a complaint from a gentleman in Halifax who thought Mr. Parsons was too exacting. He wrote to me, and I said I could not interfere, as Mr. Parsons was required to certify that the prices were fair and reasonable. I agree that, if an officer of the Government certified to prices that were outrageous, he should be dismissed, I do not care whether he is a Tory or a Grit. Let us ask ourselves, whether these prices are fair and reasonable, and, if they are, and if we take the statement of those who are informed upon that point, the committee will come to the conclusion that there is no ground for complaint.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In reference to this question of responsibility resting on the Government, which professes to be a business Government, to see that these extraordinary prices should not be paid, the ground is taken, that the officer who permits such extraordinary prices, ought to be dismissed, but if he is not dismissed and the Government retain him, I contend the Government is responsible.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If there is evidence that the prices are unjust.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, but not to be brought to their notice by people making charges. The Ministers have the opportunity to censure or dismiss an official, and if they submit the Public Accounts without taking such action, they cannot shelter themselves behind a statement that it is a Tory or a Liberal official. I protest against the Minister's interjection now and again that an officer was this or that. The Ministers are responsible to Parliament and the officers are responsible to the Ministers.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is theoretically right, but in this practical world, we know that, as a matter of fact, a Minister has to permit a great many things to be done by his subordinates of which he can have no personal knowledge, but for which he has to accept the responsibility. The practice in the Marine Department is that these accounts are certified by the agent, reviewed by an officer in the department, and if he thinks they are too high, it is the subject of correspondence.

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And the item refused payment sometimes.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. A gentleman finds one shovel charged at 65 cents and another at 90 cents, but he takes no trouble to inquire about the quality of these, and he makes a complaint. Now, a shovel is not a shovel in all parts of the world.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have a little knowledge of shovels.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes, there is said to be a little combine in them that you know of.

Mr. TAYLOR. You need not only refer to shovels, but how do you account for the high price of nails and the high price of baking powder. All the reference I made to Halifax was that these things cost more in Halifax than they did in St. John, and I did not refer to the agent in one place or the other. I will have Mr. Parent's account at the next meeting of the Public Accounts Committee, and I will get an explanation of it there.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is fair.

Mr. TAYLOR. No sensible man in the country would pay 50 cents a pound for fifty-nine pounds of baking powder. My hon. friend (Mr. Earle) tells me that baking powder bought for the Yukon district this year under tender cost only 13½ cents per pound, and it is of the very best quality and equal to any made in the town of Brantford.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). The city of Brantford.

Mr. TAYLOR. I beg your pardon, the city of Brantford. Look at all the items through the account, and see what the charges are. Nails, $5.75 a keg; iron, 3½ cents a pound, and brick 4 cents a piece.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If you look at the same item you will see 700 bricks at 1½ cents. Why do you not read that?

Mr. TAYLOR. There are hard brick and soft bricks, and if these were fire brick they would be so entered.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The Auditor General's clerk does not copy the whole account.

Mr. TAYLOR. These are no doubt soft brick.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Why do you say "no doubt?"

Mr. TAYLOR. Because, if they were not they would be entered differently. This is money paid to some political friend, the same as they paid two prices for iron and two or three prices for nails.

Mr. BERGERON. Before we pass this discussion, I want to know from my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies) and from the Government, what is meant by the expression, "Quebec is Quebec."

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know, I heard the phrase coming from the other side of the House.

Mr. BERGERON. No doubt, the people of Quebec did wrong on the 23rd of June, 1896, but that is no reason why the Minister of Marine should reflect upon them. I heard the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce speak badly of the maritime provinces, but I do not want to hear any of the Ministers speak badly of the province of Quebec. The Minister of Marine used the expression, "Quebec is Quebec," and there must be some reason given for it, or else the people of Quebec may change their minds about the present Government.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It is very well that these items should be inquired into, but was the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor) quite fair in his criticism when he mentioned bricks at 4 cents a piece, and in the very same item, where there are bricks entered at 1½ cents each, he never said a word about them until the Minister of Marine called his attention to it. He knows that these bricks at 4 cents a piece may be fire bricks, and that they are very expensive. The hon. gentleman must know that an agent would not, in the same account, certify bricks at 1½ cents each, and again certify the same bricks at 4 cents each. The hon. gentleman must know that there was a difference in the quality of the bricks. That very fact would tend to show that the hon. gentleman was not fair in his argument.

Mr. TAYLOR. My hon. friend the Minister of Customs knows the commercial name of brick. He knows also the commercial name of fire-brick, and he knows he cannot buy fire-brick for four cents a piece.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. How much do you pay for them?

Mr. TAYLOR. I know what I pay for them. You cannot buy them under 12½ cents a piece.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. I think you are mistaken.

Mr. TAYLOR. I am not. I buy them every year for my furnace.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. So do I.

Mr. TAYLOR. I pay the Rathbun Co. about 12½ cents a piece for them.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Those must be gold bricks.

Mr. TAYLOR. If an entry is made in the Customs Department of brick, what will it call for? The ordinary building brick, and there are two qualities, hard and soft. If there is an entry for fire-brick, the goods will be entered as fire-brick.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. In the customs these entries must be specified, but the Auditor General does not go into the full commercial details in every case.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman called notice to the expenditure of nails, and said they were charged at $5, but I find by the account they are charged $2.90 to $5, and $2.90 is not excessive for good nails.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend's illustration of "Quebec for Quebec," he has not yet explained. I suppose my hon. friend's hand is not quite free in the city of Quebec. Down in the maritime provinces, things are carried on differently. I notice that when Mr. Burpee, of St. John, or Mr. Black, of Halifax, charged for iron, they charged the commercial prices, but in Quebec I find the iron is charged at a tremendous price. Shovels in Halifax are charged at 55 cents, but in Quebec we have to pay 90 cents. Iron is charged at 1½ cents in Halifax and St. John, but at Quebec it is paid for at the rate of $5 to $2.90. On the face of it, there is something that ought to be looked into, and when the hon. Minister of Marine gave the explanation that outside of Quebec no tenders were called for, but that Quebec is Quebec, he had no doubt some arrière pensée. He is not quite free, and not master of the administration.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. How many masters are there?

Mr. FOSTER. Just at present every Minister is his own master.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is a large item here on K-42 for coal. What instructions does the hon. gentleman give to the Quebec agent in regard to the purchase and sale, so far as the domestic coal is concerned. My great difficulty was to prevent him buying Scotch coal when we could supply any amount of our own.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That has ceased for some time, and there is no foreign coal got at Quebec.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to withdraw the statement that I made a moment ago. The Minister said that by looking at the Auditor General's Report, I would find I had made a mistake. I find I did, because I find the first item $5, then comes the next item, thirty-five at 4½ cents, eighteen at 4 cents, two at $3.50, two at $3.25, four at $3, three at $3, two at $2.96, and two at $3.25. Now, the hon. gentleman knows that double prices are charged all there, if compared with the average. Some charge more for shingle nails than for the large size, but these are all charged at the rate of high-priced nails, and when bought at the factory, large and small nails are bought at the same price.

The committee rose and reported progress.

ADJOURNMENT—SPRING STEAMER TO CHARLOTTETOWN.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I promised the hon. member for East Queen's (Mr. Martin), who is not present, that I would draw the attention of the Government to a statement in the "Daily Examiner" of Charlottetown, May 16th, in regard to a matter of public interest in Prince Edward Island:

We have a striking instance of this fact in the failure of the Government to authorize the expected visit of a spring steamer to sail from Charlottetown to Liverpool. Farmers and exporters who have fed and purchased cattle in the expectation that an ocean steamer would call here this spring have been disappointed and put out on account of the dilatoriness of the Government in this regard. The cattle and other things prepared for export to England have now to be sent to Halifax, St. John, St. John's and other places.

I know little about the subject, but the hon. gentleman desired me to press upon the Government, if possible, that the same convenience should be afforded as was afforded in a former season.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Last year a sum of $5,000 was voted, and they had a steamer that made three trips, and very useful they were. This year we are asking for another grant of $5,000, but it is not available until the 1st July. I have not been lying on my oars in this matter. I have made repeated applications to different steamship owners in Montreal to see if they would not put a steamer on. I have consulted the Minister of Agriculture—

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They seem to expect it just as they had it last summer.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No doubt. Nobody could do more than I have done to get it. I am in correspondence with Mr. Campbell at this moment. I forwarded to the Board of Trade at Charlottetown Mr. Campbell's last letter. The prospect is not very bright for getting it just now.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.25 a.m.

Mr. TAYLOR.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 25th May, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 128) to amend the Weights and Measures Act. He said: The Bill relates to a difficulty that has risen, especially in Nova Scotia, with respect to the correct measurement of apple barrels. In that province apples form one of the most important products of agriculture. I may also mention that several hon. members of this House have given notice of other Bills which will affect, to a certain degree, the legislation on weights and measures, if their views are adopted by the House. I would suggest that all their Bills, after they have passed their second reading, should be referred along with this one to a Committee of the Whole House to be dealt with in the same way in which we proceeded last year with a measure of a similar nature.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

TRANSFER OF PROPERTY NEAR STEVESTON, B.C.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked:

Has the Government transferred any property near Steveston, British Columbia, and adjoining section 9, Range 7 West, Block 3 North, N.W.D., to the Government of British Columbia?

(a) If so, when?

(b) If not, has any correspondence on this subject passed between the two Governments, and if so, what is the nature and effect of it?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. No. (a) Answered by No. 1. (b) No correspondence upon the subject can be found.

ACCOUNTS BETWEEN DOMINION AND ONTARIO GOVERNMENTS.

Mr. FOSTER (by Mr. Taylor) asked:

In what sum was the province of Ontario indebted to the Dominion Government on 30th June, 1898, and what rate per cent was chargeable thereon?

In what sum was the Dominion Government indebted to the Ontario Government on 30th June, 1898, and what was the rate per cent allowed?

What was the net amount of interest due to the Ontario Government on 30th June, 1898, and what payments have been made thereon since that date?

At what periods of each financial year is it usual to make interest payment to the Ontario Government, and what payments thereon have been made during the current fiscal year ?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Until the arbitrators have made their final awards the indebtedness of the province of Ontario to the Dominion Government on the 30th June, 1898, cannot be exactly determined, but an approximation of the indebtedness was made at $1,650,000, which did not include any amount for the claims made by the Dominion for payments to the Indians under the Robinson Treaties and Treaty No. 3, as these claims were before the courts and the arbitrators. On this approximate indebtedness 4 per cent per annum was chargeable in accordance with the agreement with the provinces in 1894. There have been at the credit of the province of Ontario since confederation :

The Upper Canada Grammar School Fund	$ 312,769 04
The Upper Canada Building Fund, now amounting to.....	1,597,076 59
And Ontario's share of the Common School Fund, which fund now amounts to.....	2,521,501 25

And on these amounts 5 per cent interest has been allowed to the present time. As the indebtedness of Ontario to the Dominion could not be determined, the net amount of interest on the 30th of June, 1898, could not be definitely arrived at, but $95,000 was paid to the province pending a final settlement of the accounts. It is usual to make interest payments to the Ontario Government in July and January, and in July, 1898, $45,000 (charged in the accounts of 1897-98), and $50,000 (charged in the accounts of 1898-99) were paid, and in January, 1899, $50,000 were paid.

MR. J. C. BLAIS, PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Was J. C. Blais, engineer, of the Public Works Department, at Chicoutimi, a boarder with J. C. Clareau, at Chicoutimi, in 1896 and 1897 ?

2. How much per day or per month did he pay ?

3. What sums were paid to Mr. Clareau for the board of Mr. Blais, in 1896, and for how long a time, and what sums in 1897, and for what length of time ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. Yes. 2. $2 a day. 3. For 1896, 41 days at $2, $82 ; for 1897, 166 days at $2, $332.

RESIDENCE OF MR. JUSTICE MARTIN.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. In what county of British Columbia does the Hon. Mr. Justice Martin reside and usually discharge his duties ?

2. What is the county assigned to him as the county in which he shall reside, &c., by the terms of the Order in Council appointing him ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). To the first portion of the question the answer is, New Westminster. To the second, Victoria. I may add that, by letters patent, Mr. Justice Martin is not assigned to any place.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I suppose the hon. gentleman distinguishes between an Order in Council and letters patent in that case. The first answers to an Order in Council.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes. The last portion of the answer refers exclusively to letters patent. I do not know that it makes any difference as to the fact.

RESIDENCE OF THE CHIEF JUSTICE OF BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. What district is named in the Order in Council appointing the hon. the Chief Justice of British Columbia as the one in which he shall reside and usually discharge his duties ?

2. In what district does the hon. the Chief Justice actually reside ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). The answer to the first question is, Victoria judicial district. 2. New Westminster. Perhaps I may add that, when he was appointed, Chief Justice McColl was assigned to the Victoria district, and Mr. Justice Martin to the New Westminster district, Chief Justice McColl resided at New Westminster and Mr. Justice Martin at Victoria. It was represented to the department that no inconvenience resulted from the fact that they were allowed to continue to reside at these places. The arrangement was concurred in temporarily, with the understanding that if any inconvenience was pointed out, a change of residence must take place.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I did not put the question on the paper on the supposition that any inconvenience had resulted from the actual residence of these two judges.

DATE OF MR. F. C. WADE'S ARRIVAL AT DAWSON.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

Referring to "Hansard," 1899, page 1879, April 19th, where the hon. the Minister of the Interior, in reply to a formal question, says, "Mr. F. C. Wade arrived in Dawson on or about March 20th, 1898," and the "Hansard," 1899, page 3184, where, in reply to a formal question the hon. the Minister of the Interior states that "Mr. F. C. Wade arrived at Dawson 26th February, 1898," which is the correct statement of fact ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The first report of my statement is evidently incorrect. The correct date is 26th February, 1898.

AUTHORITY FOR LEASING DAWSON WATER FRONT.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. Under what statutory authority, if any, were Messrs. Morrison & McDonald put in or allowed to take possession of or enjoy the control of the land known as the "water front" in Dawson?

(a) Has the Government approved of or confirmed the action taken by the officials in Dawson respecting the so-called "leasing" of this property to Morrison & McDonald?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. Under section 4 of chapter 22, Revised Statutes of Canada, the Minister of the Interior has control of all Crown lands, except those under the control of other departments mentioned in this section. The public lands in Yukon Territory are under his control, and Mr. Thomas Fawcett was authorized by the Governor in Council to act for the Minister of the Interior in matters relating to the administration of the Yukon territory. The question whether Mr. Fawcett's action regarding the water front was within his powers has never been formally determined. 2. The Government has taken no action respecting the lease referred to.

SURVEY OF LANDS IN YUKON TERRITORY.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. What lands, if any, have been laid off in the Yukon district, under the provisions of cap. 29, Act 1897, section 19?

(a) If the so-called "water front" in Dawson was so laid off, when was it laid off?

(b) Has the town-site of Dawson been duly patented? If so, when?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. The following lots have been surveyed under instructions of the Surveyor General, in accordance with the provisions of chapter 29, Act 1897, section 19:—Lots 1 to 11 inclusive, group 1; also, four lots which have not yet received numbers. Lots 1 to 13 inclusive, group 2. Lots 1 to 4 inclusive, group 3. Lots 1 to 4 inclusive, group 4. There is no information in the Surveyor General's office as to any lands surveyed in the Yukon Territory since surveys were placed under the direction of the present commissioner. (a) The so-called "water front" in Dawson is part of lots 2 and 3, group 2. It was laid off at the end of March, 1898. (b) No.

VOTE OF REPEAL OF SCOTT ACT. IN COUNTY OF BROME.

Mr. MOORE (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. What is the cause of the delay in taking the vote in the county of Brome on the repeal of the Scott Act?

2. When will the vote be taken?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There has been no unusual delay.
Mr. SIFTON.

in this matter. The matter has been proceeded with as fast as routine business would allow, and the voting is to take place on the 20th of June.

REPORTS OF MR. OGILVIE.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

Will the hon. the Minister of the Interior advise the House so soon as he receives it of the arrival of any report of Mr. Ogilvie upon or respecting the investigation into the complaints of the committee of miners at Dawson?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The answer is, yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. Has the report of Mr. Ogilvie, referred to on page 14 of the Report of the Department of the Interior for 1898, been received?

(a) If so, when will it be laid on the Table of the House?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The answer is, no.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does that refer to both parts of the question?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes, both parts.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. With the consent of the Minister of the Interior, I would like to refer to question No. 16. It is not really expressed as it should have been. Subsection (a) which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) answered in the negative, was meant simply to refer to that passage of the report where a reference is made to Mr. Ogilvie's report on the operations of the year, and the regret expressed that it did not arrive in time to be included with his annual report, but would form afterwards an appendix. My question was meant to evoke, in the event of its not being received at present, a statement from the Minister whether that report when received would be promptly laid on the Table of the House.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. That is not the question asked.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is not. But I ask the Minister if he would answer it now without my putting a formal question.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The first part of the question of the hon. gentleman was as to whether we have received the report or not.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I admit that the answer to the question as put was correct.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The second part of the question was, When will it be laid on the Table, and, of course, we could not say that as we had not received it. In reply to what the hon. gentleman suggests now, I beg to say, that as soon as the report is received it will be copied and laid on the Table of the House.

I.C.R.—FREIGHT RATES ON FLOUR.

Mr. McDOUGALL asked :

What was the regular tariff collected per car-load on flour carried between Chaudière and St. John, Halifax, Pictou and Sydney, over the Intercolonial Railway in June, 1896 ?

What was the tariff between same points in June, 1897 and 1898 ?

What was the tariff between Montreal and same points in June, 1898 ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I will have to ask the hon. gentleman to move for a return in this case, as the answer will be voluminous.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It is a well-known fact that a return cannot be got down to the House this session.

WORKS ON RIVER NICOLET.

Mr. LEGRIS asked :

1. In what years were the dredging and wharf-building works at the mouth of the River Nicolet done ?

2. How much has the Government spent yearly on the said works ?

3. Is the Government informed whether it is true that the said works are going to ruin ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. Works were commenced in the fall of 1881. 2 :

1881-82	$ 594 52
1882-83	10,474 12
1883-84	30,995 76
1884-85	17,116 28
1885-86	10,855 54
1886-87	6,778 32
1887-88	19,058 83
1888-89	10,999 93
1889-90	12,492 72
1890-91	8,030 24
1891-92	8,904 61
1892-93	1,953 50
1893-94	562 50
1894-95	72 17
1895-96	10,091 50
1897-98	Nil.

Total $148,980 54

3. An examination will be made to ascertain the condition of the work. But the Government is aware that it is in a poor state of repair.

MR. J. L. BIGGAR—15TH BATTALION.

Mr. ROBERTSON (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Has Paymaster J. L. Biggar, 15th Battalion, been appointed to the militia service in connection with what is called an Army Service Corps ? If so, is it a permanent appointment ?

2. What military qualification, if any, has he ?

3. Will he be sent to England at the public expense for a course ?

4. Has the Minister of Militia not stated in this House that no officer would be sent to England for a course unless in possession of the highest qualification obtainable in Canada ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The answer to this question is, no.

PERMANENT FORCE—BREVET PROMOTIONS.

Mr. ROBERTSON (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Does paragraph 54, Regulations and Orders for the Militia, 1898, in regard to brevet promotion of officers of the permanent force, meet the approval of the Minister of Militia ?

2. Is it intended to change it ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). All regulations and orders promulgated in the "Canada Gazette" are recommended by the General Officer Commanding, and approved by the Minister of Militia and Defence. Any changes must be similarly recommended and approved. I am not aware that it was intended to change the regulations referred to.

LIST OF REGIMENTAL ESTABLISHMENTS.

Mr. ROBERTSON (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

Has a list of regimental establishments for the years 1897, 1898 and 1899 been submitted to Parliament annually, as required by Order in Council published in Militia General Orders, dated 20th January, 1893 ? If so, on what date ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The list for 1897 was laid on the Table of the House on August 24th, 1896, but I am unable to find that the list for 1898 was laid on the Table of the House. A general order requiring this to be laid on the Table of the House is no longer in force.

MILITIA REGULATIONS.

Mr. ROBERTSON (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

On what date, in the years 1897, 1898 and 1899, were regulations made under authority of the Militia Act laid before Parliament in accordance with clause 126 of the Militia Act ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). Regulations made in 1897, 1898 and 1899 were published in the "Canada Gazette." They were never specially laid before Parliament, except once, since confederation.

PERMANENT FORCE—APPOINTMENT OF OFFICERS.

Mr. ROBERTSON (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Has it been found advantageous to the militia to appoint officers to the permanent force who were not qualified ?

2. Is it advantageous to the militia to retain officers in the permanent instructional schools who are not qualified ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). No officers have been appointed to the permanent force who were not qualified under the terms of the regulations existing at the dates of their appointments.

MILITIA ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. ROBERTSON (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

Is it intended to amend the Militia Act this session? If so, in what respect?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The matter is under consideration.

EASTERN EXTENSION—CLAIM OF NOVA SCOTIA GOVERNMENT.

Mr. McDOUGALL asked :

1. Has the subject of the claim of the Government of Nova Scotia for a refund of the subsidy paid by Nova Scotia towards the construction of the Eastern Extension received the consideration of the Government?

2. If so, has the Government decided to pay the claim? If not, why not?

3. Has the recent visit of the Premier of Nova Scotia been in connection with this subject?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). To the first question I may say, the matter has received, and is still receiving the consideration of the Government. To the second question I may say, no decision has yet been reached. To the third question I may say, the Premier of Nova Scotia, whilst in Ottawa, did urge this question, with others, upon the Government.

INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY SUPERINTENDENT.

Mr. GAUVREAU asked :

1. Whether the Minister of Railways is aware that a report of the general manager of the Intercolonial Railway was favourable to the retaining of the headquarters of the superintendent at Rivière du Loup, or that, at bottom, he desired to maintain them in the same locality as in the time of ex-Superintendents McDonald and Ouellet, but that influences alien to the county of Témiscouata and to the district of Kamouraska prevailed against the decision or opinion, verbal or written, of Mr. Pottinger?

2. Has there been correspondence between the Minister, or the general manager, and certain persons at Lévis or Quebec on this subject?

3. Who has suggested this change to the Minister of Railways, or to the general manager, Mr. Pottinger, this year?

4. Had requests been already made, prior to this year, for the transfer of these offices to Lévis, and if so, when and by whom?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. To the first question the answer is, no. 2. To the second question the answer is, no. 3. To the third question the answer is, the general manager suggested the change. 4. To the fourth question I say the answer is, not that I am aware of.

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

NAVIGABILITY OF BATISCAN RIVER.

Mr. MARCOTTE (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Whether the Batiscan River is navigable at its mouth?

2. Whether the Government have received petitions from the parishioners of St. Genéviève de Batiscan and others, complaining that the said river had been obstructed by piers, which impeded navigation?

3. Whether the Government have inquired into this matter, and whether they intend to comply with the prayer of the said petitions?

4. What do they propose doing in relation thereto?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. Yes, during the ordinary stages of the waters, for boats drawing 3½ feet of water. 2. Yes. 3. The Government has inquired into this matter. A petition has been received from St. François-Xavier de Batiscan, praying that the Messrs. Price Bros. & Co. may be allowed to maintain their works in that river. The remedy suggested by the chief engineer is the removal of a pier from its present position in the centre of the channel to the outer edge. 4. The matter is under consideration, with a view of conforming with the chief engineer's suggestions.

YUKON FORCE—MAJOR BLISS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. What amount of public money has been paid to Major Bliss since he was connected with the Yukon service?

(a) As salary or pay?

(b) For travelling allowance or expenses?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). The answer to the first part of this question has already been given. The total amount paid up to the month of April from April, 1898, is $2,829. The answer to the second question is, $1,100, which includes purchase of ten dogs, and travelling outfit for use of the force in the Yukon, and to receipt of which, dogs, &c., has been acknowledged by the commandant in his last despatches.

SUPERINTENDENT, ST. OURS LOCK.

Mr. MONK (by Mr. Gillies) asked :

1. Why was Mr. Coderre, late superintendent of the lock at St. Ours, River Richelieu, dismissed?

2. Who was appointed in his place?

3. What was the business of the new incumbent previous to his appointment as superintendent of said lock?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. Mr. Coderre, late superintendent of the lock at St. Ours, was dismissed for irregularities in his accounts and other reasons. 2. Mr. Olivier Laventure was appointed in place of Mr. Coderre. 3. He was a trader of St. Ours, P.Q.

CHAMBLY CANAL INVESTIGATION.

Mr. MONK (by Mr. Gillies) asked :

1. Is it true that the Government has ordered an investigation into the management of the Chambly Canal ?

2. By whom was such investigation demanded, and for what purpose ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. The Government ordered an investigation into the management of the Chambly Canal, which has taken place. 2. The investigation was demanded by Mr. Willett and others. For contravention of canal regulations and undue political partisanship.

ARRIVAL OF IMMIGRANTS LAST YEAR.

Mr. CLARKE (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

How many immigrants arrived in Canada during the year ending 31st December last ? How many of these became settlers in Canada ? How many homesteads were taken up last year ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 31,702 immigrants arrived in Canada during the year ending 31st December last, with the declared intention of settling in Canada permanently. No means exists for tracing these settlers to their destination absolutely, but the officers of the Government have means of knowing whether substantially the greater portion of them or nearly all of them will settle permanently. It would be impossible, however, to give absolute figures on that subject. In reply to the latter part of the question, 4,848 homesteads were taken up last year.

I.C.R.—PURCHASE OF CARS.

Mr. CLARKE (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

How many palace or sleeping cars were ordered by the Government for the Intercolonial Railway, between the 1st January, 1888, and 1st April, 1899 ? To what company or firm were the orders given ? Were public tenders called for ? What prices are to be paid for each class of car ? Why were not the orders for these cars given to Canadian firms so as to provide work for Canadian citizens ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Sixteen palace and sleeping cars were ordered by the Government for the Intercolonial Railway between the 1st of January, 1888, and the 1st April, 1899. The orders were given to the Crossen Car Company for eight of these cars, and to the Wagner Palace Car Company for the other eight cars. Tenders were not called in 1888 for five of these cars, but tenders were called for eleven. $14,045 each for five sleepers and $19,940.80 each for eight sleepers and $9,800 for each of the three parlour cars. The cars recently ordered were obtained from the Wagner Palace Car Company after tenders asked for and obtained from several large firms in the United States. The department, before making a contract with United States manufacturers, had applied to the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway Companies, Messrs. Crossen and Company, and Messrs. Rhodes, Curry & Co. for offers. The two last mentioned firms declined to tender for these cars on the ground that the orders they had then on hand from the Intercolonial Railway were all they could fill within the time allowed. The first two companies would not undertake the work, as their shops were overcrowded with their own work. The department needed these cars for the opening of the tourist season this spring, and had no alternative than to place these orders with the Wagner Palace Car Company, whose tender was the lowest of the United States firms.

CANADA EASTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. FOSTER (by Mr. Taylor) asked :

1. Has any promise been made, officially or otherwise, by the Government or any member thereof, to any person or corporation to purchase the Canada Eastern Railway of New Brunswick ?

2. If so, what was the amount offered therefor ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). No promise has been made by the Government, either officially or otherwise, to purchase the Canada Eastern Railway.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. gentleman has not answered the full question. He has merely answered for the Government, not for individual members.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have answered the question fully.

LEVIS MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. How many persons are employed for carrying the mails from the central post office or from the ferry landing at Lévis to branch post offices in the same town or its immediate neighbourhood ?

2. What are the names of such persons ?

3. What salary or price do they receive for their services ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. Five. 2. Joseph Verrault, Geo. Bordeleau, Alphonse Lafamme, François Gingras. 3. George Bordeleau, $260 (two contracts) ; Joseph Verrault, $75 ; Alphonse Lafamme, $150 ; François Gingras, $315. The services performed by the various contractors are as follows :—Lévis and Beaumont, from Lévis to Beaumont and back. Geo. Bordeleau, $160 ; Lévis and Guay, from Lévis to Guay and back, Joseph Verrault, $75 (temporary agreement) ; Lévis and Lauzon, from Lévis to Lauzon and back via Bienville, Geo. Bordeleau, $100 ; Lévis and railway station, Alphonse Laflamme, $150; Lévis street letter box service, via Guay and Notre Dame de Lévis, François Gingras, $315. Under this contract mails are conveyed as follows:—(1) from Lévis to Notre Dame de Lévis and back; (2) from Lévis to letter boxes, via Guay, which is also served under the Lévis and Guay service; (3) from Notre Dame de Lévis to Villemay and back.

EMPLOYMENT OF JOSEPH VERRAULT.

Mr. CASGRAIN (by Mr. Dugas) asked :

1. Is one Joseph Verrault, of Lévis, in the employ of the Post Office Department ?
2. If so, in what capacity ?
3. What is his salary ?
4. If he is employed in a dual capacity, what pay or emolument does he receive in each ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). Joseph Verrault is postmaster at Guay, County of Lévis, and for his services as such is allowed the usual percentage of the revenue of his office. He also holds a contract for the conveyance of mails between Guay and Lévis, for which he receives $75 a year.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) rose to move :

That from this date to the end of the session, Government Orders have precedence on Wednesdays, immediately after questions to be put by members.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Might I ask the hon. gentleman to allow that to stand until the evening session, as the leader of the Opposition would, no doubt, like to be here when it is moved, although I am not aware that he would object to it.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am very happy to extend the courtesy.

Motion allowed to stand.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. Speaker, it was my intention, before the Orders of the Day were called, to make a motion which would have afforded me an opportunity of making a statement to this House to which I attach considerable importance; but, realizing that the hon. leader of the Opposition may also attach some importance to it, and that he is unavoidably absent to-day, I will not avail myself of the opportunity to-day, but will wait until to-morrow.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Hear, hear.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Before the Orders of the Day are called, Mr. MULOCK.

I want to remind the members of the Government of a promise, the last, I think, on record made by that Government, that they would make an effort to produce before this House and lay on the Table certain returns which were asked for before the holidays, and to which particular attention was called. The right hon. leader of the Government seems to have forgotten them, and I would now remind him, first of all, of a return ordered by this House in March, 1898, over a year ago, of all the correspondence in regard to the Manitoba prosecutions. That is a subject that engaged the attention of a committee of this House last session, and a committee of the House is now occupied in dealing with it this session. A return of this character would be obviously important, because it would clear up the question as to how many of the papers or documents that were in the possession of the Government have not already come to light in the ordinary way before the Public Accounts Committee, which of course has been furnished merely with such documents as passed through the hands of the Audit Department. Then, there was a question concerning Deadman's Island. The hon. gentleman who moved for the papers on that subject is not in his seat; but it is a subject of such general interest, that I myself, with the hon. gentleman who has charge of the motion, pressed upon the attention of the Government the necessity for some expedition in preparing that return. I have also privately urged it upon the Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden). There did not seem and there does not seem to be any reason for the extraordinary delay that has occurred in the preparation of these papers, which involve a question of title—a question that concerns not only the lessee of this Government, but the people of this country and the government of British Columbia. The matter has finally reached the courts, and notwithstanding this House is primarily charged with the matter and this subject engaged the attention of the Government before this session of Parliament was convened, it seems extraordinary that the Government should be pressing the despatch of public business and the consideration of the ordinary supplies without furnishing the House of Commons with the papers that must have been before the Privy Council, because different deputations have been received and final opinions given on the part of the Government with regard to the titles. That is one question, but underneath all that and the reason for expedition is the extraordinary price that was paid for this public property—$500 a year for twenty years—given without notice to the public, without competition, for a property valued, as I have been informed by reliable people wholly devoid of political feeling in the matter—because both Liberals and Conservatives ranged on one side or the other on the locality question—very much higher. Therefore, there is, I think, all the more reason for extraordinary expedition in the preparation of this return.

Then I have a right to claim some attention at the hands of the hon. Minister of the Interior with regard to procedure I adopted more than a week ago with reference to the ordinary rule that when a Minister in debate refers to written documents, they should be promptly laid on the Table by the Minister making such reference.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman is going too far.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not intend to dilate upon the matter, but simply draw attention to the fact. In order not to take up the time of the House, I simply gave the reference in "Hansard" to the hon. Minister, taking it for granted that, by his silence, he consented to furnish the documents. But no attention has been paid to that subject, and I mention it now simply to say that I will be absolutely compelled to make a formal motion and a long discussion with regard to it.

There is also a return with regard to the sheriff's appointment in the Yukon. Only the formal papers were asked for, and the House gave its order on May 15th. These papers cannot be voluminous, but none are forthcoming.

Then with regard to the New Westminster investigation of the Crown Timber Agents there, I asked the Minister of the Interior across the House, when that order was carried, to lay the formal papers, the appointment, the Order in Council, the complaint on the Table and have the others brought down in a supplementary return, as they might be voluminous. That order was given the 15th of May, but has not been complied with yet.

Then again the reports of Mr. Ogilvie, the letters and telegrams passing between him and the Department of the Interior, for which an order of the House was carried on the 8th May. Also on the 8th of May there was an order for the correspondence between this Government and the Executive Council in the Yukon, and also an order of the same date for the correspondence with Major Walsh.

With these orders there is no compliance, and I have not been told by any of the Ministers that they decline to lay on the Table the documents specified. I have spoken frequently on the Orders of the Day being called on this subject, and do not wish to take up time by making a motion, but if pressed will have to do so, and in that way occupy a long period of time in showing how much reason I have for pressing these points upon the attention of the Government. As I prefer not to do that, I merely mention from time to time the desire I have for these particular papers.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I must frankly tell my hon. friend that I was not at all prepared for the language he has made use of. I expected, on the contrary, some measure of encomium on his part for the great effort we have made to supply his wishes. He knows that this day we have brought down a dozen of reports.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. None of these.

The PRIME MINISTER. I am sorry we cannot come up to the degree of exhaustiveness of my hon. friend, but perhaps tomorrow will be able to gratify him.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). With reference to the particular return in my own department, I was not in the House when the matter was brought up. The hon. gentleman spoke to me privately, and I told him I would have the return brought down as soon as possible. I think he might very well have stopped there and not drag in a discussion of this particular lease. The hon. gentleman insinuated, or rather stated clearly, that the price which the Government was to obtain for the property per annum was ridiculously small.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Undoubtedly.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I understand that it is out of order to discuss this matter now, but I shall be prepared to discuss it later. It is rather unfair for an hon. gentleman, when asking for returns, to take the opportunity of making a charge or insinuation of this kind. I wish to say that the price obtained was, I believe, very much larger than the one which it was proposed should be paid by a private company in the city of Vancouver only two or three years ago. Further, I wish to point out that the late Government, of which the hon. gentleman was a member, handed over 950 acres of the public lands of this country in the city of Vancouver for $1 a year. Furthermore, I shall be able to establish that a committee from Vancouver which waited on the Government here—members of it—stated that the Government of which the hon. gentleman was a member were prepared for the sum of $1 a year to hand over this particular island to a private company.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will not be able to bring down any paper to verify any such statement.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the evil of breaking the rule forbidding discussion before the Orders of the Day are called, is apparent in this matter.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I see no evil.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is the evil of provoking a debate by abusing the privilege of asking questions about returns before the Orders of the Day are called.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I will move a motion next time.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I beg to lay on the Table the information asked for by the hon. gentleman on the 15th May, 1899, about which he has just been complaining so vigorously. If he had waited a moment, he might have saved himself and this House his complaint.

I may say, by way of explanation in regard to this, that this is not an ordinary return. The hon. gentleman made some remarks in the House calling attention to the fact that I had referred to certain papers and asking me to produce them. My secretary has gone very carefully through the remarks of the hon. gentleman, as reported in "Hansard," and he says he has complied with his requests as far as possible. But if, on looking through what is laid on the Table, the hon. gentleman thinks I have not fully complied with his requests, I will be happy to supplement the information. In the absence of the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) I beg to lay on the Table also a return to an Address of the House of Commons dated 30th March, 1898, for copies of all reports to His Excellency the Governor General, minutes of Council, reports, papers and correspondence in any way relating to the navigation of the Yukon or Stikine rivers, or to customs regulations in connection therewith, including the transshipment of cargoes; also all reports to His Excellency the Governor General, minutes of Council, correspondence and papers touching the customs regulations and fees imposed in connection with Canadian goods passing through St. Michael's, Dyea, Skagway and Wrangel. I beg to lay on the Table also a return to an Address of the House of Commons dated the 19th April, 1899, for copies of all correspondence and papers connected with the removal of Mr. Fawcett from the position of Yukon Gold Commissioner: also a return to an Address of the House of Commons dated 15th May, 1899, for copies of all Orders in Council, ordinances, commissions, appointments, bond certificates and oaths, relating to the appointment of the sheriff for Yukon territory, also copies of the same papers respecting the appointment of the clerk of the court for the Yukon territory: also a return to an Address of the House of Commons dated 14th March, 1898, for copies of all correspondence between the Government of Canada or any member thereof, and the United States Government either directly or through the British Government, or its representative at Washington, in reference to bonding or transient arrangements on the Pacific coast and to the relief of destitute persons in the Yukon or Alaska district. Also any reports of Ministers to the Government on these matters.

Mr. SPEAKER. The first collection of papers referred to by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) was not brought down in answer to an Address or an Order of the House, so I shall have to put a motion. Mr. Sifton moves, seconded by Mr. Mulock, for leave to lay on the Table certain papers containing information asked for by Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper on 15th of May, 1899.

Motion agreed to.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. May I ask you, Mr. Speaker, in regard to the procedure, whether that statement by Your Honour is altogether correct—I do not mean as to fact, of course. What I desire to know is whether I was not entitled, without motion, to ask for and obtain any public documents referred to by the Minister in debate. I proceeded on that assumption. It seems to me, therefore, that this motion would not be necessary, if the action of the Minister is, as I suppose it is, in compliance with the point taken by me that he was bound to lay these papers on the Table of the House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) must have misapprehended what I said. I did not suggest that he should have made a motion. The motion I put before the House was by the Minister for leave to lay these papers on the Table, as neither a Minister nor any one else has the right to lay papers on the Table of the House without some order or some authority from the House.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understood so, but I desired to know if that rule applied—as, I confess, I did not think it did—to the case mentioned by me of a Minister referring to a public document in a debate. I did not suppose that a motion by anybody was required in that case.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am inclined to think it is, but it can do no harm at any rate in order to have the Journals of the House correct.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Not at all.

I.C.R.—EXTENSION TO MONTREAL.

House again resolved itself into committee to consider a certain resolution respecting the Drummond County Railway.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. R. L. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose on Thursday last, I had been discussing the price to be paid by the Government for the Drummond County Railway on the basis of its value, firstly, based upon options which had been given by the company; secondly, based upon stock purchased by Mr. Greenshields ; thirdly, based upon the earning powers of the road ; and, fourthly, based upon the cost—but pointing out that the basis of cost is not a basis on which property is usually purchased. You will have observed, Sir, that the results obtained by the different methods which I propose are not very greatly different. I said, in the first place, that Mr. Farwell's option of $500,000, plus the subsequent cost of the road, amounting to $685,000, would make the value at present equal to about $1,115,000, if you deduct from the amount so arrived at the fair value of the rolling stock, which was included in that option but which was not included in the purchase by the Government. The value of the rolling stock was admitted to be between $70,000 and $80,000, and I have put it at $70,000. I also pointed out that if you take the second option given to Mr. Farwell of $400,000, you arrive at a result just $100,000 less, viz., that the value of this road in 1898 would be $1,015,000. Also, if you take the basis on which the stock was purchased by Mr. Greenshields, you would arrive at a value to be set upon the road in 1898 of about $1,000,000. Mr. Greenshields acquired one-eighth of the total stock for nothing, except his financial advice and assistance, and he acquired one-fifth of the whole stock of the road for some $24,000. Other stock, which he paid for at par, was stock purchased under options obtained before but exercised after this agreement had been made by the Government. I also pointed out that the average earning power of the road for three years amounted to $33,428.33, which certainly does not represent a value in the road of $1,600,000. I also pointed out that the basis of cost is not a basis upon which property of this kind is generally purchased. The value of a property is not its cost or the value to the person who buys, but the value to the person who sells. In expropriation proceedings, that is the basis that has been laid down over and over again by the courts. But even upon this basis, taking the estimate of cost made by the Deputy Minister at $1,565,000, and deducting the subsidy $650,356, you have a balance of $914,644 as the utmost possible amount which this road could have cost these people who are now selling to the Government. Now, under these circumstances, I endeavoured to argue that the sum of $1,000,000, or at the outside, $1,100,000, would be the utmost possible value you could place upon this road upon any reasonable basis on which the Government ought to buy it ; and that, therefore the price now proposed to be paid by the Government—though their second bargain is an infinitely better one than that for which hon. gentlemen opposite first voted—is an excessive price.

Now, in dealing with the question as to whether this road was the best possible route by which to get into Montreal, the hon.

Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) was good enough to refer to me for an opinion upon the merits of the Drummond County Railway. It is quite true that I have passed over that road on two or three occasions, and while I do not profess to be able to give an opinion of an expert upon it, still I have my own ideas, based upon some slight observation. I do not think it needs the eye of an expert to observe that the road is not constructed according to the standard or in the same manner in which the Intercolonial Railway is constructed, or the Grand Trunk Railway is constructed, or the Canadian Pacific Railway is constructed. This road, as compared with these three roads, does not rise to the same height; as compared with them it seems to be down in the ditch. It is also perfectly obvious that a very considerable portion of this road runs through a forest.

Now, the Minister, in dealing with the question of obtaining running powers over the Canadian Pacific Railway from Montreal to Quebec, told us that that road was not equal, on account of the country through which it ran, to the road from Halifax to St. John ; and he told us that the road from Halifax to St. John was the best-paying portion of the Intercolonial Railway. I would like to know how the Minister of Railways and Canals, in view of the statement that he has made to this House, is able to give us that information. He told us that so far as the Drummond County Railway was concerned, it was absolutely impossible to give this House any idea whatever as to whether that railway was a piece of road which paid, or which did not pay, he said the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway were not made up in that way. Now, if the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway are kept as he suggests, how does he know anything about the earning power of this road from Halifax to St. John ? How is he able to make a comparison in the one case and not able to make it in the other case ? Any one comparing the road from Halifax to St. John with this Drummond County Railway which he has purchased, would say that the one road runs through a thickly populated country, a country furnishing a large business, and the other road does not. Well, if he bases his opinion in the one case on the appearance of the country, he might base his opinion in the other case on the appearance of the country ; and in that case, I venture to think that he will be able to give his conclusion to this House that the Drummond County Railway, running as it does for a considerable distance through a forest, would not be a very valuable piece of road, so far, at least, as local traffic is concerned.

Now, my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Morrison), in dealing with the bargain made with the Grand Trunk Railway, was good enough to tell us over and over again that he could not for the life of him understand what the question of user had to do with the amount which the Intercolonial Railway is to pay for the use of the road which it is proposed to lease from the Grand Trunk Railway, or with the value of the terminals at Montreal. Now, I think my hon. friend must have overlooked the evidence of Mr. Wainwright, whom he refers to as a witness of great credibility, and whose statement we must take, he says, if we do not take the statement of any one else. I would like to read to the House what Mr. Wainwright says about this bargain, and the importance which he evidently attaches to the question of user. He was asked, on cross-examination, as follows:

Q. But all your business between west and east would come to Montreal?—A. Yes.

Q. And all those terminals are for the purpose of that business?—A. Certainly.

Q. Your use of these terminals would be very much larger than anything the Intercolonial Railway could make?—A. Certainly.

Q. What proportion?—A. That would depend upon the business they do. The position is this: the agreement provides that we have the use of those terminals in common. I have shown in this plan that it involves the use of 40 miles of sidings, freight sheds, round houses and all appurtenances. It is very much like going to a man who owns a palace, with my wife, having married, and asking him to give me his whole house. Of course, I can only use one room, but in a few years there may be a large family. I do not know what proportion will be our use and what will be theirs.

Mr. Wainwright, whose evidence my hon. friend commends so highly, seems to have the idea that what the Intercolonial Railway authorities are doing at the present time is buying a palace when they have use for only one room. Well, no one objects to their buying a palace and using only one room if they pay for only one room. But the difficulty about this bargain, a difficulty which my hon. friend from New Westminster does not seem to be able to grasp, is this, that whereas they are using only one room in the palace, they are paying half rent for half the use of the entire palace. I venture to think that if my hon. friend from New Westminster looks over the evidence again in the light of what I have suggested, he will see that the question of user has something to do with this case. Now, Mr. Wainwright continues:

Q. How long do you think it will take this Intercolonial Railway to have a family large enough to occupy this palace of the terminals?—A. I think it will not take them long, and I think the proposition to extend the road to Montreal is one of those things that will add materially to the traffic.

Q. You have something of an idea of the business that came over the Intercolonial Railway before they connected with Montreal?—A. Yes.

Q. You have an idea of the relative proportion which your business at Montreal bears to that business?—A. Well, it is very large, of course, in comparison.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Q. Could you give any idea of the proportion?—A. No, because it varies materially.

Then the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) asks this question, and I think the answer of the witness is very significant. He asks: "Is it a 100th?" That is, Is the use of those terminals by the Intercolonial Railway a hundredth part of the use of those terminals by the Grand Trunk Railway? And Mr. Wainwright, whose evidence my hon. friend relies on, says:

I would not like to make a positive statement. So this gentleman, who is as well acquainted, I suppose, as any railway man in Canada could be with the relative amount of user by the Grand Trunk Railway and by the Intercolonial Railway of these terminal facilities at Montreal, is unable to state on his oath, when the question is put to him, that the Intercolonial Railway will make a hundredth part the use of those terminals that the Grand Trunk Railway makes. Yet the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) thinks that the question of relative user of these terminals has nothing at all to do with this case. As a matter of fact, he is carrying out in that the same idea which the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) carried out, and I will show this by referring to the evidence of the Minister of Railways and Canals given upon this very inquiry. Now, Mr. Blair, at page 10 of the evidence, produced a statement made by Mr. Schreiber, who showed to the satisfaction of the Minister, at least, having made up the statement under the instructions of the Minister, that the Intercolonial Railway should, in the first place, pay interest to the Grand Trunk Railway for the use of its railway, not including terminals, on $750,000. This is his estimate:

Interest on line St. Hyacinthe to St. Lambert, one half $750,000, at five per cent..	$37,500
For use of Victoria Bridge and approaches	50,000
For terminals at Point St. Charles, Bonaventure and use of railways.....	62,500
For use of Chaudière Bridge and necessary occupation of line east.....	6,000

Then he recapitulates that, and he also produces a memorandum in somewhat similar terms, which is to be found on page 11 of the evidence. Then the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) is examined about this, and I think it is well to bring to the attention of the House what he has to say as to the question of user with which my hon. friend from Westminster thinks this House should not concern itself.

Q. That is for half, or simply the share that the Intercolonial Railway would require of these terminal facilities?—A. That would be on the basis of one-half the value at 5 per cent of such portions of these terminals as he thought he would require to use.

Q. Whether we only required the one-tenth or not, that estimate was based on one-half?—A. This estimate was based on one-half.

So, I desire to point out to the committee that although Mr. Wainwright has not ventured to state on his oath that the Intercolonial Railway will make a one-hundredth part of the use of these terminal facilities that the Grand Trunk will use, nevertheless, we are to pay to the Grand Trunk Railway Company on the basis of equal user of such terminals as we do use. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals is examined further on the subject :

Q. Did you take any pains to find out what the proportion would be of the Intercolonial's use of these facilities?—A. I cannot say it would have been very possible to come to a very clear conclusion in regard to that. It would depend altogether on how business turned out.

Q. Did you take any pains to find out what the Intercolonial's proportion would be?—A. We took every pains to ascertain as to what were the best terms we could get the use of these facilities for—the lowest price at which we could secure them from the Grand Trunk.

Q. That is hardly what I asked. I ask if you took any pains to find out the proportion of the user of the Intercolonial Railway?—A. The element of user has two phases. The amount of user of two companies relatively would affect the contribution which each would make to the cost of maintenance, but it would not affect, nor, in my view, should it properly affect, the question of rental. If the Grand Trunk were willing to rent to us all their property at a rate of interest on the whole cost, governed by our proportion of the use of the line to theirs, it would have been all right to make an arrangement of that kind, possibly; but they were not so disposed.

Q. It is not whether you have inquired into the proportions, but simply whether the Railway Department, or you as its head, took the precaution to have an estimate of the proportionate user?—A. There was no estimate of the proportionate user at all. It would be very hard to ascertain that.

And so on, on page 13, making it perfectly apparent that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, from first to last, never took the precaution, the very obvious precaution, to make any estimate or to ascertain, in any way, what the probable proportion of user would be. But there is something more than that. What difficulty, I ask you, would there have been in his making an arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company on the basis of proportionate user? There would have been no difficulty at all, and I would like to ask any hon. gentleman, who may speak after me, to point any possible difficulty in regard to that. It is necessary in this case, under the terms of this very contract, that a correct statement of the relative user by these two roads, of the terminals shall be made, because maintenance is to be paid for on the basis of proportionate user. Well, Sir, if the cost of maintenance is to be based on proportionate user, why should not the rental be based on proportionate user? What difficulty would there be about that? Accounts have to be kept for the purpose of ascertaining what the proportionate user of the Intercolonial Railway, as to maintenance, will be. Upon exactly the same basis it would have been proper to have paid rental to the Grand Trunk Railway, yet the hon. Minister of Railways, instead of paying rental in respect of the user, which is many times less than the user which the Grand Trunk makes of these terminals, proposes to pay them, not on the basis of user at all, but absolutely on the basis of one-half of the rental which would be payable to any company or person acquiring the whole of these terminals under a lease. I may point out, in passing, some figures which were collected by the committee in regard to the proportionate user by these two roads during the months of March and April, 1898. The total number of cars of each railway in and out of the year at Point St. Charles during the months of March and April, is as follows:—

	G.T.R.	I.C.R.
March	53,940	2,171
April	45,167	2,210
Total	99,107	4,381

The total number of passenger trains of each railway crossing the Victoria Bridge daily is as follows:—

Grand Trunk Railway	46
Intercolonial Railway	4

Yet for all this we are to pay on the basis of one-half and not on a proportionate basis. And my hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Morrison) cannot see any reason why we should not pay on the basis of one-half. The total number of freight cars of each railway passing over the Victoria Bridge, and the railway from Victoria Bridge to Ste. Rosalie is as follows:—

	G.T.R.	I.C.R.
April	10,491	2,867

Yet for this we are to pay, not on a proportionate basis, but on a one-half basis. The published time table at the time the report of this committee was made showed a daily use of the terminal facilities by 100 passenger trains of the Grand Trunk Railway and by four passenger trains of the Intercolonial Railway. Yet my hon. friend on the other side of the House believes, in view of all that, that we should pay for the use of these terminals on the one-half basis and not on the proportionate basis.

My hon. friend challenged some statements in our report, and I have dealt to a considerable extent with what he said in regard to the basis of rental; but, in passing, I would like to point out to the committee what the Intercolonial Railway receives when it makes an arrangement, somewhat of the same character, as that now being made by the Grand Trunk Railway. The Dominion Atlantic Railway has running powers from Windsor Junction in common with the Intercolonial Railway over 14 miles from Windsor Junction to Halifax. It has exclusive running powers, of every kind, over the road from Windsor Junction to Windsor, a distance of 32 miles, making in all, 46 miles of the Intercolonial Railway. As to 32 miles, the Dominion Atlantic has exclusive running rights, and as to 14 miles, it has running rights in common with the Intercolonial Railway. The arrangement made in that case is this: The Intercolonial Railway bears the cost of maintenance and receives one-third of the company's gross earnings over this line. The average net rental received by the Intercolonial Railway, during the past eight years, for the 46 miles of road and for the use of the terminal facilities at Halifax, which are very extensive, is $16,682.50, or about one-ninth of the sum which it is proposed to pay the Grand Trunk Railway in this case. Any hon. gentleman who is familiar with the business of the Dominion Atlantic Railway is aware how that business has grown up during the past eight or ten years, and that the business which is done by that railway is nothing like the small proportion which I have indicated. The Dominion Atlantic has a very heavy freight traffic into Halifax over this portion of the Intercolonial Railway. It runs six passenger trains daily instead of four into the station at Halifax, and it obtains the use of this railway for the annual payment of $16,682.50. The Intercolonial Railway bears the cost of maintenance.

Coming back for a moment to what was suggested to me by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) in respect to the value and the character of this Drummond County Railway, I intended to have stated at the time, only that hon. gentleman did not apparently desire to hear my answer, that my experience, during this year, of that road was not an experience which indicated to me that it is a very suitable road, at some seasons of the year at least. I came as far as Lévis on the Intercolonial Railway during the month of March last; I was stopped there for twenty-four hours because the Drummond County was blocked up with snow. The manner in which that road is built, probably, makes it more difficult to keep it clear in winter than other roads; and the passengers on that Intercolonial Railway train, fifteen or twenty in all, after waiting twenty-four hours, were compelled to cross the river to the city of Quebec, take the Canadian Pacific Railway to Montreal, and they arrived in Ottawa about two days, I believe, in advance of those who thought fit to stick to the Drummond County Railway.

Mr. GIBSON. Was the Grand Trunk Railway blocked up at the same time?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). The Grand Trunk Railway was blocked, too, for, I believe, a portion of its line, but I understand it was cleared considerably before the Drummond County road. I am not sure about that, but it is what I was informed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Drummond County was the last cleared.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). With respect to what has been stated by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair), as to the impossibility of giving any information to the House with regard to the results during the past year of the leasing of this road, I desire to point out, that in 1897 we were told, both by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) and the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), that the temporary lease was only an experiment, that the Government were to test the value of the road, and that, after we had leased the road as an experiment during the year, we would have some information about it. It is to be regretted that the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) has not been able to carry out the promise which he made at that time, and that we are as much in the dark now about the value of that experiment as we were then. I also wish to point out, for the benefit of members of the Government other than the Minister of Railways and Canals, that, at page 81 of the evidence before the committee, the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals told us, that the success of this experiment, so far as Halifax was concerned, would to a considerable extent depend upon the establishment of a fast line of steamers from Halifax. I merely desire to say this, in comment: that, in view of the difficulties which now stand in the way of the establishment of a fast line, owing to the fact that this Government interfered with the arrangements made by the late Government, it looks very much as if the expected increase of revenue which the Deputy Minister of Railways hoped to realize in that way, would be postponed for a long time—a thing which the people of the maritime provinces, at least, very greatly deplore.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with respect to what the Minister (Mr. Blair) said concerning the running powers which were granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway over the line of the Intercolonial Railway from St. John to Halifax, I do not need to add very much in comment upon the terms of that agreement to what was said by the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart). I notice that the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) seemed to be somewhat distressed at the idea of Halifax being one of the termini of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I do not think that there was any occasion for distress of mind on the part of the Minister (Mr. Blair) at any such consummation as that. He told us, that it was very undesirable to exchange running powers from Quebec to Montreal with the Canadian Pacific Railway, for running powers to them over the line from Halifax to St. John, and he based his argument chiefly on the difference in the length of the line. It is perfectly clear to any one, whether he has much knowledge of railway business or not, that the fact of these two lines differing in length would not prevent a reasonable and proper bargain being made, and I say, that an arrangement of that kind would be very desirable, not only in the interests of the port of Halifax, not only in the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but in the interests of this country as a whole. Why should the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) be distressed at the idea of Halifax being one of the termini of the Canadian Pacific Railway? Is it not in the interests of this country that a great railway like that, which has a terminus on the Pacific, should also have access to all the best ports on the Atlantic? The Minister (Mr. Blair) seems to think it a very desirable thing that this Intercolonial Railway should have a terminus at St. John. In what way need he be afraid—even if he has the interest of St. John particularly at heart—in what way need he be afraid of the Canadian Pacific Railway having a terminus at Halifax? Why, Sir, he proposes to compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway at the city of St. John, by building at enormous expense terminal facilities on the east side of St. John harbour. To do that, he is handicapped by an increased haulage of 259 miles over the Intercolonial Railway, as compared with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and then he brings his freight to exactly the same port to which the Canadian Pacific Railway brings its freight. If the Minister desires to compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway, the only place where he has a chance of competing with that railway, is at the port of Halifax, and I think I can show any reasonable gentleman in this House, that this is a fact. At the port of St. John, he must bring his freight 259 miles further than the Canadian Pacific Railway; if he goes to the port of Halifax, he hauls his freight only 97 miles further than to St. John, and he is 250 miles further on the road to England. In other words, by hauling his freight to Halifax, 97 miles further than to St. John, he does not compete with the Canadian Pacific at the same port of St. John, but he competes at the best port in the world, having an advantage of 250 miles on the ocean voyage to European ports. If the Minister is disposed to compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway—and I hope he will compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway, in the interest of the country and of that railway itself—I say, the only place where it is proper and competent for him to so compete is at the port of Halifax, for the reasons I have mentioned. Every difficulty lies in his way in the city of St. John, because he has an increased railway haulage of 259 miles, and he starts on the ocean voyage from exactly the same port as the Canadian Pacific Railway does. At the port of Halifax, he has a port where there is practically no tide at all. He has a port which a steamer can leave and in two hours be out in the Atlantic, headed on her voyage to any British port. He has at Halifax a port where the port charges, the expenses of loading and unloading, and all charges of that kind, are probably as low as at any port in Europe, and lower than in any other American port, and it seems to me to be as clear as a mathematical demonstration, that, if the Minister is to compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway, the place to compete is at Halifax, and not at St. John. But, I regret, Sir, that the Minister (Mr. Blair) does not seem to look at matters in that light, if I have gathered his language rightly.

I desire further to submit for the consideration of this House one further point, and it is this. The Minister, in dealing with the agreement which was made between the Intercolonial Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway in 1890, tells us, that by cancelling that arrangement he will be able to secure practically all the passengers to Montreal, and in that way he will get a greater proportion of the passenger receipts than he otherwise would. Why, Mr. Chairman, if the Minister (Mr. Blair) logically carried out the idea which he there presents, he would refuse to make any connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway; he would compel every one in Halifax and eastern Nova Scotia to have but one means of access to Montreal, instead of two. The arrangements with regard to that, as they at present stand, are, that the people of eastern Nova Scotia, and of western Nova Scotia for that matter, and of the city of Halifax, have two trains daily to and from Montreal, have two means of access to Montreal: you can take the Canadian Pacific Railway in the morning, and you can take the Intercolonial Railway in the afternoon. I venture to think that the people of Halifax, and the people of Nova Scotia generally, are entitled to some use of the Canadian Pacific Railway, are entitled to some use of that road for the purpose of having access to Montreal. The people of my province have paid their legitimate share, a large share, of the cost of that railway, and I submit that any proposition by the Minister of Railways and Canals which would prevent the people of Halifax, and the people of Nova Scotia generally, from using that railway in going to and from Montreal, will not be favourably received by the people of that province. I say that the Minister of Railways and Canals, in ordinary railway competition, if he does his duty, if he does what he said he was going to do in the committee, if he does what the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals said would be done—if he sends out agents and develops the traffic—will be able to compete at Halifax as well as St. John with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and do that without hampering in any way the use of the Canadian Pacific Railway by the people of Nova Scotia, and will be able to do it on a fair and equitable basis for granting running powers to the Canadian Pacific Railway over the Intercolonial from Halifax to St. John. Now, I regret to say that the Minister of Railways and Canals, during the past two years, has not given very much evidence of attempting to deal with the business of the Intercolonial Railway, so far as Halifax is concerned, in a very businesslike manner. At page 77 of the evidence, the hon. gentleman, in examining his Deputy Minister, put these words in his mouth :

Q. Now, then, you rely somewhat for an increased traffic over the Intercolonial Railway upon an active and progressive policy, do you not, on the part of the management?—A. It must be so, or we would not get the traffic.

Q. And you do not despair at all but that Halifax may ultimately, under the Intercolonial Railway, become a port of some importance for through traffic?—A. If fast steamers are put on better traffic is certain.

Again, at page 81 :

Q. How about passengers?—A. If fast steamers were to run to Halifax and make that their terminus, I think passenger traffic would increase largely.

Q. As to the expected increase in revenue, it will to a considerable extent depend on the establishment of a fast line from Halifax?—A. Yes.

I hope the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), in a spirit of contrition and repentance will bear this in mind, and will recollect that in 1897 he was absolutely sure of the ability of Petersen, Tate & Co. to carry their arrangement out, the result being, however, that Petersen, Tate & Co. have ignominiously failed, and, owing to the great increase in the cost of shipbuilding since then, experts say that it will be absolutely impossible, even upon the terms offered by the late Government, to have any such arrangement carried out in the next half dozen years at least.

Now, with reference to the administration of this road by the Minister of Railways and Canals, I want to point out how different his views were at a later date, when the Board of Trade of Halifax sought to put them to a practical test. The Halifax Board of Trade brought to the attention of the Government the necessity of some active exertions being made on the part of the Government for the purpose of increasing their traffic over the Intercolonial Railway by the port of Halifax, and the Minister of Railways and Canals, in a letter to that body, dated the 15th November, 1898, about six months after he had put the words which I have read into the mouth of his Deputy Minister, used this language :

We are not guaranteeing freight over our line for shipment from any point, not being so situated as to be able to do it. Perhaps later our organization may become sufficiently complete ; but I am inclined to doubt even the probability of this fact. We must look to the two lines—at most to three—with which we connect westerly, for our freight supply. They will be the originating lines, and they will look up the business.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

According to the statement put into the mouth of the Deputy Minister by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals himself, the Intercolonial Railway is going to enter on an active and aggressive policy, otherwise this whole scheme will fall through, and we will not get the traffic ; but six months afterwards, when the Board of Trade of Halifax asks him to inaugurate that active policy, he says :

They will be the originating lines, and they will look up the business. This winter nothing whatever has been done in that direction, and I think until some accommodation has been provided which is yet wanting we will not be able to count upon any large quantity of freight.

Now, Sir, it is needless to say, after the hopes that were held out by the Minister of Railways and Canals, not only in this investigation, but otherwise, that this was a very disappointing statement ; and I might answer the hon. Minister's suggestions in that letter, by quoting the very well-chosen language of the Halifax Board of Trade, in their memorandum in reply, dated the 25th November, 1898, which contains a very full, exhaustive and complete answer :

The balance of his letter shows a much larger range, and if the ideas therein expressed should be acted upon, the effect on our future winter business would be very serious. We must certainly take exception to the assertion that the trade of the Intercolonial must depend solely and wholly upon the originating lines out west, and that it is solely their duty to look up the business. No ordinary railway company having its terminus at a port such as Halifax would think of adopting any such principle with the expectation of business coming to its road. The Intercolonial should have agents out west, who would be in a position to give through rates on grain and other produce from the point of shipment to that of delivery in Europe. To do this, it would, of course, be necessary for the Intercolonial to have specific arrangements with the different lines over which this freight would have to come for delivery at Montreal, and should it be, as is frequently suggested, that any one of those lines should decline to carry the freight so offered on the ground that their rolling stock would not admit of their extending their business beyond that which was absolutely necessary for their own through shipments, in that case the Intercolonial should be in a position to tender sufficient rolling stock or cars to carry the freight engaged by their agents to Montreal, and we have no good reasons to suppose that the use of the rails on any one of the lines referred to could not be had under a reasonable arrangement for such purpose.

Mr. Hays, of the Grand Trunk, when here last summer, asserted most positively that the rail accommodation was equal and capable of carrying two or three times the amount of freight now passing over the roads. This being the case, why should we be constantly met with the assertion that it was not the Government's place to provide freight for their road ? The term "government" should be dropped out of the matter altogether, and the Intercolonial should be run by a competent staff of men, whose interest and duty it would be to develop the business of the road to its very fullest extent in competition with the roads which have their terminal shipping points at the various ports on the Atlantic coast.

During some years past the through ocean traffic of the Intercolonial to and from the west has so dwindled away to practically nothing, that in extending the line to Montreal an entirely new departure on the part of the management was essential to create a traffic in competition with other routes. The appointment of a live traffic manager trained in an active company was a businesslike proceeding. It is difficult to dissociate the reactionary step taken by the Railway Department in abolishing the office of general traffic manager, and the very unsatisfactory position of the traffic arrangements indicated in the Minister's letters. It is of vital importance that a capable and energetic man of modern training should without further loss of time be appointed to organize the management of the Intercolonial Railway, so that the Minister of Railways may no longer have to announce that the Intercolonial Railway is not able to offer export traffic.

That is the view which the Halifax Board of Trade took of the Minister's course, and we cannot help feeling—those of us who are from the province of Nova Scotia—that it would have been better and more in the interests of the country if the hon. Minister had entered upon that active and progressive policy which he proposed in the spring of 1898, and that he should not in the autumn of 1898 have told the Halifax Board of Trade that the Intercolonial should look to other lines out west to hunt up business for it, and make no effort to capture business for itself. Does not the hon. Minister know that two, at least, of the lines which are to hunt up business out west are the Grand Trunk Railway, which is competing with Halifax at Portland, and the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is competing with the Intercolonial at St. John. And does he expect that these two lines are to hunt up business out west for the purpose of sending it over the Intercolonial, and that all the Intercolonial officials need do is to sit back and wait for the business to be sent them by these competing lines? The idea seems absurdly childish, and I am sure the Board of Trade of Halifax have not been able to understand up to this day why it was that the Minister, having announced an active, progressive policy in the spring of 1898, according to the sworn testimony of the Deputy Minister, should have seen fit, in the autumn of 1898, to have made such an extraordinary announcement.

Possibly uncharitable persons might think the reason of this is to be found in an announcement which the Minister of Railways and Canals was good enough to make at a banquet in St. Johns, I think, on the 13th October, 1897 or 1898. Speaking of the ports of Halifax and St. John, he said it was the duty of the Government to assist both ports in providing proper facilities for trade. Well, he has been doing that to a pretty handsome extent at St. John, because he has spent $750,000 or $1,000,000 in constructing terminal facilities on the east side of that harbour to compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway on the west side, although, in order to make that competition he has to haul his freight 259 miles further. But he has not made very active progress in Halifax in the meantime. The elevator which was to have been completed for last season's operations is now, according to his own statement in this House in reply to a question from me, not to be completed until the 1st of next October, and some of his own friends in Halifax have a very shrewd suspicion that the 1st of October will come and go and not see that elevator ready for business. However, I shall, to the best of my ability, during the remainder of the session, endeavour to bring the matter to the Minister's attention, from time to time, and spur him up, if I am in any way able to do so, to complete that elevator by that date at least. The hon. gentleman, in that speech, continued :

The one having the greatest natural advantage would, of course, be the favoured one.

One would suppose that Halifax, having the advantages which I have already claimed for it, having 250 miles of a shorter ocean voyage, and being probably as fine a port as there is in the world and as cheap a port, would be the one having the natural advantages, not only so far as passengers are concerned, but also freight. But, the hon. Minister continued :

Speaking as one member of the Government, but not binding the Government, he had no hesitation in saying that to his mind St. John had advantages over Halifax. (Tremendous cheers.)

This speech was made at St. John :

St. John was nearer Montreal than Halifax. (Cheers.) That was one advantage. The fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway has charge of the business on the western side of the harbour was to his mind another advantage. (Cheers.) He believed that when the Intercolonial Railway is extended to Montreal a new day will have dawned too for the Intercolonial Railway, for Canada, for the maritime provinces, for St. John.

So the idea of the hon. Minister is, apparently, if you can judge from that language, that the proper course for the Intercolonial is not to haul freight ninety-seven miles further and have the advantage of 250 miles on the ocean voyage and a splendid and a cheap port, but to haul it 259 miles further than the Canadian Pacific Railway to the port of St. John, and there compete with that line. That is the advantage which, in the eyes of the hon. Minister, St. John has over Halifax. He continued :

To his mind the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal meant everything to St. John.

Certainly, if the Minister sees fit to carry out the policy announced to the board of trade in Halifax and make no effort to secure western trade for that port, and to confine his energies solely to competing with the Canadian Pacific Railway at St. John, his statement would be perfectly correct; but I would like to know what the people of Halifax and of Nova Scotia, and particularly eastern Nova Scotia, will have to say to that.

Then what the Canadian Pacific could not bring down to the western side of the harbour of St. John the Intercolonial would bring down to the eastern side of the harbour (Prolonged cheers.)

My hon. friends from Nova Scotia will see from this statement of the Minister of Railways and Canals, which seems to be borne out by his subsequent conduct in the autumn of 1898, that Halifax and Nova Scotia have no place in his consideration, so far as through traffic over the Intercolonial is concerned. Then, the hon. Minister continued as follows:—

Mr. Blair said the Intercolonial Railway, when extended to Montreal, would enter into friendly competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway for part of the freight business of the west. Although the distance by the Canadian Pacific Railway would be somewhat shorter than by the extended Intercolonial Railway, yet the Intercolonial Railway would be able to cover the distance in exactly the same time. This was because the Intercolonial Railway was in some respects an easier road on which to haul and better time could be made.

So that he is going to expend $750,000 or $1,000,000 to enter into friendly competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway on the west side of the harbour of St. John; and, so far as the Halifax Board of Trade are concerned, they are to be told that the Intercolonial freight in the west is to be hunted up by the very lines which are competing at Portland and at St. John against the Intercolonial and against Halifax. And the Minister of Railways and Canals is good enough to expect that the people of Halifax will be deceived by any such story. I think I have made out in a fairly clear and reasonable manner to any hon. gentleman who has been good enough to follow me that the administration of the Intercolonial Railway under this lease has not been one which conduces to the sending of through freight over the Intercolonial Railway via the port of Halifax. The Minister's declarations in his speech, to which I have referred, coupled with his careful declarations in his written communication to the Halifax Board of Trade, bear out the arguments that I have been making. It should be the desire of the Minister, if possible, to send through freight over the Intercolonial Railway to Halifax, because if he is able to carry out that project successfully, he has the advantage of the long haul from Montreal to Halifax. The Minister himself has put in the mouth of his Deputy Minister the statement of the fact that Halifax is 250 miles nearer to England than is St. John, which gives Halifax an advantage over St.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax).

John and over Portland in competition for through business. Is it not perfectly clear to any hon. gentleman in this House that if the hon. Minister can utilize the advantage given by that shorter ocean voyage and make his long haul from Montreal to Halifax, it will stand him in better stead than to attempt to compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway at the port of St. John? It is perfectly obvious, for the reason I have mentioned, that it is his interest to do so, because, though he has a haul of 97 miles further, that is more than made up for by the 250 miles of decreased ocean voyage, and by the advantages which the port of Halifax presents even to an unprejudiced person, as compared with the port of St. John. In making comparison between the port of Halifax and the port of St. John, I desire to be understood as expressing no jealousy of the port of St. John. Every man in the city of Halifax recognizes, and recognizes with admiration, the splendid efforts which the citizens of St. John have made in competing for through business. We also recognize and appreciate this fact—that if the people of St. John and the Canadian Pacific Railway are able, by means of competition at the port of St. John, to take any portion of the through freight which otherwise should go to Portland or Boston, they were doing a service not merely to the whole country, but to the city of Halifax. We, therefore, not only appreciate their efforts, but we sympathize with those efforts; but we desire, so far as through trade competition is concerned, to have fair-play and to have the Government recognize the natural advantages which the city of Halifax possesses in being a port of the character I have shown and in having the advantage over the port of St. John of 250 miles less ocean voyage, and over Portland of a very much greater distance.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have detained the committee at considerable length, but at no greater length than I thought was necessary under the circumstances. I am still of the opinion which I expressed in this report, that the bargain which the Government has seen fit to make with the Drummond County Railway and for which it asks the sanction of this House, is an improvident agreement; that the Government, in paying for the road on the basis of $1,600,000, is paying a very much greater price than that road could have been sold for to any other person; that they are paying for it on a basis which is not justified by any of the tests of value which can fairly be applied to it; and, so far as the arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway is concerned, that that arrangement is not based on any principle whatever. In that case the user is what we should pay for, the proper proportionate user of the terminus; and, inasmuch as the Minister of Railways and Canals did not see fit even to procure an estimate of the user, as his deputy, under his instructions, proceeded solely on the basis of equal user of such portion of the terminals as he thought it would be necessary for the Intercolonial Railway to employ, the result has been an improvident agreement. In fact, I think that probably when we have the actual results, the arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway will be found to be much more improvident even than the arrangement with the Drummond County Railway. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals tells us that he could not force the hand of the Grand Trunk Railway, that he could not compel them to make a better bargain. But, at least, he could look around and use the method pointed out by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart)—he could have told the Grand Trunk Railway that if they did not make a better bargain, the Intercolonial Railway could come in on its own property and erect terminals in the city of Montreal and build a line for about half—as I remember the figures—of the capitalized expenditure under the Grand Trunk Railway and Drummond County arrangements.

It is apparent, therefore, that the Minister was not in a position to have his hand forced either by the Drummond County or the Grand Trunk Railway. He could have stood on the splendid position which he held. But, instead of doing that, he has made this arrangement. I think that both these arrangements were not such as the hon. Minister would have been likely to make with these two companies if he had been dealing as the president or director of a company owning the Intercolonial Railway. I think that if the Minister of Railways and Canals was dealing with the money of a company in which he was interested, having the splendid opportunity which the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals pointed out, he would surely have made some estimate as to the user by the Intercolonial Railway and as to cost and value further than he is shown to have made in this case. Therefore, I think that the bargain made with the Drummond County Railway is not one which should be sanctioned by this House, and that the proposed bargain with the Grand Trunk Railway, necessarily involved in this, is not one which should be sanctioned by this House. And, although, as I said in the first place, I am in favour of the abstract project of extending the Intercolonial Railway to the city of Montreal for the purpose of competing with the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railways for western traffic, nevertheless I believe it to be my duty, for the reasons stated in the minority report, and for the reasons I have endeavoured to state, however imperfectly, to this committee, to vote against this resolution.

Mr. COLIN F. McISAAC (Antigonish). Mr. Chairman, in discussing the resolutions before this committee, there are three main questions that we must consider: First, is the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal desirable in the public interest?

Second, of the three available routes, the Drummond County route, the South Shore route and the Grand Trunk route, is the Drummond County the shortest and best? Third, is the Government paying too much for the Drummond County road, or could they acquire that road for less money, or could they construct another road for less money?

As to the first question, I do not think that there are two opinions in this House or in this country, except perhaps the opinion of the leader of the Opposition, but even his opinion is opposed by hon. gentlemen sitting on his own side of the House. Then on the second question, as to whether this is the best, the shortest and most direct route, I will only refer to the evidence of two witnesses before the committee last year, the evidence of the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope), one of the ablest men on the other side of the House, and of Mr. Wainwright. Then I will briefly consider the last and only question which I think is in controversy in this matter. Now, the member for Compton, as reported on page 142, says on this point:

Q. You presented it (this scheme) upon the principle that it would be advantageous to the country generally to get an entrance into Montreal?—A. That is right.

Q. Having behind that, of course, this line as being the most likely means of getting into Montreal?—A. Yes.

Q. And you think it still?—A. Yes.

Q. In your judgment it is in the interest of the country that the Intercolonial Railway should get into Montreal?—A. Yes.

Q. And I understand you to say that in your judgment this is the proper way of getting into Montreal?—A. Yes.

Q. It is the best way?—A. Yes.

That is the sworn evidence of the hon. member for Compton. Then Mr. Wainwright, on page 50, testified as follows:—

Q. Had you a favourable opinion of the road and the possibilities of traffic?—A. Yes, sir. Mr. Church originally undertook the construction of the road in full touch with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and the idea at that time was entertained by the late Sir Joseph Hickson that the Grand Trunk Railway would acquire it. We expected we should be able to secure quite a good traffic off the line, and that was our reason for desiring to obtain possession of it.

Q. Have you any reason from your recent experience and knowledge of the business upon that road to alter your opinion in that regard?—A. No.

Q. Would you kindly state what your view would be in regard to the relative merits of that road with others that have been spoken of as through lines for the Intercolonial Railway in reaching Montreal?—A. Well, as regards the connection of the Intercolonial Railway with Montreal, the Drummond County Railway, as far as I know from the engineer's reports, is the shortest line and the easiest line to St. Lambert that could be acquired. The distances have already been given, I think, in your evidence, Mr. Blair, and these figures are correct according to my report.

Q. How about the grades?—A. Of course, the Grand Trunk has some longer and has some heavier grades. The South Shore road is a little longer according to the engineer's reports, and would have a good deal of heavy bridging, therefore would be very costly, and, under the circumstances, I presume that the Drummond County is about the easiest method of extending the road to Montreal.

Then again he answers this question put to him by the Minister of Railways and Canals:

Q. Of the three roads, therefore, which would you consider the cheapest and best road for the Government to acquire, taking it altogether, for this purpose?—A. Well, as I would like the Government to have taken the Grand Trunk through to Lévis, it is rather—I would, of course, have to admit, after we were out of the race, that the Drummond County, with its shorter mileage and lighter grades, necessarily would be worked more economically and probably make better time for the service. I am bound to admit that.

It is not necessary to quote any further from the evidence to show that this is by all odds the best available route. I will now proceed to consider the third question, the only one, I say, with regard to which there can be any controversy, that is whether the price paid by the Government is a reasonable one, or whether the Government should be expected to get it at a lower figure. In dealing with this matter I am going to confine myself strictly to the evidence. Having listened with a great deal of attention to the speech of my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden), I must say that it has strongly confirmed me in the opinion that this is an eminently good bargain. Everybody knows that that hon. gentleman picked out the very best evidence that he could find in support of his position, and yet he has been able to find nothing to show that this is not a good bargain. If he had been able to find in this evidence anything to strengthen his position, he would not have resorted to extraneous opinions and statements by outside parties. We had before the committee the evidence of Mr. Schreiber, Deputy Minister of Railways, and also the evidence of Mr. McLeod, an experienced engineer. Let me point out to the House that Mr. Schreiber's estimate was made in 1894. He had not been on the road himself, and his estimate was not made from personal observation, but from information supplied him by his officials and others. When we consider that nearly the whole speech of the hon. member for Halifax, in examining what this road had cost, is based upon an estimate made by the Deputy Minister in 1894 of the cost of that road, the House will be able to realize how weak indeed must be the position of that hon. gentleman. He says that in arriving at the cost of the Drummond County Railway we must take the figures given by Mr. Schreiber in 1894, when we have the evidence of Mr. McLeod, who travelled over every inch of the road last year, and who gave evidence showing that the cost was far above the estimate of Mr. Schreiber. Now Mr. Schreiber says that to construct that road according to the requirements of the Subsidy Act, it would cost about $1,535,500 to complete it. But any person knows that the requirements of the Subsidy Act were entirely different from the requirements of the agreement under consideration here today, and the Minister of Railways and Canals has taken special pains to see that this road when completed according to this agreement will be far more efficient in every way than a road completed under the Subsidy Act. The Minister of Railways and Canals has made it a condition that the sum of $100,000 shall be expended in addition to the sum given in Mr. Schreiber's estimate, to bring that road up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway. Indeed, 43 miles of that road is already above the standard of the Intercolonial Railway, notwithstanding the opinion of my hon. friend from Halifax. Everybody who knows anything about the transaction knows that the 42½ miles-section of this road is superior to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway. The $100,000 additional to Mr. Schreiber's estimate brings the estimated cost up to $1,635,500. Who is Mr. McLeod? He is an engineer of the very highest standing; he has been in the employ of all Governments in this country for the last 25 years. In our presence before the committee, the ex-Minister of Railways himself stated that Mr. McLeod's opinion as an expert engineer was entitled to the very highest respect. I propose to read from the evidence of Mr. McLeod. I am not going to weary the House by reading long extracts, but I will read only those portions which are most pertinent to the case in hand, to show that hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House do not deal fairly with this question when they run away from the evidence altogether. At page 111 Mr. McLeod made a statement as to the value of the road. Now, Mr. McLeod, as I stated before, has been over this whole road. He was in charge of the construction of the road since this Government took charge of it up to the present time, or, at least, up to the time he gave this evidence:

Q. Your valuation of the road when completed under contract with the Government, what do you estimate its value per mile?—A. It ought to be more than $15,000 for the portion from Moose Park.

Q. How much is it worth from Moose Park to the Chaudière per mile?—A. It would cost about $16,000 to $17,000 a mile.

Q. That is the new part?—A. Yes; the new part from Moose Creek to Chaudière.

Q. Then the value of the rest of the road from Moose Park to Ste. Rosalie, I think, you said was $15,000 a mile; do you still adhere to that?—A. With the improvements it would probably cost about $16,000 a mile.

Q. And the other about $17,000 a mile?—A. Yes.

Q. And the total can be figured upon that?—A. Yes.

That was the estimate of Mr. McLeod. He says the total may be estimated upon that basis. I have an estimate, according to that, which is as follows:—

42½ miles at $17,000 per mile.....	$ 722,500
90½ miles at $16,000 per mile.....	1,628,000
Total.....	$2,350,500

This is the estimate of Mr. McLeod, an engineer who has had the entire confidence of both Governments for the last twenty-five years. He is in charge of this road; he has walked over almost its entire distance and gone over and over it again on a hand-car, and he knows every inch of it. He knows more about it than any other person, and he swore, before the committee, that its value was $2,350,000. These are only the estimates of two engineers, and I do not pretend to say, that any one should be held to that, which is only an estimate, because all estimates are liable to err on one side or the other, and, as was remarked by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) the other day, they are generally found to be too low. However, I am now coming back to the testimony of witnesses who knew what they were talking about, who gave evidence as to cost of construction. The evidence given as to the cost of construction of this road was pooh-poohed by the hon. ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), the other night. He told us, that there were no books, and he took me to task for corroborating the statement made by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, that there were books before the committee. The hon. the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals said, that he was surprised that I should undertake to contradict him. I want to refer to this point to show that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals was correct in the statement which was contradicted by the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, speaking the other night on this question, said, at page 2956 of "Hansard":

The amount of the cost of construction, I think, expended, and not shown by the books, was $729,000.

Mr. HAGGART. The books were never brought. The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. None of them were brought.

Mr. HAGGART. The construction-books, containing the construction accounts, were not brought at all.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Were none of them brought? My impression is that the books were all available from the date named by Mr. Newton.

Mr. McISAAC (Antigonish). They were all there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. My impression corresponds with that of my hon. friend from Antigonish.

The hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, the other day, took occasion to refer to this, and tried to make this committee believe that he was right, that no books were produced at all. The statement of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals is correct. As I will show you, by the evidence, the books were all before the committee, except in so far as items up to some time in 1890, when the items on account of the construction of the railway amounted to something like $729,000, are concerned. Mr. Newton was the secretary of the construction company at that time. As an attempt has been made by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House to charge that we had not proper evidence to show what the real cost of the road is, I want to show, from the evidence, that we had all the possible evidence, and evidence which hon. gentlemen cannot now repudiate. At page 43 of the evidence Mr. Newton says:

Q. Have you any books that will inform you of that?—A. Yes, I have at Drummondville.

Q. It is very important to have them here.—A. I was not aware of that. I could have brought them as well as not. I have the construction account. On August 7, 1887, the first payment was made on stock.

* * * * *

Q. Give us the amount this firm passed to you as the amount of construction at that time?—A. "The amount paid out to date for building the line and received from the foregoing, as per construction-book on June 30, 1890, was $729,314.52."

This is what the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals said the other night. Up to this date this was the amount paid. After this date there were books to show what the cost of the railway construction was. Up to this date, although we did not have the books, we had the man who kept the books. At page 44, again, Mr. Newton says:

Q. Mr. Newton, just turn up your books showing the construction account. I understand you to say to us that you transcribed into this book the total cost of the construction of the road up to that date, 30th June, 1890?—A. Yes.

Q. As made by you, you keeping the accounts up to that time?—A. Up to that time.

Q. The total of these accounts were correctly transcribed?—A. Yes.

Then again, at page 95, he was asked by Mr. Powell:

Q. Then, as a matter of fact, you do not know whether this capital stock was paid up to the amount of $400,000 or not? As a matter of fact, all you know is that it was transferred to the construction account in these books in 1890?—A. It is as I said before. These amounts are taken from the construction account, and these accounts I consider are correct. I made all the entries in the other books. I do not think that there is anything charged in this account that I have taken that is not for construction.

Then, at page 96, he is asked by the chairman:

Q. You are book-keeper of the firm?—A. Yes.
Q. The firm undertook to build the road and owned it?—A. Yes.

Q. And up to 1890 all the cost of construction was put into the books of the firm and not of the railway company?—A. Yes.

Q. That is to say, there were no separate accounts?—A. No.

Q. You were book-keeper?—A. Yes.

Q. And in the ordinary course of business entered into the books of the firm whatever they claimed should be charged against the railway?—A. To construction account.

Q. And that account was correctly transferred when you opened the books for the Drummond County Railway?—A. Yes.

Q. Where?—A. In Drummondville.

Q. Speaking generally, as book-keeper, would you say the accounts charged to construction were proper accounts?—A. I think so.

Q. These accounts you say belong to the firm?

—A. To Church, Mitchell & Fee's own business.

Q. And these accounts are with the papers of the firm?—A. They are with Church's business altogether.

Q. And you have no control over them?—A. No.

Q. If it is thought desirable to have these accounts produced before the committee, who would be the proper person to subpoena?—A. The business was sold last fall to Charles Church and his two sons. George Church is carrying it on, and he is the proper person to apply to.

My point is this. I was absolutely correct in corroborating the Minister of Railways when he made the statement that after 1890 the construction accounts were before the committee, and before that date we had the accounts as transcribed by the very person who kept these books before 1890. It may be contended by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House that we had not the books in which all the entries up to 1890 were entered, and that the members of the committee from the other side of the House were not able to go through the details of the items of construction, which gave the total of $729,000. The evidence of Mr. Newton, which I have just read, is a complete answer to that. He says he was the man who kept the books of construction up to 1890, and after 1890 up to date. He says, however, that the books before 1890 were not in his custody or control, and he could not produce them before the committee, yet when he was asked in whose possession these books were, he said they were in the possession of George Church, down in Drummondville. This evidence was elicited before the committee, and surely hon. gentlemen on the other side—especially the two lawyers that were there—surely they cannot now contend that they have not had an opportunity to find out the entries that were made in the books previous to 1890, simply because the books could not be produced, when the witness Newton told them where the books were, and gave the name of the man in whose possession they were. But these gentlemen never asked to send a subpoena to George Church, in whose possession the books were. They subpoenaed witnesses from all the other points of the compass before that committee, but they never asked to have Mr. George Church produced.

Mr. McISAAC.

It, therefore, does not lie in the mouths of hon. gentlemen opposite to say now that these books were not produced. I shall now give to the House the evidence of those who knew the real, actual cost of the construction of the Drummond County road was. First, I will take the evidence of Mr. Greenshields. It is not the strongest evidence, because Mr. Greenshields did not keep the books, but still Mr. Greenshields is a pretty good witness, and he was not contradicted. At page 28, the evidence of Mr. Greenshields, I read as follows:—

Q. What has been the cost of the road up to the present time?—A. Well, I cannot tell you from memory the total cost. I have sent all the books, and the construction account will show exactly what the road cost. I had the figures from the secretary up to November 30 last, 1897. The construction account up to 30th November, 1897, shows the cost of the road at $1,885,184.54, but there is to be added to that a sum of from $200,000 to $250,000, paid out in December and January on account of construction of the new portion of the line, 42 miles; so that, in round figures, the construction account, so far as I can get at it now, when we have paid the cost of the 42 miles, and with the $100,000 we are pledged to spend under the temporary lease, will put the cost of the road at from $2,100,000 to $2,250,000. I cannot tell you the exact figures to a dollar, but the secretary will come here and tell you the exact amount.

Q. What is the secretary's name?—A. Samuel Newton.

That is the evidence of Mr. Greenshields, which goes to show that the actual cost of that road was between $2,100,000 and $2,250,000. At page 133, Mr. Farwell gave his evidence, and by the way, I have a remark to make about Mr. Farwell. We have heard a good deal about Mr. Greenshields being a very prominent Liberal, but I might remark in passing that a meeting which took place at Sherbrooke yesterday at which the leader of the Opposition and some distinguished Conservatives attended, this same Mr. Farwell was present, according to the newspaper report. I have nothing to say against that, and no person can object to it, but, lest I forget, I would point out that if it is true, as charged by gentlemen opposite, that Mr. Greenshields is reaping a tremendous profit out of that road, and that that money has been already expended, or will be in the future expended in the interest of the Liberal party in the federal elections and elections in the province of Quebec, I want to point out that Mr. Greenshields is only a partner, that he only gets his share, that even if there is a tremendous profit, the friends of gentlemen on the other side of the House will get their share, and so these gentlemen need not shed crocodile tears over it, even if it were true. I intend, however, before I have finished, to show that it is not true. Mr. Farwell was under the critical cross-examination of the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell), and at page 133 I read the following evidence:

Q. And $2,500,000 was all your conscience would allow you to take?—A. I mentioned the road to-day as worth $2,500,000. Our earnings on a piece of the road for the last three years were $35,000 net per annum, and the capacity of the road for local earnings is equal to the amount we were to receive under such agreement for the road.

That is the evidence of the political friend of gentlemen on the other side of the House. That is the evidence of one of the company, a man who had perfect knowledge of all the transactions concerning this road and as to its cost. I now refer to the evidence of Mr. Newton, who was the secretary of the company, who kept the books from the first day a dollar was expended on this road until it was transferred under the temporary arrangement. At page 46, Mr. Newton says :

Q. That is over the whole?—A. Yes.

Q. Then, on the whole road, as far as you have received your accounts which are not yet all in, the company has expended $2,000,000?—A. When they will all be in, $2,000,000 ; somewhere in the vicinity of that sum.

Q. Will the $2,000,000 include the $100,000 which the Government required the company to expend to bring the road up to standard?—A. No, sir.

Q. Then the $2,000,000 is exclusive of the $100,000 yet to be made under contract with the Government?—A. I should think it would be about that.

Q. You cannot get an accurate statement?—A. Yes, sir, in a few days.

Q. With all the vouchers?—A. Yes.

At page 89 of the evidence, Mr. Newton further deposes :

Q. Just state to the committee what the cost of the Drummond County Railway has been up to the present time?—A. Up to the 28th February, $1,908,271.33.

These figures were taken from his books. These figures, as I have said before, were given by the man who kept the books from the time the first dollar was expended up to the time they transferred the road under the temporary arrangement, and these figures show that up to that time the expenditure was $1,908,271.33. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair), under this agreement, which the House is asked to ratify, made it a condition that above and beyond what they had already expended, they would have to spend $100,000 more in order to bring that road up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway. In other words, $100,000 added to the actual cost of construction would bring the cost of the road, according to Mr. Newton, up to $2,008,271.33. These are the figures taken from the books ; these are the figures that cannot be gainsaid by any gentlemen on the other side of the House. Now, what does Mr. Wainwright say about this question. Mr. Wainwright, as you know, is the assistant superintendent of the Grand Trunk Railway, and Mr. Wainwright, by the way, was very anxious that this road should not be purchased by the Government, for he would much prefer, in the interests of his own company, that the Government would buy the Grand Trunk Railway or take running powers over it. But, finding that the Minister of Railways was unable to select a better road in the interests of the country and to make a better bargain, and that the Minister had made up his mind to take the Drummond County Railway, Mr. Wainwright, like an honest man, when put in the witness-stand, gave his evidence without prejudice. Mr. Wainwright's evidence is very important indeed, because I do not think we have any person who can throw a better light on this than Mr. Wainwright can, outside, of course, of the witnesses who know the actual amount of the money which had been expended. Mr. Wainwright, at page 48, says :

I might say to you that there are three railways in Quebec constructed under my own supervision, namely, the Beauharnois Junction Railway, which was built in accordance with a subsidy contract, with a light rail of 56 lbs., running from the county of Beauharnois, cost the Grand Trunk Railway Company about $17,000 a mile ; the Champlain Junction Railway, with a 65-lb. rail, and built in the same manner, cost the company between $18,000 and $19,000 per mile ; the Jacques Cartier Railway, which connects the Grand Trunk with the Canadian Pacific Railway in Jacques Cartier, with a 56-lb. rail only, cost the Grand Trunk $19,000 a mile—a little over. I have been over the Drummond County Railway, and will say this much, that the 43 miles recently built is, in my opinion, far superior in construction to the roads I have named. The other portion of it, of course, is not so good, because it carries a lighter rail ; therefore it is not so expensively constructed.

By Mr. Blair :

Q. How does that compare with the other roads you speak of?—A. The old end of the road, Mr. Blair ?

Q. As it is to-day?—A. Well, it compares very favourably. The only question with regard to cost would be the question of land damages, which I do not know anything about.

Again, at page 50, Mr. Wainwright is asked :

Q. The rate at which we acquired it is the cheapest, is it not?—A. I should think so. I think the price agreed upon represents, as far as I remember, about $12,000 a mile, which is certainly a very low price for the railway.

By Mr. Haggart :

Q. How much per mile?—A. I think about $12,000 a mile is the price that is stated. It is a very low figure for a railway of any pretensions.

According to Mr. Wainwright's evidence, this road would cost, at his lowest figure, $2,225,000. We have the estimates of Mr. McLeod, the engineer ; we have the evidence of Mr. Newton, Mr. Farwell, Mr. Greenshields, and Mr. Wainwright, all agreeing that this road did cost over $2,000,000. Now, how does the hon. member for Halifax answer this ? Does he show from the evidence of experts, or people who knew anything about the road, that it did not cost that much, and was not worth $1,600,000 ? No, but he advanced a proposition, which so far as it goes is fair enough, but which does not go far enough, and does not cover this case. He says the value of the property should be determined by its value to the owner, and not by its value to the purchaser. The truth is that both the value to the owner and the value to the purchaser are to be taken into account in determining the market price of any article. To illustrate this, suppose the hon. member for Halifax had a lot of land adjoining a mill or factory. This lot to him is worth, say, only $500, but to the man who owns the mill or factory, and desires to extend his premises, it is worth $1,000 or more; because if he cannot obtain that, he may have to buy the lot of his neighbour in another direction at perhaps three times the value of the other. If the hon. member for Halifax wanted to sell his lot to the mill owner, he would not be so silly as to ask only $500 for it, but he would try to get what it would be worth to the purchaser. The hon. gentleman's proposition is entirely unfair, and he would not rely on it if he thought he had anything of a case on the evidence. The Drummond County people were in the same position as the hon. gentleman would be in the case I have cited for illustration. They knew that it was the desire of the late Government as well as the desire of the present Government to extend the Intercolonial Railway in the public interest to Montreal; and they knew that of the three available routes the Drummond County Railway was the best, and that public opinion would be behind this or any other Government in making that extension. Therefore, do you mean to tell me that these people did not know that if the Minister of Railways did not buy their road, he would have to make the extension either by the Grand Trunk Railway or by the South Shore Railway, either of which would have cost a great deal more? They were, therefore, justified in asking for the Drummond County Railway every dollar they could get.

But the hon. member for Halifax goes further and says that the Government should have dealt with the Drummond County people on the basis of expropriation. The Government were not in the expropriating business in this matter. They had no authority, as I understand, to expropriate the Drummond County Railway. But even if they had the authority, I take issue with my hon. friend from Halifax in regard to the possibility of making as good a bargain by that means as the one the hon. Minister of Railways has laid before the House. If the Government had authority to expropriate the road, we know that Mr. Greenshields, Mr. Farwell, Mr. Newton, all clever men, would be able to present such an array of evidence as to its value that we would not be likely to get it for $1,600,000 or perhaps even for $2,600,000. We have a very good illustration of the results of expropriation in the case of the purchase of the right of way for the St. Charles Branch, for a distance of 14 miles when the hon. leader of the Opposition was Minister of Railways. Under that beautiful process of expropriation the farmers along that line got from this country $1,000,000 for the land alone. If my hon. friend is not satisfied on this point, I will give him evidence to show that he or any other man on that side of the House should be the last to propose expropriation. I will refer him to page 1225 of "Hansard" of 1888, where he will find the discussion which took place on that question:

Mr. McISAAC.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the total cost of that branch to date?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am ashamed almost to say.

The first time I ever knew him to be ashamed of anything—

The total expenditure up to the 30th June, 1886, was $787,473.47. The expenditure during the year ending 30th June, 1877, was $230,103.78. The expenditure during the two months ending 31st January, 1885, was $55,042.83; total, $1,274,619.31.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. To which this $188,000 must be added?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. So it will be close on $1,500,000?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. What is the length?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Fifteen miles.

Mr. DAVIES. How much more will be required before the claims cease completely?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There are some claims in addition.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. There is no tunnel on this that I am aware of.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, it is an enormous cost, and principally consists of what is claimed as land damages.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. Yet we are told the price of property in Quebec is not improving.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Government resisted the claim in every possible way. They expended $8,000 for legal expenses, and even brought the cases to the Supreme Court.

Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT. In a sense this is satisfactory, as it shows that the value of land within a certain radius of the ancient capital is as dear as at any point of Ontario that I know of.

Mr. DAVIES (P.E.I.) What is the amount of the claims yet unpaid?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A very large sum, indeed—over $500,000.

What are the facts? According to the statement of the leader of the Opposition, 15 miles of the St. Charles branch, the right of way, cost this country over $1,000,000. Now, apply this case to the Drummond County people. Remember that these poor farmers of St. Charles branch had to submit their claims individually—and you know that a farmer, no matter how well off he may be, is not in a position to carry through an expensive lawsuit. Supposing Mr. Greenshields, who is rather a clever man, were given the opportunity of proving damages, as he would be, if this property were to be expropriated by the Government, do you think he would not make a stronger case than did these farmers along the St. Charles branch of the Intercolonial. The hon. gentleman from Halifax must admit that Mr. Greenshields and his associates are less able to prosecute their claims for damages in the courts than were the poor farmers on the St. Charles branch of the Intercolonial, or that this Government is far better able to look after the interests of the country than was the former Government, which had to pay these heavy damages. My hon. friend has to take either horn of the dilemma before he can make much headway in his argument for expropriation.

Then, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) resorted to another argument, equally unfair. He said, that the earning powers of a road are a very good test of its value. I admit the correctness of that statement, so far as it goes, but he does not apply his premises fairly. What were the earning powers of this road? The average earning power of the part completed and running amounted to $33,124.28. Therefore, he said, this railway which, according to the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison), had cost $1,908,000, was yielding on that investment the sum of $33,128. Such was the argument of the hon. gentleman, and he claimed that the line, therefore, was not a very paying concern. But let me point out where his statement is unfair. He makes a comparison between the earning powers of a portion of the road and the cost of the road completed. But the earning powers he referred to were simply those on one-half of the road. They were the earning powers on the branch from Ste. Rosalie to Moose Park, and the Nicolet branch. According to the evidence of Mr. Newton, at page 101, the 28 miles from St. Leonard to Moose Park did not pay at all. The earning power, therefore, applies to only 62 miles of the road, which was the only part paying at the time, and yet the hon. gentleman wants us to conclude that that will be the earning power of the road completed and in full running order. I ask you, Sir, if that is a fair argument. In showing the percentage of profits, he ought to apply that earning power, $33,000, to the 62 miles which actually earned it, and then give us a fair statement of the value of the 28 miles to Moose Park, where the road then ended, and state that there was no connection for 42 miles at all to Chaudière. The amount he gave is, therefore, no criterion at all of what the earning powers of the road will be, as extended and in operation all the way between Chaudière and Montreal. What does Mr. Farwell himself say, in this connection? At page 133 of the evidence he says, on this point:

I mention the road to-day as worth $2,500,000. Our earnings on a piece of the road for the last three years were $35,000 per year net per annum, and the capacity of the road for local earnings is equal to the amount we were to receive under such agreement for the road.

There is the evidence of Mr. Farwell against the statement of the hon. gentleman, clearly showing that the earning powers on 62 miles of the road is not a fair test of the value of the whole line. But, when we take into consideration the fact that the whole Intercolonial never paid any percentage of profits at all, what becomes of his argument? Every year, under both Governments, there has been a deficit between the ordinary running expenditure and its earnings, except for one or two years. When the Intercolonial is not able to pay expenses, surely my hon. friend cannot make a very strong argument, even if he could show that the Drummond County road is not any better than the rest of the Intercolonial; but, by his own showing, it has yielded a far better return for the money put into it than the whole of the Intercolonial.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. McISAAC. At six o'clock I was referring to what I believe to be certain misleading statements of the hon. member for Halifax. I would now refer to another statement of that kind. It is found in the minority report, page 30. It is as follows:—

Mr. Schreiber's estimate of the cost of the road, if built fairly up to the plans and specifications of the subsidy agreement, is the sum of $1,535,000. Assuming that the road was built up to that standard, it must be remembered that $650,356 of this amount was received in subsidies, and that the balance of $884,644 represents all the money which the company put into the road. The price of $2,094,192, which would have been realized by the company under the agreement of 1897, would have given to the company on this basis a profit of $1,209,548.

I contend that no more misleading statement than that could be made, and I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should make such a statement. The first figure given is the estimate which Mr. Schreiber made in 1894 of what the road would cost if brought up to the requirements of the Subsidy Act. They assume that that was the cost of the road. But they forget the evidence which shows that, instead of the cost being that estimated by the engineer, the road actually cost, according to the company's books, over $2,008,000. To be fair, the hon. gentleman should give that as the cost of the road. Then, again, they take the subsidy paid from the federal, provincial and municipal sources. I am not going to find fault with that at the present moment, but will say the subsidies were not deducted by the late Government in the purchase of the Rivière du Loup branch. And then they conclude:

The price of $2,094,192, which would have been realized by the company under the agreement of 1897, would have given to the company on this basis a profit of $1,209,548.

Thus they try to make the House and the country believe that the company, out of their rental of $64,000 a year, which they would get under the first agreement, would realize something over $2,000,000, forgetting the statement put forth by themselves that the present bargain is so much better than the first, because the Government can borrow money much more cheaply than the company can. Now, how can hon. gentlemen, and especially those who signed that report, reconcile their statements? It is absurd to say that out of their $64,000 annual rental, the company could raise the capital amount of over $2,000,000. It is admitted all around that the company could not borrow money at the same low rate of interest that the Government can, and, therefore, the capital amount estimated by hon. gentlemen opposite is erroneous. If hon. gentlemen are going to make an estimate to show how much money the company are making out of the road, they should take the estimate, not of Mr. Schreiber alone, but of Mr. McLeod, whose testimony on this point is far more valuable than Mr. Schreiber's, because, as I stated in the afternoon, he was on the road and travelled all over it. He made the estimate that the road, brought up to the state of efficiency it was in when handed over to the Government under the present agreement would cost $2,225,000. And according to the estimates and figures sworn to by Mr. Newton, Mr. Greenshields, Mr. Farwell, and those who know what actually went into the road, the cost to the company was $2,008,271. They are getting $1,600,000 from the Government, leaving a balance of $408,271 in favour of the Government. So, instead of making a profit, the company are actually losing $408,271. This does not include the subsidies. And I contend we have no right to include the subsidies from federal and provincial sources. The present leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) when he was Minister of Railways and Canals carried on the transaction for the purchase of the Rivière du Loup branch but did not consider the subsidies that the company received when they were building the road. But I will not insist even upon that point. I will subtract the federal subsidies of $287,000 from $408,000, and even then there is a balance in favour of the Government of over $120,000. This, Sir, is a very much fairer statement, if hon. gentlemen wish to know what the profits of this company would be.

Now, I will refer for a few moments to the question of the option over which the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), the other day, spent a great deal of time. He tried to lead this House and this country to believe that he had an option at one time for this road for $500,000, and at another time for $400,000. He gave evidence before the committee, and when he was asked the question whether he understood that the option meant that he could have the road for $500,000 or $400,000, his answer was: Oh, no; I did not say that. His evidence will be found at page 151. The leader of the Opposition took occasion more than once, in this House and out of it, to convey the idea that the company were hawking this road about for the sum of $500,000, and the Government are now giving $1,600,000 for it. The statement is misleading. It is only half the truth, and you know how dangerous it is to give half the truth and conceal the rest. It is true there was an option for $500,000; it is equally true, according to the evidence, that on another occasion there was an option for $400,000; but as explained by the evidence of Mr. Greenshields, Mr. Farwell and Mr. Pope, those figures of $500,000 or $400,000 were simply nominal sums, and the arrangement which the Drummond County people made with Mr. Hugh Ryan and others was that this road was to be disposed of to the late Government for a yearly rental of $100,000, or at the rate of $17,500 per mile when completed. Now we have the evidence of Mr. Greenshields on page 32 on this very point, where he says, referring to this agreement:

This is only a copy. Mr. Farwell called a meeting of the shareholders of the Drummond County Railway Company about the time that this document was signed. He said to us that he was then negotiating, or was about to open negotiations, through Mr. Hugh Ryan with the Conservative Government for the purchase of the Drummond County Railway, and that the negotiations were conducted on the basis of the leasing of the road for $100,000 per annum, to be completed through to Chaudière, or the payment to the company after completion at the rate of $17,500 a mile. He said: "I must have a complete assignment of the stock of the road so that it will be entirely controlled by me. This assignment I propose to give to Mr. Hugh Ryan, who is to conduct the negotiations." A subsequent agreement was made by which, if the road was leased for $100,000 rental, or sold for $17,500 a mile after it was completed through to Chaudière, the cost of the completion was to be deducted out of the difference between $500,000 and the price received, and the total amount remaining was to be divided into three portions, one portion to go to Mr. Farwell and two-thirds of the difference to Mr. Hugh Ryan and his friends, and the one-third going to Mr. Farwell was to be added to the $500,000 which was to represent the real purchase price of the road to the shareholders.

Then again, at page 37, Mr. Greenshields is asked this question:

Now, do I understand you to say, Mr. Greenshields, that the result, if the negotiations had closed with the Government, would have been financially a better one for the Drummond County Railway than the arrangements you have made with the Government to-day?—A. Undoubtedly it would have been.

Now what is the evidence of Mr. Farwell? By the way, I want to remind the committee again that Mr. Farwell is not a Liberal, he is a great friend and supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Q. What were the terms of the verbal agreement?—A. The understanding was that he (Mr. Ryan) was to undertake to construct—first of all, he was to undertake to effect an agreement for a lease of the road to the Government for $100,000 a year, or a sale for $2,500,000. I will not say he undertook to do it, but that was the condition on which he had this agreement, and on which I signed this option to him. He was then to construct, to furnish the money to construct the road through to Chaudière, and after deducting the expense of that the shareholders were to be paid the amount stipulated in this agreement, and one-third of the profits on the transaction after that was to come to me.

Then again, at page 136, Mr. Farwell was asked this question :

Q. Was there ever any authority given to anybody to sell for $400,000?—A. Never.

Now the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, notwithstanding this evidence given before the committee, tried to show that they had an option for this road for the figure of $500,000. I will read the evidence of Mr. Pope, another witness whose testimony will not be discounted by hon. gentlemen opposite :

Q. Do you know, as a matter of fact, that any particular terms were mentioned?—A. I have often heard Mr. Farwell speak of getting certain terms.

Q. What were they?—A. $2,500,000—in the vicinity of that.

He was asked again by the chairman :

Q. There was no secret about it. They wanted $2,500,000 of a capital sum, or $100,000 a year?—A. Yes.

Now, I do not think it is necessary to give any further evidence on this point to show that the contention of hon. gentlemen opposite that this road could have been had by the late Government for $500,000, as it stood before the $100,000 was expended upon it, is entirely unfounded. The member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) the other night tried to leave the impression upon the House that while he was Minister of Railways and Canals this road was available at any time for either $400,000 or $500,000. We have his own evidence that he was very anxious at the time to extend the Intercolonial Railway from Lévis to Montreal, for the reasons, as he stated before the committee, that he had a good deal of trouble with the Grand Trunk Railway and with the Canadian Pacific Railway at Lévis, and, therefore, he wished to have the Intercolonial Railway extended to Montreal. He told us that he asked his deputy, Mr. Schreiber, to make an estimate of what that road was worth, and he received from Mr. Schreiber an estimate that that road, which he tried to make us believe could have been obtained by him for $500,000, was worth no less a sum than $1,535,000. What can hon. gentlemen think of the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals? He says that he had been having trouble with the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway at Lévis, and was anxious to secure an extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, and he tells us that he could have had that road completed for $500,000, while his deputy told him that the road was worth then $1,535,000. Yet he never did anything. When he found out that the road was worth over a million more than he could have obtained it for, he stopped, and did not take another step. What kind of statesmanship was this for a man who occupied the position of Minister of Railways in this country? Why did he not take advantage of this great opportunity to get this road at so small a figure? He could have saved a million dollars, according to his own testimony. But at the same time, under his own eyes, he lost or allowed to be stolen $270,000 on the Curran Bridge at Montreal. He could have saved more—four times more than that sum to the country by buying this road at the estimate of Mr. Schreiber, but he did not buy it though he told us that the road was going begging for $500,000 all these years.

I have shown what the actual cost of this road was from the evidence, which must be admitted by hon. members on both sides of this House; I have explained away the nature of this option which has also been sought to be misrepresented by some hon. members on the other side of the House. Now, I am going to make a comparison between the cost of other portions of the Intercolonial Railway and the Drummond County Railway. I want to be fair; I am not going to undertake to say that every section of the road would cost the same amount. I am not going to say that this road ought to be purchased for the sums at which the other portions of the road were purchased, because some portions of the Intercolonial cost more than others. I want to say that a comparison of the price paid for the Drummond County with the prices paid for other sections of the Intercolonial Railway is, to say the least of it, as fair a way of arguing this question as was the argument of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), who told us that the value of the road to the owners and not the purchaser as well, is the only basis of the value of the road. I will take, first, the Rivière du Loup branch. This branch cost in the vicinity of $17,600 a mile. I put the question to this committee: How much would the Drummond County Railway cost at the price paid for the Rivière du Loup branch when it was purchased? The Drummond County Railway, 132 miles in length, at the price paid for the Rivière du Loup branch, would cost $2,332,000. In other words, instead of paying $2,332,000 for the Drummond County Railway, the rate paid per mile for the Rivière du Loup branch, we are getting the road for $1,600,

000. Take the Oxford and New Glasgow branch; this road cost $26,700 per mile. If the Drummond County Railway had cost the same figure as the Oxford and New Glasgow branch, instead of costing this country $1,600,000, it would have cost us $3,537,750. The Cape Breton road cost $33,000 a mile, not including the Narrows bridge or the ferry across the Strait of Canso. At that figure the Drummond County Railway, instead of costing us $1,600,000, would have cost us $4,472,500. Let us take the St. Charles branch of the Intercolonial, a railway fourteen miles in length, constructed when the hon. leader of the Opposition was Minister of Railways in this country. That road cost $136,000 per mile, and, at the same figure, the Drummond County would cost about $18,000,000. That includes the right of way as well as the construction. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals was fair, I think too fair, when, the other night, he struck off the damages for right of way. It is true the right of way for the St. Charles branch of the Intercolonial may have been more expensive than the right of way of the Drummond County, but no person will contend that the price paid by the late Government for the right of way—over $1,000,000—for fourteen miles, could be justified. I read the explanation offered by the hon. leader of the Opposition in 1884, when he actually said that he was ashamed of the cost of this branch and of the right of way. It was the first time that I ever heard that hon. gentleman express sorrow for anything he did as a Minister of the Crown. However, he had to do that, and, on this occasion, I think he was perfectly honest. Fourteen miles of the St. Charles branch of the Intercolonial cost this country just $400,000 more than 132 miles of the Drummond County Railway. I would ask hon. gentlemen to compare the record of the hon. leader of the Opposition, when Minister of Railways, with that of the present Minister of Railways, who has been so viciously assailed for the alleged mismanagement of this transaction by the hon. leader of the Opposition. I think when a comparison of these records is made it will be found that the hon. leader of the Opposition, when Minister of Railways, did very little to deserve the confidence of the people of this country. Now, Sir, I think it makes no difference from what standpoint you look upon this question. It cannot be contended that the price was extravagant, and it cannot be shown that the Government could have obtained that road for a smaller amount of money than they are paying for it. But hon. gentlemen opposite say: Oh, but the bargain this year is much more favourable than the bargain of two years ago, and they will try to make it appear that the Senate was justified in throwing out the Bill, and that it is very much to the discredit of the hon. Minister of Railways that the bargain this year is more favourable than that of two years ago. I do not think, assuming even that it is more favourable, that it is any discredit to the hon. Minister of Railways. It shows that the hon. Minister of Railways, when he had an opportunity to make another bargain, put forth again every honest effort to make a better bargain, and, I venture to say that if this bargain is not ratified by this House, or by the other branch of Parliament, the Minister of Railways will again devote his attention to secure every possible concession from the company. If you institute a comparison between these two bargains you will find that the different statements by different hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House are not borne out by the facts. Some say that the bargain is $500,000 better than the first bargain, whilst other say that it is $750,000 better than the first. The hon. leader of the Opposition says it is worth a million or more to the country than the first bargain. On what principle they go in these different calculations on a question of simple interest I cannot understand. To my mind, the question is simply this: Under the first bargain of two years ago the Government undertook to lease the Drummond County Railway for ninety-nine years, and they undertook to pay for every year of these ninety-nine years a rental of $64,000, and at the end of the ninety-nine years the road was to become the absolute property of this country, and the country would have no more money to pay. It would simply have to pay the $64,000 every year for ninety-nine years. What is the bargain of to-day. The bargain which the Government proposes to-day is to buy this road out-and-out for a lump sum of $1,600,000. There is quite a difference. In the one case it is the question of an annual rental which includes both principal and interest. In the other it is simple interest on borrowed capital. The first bargain is that, for ninety-nine years, the Government were to pay $64,000, and in ninety-nine years would extinguish both principal and interest. Now, the Government propose to pay $1,600,000 for the road, and it will not be denied that the Government can borrow money at a lower rate of interest than the company, therefore, the Government will have to borrow $1,600,000, and add that to the capital debt of the country. It will have to continue to pay interest—at a lower rate, it is true—but it will have to continue to pay interest until the bonds are redeemed by this country, and at the expiration of the bonds the Government will have to pay in cash the principal amount. So that they are paying a lower rate of interest until the redemption of their bonds, and after that, they pay the principal sum; whilst under the first agreement the $64,000 includes interest as well as, of course, the reduction of the capital year after year for ninety-nine years, until the whole thing is wiped off, and that is the end of it. If hon.

gentlemen will make a calculation on that, they will find that it is not $500,000 or anything near it, and it is just a nice question of arithmetic as to which of the two bargains is the better.

Now, Sir, what has been the result of this temporary arrangement? Will anybody deny that the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, both from a financial point of view and from the view of the public convenience and interest, has been a great success. If you compare the expenditure for maintenance and repairs on the Intercolonial Railway, for the two last years of the late Government, with that of the two first years of the present Government, you will find that the present Minister (Mr. Blair) has expended in the vicinity of $300,000 in these two years more than the Conservative Government did, in maintaining and repairing this road. And what is the result of it all? Before the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, the passenger traffic between the east and west, almost without exception was by the Canadian Pacific Railway via St. John. The exception then was to see anybody travelling on the Intercolonial Railway, but that order of things is to-day reversed, and the exception is to see any one, unless he has special reasons to go by St. John, travelling on the Canadian Pacific Railway. Before this extension, the Intercolonial Railway was a back number among the railways of this country, but to-day it is in the front van of railway enterprise, and it is useless, in view of the existing state of things, for hon. gentlemen opposite to contend against the principle of extension. I venture to say, Mr. Chairman, that you will search the parliamentary records of this country in vain to find a case on which so much time and so much energy has been wasted in the vain and hopeless attempt to fasten a charge of corruption and mismanagement against an administration, as has been done by the Opposition in this case. For the last two years these gentlemen have kept up the struggle. Two years ago they commenced by calling this a scandalous, corrupt and extravagant bargain, in which two members of the Government were directly implicated, and by which a huge corruption fund was to be raised for the purpose of carrying federal and provincial elections in the province of Quebec, and, as was stated the other night by the leader of the Opposition, for carrying the elections in New Brunswick also. Well, suppose we admit for the sake of argument that there was some possibility of this, we must remember that there was more than one party to this transaction. Mr. Greenshields is, of course, the man who would be supposed to give a corrupt fund to the Liberal party, but Mr. Greenshields had a partner in the transaction, and this partner was Mr. Farwell, the Conservative organizer of the eastern townships.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. McIsaac) pardon me. Mr.

Farwell stated on oath before the committee that he was not the Conservative organizer.

Mr. BERGERON. And never was.

Mr. McISAAC. True, he stated he was not the organizer—

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). He said he not only was not the Conservative organizer, but that he had very little to do with politics.

Mr. McISAAC. He stated he did not take as active a part in politics as some hon. gentlemen did, but in that respect he put himself on a par with Mr. Greenshields, and they are both in the same position. If he is not an organizer, he is an active and energetic supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite, and yesterday he was with the leader of the Opposition and other distinguished Conservatives, holding political meetings in the eastern townships.

Mr. BERGERON. No; he left by the morning train.

Mr. McISAAC. If Mr. Farwell was not with them he was not far behind them, and I can tell these hon. gentlemen, that if they think Mr. Greenshields got a huge campaign fund for the Liberal party out of the transaction, it is reasonable to suppose that Mr. Farwell will also keep his share for his Conservative friends. But, Sir, from the evidence given, there is very little margin for Mr. Greenshields or for Mr. Farwell to devote to election funds in the province of Quebec or elsewhere. Two years ago, the Conservative press charged that two Ministers were directly implicated, and they said they had the evidence in their possession. The same charges were insinuated in this House at the time, but not made directly. Encouraged by the tone of the Conservative press, the Senate appointed a committee of inquiry, and what was the result? They organized and they sat, and they adjourned, and they sat again, and at the end of the session they disbanded and nothing was done. Then, a committee was appointed by this House, and it was announced that the Senate committee were watching the House of Commons committee, that the moment it would appear that the Liberal majority on the House of Commons committee would decline to admit the evidence that the Conservatives had, then the Senate committee would proceed. They prowled around day after day like watchdogs over the proceedings of the House of Commons committee, and at the close of that investigation, as is well known to every one in this country, two of the Conservative members of that committee declared, that not only did they not charge corruption, but that they never heard of such a charge being made. The end of the Senate committee that was appointed the second time was, that they disbanded again, and that is the result of all the Conservative talk about corruption. The ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), in the course of his long speech the other evening, once actually asserted, but evidently with a faint heart, that he was willing to appeal to the country upon this transaction, and he hoped that the result of that appeal would be to remove the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair), in the expectation, no doubt, that he (Mr. Haggart) would take his position. But, Sir, the first hon. gentleman who rose on the Conservative side after the ex-Minister (Mr. Haggart) had concluded, the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) stated to this House, that after hearing the speech of the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) he was compelled to support this transaction, and he (Mr. Ross Robertson) stated further, that although the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), for two hours, had said everything he could against the management of the Intercolonial Railway under the present Minister (Mr. Blair), yet the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross Robertson) was bound to confess that the present Minister (Mr. Blair) had done more for the Intercolonial Railway than any other Minister of Railways in the past, whether Liberal or Conservative. It is unnecessary for me to say any thing further on this point. The ex-Minister (Mr. Haggart) and his friends opposite who support him, have got their answer, from one of their own strongest and most independent supporters in this House. The people of Canada will take no stock in the policy of the Conservative party on this question. The people of Canada are not likely to be in a hurry to discharge the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair), and to put in his place the ex-Minister (Mr. Haggart), whose peculiar administration of the Railway Department is yet fresh in the minds of the people. The electorate of this country have not yet forgotten the Curran Bridge and the Tay Canal, which, in the good old days of Tory corruption, was familiarly known as Haggart's ditch. Hon. gentlemen opposite will have to adopt a waiting policy before they again reach the Treasury benches. They must wait until the people of this country forget their bad record. They must wait in Opposition so long as the people of Canada remember, that the Liberal party in Opposition preferred specific charges of corruption against the Conservative Administration, asked for committees, and proved their charges to be well founded. The people of this country are not slow to distinguish the methods of the two parties in this House. They will not regard as manly political warfare the tactics pursued by hon. gentlemen opposite, when they make wild, extravagant and vague charges. Instead of taking a manly course, making specific charges, if they had any, asking for a committee, and producing their evidence, they invariably conclude by moving the adjournment of the House, in order that they may get an easy way of running out of the House and taking to the woods. That has been their conduct up to date. Not one of them will dare to make any specific charge and back it up with evidence. The public opinion of this country is against these hon. gentlemen, and it will continue to be against them until they change their tactics. This Government is steadily gaining ground in the confidence and esteem of the people of this country. All the by-elections show this, and from all other directions the indications point to the same conclusion. We need not go outside of the four corners of this Chamber to see that public opinion is with us. Hon. members sitting beside and behind the leader of the Opposition changed their seats and are now giving a full support to this Administration; and there are other hon. gentlemen on that side of the House who are looking across with longing eyes. The germs of disintegration and decay are spreading with wonderful rapidity and are developing fast among these hon. gentlemen and among their friends in the country. Sir, I do not fear a general election, as has been suggested by the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart), whether it be this year or next year. So long as the Government whom I support have such a record as they have shown by this Drummond County Railway purchase, so long as their record shall continue as it is up to the present time, they will command the confidence of the people of this country. We will not appeal to the country. Sir, in a state of mutiny, flying at each others' throats; but we will appeal to the electors in the full hope that the record of this Government is such as cannot fail to enlist the sympathy and support of the great majority of those electors.

Mr. H. A. POWELL (Westmoreland). Mr. Chairman, I have followed with a great deal of interest the remarks of the hon. member for Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac). But, notwithstanding the closeness with which I have followed him, I have failed to observe what connection there is between ratting from this side of the House to the other and a justification of the Drummond deal. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman sees a necessary logical connection between the two, and I presume, from its attention, that the House sees probably as much connection between these two subjects as between his speech and the merits of the deal generally.

Sufficient of detail has been entered into, I think, without my wearying the House with further elaborate detail. In order that those who are not from the maritime provinces, however, may obtain an intelligent grasp of this question, I shall state a few facts which, to us who come from the maritime provinces, are unnecessary to be stated, but which may serve to elucidate the question for those hon. gentlemen who represent the west. The Intercolonial Railway, I may say, was a system composed of about 1,141 miles of railway. Its chief oceanic terminals were at the seaports of St. John and Halifax. Its western terminals, which connected it with the great continental systems of railway, were at the port of St.

John and at Lévis, in the province of Quebec. All traffic originating on the Intercolonial system and destined for Montreal or points west, had to seek interchange with the Canadian Pacific Railway at the city of St. John, or with the Grand Trunk Railway at the town of Lévis; and, vice versa, all traffic originating at Montreal or points west and destined to points on the Intercolonial, had to be interchanged either at Lévis with the Intercolonial, or at St. John with the Intercolonial.

It may be necessary to state the distances, in order that you may fully understand the argument. From St. John to Montreal, via the Canadian Pacific Railway, the distance is 481 miles. From St. John to Montreal, via the Intercolonial Railway and its extension to Montreal, the distance is 740 miles. The town of Moncton occupies a pivotal point on the Intercolonial Railway system. It is the point at which the branch to the city of St. John diverges from the main line to Halifax. From Moncton to Montreal, by way of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the distance is 570 miles; and by way of the Intercolonial the distance is 650 miles. From Halifax to Montreal, by way of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Intercolonial to St. John, the distance is 758 miles; the distance, by the Intercolonial Railway and the present extension to the city of Montreal, is 837 miles. The advantages, therefore, are as follows:—The Canadian Pacific Railway has an advantage, in respect to transportation from Montreal to St. John, of no less than 250 miles; the pivotal point of Moncton has an advantage of 81 miles; and all the eastern section of the Intercolonial, between Moncton and Halifax, Sydney and Pictou, has an advantage of 81 miles, as has also the city of Halifax. Now, previous to the initiation of the policy of the present Minister of Railways, through traffic originating on the Intercolonial, and through traffic originating at points west of Montreal, which was destined to or from points on the Intercolonial, were interchanged, as I have said, at the port of St. John or at the town of Lévis. The greater portion of this through traffic was interchanged at Lévis. In the course of time, owing to the lack of business tact, or owing to the lack of desire to accommodate, on the part of the Grand Trunk Railway, the communication by Lévis became very imperfect. Freight was detained, express passenger trains failed to make necessary connections, and it seems that the late Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) had in view an extension of the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal. So far, then, as the general policy of the Intercolonial extension to the city of Montreal is concerned, there does not seem to be any radical or basal difference between the hon. gentleman who now presides over the Department of Railways, and the ex-Minister of Railways. These drawbacks to which I have referred, and these delays in the transportation of freight and passengers made the present question a live one, and, when the present Minister of Railways came into power, he took into consideration, soon after his advent to office, the desirability of an extension to Montreal.

Now, in order to grapple with the question intelligently, let us consider the problem that presented itself to the Minister of Railways and Canals. With a terminal at Lévis, there were opened up to him the two following methods of transportation to Montreal—first, by means of the Grand Trunk Railway around by Richmond Junction and then by Montreal, which was about nine miles longer than the present system; and also the water transportation by means of the St. Lawrence. In addition to these two methods, there was in contemplation a third route. That route would have been completed—and some day, doubtless, will be completed—by the construction of a bridge at the city of Quebec. To the construction of this bridge both parties in this country are more or less pledged. So far, then, as the question of through freight is concerned, the extension to Montreal meant no more, except so far as freight originating at or destined to the city of Montreal was concerned, than had the Intercolonial Railway its terminal at Lévis. But concede that it was desirable and is desirable that the Intercolonial Railway should be extended to the city of Montreal, there were four methods open to the hon. Minister.

First, there was the traffic arrangement. This great system of the Intercolonial Railway—great in its importance as respects the maritime provinces—could have effected virtually an entrance into the city of Montreal by an adequate traffic arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway for the interchange of traffic between them at the town of Lévis. The second course open to the Intercolonial Railway officials was to obtain running rights, which might be a subject of agreement between the Intercolonial Railway authorities and the officers of the Grand Trunk Railway, or, in case of failure to arrive at what would be a fair agreement, might have been a subject of an order of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council granting to the Intercolonial Railway running rights, on terms that might be fair and adequate for the Grand Trunk Railway, to the city of Montreal. There was a third scheme that was open. The Intercolonial Railway could have constructed a line from Lévis to Montreal. The fourth scheme was that the Intercolonial Railway authorities could have purchased or leased a line and terminals in order to complete the system.

Now, Sir, so far as the traffic arrangement is concerned there seems to be a disposition on the part of some to say that this is entirely inadequate. But I have no hesitation in saying that if this business Government were disposed to act on business principles, if they were disposed to act on the same principles as railway companies observe under similar circumstances, there would have been no difficulty between the Intercolonial Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway that could not easily have been overcome. My authority for that statement is this—that it is to-day, and has been for a long time the custom between great railways in the United States to arrive at just such agreements as this.

However, suppose that we concede that it would be impracticable to make an arrangement of that kind. I ask, then what there was impracticable about the second scheme—that is to obtain running rights over these roads to effect an entrance into the city of Montreal? At the present time the Wabash Railway in the United States and the Grand Trunk itself have a traffic arrangement extending over 200 miles. It might be said that the terminals at Montreal would be crowded and that great inconvenience to the Grand Trunk would result. Against that I could cite a great many instances in the United States of two or more railways using the same terminals. Why, in the city of Chicago to-day, there are the following occupying one set of terminals:—The Wisconsin Central, the Northern Pacific, the Chicago and Great Western, and the Baltimore and Ohio—all great leading highways in the western states. We have also, occupying one station, the Michigan Central and the Illinois Central. Also on the eastern coast of the continent occupying the same terminals, we have the Reading, the New Jersey Central, and the Lehigh Valley. Again, in Chicago, we have, occupying the same terminals, the Chicago and West Illinois, the Chicago and East Illinois, the Chicago and Grand Trunk, the Chicago and Erie, the Atchison, the Louisville, New Albany and Chicago, and the Chicago and Wabash. It is not necessary for me to go further in citing cases of United States systems. I appeal to the practice in Canadian centres. To-day, in the city of Toronto, we have the Grand Trunk and the Canadian Pacific occupying the same station and using the same terminals. The Minister of Railways and Canals said it would have been a very harsh thing to take the Grand Trunk Railway by the throat and force upon them an arrangement of that kind. From that position I entirely dissent. I dissent, in the first place, on the general theory of railroads, which it is well known prevails universally in this country and in the great republic to the south of us and in every civilized country on the globe to-day. Why, what is the theory of railroads in Great Britain—and I shall not pursue this theoretical discussion at too great length as it may savour somewhat of an academic nature? I find that from the time the first railway company was incorporated down to the year 1840, the theory underlying the railway system of the country was this—that each and every man in Great Britain, and each and every corporation had a right to run its trains and engines on any railway without respect to the person to whom the road belonged. Not only that, but under the Railway Clauses Act of 1845, which stands upon the British statute-books still unrepealed, the theory of British law is that any man or corporation in Great Britain can employ his engine and train and run it on any railroad subject to reasonable tolls that the company which owns the road-bed and terminals may impose. The same thing applies to the countries on the European continent that have great railway systems. But we need not consider these instances abroad; we can come nearer home. And, approaching home, what do we find? In this very city of Ottawa, this course that the Minister of Railways and Canals has denounced as harsh and tyrannical has been pursued; and here we see the Canada Atlantic Railway, with vested rights in the Central Station, under an order of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council forced to admit to the user of its terminal the Canadian Pacific Railway, and also, I am informed, through the newspaper, though it is not yet a matter of public record, the Ottawa and New York Railway. Here, then, we have an illustration made by the Minister of Railways and Canals himself, of what he considers to be a harsh and tyrannical exercise of power. These franchises were granted to the Grand Trunk for what? For the benefit of the people. The Grand Trunk Railway Company was made a trustee for the people of this country. And, Sir, the theory underlying all railway systems in English-speaking countries justifies that they should be forced, in the exercise of that trust, to admit to these benefits, on reasonable terms, any applicant who can make out a reasonable case. Therefore, all that was necessary was for the Intercolonial Railway authorities to obtain running rights, by agreement if possible, or, if that were not practicable, by an order of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. The power to give such an order as this is conferred by the Railway Act to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. Under section 11, subsection F, this Railway Committee have the right to make regulations for the use by one company of the tracks or station grounds of another; and companies, as defined by the Act, include any person having authority to operate a railway. And by the second section of that Act, the Railway Committee of the Privy Council are authorized to make regulations for running powers or haulage over the lines of one company by other companies. But when the matter came before the present Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair), he decided that he would not exercise the rights he had, but would resort to purchase or lease. There were at that time three ways by which the Intercolonial could have got into the city of Montreal. There was, first, the Atlantic and Lake Superior, which was not then constructed, but was subsidized and which was pushing its line through to the same terminal point; there was, second, the Drummond County Railway, and third, the Grand Trunk Railway. These roads are substantially equal in length. Yet, without any adequate or regular inquiry, the Minister of Railways selected the Drummond County road and the leasing of the Grand Trunk from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal.

Let us look for a moment at the Drummond County road, and see in what position it was. My hon. friend the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) discussed very fully this matter, but at the risk of repetition, I will enter upon its discussion again. The Drummond County line was built as a mere lumber road. The gentlemen who inaugurated that scheme had no idea at the time of doing anything else than build a road which would afford them access to their lumber lands in the counties contiguous to the line of railway. Afterwards it began to dawn upon them that they might do better than construct a mere lumber road, that there might be a good speculation in extending it, and at the time they entered into negotiation with the Government, there were ninety miles of the railway completed—seventy-three miles of the main line and a branch of seventeen miles, which ran down to the St. Lawrence, and forty-three miles not constructed, or, in fact, not begun. Financially, the road was bankrupt. Its construction had been entered upon away back in 1889, and during the nine years in which that railway, or parts of it, had been in existence, not at any time—and I bring this matter to the attention of the House to show what an absolutely bankrupt affair it was—not in one single year had there ever been a dividend of a solitary cent declared, although they showed earnings, year after year, in their sworn reports to the Government. This one-horse road had as an equipment on its ninety miles of railway one first-class car, one second-class car, one baggage car, five engines, nine box cars and twenty flat cars. This was the total equipment of this magnificent railway. Its average net earnings in 1897, as stated in its sworn return, were $33,101.61. I give the exact cents, as they are very important, considering the fact that the undertaking was worth nothing. Averaging the three years, including 1897, the net revenue on that railway was $33,124.28. I make bold to declare that there was not during all that time—and I challenge contradiction from any hon. gentleman opposite—one dollar of that earnings bona fide to show for the company's operations. Later on I will touch upon that matter, and show exactly the method of reasoning and illustration by which I arrive at this conclusion.

As respects its passenger traffic, this road, with its magnificent equipment, that has been swelled by the imagination of the Minister of Railways to an important, great trunk line, had been practically stationary for six years. There was a little annual variation—at times higher and at times lower—but substantially there had not been any increase during the space of six years. Its freight traffic consisted of tan bark, lumber, pulp wood and such like unprofitable kinds of freight, which are the lowest kind of freight a railroad can have. It is freight that is subjected to the lowest traffic rates a railway can charge. But in making up this showing a net revenue of $35,101.61, the company acted upon a peculiar system. I have drawn the attention of the House to the fact that this freight was the cheapest any company could carry, but if you allowed every ton of that freight to pass over every mile of the railway, if you gave it the longest haul possible, you then would have a freight rate of no less than 7-10ths of a cent per ton per mile, which is considerably in excess of the general average tariff for this class of freight on the railways of the eastern part of the United States. It is considerably in excess of the average on those great trunk railways that run from New York, Baltimore and Pennsylvania to Chicago and points west.

I have already stated that there was no bona fide surplus of earnings on this line, and shall proceed to make good that assertion. In the first place, that road was run so cheaply and kept in such a condition that the lowest normal rate of expenditure by railways in Canada on maintenance was far in excess of the charges upon it. Take the railways of Canada as a whole, and we find that the cost of maintenance of the line and buildings is $460 per mile, and this magnificent Drummond Railway was kept in repair at what rate? Not at $460 per mile—the average of the roads of Canada, good, bad and indifferent—but at an annual expenditure of only $185. Therefore, there was expended upon it annually only 40 per cent of what is required as the normal expenditure in keeping the average line or railway in Canada in suitable condition. Such was the case as regards the cost of maintenance, but let us see what the working expenses and repairs of engines cost. The average expenditure on roads throughout the whole of Canada on working expenses, repairs to engines and maintenance, is $650 per mile, and this bankrupt road did not expend even the half part of the average of Canadian roads. Instead of expending $650 per mile, it only expended $229 per mile for this purpose.

Now we come to the car repair expenditure. While the average expenditure over the roads of Canada, good, bad and indifferent, was $185 per mile, what was the expenditure on this magnificent road, which has been compared to the great highways in the United States, to the most excellent portions of the Inercolonial Railway, and the most notable portions of the great western roads? They did not expend any such paltry sum as $185 per mile on the repairs of cars. No, Sir, their expenditure swelled to the magnificent amount of $29 a mile. Now, when we come to general operating expenses, the average general operating expenses on railroads in Canada, good, bad or indifferent, are $824 per mile; similar expenses upon the Drummond road during the same year, were about one-third as much, or $277 per mile. Then, if the road bed had been properly maintained, if it had had its full quota of section men, if it had had its full quota of gravelling every year, if it had had its full quota of car repairs, of engine repairs, of general operating expenses, instead of there being a surplus, there would have been a deficit of quite a large amount.

But not only that. I will prove to this House that there is fraud in these returns, deliberate fraud, and I have no hesitation in stating it. How do I make that out? If any hon. gentleman in this House will take the trouble to look into the sworn railway returns, he will find that in the year 1895 their capital expenditure had been about completed; in that year there were 89.53 miles of the railway completed. The subsidies had all been drawn with the exception of the Quebec subsidy, over which there was some little question, but not on account of the completion of the line, or of the requirement on the part of the Quebec Government to make further outlay upon capital account. Well, Sir, at that time we find the total cost of the line had been $1,346,011.76. Now without having a solitary foot of that line to complete, with the capital expenditure already made so that these gentlemen who controlled that railway were able to draw their subsidies, when the sworn statement is completed to the satisfaction of the engineers of the Government, what do we find? They profess still to make large capital outlays upon it. Why, these capital outlays are a pure fiction. What were they? They were outlays made in necessary repairs of the road from year to year, outlays that should have been charged against revenue. And why were they charged to capital? Simply because these gentlemen had in mind the floating of a scheme, and the robbing of some person or persons, or some Government, and their object was to make appear as large a surplus as possible so as to give the road a fictitious commercial value that in truth it did not possess. There is nothing exceptional about this. I am not going to say that Mr. Greenshields and these other gentlemen associated with him are rogues, and thieves and rascals. Unfortunately for the tone of public life on this continent, especially in the republic to the south of us, and in this Canada of ours, this system of what I may call commercial freebooting in railways, is looked upon as respectable. The day will come, I trust, when that sentiment will change. But just the same as in the days of Queen Elizabeth, Drake, Hawkins and Frobisher gathered wealth and accumulated vast fortunes by freebooting, or buccaneering and pirating on the Spanish main, and it was regarded as respectable and their actions met with the favour of their sovereign; so, to-day society regards these men who make money by commercial freebooting, as most honourable. We are simply adopting the methods so prevalent in the republic to the south of us. I have by this time, I think, left the idea upon the House that my opinion, at least as a member of the committee, was that this whole transaction was a bogus one. I will give you an illustration that these men were not serious. We have the evidence of Mr. Farwell. Mr. Farwell gives his version of things, and Mr. Greenshields confirms it, on pages 32, 36 and 37 of the evidence taken before the committee. These gentlemen deliberately tell us what the scheme was, and I call the attention of every hon. gentleman in this House to that scheme. If it is not freebooting, if it is not fraud, if it is not deception, if it is not cheating, then I do not know what it is. We see they had put, according to these gentlemen's testimony, an estimated value upon the road of $2,500,000. Then they say they were going to add to that the subsidy they were to receive, a further subsidy from this Government of $145,984, if they could obtain it, and I think they had signed the contract for it—putting a total valuation on the road completed of $2,645,984. Now, what do they say? They say: We intended to complete the road, say for the sum of $650,000, and to leave a net balance of $1,995,000. From this they were going to deduct $500,000 and give it to the ordinary shareholders. Then, what were they going to do with the balance? Why, Sir, tell it not in Gath, proclaim it not in Askelon! These gentlemen who pretended they had a valuable asset in this road, which value is endorsed by the Minister of Railways and Canals, and by the gentlemen associated with him, actually proposed this absurd scheme to give to Mr. Hugh Ryan, $998,651 to sell the road, and to keep $498,661 for themselves. Adding that to the $500,000 which I have already spoken of, the shareholders, big fish and little fish, would get altogether out of the concern $997,322, and Mr. Hugh Ryan would get $1,300 more, or $999,651. Yet we are to believe this to be legitimate business.

These gentlemen are relying upon construction account. I may say that we have not the details before us, and I am not going to inquire into this feature of the transaction at any great length; we have not the details before us that warrant me in making a positive statement in respect to this construction account. But I will say that the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Borden), and the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals and myself, endeavoured time and again to get this construction account, and could not. There was an item of $729, 314.52 which was transferred into the books of the company from the books of the partnership firm which built the road whose members were the only shareholders of the company, but how that amount was made up, or what the items really were, we are in darkness to this day, although we tried time and again to get the books containing the figures. Now, Sir, there is something very fishy about this account, and I call the attention of the House to it. Gentlemen who are acquainted with railway methods in the republic to the south of us, here meet an old acquaintance, the fakir, a construction company. Now, Sir, what is a construction company? Down south, when they wish to defraud the public by swelling their capital account, they take the clerks of directors, and the leading stockholders, and they form a company, and to this company they let the contract for the construction at two or three times what it is worth; and then in making up the capital account, or the construction account, they charge the fictitious amount and not the real outlay. I will simply cite to this House two instances of this gigantic fraud. In the case of the South Pennsylvania Railway, which was constructed by the Vanderbilt Construction Company, which company was composed almost entirely of Vanderbilts and Webbs' clerks, actually cost $6,500,000. It was proved by the sworn testimony of the men engaged in it before the Hepburn Committee in New York state that when it was charged up to capital account the cost of construction of the railway was charged up as bona fide outlay, not of $6,500,000 but of $15,000,000. Bonds were floated upon the market, and the moneyed men and brokers of England, of France and of Germany were swindled to the tune of $40,000,000 on bonds issued upon this capitilization. I will give another case. The Central Pacific Railway was built also by a construction company. The amount actually paid out for construction of the railway was $58,000,000, and there was charged up to capital $139,000,000. So in this item of $729,000 I have no hesitation in saying that I can draw an inference, and I wish to be guarded in this matter; it is not a matter of positive evidence; it is a deduction I make, and an inference from the facts and figures presented, but I have no hesitation in saying that in this $729,000 there is a fictitious capital construction account to the amount of $400,000. I shall say nothing further about the construction value, except to treat for a moment of the valuation placed upon the road by Mr. Schreiber. When Mr. Schreiber was put upon the stand he gave as his valuation $1,535,000 for the road when completed. This is a matter that has been dwelt upon by the hon. member for Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac), and I am not going to follow him in that discussion other than to say that when Mr. Schreiber made that estimate it was an estimate of the road if constructed up to the full requirements of the subsidy contract, which meant in accordance with the specification, the profiles, facts and figures in his office. Whether that road was constructed up to the full measure of the contract, whether it met the requirements of the Subsidy Act or not, Mr. Schreiber knew no more than any other man because he had never made any inspection of that road in his life. But that is not enough for the hon. member for Antigonish, and he went on to quote the valuation of Mr. McLeod. Mr. McLeod may be all that the hon. gentleman claims him to be. I say nothing against his honour. He may be the soul of truth; I have no doubt of his veracity, but when Mr. McLeod is held up as a gentleman who is exact in his figures, who had made a thorough investigation of this road and an estimate that ought to command the respect of every man in this House, I say as a humble member of this House that I most positively demur. That gentleman, Mr. McLeod, and I am not going to deal unjustly with him, not only gave one estimate, but he gave three or four estimates differing from each other as widely as absolute guesses will differ, although the hon. member for Antigonish informed the House that this gentleman made a scientific investigation of the cost of the construction of this road. I cannot help thinking that if the hon. gentleman is not mistaken he is wilfully misrepresenting the facts to this House. Let us trust that he is mistaken. I have a few facts and figures by which I will test Mr. McLeod. Mr. McLeod's theories or estimates and valuation of this road are not borne out by the result. These gentlemen have not taken the pains to get the facts and figures given in the returns of this road. If they had they would have seen that in 1896 to the first day of July on the whole of the road completed, with the exception of 43 miles, and on this the total capital expenditure was $1,366,485. They would have found also by reference to the returns given in the annual report of the Department of Railways and Canals brought down for this year the statement that the outlay up to July 1st, 1898, was $1,908,261. That shows that the capital expenditure between these two dates was $541,775. That sum represents more than the cost of the 43 miles that by express agreement was to be built up to the standard of the Intercolonial Railway. It was far beyond the subsidy standard that Mr. Schreiber speaks of. Out of that $541,775, $35,000 was expended to make certain changes in the old line, so that leaves a total of $506,775. That outlay was incurred, we will suppose, in the construction of these 43 miles up to the standard of the Intercolonial. Where is Mr. McLeod? That makes the cost per mile of the construction of this railway up to the standard of the Intercolonial $11,786. Yet, Mr. McLeod went on the stand and swore that $16,000, $17,000, and I think as high as $18,000 was a fair estimate of the cost of the construction of the railway generally. I give that as an illustration of the amount of credence—I am not using the term offensively—that must be placed in the statements of Mr. McLeod. Mr. McLeod is also candid enough to tell us further, which was concealed—I will not say wilfully, but actually concealed by the hon. member for Antigonish—that he never made an inspection of the road, never measured a solitary dump, never measured a cutting, never measured a bit of masonry on the line, but that he simply jotted down statements, perhaps sitting on the bank, and trusting to his memory, basing his judgment on casual observations made by him of banks that were miles and miles away. He had never inspected or measured the road or the materials, and in this way he arrived at an estimate six or eight thousand dollars in excess of the real cost of the road. At this particular stage I would like to remind the House that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals did me the honour to refer to a statement I made in the House in 1897. That statement I quote from the unrevised "Hansard" of May 9th, 1899 :

Then we come to the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell), whom I do not see in his place at present. He said :

"When it is proposed to pay $1,150,000 over and above the expenditure upon the road, that is a transaction that cannot be justified, and concerning which the wholesome sentiment of this country will be very suspicious indeed as to the motives that prompted the Government to enter into it."

I do not retract one jot or tittle of that sentiment. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals proceeds :

That is what the hon. member for Westmoreland said about it. I pass by also the suggestion—the utterly offensive and visionary suggestion—that we were to pay $1,150,000 over and above the expenditure on the road, but before I conclude, I propose to show that that was entirely unfounded, whether he will acknowledge it or not.

The statement I made to this House on that occasion was that the amount of money that these gentlemen had paid out of their own pockets, giving them credit for the amount of the floating indebtedness on the property and adding to the floating indebtedness the amount I then estimated it would take to complete the road there was a balance of profit of $1,150,000. I made that statement then; I make it now. It is a correct statement. I do not think it redounds to the honour of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to take a garbled extract from a speech and place in my mouth words that are qualified by the context. As qualified by the context the statement is correct; the garbled statement I am not responsible for. I do not care what the construction value of this road is; I deny that the construction value is a true test. My hon. friend the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) has given a statement of the law; I will quote the authority. Hon. gentlemen opposite will find it in the third edition of Cripps, a most authoritative text-book on compensation or expropriation. And, Sir, when I make this statement to the House, as a statement that has been universally acted upon by English jurists of late years, I want the House to remember that this statement is a stronger statement in favour of hon. gentlemen opposite than if the statement merely regarded the matter of purchase; because, when you are taking property away from a man, the courts of the country have recognized that there should be some solatium, and that not its ordinary market value, but the full measure of valuation to that man, should be paid. Here is a statement of the law :

The basis only of compensation for lands required or taken should be assessed as their value to the owner at the date of the notice to treat and not their value when taken by the promoter.

Again, I quote from the judgment of Cockburn, Lord Chief Justice of England, in Stebbing vs. the Metropolitan Board of Works (Law Reports, 6, Queen's Bench, 37):

When Parliament gives compulsory powers, and provides that compensation shall be made to the person from whom the property is taken for the loss he sustains, it is intended he should be compensated to the extent of his loss, and that his loss shall be compensated by what was the value of the thing to him, not by what will be of value to the person acquiring it.

By an unbroken series of decisions in England, under circumstances less favourable to the Government than the present, the correct method of valuing property is to give the value to the person from whom it is taken. Now, what was the value of this road to the Drummond County Railway Company? For nine years, as I have shown, it did not return to the pockets of the shareholders one solitary cent, and the probability was that it never would. The company themselves recognized that they had an elephant on their hands, after the road had served its purpose as a lumber railway. They found that they were unable to carry out a scheme which they had contemplated, of selling it to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and they then commenced a regular method of hawking it around the country in vain attempts to sell it to some person. They gave an option to Mr. Farwell for $500,000—that is, for the railroad in its then condition. They gave an option to another person for $500,000. They gave an option to Mr. Maze for $400,000, I am informed, though the exact amount does not appear in the evidence. They gave another option to Mr. Pope for $500,000. They gave an option to Mr. Greenshields for $500,000, and Mr.

Farwell, on his oath before the committee, stated, that there was an option of $400,000, and Mr. Haggart, in his evidence, stated, that he knew of an option for $400,000. But even at this they were unable to sell this railroad. With a bankrupt concern upon their hands, the shareholders could not get any respectable financiers to handle the road, and so they became disheartened. And what was the result? In their pitiable condition, they actually appealed to Mr. Greenshields, thinking he had command of the money market and could borrow for them moneys in order to complete their work. What did they do? Let me tell the House, that the total capital stock of this railroad was $400,000, and they actually donated to Mr. Greenshields—without one solitary cent of tangible consideration, except the mere imaginary consideration of his advice and his influence in the money market, which turned out to be absolutely nil—they donated to Mr. Greenshields $50,000 of the capital stock of this railway, which $50,000 represents one-eighth of the whole transaction, subject to about $100,000 floating indebtedness at that time. But, Sir, it is worse still than that. Even while they were negotiating with the Conservative Government, or, rather, while they were approaching Mr. Haggart, what happened? The bank was pressing them at that time, because a large amount was due to the bank. Their concern was bankrupt; it was not an asset that they could hypothecate with any moneyed man, for the bank itself was anxious to get out of the rut it was in; and so one gentleman, a large shareholder, actually sold $80,000 of stock, or one-fifth of the whole railroad, to Mr. Greenshields for $24,000. That is this magnificent road that gentlemen opposite now speak about. Mr. Greenshields comes out of the transaction with $80,000 plus $50,000, or $130,000, almost within one or two thousand dollars of one-third of the total ownership of the road; Mr. Greenshields gets that for $24,000, and for his share he would have a net gain of about $400,000 under the first agreement of sale with the Government. Of course, at that time there was considerable work to be done to the road, but my hon. friend the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) would have this country believe—I heard him state it audibly enough for us on this side of the House to hear him—that at that time there were only 49 miles of this railway completed. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair), in saying that, made a statement that is at complete variance with the facts, and no man knows it better than himself, because he has in his department the reports which show that statement to be most extremely fallacious and unreliable. Instead of there being 49 miles of the road then completed, there were 89·53 miles completed, almost within a fraction of one mile as much completed as there was at the time the negotiations with this company were closed by the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair). At that time the floating indebtedness of the concern was somewhere between $175,000 and $133,000. The Minister (Mr. Blair) admits that the statement of the Opposition about the road being offered for sale for $500,000 at that time is correct. But there is a new star in the firmament, to light and glory born—a star not rising in the east, but in the far west—and that hon. gentleman (Mr. Morrison) tells the House, that the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), and myself, and Mr. Haggart, not only put falsehoods in the minority report of the committee, but actually published them to the country. There is his leader declaring a week before, on the floor of this House, that at that particular time the road had been offered for $500,000, and the only statement of the Minister (Mr. Blair) respecting it was to charge the leader of the Opposition with not being frank in giving to the country the whole facts, because that was for a half-constructed railway, whereas the offer he (Mr. Blair) had made was for the railroad complete.

I come now to the first agreement that was made with the Drummond County Railway. The hon. gentleman from Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac) found fault with our method of capitalization. Well, Mr. Chairman, I do not think much fault can be found with that, for, in order that the matter should be lifted above party spirit, in order that there should be no question as to the exactness of these figures, we had the Deputy Minister of Finance brought before the committee. He did not seem to be mathematician enough to solve the problem—although, to my mind, it is a simple question in mathematics—and he being unequal to the task, we summoned Mr. Fitzgerald, who presides over the department of insurance, and Mr. Fitzgerald gave us a statement he had worked out as to the value, based upon the borrowing powers of this Dominion on the last loan we had floated. He gave the equivalent of the ninety-nine years' annuity which the Minister of Railways had agreed to pay for the Drummond County Railway, at $2,094,192.

Now, when this large amount of money is proposed to be given for a road which is really worth commercially only $500,000 at the very outside estimate—because it was worth nothing commercially before this latter expenditure—which was made in order to complete it—then the enormity of the transaction will be appreciated by the House. I can safely say that of all the railroad deals which have taken place in this country so far this is the cap-sheaf, barring I may say the agreement made with the Grand Trunk Railway. Bad as was the agreement with the Drummond, the agreement with the Grand Trunk was a great deal worse. The agreement with the Grand Trunk we may divide, so far as the subject matter of the lease is concerned, into three parts: first, the terminals at Montreal; secondly, the Victoria Bridge; and thirdly, the thirty-one miles of line from Victoria Bridge to Ste. Rosalie. Now, the Minister proposes to pay for the terminals $62,500; for the Victoria Bridge $40,000, and for the thirty-one miles of railway from Ste. Rosalie to St. Lambert, $37,500. This rental was on a 5 per cent basis, on a valuation which had been made by the Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals. This, I claim, was a most improvident bargain. The rentals on the Grand Trunk Railway and the Drummond Railway together amount to $210,000. This, capitalized at 5 per cent, would amount to $4,200,000. Now, our borrowing capacity is not at the rate of 5 per cent, but at the rate of 2½ per cent, according to the last loan negotiated; and at that rate this annual rental capitalized would come to the large amount of $7,300,000, or a loss, with respect to these rentals alone, of a capital of no less than $3,100,000. Now, we come to the terminals at the city of Montreal. Mr. Schreiber was put upon the stand, and was asked by myself and other members of the committee whether he had looked into this matter. Well, he had gone to Montreal. We asked him if had taken any pains to arrive at the figures as to the user the Government would have at Montreal. He candidly said he had not. It was the merest guesswork on his part. We placed on the stand Mr. Wainwright, and got from him the fact that the user of the terminals, so far as the working had gone under the terms of the contract, amounted, for the two months, to 99,107 cars for the Grand Trunk and 4,381 cars for the Intercolonial, or 1-22nd of the Grand Trunk user. And yet the Grand Trunk was making us pay rental on one-half the terminals, and was computing that rental at 5 per cent.

Leaving the terminals, I shall not discuss the bridge, because I will be candid enough to say that I consider the rental for the bridge a fair transaction. I do not think the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals agreed to pay too much for the bridge when he agreed to pay $40,000. While it may be a little high, it was as fair a bargain as we might expect.

I come now to the consideration of the thirty-one miles from the bridge to Ste. Rosalie. If there is one feature of this transaction worse than another, more worthy of condemnation than another, it is the feature dealing with this particular piece of road from the bridge to Ste. Rosalie. How did the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and his deputy work this out? In the first place, they put a valuation on that particular thirty-one miles. Let me tell this House and hon. gentlemen who have not been over that railroad that the country through which it runs is as level as water—that it is nothing more nor less than a mere prairie railroad, well constructed, but a prairie road as respects its profile. And what valuation did they put on that road? They put a valuation upon it of no less than $50,000 a mile, with no terminals whatever and not any rolling stock. Capitalize that at 2½, and what do we find? We find that its cost comes to $1,304,000. I have consulted eminent engineers, men who are recognized authorities in this country, and gentlemen who have contracts on hand, in regard to this feature of the transaction. Here is the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. McLennan), who had been engaged in large contracts, and who has no hesitation in saying that that road could be built—that is, the bare roadway, without any rolling stock—for $15,000 a mile. But we will put it at $16,000; and we find that that portion of road could be built for $500,000. Yet we are agreeing to pay, not for the road, but for one-half of the user of the road, not $500,000, which would have built the whole road, but $1,304,347. We are giving a sum of money that would have almost built three such roads, and we do not get half the road, but only half the user, subject to the conditions which hedge it around. We must use it under the direction of the Grand Trunk Railway. We pay for three times the value of the whole road, and the Grand Trunk will regulate the running of trains on it. When the Minister of Railways and Canals in 1897 stated that one of the great features of this arrangement was the local traffic on this line, he either inadvertently or knowingly misled this House; for we have not the right to put on one solitary local train between Montreal and Ste. Rosalie. We can put on nothing but through trains. Now, I come to another phase which is nearly as bad as the last. Under section 3—and it is section 3 in both the old and new agreements—and under section 19 in both the old and the new agreements, the Government contribute, according to engine and car mileage, towards the maintenance of all the terminal facilities; and the hon. senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) read to the House a statement of what these terminal facilities were. I think it was given in sworn evidence before us that the terminal facilities in Montreal were 60 miles of track, 150 acres of land and an immense series of sheds and outbuildings for the accommodation of sheep, cattle and traffic generally; and while the extravagant estimate of the Minister and his deputy was that we might use ten acres and some few miles of track, I call the attention of the House to the fact that we are not limited by the terms of this most extraordinary agreement in our contribution to what we use, but that our contribution is towards the maintenance of the whole terminal facilities according to wheelage, engine and car passing over any part of the terminals. So for the Government has contributed, according to the Auditor General's Report, for the four months of last year at the rate of $3,000 per month for the use of these terminal facilities. There is another $36,000 for maintenance of which we have heard nothing; and this is but the entering of the wedge. When the full brunt of the burden is borne by this country, I have no doubt that this $3,000 a month will swell to $15,000 or $20,000 a month when we consider the vast outlays which will be necessary to maintain these enormous terminal facilities in the city of Montreal. Mr. Wainwright suggested the analogy of a palace in our use of the terminal facilities. He said it is a very large palace, and we only want a room now. Why, the preposterousness of renting all the terminals and contributing towards the maintenance of them all, could only be equalled, if the hon. gentleman, in a flight of imagination, rented the rings of Saturn or the nebulae of Orion. These would have been just about as much practical use to the Intercolonial.

But there is another provision in this contract almost as bad—section 35 of the agreement of 1897. I am now speaking of the agreement of 1897, and not of the agreement of 1898. Under that section, how do matters stand? Under it this Government bound itself hand and foot for all time, because it is a lease for ninety-nine years and renewable for ever—bound itself for ninety-nine years, and that is for ever, so far as most of us are concerned. To what did the hon. gentleman bind the Government? He bound the Government to pay 5 per cent on half the cost of making all the betterments in connection with this road, whether terminals or on the joint section. I ask the hon. Minister's attention particularly to this phase of the matter. He may reply to this. He may say: Why, we will only use what we require. But we are not in a position to only use what we require. We are held firmly by the throat by the Grand Trunk Railway, in respect of that portion of the road we use. They direct where cars shall go, where trains shall be made up, they form the time tables; and if they wanted to squeeze the Government, all they would have to do would be to divert from some other portion of their terminals a certain amount of traffic to that we do use and then oblige us to use their betterments, and the moment a betterment is made, under that agreement, we have to pay 5 per cent on one-half the cost. Further, the Grand Trunk Railway are to construct the betterments, and if the sharp managers of that railway could not make another one-fifth out of the work of construction, so that the Government would bear the whole cost, I am somewhat mistaken in my estimate of the men.

On what ground does the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals seek to justify this transaction? He puts forward the contention that the road pays. But we have this absurdity in the hon. gentleman's position. In the same speech in which he puts forward this claim, he states boldly to the House that there are no means of telling whether the road is paying, and that there are no means of ascertaining whether it is paying or not. Which statement are we to believe? Are we to believe him when he says he can give no data to this House by which we are to judge whether the road is paying or not or when he says that it is paying? He seems to be possessed of what psychologists call a dual consciousness. They state that some people are possessed of a normal and an abnormal mental condition. In their normal condition, they are ignorant of what took place in their abnormal condition; and in their abnormal condition, they are ignorant of what took place in their normal condition. The abnormal condition of the hon. gentleman seems to be that in which he tells us he has no means of ascertaining the earnings and expenditure in connection with the road, and his normal condition seems to be that in which he says that the road pays. Conceding for one moment that the road does pay, why are the Drummond County Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway to get the advantage of this? That Drummond County Railway, with its termini as they were, might remain there until the crack of doom and the road would never pay. It was there a bankrupt concern, without the slightest chance of ever paying a revenue. But what does the hon. Minister of Railways propose? He proposes to galvanize into life this decaying corpse by conferring upon it the vitality of the Intercolonial Railway system. That large system, which, over 1,140 miles, gathers through traffic, is to have all its strategic advantages conferred by him upon the Drummond County Railway, and for what purpose? In order to give it a financial standing, a value, it does not really possess. Supposing the Intercolonial selected another route from Lévis to Montreal what portion of its traffic would then go to the Drummond line? Supposing it built a new line and was controlling the traffic originating on its own system and landing it in Montreal, the Drummond County Railway would get none of that traffic. But Sir, taking our through freight—and we have great difficulty in getting this or any facts from the hon. Minister in order to intelligently discuss this question, but so far we have been able to get this fact—that in the year 1897, our through traffic passing by Lévis over the Intercolonial system yielded us $622,304.81. Remember that that is over one-fifth of the total revenue of the Intercolonial, and when the hon. Minister stands in his place here and states that the agreement of the Canadian Pacific Railway was throttling the Intercolonial and was a cancer that was eating out its vitals, I tell him that if he would dare bring down the figures he has in his department, he would find that the amount I have stated is double the amount the Intercolonial reaped from the freight passing over the Canadian Pacific Railway. Of this $622,304.81, think you that the Drummond County Railway contributed one dollar? Think you it had the possibility of contributing one dollar? Not the slightest. Therefore, you see the utter absurdity of giving this line a valuation based in any way upon the power of accumulating through freight.

I deny, however, that the road does pay. It does not pay. The Minister of Railways gave us a return for the eight months from July 30th to March 1st, 1897, and from June 30th, 1898, to March 1st, 1899. What do we find? I have made comparison with the leading railways in Canada, and all the railways in Canada. I call the hon. gentleman's attention to this, because it requires to be followed out closely. The increase of traffic on all the railways of Canada combined, during the year ending 1st March, 1898, was 14 per cent; the increase on the Canadian Pacific Railway was 18 per cent; and on the Grand Trunk Railway 9.04 per cent. Supposing the Intercolonial had shared in the general prosperity of this country—I will not say to what extent of the general average of the railways of Canada, but as much as the Grand Trunk Railway—now if to the Intercolonial Railway earnings in the year 1898, we add this percentage, and then take the earnings from March 1st, 1899, and work out the calculation, we shall find that this railroad will be, by the end of this year ending July 1st, 1899, behind no less an amount than $227,000. That follows from the statement made by the hon. gentleman. By the figures in the Auditor General's Report for 1898, if we work out the calculation, we find there has been a larger deficit. Arriving at the deficit by still another means what do we find? We find that the operating expenses in 1898 amounted to $3,257,648. One-seventh of this sum, which is the proportion of the mileage of the extension to Montreal, would give us working expenses for that line of $465,378. If to that we add the rental, $210,000, which is not included in the operating expenses, we find that the total operating expenses would be $675,378, from which we have to deduct earnings, which the hon. gentleman has not given us. If we estimate them at $375,000, we arrive at a deficit in excess of that given under the first method of calculation of over $300,000.

The hon. Minister speaks of his economy and of his masterly management of the Intercolonial Railway and says he has reduced expenses. I challenge that statement, and for the benefit of the hon. gentleman's associates, I will give a few facts and figures. The railroads of Canada show an outlay for every dollar of additional earnings, as follows:—The average for all the railroads was 54 cents; the Canadian Pacific Railway, 47 cents; the Grand Trunk Railway, 12 cents. Come to the Minister of Railways and Canals. See what his remarkable management did for the road. For every dollar extra earnings on the Intercolonial Railway last year, the hon. gentleman spent $1.32. The rational way to account for this is that the great loss was made in connection with the Montreal extension. Take 1899, so far as the hon. gentleman has brought down his returns, and his figures show that for every dollar of the Intercolonial earnings the cost was no less than 84 cents, or about double the cost on the Canadian Pacific Railway and seven times that on the Grand Trunk Railway. But the hon. Minister has another scheme in hand. He says that the full scheme is to compete for ocean trade to and from all points west of Montreal with the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk Railways and the water ways. Mr. Schreiber in his evidence goes into this at considerable length. In order to accomplish his purpose the hon. Minister is running up the capital expenditure. In 1898, he incurred a capital expenditure of $128,188. In 1899, which is not yet completed, he has provided for the expenditure of $1,233,500, and in the estimates for 1900, so far, provision is made for $914,000 on the same account, or a total of $2,245,688 in connection with this advance that the management has inaugurated. This vast capital expenditure is going to increase our interest outlay. Estimating the rate of interest we pay at 2½ per cent, there will be a considerable amount that will have to be paid year by year by the country that is fairly to be charged against this extension. The absurdity of the hon. gentleman's contention in respect to railways is well illustrated by a circular published by a transportation company in Halifax seeking to deal in grain. That company is promised rates from the west far and away below anything that the hon. Minister can hope to have his railway do. The rate is not at as much as one-third. But suppose that the hon. Minister is able to compete with the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railways. In a speech in the city of St. John, he advanced this political morality—which I claim is most vicious—that the Intercolonial Railway could compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk because these companies had to pay into shareholders and pay interest on their bonds while the Intercolonial Railway had no such charges. He proposed to enter the lists of railway competitors and run others off the ground because interest is not charged against his railway and no dividends have to be paid to stockholders. But the experience of other countries does not bear the hon. gentleman out. In Belgium they tried Government railways in competition with private railways, and notwithstanding the magnificent position Belgium is in compared with this country, it being a country well used to government by bureaucracy, they found that the Government railways, when put into competition with a private railway were actually run off the ground, so that the Government as a matter of self-protect-tion had to buy up the private railways of Belgium, which they have done almost entirely.

Some former speakers have made comparison of Halifax and St. John. I belong to the province of New Brunswick and represent the county of Westmoreland, which is not interested either in the city of St. John nor the city of Halifax; so that, without running any risk of incurring the displeasure of my constituents, I am prepared to give the freest expression to my opinion. And I have no hesitation in saying that any gentlemen who have visited Baltimore, or Boston, or New York and have looked at the terminals of the Baltimore and Ohio or the Pennsylvania, or the New York Central, or the Erie and compared these magnificent terminals, or the terminal of the Grand Trunk at Portland, with the insignificant terminal facilities with which the hon. Minister says is going to accommodate all the traffic of the west that he hopes to divert to this road must laugh. In the city of St. John, where he is putting his elevator, there is what they call the valley, a narrow gorge, at best a few hundred feet wide, and in that gorge, on a small piece of land bought from the Harrises, the hon. gentleman is erecting his elevator. And on one wharf that will not offer accommodation for more than one or two steamers at a time he is making the eastern terminus of what hereafter is to be a vast transcontinental scheme of transportation, and to be the entrepot for the business of the west. That is an absurdity. The real secret of the expenditure at St. John is that the hon. gentleman is going to contest the city of St. John at the next election. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) will find the expenditure in Halifax upon the construction of his grain elevator will prove of about as much use as did the $750,000 worth of mud that he dumped on the highways of Nova Scotia, to be washed by the rain of that humid climate into the ditches of the highways.

But, when we approach the consideration of what we might call this oceanic through freight undertaking the absurdity of the whole scheme dawns upon us. After the denunciations of the late Government made by the Minister of Railways and Canals, as respects the arrangements they had entered into, is this House prepared for the statement, that in respect to its ocean traffic, this Government are bound hand and foot by an iron agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway, and are as absolutely powerless in their hands as if they were children or babes? I will read it. They complained of the share that the Government get from the Canadian Pacific Railway in respect of the interchange of traffic at St. John. What were the terms of that agreement? Now, mark this: The distance from the port of St. John to Halifax is 274 miles, and, under the agreement which this Government had with the Canadian Pacific Railway, that had to count arbitrarily, not as 274 miles, but as 303 miles, on oceanic traffic. Under the late agreement, signed by one of the officers of the Grand Trunk Railway and by the Minister of Railways and Canals, or by his agent, Mr. Harris, and which is known as the "Supplementary Traffic Agreement," on all oceanic freight that comes from the Grand Trunk Railway, what do you suppose our distance counts then? Why, the distance from St. John, which is 740 miles, is only to count, in the distribution of gains, for 375 miles. Whereas, under the agreement between the Intercolonial Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, the arbitrary mileage was more than the actual mileage, under this new agreement, by which the Government are bound hand and foot, 814 miles of haul from the city of Montreal to the city of Halifax, have to count for 425 in the division of the spoils. Now, I will read those particular clauses of this agreement, in order that we may have it upon the "Hansard". It is known as the "Supplementary Traffic Agreement," and bears date of the 1st day of February, A.D. 1898, and is expressly incorporated in and made part of the main agreement of rental between the Crown and the Grand Trunk Railway Company. The sections are not numbered, so that I cannot give the number of the sections, but I will read them:

In connection with import and export traffic via Halifax or St. John, or any other port in the maritime provinces that may be hereafter selected, it is understood that during the life of the agreement that the Intercolonial Railway will accept 425 miles on Halifax, and 375 miles on St. John, the St. John rates to be the same as those quoted by the Canadian Pacific Railway to and from that port or West St. John, and the same as quoted by the Grand Trunk Railway to and from Portland; the Halifax rates to be one cent per 100 lbs. on all classes and special class over the rates to and from St. John or Portland, on both exports and imports, the company to have as its proportion the mileage as per the various groups west of Montreal.

Now, gentlemen, would you believe your own ears? Here is a Government complaining of the agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway which bound them, and here they have expressly, for the term of ninety-nine years, bound themselves to be governed by the rates of the Grand Trunk Railway to Portland. In the evidence before the committee, Mr. Schreiber, the gentleman with brains in the department, stated, that, at the present rates, the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway would take the traffic from them every time; that, in order to get traffic, the Government would have to reduce rates to take it away from them. And here, in face of that knowledge, these gentlemen have bound themselves hand and foot for ninety-nine years not to vary one iota from the Grand Trunk Railway charges on its freight from Montreal to Portland, or the Canadian Pacific Railway on its charges from Montreal to the port of St. John. But from what source can we get traffic, except from the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk Railway? Whatever traffic they hand over to us, we have to deliver in Halifax, not on the basis of allowance according to our mileage, but on the fixed mileage, which is one-half the actual mileage. We have actually to haul our traffic nearly 400 miles for absolutely nothing. Sir, I may state to the House, that I got hold of two or three divisions of the profits over two roads: one was from Hamilton over the Grand Trunk and Intercolonial Railway, and the other was from Halifax over the Grand Trunk Railway and the Intercolonial Railway, and the result was this: That the Intercolonial Railway was hauling freight at two-tenths of a cent per ton per mile from Montreal to Halifax, which, according to the sworn statement of Mr. Wainwright before this committee, was two-tenths of a cent per ton per mile less than the actual cost.

Now, I complain of the hon. gentleman for not having brought down the facts, the figures and the data in his possession respecting this interchange of traffic. I have no hesitation in saying, with respect to these two agreements, that, if you will look into one that is complained of, carefully and work out the ratio, you will find that, so far as the importance of the agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway and the agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway is concerned, the Intercolonial Railway stands in the position of betterment under the former as respects the latter of 110 to 56. The more freight the Grand Trunk Railway gives us under this arrangement, the poorer the Intercolonial Railway is, and that may account for some of the shortage in connection with the running.

Now, the hon. gentleman from Antigonish who last spoke complains of suspicions on this side of the House, and complains that people will not, in a manly way, make charges against them for what they believe to be improper. He has also referred to a statement made by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals, and a statement made by myself before the committee of investigation. So far as that statement is concerned, I was sorry to hear a gentleman with the ordinarily fair mind of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) assenting to the proposition of the Minister of Railways and Canals, that the charges were withdrawn before the committee of investigation of the Drummond Railway. The hon. gentleman must have known that the statement was far from true. There were no charges preferred to the committee at all: the committee was simply required to investigate into the merits of the agreement, and, having investigated into the merits of the agreement, we were then "functus officio," and our work was done. I there stated, that I had never heard upon the floor of the House any charge of corruption, and I had not, and I have not as yet, but if the hon. gentleman infers from this that I mean to withdraw any opinion I have had in regard to the integrity of the hon. Minister in dealing with business of the character of this scheme I can only tell him that he is entirely in error. Many a man has been hanged on less evidence than there is of corruption in relation to this transaction. There are suspicious circumstances in connection with this transaction. I will look for one moment at the position of Mr. Greenshields. These are all suspicious facts. Because Mr. Greenshields happens to be the cashier of the Liberal political fund, it does not mean that Mr. Greenshields is a rascal by any means. It does not appear in the slightest degree to show any lack of integrity, judging him by the conventional standards, but when you take other suspicious circumstances this fact is not to be left out of sight. Then there is another thing suspicious about it. Here is a gentleman, in the secrets of his party; here is a gentleman with whom a member or members of the Government, whom I might mention, have been closetted here, at Montreal, and all over the country. Here is a gentleman who was sent down during the last local election in the county of Westmoreland, in New Brunswick, to gag the employees in the cotton factory, with a man named Whitehead, their secretary, who took by the throat Mr. Wilson, the manager, who was known to be a Conservative, and said to Mr. Wilson: "You must use your influence for the Liberal party, and if it is necessary you must come out and be a candidate for the party." They forced that gentleman to go to the convention, for the purpose of selecting Grit candidates. This is the gentleman who is mixed up in this transaction. Immediately upon the advent of this Government he knew that his hour had come. He knew that the time had arrived. He hies himself to the different stockholders whom he can control, and gets from each an option to purchase his stock. That was in June; month after month goes by, and then an arrangement was completed between himself and the Government, and he completes the contract of purchase from the men whom he had the option to buy stock. Then we come also to other dramatis personæ in this comedy. Besides Mr. Greenshields we have the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte). I am not going to make any personal statements in regard to the hon. Minister of Public Works. He is not here. If there are any reflections upon the hon. Minister of Public Works they are reflections which he has drawn down upon himself. It is well known that he has connected himself intimately with the gang of thieves and marauders who rifled the public treasury of the province of Quebec, and devoted its contents to carrying elections and to political purposes.

Then, Sir, I want to speak of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, and if rumour states it correctly he is not entirely free from a division of the spoils of these nefarious transactions which disgraced the public life of Quebec. For I am in a position to make the statement that $5,000 in the form of a cheque came to New Brunswick from Quebec, that that cheque was made payable to the Hon. Andrew G. Blair, that that cheque was endorsed, that the money was got, that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals used part of it in elections in New Brunswick, and the fact that the right hon. leader of the Government had the support that he had from the province of New Brunswick was due to the magnetic power of the $5,000 which came from the marauders and boodlers who followed in the wake of Mercier. Then I come next to the recklessness of the purchase or attempted purchase of the Drummond County Railway. Here is a transaction of great magnitude, a transaction by which it is proposed to purchase a railway costing $2,094,000. You would expect that those persons who were asking this House to accept that proposition would have made inquiries on the subject as to the merits of the road and as to the amount of compensation that they should give for it. What do we find? We find that they never went to work to put a surveyor, or an engineer on the line, but, apparently, the only information the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals had, according to his own statement which is given at page 4275 of the revised "Hansard" of 1897, was the following:—

We have abundance of evidence to satisfy us as to the character of that road. There are numbers of persons whom I have met, and with whom I and others had conversed, who had been over the road, who knew it thoroughly and who had travelled over it at a rate of speed which could not possibly have been safely attempted if the road were not in good condition.

Here is the evidence: numbers of men, he said, who had travelled the line, had told the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals so. On this vague, useless information he entered into this agreement of great magnitude. He comes before this House and asks us to give $2,094,000 for this railway. The thing is so absurd that it is beyond credence that the hon. gentleman should have made such a statement. But he has some evidence besides that. He has the evidence of Mr. Schreiber. Mr. Schreiber had never seen the road, but Mr. Schreiber gave him an estimate of the cost of the road if it had been properly constructed up to the full requirements of the law. But when he came to this House we had the inflated statement of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals and of Mr. Schreiber as to the probable traffic of the road. Who does not remember the great flourish of trumpets with which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals introduced this measure to the House in 1897? What does he say? In the arena of history and of facts he knows nothing, but in the arena of prophecy he has been very exact. He told us that there would be a great increase in the gross earnings of $522,000. It was shown by calculation that there would be an increase of 628,137 passengers on the portion of the line between Montreal and Lévis. Then he was going to have an increased freight tonnage of 517,000 tons. After the absurdity of these calculations was pointed out, in some mysterious way they were excised from the revised "Hansard," but they were given to the House. The statement was copied and sent to me; it was copied by the hon. ex-Minister of Railways, Mr. Haggart, and if I were able to put my hand upon the unrevised "Hansard," I have no doubt that these statements would appear. They are expurgated from the revised edition of the "Hansard," and the ridicule that they would have caused was in that way somewhat minimized. Two thousand passengers per day was too absurd an estimate to be responsible for and it had to be got rid of. The hon. gentleman procured from his deputy a very absurd statement. He procured from his deputy the statement that these 31 miles of railway would cost about $50,000 a mile without rolling stock. And the hon. gentleman has come down and given some facts and figures as to the cost of railways. He has given facts respecting the Cape Breton Railway, respecting the St. Charles Branch, respecting the Oxford Branch and respecting the Rivière du Loup Branch. If the hon. gentleman had followed this up to the full measure of his imagination and crossed over to Great Britain he could have found that railways cost on an average $265,000 a mile, that Scottish railways cost $196,000 per mile, that French railways cost $133,000 per mile, and that in the German Empire railways cost $99,000 a mile. If we look at these facts a little closer what do we find? Why, Sir, the cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway, outside of the Rockies—that is the prairie section and another section that was very hard to build—including rolling stock, was $19,000 per mile. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) will find that set forth in the report of 1885. The Intercolonial Railway, up to date, including the rolling stock, cost only $47,300 per mile. Remember, Mr. Chairman, that was the cost notwithstanding the charges that have been hurled across the floor of this House for 18 years by hon. gentlemen opposite, as to the Conservative Government capitalizing ordinary expenditure: which they claimed was done by the million. Notwithstanding that, and notwithstanding—if we may believe these hon. gentlemen opposite—the gross and unnecessary expenditures in the cities of St. John and Halifax, all made for political purposes: notwithstanding all the political corruption they accused the Conservative Government of in connection with that road; notwithstanding that the road runs through a difficult country in places, notwithstanding that very expensive bridges were built at a time when bridges cost quite double what they do to-day: notwithstanding all that, the Intercolonial Railway, up to date, rolling stock included, cost only $47,300 per mile, and yet Mr. Schreiber estimated this prairie or water level road at $50,000 per mile. The hon. gentleman (Mr. McIsaac) says that the Cape Breton road cost $33,000 per mile. I have not the figures at hand, but I will adopt the figures of the hon. gentleman. Let us look at the Cape Breton Railway. Is this House prepared for the statement, that there is one railway bridge on that road, across the Grand Narrows, which—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). It does not include that.

Mr. POWELL. If it does not include that, it includes a number of other bridges, and it includes dozens of immense embankments.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It does not.

Mr. POWELL. It includes the embankments, and the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) need not tell me that it does not.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. It includes the embankments, but my hon. friend (Mr. Powell) said that it included dozens of other expensive bridges.

Mr. POWELL. I have been over that road. I was there when it was built, for I had a contract for transporting a lot of ties, and I saw them spread over a great portion of the road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not know that.

Mr. POWELL. Yes, I know something about it. I make the statement to the House, that the Cape Breton road traverses almost an Alpine country, and is in the heart of one of the most extremely undulating and mountainous regions that characterize Cape Breton. It is one of the most difficult pieces of railroad construction almost on the continent, with the exception of the Rockies or the Alleghanies, and yet it only cost $33,000 per mile. Take the short line to Oxford, and it only cost $26,700, although it is a very expensive line to build, with long bridges, and runs through an undulating country. And yet, the Minister of Railways adopts the estimate of his deputy, that this canal level road would cost $50,000. Mr. Wainwright is summoned to the aid of the Minister, and what does Mr. Wainwright say. They introduced the figures of Mr. Wainwright for one purpose, and I will introduce them for another purpose. Here is the Beauharnois Junction Railway, built through very much the same kind of country as this "joint section," and did it cost $50,000 per mile? No; it only cost $17,000 per mile. The Jacques Cartier Junction Railway on the Island of

Mr. POWELL.

Montreal, running through a tract of country, where, from its proximity to the city of Montreal, the right of way would be naturally expensive, cost only $19,000 per mile instead of $50,000. The Champlain Junction Railway, the facts as to which were given by Mr. Wainwright, cost, not $50,000 a mile, but $18,000 per mile. Why, Sir, according to Poor's Railway Manual, one of the most authoritative books on the railroads of the United States, what do we find? We find that in 1885, the average cost of all the railroads in the United States—including the great transcontinental lines that pierced the Rockies, and had such enormous outlays made on them, including the vast system of terminals at Buffalo, Chicago, Baltimore, New York, Jersey City, San Francisco and other places on the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, notwithstanding all these immense charges, these railroads, terminal facilities, rolling stock and all, cost, on an average, only $40,000 per mile—and they were constructing at a time when the cost of constructing railroads was probably 50 per cent more than it is to-day. It is a suspicious circumstance to try and railroad this scheme through this House by representations of such a character.

There is another suspicious circumstance, and now I refer to the changes made in the agreement after the Senate refused to confirm the purchase. The Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) suggests that there is no difference between the first agreement and the last one. Well, we will see as to that. Take the basis of the new agreement as compared with the old. The value of the annuity in connection with the Drummond County Railway under the first agreement was $2,094,192. Under the second agreement, the Minister (Mr. Blair) has the option of purchasing the railway for $1,600,000—which is lessened by $65,795, on account of the extra work that has to be done to bring the road up to a higher standard. That leaves a saving on that portion of the system of $559,987. But that is not all. We will pass to the Grand Trunk Railway. On page 62 of the evidence given before the committee, Mr. Wainwright, referring to the change that had been made in the new agreement as compared with the old, by which traffic was to be delivered to the Intercolonial Railway at Montreal, instead of at Lévis or Chaudière, used these words:

I regard the change of handing over the traffic at Montreal and shutting up our line to Lévis as a great concession to the Government.

And I think Mr. Wainwright was making no extravagant statement when he said it was practically shutting up the Grand Trunk line from Lévis to Richmond. According to the sworn evidence, the interchange of freight at Chaudière gave to the Intercolonial Railway as its share on the west bound freight charges $201,591; it gave to the Intercolonial Railway on the east bound freight—freight that had originated at Montreal and on the Grand Trunk system—it gave as receipts to the Intercolonial Railway, $420,713, or a total on the through traffic of $622,304. Now, Sir, supposing that the share of the Montreal extension, when it got the through freight, would be one-fourth as much as there was earned by the Intercolonial Railway, we would then have $105,178 of receipts on through traffic accruing to the Intercolonial Railway by virtue of the change by which the freight was to be delivered to the Intercolonial Railway at Montreal instead of at the Chaudière. We will say, for the sake of argument, that under the first agreement, the Intercolonial Railway, when extended to Montreal, by competing with the Grand Trunk, could have got $35,000, or one-third of it, which would leave a net gain, by virtue of the change made in the contract, of $70,118.87. Now, as every man who has read anything about railroads knows, all the roads of the continent are struggling for through freight. They are struggling for the additional freight, because this additional freight brings into the treasury of the road the freight charges, less the net expenses of the particular freight. Inasmuch as the additional freight on the Canadian Pacific Railway last year only cost 47 per cent, and inasmuch as the additional freight on the Grand Trunk Railway only cost 12 per cent, I will allow the Intercolonial Railway a profit of 50 per cent. Giving them 50 per cent on this diverted traffic, what do we find? We find that a resulting net profit from delivering the freight to the Intercolonial Railway at Montreal as against delivering it at the Chaudière, of $35,000; and $35,000 per annum means at our borrowing rate, a capitalization of $1,219,458.25. There is the gain accruing to this country by this change in the agreement, and I defy the Minister of Railways and Canals to minimize the statement or attack it in the slightest degree, unless he may do it by claiming that my estimate of the cost of earning additional revenue is too low. But I base my estimate of the cost on the general experience of the country.

In the second agreement there was a great change in respect to the betterments. Under the old agreement we were to pay 5 per cent on half the cost of all the betterments. Under the new agreement we pay 4 per cent, not on half the cost, but on a part of the cost proportioned to our engine and car mileage. Now, take one betterment which is in contemplation, which in a few years will have to be made, which Mr. Wainwright said the Grand Trunk Company have had in contemplation for some time. I mean double-tracking the section between Ste. Rosalie and Montreal. Suppose that cost $200,000. On that the gain to this country by the change amounts to $127,623.48. I might go on and enumerate other features in which there will be enormous reductions; but I have not the data. This is largely speculative, largely a matter of opinion, though tolerably authoritative, as it is based on the results of experience. The total gains resulting from the changes in the agreements amount to $1,709,068.73 as far as I have gone.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Is that on the Grand Trunk alone?

Mr. POWELL. That is on the Grand Trunk and Drummond County combined. In the change made from the first agreement to the second, in respect to the betterments made on the Grand Trunk Railway, to which we are called upon to make a contribution, if you take our user at one-sixth. We make a gain of no less than 63 cents on every dollar expended on those betterments, on the basis of our user being one-sixth, which is entirely too liberal an estimate.

Mr. TAYLOR. Through the Senate.

Mr. POWELL. Yes, through the Senate. Is it any wonder that the joy of the president of the Grand Trunk Railway was so exuberant when he met the shareholders of the company in London, or that he told them that he had made a most magnificent bargain with the Government of Canada? Is it any wonder that the stocks and bonds of the Grand Trunk appreciated several points the moment the agreement was made known to the financiers of London?

Now, Sir, I am coming to the withholding of information, and on this score, if I have to be a little severe on the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, it is simply because he has placed himself in the position—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Oh, I am not alarmed.

Mr. POWELL. I know the hon. gentleman so well that I know that it would take a great deal to alarm him. I deliberately say that that hon. gentleman has withheld information from this House; and I say, with a full knowledge of the force of the statement I am making, that the hon. gentleman has under his control the means of giving the information that he states he is unable to give. Why, Sir, in 1897, when the first agreement was rejected by the Senate, after having passed this House, and afterwards the amount of rental for one year was included in the Estimates of that year, the following statement was made by Sir Oliver Mowat in the Senate, as reported at page 808 of the Senate Debates:

I believe the object is this, that hon. gentlemen having doubts or more than doubts, whether the business to be done would warrant the expenditure, it was felt desirable that there should be an opportunity to us all to know by actual experience how that would be.

Now, I tell the hon. gentleman that the Interstate Commerce Commission of the United States of America exact from every railway company owning the 184,000 miles of railway of the United States, the information that is asked for here, and every one of these railways is enabled to give to the Interstate Commission the cost of every ton of freight carried by every railway per mile of haul; and if the hon. gentleman takes the trouble to look up these returns, he will find that it is sometimes 4-10ths of a cent per ton per mile, sometimes 7-10ths of a cent per ton per mile, and so on. I have not had very much to do with the Railway Department since the change of Government, but I do not believe that the system of book-keeping has changed, and I know that there was not a railway station on the Intercolonial from Lévis to Sydney which did not every month, through its agent, send a tabulated statement of every ton of freight that goes from his station, its destination, and the charges upon it; and at the end of the year the Auditor General or the general freight agent could go to work, and with very little trouble indeed, could make up this statement; and the hon. gentleman knows it. I state that they have done it also in the case of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway. The hon. gentleman makes a difference in regard to that railway; but it was worked as part of the Intercolonial system, and its receipts, and if I mistake not, its expenditures also, are given in the Auditor General's Report. But if the hon. gentleman is not satisfied with that, we will come to the Dominion Atlantic, which is within the cognizance of the hon. gentleman himself. This is a railway which runs from Halifax to Yarmouth, with a portion between Windsor Junction and Halifax, owned by the Intercolonial. Now, I will read the terms of the lease to the Dominion Atlantic Company, as follows:—

The Dominion Atlantic Company shall pay to the Government one-third of the gross earnings of that line, and the Government shall pay the cost of maintenance of that portion of the line.

Now, I ask the hon. gentleman if his officers do not, year after year, make up the returns for that portion of the line, and are not these returns submitted to the Auditor General? Does he not know that the Auditor General frequently looks closely into the facts and figures, and frequently challenges them? And yet they have been made up with sufficient exactness during the last ten years to satisfy the Auditor General. In the very agreement which the hon. gentleman entered into with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, signed by his own hand, it is provided as follows, in section 3:

That Her Majesty shall and will pay to the company a share of the cost of maintenance of the Montreal Joint Section and the Chaudière Joint Section, including tracks, bridges, switches, sidings, signals, appliances of all kinds, platforms, water tanks, water supplies, fuel stations, fences, crossings and all other appurtenances and appliances used by it jointly with the company, and upon the two joint sections it has the right and privilege of using included in this demise; such share of the cost of maintenance of each joint section to be in the proportion that the combined engine and car mileage of the Intercolonial Railway trains made over each of the above mentioned joint sections during each month, passenger and freight car counting each as one car.

There he bound himself by this agreement for ninety-nine years to pay his share of the cost of maintenance of the two joint sections. What did he mean by that? Did he bind himself to something he knew nothing about, or could not possibly know anything about? Does he acknowledge that he acting as Minister of the Crown and representative of the railway interests of Canada, actually entered into an agreement that no man under the sun could tell anything about? Does he mean that he had no idea of the cost, any more than he had in the case of the Yukon transaction, which he told us was a mere gamble, beyond calculation?

But the proof does not end there. Here is the unkindest cut of all. Mr. Schreiber submitted a statement to the committee, which is found on page 137 of the evidence, and which is as follows:—

This is a statement of the amount of traffic on the Drummond County Railway from the 1st to 31st March, both inclusive:

Through freight	$18,867 39
Local freight	11,963 36
Through passenger	7,371 83
Local passenger	6,513 46
	$44,716 04

Mr. Haggart asked:

Q. You have got the working expenses?—A. No, I have not.

Q. How do you apportion the amount of the Drummond County Railway through rates?—A. That is determined on a mileage basis, I think.

Q. The same as for passengers?—A. It must be so, it is the only way to do it.

What does the hon. gentleman think of that? But it does not end there. To-day he has summoned to his aid the superintendent of railways. Well, we got something from the superintendent, too. I may say, that Mr. Schreiber, Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, was asked for these, and submitted them under oath, so that they have the sanctity of an oath:

Mr. Collingwood Schreiber, Deputy Minister of Railways and Canals, recalled, produced a copy of a telegram from D. Pottinger, as follows:—

I had asked for a return, and so had the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell).

Moncton, N.B., 13th May, 1898.

C. Schreiber, Esq., Ottawa.

No freight charge on material for Drummond County Railway construction or equipment entered into the earnings of Montreal extension for March, as per statement sent you. It covered earnings from freight for the public only.

(Sgd.) D. POTTINGER.

Not satisfied with that one of the 30th May, 1898, we have another telegram from Mr. Pottinger to Mr. Schreiber, as follows:—

Information respecting April traffic over Montreal extension cannot be given until the 2nd or 3rd June, after the April accounts have been made up. Material carried for the railway does not enter into earnings.

If, on the face of that, the hon. gentleman will still say it is impossible, then he has arrayed against himself the universal practice of companies owning 184,000 miles of the United States railways; he has arrayed against himself his own agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway; he has arrayed against himself the practice of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway, and he has arrayed against himself the Auditor General of Canada; he has arrayed against himself the agreement of the late Government with the Dominion Atlantic Railway Company and his own practice under that agreement; also he has arrayed against himself his own deputy who, under oath, produced statements which, off oath, he said he could not produce. He has also against himself the statement of his own superintendent, which he knew was asked for and required the solemnity of an oath, and again he has against him what should be the very highest authority he could have—that is, himself

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have spoken at greater length than I thought I would be able to do, owing to my physical condition, and I am very thankful for the kind attention which the House has given to me, on that account. In closing, I may simply say this, that, after an experience, not very long, but an experience in the trial of cases covering some twenty years practice as a lawyer—in all kinds of cases unearthing frauds and hunting down fraudulent manipulators, cases which no man expects to have disclosed by positive and direct evidence, because fraud is invariably detected by indirect and circumstantial evidence—I say, that, if I wished to take a case before a jury, I would not ask for stronger proof to convince them of improper conduct, even if I had the evidence manufactured to order. These transactions in question savour, as the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) said they do, of fraud and corruption, and call for a fuller, franker and honester disclosure on the part of the Government than has yet been given to this House, and I make this statement in respect to both the transactions with the Drummond and the Grand Trunk.

Mr. BENJAMIN RUSSELL (Halifax). In discussing the matter now before the House, my hon. friend who has just spoken (Mr. Powell), had advantages of which I am not possessed, some permanent advantages, and also some which are purely adventitious and accidental. My hon. friend was a member of the committee which had the opportunity of inquiring most minutely into this matter, and, therefore, the advantage of having the evidence entirely under his control; so that, probably, he knows everything stated in the volume of evidence published and embodying the results of the investigation. He has also, of course—and that we take for granted—that large mathematical ability which enables him to utterly despise the slender mathematical resources of Mr. Courtney, the Deputy Minister of Finance, who was a financier, I suppose, before the hon. gentleman was born. He is also, of course, as he has informed us, a very able lawyer, who has given this class of transactions very special study, and, I believe, is the author of a work on the nationalization of railways, and, as such, was obliged to go very far afield and familiarize himself with many facts which he has given us at great and somewhat irrelevant length this afternoon. He has further, as he told us, consulted engineers, which consultations, no doubt, enabled him to present to the committee to-day matters which are, of course, beyond my ken and not involved in the book under our consideration this evening. He has, still further, had practical experience, as he told us—and that was a great surprise to me indeed—in the construction of railway ties. Dear knows what other special qualifications the hon. gentleman has; but, outside of all that, he has, as he was careful to remind us, a thorough professional experience in tracking down cases of fraud and inquiring into matters of the nature of that before the House this evening, and concerning which charges of fraud have been distinctly repudiated by these hon. gentlemen opposite, who conducted the investigation. One would have thought that, with his large professional experience and the facilities put at his disposal by the committee which sat a year or two ago, and after having had the opportunity of summoning any witnesses he chose from the four corners of the earth, and of turning every department in the civil service of Canada inside out for the purpose of discovering, and tracing, and tracking down these fraudulent transactions—one would have supposed that, with all those conveniences and facilities at his disposal, it would have been possible for him and his colleagues on that occasion—one of whom, the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), is quite as expert a tracker down of fraudulent transactions, and is, I will undertake to say, without any disparagement to the hon. gentleman's ability as a lawyer, a very able and proficient lawyer, quite equal in professional skill and ability to the hon. gentleman himself—one would have supposed that, with all the legal acumen and ability thus at the command of the committee, they would not have been obliged to come to the lame and impotent conclusion with respect to fraud to which they did come, and which is embodied in the last page of their report.

Well, Sir, struggling as best I may under the disadvantages to which I refer, I am consoled with the reflection that a great deal of what my hon. friend has presented to the House it will not be necessary for me to deal with, because it was absolutely and obviously irrelevant to the question before the committee. What is that question? It was stated with admirable lucidity by the hon. gentleman who preceded me on this side, my hon. friend from Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac). In the first place, is it or is it not desirable that the Intercolonial Railway should be extended to Montreal? In the second place, if so, is or is not the route by which the Government has chosen to make the extension the most convenient and suitable for the purpose? And, thirdly, having settled these two questions and settled them in the affirmative, has the Government or has it not made a provident bargain for the purchase of the road by which the connection is to be made? As to the first, I supposed that on all sides in this House and among all classes throughout this country there was a practical consensus of opinion that it was desirable that the Intercolonial Railway should be extended to Montreal. I understood the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) to say that in his judgment this was desirable. I understood that every hon. gentleman who has taken part in the discussion, with, perhaps, one exception, which was named by my hon. friend from Antigonish, held that it was desirable and expedient that there should be a connection of the Intercolonial Railway with the great city of Montreal, and that that connection was in due prosecution of the policy which had been acted upon by the Intercolonial Railway in reaching the city of Lévis. Therefore, we need not argue and I shall not attempt to argue the abstract question as to the advisability or desirability of establishing such a connection for the Intercolonial Railway. Whatever the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) may now think about the matter, I think there is a practical consensus of opinion, which we may here take for granted that it is eminently desirable, if the Intercolonial Railway is ever to be a satisfactory means of communication between the maritime provinces and the inland provinces of the Dominion, that it should have a connection with a great metropolitan centre. Therefore, I shall not spend time in the consideration of that abstract question. As to the second question, it is very obvious to any person who studies the map of the Dominion that no better route could be taken for establishing this connection than the one secured by the purchase of the Drummond County Railway. My hon. friend says that the distances by way of Richmond and the Grand Trunk or via Chaudière by the Drummond County Railway, or by the South Shore Railway, are substantially the same. I do not understand that to be the case. I understand the evidence to show that the distance by way of the Drummond County Railway is shorter than either of the others. It is obviously shorter than that by way of Richmond and the Grand Trunk, for the hon. gentleman would not need one-hundredth part of his mathematical knowledge to know that two sides of a triangle are together greater than the third side, and, in this case, the Drummond County road is the third side. Or to put it in a form more in favour in these modern days, that a straight line is the shortest distance between two points. I learned enough mathematics myself to know that, and the Drummond County road is simply the third side of a triangle formed by that road and the branch and main line of the Grand Trunk Railway. It is a more advantageous route than the South Shore road, because on that route there are heavy bridges to build, and, properly measured, I understand that it is longer than the Drummond County Railway.

Let me say before further referring to the merits of this road that I forgot to enumerate one of the special qualifications my hon. friend has for the discussion of the matter—his vivid imagination, and, in fact, a gift of inspiration which enables him to look into the hearts and minds of people. He was able to tell us what was in Mr. Farwell's mind when he entered upon the building of this road. Mr. Farwell had the sagacity to see that this must be the means of a through connection to the city of Montreal for the Intercolonial Railway whenever there came into the management of that road a live Minister of Railways and Canals who would have the sense and sagacity and penetration to see what was necessary to be done for the extension of its business. My hon. friend says that Mr. Farwell built it merely as a lumber road. I put against that the sworn statements of Mr. Farwell, which will be found at page 133 of the evidence, that from the very first he had before his mind the belief that this Drummond County Railway being constructed towards Chaudière it might be made a part of a through line, and this was the motive that prompted him in the undertaking from the very beginning of his connection with this road. Whether it was or was not in his mind, it ought to have been, because it is one of the most obvious things that this is the proper mode of connection of the Intercolonial Railway with the city of Montreal. I think we may take the second question as settled without further argument. I think that the crux of the whole problem, and in fact the only substantial question before the committee is whether a provident or an improvident bargain was made by the Minister of Railways and Canals acting for the Government of this country for the purpose of acquiring possession and control of the Drummond County Railway. That, I take it is the whole question before this committee, and I think it is advantageous and serviceable that we should start with some general view as to what point we have reached in the discussion. Enough has been said on both sides to make it worth while for us to pause and see what stage we have reached in the controversy. The Minister of Railways and Canals when presenting this matter to the House placed several different tests before the House to enable hon. members to determine what was the proper amount to be given, assuming it to be desirable to purchase this road, to make this connection and to make it in this way. What were the fair criteria by which we should determine the proper price to be paid for this road? The hon. Minister said: One way is to make comparison with previous transactions of the Dominion Government in respect of the purchase and acquisition of control of railways which they have felt compelled or have been advised to purchase for the purpose of connection with the Intercolonial Railway or to be used as branches of that road.

Now that, I admit, is not an absolutely satisfactory way of determining this question, because I frankly and freely admit that I would not be prepared to support this Government in this transaction if the best they could say for it was that it was no worse than what had been transacted by their predecessors in office. But at the same time there is a principle that has some relevancy to this question, there is a sort of principle of moral estoppel which, at all events, should put it beyond the power of those hon. gentlemen opposite to challenge a transaction which is far better, infinitely better, than any transaction of the kind that they have ever entered into, and which has been conclusively demonstrated to be infinitely better than any transaction of a similar nature that has ever been put through by any previous Government in this country. I say that that fact of itself should, at all events, estop those gentlemen who, on the other side of the House, were concerned in those transactions from presenting a single argument upon this subject, or saying a single word in opposition to the bargain entered into by this Government.

Now, let us look at those transactions as presented by the Minister of Railways and Canals. There was a piece of road from Rivière du Loup to Lévis which the Minister of Railways and Canals stated was about 125 miles long. If he made an error at all, he made that error in favour of his opponents, because I find in the debates that took place that the distance was said to be about 119 miles, more or less. I am not going to chaffer over a few miles here or there; it was in the neighbourhood of 119 miles. The price was $1,500,000, which would bring it to about $12,500 per mile, and it was stated by the Minister of Railways and Canals to be only $12,000 a mile. That was the price of a road which was confessedly in a dilapidated condition, which absolutely required expenditures to be made upon it, and these expenditures brought the price up to $17,600 a mile. That was not the only case mentioned by the Minister of Railways and Canals. There was a second case which has already been alluded to, that of the St. Charles Branch, 14 miles of road, with which the leader of the Opposition is perfectly well acquainted, and which cost, as stated by the Minister of Railways and Canals, and I think his statement has not been controverted, the enormous, the almost unbelievable sum of $136,000 a mile. I find it very hard, indeed, to believe that there must not be some mistake about that. But taking out the land damages—and I understand the land damages were altogether surprising, they shocked and horrified even the leader of the Opposition, who is not easily shocked or horrified, although he easily expresses himself in that way—taking out even these awful land damages, there was still left some $70,000 a mile for that St. Charles Branch Railway. Now, that, I say, is to my mind an almost unbelievable statement. It is certainly a very astonishing statement, and I have been much surprised that no explanation has been offered of that, and no attempt made to break the force of the staggering blow delivered by the Minister of Railways and Canals when he mentioned the circumstances of this St. Charles branch construction; and I sincerely hope that the leader of the Opposition, if he takes part in this discussion at all, will throw some light upon this matter, and give us some more comprehensible view in regard to the cost of that road and the price at which it stood to the Government of this country, because certainly it is a very shocking and astonishing transaction as it stands. Then, there was the Oxford Branch, at $26,700 a mile. Then, there was the Cape Breton branch, at $33,000 a mile, and the fact which, although the hon. member for Westmoreland did not seem, with even all his vast experience and knowledge in the matter, and his omniscience in relation to this branch of lore, at all events to be aware of, that that $33,000 a mile did not include the cost of the ferry or of the bridge at Grand Narrows. Then the Minister of Railways and Canals might have added a reference to a branch which was very recently constructed, indeed, the branch from Windsor Junction into the town of Dartmouth, which, I believe, cost something like $23,000 or $26,000, certainly about twice as much as the average price which the Government are paying for the Drummond County Railway. Now, I think we might fairly ask ourselves at this stage, if the transaction by which the Government acquired a valuable piece of road at the rate of $12,000 a mile has a savour of corruption, or a flavour of corruption; has not a road which cost $17,600 a mile a 50 per cent higher flavour of corruption? And has not a road which cost $26,700 a mile, a 200 per cent flavour of corruption, as compared with a road that cost $12,000? And if a road has cost $33,000 a mile, I should have to make a still stronger statement, the $33,000 a mile road would surely have a 300 per cent stronger flavour of corruption. But all these instances absolutely pale into insignificance, if I may be allowed to change the figure slightly when speaking of flavours, odours, aromas and all that sort of thing. What are we going to do when we come to a case where the road cost $136,000 a mile? Are we going to talk about flavours of corruption then? Are we going to talk about savours of corruption then? We are away beyond the region of mere flavours; surely we have got now into what used to be called by the leader of the Opposition, and using an expression of his, surely we have got now into the essential element of corruption itself, we have got beyond mere suspicion, beyond mere conjecture, beyond mere flavours, we have penetrated into the inner sanctuary of corruption when we reach an expenditure of $136,000 a mile for a road 14 miles long. The amazing thing to me is that any hon. gentleman in this House, or anywhere in this Dominion, who had any connection, direct or remote, with a transaction of that character, should have the hardihood to stand up in Parliament or anywhere else, before any assembly of his fellow men, or his fellow creatures, for that matter, and talk about railway bargains as if he had any right to be heard in connection with such a subject at all. Amazing effrontery is the expression which the leader of the Opposition would use in the case of anybody else; amazing effrontery is the only proper term that can possibly describe the attitude and conduct of any person, of any hon. gentleman who, having been connected with a transaction of that sort, stands up and seeks to attach to any Government in this country, a flavour, or an odour, or an aroma, or a fragrance of corruption in connection with a transaction so plain, so simple, so obvious as the purchase of a desirable, convenient and absolutely necessary piece of railway for the very moderate sum of $12,000 a mile. I used to read when I was a boy at school, a good many years ago, that all Gaul is divided into three parts. Well, Sir, I have come to the conclusion that that is one of the fictions of the school books, that is one of the things like the story of William Tell, or Hengist and Horsa. I do not believe that the stock of gall was ever divided. I believe it subsists to-day, and has subsisted in undivided and indivisible unity, and that it has been appropriated by that hon. gentleman who would stand up after a record of that sort, and talk about railway transactions, and talk about railway deals, and talk about railway bargains. In respect of a matter so simple, so plain as the purchase of a railway for $12,000 a mile.

Some attempt has been made by the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) to minify the effect of the comparison in respect to the purchase of the railway from Lévis to Rivière du Loup. What did the hon. gentleman say? He made various efforts in the course of his cross-examination of Mr. Wainwright before the Drummond County Railway Committee to seek to destroy the value of this comparison with this transaction. What did he say the other day in this House in respect to the matter? Oh, he said, you must remember that there was the further consideration given that the Grand Trunk Railway Company entered into—I do not know that he used the term obligation, but, at all events, it was part of the consideration that they were not merely to sell this dilapidated road from Lévis to Rivière du Loup, but that there was an understanding that the line of railway would be extended westward to Chicago, and that was the consideration for this high price that was given for this old piece of road. I was anxious to inquire into that subject and find out how much there might be in that statement, and I was careful to read the Act in which the transaction was confirmed by statute. I found no reference to any obligation on the part of the company to extend their road to Chicago. The agreement has been placed in my hands, and I have looked in it for the language of obligation. The agreement in respect to the acquisition of the road is confirmed by an Act of Parliament, and, in looking into that agreement for the purpose of ascertaining whether there was any such obligation incumbent on this company in connection with the transfer of that road, all I find is this very mild, milk and water provision, which is contained in the fifth paragraph of the agreement. When I first read it I thought it could not surely be the language of an agreement. It sounds not like an agreement, but like a report, like a piece of benevolent counsel or advice or something of that sort; as to an agreement or an obligation there is not a word of the kind:

Amongst the purposes which the Government consider will promote the interests of the Dominion is the extension, either by the building or purchase of an independent line, or by such other arrangements of a permanent character with other companies as will secure free access to and from Chicago, in the state of Illinois, for the through traffic of the company.

So far, there is no obligation whatever, not the smallest flavour, not the faintest perfume of an obligation about that.

And the Minister of Railways and Canals may, by authority of the Governor in Council, make advances to the company from the sum agreed to be paid for the said line, at such times and in such amounts as, in his opinion, may be necessary to enable the company to complete the arrangements contemplated in this section.

That is to say that it was desirable that this company should extend its line to Chicago, that the Government had a benevolent wish that the company should construct its road to Chicago, that it would be a pleasant thing to contemplate that it should construct its road to Chicago; but, as for any contract by or obligation upon the company, as for anything in the nature of a contract or an obligation, nobody will stand up in this House and pretend to say that there is anything of the kind. Besides the company themselves were only too anxious to extend their road to Chicago.

Mr. Wainwright says in his evidence that there was an exceedingly great desire on the part of the Grand Trunk to reach out to Chicago, and the negotiations with the Government were in connection with that in getting money by selling this Rivière du Loup road; this was not a consideration. They were anxious to get money and they came to a benevolent and paternal Government which was willing to give them money and give them far more than their road was worth. The hon. Minister of Railways asked Mr. Wainwright:

Q. Were you anxious to build on to Chicago yourselves?—A. Yes, and we applied to the Government to take this road off our hands, as we were not in funds.

That was a convenient thing for them to do, to unload the road because they were not in funds. They wanted to extend their railway, and they came to this Government and asked the Government to relieve them of their road, and give them something in its place, which was far better, to enable them to carry out their own private schemes in respect to the construction of their road.

But here is something in connection with that bargain which I am amazed that the hon. ex-Minister of Railways and Canals should have forgotten. There was a consideration in connection with that transaction. There was really a point in connection with the transfer which was of vast importance, and I want to give the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), who was very intimately connected with that matter, the benefit of that consideration. When that transaction was going through this House the hon. leader of the Opposition said—these are his words:

He drew the attention of the then First Minister, the Minister of Public Works, to the importance of securing in the negotiations with the Grand Trunk Railway in regard to the Rivière du Loup Railway, bonds by which the Intercolonial would be secured against any desire or interest on the part of the Grand Trunk Railway to divert the trade to Portland. They had provided for that.

This does not give the full effect of the hon. gentleman's utterance, of course. If it had been reported in what my learned and grammatical and logical friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) would call the 'oratio obliqua,' if it had been given in the first person instead of the third person, it would have sounded vastly more impressive. But I am afraid that I lack the lung power and elemental force which would be imparted to these words by the mode of delivery with which we are so familiar from the hon. leader of the Opposition. These were his actual words:

I drew the particular attention of the hon. First Minister and Minister of Public Works to the importance of securing in the negotiations with the Grand Trunk Railway Company in regard to the Rivière du Loup line, bonds by which the Intercolonial shall be secured against any desire or interest on the part of the Grand Trunk to divert the trade to Portland. We have provided for that here.

Do not imagine that I suppose that I am doing it in the way the hon. leader of the Opposition would have done it. This is only a pale and imperfect reflection of the manner in which these words were uttered.

Then the late Mr. Mackenzie, who was not an imaginative person, interposed the prosaic remark that he did not understand that it was provided for. Of course, those people who are persistently asking questions are very unhandy people to have around when you are making a rhetorical exhibition. The hon. leader of the Opposition said that they were effectually secured against the contingency to which he had drawn attention. Now, the hon. leader of the Opposition is entitled to the credit of having prevented the traffic of the Grand Trunk from being diverted to Portland. That was one of the most important things in the interest of the people of this country; it certainly was of vast importance in the interests of the city of Halifax, in which his supporter (Mr. Borden) and myself have so keen and so strong an interest. It was one of the things that might have been anticipated, when they had parted with the piece of road between Lévis and Rivière du Loup, that there would be a tendency to develop the balance of their traffic, all the traffic they could control in the interests of the city of Portland, and surely this country, surely the city of Halifax, surely the Dominion of Canada, with its national ambitions and aspirations, owes a debt of gratitude which it can never repay, to the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) for having taken these bonds, by which he prevented that traffic of the Grand Trunk Railway from ever being diverted to the city of Portland. I say, Sir, it is one of the most splendid monuments to his prescience, to his statesmanlike sagacity, to his patriotism and to the skill with which the leader of the Opposition conducted that negotiation. Age cannot stale nor custom wither the infinite variety—the infinite monotony, I should have said—of the professions and pretensions that hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) has made, and is making, to statesmanship, sagacity and wisdom.

Let me pass from that. There was a second method that was presented by the Minister of Railways, of arriving at the proper value of this road for the purposes of its being taken over by the Government. I have admitted, at the very outset, and I do admit now, that a series of transactions entered into by a former Administration, is not necessarily a vindication of the transaction entered into by this Administration, and, therefore, the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) very properly referred to other transactions, not with the Government at all, but transactions with other railway companies; transactions by which this very Grand Trunk Railway Company itself had become possessed of lines of railway which they were desirous of acquiring. Mr. Wainwright's evidence gave quite a number of these, and, amongst others, the Beauharnois Junction Railway. I call the attention of the committee particularly to the fact, that the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) has said, that the Beauharnois Railway was a railway similar to this Drummond County road, and fairly comparable to it in its character and cost of construction. Now, that Beauharnois Junction Railway cost the Grand Trunk Railway Company, not $12,000, but $17,000 a mile. We, therefore, have the admission of the hon. member (Mr. Powell), that a railway similar in its general characteristics to the Drummond County road, cost the Grand Trunk Railway Company—and not so very long ago—$17,000 per mile, against the $12,000 which is the price of the transaction we are now considering. Great efforts were made, in the course of the inquiry before the committee, to destroy the value of this transaction as a test of comparison. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) suggested that it was a bad sort of country this railway went through, but Mr. Wainwright replied: Oh, no; it is a very fine country. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) asked: Any bridges? And Mr. Wainwright replied: Only one important bridge.

Q. (By Mr. Borden.) Does that $17,000 include anything such as rolling stock?—A. (By Mr. Wainwright.) No, sir, it is the cost of the road.

Q. (By Mr. Borden.) The permanent work on the road?—A. (By Mr. Wainwright.) Just the permanent work on the road.

Then Mr. Haggart plucked up courage to ask a question. It was the astuteness and acumen of the ex-Minister of Railways; it was not the luminous intellect of my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) or of the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell); it was the ingenuity and skill of the hon. member of South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) that lit upon this suggestion: That it was only from the auditor's books that Mr. Wainwright found out the cost of the road. Mr. Wainwright, of course, did not stand over the work. He did not see every shovelful of earth taken out and every solitary spike driven in; he only knew by general repute or rather from his familiarity with the affairs of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. He knew by the same process of knowledge by which we know nine out of ten things that are worth knowing at all. Ninety-nine things out of a hundred that we know best, we do not know from absolute personal consciousness of the facts. And then, the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) suggested that there might be some of this $15,000 paid as a bonus in the purchase of the franchise from the old company, but Mr. Wainwright replied:

No, there was no old company to purchase. The charter was obtained by the Grand Trunk in the name of the Beauharnois Railway.

Mr. RUSSELL.

And then Mr. Borden asked:

Q. Does this $17,000 or $18,000 include the cost of the land?—A. Yes, it includes everything—building, and land damage and all.

So that my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) could not get any light from that quarter. The hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) admitted that the Beauharnois Junction road was similar to the Drummond County, and we, therefore, have his admission that the Grand Trunk Railway paid over $5,000 per mile more for a similar road than the modest and moderate sum at which this Drummond County Railway was purchased by this Government.

I would like to furnish one other test of comparison before we adjourn, as the leader of the Opposition, is not always here, and I want his friends and followers, the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) and my hon. friend from Halifax (Mr. Borden), to know what their leader's views were as to the really proper way of estimating the value of a railroad for the purpose of a transaction like this. There is another method, and, I submit, a method which is perhaps the best of all, namely, to estimate what would be the cost of constructing a similar road, if this road were not there and we were desirous of putting it and found it necessary to have it for the purpose of railway extension there. I say, that is, to my mind, the very best way of arriving at a result, and it is what ought to be absolutely conclusive to my hon. colleague (Mr. Borden) and absolutely conclusive to the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell), who is such an admirer and panegyrist of the leader of the Opposition, and who pronounced a eulogium upon him the other day as to which I do not precisely know in what character it is to go upon the records of the literature of this country. At all events, I say that this ought to be particularly interesting to those hon. gentlemen, and I call attention specially to it. The then Minister of Railways (Sir Charles Tupper), when explaining the Rivière du Loup transaction to the House, said that they thought,—the Government thought—this was a governmental pronouncement—"they thought that the fair mode of arriving at the price was to look at what expenditure the Government would be obliged to make, provided that road was not in existence." That is to say, that the proper way of estimating what they ought to give the Grand Trunk Railway for this road from Rivière du Loup to Lévis, was to say in fairness and in honesty: We are desirous of having a road there. If the Grand Trunk Railway were not there we would be compelled to put it there; what is more fair, more just, and more equitable than that we should give to these persons who have put it there, what it would cost us if we ourselves were compelled to build it at our own expense. That is a fair and reasonable and to my mind a just and equitable way of arriving at the solution of the question. What is the proper price to pay, what was the proper price for the Government of this country to pay for the Drummond County Railway? I know of no other way of getting at that than to take the estimates of engineers as to what would be the cost of constructing a similar road. Now, what are the estimates? There was an estimate given by Mr. Schreiber of $1,365,000 for the road, exclusive of the Nicolet branch, which is also included in this purchase and which he estimated at $170,000; making a gross total estimate of $1,535,000 for this property which the Government has purchased. That was a fair estimate, made by an unbiassed officer, made for the purpose of informing the department of which he was the Deputy Minister, and made, of course, in the interests of the public, in all candour and in all sincerity. There is another estimate which is equally valuable, the estimate made by Mr. McLeod, on whom the hon. member for Westmoreland attempted to cast some sort of slur by saying that Mr. McLeod did not take pains in making that estimate. But his instructions were to take pains to make a correct estimate and do whatever was necessary to inform himself so as to put a proper valuation on the road; and he says himself that he had been over the road from Moose Park to Ste. Rosalie over and over again,—on hand-car, and that he had walked over part of it. I am sure the hon member for Westmoreland must have been mistaken in regard to the evidence of Mr. McLeod. I am sure he must have been confounding it with the evidence of Mr. P. S. Archibald, who did give evidence of the flimsy character which he described, as to the estimated cost and the quality of the road when standing on the car platform, he was being whisked through the country at the rate of 30 or 40 miles an hour—at the expense, I am reminded, of the people of Canada, when the road was covered with snow, and when he discovered a great variety of defects in it. I am sure the hon. member for Westmoreland must have been thinking of the evidence of Mr. Archibald when he characterized in that way the evidence of Mr. McLeod, the engineer who was sent by Mr. Blair to make an estimate of the road, because he has not done justice to Mr. McLeod or to his proceedings. There is one thing to be borne in mind in connection with all these estimates, especially that of Mr. Schreiber, that is, that estimates, I might almost say invariably, are below the actual experience. Why, it is almost pathetic to read what the then Minister of Railways had to admit in respect to the estimated cost of the St. Charles Branch as compared with the actual cost. Nothing could better illustrate the old adage that

Who buys a house already wrought
Hath many a board and nail for naught.

I suppose it would be safe to say that there was never a case in which the estimate was not below the mark; but I will not make so broad a statement. I can say, however, that in nine cases out of ten you may make up your mind that if a work is estimated to cost $1,900,000 it will cost $2,000,000 before you get through. There is almost a tone of pathos as I have observed in what Sir Charles Tupper said in regard to the cost of that famous St. Charles Branch. Mr. Blake had said some hard things about it in his hard way, and Sir Charles Tupper then said:

I have already stated that I found myself entirely astray in regard to the estimate made. I took the precaution, before I made my estimate, of applying to the best sources of information within my power. I had the road carefully surveyed; I employed what I supposed to be the most competent persons to make an estimate of what the land damages would be; and my estimate has proved to be entirely fallacious. The land and property were placed at a value which I thought was simply impossible. Every effort was made on the part of the Government to keep the cost at the lowest possible amount.

I say estimates are nearly always fallacious. Hardly ever are they reliable. No man ever built a house who did not find his estimate of its cost very much under the amount he was obliged to pay to his contractors. So I say, when we take these estimates, it is only right and fair and just that we should take into account the fact that nearly all estimates are below the actual experience. The very best way therefore to find out the cost of this road would be to inquire what it did cost as a matter of absolute fact. As that branch of the matter will occupy a considerable time, and lead me into an analysis of the acute cross-examination of the hon. member for Westmoreland, I hope the House will excuse me from further considering the matter this evening.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

FRIDAY, 26th May, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FIRST READINGS.

Bill (No. 129) respecting the General Trust Corporation of Canada.—(Mr. McMullen.)

Bill (No. 130) respecting the London and Canadian Loan and Agency Company (Limited).—(Mr. Bain, by Mr. Landerkin.)

PETROLEUM REFINERIES—LICENSE FEES.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved :

That the House do resolve itself, to-morrow, into Committee of the Whole to consider the following proposed resolution :—

“ That it is expedient to provide that every company or person engaged in the refining of petroleum in Canada shall pay annually a license fee of one dollar for every refinery in which such business is carried on, such fee to become payable from and after a day to be fixed by the Governor General by proclamation for bringing into operation any Act which provides for the imposing of such license fee.”

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I beg to move :

That from this date to the end of the session, Government Orders have precedence on Wednesdays, immediately after questions to be put by members.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have no objection to this motion passing, because, of course, we all desire to facilitate the business of the House, but the right hon. gentleman will understand that it is very desirable that we should have an opportunity of moving for papers to be brought down, and that they should be brought down as promptly as possible. It would be well to add, after the word “ questions ” in the motion, the words “ unopposed motions.” as I think the business of the House will be facilitated in that way. With that understanding I have no objection to the motion passing.

Mr. CASEY. I would remind the House that there are several public Bills in charge of private members which from some reason or other have been delayed from time to time, and this motion if carried in its present shape, would prevent any further discussion of these Bills. I would suggest to the right hon. the leader of the House, to amend the motion by adding that the order of business for Wednesdays should be transferred to the Mondays, after six o'clock, so that public Bills might be proceeded with.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). There is no objection to that suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Casey), and indeed that rule has been somewhat followed in former years. As to the suggestion of the hon. leader of the Opposition, it does not require a motion, but it may be understood that we will go on with the unopposed motions. With regard to the orders passed by the House I know of nothing that now requires any peculiar celerity, except the Deadman's Island matter, and I think we will have that on Monday.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And the Manitoba prosecutions.

The PRIME MINISTER. Very well; these two I think we will have on Monday.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion, as amended, will read as follows :—

That from this date to the end of the session, Government Orders have precedence on Wednesdays, immediately after questions to be put by members, and that Wednesday's Order, under rule 19, be made the Order for Mondays.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION—THE HON. MR. COSTIGAN.

Mr. JOHN COSTIGAN (Victoria, N.B.) Mr. Speaker, before proceeding to the Orders of the Day, I feel compelled, in justice to myself, and I might also claim in justice to those whom I may call my friends in the country, though they may be very few, that a certain statement should be made by me—such a statement has been rendered necessary, not only on account of certain newspaper articles attributing to me very improper motives because of my change of seat and change of attitude towards the present leaders of the Opposition in this House. The statement is further necessary on account of the very questionable and improper motives attributed to me, in an interview published in the newspapers from the hon. the leader of the Opposition. I therefore propose, Mr. Speaker, to deal as briefly as possible with this subject, to make some references to a few of the newspaper articles, and to pay more particular attention to the interview I have just mentioned. In order that I may be in accordance with the rules of the House, I will conclude with a motion before resuming my seat.

It is true, Mr. Speaker, that I find myself occupying a different seat from the one that I occupied since the last general elections. To my mind it requires no very lengthy explanation for my change of attitude towards—not the old Conservative party, that I worked with and worked with so faithfully for so many years; but towards the Conservative party as I find it constructed and led to-day in this House, and in the country consequently. I may take up first, not the most important, but one of the early critics who assigned questionable motives to me for my conduct, and I may say, that it appears to me that one of the principal objects in these attacks made upon me, is to prove, not that I have not reason, not that I have not common intelligence, not that I have not honour, but to prove that I am actuated by unworthy motives. I shall refer to the conclusion arrived at by what I understand to be the organ of a gentleman elected to this House to represent the independent sentiment of Canada.

First, I thought it was the independent sentiment of Toronto that he expressed. But he takes a broader grasp than that. According to his own speeches he is the representative of the independent sentiment of Canada in federal politics. I refer to the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson). In his paper the conclusion is arrived at, very early in the discussion of this question, that I have placed myself in a position to be known now as a man who never opposed a Government or supported an Opposition; that is, that I have been simply actuated by selfish motives, seeking to be with the men who had something to give. Now, I need not go outside of this House to prove that that is not true. The only time the old, real Conservative party of this country were in Opposition since confederation—and I have been here since that time—was from the time Sir John Macdonald resigned in 1873 up to the time he resumed power in 1878; and I pride myself on the fact that I was one of the old guard during that time, with some of the hon. gentlemen I see here, and who in their hearts, I believe, have some sympathy for me. That was the time when I had an opportunity to give proof of my fidelity to the Conservative party, and I gave it, beyond the possibility of dispute and beyond the cavils of the "Evening Telegram" of Toronto. But I question the fair-play of the hon. member for East Toronto in attacking me in the way he does. I do not question his right to attack me on the floors of Parliament. I may not be able to defend myself in as eloquent and as choice language as he can command in attacking me; but I will take my chances. But is it fair that the hon. gentleman should bring to his assistance in attacking me his newspaper? I have no newspaper behind me. I have to depend upon myself and upon the good-will of my friends for my defence. Not only has the hon. gentleman the aid of his literary editor and manager to back up his attacks on me; but he has in his paper a double-barrelled gun. Besides having the advantage of being able to attack me through his literary editor, he has the services of a very distinguished artist, no doubt, for the purpose of belittling and ridiculing, if possible, by means of cartoons published in his paper, any gentleman in this House or out of it whom he chooses to attack. That is not the only advantage he has. By means of that artist he can produce cartoons which cannot hurt, though they may distort the appearance of things, and may leave the impression on the public that the man thus caricatured is a very inferior character, and in that way may prejudice against him the opinion of men who have never seen him. The great advantage that man has is that it is out of my power to retaliate; for there is no artist in Canada or on this continent who could make a cartoon of that hon. gentleman's countenance that would not flatter him. So much, Mr. Speaker, for the "Evening Telegram's" attack, and for the independent member for East Toronto.

Now, I pass on to one more newspaper. There are a great many to which I might refer, but I do not want to trespass on the attention of the House. I will take up a very prominent paper, the "Mail and Empire." That paper revives an old slander which the Toronto "Mail" formerly put forward against me, and the falsity of which has been proved beyond the shadow of a doubt. It remained silent for a long time, and I heard no more about it. But now the "Mail and Empire," inspired with about the same amount of friendship for me as the old Toronto "Mail" evinced, reproduces the slander, not through its editorial columns, but through its correspondent in this city. That paper, to explain my position and to show what kind of a character I am, states that away back in 1884, while I was a member of Sir John Macdonald's Government, finding a number of his supporters from the province of Quebec in rebellion against his Government on account of the loan of $30,000,000 to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, I, as a traitor, took advantage of the discontent of the wing led by the late Sir Adolphe Chapleau, to betray my leader and send in my resignation; but that as soon as I found that these men came back loyally to their old chieftain, I withdrew my resignation and crawled back also. I will not use any words of my own to refute that twice-repeated slander. I will give an authority for which I have the greatest respect, and which I challenge any gentleman in this House or in the country to question. The authority I refer to is that old chieftain, Sir John A. Macdonald, whose memory is still held dear in this country. I do not know that I need read the whole of it. It will be remembered that at the time referred to I had tendered my resignation. The Hon. Edward Blake insisted on fuller explanations than he had received as to the reasons for my resignation, and the causes for my withdrawal of that resignation. On proceeding with the Order before the House dealing with the Canadian Pacific Railway Loan Bill, Mr. Blake renewed his question for fuller explanations of my resignation. Sir John A. Macdonald said:

I am very sorry the hon. gentleman and I cannot agree upon that point. I do not know whether he heard my answer the other night—my statement. I took occasion to state—although I said I would not answer it again, I will repeat what I said—I stated that my hon. friend and colleague had tendered his resignation for matters personal to himself, but matters not affecting the general policy of the Government, and which had not the most remote connection with the measure in the hands of my hon. friend, the Minister of Railways; that I refused to present the resignation to His Excellency for his acceptance; that my hon. friend withdrew his resignation for reasons which I have given, and which are of no use to anybody in the world, and can have no political significance, and can be of no constitutional significance. My hon. friend withdrew his resignation. I was very glad of it, and I hope he may long remain my colleague.

As to the question of my honour and integrity as a man, I place these words before the public as a sufficient answer to the slanderers who are attacking me to-day.

Now, Sir, when asked by a newspaper reporter about my position, as I am naturally pretty candid, I told him at once that he might say that I had severed my connection entirely with the gentlemen who control the Conservative party, that they did not represent the ideas I expected to see them represent and had been accustomed to follow, and in as few words as possible, I wished to have that understood. I do not wish to occupy a questionable position or one of doubt. I find that when the attention of the hon. leader of the Opposition was called to this matter his view was, as stated in an interview published in the press:

This move of Mr. Costigan was not, by any means, unexpected. When Sir Charles Tupper was shown the foregoing statement that I have made, he said: "I am not at all surprised to see the announcement that Mr. Costigan has made, that he now belongs to the Government party. I think that the correspondence read in the House by Dr. Roche discloses fully the humiliating position in which Mr. Costigan has placed himself. The difficulty will be for the Government to defend the means by which they have acquired his support rather than for any person else to explain it. All that I am surprised at is that Mr. Costigan has not sufficient self-respect to leave the front benches of the Conservative party. It is too late for him to raise any question of principle as the ground of separation between himself and the Conservative party had been made. The discussion of the papers brought down by the Minister of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière), moved for by Dr. Roche, will leave no room for doubt in the mind of any person as to how Mr. Costigan's support has been obtained by the party in power. The Government need have no anxiety about his vote so long as they retain power. After what has already taken place between him and the Government, it is clear that the less Mr. Costigan talks about 'independent' action the better."

Well, the hon. gentleman did not express any surprise at my attitude. I must confess that I was, on the contrary, surprised very much at that statement. Not because of any favours I expected at the hands of that hon. gentleman, not for any kindness, not for any consideration, but in view of the dignity that belongs to the position held, accidentally and temporarily, by the leader of the Opposition, I expected manly treatment. I expected to be treated as an old member of Parliament would, by even that distinguished gentleman. I have not received such treatment. I do not complain as having undergone any serious loss, but I complain of a gross breach of the courtesy that is expected to exist between members of Parliament. Now, Sir, I agree with him in his sentiment that he was not surprised at my change. He knew it was not a change of to-day; he knew that I had been changed from the time he landed in Canada, not to the rescue of the Conservative party, as in old times he might claim, but to the detriment and ruin of that old party. The day he sailed from England, and especially the day he landed in Canada, the doom of an honest Government and the leadership of an honest man was sealed. The fate of Sir Mackenzie Bowell's Government was sealed. Sir, he came, and a great deal has been said about the manner of his coming. That, perhaps, I will not touch upon now, because there is a history to the whole of this transaction, a history that will be written, and a history that will form one of the darkest pages that can be written or will be read, so far as all these who were intimately connected with it at that time are concerned. A change of position on my part! I was in the Government with hon. gentlemen that I see around me here now, under Sir Mackenzie Bowell. I had the support, as an humble member of that Government, of the hon. gentlemen that I see sitting around me here—their honest support, I am glad to say. From my acquaintance with the old Conservative party, no matter where I may sit, no matter what my feelings may be, no matter what defence I may be obliged to make, I will pay tribute to the gentlemen that deserve it; that grand old party comprises men of honour, integrity and patriotism. But they are not the rulers of the party. It is not the large number that govern and shape the policy of the party, but I was going to say, if you want to know when I changed my politics, I changed them the day that half of Sir Mackenzie Bowell's Government went out and left him in the lurch, after they had been a party to his calling Parliament together to transact business. My change of front and my justification for it are based on that act, an act that was indefensible. Is there a Conservative on this side who will say I was wrong in standing by my chieftain, and that these gentlemen were right in leaving him in the lurch and betraying him, to use a stronger term? Not one has said so to the present; not one will say it here or in the country. If I was right, it is not a great stretch of argument to say that they were wrong. That is sufficient on that point. I wish to be clearly understood, that though deeply wounded, insulted, vilified, feeling strongly, and having the feeling within me that I fear no man or party in self-defence, my only duty is to restrain myself within proper limits, to say nothing unnecessarily offensive to either the individual or the party I have been with, but to confine myself as closely as possible to what may be necessary to rebut the slanders that have been launched against me.

Now, to make my position more plain, I must say this, that I enjoyed the confidence of Sir John Macdonald, of which I shall always be proud, that I enjoyed the confidence of his successors, the Hon. Sir John Abbott, the Hon. Sir John Thompson, and the Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell. I do not claim or profess to have enjoyed fully the confidence of the gentleman who succeeded him. Some of the newspapers and some friends attach a great deal of importance to this fact, in order to strengthen the charge that I am so selfish and looking out for personal gain, and that that is my principal object—they say: Oh, yes, you differed with the present wing of the Conservative party when they were false to Sir Mackenzie Bowell, but you went into Sir Charles Tupper's Government and stayed with him as long as he was in power and had favours to bestow. I admit that, to the outside world, to those who do not understand the question, and even to those who had a good opinion of me—and I am happy to say they are numerous in this country, the people who have a fairly good opinion of me and my honesty—that appears difficult to understand. I am not so prominent as many men in public life; I have tried to discharge my duty as a humble representative of a very humble constituency during many years: I have done my duty, to the best of my ability, faithfully. I feel confident that every man who knows me—every impartial man—will give me the credit of a desire to do what is right. The fact then that I joined the Government that was formed under the present leader of the Opposition and that ended so quickly, perhaps requires a little explanation. I did, of course, go into the Government formed by that hon. gentleman. I went into it most reluctantly, however, and my presence in that Cabinet was not proof that I was seeking my own personal advantage or what favours he might have been in a position to bestow. The hon. gentleman knows that about the time—and I knew the time the change would take place as well as he did. I knew the time Sir Mackenzie Bowell would likely tender his resignation and the probable time his successor would be called on to form a Government—at that time some of my personal friends—humble, of course, like myself—were engaged in a libel suit in another county outside of their own, where they were strangers. I felt an interest in them, and they appealed to me to come, and I started at once to stand by my friends. Some persons friendly to me said: But there will be a Government constructed before you come back. I said: I do not care if half a dozen Governments are constructed before I get back. I am not very much interested in the Governments that are being constructed now upon the new basis. I started out, but accidentally it happened that on my way up to the buildings I met the leader of the Opposition. He asked me if it was true that I was going to New Brunswick, and I said it was. He asked me when I would be back, and I told him I expected to be back on Thursday. He said that very likely he might be called upon to form a Government, and that he wished to have me in his Cabinet, but in case I would not get back in time, he wished to have my consent before I started. I thanked him for the compliment that he paid me, as it was my duty to do. But I told him that I would give him my answer finally that evening, that I would call upon him, or, failing that, I would put it in writing. I did put it in writing, and sent it to the hon. gentleman. That document contained the conditions clearly defined under which I agreed to go into his Cabinet, and outside of these, I would not have accepted a position in his Cabinet, which he very well knows. Therefore, with the knowledge that I went into his Cabinet at his request, and that that request, complimentary though it was, was not sufficient to take me into his Cabinet except on the conditions that I laid down in writing. I think, Sir, it comes with bad grace from that hon. gentleman to refer to my conduct, to my motives and to my character in the way he did in that interview that I have just read in the press.

Now, I might call upon the hon. gentleman to deny, or to explain away, or read the letter that I wrote him at that time; I will do neither. The hon. gentleman has—I won't say paid me the compliment, that would be a bad construction—he has singled me out to show that I am not worthy of that courtesy which is extended to any member of this Chamber, and has refused to recognize me. Well, I have slept regularly every night since, thank God. I have taken my regular meals. It pained me, I do confess, if that is any consolation to the hon. gentleman: it wounded my feelings to think that a man in his position, knowing me as he had known me, could think that it was any advantage to him, or that he could suppose that because he ignored me he was thereby destroying my character in the country. I hope I have not committed any crime that would justify any hon. member in this House withholding from me the courtesy that every gentleman is entitled to from his fellow member.

Well, Sir, I have no questions to ask, no favours to expect. I have little more to say, especially of an aggressive character. I will add this, however: I have long felt that the hon. gentleman's reasons for disapproving of my conduct were unworthy of a gentleman holding his position. I have felt all along that there were gentlemen behind him who could not conscientiously endorse those reasons and would not stultify themselves by endorsing them. I appreciate their position. They are silent. I do not quarrel with them. Many of them are friends, have been personal friends, and I do not wish to interrupt the friendly relations that exist between many of them and myself—there are some gentlemen, of course, to whom this does not apply. But I want this to be clearly understood, that while I refrain from making retaliatory attacks, striking back to-day, from this time forward I shall defend myself. I am a man of peace, I never was a quarrelsome man, but I am not a peace-at-any-price-man; and the man that follows this up and strikes me, if he does not get blow for blow, it is because old Costigan is getting too old.

I do not feel to-day, though, perhaps, spurred up a little by the unjust attacks made upon me, that I am so far incapacitated as not to be able to give a good account of myself, wherever, whenever, and under whatever circumstances any of these gentlemen—and I allude to the unfriendly ones, of course—choose to attack me. The conditions under which I went into that Government, Mr. Speaker, are contained in a letter dated about the time I refer to, the day I was leaving for New Brunswick. I will read the letter:

Ottawa, 26th April, 1896.

Dear Sir Charles Tupper,—Referring to our conversation yesterday, in which you mentioned that during my absence until Thursday in New Brunswick, you might be called upon to form a Government, and wished to know if I would accept a position in your Cabinet. I have thought the matter over most carefully, and I think it well that I should address you this letter so as to define my position exactly.

I entered Sir John Macdonald's Government in 1882 to render his Government all the support that I could bring as an Irish Catholic representative, believing that in that position I would be able to secure for Irish Catholics a reasonable and legitimate recognition of their rights, but after 14 years under different chiefs of the Conservative party, I am forced to the humiliating admission that I have been unable to secure anything like fair treatment for the Irish Catholic people where their interests were involved, though I am quite sure that few Irish Catholics in Canada believe that I failed for want of pressing, with all possible earnestness, their claims on all occasions. You can therefore easily understand that after 35 years service in politics, I have no great desire to continue the struggle.

There is no evidence there of a greedy desire to get in for the loaves and fishes. I might retort that I know of men who are inordinately greedy.

In view, however, of the principle involved in remedial legislation, to which Sir Mackenzie Bowell's Government was pledged, and as to the sincerity of which pledges Sir Mackenzie gave such unquestionable proof, and in view of the fact that your Government is to be formed to carry out the same policy, especially as regards the Manitoba school policy, I feel it my duty to say to you at once that you may count upon my assistance and services, if you require them, as a member of your Government, always presuming that the policy to reintroduce and press through a Remedial Bill at the first session of the new Parliament, will be clearly announced by you on behalf of your Government. I attach all the more importance to this clear announcement of the Government policy on the question of remedial legislation, on account of the difficulties that occurred between Sir Mackenzie Bowell and part of his Cabinet at the beginning of last session, which involved serious delay, but for which our chances in passing remedial legislation would have been much better.

I must also mention that it will be absolutely necessary and in fact consistent with remedial legislation, that the Dominion Lands Act be so amended next session as to enable the Governor General in Council to ensure a fair proportion of the proceeds of the school lands being paid to the separate schools in Manitoba. In view of recent events I would rather not return to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and, as it is one of the most important at your disposal, I am sure you would not find it difficult to offer me the Post Office Department instead.

Yours faithfully,

JOHN COSTIGAN.

I might explain that last paragraph by saying that I did not object to taking the Marine and Fisheries Department because it was not a very important one, for I admit that it is, and I think any gentleman would be complimented who would be put in charge of it. But the hon. gentleman had treated me, not only discourteously, but in the most arbitrary and most unprecedented way the moment that he grasped what he had sought for, a seat in the Cabinet, and I did not care about returning to that department if it could be avoided. These are the conditions under which I went into that Government. I discharged my duties to that Government as faithfully as I could. I was as loyal to that Government as any man in it—more loyal than some, more loyal than some who, immediately after the results of the elections were known, when our Government was defeated, not satisfied with the slaughter that had gone on, with the knifing and betraying one another that had brought about the defeat, started a new crusade to unhorse the gallant gentleman himself. I was the first—at least, I took an early occasion, in my modest way, to counteract that movement, on the ground that they had had enough of that kind of knifing, and that they had better unite their forces, that the hon. gentleman was their legitimate leader, having fought the battles. But I knew that, if they succeeded at the time, that would not have ended the trouble, because the old friends would have been divided on new issues, and it meant the complete disintegration of the Conservative party. I have only one more reference to make, and that is with reference to my pretensions of independence. Well, Sir, after thirty-eight years representing a constituency continuously, as I have, I do feel bound to resent any insinuation, any charge that would imply a want of honour, or honesty, or frankness, in my character. I have been known in my constituency since childhood. I have not been as well known in the country as some of the prominent gentlemen around me; but, wherever I have been known, I think I can safely say, that I have been known to be a true and faithful friend and a fair and honourable opponent. These characteristics I have tried to maintain all through life. I have made no fortune in politics; I have had my difficulties; I have had as hard scratching as any man who works for his day's wages in the field or elsewhere. I started earning my wages as a hired man, and I am not ashamed of it—and I am no better off now than when I started. All I can say is, that, for every day's wages I got, I gave a good, honest day's work in return. My sense of self-respect was questioned, because I continued, for a few days longer than the hon. gentleman thought was consistent with his ideas of respectability and self-respect, to occupy a seat to which I felt I was as fully entitled as the hon. gentleman could possibly feel entitled to the seat he occupies. I felt the necessity, from changed circumstances, of changing my seat just as much as he did. I was as anxious to widen the distance between us as he could possibly be. But I exercised this right that no one will question—that was my seat, and I occupied it, and I simply delayed and suited my own convenience before leaving that seat, to know where I was going to find another one, because I had something to say about that. I made a proposition to the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Taylor), the Whip of the party. I said: I am anxious to get a little further away, and perhaps it would be more in harmony, if the change should take place. I will change with you, if you are ready, and you can move up by promotion. I am sorry the hon. gentleman could not hold that promotion long, but perhaps I had no authority to give it. Now, Sir, with respect to the parting shaft aimed at me by the hon. leader of the Opposition, that the less I say about a feeling of independence or independent action, the better; well, I do not understand that to have any greater weight than an empty threat. I have heard threats made in this House. I have heard boasts made in this House; I have heard exaggerated statements made in this House, and I am not very much influenced, nor am I very much embarrassed because the hon. gentleman happens to have made that statement. It does not weaken my faith in the possession of a fair amount of independence, of modest, manly independence, that would compare favourably with the independence of the hon. gentleman himself.

I would like to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to another very singular fact. On the question of the Yukon contract, I think it was, I voted square against the Government's proposal. The hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) was a warm supporter of that measure, and not only voted for it, but defended it in a speech. I never heard of any attempt to drum him out, to courtmartial him. The newspapers of the Conservative party, big and little, scrupulous and unscrupulous, principled and unprincipled, respectable and disrespectable, did not join in loud denunciations; they would not touch that gallant gentleman. They felt keenly the loss of his vote on that important question, but they swallowed the discomfiture very meekly and humbly. On the Drummond County Bill, one of my hon. friends, the son of a distinguished man whom I had the honour of supporting in this Parliament, the member for Compton (Mr. Pope), made a very good speech, for an Opposition member, in support of the measure. While there was a good deal of murmuring in a very quiet, muffled way, I never heard that he was very loudly denounced, or catechised, or called a traitor or a selfish man, nor were all sorts of motives imputed to him. I wondered why this different treatment was meted out to me. I had voted with the Opposition on the important questions. I voted against the Government on the next important question, the proposition to hand over a certain amount of the revenues of the school lands to Manitoba. But the moment I voted against a motion for a judicial inquiry in the Yukon territory, then, Sir, I incurred the bitter and eternal hostility of some leading men of the Conservative party. Well, there was no great necessity for being so emphatic about that denunciation. My judgment was good, if I had no higher motive, for a more stupid piece of party management never was known in the Parliament of Canada. The party had invited an old friend, a personal friend of mine, a respectable man, a man who did credit to the House while he was in it, and would do credit to it if he should return—they had selected and induced this gentleman to run for Brockville as the candidate of the party. If the county was nearly equally divided, with a small majority, such as is often found in the close constituencies in Ontario, the policy of the Opposition upon that motion alone—not the motion for a judicial inquiry itself, but the tone of the discussion, the outrageous charges, the ignoring of personal liberty, the sacrifice of personal character, the failure to recognize the right of defence on the part of these men who were attacked—all this was in itself enough to damn the chances of any man they might name. And did, Sir, my independence was proved on the Yukon measure itself. I gave my opinion somewhat in the line that the hon. leader of the Opposition gave his in interviews I saw in the press. Speaking, so far as the press is concerned, of providing access to that country, I did not make a charge against the Government that they should come to Parliament, but I considered it a case of emergency, and the only question to my mind was as to the merits of the contract itself. As to the principle of making a contract in that hasty and speedy manner to get access to that country, no one, on our side of the House will contend against. The hon. gentleman in his interview, having been over there, being largely interested in mining enterprises with capitalists from England, and having himself favoured that very route from a business point of view, in the interest of the company whose interests he so well and ably managed, I dare say, was glad when he found that the Government was adopting the route he thought the best and the one which might be made accessible much more rapidly than any other. He congratulated the Government upon their policy at once. He did not change his mind when he came to Montreal, but what became of his independence when the hon. member for East York (Mr. Maclean), got up and read him a lesson that was cheered and cheered, as he knew it would be, by a number of the important and strong supporters of an hon. gentleman to-day in whom he has no more confidence than I have. His independence weakened a little from that time. Expediency, I dare say, prompted him to change his view considerably on that occasion and to adopt the view and the lesson read to him so successfully by the hon. member who has, at any rate, the reputation of having some weight with the leader of the Opposition and with the party, too, in this House.

One word more, and I am done. As to my change of front, as to my political sympathies, as to my political principles, they are well known to this country. I never went behind the bush, I never gave a doubtful note as to where I stood or what I thought. I would sooner fall, telling candidly the truth, than save myself by squirming or misconstruing facts. I followed the Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald, and felt and will feel it as long as I live, an honour to have served him faithfully. I followed every successor of his down to the time that the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) assumed power. Had the Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald, or any of these successors I have referred to, remained in power or remained in active politics, on the side of this House that they sat on, whether to your left or to your right, Mr. Speaker, I would have been found sitting with them, as men I could trust and as men whom I felt it an honour to serve under. These days are changed. If Sir Mackenzie Bowell had not been throttled, bullied, betrayed and driven out of the Government, when he had a strong majority at his back, if he were here to-day I would be a friend and supporter, though he might be in the cold shades of Opposition. I do not speak for Sir Mackenzie Bowell, but I speak of him, and I say to-day, that I have the pleasure of this consolation, and it is a consolation, that while these hon. gentlemen are pursuing me in an unworthy manner I feel that I have not lost one tittle of the confidence and esteem of that worthy gentleman. While he goes farther than I am prepared to go and remains identified with the Conservative party for the sake of the old party—I do not speak for him, but I speak of him, and I say that he has as little confidence in the gentlemen with whom I have broken as I have myself. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, and the House for having so patiently listened to the few observations I have felt it my duty to offer on this occasion. I have seldom trespassed on the patience of the House, and I feel all the more grateful for the kind attention that the House has given me while making this brief statement. This, I dare say, is the initiation of a debatable question; I have not fired my last shot nor struck my last blow. I beg to move that the House do now adjourn.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, I am sure that you, Sir, and every member of this House, will believe me when I say that I have witnessed the course pursued by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat with the very deepest possible regret. I do not regret his action, Sir, so far as I am personally concerned; I do not regret his action so far as the great party which I have the honour to lead, is concerned, but I do, from the bottom of my heart, deplore the fact of that hon. gentleman occupying the position that he has occupied in this country for so long a time, reaching the position that he has now reached. He says the time has come when he feels it is due to himself and due to the country that he should make a statement. I think he would have consulted his own character and standing and he would have consulted his own honour if he had made that statement long ago. It is the first time in the history of this Parliament, the first time in the history of the great Parliament which it is our pride to follow, the Parliament of England, the first instance in which a Privy Councillor, in which a gentleman occupying the position which he occupies, has voted against his party on a question of the deepest public importance and the gravest party character without one word of explanation, as to why that hon. gentleman himself stood up on the front Opposition bench of this House as an ex-Cabinet Minister and voted against his old colleagues and party. I say, Sir, that the want of courtesy was on the part of the hon. gentleman. He forgot what was due to himself; he forgot what was due to this House, he forgot what was due to the parliamentary system of government when he adopted such a course as that. I witnessed his conduct. I confess, with astonishment, but I held my peace; I said not a word either in this House or out of it, and when parties spoke to me on the subject I rather endeavoured to extenuate the hon. gentleman's conduct. It was when he went to the press of the country, when he went to the Opposition press and declared that his action was based on his desire to break with the leaders of the Conservative party because their policy had ceased to be Conservative and that he could no longer associate himself with them, that I felt bound to give to the intelligent people of this country that, which you know, and which every hon. gentleman in this House knows was the cause that operated upon the hon. gentleman and led to his defection from the party he had so long been associated with, to his abandonment of that party and to his alliance with their opponents. What was the character of the vote? I need not tell you. I was not in the House when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Costigan) delivered his speech, but on the 2nd day of April, 1897, that hon. gentleman made a speech that created a great deal of surprise and a great deal of astonishment. It was a speech in which he made the uncalled-for announcement to the House and the country, that he owed nothing to the Conservative party. A man who sat in the councils of that party, a man who had been a member for many long years of every Conservative Government, found it necessary to make a declaration to this House, that he no longer recognized any obligation to the Conservative party, and practically was open to suggestions from hon. gentlemen opposite. No man could read that speech at that time and arrive at any other conclusion. Well, Sir, a very remarkable thing occurred, and that was with reference to a matter which is now receiving the attention of the Public Accounts Committee, and when the dates are examined, it will be found that a grave and important reason will be discovered why the hon. gentleman (Mr. Costigan) adopted the course he did. No man sympathizes more deeply than I sympathize with the grave position in which he finds himself; obliged to stand up here and to say to the Government: Do not regard me as an enemy. That was significant. But, Sir, what was the occasion on which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Costigan) broke with his party openly in this House and voted against it. It was an occasion which of all others that ever was presented in this House, bound him as a Conservative, bound him by every Conservative tradition, to stand with and by his party. What was the occasion? It was when three continents were ringing with charges of the gravest character affecting the Government of the country.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; three continents ringing with charges of the gravest character that affected the Government of the country—charges more grave than these hon. gentlemen opposite appreciate, but which at no distant date they will appreciate. At that hour the hon. gentleman (Mr. Costigan) voted against a motion to appoint a royal judicial commission to inquire into these charges. And, Sir, when the Government opposite were convicted of nepotism; when they were challenged with having abused their position to promote to office men utterly unfitted for the positions they appointed them to fill; when they were challenged to meet the results of that maladministration, which had caused a scandal widely extended all over Europe, Great Britain, the United States and Australia, as well as Canada, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Costigan) came to the front to protect officials who were charged with the gravest and most scandalous dereliction of their official duties; the hon. gentleman (Mr. Costigan), on that occasion, for the first time, allied himself openly in this House with the men who said: We will not permit an investigation into the conduct of officials charged with the gravest official misconduct; we will not do that unless you will allow us to select the wife's uncle of the man held responsible by this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, I say the wife's uncle of the man held responsible in this House for all that misconduct.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh. Shame.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, it was a shame. Was there ever a greater scandal than for a Minister of the Crown, charged with a gross dereliction of duty to select a person so closely identified with him and his family, that he could not, unless he were more than human, discharge his duty. It was a shame, and it is a scandal that is clinging to the skirts of this Government, and will cling to them until they adopt a different mode of dealing with this important subject. That was the occasion on which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Costigan) deserted his party. I sat here patiently to-day and listened with intense interest to hear him justify the declaration that he gave to the press. It was he who was wanting in courtesy; he was the man who had never approached the party with whom he was associated; never approached the leader who never was wanting in courtesy to him, as he well knows; never approached me, who from the first hour of our association down to the time he (Mr. Costigan) stood up here and took that attitude never was wanting in courtesy to him. Even then I did not resent it. But when he went to the press of the country and declared he was compelled to abandon the Conservative party because the leader of his party was no longer a Conservative, and was no longer a man that he could support; I listened with intense interest to-day to hear him give one word of explanation to the expecting people of this country to justify his conduct. He sat down without touching the subject, because he could not touch it.

Why, Sir, in the letter which he wrote, he admitted that when I invited him to join the Administration I was called upon to form, he gave his adhesion and became a member of my Government, and he has read a paper which he communicated to me announcing the views and principles which he held in regard to that subject. The first statement he makes in that letter is :

He was forced to the humiliating admission that he had been unable to secure anything like fair treatment for the Irish Catholic people where their interests were involved.

Yet, Sir, he stands up in this House to-day and says, that to this hour he would stand by Sir John Macdonald. And, Sir, if any man was responsible for Irish Catholics not having got that which they were entitled to : if that charge stood against anybody, it stood against the Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald, who was so long in power. If that charge lay against anybody, it was against the Hon. Sir John Abbott, it was against the Hon. Sir John Thompson, it was against the Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell; it was not against me, because I had no opportunity as Premier of showing what I could do for Irish Catholics, nor for any person else, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Costigan) knows. He (Mr. Costigan) knows, for he sat side by side in the Canadian Cabinet long enough with me to know, that the first Irish Catholic judge that ever adorned the bench of Nova Scotia was nominated by me. He (Mr. Costigan) knows more. He knows that the first Irish Catholic Governor of that province was nominated by me. He knows that on every occasion, from the first hour of my public life down to the present, no man has shown more readiness than I have to deal with the claims and interests of persons of all classes and of all creeds, without prejudice against any creed, and he knows that whenever they were entitled to promotion, to prominence and distinction, they received it at my hands as far as I was able to give it. What more? He (Mr. Costigan) said he made stipulations before he entered the Cabinet of which I was Prime Minister. He knew right well that there was no cause for stipulations. He knew right well that at a most important crisis, when the interests of the Roman Catholics were at stake and when that had become a cardinal question; the hon. gentleman (Mr. Costigan) knows, that at the request of Sir Mackenzie Bowell himself—after I refused to listen to any proposal from any source whatever in reference to party matters in this country—he knows that the Hon. Sir Mackenzie Bowell sent for me and invited me to become a member of his Cabinet, and he knows that having done so and having been appointed to the leadership of the Conservative party in this House, I fought, however feebly, that battle; and he (Mr. Costigan) knows that I fought it with all the ability and all the courage I possessed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

What is the position of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Costigan) now? Is he carrying out the sentiments embodied in his letter? Is he carrying out the conditions which he addressed to me, when he deserts the Conservative party, that party which fought and fell with their faces to the foe; that party which fought the battle of the Roman Catholics of this country—is he carrying out his conditions when he deserts that party to ally himself with the men, to ally himself with the party, to ally himself with the leader who, in order to attain power, struck down the just claims of the Roman Catholic minority when they were pressed in this House by the Conservative party of Canada. He knows that we went to the country, proclaiming with no uncertain sound that if we were returned to power we would bring into this House a measure that would do justice to the Roman Catholic minority of the province of Manitoba. He knows that the right hon. leader of this House himself, when seeking power, declared solemnly to the people of the great province of Quebec that if he obtained power he would go further than I had gone, and give a stronger measure and more complete relief if he did not obtain it by other means. That was the position; and what does the hon. gentleman do? He deserts those who have always stood true, in power or out of power, to the cardinal principle of justice to an oppressed minority, and he goes over to the men who have repudiated that principle, and who prevented the minority in Manitoba from obtaining their rights on the last occasion. But, Sir, what more? Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman wanted the Dominion Lands Act amended. Has it been amended? Has the right hon. leader of this House brought in a measure to amend that Act, and to provide for an equitable distribution of the proceeds of the school lands in Manitoba? He knows he has not; and here the hon. gentleman stands, without the shadow of an excuse from his own showing, without being able to raise his finger against one jot or tittle of the policy which I have sustained and which my hon. friends behind me have sustained, and abandons his party because he thinks it is not right to have officials who have disgraced and degraded themselves tried by anybody but dependents or personal connections of the men most interested. I sympathize most deeply with the hon. gentleman. Estranged and separated as we now are, I sympathize with him, because I can imagine the struggle, the innate struggle, which any man of honour or standing or character must undergo, in passing through the terrible ordeal through which that hon. gentleman has been obliged to pass in order to reach his present position, and for objects which I do not think I misconstrue when called upon to meet one of the most coarse invectives with which I have ever been assailed by any public man, in the interview which the hon. gentleman gave to the "Free Press" of this city, in which he denounced our conduct in pressing for inquiries into official misconduct, and in which he said that we had adopted a brutal course. Sir, I can understand the difficulty of the hon. gentleman; but he forgot himself and he forgot the intelligence of the people of this country when he gave vent to such excuses as those to which I have referred.

Now, Sir, I do not intend to occupy much time on this subject. It is not necessary; but I may say this, that from the hour I landed in Canada down to this hour I challenge the hon. gentleman to name one single act of any description whatever in which I have failed to maintain, as best I could, with what little ability I possess, the best traditions of the Conservative party. Our principles to-day are the principles they have always been. Our policy to-day is the policy that made Canada what it is, and the hon. gentleman knows it. I say, therefore, that I listened in vain for any justification whatever for the course which the hon. gentleman has pursued. With all the want of confidence which he intimates he had in me, the hon. gentleman, as I said before, closed his mouth, as far as the mouth of an honourable man could be closed, against uttering one word to my discredit when he entered the Cabinet of which I was the head, at my invitation, and remained there as long as he was able to do so. What more? The hon. gentleman says that when certain of the gentlemen behind me were caballing to depose me from the leadership of the Conservative party, he was prepared to stand valiantly by my side and defend me against all comers. And yet, Sir, the hon. gentleman takes his seat without uttering one word that can justify an act on his part unparalleled in Canada, and unparalleled in any other country.

Now, Sir, I do not intend to say more than this, that so far as the hon. gentleman's seat is concerned, I did say, and I felt, that the hon. gentleman had made an exhibition that never has been paralleled in this House nor in the House of Commons of England nor in any other place where parliamentary institutions are respected, by voting against his party without one word of explanation. Then, having found that those with whom he was associated overlooked that act, and did not challenge him, he asks, why did we not attack the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Hughes) for voting against us on the Yukon question? Why do we not attack gentlemen for voting against us on any question? We do not attack them because under our system of government it is open to men, on whichever side of the House they sit, to differ, and conscientiously differ, from their party on important questions. But on the question which the hon. gentleman selected, there was a deep significance in the position he took that he would leave the Conservative side of the House and go into the ranks of that party who will not permit official misconduct to be properly and thoroughly investigated. I do not intend to follow that matter further at this moment, for very sufficient reasons; but when I do take it up, I will not deal with the hon. gentleman who has been so anxious to place a respectable distance between us, in which desire I sympathize most heartily. This seat, Sir, the seat he occupied in this House, was not his. It was mine. He occupied that seat in virtue of having been a colleague of mine in the late Administration. He was placed there by me, and the moment he was prepared to abandon me and the party and his old associations, he was bound to leave that seat, his occupancy of which prevented that intercommunication between old colleagues which is absolutely necessary; and he was bound to regard the slightest hint that it was only reasonable to place a considerable distance between us in future.

Now, Sir, I have never had in my public life a more painful duty to discharge than that which I have had to discharge to-day. Not because I regret the loss of the hon. gentleman or his defection from the party which I lead. I think we can stand that, and a great deal more; but I am afraid, after the threat that has been held out to me, that I shall have to crave from you, Mr. Speaker, the protection of the Sergeant-at-Arms to escort me to my home, for fear of that con-dign punishment which the hon. gentleman seems to desire to inflict upon me. An octogenarian, as my hon. friend the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell) says—a valetudinarian, as the hon. gentleman says I am—I think I am able to take care of myself even in that conflict. I will not say more. In saying those few words, I have discharged perhaps the most painful duty of my public life, and one I trust I shall never be called on to discharge again during the brief period that remains to me.

Mr. JOHN ROSS ROBERTSON (East Toronto). I have listened with not a little interest, and, I confess, some curiosity, to the statement of the hon. member for Victoria, N.B. (Mr. Costigan). The making of such a statement was not unexpected, for his last political move, his desertion of the party with which he has been allied, as he himself states, for thirty-eight years past, demanded some explanation. His fitting from one political side of this House to the other may give joy to hon. gentlemen opposite, yet I have reason to believe that the loss of this side is not looked on as a great Liberal gain. The hon. member for Victoria, N.B., has gone up and down the gamut of his political life, and his explanation embraces not only a criticism regarding his late political friends, but he has also seen fit to draw into the lines of discussion the opinions expressed upon his actions by the newspaper press, and more especially by the Toronto "Evening Telegram." He referred to the editorial opinions expressed by that journal, and was also, good enough to say, that there is no artist with skill enough to portray my face on paper. But there is no doubt in my mind that the artist makes a dead shot every time he gets his pencil at the face of the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman must be aware, as a public man, that his acts, whether as a private member or when he was a Minister of the Crown, are fair subjects for newspaper comment; and, from all the hon. gentleman has given us this afternoon as an excuse for his desertion, I am inclined to think that the newspaper press have not dealt unfairly with him. I am not here, however, to justify any comments which may have appeared in the columns of the journal which I have the honour to own. The fact is, that the actions of the hon. gentleman are sufficient justification, not only for what the Toronto "Evening Telegram" has said, but for what it might say. The hon. gentleman need not blame the Conservative party for any wrong he may have suffered at my hands. I accept the fullest responsibility for anything that may have been said, either inside or outside of this House.

The hon. gentleman, in one of the letters he read, has referred to the rights of the Irish race. I have no doubt that the hon. member for Victoria, N.B., (Mr. Costigan) regards himself as a patriot and an ornament to the Irish race. I admire the Irish people; and, because I admire them, I am striving to forget that any section of the Irish people in Canada ever accepted the leadership of the hon. gentleman. I admit that he has many of the good qualities of the Irish race; but he seems to lack that noble virtue of faithfulness in adversity; and when, in the fulness of time—and I hope the time is long, long distant—he is gathered to his fathers, his monument should bear this epitaph: "Here lies an Irishman who was faithful to the Conservative party so long as the Conservative party was on a dividend-paying basis."

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier.) I hope the hon. member for Victoria, N.B., (Mr. Costigan) having brought this motion simply to have the opportunity of making the statement he wanted to make, will now withdraw it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I beg leave to ask permission of the House to withdraw my motion.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). Before the motion is withdrawn, I beg leave to allude to a hint which was dropped by the hon. leader of the Opposition with reference to the change that has taken place in the general conduct of the hon. member for Victoria, N.B., (Mr. Costigan) by alluding to a certain inquiry that is going on now before the committee of this House. I shall not enter into any details, which I have not the right to enter into now, but will merely say, that, when the report of that committee is made, it will be found that no unworthy bargain has been made between an honourable man like my hon. friend the member for Victoria, N.B., (Mr. Costigan), and myself, and it will be found that there is not a shadow of reason whatever to suspect either him or me of having been guilty of a dishonourable bargain.

Motion withdrawn.

THE INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION.

Mr. JOHN ROSS ROBERTSON (East Toronto). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to call the attention of the right hon. First Minister and the members of the Government, and every other member of this House, to a very important cablegram that appears in the London "Times" of this morning, and in the London evening papers of this evening. The correspondent, and the cable agent, of the Toronto "Evening Telegram" wires me to this House, as follows:—

The New York correspondent of the London "Times" cables that the Canadian Government is responsible for delay in settlement of questions before the Anglo-American Commission, and adds commission will probably not meet again. London afternoon papers comment on it. "Globe" regrets prominence given to report. "Pall Mall Gazette" and "St. James' Gazette" attach importance to it.

Since the receipt of that cablegram, I have also another cablegram from the Associated Press in London, which states, that the Foreign Office officials confirm the statement, and says Alaska is the hopeless hitch which precludes an agreement.

I think that this cablegram is so important that the right hon. First Minister, and his colleagues, and this House should be informed of it. If the statement is not correct, the sooner a denial of it is sent across the wires to the newspapers in England the better. I think it is only justice to the Government that I should read this cablegram.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend is aware—if he is not, I think he ought to be aware—that there is nothing new whatever in that statement. The matters referred to the commission, I stated on the floor of this House several times, were all in a fair way of adjustment, when we came to the point that we could not agree on the Alaskan boundary, and, as the commission could not agree on the Alaskan boundary, the British commissioners refused to proceed with any other question. We took the ground that, until the American Government had either agreed to make a settlement of that question or referred it to arbitration, no other question should be dealt with by us. By that ground we stand, and I think that, in so doing, we shall have the support of the country.

POINT JEROME LIGHTHOUSE-KEEPER

Mr. GILLIES. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would ask the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, if he has tabled the papers called for by me in connection with the dismissal of the Point Jerome light-house-keeper?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I have not, but will make a note of the question.

I. C. R.—EXTENSION TO MONTREAL

House again resolved itself into committee to consider a certain resolution respecting the Drummond County Railway.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BENJAMIN RUSSELL (Halifax). Before the committee rose last night, I had dealt with the question of the necessity of the extension of the Intercolonial Railway to the city of Montreal, with the question of the propriety of the mode by which the Government proposed to effect that connection, and with what seemed to me the only substantial question that is in controversy before the House, viz., the fairness and justice of the bargain into which the Government has entered with that road. I had gone on to say that estimating by any transaction of the same kind under any previous Government, the transaction that had been entered into by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals in this Government had come out triumphant, that of the transactions of a similar kind entered into by previous Governments in this country, there had been "some thirty, some sixty and some an hundred-fold" more expensive to the country than this particular transaction upon which this Government have entered. I showed that, even comparing that bargain with transactions between private corporations—perhaps a more legitimate basis for comparison for such a purpose as this—the comparison was in favour of this Government. I showed that this bargain was more favourable to the Government than even the Grand Trunk, a private corporation, in dealing with other corporations, had been able to effect in its own interest. And I argued that a fair way of arriving at a conclusion in respect of this matter was not at all the one which has been adopted by my hon. and learned colleague from the city of Halifax (Mr. Border), or the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell), the two gentlemen who with another hon. gentleman signed the minority report of the Drummond County Committee, but that the true criterion was that embodied in a statement made by the present hon. leader of the Opposition when the Lévis and Rivière du Loup contract was before the House. I will read it again:

We think that a fair mode of arriving at the price is to look at what expenditure the Government would be obliged to make if that road was not in existence.

Now, my hon. friend from Westmoreland differs from that as a proper means of computation. He says you must look at the net earnings of the road, and, having figured out to his own satisfaction that there were no net earnings of this Drummond County road, he reached the conclusion—from such a premise, and with such reasoning, he was really driven to the conclusion—that no value could be attached to the road except, possibly, the value of the rails for old iron, the value of the sleepers for firewood, and the value of the right of way, if it could possibly have had any value at all except as a right of way for a railway. How would that criterion work as a means of judging of the value of the Lévis and Rivière du Loup road? A computation on that basis, would prove that the Government should not have paid a single cent for that road, that, on the contrary, they should have demanded a bonus from the Grand Trunk when they took the road over, that an annuity should have been paid by the Grand Trunk to the Government for having graciously interposed and relieved them of the burden of running that railway. That is the only possible conclusion that could be justified by the facts and the logic of the hon. member for Westmoreland. But if we wish to make a more complete reductio ad absurdum of that method of arriving at the value of a railway in such a case, let us suppose for a moment that the Intercolonial Railway, built and owned by the Government of this country, had been built by a private corporation, and suppose that it was being run at the expense of that corporation, as it is now being run at the expense of the Government, incurring annual deficits, as hon. gentlemen opposite have told us the Intercolonial Railway does, not paying dividends to its stockholders, not even paying interest upon the capital it had borrowed; and suppose that the Government had come to the conclusion that it was necessary for public purposes—for the purpose of carrying out some scheme for the nationalization of railways all over the country or of completing a transcontinental railway—to possess themselves of that railway from Montreal to the maritime provinces—under such circumstances, what would be the price we should be called upon to give for the purpose of acquiring that road? The hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) says that we must look at the net earnings of the road, that we must consider what any person would give for it in the market—valuing the rails, I suppose, as old iron and the sleepers as firewood, and the right of way on the principles I mentioned a moment ago. According to the hon. gentleman we must not take the criterion adopted by the leader of the Opposition when he was conducting the negotiations for the Lévis and Rivière du Loup road, we must not ask what it would cost the Government to build the road. The method suggested by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Powell) was not considered by the present leader of the Opposition a fair one when he had to consider a similar proposition. The hon. member for Westmoreland would tell us, I suppose, that there were no earnings to the Intercolonial Railway, there was no interest being paid to the bondholders, and, therefore, it was proper that the company owning that road should pay us a bonus to take it off their hands. That, I think, is the conclusion that is arrived at by the logic of the hon. member for Westmoreland, if logic is worth anything, and if "logic is logic."

The hon. gentleman referred also, as a test of valuation, to the option which is alleged to have been given by the owners of the road to Mr. Farwell and assigned by him to Mr. Hugh Ryan. If there were other options than those referred to in the book which embodies the evidence taken before the Drummond County Committee, I am not aware of them, and, therefore, I do not possess the advantage that the hon. gentleman had in discussing matters not in evidence. But I think that, if there were such options, considering the elaborateness of the inquiry and the opportunities afforded those hon. gentlemen to place the facts on record before the committee and so before the House, it was their duty to have made known the facts. I, at all events, am not in a position to deal with any other options than those in the evidence taken before the committee and in report made by the committee. Using that so-called option as a test of the valuation of the road, I contend that the only evidentiary value it has for that purpose is the light in which it was regarded by the gentlemen by whom it was given, Mr. Farwell, Mr. Greenshields and the other parties to the option. If it had happened that Mr. Haggart—I speak of the hon. member as he appeared before the committee—when Minister of Railways and Canals had not happened to be aware of the conditions attached to that option, that does not matter a single pennyworth in this controversy. Even if Mr. Ryan, to whom it was assigned, was not aware of the conditions on which it was given to him and of the arrangements made with regard to profit on the transaction which it was supposed he could consummate with the Government of that day, that has no bearing upon the facts with regard to the option as a test of the value of that road. It is quite true that the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals said in his evidence before the committee that he had never heard of any proposal for a higher price to be charged for the Drummond County road than the one made in the option of $500,000. He seems to have been—I am taking the impression conveyed by the evidence given before that committee—he seems to have been under the impression that he got notice of that option through Mr. Ives, who was then a member of the Government of that day. Referring to that at page 151 of this report. I wish to call the attention of the House to what was said in respect to that particular subject. The hon. gentleman was asked, after he had given his direct evidence as a witness before the Drummond County committee :

Q. Did Mr. Ives give you any information as to what the road could be bought for?—A. It was just general information.

Q. Do you undertake to swear that he gave you to understand the road could be bought for $500,000?

Now, that is the crucial question in the case in respect to that option, as presented to the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals. What is his answer?

Oh, I do not think so.

He did not think that Mr. Ives gave him to understand that that road could be bought for $500,000. Well, then, if he was not given to understand that the road could be bought for $500,000, what value to us can this option be as a test of the value of the road? It is only because that road was offered to the hon. gentleman for $500,000 that the facts in connection with that option so-called can have any value whatever.

Mr. HAGGART. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to explain what I meant? The option was given to me of the road as far as completed at $500,000. When I was speaking to Mr. Ives I was speaking in that sense. I did not know or say that the road as finished to Chaudière Junction could be got for any such sum.

Mr. RUSSELL. The hon. gentleman will entirely misunderstand me if he supposes that I am saying anything for the purpose of putting him in an awkward position in respect to this matter. I am only referring to these circumstances for the purpose of showing that that $500,000 option so-called, under the circumstances under which it was given, would, with the conditions with which it was clogged, even with the understanding on which it was presented to the hon. gentleman, be of no value whatever such as is sought to be attached to it by the hon. member for Halifax and the hon. member for Westmoreland, and such as is attempted to be given to it in the minority report, which they sought to have made the report of the majority of the Drummond County Railway Committee. I think that is absolutely conclusive. I repeat that it makes no difference, it would make no difference, even if I had not been able to point to this conclusive evidence given by the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals in answer to the questions put to him by the chairman of the committee,—even supposing we were not able to bring that in support of the contention that I am making, I say it would make no difference in the world what the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals thought, what Mr. Ryan thought, who was charged to a certain degree with that negotiation, or what any other gentleman thought in reference to that $500,000 option. The sole question would be: What was the intention of the parties by whom that option was given, by whom that right was conferred, by Mr. Farwell, by Mr. Greenshields and by the associates of these gentlemen. Now, the evidence in regard to that is clear and absolutely incontrovertible, and I do not think there has been any attempt to controvert it; and that is that that so-called option was given with a clear and absolutely distinct understanding on their part that it was to be subject to the condition that there was to be a further dividend altogether outside of and apart from the nominal price of $500,000 mentioned in the option—that there was to be added to that a division of any profits that should happen to be made by Mr. Ryan should he succeed in making a satisfactory bargain with the late Government, as it was supposed he would be able to do, for the sum of $2,500,000.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Mr. Farwell does not state that that was the case with regard to all the shareholders. He states it was the case with himself and some others, but not so far as the rest of the shareholders were concerned.

Mr. RUSSELL. Be it so; that does not make any essential difference in the matter. Mr. Greenshields and Mr. Farwell absolutely conditioned their option upon there being a partition of any profits that were to be made over and above the amount at which that option nominally stood, and any other theory of that option would be, to my mind, absolutely nonsensical. You will remember that that option was given on July 16th, 1894; that is the evidence. It is admitted in the draft report signed by my hon. friend from Halifax and my hon. friend from Westmoreland, that at that date there was a debt due to the bank of $178,213.65, which represented money that had been invested in that road. The evidence shows conclusively that there had been $400,000 of capital expended upon the construction of the road, that there had been a local government subsidy obtained of $135,666.42, that there had been a federal subsidy also of $41,300, and, I believe, considerably more, but not having been able to obtain the figures, I can only state them up to that amount. So that there had been $755,176.07 actual money value put into that road previous to that date of July 16th, 1894, there being at that time about 82 miles of the road completed, and seven miles of the road under construction, as shown by the minority report signed by the hon. members for Westmoreland and Halifax. It would be ridiculous to suppose that these gentlemen would have been willing to sell that road under these circumstances, with these expenditures upon it, for the sum of $500,000.

As to the $400,000 option, of which mention has been made, I think that can be conclusively disposed of by the statement of Mr. Farwell at page 136 of this evidence, when he was asked by the chairman:

Q. Was there ever any authority given to anybody to sell for $400,000?—A. Never.

Q. You would not have taken it, I presume?—A. Never.

Now I come to the question as to the actual cost, the actual expenditure upon this road. I think that is really the most important inquiry in respect to this matter, that is, the actual sum of money expended by these gentlemen who were engaged in the construction of that road. The direct cost of the road is stated in the direct evidence of the witness that was called on that point, and who would know all about the matter, as he was the book-keeper from beginning to end of the transaction. The cost of that road up to the present time, or I should say 28th February, 1898, was $1,908,271.33. The amount of expenditure up to the 30th June, 1894, was $1,163,970.60. Now, I gather from the evidence of this witness, Mr. Newton, who signed all the cheques himself, together with Mr. Church and Mr. Mitchell, that he always knew of his own knowledge the purposes for which the cheques were signed. The returns show that up to June 30th, 1895, there had been expended upon the road, in round numbers, $1,225,000; and up to 1896, $1,360,000; and up to 1897, $1,500,000. Now, the direct testimony of that witness, Mr. Newton, was subjected to the most rigorous cross-examination by the hon. member for Westmoreland; and I think no person can have noticed the conduct of those cross-examinations by my hon. friend and by my hon. colleague without perceiving that they were very adroitly conducted, and if there was any possibility of weakening the force of the direct statements made by the witnesses in that investigation, I am quite sure that those hon. gentlemen would have been able to accomplish the task. The cross-examination of the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) of this particular witness, and his method of cross-examination, in which he sought to trace the progress of the road at successive stages, to search that witness' knowledge from his memory and from the books, so far as he had them there, in respect to the different stages in the progress of the work down to June 30, 1888, to June 30, 1889, and so on to 1897, was most rigorous. He asks him: How do you make it up? He tests him by seeking to discover: Where did you get the money for the purpose of expending it on this road as you allege it was expended up to these dates, and he carries him through from year to year, and if there is any break in his evidence, if there had been any break, the rigorous cross-examination of the hon. member for Westmoreland must have discovered it. I affirm, as a matter of opinion, after reading over the cross-examination as carefully as I am able to read English, that there is no break discoverable, that there is no flaw discovered, that there is not a break in the testimony of that witness Newton, after that most rigorous method of cross-examination, so adroitly and astutely pursued by the hon. member for Westmoreland. First of all, he takes him down to June 30th, 1888, and he asks, what means had you up to that date; where did you get your money for the purpose of expending it up to that date. The witness goes on to say: We had $40,000 of capital; we borrowed $31,602; we had a subsidy of $15,057, and material was supplied us to the extent of $50,000. That makes up a total of $136,659, which is entirely in accord with the statement that $131,000 had been the cost of the road up to June 30th, 1888. So he goes on in the same way for 1889. I do not know that it is necessary to weary the House with giving all the figures. On the 30th of June, 1890, the amount paid out for building the line was given as $729,314.52, which amount was taken over into the new books of Mr. Newton as secretary of the company. Now, I admit frankly that that would be a point at which I would look for inaccuracies and for fallacies if I myself were conducting an examination of that sort. I would have questioned the witness as to the way in which he made up that $729,314.52, as to which he was not able to give details, and as to which he did not give details before the committee. The hon. member for Westmoreland very properly searched him in reference to that; he cross-examined him in reference to that point, and asked him how he made up the figures, the capital and the resources that entered into that expenditure of $729,314.52, which amount was taken over in the books of the company when Mr. Newton became book-keeper of the company instead of merely book-keeper of the contractors for the road. I shall not say whether the statement I have just made as to the precise nature of the change in Mr. Newton's connection with the business is accurate or whether it is not; it is not essential. The essential point is this, that it was incumbent upon that witness who said that up to this date $729,314.52 had been actually expended upon the road, to show the sources from which that money came. What were the sources and what did he say? He said it was made up of the paid-up stock of Charles Church, $133,400; of William Mitchell, $133,400; of Thomas Fee, $133,300. Then, there was a subsidy from the local government of $135,662.42, a subsidy from the Federal Government of $41,300, and there were the net earnings of the road, which they had been able to apply to the purposes of construction. The hon. member for Westmoreland challenged him on that point, and I admit that he compelled him to strike off some $6,000 or $7,000 from the $19,765 at which he had placed those net earnings. That will not be very essential in the consideration of this matter. However, the circumstance is important as showing the rigour of the cross-examination, and showing that it was so conducted as to give us the assurance that if there really were anything fictitious about this expenditure of $729,314.52, the hon. member for Westmoreland would have discovered it. I say he has only discovered some $6,000 or $7,000. This accounts for $596,827.96 of the $729,314.52 which it is asserted was expended on the road up to that time. Further evidence on that point does not seem to have been given at this stage, but it is not difficult for us to come to the conclusion that the floating debt of the company which at the end of June, 1889, was $65,151.76, had during the course of another year been increased to $132,987, which is all that is required to bring these actual specific items to the sum of $729,314.52, which Mr. Newton says was actually expended on the construction of the road up to some date. I will not say exactly to a day what it is, as it does not seem to be mentioned in the evidence at that stage, but up to a certain date in 1890, when these books were taken over and which sum was given at $729,314.52. Up to that date all the accounts were kept in the firm's books, and Mr. Newton was their book-keeper. Considerable bother was made about the fact there were no books presented to the committee showing the details of that $729,314.52. Whose fault was it that these books were not there? I am sure the chairman of the committee sought every bit of information that could be obtained. I am sure that he was assisted by the hon. member for Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac) in getting all the information that could be obtained, and the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Morrison). The chairman of the committee went out of his way to ask all the questions possible for the purpose of discovering where the books were, who was their custodian, where he lived and how he could be brought before the committee. It appears in testimony, as having been brought out by the chairman, that the business had been sold "last fall" to Charles Church and his two sons, that George Church was carrying on the business, and he was the proper person to apply to for these books. Now, mark, Sir, that those hon. members having obtained that distinct and specific information as to the source from which they might derive all possible information as to the details of this $729,314.52, the moment that they discovered exactly and precisely where they could get that information, where they could obtain these books, where they could find the custodian of them, his description and his place of residence, they absolutely lost all interest in the further prosecution of the inquiry. He was never subpoenaed to produce the books, and no further inquiry was made in reference to the matter. Those hon. gentlemen, having at their disposal those ample and effectual means of getting at all the details in respect to that particular expenditure which they professed to desire, lost all further interest in the matter, and yet, not having prosecuted it to the end, not having gone to the fountain-head, they have the assurance to come before this House and present to this House their own suspicions, their own conjectures and imaginings in respect to that matter, and to ask this House to come to the conclusion that there is something fishy, that there is something rotten which ought not to be sanctioned in respect to the entry of $729,314.52 as to the cost of the construction of that road up to June 30th, 1890.

Now, Sir, as to all further expenditures, Mr. Newton spoke at first hand, when he placed before that committee all the details that it was possible for anybody to ask for in reference to the construction of the road. He gave evidence before the committee which, I believe, would be admissible even in a court of justice, where the rules of evidence are altogether more strict and narrow than they are ever understood to be before committees of this House. Every practising lawyer knows, and every scientific lawyer knows, that the rules of evidence, as administered by the courts of justice, very frequently exclude evidence which, to any intelligent man prosecuting an inquiry for the mere purpose of coming at a right conclusion, would have the highest possible evidentiary value, but which, by virtue of good general principles, are excluded in the courts of justice, but are not excluded in untechnical inquiries, such as was conducted by this Drummond County Committee. I say, that the evidence with regard to what occurred after June, 1890, so far as I am able to form an opinion at this moment, was every bit of it, evidence which could even have been presented by a witness under all the restrictions and under all the limitations of the administration of justice in a court of law. We have, therefore, thus far come to this result: That it was clearly proved before that committee, as a matter of direct and positive testimony, that there was actually expended on this road by the persons who were interested in it and with whom the Government were seeking to make a bargain—there was actually expended by the persons who built the road and sold it to the Government, the sum which this witness states in his unimpeached evidence, namely, $1,908,271.23. If that statement of Mr. Newton is not a true statement, certainly the members of that committee had ample and abundant opportunity to prove that it was not a correct statement, and, if they left unused the resources by which they could have discovered errors in that statement made by Mr. Newton, as to the actual amount of money expended on that road, they are certainly culpable before this House and before the people of this country for not having unearthed what was wrong in connection with this matter. The members of that committee were certainly culpable, if they did not take pains to exhaust the sources of information that were placed at their disposal in reference to the alleged actual expenditure on this road. We must, therefore, take it as proven, that the sum stated by this witness in his evidence, was the sum that was actually expended upon that road.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that really exhausts the question at issue before this committee, and I might very well cease to weary the committee with any further observations, were it not that my hon. friend (Mr. Borden) did not content himself with dealing with the question which is really the only question before the House, but proceeded to make observations outside of the resolution, and observations which I feel it to be incumbent upon me to deal with at some slight length. For I fear that, if I failed to make some observations in answer to the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden), it might be taken for granted by some stupid people, that those remarks, irrelevant as they were to the subject under discussion, were remarks that could not be satisfactorily refuted. I am not willing to labour under that imputation. I am not willing that the Government of this country should labour under that imputation which my hon. colleague (Mr. Borden) sought to fasten on it. I am not willing that the Minister of Railways should labour under the undeserved imputation which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) sought to fasten upon him, of having been guilty of the promotion of sectional interests and provincial interests antagonistic to the province of Nova Scotia and to the city of Halifax, in his administration of the department over which he presides. I do very deeply regret that my hon. and eminent colleague (Mr. Borden) has imported, as I think, unnecessarily, into this discussion, a purely sectional question, a parochial question almost, as to alleged discrimination between the city of Halifax and the city of St. John. I remember reading, with some degree of discomfort—not to use a harsher term—a discussion of that character which took place in this House some years ago, when some question came up as to the city of Halifax and the interests of Halifax as being supposed to be antagonistic to the interests of the city of St. John. I then made a determination in my heart and mind, and came to a resolution by which I shall endeavour to be governed in my treatment of this question to-day, never for a single moment, if it were at all possible, to ask this House or this country to be engaged in the consideration of any such purely parochial question as a supposed rivalry—for I will not admit there is any question of real rivalry—between the city of Halifax and the city of St. John, or any other city on the continent of America. I deplore the fact that my hon. colleague (Mr. Borden) felt himself bound to introduce into the discussion of this matter a question of so sectional and parochial a character as the question of rivalry, if there be any rivalry, between the city of Halifax and the city of St. John.

An hon. MEMBER. There is no such rivalry.

Mr. RUSSELL. Of course, there is not. But if this committee was impressed at all by what my hon. colleague said, he certainly sought to leave the impression—I do not know for what purpose—on the minds of the committee, that, in some way or other, the treatment of Halifax by the present Minister of Railways had been prejudicial to the interests of that city. Now, Sir, I make bold to say, that never was there a Minister of Railways administering the affairs of the Railway Department of this country who held the balance more evenly between those two cities—if there be any antagonism or rivalry between them—than the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) of this Government has held the balance between the city of Halifax and the city of St. John. I go further, and say—and I am sorry, in the interests of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair), that I am obliged to say it—that, so far as concerns his own constituents, he has not done to them, thus far, the same justice that he has done to the city of Halifax. What are the facts? Both the city of St. John and the city of Halifax had, in their interests, placed in the Estimates, a year ago I think, a grant for two elevators to be built, one in the city of Halifax and the other in the city of St. John. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) says, that the elevator in the city of Halifax is not yet completed. Does he know that the elevator in the city of St. John is not yet begun, or, if it is, it has only been very recently begun? Does he know that the plans for the elevator in the city of St. John were not even put in the hands of the architect until many months after the elevator in the city of Halifax was advancing towards completion? Surely, if the hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) knew that fact, he would not have thought it proper to disguise or conceal it from the committee, when he was seeking to make—for what purpose I do not know—seeking to make the impression I have referred to, with respect to the treatment of Halifax by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair), as compared with the treatment of the city of St. John. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Borden) also knows that an elevator had been erected in the city of Halifax some years ago, and that it was destroyed by fire a considerable number of years before the enforced retirement from power of the late Government. He knows that that elevator remained in ruins so long as that Government remained in power, and perhaps he has arrived at the conclusion—any reasonable person would arrive at the conclusion—that, if the Conservative Government had not gone out of power, there would have been no movement whatever made, up to this hour, for the construction of an elevator in the city of Halifax. My hon. friend (Mr. Borden) must have a shrewd suspicion that is the fact, and not a mere fiction of the imagination. Then he knows that there was a grant put in the Estimates for some considerable wharf accommodation at the city of Halifax, for a number of years before the late Government went out of power, and it remained unexpended for several years while that Government remained in power, and for the whole balance of their term down to the time that they went out of power, and I am bound to say also for a considerable period after the present Government came into power; because the departmental subordinates of the hon. Minister of Railways had been telling him all along, and never ceased to tell him, that any increased accommodation for the city of Halifax in that respect was not necessary. But the hon. Minister of Railways was open to argument from the members for the city, from the Board of Trade, from persons interested in the affairs of the city, and from my hon. friends the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Militia as representing in this Government the province of Nova Scotia. The hon. Minister of Railways was amenable to argument and when the matter was fairly placed before him he adopted our views and went on with those improvements. They are now approaching completion, and a large expenditure has been made in the city of Halifax, which I make bold to say would not have been made up to this hour if there had not been a change of Administration. I took a little trouble to explain to the people of Halifax who were interested in these matters, in a series of letters which were never answered, which I would hardly accuse my hon. friend of having taken the trouble even to read—I took pains to explain that even in so small a matter as the time-tables and maps published for the Intercolonial Railway, the late Administration did not indicate that there was any way of getting out of Halifax by water to any other part of the continent of America. While it was indicated that you could go from the port of St. John by steamship to any other part of the world, there was not the slightest indication of any steamship line going from Halifax to any other part of the continent of America. Even in so small a matter as that the late Administration was negligent of the interests of our city. But with a change of Administration we have had a change of method. My hon. friend, for the purpose of bolstering up an attack on the Government in relation to the city of Halifax, read a report which appeared in a Halifax newspaper from the hand of George Mitchell, as president of the Board of Trade, and Alexander Stephen as mayor of the city of Halifax. In that report criticisms are offered upon an observation that happened to be made by Mr. Blair as Minister of Railways, in a letter over his hand which appeared in the same issue of the Halifax "Morning Herald," that of December 7th, 1898. In this letter the hon. Minister made what appears to me to be a fair and reasonable statement, though it is put in large capitals in the letter as printed :

Mr. RUSSELL.

We are not guaranteeing freight over our line for shipment from any point, not being so situated as to be able to do it. Perhaps later our organization may become sufficiently complete ; but I am inclined to doubt even the probability of this fact.

Now, I cannot see that there is anything so very terrible in this statement. It is a statement that the Government of this country were not prepared to go into the private business of charterers, and were not prepared to guarantee freight at the city of Halifax or at the city of St. John either. One would suppose, from the hon. gentleman's comments, that the hon. Minister of Railways was guaranteeing freight at St. John and refusing to guarantee it at Halifax ; but he was not guaranteeing freight anywhere. Neither was he not sending agents over the country to look out for business in grain carrying for the Intercolonial Railway. Now, I would like to know, in the name of all that is reasonable, what use there would have been in sending agents over western Canada to seek for grain shipments when we had no means of making use of those shipments on the Intercolonial Railway either at Halifax or St. John. I would like to ask my hon. friend, who is a fair-minded man, whose fair-mindedness is only corrupted by his present evil associations, who before he came into this House was one of the fairest-minded men on earth, and who after he leaves it will again be one of the fairest-minded men—I put it to him, whether it would have been sensible, or anything but farcical, for the hon. Minister of Railways to send agents all over this country to seek for shipments of grain at Halifax, when, owing to the negligence, the carelessness—I might say the deliberate and intentional neglect of the late Administration—there were absolutely no terminal facilities at Halifax by which those cargoes could be handled. Surely it would have been one of the most mad speculations that any man could enter upon, one of the things that would have drawn from the hon. leader of the Opposition the most expressive adjectives to be found in the English language. I have no quarrel with what the Board of Trade said, in the sense in which I understand it ; but I want to call my hon. friend's attention to this fact, that that very document from which he read, but which he did not read in full, showed that the whole basis of any hopes on the part of the city of Halifax for getting any trade of this character, and the whole foundation on which they built their claim to any special exertion in this direction on the part of the Minister of Railways was the fact that the road had been connected with the city of Montreal. These are their words :

During some years past the through ocean traffic of the Intercolonial to and from the west has so dwindled away to practically nothing, that in extending the line to Montreal an entirely new departure on the part of the management was essential to create traffic.

Therefore, the hon. gentleman will perceive that it was solely by virtue of the fact that this Government had taken the practical step of making a connection of the Intercolonial Railway with the city of Montreal, and was making it possible for that railway to command a business in the western part of the country—it was only because of that very achievement, that the Board of Trade of the city of Halifax thought it was at all serviceable for them to ask for any such aggressive and progressive steps as they demanded on the part of the Minister of Railways. I think that disposes very largely of my hon. friend's attack upon the Minister of Railways in relation to his treatment of the city of Halifax. On this point I would only ask my hon. friend's attention to one thing further, that is, to the remarks that were made by the ex-mayor of Halifax at a little social or semi-official function which was held in the city of Halifax a few days ago. These remarks are those of a gentleman who is a highly honoured and distinguished member of the Conservative party in that city, who is a strong supporter of my hon. friend and colleague from Halifax (Mr. Borden), and whose opinions upon commercial subjects have always commanded very great respect in that city. Speaking of the relative treatment of the city of Halifax by the late and the present Administration, ex-Mayor Steven made these remarks :

That the Government deserved well of the people of Halifax, who have been long humbugged by the promises of Sir Charles Tupper to make Halifax the Liverpool of America.

I am sorry that the "grand old" leader is not present to hear these encomiums passed upon him by his staunch friend and follower in that city.

But it remained for the Government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and his energetic Minister of Railways to give these trade and terminal facilities which we needed, and to do all that a Government could do to implement the pledges made to Halifax.

My hon. friend made another remark which I am just reminded of by some further expressions in the short extract that I have before me. One would suppose that it was the policy of the present Minister of Railways to prevent the Canadian Pacific Railway from having access to the city of Halifax. I am afraid my hon. friend can hardly have been serious in supposing that there could have been any such policy pursued or any such views entertained by the hon. Minister. The hon. Minister is as willing and anxious to see the Canadian Pacific Railway running into the city of Halifax, as anybody else can be, but he insists—and we will stand by him in insisting—that if the Canadian Pacific Railway is to acquire rights in respect of the Intercolonial, they shall acquire them on something like fair and reasonable terms. I stand by the Minister of Railways in insisting that the terms upon which the Canadian Pacific Railway shall be allowed to come into Halifax shall be fair and reasonable and proper. I am as anxious as any man can be that the Canadian Pacific Railway should have, on fair terms, ingress into and egress out of the city of Halifax, but I do not think so meanly of my city as to suppose that it is any more important for a Halifax man to get to St. John than it is for a St. John man to get to Halifax. The people of St. John are as anxious that passengers should go to Montreal by way of St. John as the people of Halifax are that they should be able to go that way. There are people in St. John who criticise the Minister of Railways, as some of us in Halifax who do not understand the matter criticise him there, for being too exacting in respect of the terms demanded from the Canadian Pacific Railway. He is right in insisting on fair and reasonable terms, and nothing but these will be insisted on. On fair and equitable terms, I see no reason why connection at Halifax should not be established for the Canadian Pacific Railway; on terms that are not fair and equitable I do not desire that any such connection should be established. But my hon. friend is altogether mistaken if he supposes that there is any connection between the ingress of the Canadian Pacific Railway into the city of Halifax and the export of any freight from the city of Halifax carried over the Canadian Pacific line. If he will ask any of the officials connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway, I am quite certain he will be assured that, so far as he may entertain any supposition in his mind, that by the acquisition of running powers into Halifax or of access under any circumstances into that city, there will be any considerable amount of western freight carried into that city by the Canadian Pacific Railway and thence exported, he is absolutely and entirely mistaken. He will not find one official of the Canadian Pacific Railway or of any other road or any man who knows the first thing about the transportation question, that will give him the slightest hope or encouragement from that quarter.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). My hon. friend quite misunderstood what I did say. What I suggested was this, that if the Minister of Railways chose to compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway at St. John, in order to do which he would have to haul freight 259 miles further than the Canadian Pacific Railway have to haul it, he would be at a disadvantage, and that he would do much better to compete with the Canadian Pacific Railway at Halifax, where, with an additional haulage of only 97 miles he would save 250 miles of an ocean voyage. By going to St. John he has a longer haul than the Canadian Pacific Railway of 259 miles as compared with a longer haul than the Canadian Pacific Railway of 97 miles by going to Halifax, and at the latter port he would save 250 miles of ocean voyage as compared with St. John.

Mr. RUSSELL. I understood the hon. gentleman's argument to be that there was a better chance of the Intercolonial competing with the Canadian Pacific Railway at Halifax than at St. John.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes.

Mr. RUSSELL. That is exactly my opinion, and that is the very reason why I was anxious to see the Intercolonial extended to Montreal and facilities afforded at Halifax; and I am confident that when St. John and Halifax are placed on a fair and even keel, as they should be, by the creation of terminal facilities adequate to the trade in both cities, Halifax will be able to capture the traffic. That is why I support the hon. Minister of Railways. I am absolutely confident as to the capacity of the port of Halifax to capture, under fair conditions, the great bulk of the freight that comes over the Intercolonial. No doubt the hon. Minister of Railways has a different opinion. As a loyal citizen of New Brunswick, it is right that he should; but I am satisfied that his opinion will not be verified by the facts. I am satisfied, as a Halifaxian and a Nova Scotian, to take my chances. I believe that when the Intercolonial is properly equipped, that when it has the proper kinds of engines, cars, agents, and facilities at both Halifax and St. John, and those two cities are enabled to compete on a fair field, with no favour to either, the natural advantages of Halifax will enable it to capture a large proportion of the trade, which, perhaps now, goes to St. John; but I am not so small-minded as to suppose that there can be room for any unfriendly rivalry or antagonism between the two cities. I am confident that with a properly developed Intercolonial, with proper equipment, with an aggressive and progressive prosecution of the business of the Intercolonial, there will be found abundant business for both Halifax and St. John, and that, in the language of the pulpit, there will be such a blessing poured out upon us that there will not be room to receive it. That is the very reason why I support so ardently the policy of the Minister of Railways in respect to this great question.

I was going on to say that there was a time when it was possible for the Government to secure for the port of Halifax, not only in connection with the Intercolonial, but with the Canadian Pacific Railway, great and signal advantages for that city and for the province of Nova Scotia. My hon. friend has not been so close an observer of political events during the greater part of his life as he has latterly become, and may not remember, though I rather think he will, the agitation that took place in reference to this very question of transportation, a number of years ago, when a certain measure was brought before this House for the bonusing of a short line to Halifax, as we then understood it. But we have been woefully disillusioned since, because the leader of the Opposition told us, the other day, that it was not to the city of Halifax he intended that road to be extended, but to the city of St. John. He never made that observation, I venture to say, in any city in the province of Nova Scotia; he never made that observation in the city of Halifax; he never gave the slightest intimation to anybody that he was advocating a through line from the city of Montreal to the city of St. John, or that he proposed to stop short of the city of Halifax. Far from this; when the Short Line measure was brought down in this Parliament in 1885, as my hon. colleague is probably aware, because it has been brought out in recent controversies in the city of Halifax, Sir Hector Langevin, in introducing the measure for the construction of the line from Montreal to the lower provinces, explained that it was a line for the benefit of Halifax, as much as of St. John, for the benefit of Nova Scotia as much as of New Brunswick. I do not profess to give Sir Hector Langevin's words, remember, but I give the effect of what he said, and I propose to give his words. My hon. friend will remember that there was to be a connecting link, which was called the Harvey and Salisbury branch, which was to make this a through line for the province of Nova Scotia as well as for the province of New Brunswick. This is what Sir Hector Langevin said:

The Government will have to make an arrangement with the company undertaking the railway, and will take means to secure the completion of that line. I said the other day that we would take special care in the arrangements with the company that that portion of the line to Salisbury would be completed as well as the other portion. That covers the whole ground.

When that statement was made, there were sceptical people in this House, just as there are sceptical people here to-day. The hon. gentleman who then represented Guysborough, on the motion for concurrence in the amendments to the subsidy resolution I suppose it was—moved in amendment:

That the report be not now considered, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for the purpose of amending the Bill by providing to make it clear that the section of the line between Harvey, Moncton and Salisbury shall be begun and prosecuted simultaneously with that portion of the line west of the boundary between New Brunswick and Maine.

You see that the object of the hon. member was to make sure that the professed policy of the Government of that day should be carried out, and that this Harvey-Salisbury link should be built simultaneously with the line from Montreal to St. John. He was asked, if he would not kindly withdraw his motion. He was told, that it was a wholly needless motion, that the Government had given a clear pledge that the connecting link would be proceeded with, pari passu, with the rest of the road, and that there was no necessity to make such a motion. And one of the gentlemen who then represented Halifax, the present Lieutenant-Governor of Nova Scotia, made a pretty speech, indicating how inadvisable it would be to have any reflections cast upon the integrity of the Government or their intentions with respect to the city of Halifax or the province of Nova Scotia. Mr. Kirk went on to say, however, in answer to that suggestion:

The Minister of Public Works in his speech the other day pledged the Government to secure the building of the road from Mattawamkeag to Salisbury. When the road is built to Mattawamkeag we have connection, but the Short Line is not complete unless it is built to Harvey, Fredericton and Salisbury. Unless this section is built the road will be no earthly benefit to the province of Nova Scotia or to the city of Halifax. It may be built, but what we want is that since the Government and Parliament have declared that it shall be built by this company, we want to take care that it shall be built as soon as possible. Therefore, I cannot, at the suggestion of the hon. gentleman, withdraw my motion, and I shall have to ask the House to divide on it.

And the House did divide upon the motion of the then hon. member for Guysborough, and his motion was defeated, the Conservative members for the county of Halifax, Messrs. Stairs and Daly, voting for the Government and in favour of defeating Mr. Kirk's motion, which, if carried, would have secured the construction of the Harvey-Salisbury link, by which proposition the city of Halifax might have derived some benefit from the enormous expenditure of the Government in connection with the construction of that short line, and which expenditure, it was explained to the people of Halifax, was made for the purpose of building a short line into Halifax—a statement that has been elaborately, and emphatically, and shamelessly repudiated by the leader of the Opposition within the last ten days. My hon. friend is aware that that connecting link has never been built down to this very hour, but that the Short Line has been built, and that the city of St. John, by means of it, has been able to capture—nobody blames it for that, nobody grudges it that, nobody is jealous of it for that—a very considerable amount of through trade which has been shipped to it over that Short Line; and not a single pound of freight, speaking in the large, certainly no portion worth talking about, has ever been shipped to the city of Halifax over the Canadian Pacific Railway by means of the Short Line and the unconstructed Harvey and Salisbury branch, which the Government pledged themselves to construct, and by pledging themselves to the construction of which they secured the votes of the two Conservative members for Halifax.

Three or four years afterwards, they found that there was considerable dissatisfaction expressed on account of their transactions with respect to that matter; and, for the purpose of making some sort of show, some sort of pretense, some sort of flourish or demonstration of their interest in the people of Halifax and the province of Nova Scotia, they introduced, in the session of 1889, a resolution to the effect that it was expedient that a railway should be constructed as a Government railway between the point of junction on the New Brunswick Railway, at or near Harvey, in the province of New Brunswick, and the point of junction on the Intercolonial Railway, at or near Salisbury or Moncton, and that the sum of $500,000 be granted toward the construction of the said railway. Now, let us see whether there was any bona fides in that transaction. That session of the House began on January 3rd, 1889, and Parliament was prorogued on the 2nd day of May. This resolution was not introduced until the 22nd day of April, and the Bill was only introduced on the 30th day of April. Can anybody believe that there was any bona fides in a proposition like that, made to this House just two days before prorogation? The Bill came up, and was hustled through this House, and sent to the Senate, where it was absolutely foredoomed to destruction, where, I presume, it was known before it was introduced that it would be destroyed. It was not introduced in the Senate until the 1st day of May, one day before Parliament was prorogued, and it was defeated on the motion of an hon. gentleman who now occupies a high position in the Senate, who was once Speaker of the Senate, Hon. Mr. Miller, a Senator from Nova Scotia, who, doubtless, knew what fate the Government desired to have meted out to that Bill. The Bill was advocated by Sir John Abbott in a speech which was commented upon in the course of the debate, and characterized as what is known, in technical language, as a prevaricating speech, that is, one that is made for the purpose of losing the case which the maker of it is supposed to advocate. It was so commented upon by several hon. Senators. And the Bill thus introduced the day before prorogation, was of course defeated.

The statement has been made in the journal from which my hon. friend draws much of his political inspiration, that the Bill was defeated by the votes of the Reformers in the Senate. I have taken pains, therefore, to find out that among the Senators who voted against the Bill, there were Senators Armand, Bellerose, McCallum, McInnes, Merner, Miller, Perley, Reid, Sullivan and Vidal: and according to the "Parliamentary

Mr. RUSSELL.

Companion" of that day, every one of these Senators was a supporter of the Administration of that day, every one of them was ranked as a Liberal-Conservative, and was appointed by the Administration of that day. If these eleven Senators who voted for Senator Miller's amendment, had supported the Government of that day, which on general principles they always did support, if they had not understood thoroughly well that it was not the desire of the Government of that day that that Bill should pass, if they had not thoroughly well understood that it was the intention and desire that that Bill should be introduced and passed in the House of Commons simply to hoodwink the people of the city of Halifax and of the province of Nova Scotia, if, I say, they had voted for that Bill instead of voting against it, that Bill would have been carried by a majority of 22 against 11, instead of being defeated by a majority of two to one.

Mr. GILLIES. How many Liberal Senators voted against that Bill?

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not know; I admit that some Liberal Senators voted against it; Mr. Jones and Mr. Kenny both voted for it in this House, and Senator Power in the other Chamber. I did not say that no Liberal Senators voted against it. I said that if these eleven Conservative Senators had stood by the Government, by the professed policy of the Government of which they were professed supporters, that Bill, instead of being defeated in the Senate as it was, would have been carried, and that road would have been built as a Government work. But why imperil the interests of the city of Halifax and of the province of Nova Scotia by asking that an entirely different measure should be put before the country, when you had taken away from the people of Halifax and of Nova Scotia the benefit of the argument they would have been otherwise able to make that the road could have been constructed and ought to have been constructed by the company which built the Short Line Railway as a part of the general scheme which was the professed policy of the Government of that day, and on the subsidy which the House was then prepared to vote for that work?

I think I need not deal any further with any questions relating to discrimination against the city of Halifax by this Government, or with any comparisons as to the treatment of Halifax by this Government and its treatment by their predecessors in office. I think I have demonstrated, in answer to my hon. friend, that so far as Halifax is concerned, its interests are bound up with the Intercolonial Railway, and that the prosperity and progress of the Intercolonial Railway are bound up with the carrying out of the policy of this Government. I believe that in my innermost heart. I believe that the Intercolonial Railway, built as an artery of commerce between Halifax and the rest of the country, or rather between the lower provinces and the inland provinces of the Dominion, between the seaboard provinces and the other provinces of the Dominion, is going to be what is of vastly greater importance than the mere building up of interprovincial commerce. It is not only an institution for the building up of the commerce of the cities of St. John and Halifax. It is to be what Sir John A. Macdonald proclaimed it to be years ago in this House, with a statesmanlike prescience; it is to be a means of allaying the sectional spirit, especially with respect to Nova Scotia, for the creation of which the hon. leader of the Opposition is more responsible and more culpable than any other man that lives on this earth at this hour. It will operate in the way of creating what is far more important than the commercial intercommunication between various sections of the Dominion, it will produce such a unity of sentiment, and such a unity of feeling as the hon. leader of the Opposition by his proceedings in connection with the consummation of this union rendered absolutely impossible for many long years in the history of this country, and co-operate with the general policy of this Administration in the creation of a truly national spirit throughout the Dominion of Canada.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 62) respecting the Canada Life Assurance Company.—(Mr. Gibson.)

I.C.R.—EXTENSION TO MONTREAL.

House again resolved itself into committee to consider a certain resolution respecting the Drummond County Railway.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. R. R. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of patience to the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell), who has spoken at considerable length. I may say that if the Halifax elevator were taken out of his speech and the evidence from the report of the committee, which he read, there would be very little of it left. I can assure hon. gentlemen that I will not talk so long on elevators at any rate, but I will try to come to the point as soon as possible. I am sorry to commence with the complaint that we have not been furnished with proper information in connection with this Drummond County Railway. It is the impression on this side of the House that the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) is in a position to furnish us with that information, and it is difficult for hon. members to deal with the matter thoroughly without it. My hon. friend (Mr. Russell) says that the Government has made the greatest and best contract that was ever made by a Government in this country in the arrangement made with the Drummond County Railway Co. As far as I am concerned, I am not going to quarrel with the Drummond County Railway. I think we are all in favour of bringing the Intercolonial Railway into the city of Montreal if it is brought in in a reasonable way and without costing the country too much. What we complain of is that the present deal will be too expensive, and we want to know whether the line pays and whether it has paid during the last two years that the Government has been running it. This is information that should be furnished. All we now have, practically, to guide us is the report of the investigating committee. The hon. gentleman who preceded me spoke of railways that cost $17,000 a mile. The Drummond County cost $12,000 a mile, and others, he said, had cost as much as $100,000 a mile. He says that there must be a great deal of corruption in connection with a road that costs $100,000 a mile.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Who says so?

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). The speaker who preceded me. He thought the corruption must be in proportion to the amount the railway cost, and he appears to think that all railways should cost the same figure. There is a great difference between railways in this country. The hon. member mentioned railways in Cape Breton and other parts of the country. I was in Nova Scotia myself for some years building railways. I know that in some parts of that province railway building is difficult and expensive, while in other parts it is quite easy. Yet the hon. gentleman appears to think that all railways should cost about the same amount. He spoke of the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) making a comparison in regard to a road which runs to Beauharnois, and said he compared that road with the Drummond County Railway. He says that that road cost $5,000 per mile more than the Drummond County Railway. The hon. member for Westmoreland did not make any such statement at all. The comparison which he made was with the portion of the road between St. Lambert and Ste. Rosalie, for which this Government has agreed to pay 5 per cent on one-half at a valuation of $50,000 a mile, and he said this road cost, according to Mr. Wainwright's own statement, $17,000 per mile. The hon. member (Mr. Russell) said, that the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), with far-sighted sagacity, had accomplished one of the greatest business transactions that was ever accomplished in this country. If that be so, I am sure the Minister (Mr. Blair) will be quite willing to have the transaction criticised in a fair and reasonable manner, and I propose to deal with the matter in that way. The only record available regarding the Intercolonial Railway this year is a statement showing that there is a deficit of $209,987. Now, compare that deficit with the financial position of the Intercolonial Railway during the last four years of the administration of the Conservative party. In 1892-93 there was a profit on the Intercolonial Railway of $20,181; in 1893-94 there was a profit of $5,832; in 1894-95 there was a profit of $3,815, and for the last year the Conservative party was in power, there was a deficit of $59,187, showing a net deficit in the four year of $29,358. Let us see what the present Government did with the Intercolonial Railway. In the first year of this Liberal Administration there was a deficit of $50,940.65 on the Intercolonial Railway, and last year there was a deficit of $209,987, showing a deficit for the two years of $260,933. If the Drummond County Railway was an advantage to the Intercolonial, then the Intercolonial must be very badly managed, because, notwithstanding the acquisition of the Drummond County line, last year there was a deficit, as I have shown, of $209,987. But there is more than that to be considered in this matter. During the Conservative Administration, there were wooden bridges replaced by steel bridges, and charged to revenue; there were passenger and freight cars purchased, and these were charged to revenue. There were improvements and betterments charged to revenue; and there were new heavy steel rails purchased to replace the light ones, and these were also charged to revenue. But what do we find the present Government doing? Everything in the way of patching up bridges and all betterments were charged to capital account, so as to enable this Government to show no deficit on the working expenses, but, notwithstanding that, they were nearly $210,000 behind last year. Why, if they had made the same charges to revenue account as the Conservative Government did, and charged up the rent paid to the Drummond County and Grand Trunk Railways, the deficit last year on the Intercolonial Railway would have been enormous.

After the Liberal Government came into power, in the latter part of 1896, there was a great deal of talk about the Drummond County Railway, and it was stated in the press of the country, that the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Tarte) was arranging for its purchase. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) deposed before the committee, that he never knew who owned the Drummond County road until some time in January, 1897. Well, Sir, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) could not have read the press of the country, and he could not have known what his colleague (Mr. Tarte) was up to, if he did not know who were the owners of that road. I think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) also told the committee, that he knew nothing of the option for the purchase of this road for $500,000. It is perhaps well to explain something about that option, as it has been largely commented on, and I will read the reference to it, as it appears in the draft report of the committee:—

Under these circumstances, and with a view of effecting a sale of the road, the shareholders of the company, on the 16th of July, 1894, gave to Mr. Farwell the following option:—

"For and in consideration of the sum of one dollar to each of us in hand paid by William Farwell, of Sherbrooke, P.Q.:

"We, and each of us, hereby give to said William Farwell a thirty days' option in which he may pay to us the round sum of $500,000.00, for which sum, if paid within thirty days, we agree to sell, transfer and deliver to him, or his assigns, the Drummond County Railway, both main line, branches, sidings, rights of way, stations, rolling stock, tools, franchises, charters, bonuses, subsidies and appurtenances whatsoever, exactly as the whole property stands and is.

"We undertake to transfer to him the whole capital stock, both issued and unissued, also the whole of the bonds, both issued and unissued, after cancellation, and to deliver the property to him free from all debts, liens, mortgages and encumbrances whatsoever, and to defend him from all claims that may thereafter be preferred arising prior to the transfer.

"We declare that the right of way has been paid for and deeded to the company on the whole line from Ste. Rosalie to Ball's Wharf, and from St. Léonard as far as the track is laid towards Chaudière Junction, with the exception of certain small pieces which we undertake to pay for and cause to be deeded to the company, the whole for and in consideration of the sum of $500,000.

"The whole capital stock authorized is sixty-five hundred (6,500) shares of $100 each.

"The total capital stock issued and delivered by the company is four thousand (4,000) shares of $100 each.

"The total bond issue authorized is one million ($1,000,000) dollars, and the bonds issued and outstanding amount to one million dollars, which is held by the Eastern Townships Bank as security for an advance of one hundred and seventy-five thousand dollars ($175,000) or thereabouts.

"The right of way which we will transfer is sixty-six feet over the whole road, with the exception of certain sections, which are only forty feet, say in all about two miles, and also a portion of the right of way is ninety-nine feet, say from six to eight miles.

"Witness our hands in the city of Montreal, this 16th day of July, A.D. 1894.

Then he assigns :

I hereby assign and transfer all my rights to above option of purchase of Drummond County Railway, &c., to Hugh Ryan, contractor, Toronto, Ont.

There can be no doubt this option was granted for $500,000, for it is here on record. Mr. Hugh Ryan, I understand, has stated that the option was a straight option for $500,000. The ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart) has stated that Mr. Ryan offered this option to him for $550,000. Mr. Farwell says that Mr. Ryan was to complete the road, and Mr. Farwell and his associates were to get one-third of anything he could get out of it. If he sold the road for $550,000, they would only get one-third of the $50,000. These are the facts of the case, so far as the option is concerned. There was another option given for $400,000, but it is not necessary for me to go into that. Now, the Minister of Railways and Canals, in giving evidence before the committee, stated that the distance over the Grand Trunk Railway from a point in Montreal to Lévis was 157·37 miles, the distance by the South Shore line was 159·39 miles, and the distance by the Drummond County road was only 146 miles. Where he gets this 146 miles I cannot understand. The distance from Montreal to Ste. Rosalie is thirty-eight miles, the distance by the main line of the Drummond County Railway is 115½ miles, and from Chaudière to Lévis the distance is nine miles, making the length of this route 162½ miles, or five miles longer than the Grand Trunk, and a little over three miles longer than the South Shore, and 248 miles longer than the Canadian Pacific Railway to St. John, N.B. Mr. Schreiber's last estimate on the main line and branch of the Drummond County Railway was $1,535,500. The subsidies amounted to $650,000. I am saying nothing about the $136,000 which I am told was paid to the company, but I have no means of finding out anything about it. The amount expended by the company would thus be $885,144. The subsidies from the province of Quebec and from municipalities amount to $362,420. So that this Government is purchasing this $885,144 which the company have put into the road ; also the $362,420 which the Quebec Government and the municipalities have put into it ; they are also paying $216,436, making a total of $1,464,000. Then, if you take into account the Dominion subsidies, amounting to $287,936, the Government would be paying $1,751,936, and if they paid the other subsidy of $136,000 they would be paying $1,889,936. But even if they deduct the $136,000 they would be paying $1,751,936. The estimate of Mr. Schreiber, the engineer of the Government, of the cost of this railway from Ste. Rosalie to St. Leonard was forty-five and one-half miles at $13,000 per mile, and seventy miles from St. Leonard to Chaudière Bridge at $11,000 per mile, or a cost for the main line of $1,365,000. The second estimate that he has been asked to make amounts to $500 more than that. At these prices, with a reasonable price for the line from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal, you can easily see that the railway would not be a very expensive one. Now, let me read a few sentences from the first agreement which the hon. gentleman entered into :

Her Majesty shall have an undivided half share in the Grand Trunk Railway and property between and including certain points, and use of Victoria Bridge for 99 years. The construction of stations, tracks, approaches and sidings to be made under supervision and subject to approval of Grand Trunk Company's engineer.

You see, everything is in the hands of the Grand Trunk Railway engineer for ninety-nine years. This Government, which pays one-half the cost of these terminals, has nothing to say about them. That feature of the arrangement was very well explained last night by the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell), when he said the country was tied hand and foot to the Grand Trunk for 99 years. The rates and fares are to be those established by the Grand Trunk Railway Company. Why, Sir, you cannot make a rate or do anything with your own road for which you have paid so much, without the consent of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. With regard to the time of arrival and departure of trains at Montreal, I do not suppose the Grand Trunk Company would place any unreasonable obstacles in the way ; but it is a peculiar bargain to make that we cannot arrive or leave the yards at Montreal except with the approval of the Grand Trunk. Mr. Schreiber's estimate, the Minister of Railways and Canals says, was for the equal use of the terminals.

The Government to pay interest on one-half of any expenditure for improvements, such as double tracks between St. Hyacinthe and St. Lambert, yard at Point St. Charles or St. Henri, additional tracks that may be necessary from St. Henri to Bonaventure station, bridges or other expenditures for proper conduct of the business.

I wish to call the attention of the House to this as it is the most foolish and unbusinesslike clause that could be put in any agreement. But let me first draw your attention to the fact that we are to pay five per cent on one-half the cost of all the improvements, such as double tracks, sidings, station houses, branches or anything else that the Grand Trunk Railway may desire to build to carry on their enormous traffic. I put the cost of this down at the very modest estimate of $25,000 a year, over and above what will be necessary as per clause 35 of the second contract. I am now speaking of the first agreement on which the second is an improvement—the agreement that the Senate very properly threw out, in the interests of the country. I estimate that the interest on our share of the cost of these improvements at 5 per cent will average at least $25,000 a year. If they only spend $50,000 a year for 20 years, the proportion on which we would pay interest would be $500,000, which at 5 per cent would amount to $25,000 per annum, with 79 years to run, during which time the expenditure would no doubt enormously increase. That is the most moderate and reasonable estimate anybody can make under clause 35 of the first contract. I was over a portion of the Grand Trunk from St. Lambert to Ste. Rosalie a few days ago. On that 38 miles of double tracking, no doubt 80-pound rails would be used to accommodate the heavy traffic of the Grand Trunk Railway. A lighter rail would, no doubt, do for the present traffic over the Intercolonial, but under the circumstances of that first contract 80-pound rails would be required, and the cost of the ties, ballasting sidings, bridges, &c., would be at least $6,000 a mile, or $228,000. The cost of grading for double track, bridges, sidings, &c., over the 38 miles from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal would be at least $10,000 a mile, or $380,000. This would be $608,000, and there cannot be a doubt about it that if this first contract had been carried out, this double track, as Mr. Schreiber intimates in his evidence, would have been built. I was surprised to see such poor station houses and other buildings as there are along that section, and I have no doubt the Grand Trunk Railway would add station houses when laying their double track. The country would therefore have to pay five per cent interest on half this amount of $608,000, or on $304,000 as soon as this double track was built, and half the cost of the stations would probably bring it up to $400,000. My estimate of $25,000 a year under clause 35 of the first contract is a very reasonable one. Besides the improvements already mentioned, there are yard improvements, buildings, sidings, bridges, &c., and before the termination of this contract, we cannot tell but what it may be necessary to spend a large amount of money on the Victoria Bridge. Ninety-nine years is a great length of time for a Government to enter into such an arrangement, when they could do better by building a road and making improvements on lines that are the property of the country.

The hon. Minister of Railways said that the arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway was on a basis of $140,000 a year. The arrangement with the Drummond Railway was $70,000 per year and with the Grand Trunk Railway $140,000 a year, or $210,000 per annum, which, capitalized at three per cent, would be $7,000,000. And taking $25,000 as our share of the expenditure between Montreal and Ste. Rosalie, including the terminals, etc., at three per cent, would give $833,300. This would amount to $7,833,300. Although the Government gave the Grand Trunk Railway, a short time before, $300,000 for the improvements and extension of Victoria Bridge, I will not include that in this calculation. I have made my calculations on borrowing money at 3 per cent, which I say is quite sufficient. If the credit of the country is as good now as it was when this Government came into office, after eighteen years of Conservative administration, my statement cannot be doubted. Immediately after they came into office, before they had passed any legislation, or had done anything to entitle them to borrow a dollar, they borrowed money at 2½ per cent, and when discounts and brokerage and other charges are added, the rate was a little less than 2½ per cent, and that low rate was due to the prestige which this country had acquired under a Conservative Government. There can be no doubt, therefore, that the money could be borrowed by this Government at 3 per cent if their credit is as good now as then.

I shall now deal with the estimate made by the Government engineer. Mr. Schreiber says that the St. Hyacinthe line, Drummond County connection to St. Lambert, 30 miles, cost $1,500,000, on one-half of which we would have to pay interest. This line is estimated to have cost $50,000 per mile, and we are paying five per cent interest based on that valuation, which is a very high one.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). What do you say about $50,000 a mile?

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). That is Mr. Schreiber's estimate, and I understand that the Government is paying on a basis of a valuation of $50,000 per mile from St. Lambert.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You are speaking of the Grand Trunk Railway arrangement?

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Yes; I am speaking of the road from St. Lambert to Ste. Rosalie. I have gone over that road and have made an estimate of the cost, and I intend now to place it on record, that it may be there so that any practical man may go over the road and judge for himself whether I am right or wrong. Before I go into the details of the estimate, I may say that I have never seen a finer country to build a road in. From St. Lambert to Ste. Rosalie there are only two little cuts, one of six or seven feet, and a very short one of about three feet. With these exceptions, there is not a rod of it but could be worked with scrapers, the soil being a sandy loam. I venture to say if you call for tenders you will find good men to undertake that work for 12 cents a yard. I am satisfied that it can be sub-let for 10 cents a yard. It is the easiest scraper side work I ever saw. I have estimated it at 18 cents a yard. That, I believe, is ample, and I have talked it over with some of the best contractors in this country. They tell me they are prepared to enter into a contract and put up the necessary deposit inside of ten days, at the estimate I have made, to do this work.

Mr. GIBSON. Did you examine the nature of the soil from Ste. Hyacinthe to Ste. Rosalie ?

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Yes.

Mr. GIBSON. What was it ?

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Sandy loam. There is only a small amount of clearing—only about two miles, and the trees are small poplars. It would not cost more than $5 an acre to clear it. But, for clearing, close-cutting and grubbing, I have allowed $30 an acre for 25 acres ; this would be $750. Grading, including sidings, 16,000 cubic yards—and I am sure there is not that quantity necessary to make a first-class road—at 18 cents a yard, for 30 miles, would be $88,700. I find there is a bridge across the Richelieu River. My hon. friend (Mr. Gibson) is a better authority on bridges, perhaps, than he is on grading. For this bridge there are five piers and two abutments. I estimate the piers to average 37½ feet by 30 feet high, by 8½ feet. This would make 354 cubic yards. Thus, the five piers and two abutments, which I figure all the same—there would be one or two a little deeper, but others not nearly so deep—2,481½ yards, at $20 a yard, $49,630. The superstructure for this bridge, 600 feet, at $45 a lineal foot—100 feet spans—$27,000. This is the only important bridge, and the figures I have given show a total cost for it of $76,630. There is another small stone and iron bridge, which, allowing $20 a yard for masonry and $45 per lineal foot for the superstructure, would cost $29,500. Then there are culverts, cattle-guards and crossings—not very many, owing to the country being so level. I put a very liberal valuation on these when I allow the sum of $25,000. The ties, including sidings, 2,800 ties per mile, at 30 cents, would be $25,200. These ties, you will see, are about 2-foot centres. Now, the steel rails, at 60 pounds to the yard, which makes a good substantial road for the traffic of the Intercolonial Railway, including rails for sidings, also fish-plates, spikes, bolts, &c., 127 tons per mile, at $23 per ton, total $87,630. Steel rails were down very low a little while ago, as low, I think, as $17 or $18 per ton. I am told that owing to the combine of Rockefeller and others in the United States, they are somewhat higher, so, as you will see, I base my estimate on $23 per ton. Tracklaying, including sidings and switches, $300 per mile, $9,000. Ballasting, 2,347 cubic yards, at 30 cents, $21,123. Fencing, per mile, 640 rods, at 80 cents, $15,360. Stations, freight sheds, round houses, platforms, signals, &c., $25,000. This may appear small, but I can tell you, Mr. Chairman, that anybody going over that piece of road will find the stations of a very inferior character. This is a very liberal estimate for them as they are, and will put in better stations and better buildings generally than are now on the road. Engineering and contingencies, say, $1,000 per mile. There would not be many contingencies, because this work is so easily done, except the one bridge, that there can be nothing unforeseen, and I put such a valuation upon the bridge that contingencies are really not necessary. As to engineering, there are no difficulties in the way to call for much engineering work. I would like hon. gentlemen opposite to examine this road for themselves. I invite the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) when he goes that way, to look over the line and see if it is a difficult road to build. For contingencies and engineering, say, $30,000. Thus, we have the total cost of the road, $433,893. The interest on that, at 3 per cent, would be $13,016, while the interest charge which the Government has undertaken to pay, based upon 5 per cent, amounts to $37,500, a difference of $24,484.

Now, Sir, I am prepared to furnish the Government a contractor as good as they can find in this country, who will do this work for $14,463 per mile, instead of $50,000. I am satisfied that any hon. gentleman in this House, no matter what his politics may be, even the Minister himself, if he goes over the line and examines the work, must come to the conclusion that the $37,500 per year that they are paying for that road is a reckless and indefensible waste of public money. At page 11 of this report, I find Mr. Schreiber's estimate of what we ought to pay for the use of the terminals. We have here the value of the terminals at St. Charles and Bonaventure, including the use of the tracks, on the basis of half the value at 5 per cent. Now, it is well known that the country around Montreal is comparatively level, especially at Bonaventure station, St. Henri and Point St. Charles, and it is not expensive to build a road-bed. Four miles of railway, at $80,000 per mile, $320,000. This does not take in any of the buildings, it does not take in any of the sidings, it does not take in the land, the stations, the freight houses or anything of that kind, but just the four miles of track. One-half of that $320,000 is $160,000. They not only pay this enormous amount, three times what they should pay, but they pay double the interest that they could get the money for to build this work themselves. Then there are 10 acres of land (485,100 square feet) for terminals at $2 per foot, which is figured out here at $871,200, but it is a little more, it is about $970,000. The interest on this at 5 per cent is $19,000, more than it would be at 3 per cent, the rate which the Government could borrow the money. Now, they pay for a passenger station, say, $100,000, say one-half, $50,000. Other tracks, four miles at $4,500 per mile, $18,000. This is one-half the cost of the four miles of track. Then there is a freight shed, 500 feet by 50 feet, of brick, on which the Government proportion is $30,000. For the engine-house the Government pays $30,000 ; proportion of workshops, $30,000, and sundries, $50,000. These total up $1,239,200 according to their estimate, and 5 per cent on that sum is $61,960. I see here a recapitulation by Mr. Schreiber in which he puts this down at $62,500. It would appear that this Government are very liberal to large corporations. At the same time that they were putting this deal through, paying this company three prices, and 5 per cent on that, they passed legislation here to give the depositors in the savings banks only 2½ per cent interest on their money. Farmers, mechanics and labouring men could only get 2½ per cent for the money they loan the Government, but large corporations get 5 per cent.

Mr. Schreiber, the engineer, said that the Victoria Bridge cost $10,000,000. I never heard that sum mentioned before. I have seen a good many cuts and views of that bridge on all of which it was stated that the cost was $7,000,000, and that is a very large sum of money. He says it could be built now for $6,000,000. We have received no information from the Minister as to the number of cars used, and we have to take what we find on record. I find here in the report of the Drummond County Railway Commission a record of the total number of cars in and out of the yard at Point St. Charles and Bonaventure stations on the Intercolonial Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway during the months of March and April, 1898. On the Intercolonial Railway there were 4,381, and on the Grand Trunk Railway 99,107. We are supposed to pay for half the terminals. The percentage in favour of the Grand Trunk Railway is 2,263. Yet we pay half, when there is twenty-two and a half times as much traffic on the Grand Trunk Railway as there is on the Intercolonial Railway. Now, for the whole year the number on the Intercolonial Railway is 26,286. At $1.52 per car, that would give $40,000. That is what the Government has paid, I believe; if it is not that, it is more. The Grand Trunk Railway cars for the year numbered 594,642. At the same rate they would amount to $905,641. These two amounts put together would be 15½ per cent on $6,000,000. Payment of this percentage would wipe out $6,000,000 in six years and five months. The same percentage would build a bridge costing $1,400,000 in less than one and one-half years. Yet you see that we pay $40,000 for the use of the bridge, and if the Grand Trunk paid only $40,000, we would pay $1.52 per car or engine, while the Grand Trunk would pay a little less than 6½ cents. This is one of the best bargains, as the hon. member for Halifax said, that was ever made in this country. If he were speaking from the Grand Trunk standpoint, he might well say so. I find that the Delaware and Hudson road and the Central Vermont have running rights into Montreal. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals if he has succeeded in getting any proportion of the rates that they are giving to the Grand Trunk Railway?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). They are not running into Montreal.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry).

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Are they not running to the station?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I have taken the cars of those lines there.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You took the Grand Trunk cars. I understood that they had running rights.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). However that may be, it does not make much difference, but I have taken the cars there with the initials of those lines on the cars and engines.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The only difference it makes is that one statement is accurate and the other is not. That is an important statement.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I am willing to take the hon. gentleman's explanation. I asked him for an explanation, and I expected him to cheerfully give that explanation without showing ill-temper.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not understand the hon. gentleman was asking me anything. I was correcting him.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I know that it is very difficult to get any information out of the hon. gentleman, and I am not surprised at this. Now, this Government has granted some $300,000 for the enlargement of this bridge across the St. Lawrence. It is fitted for horses and carriages and foot passengers. I am not sure but that provision is made for street-cars also; however, that does not matter very much. It is quite clear that the Government is not getting any proportion of the returns from this traffic. Here is Mr. Schreiber's estimate again, and I give the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) credit for the largest estimate he made. He made two estimates, I believe, one under the old Government and one under this Government.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. There is no difference between them at all.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). There is $500.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not when they refer to the same property. One estimate did not include the Nicolet branch and the other did.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). He put the valuation at $170,000 for the Nicolet branch. The second estimate is $500 more than before on the main line. Well, now we will make some kind of an estimate in regard to this. I am willing to take Mr. Schreiber's larger estimate for the main line 115½ miles amounting to $1,365,500:

115½ miles main line.....	$1,365,500
Ste. Rosalie to St. Lambert, 30 miles at $14,463.....	433,893
Bridge across St. Lawrence and ap- proaches	1,400,000
Total for one road and bridge..	$3,199,393
Add another road from Chaudière to St. Lambert, distinctly separate from the other	1,799,393
For two separate roads and one bridge across the St. Lawrence	$4,998,786
As per first agreement, the amount to be paid and the conditions connected therewith	$7,833,300
Deduct cost of two roads and bridge..	4,998,786
Leaving a balance of.....	$2,834,514

That is the amount at which this work could have been done. As there may be a question as to the valuation of these bridges, I have a book here containing the transactions of the Canadian Society of Civil Engineers, and I can give you out of this book the cost of the Coteau bridge and the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge across the St. Lawrence. Here is a statement made at the meeting of the civil engineers by Mr. Mountain, chief engineer of the Canada Atlantic Railway:

Mr. Mountain, in reply, said he had followed the precedent showed him by the other papers, which, with one exception, gave no prices. He considered it a breach of faith with the contractors to do so. He had already given the quantity of masonry and length of superstructure, and he would now say that the total cost of the bridge, as given by the secretary-treasurer of the road, was $1,264,000. He did not feel at liberty to give any further details as to prices without the permission of both the company and the contractors.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. What bridge is that?

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). That is the Coteau bridge, belonging to the Canada Atlantic. Mr. Peterson, chief engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, discussing this question, speaking of the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge, says:

The cost of the bridge was $943,387; and from grade to grade, as per contract plans, $998,412.22. That is a little less than $1,000,000 for this bridge—the Canadian Pacific Railway bridge across the St. Lawrence. When I said $1,400,000 was my estimate of the cost of the bridge across the St. Lawrence it was a very liberal figure. These bridges have been built for much less.

Now, I am happy to say that there has been an improvement in the second contract as compared with the first, particularly in reference to clause 35 of the first contract. There is no doubt that the rejection of that contract by the Senate has saved the country, at least on that one clause, $500,000, and I think perhaps more, and including the Drummond County Railway there can be no doubt there has been a saving of at least $1,000,000.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Why not make it $4,000,000 or $5,000,000 when you are about it?

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I am not making it; you are making it yourself; I am taking it from the records as I find it here in this investigation.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You do not find that it is increased.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). I am giving you everything you can desire in regard to the engineer's estimate, and it shows that you have made a very bad bargain.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you say that I placed the difference at $500,000 a year?

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). Yes.

THE MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I beg your pardon.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). On that 5 per cent and on the improvements and betterments. If you smile at that, Sir, it is because you do not understand it. If the Minister (Mr. Blair) had figured up the cost to the country under clause 35 of the first agreement he would have no trouble in finding that the 5 per cent would amount to at least an average of $25,000 a year, and if he had taken the precaution of doing that figuring correctly, before he entered into such a foolish contract, he would have been doing his duty to the country, and the result would likely have deterred him from this outrageous undertaking. I am told, that the Minister of Railways and Canals entered into this arrangement with the Drummond County people before he ever saw their road or before he ever sent a man to inspect it. But it did not matter whether the road was longer or shorter, or cheaper or dearer, he wanted to buy it to help his friends. I shall not refer to any other reasons which may exist as to why that road was purchased by the Government. I am not going to say anything as to how "La Patrie" proved to be a newspaper institution worth two or three hundred thousand dollars in such a miraculous manner; and I am not going to say what interest Mr. Greenshields had in the business. That is well known. Under the present arrangement, taking the Minister's own figures, the Drummond County Railway Company gets $1,600,000, and the Grand Trunk Railway, $140,000 a year, which, capitalized at 3 per cent, gives $4,666,666; and then, there is $6,000 a year for another portion of the Grand Trunk Railway, which represents a capitalization of $200,000, the whole amounting to $6,466,666. I maintain that two separate and distinct roads, from Chaudière to Montreal, and one bridge with approaches could be built for this sum and leave a balance of $1,467,860 for contingencies, right of way, stations and terminals. Under the estimate I have given, I can find a man within ten days who will make a deposit and build the road for my estimate. Such is the great bargain which the Minister of Railways has made in the interests of the country. I understand that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) and some of his associates in New Brunswick are experts at building bridges. I do not know that they acquired that knowledge before the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) came to Ottawa, but I hope that when he makes contracts like this for the Dominion Government, he will make them in the interest of the people, and not in the interest of strong corporations that are able to take care of themselves.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The bridge question is a very tender question with your friends in New Brunswick.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). My friends?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, they would not thank you for referring to that subject.

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry). The bridge question in New Brunswick is a tender question with your friends, and my political friends down there have made it rather uncomfortable for your friends on that question. However, I hope the Minister (Mr. Blair) will do me the justice of taking a look at the line between St. Lambert and Ste. Rosalie, and I think he will come to the conclusion, with me, that he has made a very bad bargain. I do not oppose the Intercolonial Railway coming into Montreal, nor do I believe that any man on this side of the House would be opposed to it, but I object to its costing the country too much, and when, as I have shown, we are paying as much for it as two or three roads would cost to build, I think we have every reason to oppose it. If you build that road from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal, and build a bridge along with it, it will not cost you more than the estimate I have given, and you have Government lands in Montreal which you can use for terminal facilities. There is no reason why you should not do this and save the country two or three million dollars. But the Government seems bound to squander the money of the people in this matter. The contract they have entered into is an outrage on the rights of the people, and I trust the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) and his friends in the Government will reconsider it, and decide to act in the public interest.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). This subject has been so thoroughly discussed by members on this side of the House, and we have heard so little concerning it from the other side of the House, that it makes it unnecessary for me to say a word upon the subject, were it not that two or three matters have been referred to of which I may be expected to take some notice. The Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair), in making his four hours, or four and a half hours speech—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think it was a little short of four hours.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Well, I regard it as an evidence of great ability on the part of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair), that, during his speech of a little short of four hours, he talked for about half an hour on the Drummond County Railway, and devoted the rest of the time to somewhat extraneous matters. The object of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) seems to be, from the very commencement down to the present hour, to withhold information and to protest his inability to give information. I regret to have to say, that I have never seen the head of any department in this House, when bringing before this House a grave and important question, involving a large expenditure of public money, treat the House—not the Opposition—but treat the House with that sovereign contempt which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) has exhibited on this occasion. Does he think he is paying a compliment to his own supporters, in exhibiting them as so plastic in the hands of the Government that they can be made to swallow anything, that they can be made to carry any project the Government submits to them, and to carry it without investigation or examination? Does the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) suppose that he is consulting the dignity of the Government, or his own dignity, in standing up by the hour in this House, presenting his wrong side to the Opposition, and entering into loud conversations with parties around him, while members on this side are dealing with the question in a manner that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) never was able to deal with it, and never could deal with it? My hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) last night showed a comprehensive grasp of this whole subject with which the hon. gentleman's puny and infantile efforts contrast in a most remarkable degree. He showed a complete knowledge of the question, a knowledge which it is very unfortunate for the country the hon. Minister of Railways did not possess. And yet, Sir, with a question of that gravity before the House, the hon. gentleman insulted his own supporters as much as the Opposition by lolling around and turning his back on the gentleman who was addressing the Chair, and entering into loud conversation with half a dozen gentlemen around him. My hon. friend (Mr. McDougall) says the hon. gentleman did not know any better. That is some apology, but it is not one which the hon. gentleman is likely to present to the House. I hope for the future that the hon. gentleman will not present such a stern front to the Opposition as he has done in the discussion of this question. During some of the addresses which were delivered to this House, some of the ablest that have ever been heard here on any question, the hon. gentleman who has charge of this measure was not here at all, but treated not only his own supporters but every man in the House with sovereign contempt. I say it is a spectacle which I have never witnessed before from any hon. gentleman dealing with a great and important measure, and it is one which I trust I shall never have to refer to in terms of such strong condemnation in the future.

I may say in the outset that I do not attach and never have attached the great importance of bringing the Intercolonial into Montreal that many hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House do, and I will state very briefly the reason why. I have never had an illustration given of what the great advantage of that extension was likely to be. I have never heard any sufficient reason to induce me to believe that it was incumbent on the Government to expend an inordinate sum of public money to accomplish that object. Every man in this House and every man in Canada has a deep and vital interest in the adoption of any fair and legitimate means by which the position of the Intercolonial Railway shall be improved, and by which the heavy burden which that great work has been upon the people of this country from its inception down to the present time shall be in any way modified or changed for the better. I admit that at once; and if any gentleman will show me how we are going to change a deficit into a surplus by any means that are fair and legitimate, I am quite prepared to give such a proposition careful consideration. But I will not dwell on that question. It is not vital to our discussion to-night. I will concede, if necessary, for the sake of argument, that it is desirable to bring the Intercolonial into Montreal; but it is only desirable on business principles. A thing may be good, but it may cost too much; and the only object any Government can have in bringing the Intercolonial into Montreal is to improve its position, to increase its paying qualities, and to lighten the burthen of that great and important national work on the taxpayers of this country. That is the position I take, and I think it is one that is unassailable. But, Sir, there is another reason that strikes me as having some force. The hon. gentleman says that I appear as an advocate of the Canadian Pacific Railway as against the Intercolonial Railway. He is very much mistaken. He will search my history in vain to find evidence of my holding a retainer on behalf of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company such as was presented when he asked the people of this country to pay $2,000,000 more for a work to be constructed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company than they were prepared to perform that work for the Government of which I was a member. Therefore, the less the hon. gentleman says about holding retainers for the Canadian Pacific Railway, the better. But I want to put this to the House as a matter which I think deserves some consideration. The Intercolonial Railway terminated at Rivière du Loup, and by-and-by I will state why it was brought to Point Lévis. When, after years of experience the Government found that one of the great objects of having a great interoceanic line of railway extending from the Pacific to the Atlantic Ocean had failed in realizing the important point of having ocean termini within Canada that could do the work which the interests of Canada required should be done, the Government turned their attention to the question how they could overcome the difficulty. We found by sad experience that with all the efforts that could be made by any persons charged with the administration of the Intercolonial Railway, it was absolutely impossible to take freight to St. John or Halifax or any port within the Dominion, because the Grand Trunk Railway had a line of communication to Portland so much shorter that it was able to cut off the traffic that could otherwise be carried to the sea within the Dominion. Consequently the Intercolonial Railway was proved to be an absolute failure, as to providing a port within the Dominion that should be an efficient winter port for Canada. Now, Sir, what did we do? We acted only after the most careful consideration. It was not hurriedly done. It was not done in the dark. It was not done as this contract was made, without anybody in the House of Commons, or in Canada, except the parties negotiating with each other, knowing anything about it. We made no secret contract. We discussed the question long and fully, and finally we came to the conclusion to ask the authority and approval of Parliament to enable us to remedy that difficulty, and to secure within the Dominion of Canada the ocean terminus of the great interoceanic line of railway, both on the Atlantic and on the Pacific. How did we do that? The Canadian Pacific Railway Company were tempted by a proposal of the Government of Canada, with the authority and approval of Parliament, who voted the money before any negotiations were had, to grant a subsidy of $186,000 a year for twenty years. What does that amount to? It amounts to $2,267,210, capitalized at 3 per cent, given to a private company, given to the Canadian Pacific Railway to induce them to build a line of railway from the port of Montreal to the harbour of St. John. Those were the terms and that was the condition on which they agreed to do it. I have under my hand a copy of the Halifax "Morning Chronicle," which contains an article dealing with this subject, and I will read a single sentence from that very absurd and ridiculous editorial, but in which there is one grain of truth, and that is the paragraph I am going to read, which I happen to know is absolutely true. It is not couched in the most elegant phraseology, and does not exhibit exactly that high type of writing which one would expect from a distinguished law professor, but such as it is, I give it to the House :

They say there is another phase of the story to be told. The people of Halifax and Nova Scotia do not blame the Canadian Pacific Railway for the situation which has been created by the folly of the late Government. The Canadian Pacific Railway people did not want to build the Short Line through Maine, but were forced to against their better judgment, and, to use a vulgarity, they have ever since been making periodical visits to the back-yard, where they privately kick themselves.

That is not just the style of communication you would look for from a learned and distinguished law professor, who claims to be a man of high literary attainments ; but vulgar and common place and low as it is, it is true.

Mr. RUSSELL. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to interrupt him ? I can hardly suspect that he does not mean by this reference, not altogether complimentary, to make some personal allusion to some member of the House, and I would like to know if there is any distinguished law professor or any law professor at all, in any way connected with the Halifax "Morning Chronicle."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I thought the hon. gentleman was a distinguished professor of the law.

Mr. RUSSELL. I do not say that I am, but I ask the hon. leader of the Opposition—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. But after listening to the hon. gentleman for an hour this afternoon, I came to the conclusion that I must have been misinformed.

Mr. RUSSELL. I knew that the hon. gentleman made altogether too high an estimate of my poor abilities, but all I wish to say is that if he wants to convey the impression to this House that I have any connection in the world with the Halifax "Morning Chronicle," he is absolutely and entirely mistaken.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may have been misinformed, but after I was wearied out by the platitudes of the hon. gentleman and his needless going over what had already been said, and better said, by a dozen gentlemen before him, I left the House, but I am told that the hon. gentleman made an elaborate rehash of the "Morning Chronicle" editorials here for my benefit after my back was turned.

Mr. RUSSELL. That does not warrant the hon. gentleman in conveying any impression to this House that I have anything in the world to do with the Halifax "Morning Chronicle," or ever saw or knew anything about the article he has just read. Such an impression is absolutely unfounded.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not astonished that he or any gentleman of any standing or character should be ashamed to admit having anything to do with the editorials of the "Morning Chronicle."

Mr. RUSSELL. I think they are excellent editorials, but I only wish to say that it is untrue that I have any connection whatever with the Halifax "Morning Chronicle," and I hope that the hon. gentleman, with his distinguished fairness, will accept my statement. I never saw the paragraph he alluded to, and have not read the "Chronicle," or been able to do so for several weeks, or been a writer for it for the last twenty or thirty years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I say frankly to the hon. gentleman that I shall have a better opinion of him in future than I had in the past. He has given evidence of good sense and good taste that I must confess I did not give him credit for ; but I must tell him this, that he has adopted a line in this House in reference to my position and to this question which I shall dispose of, I think, very summarily and thoroughly before I sit down, that led me to suppose that, at all events, it was a case of great minds jumping together. If what has appeared in the "Chronicle" did not emanate from him, then it was one of these remarkable evidences of great minds thinking together and reaching the same conclusion. I want to put this proposition to this House, as business men. When the Government of Canada induced the Canadian Pacific Railway, by a subsidy of $2,267,210 to furnish that which they found the Intercolonial Railway could not provide, when they induced the Canadian Pacific Railway to build that line of railway from Montreal to Quebec, when we induced that company by that subsidy to provide the means of reaching an ocean winter port in Canada, which we found, after constructing the Intercolonial Railway, we did not possess in consequence of the great distance we had to cover compared to Portland, I ask if there is a fair-minded man in the House that would say that the Government of Canada would be entitled to turn around and build a parallel line. Those who have watched the reports of that company will come to the conclusion that the Halifax "Chronicle" is right when it says that the company had no desire to build that railway, and I am in a position to know—from the best possible authority years ago I learned—that there was no act that the Canadian Pacific Railway had ever been induced to undertake, there was no work they had ever been induced to construct, that they regretted so deeply as that. Those who are familiar with their reports will have no difficulty in discovering that they spent between $13,000,000 and $14,000,000 of their own money in performing that work for Canada. I want to know, then, is there a man in this House will say, without any reference to whether he likes or dislikes the Canadian Pacific Railway, that the Government of Canada would be warranted, after having induced that company, by a subsidy voted by this Parliament, of $186,000 a year for twenty years, to turn around and build a parallel line alongside of that for the purpose of taking away its traffic. There is not a man in this House who would not spurn any such idea and brand it as a most dishonest transaction, as between man and man, or between a Government and a company. I quite agree with the hon. Minister of Railways that that does not preclude Canada from engaging in any fair and legitimate means by which the Intercolonial Railway shall secure every pound of traffic and every passenger it can obtain. But I do say that it becomes a very questionable thing whether we should impose an additional debt upon the shoulders of the people of Canada of $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 for the avowed purpose of taking away traffic from the Canadian Pacific Railway over a road that company was induced by Canada to build, and which it has found most unprofitable and regretted very much ever having been induced to undertake.

But I will put all that aside, and will treat this question as if we had a perfectly legitimate ground to enter upon competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway or anybody else. I do not intend to go over the points already touched upon. I should be insulting the intelligence of this House in doing so after such clear, lucid and luminous statements as those made from this side of the House in criticising this measure; for instance, after such a speech as we have heard delivered by the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. McLennan), one of the ablest and most practical men sitting in this House, a gentleman who speaks with knowledge of the value of these works possessed by very few hon. members. I believe that there are gentlemen on the other side of the House who, if they occupied as independent a position as my hon. friend from Glengarry, might make speeches showing, perhaps, equal ability and equal knowledge of the subject. This, however, we cannot hope for. If any gentleman on the other side with equal ability and equal knowledge were to intimate to the occupants of the Treasury benches that in justice to his own character as a man of ability and knowledge on such subjects, he would feel it is his duty to make such a speech, he would be appointed a Governor of one of the provinces within twenty-four hours, or at least he would have the promise of some such office, and would become as dumb as these gentlemen usually do when weighted down with Governorships or judgeships or postmasterships. I take up a point which has not been very fully dealt with by my hon. friends on this side of the House. I put it before the House on a former occasion my view as to what—if it was considered necessary to bring the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal—should have been done. And I leave it to the judgment of hon. gentleman opposite themselves, if they will give it dispassionate consideration for a few moments, whether the proposal I made was not the one best calculated to promote the interests of the whole country while accomplishing the object in view. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, when he decided to carry the Intercolonial Railway to the city of Montreal, had three modes opened to him on the south shore of the St. Lawrence. He chose the worst, in my opinion. He had the mode—which any person regarding the case would think the best—of making an arrangement with the Grand Trunk to run over their line. This could be run as a traffic arrangement; or if the hon. Minister is determined to be a great railway magnate and must have absolute ownership, he could have purchased the right of that portion of the Grand Trunk Railway upon infinitely better terms. Mr. Wainwright, the very able and talented gentleman connected with the Grand Trunk, who, perhaps, is able to speak on questions appertaining to the Grand Trunk with as much authority and wisdom as any man in this country, said before the committee that owing to this arrangement the Grand Trunk was obliged to practically abandon that portion of their line from the Chaudière to Ste. Rosalie. If that is the case, can any one doubt that they would have been only too glad to have made arrangements to enable the Intercolonial Railway to enter Montreal on infinitely better terms, with all terminal facilities provided, than by the mode proposed. But there was another mode. There was what is known as the South Shore line. There is a road running through the most populous portion of the country, a road which would give you a large amount of traffic and would have enabled the Intercolonial Railway to get into Montreal upon far better terms than are provided under the plans proposed. More than that, we must not forget that at this moment the Prime Minister stands pledged, as do other hon. gentlemen connected with the South Shore Railway, to come to this House and get from it the subsidies by which that road can be built. And then, in the third place, you have an old, broken-down railway that has been shown by my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) to be a miserable, bankrupt concern, that had never earned a penny of net earnings in its history, that commenced nowhere and ran nowhere, and was utterly unadapted for the purpose proposed. This road you will have running between the Grand Trunk on the one side and the South Shore on the other, both competing with it and both in a position to compete successfully. Therefore, I contend that it was infinitely the worst proposition that could be selected. But what I proposed and what the Minister of Railways and Canals has treated with infinite scorn and I draw the attention of the Prime Minister (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) and the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr.

Dobell) to the point—was to secure the terminus of the Intercolonial Railway in the heart of the city of Quebec by building a bridge and bringing that road in. The Minister of Railways and Canals says that I said all we would have to do would be to give a million. I say that both Liberal and Conservative parties were pledged, whenever means could be found to accomplish that work by a suitable contribution from other parties, to give liberally from the Dominion treasury to that important work. The Minister says that the Grand Trunk would have treated with contempt any proposition to have a bridge there. I do not think so. Every person knows it would be infinitely preferable for the Grand Trunk to have its terminus in the heart of the old historic city of Quebec rather than at Lévis with no communication, except by water, with the city. The Canadian Pacific Railway would have had a great interest in the construction of the bridge, and I have no hesitation in saying that both the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway would have contributed handsomely to the construction of that bridge, because it would give them an outlet connected with the whole of these railways ramifying to large sections of the province of Quebec, from which they are now cut off and with which they have no communication. That is not all. There is the legislature of the province of Quebec, which has always said that it is prepared to join with the Dominion Government and the Grand Trunk and Canadian Pacific Railway in providing for the construction of that bridge, because it would be an immense thing for the city of Quebec, in fact, for the whole surrounding country, to have such a bridge, which would give access to a large section of country. You have not only the Intercolonial Railway on account of which Parliament would have been justified in giving a million dollars to this scheme to bring the road from Lévis into the city of Quebec by the construction of this bridge. You would have had the Legislature of Quebec, you would have had the Grand Trunk Railway, the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Quebec Central Railway and the Lake St. John Railway, which now runs to the city of Quebec, only too glad to assist and contribute in getting an outlet across that bridge and connection with the surrounding country in every direction, giving an advantage to their traffic and developing that country as nothing else could have done. We remember that, when this Drummond County Railway transaction was proposed, one man in this House immediately started up and said: Are you going to give the go-by to the city of Quebec? Are you not going to contribute to the bridge? He did not get the bridge, but he got the judgeship. He has gone, and we will have other gentlemen now starting up.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). You have to appoint judges; you cannot get along in the country without judges.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am inclined to think that what we want just now is a Minister of Railways with more judgment; I think that is a more crying necessity at this moment than even the appointment of more judges. When we are dealing with a question of great magnitude and of vital consequence to the city of Quebec, the contract for the fast line service, a gentleman sitting down in that part of the House, rose up, and, in stentorian tones, told the Government, that, if they believed that any man could be elected in the city of Quebec who would not assist that fast line service, they were greatly mistaken. Well, Sir, he got a judgeship, but he did not get the fast line service. So Mr. Choquette was choked off with a judgeship, but he got no bridge. Now, I want the Minister of Railways and Canals to deal with the position of the member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), whose existence is at stake. Does any person suppose that that hon. gentleman will have a ghost of a chance in Quebec to be returned to this House, if that bridge is not built, which he has declared over and over again only requires a million dollars from the Government of this country to make it a complete success? That is the answer that I give to the whole story of the hon. gentleman, that my mode of bringing the Intercolonial Railway into the city of Quebec was illusory. I say that, if, when there, you wanted to carry the Intercolonial Railway to Montreal, all you had to do was to say to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company: Take our traffic; allow our trains to run over your line; give us the advantage of your terminals at Montreal, and we will engage to take your trains from St. John to Halifax, and give you the advantage of ours. How did the hon. gentleman meet that? Why, Sir, he met it with a display of absolute ignorance of the whole question of railway transportation and railway arrangements, such as ought to be enough to startle hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches, if it did not startle anybody else. Why, he said, it would be a monstrous bargain to carry the freight and traffic of the Intercolonial Railway to pay for that by allowing the Canadian Pacific Railway to run from St. John to Halifax, which is a much longer distance. To use his own language, he said it would be a monstrously absurd bargain for the Government. Let me ask the hon. gentleman, whether he has reconsidered that question, after having heard the argument of my hon. friend from Glengarry (Mr. McLennan), of my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell), of my hon. friend the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), of my hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Haggart), and half a dozen other gentlemen who have dealt with this subject. After he looks in the face what he has paid to the Grand Trunk Railway to get into Montreal, let me ask him, if anything that he could propose to charge for taking traffic across the Intercolonial Railway from St. John to Halifax would not be insignificant, compared with the advantage of bringing the Intercolonial Railway into Montreal, and as compared with what the hon. gentleman is paying to the Grand Trunk Railway to get in by another route? Why, Sir, to any man who knows anything of railway transportation and terminal facilities, I have only to mention these things to cover the hon. gentleman with ridicule, when he stands up in this House and is impaled, as he has been, by his declaration that it is worth more to take Canadian Pacific Railway trains from St. John to Halifax and give them the advantage of our terminals, than it is to take the traffic of the Intercolonial Railway from the city of Quebec to Montreal, 160 miles shorter though it be, and have all these terminal advantages there for which he is paying such an overwhelming sum. Under these circumstances, I leave the hon. gentleman, and I leave the Government, to settle that question with the deeply-wronged and injured people of the city of Quebec, as well as with the surrounding country. We have a common interest in avoiding hanging around the necks of the people of this country $6,000,000 or $7,000,000. They themselves call it $6,000,000, but the hon. member for Westmoreland has gone one better than I have. I have been called a millionaire on this question, because I have said, that the present terms are a million dollars better than the terms that the hon. gentlemen had rejected by the Senate before. But, Sir, the hon. member for Westmoreland has shown that I had not sufficiently grasped the question. He has gone into the figures, into the details, and, with the most admirable mastery of the whole subject, in the most graphic manner, he has shown us the enormous cost at which this present railway scheme is to be carried out.

Now, I have been a little amazed at listening to the discussion of this question in this House. Does the Minister of Railways and Canals want this contract ratified? I ask that in all seriousness, because I begin to doubt it? Do the Government want this contract ratified, or have they got out of the Drummond County people all they can get, and are they now turning their faces in another direction? What is the meaning of the extraordinary spectacle that we have seen in this House? Every person knows that the Drummond Railway scheme was not ratified because the Senate refused to pass the measure that was sent up to it last year. Every person knows that the object which the Government profess to have in view can only be accomplished in one way, and that is by convincing the Senate that this is a better bargain than that which they rejected. I assume that the Minister of Railways and Canals wants to carry this project. But if so, would he take the ground of stubbornly refusing to admit that the terms of this new arrangement are a dollar better than the arrangement that the Senate rejected? Does he think that such a course will improve the prospect? Suppose he had the candour to admit that which every intelligent person in this country knows, that the terms of this new contract, both with the Grand Trunk Railway and with the Drummond County Railway, are more than a million dollars better—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Oh, oh.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am now making an argument for him. Does he want the Senate to pass it? If he wants the Senate to pass it, he would take this position: The Government maintained two years ago that they had made a good bargain. They maintain that they had made a good bargain, that they had made the very best bargain, both with the Drummond County Railway and with the Grand Trunk Railway, that was possible. That is what the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals told us when he brought it down here. If he had had the candour to stand up here, instead of stubbornly refusing to admit that the terms of this bargain are infinitely better than those that the Senate rejected, would he not have been promoting the passage of this measure and removing the obstacles out of the way that blocked the Government on the former occasion? If he had said: While I still stand by the original contract as one that was fair and one that I was prepared to advocate, we could not carry it; it was rejected and, having been rejected, I have used that, I have said to the Drummond County people: You must better your offer; we cannot get it through Parliament, we cannot get through the Senate the proposal, as I have attempted it, and, if you have any desire to have this contract implemented, and if it is to receive the support of Parliament, you will have to better your offer. If the hon. gentleman had used the fact that the Senate had rejected this measure to squeeze the Drummond County people and the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and if he had come here and said: I am happy to say that, owing to the rejection of the measure, I am able to present a measure which is a million dollars better than the one the Senate rejected, would that be calculated to get it through Parliament? I think it would. Yet, strange to say, the only arguments addressed on this question, that were calculated to secure the passage of this measure through the Senate, and which were advanced by hon. members on this side of the House, have been stubbornly resisted by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House who persist in declaring that this new contract is not a bit better than the old one, and that there is no reason in the world why the Senate should not throw it out. What is the meaning of their course? Do they want the Senate to throw it out? Is that their object? This would appear to be their desire and their object in taking a course that strikes me as the most illogical and most irrational that any Government could take. I do not believe any hon. gentleman on the Treasury benches; I am sure there is not an hon. gentleman on the Treasury benches, who does not know that this present arrangement, made with the aid of Mr. Harris, a gentleman whom the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals brought to his support in connection with this matter, and a gentleman who has very great knowledge of railway matters and who was called in to assist in these negotiations, is more favourable than the first arrangement. Any man who knows anything of railway questions has only to read the two contracts, the first contract and the last contract, put side by side, to see that the advantages are overwhelmingly on the side of the latter, and that, while the Senate were perfectly justified in rejecting the former measure, they would be perfectly justified in saying: This second contract is so much better that we are prepared to give it our ratification although we rejected the other. Am I addressing myself to intelligent men, or am I not? There is no intelligent man who will not say that the line taken by the Government looks like one of two things. It looks like an attempt to pretend to get this contract ratified when they do not want it ratified, and the other is that the Government desire that the Senate should reject this measure. When this question was before the House on a former occasion I never exchanged one word upon this subject, with any Senator, pro or con, as to what I desired the action of the Senate should be. I never said a single word except on the floor of this House. I have my position here, and I declared the view in which I regarded the transaction, but so far as the Senate was concerned, I felt that it was not my province to say anything; I felt that my position to speak to the Senate is here from my place on the floor of the House of Commons, and that was the only mode that I adopted. I do not intend, I will not, on the present occasion more than on the last, say one single word, but I am amazed when listening to this discussion on the two sides of the House, to find that every argument that could be advanced to obtain the support of the Senate comes from this side of the House while there is a stubborn determination on the part of hon. gentlemen opposite not to admit that this is one jot or tittle better than the first contract which indicates that the Government do not want this measure carried, and that they are really inviting its rejection again. I promised to be very brief, and I must not forget it, but I drew the attention of the House to the remarkable fact that in the four hours' speech of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals he spent but half an hour in dealing with the Drummond County Railway. His great object seemed to be, and it exhibited a great deal of tact and ability to exemplify the truth of the saying that when you have a bad case in hand, there is nothing like drawing a red herring across the track and leading the hounds as far away as possible from the scent which they have got. Therefore, I find the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals ranging over the whole of the Dominion of Canada, and finally concluding that he could not do a better service to his cause than by dropping down upon your humble servant and showing how he had failed in dealing with railway questions. This was not the question before the House. Conditions have changed; they have relegated me to the cold shades of Opposition, and they have put the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals in the position that I formerly occupied, and he will not be able to shelter himself by a comparison with anything that I did. This is an age of progress, it is an age of advancement and the hon. gentleman has greatly the advantage of me because he has all the records of the past to study and learn, and when you have that you can study from two sources; you can be guided by what has been done in the past, and you can use it as a beacon light to help you to avoid the errors that your predecessors may have made. The hon. gentleman took up what was called the Short Line Railway, that is to say, not the present Short Line Railway from Montreal, but he took up the question of the great Short Line Railway, as it was called, which occupied the attention of this House before, and he furnished up and revamped an old slander uttered by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), when I was 3,000 miles away on the other side of the Atlantic, and when he thought he could advance his cause by attacking one who was absent. He took up the statement as to my having been mistaken in the distance that would be saved by building what was not then, but what is now called the Oxford and New Glasgow Railway. What purpose did the hon. gentleman hope to serve? I think there is no other logical inference that the hon. gentleman undertook to show that as I was greatly deceived about the distance that would be saved in the building of that line of railway, the Drummond County scheme must be an excellent one and everybody must swallow it without making a wry face. Let me ask the attention of the committee while I consign that slander to utter oblivion as I have consigned many slanders on former occasions. I came out from England in 1891 to assist the late Right Hon. Sir John Macdonald in carrying on the campaign of that year, and on that occasion I addressed a large body of people in Windsor, Ont. There I had a pamphlet put in my hands.

This was considered to be such a wonderful card, that the hon. gentleman had had it put in pamphlet form, and some one was good enough to give me a copy, and I gave my answer then as I give it now, and I will repeat it so that it may go on record. I think it is probably the last time the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) will think he is best promoting a measure he has before the House by referring to that. I read from my speech at Windsor, as reported in the "Mail and Empire," February 23rd, 1891 :

I hold in my hand the petition of Mr. Blackman, the president of the Great European Short Line Railway, who came to the Government of Canada with a petition asking for aid to construct the road, and the statement made in that petition was that the construction of a line of 77 miles would mean the saving which I have referred to. That paper is the original paper now on file in the Department of Railways and Canals in Canada. That was in 1882.

The files of the Department of Railways were then under my hands, as they are now under the hands of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair), and by reference to them he will find this identical petition of Mr. Blackman. Mark, Sir, this was not a case in which Parliament was asked to build a line of railway, and in which it became important that great accuracy should be had as regards the mileage, but this was a mileage subsidy, and the subsidy would only be paid for the length of miles constructed, so that we were not obliged to give that close and accurate attention to it that we would if we were asking for the construction of a line by the Government. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) does not expect me, when a proposal was made by a company such as that, a company that had Dr. Green, the chairman of the Telegraphic Union, as its president, and had a number of leading men possessing, as we were led to believe, a large amount of capital, asking for permission to construct this line for a subsidy of, I think, $3,200 a mile. Does the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) think it was my duty to get a tape line and to go with my private secretary and measure that road, and ascertain if it was just the distance that Mr. Blackman assured me it was? I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) put a tape line on the Drummond County and measured it before he entered into the contract. That is not my contention of the duty of a Minister of Railways. What did I do? The hon. gentleman will soon see :

I did not go into the question with as much care as I otherwise would have done, believing that Mr. Blackman and Dr. Green, the president of the Great Union Telegraph Company, of the United States, who were promoting this company, and Mr. Wiman,——

Mr. Wiman is a gentleman that the members on the Treasury benches have heard of before, and he was one of the capitalists largely interested in this road :

——before undertaking the building of a line of railway, would have ascertained what was to be accomplished by it. Their statements were accepted by me, but I put the paper in the hands of Mr. Collingwood Schreiber, Chief Engineer of Government Railways in Canada, who reported that what Dr. Green and Mr. Blackman had set forth in regard to the distance to be saved would, he also thought, be saved.

Did I do right or did I do wrong? Was I to undertake to decide that question? No, I handed that petition with the statement of the distance that would be saved to the chief engineer, Mr. Collingwood Schreiber, the Deputy Minister of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) to-day, who was then the chief engineer of the Government railways. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) will find Mr. Schreiber's report on that petition in the files of his department. Mr. Schreiber said :

The following link in the railway system will, therefore, have to be provided : New Glasgow to Amherst, 77 miles.

That is what the petition said and that is what Mr. Schreiber reported accepting the statement of the petitioners who were asking for mileage subsidy and who would only receive a subsidy for each mile actually built. Mr. Schreiber continued :

The scheme appears very attractive, and the road would undoubtedly draw a large ocean traffic. It would also, he thinks, secure to the Dominion the control of the highway between the two continents, and contribute to the development of her resources and the promotion of her prosperity.

That is Mr. Schreiber's report, confirming Mr. Blackman's statement in the petition as to the distance saved, and commending the scheme as one which would greatly promote the prosperity of the country. That is my answer to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair); that is my answer to this House, that is my answer to the people of the country, and there is not an intelligent man in the country who will not say that it is not a complete vindication of any charges against me. The statement I made in this House as to that saving of distance was based on the statement of the gentleman who was the chief engineer of railways, and who is to-day Deputy Minister as well as chief engineer. It was to form a great line of communication to the heart of Canada; it would also secure the Dominion the control of the highway between the two continents, contribute to the development of her resources and the promotion of her prosperity. It spoke of the distance to be built from New Glasgow to Amherst, and said it would be 77 miles. Now these were the statements that Mr. Wiman and his friends made. I have given you the report of the Government engineer, bearing out what Mr. Wiman had said, and upon that Parliament was asked for a vote of money and gave a subsidy. I will not take up the time of the committee longer in dealing with this exhumed slander, which has met at my hands to-night just the fate that all these slanders will meet with when they are raked up after being long ago disposed of, by an hon. gentleman who knows so little about the past history of Canada as does the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair).

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Would the hon. gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Certainly.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have endeavoured to follow the hon. gentleman somewhat carefully, and I have not yet gathered that he states that he did not represent to Parliament that the building of his short line would affect a saving of over forty miles.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) is quite so obtuse as he appears to be at this moment. I have told him in terms that any intelligent man can understand, that the statement I made to this House in reference to the distance was based on the report of Mr. Collingwood Schreiber, which he laid before me.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not care what it is based on, I ask did you make the statement?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I say that statement I made in Parliament was the statement contained in the report of my chief engineer, and unless the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) says it was my business to get a tape line and measure the road, that answer ought to be sufficient for him, and when the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) can bring, on a question of that kind, such an authority, he will find I will pay great deference to it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Do you say that the present Deputy Minister, when chief engineer, made a measurement and ascertained the length, and advised you that it was 77 miles shorter?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Now, Mr. Chairman, this is really too bad. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) was half as big a fool as that question would indicate, he ought to be turned out of Parliament without a moment's hesitation.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) is going a little too far.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You quite misunderstood me. I said he is not a fool. I say he is a clever man. I say he is not half as big a fool as he looks.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I think the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) wants the committee to assume that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) is a fool.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, no. On the contrary, if I could speak French, Mr. Chairman, you would not make that mistake.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER. I am not very conversant with the English language, but I think I am conversant enough with it to understand that the expression which has been used is not quite proper.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I assure you I was endeavouring to pay the hon. gentleman a compliment, and endeavouring to relieve him of the impression which the question he asks would naturally leave on both sides of the House. Coming from the seaside, you know, I take a particular interest in the hon. gentleman. I daresay the hon. gentleman remembers very well that Horace Greeley, when editor of the New York "Tribune," wrote an article on the wonderful brain-producing power of fish, showing the reason why men on the sea-coast in all countries held their own pretty well with men in the interior. The next morning a tall, slab-sided Yankee came into the office and said, "Mr. Greeley, I have been reading your article on the wonderful brain-producing power of fish; I want to improve my brain power, and I would like to ask you how much fish I would require to use." "Well," said Mr. Greeley, "I think you had better begin with a whale." If it were not unparliamentary, I would recommend the hon. gentleman to begin with a whale.

I now come to the St. Charles branch. Does the hon. gentleman hold me responsible for the St. Charles branch? It was not a thing done in the dark. No secret contract was made with political partisans who were able to contribute handsome party funds to the Government of the day. No person has ever insinuated that. What was done was this. I, as Minister of Railways, asked Parliament if they wished that work to be prosecuted, and I put before Parliament all the information I could get from the Railway Department and from the same gentleman in whom the hon. Minister has such confidence to-day. I had equally great confidence in him then. As engineer of Government railways, he investigated that subject and reported to me what he believed the road could be built for, and I brought all the facts before Parliament, and Parliament voted the money before a blow was struck or anything was done. It turned out that a long section of that line ran along the sea shore, where wharfs had been built, and where arrangements had been made for large shipping enterprises. The result proved what an hon. gentleman read here yesterday from the statement I made to the House, which was perfectly correct—that I was aghast at the expenditure that had been incurred, but it was not an expenditure one dollar of which I could control. The cost of construction itself was infinitely greater than any person supposed it would be, and the land damages were of such a frightful character that I fought them step by step before the arbitrators, before the courts, and finally before the Exchequer Court, and made every effort a man could make to reduce the expenditure down to the lowest dollar. Does the hon. gentleman find in that any justification for the Drummond Railway bargain? Has it any more to do with it than what is going on in China? The hon. gentleman knows it has not. But he felt that the only chance he had of deluding his own followers into supporting this measure was to draw a red-herring across the scent and draw the hounds away in another direction, and thus prevent them giving to this measure that scrutiny which would have been given if he had been obliged to spend the valuable time he was wasting, in giving the information which this House has a right to demand from any gentleman occupying the position he does to-day.

But the hon. gentleman had something to say on another question, which I confess has perhaps a closer bearing on this measure, that is, the purchase of the Rivière du Loup line. Well, Sir, what was that case? Was it a case in which the Government went to the Grand Trunk Railway Company, as he went, and made a contract involving millions, without the knowledge of anybody in this House or in this country? Not at all. My predecessor, the late Hon. Alexander Mackenzie came before Parliament and stated the grounds on which he considered it of great importance to Canada that the Intercolonial should be brought from Rivière du Loup to Lévis, a distance of 123 miles. The position was this. That was not a profitable portion of the Grand Trunk Line. The company had allowed it to fall so much into desuetude and so much out of repair that when the Intercolonial Railway was opened to Rivière du Loup the effect of running trains over that portion of the line at the rate of speed that could be obtained on the Intercolonial was that the engines and cars and everything else were damaged and destroyed. Mr. Mackenzie stated that to the House, and the House unanimously authorized him to go ahead and open up negotiations and see what arrangements he could make with the Grand Trunk Railway for the purpose of having the terminus of the Intercolonial brought to Lévis, where it would have connection with ocean shipping with steamers coming from the mother country and steamers going to all parts of the world. These were the circumstances under which that line was taken over. When we came into office that was the condition of things, and I took up the question with the Grand Trunk Railway. How did I proceed? Did I go and make a bargain, such as the hon. gentleman has made, without an investigation, without consulting my engineer, without obtaining opinion from anybody? Did I make a bargain in the dark for the purchase of that road? Nothing of the kind. In the first place, I got the best terms I could from the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and I put them in the hands of Mr. Schreiber, the engineer of Government railways. The hon. gentleman has made a great deal of capital out of the course I pursued. What other course could I pursue? There was no Drummond County Railway, no South Shore, to fall back upon. We must either buy that 123 miles from the Grand Trunk Railway Company or build a new line; there was no alternative. Well, Sir, what did Mr. Schreiber report? I have the statement which I made to the House, and on which I got the authority of the House to make the contract—a contract which has never been called in question in this House down to the time when the hon. gentleman found it much more convenient to talk about these far-away subjects than to throw a little light on the Drummond County Railway transaction, such as this House had a right to expect at his hands. I hold in my hand the statement that I made to the House when I submitted this project and it will be found in the "Hansard" of 1879, May, 13th page 1993:

Sir CHARLES TUPPER said: They thought that a fair mode of arriving at the price was to look at what expenditure the Government would be obliged to make, provided that road was not in existence.

This was not a question of different roads, but of that or nothing.

They addressed themselves to that consideration, and those who looked at the papers would see that the road was obtained from Rivière du Loup to Chaudière Junction, the old iron rails not being purchased, but merely retained until they could relay the road with steel rails very cheaply, at a cost of about $13,000, or a little under, per mile. Mr. Schreiber had examined this road in 1876, and was instructed to give the Government an estimate of what it would cost to build a similar road. Mr. Schreiber came to the conclusion that it would cost $1,859,256 to build the road from Rivière du Loup to Chaudière Junction, 119 miles, in the same condition as the Intercolonial. He then estimated the cost of relaying the track with steel rails and putting it in the same condition as the Intercolonial at $356,280, which would leave $1,502,976 as the lowest sum for which they could obtain a road in the same condition as the Intercolonial.

Mr. Schreiber put the amount required to provide steel rails and give us precisely such a road as the Intercolonial Railway at $1,502,976.

The road from Chaudière Junction was a very expensive one. The heavy cuttings and everything else connected with it, would involve a very much greater expenditure than the other portions of the road. They required also to have a terminus at Quebec Harbour, and in order to obtain that it was necessary to run up six and a quarter miles from Chaudière Junction to Hadlow, a property on which the Grand Trunk Railway, at this moment, with their wharfs, engine-house, shops, &c., were paying on an assessment of $120,000 a year. The 6½ miles, with the Hadlow property, furnishing them with an independent means of access to the harbour, were put down at $200,000, which was a very low price, and which brought the total amount, at Mr. Schreiber's estimate, to $1,700,000 for this property as a very low sum at which they could hope to provide it. They, therefore, made a proposition that the highest they could give for the whole of this property was $1,500,000.

The lowest amount for which it could be provided, according to Mr. Schreiber's estimate was $1,700,000, and we made the proposition that the highest we would give for the whole property was $1,500,000, or $200,000 less than the estimate of the very lowest price at which we could do the work ourselves.

The Government deemed, in a matter of such importance, that it would not be unwise to have additional information, and although they had carefully scrutinized and verified Mr. Schreiber's statement, so as to leave no doubt that he had made a low estimate, they sent his report to Mr. Shanly,— Admittedly the most eminent engineer in Canada and the highest and most distinguished authority in this country.

—with a request that he would favour the Government with his opinion on it. Among the papers submitted,—

We did not treat the House as we are treated on this occasion, when we have had to resort almost to obstruction in order to get any modicum of information at all, but brought everything down and gave the House every means of judging whether we were acting wisely or unwisely, and whether the House would be warranted in supporting the proposition we had submitted.

—would be found a letter from Mr. Shanly, in which he estimated the 119 miles, the property the Government had purchased, exclusive of the old iron rails, at a value of $1,758,000, and Mr. Shanly assured him (Mr. Tupper) in the most emphatic terms, that even with the low price of labour and steel rails, and the favourable time for railway construction, if the ground was clear, he did not believe it was possible to build a road in the same condition for that amount of money. To that he added for the 6½ miles, with the Hadlow property, $300,000, or a total of $2,100,000, which was the value Mr. Shanly placed upon the property. He had already stated that their offer to the Grand Trunk was $200,000 below Mr. Schreiber's estimate, and $600,000 below Mr. Shanly's estimate.

Can the hon. gentleman find anything there to indicate that everything the Government could do to protect the treasury had not been done? And we purchased that property at $200,000 below Mr. Schreiber's estimate of what it could be built for, and $600,000 below Mr. Shanly's estimate of what he believed it would cost.

On this same subject let me read what Sir Henry Tyler said at a meeting of the Grand Trunk Railway Company in London, and I am quoting from the "Canadian Gazette" of April 16th, 1891. Sir Henry Tyler said:

As regards the sale of the Rivière du Loup line, it was a very old story, but the proprietors would not have imagined from what Sir Charles Tupper had said that the negotiations in regard to this transaction had extended over a period of a year and a half, and with two sets of Governments in Canada. He detailed the circumstances in connection with the sale of this line to the Government, stating that the contract price to the company for its construction, after deducting the Government subvention, was £536,000. All that they could get from the Government for it, however, was £300,000 and the old rails, or less than the value which the engineer of the Government put upon the railway, and very much less than the valuation put upon it by an independent engineer trusted by the Government. They, therefore, considered that they had sold this line at a great loss.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

I shall come to that question a little more closely by and by and show the hon. gentleman how entirely astray he is in the strong position he took—or rather the weak and foolish position, but what he thought was a strong one—that such a thing as a Government buying a road from a company and deducting the subsidy never was heard of in the history of the country. Sir Henry Tyler said that we only gave the company half what it cost them to build that road, after deducting the Government subvention.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Do you say that Sir Henry Tyler says you deducted the subsidy from the price you gave?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, I will read the quotation again, which I have taken from Sir Henry Tyler's report, as published in the "Canadian Gazette" in London at the time, April 16th, 1891:

He detailed the circumstances in connection with the sale of this line to the Government, stating that the contract price to the company for its construction, after deducting the Government subvention, was £536,000.

Did we give him £536,000?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. No, you did not give him a great many things, not even the rails and equipment. You did not give them anything, or at least they did not give you.

Mr. FOSTER. Which is it?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You did not get the rails from him.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does the hon. gentleman wish to make a little speech? If so, I will take breath.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have no objection to your taking breath.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman does not seem to understand. I seem unable to penetrate his cranium. I did not know he was a Scotchman and that it required a surgical operation to really reach the hon. gentleman's brain with a joke, but it really looks very like it, and I am beginning to think I shall have to resort to my old profession and perform a trepanning operation on the hon. gentleman in order to reach what he calls his mind.

All that they could get from the Government for it, however, was £300,000 and the old rails, or less than the value which the engineer of the Government put on the railway, and very much less than the valuation put upon it by an independent engineer trusted by the Government. They, therefore, considered that they had sold this line at a great loss.

There is the denunciation of the president of the Grand Trunk, in complaining of the hard bargain we drove with them. They said we had no regard to what the road had cost them, that we would not consider anything except the very least price at which we could furnish ourselves with a road, if they did not come to terms—and they did.

Mr. RUSSELL. Would the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) allow me to make a suggestion? Would he recall the fact that the point was taken, in the course of that very debate, as to whether that subsidy should not be deducted from the amount payable to the company, and the answer by Mr. Plumb was to the effect, which seems to have been considered conclusive, that the Government had absolutely lost their lien on that subsidy; they should not think of taking it from the company? And that was accepted, apparently, as a solution of that question.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am very much obliged to my hon. friend (Mr. Russell) for bringing that question up, because it shows how determined we were to force the Grand Trunk to accept what they considered very hard terms.

Mr. RUSSELL. The determination was not on the side of the Government, but on the Opposition side of the House, and this was the answer given for not deducting the subsidy.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Russell) does not appear to know what he is talking about. Does not he know that I have just read the utterance of the president of the Grand Trunk Railway, that this road cost £736,000, besides the subsidies? You gave £300,000 for what cost £536,000, after deducting the subsidy. Put that alongside this monstrous proposition, in the defence of which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Russell) is using his puny casuistical arguments, contrary, as I believe, to his own judgment. Who could listen to his tone, so feeble that, with all the efforts we made, we could hear but little of what he said, without feeling that he handled his subject with timidity? He seemed to be afraid of his own voice—he seemed to be ashamed. Everybody knows that the hon. gentleman belongs to a profession that is paid day by day to make the worse appear the better reason. I belong to a profession that scorns anything of that kind, as the hon. gentleman knows.

Mr. RUSSELL. The hon. gentleman, as everybody knows, has deserted his profession.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not catch what the hon. gentleman said. I can only say, that, if the hon. gentleman has a case that he thinks will bear investigation, and that he is willing that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House shall hear, I trust he will speak a little louder than in the timid tones he used, as he maundered all over the ground that had been travelled again and again by hon. gentlemen who did know something about the subject. The hon. gentleman showed his ignorance of the question or his inability to answer the overwhelming arguments used on this side. I do not wonder at the moral and physical paralysis the hon. gentleman exhibited, under the circumstances. I can understand his feelings. No doubt, he had been retained by the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) to come to his rescue, and promised to accept the brief. But I can understand what his feelings must have been, when he listened to the hon. member for Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) and the senior member for Halifax (Mr. Borden), who in this debate show as giants alongside of pigmies, in the contrast of arguments used by them and the hon. gentleman. But my hon. friend need not be altogether alarmed; I intend to pay a little attention to him before I sit down. It will not be much, but still I can give him a passing notice, if he will possess his soul in patience.

Now, I have shown what our position was. I ask the hon. Minister, and I ask this House and this Government, if they ever heard of a question that runs on all fours with this one we are now discussing? If so, why did not the hon. gentleman touch upon it? Is the hon. gentleman afraid to hear something, or is he afraid that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries—

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Is the hon. gentleman addressing himself to me?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am addressing myself to this House on one of the most important questions ever submitted to it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. But does the hon. gentleman refer to me?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And I say, the hon. gentleman would better discharge his duties as a Minister of the Crown, if he would pay more respectful attention to the discussion of this question, which discussion he has treated with contempt such as has never been witnessed in this House from its inception to the present hour. I say it is most offensive, when I am dealing with a question, to interpose in this manner. But he seems to have an inkling of what I refer to, and wished to prevent his colleagues from hearing, for fear they will learn how disingenuous he has been and how unable to deal with this question. I tell him, that there is a case that runs on all fours with this Drummond County Railway story, in which he can compare my action and the action of the Government in which I was Minister of Railways and Canals, with his own. Did the hon. gentleman ever hear of the Eastern Extension Railway purchase by the Conservative Government from the Government of Nova Scotia? Here was a case exactly parallel with the Drummond County case. Here was a case in which the Government of Canada purchased from the owners a line that had been most heavily subsidized. The hon. gentleman does not seem to have heard of it. If he knew of it, then I ask him, how he dared to say to this House, that there was no record to show that the Government, in purchasing a railway from its owners, had ever deducted the subsidies. Look at the case of the Eastern Extension, and what do you find? The road was in this condition. Mr. Mackenzie, the former leader of the Government of which my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was a member, came to the conclusion, and the sound and wise conclusion, that it would be of great advantage to have the railway extended from New Glasgow to the Strait of Canso, 80 miles. How did he go about it? He proposed to this House that they should give the branch from Truro to New Glasgow, which had cost some $2,000,000 or thereabouts, as a free gift, as a subsidy, to the Government in Nova Scotia to enable them to procure the extension of the road from New Glasgow to the Strait of Canso, about 80 miles. The Government of Nova Scotia, as my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) well knows, accepted that; Parliament passed a Bill authorizing this House to give away a property that had cost probably a sum approaching $2,000,000, at least a very large sum of money, to give this to the Government of Nova Scotia to enable them, by using it, to secure the extension of the line. The Government of Nova Scotia, having the 43 miles from Truro to New Glasgow given to them by Act of Parliament as a subsidy to aid in the construction of that road, made a contract with the Eastern Extension Company to take over that road as a part of their own property, to build the road and to complete it to Canso. Difficulties arose between the Government of Nova Scotia and the parties with whom they had contracted, and that matter was ultimately referred to arbitration to see how much money the Government of Nova Scotia should pay to that company to become owners of the road from Truro to the Strait of Canso. Well, what was the decision of that arbitration? The decision was that they should pay to the parties who then owned the line from Truro to the Strait of Canso, $1,200,000. That road was purchased by the Government of Canada when we arrived at the conclusion that it was in the interests of Nova Scotia and of Canada alike that it should be taken over by the Government of Canada. I negotiated the purchase with my hon. friend the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) and one of his colleagues, and very sharp gentlemen I found them on that occasion, and very able to take care of the interests of Nova Scotia. We negotiated the sale of that 123 miles of road from Truro to the Strait of Canso. There were 43 miles of admirably completed road in that fine section of country, the best paying portion of the whole Intercolonial Railway from one end of the country to the other. Now, Sir, I ask the hon. gentleman: Did he know anything about that transaction? Had he ever heard of it? And if he had heard of it, how dare he stand on the floor of this House and say that there was no such a thing as the Government negotiating the purchase of a road from the owners, and deducting the subsidy the Government had given. The Government of Nova Scotia did not get one dollar for the 43 miles of splendid road, through a splendid country, the most paying portion of the Intercolonial Railway; they did not get one dollar out of the Dominion treasury. But they got what they had paid to the contractors in order to take their place and to become owners of the road. I give that to the hon. gentleman as the most complete contradiction that can be given, and I ask him why did he hide that? Did he know it? If he did, and concealed it from his colleagues, and concealed it from the gentlemen supporting him in this House, he acted a disingenuous part, and placed himself in the very unenviable position of knowing that fact, so well known in the railway transactions of this country, and yet standing on the floor of this House and there committing himself to the declaration, as will be found in "Hansard," that no such transaction as a purchase by the Government of Canada of a railroad and deducting the subsidy, had ever taken place. I do not require to say one word further on that. When that matter was ratified by the House of Commons, a gentleman estimated the value of the property that had been sacrificed by the Government of Nova Scotia in that transaction, at $4,000,000. The Hon. Mr. Blake, who was then a member of this House, and if not the leader of the Opposition, was a leading member of the Opposition, said that there was no claim for the subsidy, for the value of the property that had been given, and that belonged as much to the province of Nova Scotia as any mile of road between New Glasgow and Canso, and that there was no reason for paying for it, because the arrangement was one that would be most conducive to the interests of Nova Scotia and of Canada alike. The Minister of Railways and Canals, if he will turn to his speech on the "Hansard" of 1899, page 2959, will find that he said this:

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Now, when it is claimed that it would have been proper for this Government to deduct the amount of the subsidies from the purchase price, or to insist that they should be allowed in estimating the value and fixing the purchase price, I am really lost in conjecture as to the ground upon which such a contention can be based.

He was in a state of utter bewilderment as to the ground upon which such a contention could be based. Yet he knew, or he ought to have known, and if he did know he concealed it, and if he did not know he should be ashamed to admit it, that there stood a transaction exactly parallel with what he had been doing, buying from parties a road heavily subsidized by various Governments and corporations, and giving them not only their own estimate of what the property was worth, but giving in addition all the subsidies out of which the road had been almost entirely constructed and completed.

I now come to a position of a very grave character, because it is one that touches the fitness of the hon. gentleman to hold the office he occupies. The hon. gentleman has told this House that it is impossible, with all the staff that he has, all the engineers, all the accountants, all the clerks at his disposal, to show what is the result of the operations of a leased line of railway. Am I correct in that statement? I am in the judgment of the House when I say that again and again, a dozen times, the hon. gentleman stated to this House that he was utterly incapable of giving us that information. We were told in the other branch of Parliament by a Minister of the Crown that the object of leasing the line, and going on with the work, and getting authority to lease it for a year, was to give conclusive evidence to the House and to the country of the wisdom of the transaction. And, Sir, that was the common sense statement. But I say that that hon. gentleman stands here to-night impaled on the horns of this dilemma. He either stated what he believed was the fact that he was utterly incapable as Minister of Railways, of devising any means by which such information could be furnished to the House, or he has proved himself, in the face of the world and of every man who knows anything of railway transactions in this or any other country, to be totally unfit for the position he occupies. He may take whichever horn of the dilemma he pleases. He has disqualified himself from claiming the confidence or the respectful consideration of any hon. gentleman on either side of the House for what he stated is not a fact. There is not a railway man in Canada but who is doing every day what the hon. gentleman says is utterly impossible. The Grand Trunk Railway Company, every year, where they have leased a line of railway, show exactly how that leased line has affected the operations of the whole Grand Trunk system. I ask the hon. gentleman to bring before this House, I ask him to bring before the Committee on Railways, any man claiming to be an expert, or to have an expert knowledge of railway management in Canada, I care not who he is or what he is, bring him before the Railway Committee and put to him the question: Is it practicable or is it impracticable for a great railway company to know what the operations and the effects of a leased line are? I say he cannot find a man in Canada connected with the Grand Trunk, the Canadian Pacific Railway or anybody else who will not say that it is perfectly practicable. Look at the contracts that the Canadian Pacific Railway have had, under which they have agreed with the parties who had constructed a hundred miles of railway to lease that road from them and to give them a certain proportion of the net proceeds on whatever the road produced. How did they find that out? If what the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals says is true it is impracticable. Then I say it is a delusion. There is no railway expert, there is not a man who knows anything of railway management, in this country, or any other country, who does not know that railway accounts are kept in such a perfectly clear and lucid manner as to make absolutely certain down to the smallest point and to show what every leased line of railway does. Yet we have an hon. gentleman, professing to be the Minister of Railways and Canals and taking the position of a guide and counsellor to hon. gentlemen behind the Treasury benches, who tells us that he does not know any means and that it is utterly impracticable to do that which every railway management in the world, except his own, does every day. I need not waste any more time with that; it is too self-evident a proposition, and I will leave the hon. gentleman to choose whichever end of the dilemma he pleases. When I intimated to the hon. gentleman that there were officials in his own department who could furnish this House with this information if he would allow them to come before it, what did he say? I will not allow them to go before a committee; I will decapitate them very quickly if I find them giving false information. I would not demean myself by putting myself in communication with any official of the Government on that or any other subject. I have no knowledge, no information, no statement from anybody in regard to that question from any person connected with the Railway Department, but I know from my own experience in the department, from the manner in which the books were kept that if the accountants and auditors of the Intercolonial Railway service were put on the stand or brought before a committee they could at once give the information that is wanted. But what is my answer? The hon. gentleman says: I will decapitate the man in my department who will dare to give any such information to this House or to anybody else. This is the mode of terrorism pursued by the hon. gentleman. He will not permit anybody to know anything more, it appears, than he does, and it is a capital crime and will meet with decapitation to have any such knowledge. I do not intend to say a word about this question further than this, that I believe my hon. friend from Westmoreland (Mr. Powell) proved to a demonstration to this House that there is not a word of truth or accuracy in the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals that there was going to be a great surplus on this line. The reason that the hon. gentleman refused to give the House information is that he knows that this information would have condemned him out of his own mouth and he would not have dared to have asked hon. gentlemen behind him to support this proposition. There is no difficulty in a gentleman who manages and manipulates railway undertakings as the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals manages and manipulates them, while you give him what he is spending now, $1,000,000 on capital account a year, or more than $2,000,000 within two years—there is no difficulty in manipulating the accounts so as to show pretty much what the hon. gentleman wants to show. The hon. gentleman either suppressed the facts or he was ignorant, and if ignorant, he is incapable, and if incapable, he is unfit for the position he holds. That is the attitude I take on this question. I say it is a very grave one, and I say this House has a right to a little more respectful treatment than that when a question of that gravity is under consideration. Half the time that hon. gentlemen were dealing with this subject in an able and lucid manner the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals was not in his place in the House, and if he was present he thought to distract attention by walking around showing his back to the Opposition and engaging in loud conversation with other hon. gentlemen in this House. I may as well tell the hon. gentleman that nothing flatters me like that. When I am attacking the Government, or any member of it, or the head of a department, and he is going about and talking to this and that hon. gentleman, it shows that he is afraid to hear what is being said. The highest compliment he could pay me, when I am addressing this House, is to endeavour to distract the attention of the people around him. He gets between a Minister of the Crown and a gentleman who is next in rank, and I am not sure that he is not very often a great deal above some Ministers of the Crown, and he says: It will never do to let these two gentlemen hear what is being said. Therefore, he attempts to engage their attention and endeavours to draw them away from what is being said. Is he afraid that the whip (Mr. Sutherland) will become the whip on this side of the House if he allows him to hear these statements by those on the Opposition side of the House? I may tell the hon. gentleman that if he is going to carry great measures through this House he will have to treat his own friends with more respect and the Opposition with more respect than he has shown during the course of this most important debate.

Now, Sir, I am happy to say, I am reaching a conclusion. I had no idea of occupying so long a time. I have only a word to say in reference to Mr. Harris, whom the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) stated he had brought upon the Intercolonial in order to make it a commercial undertaking, a gentleman who was going to put the Intercolonial Railway upon a footing so that it would pay its working expenses and show a handsome surplus. I believe that Mr. Harris is an able man, and I believe there is no question that, in a moment of forgetfulness of what the character of his chief was, he ventured to say to men in Montreal, that, under his reorganization of the tariff of the Intercolonial Railway, he would show half a million dollars a year better than before. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) then found that Mr. Harris knew too much for him, or for some cause or other he sent him about his business, and broke his contract. This is what Mr. Harris put on record:

According to this statement the gross earnings of the Intercolonial Railway for 1895-96 were $2,957,640. The working expenses were $3,012,000, a difference against the road of about $55,000.

That was under the administration of the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart).

It is estimated the gross earnings for the year after the extension to Montreal will be $3,885,000, and the working expenses $3,363,000. In other words, the gentlemen who are responsible for the management of the Intercolonial, and who have advised me in this regard, estimate that there would be a surplus of $250,000 on the first year's operation of the Intercolonial Railway extended to Montreal. Now, I deduct from the earnings which I have stated, the rental of $210,000, and I get a net surplus of $310,000, or a margin of, say, $300,000 as the result of carrying out his policy of extension.

At the end of four months, on the operation of that road, we have a heavy increase of the deficit, instead of a surplus. Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not a gambler, or a betting man, but I would risk anything I can reasonably lay my hands upon, that I could prove before any railway experts that the increased deficit on the Intercolonial road, due to the Drummond County Railway and the contract with the Grand Trunk Railway, has been $300,000 in the first year. While this House votes $1,000,000 a year for capital expenditure, and hands it over to the manipulation of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair), I dare say, he will be able to give us a very glowing statement; but stop charging to capital what should be charged to revenue, and you will soon find where the extension into Montreal has landed you.

I promised a little notice of my hon. friend the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell). When I listened to him last night, he reminded me of rather an amusing incident that occurred many years ago in the Legislature of Nova Scotia. There was a very portly gentleman, who at that date occupied the position of Attorney General, and there was a little man sitting on the Opposition benches who gave him a great deal of trouble, and made some very sharp and pungent attacks upon him. And the Attorney General rose, and said: "Mr. Speaker, I am reminded of what I once saw, while passing along the country, on a warm summer's day. I saw a magnificent horse in a pasture and a mosquito stinging his little proboscis into him, and causing the horse a great deal of irritation. The noble horse paid very little attention to the mosquito for some time, but by and by he lashed around with his tail, and he dashed out the brains of the mosquito." And the Attorney General of Nova Scotia concluded: "Mr. Speaker, this case cannot be paralleled here to-day, because, unfortunately, I have not the tail of a horse, and my little friend has not the brains of a mosquito."

Mr. RUSSELL. It is a first-class story, but the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) told it very badly.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Russell) would do well to remember, that, while he may be a great professor of law, he has no claims to distinction, when he comes to deal with a question of this kind. I want to give my hon. friend (Mr. Russell) another suggestion for his future guidance. He has, no doubt, read Æsop's Fables, and there is one of them, which, after the exhibition he made of himself last night, it may be opportune to call to his memory. He will remember that a little frog felt disposed to extend his small proportions and attract a great deal of consideration, and, viewing a noble ox in his presence, he endeavoured to inflate himself, so as to rival the ox; but the frog burst, unfortunately for himself, and the consequences were anything but agreeable to the frog. I recommend my hon. friend (Mr. Russell), with all his great ability, with all his legal knowledge, and with all his legal acumen—I recommend him not to attempt the role he took last night, of mimicry, in referring to gentlemen who had the right to expect very different treatment from him. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Russell) had something to say about my position in connection with the extension of this line of railway from Montreal to St. John, and he spoke of my having sacrificed the interests of the city of Halifax. I can tell him, that little game has been tried in this House before, and by bigger men than he is, and, Sir, I went down to Halifax and met them in the presence of that intellectual and intelligent constituency, with the result that they have been consigned to merited oblivion. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Russell) has anything to say as to policy with regard to the interest of the city of Halifax, a city to which I have always been so devoted, and for which I have done so much in the past, and expect to do a great deal more in the future; I am ready at a moment's notice to meet him in the presence of the electorate of that magnificent city, and to discuss with him the question, whether he or I has contributed most to the progress and prosperity of Halifax. Sir, when that Short Line Railway was brought before this House, it was based upon the fact that it would bring us near to one of the most important ports in Canada, the port in the best position of any to rival Portland, which was the city we had to compete with. I refer to the port of St. Andrew's. Then, I said: You go on, and you come to the port of St. John, and you there save so much distance, as compared with the Intercolonial Railway; what would be utterly impracticable to do at St. John with the Intercolonial Railway, is practicable to do with the Short Line Railway, and I asked Parliament to give me $186,000 a year for twenty years to carry the road from Montreal to St. John, in order that we might have an ocean freight port there. But what more? Nobody would be idiot enough to carry the line through and to parallel the Intercolonial Railway, but we at once made arrangements with the Canadian Pacific Railway by which they reached Halifax in a much shorter time than they possibly could by means of the Intercolonial Railway. And so with the ports of Cape Breton and all the other ports in that part of the country. I am not going to detain the House by giving the figures, although I have them under my hand, to show that that short line of railway shortened the distance and made it practicable to establish an ocean port in our own country. When the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, under the able management which fortunately for Canada has marked that great enterprise, by arrangements with steamships, found that it was practicable, I never heard anything in my life that gave me greater satisfaction than the statement made to me by Sir William Van Horne that by experiment they had demonstrated that we were able to compete in the city of St. John with the city of Portland, and at the same time obtain much more ready and complete access with the city of Halifax and with the eastern part of Nova Scotia than was practicable by any other means. I say I am prepared to meet my hon. friend on his own ground whenever and wherever he desires I should, in the presence of the intelligent electors of Halifax and the province of Nova Scotia, and let them decide the question as to whether I or he has the strongest claim on the confidence of the people of that country.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Mr. Chairman, I had not intended taking any part in this debate at this stage, nor do I rise now for any other purpose than to make a few observations on what the hon. gentleman has said concerning what is known as the Eastern Extension Railway of Nova Scotia. I regret that the hon. gentleman referred to that transaction in the terms he did, and endeavoured to obtain from it any argument to assail the position which my hon. friend the Minister of Railways has taken in regard to the purchase of the Drummond County Railway. A very slight examination of the facts of that case will show that the two transactions are so widely different that there can be no possible comparison between them. I want to call my hon. friend's attention to the facts of the case, which are probably not as familiar to him to-day as they were a few years ago. It is true the Government of Canada, under that transaction, did receive possession of a very valuable railway property, which probably cost between three and four million dollars, for which they paid the province of Nova Scotia the small sum of $1,200,000. The statement which the hon. gentleman made in that respect is substantially correct. But when the hon. gentleman treats it as a matter mutually agreed upon, as a sale that was satisfactory to both parties, I have to remind him that he is entirely mistaken; and I do so with some regret, for this reason, that the difficulty between the Government of Nova Scotia and the Government of the Dominion occurred when the hon. gentleman was in England; and I want to do him the justice to say that when he returned to this country, although he adhered to the unjust position which his colleagues had taken, a position which they might not have taken, possibly, if he had been here, yet when we came to deal with matters of detail, he was more generous to the province than his colleagues. But the fact still remains that that was not a voluntary sale, mutually agreed upon and mutually satisfactory, but a forced sale which the Government of Canada carried out by an unjust and tyrannical proceeding towards the province of Nova Scotia. What are the facts? My hon. friend stated that Mr. Mackenzie decided on handing over the Pictou branch to the province. In that he is correct, though the matter had an earlier history. My own recollection tells me that the first proposal to hand over the Pictou branch came from the late Mr. Justice Hugh Macdonald, when sitting in this House as the member for Antigonish. I am speaking from memory, but I think a resolution was moved by Mr. Macdonald, which virtually committed the House to the policy of handing over the Pictou branch of the Intercolonial Railway to the province for the purpose of encouraging railway development eastward, and at the same time another resolution was moved in favour of the Windsor branch of the Intercolonial being handed over for the encouragement of railway extension westward.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And the hon. gentleman will do me the justice of saying that I always heartily supported the proposition.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think the hon. gentleman in that is quite correct.

Mr. FIELDING.

The Pictou branch is not to be confounded with another railway built later, called the Pictou town branch, which ran from the Pictou branch into the town of Pictou. What was called the Pictou branch began at Truro, an important junction on the Intercolonial Railway, and ran to Pictou harbour, a distance of forty or fifty miles. That line, constructed under the hon. gentleman's own management, cost the magnificent sum of $53,000 per mile. I am speaking from memory, but I am sure that it cost over $50,000 per mile. No doubt, railway building is cheaper now than it was thirty years ago; but, making reasonable allowance for that, you still have the fact that the hon. gentleman built a railway in Nova Scotia which cost $53,000 a mile, and he becomes suddenly alarmed and sees the savor of corruption in these days in the purchase of a railway at a cost of $12,000 a mile. The Pictou branch, by a resolution of this House, subsequently confirmed by legislation in the time of the Mackenzie Government, was assigned to the Government of Nova Scotia or to any company acting in co-operation with that Government, for extension towards the Strait of Canso and afterwards into Cape Breton. By an Act of the Parliament of Canada, that railway was practically deeded to the Government of Nova Scotia, and, subject to certain conditions, became their property. In 1883 the Government of Nova Scotia determined that they would exercise an option which they possessed, and would agree to buy out what was known as the Allan Company, which had contracted for the Eastern Extension Railway, and the Nova Scotia Government would thus stand in the company's place. The chief object was, not merely to take possession of about eighty miles of new railway which was approaching completion, but to get possession of the Pictou branch costing $2,000,000, which the hon. gentleman has correctly said ran through a very profitable section of country. It was granted to them by an Act of this Parliament, and they obtained an Act of the legislature of Nova Scotia authorizing them to take possession. They took authority to issue bonds to pay the Allan Company their outlay, which, by an award of arbitrators, amounted to $1,200,000. Before they paid a penny to the Allan Company, it was indispensable that they should know that they were going to get possession, not only of the new road, but of the Pictou branch. I was one of the delegates sent to Ottawa to make assurance doubly sure—to see that there was no doubt. We brought with us our Act under which we were to acquire the new road. We explained the whole transaction to the Government at Ottawa, and asked them to facilitate the matter by getting His Excellency's assent to the Act immediately. I am glad to say that that assent was given. I discussed the matter fully with my hon. friend, who was then Minister of Railways and Canals, and he stated that there was no difficulty whatever. He admitted that the Government of Nova Scotia virtually owned the branch at that moment, and were entitled to it, and he stated in the House—I sat in the gallery and heard him make the statement—that in a few days or weeks that property was to be handed over to the Government of Nova Scotia. So we issued our bonds and committed ourselves to the expenditure of $1,200,000 on the faith of that Act of Parliament and the hon. gentleman's pledge that we would get the Pictou branch; but when we had expended our money and demanded the railway, we were refused possession of the property, and no explanation was given to us. That was the position in which the Government of Nova Scotia found themselves. They came up here and they found all sorts of obstructions placed in their way. My hon. friend was in England, and took no part in these transactions; but it became evident that the policy of the Government at Ottawa was to break faith with the Government of Nova Scotia, and not hand over the property. And, Sir, the Government of Nova Scotia were not in a position to go on. They had no means of paying this interest on $1,200,000, unless they got possession of the Pictou branch, and rather than go into an expensive law suit, they came to the conclusion to allow these gentlemen to force us to a sale. The whole correspondence will show that we came here and demanded the Pictou branch. We did not want to sell the road, but the Dominion Government were determined to break faith with the Government of Nova Scotia and embarrass it, and did so to this extent that they forced us to sell to them that road for $1,200,000. When he points to that as a fair sale and compares it with the sale of the Drummond line, I reply that the two transactions are entirely unlike, and that the Government of Nova Scotia have never ceased to complain that that transaction was unjust, and to demand a return of the subsidy.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman answer me one short question? Before you came up, did you not send a telegram to inquire if we were prepared to relieve you of the road, and on what terms we would relieve you.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. That is perfectly correct. When we found that difficulties were being put in our way and that we were not going to get possession of the property for which we had bargained and paid our money, we knew very well that our small provincial government could not fight the Dominion, and we did ask the hon. gentleman on what terms he would relieve us. The hon. gentleman must see that these are the vital points. First, we came, not to sell the railway, but to demand possession of the Pictou branch. They refused at first, without a word of explanation, although the hon. gentleman knows that he had given me the assurance there would be no difficulty whatever. He repeated that statement in the House in 1883, when he moved his railway subsidies. He said that, as a matter of course, that property was to pass into the hands of the provincial government in a short time, but when in his absence—for I must do the hon. gentleman the justice of saying that he was not here at the time—all these difficulties occurred, we did ask the Dominion Government to relieve us, and thought it was far better to take the step we did and pass the property over to the Dominion than engage in a long litigation which would have cost a large amount of money and not benefit anybody. The hon. gentleman must admit that there is no comparison between the two transactions. In the one case you have a sale mutually agreed upon, but in the other you have a forced sale, by which $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 were forced out of the hands of the local government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It would not be right to allow the hon. gentleman's statement to pass unchallenged. This thing occurred a long time ago, and I was speaking from memory, and may have to refresh myself by reference to the documents, but my recollection is that the difficulty over the transfer was this. The Dominion Government were perfectly ready to transfer the Pictou branch to the local government, the moment the latter were able to put on rolling stock to equip and run the road; and it was because they were not able to put rolling stock on, and because to hand the road over in that condition would have been to destroy the whole of our communications with the eastern section of the province, we did not hand the road over. There is where the difficulty arose. The hon. gentleman found that his Government had got out of its depth and had undertaken something heavier than it could manage. The road belonged to that Government by Act of Parliament, and nobody could prevent its having it, so that there could be no litigation, and the moment that Government was in a position to operate the road, the Dominion Government was ready to hand it over.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is wrong in saying there were difficulties about our operation of the road. There were difficulties at a later stage, but not difficulties about the rolling stock only. After we had arranged with the hon. gentleman, he told me there was no difficulty, and made the statement in the House that the property was to pass to the Government of Nova Scotia, and he has now stated that, by Act of Parliament, it belongs to Nova Scotia. But, in the meantime, we had incurred difficulties in the banks of $1,200,000. Then difficulties arose. In the first place, the Dominion Government refused without a word of explanation, to hand over the road, and later on, when pressed to give some explanation in order to defend themselves before public opinion, they exacted two conditions which we claimed were utterly unreasonable and unjust. One did relate to the rolling stock. They demanded that we should put a certain amount of rolling stock on the property, and we believed the demand was excessive and that it was made excessive in order to prevent our complying with it. We said that we would refer the matter to independent experts and that any rolling stock which these experts declared was required we would supply, no matter what it cost. The other difficulty was with regard to the tariff rates on coal and freight generally. The Dominion Government made this monstrous demand on the Government of Nova Scotia, that we should accept a tariff for 43 miles of road, at the same rate per ton per mile as they were going to get on the Intercolonial Railway on a run of 700 or 800 miles. The principal of a long and a short haul, which every railway man understands, was not recognized, but we were asked to agree to a tariff on 43 miles of railway on the same mileage basis as they would have on a long run. These conditions were monstrous, and were made so in order that the Government of Nova Scotia would not be able to comply with them, and thus the property would be forced out of our hands.

Mr. A. C. BELL (Pictou). In saying that this property had cost $3,000,000 or $4,000,000, did the hon. gentleman refer to the Eastern Extension Railway?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I included both, the Eastern Extension and the Pictou branch. The Pictou branch cost $50,000 per mile for between 40 and 50 miles. It was a very expensive road, and if you add the cost of the Eastern Extension, the two together would amount to about $4,000,000 or $5,000,000.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). There was even more than that. The hon. gentleman gave up on that occasion the right to run over the Intercolonial Railway from Halifax to Truro.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We were not buying that.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). The hon. gentleman on that occasion surrendered a very valuable consideration.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Under the circumstances I have described.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). I am not going to make a speech, but will recall to the hon. gentleman's mind certain circumstances. I would like the hon. gentleman to recall that the $1,260,000 which he got for that road was considered by his opponents to be very much in excess of what the company spent on it. That exceeded the actual cost to the country by some $500,000. The company had not expended over $700,000 of their own money in that Eastern Extension Railway, and if the

Mr. FIELDING.

Government of Nova Scotia, under the able management of my hon. friend, chose to pay the Allan Company $500,000 more for that property than it was worth, I do not see exactly how he would expect the Dominion Government to assist him out of that bad bargain by giving him the sum of $500,000 in excess of what the property was worth. If he will recollect the circumstances, he will know that he, in speaking of a forced sale, might very properly have applied that expression to the sale made by the Allan Company to the Nova Scotia Government. That was really a forced sale, because by the bungling and incompetent management of the Government of Nova Scotia, they allowed the time when they could have purchased the road by arbitration, and get it on a true valuation to expire and were compelled to pay the company what they chose to ask.

In reference to another matter, the hon. gentleman who was at one time Provincial Secretary and leader of the Nova Scotia Government repeats that his Government were compelled to sell to the Dominion that property for what the Dominion choose to pay. The hon. gentleman must recollect very well the pitiable terms of appeal in which he asked the Government to take that road off his hands. Can it be possible that that was the same Government that, three years afterwards, undertook the dismemberment of confederation? Could this gentleman who, for $1,200,000, was prepared to place Nova Scotia in the humiliating position in which he did place her, be the same who afterwards became known as the Great Repealer? Can it be that $1,260,000 was the measure of the capacity of that gentleman and the Government of which he was so prominent a member? He underestimates his own strength and his own importance. Why, before he left the Government of Nova Scotia he found himself in a position to handle a debt of $3,000,000, and not of $1,260,000 merely; and if he had remained in power until this time, I have no doubt he would have found himself able to handle a debt of $5,000,000, because every year he was in power he found no difficulty in adding to the debt of that unfortunate province about $200,000 a year, and a much smaller sum than $200,000 would have bought all the rolling stock which the Dominion Government required to be placed on the road. The fact is there never was a more reckless frittering away of the provincial assets placed in the charge of a Government than there was under the mismanagement, the absolute incompetence of the government of Hon. Mr. Fielding. To come at this time of day, or this time of night, and give a garbled and mangled account of these transactions to this House is inexcusable. There was one thing in which I was satisfied with the hon. gentleman's conduct, and that is that he did not blame the leader of the Opposition for having pressed him in this matter. The fact is that the hon. gentleman did not know where he was. He had bungled from one difficulty into another, and he was glad when the Dominion Government did take this property off his hands. The Government of which not he, but Mr. Pipes was the head, sacrificed the resources and valuable property of Nova Scotia simply, I suppose, because they found themselves in control of property of which they felt themselves utterly incompetent to take charge.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). I do not imagine that the House is anxious to go into more details of Nova Scotia politics. But I may say that it seems to be assumed by hon. gentlemen opposite that when there is no argument in support of their view, it is perfectly proper for them to say that somebody on this side is incompetent. The hon. leader of the Opposition spent a considerable portion of his time in speaking of the incompetency of a gentleman like the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Russell), an eminent lawyer, an eminent public man, recognized throughout Nova Scotia and the Dominion as one of the brightest men in our country; and he can find no better argument than to say that that hon. gentleman does not know what he is talking about, that he does not speak loud enough, mimicking the tones of his voice and saying he is physically and mentally paralyzed. I am speaking in the hearing of hon. members who heard the hon. gentleman devote a considerable part of the last portion of his speech to ridiculing the hon. member for Halifax. Let me tell hon. gentlemen opposite that they will make nothing by treating hon. gentlemen on this side in that way. Now, as to the junior member for Pictou (Mr. Bell), perhaps a sentence or two will be enough as between him and myself. The people of Nova Scotia had an opportunity to measure his competency and mine for several years. When I entered the legislature of Nova Scotia he had just been beaten not in his own county but throughout Nova Scotia. We sat together in the legislature for some years—but not for a very long time. He disappeared from the politics of Nova Scotia. I remained, and in election after election I vindicated my position on these questions to which he has referred; and it was my good fortune to receive, whether I deserved it or not, a large measure of continued support from the electors of the province such as no other Prime Minister in its history had ever received.

An hon. MEMBER. How about Repeal?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If hon. gentlemen think they can wound my feelings by reference to confederation, let me assure them that they are vastly mistaken. I am proud of the fact that I was an anti-confederate, and I am not going to apologize for it here or elsewhere. The poverty-stricken party to which the hon. gentleman belonged would have perished off the face of the earth if it had not been for the anti-confederate blood that they got into it to keep it alive. They took in A. W. McLelan, an anti-confederate. He had pictured the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) in the likeness of one who sits in a carriage with a pair of false hands in his lap while his real hands are thrust into the pockets of the unsuspecting passengers beside him. They took in Mr. McLelan, they made him Senator, they made him Governor. Joe. Howe was an anti-confederate, and they were glad to get him in to bolster up their party. J. S. D. Thompson was an anti-confederate, and they were glad to get him in. The best blood they could get in their councils was anti-confederate blood, and without it, they could not have carried on their party to the present day. I want to say again that if they think they can wound me by any reference to the question of confederation, I reply that I am proud that I opposed confederation. I did so honestly, and I believe that the great mass of the people of Nova Scotia who opposed that measure were quite up to and perhaps above the average of intelligence of the men who advocated it. I do not want to say that there were no able and patriotic men on the Conservative side. An American orator once said that it would not be right to say that every Democrat was a horse thief, but it would be right to say that every horse thief was a Democrat. So, I would say that while it is not true that all the confederates were scallawags, still I feel perfectly safe in saying that all the scallawags in Nova Scotia were confederates in those days. If the men who sit around the hon. gentleman to-day had been in Nova Scotia in those days, they would not have been following the hon. gentleman in his policy of dragooning the province into confederation, but would have been with Howe and other anti-confederates who had the great mass of the people behind him. So, I am not afraid to discuss this question here or elsewhere if it becomes necessary—

Mr. FOSTER. But how about Repeal?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. What has my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) got to say about it?

Mr. FOSTER. What we want to know is what my hon. friend (Mr. Fielding) has to say about it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I have a view of the question of Repeal, and I expressed it and stood up for it; and when there came a time that my people were not prepared to go on with the Repeal movement, I told them that I was not prepared to go on with it. In Nova Scotia we fought out this question. And we had some of these gentlemen come down and ask the same foolish questions as are asked now. We discussed the question on every hustings in Nova Scotia years ago—many years ago. It was evident that confederation was accepted by the people of Nova Scotia—we were in the union and would remain. Since then, I have been as willing as any to work out the destiny of the country; but so long as heaven spares me I am not going to apologize to anybody for having been an anti-confederate.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to add a single word to what the hon. gentleman has said. He has boasted of the sovereignty he exercised in Nova Scotia for a long period. Does he know the reason?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I think I do. Shall I tell the hon. gentleman?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I can tell the hon. gentleman the reason: it was that the best men in Nova Scotia came here to support me. I tell the hon. gentleman, that the reason of his long reign at that time, when, as he said, he had the people of Nova Scotia at his back, and when I had 16 out of 21 members returned to the Dominion Parliament supporting me in this House and supporting the Conservative party, was because the strength and the wealth of intellect of the party in favour of confederation came here, to the higher arena, and left my young friend, as he was at that time, and as he still is, surrounded with a majority of an inferior class of people.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I want to congratulate my hon. friend from Pictou (Mr. Bell), who sat in the House with me for some years, as leader of the Opposition. I want to congratulate him on the fact that his leader to-day says, that the reason I succeeded in Nova Scotia for years was, that the Opposition in Nova Scotia had no brains at that time.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I want to ask the Minister of Finance a question with reference to the Eastern Extension. In 1879, when the Holmes-Thompson Government made an agreement with the Allan Company, it was found that there was no proper agreement, so far as the interests of Nova Scotia were concerned, made by the government that preceded the Holmes-Thompson Government, with respect to the building of the Eastern Extension; and, when the Holmes-Thompson Government made an agreement, to which the Allan Company was a party, and the Nova Scotia and Dominion governments were parties, it was provided that the local government should take over the Eastern Extension, and the Pictou branch as well, that had been delivered to the company at a valuation, that valuation not to exceed the actual outlay of the company, whenever the company made default, and in the event of the Nova Scotia Government failing to operate that road satisfactorily, or in the event of the Dominion Government desiring to take it over and operate it in connection with the Intercolonial Railway to the Strait of Canso, they had the option of taking that road over at a valuation not to exceed the cost outside of the subsidies given by the two governments, and it was under that agreement that the Government of Canada took the road over from the Government of Nova Scotia. I ask the Minister of Finance, if those were not the circumstances which led up to taking the road over by the Government of Canada.

Mr. FIELDING.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is right, excepting in his last sentence. There was an agreement such as he describes, which gave the Government of Nova Scotia, not the Government of Canada, the right to buy out the Allan interest in the way he has described. But that agreement gave no right to the Government of Canada to take possession of that road until the province of Nova Scotia was found to be in default.

Mr. McDOUGALL. That is the question: Was the province of Nova Scotia in default, when they were unable to operate that road in accordance with the agreement?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There was no default. The road was operated; the road was running.

Mr. J. B. MORIN (Dorchester). I desire to say a few words in regard to this Drummond County Railway. What I have to say is very short and very plain. Two years ago, the Government leased that road, and the Senate threw out their agreement on the ground that they did not think that it was going to be a paying road. Then the Government leased it for a while, in order to see whether it would pay or not. Now, in discussing this question, I do not propose to talk about Mr. Wainwright, or Mr. Schreiber, or this man or that. The question is: Will this road be a paying road or will it not? The Government has refused to show us whether it has been a paying road so far, or whether it has not. Let the Government prove that it has been a paying road, and I will vote for it; but, unless the Government proves that, I shall not promise to vote for it. Now, I say, that it is due to contrariness or laziness on the part of the Government that they refuse to give this House a statement of the revenues and expenditures of that road. We have been sent here by the people of this country to represent them; but how can we vote for a thing that we know nothing about? If the Government would give us information on this subject such as they do on other subjects, we should then know where we stand. I think very little of a Government that will keep us ignorant. We demand a statement, and the people of the country will demand it also. I was down at Quebec a few days ago, and saw some as good Liberals as there are in this House, who asked me the same question. I told them, that the Government refused to give us a statement. and they thought it very strange. Now, some time ago the Minister of Railways and Canals said, that he proposed to buy the road for $1,000,000, but we do not yet know what agreement the Government made with the Grand Trunk Railway for the right of way. It has been said that it was a cheap road; that is true, it is a cheap road. But it does not matter whether it is cheap or expensive, the question is: What is the value of the road? It does not matter whether the Government can buy it for a $10 bill or for $2,000,000, the question is: What is the value of the road? The value of the road is based upon its revenue; that is the case in a nutshell. When you hire men to work for you, you may find that one is worth 50 cents a day, and another is worth $1 a day. Now, I would like to have some one show me where the revenue is to come from. The distance from Montreal to Portland, in the State of Maine, by the Grand Trunk Railway, is 297½ miles. The distance from Montreal to Halifax by the Drummond County Railway and the Intercolonial is 837 miles. From Montreal to St. John by the Canadian Pacific Railway the distance is 481 miles. We also know that the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway are old companies and are well up in their own business. They get to do their business the best men that they can find, and I am told that they pay salaries as high as $25,000 a year. How can the Government of Canada compete with these two railway companies when you have one line from Montreal to the seaboard at Portland, with a mileage of only 297½ miles, as against 827 miles by the Intercolonial Railway from Montreal to Halifax? I would like to know how the Government can hope to carry freight or passengers and compete with the Grand Trunk, especially when a politician is placed at the head of the Government railway system? When a man has been elected to Parliament once or twice, he becomes quite a talker. At the time of his career he speaks pretty well, he is able to stand up for his party, and a man who has worked hard for his party is selected to occupy a position at the head of a department or in some other place of responsibility. This is a very poor way of managing any kind of business. If one of these gentlemen went to a farmer and asked for work, the farmer would ask him: What can you do? He would reply: I am a great politician. The farmer would reply: I do not want you at all. Go into the store, the blacksmith shop, the saw-mill, or the woods, and the same thing would take place; yet this great railway must be run by politicians. Politicians are all right in their place, but they are not suited to all conditions. According to the agreement made with the Grand Trunk Railway Company two years ago, the Government was to pay $62,500 a year for the use of the station at Montreal. Well, now, that is an enormous price. We all know that that station is about 110 by 270 feet in dimension, and that it cost about $500,000. Half a million at 4 per cent will give $20,000 a year. We are paying $62,500 a year for the use of that station according to the agreement which I received two years ago. I have no other; hon. gentlemen refused me any other. Any one could afford to build a station at a cost of half a million dollars and lease it for $62,500. About twelve railways come into that station in Montreal, and, if the Grand Trunk Railway Company charges all those railways the same amount that they were to charge the Government, how much will they receive for the use of their station? They will get $750,000 for a station that cost probably half a million dollars. I do not know what the station did actually cost, but I made up my mind that it would cost about half a million, probably less or more. There are hon. gentlemen in this House who know more than I do as to that. The Government was not compelled to lease or buy this Drummond County Railway, and if the price is too high the advice I would give would be to let it alone. We know that the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are building branch railways and buying railways. If this Drummond County Railway had been a paying road, or if it had been of any use to them they would have bought it long ago. The owners of this road would not have required to have gone to Mr. Greenshields and pay him thousands of dollars to sell the road for them, and probably he is paying somebody else to buy this road. I am told that this road is a very good road, and I will not say anything about that. It does not matter what I say about it, because that will not change the character of the road. But, I will say, that it will never amount to anything as a local road. There are just a few thousands of people along the road, and the best of the timber has been cut away. The farming country is quite poor, and you cannot find any industry along the whole line of the road, except it be at Drummondville, and that is pretty well played out. In a few years you will find that the road does not amount to anything in respect to local traffic. While the Government want to make that road pay they will have to turn around and compete with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, and how will they be able to compete when they have a mileage of 837 miles to the seaboard, as against a Grand Trunk mileage of 297 miles. My advice would be to let it alone. Three years ago a great many of the apostles that are here to-day found fault with the Conservative party for building a railway from Halifax to Vancouver. Of course, these hon. gentlemen said that that was entirely wrong. The Conservative party built that road because they had to carry out an agreement entered into at the time of the entry of British Columbia into our confederation that such a road was to be built, and it had to be built no matter who was in power. Three years ago I heard a great many of these apostles preaching and blaming the Conservative party for building that road. How is it that after blaming the Conservative party they turn around and propose to buy and to build a road? Why do they not stick to their own policy? If it was wrong to build or buy railways, why not let that Drummond County Railway remain where it is. If the Government do not buy that road the people using the road will never suffer in consequence of it. That road will be operated, if not by the Government, then by some other company. I would advise the Prime Minister to stick to his word as much as possible, and I might remind him of some of the things he has promised to the city of Quebec. He promised the people of that city, and I will support him in that, to build a bridge, but he has not done so. The present Government is doing the same as the late Government, it is doing that which I never approved of; it is dredging a channel between Montreal and Quebec, and making a flag station out of Quebec. The Government have sent the steamers to Montreal, and now they are sending the Government railway to Montreal. I am afraid the Minister has no intention of carrying out his promises to the people of Quebec, but I sincerely wish that he will do so.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I would like to draw the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) to one piece of information which he might afford to the House, and which must be very accessible. Under the third clause of the agreement of 1898 with the Grand Trunk Railway, the cost of maintenance of the Montreal joint section and the Chaudière joint section is to be apportioned. The share of the Intercolonial Railway on the one hand and the Grand Trunk Railway on the other is to be in the proportion which the engine and car mileage of each road bears to the total combined engine and car mileage. By the 33rd clause of the agreement, Her Majesty and the company are to furnish to each other promptly, each and every month, all the information necessary to the ascertaining and checking of the rates, fares, charges, shares of costs, and other returns to be made as under these presents. Therefore, the Minister (Mr. Blair) must have from the Grand Trunk Railway Company returns and information which indicate exactly each month, what the proportion of user, made up in that way, by the Grand Trunk Railway and by the Intercolonial Railway respectively is. I venture to submit that information of that kind will be very useful to the House at some stage of the proceeding. It has not been brought to the attention of the House so far, as I understand, and it will be clear to the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) that it might at least be useful to some hon. gentlemen in the House for the purpose of making up their minds as to whether the arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway was a fair arrangement. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) himself, in giving evidence before the committee, stated what is, of course, the case, that the arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company is so necessarily connected with the agreement now brought before the House by these resolutions, that the two must be considered together. I would like, therefore, if the hon. gentleman will, before this vote is taken, or before the Bill founded upon this resolution is brought down, be good enough to furnish that information to the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). There will be no difficulty, I think, in furnishing that information, if the hon. gentleman desires it. Does he desire it for the whole period that the arrangement has been running?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I do not want to put the hon. gentleman to any unnecessary trouble, but I thought it was probably easy to furnish it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think there will be no difficulty so far as I am aware in furnishing it down to the last date we have received a statement from the Grand Trunk Railway Company. It will, I should think, be furnished before the introduction of the Bill or before the Grand Trunk Railway matter is disposed of.

Resolution agreed to on division and reported.

INCORPORATION OF BENEVOLENT SOCIETIES.

On the Order being called for second reading of Bill (No. 87) respecting the incorporation of Benevolent Societies.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). As I before announced, I now beg to move that the Order be discharged and that the Bill be withdrawn.

Motion agreed to, and Bill withdrawn.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. FOSTER. What business will be taken up to-morrow?

The PRIME MINISTER. We will take up a few minor Bills, and then go into Supply; but if it were convenient, we will take another stage on this resolution, without debate, by consent, and we could have any debate that was necessary later on.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.30 a.m. (Saturday).

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

SATURDAY, 27th May, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

INSPECTION OF PETROLEUM AND NAPHTHA.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 131) respecting the inspection of petroleum and naphtha.

Mr. TAYLOR. Explain.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The purpose of this Bill is to facilitate the handling of petroleum and naphtha by removing some of the present regulations which have given rise to a great many complaints, and which are by many considered tyrannical and useless. Personally, I am not of that opinion, because I think the present inspection protects to a certain degree the user of petroleum against danger, in case the oil has not attained that degree of security which we ascertain by the flash test. This Bill proposes to abolish the most irksome of these regulations. It is now proposed that the inspection of Canadian oil shall be made at the refinery, and then that it may be carried in tank cars to any portion of the Dominion. Up to the present those who bought petroleum were obliged to keep it in large tanks and it was only when it was put in barrels that it was inspected. Under this Bill there will be no necessity to barrel the oil before it is inspected, and this will especially benefit the North-west Territories; places like Medicine Hat and Moose Jaw where the merchants find it difficult to have a sufficient number of barrels on hand for the oil. I have said that the Canadian oil is to be inspected before it leaves the refinery, and with regard to the imported oil it will be inspected before it is allowed to leave the customs, so that in neither case will the oil have to be barrelled before being inspected. Another great inconvenience, which was referred to by my hon. friend from Stanstead (Mr. Moore), is the manner in which up to the present it has been compulsory to sell oil by retail in the city and in the country. We must admit that a large tank wagon contains a much greater quantity of oil than these little barrels that we see carried in carts and from which the oil is retailed from door to door. Under this Bill the oil can be sold from tank wagons. I am told that the abolition of the regulation compelling the oil to be barrelled will effect a saving of nearly a cent a gallon. This Bill appears to be a somewhat voluminous Bill, because we have codified all the different Acts relating to the inspection of petroleum, so as to have only one Act. We have also been obliged to have an appendix to the Act of nearly a page and a half, giving a description of the instrument to be employed in testing the oil. This makes the Bill more bulky than it would otherwise be. I may say also that there have been strong representations made to the department upon what was considered the unfairness of allowing the handling of naphtha, gasoline and other inflammable oils in tank wagons when these are Canadian products, and not allowing the same kinds of oils to be imported from abroad in tank cars. We have covered this point by allowing the importation of naphtha, gasoline and benzine in tank cars from abroad. We inspect these, of course; but, owing to the dangerous character of these volatile oils, we have taken the precaution of insisting that when they are taken from the tanks and put in barrels or jars, these barrels or jars shall be coloured red, so that everybody will be informed at once of the dangerous nature of their contents. Gasoline and benzine are actually more dangerous than gunpowder. You can hold a lighted match within an inch of a barrel of gunpowder, if you choose to run the risk, and so long as the blaze does not reach the gunpowder it will not ignite.

Mr. FOSTER. I would rather you held it than I.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I would take a mighty small barrel to begin with. But in the department we have made the experiment of taking a few drops of benzine and holding a lighted match within two or three inches of it, and, without heating the liquid, but leaving it at its ordinary temperature, there was an explosion. One can easily understand, therefore, how, in a freight car or store car, if there was leakage from one of these barrels, and the circulation of air was not perfect, the gas would accumulate, and there would be great danger of explosion. Therefore, it has been thought advisable that all the vessels containing these volatile oils should be covered red. There is a new clause requiring each refiner of coal oil to register at the department and pay a fee of $1. I may be asked why we make this charge, as thus far no license fee has been imposed upon the refiners of coal oil; but, as we propose now to inspect the oil at the refineries instead of inspecting it at a point thousands of miles distant from the refinery, it will be easily understood that it will be indispensable that every one of the refiners should report himself to the department, so that our officers should know where to go to test the oil. These are the principal changes made by the Bill.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

INSPECTION OF WHEAT.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 132) to amend the General Inspection Act. He said: I will not take up the time of the House by entering into a lengthy explanation at present. I consider this a most important Bill, because it attempts as far as possible to remedy the complaints about the unsatisfactory inspection of wheat, and which culminated towards the end of the last season owing to the way in which some of the wheat was damaged by the rains of the previous fall. Before introducing this Bill, the department gave notice to all the parties who appeared likely to take an interest in the question, and to give a valuable opinion upon it. About a month ago nearly 100 gentlemen, principally from the North-west, but also some representing the Boards of Trade of Toronto and Montreal, and several millers of Ontario, met together here and had considerable discussion on the subject. The Bill has been drafted by a committee consisting of gentlemen who represent the different interests, including the wheat-growers of the North-west. I am not ready to say that it will give universal satisfaction, as I have already been given to understand that some of the millers of Ontario do not approve of all the provisions of the Bill, though it has been prepared with the greatest care. We have even gone so far as not to leave to the Governor General in Council the right to make regulations under which the inspection shall be carried on; but we have embodied in the Bill all the regulations covering the inspection of wheat. I may say further, that this Bill is intended especially and exclusively to apply to the inspection of wheat in the North-west.

Mr. SPROULE. May I ask my hon. friend if he got the memorial of the millers of Ontario issued recently with regard to this Bill?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have received a paper published under the authority of the Dominion Millers' Association, in which this passage occurs:

I inclose papers which speak for themselves, and regret I cannot send you a copy of the proposed Government regulations, but if they should become law they would mean tremendous loss to Ontario millers. Please write your member at Ottawa, or get somebody who has strong influence to write him, sending him these papers, and urge him to impress on the Government the necessity of doing justice to the milling interests of Ontario.

This Bill appears to be opposed by the Millers' Association, who anticipate that it is going to work injuriously to their industry, and I hope that the hon. gentleman, before he proceeds with the Bill, will give the millers ample time to be heard upon the subject.

Sir HENRI JOLY DE LOTBINIERE.

I hope the hon. gentleman, before he proceeds with the Bill, will give ample time to the millers to present their objections to it.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). As I explained a moment ago, the Bill was asked for specially by the North-west—by the farmers, dealers and exporters in the North-west. When we had the meeting to which I have alluded, the millers, as far as I can remember—some of them, at all events—were certainly represented, and it was only lately I got the protest to which my hon. friend has alluded. As he will notice, I took occasion to draw the attention of the House at once to the fact that, very likely, some clauses might not be acceptable to the millers in the North-west. I shall be very glad, however, to consider all sides of the matter and suspend for a short time the passing of the Bill which is now before the House, and with the contents of which every one can make himself familiar.

INQUIRIES FOR RETURNS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) to a return that has been laid on the Table in compliance with an Order of the House dated 24th April, 1899, calling for copies of all letters, telegrams and communications from Archer Martin, of Victoria, B.C., barrister-at-law, to the Minister of the Interior, or the Deputy Minister, or any officer of the Department of the Interior, relating to the granting or recognition of any permit or authority to take or import liquor into the Yukon district, or relating to the importation of liquor into the Yukon district, and all replies to such letters, telegrams and communications. The return brought down seems to be incomplete. It relates to the correspondence respecting permission given in the case of Pritcher and Lizer and George A. Gardner, but does not refer to a case in regard to which I am personally aware that correspondence took place, the case of Macaulay. I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister to this, so that he may supplement the return, if it is incomplete, as it seems to be.

Mr. PRIOR. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the attention of the Government to a return I moved for with regard to the Commercial Telegraph Construction Syndicate. It was called for on the 9th May, and I would like, if possible, to have it brought down at once. The correspondence cannot be very voluminous. There is also another return of great importance which I asked for on the 20th March, with regard to the petition addressed to His Excellency by the members of the Turner Administration of British Columbia. Will the right hon. First Minister see that this is brought down at once?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I will.

FRAUDULENT PACKING OF APPLES.

Mr. JOHN McMILLAN (South Huron). I have received a letter which I would like to bring before the House, inclosing an article from the Toronto "World," which I think I also ought to read. The letter is as follows:—

My dear Sir,—I have forwarded to-day to your address a copy of the Toronto "World," with an editorial marked. Probably you have seen this editorial ere this reaches you, but, if not, will you kindly allow me to draw your attention to it. You are aware that very few of the farmers of Canada pack their own apples. If the Minister of Agriculture and Professor Robertson do not know this, I think they should be made aware of the fact, and withdraw this charge against the farmers of Canada. There is, no doubt, a large number of barrels of apples improperly packed for the European market, but before making this damaging charge against the farmers of Canada, let us know who packs the apples.

Let me now read just an extract from this editorial:

It's a crime against the country to send to Great Britain fruit that is packed in such a way as to wilfully deceive purchasers in that country. This kind of trickery must be reserved exclusively for us in Canada who live in cities. If our good friend the farmer will persist in doing this kind of thing in Europe, we will have to use some pretty rough language against him, for he is not giving his own country a fair deal. He is at the same time injuring his own prospects. The practice must be stopped, and if it can be done in no other way, the Government must interfere and devise means for this purpose. The Minister of Agriculture and Professor Robertson are authority for these charges of dishonesty against the farmers of Canada. The former states that thousands of fraudulent barrels of Ontario apples were sent to England last year, much to the great disgrace of Canada. Come, now, Mr Farmer, do you want to go to jail? Hadn't you better join the Church and live a godly life, giving full weight and a just measure? For the Lord, you know, loves a just balance. So do the people of Great Britain; so much so that they will pitch you and your apples into the sea if your fraudulent practices are continued.

This refers to a meeting that took place before the Agricultural Committee, where the subject of the packing of apples and their export to the old country was thoroughly discussed. I made the statement there myself, that few of the farmers in western Ontario packed their own apples. Agents come around, and purchase the apples, and then have them packed. In the locality where I live, the farmers only pull the apples, which are then packed under the direction of the agents who buy them. All that the farmer has to do with them, after they are pulled, is to draw the barrels to the railway station. With the packing into the barrels he has nothing to do. I hold, therefore, that it is a slander on the farmers of this country to circulate such a statement. I do not propose to say anything with regard to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, who is here, and can speak for himself; but I do not believe that he made any such statement in the committee. I would not consider myself justified, as a representative of the farming community, and especially after receiving this communication from one of the leading farmers in my locality, in allowing the statement to go forth uncontradicted, that the farmers of this country are guilty of the practice charged against them. We have honest and dishonest farmers, just as we have honest and dishonest people in other classes of the country, but in this instance the farmers are not the persons responsible. One thing is undoubted, that the packing of our apples is very much in need of a thorough overhauling.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member must move the adjournment of the House, if he is going to speak at any further length.

Mr. McMILLAN. I have done.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not rise for the purpose of challenging for a moment the statement as to the extreme honesty of the farmers of Ontario, but I wish to draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that you have allowed a long article to be read from a newspaper and a long speech to be made, without raising the question that it was all out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am very sorry to hear criticism volunteered as to my conduct in the Chair by the leader of the Opposition. I cannot quite ignore it. I must say I was expecting every moment that the hon. member who first spoke (Mr. McMillan), who is an old and experienced member of the House, would ask a question of the Government on the point to which he referred. Certainly he should not have made statements at this stage of the proceedings without either moving the adjournment of the House or asking a question of the Government.

Mr. McMILLAN. I certainly apologize for not putting myself in order by concluding with a motion. But I thought my remarks so few that no person would take objection to them. I now move the adjournment of the House in order that any statements may be made that any other hon. gentleman desires to make.

Mr. JAMES CLANCY (Bothwell). I regret that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) took his seat without moving the adjournment of the House, and I will conclude with a motion to put myself in order. I am glad the hon. gentleman has drawn the attention of the Government, and especially the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher), to a statement which is exceedingly unfair to the farming community of this country. The statement was broadly made at the committee to which the hon. gentleman refers, and repeated—I am not sure but that the Minister of Agriculture himself was one of the chief sinners in that respect—that the farmers had been dishonest in the selection and packing of the apples that had been sent abroad. I think it is the experience of every hon. gentleman in this House that in very few cases—in my own experience I know not one case—of a farmer packing the apples. The apples are bought by the shippers and are by them packed and sent away. I think it is well that the attention of the Government should be drawn to this extremely unfair reflection on a class who are not more or less honest than other people, but who do not deserve to be singled out as specially dishonest in a matter affecting a great trade with England. If some system of inspection could be provided, some means devised of heading off those persons who, for mere love of gain, do send a class of goods to the English market that turn out very badly, beyond all doubt it would be a good thing in the public interest. I am glad the hon. gentleman has brought this matter up, because it offers an opportunity to remove an unfair imputation made against a large class in this country. I beg to move the adjournment of the House.

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). I think it would be only fair to myself, as well as to the House to say that the statements made in the article which was read by my hon. friend from South Huron (Mr. McMillan) in regard to myself and Prof. Robertson are an entire misrepresentation of anything we said on the occasion referred to. It is true that on a certain occasion I directed Prof. Robertson, one of the officers of my department, to bring up the question of the packing of Canadian apples, because we had found, during last year especially, that great difficulty had arisen in the English market because our apples were not properly packed and had arrived in England in such a condition as had led to accusation even of deliberate fraud by the English importers against the packers and exporters of apples from Canada. On a former occasion, when this question was brought up, some gentlemen thought it was better that the difficulty should be glossed over or suppressed, on the ground that any statement in regard to it might injure the apple trade abroad. That suppression does not seem to have accomplished any good; on the contrary, last season there were the most glaring examples of the export from Canada of badly packed apples—and when I say badly packed, I do not mean that the packages were bad or that the method of handling the apples was bad, but that the people who had packed the apples had deliberately put the good apples at the ends of the barrels and filled the barrels up with trash. I speak strongly, because the specimens that were examined by the agent of my department in England proved conclusively that these accusations against the packers of Canadian apples were true, and I believe that it is better that the people of this country, and those especially who are engaged in this trade, should understand the danger they incur and the difficulty being encountered in consequence of the fact that some people engaged in that trade—not all by any means—have been doing this kind of work. I therefore wished to bring it before the Committee on Agriculture and have it thoroughly ventilated in the country, to see what remedy could be applied and by what means the application of that remedy could best be carried out. As to accusations against the farmers of Canada, I made none, nor did Prof. Robertson. I did not mention farmers or packers, but simply called attention to the fact that people, whether farmers or packers, who had packed apples in this way, had done a great wrong to our country, and had endangered a large trade, which could be built up by honest methods, and which will, I am sure, be built up by honest methods, so as to do a great deal of good in the country. I am satisfied that it is only by the exposure of dishonest methods of this kind that we can bring them to an end, and that any suppression of the facts or any trying to hide the facts will only encourage these dishonest people to continue their practices. Therefore, I wish to bring the matter to the public attention, for I believe that the drawing of public attention to the facts is the best means to suppress dishonesty of this kind. The worse than insinuations that are contained in the article that has been read as to a statement of myself or Prof. Robertson against the reputation of the farmers of Canada are entirely without foundation and untrue. I wished simply to put this matter before the House as I have done.

Mr. GILMOUR. I venture to say that the inference drawn by the "World" is correct on the evidence given before the Agriculture Committee. I would remind the Minister of Agriculture that one of his staff, in dealing with this question, stated that the farmers down in Nova Scotia watched the packer with a gun. What inference could be drawn from that, I would like to know, but that the farmer dictated terms to the packer in the packing of the apples? The "World" is correct in drawing that inference, but the impression that the farmer is responsible is wrong, as a matter of fact. The packer and the farmer are two separate persons. I have sold apples to the packer, but I have shipped more apples than I have sold in that way, and in no case that I have known did the farmer have anything to do with the packing of the apples that the packer sent away. I think it is desirable that improvements should be made in the shipment of apples, but you will need to know who the parties are who are offending before you can correct the evil.

Mr. SPROULE. So far as the farmers in my part of the country are concerned, they do not usually pack the apples at all. The dealers buy the apples, and the farmers pull them and lay them on the ground at the foot of the tree or in a building where they can be protected from the weather. The packer sends a gang of men, supposed to be experts in the business, who pack the apples, and the farmers draw them to market. If there is any dishonesty it cannot be attributed to the farmer, because he has no say whatever in the selection or packing of the fruit.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). I think if this business is to be properly adjusted so as to gain for Canada the credit that she deserves for the exportation of good fruit, the Government should take immediate steps to secure the inspection of all apples exported, or to give an opportunity to parties exporting apples to have them inspected. I do not know whether it would be wise to exclude those who want to export apples without inspection. But I think it is well, in order to put the trade on a proper basis, that immediate steps should be taken to offer the privilege of having apples inspected that are to be exported, and the package branded as inspected by a Government brand. The people of England then would realize that when they bought apples from Canada they would buy apples that had been inspected and branded as of a certain quality, and of a certain kind. If, on the other hand, they choose to buy without any inspection, they would have to run their own risk. But owing to the evident danger of this very important trade, and this growing trade, I think the Government should at once take steps to protect the interest of that trade in Canada, and to secure to the people of England proper value when they invest their money in Canadian fruit, by having it inspected and branded at the point of export. They would then know what they were buying, and in that way you will increase the reputation of Canadian apples, and you cannot do it otherwise. Merely talking about it in this House will not make honest men of dishonest men, or control the men that go round buying apples. I agree with that portion of the remarks of the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule), when he says that most people sell the product of their orchards, and that packers go around and pack the apples. It is the same in our section of the country. As a rule, the farmers do not do their own packing, but men come along to buy apples, to see what a man has got to sell, and having bought the orchard, they send men there who do the packing themselves. In that case it is unfair to hold farmers responsible when poor apples are put in the centre of the barrel. In order to prevent that wrong, we should place the apple trade on a proper basis, and I do not think that we can do it in any other way than by inspection.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). The hon. member from Montreal, St. Lawrence Division (Mr. Penny), has a Bill on the Order paper (No. 55), which I have examined with him. It appears to provide in a certain degree such precautions as will prevent the difficulty complained of. The hon. member is not present at this time in order to describe the precautions that will be taken. I told him that I would gladly incorporate his Bill with our Bill. One of the clauses reads :

In inspecting a barrel or half-barrel of such fruit, the inspector shall either open one or both ends of the barrel, or loosen one of the staves, or empty the fruit out of the barrel ; in inspecting boxes, he shall open one or more sides, or empty the fruit out of the box ; in inspecting baskets, he shall either inspect the fruit from the top or empty it out

Of course, it is only a certain proportion of the barrels that shall be open.

The duty of an inspector shall be to inspect not less than ten per cent of each variety of apples, pears or other fruit, &c.

So I think that when this Bill comes before the House and we are in committee upon it, we may consider the precautions suggested, some of which may be incorporated in the General Inspection Act.

Mr. R. R. McLENNAN (Glengarry). A year or two ago, since this Government took office, I brought a Bill before this House for the purpose of branding cheese and butter, and registering the brand with the Dairy Commissioner, so that we would have a record of it the same as you have a record of the registration of a piece of property. This would be kept in a book prepared for that purpose, containing the date and the number of the factory. This system might be extended to those who are packing apples, and who should register themselves as packers. If that were done, then you could place upon the man the responsibility of exporting a bad article to Great Britain. You would then have a record with the Dairy Commissioner of that mark or brand, and number of the article registered. You could then see at once who was guilty of packing and exporting an inferior article. This proposition was submitted to the farmers and to the people who were most interested, and I think about 95 per cent of them, at least 90 per cent, were in favour of such a system as the registration of the date and the number of the factory. If this system were carried out in respect to apples, there is no doubt that there would be no further trouble. It is necessary to establish the name of the exporter, the place where he lives, the date of the export and everything else. But although 95 per cent of the farmers and the people most interested were in favour of that scheme, the Bill was thrown out, and the consequence is that we are now shipping from the country an inferior article. At present we do not know who is guilty of committing the fraud that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Fisher) says has been perpetrated by people in this country to the great injury of the apple trade. We realize that it must be a great injury to this country, and I think it about time that the Minister of Agriculture should say what he proposes to do to prevent that sort of thing. I think it is very much in the interest of this country that he should deal with this matter at the earliest possible moment.

Mr. CLANCY. With the permission of the House, I beg to withdraw the motion.

Motion to adjourn withdrawn.

INQUIRY FOR RETURN.

Mr. BELL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to ask the Government when we are likely to have printed copies of the Report of the Commissioner on the Crow's Nest Pass Railway matter, moved for on Friday, May 19?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I cannot give the information to my hon. friend. I can only say that I will inquire and see that the thing is expedited.

AMENDMENTS TO INLAND REVENUE ACT.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) moved that Bill (No. 124) to amend the Inland Revenue Act, be read the second time.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 1,

1. The paragraph substituted for paragraph (g) of section 121 of the Inland Revenue Act, chapter 34 of the Revised Statutes, by section 3 of chapter 46 of the statutes of 1891, is hereby amended by striking out the word "one" in the fourteenth line and substituting therefor the word "two."

Mr. FOSTER. What is really done for striking out "one" and substituting "two"?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). The clause substitutes the word "two" for the word "one." It means 200 instead of 100, and I may explain what the object of the change is. It refers to chemical stills. The maximum capacity of chemical stills is at present limited to 100 gallons, which has been found too small for the large concerns, such as

Mr. McLENNAN (Glengarry).

Parke, Davis & Company, and others, who are manufacturing drugs of different kinds on a large scale for export, and it is proposed to allow stills to be used of the capacity of 200 gallons instead of 100 gallons.

Mr. FOSTER. Does this apply to illicit stills as well as others?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No. If they had as great capacity as that we would find it more easy to discover them. They are so small that they can hide them away with greater ease.

On clause 2,

2. Paragraph (a) of subsection 1 of section 131 of the said Act is hereby repealed and the following is substituted therefor:—

"(a) Upon the grain used for its production, at the rate of one gallon of proof spirits for every twenty and four-tenths pounds,—or, in a distillery where malt only is used, upon the malt used for its production, at the rate of one gallon of proof spirits for every twenty-four pounds."

Mr. FOSTER. Why does my hon. friend introduce the fraction there?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. It has been so fixed by law. We have to assess the distilleries which do not produce one gallon of proof spirits from each 20 4-10ths pounds of the grain used. The distilleries must produce one gallon of spirit for each 20 4-10ths pounds of grain used, and if they produce less than that we assess them on the assumption that by some unfair means a part of the spirit has been unfairly removed from inspection. But there is a distinction between the production of spirits from malted barley and from raw grain. The production from malted barley is less than from raw grain. The sort of whisky produced from grain is called rye; it is produced by a certain process of distillation which is well known. Malt whisky goes by the name of Scotch whisky or Irish whisky, or any other name they choose to give it, and it is manufactured in a different way. It is manufactured in what is called pot-stills.

Mr. FOSTER. Pot-stills?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) will not think I am pedantic in making use of all these terms with which I do not claim to be very familiar. Instead of being produced by means of distillation, as is rye whisky, malt whisky is manufactured over a fire in pot-stills. One kind of whisky takes a greater number of pounds of grain than another, and it has been represented that it would not be fair to assess the two products in the same way, because one of them requires 23 pounds of grain for each gallon of spirit produced, while the other one only requires 20 pounds. It is not fair to assess these two productions in the same way, for the three pounds difference multiplied by hundreds and hundreds, would reach a considerable amount.

Mr. FOSTER. I understand the hon. gentleman's explanation thoroughly, but I am not sure that the hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) did, and I think it would be well for the benefit of the hon. Minister of Customs and the hon. junior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell), that the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue should be a little more explicit about these pot-stills.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The only way to find out the difference between the two is to taste them, and I am afraid my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) would not do that.

Mr. HAGGART. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue whether this Act is to have a retrospective effect, whether it is to apply to liquors already manufactured?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. To tell the truth, we have not considered this question. I think it would, perhaps, be well to say that this Act will go into force only on the day of its sanction.

Mr. HAGGART. I think it is intended to cover liquors at present in bond, and I thought, perhaps, the wording was not clear enough that it would have a retrospective effect. At least it ought to have.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Would my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) suggest that we should make an addition to this by stating that this section will apply to spirits actually in bonded warehouses?

Mr. HAGGART. I think it ought to. I think, perhaps, the section is intended to be retrospective, and I would like to know from the hon. Minister whether it is or not.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. It might, perhaps, be as well for the committee to rise, and I will examine that point.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would suggest to the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue that clause 3, which we have not yet reached, might be reconsidered and drafted in a different style. For instance, instead of, as it appears there, referring to Acts and subsections as being repealed, it would be well to repeal the clause absolutely, and re-enact a new clause. It will be clearer to have the whole clause struck out and a new one substituted.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. It is rather a curious anomaly, but, in connection with manufactured tobacco, we have stamps for every fraction of a pound, except one-third of a pound, this third clause is to provide for that, and we will have to get that stamp.

Mr. FOSTER. Will this necessitate the making of a new stamp?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes, we will have to make a new stamp.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope my hon. friend will depend on his own head for these stamps, and not consult the Postmaster General.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I think my hon. friend (Mr. Foster) is most unjust in the way he alludes in alluding to the postage stamps issued by the Postmaster General. Since my hon. friend introduced the subject, I think it would be well to give him to understand the motto on our postage stamps. We have seen what "Punch" said about it.

Mr. FOSTER. Will you put what "Punch" said, in the Bill?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No, but I have here in my pocket the poem from which the quotation is taken, and I will beg leave to refer to it for the information of gentlemen who may not be acquainted with its origin. I think the stamp and the quotation reflect credit on the classical knowledge and artistic taste of my hon. friend the Postmaster General.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will there be a new clause in the Bill embodying that?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. "We hold a vaster empire than has been." I am not a betting man, as the leader of the Opposition said yesterday, speaking of himself, but, nevertheless, I am ready to bet that half of the hon. members opposite do not know where this quotation comes from. I will tell them. I must say, that the hon. the Postmaster General would not tell me where he took it from, but ultimately, after a good deal of trouble, I had the pleasure of discovering where it came from. It is from Sir Lewis Morris' poem.

Mr. FOSTER. Sir Louis Davies.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. It is taken from Sir Lewis Morris' "A Song of Empire," bearing date June 20th, 1887, and occurring in the seventh last line of the poem. Here are two couplets, in which the quotation appears:

Whoever guides our helm of state,
Let all men know it, England shall be great—
We hold a vaster empire than has been—
Nigh half the race of men is subject to our Queen!

I do not think the hon. the Postmaster General need be ashamed of having given that quotation. He did not give it as a Canadian only, but he gave it as a subject of the British Empire, and, though he belongs to this side of the House, every one will adopt it as a loyal sentiment.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear hear.

The committee rose and reported progress.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to draw your attention to the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. the Minister of Inland Revenue, after having quoted from that public document, has not laid it on the Table.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I am just about to lay it on the Table at this moment.

Mr. WALLACE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would print the whole poem on his new inland revenue stamp.

Mr. SPEAKER. We are not considering the Bill at the present time.

AMENDMENTS TO THE BANKING ACT.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 127) to amend "The Bank Act".

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

The House resolved itself into committee on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would ask, whether this Bill has been carefully considered by the Department of Justice in connection with the powers it confers. I am not at all objecting to the Bill; but, of course, it is somewhat an unusual measure, as it deals with the exercise of powers and rights outside of Canada. Has it been carefully considered, as to whether we are going, not only beyond the usual legislation in connection with Canadian banks, but as to what our authority is, so far as outside of Canada is concerned.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Although there has been no formal reference of the Bill to the Department of Justice, I think the Minister of Justice believes it to be satisfactory. However, in view of the suggestion of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), I will have that point submitted to the Department of Justice. Of course, we can grant no power in any other colony. All we can do is to grant power to the bank itself, subject to the first clause, that this can only be done in a colony where the local laws will permit it. But in deference to the hon. gentleman's remark, I will see that it is brought to the attention of the Minister of Justice before the final stage of the Bill.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I did not suppose that there would be any serious difficulty with regard to the point suggested by my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), for the reason that this Parliament has the right to give to the bank power to carry on business out of Canada, subject, of course, to the laws of any colony where the bank proposes to carry on business; just as the Parliament of Canada or a local legislature could authorize a corporation to carry on business outside of Canada, though that corporation in carrying on business outside of Canada would be subject to the laws of any country in which it saw fit to carry on business, and it would be recognized in a foreign country only by the comity of nations. Nevertheless, it would be recognized, and I do not think Parliament would be exceeding its authority by giving such a corporation power to carry on business in a foreign country.

Mr. FOSTER.

Mr. ELLIS. I would like to ask the Finance Minister if he is not giving the bank greater power than the country itself possesses; that is to say, the country itself could not issue currency in a foreign country, but you are giving the bank power to do it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. We are not giving the bank any power to issue currency further than it has at present. All we are doing, so far as the bank is concerned, is to say that we have no objection to its issuing this currency. How far it can make that provision useful to itself in another colony is a matter entirely between the bank and that colony, and in regard to that, the bank must be subject to all the laws of the colony. For example, the Bank of Nova Scotia is doing business in the Island of Jamaica. We give it the authority, which it would not otherwise possess, to issue a note for a pound sterling; but when that note goes into Jamaica, it does not become a legal tender there unless it is made such by the laws of that colony. But if the bank issues these notes in Jamaica and the people of the colony have such faith in the bank that they are willing to accept those notes, we have no objection to its doing so, but on the contrary, we have every desire to encourage it.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). A corporation has the power which is given to it by the legislature which brings the corporation into existence, that is, this legislature. We give the bank power to issue these notes; but if it does any business in a country outside of Canada, it then becomes subject to the laws of the locality in which it does business. Therefore, it will necessarily exercise the power given to it by the Dominion subject to the laws and regulations of the place where it attempts to exercise that power. This Bill gives the bank the power which it intends to exercise in the locality, and which can only be conferred by us. It seems to me there can be no difficulty about it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I see no good reason to disagree with the opinions that have been offered. My point was rather—and the Minister of Finance has met it—that in the case of legislation of this character, especially with regard to banks, we should have the advantage of the revision of the whole Bill by the Department of Justice. The Minister of Finance, I understand, before the Bill takes its final stage, will see that it is examined by that department.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. There will be no formal reference of the Bill to the Department of Justice; but I will see that, before the final stage of the Bill is reached, in deference to the hon. gentleman's suggestion, that department is asked to consider it.

Mr. HAGGART. Has the bank to make the usual deposit with the Government here in regard to the circulation in Jamaica?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Yes.

Mr. HAGGART. And are the other banks subject to the abatement?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The general provisions of the Bank Act will apply to all circulation issued in this way.

Bill reported as amended, and amendments concurred in.

I. C. R.—EXTENSION TO MONTREAL.

Resolutions respecting the Drummond County Railway reported from Committee of the Whole, read the second time and concurred in.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 133) to authorize the acquisition by the Dominion of the Drummond County Railway.

Mr. H. F. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Finance to a matter in relation to which I made a statement to the House last evening when the resolutions were under discussion. I referred to an agreement entered into between the Allan Co., the Nova Scotia Government and the Dominion Government twenty years ago with respect to the construction and the operation of the Eastern Extension Railway of Nova Scotia and the taking over of the Truro branch. I asked the Minister of Finance if it was not a fact that that agreement gave authority to the Government of Canada to take over those railways even after the Eastern Extension Railway had been delivered to the Nova Scotia Government. The hon. Finance Minister stated that I was correct except in respect of the last sentence of my statement, and that is the one which applied to the authority of the Dominion Government taking over the road. I had not time to consult the public documents, which were then in the library, and which I sent for, but did not get in time to have the matter brought up before the discussion was completed. I have now that agreement in my hand, and I find that the statement that I made last night is sustained by the terms of that agreement. Before that agreement was entered into, I might say that another agreement existed previous to that between the Government of Nova Scotia and the Allan Company for the construction of a road known as the Eastern Extension; and when the Holmes-Thompson Government of Nova Scotia came into power in 1878 they found that the Allan Company were in difficulties with the previous Government with respect to carrying on the work of building the railway. They found that the agreement, under which that work was carried on, was not such as gave to the province of Nova Scotia that security for the construction and operation of the road which to them seemed necessary, and they took advantage of that fact to go before the Government of Canada to renew their negotiations for the further carrying on of that work and the further protection of the interests of Nova Scotia in its construction and operation. A new agreement was entered into on the 1st of February, 1879, and from one of its clauses I will read an extract which sustains the point I have just stated with regard to the necessity for making a new agreement:

An Act to incorporate—

Referring to the Act under which the work was being done previously.

An Act to incorporate the Halifax and Cape Breton Railway and Coal Company—and doubts have arisen as to the validity of the incorporation of the said company, and the acts done by it as a corporation, and it has been agreed that the Government of Nova Scotia shall confer with the company in procuring the declaratory legislation, confirming their proceedings for incorporation, and all acts done as such corporation,—

Then I find that the first clause proceeds as follows:—

The Government of the Dominion will recommend the passage of an Act by the Parliament of Canada at the approaching session of said Parliament, repealing the said Act, 40th Vic., chap. 46, and providing in effect that as security for the purposes aforesaid, the Pictou and Truro Branch Railway, including sufficient land for the purposes thereof, and the stations and buildings thereon, necessary for the use of the railway, but without any of the rolling stock therein referred to as the "Pictou Branch" shall be retained by the Dominion Government until the said Eastern Extension Railway to the Strait of Canso and the steam ferry across the strait are completed, equipped and established in accordance with the existing contract, or any modification thereof that may be agreed to by the company and the said Nova Scotia Government, to the satisfaction of the Nova Scotia Government; and further providing that upon such completion the absolute right of property in the said Pictou Branch shall be conveyed to the company on the following terms:—

I might say, before reading further, that the previous agreement provided—speaking from memory, and I think my recollection is exact—for a transfer of the Pictou branch, as soon as $400,000 was expended by the company in the construction of the road. The people of Nova Scotia looked upon this secuerty as insufficient, and the facts, as they appear at this particular period when this agreement was entered into, justify that apprehension on their part. That is why the Government of the day saw proper to further secure the interests of Nova Scotia in the matter. The agreement provides further :

(a) That the company, after the completion of the said railway to the Strait of Canso and the establishment of said ferry, shall efficiently and continuously operate the said two lines of railway and the ferry at the Strait of Canso, to the satisfaction of the Lieutenant Governor of Nova Scotia in Council, at a fair and reasonable tariff of charges, which shall be made and established by the said company, subject to the approval of the Government of Nova Scotia, and which shall only be altered or amended with the assent and approval of the said Government of Nova Scotia, and any difference of opinion as to any item of the tariff to be so agreed to, shall be submitted to the Minister of Public Works of the Dominion as the referee, whose decision shall be final and binding on both parties.

(b) That in the event of the said existing contract, with any modification thereof that may be agreed to by the company and the Nova Scotia Government not being performed to the satisfaction of such Government, and the said Eastern Extension Railway and ferry not being completed, equipped and established in accordance with said contract, or in the event of the failure of the company for a period of three months to operate the said railways and ferry efficiently and continuously, to wit, by running at least one passenger train over the whole line each way daily except Sundays, and such freight trains as may be sufficient for the conveyance of the freight offered for carriage, and the ferry in such a manner as to connect with passenger trains, the two lines of railway, including the ferry, shall become the property of the Nova Scotia Government, free from any incumbrance of any kind whatsoever created by the company (the power of the company to create incumbrances to be made subject to this agreement), the said period of three months to commence and be computed from the date at which the Nova Scotia Government shall cause to be served on the said company, in the manner provided by the eighteenth section of the said Act, 39th Vic., chap. 74, a notice claiming that the said railways and ferries, or one or either of them, or said ferry, are not or is not being efficiently and continuously operated as aforesaid: the said Minister of Public Works to be the referee in case of a dispute between the company and the Nova Scotia Government, as to forfeiture having been incurred.

Now, a forfeiture was incurred by the company, and the Nova Scotia Government took over the road from the company at a valuation of $1,200,000 or thereabouts.

(c) That in the event of the said two lines of railway and ferry becoming the property of the Nova Scotia Government under the preceding subclause, before the said Eastern Extension Railway and ferry are completed, equipped and established, the said last named railway and ferry shall, with all reasonable despatch, be completed, equipped and established by the Nova Scotia Government, and the said two lines and ferry shall be thereafter efficiently and continuously operated by the Nova Scotia Government to the satisfaction of the Governor General of the Dominion in Council at a fair and reasonable tariff of charges, which shall be made and established by the Nova Scotia Government, subject to the approval of the Government of the Dominion, and which shall only be altered or amended with the assent and approval of the said last named Government.

(d) That in the event of the failure of the Nova Scotia Government to complete, equip and establish the said Eastern Extension Railway and ferry with all reasonable despatch, as above provided for, or in the event of their failure for a period of three months to operate the said railway and ferry efficiently and continuously, to wit, by running at least one passenger train over the whole line each way daily, except Sundays, and such freight trains as may be sufficient for the conveyance of the freight offered for carriage, and the ferry in such a manner as to connect with the passenger trains, the two lines of railway, including the ferry, shall become the property of the Government of the Dominion, free from any incumbrance of any kind whatsoever created thereon, either by the company or by the Government of Nova Scotia (the power of the company and the Government of Nova Scotia, respectively, to create incumbrances to be made subject to this agreement), the said period of three months to commence and be computed from the date at which the Government of the Dominion shall give to the Provincial Secretary of the Nova Scotia Government a notice claiming that the said railways and ferry, or one or either of them, or said ferry, are not or is not being efficiently and continuously operated as aforesaid; any dispute between the two Governments as to forfeiture having been incurred to be decided by arbitration in the manner hereinafter provided.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I said before, that is the clause in the agreement under which the Government of Canada had the authority to take over that road; and it is the clause under which they exercised that authority. There is this difference, that, as far as I know, the Government of Canada did not voluntarily take advantage of the power vested in them by the agreement in calling the attention of the Nova Scotia Government to their making default in not sufficiently equipping that railway for the traffic offering, and also completing and operating the ferry across the Strait of Canso. Now, before the Government of the Dominion took advantage of the power granted them by this agreement, the Government of Nova Scotia found themselves in this difficulty—that they were unable to secure, I understand, the financial means by which they could equip and operate that road or complete the ferry across the Strait of Canso. In their necessity, they came to the Government of Canada and asked that Government to relieve them from their distressed position with regard to the road. That is my understanding of it, and I think that is the understanding of the whole country, so far as they are conversant with the facts. I was a member of the Government of Nova Scotia when this agreement was entered into. Last night I was depending upon my recollection of what took place. The Minister of Finance should have been more familiar with the question than he appeared to be last night, because for a long time subsequent to the time when I ceased to be a member of the Nova Scotia Government, the hon. gentleman was in negotiation with the Government of Canada with regard to these transactions. Now, there is another point in this matter referred to by the Minister of Finance last night, and that was the difficulty that he discovered in carrying out his negotiations with the Government of the day on that occasion. The Government of Canada was aware—as the people of Nova Scotia were aware—that the Government of Nova Scotia had paid the Allan Company a great deal more for that road than what in the judgment of the people, and especially in the judgment of experienced people, was a proper sum to pay. And if my memory serves me right, an investigation took place in the legislature of Nova Scotia at a subsequent period, about the year 1884 or 1885, which revealed the fact that a large amount of money had been paid to the Allan Company over and above what it was understood the Government of Nova Scotia had authority to pay, the Government having authority, in the event of their taking over the road, to pay the actual outlay of that company over and above the subsidies which were given by the two Governments. I think that investigation revealed the fact that no less than $400,000 was paid to that company by the Nova Scotia Government over and above what that company were entitled to. This statement I make from my recollection of what took place at the time. I have not gone into an examination of the documents, but I am willing to be corrected if the Minister of Finance can show that I am astray in my recollection of what the investigation revealed. I am sure that he cannot now dispute the point which I raised last night, and that is more particularly the fact that the Government of Canada had authority by this agreement to take over this road from the Government of Nova Scotia.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. I am sorry I cannot admit much more than that the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) has read, no doubt correctly, from an agreement which appears in the blue-book. When the hon. gentleman last night made reference to an agreement, asking me whether it did not give the Government of Canada power to acquire the road, I said: Not unless the Government of Nova Scotia proved to be in default. That was the point.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fielding) excuse me. I said in my statement that the Government of Nova Scotia gave evidence that they were in default, that the Dominion Government did not take advantage of the clause before the Nova Scotia Government admitted that they were in default.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. The hon. gentleman is labouring under an entire delusion. Not only was no default admitted, but it was not even alleged. In all the discussions I had the pleasure of having with the Ministers at Ottawa at that time, there was no allegation of that kind. The hon. gentleman says now that the Government of Canada took possession of that property under the clause in that agreement to which he has referred. I beg to tell him that he is entirely mistaken. The Government of Canada did not take over that road under that clause. They took it over under a very different procedure; and in all the discussions I had the privilege of having with the Ministers of the Government, no such ground was taken as the hon. gentleman now advances. He said that the Government of Nova Scotia were in difficulties and came to the Government of Canada and asked to be relieved. That statement has been made two or three times, and so I feel bound to explain what the cause of those difficulties was. I am sorry thus to go into the details of Nova Scotia politics. I realize that hon. members are not very deeply interested in them. So fully have I realized this that I have declined, on more than one occasion, to follow hon. gentlemen who have made statements with which I could not agree, because I felt that the House did not care to hear the matters discussed. When the Government of Nova Scotia went into the money markets to raise money for the purchase of that property, they did experience difficulties. And why? Because, in a great transaction which had taken place between a Government of the province of which the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) was a Minister without portfolio, a great transaction with the banking house of Baring Brothers in London, there were records of the transaction which were not to be found in the offices of the Government, and concerning which the incoming Government had no information. When a member of the incoming Government went to England, he found himself face to face with the complaint on the part of the representatives of the house of Baring Brothers that there was a breach of faith on the part of the Government of Nova Scotia in its dealings with that firm. And when the member of the Government declared that there was no such breach of faith, an extraordinary thing happened. They brought out of the pigeon-holes of that firm an agreement with the Government of Nova Scotia, a copy of which had never been put upon the public records of the province and of which we knew nothing, a cablegram sent by the Prime Minister to Baring Brothers which formed an essential part of the transaction but which the incoming Government of Nova Scotia were not permitted to know about until it was thus taken from the pigeon-holes of the banking house. In the face of such a transaction as that, the Prime Minister of Nova Scotia, who had gone to London, came back and said: I will not attempt to press a financial transaction in London with that great banking firm charging us with a breach of faith. In consequence of that, we were delayed in raising money, there were difficulties, and if any distress occurred, as the hon. gentleman says, it was distress arising entirely out of that important transaction. One point more. My hon. friend says that the Government of Nova Scotia paid too much for this road, and the Dominion Government knew they paid too much, and that was an element entering into the transaction. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. In all the discussions that took place at Ottawa, no shadow of complaint of that sort was ever made. He will search the public records in vain to find that any member of the Government at Ottawa, conducting that negotiation, ever questioned the fairness of the amount that was paid. And how could it be questioned if it was established by arbitrators after a sworn investigation, and the arbitration stands on record? But whether the amount was sufficient or insufficient, I tell the hon. gentleman that in the discussion that took place at Ottawa it was never alleged on behalf of the Dominion Government that the price paid to the Allan Company was too much.

Mr. HAGGART. Before this Bill takes another stage, I would ask the Minister of Railways and Canals if he would be kind enough to bring down certain documents which I will mention to him. First, I would like the map that is attached to the agreement with the Grand Trunk Railway in 1898. The hon. Minister is aware that there is a map of that sort. We have never seen the map; I would like to see it, or a tracing of it, a copy of it. I would like to see the agreement entered into with the Grand Trunk Railway Company in 1890, about the same time as the agreement that was entered into with the Canadian Pacific Railway in reference to the user of the Intercolonial Railway, and the interchange of traffic.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I do not carry in my mind that there was any agreement made in 1890 with the Grand Trunk Railway. I think that the only agreement which was existing and made previously to the one entered into by me, was made in 1879 or 1880. I know of none between those dates.

Mr. HAGGART. Have you an agreement with respect to the interchange of traffic?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You refer to the one of 1879?

Mr. HAGGART. Whatever date it was, or a later one, if you have a later one, with the Grand Trunk Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. We have none.

Mr. FIELDING.

Mr. HAGGART. Then I want to know the amount which was paid to the Drummond Railway under the Subsidy Act, since the agreement was made with them in 1897.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have stated to the hon. gentleman that it was about $126,000, that is my memory. But I will bring in an exact statement.

Mr. HAGGART. Then, I want from the hon. gentleman the amount of money that was expended by the Government, or by the company, under the last agreement with the Drummond County Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Expended on the Drummond County road since it was leased?

Mr. HAGGART. Since it was leased.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. All right, you may have it.

Mr. HAGGART. Then, I want from the hon. gentleman the percentage of the total user, of the total amount for maintenance and wages on the Chaudière branch. I see by the Auditor General's Report that besides the amount we have in the form of income on the Grand Trunk Railway, we pay according to user on the Chaudière branch. I want to know what our percentage is with regard to the other, and what is the total amount of expenditure on the Grand Trunk Railway terminals in Montreal. Give us the percentage that we have to pay on the total amount. I see in the Auditor General's Report that we pay $11,000 or $13,000 for the user, and I want to know what percentage that is of the whole expenditure by the Grand Trunk Railway, the Intercolonial Railway and other roads.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The fifth item I have here is the amount paid to Grand Trunk Railway Company for user of the different sections of the road and of the terminals.

Mr. HAGGART. Yes, and of the amount paid. We have that in the Public Accounts, at least to the end of 1898. I want to find out what is our percentage of the total amount, what proportion it bears to the full amount charged.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Our traffic amounts to about 5 per cent, if that is what the hon. gentleman means.

Mr. POWELL. It is the wheelage.

Mr. HAGGART. On the wheelage or user basis?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. As to the map referred to by the hon. gentleman, he will recollect it was produced before the committee at the time of the investigation. It is rather an important and valuable paper, because it forms part of our contract, and shows on the face of it just what terminals are included in the arrangement which was entered into between the Government and the company. I think it would hardly be possible for me, within a reasonable time, to get a tracing of that, because it is not only a map, but it is quite a series of plans, and they are large and cumbersome. When I produced it before the committee it was for the purpose of inspection by the members of the committee, that they might see just what we were doing. I do not think it would be well to bring that original map here and have it left in the House. It is too valuable and important, it is the only map we have. If the hon. gentleman will suggest any way by which I can abstract from it what he desires, and if it can be done expeditiously, I would be glad to do it.

Mr. HAGGART. The common practice is to lay it on the Table, no matter how valuable the document may be.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Then, I must decline to bring that map and lay it on the Table of the House. I have no objection to affording the hon. gentleman every opportunity of looking at it, or any other hon. gentleman who wishes to see it. But I do hold the opinion that it is altogether too valuable and important a paper to allow it to remain here permanently, or to remain out of the proper custody in the department.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I never heard such an objection made before. The more valuable the paper, the more important and necessary it is for us to see it. It is not injured by being in charge of the officers of the House. There is not the slightest danger of anything happening to it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will take the time which may be necessary to procure as expeditiously as possible a tracing of these maps and bring it here, then it is no matter what becomes of it. But I must say to the House that it would not be wise or prudent for me to bring down an original document of such importance and have it left here outside of the proper custody.

Mr. HAGGART. A tracing is sufficient. But it is a new doctrine that an original document cannot be laid on the Table of the House. I never heard of the objection being taken before.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). My hon. friend forgets one thing. This map is attached to the contract, and my hon. friend surely does not expect that the contract should be taken out of the hands of the proper custodian and brought into the House where it may be mislaid or accidentally destroyed. This is a contract which belongs to the Grand Trunk Railway Company as well as ourselves, and that makes a great difference.

Mr. HAGGART. I never heard before an objection made to lay on the Table of the House any contract that has ever been made.

Mr. POWELL. So far as the tracing is concerned. I think it would be ample, provided the portions were coloured.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The colouring is a vital part of the whole matter, and it will not be of any use, unless the tracing can be coloured.

Mr. POWELL. I thought your remark was simply as to the tracing.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. The tracing can be coloured.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—THE TRACKMEN'S STRIKE ON G. T. R.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. E. F. CLARKE (West Toronto). Mr. Speaker, before you leave the Chair, I deem it to be my duty to draw the attention of the Government, and especially of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), to a condition of things which exists on the Grand Trunk Railway system, due to the strike that has taken place of the trackmen in the employ of that company. It seems to me that it is not out of place that a matter of such importance should be brought to the attention of Parliament. I would not like anything I may say to prejudice the case either of the company or the men. The demands which have been made by the men, however, seem to me to be reasonable demands—to be demands, at any rate, that are worthy of the consideration of the management of the road; but, from what I have been able to glean from the reports of the proceedings, as between the men and the company, there does not seem to be any likelihood of an amicable settlement being reached, at all events in the near future. The company owe something to the men, but they owe something also to the travelling public. There is a danger that the strike may spread, as a result of the determination of the company not to treat with the men, to other classes of the operatives, and I think it is the duty of the Government, at the earliest possible moment, to interfere, as far as it can and may interfere, and endeavour by all reasonable means to try and secure an amicable settlement as between the men and the company. The statement of the men is to the effect, that they are paid $1 for each day they are employed in the company's service; that some 2 or 3 cents are taken from that $1, and that the net result to them of the day's labour, sometimes exceeding ten, eleven and twelve hours, is 97 cents. I have no hesitation in saying, and I take the responsibility of saying it, that any white man in Canada who is compelled to work outdoors in all seasons for from ten to twelve hours a day, is not overpaid, but that he is underpaid, when he only receives 97 cents for his services. In view of the obligations of these great carrying companies to the country, and in view of the fact that the lives and property of the people of Canada may be placed in jeopardy by this strike, should this strike, unfortunately, continue and not be settled amicably at the earliest possible moment, I think the Government should interfere in this matter. The representatives of the company, if they are correctly reported, have intimated to the representatives of the trackmen, that it is not possible for them to consider their demands for recognition and for a higher wage, in view of the fact that the financial arrangements they have made to carry on the company's business will preclude them from giving the trackmen any additional wages. It seems to me that this is not enough, that it is not a perfectly satisfactory answer to these men. These men have the right, as Canadians, to receive reasonable and fair treatment from their employers, and, if they can establish the fact that they are compelled to work ten, eleven, thirteen, and sometimes fifteen and eighteen hours, as I am advised, a day, and only receive for that a miserable pittance of 97 cents, the sooner that condition of things is put a stop to, as far as it is in the power of the Government to do so, the better it will be for all concerned, and for the fame of this country. I hope that the Government will exercise its undoubted influence, as mediators between the company and the men, and endeavour, at once, to put a stop to this unfortunate condition of things, and interfere, as far as they can, to secure amelioration of the condition of these workmen. I have taken the earliest opportunity of bringing this matter before the House, because I think it is one of the greatest importance to the people of Canada, and, so far as I have heard yet, the claims of the men have not received that consideration that I believe they are justly entitled to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I have followed the newspaper reports that have been published from day to day in respect to the difficulty which the hon. member (Mr. Clarke) refers to. But I must confess that, so far as I am individually concerned, I have not been able to form any opinion as to the side of the controversy upon which the right inclines. I may agree, and I do not know but what I do agree, with what the hon. gentleman has said, as to the low wage many of the employees of our railways are receiving, having regard, perhaps, particularly to the long hours which they are required to work. But I cannot shut my eyes to the fact that, in a large measure, this question is a question of supply and demand. One might sympathize—I might, as a member of the Government, sympathize, and do sympathize, to the utmost degree, with the men in that struggle, and yet it would not follow that any duty devolved upon me, as the head of the Railway Department, to intervene between the parties. There is certainly no duty devolving under any statute of which I have any knowledge. I do not think the Railway Department is charged with the responsibility of settling these difficulties, and I may say, right here, that I do not agree with the hon. gentleman, if he thinks that any good end would be served by the early intervention of any outside authority in a struggle of this kind. I believe that it is possible that a stage might be reached, after these people on each side have endeavoured to come together themselves, when such intermediaries as they might choose to call in might be useful. Possibly, a stage might be reached in which, if it were the desire of both parties, that some independent individual authority should take the matter up and try to get the parties together, a useful purpose might be served by acting upon such a suggestion, but until the persons engaged in the struggle themselves are willing to either call in or refer their difficulties to the arbitrament of some outside authority, I cannot think that it would be wise, or prudent, or that it would be attended with good results, for any person else to interfere. Not only that, but one who would thus gratuitously offer his services would not be likely to find his offer appreciated by either party to the struggle.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I agree very much with what has fallen from the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, as to the absolute difficulty there is, under the circumstances, in the way of the Government offering any active interference in this matter. But I may say, that on several occasions, where conflicts between the employers and employed occurred in England, the Government, when they felt the gravity of the case warranted it, proposed to the parties that a member of the Government most familiar with the subject should be charged with the duty of acting as arbitrator between the parties. The moral influence that the Government possesses is such as to make it very difficult for either one party or the other in such a case to refuse. Therefore, I think the Government would be quite right in giving this question their attention and watching the condition of the proceedings, so as to intervene in that way, if the occasion seems to demand it.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). I hope I may be permitted to add, in reference to what the hon.

gentleman has just stated, that I have followed the difficulties in England sufficiently closely to know, that the Government in England has not thought it would be prudent to offer their services, until they had reason to believe from what they heard from the parties engaged in the controversy, that their offer would be appreciated. I very well recollect that the last difficulty was solved through the intervention of the Home Secretary, and I am very clear in my recollection that he did not intervene until it was suggested to him by the parties themselves.

Mr. SPEAKER. Will the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) allow me to point out, that it is only by the unanimous consent of the House that he can make another speech.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am not making another speech.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think we are all anxious to hear the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair).

Mr. SPEAKER. It is out of my hands, of course; it rests with the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Hon. gentlemen will remember that when I rose I asked permission of the House to say a word or two. I do, however, very gladly say, that if it shall transpire that any intervention on the part of the Government, or of any officer of my department, or of myself, is likely to be attended with good results, I will be happy indeed to render any assistance in my power to bring about an end to this very unfortunate and very unpleasant difficulty.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE (Sir Richard Cartwright). If my memory is not in fault there is a special provision in English law under which a board of arbitration sits in connection with the Board of Trade.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). A board of conciliation.

The MINISTER OF TRADE AND COMMERCE. It is provided for in the law, I think, that there shall be a board of conciliation, or something of that kind.

Mr. N. C. WALLACE (West York). That has reference to other matters. It is an extraordinary position for the Minister (Mr. Blair) to take, that at this stage he would not be justified in interfering. There is undoubtedly a great loss to the community when 1,800 men are out on strike and not getting wages and work. A still more important matter is, however, that the safety of the travelling public depends upon the maintenance of the road in good order and repair, and with these men on strike and none in their places, there is the greatest danger to those who travel. Yet, in the face of all this, the Minister says that this matter must go on indefinitely.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do not remember to have said that.

Mr. WALLACE. Perhaps he did not say that, but he said until a further stage is reached, which clearly means some indefinite time in the future; while in the meantime the men are impoverished and the road is dangerous to the travelling community. The opportune time for interference by the Government is now, and not when some disaster has happened. I remember that a few years ago, Lord Rosebery interfered effectively in a strike where the public interest and safety were not in such danger as they are in Canada to-day. It is the duty of the Government to attempt, at any rate, to settle this difficulty and to see that justice is done.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Was not Lord Rosebery chosen as intermediary by both parties?

Mr. WALLACE. He offered his services first.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, and was accepted by both parties.

Mr. CLARKE. Is there anything wrong in the Minister offering his services at this stage?

Mr. WALLACE. Here are 1,800 men who have served the company faithfully in arduous work, and in this prosperous season when other men are getting increased remuneration, it is a scandal and a disgrace that this railroad company should pay them an insufficient remuneration for the skilful labour which they are performing and have acquired after years of service; remuneration less than other railway companies are paying their men.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I think the experience of the past justifies me in saying that whenever a strike occurs, the sympathy of the public generally goes to the employees, rather than to the employers. However, it does not follow that a strike is always well-founded and that there is cause for it. For my part, I quite agree with the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair), that it would be quite improper for the Government to interfere at this early stage. We hardly know yet what is the subject of this controversy; we have not heard the statements of the men and of the employers; that will come out gradually. But as events go on, if unfortunately that strike is not settled between employees and employers, then it may be advisable for some one to interfere. My hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) knows as well as any one else, that the Government has no more power to interfere in this matter than he himself has. The only power that the Government has over any one in this matter is, that the Government perhaps could bring the prestige of its authority to interfere on behalf of the justice of the case. With regard to the precedent in England, my hon. friend (Mr. Wallace) is altogether astray. It is within our memory, that twelve months have not yet elapsed since the strike of the engineers took place, which lasted for a whole season or more. Two years have not elapsed since the strike of the colliers in Wales, which lasted for more than a year. Those strikes took place in England, and though the strikes of the engineers was one of the most damaging to the public at large, still the British Government never interfered in any way. The British Government, for reasons of their own, thought they were not justified in taking any action in this matter though it took place at their very doors. That shows that in a question of that kind, we have to move with some prudence. I again repeat, that at this moment if the Government were to interfere they would take a serious responsibility upon themselves. The time may come, perhaps, when it will be found by the men and by the employers that they cannot come to an agreement, and then some one in authority may deem it advisable to interfere. However, the strike has not yet lasted eight days, and I have not given up hope—a hope which I think will be shared by everybody—that there is still a probability that the strike may be settled by the employers and the employees themselves. If that, unfortunately, should prove not to be the case, then the reasons advanced by my hon. friend may suggest themselves to us all. Perhaps it would be then advisable not to allow the road to be without its ordinary repairs and attendance, but I again suggest that in a matter of this kind it is the part of prudence to deal very cautiously and not hastily.

SUPPLY—THE INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I wish to draw the attention of the House to a matter of some importance.

Mr. SPEAKER. I wish to call the attention of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) to the fact that he has spoken on the motion.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I wish to speak on a different subject from that which we have been discussing.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion is that I do leave the Chair. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) has already spoken on that motion, and without the consent of the House he cannot again speak.

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). We will give the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) a unanimous consent.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) is in the same position as was the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) a few moments ago.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have only to say, Mr. Speaker, that I have no desire to interfere with the business of the House; but, although you are technically correct, I would like, with the common consent of the House, to make a few remarks on an entirely different subject. I refer to the position of the Anglo-American Commission, which occupied some six months not very long ago in discussing questions of very great importance to Canada, and which was adjourned ostensibly with the purpose of reassembling on the 2nd day of August, to take up again matters which it had been discussing, and which we all recognize as matters of very great moment. It may be said that I took the position that the commission ought not to have been adjourned, but that when the United States commissioners took so very extraordinary a position in regard to the Alaskan boundary, the British commissioners, instead of consenting to an adjournment, would have been warranted in declining to continue the negotiations.

Mr. SPEAKER. Would the hon. gentleman allow me one moment? I can see an obvious difficulty in his going on at the present stage, which is not regular, as other hon. members who have already spoken on the motion to go into Committee of Supply, will probably desire to speak again. Therefore, I would suggest to the hon. member that some hon. member move the adjournment of the House, and then the debate on this subject will be open, and it will be quite regular for everybody to speak.

Mr. PRIOR. Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the adjournment of the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am very much obliged, Mr. Speaker, for your suggestion, because, as you say, it removes any semblance of irregularity, and I was only proceeding to deal with this question with the unanimous consent of the House. I may say that the statement made to the House yesterday by the right hon. First Minister removes a good deal of the difficulty that I had felt in regard to the action of the commission in adjourning until the 2nd day of August. I think it was the first time that the right hon. leader of the House stated so clearly—and I was very glad to hear it—the position which the British commissioners adopted on that occasion. In the official communication that was given to the public by the respective leaders of the plenipotentiaries on both sides, it was stated that a difficulty had occurred, which was remitted for the consideration of the British and American Governments, in regard to the Alaskan boundary; but it was not stated in that communication, so far as my memory serves me, that the re-assembling of the commission depended upon that question being removed from the arena of discussion by the diplomatic action of the two Governments. The statement made to the House yesterday by the right hon. First Minister was .

We took the ground that until the American Government had either agreed to make a settlement of that question or referred it to arbitration, no other question should be dealt with by us.

So that practically that came very near to the position which I had claimed the British plenipotentiaries were bound to take; that was, in consequence of the determination expressed by the American Government as to the only terms on which they would have the Alaskan question referred to arbitration, to insist that there should be, not an adjournment, but an abandonment. Now, the statement made by my right hon. friend—and I was glad to hear it—practically amounts to the position that there would be no re-assembling of the commission unless by diplomatic arrangement that question were removed; and my right hon. friend went on to say that that position, which they had taken on that occasion, they adhered to now; and I was very glad to learn that that was the case. I need not tell the House that from the inception of this question, I have treated it as a question above and beyond party, and I have treated it from that attitude down to the present moment, notwithstanding what some hon. gentlemen might regard as my rather severe strictures in regard to the action of the Canadian section of that commission. I am in a position to show that the attitude I have taken from the outset towards this commission has been that I would be a party to nothing that would weaken in the slightest degree the hands of the British commissioners in dealing with questions of such vital importance to Canada; and that attitude has been maintained by me up to the present moment. Now, I read with great satisfaction this morning that the peace commission now assembled at the Hague has made a great advance—that it has practically agreed to a proposal of the British representative, Sir Julian Pauncefote, that a board of international arbitration shall be established for the purpose of dealing with questions that may arise in controversy between any two nations. I regard that announcement as entirely changing the aspect of that which only yesterday was looked upon as practically hopeless—that any valuable result was to come from that great commission; and as affording good reason to believe that at a very early day a measure of very great importance will be arranged by that commission, under which questions of international difficulty shall be referred to a board of international arbitrators. The United States of America and Great Britain being prominent parties in that commission at the Hague, if they become, as there is every reason to believe they will become, parties to such an arrangement as is proposed by Sir Julian Pauncefote, it will be most unreasonable to suppose that the American commissioners could for a single moment continue to interpose any serious obstacle to such an arbitration as the British commissioners proposed at the late negotiations for the settlement of the Alaskan boundary. I will assume, therefore, that at this moment we are in a position to look hopefully forward to the re-assembling of the Anglo-American Commission on the 2nd day of August; and so it appears to me, owing to the circumstances to which I have referred, that this question presents itself in an entirely new light. Now, my attention was called, as I have no doubt that of the right hon. leader of the House was called, to an article in the New York "Sun," of May 14th, in which a rather extraordinary position was taken. This paper says that the difficulty is not with Sir Wilfrid Laurier or with the Liberal commissioners or with the Liberal Government; that they are disposed to make such concessions and such friendly arrangements with the United States as would lead to a complete solution of all the questions in controversy between the two countries; that, in fact, just as the First Minister stated to us here yesterday: "The matters referred to the commission, as I have stated on the floor of the House several times, were all in a fair way of adjustment when we came to the obstruction of the Alaskan boundary." The "Sun" newspaper not only says that they were all in a fair way of adjustment, but took the ground that the United States cannot persist in insisting on any unreasonable terms for the settlement of the Alaskan boundary, such as have caused the interruption of the proceedings, but would be bound to waive the very strong position that they took on that question, and that, therefore, everything is in a very hopeful position, with one exception, and that is that I am the criminal, that I am the great obstructor, and that my right hon. friend and his colleagues would be quite prepared to make fair and reasonable concessions to and an arrangement with the United States—and the "Sun" goes on to specify all the questions and to say that it sees no difficulty in our having common mining laws, common alien laws, in arranging a fair measure of reciprocity, in reducing or removing the duties on lumber, and a number of other things, which are specifically stated—were it not for the obstructive attitude adopted by the Conservative party, which embarrasses the Government in dealing with these questions. But for this, the "Sun" says, there is every reason to believe that upon the reassembling of this commission every pressing question, which every one, to whatever party he may belong, agrees it is most desirable should be settled and adjusted on a fair and reasonable basis, would be so settled at an early day. I may be reminded that I have taken a rather strong attitude on the floor of this House in dealing with this question, but I think that those who will remember what I said or will run their eye over the statement I made, will discover this fact, which stands. I think, very much in antagonism with the charge made in this paper, because it will be found, if the commission were to assemble to-morrow, that there is no means that the British commissioners could take more effective with the United States or better calculated to promote a friendly arrangement of all these matters than to present the statement I have made with regard to this question on the floor of this House. Take, for instance, the prominent statement that Canada occupies a position which renders her absolutely independent of the United States, that although it is most desirable that these questions should be settled on a fair and satisfactory basis, such, fortunately for us, is our position, that we are not, in any degree, dependent, or in a position that compels us to make any undue concessions to our great neighbours to the south. I do not think that that is calculated to weaken the hands of the commission. On the contrary, the strongest card they have to play, the most effective means they have of obtaining fair consideration from the United States is to show them that, however desirable it is to have these matters arranged on a friendly and satisfactory basis, we are fortunately in a position to protect our own interests, in case of failure to do so, and in many respects, perhaps, to improve them as compared with what would result from any arrangements we might make. Take the question of the power that this House has already given this Government to impose an export duty on pulp wood, logs and nickel matte. Why, the astute diplomatists of the United States know perfectly well that at this moment they are enjoying a great monopoly in paper manufacture for the world, or a very large portion of it, and that nothing would be so destructive of that position as the adoption of a policy by Canada that would cut off the supply of pulp wood, upon which that great manufacture depends; and it follows, as a matter consequent upon such action, that you would to a large extent by such a policy transfer the manufacture of paper from the United States to Canada, because the supply upon which the Americans depend for their own raw material abounds in profusion in Canada, and our great water-power and all the facilities for manufacture and ocean communication, and everything of that kind which we enjoy, give us an enormous advantage. Take also the question of mining rights, Canada has obtained such a position in reference to mineral production as to make it of infinitely greater importance to the United States to-day to come into Canada and to have the advantage of mining in Canada than for us to have the corresponding privilege of mining in the United States, and there is, therefore, every reason to believe that, with this matter fairly and fully stated, the United States would find it is greatly to their interest to assimilate the mining laws of the two countries and give to every Canadian in the United States those advantages which Canada has freely given to the citizens of the United States in Canada. So with reference to all these questions. Take the question of nickel matte. It is known that the great fleet of the United States has been armour-plated by our nickel steel, the nickel for which is furnished exclusively, or almost exclusively, from the Sudbury nickel mines. Look at this question from whatever point of view you may, and you will see that the attitude I have taken in this House, that we are absolutely independent of the United States, and the attitude I took of grounding our arms and doing nothing that would in the least degree interfere with the British commissioners while engaged in these negotiations, show, not that the Conservative party is obstructive, but that we have taken the position best calculated to strengthen the hands of the British commissioners when that work is resumed.

My object in drawing the attention of my right hon. friend and the Government to this question at present, I will briefly state. I propose to meet my hon. friend with a flag of truce. Now that the hopes, which yesterday seemed to be of the most slender description, but which to-day, in the light of what I have mentioned, are much brighter, now that there is a prospect of this commission resuming its negotiations on the 2nd of August, with the favourable prospect of bringing them to a satisfactory termination, and that the ground, as I understand from the statement of my right hon. friend, taken by the British commissioners is that this boundary question should be referred to such an international commission as the British commissioners propose, and these other matters on which, as my right hon. friend says great progress has been made, exclusively dealt with, I propose to suggest a means by which my right hon. friend will be left more free to proceed with the work of the commission. I still hold the opinion I expressed at the outset, that the negotiations by this commission constitute a subject above and beyond party.

And the Conservative party in Canada will be prepared now, as they were then, to do everything that is possible to strengthen the hands of the British—which practically means the Canadian—commissioners, because these are eminently Canadian questions. I, therefore, suggest to my hon. friend that, under these circumstances, he should withdraw the Redistribution Bill, have it published for the information of the country, and allow the business of the session to be promptly closed by disposing of all the other questions that are before us, in order that the Government may give that care and that attention to these important matters that is absolutely necessary they should give, and may furnish themselves with the most minute information to strengthen the case with which they are charged. They have had the experience of six months' negotiations, which must be most valuable to them, and, having that experience, they know exactly the kind of information they need, and the best course to pursue in order to present the British or Canadian side of this case to the commission in the most effective way. My right hon. friend knows that this House was called at a most inconvenient season of the year. He knows the sacrifice it is to members on both sides to spend the summer in attending Parliament, even in so charming a place as the city of Ottawa, which is, even on the Opposition side of the House, a little warmer than most people would care about in June or July. It is provided in the Bill which the right hon. gentleman has introduced, that it shall not come into operation until the dissolution of this Parliament. The necessity for that dissolution will not arise for some time, certainly is not pressing. Of course, I do not expect a statement from my right hon. friend to-day as to the suggestion I have made. This is a matter upon which he would, naturally, confer with his colleagues.

But I would ask him to consider my suggestion. I felt that it was my duty, under the circumstances and in the light of what has transpired yesterday and to-day, to state that, in my judgment, the interests of Canada would be consulted by withdrawing this measure, which is of a character to compel us to remain here for a very long period at this most inconvenient and, most unfavourable season, and enable the business of the House to be closed and the Government to address themselves to these questions in such a manner that, on the reassembling of the commission on the 2nd of August, they would be in the best possible position to do everything that could be done in support of Canadian interests. One other point before I sit down. I am sure that my right hon. friend will say that I have not been fairly represented in this article. It says, that the modus vivendi which was proposed by the United States, would have been at once accepted by Canada, but for the fear that the Conservative party, and especially that I myself, would take an attitude of strong hostility. My right hon. friend will vindicate me, at all events, on that point, because he did me the honour to consult me in reference to what the Canadian Government proposed, when, as he knows, I gave him at once the assurance of my hearty support of the Government in the attitude they had assumed. I mention that because it is put forward in this article, as one of the difficulties the Government had in dealing with these questions. I felt it right that I should draw the attention of my right hon. friend and the Government to this matter, and I hope they will receive these suggestions in the spirit in which they are offered, and will give them that consideration to which they may be fairly entitled.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, we, on this side of the House, may be pardoned, I am sure, some feeling of satisfaction at the words that have just been spoken by my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper). The wisdom of the course which I took in the month of February, in not breaking off suddenly the negotiations of the Anglo-American Commission, has been fully vindicated by what the hon. gentleman has just said. If I were allowed to refer to a past debate, I might call the attention of the House to the fact that, in the debate on the Address, my hon. friend took a very different position, and stated that, the moment we could not come to an agreement with our fellow-commissioners representing the United States, we should have broken off negotiations and come home. We thought that this course was not the course which should be followed under the circumstances.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. But that is practically what you did, judging from your statements in the House yesterday. You said, you would not go on with the negotiations until the other question was removed.

The PRIME MINISTER. When we left, we referred the question of the Alaska boundary to our respective governments. We stated then to the world, that it would be useless to reassemble unless this matter had been disposed of. I stated at the time to my hon. friend, and to the House on more than one occasion, that the matter had been referred to the respective governments, American and British, and that we were to reassemble on the 2nd of August. But what would have been the use of reassembling on the 2nd of August, or at any other time, if the very questions on which we had not been able to agree, were then to be found in the same position as before? We would not proceed with the other matters, pending that consideration, but we hoped that, when we assembled again on the 2nd of August, the British and the American Governments, by their respective authorities, would have been able to perform what we had not been able to perform, that is to say, settle the question of the Alaska boundary. We thought that, of all the measures that had been referred to us, the most important. We might have gone on with some other questions, but, pending that, we thought it would not be advisable, in the best interest of Canada, to proceed with other questions. If that question could have been settled, one way or the other, we could have proceeded with other questions, giving more or receiving more, as the question was settled one way or the other. There were only two ways of settling it. One was by compromise. We did not agree as to the location of the boundary, which had been defined by the treaty of 1825 between Great Britain and Russia. We, representing Great Britain, and the Americans, representing Russia, did not agree as to the location of the boundary on the ground. We claimed that the boundary passed at one point, while the Americans contended that it passed at another. If we could compromise the question, I say, without hesitation, the manner in which we settled it would be of material aid in the solution of other questions before us, by giving more and accepting less, or by receiving more and giving less. But, if we cannot come to an understanding upon that question, the question ought to be referred to arbitration. We cannot, of course, force our fellow-commissioners to come to an understanding with us. But there is one thing that must be done—if we cannot come to an understanding, the matter should be referred to arbitration. When it is referred to arbitration, it is then out of the way, and we can resume our sittings and go on with the other questions. I shall regret very much, if the matter has to be referred to arbitration, instead of our reaching a compromise. I should prefer to have a fair and honourable compromise by which both parties would relinquish claims in order to have an amicable settlement of the question. And, if we can have an amicable settlement, the hon. gentleman will agree, we would be in a position to give and take in other questions more, better than we would be otherwise. But, if it must be settled by arbitration, then, when it is referred to arbitration, we shall be free to take up other questions. As to the other questions before us, I can repeat what I stated yesterday, and what I have said several times before. By the way, I do not agree with my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition that I spoke more clearly yesterday than before. It seems to me, and I place myself in the judgment of the House in so saying, that what I said yesterday I have stated twice or three times already on different occasions during the present session. Having taken that ground, I may proceed to say that if this matter of the Alaskan boundary is removed from the questions entrusted to the commission, and if we resume our negotiations upon the other matters still remaining open, and there are some of great moment, I say frankly that while I do not expect that we can settle them all, perhaps, as I would like them to be settled myself, to the extreme limit of our rights and pretensions, I have hopes that we can settle the most, if not all, of those questions in an honourable and satisfactory manner to both countries. I do not expect that we can get all that we are contending for, and I am sure the American authorities cannot get all they are contending for; but I expect that we can make an honourable settlement, such a settlement as will intensify the good feeling which now prevails between Great Britain and the United States. Now I can acquit my hon. friend altogether from the aspersions made upon him by the editor of the "Sun." I can say that anything that he has done or has not done, had nothing to do with the non-success of the negotiations. But I must take exception, at all events, to the suggestion which he made to us. I do not believe that either in the future or in the past any policy of retaliation towards the United States would have had any effect, or will have any effect, in settling our difficulties with them. I am quite as much in earnest as my hon. friend himself in this respect, that we must stand upon our rights and upon our dignity, but standing upon our rights and upon our dignity does not call upon us to enter upon a policy of hostility to the United States. Even though the United States sometimes try our patience very much, even though they sometimes more than try our patience, still I think it would be the part of wisdom in us under such circumstances to continue to be patient, and not to allow ourselves to be moved by any sentiment of irritation. If we resume our negotiations, as I believe we shall, I think we are in a fair way of making a treaty which can be settled in a very few days.

Now, my hon. friend led up to a conclusion for which I must say I was not prepared. He made these international negotiations a basis upon which to ask us to withdraw the Redistribution Bill. Well, the ground is a broad one for such a request. For the present I must say that I am not prepared to withdraw the Redistribution Bill. I am quite prepared to consider his suggestion; I owe that to him, occupying the position which he does in this House; I owe it to him to place the matter before my colleagues and before my party, and we will give it the best consideration. But if we are to spend the summer in Ottawa, I do not think that it will be in the legitimate discussion of the Redistribution Bill. If we are to have a legitimate discussion of the Redistribution Bill it will not at all involve us in remaining here during the months of July or August, or any part of the summer. We can dispose of the Redistribution Bill in a short time if it is approached on both sides with a view of making it a fair measure, and I think it is drawn upon a fair basis. I do not pretend that all its details are perfect; I do not know that we may not be able to make some improvement in it, and to that end we will listen to the suggestions which are made to us. All this is a matter for consideration in the committee. But I say that the measure, as it has been proposed, is one which is fair in its terms, and which ought to win the commendation of both sides of the House. I do not see why, if that measure were to receive a fair criticism, it should not be disposed of in a few days. But the hon. gentleman has made me a suggestion which, I repeat, coming from one having the authority which he has in this House, an authority resting not only upon his official position but upon his long experience and long service in Parliament—a suggestion which I intend for my part to treat with great respect, and I shall ask my friends as well to give it their best consideration. But more than this I know my hon. friend does not expect me to say to-day.

Mr. PRIOR asked leave to withdraw his motion to adjourn.

Motion withdrawn.

LIQUOR PERMITS IN THE YUKON.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) Before you leave the Chair, I wish to bring a matter to the attention of the House of considerable moment. I am sorry the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) is not here, because it refers to the Yukon. But as it is a matter that I know he will have to bring before the Council, if he has not already done so, every Minister present is interested in it. I refer to the liquor permits that have been issued by Mr. Ogilvie. It seems that that gentleman, since he has been in charge of the Yukon district, has issued several permits to take liquor into that country. Whether he was authorized to do so, I cannot say. I presume he must have been acting under general instructions, or perhaps, he has had special instructions. But as a matter of fact, some of those permits that he has given have been disallowed by the Government since they were issued. Now, that has been a cause of great hardship to several gentlemen who, relying on the permits already issued by Mr. Ogilvie, purchased a large amount of liquors to be taken into that country. One case in particular that has been brought to my attention, was the case of Mr. H. C. Macaulay, who was in Dawson and obtained a permit from Mr. Ogilvie to take in a certain quantity of liquor.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). How much?

Mr. PRIOR. I cannot say how much the permit was for, but I can tell the Minister of Marine and Fisheries that he immediately came down to the coast and purchased two car-loads of beer and 200 cases of beer. Now these two car-loads of beer were ordered, so I am informed, six weeks before the disallowance of these permits, and they were put into storage and have been there ever since. He did not want to ship them just at that time. No doubt he did not think that a few weeks made any difference about the permit. The 200 cases that he bought were shipped from Victoria, B.C., on the 4th of April, and arrived at Lake Bennett before the Government disallowed the permits, so that they were pretty well on the way. The two car-loads of beer have been paid for, and they are now in a warehouse at considerable expense to the parties. Of course he and his partners in the business are very anxious to know whether these permits are going to be disallowed only temporarily, or whether they can look forward to losing the sale of their goods. It seems to me that if Mr. Ogilvie was authorized to issue those permits the Government surely should allow men who bought liquor before the disallowance, or before they knew the permits were disallowed, either to take it in, or give them some compensation for the loss they will sustain. I have brought this matter before the House once, and to the attention of the Minister of the Interior two or three times, and he promised to have it settled as soon as possible, but up to the present time nothing has been done in regard to it. I do sincerely trust that the Government will take this matter into consideration and give a ruling on this question, so that gentlemen who have invested large sums of money will know exactly how they stand and what they should do. I would like also to call the attention of the Government to a statement which was made to me in regard to the brewing of beer in the Yukon. I am informed that there is a brewery running in Dawson City and disposing of beer. The hon. Minister of Inland Revenue informs me that he does not think there is such a thing. My correspondent who knows the country well, and who has been there time and time again, tells me that there is a brewery, that it is brewing beer and paying no revenue to the country. It is very unfair to many gentlemen who have applied for licenses to brew beer and who have been refused. I only draw the attention of the Government to this condition of things; I do not know whether it is correct or not, but my correspondent is a man of integrity and a man who is well known. If it is not so, there is no harm done in my mentioning it; if it is so, I think the Government should take some action in regard to the matter.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). Mr. Speaker, I received a number of applications for brewing beer in the Atlin district.

Mr. PRIOR. This is in the Yukon district, not the Atlin district.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I know, but I merely want to explain. The Atlin district is partly situated in British Columbia and partly in the Yukon territory. I felt that as long as the Government had not adopted a policy for the granting of licenses in the Yukon country I did not feel justified in granting these particular licenses, because I knew they would be employed in the Yukon country as well as in the Atlin district. When I heard that there was a gentleman moving in that direction of Atlin Lake with material for the erection of a brewery, I applied to the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), and asked him to notify the Mounted Police to seize the brewing material entering that country until the Government have decided upon a policy in relation to brewing and distilling in the Yukon district. I am intensely surprised to hear that there is actually a brewery working in the Yukon, at Dawson City. I think that the hon. Minister of the Interior, who is not here at present, will be able to give further information on that subject.

Mr. PRIOR. I think it would be a great deal better to allow breweries in that country, and to have good beer for the miners, instead of that terrible whisky that is going in there.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I suppose that the hon. Minister of the Interior will be able to give us some information on Monday.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I can give the information my hon. friend (Mr. Prior) has asked for in regard to Macaulay, or any other party that he has referred to. My hon. friend stated that if permits had been issued to take liquor into the Yukon territory it must have been under the authority of this Government. The hon. gentleman is mistaken; the authority under which permits were issued in the Yukon was that of one or two ordinances issued by the commissioner of the Yukon under the advice of his council. These ordinances we have disallowed, and, of course, this disallowance having taken place, all the parties must abide by the consequences. We thought, after due consideration, that it would not be well for us to allow liquor to go into the Yukon in such quantities as was allowed by Commissioner Ogilvie and his council, and therefore we disallowed these ordinances. I think both the ordinances and the disallowance have been placed on the Table of the House, and therefore the parties who have been given any of these permits must take the consequences.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have looked into this point very carefully, and I do not know whether it was considered by the hon. Minister of the Interior and the Government. This particular ordinance of the 7th of December was disallowed on the 13th of April. In the meanwhile some parties had shipped and some had bought their materials and were ready to send them into the Yukon territory, but they did not get that far. Although the ordinance of the 7th of December has been disallowed, it is not followed by the consequences that my right hon. friend mentions. A discrimination has been made, not in favour of any particular individual, but in favour of all those who happened to have shipped under that ordinance, and the point which the hon. member for Victoria, B.C. (Mr. Prior) refers to, is that if the Government is exercising that power it should exercise it fairly. They have approved, practically, of what the legal executive have done in regard to some of these individuals.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I must remind my hon. friend that the order of disallowance was telegraphed to our officers, and it has acted mechanically. The same rule must apply in this matter as in any other. The disallowance took effect from the time of its being made. The moment the order of disallowance was passed a telegram was sent to the officers of the Government.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And the instructions to the officers were to permit all liquors shipped prior to that date to enter the Yukon, so that there was a discrimination.

The PRIME MINISTER. I do not think so.

YUKON MAIL SERVICE.

Mr. H. F. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand mail matter that I registered and posted on the 12th of the present month, and which was addressed to Dawson City. It was returned to me yesterday by one of the clerks of the post office here, having come to the dead letter office with the explanation that no mail matter of this kind would be forwarded by the authorities to the Yukon district. He also told me that they had no instructions to that effect in the post office here. I want to understand if it is a fact that mail matter of that kind, which only contains papers, is not permitted to go into the Yukon, and if so, why the officers of this House, in charge of the post office, have no instructions to that effect. This went as far as Victoria, B.C., was returned from there to the dead letter office here, was opened and returned to me yesterday. I presume that many other people are in the same position, and perhaps they are in a worse position because they may not be able to get their mail matter back. I may have had an advantage in being here and of having registered this matter.

Mr. TAYLOR. I might refer to a case down home that was called to my attention, in which a brother-in-law of mine sent a parcel prepaid, and which was returned.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). The mail service through the winter, to the Yukon, is conducted by dog train and is one of very exceptional difficulties. I need not go into details, because hon. gentlemen have some idea of the physical difficulties involved in that service. It is not possible to carry on that service during the winter by any known agency except dog trains, and each sleigh is only capable of carrying a certain quantity. After the most careful inquiry, and the best arrangements, the most that we can place on a sleigh is 700 pounds, and even that is regarded as a somewhat excessive load for a strong team of dogs. The equipment consists of five dogs to each sleigh. The expense is very considerable in itself, and with such a service it is not possible to provide for other than letter mails. There is no service, throughout the winter, to the Yukon, conducted by Canada or the United States, except for letter mails, and if this is not a letter it does not go as letter mail matter. We have no way of carrying it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Has any notice that no newspapers could be sent to the Yukon been given, because, it appears to me that if the Post Office Department gave instructions that nothing but letters would be carried, they were bound at once to publish far and wide the statement that nothing but letters would go.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I have not seen it stated in the press myself, that none but letters were to be carried. Whether there was any formal advertisement placed in the newspapers or not, I do not know, but, because I say that, it does not follow that it was not done. I cannot take charge of the whole executive portion of the Post Office Department.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. gentleman said that mail matter was carried by dog train, but he does not inform the House whether he has let a contract, or whether this is done by the Mounted Police. By whom is this service performed?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The mail service during last winter was performed under an arrangement made between the Post Office Department and the Mounted Police, by which the Mounted Police performed the service. I did not think it safe to entrust it to private contractors for fear that they would not have the facilities for maintaining the service efficiently.

Mr. WALLACE. How is the service performed now? The hon. Minister said that was last winter.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. There was a contract let by public tender for the carriage of the mails from the opening of navigation for a certain term—I do not remember the length of it, but, at all events, it covers the present coming season of navigation.

That means as soon as the rivers are navigable. Arrangements have been made and contracts entered into for a weekly service between Dawson City and Lake Bennett during the season of navigation.

Mr. SPROULE. Does that mean that newspapers will be carried now?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The summer contract does not limit it to letter mails.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Why does this matter now come back?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I suppose that navigation has not opened yet. I do not think that the waters are navigable yet.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if this can be mailed yet, or are we to understand that no such matter as this can be mailed. This was mailed on the 12th of this month.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think navigation is opened yet. It can go during the period of navigation, but we cannot carry it during the winter period.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I should like to ask the hon. Postmaster General to explain why his own officials are not notified of this. He seems to think that the public can read this in the newspapers. If the public believed everything they saw in the newspapers about the Yukon, I think that the hon. Postmaster General, and some of his colleagues, would not be very well pleased; but so far as the mail service is concerned, it is apparently considered quite enough that the hon. gentleman has seen this in the newspapers. I regard it as significant that the officers of this House have not been instructed by the Postmaster General. If the public know of this regulation, his own officials do not seem to know of it, and I do not exactly understand how he can expect that the general public of this country, who are entitled to be notified, could be aware of it when his own paid officials do not seem to know anything of it.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Mr. Speaker, you have in your hands a motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of Supply. I beg to withdraw such motion.

Motion withdrawn.

COMMISSIONER OGILVIE'S REPORT.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask the hon. Prime Minister if Mr. Ogilvie's report, which it was announced in the papers had arrived at Victoria a week ago, has yet been received, and, if so, whether it will be promptly laid on the Table of the House?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I am not aware that the report has yet been received. I will inquire of the hon. Minister of the Interior and give an answer on Monday.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 6.10 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MONDAY, 29th May, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

REPORT OF THE YUKON INQUIRY.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I wish to advise the House that I have received the report of Mr. Ogilvie of the inquiry which he has conducted under the commission issued to him with respect to the charges of irregularities in the Yukon district. A copy of the report will be laid on the Table of the House tomorrow afternoon, and the evidence will be copied as rapidly as possible and laid on the Table of the House as soon as possible.

FREDERICTON MILITARY SCHOOL.

Mr. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton) asked :

What commanding officer recommended the admission for instruction at the military school at Fredericton, N.B., of the following persons from the county of Cape Breton :—Archibald J. McDougall, Dan J. McDougall, Hugh P. McKinnon and Francis H. McKenzie ? To what volunteer companies did they belong and how long have they been members of such company ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Commanding officer of the 94th Battalion. 2. To No. 3 and 4 companies, 94th Battalion (as stated at the time by the officers commanding those companies). 3. It is not known how long they have belonged.

SURVEY OF TIDES AND CURRENTS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (by Sir Charles Tupper) asked :

Have parties purporting to be practical seamen, captains of steamers, &c, or any of them (and if so, what names) petitioned the Government or any department thereof asking for a survey of the tides and currents in Canadian waters ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Yes. In 1889 petitions so signed were forwarded to the department by Prof. Johnson. The names are very numerous and will be given at once in response to any return moved for, or I will give the hon. member a copy when made for his information.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (by Sir Charles Tupper) asked :

1. Have any of the captains of the Allan Steamship Line stated to the hon. the Minister of Marine that they attach no value whatsoever to the tidal survey ?

2. If so, what are their names ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes. Captain More of the "California."

ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE INSPECTION.

Mr. ROBERTSON (by Mr. Sproule) asked :

1. What is the regulation in regard to inspecting the Royal Military College annually by a board of visitors ? Has this regulation been carried out ? If not, why not ?

2. Why have the names of the members of the board been omitted from the Militia List ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. The regulation is as follows :—

An independent inspection by a board of visitors appointed by the Governor in Council, and reporting to the Minister of Militia, will be made once a year. Such board will not be a permanent body, but will consist of five members, of whom three shall be members of the militia staff, not less than two to retire annually.

Inspections have been made only in the years 1881, 1889 and 1895. Annual inspections have never been considered necessary. 2. There is no regulation requiring such publication of the names of the members of the board.

RICHELIEU RIVER BUOYS.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. How many contracts for new buoys for the Richelieu River have been awarded since two years ?

2. To whom were said contracts awarded ?

3. Of what material were said buoys to be made ?

4. What was the number of buoys ordered, and the price per buoy ?

5. Were tenders for such buoys publicly called for through the newspapers ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. One contract for district between Sorel and Chambly, and one contract between St. Johns and Rouse's Point. 2. A. E. Beauchemin, Sorel, district between Sorel and Chambly ; and B. V. Naylor, between St. Johns and Rouse's Point. 3. Of cedar spars. 4. Twenty-eight buoys between Sorel and Chambly ; contract price for making new buoys, placing, maintaining and taking up, and storing is $250 per annum. Between St. Johns and Rouse's Point the contract price for the same kind of work is $150 per annum. There were formerly eleven buoys, but this spring eight new spar buoys with mooring stones, chains and shackles were added at 10 cents each; the whole nineteen buoys to be maintained hereafter at $150 per annum. 5. Tenders were invited publicly by post-bill sent from Ottawa and posted in conspicuous places for Sorel and Chambly district. The contract for the other district was renewed with B. V. Naylor, contractor for many years.

SUPERANNUATION OF ALEXANDER WALMSLEY.

Mr. MONK (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Why was Mr. Alexander Walmsley, of St. Johns, P.Q., formerly British mail clerk, superannuated ?
2. Did Mr. Walmsley ask to be retained in active service ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). Mr. Walmsley was superannuated because the office he held, that of British mail clerk, was abolished.

THE SONGHEES, B. C., INDIANS.

Mr. PRIOR (by Mr. Earle) asked :

1. Has the Government arrived at any settlement with the Provincial Government with regard to the removal of the Indians from the Songhees Indian Reserve at Victoria, B.C. ?
2. Has a satisfactory arrangement been arrived at as to the ultimate ownership of said reserve, in the event of the removal of the Indians ?
3. Has the Provincial Government of British Columbia now in power ever asked for any steps to be taken looking for a settlement of the above questions ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. No. 2. No. 3. Yes.

STEAMSHIP SERVICE FOR VANCOUVER ISLAND.

Mr. PRIOR (by Mr. Earle) asked :

Is it the intention of the Government to grant a subsidy to encourage some small steamer to run regularly on the east coast of Vancouver Island, carrying mails, passengers and freight, and calling at all the inhabited islands en route ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). A petition has recently been received, asking for the establishment of a mail service. It is at present under consideration.

THE TWO-CENT STAMPED ENVELOPES.

Mr. QUINN (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Is it true, as stated in the press, that a number of two-cent stamped envelopes were printed in a purple colour by mistake and were recalled from circulation after distribution to various post offices ?

2. How many of these were printed ?
3. Were any recalled envelopes destroyed because the impressed stamps were printed in the wrong colour ?
4. If not destroyed, what was done with them ?
5. Has the Government taken any steps to ascertain the truth of charges made in the press that Government officials have secured a large stock of these purple envelopes and are making them the object of a speculation for their personal profit ?
6. Is it the intention to print any two-cent envelopes in a purple colour ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). It is not true that there was any mistake in the printing in purple of two-cent stamped envelopes, or that any purple-stamped envelopes were recalled from circulation after distribution amongst the various post offices. No such envelopes were recalled, and accordingly none were destroyed, nor were any of the embossed stamps printed in a wrong colour. All the purple colour two-cent stamped envelopes were issued in the ordinary course of business to the post offices, and so far as this department is aware went into the hands of the general public. The department has no information as to whether or not any quantity of such envelopes were purchased by Government officials. If the hon. gentleman is aware of any Government official having improperly possessed himself of any such envelopes, and will communicate such information to the department, the fullest inquiry will be made into the matter. It is not the intention of the Government to print any two-cent envelopes in a purple colour.

Mr. BERGERON. The second question is not answered yet.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). I practically answered the same question some time ago, and I am sure in that reply the information desired will be found. If not, I will furnish the information later.

MAJOR WALSH'S REPORTS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. How many, if any, reports did Major Walsh make under the following paragraph of Order in Council of 17th August, 1897 : " He should make a full report to him, the Minister, by each mail upon all matters affecting his office and the administration of the various departments of the Government in territory under his control " ?
2. If he made any such reports, how many have been laid on the Table of this House ?
3. If there are any such reports not brought down, when will they be laid on the Table of this House ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In reply I beg to say : 1. Major Walsh made eight reports. 2. Six. 3. Two reports not brought down will be included in the return ordered by the House in April, 1899, and will be prepared as soon as possible.

Mr. OGILVIE.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. Had Mr. Ogilvie, the Commissioner of the Yukon, any connection with the British Canadian Goldfields of the Klondike, Limited ?

2. If so, what was it ?

3. If so, when did he cease to have any connection with the said company ?

4. Is the Government aware that the prospectus of the company refers to Mr. Ogilvie as asserting: "That to his personal knowledge there is at least £20,000,000 worth of gold in sight," and that he wrote to the founders of the company that he had furnished them with a private map on which he had marked places not yet taken up where he knows gold to exist, and advised "that claims upon them be staked for the company as soon as possible," while he had also privately indicated the location of other unclaimed mineral deposits ?

5. Is the Government aware that this prospectus states that the company proposes that "an exploration party shall be despatched to certain districts with regard to which Mr. Ogilvie has given the founders exclusive information, and to there secure possession of the most desirable properties already indicated by him" ?

6. Has the Government any information as to the authority of the company making such reference to Mr. Ogilvie, or has it any explanation to give ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In reply I beg to say: 1. No. 2. Answered by No. 1. 3. Answered by No. 1. 4. Yes. 5. Yes. 6. Upon the facts referred to coming to the attention of the Government the statements which concerned Mr. Ogilvie were reported to him and an explanation was asked for. A copy of Mr. Ogilvie's reply is herewith laid upon the Table.

Mr. FOSTER. That ought to go in the "Hansard."

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). It is too long to go into the "Hansard."

Mr. FOSTER. It must go in the "Hansard."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think that should be read and not laid on the Table. It ought to go into "Hansard" as a reply to the question. I would ask the hon. Minister of the Interior to read the paper instead of leaving it on the Table.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. If the hon. gentleman objects to its being laid on the Table or desires to have it in any other form, he will have to move for a return.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not at all. The hon. Minister has answered part of the question verbally and laid the balance on the Table. We are entitled to have his whole reply in "Hansard," and it is not open for him to say that the part not replied to should be moved for as a return.

Mr. SIFTON.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The rule is well laid down by the Minister who gives the answer, because he gives the answer according to his own discretion.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Minister may refuse to give an answer if he chooses, but he has not refused. He has given the answer, but not in the proper way. He has given part verbally and part to be laid on the Table. That at once interferes with the custom invariably followed of having the complete answer entered in "Hansard." As the matter stands now, the whole question is answered, but not in the way the House invariably has required hitherto.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I shall go on the ruling of the Speaker. My interpretation of the rule is that the Minister who answers a question answers it according to his own discretion or judgment.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the question is entirely one of order. There is another point involved, and that is the point whether the House shall have the answer it desires to have. What objection is there to have that question answered and the whole answer put in the pages of "Hansard"? There cannot be any, but the hon. Minister says the only alternative is: If you do not like your porridge as I put it before you, move for an order of the House, and you may have it in a month or two.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He will lay it on the Table.

Mr. FOSTER. No, he says if you do not take it that way, you must move for a return. You may appeal to the Speaker on a question of abstract order as to what a Minister may or may not do, but I do not think any such question arises in this matter. Here is a Minister who pretends to give an answer to a fair question put to him, but he reads three-fourths of his answer and then throws a paper on the Table and says that is the remainder. The answer is incomplete. Surely there is no reason for his not giving the whole answer in the usual way. It would not take my hon. friend five minutes to read it.

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not quite think this is a question of order or one that ought to raise any difficulty between the two sides of the House. The report which the Minister is willing to lay on the Table covers eleven pages of closely typewritten paper. The hon. Minister might very well have said that he had the paper and would produce it on a return being moved for, but he went further and said he would lay it on the Table without a motion, so that, I think, if the House will allow me, I will put the motion, though, of course, the paper will not then go on "Hansard."

Mr. FOSTER. That is where we want it.

Mr. SPEAKER. If it comes to that, I think the matter is in the discretion of the Minister.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). May I be allowed to explain? I gave the answer in the way I did, because I thought that would be the most satisfactory way. If I had made a short extract or reference to this letter from Mr. Ogilvie, that would not have been satisfactory, and the hon. gentleman could have asked for the whole letter and asked me to lay it on the Table. Instead of waiting for any motion or request, I said that I had Mr. Ogilvie's explanation in a document, which I would lay on the Table. If the hon. gentleman objects to my laying the paper on the Table, he can move for it.

Mr. FOSTER. I imagine the House can get the answer and get it in the "Hansard," and I move the adjournment of the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am greatly surprised that any gentleman on the Treasury benches should take such an unworthy mode as this in order to evade his plain duty. Every one knows that the ordinary means of getting information is to put questions on the Notice paper, which the Minister may answer or not as he chooses. If he chooses to take the responsibility of refusing to answer, then the House will judge why he refuses to answer; but when he consents to answer, he is bound, by the invariable practice of the House, to give his answer in complete form so that it may go in "Hansard," and not give it partly verbally and partly by a document which he lays on the Table. If the course adopted by the hon. Minister of the Interior on this occasion is allowed to pass unchallenged, we shall have a new practice introduced into this House, by which Ministers can evade giving that information to the House which the House and the public are accustomed to receive and entitled to receive.

Now, Sir, if the hon. gentleman wants to decline to give an answer, it is very convenient for him to bring forward a long paper, like this, and refuse to read it in his place. There is no objection to a Minister of the Crown using as much time as he needs in giving an answer, provided it is all relevant to the question that is put. The question has been asked here:

Has the Government any information as to the authority of the company making such reference to Mr. Ogilvie, or has it any explanation to give?

It is very easy to state an answer to that question, and say: Yes, we have information, and we propose to give it—and then state briefly to the House what that information is, in order that the parties who read the "Hansard" and the press reports of discussions that take place in this House, may have an opportunity in connection with the question asked, to know what the answer is. But the hon. Minister proposes to adopt a novel proceeding, by which the answer to a plain question which he has undertaken to answer, and which he admits, therefore, there is no difficulty in answering, is not shown in connection with the question. He says, in effect: I lay this upon the Table of the House, but, if you want it brought down, you have got to move a resolution and give me a month before I bring it down, if you will not take it as I give to you here, I will take it back, and you shall not have it for a month. Or, perhaps, he might promise to bring it down next session, and then, as hon. gentlemen too often do, forget to bring it down. This action of the hon. Minister should be marked, and marked at once, by the disapproval of the House. Hon. gentlemen opposite need to be taught, as they are now being taught, that they cannot evade a plain duty by taking a course of that kind and changing at pleasure the precedents and practice that have invariably been followed ever since I had the honour of having a seat in this House down to the present time. The answer is laid on the Table of this House, and we can only get it upon "Hansard" in connection with this proceeding by the very inconvenient course of reading it, a course to which the Opposition are compelled to resort. But, fortunately, the rules of Parliament do provide a means by which such evasions—for I cannot characterize it otherwise—can be met and defeated, as they will be met and defeated in this case.

Dawson, February 14, 1899.

The Hon. Minister of the Interior, Ottawa.

Immediately on my arrival in London in March last, I met Mr. J. B. Roche, M.P. (in fact, it was through him that I visited the old country). He evinced great interest in the Yukon and its resources, and we had many discussions together. He intended organizing a company to operate in that region, and asked me if I would assist him in his purpose. I replied that I would be very glad to do anything to assist in the development of the region with which I had been so much associated during the past eleven years. He introduced me to several gentlemen who were interested in it, and anxious to organize the company, among whom was a Mr. Bernard Malloy, also M.P., a lawyer by profession, but more or less associated with mining in Africa, and who had also visited Australia. This gentleman I found to be very interesting. He had considerable knowledge of scientific mining, geology and chemistry, and was the originator and inventor of several useful inventions in connection with mining.

The question of the formation of a company was often discussed, and, being anxious to see British capital invested in that region, I lent my aid as far as lay in my power to the advancement of this project.—

He was unlike my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies), who, when this matter was brought up, of obtaining British capital for conducting mining operations in Canada, told an assembly of people in Wales, whom he was addressing, that he was very much of Mark Twain's opinion—that a mine meant a hole in the ground and a liar, and he would ad-wise the people to keep their money in their pockets—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I never made such a statement.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is true, that the hon. gentleman, when collared by Col. Domville, within a short time after that, changed his opinion, and wrote a letter, over his own signature, recommending the public to trust their money to Col. Domville. And I may say that a suit is now going on, a very important suit, in which the defence of the parties was, that they were misled by statements of Ministers of the Crown to invest their money in this enterprise.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would draw the hon. gentleman's (Sir Charles Tupper's) attention to the fact that the motion to adjourn is for a specific purpose, and—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have not departed from that.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must say, that, in my judgment, the hon. gentleman, while reading the paper, is within his rights, but while carrying on a discussion on various subjects, is out of order.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And perhaps the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) will allow me to follow him in his excursion. I never made such a statement as he attributes to me—advising people not to put their money in the Yukon.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. All I can do is to bring forward the statement, as published in the report of the hon. gentleman's speech in Wales, and allow the public to judge whether his statement—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Prudence is one thing; taking the hon. gentleman's statement is another.

Mr. FOSTER. You do not deny the other.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What other?

Mr. FOSTER. As to the other company.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman gave a letter, over his own signature, advising people that Col. Domville was a gentleman of great opportunities of carrying out an undertaking, and that he would be able to obtain the assistance of the Government.

Mr. FOSTER. Had the ear of the Government.

Mr. LANDERKIN. He has done it before.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, he has done it before. I have great respect for your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and I think I am complying with your ruling exactly. The question now before us is, the answer of the Minister of the Interior, and I find a statement made in it that requires just such comment as I have made upon it in reference to the conduct of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must say, I have cautioned the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper). I cannot allow any such comments later on in his speech.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I shall wait until you take a course that is calculated to interfere with free discussion in this House, Mr. Speaker, and then I will appeal to the House on the question. Notwithstanding the large majority of hon. gentlemen on the other side, I believe there will be a disposition to protect the rights of members—

Mr. SPEAKER. Another thing—I cannot permit any hon. member in this House to threaten the Chair.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not know whether you call it threatening the Chair, for an hon. member to say he has a right to appeal from the ruling of the Chair. If that is threatening the Chair, I have yet to learn—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is not what I complain of. What I complain of is, that the hon. gentleman said I did not allow free discussion.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not say anything of the kind.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) said that, and I will not permit it to be said by anybody.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You are mistaken, Mr. Speaker. I made no such statement, and "Hansard," when it comes to be read to-morrow, will show that you are mistaken in saying I made such a statement. I had no intention of making such a statement, and I think "Hansard" will show that I did not make it. I should be very sorry to make it.

Now, to proceed :

I lent my aid as far as lay in my power to the advancement of this project,—

Unlike my hon. friend (Sir Louis Davies), when in Wales.

—always stipulating that the company should be established on a good sound financial basis before entering into business, a feature not too common in the establishment of such companies—the promotion of the interests of the founders or promoters generally being primary.

These gentlemen agreed heartily with me in my ideas and professed themselves eager to embark in a scheme laid down on the lines on which I proposed, that is, a genuine enterprise in which the originators and investors themselves would receive no pay until the profits were drawn from the investment.

This was agreed to, and I professed my willingness to aid them in every way consistent with the duties required of me in any official position which might be given me in that region by the Canadian Government.

While the organization of the company was being discussed and the probable nature of its operations defined, I was often discussing with Mr. Malloy the peculiar conditions existing in the Yukon region, to which the ordinary mining methods were not well adapted. New methods would be outlined by us. He would work out the details, and at our next meeting this would be discussed and amended until we both arrived at an idea which we thought would produce the best possible results in the development of our Canadian gold fields.

Prominent among the suggestions discussed was that of quartz-milling, or extracting gold from the numerous deposits of low-grade ore which were known to exist in that region. Of some of these I gave the location and extent; at the same time, mentioning that many of them had already been located, giving the name of the locator, and what appeared to me to be the best way of securing control of these locations, or at least an interest in them. I further intimated in what parts of the country it was likely similar lodes would be found, and marked on the map as nearly as I could the sites of those which had already been located and recorded, as well as the regions where I felt confident others would be discovered. This subject was very much discussed, and the cheapest and most working appliances adapted to the working of the country were developed to what seemed to us to be a workable perfection.

I need not enlarge on the conditions that appeared to me to require a revolution in quartz-mining machinery—that is, the extreme cold and scarcity of water; for, time and again, in my lectures concerning that region, as well as in newspaper interviews, and the "Yukon Official Guide," I have laid stress on these points.

With Mr. Roche, and Mr. Malloy, too, I discussed often and fully the difficulties attending placer mining prospecting. These I have so frequently spoken of, I need simply to refer to them here. I proposed to this company improved appliances for placer mining prospecting—which were fully discussed, criticised and accepted—which may be described as an adaptation of the diamond drill.

In connection with this idea Mr. Roche and myself visited a drill factory in London and gave the manufacturer the ideas we had developed in our various discussions. He entered into the project with some zeal, and Mr. Roche there and then ordered several of the machines.

These machines, in my opinion, will revolutionize placer mining in this country, but, as they are the property of Mr. Roche, I do not care to describe them in detail. Nevertheless, I feel sure that that gentleman would not object to my giving the ideas the widest publicity, nor would he hesitate to give me all due credit for my share in the development of the machine.

Mark, Mr. Speaker, these parties are getting instructions and advice and information of an official of this Government that would enable them to take out patents and make profits out of other people:

Places where good placer diggings were likely to be found were pointed out and marked by me on a map.

Assistance that is not very usual, I imagine, to be given by officials of the Government to parties except when called upon.

At that time I had every hope that this company would begin operations early in the past year, and assured them of my active sympathy and assistance in as far as was compatible with whatever official standing I might have in the country.

The development of coal I particularly urged upon these gentlemen, realizing it to be absolutely necessary that something be done in that direction as speedily as possible. This, as I have frequently stated, was because of the comparatively slender timber resources of the Yukon valley, and my expectation that so many steamers would be plying in the river soon, that it was the only fuel, as it would be only a few seasons until we would be compelled to import lumber into the Yukon.

Particular stress was laid on this industry in the Yukon, with the result that Mr. Roche made application to the Minister of the Interior for a coal claim in a locality where I had reason to believe it would be found. I told him in general terms where the coal was found, and in doing this I was giving away no secret, for in my lectures and newspaper interviews, the "Klondike Official Guide," and reports to the Government, I have pointed out quite as distinctly (and was pleased to be able to do so), the abundance of coal that lay in close proximity to where our richest deposits of gold are.

The reason that I gave this information to these gentlemen was because I believed then that they were embarking on an enterprise that would add greatly to the advancement and rapid development of our country.

As regards the exclusiveness of this information, I would say that I gave the same information generally in every lecture which I delivered in both Canada and the old country; and if there be any exclusiveness in it at all it was confined to such points as these gentlemen intended to make—

"Made" the word is; it is intended "to make," I suppose.

—use of on the lines which I had myself laid down, and because no others had proposed to embark in an enterprise of this character.

I think I can claim truthfully that during my stay in the old country I was interviewed by thousands interested in mining in the Yukon—by people who were anxious to know the true value of property to which they had already a title, or which was offered to them for sale, or referring to assets of a company in which they held stock, or in which they proposed to purchase stock.

These gentlemen alone, of all who consulted me at that time, had no interests in the Yukon country, and were anxious to know the best fields for operations. Hence the reason for their acquiring this information and my desire to assist them.

Mr. Roche at that time offered me a much more lucrative position, as a member of his company, than that I now occupy as Commissioner of the Yukon territory.

That is a very important statement, Mr. Speaker, because it shows that the information given to certain capitalists who professed to go into mining in the Yukon district, was of such a valuable character that they offered the gentleman who gave them that information a higher salary than he now receives as Commissioner of the Dominion. I think that is a point well worthy of the attention and accentuation of hon. gentlemen opposite.

This I declined to accept, giving him as my reason that I had received similar and better offers from other parties, and had pledged myself that if I did not remain in the Government service I would accept one of such offers; and that I believed that I could do better service to my country by remaining in the Government employ than accepting a position, however remunerative, with any company, as in the latter case my labours would be confined to a smaller field, and in the former a very wide one; and my ambition was to assist to the fullest extent of my powers in the development of that rich region, the Yukon and the Dominion of Canada generally.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I say "hear, hear," also. I was in London when this occurred, and I am in a position to say, in the presence of this House, that that company could not have been floated except for the statement that they had secured the able assistance and co-operation of Mr. Ogilvie, and his influence with the Government.

Mr. Roche then asked me if I would be able to undertake, while in the Government service, the supervision of their operations, for which I would, if I wished, receive a salary. This I stated at once would be impossible, and then and there made it clear that while I was willing to aid them in every way compatible with any public duties I might assume, it would simply be as a public official warmly interested in the development of the country, and that I could not and would not accept remuneration for any advice or assistance rendered them or any other company or individual who might apply to me for such information.

I was then asked to formulate a scheme or plan of operations for them, which I did on the assumption that the work would be begun forthwith, and this scheme appears as a letter accompanying the prospectus of the company, addressed—although it then had no name or existence—to the founders of the "British Canadian Gold Fields of the Klondike, Limited."

Does the hon. gentleman say "hear, hear," to that? Does he say that capitalists competing in gold mining operations in the Klondike are entitled to a letter from a gentleman who had held such a high position, and who declined to go into it because he was going back into the service of Canada? Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that he thinks that is a perfectly legitimate operation? Why, it is as bad as some of the transactions that have taken place in connection with loan companies in Canada.

This letter I kept no copy of, but believe it a true copy, and that it contains essentially what I wrote at that time, except two or three geographical errors, which arose through ignorance in the proofreader, but do not affect the general nature of the facts therein set forth. Mr. Roche further asked me to what extent I would allow my name to be used in the prospectus. I suggested that he should draw up one on those general lines and I would amend it. This was done, and the prospectus was amended by me, still under the impression that operations would be begun during the season of 1898.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

I do not see what that has to do with it. It does not vitally affect the question of a prospectus being brought out under the authority of a high official of this Government, who pledges his assistance in that capacity and his influence with the Government of the country.

This document was initialed by me, and, as I kept no copy of it I am not in a position to contradict any part of it as not having been approved by me at that time, and believe it to be correct.

Up to date I have had several letters from Mr. Roche, informing me that the company had been organized, but that sickness had prevented him from visiting the Yukon territory. In a letter which he wrote to me from Vancouver in October, 1898, he informed me that he had arrived there with several of the prospecting drills referred to, but was not in sufficiently good health to enter the country himself, and that he would endeavour to forward one of the drills to me to be tested.

I think Mr. Roche was bound, in common justice, as he got this patent from the brains of Mr. Ogilvie, to give Mr. Ogilvie, as I trust he did, a very handsome percentage of the value of the patent whatever it might be.

I regret exceedingly that he did not succeed in accomplishing this, since, if it had reached me, I would (with the aid of four men, all that are required to work it) have made a thorough examination of its merits, and, I believe, have revealed some interesting features in connection with the auriferous deposits here as well as the bed-rock also.

Since that date Mr. Roche has written again, informing me that they had become possessed of a charter to construct a telegraph line from Skagway to Dawson, and again asked for my advice as to the best method of construction. This I was glad to give, and trust that the ideas transmitted to him will assist him in successfully completing that important undertaking at a very early date.

I wonder if he had seen the fact announced that the Government, having brought out and assisted in the organization of a telegraph company, and a large number of capitalists having put their money into that undertaking in good faith on the assurance of fair-play, woke up one fine morning and found that the Government had swept them all aside and declared that they were going to do the work themselves.

I may say that a telegraph to the Yukon was one of the features discussed in London by us, and it was then determined to take it up.

I may say here, parenthetically, that while in London I was equally interested in a scheme which originated in the city of Montreal for the cheap thawing of the eternally frozen auriferous gravels in the Yukon country, and took quite as active an interest in furthering that as I did any of the methods of operation suggested in connection with Mr. Roche's company, if not more. To the gentlemen who represented that interest in London I also promised every assistance in my power compatible with my official position, and I only regret that the scheme is at present in abeyance. I referred to this scheme also in all my lectures and public utterances, and in that way have endeavoured to interest the public in it. The proposition is an electrical one, and I believe would, applied on an extensive scale, completely revolutionize the working of the lower grade of gravel of this country. In this case also, I advised the promoters how to make application for, and where to seek for a location best suited for the beginning of their work, going so far as to write out for them necessary description.

I was also much interested in dredging, and discussed at length with gentlemen from both Canada and the United States, the applicability of known dredges to the conditions existing in the Yukon region.

I attended meetings of capitalists with these gentlemen, addressed the meetings at length on the conditions here existing, and what we considered the prospects for the dredging industry, discussing also what we thought to be the most desirable appliances for that purpose. Again, to these gentlemen, also, I promised every aid in the way of advice compatible with any official position which I might afterwards assume in the Yukon. Since my advent here I am pleased to have been able to furnish them information which I hope will prove useful and encourage operations in that field.

For all this advice and assistance to be given I have been offered nothing, accepted nothing, and would not accept it if it were offered. I have no interest other than that of a Canadian, anxious for the good of the country, in any company, investment or business concern of any kind directly or indirectly, nor do I expect to have any. Neither will I allow any one to hold such interest for me while in the service of the Government.

Permit me again to say emphatically that I have no interest in any part or parcel of the Yukon territory other than an ardent desire to see it developed on lines adequate with its great merits, and thus to enrich and increase the value of the land of my birth.

The one small interest I had in the Yukon before assuming my present position, acquired in an open and legitimate way, I have, since my arriving here, almost given away in order that I might be perfectly free and untrammelled in my official position as long as it is entrusted to me.

Before closing, I might say that I regret that the British Canadian Gold Fields Company, Limited, did not succeed in beginning operations in the Yukon this year, as I would have been delighted to assist them on the lines outlined in our discussions in London, knowing that in doing so I would be very materially advancing the development of the wealth of this region.

This information was exclusive in so far as the methods and appliances proposed differed from those now in vogue. As to imparting special information to them, I may say that the same information had been pretty generally given in my lectures and other public utterances.

I have since my arrival at Dawson, discussed with scientific miners here vast projects on new lines, and have been glad to assist them in every way in my power, always being determined that while I remain Commissioner of the Yukon territory, or in any other official capacity, my salary and allowances will be my sole and only source of revenue.

Yours very truly,

(Sgd.) WM. OGILVIE,

Commissioner.

I regret that the unusual course pursued by the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) should have imposed upon me the imperative duty of assisting him to answer this question that has been asked, and the only comment that I will make upon this matter is, that while there can be no possible objection to Mr. Ogilvie or any other gentleman, holding a similar position, giving any general information, any general advice, or any general assistance to the public, I think it would be found an extremely inconvenient procedure, however honest—and I will not challenge it for a single moment—Mr. Ogilvie may be, to allow the prospectus of a particular body of capitalists to be brought out embodying a letter from Mr. Ogilvie pledging them every assistance and every support he can give them himself professionally and as an officer of the Government. That will be found to be a very inconvenient matter, and will only raise the protests of competitors, because there are many millions of British capital at this moment invested in kindred enterprises connected with the development of the Yukon, and it will expose Mr. Ogilvie, as commissioner, or any other gentleman occupying that position, to the very invidious statement that all capitalists do not enjoy the same advantages as this company, brought out professedly under his auspices and, possibly, upon information which he furnished to them.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Mr. Speaker, I desire to say in regard to the matter to which the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) has spoken of, at some length, while reading Mr. Ogilvie's letter, that Mr. Ogilvie's letter, so far as he is concerned, being before the House, speaks for itself. So far as the Government is concerned, I desire to say that it was first brought to my knowledge by telegraph—some time, I think, after Mr. Ogilvie left for the Yukon district, last summer, that the prospectus of this company, referred to, had been published in some one of the London papers. I immediately caused instructions to be sent to the High Commissioner's office, which resulted in Mr. Colmer, the chief clerk in the High Commissioner's office in London, writing a letter to the London press—I am not sure at this moment to which paper it was addressed—I think it was the London "Times"—stating that it was contrary to the desire of the Government that any officer of the Government, engaged in the administration of the Yukon, should have any special relations with any particular company. This was somewhat resented by the company, but the position was maintained by the department. When the papers came from the High Commissioner's office, showing exactly what had happened, they were sent to Mr. Ogilvie, he was asked for an explanation, and this letter is his reply. Lately the matter has again been before me upon correspondence from the company. This company claims, according to my recollection—I will bring the papers down and lay them on the Table of the House as soon as possible—this company claims that it was important to them that they should have the special advice and assistance of Mr. Ogilvie, and upon that I ruled that it was altogether incompatible with Mr. Ogilvie's position that he should have any special relations with any individual or company. I desire that the House should be aware of the position the Government has taken in connection with this matter. I have necessarily referred to the correspondence in connection with it, and that correspondence I will lay on the Table of the House as soon as it can be prepared, perhaps to-morrow.

Mr. FOSTER. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if the correspondence will include a copy of the letter embodied in the prospectus.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I will have the whole correspondence prepared as soon as possible. It will be laid on the Table of the House to-morrow or as soon as possible.

Mr. FOSTER. A good deal of it bears on the point of that letter, and, as my hon. friend says, I think the trouble lies in his having anything to do with the company when it was floated.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. My attention was called to this matter by an article in the "Mining and Engineering Journal," a very high class English publication, animadverting upon the extraordinary course that had been taken by Mr. Ogilvie. That article was written as soon as this prospectus appeared, and listening to the explanation of Mr. Ogilvie, which I doubt not is a frank statement, it appears that where he has undoubtedly erred, and merited much of the censure of this journal, is in giving such special information of a character so as to warrant that company in making the statement which forms part of the 4th clause of the question which I put to the Minister (Mr. Sifton):

"That to his personal knowledge there is at least £20,000,000 worth of gold in sight," and that he wrote to the founders of the company that he had furnished them with a private map on which he had marked places not yet taken up, where he knew gold to exist, and advised "that claims upon them be staked for the company as soon as possible," while he had also privately indicated the location of other unclaimed mineral deposits.

That seems to be confirmed in every particular, word for word, by Mr. Ogilvie's statement, where he goes on to say: That he had supplied such general information as he gave to those parties, by means of lectures to the public, but he fails to say what his practice was in dealing with other parties privately, and undertaking the very dangerous responsibility of marking off maps, as he explains in his letter he did, or giving private information of a special character. He himself seems to draw a distinction in that letter between general information such as was contained in his public statements, and special information which was contained in this private interview, and confined, so far as he explained, to one single company. Therefore, in my opinion, the comment of the "Engineering and Mining Journal" was warranted, and the Minister (Mr. Sifton) himself from his statement, seems to share the views of that paper, and to deprecate such a practice on the part of any officer of this Government having special and valuable information; such information as he should impart to the world at once, either by means of lectures which the department approves, or by means of official reports brought down under the authority of the department.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). Lest an attempt should be made to make an improper use of this incident, it is well we should understand the position with regard to asking and answering questions. At the commencement of this Parliament, and for the convenience of those who felt disposed to put questions, Mr. Speaker made a rule, that the questions should be numbered and put by the hon. member from his seat, and since then the question has been called by number and not read out. If you turn to page 2900 of "Hansard" you will find, page after page, of long questions put by the member, who simply says: I beg to put the question standing in my name; and although the question is not read it is copied into "Hansard."

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And so it ought.

Mr. McMULLEN. Very well. If a member can put a question and have it printed in "Hansard" without being read, I would like to know why the answer cannot be put in "Hansard" without being read?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The question is printed on the Orders of the Day.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the rule applies one way it certainly should apply the other. The hon. gentlemen opposite brought this upon themselves through their own fault. If no technical objection had been raised by them, the answer given by the Minister would have got into "Hansard."

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. Minister (Mr. Sifton) was put to the trouble of reading the entire answer, and we should have a distinct understanding now as to what the rule should be in future.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I cannot allow this incident to pass without protesting against the abuse of the privileges of this House, which is evidenced by the motion now in your hands, Mr. Speaker. There was not the shadow of a reason for moving the adjournment of the House on this occasion, and if we have learned anything to-day, for my part I have learned, that it is no use to extend courtesy to hon. gentlemen on the other side. My hon. friend (Mr. Sifton) was not bound to bring down any papers to-day. He was asked simply to give an answer, and it would have been within his privilege if he had given simply an extract from the statement.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. But he did not.

The PRIME MINISTER. Instead of doing this, the Minister gave the very best answer possible, for he laid on the Table of the House the papers which constituted a full answer. This proceeding of the Minister was intended to give the most valuable and available information in his power, and instead of it being received with courtesy by gentlemen opposite, it was received as if the Minister had something to conceal. What had he to conceal? The personality of Mr. Ogilvie is not in question to-day, and I think all that was said by the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Tupper) in the way of comment on Mr. Ogilvie was quite out of place. The conduct of Mr. Ogilvie may be discussed at a future time, if hon. gentlemen opposite think there is any occasion for it; but at present we were simply discussing a question of parliamentary procedure, and my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) went out of his way to abuse my hon. friend the Minister (Mr. Sifton), and went out of his way to place the Opposition in the humiliating position they occupy in regard to this matter. We shall know henceforth, that it will be better, in our relations with gentlemen opposite, to keep strictly within the rules.

Mr. N. CLARKE WALLACE (West York). The right hon. the Premier is taking a high and mighty course, but it is only on a par with what the rest of the Ministers are doing. They think when a question is asked in this House that they can dismiss it in a flippant tone, or give no answer, or give an evasive answer if they desire. But, Mr. Speaker, the country is watching these gentlemen opposite. We are the mouthpieces of the people of Canada, and we are asking these questions because the people cannot come here and catechise the Government. And, Sir, when the Prime Minister gets up and says that in future he will do as he pleases, we challenge him. We have duties to perform here—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And rights.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, and rights; and we shall discharge our duties and exercise our rights, and no threat will deter us, even though it comes from the Prime Minister. The question asked was:

Has the Government any information as to the authority of the company making such reference to Mr. Ogilvie, or has it any explanation to give?

Does the Government think that in refusing to answer that question, and throwing the papers upon the Table, that they are doing a compliment to us? Do they think it is right to put the papers on in that way in giving an answer, when that answer would not appear in "Hansard"? If it did appear in "Hansard" it would satisfy the members on this side of the House, but it would not appear in "Hansard."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It would not appear in "Hansard," nor anywhere else.

Mr. WALLACE. It would not appear in "Hansard," nor anywhere else. All we asked was that the answer should be put in such a way as it would appear on the pages of "Hansard." But what does the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) say, preceding the statement of the Prime Minister: If you do not like my throwing it on the Table of the House, then you can ask for a return. Do not we know from the experience of the past three years, that asking for returns in this House has become a complete farce. We are confronted to-day with three months of the session, and yet many of the papers that were asked for last year—not that were asked for this session—have never yet been laid on the Table of this House. I should not say these returns were asked for, but I should say that Parliament ordered they should be brought down, and yet this Government has not the slightest respect for the commands of Parliament. They go along at their sweet will, and the Prime Minister tells us that they will do more of that in the future. When an Order of this House is passed, when Parliament commands its servants, the Ministers—for that is the true relations the Ministers bear to Parliament, although these gentlemen opposite do not realize it—when Parliament commands that certain papers be produced, the Ministers have no right to quibble or delay, but should at once produce these papers. Documents ordered by the House last year are not down yet, and some of them have been brought down piecemeal, so that we do not know whence they come or where they go.

Mr. SPEAKER. I am afraid that the question of bringing papers under an Order for a return does not arise on this motion.

Mr. WALLACE. Why, Mr. Speaker, it is a very pertinent question. I am replying to the statement made by the First Minister.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question which, I understand, is being discussed now, is anything which arises out of this question No. 20 on the paper, and the action of the Government in the way they chose to deal with it.

Mr. WALLACE. And the statement of the Prime Minister.

Mr. SPEAKER. The statement of the Prime Minister, that the Government would use their discretion hereafter, was, I understand, in relation to questions, and not in relation to Orders for returns. The question, whether a return has been brought down, is an entirely different question.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will you allow me to say, Mr. Speaker, that what I understood the Prime Minister to say was not in regard to the question, but in regard to courtesy.

The PRIME MINISTER. And I think it was quite in order, and quite appropriate, too.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question of courtesy, I fancy, in this debate must have reference to the matter before the House.

Mr. WALLACE. Speaking to the point of order—

Mr. SPEAKER. I have decided the point of order, and it cannot be discussed now.

Mr. WALLACE. But I suppose the Speaker would desire to receive further information on the point.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The Speaker cannot allow perpetual discussion on a point of order after his decision has been given on that point.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. May I ask, whether a decision of the Speaker on an important point will be given before it is discussed?

Mr. SPEAKER. There was a discussion on the point, and I gave my decision.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The discussion had not ended.

Mr. SPEAKER. The discussion cannot go on for ever. I gave my decision—

Mr. WALLACE. Without discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. I gave my decision, after a certain amount of discussion had taken place on the point, and nobody had wished to discuss it further. I have given my decision, and, rightly or wrongly, I adhere to that decision.

Mr. COCHRANE. Amen.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker, I was going to refer to a statement made by the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), when you got up and stated, that you thought I should confine my remarks to a certain direction. I am now going to refer to the statement of the hon. member for North Wellington, unless you declare that statement to be out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member understands perfectly well that I could not do that, and I do not.

Mr. WALLACE. The hon. member for North Wellington said it opened up the whole question as to what should be put in "Hansard," and as to what should not be put in "Hansard".

The PRIME MINISTER. On questions.

Mr. SPEAKER. On questions.

Mr. WALLACE. Yes, and what information could be given. I said the information the Minister placed on the Table had been put in the way the hon. member for North Wellington said it should be, that is, that the question itself not being read in the House, if the answer to that question was not read in the House, but placed on the Table, with the understanding that it should be printed in "Hansard," that would be completely satisfactory to the members on this side of the House, and would give the information to the public which it was desirable the public should have. But I can only repeat further, Mr. Speaker, that it is not a matter of courtesy—it is not a matter that these gentlemen on the ministerial benches can either give or withhold information. If they withhold the information that is asked for in questions that are relevant, on matters of public importance, then they have to take the responsibility of refusing to answer those questions. Then, Sir, we can also find other means, legitimate and proper means, of getting the information which has been denied by the Ministers; and they will find that they have made a great mistake in withholding that information which Parliament is entitled to receive. I was going on further, when you called my attention to the fact that I should not wander from a particular question. So far as I understand the motion made by the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), it was, that the House adjourn. If you rule that, on a motion for the House to adjourn, a member must discuss only one question, then, of course, I shall not refer to matters with regard to returns. Is that your ruling, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. member wishes my ruling, I may say, that I have stated to the House several times my view of the motion to adjourn. There are three kinds of motion to adjourn the House: I mean to say, that they have three different effects. One is a motion to adjourn the House made while a debate is going on. That is in order to give a member who has already spoken in that debate, or any other member, an opportunity to speak again on the subject under discussion. Another kind of motion to adjourn the House is the motion that is made by the Government to close the sitting of the House. That is really not a debatable motion. The other kind of motion is such a one as has just been made by the hon. member for York, N.B., that is, a substantive motion to adjourn the House in the interval of the proceedings, which motion may be moved by an hon. member in order to bring up a particular important or unimportant public question.

Mr. WALLACE. But he does not mention the question.

Mr. SPEAKER. In his speech he mentions what it is; and, while everybody may participate in the discussion, speaking once, and the mover speaking twice, as it is a substantive motion, the discussion must be confined to the purpose for which the motion was brought up. In that respect it differs entirely from a discussion which may take place on the motion to go into Committee of Supply, when each member of the House may bring up a different public question. For that reason, I hold that the subject of discussion under the present motion to adjourn the House must be confined to the point involved in that motion—that is, to the point as to how questions are to be answered, not as to how returns are to be brought down.

Mr. WALLACE. Mr. Speaker, I call your attention to the fact that the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), in making his motion to adjourn the House, did not give a single reason why he wanted the House to adjourn; so that your ruling, as last stated, does not apply.

Mr. SPEAKER. Order. The hon. gentleman has questioned the accuracy of my statement. As I understand it, the hon. member for York, N.B., said: "We shall find a way of discussing this question now," and got up and moved the adjournment of the House; and then the hon. leader of the Opposition proceeded upon this line. The hon. member will, therefore, please confine himself to the question under discussion.

Mr. WALLACE. Well, Mr. Speaker, I had said all I desire to say on the question of the remarks made by the right hon. First Minister, and I shall probably have occasion to make some further remarks on the production of those papers which you have decided it is not in order to discuss on the motion now before the Chair.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Mr. Speaker, I want to say a few words in regard to the statement made by the hon. member for North Wellington. I understand that some years ago you yourself, Mr. Speaker, laid it down, that it would be judicious for the member in whose name a question stood, to refer to the number of the question, and ask an answer to the question standing in his name—that that would be equivalent to his reading the question. That was done, I understand, for the purpose of saving time. Notwithstanding the rule we have always adhered to in this House, that anything not read in the House should go on "Hansard," we decided that questions, though not read, should go on, for the purpose of making "Hansard" intelligible. That was my understanding why this departure from the rule was adopted in the case of questions. Therefore, I do not think the contention of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) holds good.

With regard to the statement of the right hon. the First Minister that because the Minister of the Interior proposed to answer the question in the way he did, we were assuming that he had something to keep back, that does not follow at all. All we desire is to have the full answer in "Hansard," and if this document be not read, but simply laid on the Table, the complete answer will not appear in "Hansard." There would be, therefore, no record of it which we could turn up at any time when desired. That was the only object we had in view. We desire to have both the answer and the reply in full in "Hansard," where they can be easily referred to, and it was for that purpose we moved the adjournment of the House.

It is very important that, as far as possible, we should have courteous replies to questions put in this House. I do not wish to be understood as implying that replies are not courteous, but I scarcely think that the statement of the right hon. First Minister was in strict consonance with his usual courtesy, when he said that if we were not inclined to accept the answers as given, he would not be disposed to observe the course usually followed by the Government in such matters. I think he must have made this outbreak in a moment of weakness possibly, or of temper, and I hardly think that on sober second thought he would be disposed to carry out his threat. The rule reads as follows:—

Questions may be put to Ministers of the Crown relating to public affairs, and to other members, relating to any Bill, motion or other public matter connected with the business of the House in which such members may be concerned; but, in putting any such question, no argument or opinion is to be offered, nor any facts stated, except so far as may be necessary to explain the same, and in answering any such question, a member is not to debate the matter to which the same refers.

I respectfully submit that the rule laid down giving the right to put a question, carries with it the implication that at least a fair reply should be given. It does not seem to me that, under the rule, it is optional, as a matter of right, to a Minister whether he shall answer or not a question. If the question is a proper one, and that is to be decided by the Speaker, the member putting it is entitled to a reasonable reply from any Minister of the Crown or any other member to whom the question is put. The rule carries the implication just as much as does the rule of law that when a statute provides that a thing shall be done on a certain day, it carries the implication that the thing may not be done on any other day. When this question was put, it was asked for the purpose of getting information, and I assume that the question was a reasonable and proper one, because it was not ruled out of order. The Minister, therefore, ought to give the information. I am not imputing any blame to him for the way in which he desired to reply, but what I do complain of is that he refused, when requested by us, to give his reply in the usual manner, so that it might appear in full on "Hansard." The essence of the rule is that when a question is put and replied to, the full reply should be given to the House and put on record, and therefore there can be no ground for complaint when we desire to have as complete an answer as possible.

That being the case, although it is a very awkward and roundabout way to get the information on "Hansard," I do not see any other way in which that could be accomplished except the one taken of moving the adjournment of the House. If there were any other way, the one we took might be open to objection; but in my opinion, we took the only way open to us of getting the answer on "Hansard," and the desirability of having the answer on "Hansard," so that we might have the question and answer on record together, is our justification for the course we have taken.

Mr. BELL (Pictou). If I understood the right hon. First Minister rightly, he spoke, in his opening remarks, of the course taken by this side as being somewhat of an abuse of the privileges of Parliament or the ordinary procedure of Parliament. Later on I understood you, Mr. Speaker, to have decided that the member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), in moving to adjourn the House, took the means recognized as strictly parliamentary and correct. If that be the case, I think the First Minister should certainly qualify the remarks he made, or withdraw them. If I understood you correctly, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for York acted strictly within parliamentary usage in the motion he made, and I am sure there was no intention on the part of any hon. member on this side to abuse the privileges or procedure of Parliament. It would seem also, from the statement just made by so experienced a member as the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) that no other method was open to those who wished to have that particular answer in such form as would entitle it to receive a place in the pages of "Hansard," so that I think the strictures of the right hon. Minister were somewhat out of place.

THE YUKON INVESTIGATION.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

Mr. SPROULE.

1. Has any official or unofficial or other communication been received by the Government from Mr. Ogilvie respecting the commission of inquiry ?

2. If so, what is its purport ?

3. Will the hon. the Minister of the Interior lay upon the Table of the House that portion of the private letter from Mr. Ogilvie referring to the subject to which the Minister alluded on 15th May, 1899, in the House of Commons ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. Yes. 2. The report has been received. 3. Inasmuch as the remarks in reference to the subject are intermingled with references of an unofficial and private character, it is not considered proper to lay a copy of them upon the Table of the House.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has not replied to the second part of the question.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. I have said that a report has been received which indicates that it is a report from Mr. Ogilvie. The hon. gentleman does not expect me to read the report.

WM. BEAUMONT, OF COWICHAN.

Mr. McINNES asked :

1. Was William Beaumont, Esq., of Cowichan district, British Columbia, the postmaster at Maple Bay at the time British Columbia entered confederation ?

2. Was any salary due him as such postmaster by the Colony of British Columbia when it entered confederation ?

3. Did the Dominion assume the liability ?

4. Has Mr. Beaumont filed a claim with the Postmaster General for such salary ?

5. If so, has the claim been investigated, and with what result ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). Mr. Wm. Beaumont was not postmaster when British Columbia entered confederation, there being no regular post office at Maple Bay at that date. There was, therefore, no salary due to him at the date in question. No liability existed in this case. Mr. Beaumont has on different occasions applied to be paid for services rendered by him prior to confederation for voluntary distribution of mail matter to settlers of Maple Bay from his store there before the establishment of the regular post office. The matter has been investigated many times within the last twenty years, and the claim disallowed on the ground that there was no liability on the part of the Dominion Government.

DREDGING THE RIVER SYDENHAM.

Mr. CLANCY asked :

How much has been spent in dredging the River Sydenham since the year 1896 ?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). The Minister of Public Works has sent me the answer to this question. The expenditure for dredging the River Sydenham from 1896 to date is $1,649.25.

SALARIES, BRITISH COLUMBIA LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

Mr. McINNES asked :

Is the Minister of Marine considering a readjustment of the salaries paid in the lighthouse service in British Columbia ?

If so, when is it expected the changes will take effect ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). A report is being prepared by the Deputy Minister of the duties and services performed by the lighthouse keepers in British Columbia, together with the salaries paid to each of them. Until the report is received and considered it is impossible to say whether there will be any changes.

OYSTER BEDS, OYSTER BAY, B.C.

Mr. McINNES asked :

1. Is the Government aware that the Esquimalt and Nanaimo Railway Company claims the oyster beds at Oyster Bay under and by virtue of letters patent from the Dominion, and that the said company has interfered with and damaged oyster beds cultivated by lessees of the Dominion ?

2. Have the respective rights of the said company and of the lessees of the oyster beds been investigated ?

3. If so, what are their respective rights in the oyster beds ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. Yes. 2 and 3. The claims referred to in the question were submitted by the Department of Marine to the Department of Justice, with a request for their opinion as to their validity. A written opinion has been received, a copy of which I will be glad to give to the hon. gentleman if he so desires, or if he prefers to move for the correspondence, it will be promptly brought down.

Mr. PRIOR. What is the purport of it ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not wish to state the purport of a legal opinion which is qualified a good deal throughout. The hon. gentleman knows how difficult it would be to summarize such a document. I prefer that the opinion should be moved for and brought down.

GEORGE PEPIN, EMPLOYEE CHAMBLY CANAL.

Mr. MONK (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Has George Pepin, employed on the Chambly Canal, been accused of keeping a general store, contrary to the rules and regulations of the Department of Railways and Canals ?

2. Is the Government aware that during the inquiry held in regard to the management of said canal, George Pepin admitted under oath that he did own and manage a general store ?

3. What steps do the Government intend taking in this matter ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. Mr. George Pepin, employed on the Chambly Canal, has been accused of keeping a general store, contrary to the rules and regulations of the department. 2. The Government is aware that Mr. Pepin, during the inquiry held in regard to the management of the said canal, admitted under oath that he did own and manage a general store. 3. The Government have informed him that he must choose between his office on the canal staff and the keeping of a general store ; that is to say, if he elects to keep his store, he must resign his position on the canal staff, or vice versa.

TIDAL LANDS BELOW STEVESTON, B.C.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. Under whose control (Federal Government or Local) are the 37.29 acres of foreshore and tidal lands, situated west of and immediately adjoining section 9, range 7 west, block 3 north, N.W.D., about two miles below Steveston, British Columbia ?

2. Was an application made to the Department of the Interior, or to the Department of Marine and Fisheries in 1892, for a lease of these lands, and if so, to which department was the application made ?

3. Was application to either department, as aforesaid, made in 1896, and if so, to which and by whom ?

4. Were other applications subsequently made, and if so, by whom ?

5. If applications were made in any of the above years to either of said departments, what was the reply ?

6. If any communication to any one has been made by either of the above departments on this subject, what is the purport of the last ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The department of the Interior have furnished me with the information so far as it is able to give it. I am not able to answer the question to-day. It is a rather complicated matter, and I wish to find out how far the foreshore to which the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) refers is part of the harbour.

THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR AND MR. FAWCETT.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

Has the hon. the Minister of the Interior consulted Mr. Fawcett, as promised on 19th April last ("Hansard," page 1879) ? If so, what is the result ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Yes. Mr. Fawcett states that Mr. Wade did not advise him respecting the recording of mining claims or duties of his office.

LETTERS REFERRED TO BY THE MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

1. Does the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries intend to lay upon the Table of the House of Commons the "large number of letters" referred to by him in debate on 14th April, 1899 ("Hansard," page 1642)?

2. If not, why not?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The letters referred to by me in the debate of 14th April last were personal and private. Not being public documents, it is not my intention to lay them on the Table of the House.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Why did you refer to them, then?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I had a right to refer to them.

MR. J. W. WILLISON.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked:

1. Is J. W. Willison, Crown timber agent in Yukon district, mentioned on page H—26, Public Accounts, a brother of the J. S. Willison, Esq., editor of the Toronto "Globe" newspaper?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). No.

MR. PHILIP WALSH.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked:

1. What relation, if any, to Major Walsh, is Phil. Walsh, mentioned in Public Accounts, H—26, as timber agent in Yukon territory, at $100 a month?

2. Is he still in the employ of the Government? If not, when did he leave the Government service?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. Philip Walsh is a brother of Major Walsh. 2. No. He left the Government service on the 31st August, 1898.

EXTENSION OF FRANKING PRIVILEGE.

Mr. TAYLOR (by Mr. Bergeron) asked:

Is it the intention of the Postmaster General to extend the franking privilege to members of the local legislatures of Canada on legislative reports during the recess of the respective legislatures?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). The Postmaster General has no power to extend the franking privilege. That is entirely regulated by the Post Office Act.

MAILS FROM RAILWAY STATION TO LANG POST OFFICE.

Mr. LANG (by Mr. Somerville) asked:

1. Have the Government called for tenders for carrying the mails from the railway station to Lang post office?

2. If so, how many tenders were received?

3. What was the amount of each tender?

4. To whom was the contract awarded?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. Yes, the Government has called for tenders for carrying the mails from the railway station to Lang post office. 2. Three. 3. Andrew Colville, $63 per annum; Adam Johnston, $64 per annum; Robert Speirs, $69 per annum. 4. Andrew Colville.

MAILS FROM HAVELOCK TO OAK LAKE POST OFFICE.

Mr. LANG (by Mr. Somerville) asked:

1. Have the Government asked for tenders for carrying the mails from Havelock to Oak Lake post office?

2. If so, who were the tenderers?

3. What was the amount of each tender?

4. To whom was the contract awarded?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. Yes, the Government have asked for tenders for carrying the mails from Havelock to Oak Lake Post Office. 2. Samuel Hubble and Robert McCutcheon. 3. Samuel Hubble, $60 per annum, and Robert McCutcheon, $65 per annum. 4. Samuel Hubble.

CANADA EASTERN RAILWAY.

Mr. FOSTER asked:

Has any promise been given, directly or indirectly, by any member of the Government of Canada to the Canada Eastern Railway Company, or to any person connected therewith or interested therein, or to any person on the behalf thereof, looking towards the purchase of that railway for the use of the Government?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). No promise has been made or given by or on behalf of the Government, either directly or indirectly, to purchase the Canada Eastern Railway. In answer to addresses which have been presented to me, both publicly and privately, by Boards of Trade and municipal bodies in New Brunswick, urging the taking over of the Canada Eastern Railway in the interest of the public and of the Government railway, I have stated publicly and privately that while not authorized to speak for the Government or otherwise than for myself individually, I had come to the conclusion that I would personally favour the Government ownership of that railway if the same could be had upon proper terms, and that upon an opportune occasion I would take up the subject with my colleagues and submit the same for their consideration. I have not made any further or other promise or statement than the above to any one connected with or interested in the Canada Eastern Railway.

POSTMASTER OF GALT, ONT.

Mr. BENNETT (by Mr. McCleary) asked:

1. Who is the present postmaster at Galt, Ont.?

2. When was he appointed?

3. What is his salary?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. Wm. S. Turnbull is postmaster of Galt, Ont. 2. He was appointed on the 1st of March, 1899. 3. He is allowed the usual percentage, which varies with the revenue of the office.

POST OFFICES, INVERNESS COUNTY.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

Has the Government changed the location of the post office at Strathlorn, in the county of Inverness ? If so, why ?

(a) Has A. D. McLean, the former postmaster at Strathlorn, been removed from office ? If so, for what reason ?

(b) Was the reason for his removal, if any, communicated to Mr. McLean before his removal ?

(c) Were there any charges of official wrongdoing made against the said A. D. McLean as postmaster ? If so, what were the charges, and by whom made ?

(d) Who is appointed postmaster at Strathlorn as successor to A. D. McLean ? On whose application was the new appointment made ?

(e) Has the Government established a new post office called the "Willow Bank" post office, in the district of Strathlorn, in Inverness County ? If so, why ?

(f) Who is the postmaster at Willow Bank, and on whose application has he been appointed ?

(g) Is the Government aware that the new post office at Willow Bank and the Strathlorn office are within three-quarters of a mile of each other on the same road—the road leading from Mabou to Margaree ? What salary attaches to each of these offices ? Will each of them be a money order office ?

(h) Did the people of Strathlorn, or any of them, by petition or otherwise, ask for the establishment of the Willow Bank post office, or for the removal from office of A. D. McLean, the former postmaster at Strathlorn ? If so, who asked ?

(i) Is the Government aware that the new post office called Willow Bank, is also within one mile of the Glenville post office on the same road—the road leading from Mabou to Margaree ?

(j) Has John N. McLellan, postmaster at Deepdale, in the district of Strathlorn, Inverness County, been recently removed from office ? If so, for what reason ?

(k) Was the reason for his removal from office, if any, communicated by the Government to Mr. McLellan before his removal ?

(l) Were there any charges of official wrongdoing made against the said John N. McLellan as postmaster ? If so, what were the charges, and by whom made ?

(m) Who is appointed as successor to the said John N. McLellan as postmaster, and on whose application was the new appointment made ?

(n) Did the people of Strathlorn, or any of them, by petition or otherwise, ask the Government to remove John N. McLellan from the office of postmaster ? If so, who asked ?

(o) On whose recommendation did the Government remove from office as postmasters A. D. McLean and John N. McLellan, the postmasters referred to ? How long has each of them been a postmaster ? Were they honest and efficient postmasters ?

(p) Has the Government removed, or is it the intention to remove from office, Walter McDonald, Esq., postmaster of Glendyer, Mabou ? If so, for what reason ?

(q) Has any reason been communicated by the Government to Mr. McDonald ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). 1. Yes. To obviate the existing overlapping of two mail services over the one route, and to accommodate the neighbouring coal mining village as well as the greater number of the people of Strathlorn. (a) Yes ; because the post office was removed. (b) No. (c) No. (d) William D. Lawrence. The Postmaster General assuming full responsibility for his appointment. (e) Yes. To accommodate the public in that locality. (f) Duncan McLean, Esq. The Postmaster General assumed full responsibility for his appointment. (g) The Government is not aware that those offices are within three-quarters of a mile of one another. (h) The people's representative in Parliament asked for the establishment of the office.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What salary attaches to each of the offices in (d) ? That is not answered. And will each of them be a money order office ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. The salary will be whatever is the usual salary under such circumstances.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, but I do not know that.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. It always depends upon the revenue, which is a fluctuating amount. There is a minimum salary of $10 to each post office, and if the revenue of the office in course of time justifies an increase, it will be made.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will each of them be a money order office ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. If there is any public interest to be served by a money order office being established in connection with any of them, such office will be established.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But they are not now established ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. I do not think there are any at this moment. (i) The Government is not aware if such is the case. (j) No. (k) No. (l) No. (m) No one. (n) No. (o) Mr. McLean was removed, because of the change of the location of the office, on the recommendation of Mr. McLennan, M.P. for the riding. Mr. McLean was in the service from 1874. (p) Mr. McDonald has not been removed. The department is not aware of there being any intention to remove him.

PERSONS IN QUARANTINE SERVICE.

Mr. MONTAGUE (by Mr. Haggart) asked:

What persons are now engaged in the quarantine service of the Government, and what is the amount of salary in each case ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). G. E. Martineau, M.D., $2,000; F. Montizambert, M.D., $4,000; N. E. MacKay, M.D., $1,000; G. Carleton Jones, $800; Jos. Himmelman, $1 per day; Rev. C. Underwood, $100; Rev. E. Roy, $100; Wm. Sutherland, $300; J. E. March, M.D., $1,400; Thomas McGowan, $300; J. Macdonald, M. D., $400; P. Conroy, M.D., $400; M. Henry, $300; H. W. Mutch, $150; H. Rindress, M. D., $1,200; D. J. McIsaac, $400; A. T. Watt, M.D., $2,500; R. L. Fraser, $200; L. McKechnie, M.D., $400; A. C. Smith, M.D., $1,600; Rev. J. A. Babineau, $200.

YULE BRIDGE, RICHELIEU RIVER.

Mr. MONK (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Have the arbitrators on the value of the Yule Bridge over the Richelieu River at Chambly made their report to the Government?
2. If the report has been made, what does the Government intend doing about it?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). The arbitrators in this case made an award amounting to $36,810.82 to be paid to the Yule Estate for this bridge. The Deputy Minister of Justice applied for a reduction of award, as in 1845 the bridge cost about $30,000, contending that bridge was not worth more now than in 1845. Mr. Walter Shanley who gave evidence for Yule Estate, made affidavit that bridge would cost more to construct now than then. Case is in abeyance; it now rests with Yule heirs to apply for judgment when the Minister of Justice will decide whether it is best to appeal the case or pay the judgment.

FRANK GOSSELIN.

Mr. STENSON (by Mr. Flint) asked :

1. Is Frank Gosselin, who was employed as locomotive fireman on the Intercolonial Railway between Lévis and Rivière du Loup, from 1880 to 1882, when he was promoted to the position of engineer, an employee of that railway now?
2. If not, when did he leave that employment?
3. In what way did he leave? Did he resign, or was he dismissed?
4. If dismissed, for what cause, on whose report, and by whom was his dismissal recommended?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. No, Mr. Frank Gosselin is not now an employee of the Intercolonial Railway. 2. He left the service in August, 1889. 3. He left of his own accord. 4. He was not dismissed.

PUBLIC WORKS AT BELCÉIL.

Mr. MONK (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Are the wharf and ice breakers on the Richelieu River, at Belcélil, completed?
2. What is the total cost of the same?
3. What was the estimate of the total cost of these works as executed?

Mr. MONTAGUE.

4. What was the estimate of the cost of these works by Mr. Coste, chief engineer under the late Government?

5. Is it the intention of the Government to continue the wharf on the lower or north side of the Grand Trunk Railway bridge, and if so, why?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). 1. Yes. 2. $15,650.13. 3. There is no estimate on record in the department as to the probable cost of the works as executed. 4. There is no record in the department of any estimate having been made by Mr. Coste of the probable cost of the work. 5. The matter is under consideration. I may state that the intention was at first to build a pile structure, and tenders were called for the work. The contract was let to Mr. Beaulieu, of Quebec, before this Government took office. Owing, however, to the nature of the bottom, piles could not be driven and crib-work had to be resorted to. No new tenders were called, and the work was done by day's labour.

VICTORIA HARBOUR, B. C.

Mr. PRIOR asked :

Has Mr. Roy, the resident engineer in British Columbia, made any report during the last eighteen months as to the state of Victoria Harbour? If so, what is its purport? Has he reported that the bar at the mouth of the harbour is silting up?

The MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE (Mr. Fisher). There is no report in the Department of Public Works from Mr. Roy, as to the state of Victoria Harbour during the last eighteen months.

IMPORTATION OF PLATES AND DIES BY BANK NOTE COMPANIES.

Mr. FOSTER moved for :

Return showing in detail all dies, plates or other parts, wholly or partially engraved, entered or imported by or for the use of the American Bank Note Company, to be used in the making of bank notes, postage stamps, postal notes and inland revenue stamps for the Government, with the valuation and amount of duty charged and collected.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Pater-son). I do not know how far I will be able to obtain the information that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) asks for, and I simply desire to mention that before the Order goes.

Mr. FOSTER. As far as it can be obtained.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if he would have any objection to adding to this motion, after the words "American Bank Note Company," the words, "and the British American Bank Note Company"?

Mr. FOSTER. Not at all. The only thing I would like to say is this: I hope the placing of those words there, which will make the return go back twenty or thirty years, will not have the effect of keeping my information back, because that materially alters the ground to be gone over, in fact, I am not sure but that it will go back over forty-five years. He might bring down my section first, and let the other come in afterwards.

The POSTMASTER GENERAL. All right.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. It will take a good while to prepare the information anyway.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not think the hon. Postmaster General wishes to keep back the information I desire, so that the hon. Minister of Customs will understand that, and bring it down in sections.

Motion agreed to.

GRAIN STANDARDS.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia) moved :

That it appears from year to year the unsatisfactory state of grain standards has been formally brought before this House and before the Minister of Inland Revenue, and that the following resolutions have been passed unanimously by the Winnipeg Grain and Produce Exchange :—

(1) Resolved that this Exchange request the chairman of the Western Grain Standard Board to ask permission of the Minister of Inland Revenue to call together the western members of this board to discuss the advisability of having inspectors grade on the word and meaning of the Inspector's Act, and that the Standard Board from year to year define such commercial grades as may be found necessary.

(2) Whereas, the evils resulting from the mixing of Manitoba grain at Fort William and other terminal elevators are most injuriously affecting the reputation of Manitoba grain in the European markets ; and whereas, the Winnipeg Grain and Produce Exchange is most desirous of restoring the reputation of Manitoba grain to its former high standing, that this exchange hereby expresses its positive conviction that no mixing of grain should be permitted in terminal elevators, and also that no mixing of grain should be permitted in a cargo shipment unless the inspection certificate issued therefor shall have written across the face a statement defining the various grades entering into its consumption.

(3) And further be it resolved, that this exchange memorialize the Department of Inland Revenue to secure the enactment of such legislation as may be necessary for the carrying into effect and enforcement of the principle above enunciated.

In view of the foregoing resolutions, it is the opinion of this House that immediate action is demanded on the part of the Government to secure for the wheat of the west that premier position in the estimation of the world to which by its unrivalled excellence it is entitled.

He said : Mr. Speaker, I beg, in the first place, to thank the leader of the House for allowing my motion to stand during my enforced absence from the House. In 1874, the General Inspection Act was passed, providing, among other things, for the inspection of wheat, and, under the Revised Statutes of 1886, that Act was re-enacted, and there provision was made also for the inspection of wheat. In 1887 the North-west Territories obtained representation in this House, and shortly after we came down here, a deputation, led by the members from Manitoba and the North-west Territories, waited on the hon. member for Victoria, N.B., (Mr. Costigan), who was then the Minister of Inland Revenue. The result of that interview was, that legislation was passed in 1889 which provided that a Standard Board should be brought into existence for the purpose of forming standards for the wheat west of Lake Superior ; and the grade fixed by that board was to govern the inspection in all parts of Canada in regard to wheat grown west of Lake Superior. Subsequently to that, representations were made to the members from Manitoba and the North-west Territories, that, owing to the vast extent of territory on which the wheat was grown, the differences of climate and the differences of conditions, that at times it was exceedingly difficult to bring the wheat within the category of definite standards, and that, in that way, wrong was done to the producers—not only the producers suffered, but the handlers as well—especially was it impressed on us that the producers suffered. As a consequence of the representations that were made at that time to the Minister of Inland Revenue, an Act was passed in 1891, and the 4th subsection of section 3 provided that, if a considerable proportion of the crop of any year had marked characteristics which would exclude it from the given standard—to the prejudice of the producer—from the grade to which it properly belonged, the examiner might establish a special grade, and choose a sample of such a grade to be the sample therefor. In other words, it is provided that he should make a commercial grade. That legislation was passed as far back as 1891. It was hoped that a provision would be made, that, if wheat fell just below the standard to which, at a glance, it might properly belong, that those who had the grading of the wheat, instead of throwing it to the next standard, would make a commercial grade, and thus, probably, get for the farmer a cent less per bushel than the better grade, to which, but for some slight defect, it might have been entitled. However, for some reason that I cannot understand, that does not seem to have been done. Notwithstanding that in 1892, in 55 and 56 Victoria, that clause was re-enacted, emphatically showing that the Parliament of Canada set store by the provision ; as I say, for some reason that I cannot understand, that does not seem to have been acted upon, and for some time there has been considerable dissatisfaction amongst the producers, dissatisfaction amongst the dealers, dissatisfaction amongst the millers, dissatisfaction all around, with the system that prevails at present. From the point of view of the producer, from the national point of view, from the point of view of the general wheat trade of Canada, and from the point of view of the English buyer, on all grounds, it is desirable that the Government should turn its attention to this important question. And, now that it has been again and again before this House, and before successive Ministers of Inland Revenue, I trust that the Government will at last find a solution for the very serious grievances and difficulties which exist. I will say this: I look forward with a good deal of hope to its being done, because I am fully aware that there never has been a Minister of Inland Revenue who came to this question with more zeal and more desire to solve all the difficulties in the way that now exist, in the interest of the North-west Territories, than the present Minister of Inland Revenue. How is it that the present state of things affects the producer? Men who are farmers, men who are handlers of grain, men who are millers, testify, that the producer is, by the present system, placed in a very unsatisfactory position. For instance, suppose a producer has a large quantity of grain which just grades off from No. 1, at the present time, according to the testimony of competent persons, instead of having the advantage which he would have if he took his wheat to Minneapolis or Duluth, of being able to sell it by sample, he has to trust to persons who may be interested in dealing with it in a way foreign to the direct interest of the producer, and may have to be content with having his wheat graded No. 2, and taking the price of No. 2 wheat. The statement is made by competent men occupying high positions in Winnipeg, that as much as 5 cents a bushel has been lost to the producer under the present system. But if only 1 or 2 or 3 cents a bushel are lost, that is sufficiently serious. Then, there is another great drawback in the present system. Under it the wheat goes to Fort William, and it may be a considerable time before the man who has shipped it gets his return and knows how his wheat has been graded; and he has no redress whatever; whereas, if we had such a system as we are told exists in Duluth, the producer could send his wheat, say to Winnipeg, and when he found it graded off from the standard to which he thought it rightly belonged, instead of being forced to accept an inferior grading and a lower price than the wheat was worth, he could have his wheat sold by sample, and get every cent of its value. There is another serious aspect. At Fort William and at other points where there are terminal elevators, what do we find done? The wheat of the North-west and the wheat of Manitoba, the finest wheat in the world, is mixed with inferior wheat, and we are assured on good authority that inspectors have actually graded the same wheat higher for the English market than they have graded it for the Ontario market. That is to say, wheat which they would only grade No. 2 for the Ontario millers, they will grade No. 1 for the English market. The result of that is that in England, where the wheat of the North-west, as you know from universal testimony, should stand at the very top of the ladder, is at present at a discount as compared with the same grade from Duluth. What is the reason? Is it because our wheat is inferior? No, but because the mixer has mixed inferior grades with the superior grade for his own purposes, not in the interest of Canada, very much against the interest of the English millers, and of course foreign to the interest of the North-west Territories. Now, I want to give some statistics to illustrate how the producer suffers. In Duluth and Minneapolis they have, what it is very desirable we should have a re-inspection if necessary; and the result in Minneapolis, for the year ended 31st August, 1898, out of 9,005 cars which were re-inspected, in the case of only 4,885 cars the original inspection was sustained, in the case of 3,853 it was raised, and in the case of 294 it was lowered. Again, in Duluth, the number of cars re-inspected was 5,956; the number in which the grade was sustained was 3,422; the number in which the grade was raised was 2,491, and the number in which the grade was lowered was only 43. Now, the motion which I have put on the paper embodies a resolution passed by the Winnipeg Grain and Produce Exchange. After its adoption of that resolution, early in April, the Grain Standard Board came together and passed resolutions, the first of which aims, as one of the members of that board has declared, at practically doing away with the board. All persons interested in this matter, whether inside or outside the board, are unanimous in desiring that there should be, not a varying standard, but permanent standards for certain grades. The following is the first declaration adopted by the Standard Board:

We believed, says that board, that by the present unsatisfactory system of inspection and handling of the grain of this country, the commercial value and general reputation of our wheat has been injuriously affected both at home and abroad.

Be it resolved, that in the opinion of this board, steps should at once be taken and all legitimate means used to restore and maintain the high standard and character which rightfully belongs to the hard wheat grown in Manitoba and the North-west Territories.

Then, there is a resolution, as follows:—

Resolved, that this Standard Board approves of the policy of permanent and uniform grades for extra Manitoba Hard, Nos. 1 and 2 Hard and Nos. 1 and 2 Northern, in respect of which the inspectors should be instructed to inspect according to the wording and meaning of the Act.

I think that I shall consult the interests of the case and the time and convenience of the House, if I read the resolutions passed by that Board, and then make some comment. The next resolution is as follows:—

Moved by Mr. W. W. B. Underhill, and seconded by Mr. Chas. Castle: Resolved, that this board heartily concurs in the resolution passed by the Winnipeg Grain and Produce Exchange on the 15th of March, 1899, viz., that the evils resulting from the mixing of Manitoba grain at Fort William and other terminal elevators are most injuriously affecting the reputation of Manitoba grain in the European markets. And further be it resolved, that this board hereby expresses its positive conviction that no mixing of wheat should be permitted in a cargo or shipment unless the inspection certificate issued therefor have written across its face a statement defining the various grades entering into its composition, and no mixed cargo shall carry a straight grade certificate.

That is a very strong condemnation of that system of mixing grain to which I have referred. Then comes this resolution:

Resolved, that when the inspectors are called on to inspect grain shipped from what are called mixing elevators, they shall be governed in their inspection of such grain by the general standard of grades enforced at the public warehouses, and no grain will be allowed to pass inspection that is not fully up to the general standard quality of the different grades coming out from the regular bins of the public warehouses, provided that grain may be cleaned only (not mixed) under the supervision of an inspector or his deputy, at any elevator, without coming under the above regulations.

Then comes the final resolution:

That this board is convinced that the time has now arrived when it is absolutely necessary in the interests of the producer and grain interests generally, that all grain grown in Manitoba and the North-west Territories, passing Winnipeg and Fort William or south or east thereof, be inspected at Winnipeg and houses at Fort William, or rather eastern elevators on Winnipeg inspection.

Thus you have four principles that it is desired to see carried out. You have the principle of a permanent standard; the principle that grain shall be taken as nearly pure as possible to Europe; the principle of final inspection at Winnipeg; the disposal, wherever necessary, by the purchaser of his wheat by sample.

Subsequently, some time, I think, about the 18th April, a deputation, consisting of members of the Western Standard Board, gentlemen from the Winnipeg Exchange, Winnipeg Board of Trade, from boards of trade throughout Ontario, from the Board of Trade of Montreal, and the Board of Trade, I think, of Fort William—and Mr. King and Mr. Gibbs, from Fort William, were present—waited, accompanied, I think, by all the North-west and Manitoba members, on the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, and this very remarkable thing happened, that these gentlemen, representing various interests, representing, as in the case of Mr. Castle, the producers; as in the case of others, the handlers of grain; as in the case of others, the millers of Ontario—all coincided pretty well in condemning the present system.

There was some slight difference of opinion as to the solution of the difficulty, but it was so slight that I think we may say there was a general consensus of opinion that it was desirable that henceforth the wheat of the North-west and Manitoba should be inspected under the Act, that a permanent standard should be devised, subject to any slight variations that would necessarily take place, in consequence of mutations in the character of the cereal, from year to year, but that, still, there would be the certainty that would be found by reason of definite provisions in the Act. And there was also—although, of course, men like, Mr. King, whose interests were in Fort William, would not agree to that—a general opinion that the inspection should be made at Winnipeg. I think there was the unanimous, or practically unanimous, opinion that our grain should go into the hands of the English buyer in as pure a state as possible, and as nearly as possible as it leaves the farmers' hands, having regard to the fact that, of course, we postulate that it should be clean. I think that I shall probably consult brevity, if I give a few of the opinions that were uttered by these responsible gentlemen. What is asked, said one, is the adoption of the principle followed at Duluth. It is said that at four or five different points the grain is inspected, one inspector being pitted against another, and, in order to get rid of that, what is proposed? It is proposed that there should be only the final inspection at Winnipeg. I think it is Mr. Bell, whom I know, and who could speak with authority, said:

If a car, for instance, misses grading, that wheat is worth more than the minimum, but the purchaser cannot get it because it is in Fort William before the result of the inspection is known.

By this system—

That is the system that is now advocated——he could go into the market and get every cent that is in his wheat.

And he goes on to make this remarkable statement:

The market reports show that a car has gone marked No. 1 Northern or No. 1 Hard, and just missed the grade, and was sold for much less than the regular grade. The present system is most unsatisfactory from every point, but especially from that of the producer.

Mr. Spink says, and he speaks with a great deal of authority:

Every single year you have been above the wording of the Act, and if the inspectors had been able to grade down, they could have had 5 cents a bushel more for the wheat.

"They"—I suppose, referring to the producer. And what that points to is this—that practically the standard of the Grain Standard Board has over-riden the Act of Parliament, and what is now desired is that henceforth the grading be under the Act. Again, one of the parties said :

When the standard admits of low grade, you help the mixer.

Now, Sir, on Saturday the hon. Minister brought in a Bill dealing with this question. I understand that the hon. gentleman did not explain his Bill on Saturday, when he introduced it, so we do not know what it provides. But I hope, and, indeed, I am inclined to believe, that it will be found that the hon. Minister is seeking to solve the difficulties and problems that I have referred to and in the direction I have suggested. The motion standing in my name was originally placed on the paper as long ago as March 21st. I had hoped to move it long since, but an accident has kept me out of the House, and I have been unable to move it, but I am inclined to believe, and I hope, that the Bill that my hon. friend brought in on Saturday will go in the grooves I have ventured to indicate. I beg to move this resolution, seconded by Mr. Taylor.

Mr. T. S. SPROULE (East Grey). Before that motion passes, I wish to say that I have a memorial from the millers in my section of the country desiring that certain amendments be made in the Bill introduced by the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue ; but as that Bill will shortly be before us, I think it better to reserve what I have to say until that time, so that we might endeavour, as far as possible, to get such amendments made as will meet their wishes in the matter.

Mr. A. CAMPBELL (Kent). I understand that the question that has been brought to the attention of the House by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) is in connection with the subject of the Bill introduced by the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) on Saturday. I have not had an opportunity to examine the Bill very closely, but I understand that it will remedy many of the grievances complained of. I must say that in my experience there is great need of a Bill of this kind. In the interest of Manitoba and also in the interest of the farmers of Ontario, a very radical change should be made, not only in the manner of inspecting the grain, but also in the system of inspection. First, I think it is a great injury to the farmers of Manitoba that there should be any mixing of grain at all. I think that that should be clearly and distinctly prohibited by the Minister of Inland Revenue. If there is any mixing allowed, it should be only on the distinct understanding that the certificate of the inspector shall clearly indicate that the cargo or car or whatever it may be is composed of mixed grain. But I believe it would be better for all concerned if there were no mixing at all. Moreover, I think that the way we pay our inspectors is a very serious injury not only to the farmers of Ontario, but to the farmers of Manitoba as well. I do not think our inspectors should be allowed a commission or fee of so much a car for inspecting the grain, but that the inspectors should be paid a salary. Give them a reasonable and sufficient salary and let them inspect all the grain that is presented to them. As it is now, I know that it is quite an inducement to the inspectors to pass the grain. We have an inspector at Montreal, an inspector at Kingston, an inspector at Toronto, an inspector at Fort William, and so on. Now, in the year 1897 we had a very poor crop of wheat in Ontario. Owing to the wet weather, it was sprouted and grown in very bad condition. A great deal of that wheat was exported to the old country, and I know, as a matter of fact, that there was wheat exported from the province of Ontario carrying the inspector's certificate as No. 2 red, that should have been graded No. 4 or rejected. The excuse was that the inspector at one place said : If I do not pass it as No. 2 red, the inspector at another place will, and I will lose my fees and commission on the inspection. They knew that the wheat was going for export, and so many of the inspectors passed it as No. 2 or No. 3 red, knowing at the time that it was not that grade. A case came under my own observation where I bought two or three cars of wheat at Toronto. When the wheat came to me I had it inspected, and I found it was not No. 2 Red ; but in calling up the man from whom I purchased it he told me I was mistaken, that he had his certificate that it was No. 2 Red wheat. I said it was impossible, that no man who would look at that wheat would pass it as No. 2, but would make it about No. 4. Afterwards I found he had obtained his certificate from the inspector on the understanding that the wheat was going to be exported, and when he found it was not going for export, the inspector went and took up the certificate and gave him another. Now, I think we should remove inducements from these men to pass grain that is not thoroughly up to the standard ; and to that end the Government should take this matter into their own hands and appoint these men by salary, giving them a reasonable and sufficient salary, and compelling them to make returns to the Government of all the wheat they inspect. Who knows to-day what the inspector at Port Arthur is getting ? I have heard it estimated that he gets $15,000 to $20,000 a year. I do not know how that is, he does not make any returns to the Government. Why should he not make returns to the Government ? Why should he be compelled to levy a tax upon every car of grain that comes from the North-west ? He should be put on a reasonable salary, the inspection fees should be reduced one-half what they are to-day, exclusive of all expenses. Our inspectors at Toronto and Montreal, I think, do not make returns to the Government. We do not know how much they do. I say that this system should be changed entirely, and I hope that in the Bill the Minister is bringing in, he is taking steps to change that system, and to place all our inspectors on a reasonable salary. Let them make monthly or half yearly returns to the Government so that we may know just what they are doing. Then you will have a supervision over them, and see whether they are performing the duties allotted to them. I think the matter is a very important one, and I am glad that it has come before the House. I am sure that it will receive the commendation, not only of the people of the North-west, but of the people of Ontario and all those who are interested in cereals grown in Canada. I think if these two steps are taken, namely, to abolish the mixing of grain altogether, and to place our inspectors upon a salary, compelling them to make returns half yearly to the Government, we will have a very much more satisfactory state of affairs in Canada than we have had in the past.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). I think, perhaps, the hon. members who represent the North-west would like to take part in the consideration of this question, but I understand they are reserving themselves till the Bill introduced last Saturday next comes before the House. The Bill has not yet been distributed, and it is very difficult for them to follow exactly its details from any explanations I may give. At all events, I am in a position to say now to the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), who introduced this motion, that I hope when he has had time to look over the Bill, he will be satisfied with it.

Mr. DAVIN. It is not distributed yet ; I could not get it to-day.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I hope he will be satisfied upon seeing it that we have earnestly attempted to carry out a great many of the principles which he considers indispensable in order to protect the grain-growers of the North-west, and also the purchaser, the shipper and the miller, as well as the purchaser on the other side. I may take this occasion of remarking, before discussing the resolution itself, that it is with the greatest pleasure I see that the hon. member for Assiniboia is able once more to resume his work in the House, and I am very glad that the accident that befell him has not had any more serious results. Now, I will take up seriatim the different paragraphs in this resolution. I notice first that my hon. friend alludes to the unanimous vote of the Winnipeg Grain and Produce Exchange which runs nearly on a parallel line with the resolutions passed by the Winnipeg Board of Trade. The first clause of his resolution :

That it appears from year to year the unsatisfactory state of grain standards has been formally brought before this House and before the Minister of Inland Revenue, and that the following resolutions have been passed unanimously by the Winnipeg Grain and Produce Exchange :—

(1) Resolved, that this exchange request the chairman of the Western Grain Standard Board to ask permission of the Minister of Inland Revenue to call together the western members of this board to discuss the advisability of having inspectors grade on the word and meaning of the Inspector's Act, and that the standard board from year to year define such commercial grades as may be found necessary.

My hon. friend alluded a moment ago to the composition of that large meeting of gentlemen interested in this question, that took place in the Railway Committee Room where, I think, nearly every interest was represented. There were at least 80 gentlemen, representing all the various interests ; at all events, I made it a point to invite representatives from one end of the Dominion to the other, of the principle interests which I thought ought to be represented. At this moment, as every one of my colleagues knows, we are too often called upon to hear only one side of a question in the deputations that generally come to Ottawa in order to lay before the members of the Cabinet questions in which those deputations are interested. We generally find that there is only one side of the question presented at a time. Therefore, I thought it was of the utmost importance, if this meeting was to be of any value, that we should try and get every shade of interest represented. I think we did so, and I hope that the result of this meeting, and of the Bill that has been prepared in order to carry out the views of this meeting, will show that no interest has been seriously injured. Now the first item is in connection with the Standard Board. It will be remembered by my hon. friend who introduced this motion, that when we organized the Standard Board on a large scale in the fall of 1897, an attempt was made to represent all the different interests, and to give a preponderating influence to the farmers, that is to say, to the producers. To that end, out of the 16 members on that Standard Board, there were eight farmers, which we considered a sufficient number to look after the producing interest. The other eight members were subdivided among the different interests, which were more or less hostile to one another. There was the dealer's interest, the shippers' interest, and the millers' interest ; therefore, no one could say for a moment that the producers' interest was not the predominant one in the organization of that board. Although we did what we could with that Standard Board, the result evidently was not a satisfactory one. A similar scheme had been abandoned long before by our neighbours at Duluth, at Minneapolis, and elsewhere, as having proved completely abortive on account of the standard varying every year. So we have adopted the views enunciated by the Winnipeg Produce and Grain Exchange, and by my hon. friend in his motion, as will be seen in the appendix of the Bill which I hope will be in the hands of hon. members this afternoon. One of the clauses says :

Inspectors are to be required and instructed on and after the coming into force of these regulations to grade to the Act all grades defined therein.

So far as the inspector grades No. 1 or No. 2 straight, the intention of the Bill is to have them graded to the Act, or, in other words, according to the meaning of the Act. This point is perfectly well understood, and, I think, it will give satisfaction to all parties concerned. My hon. friend (Mr. Davin) alluded, his resolution alluded, and the remarks of the numerous gentlemen who took part in that meeting the other day, alluded to these inferior qualities of grain which could not come within the meaning of the Act, and be graded according to it. As my hon. friend will see in the appendix which will form part of this Bill, we are providing for this.

Should the climatic or other conditions result in the production of a considerable proportion of grain not capable of being included in the classification provided in the Act, the Western Grain Standard Board shall be convened—

So that under this we might still appeal to the interference of the Western Grain Standard Board not to grade as No. 1 and No. 2, grain which has suffered in this way. In that case :

—the Western Grain Standard Board shall be convened for the selection of commercial grades and samples whenever the Chief Inspector shall notify the chairman of said Standard Board that such a course is necessary, and the inspectors shall grade all classes of grains which cannot be graded to the Act, in accordance with the commercial samples so selected by the board.

So that by this means we are providing against the danger of the loss which has hitherto been incurred and which, as my hon. friend stated a moment ago, amounted, in some cases, to as much as 5 cents a bushel, will be as much as possible removed, and there will be a fair valuation of the grain which cannot come under No. 1 and No. 2, and it will come under these commercial grades, graded by the Western Grain Standard Board. In that respect we have a provision to meet the complaint, the justice of which I have admitted, that has been made. As I was saying a moment ago, the high grades, Nos. 1 and 2, are not to be judged any more by the standards which we have made every year, by which the quality of grain has varied continually, making it impossible to have a fair and reasonable continuation of our grades. This sets aside the practice hitherto followed of fixing a standard for extra No. 1 and No. 2, and sending that abroad. We have recommended the practice which is now followed at Duluth, Minneapolis and other places in the United States, namely :

On or after the 1st day of November each year, or such prior date as the Chief Inspector may deem such a course to be practicable, inspectors shall furnish on demand samples of grains of any grade, such samples being equal to the average of the grain of each such grade inspected by the inspector at Winnipeg.

Under this, instead of adopting a standard which must change every year, in future the inspectors are going to grade according to quality. Extra quality must weigh so many pounds to the bushel, and must contain such a percentage of the grain to which that quality applies. For instance, No. 1 must weigh say 60 pounds, or No. 2 58 pounds to the bushel, and have 75 per cent or 66 per cent of the quality of grain applying to that standard. It is just as possible to judge grain in this way as it is for a culler to cull deals. He need not see the deals and he need not carry the deals around. He has his regulations, which say that No. 1 pine deals are allowed so many knots of such a size. In exactly the same way as the culler need not carry the deals around on his shoulder, but need only carry the statute in his pocket, the inspector of wheat will be enabled to grade wheat according to the regulations. Then my hon. friend (Mr. Davin), in continuing his remarks, alluded to the mixing of grain, and my hon. friend from Kent (Mr. Campbell), made the same remark, and referred to the great danger and damage resulting from mixing. I think the gentlemen from Ontario, especially those who represent the milling interests ought to be—I was going to say grateful, but I will not say that—ought to be satisfied with the efforts we have made in order to prevent them being the victims of that habit of mixing grain before it is delivered to them. It will be a protection to them as well as to the importers in England, who purchase our grain, to have a provision incorporated in the Bill preventing that mixing of grain :

Should wheat of different grades be loaded together in the same compartment of any vessel, at any point within the jurisdiction of the inspectors of the Manitoba inspection district, a certificate shall be issued for such mixed cargo, which certificate shall have written across its face a statement of the quantities of each grade entering into the composition of such mixed cargo, but no certificate for a straight grade shall be issued for any such mixed cargo.

In future, I think it ought to be a great comfort and satisfaction to the millers, as much as to the purchasers of grain in Europe, to know that no certificate for straight grade shall be issued for any such mixed cargo, and that they will know exactly what kind of grain they are receiving, in what proportion they receive it, whether there is one-half or three-quarters of one quality and the balance of another quality. I think it should be a source of great satisfaction to eastern men, as well as men on the other side of the Atlantic, to know that this provision is made.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that the inspection was subject to the jurisdiction of the inspectors of the Manitoba district at Winnipeg. How far does that district extend eastward?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The district will extend as far as Lake Superior.

Mr. SPROULE. Mixing might take place outside of that district without such a certificate being given. Does it include Fort William?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Fort William is included in that district. I intended to allude to that in a moment. I, perhaps, should have explained it sufficiently at the beginning, and it will appear evident by a cursory view of the Bill, that the district of Winnipeg extends from Lake Superior to the west, so that Port Arthur and Fort William will be included in that district, and this requirement as to the proportion of each quality of grain will prevail there. That, I think, ought to give satisfaction to the eastern men, who will know exactly in every bushel of grain they will receive—which is grain grown west of Lake Superior—what portion of each grain is included.

Mr. SPROULE. Suppose grain were shipped to the elevator at Owen Sound, for instance, and two different qualities mixed there, and sold to the Ontario millers; this regulation will not apply in that case. I know there is a great deal of complaint at times that it is mixed somewhere, and, while this Bill would provide for a certificate of inspection, showing the percentage of each kind of grain, if it came from Fort William or Fort Arthur, it would not apply to the elevator at Owen Sound, if the qualities were put together there.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. When I said that the eastern men ought to feel satisfied at the attempts made to put in their hands such grain as they will know exactly what they receive, when the grain has been loaded and shipped at Fort William, with a certificate showing, bushel for bushel, in what it consists, I am not ready to say how far it would be possible to follow the grain afterwards. This regulation ought to apply, and, if the Bill does not make it clearly apply to such places as Owen Sound, I think it would be our duty to take care that it does apply. In other words, I consider that this Bill will be very far from being perfect—in any case, we cannot expect that it will be entirely perfect—it will be far from what it is intended to be, if we do not make every effort to try and render justice, not only to the producer, but to the consumer. It is one of these questions in which I acknowledge my want of experience, and I will be only too glad to obtain every help possible from any hon. gentleman who is kind enough to offer suggestions.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS.

Bill (No. 73) respecting the James Bay Railway Company.—(Mr. Hughes.)

Bill (No. 33) respecting the Nipissing and James Bay Railway Company.—(Mr. Bertram.)

Bill (No. 18) respecting the Ottawa Electric Railway Company.—(Mr. Belcourt.)

THE NISBET ACADEMY OF PRINCE ALBERT.

Mr. DAVIS moved that the House resolve itself into committee on Bill (No. 10) respecting the Nisbet Academy of Prince Albert.

Mr. J. V. ELLIS (St. John). While I am not opposing this Bill, I desire to call attention to what it contains. There was a sum of $8,000 subscribed by persons in different parts of the country for this Nisbet Academy, which was founded at Prince Albert for the purpose of stimulating education in the North-west. After a time the academy was burned, and $7,000 or $8,000 of accrued money remained in the hands of the committee or the association or the trustees of the academy. The reasons set forth in the petition for the Bill are that the academy was burned, and further that the North-west Territories had established a system of education which of itself was sufficiently good, and therefore the reason no longer existed why this academy should be maintained. Therefore, it is proposed to take this money and devote it to the purposes of the Presbyterian denomination, the local church getting one-fifth and four-fifths going to the general funds of the church. All I wish to say is that I think that money which has been given for the purpose of education should be held sacred for that purpose, and should not be devoted to the purposes of a religious denomination. If the system of education for which this academy was founded has been superseded by the general educational system of the Territories, the money might very well be given to the general educational funds of the Territories; but if that be not done, then I think the money should go to educational purposes within the church itself—for example, to assist poor young men who desire to gain a higher education within the Presbyterian body. Of course, all the authorities of the church have agreed to the proposed disposition of this money, and I would not like to set up my idea of what is honest and fair, against the will of the Presbyterian Church in the North-west. But it seems to me that there ought to be a public opinion against giving to a church for purely denominational purposes moneys which ought to be held sacred for the purposes of education.

Mr. THOMAS BAIN (South Wentworth). Perhaps one word of explanation, from what I know personally of the circumstances of this case may throw a little light upon the question. Many years ago this educational institution was started in Prince Albert on property that belonged to the foreign mission committee of the Presbyterian Church. The academy was started under the auspices of that church; and, while the subscriptions were taken for an academy at Prince Albert, they were collected from members of that church, and the supervision and general management of the academy were under the control of the Presbyterian denomination. Some hon. members may recollect that at that early day an Indian mission was started in the same locality in charge of the Rev. Mr. Nisbet. After it had gone on for a certain period, the establishment was unfortunately burned out. The conditions had changed from that early day, and there was no disposition to rebuild the academy and start the establishment again. A general system of education had come into existence in the interim, and the necessity for this original provision was not so much felt. About ten years ago the academy was burned, and since then there has been no attempt made to rebuild the institution. It was felt by those who were interested that the money lying in the hands of the trustees was accomplishing no good purpose, and the subscriptions had been given mostly in small sums and from widely scattered localities, in addition to what was given in the neighbourhood.

Mr. HUGHES. Who are the trustees?

Mr. BAIN. I cannot recollect, but I think they were gentlemen on the spot, appointed by the church. But I was pointing to the original situation, outside of that. It was felt that it was no use having the money lying idle under these conditions. The first subscription lists were lost, the local interest in the matter had died away, and, after a considerable discussion in the church courts, this arrangement was finally come to. It was advertised in the locality, so that every one interested was aware of the fact, and there has been no opposition to the proposed distribution of the funds.

It was felt that the next best thing to do, in the interest of the church and the people of the North-west, was, after giving a portion of the funds to aid the church in Prince Albert, to use the rest for the general purpose of the church in the North-west, by handing it over to the committee that had been aiding the construction of manses and the building of churches in other localities. It is under these circumstances that they come to the House and ask us to pass this measure. I may say, that, from the first, the contributions to the fund were under the control of the Presbyterian Church; so that it is hardly correct to say, that this is diverting money from a public purpose to that of a private body or particular church; but it is one of those occasions on which, I think, it is infinitely better for all parties that they should give up the use of this money, instead of expending it in establishing an educational institution which probably, after a few years, will result in failure and be of no possible utility. The committee, therefore, felt, after the evidence was tendered to them, that the best and wisest thing to do was to accede to the request, and close the matter finally.

Mr. HENDERSON. I feel somewhat interested in this Bill, inasmuch as the Rev. John Nisbet, who was, no doubt, the founder of this congregation at Prince Albert, came originally from the county I have the honour to represent, where he was well known and highly esteemed. It seems to me that this money was subscribed for the purpose of establishing Presbyterianism in the district of Prince Albert, and I can hardly come to the conclusion that there is any right in taking this money which was intended for the purpose of propagating Presbyterianism in that section, and handing it over to another body, to the people of Manitoba or all over the Territory, for purposes for which the money certainly originally was never intended. It seems to me that no better monument could be erected to the memory of Mr. Nisbet, who was instrumental, in the first place, in having this money raised, than to leave it where it is, and allow it to be used by the people of Prince Albert, to whom it belonged—if it belongs to anybody—as it was originally subscribed for their benefit. I think we should leave it for the purpose of aiding them in church construction and for church purposes, in the particular locality for which it was originally intended.

SECOND READING.

Bill (No. 129) respecting the General Trust Corporation of Canada.—(Mr. McMullen.)

REDISTRIBUTION BILL.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask my right hon. friend the leader of the Government, if he has given consideration to the suggestion which I ventured to make, with regard to the progress of public business, in relation to the commission.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I have given, and my colleagues also, attention to the suggestion made by my hon. friend the other day, and will be prepared to make an announcement to-morrow.

MR. COSTIGAN'S SEAT.

Mr. DAVIN. I wish to call attention to the statement made in "United Canada," to the following effect:

Mr. Nicholas Flood Davin, M.P., made application to the Speaker for a seat in the House of Commons, on the front row, among the Conservative leaders, which has long been occupied by the Hon. John Costigan.

I need hardly say, that I have made no application to you, Mr. Speaker, for that seat.

Mr. SPEAKER. I can entirely confirm the statement of the hon. member, because I have nothing to do with the distribution of seats, and the hon. member did not apply to me.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. So far as I am concerned, I have never heard any suggestion from the hon. gentleman with regard to the subject until this moment.

THE ALASKAN BOUNDARY.

Mr. E. G. PRIOR (Victoria, B.C.) I would like to say a few words with regard to a matter that is of paramount importance to my constituents, and in fact to everybody on the Pacific coast, as it is of interest to the whole of Canada. That is, I would like to draw the attention of the right hon. leader of the Government to an article appearing in the "Gazette," and, in fact, in all the other papers, in regard to a statement, from American sources, as to the Alaska boundary. In the course of a long article, it is stated that the American Ambassador and Lord Salisbury have been negotiating in regard to this matter. The article goes on:

Just as the acceptance was about to be given the officials here were surprised to have presented what they regard as an extraordinary condition, which Canada imposed in connection with the submission of the question to arbitration. This condition was that, in any event, Canada should have Pyramid Harbour and a strip of territory on the Lynn Canal, without reference to the general conclusions reached by the tribunal of arbitration. This port and the strip of territory on the coast would have carried also the back country leading to the interior.

It goes on to say, that this has caused surprise and indignation amongst the officials at Washington, and

It was decided not to accept this condition, and a peremptory refusal was given to the proposition.

The article then proceeds:

The series of conferences held here between Sir Julian Pauncefote and Lord Salisbury and Mr. Choate has ended in the adoption by the Foreign Office of the Ottawa proposals and the complete arrest of negotiations for the re-assembling of the Joint High Commission.

It also states:

Canadian statesmen are disappointed over the results of this preferential tariff scheme and jealous of the increased influence and popularity of America in the mother country, and are bent upon holding the balance of power in international negotiations, even if various vexatious questions remain unsettled. This is a phase of the present deadlock which the English press does not consider. Americans need to understand it in order to place the responsibility for the possible failure of the Anglo-American Commission where it belongs.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would not ask the House to allow me to take up its time, if this was not a matter of such great and general interest. Anybody can see that this article is from American sources. This boundary question is one which is very vital indeed to the business men in Victoria and Vancouver, because there is an immense business done between the Alaska district, the Yukon district and the cities on the coast.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Prior) is going to make a speech, I suppose he will move a motion. But, of course, if he only desires to put a question—

Mr. PRIOR. I am not going to make a speech, but I will conclude with a motion. Although the people of the Pacific coast are very anxious indeed to have a settlement of this question, still, they are in hopes that the Government will stand up for all the rights of Canada, as, no doubt, they will. I am sure it will give great pleasure to everybody in Canada, if the right hon. First Minister can give us the assurance that the face that this paper puts on the question is not the right one, and that the contention of the Americans is not the correct one. If the right hon. gentleman can enlighten us as to what the Canadian contention is as to this boundary, I am sure everybody will be glad to hear him. I do not know whether this is asking too much, but my excuse is the great importance of the subject.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, of course I have, like everybody else, noticed the series of articles and correspondences that have appeared of late days in the American press. I believe I am not saying too much, when I say, that there is an evident attempt on the part of somebody to create the impression that Canada has taken a very unfair position in regard to the settlement of the Alaska boundary. It has been suggested in some quarters that the authorities in Washington must, in some degree, be responsible for such a statement appearing so frequently, so repeatedly in the American press. I am quite sure that the American authorities in Washington are free from blame in this matter. I am sure they cannot, in any way, have authorized or sanctioned any such expression of opinion appearing in the press, for the very simple reason that the American authorities know perfectly well in what position the question stands at the present time. I have only to repeat that the position to-day, on the 29th of May, is exactly what it was when the commission adjourned in the month of February last. There has been no change, and, so far as this Government is concerned, there will be no change. My hon. friend (Mr. Prior) asks me to state what is the contention maintained by the Government of Canada, or the commissioners of Canada, with regard to the Alaska boundary. I am not in a position at this moment to give any information on this point. I may say, that I hope—without making any promise, or even undertaking to anticipate coming events—I hope that, perhaps, the negotiations of the commission upon this subject may be laid before Parliament during the present session. As I say, I make no promise upon this point. I hope that, before we separate, we shall be able to lay before Parliament the exact condition of things, that is to say, the statement of the views maintained before the commission, and of the point on which we disagreed. While I cannot say what was the position maintained by Canada upon this question, still I may, without revealing any secret, say, that it is well known by everybody who has given any attention to the study of the question of the boundary, that the boundary is defined by the treaty made between Great Britain and Russia in 1825. According to our construction of the treaty—according to the construction that has been maintained all along—the boundary line should follow the crest of the mountains nearest to the coast, passing over bays, and creeks, and inlets, which are territorial waters. The contention maintained by the American authorities all along is, that the boundary line should be run so as to place in American territory the strip of territory which is given to Russia by the treaty of 1825, beyond and above all head waters. That was the contention, I may say, which was maintained all along by both parties; and it may be assumed, without doing violence to any understanding, that this was the position maintained by the British commissioners. The contentions of both parties were so far apart that I shall not surprise any one, if I state that it was difficult to come to an understanding. Nor shall I surprise any one, if I state that we endeavoured on both sides—both American commissioners and Canadian commissioners—to reach a settlement by a fair compromise. After we had negotiated on this basis for a long time, we came to the conclusion that even a compromise could not be reached upon that question:

Sir WILFRID LAURIER.

and, having reached that conclusion, that it was not possible by the commission to effect a settlement of this question, by giving and taking, or by reconciling either party to the views of the other, we came to the conclusion that the only thing to be done was to have the question referred to arbitration. We proposed, and the statement was made when we adjourned—that is to say, the British commissioners proposed—that the arbitration should be held on the lines of the Venezuela precedent. That position was ours, and it was not coupled with any other condition. The only proposition which we made was, that the matter should be referred to arbitration, and that the arbitration should proceed exactly on all fours with the lines of the Venezuela precedent. All statements made that this was coupled with any other condition, are absolutely erroneous. This is the set statement of the case that I have to make at this moment. I hope I have made it sufficiently clear to have it understood by everybody in this House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sure that the House is greatly obliged to the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) for having gone as far as he could properly go, under the circumstances, in giving a brief explanation of the present position of this question.

One of the greatest difficulties, I suppose, that was encountered at the outset was the determination of the meaning of the term coast, or lisière. The United States authorities contended that ten leagues from the coast counted from the upper waters or the inlets, whereas the British authorities have undoubtedly always contended that the term coast meant the general line of the coast without reference to the inlets. This has really been the great bone of contention between the two parties; therefore, it appeared to me that, if a reasonable arrangement could not be obtained by compromise, as my hon. friend says, a rational solution of the question might be found by referring it to an international arbitration of such a character as would command the respect and confidence of both the great countries interested. It occurred to me that, inasmuch as the continued procrastination and postponement of a settlement of this question might involve somewhat serious consequences, if we adopt the proposal that was made by the British plenipotentiaries, that the Venezuelan reference should be the one followed. My right hon. friend is no doubt aware that Great Britain yielded two very important points after the contention that was first made, by agreeing that she would surrender any portion of the Venezuelan territory that could not be shown to have been in the possession of Great Britain for over fifty years. Therefore, the question of the time when this controversy should be settled would become very important, because the settlement of some portions of this disputed territory by Russia or by the United States has been pending for a considerable time, and if indefinitely postponed, and if the terms of the reference that was adopted regarding the Venezuelan boundary were selected, the question of a fifty years' occupation might become a very essential one so far as British and Canadian interests are concerned.

Motion to adjourn, negatived.

DRAINAGE ACROSS RAILWAY LANDS.

Order called for :

Resuming adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Casey: "That the Order for House in Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 24) an Act concerning drainage on and over the property of railway companies, be discharged and the Bill be referred to a special committee"; and the proposed motion of Mr. Blair in amendment thereto.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved for leave to withdraw his amendment to Mr. Casey's motion to refer Bill (No. 24) to a Select Committee.

Motion agreed to.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved in amendment to the motion of Mr. Casey to refer Bill (No. 24) to the Select Committee, that all the words after "Messrs." in said motion, and so far as the word "power" be struck out, and the following words be inserted therefor: Messrs. Casey, Monk, Maclean, McGregor and Craig.

Motion agreed to, and motion as amended, agreed to.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 41) in further amendment of the Trade Mark and Design Act (Mr. Bertram).

BOARD OF RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS.

House resumed :

Further consideration of the proposed motion of Mr. Rutherford: "That the public interest demands that the railway companies of Canada should at the earliest possible moment be brought under the control of a Board of Railway Commissioners, clothed with full power to enforce the provisions of the Railway Act and to prescribe and enforce the observance of such regulations as may be necessary in the public interest.

Mr. H. BOSTOCK (Yale and Cariboo). This motion is one that very largely interests the constituency which I have the honour to represent at the present time. The question of the better control of the railway interests of this country is one that is taking a strong hold on the people of this country from the fact that they find that these railways now have a great deal of power in their hands, and they consider that the railway companies are not always in the habit of exercising that power in the interests of the public. They think that greater control might well be exercised by the Government over the railways of this country for the benefit of the people. There is a widespread feeling throughout the country, and especially in the west, that the rates which are charged by these railway companies, are, in a large number of instances, unfairly discriminatory in the interest of central points where there is competition between railways, and that they are greatly to the detriment of points on the mainland of the country, where they have no competition and where they are not likely to have competition for a long time to come. For the purpose of making this point plainer to the House I will refer to a statement I have received from the Board of Trade of one of the central points in my constituency. They point out that they are very much handicapped in their business on account of the way that rates on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway are fixed. For instance, take a point like Kamloops, which is situated practically in the centre of the mainland in British Columbia; they consider that it should be a point from which a considerable distributing business should be done, and they find that in this matter of freight rates they are handicapped in shipping goods from Kamloops to other points from the fact that the rates that are charged by the railway company are detrimental to their interests. In the case of goods shipped from the east to Kamloops, the traders of Kamloops pay higher rates than the traders at a point such as Vancouver. The rate on goods from the east to Kamloops, under the tariff at present in force, is $4.32 per 100 pounds, whereas, the coast towns are charged $3.25 per 100 pounds. This is just one instance that has occurred in this matter, and I do not wish to detain the House by quoting a large number of instances, because it would only be a repetition of the same sort of thing. An instance such as that shows that there is certainly discrimination against a town on the main line of the railway at a non-competing point as against a town at a competing point, notwithstanding the fact that these goods that are sent out to Vancouver are carried past this town of Kamloops, and that they are carried some 200 miles further than they would be carried to Kamloops. Also, in shipping from that town to another town on the main line, the traders of Kamloops find that they are handicapped because the traders of the coast are able to get, on the whole, a better rate to other points over the line than they are able to get. In shipping from a point like Kamloops to points in the Kootenay district, they also find that they cannot get as good rates. They find that they cannot get as good rates from Kamloops to Kaslo, in the Kootenay, as the people of Calgary are getting at the present time, although the distance is very much less from Kamloops to Kaslo than from Calgary to Kaslo. The fact of the rates being arranged in this way prevents the people of Kamloops from entering into trade in the Kootenay as they wish to do and as they are entitled to do. I do not propose to trouble the House by going into a long list of statements such as I have here, but, I mention this matter to show, from one point of view, the necessity at the present time, of appointing a commission, such as is called for in this resolution, for the purpose of going into this matter, and taking evidence to see whether something cannot be done, in the interest of the people of the country, to help them in their business, and to try and bring pressure on the railway company so that they will take a more lenient and more favourable view of this question of freight rates and help in the building up and development of the interior portion of our country. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that it is a serious matter, in the interest of this country, when the mainland portions of the country are not going ahead as they ought to do, and one of the main reasons why they are prevented from developing the interior as they should do, is this question of freight rates. If they had competition between railways they would be able to ship their goods in a great deal better than they can at the present time, and consequently, the country would be developed very much quicker and we should have a larger population in these towns. We see that very clearly in the development that took place in the Kootenay, as soon as we obtained competing lines. We found out that the points where two railways came into competition, immediately became the centres and commenced to build up very much faster than other points where they were simply dependent upon the one railway. Under the Railway Traffic Association the railways were forced, in fact to make competing points of these places, and they gave to places such as Nelson, Rossland and Trail a much lower rate than could be obtained by places on the line of railway where they had not the same facilities for carriage. The town of Nelson has gone ahead very much faster than a town such as Revelstoke. As a natural point of distribution Revelstoke is as well situated as Nelson and the people settling in Revelstoke would naturally consider that they had great natural advantages for the distribution of goods in the mining country to the south of them, but they found that owing to the conditions under the railway system as it is working at present, Revelstoke could, in no way, compete with Nelson, from the fact that the railways gave a competing rate to Nelson, while to Revelstoke, being in the hands of one railway they did not get as good a rate, although very often, the great bulk of goods that go to Nelson are carried through Revelstoke. Inasmuch as we might say that the whole province of British Columbia is practically in the hands of one railway, this is a very serious matter in the interest of the whole country, and it is one that demands the attention of this House and calls for the immediate appointment of a Board of Railway Commissioners, such as is asked for in this resolution. There are also a number of other matters which require to be dealt with, and which could be very much better dealt with by a railway commission than by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. The advantage of a railway commission would be that the commissioners would be able, when necessary to travel through the country to visit the different points, and to examine into the issues arising between two different railways or between the public and a railway company. The commissioners would be able to make their examination on the spot, and it is needless to say that the present Railway Committee of the Privy Council are precluded from doing that owing to the large amount of other work they have to cope with. For that reason also, I think the appointment of a railway commission would be of very great benefit to the country. On account of the large amount of work which the Railway Committee of the Privy Council have to do at the present time they are not in a position to see that the railway laws at present on the statute-book are properly complied with by the railway companies, and I think if it were carefully looked into it would be found that the railway companies do not comply with the Railway Act quite as strictly as they ought to do. A little attention paid to this matter would be found to be very beneficial in the interests of the general public. It is, of course, a very difficult thing to get the people in any community to take up a matter as against a railway company and it is not at all a difficult thing for a railway company to sow dissensions amongst the people if they should come together and form a combination for the purpose of promoting their rights and interests as opposed to those of the railway company. A railway commission endowed with proper powers could do a great deal in the public interest to see that the Railway Act is properly enforced and complied with by the companies. It is of no use having on the statute-books a law passed in the interests of the whole country and allow it to remain as a dead letter; the railway companies practically setting it more or less at defiance.

Again, we have had discussions in the Railway Committee of the House with regard to the question of the location of stations, and the route of lines of railway in the part of British Columbia I represent. A railway commission could better look into these matters, and decide as to the location of lines and stations in any case where the interests of the railway company may apparently conflict with the interests of the general public. There is no doubt that occasions arise when a railway company has the power to inflict very great hardship on the general public, simply by the location of its line, and it very often becomes a matter of investigation to see whether it is absolutely essential for a railway company to build its line in the exact location which it has been laid out. It is a serious matter that it should be in the power of a railway company in locating a line; to practically as has been done heretofore, compel people to tear down their houses and fences and to move, perhaps a mile or two, in order to be within touch of the railway station. In the west that has been a real grievance in times past and we have not been able to bring these matters before this House or before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council in the manner we should like. I also would wish that this railway commission should eventually consider the question of the desirability of the Government taking possession of our Canadian railways. This I know is a question involving a very large amount of money, and a great deal of serious consideration as to the best method of accomplishing it. I find, however, that people of different classes and people whose experience has been so far apart, as men who are the presidents of the great railway systems of the United States and the leaders of the social movement there, have both practically come to the same conclusion—although of course from a different process of reasoning. The belief of men like C. P. Huntington, who has wide railway experience is that eventually the railway systems of the United States must come into the hands of either one or two large companies. Mr. Huntington arrives at that conclusion by a method of reasoning by which he shows that this result would conduce to railways being worked more economically in the interest of all concerned. He naturally concludes that this should be done by forming an immense company and not by means of Government ownership. On the other hand, Mr. Powderly and others who have considered this question from a totally different point of view, have come to the conclusion that in the interest of the people of a country like the United States, it would be very much better that the railways should be owned and operated by the Government. If we may take the experience of the Australasian colonies, we find that the railways, run as they are there by the Government in the interest of the public, are able to afford to the people very much wider advantages in some ways, than the railways on this continent, controlled as they are by private corporations. It stands to reason, that when you have a railway operated by the Government it is operated in the interests of the whole people, and where you have it operated by a company the company and the directors of that company have to take into consideration the dividends which they shall pay their shareholders, and a number of other matters which are not altogether in the interests of the general public.

They have to deal practically with diversified interests and to make them coincide as nearly as they possibly can. Then, we have the experience of countries in Europe, such as Germany. In Germany they have dealt with this question from an entirely different point of view. The railways there were taken charge of by the Government on account of the military policy of the country, because it was deemed advisable from a strategic point of view that the railways should be kept entirely in the hands of the Government. Consequently, in Germany the railways are all operated by the Government, who have used them very largely to encourage the trade and commerce of the country. The German Government have dealt with the question of railway rates in such a way as very largely to benefit the traders and shippers of the country, and to help them to establish trade relations with other countries, by placing the rates at a very low figure. In this way they have brought the German trader into keen competition with the traders of England and other parts of the world in a way that would not otherwise have been possible. At the same time, the German railways have not been found to be a burden on the people, because the revenue they have received has amounted to a considerable sum every year. Then the Government has fixed the rates on an intelligible basis which the people of the country can understand. It is almost impossible for any ordinary individual to understand the principle on which a railway company fixes the rates in almost any case. The boards of railway officials who arrange the rates do not seem to be guided by any intelligible principles that the ordinary individual can understand; but where the railways are run by the Government, as they are in Germany, we find that the rates are founded on intelligible principles, and are estimated, not on what the traffic will bear, but on a general principle that enables the people of the country to understand the basis on which they are fixed, and consequently assists them in making their calculations in regard to their business generally. For these reasons, I hope that the effect of the resolution which we are now considering will be that the Government will take this question of the appointment of a board of railway commissioners into their immediate consideration, and that we shall have a board appointed in this country that will be clothed with the necessary powers for dealing with this question and for exercising such a control over the railways in the country that we shall be able to get this question of rates more satisfactorily settled in the interests of the people.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, under ordinary circumstances I would not object to joining the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Bostock) in carrying a vote of want of confidence in the Government, which this undoubtedly is; but the case is too serious for that, and I am afraid that I shall be compelled to withhold my support from the hon. member. I rather rise for the purpose of moving the adjournment of this debate until we shall be able to secure the attendance in this House of the hon. Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair). I think the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo is taking a very unfair advantage of the Government in making such a motion as this in the absence of the gentleman who has charge of the Railway Department, and who will be best able to protect the interests of the Government against this attempt.

Mr. BOSTOCK. I might interrupt the hon. gentleman to say that this is not my motion. I am only speaking to a motion moved by the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford).

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then, if the hon. gentleman repudiates this motion, of course, it will not be necessary for me to take up the time of the House at any great length. But I may say for his information as he is a young member of this House, that a number of young members of this House have attempted this same thing before; and I have always found that after they have been in this House for some time, and have become thoroughly acquainted with the public business of the country and its railway interests, they have finally arrived at the conclusion that the country has a much better protection in the Government of the country than they would have under a railway commission. The most effective system of government of any country is a system of responsibility; and just in proportion as you divest the Government of the day of responsibility, and put the obligations of government upon gentlemen who are not on the Treasury benches and are not in a position to be held directly responsible to the people, you weaken the control of the people without effecting any good. I have for many long years had an opportunity of seeing the present mode of managing this subject, that is, by a reference to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, who are directly responsible to Parliament and consequently to the people; and I do not believe that the substitution of an independent railway commission, however wisely and judiciously they might be chosen, would have the effect of increasing the public control over the railway corporations, or protecting the public to a greater extent than is the case under the present system. It is a very rare thing indeed to have the deliberate decision of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council challenged by any person in this House or out of it, in regard to one of the most difficult questions which it is possible for a Government to be called upon to deal with. Therefore, I think it would be very unwise hastily to change a system which has worked well for the system proposed by this resolution, and put out on an unknown sea. There is another, and I think a sufficient reason, why I think we should not unduly interfere with railway management in this country. We are here half a continent, running parallel along a line of 3,000 miles with the great republic to the south, and having on both sides of the line great and varied railway interests. I am inclined to think that the operations of a railway commission might unduly hamper Canadian lines in that which is most important to Canada and Canadians of all parties and classes, that is, the ability to compete, in the most complete and efficient manner, with rival lines in the United States. That, I think, is a subject that would have to be very carefully considered before taking such a very strong step as this. Therefore, I am inclined, reluctant, as I am, to give any support to this Government, to believe it is my duty to support the Government against this declaration of want of confidence in it by the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat (Mr. Bostock), and who endeavoured to show, as far as he is able, that they are unworthy of the confidence of this House and the country and ought to be displaced and superseded by an independent railway commission.

Now, the hon. gentleman says that one of the important functions of this railway commission would be the location of railway lines, that is to say, that a body of independent commissioners would be better qualified to locate a line of railway than the capitalists who find the money to build it. I do not agree with him in that opinion. I believe that the parties who find the money to build a line of railway have the greatest and deepest interest possible in the selection of the best line. Why, their whole future, the success of their enterprise, all depends upon their wisdom in the selection of the best practicable line, the one that will give the best convenience to the people themselves. If any one is interested in locating a railway so as to subserve the very largest portion of the population through which that railway runs, it certainly is the railway company, because the success of all the operations of that company depends upon the wisdom with which their line is located, and if that selection be interfered with by irresponsible parties, you may prevent a wise investment of capital and defeat the object of that investment by making unremunerative that which would be otherwise remunerative. That is another reason why I cannot join the hon. gentleman in his vote of want of confidence.

Then he objects to the tyrannical power of railway corporations to expropriate private property. Well, I have had some little experience, and so have had a good many other gentlemen in this House, in that matter, and my own opinion is very much the reverse. Instead of feeling that the interests of private property owners, whose buildings or farms may be expropriated, is injured by the present law, my experience is that they manage, under its operation, to get paid generally two or three times the entire value of everything the railway takes from them; and, therefore, I think my hon. friend will have to find some stronger ground for the establishment of a railway commission.

But I find that the hon. gentleman, not content with a railway commission, wants to revolutionize the whole railway system of Canada. What is the revolution he proposes? Why, it is that the Government of Canada should become the owners and proprietors, not only of the Drummond County Railway, but of the whole of the railways in Canada. I may tell the hon. gentleman that Canada has had some little experience in that matter, and that at this moment we are paying over $2,000,000 interest on the capital invested in the railways that already belong to us. We have expended about $58,000,000 of capital in the construction of Government railways, which do not return one farthing to the Government of interest on the money invested. Does any person propose that we should extend that operation and become the owners, not only of $58,000,000 of railway property which we have now, but of $941,000,000, which is the paid up capital of the railways now in operation in Canada? The people of the country who have freight to be carried manage, under the system of Government railways, to get that work done at a nominal rate, and does the hon. gentleman think that we would improve our position by extending our investment from $58,000,000, on which we are now paying at least 3 per cent interest, and on which we did pay double that amount for a considerable period, all of which has been absorbed, by loading the Government of this country with about $1,000,000,000 debt, for that it would be in a very short time, as it is $941,000,000 now. If we were to attempt to buy up all these railways, we would have to expend over $1,000,000,000, and if the hon. gentleman would apply the same result to that whole railway system that the country is enjoying in the railway property we have now, we should find ourselves with a burden of interest to pay on railways, without any return, of something like $28,000,000 per annum.

I do not think it is very likely that the hon. gentleman, with all his eloquence and examination of this important subject, will convince this House that it would be a wise step for Canada to undertake the ownership of all the lines of railways in this country.

The country is best served by the competition of large companies and varied railway interests throughout the country, supported by the Government, who are always, when new lines are required, whichever side is in power, prepared to subsidize these new lines to assist in opening up a new section of the country, and in that way help to provide for the bringing in of capital to these enterprises. I speak from the experience of having had these Government railways under my charge for several years, and speaking from that experience, I must say that private companies are infinitely better qualified to manage these railways, both in the interests of the country and of the railway enterprises themselves, than the Government is. Every one knows, who has given the subject any attention, that a private corporation, free from that control that must always act upon a Government in such matters, construct railways infinitely cheaper than a Government can. In the next place, it is perfectly well known that when you come to railway extension, you would be in no end of difficulty if the hon. gentleman's scheme were adopted. I often sympathize with the Government of the day in the difficulties it has now to contend with, but would sympathize much more deeply if they were responsible for the construction of railway lines out of the public exchequer, because we would have every member of this House drawing in one direction and another to obtain railway extension at the public cost. The position of the Government would not be an enviable one.

Then, when you come to the management of railways, it is absolutely impossible, in the nature of things, that a Government railway can be managed in Canada by the Government of the day with the same economy and success and the same regard for the interests of the people as the same railway could be managed by a private corporation. A private corporation is not in a position to be coerced and pressed by gentlemen to have their friends and relatives appointed in connection with the railway management; and they are in a position, when the services of parties in their employ are not of a kind calculated to benefit the enterprise, much more freely to get rid of them than can a Government management who have gentlemen sitting behind them the relatives and friends of these employees. It is extremely difficult for the Government, under these circumstances, to deal with employees as their judgment of the public interest would dictate. I hope that the House will not hastily rush into the proposition of the hon. gentleman, and involve this country in an expenditure of a thousand million dollars for the purpose of acquiring all the railways of the country and undertaking their management. I am inclined to think that they have sufficient difficulty in conducting public affairs as they are, without resorting to that. After careful examination of this question year by year for more than twenty years, this House has steadily refused to lend itself to this proposition to appoint an independent railway commission, which will relieve the Government of the duty that devolves upon it, which duty they have discharged faithfully and well, to interpose persons who are not acting under the same responsibility and whose judgment I do not believe would be as conducive to the public interest as that of the Government of the day, whoever may compose that Government. I think, therefore, that the House would be wise in adopting the same course on the present occasion as on past occasions and moving the adjournment of the debate, at all events until the Government has the presence here of the member of the Cabinet who is primarily charged with the control of railway affairs.

Mr. NICHOLAS FLOOD DAVIN (West Assiniboia). I think I may be excused, as a member of the Opposition, if I do not feel myself bound for once, to follow my leader in coming to the aid of the Government. The speech of my hon. friend from Yale (Mr. Bostock) had the defect of a dual defence. His course in supporting a motion which, if it means anything, means taking the responsibility out of the hands of the Government, by proposing to buy up the railways of Canada and put them into the hands of the Government, has led the distinguished leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) to devote a considerable portion of his speech to discussing the relative advantages of private ownership and Government ownership of railways. Now, Sir, there cannot be the least doubt, a priori, and as the result of an exhaustive inquiry, that there can be no comparison between the cheapness and economy of managing a railway by a Government department and managing it by private parties. Because, as my hon. friend who has just addressed the House has indicated, the department is pressed by members of Parliament, pressed by all sorts of interests, to manage these railways not directly in the interests of the community, but partly in the interests of the community and partly in the interests of party, whereas the private owners of a railway only consider what is best to enable them to manage that railway in the most efficient and most economical way. But, Sir, that question does not, I apprehend, come up here unless in a way which is of advantage to the motion before the House. The motion before the House, as I gather, is actually to take away from the department, from the Government, those disadvantages that the distinguished leader of the Opposition has pointed out. Because, if you have a railway commission, and that commission be appointed by the Government and given power from the Government under an Act that would make it as independent of the Government of the day as is the Auditor General, it is manifest that that railway commission would not be open to the suspicion that at this moment attaches, apparently to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, nor would it be open to the pressure which is now put upon the Department of Railways. And I may say here, Mr. Speaker, that I do not see, I never could see, any reason why it would not be possible, in a democratic community like this, to form a commission that should be removed from all the temptations, all the pressure of party and all the pressure of voters and able to devote itself to the management of the railways of the country with just as single an eye to efficiency and to economy as Sir William Van Horne and Mr. Shaughnessy give to the management of their own lines. I agree, however, with my hon. leader that this motion sounds as a motion of want of confidence in the Government, because I cannot forget that the right hon. Premier prior to his having the cares of the Government of Canada on his shoulders, declared in a central town of the North-west Territories that one of the things that was absolutely necessary to be dealt with was the oppressive freight rates that the people of the North-west had to bear. And only the other day the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton), who is, I suppose, our representative in the Cabinet, speaking in a city of Ontario, said that at the present minute 10 per cent more is charged to the Manitoba and North-west farmer than is charged to the farmer below the line. And yet, Sir, here is the position we are in: Although the Minister of the Interior tells us that the farmers of the North-west and Manitoba are charged 10 per cent more than is the farmer below the line, and though he says something must be done, yet the only thing we have is amateur movements like this which have just as much effect upon practical legislation as the insects upon the body of a swallow have upon the curve of its flight. Now, Mr. Speaker, it is a reproach on the Government of my right hon. friend that the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) brings forward a motion like this, which is supported by one western member after another, but in which the Ministry, one of whom should have a measure dealing with the matter, seem to take no interest.

As the leader of the Opposition points out, here is a railway motion of the first consequence, and the Minister of Railways and Canals is not in his seat, showing that the Minister who is directly responsible for questions such as this motion deals with, regards this motion as academic, amateurish, of no practical effect. The people of Manitoba and the North-west should not be placed in a position where a Government that is in its fourth session, and near the completion of its third year, a Government that has promised them, both by resolution, by speech and by propagandist pamphlets, relief in regard to freight rates—I say those people should not find themselves at this hour in the face of that declaration from their own Minister in the Cabinet, making a confession almost of incompetence.

At the present time the western farmer has to pay 10 per cent more than the farmer below the line. Something must be done, and the only something that is done is an academic motion like this, proposed by one of the supporters of the Minister of the Interior in this House. Sir, I must say that I know nothing so calculated to impress the farmers of that region with the conviction that this Government has not their interests at heart, as the spectacle that we have here to-night; the Minister of Railways and Canals out of his seat, my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) moving this motion, my hon. friend from Yale (Mr. Bostock) supporting it in the way he has done, the Minister of the Interior not here to help him, and the Government listening in a languid manner, hoping as soon as possible to get this troublesome question off the tapis.

Mr. T. O. DAVIS (Saskatchewan). I think it is uncalled for on the part of the leader of the Opposition to read a lecture to the hon. member for Yale and Cariboo (Mr. Bostock), because that hon. gentleman has seen fit to discuss a question in this House that directly interests the people of his constituency, and also the people of Manitoba and the North-west Territories. Now, the hon. gentleman has told us that young members who have come into this House have been in the habit of bringing legislation like this before the House of Commons time and again. But he went further and told us that after they had sat in this House for several years they seemed to lose their enthusiasm. I would infer that he means that after they had sat in this House for many years, they must have come under the influence of these great railway corporations which have been spoken about this evening. I think it is only right that any member who represents a constituency in any part of the country should discuss a question of this kind, and I think they may do so without expressing want of confidence in the Government. Now, the hon. gentleman wound up his speech by saying that he hoped this House was not going to vote a thousand million dollars to buy up the railroads of the country. In reading this motion I find in it nothing at all about buying up the railroads of the country. The motion proposes that we shall appoint a railway commission to deal with disputes, and freight rates, and anything else that may come before them. He says that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council is a very efficient body, and I agree with the hon. gentleman that they are. But I would like to draw his attention to the fact that they are a very busy body of men, and they cannot be expected to deal with all the minor details which would come before a railway commission, if such a commission were appointed. Now, we know that this country is developing very rapidly, the population is increasing by leaps and bounds, and transportation companies are being formed in every direction. It is impossible for the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, no matter how efficient they are, to deal with all such matters, so I think it is high time that a commission was appointed to deal with all these questions that are arising. As the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin) has said, the people of Manitoba and the North-west suffer more from discrimination in freight rates than the people of any other portion of this country, there is no doubt about that. We are paying, and paying through the nose, for everything we get from the railway corporations in the west. Although those corporations have been subsidized by large tracts of land and large amounts of money from the public chest, there is nobody at the present time to see that they treat the people as they ought to be treated. Now, I do not think that such a commission can be called an experiment. Railway commissions have worked successfully in the United States, and have worked in the interests of the people, they have a successful railway commission in England, and I think we could not be going far astray if we appointed a similar commission in this country. I say that to-day we are in this country practically at the mercy of these great railroad corporations. They are enabled to manipulate the freight rates back and forth in such a way that the ordinary layman cannot at all understand what they are doing; for that reason the members from the west who have been looking into this matter, and whose constituents have suffered, think it time to bring it before the House. Take the question that was brought up this session by the hon. member for East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas). For two years now he has brought legislation before this House to relieve the farmers of the west from the injustice they have been suffering. No longer ago than last year that hon. member showed, in relation to a matter that he brought before this House, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had entered into an unrighteous bargain with a lot of gentlemen in Manitoba for the purpose of giving them a preference; in other words, these gentlemen were to build certain elevators at certain points on the railroad, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would take no grain from any farmer's wagon, or from any flat warehouse, but only from these elevators. It has been pointed out that under the Railway Act the railways were obliged, as common carriers, to take the produce of any farmer presented to them at any time. That has been brought to their attention, and of course the company has had to take back water. Now, if there had been a railway commission in this country there would have been no necessity for my hon. friend from East Assiniboia (Mr. Douglas) to bring that question before the House, because the railway commission would have dealt with it at once. There are other questions he has brought up this year in connection with elevators, that a railway commission could have dealt with and with which this House would not have been troubled.

Now, who should compose this railway commission? I think that we should have three commissioners, and they should be among the very best men that we can find in the Dominion of Canada, men who have a great deal of experience in their own lines. I think we should appoint a business man, we should appoint a gentleman who has had a great deal of experience with railway companies, schedules, tariffs, and all that sort of thing; and then we should appoint a first-class lawyer who would be able to advise and assist his colleagues in legal questions. In order to get gentlemen of that character we should have to pay them well, because they would be able to earn, in the fields from which we would take them, probably, $5,000 to $8,000 a year. You could not get good men to act on a commission of this kind unless you were prepared to pay them salaries as high as that. I may mention another point which I hope will prove satisfactory to the leader of the Opposition. I claim that if men of this kind were appointed it would be necessary that they should be put altogether outside of politics, if they were to perform their duties efficiently. I would suggest that although they would have to be appointed by the Government of the day, after they were appointed, they should be like the Auditor General and not removable by any Government, because if you did not leave them wholly independent, they would be of very little use to the people of this country. Now, a word in reference to discrimination and freight rates in the North-west Territories. I know there are some who contend that such a commission would not be in a position to interfere with the main line of a great national highway like the Canadian Pacific Railway, because, under a regulation made by the late Government, I believe the companies are free to exercise their own judgment of the amount of money, call it blood money if you like, that they may take from the settlers of the North-west Territories. But the branch lines were not built in that way. These branch lines were built by the assistance, as the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) has pointed out, of the public, given by this House, and I submit that they should be, and that they are, under the control of the Government. If there was a railway commission appointed that could look into these matters, and which would have jurisdiction, it would be able to secure redress for the people. These branch lines were built as feeders to the main line; that is how they should be considered by the railway companies. The railway companies should look to the amount of traffic coming from these branch lines as an addition to the traffic of the main line. The people in the west and in other portions of the country should not be called upon to pay higher rates on the branch lines as on the main line. I have here a sample case of the arrangement of a railway tariff, which I will give as an illustration. We will take the question of the transportation of coal oil. The distance from Petrolea, in Ontario, to Winnipeg is some 1,400 miles. We find that railway corporation carrying coal oil from Petrolea to Winnipeg for 61 cents per 100 pounds. From Winnipeg to Prince Albert the distance is only 600 miles, yet that railway corporation charges 64 cents for carrying that coal oil from Winnipeg to Prince Albert—64 cents for carrying coal oil 600 miles, when they carry it 1,400 miles, in a part of the country where there is competition, for 61 cents. There is another view of this question. If you add together the two local rates, from Petrolea to Winnipeg, and from Winnipeg to Prince Albert, you find that they are less than the through rate from Petrolea to Prince Albert; so that it would pay a merchant in business to buy his coal oil in Petrolea, ship it to Winnipeg, unload it at Winnipeg, load it again, and ship it to Prince Albert. It is high time that something was done, that these railway corporations shall be brought to book about this matter. I do not propose to take up any more of the time of the House. I am glad that the hon. member for Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford) has brought this motion before the House. I think it is a proper motion, notwithstanding all that the hon. leader of the Opposition has said about it. I think that every hon. member from the west, or from any other portion of this country, has a right to express his views on such a motion, without being taken to task by the hon. leader of the Opposition, and I may say, that I have very much pleasure in supporting the motion of the hon. member for Macdonald.

Mr. JAMES McMULLEN (North Wellington). Mr. Speaker, I find that this question has been repeatedly before this House, and perhaps it may be well that I should jog the memory of the hon. leader of the Opposition by reading to him what the late Hon. Sir John Thompson said on this question, when it was brought before the House by the late lamented member for North Simcoe, Mr. McCarthy, who brought a Bill before this House for this very purpose. He had frequently had the question before the House. Sir John Thompson said:

I, therefore, state on behalf of my colleagues and of the Government, that in view of the information which has already been gathered upon this subject, the correspondence which has taken place, and the changes which have been proposed in the countries to which I have referred, it is the intention of the Government during the recess to give this matter a thorough investigation by the appointment of a commission to inquire into the whole subject, and ascertain the interests and the views of all classes in the community affected by it. The result, I trust, will be fully reported to this House at the ensuing session, so that the House, before the expiration of this Parliament, may deal definitely with the whole question.

So it is not a question of yesterday; it has been a question of long standing, and, although the Government, in 1886, ten years ago, agreed, when that question was brought before the House by the late member for North Simcoe, to appoint a commission and thoroughly investigate the subject, and report to the House at the next session, with the view of dealing with the whole question, it dropped there: a commission never was appointed, and there never was anything more done.

Mr. LEIGHTON G. McCARTHY (North Simcoe). Mr. Speaker, just one word in regard to this question from the stand-point more particularly of the question as a business proposal. Are the disputes between individuals and between localities, or the grievances in regard to freight rates or the tariff of rates to be disposed of by the Government, or are they to be disposed of by a commission? We have had instances occurring this session, and prior to it, of the power of railways in regard to politicians. We know that railways run through pretty nearly all the constituencies that are represented here. I do not mean to say, that that fact, of necessity, deprives any hon. member of his independence; but would it not relieve the doubt in that regard which exists in the minds of any individuals or of any particular locality, who may have grievances, if those grievances were to be tried and disposed of by an independent commission? The only question, then, to be considered is: Would that commission be strong enough and capable to cope with all the difficulties? Without doubt, a railway commission has been most satisfactory in England; without doubt, railway commissions have been most satisfactory in the States of the Union. Why would they not be satisfactory here? We know the enormous mileage of railways, as compared with the population of this country. Railway corporations are almost all-powerful in this country, by reason of the very fact that they employ so many men, as compared with the population; so that they must have a greater percentage of control in this country than perhaps in any other country in the world. If that is so, for the purpose of putting a quietus to the disquiet that exists, why should not the Government consider the advisability of a commission being appointed? I think the people will feel that it is to be regretted that the commission proposed by Sir John Thompson in 1886, and which the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has called attention to, was not appointed, and the result made known to the people of this country and to the members of this House, because we would then be better able to judge as to whether it is advisable that a commission should be appointed or not. I may say, frankly, that I am in favour of a commission myself, but the hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) has told us, that this is a position which all youthful members take in this House, and that, after they have been here a few years, they become wiser and do not uphold such views. That may be so. If I am spared by my constituents to remain here any length of time, I may become wiser, my views may change, and I will not be afraid to change them; but I am here to represent the views of my constituents, according to my best judgment, and it seems to me that, in this country particularly, in view of all that has taken place in the railway committee of this House, a grievance exists on the part of the people of the North-west in regard to railways. I am not saying whether these grievances are just or not, whether these railways are treating these people as they should be treated or not, or whether there is unfair discrimination as against individuals or localities. One must realize that an individual who is not an expert, cannot make up his mind as to whether these grievances are right or not, unless he hears evidence in regard to them. I do not suppose that there are many hon. members in this House who understand the question of the difference between long and short hauls, and the different percentage of charges which should be charged for long and short hauls by these railways; they are most intricate questions, I know, because I have had some experience in trying to solve them.

This, therefore, is a still greater reason why a commission should be appointed which should take evidence upon these questions, and which could adjust these grievances in a fair and impartial manner without having regard to any political influence or to any lobbying of any kind. We find—be it to the discredit of the railways or not—that no sooner is an important railway Bill before this House than the railway magnates are here; even if it be only a private Bill affecting railway interests, that seems to be the practice. I am not saying they are doing anything they should not do; but take a small locality which has been unfairly discriminated against, and which is asking for that which they think should be righted; and we find in every case that the enormous power of the railway is opposed to the weak power of the locality. If that is fair it is all right; but if it is not fair it is all wrong. Having regard to these important questions, they ought in my humble judgment, be removed from the political arena and be disposed of by a fair and impartial commission. This is purely a business proposal. We have courts of justice to settle differences between individuals and to decide what damages shall be paid to a man if his cattle be killed, or if a railway company expropriates his land, and why not have a similar court of justice or board of arbitrators or a railway commission to decide the differences between localities and corporations, between individual interests and the railway interests? It is only fair it seems to me that this should be done. It is right, in my mind that the Government should be relieved of an enormous amount of work which can only be of a political nature because while the Government is here to legislate for the country's benefit when they sit as judges they also sit as politicians, and they cannot separate the one from the other. I do not charge the Government with yielding improperly in any instance. But, of course, I am youthful, and perhaps as I grow older I may be able to divide myself into a judge on one day and a politician on the next; or a judge one hour and a politician the next hour. But if a railway corporation comes asking for something that is detrimental to a locality then the politicians have to sit as judges, and it must be difficult nay, impossible, for them to separate themselves from the political aspect of the case. The Railway Committee of the Privy Council have done their work well, I am free to admit, but it seems to me that greater will be the feeling of respect, greater will be the feeling of the people that justice is being done, when they have an impartial commission rather than the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, which must find it hard, I submit with all respect to the Government, to separate itself for the time being from being a body of politicians.

Mr. FRANK OLIVER (Alberta). Mr. Speaker I wish to express my satisfaction at this motion being brought before the House for discussion; not so much because I see in the wording of the motion, a final cure for all the difficulties we labour under in Canada with regard to railways, but because I see in the bringing forward of such a motion and in its wording, possibly the beginning of such a cure; not by any means the end. I fear that however well a railway commission may be composed, or however well it may be empowered, there are still difficulties in the adjustment of dealings between the people of the country and the railway companies which are beyond the reach of any commission. There are difficulties which arise at the very beginning; which arise and necessarily must arise in the legislation passed by this House, and when they have been allowed to have their origin in legislation here they cannot be dealt with by a railway commission. However, in so far as the appointment of a railway commission would be the beginning of a dealing with this subject; in so far as this motion brings this question up for discussion in Parliament at this time; I am glad of the opportunity of raising my voice and I hope of casting my vote in favour of it.

The conditions existing in Canada have been allowed to as being paralleled in the United States. It has been said that they have a similar railway question there, and a railway commission to deal with that question. But I would like to say, that if the United States have a railway question, Canada's railway question is ten times more serious than that which exists in the United States; because, while we have a country as large as the United States, and a population almost infinitesimally smaller, we have only two, or we will say three, railway companies in this country that give us any competition whatever; and in by far the greatest area of the country, and in that part which contains by far the greatest possibilities for the future, there is only one railway company—and, apparently, only the possibility of there being one. Therefore, while the United States, by reason of their situation and by reason of their conditions, have unlimited opportunities of railway competition; we in Canada have not—nor is there in sight—anything which might be called real competition in railways. As the matter stands at present and as far as we can see in the future we are limited to a practical railway monopoly in this country. It is not a question of detail, it is not a question of small matters with us; it is a question simply: Whether the railroads are going to run this country or whether the country is going to run the railroads. That is the real question, and I put it in these words for the purpose of conveying my idea, that this motion, good so far as it goes, is only the beginning and not the end of the solution of the railway problem.

Mr. McCARTHY.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I do not in any way feel called upon to express gratitude to my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper) for the assistance he claims to have given the Government against this attack—or what he was pleased to call an attack—upon the Government. It is not an attack upon the Government; neither is it a vote of want of confidence. This motion which is now before us is simply an invitation to the House to consider one of the numerous problems which we have to deal with concerning railway transportation. But my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) is so pugnacious that the moment he does not speak and some one else does, he sees in it an attack upon the Government; and his spirit is so contrary that even though he thinks it is a motion of want of confidence in the Government he comes to the rescue of the Government. But there is no occasion for a fight on this motion; there is occasion only for an exchange of views upon a very important subject. I must express the gratification I experience upon this occasion—something which does not very often take place on the floor of this House—in that I can agree with a great deal that has been said by my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. I agree with him that the Railway Committee of the Privy Council has been a very efficient body and has given as a rule complete satisfaction in its decisions.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hear, hear.

The PRIME MINISTER. The decisions of that committee have, I think, been marked by wisdom, and I am not aware, as my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) is not aware, that any one of its decisions has ever been challenged. But my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) is aware—at all events, every one else is aware—that while the action of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council has been generally acceptable, there has been a want felt all through the community that there was a class of public grievances which could not be reached by that committee. First of all, the Railway Committee of the Privy Council is an expensive body; that is to say, litigation—if I can use the word—is a very expensive process before that committee. There may arise in a certain part of this vast Dominion, say in the North-west Territories or in British Columbia, a conflict between a railway company and the public. It may be a conflict between the railway company and a town which has been sidetracked by the railway company; or it may be simply an occasion of difference between an individual trader or importer and the railway company. It may be that this individual feels that he has been discriminated against—that a more favourable rate has been given to his rival in business than to himself. There might be a remedy found for his grievances if he appeared before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council; but he may live thousands of miles from that body, and he may not have the means to follow up his claim. He feels that there should be in this country a tribunal before which he could go, and which would not be at a great distance, but a tribunal which would come to him and hear his grievance. Complaints of this kind are pretty general all over the country, and I cannot, for my part, see why we cannot do in this country what has been done in other countries, notably in England—I cannot see why we should not have a railway commission to deal with this numerous class of grievances on the part of the general public. I think we can agree with that. At all events, I express the views of the Government when I say that we think there are many sorts of grievances which could be effectively dealt with only by a railway commission. But the trouble and labour and difficulty of framing a law which would constitute such a court makes the question a very embarrassing one, and I shall not surprise my hon. friends behind me, especially my hon. friends from the North-west Territories and the province of Manitoba, when I say that this is a question which up to the present time we have not been able to grapple with in such a way as to be in a position to present a Bill this session. But the matter is engaging the attention of the Government. I claim that we have done something already for the people of the North-west. I remember very well the occasion referred to a moment ago by the hon. member for West Assiniboia (Mr. Davin), for the question of freight rates is one that has engaged the attention of the Government, and I think we have done a great deal already to redeem the promise we made. My hon. friend will not deny that in the very first year after we assumed control of the Administration, we obtained from the one great transportation company in the North-west Territories, that is to say, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, a notable reduction in its freight rates.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And without a commission.

The PRIME MINISTER. And without a commission. But whilst we have obtained that much, I must tell my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition that we do not think that we have exhausted our efforts on behalf of the people of the North-west. On the contrary, we think there is a great deal yet to be done in that respect, and we think that one thing that can be done in order to solve the problem is to do just what is asked by this resolution. But I would ask my hon. friend from Macdonald (Mr. Rutherford), the mover of this resolution, not to press it to-day, but to confide in the good-will and good intentions of the Government and allow the matter to rest for the present where it is, and consent to the adjournment of the debate.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Mr. Speaker, I understand that references have been made to myself and to the fact that I have been absent from the House during the larger portion of this discussion. I need not say, Mr. Speaker, to the gentlemen who are interested in this question, and who have been discussing it, that my absence has been under circumstances which I could not possibly avoid. I had not anticipated that this resolution would be reached to-night, and I made engagements which it was quite impossible for me to forego, and which compelled me to be absent; therefore, I have not had the opportunity of hearing what hon. gentlemen have been saying on this question. I have not risen, Mr. Speaker, with a view of discussing the resolution at all or of indicating any individual opinion upon it. The House has heard from the First Minister upon the subject, and I would only supplement what he has stated by adding that the matter has not been overlooked by me, but I have been giving a good deal of attention to it. I have already in the department a Bill which has been prepared for the purpose of establishing a commission; but I can state to my hon. friends who are anxious that this matter should be pressed forward as rapidly and as effectively as possible, that I am not satisfied with the character of the Bill. I am not assured that, as framed, it is likely to be workable. Its proper consideration is a question of time. It involves a great many intricate problems, and it is not in such shape that even if we had time, and we were not pressed with other business which has been prepared and is now before the House, I would feel like recommending it to my colleagues as it stands.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. May I ask my hon. friend if this is a Bill prepared by the Government?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Yes, prepared for the Government. I have had the benefit of the advice and services of a gentleman whom I employed for the purpose, under an authority which I had from Parliament last session. The work which he has done has been very well done indeed; but the Bill is not as it stands at present in such shape that I would feel justified, as the Minister chiefly responsible for it, in recommending it favourably to my colleagues. I would like to add before I sit down that there is one thing which our friends who have been chiefly discussing this matter to-night have not had fully in their minds. The grievances they desire to see remedied are grievances that pertain very largely to the question of rates, and these grievances arise more particularly in connection with one great railroad system; we all know that that railroad, under the law, is practically free from control by Parliament in any shape or form as respects its rates. Until certain conditions which have been provided by the statute are realized, and until certain events occur, no such ample authority as Parliament would require to exercise in order to provide a remedy such as the people desire would be within our means. In addition to all the ordinary difficulties which surround the efficient solution of this question, we have in Canada a great railroad system which traverses that particular portion of the continent which our friends from the Northwest represent, and which is absolutely above and beyond the reach of this Parliament, at all events for the time being; so far as the regulation or reduction of its freight rates is concerned.

Motion for adjournment of debate agreed to.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT.

Mr. PENNY moved second reading of Bill (No. 55) further to amend the General Inspection Act. He said: The grocers and fruit dealers of Montreal find that a great deal of fruit comes into the city, not only in bad order, but not exactly what the fruit is represented to be in a great many instances, as is found after opening the packages.

Mr. BLAIR.

Consequently they have asked me to introduce this Bill, so as to have an inspector appointed and every one protected, not only the dealers, but also the consumers. I am told that the wholesale dealers and auctioneers are also in favour of this measure. There is no commodity in which there is more room for fraud than fruit. I see that on Saturday last an hon. member made some remarks about the inspection of fruit, which I was very glad to note because it shows that interest is being taken in the question.

Mr. CLANCY. I suppose there is no objection to the Bill going into committee, but I desire to point out that it provides that apples shall be put in certain packages in all cases. If he were to confine his Bill to fruit for export, I would see no objection to it; but as it now stands, any person taking a barrel of apples to the smallest village, would be subject to a fine, if the package were not according to the regulations of this Bill. I do not object to the measure on other grounds, but wish to point out that the hon. gentleman would have to modify it very much before he can expect the assent of the House to it.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). I need not say that I am in accord with the hon. gentleman, but as I have introduced a measure dealing with the General Inspection Act, I would ask him to wait until that measure is dealt with in committee, and then we could incorporate in it what portions of his Bill the committee will think fit to adopt.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

SMALL FRUIT PACKAGES.

Mr. PENNY moved second reading of Bill (No. 56) to define the size of small fruit packages. He said: The fruit dealers of Montreal have found that packages containing small fruits are not of uniform size, which gives rise to a great many complaints. But in the case of this Bill, as in the other, the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue has asked me to bring it up for second reading, and then when we come to discuss it in Committee of the Whole, I shall make some alterations so as to bring the sizes of the boxes into conformity with a standard measure, and add this Bill as an amendment to Bill respecting weights and measures, to be introduced by the Minister of Inland Revenue.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. HAGGART. What will be the business of the Government to-morrow?

The PRIME MINISTER. Perhaps a few minor Bills, but at all events the Drummond Bill.

RETURNS ORDERED.

Copies of all reports of any survey held during 1897 and 1898 of Neufrage Pond, King's County, Prince Edward Island.—(Mr. Macdonald, King's.)

Copies of all correspondence, papers, petitions, &c., in connection with the resignation of Dr. Morris as postmaster at Dundas, Prince Edward Island, and the appointment of his successor and persons applying for the position (Mr. Macdonald, King's.)

Jardine, W. F. Bullen, R. W. Reford, Henry Moss, William Moss, J. G. Tiarks, Charles Kent, Thornton Fell, Andreas Keating (B. L. Ker), Hans Ogilvy Price, H. F. Bishop, S. J. Pitts, and any others that may have presented claims in regard to same.—(Mr. Prior.)

Copy of the report of W. H. Lynch, referred to by the hon. the Minister of the Interior ("Hansard," page 1848, April 19th, 1899).—(Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper.)

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 10.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

TUESDAY, 30th May, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

TENDERS FOR MILITIA CLOTHING.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough) moved:

That copies of all tenders issued by the Department of Militia and Defence since 1896 for the clothing of the militia of Canada be forthwith produced for the use of the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts, in accordance with the recommendations contained in the second report of the said committee.

Motion agreed to.

TEMPERANCE ACT OF 1864

Mr. COWAN moved for leave to introduce Bill (No. 134) to amend the Temperance Act of 1864. He said: Under the Temperance Act of 1864, commonly known to-day as the Dunkin Act, any township or municipality having that Act in force which desires to repeal the same, must have an open vote, recorded in one poll in the centre of the township, one day's voting being allowed for each 400 voters on the list. In the south riding of the county of Essex there is a municipality which has this Act in force and desires to repeal the same. In order to do it, they are compelled to resort to the cumbersome machinery of 1864. It is for the purpose of bringing this under the ballot system and to have the election held in the same manner as municipal elections are held both in the province of Ontario and in the province of Quebec that this amendment is introduced.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

DEPARTMENTAL CORRESPONDENCE.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). I ask leave to lay on the Table copy of correspondence between John R. Barrett, district inspector of Inland Revenue, Collector H. A. Costigan and the department relative to the receipt of $93.20 by Collector Costigan from Virden and not deposited at the proper time. This return is presented in anticipation of a motion being passed by the House, as it certainly will be for these papers. I have already laid before the committee a duplicate of these papers, so as to place it at once in possession of the whole case.

Mr. SPEAKER. These papers will be laid on the Table as a supplementary return, I suppose?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

REPRESENTATION IN THE HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I think it was on Friday last that my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), reviewing the business of the House, suggested to me that it would be advisable, under the circumstances in which we now are and in view of the lateness of the season, to proceed no further this session with the consideration of the Redistribution Bill. My colleagues and myself were bound to give to the views set forth by my hon. friend careful consideration, with a view to meeting his wishes, if possible; but I must say that, having given to his suggestion the best attention we could, we have come to the conclusion that there is no reason really why we should not proceed with the Bill this session.

LIQUOR PERMITS IN THE YUKON.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to ask the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) whether he has been able to look into the question of return in regard to the letters and telegrams connected with the permission for the entry of liquors into the Yukon territory given to Archer Martin, of Victoria. This is a subject that I brought to his attention the other day, the papers in regard to the Macaulay application not having been brought down.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I gave instructions to have search made to ascertain if there were any papers such as the hon. gentleman referred to. Up to to-day at twelve o'clock no papers showing any correspondence or telegrams between the department or myself or any person in the department and Mr. Martin in regard to the permit to Mr. Macaulay have been found. I have given instructions to have a further and more careful search made in case such papers may be there, although not yet found. There has been some correspondence in regard to Mr. Macaulay, but not with Mr. Martin. If the hon. gentleman wants that correspondence, I shall be happy to let him have it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not particularly want that correspondence, but I would not object to it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Sifton) understands that I refer to telegrams or letters from Archer Martin or the firm of Martin & Langley. I suppose the Minister would not confine the search to communications from Archer Martin, but would extend it to those from Martin & Langley.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. The instructions I gave were to look for correspondence from Archer Martin. There may be correspondence from the firm which would probably be overlooked in such a search. I understand that the firm name is Martin & Langley. I will have a search made for correspondence in that name.

ALLEGED ELECTION FRAUDS IN MANITOBA.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. May I ask if the hon. First Minister has been able to make good his undertaking to have the papers in regard to the Manitoba prosecutions for alleged election frauds brought down?

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). The promise has been made good, as our promises always are.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And the papers have been brought down?

The PRIME MINISTER. Certainly. They were brought down yesterday.

THE YUKON INVESTIGATION.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I move for leave to lay on the Table of the House copy of an Order in Council of the 7th October, 1898, providing for the appointment of Mr. William Ogilvie as commissioner under the provisions of chapter 114, Revised Statutes of Canada, to investigate the charges and complaints referred to in said Order in Council; copy of the commission issued under the great seal of Canada appointing Mr. Ogilvie such commissioner; copy of his report of the 27th April, 1899, and copies of the three public notices referred to in such report and attached thereto.

Mr. FOSTER. May I ask the hon. gentleman if this is the report of Mr. Ogilvie's official inquiry?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. Yes.

Mr. FOSTER. With the consent of the House, I would like to move that the rule be suspended, and that these papers be printed at once.

Motion agreed to.

DISMISSAL OF POSTMASTER AT BATH, ONT.

Mr. WILSON. May I ask when I may expect the papers in regard to the dismissal of the postmaster at Bath, Ont? Some time ago a promise was made that the papers would be brought down soon.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I will call the attention of the Postmaster General to the matter.

SUNDAY TRAFFIC ON THE INTERCOLONIAL.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Before the Orders of the Day are proceeded with, I would like to call the attention of the Minister of Railways and Canals to an item which I find in a journal published in my county with reference to the running of Intercolonial trains. The article reads as follows:—

Tha luchd-riaghlaidh an rathaid-laruinn air a dhol gu bristeadh na Sabaid. Feasgar na Sabaid s'a chaidh, dh' fhalbh train a Sidni air son an luchd-turuis a thainig air a Bhruce oidhche Shathurna a thoirt gu Truro, agus an t-Sabaid roimhe sin dh' fhalbh train guail. Tha an t-am stad a chur air an obair ud, air neo cha'n fhada bios latha fois aig an luchd-obrach idir.

I would like the Minister of Railways and Canals to explain that matter, how it is that trains have been permitted to run under these conditions. For the information and instruction of the hon. Minister of Railways as well as for the edification of the hon. member for North Norfolk I will give the translation, which is as follows:—

The railway management have gone into breaking the Sabbath. On the afternoon of the last Sabbath a train left Sydney for Truro with the passengers who arrived Saturday night by the Bruce. On the Sunday previous a coal train left. It is time to put a stop to this work, otherwise in a short time the labouring people will have no day of rest.

I would like the Minister of Railways and Canals to explain to the House how it is that trains are permitted to leave the Sydney station on Sunday. I cannot see any reason why a train should leave on that particular Sunday with the passengers who arrived by the Bruce on the Saturday night previous. They could have connected with the passenger train going west from Halifax, at Truro, at ten o'clock or thereabouts on Monday morning, by leaving about midnight on Sunday night. I can understand that there may be a reason for these trains running in the daytime, instead of running at night.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman must not make a speech.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am asking the Minister to explain why this is done, and he should know the reason. The track on that section is not in as good a condition as it ought to be, and the reason is, that a number of skilled workmen were turned off the track and unskilled men were put in their place, men who were not fit to put that track in order, and the train people know this.

INQUIRY FOR RETURNS.

Mr. MARTIN. I desire to ask the Government when I may expect some returns that have been asked for brought down, namely: first, concerning proposed branch railway from Southport and Murray Harbour, and other proposed railways in Prince Edward Island; second, concerning delegation from Prince Edward Island, consisting of the Attorney General and Hon. Messrs. Richards and Rogers, in March last; third, regarding the change in carrying mails for Prince Edward Island between the Intercolonial Railway and Sackville; fourth, expenditure in regard to reconstruction of China Point pier in Prince Edward Island; also, expenditures on piers and wharfs not of Dominion importance, for the years 1896-97 and 1897-98, and scizing of traps and ropes belonging to Benj. Sampton & Co., of Belle River in Prince Edward Island.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). If my hon. friend will kindly send me over a memo. of the returns that relate to the Island, I will have them brought down.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). I am sorry the hon. gentleman is asking what my officers tell me is next to impossible to furnish. He asks me for a return of expenditures on wharfs that are not public property all over Canada. Those of my hon. friends who have been Ministers know that it would be very difficult indeed to ascertain the expenditures that have been made occasionally by other Governments on works that are not the property of the Government. I may say, that the Deputy Minister of Public Works, to whose attention I called this matter a few days ago, told me that it would take months and months to make the report that the hon. gentleman is asking for. But, if he will be kind enough to call at my office, he will be accorded every facility to look into the books to find what he wants. If he will come to-morrow, I will be glad to show him all the books we have.

Mr. MARTIN. This motion was agreed to last session, and the hon. gentleman told me then that it would take a fortnight or so to make this return. It only covers two or three years. The hon. gentleman told me last session when I applied for an expenditure on the Belle River breakwater in Prince Edward Island, that there were no expenditures on piers or wharfs which had not been assumed by Canada ; that he himself had never made any such expenditures. He says now, that those expenditures cover so much ground that the department cannot tell us what they are. I do not think that is fair to this House. It is very important that this House should know what expenditures are made on wharfs over which the Dominion has control. It is also necessary that this House should be placed in possession of information of every amount that is spent from year to year on wharfs and piers over which the Government have no control. If this expenditure is so large that the Public Works Department cannot tabulate it in one year. I think it is a serious matter that this House should inquire into carefully. Of course, I am powerless in the hands of the Government ; but I think the House and the country is entitled to this information.

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS. I may be permitted to add, that, as the hon. gentleman knows, I have not been very well during the last month, and some matters may have escaped my attention. The last time my hon. friend called my attention to this matter, I asked my Deputy Minister to look into it, and he told me what I have just said. But, after the remarks that have fallen from my hon. friend, I will again look into this matter, and if, as he says, the return only covers two years, I think it can be brought down.

SUNDAY LABOUR IN THE PRINTING BUREAU.

Mr. GUILLET. I would like to ask the Prime Minister, if it is true, that men are employed in the Printing Bureau on Sunday ; in other words, if that Bureau is in operation on Sunday.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I never heard of it up to the present moment.

Mr. GUILLET. Will you stop it, if it is true ?

The PRIME MINISTER. It is easy to find out.

THE ALIEN LABOUR LAW.

Mr. WILLIAM McCLEARY (Welland). I desire to call the attention of the leader of the Government to a circumstance calling for the enforcement of the Alien Labour Law. Members of the House are aware that attention has been called to this Act on account of a strike going on in the city of Hamilton at the present time among the garment makers, in consequence of which Calder & Co. have imported a number of workmen to take the place of the men who have gone on strike because they have not received sufficient wages. On the other hand I have understood from the newspapers, as well as from correspondents, that the Government has taken the position that the Alien Labour Law should be allowed to remain in abeyance until the commission closed at Washington ; neither Government enforcing it. But, only last Saturday, a young man named Hunt was deported across the river by Mr. DeBarry, simply because he was going to visit his uncle at Cleveland. He was a bricklayer ; it was feared that he was seeking work, and he was sent back. Now, it will be apparent to the right hon. leader of the Government and to the House as well, that, if the United States are not going to keep their end of the bargain, if there was an agreement reached in that regard, certainly, our Government should enforce the Alien Labour Law, such as we have on the statute-books in regard to the importation of aliens who are brought in to take the places of Canadian workmen. I was expecting that some hon. gentleman representing Hamilton would have called the attention of the Government to this fact, but I deemed it my duty, as I live in the neighbourhood, to call the attention of the Government to that matter.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I may say to my hon. friend (Mr. McCleary) that whilst we were in Washington, last winter, there was then a very arbitrary enforcement of the Alien Labour Law by some agents of the American Government, in fact, that a commercial traveller had been sent back to Canada under the pretense that in the prosecution of his business he was violating the Alien Labour Law. Under representations made, formally, to the authorities at Washington, it was informally agreed that the practice of enforcing the law should be, as far as possible, discontinued on both sides of the line pending an arrangement by the commission. I may say that that understanding was purely informal ; we could not do anything which would have been absolutely binding, but it was well understood on both sides that we should discourage, as far as possible, the enforcement of that law. My attention has been called, within a day or two, to the violation of the Act by the agent named by my hon. friend, Mr. DeBarry, of Buffalo. I caused inquiries to be made, and I am engaged now in exchanging communications with some gentleman in authority at Washington upon this subject. I believe that the reports have been very much exaggerated, and even the fact to which my hon. friend has just alluded, seems to be a confirmation of the exaggeration of these reports. My hon. friend has said that a young man has been sent back by Mr. DeBarry because he was visiting his uncle, and because of the fear that, perhaps, he was going to the United States to work. This is a violation of the Alien Labour Law of the United States ; the Alien Labour Law of the United States does not contemplate that a man can be turned back from American soil because he is visiting relatives. The law only provides that it shall be applied when there is anybody going to work in the United States under contract, and, if a case of that kind has arisen, the person responsible was not proceeding according to law. A similar case has been brought to my attention. I have written to my informant to send me particulars under affidavit so that I may make due complaint to the American authorities that their officer not only enforces the law, but is abusing his privilege to prosecute citizens of Canada who happen to be visiting in the United States. Anybody treated in this way might have his remedy at law in such a case. The question is engaging the attention of the Government at this very moment.

INLAND REVENUE ACT AMENDMENT.

House again resolved itself into committee on Bill (No. 124) to amend the Inland Revenue Act.—(Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière.)

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). Mr. Chairman, it will be remembered that when this Bill to amend the Inland Revenue law was introduced the other day, the hon. member for South Lanark (Mr. Haggart) called attention to clause 2, which says :

(a) Upon the grain used for its production, at the rate of one gallon of proof spirits for every twenty and four-tenths pounds,—or, in a distillery where malt only is used, upon the malt used for its production, at the rate of one gallon of proof spirits for every twenty-four pounds.

I explained to the committee the distinction we are making between the two different modes of distilling whisky. I explained why, in one case, the assessed amount should be less than in the other case, or rather, why a larger allowance should be made in one case than in another, and the hon. member for Lanark asked me if I did not consider it fair to apply it, as much as possible, to the past as well as to the future, so as to repair any injustice that may have been done up to this time. I will now suggest to the committee the addition to the section of the following provision :—

The provision of this section shall apply to all transactions since the first day of July, 1898.

It is impossible for us to go any further, because the day of settlement is the first day of the fiscal year. I hope this decision will be found satisfactory to my hon. friend, and to all those who suffered by the mode adopted up to this time in regard to the amount of grain allowed.

Mr. Haggart. Will the hon. Minister give a reason why it should not apply to all liquors in bond ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There is no complaint and no reason to change the mode of assessment in both cases. There are two modes of distillation ; one requires a larger amount of grain in order to produce the same effect than the other does. The assessment that requires the smaller amount of grain has not given rise to any complaint, and in the other case, where the assessment works unfavourably, the provision we are making will remove the complaint as much as possible.

Mr. Haggart. I am speaking entirely of malt liquors that the hon. Minister intends to apply this Bill to. He says that, at the end of the fiscal year, there is an assessment made, but the money is not paid. It is only an estimate, and why the reduction should not apply to all liquors in bond is something I cannot understand.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The reduction is only asked for in regard to one kind of liquor.

Mr. Haggart. I understand that perfectly well. Why should it not apply to all malt liquors in bond ? You only make it apply to July, 1898. The distiller has to keep liquors in bond two years before he can sell them. Some liquors are kept in bond eight or ten years, and while the provision, perhaps, is a just one, this clause does not apply to all liquors in bond, but only to malt liquors.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Hitherto, on both kinds of whisky produced under different formulas, we assessed the same amount. If they did not produce one gallon of spirits for every 20 4-10ths pounds of grain they were assessed for whatever might be wanting in the number of gallons at the rate of 20 4-10ths pounds per gallon. We found out that there is a mode of distilling which could not produce a gallon of spirits for 20 4-10ths pounds of grain. It is impossible for them, and they are always in arrears, and we are always obliged to assess them at the end of the year. It is to render justice to them that we are asking that instead of assessing them, if they do not produce one gallon for each twenty and one-tenth pounds, we only claim from them one gallon for each twenty-four pounds. It is only for a special kind of distillery that we are trying to remedy whatever hardship they are labouring under. I am willing to go back until the beginning of the current year, which is now nearly over, to give them the benefit of this law, but as we have assessed them for the last year, and closed up their accounts, I do not think it would be judicious to apply the law to that period.

Mr. Haggart. I understand from the Minister that there is a distinction made between two kinds of manufactured liquor, one from raw grain and the other from malt. Distillation from malt requires a larger quantity than from raw grain ; but no malt or other distillery can sell any liquor until it is two years old. It is true the amount is assessed at the end of every year, but the distiller does not sell, and there is no money paid into the Inland Revenue Department. If the manufacturers for the last ten years back could not make the quantity of liquor out of the amount of malt provided, and if the department finds that they are entitled to this act of justice, why do they not make it apply to all liquors in bond ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). It is impossible for me to understand why I should apply it to all liquors in bond, when it is intended to apply to only one particular kind of liquor.

Mr. HAGGART. I have made it clear. I think, that my argument applies to one particular liquor, namely, that manufactured out of malt. You can only sell that liquor after it is two years in bond. And, if it is just to apply the law for one year, it appears to me that it would be just to apply it to all liquors in bond. If the principle of the Bill is to apply to 1898, why should it not apply to all malt liquors that are now in bond ?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We are trying as much as possible to relieve that industry ; we are coming to the help of that industry, but why we should now upset all our books and all our assessments I cannot understand. I think there is most certainly a proof of liberality in applying the Bill to the current year, and I was in hopes my hon. friend (Mr. Haggart) would be satisfied with that.

Mr. HAGGART. Oh, I will be satisfied if you insist upon it.

Section as amended agreed to.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) made a suggestion the other day, that this whole clause should be re-drafted. I thought before looking at the old clause that a very good suggestion, but as I am only substituting one word for another, it would cause a good deal of trouble if we reproduced this whole clause, which is more than half a page in length.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I had no particular knowledge of this class of legislation, but I made an appeal to the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) or any representative of the law department of the Government, regarding the convenience of reproducing the whole amended clause in a case of this kind. When these amendments are being made, it is very inconvenient to have to refer to changes of a word in the third or fourth line, and so on, and I thought it would be more convenient if the clause were reproduced.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. This amendment is merely to meet what appears to be the result of forgetfulness in this case. For although it provides for nearly every fraction of a pound, it does not provide for one-third of a pound. We have been requested by several of the tobacco manufacturers to provide third of a pound stamps, and we do so in this Bill.
Mr. HAGGART.

Section agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

INSPECTION OF PETROLEUM AND NAPHTHA.

Bill (No. 131) respecting the inspection of petroleum and naphtha—(Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière)—read the second time, and House resolved itself into committee on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2, subsection (h),

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. This is a new clause, intended to meet the new order of things which we are attempting to introduce, and by which we hope to remove a great many of the hardships of which those who deal in petroleum as well as those who import it, especially people in the North-west, complain so seriously, and I must say with a good deal of reason. Instead of requiring the petroleum imported in tank wagons to be barrelled as hitherto, and only inspecting it when it is barrelled, we shall hereafter inspect the petroleum at the refinery or the custom-house, and then there will be no necessity for the petroleum to be barrelled. In order to inspect it at the different refineries, we must know where the refineries are, and make arrangements for bringing every one of the refineries under the control of the department. This is the purpose of this new clause.

On section 22,

Mr. FOSTER. That is a tyrannical clause. Any person is liable under it who may have only half a pound in his possession, and who may have bought it innocently.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. It is considered as smuggled oil. This would only apply to smuggled oil.

Mr. FOSTER. How is the man to know whether it is smuggled or not ?

On section 29,

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I find that this clause is rather extravagantly severe, because there are many cases where the party found in possession of the oil, not being smuggled oil or anything of the kind, may be only guilty of neglect and nothing more. So I move that the last words "one hundred dollars" be struck out and the following be substituted :—"a penalty of not less than ten or more than one hundred dollars."

Amendment agreed to.

Section as amended agreed to.

Committee rose and reported progress.

The House resolved itself into committee to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to provide that every company or person engaged in the refining of petroleum in Canada shall pay annually a license fee of one dollar for every refinery in which such business is carried on, such fee to become payable from and after a day to be fixed by the Governor General by proclamation for bringing into operation any Act which provides for the imposing of such license fee.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We propose that a fee should be imposed in order to enable us to keep track of the different refiners and manufacturers; and it is thought that the nominal fee of $1 will be sufficient.

The committee rose and reported resolution.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would like to ask, before proceeding further, if this is not a matter of taxation, and, therefore, requiring to be introduced by authority of His Excellency the Governor General?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I understand that the Minister of Finance gave notice that he had the consent of His Excellency the Governor General.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES ACT AMENDMENT.

Bill (No. 128) to amend the Weights and Measures Act—(Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière)—read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee on the said Bill.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. CLANCY. I desire to ask the Minister of Inland Revenue whether the provisions of this Bill are to apply entirely to fruit for export, or if they are to apply generally? It is very material, I think, that the Bill should be considerably altered if it does not apply exclusively to fruit packed for export.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. My hon. friend will see that in the second section of the Bill, its operation is confined only to those who offer or expose apples for sale or for exportation.

Mr. CLANCY. As the Bill now stands, any person offering a barrel of apples for sale other than in accordance with the provision of this Bill, would be subject to the penalties prescribed. If it is only intended to apply to apples packed for export, the Bill should be made more clear. It would apply to a man offering a barrel of apples for sale at a local auction.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I may be allowed to explain the reasons why it was thought necessary to introduce this change. It is thought necessary to specify the size of the barrel so as to put an end to the complaints that have been made, especially in Nova Scotia.

Mr. MONTAGUE. The hon. gentleman does not touch the point to which we refer. The hon. gentleman is making parties who transgress this Act subject to certain penalties. Well, we say that if these penalties are only attached to parties who pack apples in a certain way for exportation, this first clause ought to be amended.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I thought that before dealing with that part of the Bill which provides for penalties, I would explain the reasons why we are dealing with the size of the barrel.

Mr. MONTAGUE. We are perfectly willing to take the reasons for granted. The hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) suggested that this was an exceedingly severe penalty to place upon a man who happened to pack a barrel of apples contrary to the provisions of this statute, for his own use, for instance, or for sale at the local market. If an ordinary man who packs apples had that statute under his eyes, he would be afraid to pack apples at all, unless he had a veneer barrel or something of that kind.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The intention of the Bill is to prevent fraud, which has been complained of for a long time. If my hon. friend does not object to the description, and to the slight change that is made in the form of the barrel, we will come now to the penalty and its application. The penalty is much less than that provided against any other fraudulent dealer, because it is only 25 cents a barrel. It is a moral penalty rather than a material one. But I think the penalty ought to apply, not only to those who pack for exportation in a fraudulent manner in barrels smaller than those of the size fixed by law, but it ought to apply to all those who pack barrels for disposal in this country as well as for exportation. The fraud is the same in either case, and ought to be punished in the same manner.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether, in the statute that was amended, these words appear "cylindrical veneer barrels"?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is this veneer barrel?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Cylindrical veneer barrels are only now coming into use in Nova Scotia. The Minister of Militia and Defence (Mr. Borden) is, perhaps, better acquainted with these barrels than I am, and, perhaps, he will explain what they are. I have not seen these cylindrical barrels, but I have been told how they are manufactured.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Where does the veneer come in?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Veneer is one of those words, the application of which it is difficult to account for, in this case. But it is a word used among coopers.

Mr. CLANCY. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he has got some friend behind him who has a cylindrical veneer barrel that he wants to unload on the farmers of this country. I have no hesitation in saying that I dissent entirely from the proposition the hon. gentleman has made that every person who wants to sell to his nearest neighbour, or take into town, a barrel of apples, must take either a cylindrical veneer barrel or suffer the penalty.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). There is an alternative—"or in good and strong barrels of seasoned wood."

Mr. CLANCY. But it must be of a certain size. The barrel is to be a barrel of apples packed in Canada for sale:

All apples packed in Canada for sale by the barrel shall be packed either in cylindrical veneer barrels having an inside diameter of eighteen inches and one-third, and twenty-seven inches from head to head inside measure, or in good and strong barrels of seasoned wood twenty-seven inches between the heads, inside measure, and having a head diameter of seventeen inches and a middle diameter of nineteen inches, and such last-named barrels shall be sufficiently hooped, with a lining-hoop within the chimes, the whole well secured with nails.

It means that every barrel of apples brought into every city, town and hamlet in this country will have to be made of that fashion, or the packer will be subject to penalty. If the hon. gentleman proposes loading such conditions on the people of this country, they will very properly resent it. I think it is unfair and uncalled for. My hon. friend may have some person behind him urging him on, but that person represents but a very small section of the people of this country. I do not know why the farmers should be harassed with such regulations. If it is desired to protect the export trade that is a very proper thing to do, and if the hon. gentleman means that and means no more let him make that plain; let him strike out the words "for sale" in the first section, and that will meet it, and, in the second subsection, let him strike out the words "or exposes for sale," because the first section will cover it entirely. If my hon. friend adheres to the statement he made a moment ago that a barrel of apples, to be sold, is to be subject to any such regulations I hope the House will not assent to any such arbitrary measurements.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I understand that the hon. Minister says that this only applies to apples for exportation.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR. No; if I may be allowed to explain the law, today, that my hon. friend (Mr. Clancy) complains of, has been such a hardship that it is hardly enforced now.

Mr. CLANCY. Well, then, it is time my hon. friend should get rid of it.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. If my hon. friend wants to get rid of it he had better try to get rid of it. The only part I wish to improve in the law, as it is now, is in reference to the size of the barrel.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I think the hon. gentleman ought to drop that veneer.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I am sorry that I cannot drop the veneer. What I am willing to drop, in order to make this Bill exactly on the same lines as the previous Bill, only changing the size of the barrel so as to make it entirely fair to all parties, is, in the second subsection, the words "every person who offers or exposes for sale, or who packs for exportation." I am ready to take the law as it is now. The law as it is now says that:

Every person who offers or exposes apples for sale by the barrel otherwise than in accordance with the foregoing provisions of this section, shall be liable to a penalty of 25 cents for each barrel of apples so offered or exposed for sale.

My hon. friend speaks as if a hardship would be imposed by adopting this Bill. The only purpose is to make the size of the barrel so regular that there will be no cause of complaint resulting from the use of smaller barrels. The law as it is now gives the distance between these heads and says that the heads shall be from 16½ inches to 17 inches in diameter, but these heads can be made as thick as you like, and this Bill proposes to prevent fraud by saying the distance that there shall be between the heads.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman please read section 18, which it is proposed to repeat, so as to see what is to be substituted.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I have read section 18. In regard to these words "for exportation," I do not see why they should have been added. I do not know why we should make an exception, and I will propose that these words "for exportation" should be struck out, and by comparison with the old clause it will be seen that the only difference we make is to provide that the construction of the barrel shall be of such a nature as to make it uniform in any case.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. "Cylindrical veneer" is not in the old section.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No, I have had a calculation made as to the contents of such a veneered barrel, as the one my hon. friend finds so objectionable, and I find in one case they are 7,128 cubic inches, and in another 7,125 cubic inches, so that there is only a difference between the two barrels of 3 cubic inches. Will my hon. friend, who represents so many of these apple packers in New Brunswick, stand up and defend veneer barrels?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Chairman. I think the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue ought to do one of two things: he ought either to drop the "cylindrical veneer barrels," which is included in the Bill he is introducing, or explain to us what it means. He says he does not know. I am anxious to know, I do not know, and I say that the House is entitled to an explanation when a new term is introduced in a Bill for the purpose of preventing frauds. The hon. gentleman has either to drop it or explain or get some person else to explain it so that we will understand it. This is a Bill which is to be carried into law, and a penalty for fraud is to be imposed, and under these circumstances it is not unreasonable that he should be asked to make the members of the House of Commons understand the meaning of the terms he employs. It is to be put in operation all over the country wherever fruit is grown. I would like to say a word or two, as I am on my feet, on the subject itself. I quite appreciate the effort the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue is making to prevent fraud, but I do not see the necessity, or the great importance of preventing fraud in reference to the trade in Canada. I am able to say from experience that there is not a question that could engage the attention of this House that is more important to Canada, than the prevention of fraud in the exports of Canada. I may say that when I was High Commissioner for Canada at London, hay went up to £10 a ton, and opened a field for export from Canada to Great Britain that was of the utmost value to this country. Having studied the subject thoroughly, I came to the conclusion that, whenever hay rose to over £5 a ton, which it does very frequently, it can be exported profitably from Canada to Great Britain. Every person knows the enormous facilities that this country possesses for the export of hay. It was proved to a demonstration by parties who fed Canadian hay to horses, persons who kept five or six hundred horses, and who made an experiment—there was a great prejudice against Canadian hay because it was said that it was too coarse—which completely dispelled that supposition. The parties who fed this Canadian hay to hundreds of horses—one of the persons, I remember, had at that time 600 horses—fed Canadian hay for a month and fed hay procured in Great Britain for another month. This gentleman that I refer to gave a certificate, and made a declaration that he could keep his horses in infinitely better condition on Canadian hay than on the hay produced in Great Britain, and at a very much smaller cost. The condition of the horses was better and the cost was very much less. That trade, which rapidly assumed great proportions, was destroyed by parties in Canada, who, instead of keeping up the character of Canadian hay, shipped stuff that was not fit for shipment. Consequently, persons who were induced, under the high reputation that Canadian hay acquired, to order hundreds of thousands of tons of it, found that a great mass of it was totally unfit for consumption. The grossest frauds were resorted to, and anything which the Minister of Inland Revenue, or the Government, can devise to prevent frauds of that kind in connection with goods exported from Canada to Great Britain, deserves the most attentive consideration of this House. Whether it be apples, or hay, or any other commodity, the only means by which fraud can be guarded against is by having an inspection of the exports leaving this country, and an inspection which shall be as cheap and effective as possible. Canadian apples have carried off the gold medal in London at great exhibitions, in competition with apples from all parts of the world, and there is no doubt that, if we can prevent fraud, we can extend the export of fruit from Canada to Great Britain to almost any extent you like. But, when Canadian apples attain a high character, and people are anxious to obtain them, if it be found that there are good apples on the top and bottom of the barrels, and inferior apples in the middle, our trade will be destroyed. I believe that this measure, which imposes a penalty for fraud in that direction, is a very important one. However, I am inclined to think it is being pushed a little too far, when it is made to apply, not only to apples for export, but apples which are sold in the neighbouring town or village.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I understood the Minister of Inland Revenue to say, that these persons could not sell apples anywhere without being liable to a penalty, and that is the objection which my hon. friend from Bothwell (Mr. Clancy) took. In my opinion, the penalty for fraud should apply to that which is offered for export, and not to these transactions which take place in the neighbouring towns.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There seems to be a great deal of misapprehension about the effect and the object of this Bill. In order that we may understand the object of the Minister of Inland Revenue, let us see what the law is, as it now stands. Section 18 provides :

All apples packed in Canada for sale by the barrel shall be packed in good and strong barrels of seasoned wood, made as nearly cylindrical as may be, the staves of such barrels shall be twenty-seven inches in length from croe to croe, with heads from sixteen and one-half to seventeen inches in diameter, and such barrels shall be sufficiently hooped, with a lining-hoop within the chimes, the whole well secured by nails.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What does "from croe to croe" mean?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The little curve that rounds around the staves into which the head of the barrel is inserted. Now, the change which we make by this Bill is :

All apples packed in Canada for sale by the barrel shall be packed—

Thus far, the words are the same as in the old Act, and here is the change to which I draw the attention of the leader of the Opposition, because, I think, there is no one in the House who does not agree absolutely with all that has been said with reference to the necessity for seeing that exports from Canada are equal to the staple article in the country. Here is the change :

—shall be packed either in cylindrical veneer barrels having an inside diameter of eighteen inches and one-third, and twenty-seven inches from head to head, inside measure,—

That is the first change. What is a cylindrical veneered barrel? A veneered barrel is a veneered piece of wood put in the form of a barrel. What is a veneered piece of wood? Two pieces of wood put together, the grain of one running one way, and the grain of the other running another way.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Not at all.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Wait a moment.

Some hon. MEMBERS. You are all wrong.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Veneered wood means, necessarily, a veneer of one kind of wood applied to another.

An hon. MEMBER. Look in the dictionary.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is not at all necessary to look at the dictionary for that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Ask the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Do-bell).

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. A cylindrical veneered barrel means a cylindrical barrel of veneered wood. Any one will understand that two sorts of wood running together, the grain of one running in one direction, and the grain of the other running in another, will give you a piece of wood with a greater resistance than if the grains of both woods ran in the same direction. Now, the balance of the section provides for barrels the same as are now used, and leaves the law absolutely the same as it exists at present, except that the barrel now used is to be measured under a different system. The system of measurement which is to be applied, as provided by this Bill, would enable a more accurate estimate to be made of the contents of the barrel. For instance, here is what the section says :

—or in good and strong barrels of seasoned wood, twenty-seven inches between the heads, inside measure, and having a head diameter of seventeen inches and a middle diameter of nineteen inches, and such last-named barrel shall be sufficiently hooped, with a lining-hoop within the chimes, the whole well secured by nails.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That does not differ from the old law.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is absolutely the same as the old law, except in respect to the mode of measurement, which is to be different.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It appears to be the same as the old law.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is a little difference, because of the thickness of the barrel head. If you eliminate from this section of the Bill a reference to the veneered barrel, you have the old law, as it has been in force for twelve or fourteen years. Whatever may be the character of the veneered barrel—and there seems to be some difference of opinion as to it—I understand it is used in some sections of the country; and it is simply required that that barrel shall have certain dimensions. I do not see any great difficulty about that. Some of my learned friends on the other side objected to the penalty clause; but that clause is simply a re-enactment of the law as we have had it in existence for fourteen years. Now, another change is the addition of the words: "Or who packs for exportation." The existing law applied only to apples offered for sale in Canada, and the effect of this change is to meet with the views of the leader of the Opposition, and to protect our apple trade, when these apples are exported. This change provided for in the Bill protects the foreigner who buys our apples, in the same way as the local buyer is protected.

Mr. COCHRANE. Do I understand that the barrel, as provided for under the section of that Bill, is the same size as provided for under the existing law?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, about the same.

Mr. COCHRANE. I did not understand the hon. leader of the Opposition to refer to the size of the barrel at all. I admit that the size of the barrel is important;

all barrels should be uniform in size ; but it is much more important that there should be a uniform quality in the apples inside the barrel. It is in this respect that I understand our apples are losing their hold on the British market. When the consumer buys a barrel of Canadian apples, he assumes that they are a first-class article all through ; but when he opens the barrel he finds a few good apples on the top and a few on the bottom, while all in the middle are inferior. Now, I object to the newspapers giving currency to the statement that it is the farmers of this country who are to blame for this state of things. I want to tell this House, and the country through this House, that there is hardly a barrel of apples intended for Great Britain that is packed by a farmer. The dealers come to the farmers and buy the apples in the orchards and pack them themselves. There is hardly a barrel of apples in the country packed by a farmer, and I repudiate the circulation by the newspapers of the false impression that the farmers of Canada are cheating the consumers of Great Britain. The farmers have no more to do with the packing of the apples than they would have if they did not raise the apples at all. I want to correct the impression that has gone abroad that the farmers of the country are responsible for the fraud which is perpetrated on the British consumers. I can tell you where this clause may have a serious effect. An apple buyer comes to me and buys my apples for a lump sum, and he asks me to deliver them at Brighton or Colborne, my nearest market. I put them up in the barrels as he directs me ; and the question is whether under this clause I would be liable to the penalty.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not think anybody in this House is prepared to dispute anything my hon. friend has said in reference to the honesty of the Canadian farmer ; but I think that is beside the present question. I quite agree with what he says with reference to the necessity for the proper packing and inspection of apples ; and if he refers to the General Inspection Act, he will find that the law since 1890 has provided for the difficulty he now speaks of. We proceed, by this Bill, to provide for the new difficulty. The second section is absolutely the old law as it has been in force for the last twelve or fourteen years, with the exception that the provision which now applies to apples put up for sale in this country is made to extend to apples packed for exportation. That is the only change, and in view of what has fallen from the leader of the Opposition, it seems to me there cannot be any dispute as to the necessity for that change.

Mr. MILLS. In addition to the objections which have been already offered to the Bill, I would urge this one. It seems there is to be a drastic change in the size of the barrel, which will particularly affect barrels made in the province of Nova Scotia ; so that if this Bill becomes law, it will put the coopers in the country to a great disadvantage.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Will my hon. friend take the Bill, and point out in what respect a change in the size of the barrel is made ?

Mr. MILLS. In the law as it is now, I understand that there must be twenty-seven inches between croe and croe, whereas the Bill makes the space twenty-seven inches on the inside. Even that is quite a little difference. It is sufficient, at all events, to change the construction of the stuff which the coopers have already got out. Then, there is also a change with reference to the bilge of the barrel, making the barrel a great deal larger.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No.

Mr. MILLS. Excuse me. The old law, if I remember correctly, provides that the diameter of the barrel shall be seventeen inches at its wider part to sixteen and a half inches, whereas the Bill makes it seventeen inches at the head and nineteen inches at the middle. Of course, I am not an expert in these matters, but I represent a constituency which is intensely interested in this subject. I have sent copies of this Bill to the coopers, asking them to give me their opinion of it, and I would like the hon. Minister to postpone the Bill for a short time until I can have an opportunity of ascertaining the opinion of these men. I do not wish to offer a factious opposition to the Bill at all. I make this suggestion in all good faith.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). My hon. friend the Minister of Inland Revenue has stated that I have had some communication with him in reference to this matter. That is quite true. In fact, some years ago, when the late Sir John Thompson was Premier, I brought this matter up in this House at the request of the fruit-growers of Nova Scotia ; and this Bill, I understand, is word for word what was adopted at a large meeting of the fruit-growers of Nova Scotia, and approved of by several meetings of farmers held at different points in the western part of Nova Scotia. The objection which my hon. friend from Annapolis (Mr. Mills) has raised is, I think, entitled to some consideration. No doubt, there are a great many men engaged in the manufacture of barrels in western Nova Scotia. Thousands and hundreds of thousands are made every year, and if the Bill becomes law, I think it might be provided that it should come into force at some future fixed date, which would enable the manufacturers to dispose of the stock which they may have on hand. I do not think, however, that there is at present any large stock on hand. I understand the hon. leader of the Opposition to refer to quite a different matter. This is an amendment to the Weights and Measures Act, and the hon. gentleman referred to the Inspection Act. I quite agree in all the hon. gentleman has said with reference to the very great importance of having our exports go on the foreign markets in good condition, and I also agree with my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) that the farmers are not always by any means responsible for the bad packing. The same thing occurred in my own province which he says takes place in his county. The farmers sell the whole orchard, on the tree, and the purchaser sends in his men who pick the apples and pack them. I think it would be well for the Minister of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) to consider seriously the question of amending the Inspection Act in such a way as to cover all important exports such as apples.

Something has been said with regard to the new style of barrel referred to here. I regret that I am not able to explain minutely what sort of a barrel this is, but that does not seem of much importance because the alternative is permitted and there is no attempt to force anybody to use the veneer barrel.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
What is the veneer barrel?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I understand that a new process has been discovered by which the round log is taken and, as it were, peeled, and instead of having a number of staves, as in the ordinary barrel, there is simply one stave and the barrel is absolutely cylindrical—the same size at the head as all the way through; and a very careful calculation has been made, according to which the contents of this cylindrical barrel are absolutely the same as those of an ordinary barrel.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Where are they made?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman, but I believe they are made in Ontario and other places.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Is there a patent out?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I do not know. I can only repeat that the Fruit Growers Association of Nova Scotia, one of the oldest and most important horticultural organizations in the country, approves of this Bill, and no doubt would not have given it their approval without very carefully looking into the question.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER.
Then this cylindrical barrel has some other material put on the outside?

Mr. BORDEN (King's).

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE. I do not understand that that is necessarily the case. The packer, by this Bill, is left open to buy any barrel he chooses and not compelled to use the veneer barrel. I only wish to say in conclusion that I think it is important that the words "or who pack for exportation" should be retained in the Bill. I think it is important that we should adopt a uniform package for all the fruit sent out of Canada, and that is the object of the introduction of this measure. There can be no hardship in defining the size of barrels which shall be used in the home and the foreign market. It would certainly be a great convenience if one uniform size should be adopted, both for sale on the home market and export.

Mr. CRAIG. I merely rise to endorse the suggestion made by the hon. member for Annapolis (Mr. Mills). I do not profess to know very much about this matter myself, but in my constituency there are large shippers of apples and men who make barrels as well; and as the Bill was only read the first time on the 25th May, it would be well for the Minister of Inland Revenue to postpone further consideration until we have time to get word from those interested. I am very anxious to know the views of my constituents with regard to this measure, and I would urge the hon. Minister to give the necessary time to obtain these views.

Mr. HENDERSON. I trust that in the meantime the hon. Minister will consider seriously the question as to whether this Bill should apply to any but apples for export. I am quite sure it will create a very great deal of disturbance in the country if the Bill is made to apply to all apples packed for local sale. In my own section, a large number of sugar barrels are used in the packing of apples for the local market. These are larger than the apple barrel, and under the present Bill a penalty could be imposed on the farmer using such larger barrels.

There is no grievance alleged on the part of the local trade, and I am quite sure the hon. Minister will find that he will meet with the approval of the people generally if he makes no attempt to interfere with the trade of the country, as it has been carried on heretofore, and simply make this Bill apply to apples for export.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE.
That would be changing the law.

Mr. HENDERSON. I think the law should be changed for it is now a dead letter. The hon. Minister will meet with the approval of farmers generally if he would amend the law so as to make it in accord with the custom of trade in the country. There is no need whatever to define the size of an apple barrel used in the home trade. I trust that further time will be given to the consideration of this Bill, as I would like to hear from some of my constituents and know what the desire of the people is.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think the attention of the Solicitor General might be directed to the last line of clause 18.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Of this Bill or the old one?

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Of the present proposed Bill. There is a provision that the barrel shall be provided with "chimes," I think we should regulate the quality of the "chimes," if it be necessary to deal with them at all. I am under the impression that the word intended is the word "chimes."

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My hon. friend (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) has probably copied too closely the legislation we have had in force for the last 14 years.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I can explain to my hon. friend what the chime is, if he desires information.

Mr. MOORE. I had something to say on this subject, but the hon. gentleman on my right (Mr. Henderson) has stolen all my thunder. The main objection to this Bill is one that he has placed before the House more forcibly than I could. In the province of Quebec very few apples are sold for export. Still, many farmers are raising apples in that country. They put them in barrels such as they can buy, flour barrels and so on, and take them into the towns and sell them. I understand that this law provides that if a farmer offers apples in a barrel not of the prescribed size, he will be liable to a penalty.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That has been the law for the last 14 years.

Mr. SCRIVER. But the law has not been enforced.

Mr. MOORE. But you propose to make a law now that will impose a penalty in such a case. Even if a farmer sells a barrel of apples to his neighbour, he is liable to a penalty, as I understand it, if the barrel is not of the prescribed size. If I am wrong I would like to be corrected. I understand the hon. Minister of Militia (Mr. Borden) to say that there would be no harm in prescribing a barrel of uniform size in which apples are to be sold for domestic use as well as for export. I do not see any particular objection to a fixed size of barrels for apples packed for export. After what we have heard from the Minister of Agriculture in the Agriculture Committee, that the farmers have been dishonestly packing apples to send to the foreign markets, it would, perhaps, be better that the Government should look to the inside of the barrel than to the form of the barrel. I was surprised, for my part, to find the farmers of our country accused of being so dishonest. If they were packing apples as they have been accused of doing,

I think it would be well for the Government to look into the inside of the barrel and leave the rest alone, except, possibly, in the case of apples packed for the English market.

Mr. HEYD. I do not see why there should be a single voice raised in opposition to this Bill. The Bill must strike any one familiar with the apple trade as exactly what the country has been wanting. It is evident that many of those who have spoken on the subject of this Bill are not familiar with the subject or with the difficulties the Bill is intended to reach. It is certainly desirable to have a standard measurement so that a person when buying a hundred or a thousand barrels of apples may know exactly what he is going to get. Now, what is the actual practice? When we buy apples for export, it is understood by the people in the trade that a barrel shall contain so much. They are generally understood to contain about two bushels and three pecks. But outside of the export trade there are thousands of barrels of apples sold in this country, the barrels being bought by farmers from the grocers—sugar barrels, flour barrels, starch barrels—containing all the way from two and three-quarters to four bushels, all sold under the generic name of a barrel of apples. A farmer goes into a store and buys, probably, a hundred sugar barrels, packs them with apples, and brings them in and sells them as barrels of apples. I understand the object of the Bill is, as the hon. Minister tells us, to provide that when one is buying a thousand barrels of apples he may understand them to be of a specific size. We have had similar legislation to this in operation for 14 years. I have seen thousands of barrels of apples in the place I came from, containing three bushels and a half, and I never knew a man to be fined for giving three bushels and a half when he was bound only to give two bushels and three-quarters under the terms of his agreement. I think it desirable that we should have it so arranged that exporters of apples and those who sell apples may know that they are not bound to give three bushels and a half or more instead of two bushels and three-quarters in selling a barrel of apples. It may be that the Opposition, for the purpose of having a little fun, criticise this measure this afternoon; but it is not in the interest of exporters or farmers that it has not been well understood that two bushels and three pecks of apples make a barrel. I trust the Bill will pass. There is nothing of an objectionable character in it that has not existed for 14 years, and I defy any man to say that under that law a farmer has been fined for giving three and a half bushels instead of two bushels and three-quarters.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is evident from the remarks of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Heyd) who has just sat down that there is a job in this Bill for somebody. In the first place, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) if the cylindrical barrel measuring 18½ inches by 27 inches will contain the same quantity as the other barrel measuring 27 inches between the head by 17 inches head diameter and 19 inches middle diameter?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I explained that one will contain 7,128 cubic inches and the other 7,125 cubic inches. In other words, there is a difference of three cubic inches between the two, and it is impossible to come nearer.

Mr. TAYLOR. You find mentioned in this Bill two classes of barrels, one cylindrical—made in the shape of a cheese box—the same size from top to bottom—and the other of the ordinary size. It looks as if some friend of the hon. Minister invented a barrel of this cylindrical kind. It is provided that apples must be packed either in a barrel of that kind or in one 27 inches between the heads with a head diameter of 17 inches and a middle diameter of 19 inches. If it has a middle diameter of 18½ inches, it cannot be used. No cooper can make barrels exactly 19 inches in the centre. If the hon. Minister will provide that a barrel of apples shall contain so many cubic inches or so many bushels, there will be some sense in that. In my part of the country, seven-eighths of the apples are sold in Kingston and Brockville and other nearby markets. The apples are put up in flour barrels or sugar barrels, varying somewhat in size, but none measuring less than two and a quarter bushels. I do not know what the barrels provided for in this Bill will contain, but it is evident that the apples that are sent for export will go in these cylindrical barrels, made, no doubt, by some friend who has the ear of the hon. Minister. Now, in answer to what the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Heyd) has said, I may point out that the exporters have this matter in their own hands. The farmers do not export a barrel of apples. The exporters can supply any barrels they like. They buy the apples from the farmers at so much a bushel and pick them and pack them themselves; and they, not the farmers, provide the barrels. If there is fraud, as my hon. friend from East Northumberland (Mr. Cochrane) contends, in putting large apples on the bottom and on the top, no doubt our English friends have found it out, and the farmers of this country have got the blame for it—through the Committee on Agriculture, who brought out the fact, and gave it to the world, some days ago. The fact is, that the packing, in 99 cases out of 100 is done by the packers and exporters themselves. But it is evident that this Bill is intended to benefit some man who has patented a barrel made in the form of a cheese-box, who has got the ear of the Minister, and has had a Bill introduced here to force the sale of his barrels in this country. It would be all right, if the Minister would introduce a Bill saying, that a barrel of apples should contain two bushels and three pecks, or three bushels, let it be square, round, or any other shape, of whatever material they like, and that it must contain a certain quantity of apples; then, if these conditions are not fulfilled, let the packer, or the farmer, be liable to a penalty. But it is absurd to say, that a farmer cannot sell a barrel of apples, unless they are packed in these cylindrical barrels, or a barrel that must be 19 inches at the bilge, because no cooper can make all barrels of exactly the same measurement at the bilge. It will not be the same on every barrel. Therefore, he forces everybody to buy this patent barrel to help some one introduce it on the market.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). The statement of the hon. member (Mr. Taylor) so far as Nova Scotia is concerned, is not correct. From one-third to one-half of the apples exported from Nova Scotia every year are exported directly by the farmers. The farmers there are wealthier than those of Ontario, and know how to raise apples. The consequence is, that the farmers themselves export the apples, and the names of the farmers who export apples from that valley are better known in London than the packers that have been spoken of. The province of Nova Scotia is the one of all others where the people know best how to raise apples, and where they do raise the best apples.

Mr. COCHRANE. What nonsense that is.

Mr. McDOUGALL. With regard to the veneer barrels, I have seen different kinds of them, and I have handled them myself. A veneer barrel is made by putting two plies of wood together. The outside is precisely like a cheese-box; the inside is made up as the staves of an ordinary barrel are made now, only that it consists of one piece of wood, instead of several pieces. That makes up the barrel. It cannot be made in any other way than of the same size from top to bottom. Veneer is one piece inside and one piece outside, only that they are put in opposite directions. The outside is in the position of a hoop on an ordinary barrel, and the inside is in the position of the staves in an ordinary barrel, thus they are in opposite directions. And instead of having the croes to hold the head and the bottom, there is a hoop put inside, and the bottom and head are put on to that, and another hoop is put on the outside. That is the way the barrels are made up. These barrels are now used in packing nails; I believe their manufacture is confined to the United States; I am not aware of any being made in Canada. They are used for packing soda, in some instances, and nails. I have seen them years ago, containing granulated cornmeal manufactured in the United States. I may say, with regard to the shape of the barrel, that I think it would be preferable not to make it with the bilge for packing fruit. When you stow a lot of barrels having a bilge, you are liable to press down the staves of which the barrel is made up, on the bilge, and in that way bruise the fruit, because you have a vacant space between the ends of the upper barrel and the lower barrel. If you want to stow a number of barrels, with the cylindrical veneer barrel, you have the full length of one barrel resting on the other, with the two ends lodging evenly, and the wood which is on end forming the head of the barrel, is stronger than the bilge of the barrel, when you have the weight of several resting on each other. That is my understanding of the advantage in using a veneer barrel, when the two plies of wood are put together in the way I have described. If they are put together in any other way, and a split took place in the material of the barrel, the split would continue to the end of the wood, whereas, if the split took place in the outside ply of the veneer barrel, it is met on the inside by the wood being in the opposite direction.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I would ask my hon. friends to allow me five minutes to explain the purpose of this Bill. Anybody who will examine the law, as it stands to-day, will see that there is complete uncertainty in regard to the size of the barrel, and it is to dissipate this uncertainty that the present Bill has been introduced. The old law, as it now stands, reads :

The staves of such barrels shall be twenty-seven inches in length from croe to croe.

Well, the croe is the groove in which the head of the barrel is placed. But there is nothing now to show what the thickness of the head shall be. A man who wants to cheat can make that head an inch thick.

Mr. MILLS. Usually, there is quite a bulge in that head.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. The present amendment simply states that between the two heads there shall be 27 inches. The old law says there shall be 27 inches between the two croes, but it does not say how thick the head shall be. If the head is 1 inch thick at each end, you will see at once there are 2 inches lost on the whole length of the barrel. Now, let me say, that the very description of the barrel in the old law is of such a nature that it is impossible to say that it is positive.

The staves of such barrels shall be twenty-seven inches in length from croe to croe, with heads from sixteen and one-half to seventeen inches in diameter.

My hon. friend said, a moment ago, that we were increasing the diameter of the barrel. We are not increasing the diameter of the barrel. The present amendment says, that the head of the barrel shall be 17 inches in diameter, whereas the old law says, that it shall be between 16½ and 17 inches. Well, I am adopting the entire measure, instead of the fractional measure, saying 17 inches, instead of 16½. Then, again, there is no precise shape of the bilge prescribed for the old barrel: you might make the old barrel nearly perpendicular, if you liked. We try to dissipate that uncertainty by saying, that the bilge shall be 19 inches in diameter. I hope, from these explanations, my hon. friend will see that there is a purpose, at all events, in the introduction of this Bill, that we are trying to remove the uncertainty that exists in each of these respects, so that in future it will be perfectly clear what the size of the barrel must be. Now, as to the veneer barrel. In a barrel with staves, which I may take for an explanation, it has been calculated with the greatest care that there are only 3 cubic inches difference between a veneer barrel and a barrel with staves, such as we now wish to define. I will not to take up any more time of the committee, but I hope I have said enough, at all events, to satisfy my hon. friends that the reason for introducing this Bill is not to favour the manufacturing of veneer barrels, nor has it any purpose of that kind. They are already manufactured; I have myself got barrels made of veneer. The Bill is to put an end to all complaints as to the real contents of the barrel. By looking at the first line, it will be seen that the time when this law comes into force has been left in blank, so as to give fair-play to every one, to the coopers, to those who have a collection of these barrels on hand, and, if the Bill is passed, the date when it becomes law may be put as remote as they like, providing it becomes law within a reasonable time.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is the veneered barrel being made in Canada now?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Certainly it is made in Canada. I have some veneered barrels.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It appears to me that the statute which the hon. gentleman is introducing is really a law against being thick-headed. I think we should withdraw our opposition to this clause at once.

Mr. CLANCY. Since the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue has consented to allow the Bill to stand, as I understand he has?—

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Yes.

Mr. CLANCY. I am going to ask him to consider, in the meantime, the possibility of amending section 18. It has been stated that this is practically the old law. Now, I want to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the old law is a dead letter, because it is not practicable. Nobody pretends to conform to the law as it now stands, and therefore it is no excuse to argue, in this case, that we are simply following the old law. I think the hon. gentleman will see that it is time the old law was repealed, or at all events, that we might repeal that part of it so far as it refers to apples packed entirely for local, or what we call domestic use. I hope the hon. gentleman will repeal a law that is so obnoxious, and that would so restrain trade if it were put into operation. I would suggest that we repeal that part of section 18 which compels farmers to have barrels of a certain size in which to pack apples for domestic use. I was about to say, if I can make myself heard in the midst of the din here, caused by hon. gentlemen talking at the top of their voices, that I am sure the practice has shown that the present law is a dead letter, that it would restrain trade, and that it would be impossible to carry it out for the reasons that have been stated, so far as it relates to domestic sale or the sale of apples for home consumption. Farmers get all kinds of barrels; they get sugar barrels at a small cost, and the purchaser of the apples has the profit of the barrel and of the apples afterwards. The same applies to flour barrels. If this section were enforced there is not a farmer in the country who is not already liable. I am not going to question the propriety of enforcing section 18 so far as it relates to the export trade of Canada. There is a general consensus of opinion that we cannot take too much care in regard to our export trade, and that, although we may adopt statutory regulations that appear harsh, they are tending in the right direction. But it is not an answer to say that this has been the law. This is a bad and useless law, so far as it relates to domestic sale, that has never come into operation, and if it had there would have been such an outcry that it would have been repealed long ago. I have no doubt that this is one of those laws that have got upon the statute-book by accident. I appeal to the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) to say if that Act were carried out every farmer in the country would not be liable, because it is a law with which he cannot profitably conform. So, I hope the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue will consider this matter, and will be prepared to repeal that law so far as it relates to the home trade.

Mr. DAVID HENDERSON (Halton). Before the committee rises, I desire to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue to another matter which may be regulated under the Bill now before the committee. Last year, unfortunately, whether in this House or in the Senate, a serious blunder was committed in amending the Act in regard to the weight of a bushel of lime, in providing that a bushel of lime shall weigh eighty pounds. The hon. Minister tells me that he does not know how that word "eighty" came into the statute, whether it was in this House or in the Senate.

Mr. CLANCY.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). In the Senate, of course; that is an argument to reform the Senate.

Mr. HENDERSON. Whether it was in the Senate or in this House, it is altogether erroneous. The men handling that article cannot possibly comply with that provision which says that a bushel of lime shall weigh eighty pounds, because it does not weigh eighty pounds to the bushel. They are forced to adopt the expedient, in dealing in lime, of selling it by the hundredweight instead of selling it in the usual way, by the bushel, in order to avoid the penalty if they sold a bushel of lime weighing seventy pounds instead of eighty pounds. I understand the hon. Minister would be prepared, when we go into committee again, to propose the necessary amendment to substitute "seventy" for "eighty," so as to correct the blunder of a year ago. I have prepared an amendment, which I may read:

That section 16 of such Act be amended by striking out the word "eighty" in the sixth line thereof, and inserting in lieu thereof the word "seventy."

This would accomplish the whole purpose. If the hon. Minister would prefer leaving it until we go into committee again, I am satisfied, but I hope he will have an amendment prepared that will meet the case.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I hope my hon. friend (Mr. Henderson) will be prepared, when the Bill comes before the committee again, to show, in the most conclusive manner, that by doing so we will be doing an act which will meet with the general approval and with the requirements of the trade. I hope my hon. friend will be prepared to prove that it will be an advantage to adopt what he proposes.

Mr. HENDERSON. Personally, I am prepared to do that, because I know a good deal about the matter, being interested in the sale of thousands of cars in a year of this article. I know what I am talking about, and possibly I could not get any stronger evidence than what I could give myself. However, I have no doubt I can obtain information from the association which handles a large amount of this article in Ontario, probably three-fourths of the whole output, which will certify to the fact that seventy pounds is the proper weight of a bushel of lime, and that eighty pounds is altogether out of the question.

Mr. JOHN McMILLAN (South Huron). Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment in Bill (No. 122), which reads as follows:—

The Weights and Measures Act, chap. 104 of the Revised Statutes, is hereby amended by adding the following section thereto immediately after section 18:—

"18a. Unless otherwise specially agreed upon between the buyer and seller, eggs shall be sold by weight, and the weight equivalent to a dozen shall be one pound and one-half."

In a conversation that I had with the hon. Minister he thought it would be better for me to bring in a Bill and bring it before the House. The egg question is a growing question in Canada to-day. There has been a very great change in this trade during the last eight or nine years, as the following table will show :—

The market we at one time enjoyed for eggs in the United States, we never can have again because of the changed conditions of that market. I have here a statement which shows the price of eggs in the different years from 1891 to 1898, during the month of March, in Toronto as compared with the price in New York. That statement will show that the Toronto market is now as good as the New York market. It is as follows :—

	1891	1892	1893	1894	1895	1896	1897	1898
	c.
Toronto ..	16	14	17	16	15	16	11	10

During the year 1897 there were over one million dozen of eggs shipped from the United States to the British market, and I believe there was a larger quantity exported last year. Sir, the egg industry is an industry that requires to be fostered. That is why I have introduced the measure which stands in my name. Between the dealers in Canada and the dealers in the old country, there is often dispute in respect to what the standard of a dozen of eggs shall be. I met last spring a gentleman from England who is a large dealer in eggs, and he said it would be a great benefit if we had a law in Canada defining the standard dozen. Some people thought that we would need a law to define the standard as between buyers and sellers in Canada; but others thought that would be too rapid a change. I have adopted the principle in this Bill of making a regulation as between buyers and sellers living at distances apart in this country. This egg trade is a trade that can be fostered to a great extent, and I believe we should do something which would enable our farmers to improve the quality of their poultry, because we generally find that the large chickens lay the best eggs. If the provision in my Bill is adopted, it will encourage the farmers to raise a better quality of poultry which will produce a better quality of eggs. I believe the day is fast approaching when eggs will be sold by weight instead of by the dozen. It is unfair that a farmer who raises eggs seven of which will make a pound, should only receive the same price for a dozen as the farmer who sells at nine eggs to the pound. I believe that a dozen of eggs will weigh a pound and a half, and make that as the standard weight. I would ask the Minister of Inland Revenue (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) if he will incorporate this provision in his Bill to amend the Weights and Measures Act?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE.

I will be glad to consider it, and to take the opinion of the House on the matter. For my part, I must say that there is a great deal in what the hon. member (Mr. McMillan) states. But of course the Bill is in the hands of the House, and I hope the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) will be able to convince the House that his views are right.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I am sure the House will be pleased with the sympathetic smile with which the Minister turned to the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan), but he will be still more deeply interested in that smile had it not been for the manner in which the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) represented the Minister's position on this question. The hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) said he had consulted the Minister (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) as to whether this Bill should be introduced, and the Minister feeling that he might hatch trouble for himself by introducing the Bill, gently asked the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan) to introduce it. But the Minister now says that instead of adopting the measure he will give it his serious consideration. The Minister will, to use the suggestion of the ex-Finance Minister (Mr. Foster), incubate upon the question, and after a while lay his opinions before the House. It is not at all my suggestion that the Minister wished to sit upon the hon. member for South Huron (Mr. McMillan). I rose for the purpose of joining in the note of congratulation that was sounded by the hon. member for South Huron upon the wonderful extent which the egg trade between Canada and Great Britain has grown, and I could not help thinking, when the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) was expressing in jubilant notes the facts in regard to that trade, nor could I forget that during a previous debate in this House a gentleman occupying the most important place here, thought it an evidence of Canada's prosperity to mention the fact that the egg trade between Canada and Great Britain had grown to immense proportions. Nor, Sir, could I forget the jeers, and the sneers, and the laughter, and the general fun-making that was indulged in by the Liberal Opposition some time ago, when the present hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster), then Finance Minister, seriously proposed to this House that there was an opening for a splendid trade in eggs between Canada and Great Britain. And, Sir, the suggestion of that hon. gentleman (Mr. Foster) as to cultivating the English market, laid the foundation well indeed, of the trade of which these hon. gentlemen opposite boast at the present time.

Mr. McMILLAN. I wish to say that it was I myself who brought in this Bill. After I brought in the Bill I consulted the Minister of Inland Revenue in reference to it, but it was not at his suggestion it was brought in.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. That is the fact.

Mr. TAYLOR. Is it due to the National Policy that eggs commanded a higher price in Toronto than they did in New York during the several years the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMillan) quoted?

Mr. McMILLAN. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) has the National Policy on the brain, and I rather think it interferes with his sleep.

The committee rose and reported progress.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

I. C. R.—EXTENSION TO MONTREAL.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved second reading of Bill (No. 133) to authorize the acquisition by the Dominion of the Drummond County Railway.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I want to draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to the position that this question is in. We have had a long and somewhat animated discussion on this measure; but it is only one-half of the transaction. The hon. gentleman has resolutions on the paper, which you and he will agree with me have to be proceeded with before the second reading of this Bill takes place—resolutions in regard to the contract made with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, which are an essential part of this measure; and we would be in a very extraordinary position if this Bill should pass the House, and the House should then not agree to those resolutions which are an absolutely component part of the arrangement. Therefore, I would suggest to the hon. gentleman, in order to put this matter legitimately and fairly before the House, that the second reading of this Bill should not be proceeded with until the resolutions with reference to the other component part of the measure have been carried. When those resolutions have passed the House, we shall then be in a position to pass this Bill or any measure to carry out this portion of the arrangement.

Mr. MONTAGUE.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Mr. Speaker, I confess that it had not occurred to me that there was any serious objection from any point of view to our proceeding with some further stages in the matter of this Drummond County arrangement. It must be pretty well recognized on all sides, and I think my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition will himself concede, that there has been no attempt to impose any restriction whatever upon the discussion of the Grand Trunk feature of the arrangement during the progress of the resolutions in respect of the Drummond County Railway. There has been no objection to a reference to the existing contracts. Everybody has discussed both with the utmost freedom, and I think my hon. friend will not suggest that there has been any absence of information either as to one agreement or the other. Now, I take it that the present motion is largely a formal one. The House has already passed upon the principle of the measure in adopting the resolutions in committee, and these resolutions have been concurred in by the House; I am sure, therefore, that my hon. friend will not, on reflection, think it desirable to further delay the present motion. If my hon. friend particularly desired it, I would have no objection at all to consider whether the third reading of the Bill might not stand until we had the Grand Trunk matter before the Committee of the Whole. I think that would probably meet his views. One or the other must, of course, pass first; we cannot have them both passed together. They are old subjects, they have been pretty thoroughly discussed, and I would suggest to my hon. friend whether his object could not be as well accomplished by allowing the matter to remain in suspense after the second reading, and before the Bill gets its third reading.

Mr. GEO. E. FOSTER (York, N.B.) Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend will find that his acceptance of the suggestion will tend really to bring about what he desires, which is the passage of his measures as quickly as possible. I have felt all along, while this discussion has been going on, that we had really only half, and the least important half, of what is a very large and very important transaction. This is not a matter which we can enter into to-day and get rid of to-morrow. If we enter into it now, it remains with us for three generations. One may say that it is an absolute transaction which it will be almost impossible ever to have reviewed.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. That is the case with nearly all our legislation.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend himself will admit that he ought not, for his own sake, and the Government ought not as a Government, to press the matter without the fullest discussion and the fullest information; and I have felt all along, from the time the discussion commenced, that we were discussing simply one-half of the measure. We are here discussing the Drummond County road, which is a part of the transaction, and as it stands to-day the least important part. I have not the least hesitation in saying that I consider the proposed arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway far more objectionable in its present condition than the arrangement with regard to the Drummond County Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I must say that one would not have suspected that in the discussion in times past.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not know how my hon. friend would draw his inference, or how his suspicion would work out in his own mind; but that is what I feel now. Although my hon. friend has not acknowledged it to the House, I think he himself knows, and I imagine that none of his followers, and certainly no one on this side of the House, is unaware, that the Drummond County portion of the transaction is radically different from what it was before. There is no doubt about that. I do not think there is any use of hon. gentlemen opposite trying to blink it, or hide behind the assertion that they are only proposing to do now what they proposed in 1897. They are doing a very different thing in regard to the Drummond County Railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I think assertion on one side is really as good as assertion on the matter.

Mr. FOSTER. I take issue with my hon. friend as to that. The two assertions will be weighed by people outside, and they will conclude, not from a simple assertion itself, but from the facts and circumstances, and the reasons by which the two assertions are backed. However, that is my statement, and I have no hesitation in making it, that the Drummond County arrangement is radically different from what it was in 1897.

The PRIME MINISTER. Worse or better?

Mr. FOSTER. It will be a good deal as hon. gentlemen look at it. If they have, as they appear to have, very little regard for economy, very little regard for the taxpayer, perhaps they would say it did not matter much that in the present arrangement as compared with the arrangement of 1897, something more than half a million dollars had been saved in the Drummond County part of the transaction alone.

The PRIME MINISTER. Hear, hear.

Mr. FOSTER. If my hon. friends think that economy practised to the tune of about one-third of the purchase price of the Drummond County Railway, that one-third being over half a million dollars, is a betterment, as my hon. friend the right hon. leader of the Government evidently does, I would like to have my right hon. friend reconcile this position with the fact that in 1897 he backed up his Minister of Railways in a proposal to give $2,000,000 of the people's money for a piece of road which he is now getting for $1,600,000, with a large betterment put upon the road.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Not a bit.

Mr. FOSTER. With a larger betterment put upon the road under the present conditions than were put upon it under the previous conditions, because a larger amount of money had to be expended upon the road. Therefore, I come back to the original position, that the Drummond County portion of this whole matter is in a far different position from what it was in 1897.

When I come to the Grand Trunk Railway end of the arrangement, that is most objectionable. I have not heard a single business reason given by any gentleman on that side as to why, when you get to Ste. Rosalie and want to go to the city of Montreal, you should pay the immense sums you are to pay in order to get there, and then pay your share of maintenance and user besides. Absolutely no business reason has been given; and I venture to say you cannot take any class of business men in any city of the Dominion who would consent to put that bald proposition as a business proposition. The arguments used on this side were arguments addressed to the good business sense of the House. The Minister of Railways has not answered, neither has any man on that side answered or even attempted to answer them. Why, for instance, when my hon. friend is at Ste. Rosalie, within some thirty miles of Montreal, does he propose to give $37,500 per year for the simple right to travel along the tracks of the Grand Trunk Railway? What reason in the world was there why the Minister of Railways, when he made a fair valuation—we will say, for argument's sake—of the worth of the thing, should take Canada's credit and say: True, Canada stands on the basis of credit on the money markets of the world of 2½ per cent, but when we gave you to the last penny—yes, and far more than what we get is worth—instead of paying you on that basis, we pay you as though Canada could not get money at less than 5 per cent per annum? What right had the Minister of Railways to mulct the Dominion for 999 years into paying on what, for argument's sake, we might take as a fair valuation, 5 per cent per annum, to the Grand Trunk Railway. There was no reason, and the very men who promised to do that went to London and got three millions for the needs of this country at 2½ per cent, all costs and charges taken in.

An hon. MEMBER. Oh, no.

Mr. FOSTER. The Solicitor General says not.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). I beg your pardon.

Mr. FOSTER. Then, the man next to him.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Excuse me, the "gentleman" next to him says no.

Mr. FOSTER. I suppose we will have to take the hon. gentleman's assertion.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I should think—

Mr. FOSTER. If this irresponsible gentleman is going to break into a business argument, I will have to ask you, Mr. Speaker, for your protection.

Mr. DOMVILLE. What is the business argument?

Mr. FOSTER. I am addressing myself to a gentleman who has not shown any great capacity as a business man, but I prefer addressing myself to him than to the hon. gentleman who has interrupted me.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have not the business head you have, and would not take it as a gift.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend has a better appreciation of his powers now than perhaps he had when he first came to the House, but I think he would conform better to the rules of the House and the decency of debate, if, when I am attempting to express my ideas, he would not keep muttering or murmuring in reply. If he has anything to say, let him stand on his feet and say it, and I shall give place to him for a time.

Mr. DOMVILLE. Then sit down.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend (Mr. Blair) says he knows he has not the ability some others in this House have.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I did not say that, although I might have.

Mr. FOSTER. What did my hon. friend say?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If you do not remember, I am not going to furnish you with my recollection.

Mr. FOSTER. My hon. friend is very inconsiderate. When I ask him to assist me as best he can, he abruptly refuses to give me any aid at all. However, all we can do is our duty, and I must still try and address a business argument to my hon. friend opposite.

Mr. FOSTER.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Is my hon. friend speaking on the second reading?

An hon. MEMBER. He does not know.

Mr. FOSTER. I am trying to address an argument to this House to show why we should take the most important part of the measure and discuss it, and bring it 'pari passu' with the other, or at least before we pass the other out of the scope of the House.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If the leader of the Opposition, who made the appeal, is not satisfied with the suggestion I made, I have no desire to press the matter unduly. I thought I had made a suggestion that would be accepted; but if not accepted, I am willing that the second reading should stand until the other question is completed.

Mr. FOSTER. As my hon. friend has acceded to that, and as no doubt the leader of the Opposition will speak on the subject, I shall not continue my remarks further, except to point out some things which I think we ought to have. I think we ought to have the original of the Grand Trunk contract laid on the Table and the plans which show the connections for which we are paying, and paying heavily. Up to this period in the debate, we have not had a single plan of the original contract in either of these cases, and I think that is unprecedented when discussing a matter involving nearly $7,000,000 of a permanent addition to the burdens of the country. We ought to have those before us, so that we may look into them before being called on to pass the measure. Hon. gentlemen opposite may be strong, but they should not, on account of their strength, refuse us all the information we need.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am extremely glad the Minister of Railways has consented to the suggestion made, and made without the slightest idea of obstructing progress or the business of the House. I thought it really conduced to the progress and would place everything in a much more regular shape, as the two things must go 'pari passu.' It is better for another reason. I quite admit that the discussion has almost entirely covered that branch of the question as well as the resolutions passed. Having had the discussion, we would proceed much more rapidly and in a businesslike way by having the resolutions brought forward, carried, and then taking the second reading.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. Perhaps I might be allowed to refer to the request of the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Foster). I understood him to say that the original of the contract with the Grand Trunk Railway should be brought down. Now, I do not understand why the hon. gentleman should make such a request. It cannot be possible that hon. gentlemen would suppose that we would bring as a copy of that document something that is not a copy. Nor do I think that the verification of the execution of that document can be a matter of the slightest moment to hon. gentlemen opposite. I, therefore, am unable to see why such a request is made. I do feel that it is an entirely unusual course to adopt in Parliament. But yet so anxious am I to avoid the possibility of being thought to withhold any document that any hon. gentleman wants to see, that I will be content to do this—I do not suppose that every gentleman on the other side of the House wishes to have this original document in his hands; I suppose that if the hon. gentlemen who are immediately in front of me are shown the original document and have an opportunity of examining it, that will be sufficient. They will return it to me so that I can restore it to the files and the record room and a copy will suffice to be laid on the Table.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Certainly..

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will bring the original paper and show them to the two gentlemen opposite, and to any other gentlemen who wish to see them.

Mr. FOSTER. The usual course, I may say, would be to bring down the originals—we do not want to purloin them—and lay them on the Table so that we can look at them.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is not usual to bring the original document—

Mr. FOSTER. We fought that question out here before, and we got the original document, what happened? My hon. friend knows quite well. He thought there was no mistake then; he was positive that the copy shown us was correct, and it was not until he got the original and brought it down that we found he was mistaken and that the copy we were discussing was not a true copy. Now, it has always been usual, for the sake of certainty—it is usual and it is always best—that the original document itself should be where it may be seen. After that, a copy may be used for all practical purposes of the session. I would recall that incident to my hon. friend's attention, and I would remind him of the debate we had and the statement made by probably the best parliamentarian in the House and the oldest, the present Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), who without any grudging or denial said we had a right to these documents.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. He did not say that. It is not the usual course.

Mr. FOSTER. I think that when my hon. friend thinks it over he will remember that that is what the hon. Minister said. At any rate the "Hansard" will show.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I do remember what he said.

Mr. HAGGART. I hope the hon. Minister (Mr. Blair) will bring down all the information I asked for which he promised before the second reading of the Bill.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I have already given the hon. gentleman (Mr. Haggart) one assurance. I do not suppose he wants another; that will not strengthen it.

Mr. HAGGART. No; but the hon. gentleman moved the second reading, and I went to the Clerk and found that there was not a single document with him that I required.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. You did not ask to have them here before the second reading. I could not get the plans you asked for here for several days.

Motion for second reading withdrawn.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS moved that the Bill be placed on the Orders for second reading to-morrow.

Motion agreed to.

CONSOLIDATION OF ACTS—QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSION.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved the second reading of Bill (No. 91) to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would be glad if the Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) would give a brief explanation of what his proposition is.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The Bill is a consolidation of the Acts now in force relating to the Quebec Harbour Commission.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Perhaps it would be a good plan, if this is only a Bill to consolidate, if it is a long Bill to go into committee and the Solicitor General can then explain what clauses have been changed.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I have made a brief synopsis which I may read, if hon. members of the House will bear with me, showing in brief the purport and object of consolidation and showing the nature and object of the one amendment that is made by this Bill in the existing law. This I can probably more conveniently do in committee.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into committee on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I presume, Mr. Chairman, that it is unnecessary for me to trace the history of the Quebec Harbour Commission from 1805 when the Trinity House of Quebec was established. For the purpose of this committee, it will be sufficient if I give a synopsis of the Bill introduced and point out the one important respect in which it is an amendment of the existing law. I begin with the definitions in the Bill. The port of Quebec and the Harbour of Quebec have been more accurately defined than in the existing Act. The composition of the corporation, which is next dealt with, remains unaltered. Various provisions respecting the election of commissioners have been amended so as to make the elections less costly. Then, as to officers and employees provision is made for allowing the corporation to remunerate the commissioners, their powers to do so being doubtful. They have exercised these powers for many years, however. Provision is made, as in the case of the Montreal Harbour Acts, to allow the pilotage powers and the judicial powers to be delegated to the three commissioners. Under the present law the whole board deals with all matters affecting the pilots. Under this Bill it will be optional for the commission to delegate its powers in this respect to three commissioners.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That is new.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes. As to the officers, the only change is that at present the Governor General has the approval of the appointment of the secretary-treasurer, and this appointment is now left entirely to the commissioners. Then as to general powers. The powers of the corporation to extend and improve the harbour and its accommodations are defined to include the construction of docks, &c., warehouses and elevators, and it is given power to own and operate all kinds of machinery and for the purpose of increasing the usefulness of the harbour or facilitating traffic therein. It is also given power to load and unload vehicles and to receive and store goods, and for these purposes to own and acquire warehouses, &c., and to contract for the exercise of such powers on its behalf. It is also given power to construct lines of railway on its property and to enter into agreements with railway companies as to the operating of these lines and the facilitating of traffic. The next is as to pilotage, and this is of a good deal of importance to persons interested in the navigation of the St. Lawrence. All the laws on this subject which, in the old Act, were mixed up with the powers of the Harbour Commission, I have put in a Pilotage Act which deals with all matters affecting pilots. This is eliminated from this Bill. There is a material change effected in that respect. Under the Pilotage Act the commissioners will fix the standard for qualification for pilots, instead of its being fixed by the Act 12th Victoria, chap. 114. In view of the changes that have taken place in the navigation of the St. Lawrence, it is almost intolerable that for the qualification of pilots, we should still have to appeal to an Act passed so long ago as 12 Victoria. One can scarcely imagine how that has been allowed to continue to the present day.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

By-laws.

As to the amendments under the powers to make by-laws, the following are the principal ones :—

Obstructions to Navigation.

The prevention and removal of these within the harbour of Quebec is left to the commissioners to regulate by by-law, but so as not to interfere with the powers of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, nor with the provisions of "The Wrecks and Salvage Act."

Disposal of Property Found.

The present complicated and obscure provisions of law contained in several statutes are now to be regulated by by-law.

Control of Ice in Quebec Harbour.

Following out chap. 77 of 1885, the commissioners are given full control over the ice.

Explosives.

The regulation and control of the landing and shipping of gunpowder is now extended to all explosives and inflammable substances, and made to cover the storage thereof, and all precautions are to be observed.

Use of Whistles, Bells, &c.

Powers are given to regulate by by-law all apparatus for signalling by sound.

Machinery.

Powers are given to regulate all machinery and appliances used for loading and unloading vessels, to regulate the railway traffic on the wharfs, to maintain order and prevent theft, to enforce the lawful direction of the officers of the corporation.

Reverting to matters to be regulated directly by the Act, and not by by-law, the following may be noted :—

Harbour Rates.

Instead of the present statutory tariff, which is not easily kept adapted to the rapidly changing circumstances of modern commerce, provision is made, as in the case of the Montreal Harbour, that the corporation may levy such harbour rates as are approved of by the Governor in Council.

These are the financial clauses, to which I beg to draw the attention of my hon. friends opposite. They have been submitted to the Deputy Minister of Finance and I have his approval of these clauses.

Advances by the Government.

No change has been made from the provisions of the present Acts. The balance which the Governor in Council may arrange and advance to the corporation has been stated in the Bill. The figures, as furnished by the Department of Finance, are $362,197.58.

Bond-issuing Powers.

There is no change here, the provisions of the present Act being merely consolidated and made to apply to the balance now issuable under 61 Vic., chap. 48, viz., $200,000.

Special Judicial Powers.

The corporation now exercises the special judicial jurisdiction of the Trinity House of Quebec. As in the case of the Montreal Harbour Acts, the antiquated, cumbrous and defective procedure sections of 12 Vic., c. 114, are replaced by the procedure under part 58 of the "Criminal Code."

Annual Report.

The time for furnishing this is extended from seven days to twenty-one days after January 1st.

On section 4,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There are two changes here which I ought to explain. In the paragraphs "b," "c" and "d," the word "vessel" has been extended so as to include dredge, elevator and scows. We have also defined the word "raft".

On section 5,

Mr. FOSTER. How many miles is that, each way?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. About 138, from the parish of Deschambault to the island of St. Barnabé.

Mr. CASGRAIN. It is more than that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Under the old definition, it was absolutely impossible to ascertain where the dividing line was between the port of Montreal and the port of Quebec, and we have here defined it to start from the Roman Catholic church in the parish of Deschambault, in the county of Portneuf.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Does the hon. gentleman think that a line from the Roman Catholic church, in the parish of Deschambault, is a good definition? The site of the church may be changed; it may burn down in a few years, and a new one may be built somewhere else.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not think we can take a better landmark than that. If my hon. friend can suggest any landmark of a more permanent character, I would like him to do so. I think, in the way of a landmark, it will be impossible to get anything better than this suggestion.

Mr. FOSTER. All right; so long as it is there.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, but the site remains.

Mr. IVES. What will be the effect of extending the harbour so far down the river?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman will find that the harbour is very much restricted in the next clause.

On section 6,

Mr. IVES. Is there any change in the limits of the harbour?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is no change except that it is more accurately defined. There is absolutely no extension of the limits of the harbour, but this is the description of the harbour which has been furnished by the Harbour Commissioners, and which we think is more correct than the description under the old statute. There is a change I would like to make in paragraph "a". With the permission of the committee, I would like to strike out the following words after the word "immovables":—"situate within the limits of the city of Quebec, as defined for municipal purposes by the third and fourth sections of the Act of the former province of Canada, 29th Victoria (1865), chapter 57." The intention is to strike this out, so as to make the definition cover the wharfs as far as the Island of Orleans.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 7,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The words "of the corporation," in the 27th line, should be struck out.

Section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 8, subsection 2,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is a clause which has been suggested by the Montreal Bill. When their Bill was consolidated in 1894, the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal thought it was wise to have such a clause, and we have incorporated it in this Bill.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Why do you not put in here a provision for the resignation of other members of the board? It is thought fit to put a provision in for the resignation of elected members of the board; why not extend it to those appointed by the Government?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is not necessary; the appointment is by the Governor in Council. It is necessary that he should notify his resignation to the body to which he is elected, but in the case suggested, he is not elected. The very moment he ceases to be commissioner, he notifies his resignation to the Governor in Council, and the Governor in Council appoints his successor.

On section 9, subsection 4,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Subsection 4 is new, though I do not know that it is of very great importance.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Does this shorten the term of those who are elected now?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No. There is absolutely no alteration in the clause, except in subsection 4.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I understand the hon. gentleman to say, that those elected by the shipping interests and the Board of Trade will not have their terms of office shortened by this section.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No; that is quite right.

On section 10,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is a change in subsection 3 to extend the time for filling a vacancy from fourteen days, which the old law provided, to thirty days.

On section 12, subsection 2,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This is new, providing for the giving of notice of a meeting, and I think it is a very wise provision.

Mr. CASGRAIN. How is the meeting convened now?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is convened by the secretary without notice.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There was surely some provision, for I used to see the advertisement in the newspapers of Quebec. However, it is a good provision, if it did not exist before.

On subsection 4,

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is there any change in this?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes. The words "payable by and" are the words inserted.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What is the reason of the change? You want people to vote who are not strictly qualified?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No, it is to provide that the person voting must not only have paid, but be a member of the shipping interest, and thus be a person interested.

Mr. FOSTER. I cannot see the reason for putting in "payable by." You are fixing the qualification of a voter, and you say that a man shall have a vote if he pays dues. You do not intend to give him a vote unless he has paid dues, do you?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No.

Mr. FOSTER. Well, what is the use of also saying "payable by"? Do you suppose that anybody would pay harbour dues for the sake of getting a vote?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That is all—just to cover that point.

Mr. FOSTER. How could he pay the dues if he was not entitled to pay? Who would take them if they were not due? Has any officer of the Government a right to take John Jones's money unless he is a member of the shipping interest of Quebec?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). It is only put in from an abundance of caution.

Mr. CASGRAIN.

Mr. FOSTER. But it seems that the abundance of caution is absurd.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Are there any instances in which a man who was not a member of the shipping interest paid dues and thereby became a voter?

Mr. DOBELL. I have never heard of one yet.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Then, what is the use of putting it in?

Mr. DOBELL. It is simply a legal precaution suggested by our legal adviser, and the hon. member should be able to appreciate why that is done.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If I were able to appreciate it, the Solicitor General should be much more able.

Mr. FOSTER. I think I shall have to take advantage of the remarks of my hon. friend the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, to say that this is probably a precaution put in by a resident of the city of Quebec who knows the peculiarities of the city of Quebec—such peculiarities as were referred to in Committee of Supply when my hon. friend tried to excuse the loose way of getting supplies for the city of Quebec when the strict rule was applied to other places by saying "Quebec is Quebec," you know.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I borrowed the remark from you or from somebody else on the other side. Do not give me credit for that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am quite willing to omit the words "payable by and." I do not think they can have any effect. Perhaps I ought to state to my hon. friend (Mr. Foster), that these clauses are not peculiar to this Bill. These two clauses are taken out of the Montreal Bill, so that it must not be said that there is anything peculiar to Quebec so far as this matter is concerned; that is for the benefit of all concerned.

On section 13,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We change that, by extending the date from fourteen days after the occurrence of the vacancy, to one month after the last date for holding the election. Under the present Act the Governor in Council has power to appoint a new commissioner in the place of an elected member, whereas under this Bill we have transferred that power back to the electing body.

On section 14,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The members of the Trinity House in Quebec were required to take an oath before entering on their duties, and the Harbour Commissioners were also required to take the oath for the performance of the duties formerly filled by the late Trinity House. The change in this section is to make the oath applicable to all.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is no provision as to the officer before whom this oath is to be taken.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This clause is taken exactly from the old Act.

On section 15,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is a change in this clause. The corporation has at the present time undoubtedly the right to remunerate the chairman of the board, and they undoubtedly have the right to remunerate the Superintendent of Pilots who sits as a member of the board. They have gone on paying allowances to the different members of the board for each sitting, and it has been considered they had the power to do so under the law. Some doubt has arisen as to that, and in order to eliminate the doubt the section is drawn as it is now.

Mr. FOSTER. What has the chairman heretofore been paid?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Two thousand dollars a year, I think.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This provision involves a question that comes up in connection with the various pilot boards.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. One of the members of the Quebec Harbour Board tells me that although they have the power to pay a salary not exceeding $2,000 to the chairman, at the present time, he does not accept more than $1,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As to the question of legality in connection with this remuneration, it has come up in connection with other pilot boards in the various provinces, and I do not think any legislation such as this has been passed to clear the matter up. In other boards they pay themselves what they call expenses, which is practically a remuneration.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That has been stopped.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries says that has been stopped, but if this provision in the Bill be correct, and I am in favour of it myself, it should be extended to the similar bodies throughout the country—though not in this Bill, of course.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. That was the old Trinity House practice, and when the Harbour Commission of Quebec superseded the Trinity House, and took over the powers and responsibilities of it, they took over also the privilege of paying themselves, and the question arose whether they had the power to do that. At any rate I thought it better to remove any doubt in this Bill.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I call the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the fact that it is worth looking into that question, in view of the general consensus of opinion here that this is a proper provision, and that these men who give their time to the consideration of important questions should be paid for it.

Mr. ELLIS. The only question now is as to whether there is any limit to the amount which the commissioners may vote themselves.

Mr. FOSTER. You fix the maximum limit to be paid to the chairman, but you do not apparently fix any limit to the amount which the commissioners may vote themselves.

Mr. DOBELL. I can speak for the practice. It has never exceeded $5 a sitting, and we have one sitting a week. Sometimes, but very seldom, we may have two sittings.

Mr. FOSTER. But that does not meet the objection which I have raised. If there is no limit fixed they might vote themselves an exorbitant salary.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Section 27 provides that none of these by-laws shall become effective until approved by the Governor in Council.

On section 16,

Mr. CASGRAIN. There are some very important changes in this clause. Under it the powers of the corporation, as pilotage authority, may be delegated to any three commissioners. Formerly, I believe, the commission sat as a full court. Again, by subsection 3, the judicial powers of the corporation may be delegated to any three commissioners, exclusive of the chairman of the corporation of pilots for and below the harbour of Quebec. My learned friend knows that the Quebec Harbour Commission is the judicial authority which tries the pilots on charges of dereliction of duty or in the case of accidents. I think it would be a mistake to limit the number of the commissioners for the trial of such cases to three. I do not wish to cast any reflection upon the present commissioners, especially my hon. friend from Quebec West (Mr. Dobell); but it must be admitted that there are gentlemen on the board, as there always have been, who probably know no more about navigation than I do, and that is not much. For instance, if the judicial power were delegated to Mr. Laliberté, the chairman, who is a furrier, and to Mr. Rioux, who is a grocer, and another gentleman, who is a merchant in St. Roch or the lower town, and who cannot know much about navigation, it would hardly be contended that they would constitute a board qualified to try the very difficult and important questions that might arise in connection with accidents. The decisions which these gentlemen might render might be of the greatest importance to the pilots concerned. A pilot might be deprived of his branch for ever, and of his means of livelihood. It, therefore, seems to me that, as this tribunal is vested with very great powers, we ought not to decrease its numbers. Amongst other powers, this board has the power of deciding whether or not a pilot shall continue to exercise his functions, which is, of course, a very important question to the pilot, and, if this board should not do its duty properly—and we must suppose that sometimes such a case may occur—this man may be deprived of his means of earning a livelihood. I would like the hon. Solicitor General, or the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), to tell us what are the reasons why this power is given the Harbour Commissioners to delegate their judicial authority to three members.

Mr. DOBELL. These pilot cases are very lengthy, and take up a great deal of time, and this section only provides that the judicial powers of the corporation may be delegated to any three commissioners. It thus leaves it optional with the commission to try any case with a full board or delegate its power to three. There are generally three members of the commission competent to try such cases, and, inasmuch as the chairman of the pilot board is also one of the judges, I do not think that the apprehensions of my hon. friend are well founded.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The only reason the hon. gentleman gives for the change is that these cases take up too much time, and, therefore, all the commissioners should not be called on to try them. But, when any question affecting trade or navigation comes before the board, and in which the commissioners are interested as business men, they do not fail to attend. My hon. friend should take into consideration the fact that the trial of a pilot is of even greater interest to the pilot concerned than questions affecting business interests are to the members of the board. If five members of the board are required to decide in the case of any question affecting the shipping interest and trade, a fortiori, the same number should be required to try a case much more vital to the pilot concerned. I would suggest that five should be the quorum, instead of three.

Mr. DOBELL. I might point to the Railway Committee of the Privy Council as an analogous case. That committee tries most important questions, and yet three members of it are considered sufficient. It must be remembered that there are sometimes two or three cases affecting pilots before the commission in the course of a week, which take up a great deal of time. It seems to me that three members of the board, with the chairman of the corporation of pilots, ought to be ample for the trial of such cases.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I believe that the quorum of the Railway Committee is seven, and not three, and I have never seen only three sit on a case, except by consent. We must also bear in mind that the Railway Committee is composed of members of the Cabinet, the leaders of Parliament, who are supposed to be most versed in all the questions that come up before that committee. Whereas, upon this harbour board, there are some gentlemen who know nothing about navigation, whose only navigation consists in crossing between Quebec and Lévis. Some of them, I believe, cannot cross between a United States port and Liverpool just now, but, of course, that does not affect the question we are discussing. I would again call attention to the great difference, as regards qualifications, between the gentlemen on the Railway Committee and the gentlemen on the harbour commission. There is also the extreme importance it is to the pilots to have gentlemen who, if not trained judicially, are at least qualified from another standpoint, that is, from their knowledge of ships and navigation. And if it is within the power of the commission to appoint three of their number, we may have men there trying pilots, who may be deprived by the decisions given of the means of earning their livelihood, who certainly are not competent to deal with such cases. Another objection is that the third clause says that power may be delegated to three commissioners, but the chairman of the corporation of pilots shall be a member of the board also. That would be four members of the board. Suppose then you have the board evenly divided. That is an inconvenience. Now, it seems to me, in view of all these questions and of the fact that no reason has been given except the saving of time, that the law should be allowed to stand as it is to-day.

Mr. DOBELL. This clause has probably been copied, like many others from the laws relating to pilots in the harbour of Montreal. I do not regard it as a matter of great importance.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If the hon. gentleman represented a constituency in which there were about 100 pilots, he would see great importance in it. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Dobell) knows that there is safety in numbers sometimes. I would rather go before a tribunal composed of five men than before one composed of three. I would rather go before a jury of twelve than a jury of six.

Mr. FRANCOIS ARTHUR MARCOTTE (Champlain). (Translation.) Mr. Chairman, I think this is a very important question, and do not see why the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) should not give it the attention it deserves. The interests of an important class of the community are at stake here. In the case of accidents, the pilots are tried by men who know nothing about pilotage. Now, in my opinion, five members of the board would not be too ample for the trial of these cases. The pilots have already suffered hardships; the judgments rendered by the commissioners have not always proved satisfactory to the pilots. That is the reason why I am in favour of the proposition of the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), who does not want to limit the number of the commissioners for the trial of such cases to three, but proposes that five should be the quorum.

Mr. FOSTER. I think it may be well to consider whether three is not too small a number out of nine. If the commissioners happen to get their best qualified men, probably the three men would be quite as efficient as five men, some of whom were not very well up in the subject. But there is another point of view which might be taken into consideration, and that is the satisfaction which a board like that ought to give to the pilots themselves in the adjudication of their grievances and difficulties. It seems to me that the great and important body of men who may have to come before this tribunal would feel a greater confidence, would feel that they were more considered and that their interests would be better guarded if they could appeal to five out of a commission of nine, instead of three. I do not see that this is any hardship upon the commissioners. You are paying your commissioners now, and they will, no doubt, get a fair salary in remuneration for the trouble they take. The commissioners may be looked to to see to that. It is different from taking a fee: it is both a remuneration for their services and a claim upon their services; and I think it is not too much to ask that five should be upon this board.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I can quite understand how my hon. friend from Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain) regards this matter. As to the cases tried before this board, I must confess that I have had some experience of cases before the harbour board, and have always thought it an anomaly—I say this with due deference to the legal attainments of my hon. friend from Quebec West (Mr. Dobell)—that these trials should take place before the commissioners when we have the Admiralty Court, to which, it seems to me, these cases could be better referred. Regarding it from the abstract legal standpoint, it seems to me that we should have a much more competent tribunal if these cases were referred to the admiralty judge, who would have acting with him as assessors, the head of the corporation of pilots and a delegate of the harbour board to assist him with their technical knowledge. Unfortunately, the practice has been contrary to that, and these important cases have been tried before the harbour board. This law provides that in certain cases which are left entirely to the discretion of the board, they may delegate the exercise of their judicial powers to three members of the board, which three members of the board must be assisted by the president of the Corporation of Pilots. There is a difference with reference to the pilotage authority and the judicial power. The hon. member for Montmorency pointed out a moment ago that there would be four members including the head of the pilot board.

Mr. FOSTER. Then you only need to give one more.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Now, let us see what has been the practice and experience of the past. In Montreal, for instance, the harbour board may delegate their powers to three members of the board. That law was passed in 1894, and it has been found to operate beneficially, that is to say, it saves the time of the members of the harbour board and it does not appear that any complaint has been made against the law. And so, we shall have the same powers to delegate to three members of the board in Quebec, and they must sit with the head of the corporation of pilots. Thus you have a security, so far as the pilots are concerned.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The president of the pilots is always considered the advocate of the pilots, and, unfortunately, his authority with the board does not go very far.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He has a vote.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Yes, but that is all. My experience is that he is hardly ever listened to. And though I may have a good deal of confidence in the harbour board, whenever a pilot comes before the harbour board he is, from the moment he is accused, considered guilty, and has to prove his innocence. Contrary to the ordinary rule of British law, that a man is considered innocent until he is proved guilty, the pilot is considered guilty and has to clear himself. I would ask my hon. friend (Mr. Fitzpatrick) as a favour, to name the members of the board. I know Mr. Laliberte, Mr. Rioux, the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), Mr. Sharples, Mr. Arcand, Mr. Chabot—

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. All, with two exceptions, perfectly conversant with this work.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not know about that. I do not know that Mr. Chabot and Mr. Arcand are.

Mr. DOBELL. No one can be more conversant with these affairs than Mr. Chabot.

Mr. CASGRAIN. How can he be so conversant with these affairs? He was manager of the Quebec and Lévis Ferry Company, and at another time he was manager of the St. Lawrence Navigation Company. He was also, at one time, manager of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company. But he was manager of the business affairs of the company and did not navigate the boats.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. He owned vessels.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Take, for instance, my hon. friend from Quebec West (Mr. Dobell); he is more often in Ottawa than in Quebec. Mr. Macpherson is absent from Quebec very often, so that in a great many instances you will have a court trying these pilots composed of only Messrs. Laliberté, Rioux and Chabot. It seems to me that if the quorum of the harbour board is fixed at five for the ordinary administration of the affairs of the corporation, for the simple routine work, a quorum for a judicial trial of this kind should also be five. Why bring it down to three? Vast powers are conferred upon this board, they may deprive a pilot of his branch for ever. The young man, for instance, of twenty-five or thirty years of age who has passed nine or ten years in apprenticeship, who begins his life as a pilot, and through accident, when he is twenty-six or twenty-seven, may find himself deprived of his branch for ever, and thus nine or twelve years are totally lost to him. It seems to me this is a far more important question than the details of the administration of the Quebec Harbour Trust, where a quorum of five is required. The only reason given for reducing the quorum to three is the convenience of the commissioners; we are told they are very busy. If they are too busy, they should not accept the position. How many trials do you suppose have taken place during the last year, for instance? I venture to say not more than ten. In the preceding years, when I was in Quebec, there were not ten a year. I say that on so important a question as this the inconvenience of the commissioners should not be a reason for reducing the quorum from five to three. I appeal to the sense of justice in this matter of my hon. friend. These men are a very respectable set of men, there is no finer set of men in the country than the pilots below the harbour of Quebec. I would ask my hon. friend the Solicitor General to assist me in prevailing upon the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell) to ask the commissioners to endure the inconvenience which may be caused to them by sitting five or six times or even ten times, during the season of navigation.

Mr. DOBELL. I would call my hon. friend's attention to this fact, that these trials may take place within only forty-eight hours' notice. The captain and the pilot must be on hand for the trial within forty-eight hours' notice. It would be difficult to get five gentlemen together within forty-eight hours to devote four, or five, or six hours, to the trial of a pilot. If three men are able to try a case in Montreal, I claim, that three Quebecers are equally able to try a case in Quebec.

Mr. CASGRAIN.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The questions coming up in Quebec are much more important than the questions that come before the Montreal Harbour Commissioners.

Mr. DOBELL. The quorum is not limited to three men, it only says that three "may" act. If the case is of great importance, you will find that every man will be present who can possibly do so, and will devote all the time that is required.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wish to point out to the Solicitor General that clause 2 declares that the powers of the corporation as a pilotage authority may be delegated to three certain commissioners, and that under clause 3 the judicial powers of the corporation may be delegated to a different class. Do not the powers of the corporation as a pilotage authority include their judicial powers? If so, it seems to me you have some conflict between subsection 2 and subsection 3. Under subsection 2, you include judicial powers which may be delegated to a different class of persons from those to whom they are delegated, or may be delegated under subsection 3. There is another thing I would like to point out with regard to clause 3. The meaning which the Solicitor General puts upon it is one which I certainly did not see when I read it. He says he means to include the chairman of the corporation of pilots with the commissioners to whom judicial power is delegated. Well, the word "exclusively" does not seem to be a very apt word for that purpose. I think we should have some such expression as "together with."

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think the object of the clause was, on the contrary, to exclude him.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I accept the view of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is the view which I have endeavoured to express. Now, the powers of the corporation as a pilotage authority include their judicial powers.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. They include a great deal more.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But you see the powers of the corporation as a pilotage authority may be delegated to a certain class of persons under subsection 2. Then, you say the judicial powers which are included in what you have already delegated, may be delegated to another class of persons. It seems to me that the two clauses conflict with each other.

Mr. DOBELL. I think the first clause merely applies to the trial of pilots as to their efficiency, their age, capabilities, &c.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Under the heading of "pilotage authority" you say the pilotage authority for the harbour of Quebec shall be the Harbour Commissioners. Then, the powers are given, amongst others, examining powers as to their qualification. The words "pilotage authority" here would seem to include powers which are given in paragraph 3.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. The hon. gentleman knows that the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal are frequently called upon to exercise wide judicial powers, independently altogether of their powers as pilotage authorities. They are called upon at times to deal with persons for infractions of the by-laws, for instance, to send a man to jail for trespassing on the wharfs. If the hon. gentleman will refer to that part of the Act under the heading "pilotage authority," he will see that the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Borden) and myself are right in this.

Mr. DOBELL. That applied to the duties executed years ago by the Trinity House.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I know very well what my hon. friend means, what he intends to convey to the House, but our contention is that those clauses, as drafted, do not have the meaning he wishes to convey, because the powers of the pilotage authority under the old statute are all those powers which were given to the Harbour Commissioners, the examination of pilots and the exercise of judicial powers also. The second subsection says that the powers of the corporation generally and the third subsection that the judicial powers of the corporation may be delegated to any three commissioners exclusively. What judicial powers? In other words, what is the distinction between the powers conferred by this second clause and powers conferred by the third clause.

Mr. DOBELL. There is a wide distinction. In the one case the powers of the corporation are the powers of a pilotage authority which may be delegated to these commissioners. Then in subsection 3 the judicial powers of the corporation, not of the pilots, may also be delegated to any three commissioners. The two are quite distinct and cover quite different cases.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Now we have an example of the fact that there are harbour commissioners, who, although they are well disposed, sometimes do not understand points of law which are raised before their august presence. Of course the hon. Solicitor General is responsible for the wording of the section, and his attention has been called to the matter. By reading the Act he will find that we are right. However, I will go back to the other point in regard to the court that is to try the pilots. Is the court to be composed of four members? We have only asked for one more member. There are nine members altogether; we are only asking for one more on the committee who will try the pilots. Another grave objection to this is that it is a shifting board. Any three members of the commission may be appointed for one trial and any three for another trial. That is another objection which it would be well to solve before we leave it. The board is composed now of four members. All we ask for is another member.

Mr. DOBELL. When clause 41 is reached my hon. friend will get a fuller explanation. Clause 41 describes exactly what is meant by subsection 3.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think it would be well if the hon. Solicitor General would pass this clause over—there are a great many others—because the points raised are technical, and it is difficult for the Solicitor General to give his attention, at the moment, to a clause like that. While I think the point is well taken and that the hon. Solicitor General, upon consideration, will change subsections 2 and 3, the members of the committee are so far apart that perhaps it would be well to let them stand and take up other clauses.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I am quite willing to do that. But I will say that there is a broad distinction between the powers exercised by the commissioners acting as a pilotage authority and exercising judicial powers. As a pilotage authority they are called upon to exercise certain duties and rights in so far as the Pilotage Act is concerned. The judicial authority which they are called upon to exercise involves the exercise of much larger and entirely different powers. When you come to see the section which has reference to the exercise of judicial powers you will see that the judicial powers exercised under this Pilotage Act are a small proportion of the powers they are called upon to discharge. I am quite willing that we should go through the Bill, because I am satisfied that when hon. members have become familiar with all the details and when they come back to this clause they will be willing to allow it to go in its present wording. I have a grave objection, after a Bill has been drafted by an expert draughtsman to change its phraseology. I think that members of this House are about as well able to draft a Bill as to paint a picture.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That was my reason for suggesting to the Solicitor General the propriety of allowing this clause to stand so that he might reconsider it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I understand from the hon. Solicitor General that this section was copied from the Montreal Act which has been in force since 1894, and which confers the same powers on the Montreal Harbour Board that it is proposed to confer upon the Quebec Harbour Board. My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) is concerned that the pilots shall get justice. I do not think that he need concern himself about that, because I never knew a case in which a pilot has been punished.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Oh, yes, there are.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Pilots do not get punished; the difficulty is to get a conviction at all. If you have a quorum of the whole board, and if they are convicted by the board the Court of Queen's Bench will review the whole proceedings by certiorari. I rose, however, for the purpose of stating what I understood to be the meaning of the clause as drafted. The general powers of the corporation are delegated to three commissioners; no power was delegated to the pilot board. There is no doubt that the powers of the corporation may be delegated under subsection 3 to any three commissioners.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Five commissioners are a quorum.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The powers of the corporation may be delegated to any three commissioners.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That includes judicial powers.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That relates to general powers and it would include judicial powers as well. The only doubt I had was as to the meaning of subsection 3, and while it seems plain that the commissioners have the power under subsection 2 to delegate their general powers to three commissioners of whom the Chairman of the Corporation of Pilots below Quebec shall be one, there is the power under subsection 3 to delegate their judicial powers to three commissioners absolutely, excluding the Pilot Commissioner from being one of them. He must be one when they exercise their general powers, but he would not be one of them when they come to exercise their judicial powers.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It would be absolutely preposterous to allow the sub-committee to be composed so as to exclude the chairman of the pilots from this board, because that is the whole reason for putting him on the board, that is exercising the pilotage authority. If you are going to give judicial powers to this sub-committee, excluding from this sub-committee the chairman of the pilots he would cease to have any utility on the board at all. I think we had better keep that clause in its present form, and when we have got through the Bill consider it again.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I wish to make the difficulty I have clear to the Solicitor General, because, however eminent the gentleman may be who has drafted this Bill, still I want to understand it. The pilotage authority, under the provisions of the Pilotage Act, has undoubtedly judicial powers.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Limited.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That may be. Under the provisions of section 41 of this Act, this corporation has certain special judicial powers, but those judicial powers include the powers under the Pilotage Act. The point I make about the drafting of this clause is, that subsection 2 seems to me to clearly include the judicial powers which every pilotage authority has under the provisions of the Pilotage Act. Now, subsection 3 may mean one of two things. It may include all the powers which this corporation has, including the authority which it possesses as the pilotage authority under the Pilotage Act; or it may mean only the judicial powers conferred by this Act, in addition to the powers which are conferred by the Pilotage Act. If it means either the one or the other, it seems to me that this clause requires amendment. If subsection 3 includes the judicial powers under the Pilotage Act, then I cannot help thinking that it is in conflict with subsection 2, which clearly, by its terms, includes the same thing.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think that is right. I will remedy it by inserting the word "other" before "judicial powers," in paragraph 3.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That is what I suggested.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Subsection 2 gives them the power as pilotage authority, and the other judicial powers they have, irrespective of their powers as pilotage authority are exercised under subsection 3. If we say, in that subsection, the "other" judicial powers of the corporation may be delegated, &c., I think that meets the case.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Yes.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Is the number of commissioners to remain at three under subsection 2?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes. That rule has worked very satisfactorily in Montreal, and I do not see why we should make any difference.

Mr. CASGRAIN. In that case, the pilots would be tried by two members of the harbour board, and, in addition, the chairman of the corporation of pilots. I do not think that is right, and I move that subsection 2 be struck out.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It worked well in Montreal.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Well, I do not think it is right.

Amendment (Mr. Casgrain) negatived on division.

On section 18,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is this the same as the clause which is being amended? The language seems a little peculiar:

Any commissioner who owns property which the corporation propose to acquire shall ipso facto cease to be a commissioner.

That seems a remarkable provision.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It was practically the same thing in the old Act.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The majority could put out an undesirable colleague at any time by proposing to buy his property.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not say it would happen, but considerable inconvenience would result from the fact that a man might be elected on the board and then arrange, after his election, to have his property secured for harbour purposes. Such things as that might possibly occur.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The evil should, of course, be guarded against. There are a great many municipal Acts, for instance, in which precautions are taken, but it was the extraordinary proposition involved in this particular phraseology that struck one.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). For example, if the corporation proposed to acquire any property, any member having an interest in that property would cease to be a member of the board. Then the corporation might change its mind, and not acquire the property at all, and appoint somebody else.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not feel like withdrawing the provision myself. This is the law that has been in force, with a slight amendment, and I do not see anything wrong in it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is very stringent.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is, but I am not sure that it is too stringent. The very moment it is intended and proposed that the corporation should acquire a property, the person beneficially interested in the property ceases to be in a position to influence the corporation, which I think is a good thing.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He need not cease to influence them. The usual provision is that any one interested in a proposition of that kind should not vote upon it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Suppose there is a very good man on the board who is interested in a piece of property which the board chooses to purchase without his influencing them in any way. Simply because that is the case, he ceases to be a member of the board. Why not adopt the common law rule, under which a municipal counsellor, for instance, does not vote on any question in which he has a personal interest, but does not cease to be a member of the council? Why is this made more stringent than the common law?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Technically, purchasing the property would not deprive him of his position, while the proposal to acquire it would deprive him.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Certainly, the phraseology is vague and indefinite, as the Minister of Marine and Fisheries suggests, and for that reason I think difficulties will arise under it.

Section agreed to.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is a deep-water lock?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It is understood to be a lot where there is deep water at all stages of the tide as distinguished from lots that are dry when the tide goes out.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is desirable to distinguish between the power of disposal as regards these two kinds of locks.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. These deep-water locks are held by patent from the Crown and are a matter over which the Federal Parliament have authority as regulating navigation. In that respect, they would be distinguished from ordinary beach locks.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does it mean the land below low water mark?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is the clause which is in the old Act.

On section 22,

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. This is entirely new as far as Quebec is concerned, but a reproduction of the Montreal statute, except as regards the street railway, which is inserted in the Quebec Act. Immigrants landing at Quebec, land at the Princess Louise embankment, and it will be a great convenience if we have street cars running out to the immigrant sheds to convey these people to the different railway stations.

On section 26, subsection 7,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is this provision new?

Mr. DOBELL. I may explain that it is to give power to prevent the cutting of ice anywhere near where a sewer is discharged. That is the only object.

On section 26, subsection 17,

Mr. CASGRAIN. I understand the Solicitor General to say, that the Pilotage Act, 49 Victoria, chapter 86, or chapter 80 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, is not amended.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. No.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Then, it appears to me that the district over which the Harbour Commissioners have authority is not the same as that defined in one of the first sections of this Bill, fixing the limits of the port of Quebec. Under section 4 of chapter 80, R. C. S., the Pilotage Act, it was provided that :

The Quebec Harbour Commissioners shall be the pilotage authority of the pilotage district of Quebec, comprising the River St. Lawrence from the basin of Portneuf, inclusively, to an imaginary line drawn from the eastern anchorage ground under Cape Columbia,—

And so on. Now, the clause of this Bill defines the port of Quebec as :

—the River St. Lawrence and the shores thereof, to high-water mark, between a line drawn from the Roman Catholic Church of the parish of Deschambault—

And so on. So, the Harbour Commissioners, as a pilotage authority, will have power over a certain extent of territory which is not defined in this Act, but is defined in the Pilotage Act.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think they will have, as pilotage authority, power only over the port of Quebec assigned to them by this statute. I do not see how they could have powers beyond.

Mr. CASGRAIN. This is a matter in which the responsibility rests upon the Solicitor General, of course. Still, it seems to me that, with these two Acts standing, there will be a conflict of authority. The Bill defines the port of Quebec, over which the board, as pilotage authority, would have control; but, when it comes to authorize these judicial functions, for instance in the trial of pilots, we have to refer to the 4th section of chapter 80 to see over which district the commission has power.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I understand my hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) to say the powers of the Harbour Commissioners might be limited—

Mr. CASGRAIN. They might be limited, or they might be extended; I do not know as to that.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I understand my hon. friend to say, that it may be necessary, in consequence of this clearer definition of the port of Quebec, to amend the Pilotage Act. I think there is a great deal of force in that; that is a point which we must consider.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would like to draw attention to the introductory words of this section 20: "The corporation may from time to time make by-laws not contrary to law nor to the provisions of this Act," and so on. And their powers include the establishment of "rules and regulations for navigation within the limits of the port of Quebec." This covers a distance of 150 or 160 miles. Although they are prohibited from passing any regulations contrary to the law, they might pass regulations inconsistent with the law.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That does not come into force until it is approved by the Governor General; so, your officers will watch that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Of course, it could be checked by refusing to give assent to the by-law altogether. But, to make assurance doubly sure, I move that the section be amended so as to read: "make by-laws not contrary to or inconsistent with the law," &c. They must not interfere with the Admiralty regulations, for instance, as to the number of lights. While not providing for the removal of any of the lights that a vessel is to carry, they might add a separate light. They might do many things inconsistent with the law.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. You might as well prohibit them from passing by-laws altogether.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend sees there is a certain part which prescribes in great detail the course which vessels must pursue in meeting each other, or overtaking each other, in fog or storms, what lights they must carry. They get power by that subsection to establish rules and regulations for navigation in the broadest term within the limits of their authority, for 150 or 170 miles, provided that such rules and regulations be not contrary to law. But I want to provide that they shall not be inconsistent with the law either; for I can conceive a regulation which is not absolutely contrary to law but would be inconsistent with it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Think of a concrete case where a regulation would not be contrary to law but still inconsistent with it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, I can conceive of a number of cases which would not be actually contrary to law but would be inconsistent with it. The law may say that you shall have three lights in certain circumstances, they might add an additional one, that would not be contrary to law.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the law says there shall be three lights shown in a certain way, and if they show a fourth light, that would be most dangerous.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is essential that they should not make any by-law regulating navigation generally within the precincts of their port, 150 or 160 miles, which would be inconsistent with the general admiralty regulations.

I think the whole committee will agree with that. They should not make regulations either contrary to or inconsistent with the law.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If my hon. friend wishes we will put in the words "inconsistent with."

On section 28,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Section 28 is really a by-law, and by following 27 instead of preceding it, these rates that are approved by the Governor in Council do not require to be published, and there is not, therefore, any notice given, as notice is given of all the other by-laws. Following that section 27, it is taken out of the ordinary run of by-laws, and, therefore, the rates do not require to be published.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I make a difference between the tariff of the harbour rates and the ordinary by-law which would be for the regulation of the harbour generally, this is simply a tariff of rates connected with the internal management and control of the property of the corporation, and it must be controlled by the Governor General in Council. The only difference is that with reference to publication. I do not see that any harm can result in one way or another from the publication or the non-publication.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It struck me there was, perhaps, a good deal in having that by-law published, or that proposal fixing the rates. It is so in nearly every other case that I can think of. In the ordinary administration under a department any rates that are imposed inspection fees, &c., should be published in the "Gazette," as a matter of course, so that notice may be given to the parties concerned as to what the officers are warranted in demanding.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. As a matter of business it would be the duty, or interest, of the corporation to have these published, and if my hon. and learned friend proposes an amendment we will be agreeable to it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. No. I am not pressing the point. I was not aware whether under the old law there was this provision.

On section 29.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I would suggest that in the second line after the word "by" the following words be inserted: "or under" so that it will read:

The valuation of goods on which ad valorem rates are imposed by or under this Act, &c.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 33,

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As the chairman read it the last part of the first clause did not seem to read rightly:

To the same extent and in the same manner as if the said sections had been passed with express reference to the harbour of Quebec instead of with reference to railways and the corporation were thereafter referred to instead of the railway company.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There should be a comma after the word railways.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There should be after the word "railways" the words "and as if" the corporation were therein referred to, &c.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I will accept that.

Section as amended agreed to.

On section 36,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). This clause seems to restrict the payment of any moneys by the corporation, to the particular matters mentioned in the subsections. Might there not be other cases in which it would be proper for the corporation to pay money?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. These are preferential charges.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). But the clause says "the lawful charges upon the revenue of the corporation arising from all sources whatsoever shall be as follows, and shall be paid in the following order."

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Read subsection 6.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). That has only reference to bonds or debentures.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. These are amounts which are chargeable to the revenue in the order fixed by the statute; but as a corporation, surely they would be liable to pay other claims.

Mr. CASGRAIN. How would you recover the money? My hon. friend the Solicitor General may remember a case in Quebec arising out of the following circumstances: The Harbour Commissioners allowed a wreck to sink at one of the wharfs, and a boat coming into the dock struck this wreck and was damaged. An action was taken against the Harbour Commissioners for damages, and Mr. Justice Casault held that the action should be dismissed, because, amongst other reasons, there was no fund from which any money could be paid, and no money could be recovered from the corporation, except for the specific purposes stated in the Act.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My hon. friend (Mr. Casgrain) may have looked at that case more recently than I, but my recollection is that the case went off on the point that the Harbour Commissioners were not responsible for the wreck at the place where it was found.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There were two grounds for dismissal.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I take it that the corporation having the power to contract, would necessarily be liable for any obligations which might occur as an incident to the power to contract. All this statute means is, that certain claims are to be privileged and paid by preference in the order of priority as fixed.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). It may be as my hon. friend suggests, but I think it is not very clear, and I suggest there should be a further subsection providing that other liabilities of the corporation should be paid.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If my hon. friends think that the corporation is not liable to pay its just debts, I am willing to amend the clause in that direction.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). There might be something more than debts. For example, suppose the corporation exercised some of the powers conferred by this Act, or by by-laws passed without justification, so as to render themselves liable to an action for damages. It seems to me such a thing is conceivable. I am not familiar with the law of Quebec, but in our province that would not be an action arising out of a contract, but out of tort.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I may say that I am taking the words of the law as we now have it; but I can appreciate the fact that when you come to examine all the statutes that have been passed in reference to this commission, a great deal may require amendment, and I am not wedded to any form of expression. If there remains any doubt on the part of my hon. friend, I am willing to drop the clause and draft a new one to be inserted on the third reading.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I take it that under this section the only charges that can be paid out of revenue are the charges mentioned in that section.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. We might add another section saying that all other liabilities of the corporation should be a charge on the revenues.

Amendment agreed to, and section, as amended, agreed to.

On section 38,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Is it intended under subsection 3 to cut out the seamen's liens for wages?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I think that is the effect of the provision.

On subsection 4, of section 38,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Does the Solicitor General think that would be a wise provision.

Mr. FITZPATRICK.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. I do not discuss the wisdom of it. It is not a great hardship to the mariner in any case, because the rates cannot be heavy. I do not entertain the slightest doubt that no magistrate has jurisdiction to sell a ship. You may go before a magistrate, if the amount is not very high, and get a judgment, and then the magistrate issues a warrant of execution, but before you can sell the ship you must get authority from the Court of Admiralty.

On subsection 6,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. This subsection gives the rights conferred by section 38 a duration of one year, which seems to me a long time.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. My hon. friend will see that, under the circumstances, that cannot be avoided. A vessel, for instance, comes into port in the month of August, and after she sails, is not likely to return until the next year. That is the existing law.

On subsection 6,

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). Under the British Merchants Shipping Act, the wages of seamen have a prior lien, so that this would not apply to British ships. Would it not be better to have the regulations so framed that Canadian, British and foreign ships should be in exactly the same position?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That seems impossible with the Merchants Shipping Act standing in your face.

On section 40,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We find here minute provisions made with regard to the authority granted to bailiffs and so on, but there is nothing I can see under which a man can give bail and get a proper release.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. All that could be done would be to apply to the court of competent jurisdiction for a warrant, and when it issues, the party would have to appear and would be subject to the ordinary procedure of the court. There is no court that I know of that would not grant a release on proper bonds being given.

On section 46,

Sir CHARLES HILBERT TUPPER. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) never saw this.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Is that in the existing law?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Yes, it is in the Montreal Harbour Act, it is in the Canadian Pacific Railway Act, and what objection can there be to it here?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think it must have been put in some of these old Acts before the Audit Act was passed. There is no need of it here. We have it in the General Act.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. What objection can there be to it?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The objection is that you are creating a precedent for every other corporation asking us for similar legislation, whereas now you have general powers which are fully ample for all possible purposes in the Audit Act.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. There is this objection, that the promoters of this Bill will say: You gave this privilege to the Harbour of Montreal, why do not you give it to Quebec? You gave it to the Canadian Pacific Railway, a private corporation, why do not you give it to a public corporation?

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. This clause simply empowers the Government to give it to them if they call for it.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). If there is power in the Audit Act, what object is there in putting it in here?

Mr. CASGRAIN. What is the use of this section?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. If they import machinery or any articles of merchandise for the use of the corporation, the Governor in Council may remit the duties thereon. The Montreal Harbour Bill provides that the Governor in Council may waive or remit all duties of customs on any articles of merchandise imported by the corporation for its use. I find that clause has been in existence since 18 Victoria.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I think it is about time it should be repealed.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. If it is in the Montreal Act, it would be difficult to refuse it here. At the same time, I would not like it to be understood that the passage of this clause implies any obligation whatever to exercise it. I think the Audit Act is quite as broad as this.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Where this provision is in the Special Act as well as in the General Act, it is very difficult to refuse the remission when they make application for the purposes of the corporation. I think if the Montreal corporation has had it the Quebec corporation ought to have it too. I am with the Solicitor General on that question, and I am against the rest of the Cabinet.

Mr. BORDEN (Halifax). I am with the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) on this question. I cannot see any reason why a provision of this kind should be inserted in an Act relating to a private corporation if it is covered by a general Act. It gives the corporation a certain standing to have this, a certain status, if you have this provision in its charter. While the Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) says this is not to be a precedent, nevertheless we see that the case of Montreal is being used now as a precedent. The next time this matter comes up we will have two precedents.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. It seems to me this provision is really harmless, however, I will not insist upon it. But I shall have trouble in explaining to my people in Quebec how it is that we refused this clause to them while we give it to Montreal.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE. Tell them you have some wicked partners.

Section 46 struck out.

On section 43,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I wish to add the words "or the service of the Dominion of Canada," for I am not quite sure whether vessels in the employment of the Dominion of Canada would be held to be within the meaning of these words "In Her Majesty's service."

On section 43,

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding). Had you not better make a distinction? The distinction between "Her Majesty" and "the Dominion of Canada" is rather too sharp.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Vessels in the Dominion of Canada are registered in the name of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And they are always referred to as being in the service of the Government of Canada.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If they make an exception in favour of Her Majesty's ships, I want the same exception in favour of the Canadian Government vessels. I would move the addition of the words after "service" of "or of the Government of Canada."

Section, as amended, agreed to.

Bill reported.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) what business the Government proposes to take up to-morrow and the order of it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. First, some small Bills, and then we will go into Supply.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 11.55 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

WEDNESDAY, 31st May, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

DIES FOR POSTAGE STAMPS.

Mr. MONK asked :

1. How many different dies for postage stamps were ordered by the present Government ?
2. Where were said dies made ?
3. How much did each die cost ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). No dies for postage stamps have been ordered by the present Government. The Post Office Department has given orders to the contractors for postage stamps. This involves the contractors preparing the necessary dies, and they state that the orders for postage stamps so given required four original dies. The price paid for postage stamps covers the cost of the dies. These dies, the contractors state, were prepared partly in New York and partly in Ottawa.

SHERIFF OF YUKON TERRITORY.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked :

Referring to the Return to the Address of the House of Commons, 15th May, 1899, relating to the appointment of a sheriff for Yukon territory :

- (a) Was a bond given by the sheriff ?
- (b) Was an oath taken by the sheriff referred to ?
- (c) Who was clerk of the court while Mr. Wade was out of the Yukon district and before Mr. Girouard was appointed ?
- (d) Did Mr. Snell act as clerk of the court for any period, and if so, what period ?
- (e) If Mr. Snell so acted, under what authority did he act ?
- (f) If he acted, was a commission issued to him ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). (a) No. (b) No information in the department. (c) H. A. Bliss. (d), (e), (f) No information in the department.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The only question answered, then, is subsection (a).

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Subsections (a) and (c).

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Fitzpatrick) has no objection, the rest of the questions might stand, because I fancy the rest of that information might be obtained.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. Not in the department. That is the reason I was delayed in giving the answer. Though not strictly in order, I may be allowed to say for the information of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) that I went to the deputy and asked him if there was no further information, and he told me there was none in the department.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is not in the head office, perhaps, but these officers are under the Government, and for that reason I suggest that the question be allowed to stand.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL. To communicate with them ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes.

SALE OF KINGSTON PENITENTIARY BINDER TWINE.

Mr. TAYLOR (by Mr. McDougall) asked :

What are the names and post office addresses of the leading dealers throughout the Dominion to whom circulars were sent inviting them to tender for the output of the binder twine manufactured at the Kingston Penitentiary between the 1st day of July, 1897, and the 30th June, 1898 ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). The following are the firms to whom circulars were sent :—Wood, Vallance & Co., Hamilton ; Hobbs Hardware Co., London, Ont. ; John Hallam, Toronto ; Rice, Lewis & Co., Toronto ; H. Mowers, Kingston ; Dalton & Strange, Kingston ; J. H. Ashdown & Co., Winnipeg ; Coll Bros., St. John, N.B. ; Farmer's Binder Twine and Agriculture Implement Manufacturing Co., Brantford ; Charles Braithwaite, Portage la Prairie ; James Elder, Virden, Man. ; H. N. Bate & Sons, Ottawa.

LITTLE RIVER, BREAKWATER.

Mr. GILLIES asked :

Is it the intention of the Government during the present session to make provision for the construction of a breakwater at or near Little River, on the south-western coast of Richmond County, Nova Scotia ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). This matter is now under consideration.

STEPHEN McNEILL, OF BEAVER COVE.

Mr. GILLIES asked :

Why is a yearly rental of one dollar exacted of Stephen McNeill, Esq., of Beaver Cove, Cape Breton, by the Railway Department for the use of a space of 25 feet of land at the rear of his dwelling, when this space was given him absolutely at the time the right of way was settled for between himself and the arbitrators ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). When the right of way was settled for under a decision of the Exchequer Court, and the sum of $1,009.19 was paid (said sum including interest and costs). Stephen McNeil, by deed dated December 4th, 1889, No. 10360, granted and conveyed certain lands at Beaver Cove, C.B., to the Crown. This deed does not contain any reservation or mention of any space being reserved from said grant. The information with regard to the lease has not yet been received from Moncton.

Mr. GILLIES. If I am perfectly in order, I would like to intimate to the hon. Minister (Mr. Blair) that the fence is exactly in the line as agreed upon between the referees to whom the Exchequer Court judges referred the matter and Mr. McNeil.

Mr. SPEAKER. I would remind the hon. gentleman (Mr. Gillies) that discussion is out of order at this stage.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I will make a memorandum of it.

Mr. GILLIES. I will send the hon. Minister a memorandum on the subject.

Mr. SPEAKER. That is by far the best way.

CANADIAN GENERAL SERVICE MEDAL.

Mr. CLARKE (by Mr. Craig) asked :

1. Was a recommendation made by the Militia Department, or by any officer thereof, as to who should receive the Canadian general service medal ?

2. If so, what were the terms of such recommendation, and at what date was it published ?

3. Did the Militia Department ask that a separate ribbon be issued with the said medal, or suggest that the North-west ribbon should be used therefor ? If not, by whom was the suggestion made ?

4. Have any further steps been taken by the department to obtain another ribbon, and if so, at what date ?

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden). 1. Yes. 2. The terms are fully set forth in a special general order, second paragraph, 7th June, 1898, published in the "Canada Gazette." 3. The War Office directed the details of the ribbon, as already stated in my answer to a question on the 17th instant. The suggestion was made by the Right Hon. the Secretary of State for War, Lord Lansdowne. 4. Yes, on 27th May, 1899.

CONSTRUCTION OF CARS FOR I.C.R.

Mr. BERGERON asked :

1. What company or firm in the United States of America are building cars of any form or description for the Intercolonial Railway of Canada ?

2. Were the contracts given by tender ?

3. If so, to whom were tenders sent, and from whom were they received ?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). There are no companies or firms in the United States building any cars for the Intercolonial Railway.

DISMISSAL OF EDWARD DAVIS, SLIDE MASTER AT COULONGE.

Mr. POUPORE (by Mr. Bergeron) asked :

1. Has Edward Davis, slide master at Coulonge, been dismissed ?

2. If so, for what reason was he dismissed ?

3. Upon whose recommendation was such dismissal made ?

4. Was an investigation held, and by whom was it made ?

5. Has one John Mullen been appointed slide master at Coulonge to fill the vacancy caused by the dismissal of Edward Davis ? If so, by whom was his appointment recommended ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. Yes. 2. In the interest of the public service. 3. Under the responsibility of the Minister. 4. No. 5. Yes. Appointment made on the recommendation of persons in whom the Minister has full confidence.

TRIAL OF COULOMBE AND OTHERS.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Was the trial of one Coulonge and others, accused of smuggling spirituous liquors, held at the criminal assizes of Quebec at the last term of the Court of Queen's Bench, or at the preceding term ?

2. If not, why not ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). The answer to question No. 1 is that the trial was not proceeded with for the very good reason that the appellants abandoned their appeals.

THE QUEEN vs. COULOMBE AND OTHERS.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Is it the intention of the Government to enforce the conviction pronounced in the case the Queen vs. Coulonge and others by Mr. Justice Chauveau at Quebec ?

2. Have any steps been taken to enforce such conviction ?

3. If not, why not ?

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). The answer is, yes.

I. C. R.—EXTENSION TO MONTREAL.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved :

That the House do, on to-morrow, resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the proposed resolution :—

Resolved, that it is expedient to confirm the following leasing agreement entered into with the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada and Her Majesty in the interest of Canada, for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway into the city of Montreal.

This Agreement, made this first day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-eight: Between the Grand Trunk Railway Co. of Canada, hereinafter called "the Company," of the first part, and Her Majesty Queen Victoria, represented herein by the Honourable the Minister of Railways and Canals of Canada, who is herein referred to as "the Minister," Her Majesty so represented being hereinafter called or referred to as "Her Majesty," of the second part.

Whereas Her Majesty proposes extending the Intercolonial Railway, a Government railway of Canada, from Chaudière Junction, in the province of Quebec, to the city of Montreal, in said province, with termini in that city;

And whereas Her Majesty has made arrangements with the Drummond County Railway Company for the lease of all its railway now completed or hereafter to be completed between Chaudière Junction and Ste. Rosalie, in the said province of Quebec;

And whereas for the purpose of carrying out the said extension the said company is willing that, for the conducting of the business and traffic of the Intercolonial Railway, Her Majesty shall have an undivided one-half share or leasehold interest in the company's railway and property between and including Ste. Rosalie and St. Lambert station at the eastern end of the Victoria Bridge, together with the use of the company's railway and property between and including Ste. Rosalie and Bonaventure station in the city of Montreal, the use of the Victoria Bridge across the River St. Lawrence and of the terminals and connections hereinafter more particularly described, together with an undivided one-half interest in and use of the bridge across the Chaudière River, and of so much of the tracks and line of the said company in connection therewith as are hereinafter described, all of which right, title, property, interest and user shall be used, enjoyed and exercised to the same extent as if the said railway and property were owned by Her Majesty, in the manner and upon the terms and conditions herein contained;

And whereas this agreement has been executed by the parties hereto, subject to confirmation by Act of Parliament as hereinafter provided, and also by the shareholders of said company;

And whereas by order of the Governor General in Council, dated the twenty-fourth day of March, eighteen hundred and ninety-seven, authority is given to the Minister, subject to the sanction of Parliament, to enter into a contract with the company for the acquisition of the above rights and interests;

Now this indenture witnesseth that the expression "Montreal Joint Section," wherever used in this indenture shall mean the company's line and connections at Ste. Rosalie, and the whole line and branches and appurtenances hereby demised from Ste. Rosalie to St. Lambert and the Victoria Bridge, together with the terminals at Bonaventure station in the city of Montreal, and at Point St. Charles, St. Henri and between Point St. Charles and the Bonaventure station, and also with the Canadian Pacific Railway via Jacques Cartier Junction; and the expression "Chaudière Joint Section," shall mean the Chaudière Bridge and connections, except when the meaning shall conflict with the context or otherwise plainly expressed terms of the clause in which the same is used. That the said company, in consideration of the rents, covenants, conditions and agreements hereinafter contained and reserved, hath given, granted, demised and leased, and by these presents doth give, grant, demise and lease unto Her Majesty, her successors and assigns all an undivided one-half share interest, right and title to all the company's line of railway, road-bed and property from and including Ste. Rosalie station in the county of Bagot, in the province of Quebec, to the Victoria Bridge, and also the undivided one-half right, share, title or interest in the company's line of railway from a point on the western side of the Chaudière Bridge at the proposed junction of the Drummond County Railway with the company's line, and including the Chaudière Bridge and to and including the switch at the easterly side of the Chaudière Curve station, being the same rights and privileges agreed to be leased to the Drummond County Railway by the company, with the full and unlimited right and privileges such as the company itself enjoys of running the engines, vehicles, rolling stock and trains of the said Intercolonial Railway, either separately or combined, and as frequently and at such times as its business and traffic may require, and in both directions, over any and every portion of the said company's railway between and including the said points aforesaid, and the use of the Victoria Bridge across the River St. Lawrence as it at present exists, or as it may at any time during the subsistence of this lease be improved, re-constructed, enlarged or extended, and over the company's line and lines of railway over the said Victoria Bridge and into the Bonaventure station, in the city of Montreal and the other terminal points, junctions and connections of the company hereinbefore more particularly described, together with the full and unlimited right and privilege of having the business and traffic of the Intercolonial Railway done in and about the stations and premises of the said company, upon any portions of the company's line hereinbefore described, and of the terminals and connections hereinbefore mentioned, and all intermediate stations and premises of the company, and in and about and upon all stations, tracks, and sidings, branches or extensions belonging to or leased by the company or connected with the tracks of the company, together with the full and unlimited right in Her Majesty of constructing stations, tracks, branches and sidings, and connecting said tracks, branches and sidings with the main branch and leased lines of the company at any point or points between and including Ste. Rosalie and Montreal, on the terms and conditions hereinafter contained, for the term of ninety-nine years from and after the first day of March, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, with the right of renewal as hereinafter provided. The construction of such stations, tracks, branches and sidings, with the main branch and leased lines of the company as herein provided for, shall, however, be made under the supervision and subject to the approval of the Chief Engineer of the company, which right of approval shall be reasonably exercised.

The above joint sections are all as shown on the plan annexed hereto, the portion of the Montreal section from Ste. Rosalie to St. Lambert station being shown in red; and from St. Lambert station to Bonaventure station, and intermediate connections, and Jacques Cartier Junction, being shown in green; the Chaudière section being shown in red; signed in duplicate by the respective Chief Engineers of each of the parties hereto, and which is hereby made part and parcel of this agreement.

To have and to hold said rights and privileges unto Her Majesty, her successors and assigns from and after the first day of March, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, for the term of ninety-nine years, yielding and paying therefor to the said company, its successors and assigns, a yearly rental of one hundred and forty thousand dollars

Mr. BLAIR.

($140,000). such rent to be payable in equal sums monthly, that is to say, eleven thousand six hundred and sixty-six dollars and sixty-six cents ($11,666.66) on the first week day of every month in each year, or a proportionate sum for any fractional part of a month, the first payment to be made on the first week day of the month next following the day on which Her Majesty goes into possession of the said leased lines and property and begins to run trains over the same.

And these presents are made upon and subject to the provisions and conditions hereinafter expressed and contained for the due performance and observance of all of which, on the part of each of them to be done and performed, Her Majesty and the company bind themselves and each of them respectively, their successors and assigns, that is to say :

First.—That Her Majesty shall and will during the continuance of this lease or any renewal thereof, pay to the company the rent hereby reserved in the manner at the times hereinbefore mentioned without any deduction whatsoever, save for the reasons and on account of the happening of any or either contingency or contingencies hereinafter mentioned.

Second.—That the company shall and will keep up and maintain at all times in good repair and in a thorough efficient working condition the whole of the railway tracks, bridges, switches, sidings, signals, buildings of all kinds, platforms, water-tanks, water supplies, telegraph lines and appliances, fences, crossings and all other appurtenances and appliances belonging to the company's railway between and including Ste. Rosalie and Montreal, and of the terminals and connections herein described and between the Chaudière Bridge and connections, the right and privilege of using which is included in this demise.

Third.—That Her Majesty shall and will pay to the company a share of the cost of maintenance of the Montreal Joint Section and the Chaudière Joint Section, including tracks, bridges, switches, sidings, signals, appliances of all kinds, platforms, water-tanks, water supplies, fuel stations, fences, crossings, and all other appurtenances and appliances used by it jointly with the company, and upon the two joint sections it has the right and privilege of usage included in this demise ; such share of the cost of maintenance of each joint section to be in the proportion that the combined engine and car mileage of the Intercolonial Railway trains made over each of the above-mentioned joint sections bears to the total combined engine and car mileage running over each of the above-mentioned joint sections during each month ; every engine, passenger and freight car counting each as one car ; but, notwithstanding anything herein mentioned, the cost of maintenance of the Victoria Bridge shall not include the cost of maintaining any part or portion thereof except the tracks which shall be used by the Intercolonial Railway and the company, and for that class of railway purpose, which cost of maintenance shall be apportioned as aforesaid.

Fourth.—That Her Majesty shall have the right for all purposes of business and traffic of the Intercolonial Railway, under the reasonable rules and regulations of the company, to the full and unlimited use and the full and unlimited access thereto, as the same is or may be enjoyed by the company itself, of, to and from all engine-houses, car-houses and sheds, fuel sheds, water tanks, station houses, depots, freight and ticket offices, warehouses, freight sheds, baggage rooms, dining-rooms, and all furniture and fittings appertaining thereto ; all weighing scales and baggage and freight trucks ; all tracks, sidings, branches or extensions either belonging to or leased by the company at Montreal, including the terminals and other connections of the company at Point St. Charles and intermediate points between Point St. Charles and Bonaventure station, and of the connections with other railways as hereinbefore specified as the same now exists or as they may hereafter be built, rebuilt or improved upon terms as herein specified.

Fifth.—That if any of the said buildings or accommodations or facilities or anything appertaining thereto be destroyed by fire or other casualty, either in whole or in part, Her Majesty shall have no claim against the company for damages on account of loss of accommodation, but Her Majesty shall have, free of any other charge than the aforementioned rental, a proportionate share of such accommodation as the company may be able to provide for the use of its business and traffic and of the new accommodation so soon as the same may be provided, and reconstruction of such buildings and accommodations shall be proceeded with by the company at its own cost with all reasonable despatch.

Sixth.—In all cases of collision between the trains of the parties hereto, the party whose officers, employees or trains are at fault, and are or shall be found to have been the occasion of the collision shall be held responsible to the other party for all damages done or resulting from such collision, and in case the proper officers of the two parties hereto cannot agree as to which of the parties was at fault and was the cause of the collision or as to the amount of damage done, then the questions arising in respect thereto shall be referred to arbitration in the manner hereinafter provided for the settlement of differences and disputes as to the other questions, and each of the parties hereto who shall be found responsible under this clause or under clauses similar thereto shall indemnify the other and hold such other harmless and defend the other from and against all claims, costs and proceedings resulting from or growing out of such default on their part, and the party so adjudged liable to pay the other any damages in respect thereof shall abide by and perform the award of the arbitrators, and such award shall in all cases be final and terminate the controversy between the parties.

Seventh.—In case of injury to persons or property not in transit by the trains of either party hereto, or of damage by fire caused by the operation of the trains upon the said joint sections or upon lands adjoining the same, the claims arising shall be adjusted and settled by the proper officers of the company, and in payment thereof the party in fault shall pay the full amount of liability ; provided, however, that in the event of its being impossible, for want of evidence, to fix the liability on one of the parties hereto, the amount of liability, including costs, shall be borne by the two parties in the proportion of the combined engine and car mileage of the Intercolonial Railway trains made over the said joint sections at the point where the injury occurred during the current month in which the damage or injury happened bears to the total combined engine and car mileage made over the said joint sections. In case of injury occurring to persons or property on the trains of either party the proper officer of the party on whose train the said injury occurred shall settle the same as in all cases of settlement under this clause. The release executed shall be made to include and free and discharge both the parties hereto from all and further liability to the claimant.

Any loss or damage to person or property on the trains of either of the parties hereto which may be caused in any manner whatever by the negligence or the fault of any person or persons in the joint employ of the parties hereto while in the working of said railway hereby dismissed or the terminals thereof, shall be paid by the party upon whose train such loss or damage occurs and such party shall save the other harmless and indemnify the other from all claims, costs, or proceedings for or in respect to such loss or damage.

Eighth.—The superintendent, operators, dispatchers, agents, and all others employed upon the repairs and maintenance, and in the operation of the said joint sections, though paid by the Grand Trunk Railway in the first place shall be considered as, and are, in fact, in the joint employ of the parties hereto in reference to any question of liability of either party hereto to the other party for their negligence, and in reference to any and all other questions; and they shall render to each party such services as they may be called upon to render within the scope of their position or employment, and shall be subject to dismissal if they decline, neglect or refuse to render such assistance and service to either party hereto as such employees are usually called upon to render.

Each of the parties hereto assume all responsibility for the accidents or casualties upon, or to its own trains, and to its passengers, freight and employees, by reason of any imperfection of the track, or misplacement of switches by its own employee or a joint employee or strangers, or for damages for stock killed, or injury that may occur to persons walking upon the track or at highway crossings (if any liability therefor), or from any other cause (aside from or except collision, in any form, with the trains of the other party, or negligence of an exclusive employee of the other party) and no such accident or casualty shall give either party the right of action or claim against the other party, it being the intention and design that each party shall be responsible for its own trains, for the conduct of its own and joint employees as respects such trains, freight, passenger and employees, and generally, except when the other party or its employees are at fault.

Ninth.—That the company shall and will furnish free from any other charge than the aforementioned rental at stations and sidings between and including Ste. Rosalie and Montreal and terminals and yards aforesaid, standing room for the rolling stock of the Intercolonial Railway and for other rolling stock which may be brought by the trains of the Intercolonial Railway to such stations and sidings.

Tenth.—That the parties hereto shall enjoy in all respects equal rights to the said tracks, buildings and improvements used in common unless wherein restricted in this lease, and the trains of Her Majesty shall in every respect be treated by the officers, agents and employees of the company, as trains of a similar class of the company, and the higher class trains shall have equal preference over trains of the lower class belonging to either of the parties, and Her Majesty shall have a perfect right to run all classes of trains, passenger, mixed, freight and other trains over the said joint sections, subject only to the restrictions and regulations prescribed and provided for in this lease. In case of doubt between the trains of the company and Her Majesty of the same class, under the established rules the trains of the company shall have the preference. The main tracks are as far as practicable to be kept unobstructed for the use of both of the parties hereto.

Eleventh.—In preparing the time-tables the company shall and will, as regards the trains of the Intercolonial Railway, arrange the time of arrivals and departure from all stations between, and including Ste. Rosalie and Montreal, and the speed of the said trains, in accordance with the reasonable request of the Intercolonial Railway officials, made from time to time.

Twelfth.—That the station masters, freight agents, ticket agents and baggage masters of the company on the said joint sections shall, as far as the business and traffic of the Intercolonial Railway is concerned, to all intents and purposes, but subject to the payment of a share of their wages as hereinafter provided, be the employees of the Intercolonial Railway, and shall from time to time, in regard to such business, report directly to and receive and carry out the instructions of the proper officials of the Intercolonial Railway.

Thirteenth.—That the company shall and will cause the station masters, freight agents, ticket agents and other joint employees at all stations between, and including, Ste. Rosalie and Montreal, to be strictly neutral as between the Intercolonial Railway and the company, and to way-bill freight and sell tickets by whichever of these routes may be indicated or desired by shippers or passengers, and the Intercolonial Railway may put up signs to be suitably located by the superintendent of the company in each or any station on the joint section indicating that the said stations are Intercolonial Railway ticket offices.

Fourteenth.—That all business and traffic secured by agents of the Intercolonial Railway, or carried in its trains, shall be the business and traffic of the Intercolonial Railway.

Fifteenth.—That the Intercolonial Railway shall have the right to carry in and on its through trains traffic to and from and between all points on the line of railway extending from Ste. Rosalie to Montreal, both inclusive, and in the conducting of its business between and including these stations shall have the right of conducting this business in as full and complete a manner as the company itself. That the rates and fares charged between points on the Montreal joint section shall be the same as those established by the company.

Sixteenth.—That the Intercolonial Railway shall have the right to carry, in and on its through trains to and from all points on the line of railway between and including Ste. Rosalie and Montreal, all traffic coming from or intended for Montreal, or coming from or intended for any point on the Island of Montreal, or coming from or intended for any and all other points, and to enjoy the same rights and privileges in regard to such business as the company itself has and enjoys in similar business from and to such above-mentioned points, except as herein restricted.

(a.) The words "through trains" in the second line of this sixteenth clause and in the second line of the preceding fifteenth clause shall mean and include all trains of the Intercolonial Railway running between Montreal and Ste. Rosalie or points beyond in either direction.

Seventeenth.—That all moneys collected in the vehicles and trains of the Intercolonial Railway at any and all points between and including Ste. Rosalie and Montreal shall belong to and be deemed to have been earned by Her Majesty, and the company shall not be entitled to receive any portion thereof; and that all moneys collected and received by the station masters and any and all other persons who may from time to time be authorized or instructed by the proper officials of the Intercolonial Railway to collect and receive money between and including Ste. Rosalie and Montreal for Intercolonial Railway business and traffic, including among other things car rental, storage in freight in cars and storage of goods in the company's warehouses and freight sheds, or collected and received for any other business in any way connected with the Intercolonial Railway, belongs to Her Majesty and shall be deposited in bank to the credit of the Receiver General of Canada, or remitted to the cashier of the Intercolonial Railway, or otherwise deposited of as the Minister may from time to time direct.

Eighteenth.—That local tickets issued by either of the parties hereto for passage between and including Ste. Rosalie and Montreal, or any intermediate station, shall be accepted on all trains of either party hereto between said points, and the party who issued the tickets shall, on presentation of the ticket so used and collected, pay to the party who carried the passenger the full amount received for the said ticket.

Nineteenth.—That Her Majesty shall pay to the company a share of the salaries and wages of the undermentioned persons at stations on the said joint sections and terminals for their services in connection with Intercolonial Railway business and traffic, when such services are rendered, as follows:—

Train despatchers, station masters, telegraph operators, in the proportion that the number of Intercolonial Railway trains using the premises hereby demised bears to the total number of trains using the said premises; ticket agents, baggage masters, baggage porters and policemen, in the proportion that the number of Intercolonial Railway passenger trains using the premises hereby demised bear to the total number of passenger trains using the same; freight agents, freight clerks, freight checkers, freight porters and watchmen, in the proportion that the tonnage of the Intercolonial Railway freight handled by porters bears to the total tonnage handled by all porters on said premises; also, such proportionate part of the salaries of the superintendent, train master, road master and resident engineer, as the mileage of the joint sections bears to the total mileage of road under jurisdiction of the officials named, and said proportionate part shall be divided between the parties hereto, in the proportion that the combined engine and car mileage of the Intercolonial Railway trains made over the said joint sections, bears to the total combined engine and car mileage made over the joint sections, and also a share of the cost of running, shunting and switching engines, and of the wages of yardmasters, shunters, switchmen and car checkers at each station between and including Ste. Rosalie and Montreal, and the terminals, junctions and connections aforesaid and the Chaudière joint section, in the proportion that the number of cars and engines arriving and departing from the station used in the business and traffic of the Intercolonial Railway bears to the whole number of cars and engines arriving and departing therefrom. Her Majesty shall also have the right and privilege free of any other charge than the wheelage proportion hereinbefore provided of having her cars loaded or empty taken by the company to the company's junctions with connecting lines, factories, warehouses and works which may be provided with standing accommodation from the tracks of the company at Montreal, including Point St. Charles, St. Henri and intermediate points, and Bonaventure station, and the connections or junctions of other railways with the company's line, and over and upon the said joint sections as hereinbefore specified.

Twentieth.—That the engines, vehicles, rolling stock and trains in connection with the business and traffic of the Intercolonial Railway shall be exclusively by officials and employees of the Intercolonial Railway, who, while on the railway and premises of the company on the said joint sections shall be subject to the reasonable rules and regulations of the company and the directions of the officials of the company so far only as the movements of the engines, vehicles and trains are concerned.

That Her Majesty shall and will be responsible for any mileage on foreign cars carried over the joint sections by the Intercolonial Railway trains, which shall for the purpose of calculating the mileage charges be the cars of the Intercolonial Railway.

Twenty-first.—That the company shall and will house the engines of the Intercolonial Railway, and shall and will, if required, turn and clean them and fit them for the road, and supply them with fuel and water and small stores at all points, connections, junctions and terminals, as aforesaid, where it performs such services for any of its own engines, and Her Majesty shall pay to the company the actual cost to the company of the labour and material used therein and therefor, provided that Her Majesty may, at any point or at all points on the premises above mentioned, or at any time or times, perform the whole or any portion of the above services with the employees of the Intercolonial Railway and with the supplies thereof without being liable to any charge therefor by the company.

Twenty-second.—That the company shall and will, if required to do so, at any or all stations on said joint sections, clean the passenger train cars used in the business and traffic of the Intercolonial Railway, and heat and supply them with water, ice, fuel and small stores, and Her Majesty shall pay to the company the cost to the company of material, labour and stores used in such services, provided that Her Majesty may, at any point or points on the premises above mentioned of the company, and at any time or times, perform the whole or any portion of the above services with the employees of the Intercolonial Railway and heat and supply said cars with water, ice, fuel and small stores at Her own cost without being liable to any charge therefor by the company.

Twenty-third.—That the company shall and will, from time to time when requested to do so by the officials of the Intercolonial Railway, make temporary repairs upon the engines and other rolling stock used in the business and traffic of the Intercolonial Railway, such repairs to be made promptly with all reasonable despatch, and Her Majesty shall pay the company the actual cost to the company of the labour and materials used in such repairs.

Twenty-fourth.—That the company shall and will carry passengers on through tickets, and freight on through way-bills, from and to points on its railway and leased and controlled lines to and from points on the Intercolonial Railway and its leased and connecting lines, so as to avoid re-ticketing and re-way-billing.

Twenty-fifth.—That Her Majesty shall at her own cost supply all stationery, forms and tickets required for Intercolonial Railway business at all points between and including Ste. Rosalie and Montreal.

Twenty-sixth.—That all rates and fares shall be divided on the basis of mileage, except where such division would act unfairly by reason of one line of railway having a largely preponderating mileage, in which case the division of rates and fares shall be settled on a fair and equitable basis by mutual agreement, and, in default of agreement, by arbitration as hereinafter provided.

Twenty-seventh.—That the company shall and will at its own cost, at all times, keep on sale, at all stations and agencies of its railway and of its controlled and leased lines of railway, an adequate supply of tickets for all points of the Intercolonial Railway, its leased lines and its connections, reading "Over the Intercolonial Railway via Montreal," and the baggage of passengers using any such tickets shall be checked through to its destination over the Intercolonial Railway via Montreal.

Twenty-eighth.—That the company agrees upon the application of the General Passenger Agent of the Intercolonial Railway to place and keep for sale and sell at all stations and agencies on its railway, and leased and controlled lines of railway, and tickets that may be asked for reading to points on the Intercolonial Railway, including the joint sections and its connecting lines of the Intercolonial Railway via Montreal, and to treat such business with all fairness and impartiality.

Twenty-ninth.—That Her Majesty shall have the same privilege of displaying advertisements of the Intercolonial route at all stations of the company as the company itself has, and the Intercolonial Railway route and its connections with the company's railway shall be shown in all the published time tables of the company.

Thirtieth.—That all rents, revenues, benefits and receipts now accruing from any other company to the company by reason of the user of the line between Ste. Rosalie and St. Lambert, or the exercise of any running power, privilege or rights therein, or which may hereafter accrue from any such grant or user shall enure to the joint benefit of Her Majesty and the company, share and share alike, and said benefits and receipts shall be accounted for by the parties hereto when the accounting shall take place from time to time between them. As to the other portions of the company's line herein demised the company hereby reserves to itself all revenues from any source whatever arising from the use thereof.

Thirty-first.—That Her Majesty shall have and enjoy for the business and traffic of the Intercolonial Railway of every kind whatsoever the same rights and facilities and in as full a manner at and within the terminal and other premises of the company at Montreal, at the terminals at Point St. Charles and intermediate points, as hereinbefore mentioned, and all the approaches and tracks, as the Company now has or at any time may hereafter have and enjoy for its own business and traffic.

Thirty-second.—That the company shall supply for the sole use of Her Majesty, if and when requested, a suitable ticket office in the Bonaventure station, or wherever the main depot of the company may in future be situated in Montreal, as accessible and in every way as convenient as the company's own ticket office in the said Bonaventure station or main depot at Montreal, for the sale of tickets, to be provided and maintained by Her Majesty at her own expense, in which event the Intercolonial Railway shall not be liable to share the expense of maintaining the company's ticket office or paying any of the salaries of the employees therein.

Thirty-third.—That Her Majesty and the company shall each furnish to the other promptly, each and every month, all the information necessary to the ascertaining and the checking of the rates, fares, charges, shares of costs and other returns to be made as under these presents, and Her Majesty and the company mutually agree to give the necessary facilities, including access to the books and papers to the auditors of the Intercolonial Railway and of the company respectively to enable them to verify the accounts under this agreement.

That all traffic balances, charges and shares of cost, and other returns to be made under these presents, shall be made monthly, and Her Majesty and the company mutually agree to promptly audit and pay each to the other each month the total amount chargeable against the other for the month immediately preceding.

Thirty-fourth.—That Her Majesty shall not be responsible for the acts or defaults of the servants of the company, or for the deficiency or otherwise of the company's machinery or appliances, and the company shall not be responsible for the acts or defaults of the servants of Her Majesty or for the deficiency of the machinery or appliances of the Intercolonial Railway.

Thirty-fifth.—That if at any time hereafter the business or traffic shall in the opinion of the parties hereto necessitate or warrant the laying of double tracks between and including Ste. Rosalie and St. Lambert, or that additional siding accommodation should be considered necessary for the proper and efficient conduct of the joint business, the company will lay such tracks or make such improvements, and Her Majesty shall have the full and unlimited use of all or any of such works in the same manner and to the same extent as if the said work had been included in the premises hereby leased, the right, use or privilege in which are hereby demised; and if Her Majesty should determine to use any such works or improvements, and the Minister should so declare, such work and improvements are hereby understood and agreed to form part of the leased premises; and the proportion of the actual cost of such work and improvements to be borne by Her Majesty shall be ascertained by calculating interest at the rate of four (4) per centum per annum upon the amount of such actual cost; and Her Majesty shall pay the proportion of such interest which the combined engine and car mileage of the Intercolonial Railway for the year preceding, over such portion of the company's line upon which such improvements have been made, bears to the total combined engine and car mileage upon such portion; Her Majesty, however, shall have the option of paying such share so ascertained in cash.

Thirty-sixth.—That the company will and does hereby covenant with Her Majesty, her successors and assigns, that it has, subject to existing encumbrances, the right to demise and lease the rights and privileges hereby demised and every part thereof.

Thirty-seventh.—That if it should be found in practice that any right or interest of either party has not been fully protected or provided for by this agreement in accordance with the true object and intent thereof, then both parties shall negotiate and agree upon in an equitable manner a new and other clause to provide for such omission, and each party shall give and execute to the other any and all further documents in writing that may from time to time be required for the better securing of which of their rights and privileges under the said contract and for the better carrying out thereof.

Thirty-eighth.—That the company shall and will, if during the term of this lease Her Majesty well and faithfully performs all the covenants and agreements herein undertaken by Her Majesty to be performed, at the expiration of this lease, on request by the Minister, execute and deliver to Her Majesty, her successors and assigns, a renewal of said lease for a second term of ninety-nine years, and shall at the expiration of said second term, upon like faithful performance on the part of Her Majesty, make, execute and deliver a further renewal for a third term of ninety-nine years, and so on for ever, with the same covenants and conditions as are contained herein, subject to such limitations and modifications as may be mutually agreed upon between the parties or settled by arbitration according to the terms of this agreement.

Thirty-ninth.—That these presents are subject to the confirmation thereof by the Parliament of Canada and by the shareholders of the company.

Fortieth.—In consideration of the rents and covenants herein reserved and contained, Her Majesty represented by the General Traffic Manager of the Intercolonial Railway of the one part, and the company by its General Traffic Manager of the other part, have entered into a mutual traffic arrangement in writing of even date herewith, which traffic arrangement is hereby declared, covenanted and agreed to be and form a part of and be supplemental to this contract, and shall be read herewith and shall be binding upon all parties hereto during the continuance of this leasing contract, except so far as the same may be altered with the mutual consent of Her Majesty and the company. When and if the traffic arrangement shall be so altered from time to time such amended supplemental contract shall be substituted for the supplemental traffic contract of this date.

Forty-first.—That in order to facilitate and develop the business of the Intercolonial Railway and the company, every effort shall be made to cause close and suitable train connections to be made at Montreal between the trains of the company west of Montreal and the Intercolonial Railway.

Forty-second.—That through rates and fares shall be agreed upon and made from time to time for traffic to and from all points on the Intercolonial Railway, including the lines hereby demised, and all points on the company's railway, including all lines leased by them, and such rates and fares shall, as regards traffic to and from all points on the Intercolonial Railway, and to and from all points on the company's lines and leased lines, be divided on the basis of mileage, except where such division would act unfairly by reason of one line of railway having a largely preponderating mileage, in which case the division of rates and fares shall be settled on a reasonable and equitable basis by mutual agreement, and in default of agreement, by arbitration as herein provided.

Forty-third.—That as regards traffic shipped to and from Europe and the British Isles through Halifax, St. John, or such other port as may hereafter be selected, per Intercolonial Railway, the rates of the company for the carriage of such traffic west of Montreal shall not be higher per passenger per mile, and per ton of freight per mile, than the amount per passenger per mile and per ton of freight per mile charged by the company on similar classes or descriptions of traffic carried by it for others to and from the same places, and intended for or coming from the same place in Europe or the British Isles. In ascertaining such rates of freight, all drawbacks or deductions allowed are to be taken off before fixing the rates.

Forty-fourth.—That the forms of all through bills of lading, also the forms of receipts for goods passing over the said lines respectively, shall be such as from time to time are agreed upon by the officials of the parties hereto, or in default of agreement, settled by arbitration.

Forty-fifth.—Her Majesty shall have the right to deduct from the rentals herein agreed to be paid to the company any sum or sums of money which may hereafter become due by the company to Her Majesty, and for the payment of which the company is in default.

Forty-sixth.—That, should any difficulty arise between Her Majesty and the company under any clause of this agreement, or respecting the carrying out of the same according to its true intent and meaning, such differences shall from time to time, as the same may arise, be referred to the award and determination of three arbitrators, one of whom shall be nominated by the Minister, one by the company, and the third by the two so nominated; provided always, that if either party should for one month after notice that the other has nominated its arbitrator, omit or refuse to make a nomination, or if the two nominated should refuse or omit to nominate the third, then the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Canada, or, in his absence or refusal or inability to act, the Senior Puisne Judge present in Ottawa and willing to act, may, on the application of either party on notice to the other, nominate the required arbitrator.

Forty-seventh.—In case of the death or refusal to act of any arbitrator, or if for any cause the office of any arbitrator becomes vacant, his successor shall be nominated in the same manner as is provided for his appointment in the first instance, unless the parties otherwise agree, and in case such successor be not nominated by the party entitled to nominate him, within one month after the happening of the vacancy, and after receiving notice requiring him to make such nomination, then the said Chief Justice, under the circumstances aforesaid, or the Senior Puisne Judge willing to act, may, on the application of either party, nominate such successor.

Forty-eighth.—The arbitrators so chosen shall, within one month after the last appointment, proceed to determine the matters referred, and they, or a majority of them, shall make and publish their award within one month thereafter, or within such further time as they shall in writing appoint, such extension of time to be made by a majority of the arbitrators, and the award of a majority of them shall be final.

Forty-ninth.—Nothing herein contained shall in any way merge or affect the claims or rights of Her Majesty, if any such there be, as they now exist against the company or the property of the company, other than that which is the subject-matter of this agreement.

Fiftieth.—Clause 20 of the agreement between the company and the Intercolonial Railway, dated 17th July, 1879, is rescinded during the life of this agreement and all other clauses of said agreement inconsistent herewith.

In witness whereof these presents (in quadruplicate) have been signed by the Honourable the Minister of Railways and Canals, pursuant to Order in Council, dated the 24th March, A.D. 1897, and the seal of the Department of Railways and Canals has been hereto affixed, and the company has hereto affixed its corporate seal and these presents have been signed by the General Manager of the company, the day and year first above written.

Motion agreed to.

DISMISSAL OF TURNER ADMINISTRATION, BRITISH COLUMBIA.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) laid on the Table of the House a return to an Address dated May 1st, 1899, for copies of all petitions addressed to His Excellency the Governor General by members of the Turner Administration in the province of British Columbia respecting the conduct of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of that province, together with all papers and correspondence on the same.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved :

That the rule be suspended and that the papers laid on the Table of the House by the right hon. Prime Minister touching the proceedings in British Columbia respecting the dismissal of the Turner Administration, be printed.

Motion agreed to.

PROSPECTUS OF THE BRITISH-CANADIAN GOLD FIELDS COMPANY.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton) moved :

For leave to lay on the Table of the House a copy of the prospectus of the British-Canadian Gold Fields Company, and the correspondence and other papers on file in the Department of the Interior, respecting the alleged connection of Mr. William Ogilvie with that company.

Motion agreed to.

STANLEY PARK AND DEADMAN'S ISLAND.

The MINISTER OF MILITIA AND DEFENCE (Mr. Borden) laid on the Table of the House a return to an Address dated May 1st, 1899, for copies of all Orders in Council and papers respecting Stanley Park and Deadman's Island, Vancouver, B.C.

Mr. PRIOR moved :

That the rule be suspended, and that the papers brought down by the hon. Minister of Militia and Defence, referring to Stanley Park and Deadman's Island, be printed.

Motion agreed to.

ARRIVAL AT AND DEPARTURE FROM YUKON OF MR. JUSTICE MAGUIRE.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton) if he has yet heard from Judge Maguire. In regard to the question I asked as to when Judge Maguire arrived and when he left the judicial district of the Yukon, the hon. Minister said, on the 17th of May : "I shall give instructions to have a telegram sent to Judge Maguire." I would like to ask if he has yet heard from Judge Maguire.

Mr. BLAIR.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). I directed a telegram to be sent on that day and I called the attention of the Deputy Minister this morning, who promised to look up and see if any reply has been received. He is to let me know ; I can let the hon. gentleman know to-morrow what the result is.

REGULATIONS RESPECTING LOBSTER FISHERIES.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Mr. Speaker, before the Orders of the Day are called, I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) to a question asked by the hon. member for Kent, N.B. (Mr. McInerney) several weeks ago, as to what he proposes to do with the regulations respecting the fishing of lobster. The lobster season is advanced now, and the people engaged in the industry are anxious to know what the extent of the season is going to be.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I have already, this session, made two statements respecting this matter. I said distinctly that it is not the intention of the department to recommend to the Government the introduction of new regulations this year, that the lobster fishery would be carried on under the old regulations, and, in addition to that, as the commissioners had recommended an extension of time in certain localities, the probabilities were that these extensions, to some extent, if not to the whole extent recommended, would be granted this present year. I also stated that the old regulation respecting size limit, which had been recommended by the commissioners to be reduced, would not be strictly enforced beyond the limit that they recommended. Instructions have been sent to the inspectors to that effect.

Mr. McDOUGALL. We quite understand that the regulations in regard to the size cannot be put into operation this year, but what the fishermen are anxious to know is as to what time they will be permitted to fish. Will they be permitted to fish during the period for which they fished last year or for a further period ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They will be permitted, certainly, to fish for the period that they fished for last year, and, in all human probability, during a part at least of the further period that the commissioners recommended the season should be extended in certain localities, and the only point in debate is as to whether it shall be for the whole period of that extension this year.

THE ALIEN LABOUR LAW.

Mr. J. ROSS ROBERTSON (East Toronto). Before the Orders of the Day are called, I have a matter to which I desire to call the attention of the right hon. First Minister and the members of the Government, in connection with the enforcing of the Alien Labour Law in this country. I desire also to ask a question of the right hon. gentleman, and to say a few words, and in order to put myself in order, I will conclude with a resolution. I would like to ask the First Minister whether he proposes to have the Alien Labour Law enforced as regards the importation of aliens from the United States to take the place of the striking trackmen on the Grand Trunk Railway. This matter is one of great importance at this juncture to the labour interests of this country. Within the last half hour I have been placed in possession of an important telegram from Buffalo, which is none less than an interview with Mr. Inspector DeBarry, who, as the representative of the American Government, speaks undoubtedly with authority, and his words, I am sure, will be listened to with interest by members of this House, more particularly by members of the Government. Mr. DeBarry, in this interview, held within the past two hours, is reported to have said :

Inspector DeBarry was asked to-day concerning the rumours in Canada that the Alien Labour Law has been suspended. He stated most emphatically that the law was still in force, and that, so far as he knew, there had been no talk of suspending it.

"I have heard the rumour from several sources," he said, "but there is not the slightest truth in it. The law has not been suspended, and will not be suspended. It could not be suspended, except by a two-thirds vote of both Houses of Congress and the signature of the President. I do not know that there has been any talk of such a move in this country, and presume that the rumour started from the statement of some one in Canada who might be interested in getting labourers over here to work. I understand from the labour people of this city that a Bill is now being prepared and will be sent to Congressman Alexander for introduction next session, making even more stringent the Alien Contract Labour Law."

Now, it seems to me, Mr. Speaker, that the statement of the First Minister yesterday shows that the understanding arrived at at Washington has not the same effect on both sides of the line. An understanding which restrains the agents of the Canadian Minister of Justice and does not restrain Mr. Inspector DeBarry, is not what Canadians have a right to expect from this Government. The Minister of Justice leaves the door wide open to alien labourers who are brought in to take the place of the Grand Trunk Railway striking trackmen, but the door at Buffalo will remain shut tight against Canadian labourers who might be brought in to take the place of striking grain handlers. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), who, I am glad to see in his place, suggested the other night that these trackmen would have to abide by the law of supply and demand. Well,

I suppose that we all have to abide by that law to some extent; but I do think that this Government should take some steps to prevent the Grand Trunk Railway from supplying this demand for cheap labour by the importation of foreigners and aliens. I am informed that the Grand Trunk Railway is bringing in foreigners to take the place of these striking Canadian trackmen, who are forced to strike by reason of the starvation wages paid by the Grand Trunk Railway; for I think that 70, 80 and 90 cents a day is not enough to keep body and soul together, let alone for a man to keep himself, his wife and his children. I understand that the Alien Labour Law cannot be used to protect Canadian workingmen on account of the continued existence of the joint high commission. All I can say is that Inspector De Barry at Buffalo, has not the same amount of respect for the joint high commission that the Minister of Justice and his colleagues in the Canadian Government have. I am informed, on very good authority, that during the present strike of the grain-handlers in Buffalo, Mr. W. J. O'Connor, who is the boss contractor, was notified by DeBarry that he would be liable to a penalty of $1,000 a day if he attempted to bring in alien labourers. It is strange that the United States does not suspend this Alien Law against labour from Canada for the reason which the Minister of Justice urges as an excuse for suspending the Alien Law against labour from the United States. It seems to me that the authorities of the United States go right on protecting workingmen just as if the joint high commission had never been called into being. It is strange that the Government of Canada cannot enforce this law in the interests of justice and fair-play. I would not hesitate to speak out against these strikers if they were in the wrong, but if ever a strike was justified, this strike is justified, for the reason that it is impossible for these workingmen to live at the miserly wages paid by the Grand Trunk Railway. In my judgment, the Government of this country has no right to play into the hands of the Grand Trunk Railway by suspending the Alien Labour Law in Canada, while the American labour law remains in full force at Buffalo and other places on the frontier. I do not believe that the United States would be irritated if this Government should step in to prevent this country from being flooded with foreign labourers. The men whom the Grand Trunk Railway are importing are not native Americans, and there is no large force of public opinion in the United States which would utter one word of protest if the Government of this country had only the courage to do what is right in this matter. I move that the House adjourn.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I must at once express my great regret, when a matter of such importance as the strike on the Grand Trunk Railway is going on, and when everybody who speaks in this House should be careful not to speak in terms that will inflame passion, that the hon. member from East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) should have thought fit to use such language as we have just heard. If the hon. gentleman had listened to the voice of fair-play and justice at this time, he would have refrained from using such language as he has just uttered. I may tell him that my sympathies are just as strong as his can be in favour of the men who at the present time are on strike. But, Sir, I would be sorry to prejudge that case without waiting until we have heard from the other side. There must be another side to this case, as there is to every other case; but the hon. gentleman pronounces himself immediately in favour of the men without having heard at all from the Grand Trunk Railway. In matters of this kind, we know that everybody's sympathies always go naturally to the employee. Will the hon. gentleman undertake to tell me at this moment that he is ready to pass sentence and to condemn the Grand Trunk Railway, without having heard their defence? If he is prepared to do that, I am not. For my part, I think that before we intervene we should allow the Grand Trunk Railway to say something for themselves. Let me go further. I believe that the hon. gentleman is over-zealous in this matter, that he is not so much actuated with sympathy for the Grand Trunk Railway men who are on strike as he is with a desire to create some political capital at the expense of the Government. If the hon. gentleman had been desirous of promoting the interests of the striking trackmen, he would have refrained from inflaming passion as he does at the present moment; he would have waited until he had heard what the Grand Trunk Railway had to say. When the whole matter has been laid before the public, and when we have had a demand from the men to put the Alien Labour Law into force, and if we then fail to do so, we will be open to the criticism of the hon. gentleman. But it seems to me that he would have consulted his own position in this House if, before blaming the Government, he had ascertained whether a demand had come to us from the men who are on strike to put the Alien Labour Law into force. Now, I say that, speaking on this, the last day of May, between three and four o'clock in the afternoon, to my knowledge, no demand has been made upon the Government to enforce the Alien Labour Law by the men who are on strike. No demand has been made, and, if no demand has been made, what has the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross Robertson) to say? Would it not be better for him to ascertain, first, whether any demand has been made upon us. I may be in error; perhaps something has come to the Department of Justice, but I do not think I am in error, and I believe that no demand has been made. Under these circumstances, the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross Robertson) is simply over-reaching himself, for the purpose, not of favouring the interests of the men whom he pretends to serve, but simply to gratify his own political spite.

Now, with regard to the law itself; let me say to the hon. gentleman, that I repeat to-day what I said yesterday: We have not an official understanding with the American authorities, that the Alien Labour Law is to be suspended. The hon. gentleman knows, as I know, that a law cannot be suspended except by the authority that enacted it. But the authorities which have the power to put the law in force, can exercise that power with severity or with leniency, and that was the understanding we had. Moreover, I am bold to say at this moment that along the 3,000 miles of boundary between Canada and the United States, there is only one spot where the American Alien Labour Law is being enforced, and that is at the city of Buffalo. Everywhere else the Alien Labour Law of the United States is not being enforced. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross Robertson) knows, and, if he does not know it, he ought to know it, that to-day, and every day, in the town of Windsor, there are at least 300 men going to work in Detroit from that town. There the law is not enforced, and, Sir, if we are to enforce the law without respect to the private understanding that has been arrived at, we will have a serious condition of things in this country, for all these Canadians who now find a living in the city of Detroit, will have to remain on the Canadian side of the frontier and lose their work. The case mentioned by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross Robertson) is not the only one we have to think over in connection with this subject. We have to take into consideration, not only the condition of one class of the community, but the condition of all classes; and, when we are endeavouring to have a better understanding between the two countries, when the men who are engaged in these negotiations at the present time are doing their best to have this very obnoxious law removed, it is not a time to inflame passion, as the hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross Robertson) would have us do. As I said yesterday, I beg to repeat to-day: At this moment the matter is engaging the attention of the Government, and we are applying ourselves to it. I repeat that, when the trackmen choose to come to us and make their complaint, we shall hear that complaint, and give it every possible consideration and attention.

Sr CHARLES TUPPER (Cape Breton). I cannot congratulate the leader of the House upon the deliverance which he has just made. That right hon. gentleman has not done himself justice. He is a great master of form, but, when he loses his temper, he loses his form and presents himself in a light that does not add to the dignity of the position he occupies. The hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson), as was his right, as a member of this House, asked the attention of the Government to a very important subject, and he drew the attention of the First Minister to the fact that yesterday, on the floor of this House, the right hon. gentleman stated that an agreement practically had been entered into between the Government of the United States and the Government of Canada, that, pending the negotiations of the plenipotentiaries representing Great Britain and the United States, the Alien Labour Law should be suspended. My hon. friend (Mr. Ross Robertson) also drew the attention of the First Minister to the fact that, at this very important crisis, he (Mr. Ross Robertson) had information that a gentleman in the United States held that it was not in the power of the Government of the United States to suspend the Labour Laws without an Act of Congress and the signature of the President; and that this gentleman was, consequently, enforcing the Alien Labour Law against Canadians. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross Robertson) also pointed out, in a very temperate manner, that this being the condition of things, a large number of labourers were to be imported from the United States into Canada to take the place of Canadian workmen. The right hon. gentleman, in answer to this, got into a temper, and violated one of the first rules of debate by imputing motives to the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson). Does the right hon. gentleman not know that even a Prime Minister of Canada is not permitted to impute motives on the floor of this House? The hon. gentleman from Toronto had as much right to make this statement of his views and opinions as any other hon. gentleman in this House, and he had a right to urge upon the Government the course that, in his judgment, he thought ought be pursued. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross Robertson) did not speak in the interests of the strikers, or in the interest of the Grand Trunk Railway Company merely, but he spoke on the broader question, as to whether the Alien Labour Law was to be suspended in Canada, and not suspended in the United States of America. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Ross Robertson) only did justice to himself, to his constituents, and to this House, when he drew the attention of the First Minister to the fact that this was, apparently, a one-sided arrangement, by which no labour could be sent from Canada into the United States, while labour could come freely from the United States into Canada. The Government of Canada, it appeared, were prepared to observe the arrangement that had been entered into, while there was no corresponding evidence of such a policy on the part of the United States authorities. I see no cause for heat; I see no cause for the violent temper which the First Minister exhibited. I am afraid there is something outside which we have not seen, which ruffled the temper of my right hon. friend, or else he would not approach a pure business question, a question of first-rate importance to this country, in the spirit in which he did approach it. The hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) only discharged his duty in presenting this question to the House, and his remarks demand the careful consideration of the Government, unless the Government intend to become active participators in this unhappy controversy which we all deplore, and which is going on between a great railway corporation and a number of its employees. This requires the most careful and prudent consideration on the part of the Government, and, instead of doing anything which would appear like their taking a part directly with one side or the other to the controversy, they should see that the laws are maintained and equal justice meted out to Canadians in the United States, as is meted out in Canada to aliens—this in the face of a law on our statute-book, which, if enforced, would prevent aliens coming in here. I can quite see the reasonableness of the Government of the United States and of the Government of Canada doing all they possibly can to remove every source of irritation between the two countries, pending these negotiations; but I think the Government of Canada should take care that this should not be a one-sided arrangement, and that, while they, in good faith, are observing the understanding, the United States should be required to observe it also. The statement is made here, that again and again since this commission has been sitting, the United States of America had exercised the right which, under the laws of their country, they are enabled to exercise, of preventing Canadian labour entering their country, and this is a question which deserves the calm and serious consideration of the Canadian Government.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (South Leeds). Mr. Speaker, living as I do on the line of the Grand Trunk Railway, and being largely interested in that road, as well as in the welfare of the men working on that road, I understood the right hon. the Premier, in reply to the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson), to say that he had heard the men's side of the case, but that he had not heard the other side, and there was another side to it. Now, I want to inform the right hon. Premier that this strike has been on now for ten days, and I want to ask the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair), who ought to know something about railways, if any member of the Government does, whether he thinks it is safe for passengers to travel over a line of railway running for ten days without a man on the track? Her Majesty's mails are carried on that railway, and where the mails go passengers expect that their lives are safe. Just at the time this strike was inaugurated a change was made on the line of the Grand Trunk system; engines of double the weight of those previously used being introduced. Formerly the engines weighed from 65 to 70 tons. To-day several weigh from 110 to 120 tons light, and when loaded with coal and water they run up to 140 or 150 tons. These engines will haul a train of from 45 to 60 cars, and from 30 to 40 trains a day run over the track. On Monday, when I came down, I was informed that there was not a man on the track from Toronto to Montreal, or perhaps from Sarnia to Portland; yet there were passenger trains running at the rate of 50 or 60 miles an hour, and heavy freight trains following. I want to ask the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) whether it is not time to ask the Grand Trunk Railway Company to show their side of the case, and to say to them: "We send our mails over your road, and we invite passengers to travel by it, and we want to know whether the public are safe in travelling over your railway." In an accident occurs, I will lay the blame largely at the door of this Government for not taking some action in this matter. On Sunday at Mallorytown, a rail was found which had not a spike from one end to the other, and the fish-plates were loosened.

An hon. MEMBER. Who loosened them?

Mr. TAYLOR. I do not know; but I know that the men are not interfering with the track. The conductor had to stop his train and go and get a hammer and spike down the rail before the engine could go over it. Is that a safe state of affairs? The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke) the other day drew the attention of the First Minister to the question of the enforcement of the Alien Labour Law, and I understand that there is a deputation from Hamilton in the gallery to-day asking the Government to enforce that law. I am not taking sides either with the men or the company; but I say that the Government, having heard the men, ought to ask the Grand Trunk Railway Company to report to them whether the lives of passengers and property are safe on their railway. I ask the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) to say whether he would consider the Intercolonial Railway would be safe in running for ten days without a sectionman on the track. The Grand Trunk Railway Company are so careful that every Sunday they detail a man to go over every section of the track regularly all the year round to see that no spikes or nuts have become loosened by the passing of trains over it on the Sabbath day; and here we are ten days, with trains running and engines of double capacity, and not a man on the line from one end to the other to look after the condition of the track. All along the track you will see ties distributed that should be put in this spring. After the recent heavy rains the road-bed must be coming more or less out of order, the ties becoming soft, and it is important that the road-bed should be made as safe as possible. I think it is time the Government should interfere in this matter, and I would like to ask the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) whether he thinks a railroad, with 40 trains a day running over it, is safe without having a man to inspect the track?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman appeals to me, and he asks me a question, I presume with the expectation that I will give him a reply. I should be very glad to do so, if I thought in any answer I could make, I would be able to cover the ground adequately or do so with a knowledge of the facts as they exist. The hon. gentleman assumes that the Grand Trunk Railway, from Sarnia to Portland possibly, has at the present moment, and has had since this strike commenced, no men upon it to afford any protection to the trains passing over it or to the public who use the line. Now, I cannot accept the hon. gentleman's statement as to that as a statement of fact. I think the hon. gentleman must be quite unwarranted in making that statement. I do not believe, because he passed along the track on a train, and did not see any sectionmen, that he can justly conclude that there was no man looking after the road or watching it or giving any attention or care to it. On the contrary, I would rather assume that the Grand Trunk Railway Company, with its enormous interests involved, with its great property, and with public life in its care, would scarcely undertake to run its trains for a period of ten days without taking any precaution, or without having done what it deemed to be sufficient in order to protect its property and the lives of the people travelling over its road. I would rather be inclined to think that, and I am more justified in thinking it because I am told that the Grand Trunk Railway Company has men carefully going over its line. It has not, of course, its usual complement of men. It has not the regularly employed sectionmen; but it has men who are able to give such an inspection to the road as to afford a satisfactory and adequate assurance that its trains may run over the line without danger to public life or to its own property. The hon. gentleman says that if any accident does happen, however, he is going to hold this Government responsible for the results. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would just ascertain, before he jumps to a conclusion of that kind—a grave and serious conclusion to arrive at, a conclusion which would involve the charge of manslaughter against the officers of the Government or the Government as a whole if any life were sacrificed—just what means and power the Government have to put an end to this strike, and to declare either that the Grand Trunk Railway Company shall pay the men what they ask, or that the men shall accept exactly what the Grand Trunk Railway Company chooses to offer them, and immediately resume their employment. I would ask the hon. gentleman, if he can do so, to give the House some little idea of the grounds on which he bases the conclusion that this Government has the power, and has failed to exercise that power. I am not aware myself of any direction in which I could look to find any authority, statutory or otherwise, to enable me to exercise the power which the hon. gentleman assumes that I possess, and which he says this Government ought to exercise. I do not deny that the question of this strike is one of very grave and serious interest, not to the Government alone, but to everybody who is at all interested in the safety and security of the travelling public; but after you have come to that conclusion, you have not got very far, and I am not able to see any direction in which I can, by any other mode than merely communicating with the Grand Trunk people, lend any assistance at the present juncture towards bringing about a settlement of this serious difficulty. If there were any means of doing it, I need not say to this House that not only myself but every member of the Government would be instantly alive to the importance of bringing a settlement about. We do not require to be nagged on by gentlemen in Opposition; we do not require that the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) should tell us we ought to do this. It might fairly and reasonably be taken for granted that if there is any way in which we can be satisfied that we can effectively interfere in this trouble we will be only too anxious to do it. I can say for myself that I would only be too anxious to do it. I have received no appeal of any kind or description from the trackmen to interfere or from the Grand Trunk Railway. I have not been invited, except by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, to interfere, and I do not know how it would be possible for me to interfere with any effect at all at present, or how I could communicate other than in a mere friendly and amicable way with the different people concerned in that controversy, and say to them: You ought to bring this controversy to an end. But they know that already; I cannot tell them more than they already know; and I have not any power to do any more than I have done. There is really no use in hon. gentlemen taking up a matter of such seriousness and gravity and trying to make political capital out of it when there is no direction in which they can point, possibly, for us to act, in which we have not acted; and there are no members more desirous than the members of the Government to see this trouble brought speedily to a termination.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). In looking around for a reason to account for the exceeding warmth with which the right hon. Prime Minister and one of his chief lieutenants have replied to my hon. friend from East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson), it seems to me that, perhaps, that warmth arises from the fact that these gentlemen find themselves in somewhat of a hole in connection with this matter. They have very loudly called for complaints to be made by the trackmen, but the right hon. gentleman has prevented any appeal being made by the trackmen or anybody else in connection with the importation of alien labour, by reason of the policy which the right hon. gentleman has announced to this House several times this session. Again, this afternoon he told the House that he had made an arrangement at Washington, by which, practically, the operation of the Canadian Alien Labour Law is suspended, and has admitted that he is carrying out that arrangement, so that it is perfectly clear he does not intend, for the time being at least, to prevent the importation of alien labour into Canada. Undoubtedly, that is the reason why the hon. gentleman, in the face of these two great strikes, finds himself in rather a difficult place, and so, instead of answering in reason and good temper, he adopts, practically, the course of scolding my hon. friend from East Toronto, an example which is followed by the Minister of Railways, who, with a great deal of heat, answered the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) in very much the same vein.

I may say, too, that the policy of the Government has not only been announced in this House, but also by means of a communication from the Minister of Justice of Canada, who speaks particularly upon this matter for the Government, because it is one that comes within his duties as Minister of Justice, and after that policy had been given to the country, after the explicit statement from the Minister of Justice of Canada, that no man who is opposed to the importation of alien labour need apply to this Government, the right hon. gentleman, with that splendid effect which he has upon his followers behind him, rises and boldly challenges the member for East Toronto to say what complaint has been made to this Government. He asks this question after this Government has given notice to the public that no complaint need be made, because of this arrangement between it and the members of the commission at Washington. It appears to me that the right hon. gentleman, though, perhaps, not intending it, is trifling with the House and evading the question entirely raised by the hon. member for East Toronto.

Let us have a straight declaration from the right hon. gentleman. If complaints are made, and if it can be shown that, upon a large scale, and to the serious detriment of Canadian citizens and labourers, alien labourers are being imported into Canada, will the right hon. Prime Minister stand by that tentative arrangement which he made at Washington and turn a deaf ear to the appeals which may be made in Canada? Let him answer that question instead of scolding the hon. member for East Toronto for bringing up this question of exceedingly vital importance to many industrious men and their families who are citizens of Canada.

Mr. IVES. I only rise to protest against the doctrine laid down by the Minister of Railways, that the Government is entirely powerless except to mediate. I do not mean to say that such a case has arisen as would justify the Government in interfering and interfering effectively, but I do say that the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) is entirely wrong when he says that the Government are powerless, and there is nothing in the world they can do, no matter what may happen between the men and the Grand Trunk Railway, or what may hereafter be the condition of a track of the Grand Trunk Railway and its fitness to carry people without danger to their lives. The hon. Minister surely knows that no new railway can be opened for business, carry a passenger or sell a ticket, until it has been inspected by the Government officer and received the permission of the Government to carry passengers. He also knows that if a railway company has been given a license to carry passengers, the Government may, because of the unsafe conditions of its business or road-bed, absolutely close that railway and prevent its doing its business altogether. I do not care what railway it may be or how perfect its road-bed may be or how safe, if it gets into a difficulty with its men and its track is interfered with and becomes unsafe, and the lives of Her Majesty's loyal subjects are in danger, the Government are not powerless, as the Minister of Railways (Mr. Blair) says they are; and if he does not know, he had better consult his chief engineer, who will tell him how the Government may interfere and prevent the Grand Trunk Railway selling a ticket in Canada at all. More than that. The Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) whom I do not see here for the moment can bring a very strong argument to bear on the Grand Trunk if the road becomes unsafe for Her Majesty's mails. He can cancel their contract, and stop their carriage of the mails, if he finds that the road is unsafe, so that the Government are not in that powerless position described by the Minister of Railways.

Mr. JAMES SUTHERLAND (North Oxford). The hon. leader of the Opposition seems to find a great deal of fault with the leader of the Government because the right hon. First Minister expressed his regret that the hon. member for East Toronto should have brought up this matter, as the course he followed was calculated to do some harm in the country. The ex-Minister, the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Ives) has, no doubt, scolded the hon. member (Mr. Ross Robertson) much more strongly than the leader of the Government has. As he has pointed out, there is no occasion, under the present circumstances, why the Government should take action.

Mr. IVES. I did not say the case had arisen.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. You said distinctly, if I understood you aright, that no case had arisen in which the Government should interfere.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In any case, I think it is much to be regretted that matters of this kind should be so lightly brought up in this House. My hon. friend from East Toronto evidently held a brief from the Yankee inspector, DeBarry, of Buffalo. He read what DeBarry had sent him about the Alien Labour Law, and its enforcement, and what he was going to do; but the hon. gentleman did not lay before this House the complaint of a single Canadian, either as to entering Buffalo seeking employment, or any other. There was not a single complaint from any workman of Canada, or from any Canadian citizen; but the hon. gentleman has presented this statement of the views of this Yankee inspector as to the Alien Labour Law being still in force.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. When Canadians do complain, they cannot get redress.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is another unsupported statement made by the hon. gentleman. What I complain of is, that a gentleman holding the position he does, a member of this House representing an important constituency, should take the position he has taken, when he has done nothing himself to bring about some settlement between the Grand Trunk and their men. If the hon. gentleman had been sincere in his desire to assist the workmen who are protesting against the wages they receive, he might have done something to bring about a settlement of the dispute. He might have used his influence with the city council; he might have sought the assistance of others. I would appeal to the House if I am not right, when I say, that the hon. gentleman made not one common-sense suggestion as to how this matter should be dealt with. His whole desire appeared to be to attack the Government, to make some cheap political capital out of this matter, to gain some cheap notoriety, regardless of the fact that there are very grave interests involved in this matter at the present time. This is a serious matter, that should not be brought up and dealt with as lightly as it has been by the hon. gentleman to-day, and as it was by his colleague (Mr. Clarke) the other day, trying to arouse passion, to create sentiment and sympathy that may work great injury to this country. The hon. leader of the Opposition (Sir Charles Tupper), a gentleman of long parliamentary experience, himself an ex-Minister of Railways, though he defended the hon. member for East Toronto to some extent, did not make one suggestion as to how the matter was to be dealt with. But I know that, though he may differ from this side in politics, he has the interest of the people too much at heart to ever attempt to use, like—yes, I will say, like a demagogue—a case of this kind, where so much injury to the public interests might be the result. He was dealing with this question in a serious manner. If he were to-day in the position of Minister of Railways and Canals, he would expect the co-operation of his colleagues on both sides. I merely arose to express my great regret that the hon. gentleman from East Toronto should have procured an opinion from a Yankee inspector, and made that the ground for bringing up in the House a matter of this kind, to arouse public opinion, and not to benefit the men who think that they are not being fairly dealt with by the Grand Trunk. I do not believe that one man on either side of the House will say, that he is more anxious that these men should receive all that they are entitled to, than are members who sit on the side opposite to him. The Government and the leader of the Government are as anxious as any others can be to do everything that is possible to be done to assist any Canadian citizen who may be unjustly dealt with. But there are great interests involved, and it is most unfortunate that, for purely political purposes, matters should be brought up so lightly that may have results the end of which we cannot foresee.

Mr. WILLIAM McCLEARY (Welland). It is a matter of surprise to me that, whenever the question of the enforcement or non-enforcement of the Alien Labour Law is brought up in this House, it should irritate, as it does, the Government and their supporters. We are supposed to have an Alien Labour Law on our statute-books, in fact and in word the same as the Alien Labour Law of the United States; and why we, on this side, should be accused of ulterior motives, whenever we ask the Government, why they are not looking after the interests of the people of this country in regard to the enforcement of that law, is something that calls for explanation. I should think it would be the absolute duty of members on both sides of this House to protect the honour and integrity of this country, rather than to show a disposition to cringe before and bow down to the dictates of a foreign power. The hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) speaks of the Opposition bringing this up in a nagging way. I can tell the hon. gentleman, that it was only because the members on this side of the House insisted that something should be done in this regard, that we have what we have. I do not see any necessity for the expression used by the leader of the Government (Sir Wilfrid Laurier), when he spoke of our inflaming passions and prejudices when matters of this kind are brought to the attention of Parliament or of the people. We only want our Government to look after the interests of the artisans of this country and of our citizens generally, as the authorities in the United States look after the interests of their people. Yesterday, I referred to a strike that was going on in the city of Hamilton among employees of the Calder Company. Now, I have before me a telegram that was sent to the mayor of that city which shows the attitude of the Government in regard to the question of the enforcement of the Alien Labour Law. It appears that the employers imported a number of persons from the other side to take the places of the strikers. The mayor of Hamilton, who, I understand, is in this city to-day regarding this very same matter, put himself in communication with the Minister of Justice, asking for protection for the men who had gone out on strike, and asking that the law should be enforced. Well, Sir, here is the reply:

The Attorney General is not at liberty to give his assent to the prosecution for the infraction of the Alien Labour Law to which you refer, an understanding having been reached last summer by the international commissioners that the Alien Labour Law, until the negotiations were concluded, should remain in abeyance in Canada in respect to persons coming from the United States, and in the United States in respect to persons going thither from Canada. Until it is shown that this understanding is not observed by the United States officers, no action can be taken here.

(Sgd.) DAVID MILLS.

Now, this is the attitude our Government take in that regard. The Minister of Justice says, that no interference must be asked, and our law must not be enforced. But in this very same paper we have a statement—which is backed up by the telegram read by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson)—as to what DeBarry has been doing. Let me read the article, which the House may have seen, with regard to the sending back by DeBarry of a young Canadian who had gone across the river:

Buffalo, N.Y., May 28.—John R. DeBarry, immigration inspector, escorted George Hunt, a Canadian bricklayer, to the International Bridge yesterday morning, and saw him safely on the train bound for the Queen's Dominion. Hunt arrived in Buffalo early Saturday morning, and carried a kit of tools. He was promptly held up by the customs men and turned over to Inspector DeBarry. Hunt told the inspector that he had been invited to visit his uncle, a bricklayer, in Cleveland.

"What do you need tools for, if you are just going to visit your uncle?" asked Inspector DeBarry.

"Oh, I thought I might do a little work to pay expenses," replied Hunt.

"Well," said Mr. DeBarry, "I consider that a violation of the Alien Labour Law; you will have to go back to Canada."

Now, that is the way Mr. DeBarry looked at the matter.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). What paper is that?

Mr. McCLEARY. It is in the Hamilton "Spectator" of May 29th, and you will see it in the daily papers of the 27th or 28th; it is dated at Buffalo, May 28th.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Did the hon. gentleman not see that that was denied as a mere mythical statement?

Mr. McCLEARY. I did not.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. You had better consult the papers more carefully.

Mr. McCLEARY. I do not believe it has been authoritatively denied. I live too near the international line not to know what is going on in this regard. It is not the first instance, it is not the second instance, it is only one of hundreds that we do not know of, and this accidentally came to light. I was going to say that this is the way the United States Government authorities abide by the agreement that the Prime Minister says was entered into at Washington to suspend the enforcement of the Alien Labour Law. Now, under these conditions, why should not the Minister of Justice come to the aid and assistance of our own men in the city of Hamilton as against the labour imported to compete with them? I say it is unfair, it is a disgraceful thing for the Government of this country to fail to protect our own interests when we have to stand such insults from men like DeBarry from day to day, who insults our people, and we have to submit to it. I think we ought to be a little bigger in our own estimation, and we ought to carry out in its entirety the Alien Labour Law we have on the statute-book.

Mr. A. T. WOOD (Hamilton). The citizens of Hamilton, I think, have great reason to be grateful to the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McCleary) for the care and interest he takes in the management of the affairs of that city. This is the second time within twenty-four hours that he has got up to vindicate the rights of the people of Hamilton. I should suppose, there being two members representing Hamilton in this House, that they would be quite capable of looking after the interests of that city. Now, this matter has not escaped the attention of my colleague and myself. On several occasions we have brought to the attention of the Government questions relating to the Alien Labour Law, and we were so well satisfied with the position of the Government in this matter that we were willing to leave it in their hands without resorting to enforced agitation. We are quite satisfied that the Government will consult the interests of the country as well if we leave them alone, as they will by hearing it constantly dinned into their ears by those hon. gentlemen opposite for political effect. I am quite satisfied that our hon. friend from Welland (Mr. McCleary), who lives very close to the border, has no reason to find fault with anything that is being done along the border. But some people have been imported into Hamilton, and of course he makes that a ground of attack upon the Government for not taking care of the interests of the people of Hamilton. Now, Mr. Speaker, the mayor of Hamilton has taken this matter in hand, and the members for Hamilton and the people of Hamilton themselves are quite satisfied that he will look after their interests just as well as the member for Welland can possibly do, and I think a good deal better. The mayor has communicated with us in reference to this matter, we are well aware of the action he has taken, and we endorse it. I am satisfied that the political capital that hon. gentlemen opposite seek to make out of this question will not amount to much. Of course, I am very sorry to know that Mr. Calder has had to import people from New York into Hamilton in consequence of this strike; but from what I know of the mayor, I think that matter will be settled in the course of a very few days. The people of Hamilton and the strikers of Hamilton are reasonable people, and when they know that the Government have taken every means to bring about a fair and reasonable adjustment of this difficulty, they are not going to put any obstacle in the way of that adjustment. I, for one, am perfectly satisfied to leave the matter in the hands of the Government, knowing that they are the proper parties to see that protection is given to Canadian labourers. I am sorry that there has been a strike by the Grand Trunk Railway trackmen. I know that these men who live in my own city are first-class citizens, and I regret very much that they have had to take this step. But I am satisfied that at a very early day the management of the Grand Trunk Railway, in their own interests, as well as in the interests of the public, will come to an amicable settlement with their employees; and I think they will be able to make a far better settlement than can be done by outside agitators trying to force the hands of the Government. I am satisfied that the Government have taken the right course in this matter, in leaving it in the hands of the parties interested until they are requested, either by the strikers or by the Grand Trunk Railway people to intervene, and if they do intervene, they will do it in the interests of all concerned.

Mr. G. H. BERTRAM (Centre Toronto). I desire to say a word or two in connection with the question which has been brought to the notice of the House by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson). I am inclined to think that there is too much of a tendency in this House, if I may be allowed to say so, to agitate certain questions and to bring forward certain ideas with reference to some very difficult questions, at a time when premature agitation is one of the worst possible ways that can be adopted to bring about a settlement. No one will deny that in this country, and in all countries, strikes are one of the most difficult questions that we have to deal with at any time; and when any one outside of the employers and employees undertake to express an opinion on a question of that kind, he should see that he is in possession of all the facts on both sides before he undertakes to express such opinion, otherwise he will be apt to do an injustice to either one side or the other. Now, I have had some experience in matters of this kind, because it is only within the last few weeks that a serious strike took place in the city of Toronto, among the moulders in the iron foundries. A strike is now going on in Montreal; I have been written to with reference to that strike by the employers of labour in Montreal, and I have been doing all I possibly can, by correspondence, to bring about a better condition of things there.

It is to be remembered that the question which has been brought before the House is a complicated one. On the one side you are dealing with the position the Government should take with reference to the Alien Labour Law, and you are also dealing with a strike between the Grand Trunk Railway and its employees. Now, premature action on the part of a Government, or on the part of an individual, sometimes does a great deal of harm. I have no hesitation in saying, that in all matters of this kind, the sympathy of the general public is generally with the men. My experience is that if you meet the men frankly and fairly and deal with these questions frankly and fairly, you will never have any trouble in getting them settled, and I earnestly hope that the Grand Trunk Railway Company will meet these men in a more frank manner than they have done, and have this question settled. In a strike that took place in Toronto, the other day, I was waited upon by a body of men composed of a representative from the United States as well as members of a Canadian committee, and when I was dealing with the matter, I found a good deal of feeling in connection with it. My effort in connection with the matter was to try to get rid of all feeling and bring my best judgment to bear on the question with these men. I took advantage of the opportunity of meeting the workmen in their own lodge room, and I discussed freely and frankly with them the whole question, and there was no difficulty in settling the matter, and the men went to work next morning without a murmur. What Parliament should do is to see that nothing is done to create any feeling between employers and employees, because the moment you create any feeling, by partisan appeals such as were made by the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) and other hon. gentlemen, you are doing a great deal of harm. Whether the statement published in the newspapers is true or not, I cannot tell, but, if it is true, that the Grand Trunk Railway Company are hiring men to do a certain class of work for less than a dollar a day. I think the pay is too low. I think the company should pay more, but we are not going to do any good creating any ill-feeling or excitement at the present time. The alien labour question is a most difficult one to deal with. I believe that the Canadian Alien Labour Law and the American Alien Labour Law are a disgrace to both countries. I believe these laws are contrary to the spirit of good legislation, and I shall be only too glad if the efforts of the International Commission, in the direction of trying to do away with that law, on both sides of the line, are successful. It has been stated by the right hon. leader of the Government that there has been an understanding—a tacit understanding—that that law should not be enforced pending the international negotiations, and I think, on the whole, it has not been enforced. There has been some difficulty always at Buffalo. There seems to be a hot-headed American there who is trying to make trouble between the two countries, but, outside of Buffalo, it does not appear to have been enforced. If we cannot get the Alien Labour Law of the United States abolished, then, I say, we will require to have a stringent and strong Canadian Alien Labour Law, because if they are determined to enforce that kind of legislation against us we will be compelled to enforce similar legislation against them. But I believe, that the tendency of members of this House to take sides in a strike when it occurs is doing something that is unwise and which does not reflect credit upon themselves. During these last few days the same question has been put to the leader of the Government over and over again, in reference to the Alien Labour Law and the Grand Trunk strike. I do not say for one moment they are brought forward for the purpose of making political capital out of them, but, it seems to me, I repeat, that these questions are being discussed before we are in possession of the facts, and, therefore, I think the House should frown down these continued attempts and should seek to bring its judgment to bear rather than its feelings on the matter. Until the International Commission has finally disposed of its work and disposed of the Alien Labour Law, I think we should try to get along without enforcing it on either side of the line. I understand from the remarks of the right hon. leader of the Government, that the Government is in correspondence with Washington, I suppose, to know whether the Alien Labour Law is being enforced by the United States, and if the Government ascertains, that, notwithstanding the understanding arrived at, they are enforcing that Alien Labour Law, Canada will be required to take some action without waiting for the International Commission to conclude its work, but, in the meantime, I think there should be some confidence displayed in the Government. The members of the Opposition are not the only men who are thinking about this question. I believe the Government is just as strongly interested in the Alien Labour Law and is doing what it can in the interest of the Canadian workingman as any hon. member of this House. As far as the Grand Trunk Railway is concerned, I am sure the Government will be only too glad to employ its best offices to bring an end to that unfortunate strike, because, if it is not brought to an end soon, something will have to be done to bring it to an end. I do not think that a great deal will be accomplished by continuing a discussion of this kind in this House.

Mr. T. D. CRAIG (East Durham). Mr. Speaker, I am sure that with a great many of the general observations made by the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) every hon. member of this House will agree, but I was rather surprised to find that, in attacking the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Ross Robertson) for taking sides with the men and calling him a partisan, he showed that he was a partisan himself. All that the hon. member for East Toronto said about this question, and the question he brought up was not the question of the strike of the trackmen, but the question of the enforcement of the Alien Labour Law—all that the hon. member said was that he thought the wages were too low, if they were below $1 a day. The hon. member for Centre Toronto took the same ground himself, and how could he accuse the hon. member for East Toronto of partisanship for saying that which he himself said, is something I cannot understand. We all agree that these strikes are difficult matters to settle. I am not going to say anything about the present strike of the trackmen of the Grand Trunk Railway, except that I hope the Grand Trunk will soon see their way clear to give these men some increase in their wages. I hope the strike will soon be settled in the interest of all concerned. The point I wish to say a word or two about is in regard to the Alien Labour Law. The Alien Labour Law was passed after a promise, made by the right hon. Prime Minister, that if the United States did not modify their law after he had made representations to them, then a law would be passed by this House exactly similar to theirs. That promise was not carried out, because our law is not similar to theirs. Their law really enforces itself; our law has to be put in force by the Government. I may say, and this is principally why I am speaking in regard to this matter, that Mr. WOOD.

I supported the Government in making our law as it is. But, I think, there are occasions on which the Government should feel bound to enforce this law or notify the parties that it will be enforced, and one of these occasions exists to-day. Why is the law not enforced? The reply given is that the people of the United States have suspended the operation of their law, but we know that their law is enforced in some places. It is enforced in places other than Buffalo. I think I heard of men being turned back at Detroit when they were going into the United States to work. The reason for the non-enforcement of our law, which is given, is that an agreement was made between the Governments of the two countries that, while these negotiations were going on, this matter should be suspended. It is an interesting question to ask with whom was that agreement made. Was that agreement made by our Government with the Government of the United States? If that is so, I think the least our Government can do is to represent to the Government of the United States that, while our Government are keeping our part of the bargain, the United States are not keeping theirs. I wish to say, in regard to the statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister that there has been no demand made for the enforcement of that law by the trackmen of the Grand Trunk, that I think there has been a demand made in this House. The trackmen of the Grand Trunk Railway look to their representatives in this House to represent them in this matter. I know that, because, when I was at Port Hope, a few days ago, I saw several of these men at the station there, and they told me that this matter should be brought up in the House, so that the answer given that no demand has been made by these men falls to the ground. The hon. member for West Toronto (Mr. Clarke), who is not here now, brought this matter to the attention of the Government and made a demand on them. I want to say, Sir, that if there ever was a time when this law should be enforced, that time is the present. If it is the fact, that the Grand Trunk Railway Company intend to bring into Canada, Italians to take the place of these strikers, then the Government should at once make it known that they will, under such conditions, enforce the provisions of this Alien Labour Law and not allow these men to enter our country. In saying this, I do not take sides either in favour of the men or in favour of the Grand Trunk Railway Company; but if the Grand Trunk Railway is allowed, while this law is upon the statute-book, to bring in Italians from the States to take the place of Canadian workingmen, then I do say that the Government is taking the side of the Grand Trunk Railway Company. At this juncture, the Government should realize that this law is upon the statute-book for a certain purpose, and I do not think the American commissioners should take any offence, in a special case of this kind, if our Government let it be known that the Grand Trunk Railway could not import Italians or others to take the place of the strikers, and that they would see that the provisions of the Act are put in operation for this particular occasion. I do not think any one could object to that, and I believe that if the Government took that course, the trackmen would realize that the Government was giving them fair-play.

Mr. WM. MCGREGOR (North Essex). Mr. Speaker, I deeply regret the differences which have arisen between the trackmen and the Grand Trunk Railway Company. I have lived along that line for at least forty years, and I know a large number of the gentlemen who are in charge of this work, and knowing them, I feel satisfied that the day is not far distant when they will settle this trouble. The Grand Trunk Railway has been properly organized and the work is being properly carried on, and I know the workmen well, and I feel satisfied they will do what is right. I believe that both sides are anxious to have an end to this controversy. Now, as to the Alien Labour Law, it ill-becomes gentlemen opposite to make so great ado about this matter. For ten years the hon. member for South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) rose in his place every session, and demanded that an Alien Labour Law should be passed, but he walked out of the House at the end of each session without any legislation being enacted by his Conservative friends, and it was not until this Government came into power that an Alien Labour Act was passed. It is true, that it may be said, that the law is not now enforced, but the right hon. the leader of the House has given a good reason why the law is not in force today. And if the trackmen on the Grand Trunk Railway are being injured by Americans coming in here, we feel satisfied that the Government will enforce the labour law to its full extent. In the city of Windsor, which I have the honour to represent, we have at least six or seven hundred persons passing from one side to the other daily, and yet we have no trouble as to the labour question. Our young ladies go over to Detroit to work as typewriters, our young men go over to work as mechanics and store-keepers, and that occurs not only in the city of Windsor, but in the town of Walkerville, where two or three hundred cross daily, and in the town of Sandwich where the people move backward and forward across the boundary line as they think fit, and are not interfered with. If that labour law were enforced rigidly, it would make quite a difference to us, because a very large number of families would have to remove from the Canadian side and reside on the American side of the line. It is true, that some residents on the United States side, would have to come and live in Canada, but at present we are part and parcel of each other's country, and we live as amicably and freely together as any close neighbours could live. I feel satisfied that it is better for the Government to allow the Alien Labour Law to remain as it is, if there is any possibility in the near future of having a settlement between Canada and the American republic. I feel also, that we will not have to appeal to Parliament for a settlement of the difficulties between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and the trackmen, because I believe that an arrangement will soon be arrived at by which justice will be done to the workmen.

Mr. A. B. INGRAM (East Elgin). This is the tenth session that I have had the honour of sitting in this House, and I believe that during each of these sessions of this Parliament, I have heard the Alien Labour Law discussed. I have heard my hon. friend from South Leeds (Mr. Taylor) taunted by hon. gentlemen in this House because he did not press his Alien Labour Bill, but so far as I am a judge of the conduct of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) he did press his Bill on every occasion, to the extent that was justified under the rules of the House. It must be remembered that both the leader of the Government and the leader of the Opposition, as well as several of their followers on both sides were in those days strongly opposed to that measure becoming law. Let me say at the outset that I am opposed to the class of legislation under which an Alien Labour Law comes. I believe it is wrong legislation for the United States to enact, and I believe it is wrong legislation for Canada to enact. In the early stages of the introduction of that Bill this Parliament was justified in not passing legislation of the kind, but within the last few years, owing to the conduct of the United States and their officers this Parliament should have placed an Act on the statute-books of Canada, similar to the Act passed by the United States of America, and when the United States signified their willingness not to enforce the law, then let the Parliament of Canada, or the Government of Canada, not enforce the Canadian Alien Labour Law. That is the stand I take with reference to that question.

I have something to say now with respect to the Grand Trunk strike, and its connection with the Alien Labour Law. Some hon. gentlemen in this House say that it is merely a question between the Grand Trunk Railway Company and their employees, but I look upon it from a broader standpoint. I say, Sir, that every Canadian citizen who rides on the Grand Trunk Railway is interested in this question. It is not merely a question between the Grand Trunk Railway and their employees as to wages, but it is a question which concerns the safety of the lives of all who travel on Grand Trunk Railway trains. As a practical railway man, I must say that to my mind there is no employec on the railway who has more responsible duties to discharge than the man who looks after the track. Every engineer who runs his train on the road has his life placed in the hands of the trackmen. Every curve on the line requires to be examined closely each day, the track is liable to spread if it is not looked after, and if it does spread and a passenger train leaves the track, the lives and limbs of the travelling public are in danger. It is, therefore, not merely a question of what wages shall be paid to the trackmen, but a question of much greater concern. When my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) says that we are not justified in bringing up this question in the House he is quite astray. It is our duty as representatives of the people of Canada to bring to the attention of the Government, the necessity of interfering in a matter of this kind when it involves the lives of the public generally. I therefore say that something should be done by the Government, in view of the fact that I am credibly informed that the Grand Trunk Railway Company have refused to treat with these men, have refused to enter into an arbitration, or to negotiate. If that be the fact, then it is the duty of the Government to interfere in the matter, and to say: that the public interest is at stake, that the lives of our citizens are at stake, and to make the demand on the railway company, we shall enter into an arbitration as to the cause of the difficulties between you and your employees.

My hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram) said it was a premature agitation. Has my hon. friend lived so long in this country without knowing, as a large employer of labour himself, that 98 cents a day is insufficient for the livelihood of any working-man? Does he not know that this agitation has been going on for years, and that, at last, after trying every other means in their power, the men have been compelled to strike in order to get an increase of pay? Therefore, I say, that a member of this House is doing no more than his duty, when he rises in his place and calls the attention of the Government to this very important question. I have nothing to say against the Grand Trunk Railway Company. There is very much to be said in its favour. I believe the management is doing everything in its power to put that road on a paying basis. But, to my mind, it is false economy to interfere with the very foundation of the road or to refuse to deal with the men, and thus to leave the road-bed in a dangerous condition, causing traffic to leave the railway which may never come back to it. I say, if it is true, as represented by the public press of this country, that there is scarcely a man to be found examining the track between Montreal and Toronto, it is the duty of this Parliament to see that the Grand Trunk Company do place men on the road to see that the track is in proper condition. With regard to importing Italians to do the work.

Mr. INGRAM.

I say this work requires skilled men, men who have had experience on the track for years, and I would do all in my power to compel the Grand Trunk Company to put skilled, and not unskilled, labour on the track. If no action is taken by the Government at an early day, I think there is, perhaps, a section in the Railway Act which might be invoked to bring the Railway Department into the matter. I understand that section 205 provides that, where an engine, a railway track, bridges, cars, or anything of that description, is not in a proper state of repair, any person, on finding that to be the case, has only to notify the Department of Railways and Canals, and it will be the duty of that department to send an engineer to examine what is complained of; and, if it is found, upon such an examination, that any of the works of the Grand Trunk Railway are not in a proper state of repair, the Railway Department may compel the company to put them in a proper state of repair. It seems to me, in view of the attitude of the Government, and the stand taken by the Grand Trunk Railway Company, that this is the only course the employees can take in order to bring this Government to understand the real condition of affairs.

Mr. ROSS ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted, in explanation, and in reply to the question put to me by the right hon. First Minister, which I did not catch at the time of speaking, to say, that the agents of the Grand Trunk striking trackmen have been doing their best for some days past to get hold of the Government agent in Toronto to place their case before him; but, every time they go to his office, they are told that he is out of town, and the last reply they got was, that he was in Muskoka, fishing. If the Government are powerless to do anything in this matter, why do they not refer it to the hon. member for Centre Toronto (Mr. Bertram). He made the tariff, and why not let him settle this strike?

Mr. H. J. LOGAN (Cumberland). Mr. Speaker, during this discussion, great sympathy has been expressed for the men engaged in this strike. My opinion is that men engaged in a struggle of this kind want more than cold sympathy. For my part, I cannot agree with what has been said on this side of the House, that the Government should not interfere or offer their services. I have had some experience, in my short lifetime, with labour troubles, and I cannot agree with the statement that has been made here to-day, that a third party is not appreciated in these struggles. I believe there are certain times in labour struggles when only a third party can be of assistance. When men and their employers get so estranged that they refuse to treat with each other, it is only a third party who can intervene and bring the trouble to a settlement. This may be an impracticable suggestion of mine ; but I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is the duty of the Minister of Railways of Canada to-day—it will do no harm, at any rate—to offer his services as a mediator between the great Grand Trunk system, which has received immense subsidies from this country, and these men who are endeavouring to get their rights. Somebody has said to-day, that we have not got the facts before us. Mr. Speaker, the very fact that Canadian men, men of our own nationality, are asked to work, and support their wives and families on 97 cents a day, is a sufficient reason, to my mind, why interference should take place at the earliest possible moment. We are sending immigration agents to every part of the wide world, inviting men to come to Canada. Do you think they will come, when they see in the papers of their country that 1,800 or 2,000 men of a great railway system in Canada are out of work and striking—for what? To get over 97 cents a day. A fine immigration advertisement that must be for Canada in the countries of Europe. I think, therefore, it is the duty of the Minister of Railways, in the interest of Canada, in the interest of those men who are fighting for justice for themselves and their families, to offer his services as mediator. As I said before, if it does no good, it cannot possibly do any harm. There must be danger to-day in travelling over the Grand Trunk Railway system ; it may be small or great, but there is certainly danger, and, therefore the Minister of Railways should offer his services, and endeavour to put an end to this disgraceful condition of affairs—that, in the last year of the nineteenth century, this Canada of ours, this growing country, which we claim to be prosperous from one end to the other, which has an immense surplus, should have within its borders men by the thousands who are compelled to strike because they are only paid the mean, insignificant, indecent salary of 97 cents a day.

Motion to adjourn negatived.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 127) to amend the Bank Act—(Mr. Fielding)—read the third time and passed.

QUEBEC HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick) moved third reading of Bill (No. 91) to amend and consolidate the Act relating to the Harbour Commissioners of Quebec.

Mr. T. CHASE CASGRAIN (Montmorency). I beg to move that this Bill be not now read the third time, but be sent back to the Committee of the Whole with instructions to amend it, by substituting for subsection 2 of section 16, the following :—

The powers of the corporation as pilotage authority may be delegated to any five commissioners, of whom the chairman of the corporation of pilots for and below the harbour of Quebec shall be one.

Those who were in the House last evening, when this Bill was discussed, are familiar with the question I have now the honour of bringing up the second time before the House. The law relating to the harbour commission, as it stood before, constituted the board of harbour commissioners for the harbour of Quebec a judicial tribunal to try pilots who had infringed the by-laws of the corporation or the commissioners, or who by some fault of theirs had caused accidents to happen to vessels of which they were in charge. The harbour commission of Quebec is composed of nine members, five of whom are appointed by the Government and four elected by the shipping interest and the board of trade of Quebec City. When pilots were brought up before the board for trial, five members, under the law now sought to be changed, constituted the court, and a less number could not sit. The change provided by this measure is that the powers of the corporation, as pilotage authority, may be delegated to any three commissioners, of whom the chairman of the corporation of pilots for and below the harbour of Quebec shall be one. So that, according to the Bill before the House, this court would be composed of three members only.

I would like to draw the attention of the House to the important powers vested in the harbour commission, sitting as a court, for the trial of pilots. These pilots for and below the harbour of Quebec, have to serve a long period of apprenticeship—an apprenticeship of nine years—and by a law passed in recent years, that term is made much longer, because no man can now become a pilot before the number is reduced from the present number down to 120, I believe. So that some of these men have been in apprenticeship of nine, ten, and even fifteen years. They are a first-rate set of men. There are no better pilots in Canada, and probably not on the continent of America. This board has the power of depriving a pilot of his branch or license, and thus depriving him for ever of his means of earning a livelihood. It will therefore be seen that the powers vested in this board, as a judicial tribunal, are very great. Not only can it fine a pilot, but in some cases can send him to jail, and in others deprive him of his license or branch. I have no quarrel with the board as at present composed, as I said last night. The gentlemen who constitute it are as good as the average members of harbour commissioners throughout Canada no doubt, but I would call attention to the fact that they are not trained in the science of navigation. For instance, the chairman, Mr. Laliberté, a very worthy citizen, is a furrier. Then, again,

Mr. Arcand, is a broker, and Mr. Rioux is a grocer, and Mr. Chabot, I believe, is now the manager of a small line of steamers; so that, apart from those who represent the shipping interest, and have more or less knowledge of the rules of navigation, such as Mr. Macpherson, the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Dobell), and Mr. Carbray, really the board is composed of men who, when they sit in judgment on a pilot, are not proficient in the matters upon which they are called to adjudicate. There is safety in numbers. If the board is composed of at least five as a quorum, as under the present law, the pilot accused has a chance of having somebody upon the board who knows something about navigation, and can give him not only a fair and impartial trial, but a trial in which the knowledge of the gentlemen on the board who know something of navigation, will be brought to bear and be of great assistance. But the Bill proposes that the quorum of this judicial tribunal, having the great powers I have mentioned, will be reduced to three. No reason has been given for the change, except that it is inconvenient for the members of the board to come so often to the meetings. I venture to state, without fear of contradiction, that there are not more than ten trials of pilots every year, and it seems to me, therefore, that the members of the commission have not very good reason for asking that this change be made. Again, it must be remembered that the harbour commissioners do not give their services for nothing. It is true that the fees they receive are not very great, but still the emoluments and the honour of the position are sufficient inducement to make the position very freely sought after. So that, seeing the great interest which the pilots have at stake, seeing that their means of living for all time to come is at stake, and, on the other hand, taking into account the slight inconvenience that the members of the commission will be put to by having to sit on pilotage cases, five or six or even ten times, during the season of navigation, it seems to me the House should easily come to the conclusion that there is not sufficient reason for reducing the quorum to three.

I would also call attention to this fact, that the law fixes the quorum of the commission for ordinary routine work at five. So that petty office work or any small matter of administration of the affairs of the corporation or any minor question of routine, cannot be settled unless five members of the commission are present. But when these men are brought before the board to be tried, when they are to appear before a judicial tribunal which can condemn them to a fine or imprisonment, or deprive them of their license, that is of the right to follow their occupation, then the quorum is reduced to three. It seems to me that the amendment which I have offered is one that should commend itself to the fair-mindedness and spirit of justice of every member of this Chamber.

The SOLICITOR GENERAL (Mr. Fitzpatrick). Under the law as it now stands, the corporation is composed of nine commissioners, exclusive of the superintendent of the corporations of pilots, who is brought in when the commissioners exercise the powers conferred upon them as a pilotage authority. Under the law as it stood formerly, five members of the harbour commission constituted a quorum for all the purposes of the commission. That law remains. But it is provided here that, for certain cases where commissioners exercise judicial powers conferred upon the board, it shall be optional with the board to delegate to three members the exercise of those powers. But this does not preclude all the members sitting if the board so decide. This is an optional power given to the harbour commissioners, which they may exercise or not as they please. I would like to call your attention to the fact that a similar law was enacted in 1894 for the benefit of the Montreal Harbour Board, where there are many more complaints with regard to pilots than they have in Quebec, and I have not heard of any complaint as to the operation of that law of 1894. I can see no good reason why a law which is found to work so satisfactorily in the case of Montreal should not be applied to Quebec.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. As to the law of 1894, I may say a word, because I had some responsibility in connection with the matter at that time. I am heartily in accord with the proposed amendment of the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Casgrain), notwithstanding that the Bill of 1894 was in my hands containing the provision to which the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Fitzpatrick) refers. The subject was not debated nor was the point taken which has been taken by the hon. member for Montmorency. It does seem to me that the pilots have a right to ask through that hon. gentleman for this consideration at the hands of Parliament. There cannot be a more important matter dealt with by the quorum which, as the hon. gentleman says, is fixed at five, than the question whether a man is to be permitted to follow his profession as a pilot or not, whether he is to be suspended or whether his right to act as a pilot is to be taken away altogether. We cannot judge as to the effect of the law of 1894 merely by the absence of complaints as to the quorum. There are complaints as to the treatment of pilots. These men might not know that it would be an improvement of their fortunes and conditions to be placed under the control of five instead of under the control of three men. They might not appreciate the advantage it would be to them to have the ordinary quorum deal with their cases instead of the small number of three. But that they do complain of the treatment they receive there can be no question. They are forced, from time to time, to carry these matters into the courts at great expense. Even in Montreal, the district to which the hon. gentleman refers, where there is a small quorum, there are very great complaints indeed. I do not know enough of these complaints to judge between the pilots on the one hand and the gentlemen three, or five, as the case may be, who investigated their particular cases. Considering the importance of the subject of this motion, affecting as it does the very livelihood of these men, and knowing the great influence and power of the men who often call their conduct in question, the least we can do is to prevent the ordinary quorum being cut down when the board sit in trial or hold a court on such questions as this. For that reason, I am in favour of the amendment, and would be very glad to see the Act of 1894 amended in the same direction, so the pilots under the Montreal board should have the same rights when they are practically put upon trial.

INSPECTION OF PETROLEUM AND NAPHTHA.

Resolution providing for the payment of a license fee by every company or person engaged in the refining of petroleum in Canada, was read the first and second time.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the said resolution be referred to the Committee of the Whole upon Bill (No. 131) respecting the inspection of petroleum and naphtha.

Motion agreed to.

IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING.

Bill (No. 131) respecting the inspection of petroleum and naphtha.—(Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière).

AMENDMENT TO ADULTERATION ACT.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière) moved that Bill (No. 123) further to amend the Adulteration Act, be read the second time.

Motion agreed to.

House resolved itself into committee on said Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. This Bill was prepared at the request of some medical gentlemen, and I would ask the hon. member for Montreal West (Mr. Roddick) to explain to the committee the reasons of the amendment.

Mr. T. G. RODDICK (St. Antoine, Montreal). I may say, that the object of this Bill is to establish a uniform standard for the preparation of drugs. So far, no uniformity has existed. Several have been in existence in this country, have been tolerated, as it were—the British Pharmacopœia, the United States Pharmacopœia, the Le Codex Medicamentarius, and others. So that mistakes have been constantly made, some of them serious, from the fact that all drugs are not made from the same material, are not made of the same strength, and are not made of the same quality of material. I may explain by saying that some of the most poisonous drugs are prepared from the leaves of plants, some from the roots of plants, and some of them have different qualities. Some of them are prepared with alcohol of varying degrees of strength. The House, therefore, can understand that medical men especially are constantly in difficulty with regard to their prescriptions, and druggists themselves are often unable to know exactly what a doctor means, when he prescribes certain drugs. As an illustration, I might mention that the very important drug, aconite, has, in the British Pharmacopœia a strength equal to 5 per cent of the tincture of aconite, while, in the United States Pharmacopœia, it has a strength of 35 per cent. You see, therefore, how mistakes can be made. A medical man prescribes for a patient in Ottawa, or in Montreal, where the British Pharmacopœia is usually employed by druggists and by the manufacturers of drugs. He then goes to some distant part of this Dominion, New Brunswick, for instance, or on the border of the United States, or some part of Ontario, where druggists have clients from across the border, and where, for many reasons, they prefer to use the United States Pharmacopœia. The prescription is made up in Montreal, for instance, where the British Pharmacopœia is employed; but, when this patient wishes to get it filled in some other place, where the United States Pharmacopœia is employed, he has his prescription made up seven times the strength that the doctor originally intended, of this poisonous drug, aconite. That gives you some idea of the difficulty the profession has to contend with. Besides that, we find, as I said before, that some of the preparations are made from leaves, and some from roots, and the strength of the extract from the leaves and the extract from the roots are very different. Besides that, many of the preparations are prepared with a large quantity of alcohol by the British Pharmacopœia, and with a small quantity of alcohol by the United States Pharmacopœia. The British Pharmacopœia preparation extracts a number of alkaloids and other ingredients which the other does not. So, altogether, we would like, if possible, that some standard should be established. Now, this is an opportune time, because a new edition of the British Pharmacopœia is just coming out. It has been very carefully prepared by the best men in England, and Scotland, and Ireland.

and is undoubtedly the best book on the subject extant. The Medical Association, at its last meeting, in Quebec, last year, decided that the Government should be approached on this subject, with the view of making the British Pharmacopœia the standard, so that, when drugs are prescribed, it shall be understood by everybody, by druggists and by doctors, that the British Pharmacopœia is meant, and that, when any other preparation of any other pharmacopœia is meant, it should be specified: you ask for the United States Pharmacopœia, or the Codex, or you name whatever one you prefer. This, of course, is not intended to interfere, particularly with the business of men on the border. The idea is simply to have this uniform standard, and it is also going to be a very great service to the Department of Inland Revenue. The officials of that department will be able to detect fraudulent preparations, and will have a standard to go by, so that the whole thing will be very much simplified. I have nothing further to add to the explanation. I should be very glad to answer any question that may be asked respecting the subject.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. There are some small changes to be made in the Bill, and, perhaps, my hon. friend who has just explained the purpose of the Bill would like to stand near the chairman so that we can look over these changes together and see that they agree with the purpose of the Bill.

Mr. IVES. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue if he has received any representations in regard to the Bill since it was introduced?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. No.

Mr. IVES. What will be the effect of it as to preparations that are already in stock? Is it rendered criminal to use American preparations that are now kept in stock by druggists?

Mr. RODDICK. I do not know whether I quite understand the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. IVES. What I was saying was this: Of course, drug stores are more or less stocked with manufactured medicines and preparations. I have not studied the Bill very carefully, but what I wish to know is whether these preparations will be rendered useless by the passage of this Bill.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think my hon. friend (Mr. Roddick), who so clearly explained the purpose of the Bill, caught the statement of the hon. member (Mr. Ives) who is addressing him. It is an extremely difficult thing for an hon. gentleman to get the idea of a person, who is addressing him, if some person sitting near him is engaging him in conversation. I am afraid that my hon. friend from Montreal was prevented from hearing the question asked. The question asked is, whether, under this Bill preparations that are not designated by this Bill, would be prevented from being used. As I understand it from the very lucid explanation of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roddick), who has explained this Bill, it is simply this, that the British Pharmacopœia, which is now about to be published, is to be regarded as the standard, and that, if any other prescription from the United States Pharmacopœia or the Codex, or any other authority is used, except the British Pharmacopœia, the party prescribing must indicate, on the prescription, that the term used applies to the Pharmacopœia of the United States or to the Codex, or to whatever it may be. Inasmuch as a drug, designated by these different pharmacopœias are of altogether different strengths, unless this is done and the prescription is assumed to be under the British Pharmacopœia, very serious consequences might result from the greater strength of the preparations, as indicated by any other pharmacopœia, and to avoid that danger, any stock of the various druggists may be used, just as at present, only that the party prescribing will be required to indicate in his prescription it is not according to the British Pharmacopœia, but according to the United States Pharmacopœia, or the one that is named. I understand this is to be the case, and, if so, it will entirely remove any objection that my hon. friend has raised of interfering with the drugs and the different prescriptions now in the possession of various druggists.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Evidently the hon. leader of the Opposition cannot forgive me for having brought one of his friends (Mr. Roddick) to this side of the House. I declare that my motives were perfectly innocent. The conversation that I was carrying on with that hon. gentleman, and in regard to which the hon. leader of the Opposition took occasion to scold me, benevolently, was not in reference to the trip of my hon. friend to California, which, I am glad to see, has so much benefited him, but it was in answer to the question of the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Ives).

Mr. MONTAGUE. I listened with very great pleasure to the explanation of the Bill which was given by the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Roddick), who, by reason of his connection with the profession, understands thoroughly what is meant in this regard. But, I am quite convinced that this Bill does not carry out the idea that was given in this explanation by the hon. member for Montreal. More than that, I am quite convinced that the answer given by the hon. leader of the Opposition to the question of the hon. member for Sherbrooke, is not at all final, as, I think, the hon. gentleman will see, as regards the sale of articles which have been manufactured up to the present time, and which might be offered for sale. What does this Bill do? This Bill declares that anything is an adulteration except that which is prepared on certain lines and offered for sale under certain labels. I think the hon. Minister will agree with me that if an article of tincture had been prepared under the United States Pharmacopœia and was offered for sale in Canada, if this Bill passed, it would be declared an adulteration.

The parties exposing it for sale would be liable for punishment under this Act. That is the point I think is included in the Bill. I do not think the hon. member for Montreal (Mr. Roddick), or the Minister, intends that, but I think it is a fact, and if I am right in my supposition I submit that would be a hardship. I quite concur in the sentiments which have been expressed by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Roddick). The profession have had a good deal of trouble—perhaps more in the province of Quebec than in the province of Ontario, because while they have three pharmacopœias in the province of Quebec, we have only two in the province of Ontario that are at all in use. I quite agree in the desire of the profession to have a remedy applied, but I think this Bill does not apply a remedy, and while it does not apply a remedy it brings more hardship in the direction indicated by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Ives).

Mr. RODDICK. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) is probably not aware that this movement commenced in his own province of Ontario, and the following is an extract from the Pharmacy Act of Ontario passed last session:—

All compounds named in the British Pharmacopœia, shall be prepared according to the formula directed in the latest edition published "by authority," unless the College of Physicians and Surgeons of this province select another standard, or unless the label distinctly shows that the compound is prepared according to another formula.

That is the beginning of action on the part of the pharmacists in the Dominion, and we thought it better we should establish a standard here. It will not come into operation immediately, and I do not think any one is going to stop it. The amount of drugs in stock will not be so great as to last over a few months, and within a few months the whole thing will become uniform and work harmoniously. The druggists may still make up prescriptions according to the United States Pharmacopœia, but these must be specially labelled, and the officers of the Minister of Inland Revenue will know exactly what they are when they reach them. A doctor who prescribes from the United States Pharmacopœia or Codex has got to mention it. For instance, if he is prescribing tincture of aconite, he writes "tincture aconite U.S.P." or otherwise it will be from the British Pharmacopœia. I do not think there will be any difficulty in the way of the operation of this Bill. Instead of making a separate Bill, it was thought desirable to bring it in as an amendment to the Adulteration Act, so as to cause the least trouble possible, and at the same time reach the profession and the pharmacists just as effectually.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I find on reading down in another clause of the Bill, that I was rather misled in my opinion. I think perhaps there will be no difficulty.

Mr. MACDONALD (Huron). I was about to draw the attention of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Montague) to that point. I understand that the standard under which all preparations will be made will be the British Pharmacopœia, and that unless it is otherwise labelled, the druggist's order is supposed to be of the standard set forth in that pharmacopœia. If the article so ordered is not made out under that standard, then it must be labelled as belonging to the standard from which it has been taken. If it is taken from the United States Pharmacopœia, of course it must be so labelled. If it is not labelled then it is taken for granted that it is composed upon the British Pharmacopœia.

Mr. RODDICK. That is it.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I wish to add the words "latest edition of the" before the words "British Pharmacopœia."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think perhaps that may lead to a good deal of trouble.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. Medical men are bound to know the latest edition.

Mr. MONTAGUE. With all due respect to the Minister's opinion, I do not think that druggists through the country buy this British Pharmacopœia every year. It is only published every five or six years I understand, but the hon. gentleman knows that for a poor man it is quite an expensive work. Could not the hon. gentleman say the British Pharmacopœia of 1899?

Mr. RODDICK. If you put in the date you will have to change the Act every time a new edition of the Pharmacopœia is edited.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I think it is better to leave it the way I put it.

Mr. MONTAGUE. If a man does not have the latest edition he is subject to a penalty, if you insert these words.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. We can take out the provision with reference to the latest edition, and make it the edition of 1899.

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). I do not think the date should be put in. If that were done it would subject those concerned to penalties much quicker than if you leave in the words "last edition."

Mr. RODDICK.

Mr. MONTAGUE. Your idea would be to make him use the last edition of which he was aware?

Mr. FRASER (Guysborough). He might do that very well, and perhaps that is the practice, but I do not like to cast that aspersions upon him.

Mr. RODDICK. I really do not see what objection there is to making it the last edition. It is very cheap, costing only $3.

Mr. McLENNAN (Inverness). I certainly agree with the introducer of this Bill. The Bill, as it stands, states the case better than the amendment suggested by my hon. friend across the House, that is, that the latest edition of the pharmacopœia should be the standard in use. The standard of 1899 might in five years be considered a very old one. The science of medicine is a very progressive one, and five years make a considerable difference. I, therefore, think the wording of the Bill as it stands should be accepted.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. MONTAGUE. I still think this is going to subject a number of druggists to very great hardship.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

THE ADULTERATION ACT.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 123) further to amend the Adulteration Act.—(Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière.)

On subsection 1 of section 1.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I had an opportunity, after the committee rose, of talking this matter over with Dr. Roddick and some other gentlemen connected with the medical profession, and we came to the conclusion—and I promised, as Dr. Roddick was about to leave, that I would mention it to the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue—that it was better to say the edition of the British Pharmacopœia of 1898, which is the last edition. If you use the words “the latest edition,” the moment another edition is published in London, the parties would be absolutely acting illegally here before they could obtain a copy of that edition; and as new editions are only brought out after the lapse of five or ten years, when another edition comes out, the Act may be amended in the same way.

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE. I think the amendment is a good one.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—LAKE ERIE ENTRANCE TO WELLAND CANAL.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved that the House resolve itself in Committee of Supply.

Mr. W. H. MONTAGUE (Haldimand). Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I desire to take advantage of the opportunity to call the attention of the Government to a matter which has more particular reference to the Department of Railways and Canals. I am sorry that the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Blair) is not here; but I received a note from him saying that he was unavoidably detained. As I desire to have the matter before him and before the members of the Government prior to the consideration of the Estimates, I shall say what I have to say with the hope that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blair) will glance at it and consider it when he comes to deal with the question to which it refers. What I have to say refers particularly to the Welland Canal and the proposed expenditure of a large sum of money in connection with the harbour, which is at the entrance of that canal at Port Colborne. Representations have been made to the Minister by a strong deputation which came from the village of Port Colborne and the county of Welland, as well as by a very excellent speech which was delivered by the member for Welland (Mr. McCleary) the other day, calling for the expenditure of a large sum of money for the purpose of deepening the harbour and of constructing there a basin such as is required by the trade of the lakes. I am sure the House will believe me, Sir, that it is in no narrow spirit that I bring forward for the consideration of the Minister of Railways and Canals the matter to which I now refer, and which is of a great deal of importance to a part of the constituency which I have the honour to represent in this House. When public money is to be spent, we are glad, I fancy, if needs of the public service can be well served, to have that money spent in the constituency which we each individually represent in this House. But I am bound to say that this is not a matter arising from the mere question of the expenditure of money in a locality. I do not desire to look at it at all in that way; nor do I believe that the gentlemen who are now moving in the matter locally take so narrow a view of the position as one to which I have just referred. What we are anxious, I am sure, upon that side and upon this, is to see that what money is spent in the public service, and especially in connection with the matter of our waterways and the means of transportation, shall be spent in such a way as will give the greatest possible advantage with the least possible drain upon the public treasury.

It is pretty late in the day, I imagine, to say that a mistake was made in locating the lake harbour in the Welland Canal and in locating the line in the canal itself. And yet, I think I am within the judgment of men who have paid the best and most intelligent attention to that subject, and within the judgment of the very best lake captains and mariners, when I say that a mistake was made, and that instead of the Welland Canal being made along the line that it follows and having its lake port at Port Colborne as it has, that lake port might better have been established at another point and the line traversed by the Welland Canal might have been, with greater advantage and with greater economy to the country, established over another line. In the first place, Sir, the cost of the construction of the Welland Canal over the present route was a great deal more than it would have been over another route which might have been selected, by reason of the fact that it went through a section of country where very costly rock cutting and excavating was required, whereas another route might have been selected where there was no rock cutting at all. In the second place, I think the location was wrong by reason of the fact—of course, I am expressing the opinion of experts, because I do not pretend to any expert knowledge of the case myself—that the point which was selected for the Lake Erie entrance of the canal had no natural advantages whatever as a harbour, whereas, there was a port not far distant from the point at which the canal now touches Lake Erie which might have been made, with very little cost, a very excellent harbour, indeed. In justification of that statement, I need go no further than the speech of my hon. friend for Welland, who, the other day, in asking for the expenditure of a large sum of money at Port Colborne for the improvement of the harbour, stated very freely and very candidly to the House that Port Colborne was not a natural harbour at all. And what is the request now? After a large sum of money has been spent there, there is a request for the expenditure of a sum which, I think, will, in the end, amount to nearly a million dollars, for the construction of an efficient entrance, for blasting out the rock bottom of the harbour and for the construction of a basin which will accommodate the vessels which reach that port.

Well, Sir, this all results from the mistake which was made of selecting a point as a natural harbour which was not a natural harbour at all. It is worth while to inquire, just when we are on the eve of making greater expenditures, whether, if the expenditures which are now asked are made, the harbour will meet the requirements of a harbour for such a situation. Now, while Port Colborne, as I have stated, and as the hon. member for Welland (Mr. McCleary), if I understood his speech correctly, stated, is not a natural harbour, 15 miles from Port Colborne there is a natural harbour, namely, the harbour of Port Maitland, which, I am bound to say, is in the county of Haldimand and Monck, but which fact will not, I hope, prejudice its fair consideration by the Government of the day. The advantages of Port Maitland harbour are these: Port Maitland is situated at the mouth of the Grand River which at that point enters into Lake Erie; it is in consequence a natural land-locked harbour. It is always open two or three weeks earlier than Port Colborne. The lake bottom of the entrance is of sand and gravel, and consequently there would be no necessity whatever for blasting, as there is in Port Colborne. There is a natural depth of water there of about 22 feet; there are no accumulations of any kind, nor have there been any, to disturb the free entry of ships to that harbour. Already, at a very large expense, two long piers, some 1,500 feet in length, have been constructed, and between those two piers there is an ample entrance of 225 feet at their points, widening out to a space of some 500 yards of clear water harbour within the piers, affording, as I think the Government will find if they care to ask the opinions of navigators and of mariners, the very best harbour to be found upon the north shore of Lake Erie. In addition to that, for some five miles up the river there is a depth of from 20 to 25 feet of water, thus affording additional accommodation to shipping if there was too much to occupy the harbour to which I have referred. Now, Sir, the argument made by those who are advocating the expenditure at Port Colborne is a suggestion, and it is a suggestion that we offer, that by the expenditure of a large sum of money, large lake boats will be enabled to enter the harbour at Port Colborne and transfer to smaller craft. That can be done already at Port Maitland without the expenditure of a single cent. But those who are acquainted with the locality say to me: Well, would you construct a new canal from Port Maitland to the Welland Canal? In answer to that I say: Not at all, because already a canal is constructed from Port Maitland to the Welland Canal. Hon. gentlemen who have followed the history of the Welland Canal, know that when it was constructed the water for that canal was supplied by the Grand River. The Grand River was dammed at a point about six miles from Port Maitland. The feeder of the Welland Canal, through which all the water which originally supplied the canal came from the Grand River to the main body of the canal, is constructed from that dam to Welland Junction, some 20 miles distant. In its course it passes by Port Maitland about three-quarters, or, perhaps, less than three-quarters of a mile from the port, and there is a short slip from Port Maitland to the main line of the feeder. Now, in order to utilize the port at Maitland for all the purposes of a harbour and lake entrance for the Welland Canal and a lake entrance, all that is necessary is to expend a sum of money which I am told—and the hon. gentleman will be able to discover whether my information is correct—will be materially less than will be required for the mere improvement of the harbour at Port Colborne, in deepening the slip from Port Maitland to the main line of the feeder, and the feeder from its connection with that slip to the junction of the feeder with the main line of the canal at Welland Junction. This is not costly work, there being no rock cutting whatever. I am bringing these facts before the Government before it is finally decided to spend a large sum of money at the other point, because I think that in all fairness we may ask the Department of Railways and Canals, by means of its engineers, to compare the two schemes; and if the scheme of deepening the Port Colborne harbour is found to be the more advantageous, not more costly, to construct a permanent work—in other words, if the public interest will best be served by that plan—then I would say by all means spend the money at Port Colborne. But if, upon the other hand, as I think it may be shown, at Port Maitland with the expenditure of less money a more permanent work will be constructed, and a harbour provided which will be safer, of easier access and more popular among shipping men of the lakes, then I respectfully submit that the Government ought seriously to consider the question of following the suggestion which I have made in this connection. I do not expect any definite answer from the department, but what I was anxious to do, as I stated in the beginning, was, before the subject was finally disposed of by the Department of Railways and Canals, to ask them to have the two routes thoroughly investigated, to have a report of the engineers upon the practicability of the Port Maitland and feeder route before them, in order to decide intelligently upon the subject.

Mr. MONTAGUE.

Mr. WILLIAM McCLEARY (Welland). I want to say just a few words with reference to the observations made by my hon. friend from Haldimand (Mr. Montague). In the first place, no one ever expected or dreamt that Port Maitland had any claim to be a port for the reception of vessels until it was discovered by the hon. gentleman since the matter has been called to the attention of the public by the general knowledge that the transportation question was receiving some attention at the hands of the Government.

Mr. MONTAGUE. It was a port long before Port Colborne was ever thought of.

Mr. McCLEARY. Yes, and there are ports that are in oblivion now that were ports before Port Maitland was discovered. The hon. gentleman asks for this expenditure, because, as he says, it will be less expensive to build a line of canal 20 miles long—because that is what the length will be—than it would be to build a breakwater at Port Colborne, deepening the harbour from its present depth of 15 feet to a depth of 20 feet. He contends that it will be cheaper to do this than to do what I have latterly referred to. My hon. friend has very astutely told us that we have a canal built from the Welland Canal going to Port Maitland, but he does not tell you what kind of a canal it is. That formerly did do some service to the old Welland Canal as the feeder by which the water from the Grand River came down to the Welland Canal. But as he knows, and as his friends know very well, it is a little ditch that carries scows and rafts down occasionally; possibly it may carry a scow drawing four or five feet, it may be six feet deep in some places, and its width may be 30 or 40 feet in some places. So you see, Mr. Speaker, exactly what work would have to be done in order to give us a canal of say 300 feet wide or 250 feet wide, with a depth of 14 feet. The work we have to do at Port Colborne is so small, in this case, that there is no comparison between the two. It is too late in the day for my hon. friend to tell us that the Government have made a mistake in placing Port Colborne at the head of deep water navigation, because our money is already spent. We have fourteen feet of water at Port Colborne, and we take broad ground, not the narrow constituent ground, because we represent certain municipalities or certain constituencies that we ought to have some money spent there. That is not a broad ground at all. We take the ground we have taken because we have spent $24,000,000 or $25,000,000 in the Welland Canal; we cannot afford to let that go to waste or to imperil it. But, by the expenditure of this money I referred to a few days ago, at Port Colborne, we will have a system of navigation all the way to Montreal when the lower canals are completed. I, of course, admire the frankness of my hon. friend (Mr. Montague) in stating his case to the House, that inasmuch as Port Maitland is in his constituency—

Mr. MONTAGUE. I did not put it on that ground.

Mr. McCLEARY. Maybe I misunderstood the hon. gentleman, but we are looking at it from the broader ground that Canada has invested her money at Port Colborne, and that by spending a few thousand dollars there we would do all that is needful. While I would not like the Government not to listen to the hon. gentleman, or to entertain the statement that he has made to-night, still I think they have no other alternative than, instead of changing the policy which has been laid down by the different Governments to make Port Colborne the harbour and port of deep water navigation for the trade of the west.

RESPONSIBILITY OF MINISTERS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker, I am rather glad that the responsibility does not rest upon me of deciding between my two hon. friends. Both have made unanswerable cases in support of their particular views. I may say that I rise for the purpose of asking the assent of the House to a resolution, which, I believe, will commend itself equally to both sides of the House. I do not intend, so plain and obvious is the case, to occupy the time of the House or delay the consideration of the Estimates for any length of time. The reason for asking my right hon. friend (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) to accept this resolution is that it is not offered in any other spirit than with the view of placing on record the opinion of this House, irrespective of party, a principle that we all recognize as lying at the very foundation of parliamentary government, and that is the principle of the responsibility which devolves upon Ministers of the Crown, the duty and responsibility which they cannot evade and which, if they did attempt to evade in any way, would greatly undermine the value of that system of parliamentary government that we now enjoy. I will not say more than to read the resolution, because, as I said before, I expect my right hon. friend, to whom I handed a copy some time ago, to give his ready assent to it, and allow it to be made a record as a matter in which members of both sides of this House will agree. The resolution is as follows:—

This House is of opinion that it is required by our parliamentary system that every branch of the public service should be represented directly or indirectly in the Houses of Parliament; and this House is further of the opinion that the political heads who perform their duty are themselves solely responsible for every act of administration down to the minutest details of official routine. This House is further of the opinion that the Ministers of the Crown having entire control over the public departments, they are bound to assume responsibility for every official act.

This House is further of the opinion that Ministers of the Crown should not permit blame to be imputed to any subordinate for the manner in which the business of the country is transacted, except only in cases of personal misconduct, for which the political heads have the remedy in their own hands. If Ministers find that the permanent officers of the department do not work well under them, then it is their duty to devise some remedy for this inconvenience, but the responsibility should not be divided, it should be imposed only upon those who are able to answer for themselves in the Houses of Parliament.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). Mr. Speaker, I noticed with very great pleasure, if not with surprise, that when my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) has a sound proposition to offer to the House he can do it in a very few words. When my hon. friend has one of those terrible propositions to make—I do not say it with any reproach—he is very long, no doubt, in the effort to convince himself more than to convince the House. On this occasion I can find no fault with the proposition which my hon. friend has just laid down; in fact, it is the A B C of parliamentary government. We could not be expected to offer any more opposition to this motion than if my hon. friend had offered to put on record in this House that we believed in the Ten Commandments. I do not see any more reason for one than for the other. I cannot see what was the reason the hon. leader of the Opposition could possibly have in moving that resolution unless it be that in future the Opposition intend to live up to the doctrines which are there laid down. We do not at all, in any way, on this side of the House, intend to repudiate the responsibility which is ours, of being accountable to the House, not only for our own conduct, but for the conduct of those that are under us. We have officers dispersed all over this large country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific; they discharge certain duties entrusted to them by law, by the constitution, by the Administration, by the Government. If they have discharged these duties in a way which does not seem to be in consonance with the principles of sound administration and the matter is brought to our attention, we are responsible, we have to take the responsibility of investigating the matter. If we find that they are right we must support them, but if we find that they are wrong, then we must take another course, and perhaps, a more severe course. So far, there can be no difference of opinion. But I call the attention of my hon. friend, and of hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, to this paragraph in this resolution, just placed in your hands, Mr. Speaker:

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

This House is further of the opinion that Ministers of the Crown should not permit blame to be imputed to any subordinate for the manner in which the business of the country is transacted, except only in cases of personal misconduct.

It is in the recollection of the House, that early during this session my hon. friend from Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) attempted to hold the Government responsible for misconduct—I will not say misconduct, but alleged misconduct—on the part of an officer of the Government. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) attempted to hold the Government responsible for alleged misconduct on the part of Major Walsh, when he was administrator of the Yukon. Now, according to the principle which is laid down at the present time, how could the Government be responsible for the charges that were brought against Major Walsh? They were charges of personal misconduct, and so, I have in this resolution, out of the mouth of the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), the strongest condemnation which can be followed against the course followed on that occasion by the hon. member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper).

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, no.

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes. The hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) charged Major Walsh, not with dereliction of the duties of his office, but with personal misconduct; accused him of drunkenness, and accused him of associating with women of a certain character. Surely, the Government cannot be held responsible for that. That was a charge of personal misconduct, if ever there was a charge of personal misconduct; and the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) attempted then to fasten the blame of such conduct upon the Government. We have to-day, however, out of the mouth of the leader of the Opposition, the statement that in no case is the Government to be responsible for acts of personal misconduct by its officers. But there is another reason why the charges made against Major Walsh were absolutely without warrant, were absolutely without excuse, were—I cannot use any other words than that they were conceived in absolute wanton malice. Even if Major Walsh had been guilty of all that he was charged with, what was the Government to do against Major Walsh, who was no longer in the service of the Government? I can well imagine that, if one of our officials, during office hours, disgraces himself in any way, or has been guilty of conduct openly disreputable, and if we kept him in office, we would be responsible. But Major Walsh was no longer in the service of the Government, and even if every charge made against Major Walsh was true—it was not true, and no man now believes it. Perhaps it might be believed in certain places where Major Walsh is not known, but everywhere that Major Walsh was known, the charges were discarded with contempt, and no place more than in the town of Brockville, where Major Walsh lived.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will my hon. friend allow me to ask him a question?

The PRIME MINISTER. Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Does he regard the vote of every person who voted for the Conservative candidate as a vote believing and declaring that the charges against Major Walsh were true?

The PRIME MINISTER. I regard the vote as—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If not, then the statement the right hon. gentleman has made is worthless.

The PRIME MINISTER. I regard the Liberal vote that was given in Brockville by Conservatives who left the Conservative party, as a vindication of the character of Major Walsh; and all the more so, that the gentleman who openly charged Major Walsh on the floor of this House, had not the courage to repeat the accusation in the constituency of Brockville. For my part, I have no objection that the doctrine of responsibility should be applied to this Government; and, for our part, we shall not attempt to do what was done three, or four, or five years ago, in the Curran Bridge matter, when the Minister in charge of the department at that time washed his hands out of it, and said: It was not my fault, but the fault of my officers; I have nothing to do with it. But, Sir, the Minister was responsible. The works were within a few hours of Ottawa; everything that passed there must have been under his notice; he was responsible, but he shirked the responsibility. This Government has no intention of acting in that way. Let me call the attention of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper) to the last paragraph of his motion, and I respectfully call the attention of the whole House to it, because it may be instructive. It reads as follows:—

If Ministers find that a permanent officer of the department does not work well under them, then it is their duty to devise some remedy for this inconvenience.

Very well, if Ministers find that some permanent officers of the Government do not work well under them, then the Ministers have the duty laid upon them to devise the means to prevent that inconvenience, and, when we find officers who do not work well under us, I know of no better method or means which can be devised to put an end to that inconvenience, than by dismissing the offending officers. Now, I do not know that that method will commend itself to my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper), for I have never before heard him express himself in that way. We have been forced, upon other occasions, to dismiss officers who did not work well under us, and for that we have received a great deal of obloquy from the hon. gentleman. Here is our vindication now in this motion, and with all my heart I accept the motion of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Tupper).

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have been called into this debate rather summarily by the right hon. gentleman who leads this House. I perhaps may express my surprise that the right hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) was permitted to charge a member of this House with wanton malice in regard to remarks he had made when exercising his right in debate. The right hon. gentleman charged me with having been actuated with wanton malice.

Mr. SPEAKER. If these words were used by the right hon. the leader of the House, I did not notice them, as I was engaged otherwise. I am sure the right hon. gentleman did not mean them in an offensive sense.

The PRIME MINISTER. What I said was this: I said, it was impossible to conceive any other motive than wanton malice. If that be not parliamentary, I shall bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, and apologize; but I have to add, that it is impossible to characterize the conduct of my hon. friend (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) in parliamentary language.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Picton). For a gentleman whose chief reputation in the country, in political life, has been due to his manners, that is rather an extraordinary apology. But, from the observations he has made to-day, I take it that the right hon. gentleman is not yet out of the temper which he exhibited, not only this afternoon, but on several occasions recently when public affairs were being discussed. To come at once to the observations of the hon. gentleman (Sir Wilfrid Laurier) in regard to myself, I am amazed that he should make such a statement in reference to the charges I preferred against Major Walsh, and which I certainly in more solemn form, at an early day, will again prefer in no unmistakable language. Though I might have been more specific, I do not think any member of this House could have taken greater pains than I did to show that, in charging Major Walsh with drunkenness and immorality, I did not charge these offences against Major Walsh as merely acts of misconduct, wholly apart and disassociated from the high position which he held under the sign manual of His Excellency the Governor General of Canada, and as a representative of Canadian authority in the Yukon; I took pains to state that the information upon which I made that charge, and which I shall make again, when the opportunity occurs, was because, in connection with his drunkenness and immorality, the public business of that district was adversely affected. I will not, however, be drawn into a debate at this moment on that question. But the right hon. gentleman will have to deal with that and with the question of responsibility in another form than he supposes this afternoon. The right hon. gentleman should not have been so excited, if this resolution was harmless, requiring no argument, and was only equivalent to a motion laying down the proposition that the Ten Commandments should be approved of. Has he forgotten the spirit in which the Conservative Administration received a self-evident proposition at the hands of his colleague (Sir Richard Cartwright) in 1892, when that hon. gentleman brought up the subject as to the duty, as to the powers, as to the rights of the Public Accounts Committee? The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright), exercising his rights and discharging his duty, brought forward a proposition familiar to all students of parliamentary government, and the leader of the Government of that day courteously and quickly adopted that proposition. The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) had a reason for bringing this self-evident proposition to the attention of this Parliament—and what was it? It was, that he imagined, as he stated in this House—though explanations were offered—that there was a disposition on the part of the majority of the Public Accounts Committee to circumscribe and restrict the powers of that committee in regard to its inquisitorial functions.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) well recollects the incident; and what have we seen this session in Committee of Supply? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Fielding) is here; the Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) is here, and behind them is the junior member for Halifax (Mr. Russell); and in discussing the Public Accounts submitted with the approval of this Government, and laid on the Table of the House, and in criticising the manner in which the people's money has been expended, the excuse these hon. gentlemen attempted to suggest—and their language is reported—was that these expenditures were made under a certain officer; and then a little conversation took place across the House, which, I suppose, is in "Hazard" too: "Let me see, who was that officer? Yes, Mr. So-and-so, at Halifax, or Mr. So-and-so, elsewhere, a Tory appointment, a Conservative officer; let us look into the conduct of that officer; let us see whether he is careless, extravagant, or worse; we must take pains to look into these matters." And the suggestion was ever and again, not that the Ministers were there to justify the expenditure which they had made through their officers, or to answer here, which is the proper place for them to answer, as to why those expenditures had been made, but to suggest that if anything extravagant or improper had been done, it was done by some officer unauthorized, whose conduct must be inquired into. Now, the propositions contained in this resolution, to which the right hon. gentleman must, of course, subscribe, which he could not controvert, against which he could not bring any decent parliamentary authority in Great Britain or elsewhere, involve the very opposite position to that taken by his colleagues on one or two occasions this session. They involve entire responsibility for all acts done by officers who are permitted now to retain and hold the confidence of the Government; and in reference to the suggestion more than once thrown across the House, I, as a Conservative, cannot appreciate the force of it. Whether an official be a Conservative or a Liberal, no matter what his political antecedents may have been, he is an officer of the Government, and must answer to the Government as such, and the Government must answer to Parliament for all the acts of which they approve, and they approve of all acts they have not themselves taken any means to investigate or consider and deal with before bringing down the result of those acts for the approval of this Parliament. The hon. gentleman also went to the Curran Bridge for an example or illustration, and in that case he seemed to think there was a position taken by members on this side of the House inconsistent with the present position. Now, Mr. Speaker, I have a very clear recollection of all that occurred in that case, and the contrast between it and the case of the Yukon officials referred to by the right hon. gentleman is marked; because the late Government, while they were being harassed and attacked and criticised, were dealing with that matter, and were prosecuting the parties in any way directly or indirectly charged with offences. They had put the matter in the hands of counsel, and all the law officers in the service of the Government, with general instructions to investigate and follow out each case to the bitter end. The right hon. gentleman knows that the Government in that matter was not derelict in its duty, and, consequently, could not be placed in a position inconsistent with the principles of this resolution. Now, contrast that with the language to which I have referred, and the position taken by the Minister this session, in regard to officers who happened to be charged with certain duties, and the mentioning of the names of the officers. One officer at Halifax, Mr. Parsons, was named more than once, and the suggestion as to when he was appointed and what his political predilections were was quite frequently the subject of debate. I hold under my hand authorities to show that the language of this resolution is almost a copy of language used by Mr. Disraeli on one occasion, and by Mr. Gladstone on another, both of those authorities insisting that a Minister who appreciates his responsibility to Parliament will refrain from introducing an official's name in debate in connection with a matter on which the Government are being pressed and are on trial; and the Government are on trial during the whole session in Supply for their acts and conduct in connection with the expenditures of the previous year. For instance, Mr. Disraeli, speaking in 1869, said :

I think nothing more unfair, even if guided by the head of a department, to introduce his name in defence or vindication of any decision you have made on your own entire responsibility.

And Mr. Gladstone, in 1861, said :

It was observed, in the course of the recent debate, by the right hon. gentleman (Mr. Disraeli), and, I think, with general truth, that it is not desirable to bring any of the permanent civil servants of the Crown before the House, and that the Minister ought to take entire responsibility.

Again, an eminent member of the House of Commons in England, Sir Charles Wood, laid down, without contradiction by any one :

The duty of the House of Commons is to hold those responsible who are the Ministers of the Crown.

And it was only to-day, in another place, that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries was endeavouring to fasten the responsibility of dereliction of duty upon an officer who turned out to be sick in bed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member, I suppose, is referring to the proceedings of a committee ?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I do not think the hon. Minister of Marine would deny my statement.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I prefer that we should discuss it in the Public Accounts Committee.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It illustrates that while the Prime Minister to-night—and I am very glad to see him do it—acknowledges that this resolution involves the very A B C of responsible government, the incidents that have occurred this session make it necessary to reaffirm what are the A B C principles of responsible government.

Amendment agreed to.

The MINISTER OF FINANCE (Mr. Fielding) moved that the House do resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

Care of sick seamen in the Marine Hospital and other hospitals in the maritime provinces	$35,000
Shipwrecked and distressed seamen....	3,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Has the hon. Minister any of the papers prepared in connection with the return I asked for some time ago, and which the hon. gentleman promised me. I refer to the papers in connection with the dismissal of Mr. Russell, steamboat inspector.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I received my hon. friend's memorandum and sent to the deputy at once asking that as soon as any of the papers were prepared to send them up immediately, that I might lay them on the Table.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In connection with this estimate, I would like the item of steamboat inspection to stand.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have no objection. Of course, I have some supplementaries that will cover the whole ground.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have a particular reason in connection with the Yukon district, and I want as much information as I can obtain from the department. If the return in the matter of Russell is voluminous, would the hon. Minister expedite the preparation of what he has, and bring down first a return proper, and then a supplementary return.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will do that.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How many hospitals are in charge of the department now ? We began some years ago doing away with these institutions as much as possible, and making other arrangements,

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend will see all the details on pages 13 and 14 of the departmental report.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What arrangement is there in Quebec ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no change whatever. The seamen are cared for at the Jeffrey Hale and Hotel Dieu Hospitals, and 10 cents a day is charged for each seaman.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Also at Halifax ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, and at St. John the same. The marine hospital has been closed at St. John for years.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Has anything been done with that ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). No, I think about six years ago, when the hon. gentleman was head of the department, he called for tenders to sell this building, but no tenders were forthcoming, and the hospital has remained a bill of expense to the Government ever since. Two years ago, we again called for tenders and were again unsuccessful, and the agents reported last winter that something had to be done, because the stone fence around the grounds was falling down and the hospital itself was falling into decay and likely to be indicted as a nuisance by the city authorities. I had estimates of the cost of repairing it prepared, but they were very large, and I called for tenders. I was in hopes, from information I had from my hon. friend who represents the city, that the school board would have been induced to purchase the building, but it appears that one of their schools at Indian Town was burnt down, and they wired us that the cost of putting the hospital in repair for school purposes was so heavy that they did not think they would tender. To-morrow is the last day for receiving tenders, but within the last twenty-four hours I have received notice from the city of St. John that a wealthy gentleman there, Mr. Turnbull, is prepared to invest in trustees the sum of $100,000 for the purpose of maintaining a hospital for incurables, and they suggest that if no offer can be obtained for this building, we should accept a nominal sum and give it to this trust. That matter would have to come up for consideration. It is a very valuable property in a sense, but costs a great deal of money to maintain, and if this gentleman is prepared to give $100,000 to establish a hospital for incurables, I am not sure but that the best thing we could do would be to donate this property to the trustees.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is the present arrangements at Chicoutimi?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hospital there received six seamen last year, and was paid $237. The building was once owned by the Government, but was sold to the nuns, who treat the seamen on a per capita allowance.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The building was held in a peculiar way, and the work done partly on property belonging to the nuns. Has the Minister made any change in the condition that existed when he came in?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I understand that the interest of the Government in the property, which was of a peculiar character, has been sold out to the nuns since 1886. I think it is $3,000 to $4,000 we obtained for our interest. The building is now owned by the nuns, and they are carrying on the treatment of the sailors on the same terms as before.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Under what authority did the hon. gentleman sell the building? It is usual to ask Parliament for authority to sell real estate.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not aware that any special authority was obtained. The matter was referred to Council, and the Council reported in favour of selling.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to know the date of the transaction and under what authority the hon. gentleman acted?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was in 1897 or 1898. There must be some authority, as it passed through the Department of Justice. It was done in the regular way.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I would like to ask the hon. Minister with regard to an expenditure I find under the head of Sydney hospital, recorded at page K-78 of the Auditor General's Report. There is a charge of $59.50 for 1,400 feet of flooring. What kind of flooring was that?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot give the hon. gentleman the information. If he desires to know exactly, he should move for the vouchers in the Public Accounts Committee and have them brought down.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I am still without some papers I moved for last year. There might be little good in moving.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I speak of moving in the Public Accounts Committee. The vouchers can be had at once.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It seems to me that this is an enormous price to pay. The hon. Minister could not have put in better than common hardwood flooring of birch or maple, and he could buy it for far less than this price which is at the rate of about $40 a thousand. An oak flooring could be put in at this price, and surely the hon. Minister or whoever has charge of the work would not put material of that kind in an old wreck of a hospital.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I would like to know what arrangement differing from the old arrangements are made in the Island of Cape Breton in regard to the attendance on sick mariners?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am not aware of any change whatever.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is no new hospital?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If there had been, I am sure I would remember it, and I am not aware of any.

Shipwrecked and distressed seamen.... $3,000

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is usually correspondence between the Imperial Government and the Canadian Government touching the relief of distressed Canadians. At one time that duty was discharged in the Marine Department in connection with this subject of shipwrecked and distressed seamen, though not out of this particular vote. Is the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis Davies) aware what arrangements obtain in regard to the relief of distressed Canadians abroad who are not seamen, but who are relieved by British consuls?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That does not come out of this vote. We pay a certain amount to the Imperial Board of Trade for the expenses of relieving distressed Canadian seamen, and we spend a portion of the vote ourselves.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But at one time the Minister of Marine and Fisheries had referred to him vouchers that were transmitted by the Imperial Government—the Board of Trade generally—regarding cases where consuls had disbursed money to relieve distressed Canadians who were not seamen. These payments were generally made out of the vote for unforeseen expenses. What I wish to know is what policy the Government have now in relation to this matter?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The matter has not come before us. I have not been asked to pronounce upon the question, and have no applications

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. These applications are dealt with outside of the department?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They have not come before me.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Did the Brazil case come before the hon. gentleman?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Not before my department. There was special vote taken in the Brazil case.

Steamboat inspection.....	$27,200
Inspection of Dominion steamers and fog alarms	1,300

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We had better let the smaller of these items stand.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Very well.

Fisheries—

Salaries and disbursements, and of fishery inspectors, overseers and guardians	$70,000
--	----------

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. Minister please tell us how he proposes to divide that?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The hon. gentleman sees there a reduction of $25,000 as compared with last year. That arises out of the fact that we are passing through an empirical stage. The matter is not yet settled. The Privy Council's decision resulted in the Ontario government taking hold of their fisheries and administering them. As a consequence, the minor local officers that we had appointed in the province of Ontario are now being appointed and paid by the provincial government of Ontario and not by us. The same argument applies to a large extent to the province of Quebec—entirely to that province, except so far as the sea coasts are concerned. We maintain the steamer "Petrel" in the waters of Lake Huron and Lake Erie for the purpose of protecting these fisheries against the encroachments or inroads of the Americans. We maintained three inspectors in the province of Ontario; that province has been divided into three inspectoral districts, and we have three inspectors there whose duty it is to travel over the old overseers' districts and report weekly to the department how the regulations of the department are being carried out. One of these inspectors was an officer taken from my own department, Mr. Cunningham. I simply added $100 to his existing salary, and gave him that portion of Ontario which is called Eastern Ontario. The old inspector for the whole province was retained in what is known as Western Ontario, and we have appointed a new inspector for the district of Parry Sound and Muskoka, and the district of North Algoma, represented by my hon. friend (Mr. Dymont). Mr. Sheppard remains for western Ontario. He was formerly inspector for the whole province. His duties are to travel from district to district continuously and report weekly to the department how the regulations are being observed. It may be that if we find that the regulations are not being observed and that the fisheries are being destroyed, the very serious question will confront the department whether we should not be obliged to pay for the protection of the fisheries, even although we do not get any receipts at all. That will be a very broad question which we will have to determine after we have the facts before us. I am just baldly stating the facts as they are now. Then, in the district of Quebec we have two inspectors appointed.

Mr. BENNETT. Who is the officer for Algoma?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Mr. Duncan is his name.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is no such man.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He has only been appointed after the decision of the Privy Council. The one man who was inspector for the province of Ontario before is retained now for western Ontario.

Mr. INGRAM. Was it Inspector Kerr who had the western district?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There was no such person as Inspector Kerr. There were overseers who were subordinates of the inspector. The inspector had jurisdiction over the whole province, and under him were the overseers who had jurisdiction corresponding to some extent to counties. Every one of these overseers was removed.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand that Mr. Kerr was the inspector for the western district, and all the overseers were under him. He travelled from Hamilton to Windsor.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. My hon. friend is wrong. There was only one inspector for the province of Ontario, Mr. Sheppard. There was a large number of overseers, and a still larger number of guardians. The guardians simply had charge of a little local river. When the change was made, all the overseers and guardians were relieved from office, and we retained in the province of Ontario but three inspectors, one of them the old inspector, Mr. Sheppard, whose duties, instead of extending over the whole province, were confined to western Ontario; a new man, Mr. Cunningham, was appointed from the department here, and had charge of eastern Ontario; and Mr. Duncan took charge of what is called the Algoma and Parry Sound district.

Mr. INGRAM. Does the hon. gentleman know how many of the old overseers that were in the employ of the Dominion Government are now in the employ of the Ontario Government?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have no idea of that at all.

Mr. TAYLOR. Not one.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am told the most of them are; I think my hon. friend is wrong, but I express no judgment because I do not know. Then, in the province of Quebec the same principle was adopted so far as its inland waters are concerned. We appointed two inspectors, one for the eastern end, Dr. Lavoie, and Mr. Beliveau, from the department here, who had $100 increase made to his salary, and who inspects all the western part of Quebec, or that portion which is washed by the sea. That stands in the same position as Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island. A question arose with respect to the sea coast which does not arise with respect to the territorial waters of the province. The question is simply whether the sea coast is part of the territorial waters of the province or not. I have had that matter remitted to the Department of Justice some time ago. I have received a partial opinion from the Minister on this very important question. He and his deputy and the Solicitor General and myself had a consultation upon it, and the matter is still under consideration. I have had interviews with the Premiers of all the maritime provinces and Quebec, and the result was that most of them have agreed that we should submit a case to the courts to determine this point: Do the fisheries surrounding the sea coasts pass to the provinces in the same way that the fisheries of the lakes pass to the provinces of Ontario and Quebec?

Mr. INGRAM.

Mr. POPE. Did Quebec agree to that?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Quebec has not yet agreed to it, but I am in hopes that it will. It is not ten days ago since I had a consultation with Mr. Marchand upon it. Now, the principle on which I understand the Privy Council to have proceeded was that, inasmuch as the province owned the property, the ownership of the property carried with it rights to the ownership of the fisheries. The question comes up, of course: Do they own the sea coast below the low water mark? If they do own that in the same sense that they own the lakes, it may well be that the fisheries may pass from us as they have passed from us in the lakes. It is all a matter for future decision.

Mr. POPE. What arrangement was made about the management of those fisheries?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. So far as the management is concerned, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick have allowed the management to remain in our own hands just as it did last year, and I am right in the crux of a negotiation with the province of Quebec for the purpose of making some arrangement with respect to the north shore of the Gulf of the St. Lawrence, and I have not yet absolutely concluded it. Therefore, until that question is decided, the fishery officers of the maritime provinces and that portion of Quebec which is maritime, will not be dismissed. I certainly do not propose to surrender any jurisdiction over those portions until the courts tell me that I am wrong. Therefore I thought, without being able to make a very close estimate, I could very well reduce this by $25,000. The fishery officers of Ontario and Quebec being dismissed, we may not require more than $70,000 instead of $90,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The questions which the hon. gentleman has gone over are very interesting. We have spent some $20,000 in Ontario last year out of this vote. The Estimates have always been prepared by the provinces, and were given in detail. They used to be taken to Council, of course, in that form; that is, the departmental form, for convenience. Those were lumped in this printed book a few years ago. What I want to get at is the estimate of province by province.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We do not make them up province by province. When I came to make my estimate this year I sat down with Commissioner Prince and went over the cases of each of the officials in Ontario whom we have dismissed, and each of the officials in Quebec that were dismissed, and in that way we made this estimate, making allowance for the 25 inspectors that have been appointed.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I assume that the Minister prepares his estimates with regard to the possible expenditure he may have to make. Now, Ontario has to be dealt with, and he has to consider, before submitting a vote to his colleagues, his requirements for Ontario in order to reach a conclusion how much he will require for the other service in Ontario the coming year. What I want to know is what the hon. gentleman will require for Ontario.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot tell you right off-hand. I had the figures in my hand, when I made the Estimates. We saw what the cost of the retention of all the officials in Ontario was; we deducted that, and then added the sum for the three inspectors. Then, we had Quebec. We took the cost of all the officials of that province, and added the cost of the two inspectors, and that gave us the amount we could save.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I want to resist the introduction of that very objectionable and dangerous principle. The hon. gentleman will remember how closely I was held, and, I think, properly—the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Sir Richard Cartwright) will recollect how he always insisted on my handing across the House the items of that $30,000, or, as it was then, $40,000, for lighthouses. This is the same principle exactly; there can be no dispute about that. The danger would be obvious in regard to taking a bulk vote for lighthouses, in not knowing what the expenditure of the department is intended to be. When this bulk vote was changed, it was always with the understanding that, on request, items would be given to the committee, and the committee would never be asked to vote $70,000 without any explanation from the Minister as to how the amount was reached as to the requirements of the service, province by province. If the hon. Minister is unable to say how this has been apportioned, he is unable to press this item; he is unable to ask the committee to take for granted that he has made a wise and prudent disposal of that amount. Our time is wasted, if we are supposed to take all these things for granted and assume that his discretion has been properly exercised. We are entitled to have proof of this fact. The Minister says: We reach that amount by making a deduction of what we required for Ontario.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman could not have listened to what I said. I said, that all the officials in Ontario had been dismissed, and I reduced the amount by the amount of their salaries and travelling expenses; that I had appointed three inspectors, and that I had to apply for the payment of these three inspectors in Ontario; so that the entire money vote of last year for Ontario is not required now, but we only ask for the salaries and travelling expenses of these three inspectors. Of course, we keep the "Petrel"; but she is provided for in another vote. In Quebec we did the same thing, as far as that part of the province is concerned which has not a shore on the seacoast. All the officials have been dismissed, and that means a deduction of $25,000. In all other respects the vote is exactly as it was before.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is apportioned for Nova Scotia?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot say. I never heard that question put before.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It used to be put in the Estimates themselves.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Never in my time.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I told the hon. gentleman frankly that it was changed in my time, but, when I was asked to read out the lighthouse division, I did so, and I gave the manner in which I reached the bulk sums. That was a change made in my day, simply to save print, and to save time.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman never read the names of the officers.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. They were always reached in that way. It is absurd to suppose that this amount should be taken in any other way. It is in the power of the Minister to absolutely ignore the claims of some of the different provinces.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think so, because there is no doubt about it. If the Minister states in the House, while probably it would not affect the legal view, that certain amounts are apportioned for certain provinces, he could not depart from that during the fiscal year, nevertheless, that $70,000 vote, under the explanation he now gives, the Minister might spend in any one of the provinces he likes. Under the old arrangement this could not be. If, during the consideration of the Estimates, a Minister of the Crown made a statement, though, as a matter of law, probably he would not be restricted, still, as a matter of honour, he would be obliged to adhere to his statement. I will not agree to that vote passing in its present form, without the explanation that the Minister ought to give to show how he has reached the amount he is asking.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I told the hon. gentleman.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I know what the hon. gentleman's explanation is. I know that he says he has abolished the officers in Ontario, and that he has cut down the work to three officers there, and that these arrangements are going on. But, nevertheless, he has made an estimate of what he will require out of that $70,000 for Ontario, and he has made an estimate of what he will require for Quebec. We cannot discuss the thing intelligently, unless we know the manner in which this money is to be distributed. We want to know whether it is to be used in a narrow or sectional sense. We want to see how it is to be apportioned among the provinces, so as to see whether his conclusions are wise. The representatives of British Columbia, of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick want to see whether, in these items, he has enough money for what they know to be the requirements in connection of the supervision and control of the fisheries of those provinces. He says, that in Nova Scotia matters stand as they stood before, that the administration of the fisheries, the supervision, appointment and dismissal of officers is the same as before. We want to know what amount of money he is going to spend in the discharge of this business. The hon. gentleman spent last year in Nova Scotia $21,683.91. Is the hon. gentleman going to reduce that vote?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No. I think I told the hon. gentleman expressly.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Very well; the reduction will not be in that vote.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly not.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Well, let us take New Brunswick, $17,663.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not expect that it will be under $17,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. We may be pretty sure that Prince Edward Island will not be reduced from the figure of last year.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think it is likely: $7,000, in round numbers.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Six or seven thousand dollars, in round numbers. Then, in Manitoba?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I know of no reason for any change there.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou).

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is for Lake Winnipeg, I suppose—$1,200.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, Lake Winnipeg, and the next lake to it.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is the hon. gentleman going to get along with $1,200, with the possibility of a local election coming on in that province?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, we are not going to do anything for local elections.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In the North-west Territories we spent last year $2,324. Is the hon. gentleman going to cut that down?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It will not exceed $3,000.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Not larger?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There will be some increase, but not large, because a special vote will be taken for whatever purposes we specially propose there.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. If that be so, how is the hon. gentleman able to cut the vote down by $25,000, because in Ontario he only expended $19,239, or $20,000?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is right.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is the hon. gentleman going to cut down Quebec?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Between Ontario and Quebec we cut it down $25,000, and the reason I did not cut it down more is that I have to still retain my officers on the sea-coast of Quebec. Mr. Price and I tried to figure it out as closely as possible.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Out of the vote of $30,000 last year there is to be $25,000 deducted, and that leaves only $5,000 for Ontario and Quebec.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is so.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Has Quebec agreed finally to take over the charge of the inland fisheries?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And has the Federal Government already withdrawn its officers?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, from the 1st of May of this year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is the hon. gentleman's construction of the decision of the Privy Council that he is not responsible in regard to Quebec?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I do not go that far. The very fact that I have retained inspectors whose duties are to travel around and report weekly to me how the regulations are observed, and how the provincial government carry them out, proves that I do not take that position. It may well be that the result of this experiment may be entirely unsatisfactory, and I may have to come to the House and say that although we got no revenue, it still may be our national duty—but I do not want to commit myself; I want to await events and see what the change is going to bring about. If I see it is going to result in the destruction of our fisheries, I certainly would have no hesitation in asking my colleagues to consent to my asking money from the House to protect them; because I consider that these fisheries are an important national industry. It seems to me that at present, when Ontario, especially, was so anxious to get possession of the income derived from these fisheries, that she should also bear her proper share in the protection of these fisheries, and she is doing it. Whether that will be effective or not, remains to be seen, but I am taking what I consider prudent precautions to have reports made weekly to me as to the effect of the provincial officers' action.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman say what his system of supervision is, because if he waited until bad management and poor guardianship had worked an injury to the fisheries, it would be impossible to restore them to anything like their old condition. Though the Federal Government did make a better effort than any local government could possibly make, yet they fell short of doing all that was desirable to maintain the wealth of our fisheries, because public opinion never seems to properly support either the local or federal authority in fisheries regulations.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is a tremendous complaint when the fisheries are gone, and a charge against the Government of the day for not having properly looked after them. How does the Minister propose to conduct this inspection so as to acquaint himself the moment an injury is threatened by the absence of proper precaution.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I was in communication for a long time with the premiers of the two larger provinces, and with the officers specially charged by them with the protection of the fisheries, and I recognize that they appreciate fully the importance of the work they took in hand. They were aware they are taking large responsibilities; they were aware they would have large receipts, and they gave me the assurance that they would appoint local officers (similar to those I had previously appointed) to see that the regulations were enforced. I have no reason to doubt but that they will carry out loyally and effectively the intimation they gave me in that respect. We appoint these three inspectors—of course, I have my own two officers here—to travel through each overseer's district, and to report to us if the local officers are enforcing the regulations, as the Dominion officers used to do. They can keep in touch with the manner in which these officers are doing their duty almost as effectively as if these officers were directly appointed by us.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I cannot understand how the Minister can do anything effective with $5,000, in the way of general supervision over the immense fisheries districts of Ontario and Quebec. His officers here will, of course, have to travel and charge their expenses to this vote, and those two men cannot during the fishing season cover a very large proportion of that immense territory.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have to cut the vote down pretty closely.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) I wish to understand from the Minister of Marine a little more clearly the nature of the decision in the fisheries case. As I understand it, the Privy Council decided that the foreshores were the property of the provinces before confederation, and that they were not parted with by the provinces at confederation. The foreshores, therefore, belong to the provinces, and the fisheries that are over the foreshores within the three-mile limit also belong to the provinces. I understand that there is a dictum of the Privy Council to that effect.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). My hon. friend (Mr. Bell) must not start out with wrong premises. There is no decision of the Privy Council that the foreshores extend to the three-mile limit. The question which will be argued will be, whether the foreshores extend beyond low water mark.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) Whatever shape it takes, the question the people of Prince Edward Island are interested in is, whether, as a province, we are entitled to our share of the fishery award.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We cannot discuss that here.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) I do not wish to discuss the question now, but my hon. friend (Sir Louis H. Davies) has suggested that some means are being taken to determine the exact position of the matter.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There will be means taken.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) I think the hon. gentleman (Sir Louis H. Davies) said there had been some reference of this matter to the Department of Justice. So far as I can judge, that will not help us to come to a conclusion, because we may get the opinion of the Minister of Justice, and be just as much in the dark as ever.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) Yes, so far as an ultimate and satisfactory decision on this matter is concerned. There was a proposition which I think was a fair one, to refer this matter to the Supreme Court of Canada.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is the one that is being considered now; we are trying to arrive at a case.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) I wish to know whether there is a prospect of the matter being referred, at an early date, to the Supreme Court, for its adjudication.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I hope there is a reasonable prospect. The Ministers from New Brunswick were here last week, and we propose to send a draft case for their consideration in a short time.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) I understand, then, that there is a definite intention on the part of the Government to submit the matter to the Supreme Court for its decision?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. If we can get the provinces to agree to a case, it certainly will be done. If they will not agree to a case, we cannot submit it.

Mr. BELL (East Prince, P.E.I.) The three provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does not the province of British Columbia come into that?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It certainly does.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Have you had any communication from the Government there in regard to it?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That will take in the estuary of the Fraser River, and others?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, the same question will necessarily arise.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is it not singular that you have had no communication as yet?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We have just exercised the same jurisdiction as before, and no one seems to object.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. gentleman say whether Mr. Webster has still any connection with the department?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. None whatever.

Mr. INGRAM. Then will the hon. gentleman say how the Ontario government are carrying on the fisheries? Will he say whether they have reported to him up to the present, and whether they are carrying them on lines similar to those of the Dominion Government?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, we have reports from time to time, and they are carrying them on presumably on the same lines as we did. Whether the results will be as effective or not, I am not in a position to-day to state.

Mr. INGRAM. Under the administration of the late Government, speaking of my own locality, the question of the party politics of those who were granted licenses was not considered at all. But since hon. gentlemen opposite came into power, I think some attention is being paid to party, and I fear that now that the fisheries are under the Ontario government, still more attention will be paid to party. I would be sorry if that were the case.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I would be sorry, too.

Mr. INGRAM. Have the inspectors reported anything of that character?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Nothing at all of that kind.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I want to ask about the British Columbia fishery regulations. There was a great deal of discussion and excitement going on in connection with that question in the province. I know something of the difficulties of solving questions of that kind. In 1894, I think it was, we reached a scheme which, while not wholly acceptable, seemed to be more acceptable than any other system that had been adopted, and I was sorry to find this year that everything was as bad as it was at the time when I was Minister of Marine in regard to dissatisfaction on the part of the fishermen. I would like the Minister of Marine to tell the committee just what he did in connection with that subject, how the matter stands at present, and how far he has been able to meet the wishes of the two sections, for unfortunately, speaking generally, there were two sections, that is, the fishermen and the canners.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The question is a very reasonable one, and I will endeavour to tell the hon. gentleman how the matter stands. Shortly after I came into the department, I paid a visit to the province to see for myself how things were, and I had long interviews between the canners on one side and the fishermen on the other. The fishermen had grievances which they thought were substantial. They thought the regulations did not deal even-handed justice to them, and that under those regulations as they stood, the canners had them in the hollow of their hand, and they prayed that those regulations might be changed in such a way that they would have what they called at least fair-play. I gave as much attention to their representations as I could, and when I returned, I found that the time which I had at my disposal, only about a fortnight, to look into the question, was not sufficient to enable me to sit in judgment between those two great classes—the canners, with all the capital they had invested, on one side, and the fishermen, who were there in hundreds, on the other side; the one class representing capital and the other representing labour. I knew it would require a good deal of consideration before one could come to anything like a just conclusion; and, after returning here and talking the matter over with Mr. Commissioner Prince, I decided that the proper course would be for me to send out that gentleman, who was a specialist, who had been brought to this country because he had a special knowledge of the fisheries, and whose life had been devoted to the study of them, to spend two or three months on the spot. I gave him his instructions; I produced all the memorials I had received from the fishermen on the one side and from the canners engaged in the fisheries on the other; I explained as well as I could the difference between the two classes; and I told him to go out and stay there long enough to study the question, and then to come back and make a report to me as to how he thought the regulations should be amended. He did so, and when his report was made, I was rather startled at its drastic character. It did not quite commend itself to my mind, but bearing in mind that he had a greater knowledge of the matter than I had, and had spent three months in studying it, I said: "I will accept your recommendations for the time being, and we will publish them as new regulations, and submit them to the people interested. There will be plenty of time to receive criticisms from both sides, and plenty of time, if these criticisms are effective, for me to change my mind and amend the regulations."

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Were these published before the Order in Council?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The Order in Council was passed nine months before the regulations were to come into operation. We published the new regulations suggested by Mr. Prince as regulations to come into force some nine or ten months afterwards. In the meantime, and during those nine or ten months, we received communications from interested parties, and as the time drew near when the regulations were to come into force those representations became stronger and stronger, and the situation became a grave one.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I have heard that the replies were strong, too.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think those sent by me were rather judicial in tone. I recognized that I was not in a position to dictate or to form a judgment on the one side or the other. I felt that both parties had rights, and the regulations did not go far enough to please the men, and went too far to please the canners. The result was that, after giving a great deal of personal study to the matter, I came to the conclusion that the regulations were too drastic. The points were these: The men complained that the fishing season was compressed into a very few weeks, and that in those few weeks the local fishermen, who were compelled to be idle for many months, had the opportunity of making their money out of the fisheries taken from them by foreigners who came across the line for the few weeks that the fish lasted, in thousands; for there are 5,000 men employed during the weeks that the salmon run, while the local fishermen number only 700 or 800, and they said: "These foreigners come and take the bread out of our mouths, and wages are cut down to nothing." The canner says that here are not enough fishermen to supply them with the necessary labour, and that if we exclude fishermen from the United States, the 700 or 1,000 men on the spot would demand double or treble wages and ruin the whole business. I thought that a compromise could be reached. Under the regulations suggested by Mr. Prince, and approved by me, no man could go into a fishing boat unless he had a license, and in order to get a license he had to register on or before a certain day, which was anterior to the time the salmon began to run. This was for the purpose of seeing that none should register but a resident, because a floating population would not come over 300 or 400 miles simply to register in anticipation of the fishing season. I, therefore, altered the regulations and retained the principle of registration, but provided that it would not be necessary for the rowers to be registered fishermen. Each boat contains two men, one a rower and one fisherman, and the compromise amounts to this, that the fisherman is bound to register but not the rower, and the fisherman has to register before the 1st of July. I have not heard anything in the nature of complaints since the new regulations came into force.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think the hon. Minister would do well to reconsider the position altogether.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman will allow me; I omitted to mention an important point, and that is that the new regulations should not apply to Indians.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The difficulties arise from the fact that pressure is brought upon the Minister from the labouring element, on the one side, and the employers on the other, and he is assuming a responsibility with which, I think, he ought not to have anything to do. I am certain that the department cannot deal satisfactorily with the question of regulations when attempting to reconcile views put forward by these two opposing sources. No matter what the merits on either side, the question resolves itself into one of demand and supply, with which the department ought to have nothing to do.

I sympathise very much, of course, with bona fide fishermen, and I know how much regard ought to be paid to them, but in dealing with fishery regulations, you are not dealing with the men. The hon. Minister does not pretend that it is any of his business to adjust the difficulties between the employers and their employees. His business is to protect the fisheries, which are now in a prime condition, but require a great deal of supervision to be kept free from danger of injury.

The canneries on that river are of very different proportions. There are canneries on a very large scale and others on a much inferior scale, and the regulations do not discriminate between the two.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). They never did.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, but that now becomes a very important question when the number of licenses is reduced to ten. The vast majority of the boats belong to the canners and the canneries, of course, are theirs also, and the limit of ten puts the canners in this position. These licenses are not transferable, and when a licensed man is put in a boat and then falls ill, the canner has no means of replacing him, when he has received his full number of licenses. Thus, the head of a large cannery in which an enormous amount of capital is invested, is apt to find himself in an awkward position if any of his ten men who have licenses happens to fall ill, because these licenses are not transferable. I have not had the opportunity of reading the regulations, but would ask the hon. Minister if it is the case that a canner could not replace any one of his licensed fishermen that fell ill?

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is correct. The hon. gentleman sees that although they used to get twenty-five licenses, they now only get ten. That was one of the compromises between the men and the canners. The men said it was outrageous that a cannery should get twenty-five licenses, and Mr. Prince reported that it was fair they should get about ten. Having sent a man of Mr. Prince's experience to investigate, and having his report, I did not like going against it. And I thought it fair that it should have a trial this year. There is nothing to prevent these men buying these fish from the boats there.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. But they should not be driven to buy fish in that way.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You must remember the peculiar position in which the seven hundred to a thousand local fishermen stand in relation to the vast number of men who come from the United States. They say that these men come up and take the bread out of their mouths unless some protection is given. Having fished their own rivers and made five or six weeks pay, they come over to our side and sweep up the aftermath in British Columbia. Of course, the matter cannot be changed now; the regulations are passed and have been accepted with more or less satisfaction—in some cases less and not more—by the canners and the men. We shall have this season's experience to go by. I did the best I could, following, to a large extent, Prof. Prince's recommendations and modifying them with the practical common sense which I profess to have and the personal knowledge of the local circumstances I acquired while I was out there. I really think that the conditions now are pretty fair.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries is, I think, in the unfortunate position of having dealt with this matter on the ground of what he thought was fair between the fishermen and their employers. I say that is a false position for him to be in. Prof. Prince is an expert on fisheries; and if he reported that the fisheries in the Fraser River were in such a condition that the licenses for these people who have invested their means in expensive outfits, boats and gear should be reduced to prevent the overfishing of the river, we could understand the soundness of the Minister's position. But the hon. Minister refers to Prof. Prince in a matter where his opinion as an expert in fisheries is no better than that of any ordinary man.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Except that he gained local knowledge from living on the spot a long time.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. Minister says he has done what is fair. I do not think that that is the way to approach this question. The canners have gone out on those rivers to develop an industry, and dealing with canners or any other men in that position, very strong reason indeed must be given for interfering with them. And the Fisheries Department is not warranted in interfering with them except on one ground, and that is that the interference is necessary in order to protect the fisheries, not to protect the fishermen. The Minister is not charged with the responsibility of protecting the fishermen in that respect. Let me set this forth in a way that I think will appeal to the hon. Minister. When this case of the fisheries was being argued before the Privy Council, the point was pressed where the distinction came in between the right of the federal authority to regulate and for that purpose to license the right of the local authority. When the opinion was expressed by one of the judges that the power of licensing in the inland fisheries, for instance, was in the local authority, it was suggested that it was a very awkward condition of things, because the federal authority having the right to control the fisheries by right of regulation, it might supplant the local authority altogether. It was urged, therefore, that the powers should be decided to be either in one place or the other, either federal or local. In their reasons for their judgment, the Privy Council, as the hon. Minister will remember dealt with that. I cannot, of course, give the exact language offhand; but they say practically—I think the hon. Minister will corroborate my recollection—that this is a matter of honour after all, that the court would not assume that the federal authority would take advantage of their position to do indirectly anything of that kind, but would only restrict the licenses or deal with them for the express purpose of regulating the fishery and no other. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) will give his loyal support to every line of that decision. The Federal Government were parties to the case, and the Minister and Parliament are bound loyally to carry out the decisions. In view of that decision, has he the right indirectly, and under cover of the fishery regulation, to adjust differences between the fishermen and their employees and to say: While it is not necessary to do this to protect the fisheries, I do it as a matter of fairness towards these men and to bring about a proper relation between the employer and the employed. I think the question involved is whether the fisheries require this regulation. The reason given for this regulation by the Minister is that to reduce the licenses to ten would be to treat the fishermen fairly. But the Minister will not pretend, and Professor Prince will not pretend, in view of all we now know of the fisheries, that to protect or improve the fisheries it was found necessary to reduce the number of licenses from twenty to ten. And if that cannot be said, it seems to me there is no justification for this regulation. I think the hon. Minister is misinformed, if he is under the impression that this reduction has been generally accepted.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). I say that there is a general agreement to give it a trial this season.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I should be very glad if the hon. gentleman was able to say with certainty that there was a general agreement. It seems to me that there is a very hard feeling on the subject.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think there is.

Mr. G. R. MAXWELL (Burrard). I think I can claim to know something about this matter perhaps a good deal more than the hon. gentleman (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) who has just sat down, because of his short acquaintance with British Columbia. We had the hon. gentleman as Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I cannot congratulate him on his success in the management of this business. If there was anything during his time which required to be looked into, it was the condition of our fisheries in British Columbia. I can say there was the deepest and most general dissatisfaction with regard to the way that department was governed, so far as the British Columbia fisheries were concerned. It seems to me a very peculiar position for the hon. gentleman to take to say, that the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has no right to take cognizance of the difficulties that may exist between the cannery men and the fishermen on the Fraser River. We have had the doctrine proclaimed this afternoon, that it is the right and the duty of the Government to interfere with a particular matter that is now engaging the attention of the country. The Government has been pressed to interfere in a quarrel between capital and labour. Now, in a very material sense, I hold that it is the duty of the Minister to see that the men who are gaining their livelihood out of the fisheries in British Columbia shall at least have a chance of making as much as they can out of their business, the same as workmen engaged in any other business. The fishermen of British Columbia have always held, and I sympathize with them, that the cannery men have no right to have a license at all. Why should they have a license? By what right can a cannery man say, that he ought to receive 20 licenses, or even 10 licenses, from the Fisheries Department? As the fishermen look at it, they say, that these 20 licenses give each cannery man so much control over the labouring man. They can dispense, to that degree at least, with their services. The fishermen hold, and I hold with them, that the position they are put in by the cannery men is most unfair. I say, the cannery men ought to go into the labour market and find their labour in the same way as any other business man does. As the Minister has pointed out, there are hundreds of fishermen on that river, and the cannery men can go to these fishermen and get all the fish they want. They have no right, so far as I can see, to have these licenses given to them at all, and I think the Minister went a great way in trying to conciliate the cannery men, when he gave them 10 licenses instead of going the length that I believe the fishermen wanted him to go, of taking all their licenses away from them. Now, my hon. friend opposes the reduction of these licenses. Evidently, he has got a brief from the cannery men. But I can say, that he does not represent the views of the great majority of the men on the Fraser River, and I hold that we have just as much right to consider the interests of the fishermen as we have to consider the interests of the cannery men. When we consider the position in which the fishermen are placed in competition for the necessaries of life, I think the Minister has taken a very wise precaution in giving them this chance at least, that he compels the cannery men to take more fish from the fishermen than they have been in the habit of doing in the past. The hon. gentleman mentions the case of a fisherman falling sick, and that brings us back to the old point. It may happen that fishermen may fall sick, that is one of the possibilities in every business. If an employer of labour employs a man, and he gets sick, the employer goes and looks for some one else. The cannery men must do the same. If one of their men falls sick, there are hundreds of other men ready to take his place. I can say, that the present regulations we have got are the best that we have ever had in British Columbia. While there may be a little dissatisfaction on the part of some cannery men with regard to licenses and one or two other points, a great many of them are perfectly satisfied with the regulations. So far as the fishermen are concerned, they are perfectly satisfied that this is the only genuine attempt that has ever been made by any Minister of Marine and Fisheries to see that they have justice in this business.

Mr. MAXWELL.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). I do not propose to pay much notice to the personal observations of the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Maxwell). I suppose he has his own reasons for flying at me in the manner and spirit which he displays tonight. However, he does not hurt any one: if it pleases him, it does not hurt any one else. I happened to have been present when this subject was discussed with some of his leading constituents, and on that occasion the hon. gentleman was in a different frame of mind regarding me, and thanked me—I supposed at that time he was sincere—for the spirit in which I approached the subject, and for my references to him. That was in his constituency, where we both live. So the hon. gentleman, for some reason I can guess at, has changed his kindly tone. But whether his tone is kindly or ferocious, it makes about the same impression on my mind. His suggestion that I hold a brief for the cannery men hardly merits contempt, let alone denial. I certainly do not think that he holds a brief from any one, as he understands so little of this subject. He has made strong general assertions. We are not here to discuss the conditions that did obtain; we are discussing the conditions that now exist. The hon. gentleman will not gain much by going back to old scores. That reminds me that the right hon. leader of this Government made some large promises in regard to these unpopular regulations. It was the custom, when the Grit caravan invaded that province, to anathematize the regulations and the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and the line the right hon. gentleman took then was, that all these regulations ought to go by the board, that they were unduly unfair to these captains of industry and these fishermen. But lo and behold, when the right hon. gentleman got into power, the first thing he saw was a bigger hornets' nest around the ears of the present Minister of Marine and Fisheries than ever gathered around mine.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. You had a pretty hot time of it, too?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes; and the hon. member for Burrard, if he had a spark of ordinary fairness in his composition, would have remembered that I reminded those men then, who were in a very angry frame of mind, considering these regulations, of the great difficulties of dealing with that subject; and I also mentioned that I felt sure, knowing what I did of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, that he had not personally drawn some of those regulations, that they could not have received his very careful attention. The member for Burrard will recollect, that tonight the Minister of Marine and Fisheries rather corroborates that inference. He adopted, apparently, the drafting of Mr.

Prince, and in that respect there has been a great improvement in the regulations. The hon. member for Burrard may think that he will get a little political strength out of this matter, and we all know that he needs it. To set up as a great defender of the labouring interest is, of course, a popular line to take. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries (Sir Louis Davies) will admit, I am sure, that to-night I did not take the side of either labour or capital. If I was able to make myself understood, the argument I used was, that considerations of capital and labour should be absent in dealing with the fishery regulations on a certain river. That was my position, and anything that has been said by the hon. member for Burrard (Mr. Maxwell) has, I submit, not weakened that position at all. If we were discussing the question of capital and labour, all these elements might be very pertinent; but there is no reason for the reduction of these 20 licenses that appertains to the fisheries. The condition of the fisheries does not warrant the reduction of these licenses.

Mr. MAXWELL. What is the reason that they have these licenses at all?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The idea of the license system on the Fraser, as elsewhere, is that it is desirable to keep within hand the fishing on that river, lest, from promiscuous fishing, the river should be overfished. And the same system that obtains elsewhere, where you adopt that license system, obtains on the Fraser. You make regulations limiting the number of licenses on the ground that the condition of the fishery, though good, would be impaired unless you limited the fishing on the river. When the department found these canners with their men, and considered how many canners there were, it apportioned a certain number of licenses—I forget what the old apportionment was. There was always more or less of a disagreement between the canners and the department in regard to the allotment. It was never wholly satisfactory, and it never can be, probably. I do not think any Minister of Marine and Fisheries, who does his duty fearlessly can be popular with the canners or with the fishermen. It is a pretty hard thing to do in this country. I have told the hon. gentleman how the license system came about, and now I say there is no reason to reduce the number of licenses, so far as the fishery is concerned.

Mr. MAXWELL. If these were all the licenses we gave out there might be something in the hon. gentleman's contention, but when you have 2,000 men carrying around these licenses the condition does not warrant giving these licenses to the canners.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. That is a different question, and that is a question, I say, that does not concern the Department of Marine and Fisheries. That is just why I differ from the present order of things. I say the present order of things is being based on what is fair or what is unfair, on ideas of fairness. My point is that the Minister has no information that the condition of the Fraser River requires further restrictions than those which existed before in regard to the license system, and that there is no reason to reduce the number of licenses. As I understand it, no one pressed the Minister to refuse these licenses to the fishermen. I understand that no one in British Columbia asked that.

Mr. MAXWELL. No. Here is the point that every fair-minded man will recognize: it is the right of the fishermen to get employment on the river. If you give the fisherman that right, if you give him a license, why should he not have the full advantage of his labour on the river just as any other workman who is engaged in the different mechanical trades would have. By giving these cannery men these twenty licenses, you deprive the fishermen of so much of his labour.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Again, I refuse, as I must be consistent; I must refuse to enter into that discussion. My whole argument centres in this, that whatever you may look upon as good or bad, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has nothing to do with the consideration of that kind. All he has to consider is how many licenses the river will stand. I say that no one has complained.

Mr. MAXWELL. If it is a question as to how many licenses the river will stand, the hon. gentleman has no right to ask that licenses be issued to a particular number of canners.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Yes, but there are so many canners there; they had a right to so many licenses. I say that the department has not to deal with the reduction or the increase of these licenses on any other ground than the condition that the fisheries warrant.

Mr. MAXWELL. That is right enough.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. Minister cannot settle a question like this; he cannot issue licenses to one and refuse them to another, and stand between capital and labour. My point is not altogether technical. It is strictly substantial, and it is based upon what the Fishery Act contemplates. I have never argued that fishermen should not be given licenses, or that licenses should be taken away from fishermen, and I have never heard any one argue so in the province of British Columbia or in this House, but there is no ground under the Fishery Act for refusing licenses to these canners, and I must say that as between them it does seem to me a very difficult thing to justify, not merely the reduction from twenty to ten licenses, but these men own boats and expensive equipments, and not even to discriminate between the large establishment and the very small establishment, the one-horse establishment and the first-class establishment, is something I cannot understand. To put it plainly this making a drastic rule seems to have in it not merely the element of unfairness, but the element of some laziness.

Mr. GEO. TAYLOR (South Leeds). I see that the Minister is reducing this vote by $25,000. That applies altogether to Ontario?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And Quebec.

Mr. TAYLOR. And some portion of Quebec. I understand it is chiefly on account of the dismissals of the officers that have been employed in Ontario?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And Quebec.

Mr. TAYLOR. I want to draw attention to the unfair treatment that has been given these dismissed fishery officers. The hon. Minister stated that on account of this Privy Council decision the department ceased to exercise control over the fishery interests of Ontario. I do not know when the decision of the Privy Council came to hand, but I know that the Minister issued a circular on the 1st day of January, mailed it to these officers, some of whom, I know, did not receive notice until the 5th of January that they were dismissed on the 1st of January. They served four or five days without having received notice that they were dismissed. They were dismissed peremptorily without notice. I think this was an injustice to these officials; they should have received at least three months' notice that they were going to be dismissed, instead of being dismissed before they received the notice. The decision of the department surely was not come to on the day that circular was sent out, the 1st of January, but these officers, who had given faithful service to the country, were simply thrown out after receiving a circular stating that they were dismissed from the 1st of January. They should at least be paid a quarter's salary for the time that some of them devoted their services to their country. I put the question on the Order paper if it was the intention of the Minister to deal fairly with these men, and his answer was "No." He says to-day that this change is only an experiment, and that the officers were all re-employed by the Ontario Government. As a matter of fact, they have nearly all been dismissed and not one out of a hundred has been employed by the Ontario Government.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman must be wrong.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Picton).

Mr. TAYLOR. I am not wrong. I know the Minister can take the list of names in my county, and out of a large number of them he cannot find a man that has been appointed by the Ontario Government. They appointed a Mr. Judd, who was simply a political agent for that county. The Minister says that he is only giving this a trial, but if he comes to reappoint the officers he will not reappoint the old officers, but will work in another batch of political agents. Under the late Administration, Mr. Sheppard had charge of all Ontario; and, of course, as Mr. Sheppard is a strong partisan of the Liberals he has been retained, and he has got two more political agents to help him.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I always understood he was a strong partisan of yours.

Mr. BENNETT. Ask the Postmaster General about that.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I believe I was urged to dismiss him because he was a strong Conservative partisan.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Sheppard was appointed by the late Conservative Government, but when that Government found efficient men they appointed them without paying any attention to their political partisanship.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Sheppard is, and has been for years, an offensive partisan of hon. gentlemen opposite, as I know very well. Before this vote is reduced $25,000, I want the Minister to promise me that those dismissed officials who discharged their duty some time before they received notice of their dismissal, shall be paid at least the quarter's salary they are entitled to, and if this vote is not sufficient for that, then I want the Minister to promise me that he will bring an extra amount down in the Supplementary Estimates. No man in Canada would treat his servant as this Government has treated these officials. It is an outrage and ought to be resented by every hon. member in this House, irrespective of party politics. Our Canadian citizens should be treated fairly, more especially by a Government claiming to be a Liberal Government.

Mr. H. F. McDOUGALL (Cape Breton). Would the Minister be kind enough to inform me who is performing the services formerly performed by Mr. Quinan, an overseer, whom he dismissed, in my county, two years ago?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Does not the hon. gentleman (Mr. McDougall) know the name?

Mr. McDOUGALL. I do not.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I am afraid I cannot tell you, but I will be very happy to get the information and send it to you.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I gave the Minister an opportunity to give me the information a year ago, but he dodged in every possible way when I tried to get it.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Oh, I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I make that charge. I asked for a return of the names of the different parties who were dismissed from the fishery service in my county, and the names of those appointed in their places, and I have not got that return yet.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think I gave the information last year.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I beg your pardon, I did not get it yet.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no reason in the world why the hon. gentleman should not get the information.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Does the hon. Minister refuse to give it?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly not. Does my hon. friend imagine that I can carry in my head the names of all the fishery officers in the Dominion? If he wants the information I will have it ready for him any time he asks for it.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I will refresh the memory of the Minister to see if he can show me how that service is attended to now. When he dismissed Mr. Quinan he appointed in his place a man named Joseph McPherson—

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And you said you did not know the name?

Mr. McDOUGALL. Exercise a little patience. I have not told my story yet. Since then Mr. McPherson has been given a position in the Department of Customs, to which he was appointed last fall. Now, I want to know who is performing the duties that were performed by this man when he was fishery overseer in the southern part of the county of Cape Breton. He was then a resident of the northern part, though he was ordered to do the service in the southern part. But he is now tied down to the important position of collector of customs at North Sydney. Is there any one appointed in his stead to perform the fishery service?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He was the collector of bounty cheques, I think.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I have no doubt he did collect a good many of them in his business, if reports are true. I want to know whether that position is filled by the appointment of another person, or whether that gentleman is acting in the double capacity of customs collector at the port of North Sydney, and overseer of the fisheries in the southern part of the county?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I should think he could not possibly act in the dual capacity.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I do not suppose he could.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No. He may have received his cheques before.

Mr. McDOUGALL. No, because up to the time I left home, no cheques were paid for fish bounties, and he had his appointment five or six months before this.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will give the hon. gentleman the name on concurrence.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Can the hon. gentleman tell me who is performing the service which was performed by Alexander McDonald of East Bay?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No; I cannot carry all these names in my head.

Mr. McDOUGALL. There were only three overseers in the county, and all were dismissed. Surely the hon. gentleman can give the names.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I cannot remember. I will give the hon. gentleman the name if he will call at the department, or I will bring it here.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I find that John A. Fraser, of Baddeck, had $119.30 for travelling expenses, while the salary he received was only $19.83.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is quite probable. A man receives a small salary and does a large amount of travelling, and he gets his travelling expenses according to his mileage.

Mr. McDOUGALL. Can the hon. gentleman tell me where that gentleman travels to?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Over the district he is appointed to.

Mr. McDOUGALL. It is not so large that he should draw that much.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. These accounts are all audited by gentlemen who are well qualified to audit them.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I find at page K-83, that a guardian named John MacNeil, who has charge of a stream, gets $54, whereas under the old regime the guardian who had charge of it never received more than $25 and that man was dismissed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It was not the same district.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon; I know the district very well.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The boundaries of the districts were all altered there.

Mr. McDOUGALL. If the hon. gentleman thinks his memory is good in that respect, I differ from him. That district is Bonne Acadie. There is only one stream, and the distance to be travelled by an overseer is only about two miles, or at the longest three miles. The man appointed in place of the previous overseer, who was dismissed, is nearly 80 years of age, a man who can scarcely see the stream, let alone walk along it or see any wrong-doing on it. But the hon. gentleman sees fit to pay him $54 for 13 weeks. I would like to have some explanation as to what caused that increase of pay.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Do you think $54 for 13½ weeks is too much?

Mr. McDOUGALL. That is not the position. I contend that he should not be paid more than his predecessor.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I have found officers who did nothing.

Mr. McDOUGALL. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. He had no more efficient man in the service than the man who was dismissed. He was dismissed because he was a Conservative, and the other man was put in his place because he was a Liberal, though he is incapable of doing the work; he is not even able to sign his name. The man who was dismissed never committed any act for which the hon. Minister would be justified in dismissing him from the service. He always did his duty faithfully, as the inspector will report. I understand that he was dismissed without reference to the inspector.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS (Mr. Paterson). This amounts to 60 cents a day. Does the hon. gentleman object to pay that much?

Mr. McDOUGALL. No man on that service has ever been expected to go over the ground and spend from morning till night at the work.

Mr. TAYLOR. The other man did it for $25, and you are giving this man $54.

Mr. McDOUGALL. The country could get the service of the other man for $25. Perhaps he would go over the stream once a week, and you can get hundreds of people to do the work for the same sum that was paid to him.

Mr. HENDERSON. The Controller of Customs (Mr. Paterson) seems to think that 60 cents a day is a very small wage indeed; but I would like to remind that hon. gentleman and the Postmaster General (Mr. Mulock) that they have many men in their employ doing work from day to day throughout the country, and providing a horse and rig for the purpose, who are not receiving more than 50 cents a day.

The MINISTER OF CUSTOMS. Did they tender for it?

Mr. HENDERSON. I do not think the case is quite the same; but I simply mention that to show that even under the present Administration there are men who are working for a great deal smaller wages than are paid by the Grand Trunk Railway to their trackmen.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I understand that there has been a change in the Island of Prince Edward. The old system there was to pay the wardens and fishery guardians, and I would like the Minister to explain what the change is that he has introduced.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no change except that an overseer was appointed for Queen's County, who takes charge specially of the lobster business, and who goes out in a tug-boat and prevents illicit fishing. The overseer is W. C. Hopkirk, appointed by me at $500 a year.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What instructions were given him with regard to the employment of vessels?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He gets special instructions in each case. He telegraphs where he can get a boat at such a rate for a certain time, and then gets instructions whether to hire it or not. I found I could not suppress the illegal fishing around the coasts without employing tug-boats—one for Prince Edward Island, one on the north coast of New Brunswick, two along the coast of Nova Scotia. I then found I had to pay so much for the hire of these boats that last year we built a small one down in Hawkesbury.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What did it cost?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know, but a very small sum.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. It is not charged.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It may be that it is not in the accounts of this year, for it may not have been finished until after July. It was given on contract, and built by the famous boat builder at Fort Hawkesbury, Mr. Emery.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Who has charge of that boat ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. One of the captains in the fishery protection service.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Was it charged to that vote ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes, and not to this vote, because it is on the protection service.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Are the other boats charged to this vote ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, to the fishery protection service.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. How many ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There was a boat chartered for a few weeks, as long as it was necessary to prevent poaching and illicit lobster fishing. There was another boat, which Inspector Chapman was authorized to hire by the day to suppress illicit fishing on the north coast of New Brunswick. Last year we built this boat, and all this is charged to fishery protection service.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman must be wrong with regard to all these boats being charged to that vote, because we have the "Fred. M. Batt" charged to the vote for Prince Edward Island, page K-90, 44 days, $880 ; provisions for ships, $70.19 ; total, $950.19. It is the appearance of an item like that which requires some explanation.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It may have been paid out of that vote, but is used for suppression of illicit lobster fishing.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. On what system is the hon. gentleman going ? Take the large vote of $100,000 ; primarily that vote was charged with the protection simply of the coast fisheries against poachers within the three-mile limit. Is the hon. gentleman using indiscriminately these votes for instance, supplementing what is short on his Prince Edward Island appropriation, which he stated to-night to be about $7,000, by charging tugs that are used on the coast of the island to the fishery protection service.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That $7,000 embraced the expenses of that tug.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has said that he allowed the different officers to employ tugs occasionally, some on the island and some on the north shore of New Brunswick, and then he built one last year, and he said those would appear in the fishery protection account.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I thought they were all charged there.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. This one the hon. gentleman intended to take out of the fishery protection vote ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What distinction does he draw between the purchase of these two boats ? Instead of voting $70,000, is he treating it as though he would take, for instance, $170,000 on the two votes ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, the one is entirely distinct from the other. This is supposed to be inland entirely, but it appears that $950 are paid out of that for that tug. But it is not so, as a rule, and is not intended to be so. The tug boats are employed as subsidiary to the work done by the protection cruiser.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What has Mr. Hopkirk to do with the coast fishery ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. He is a fishery officer and has plenty of time to give to this work.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is he under Captain Spain ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. He is not in the fishery protection service ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, but he is put on board as a fishery officer, and would have perhaps a boatswain in charge.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Does he go up the rivers ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, simply along the coast. It is part of the fisheries protection service.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. And ought not to be in this vote ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Ought properly to be in the fisheries protection vote. I do not see how it came here.

Mr. McDUGALL. Is this the boat that was employed in connection with the oyster beds in Bras d'Or Lake, a small vessel from Prince Edward Island ?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It might be.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is this officer empowered to hire a steamer at what he thinks proper?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No, he telegraphs or writes the department that he can get a boat at such a price for so many days, and, if deemed advisable, he is authorized by special instructions to employ the boat.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What is this item of $42.75 for office furniture?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is for the inspectors' office in Charlottetown.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Is the Minister furnishing this office for the first time?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Yes.

Mr. INGRAM. I notice that the "Petrel" is in Lake Erie, and that it has captured something in the neighbourhood of 73 American nets placed in Canadian waters. Has this Government control of the nets that are seized and have to be disposed of, or is that in the hands of the Ontario Government?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That matter is in the hands of this Government.

Mr. TAYLOR. The hon. Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) propounded a question to my hon. friend as to whether he thought 60 cents a day would be too much for this officer. Now, I would like to call his attention to the salaries that were paid to the officers in my county by the late Government, which he used to call an extravagant Government, and ask him to figure out how much a day these figures represent. First, we have Mr. Nassau Acton, of Gananoque, whose salary is $77.08; Samuel Boddy, of Athens, salary $50 a year; Captain Davis, of Gananoque, salary, $50 a year. Then, there is Mr. Greer—his name appears as Green in the Auditor General's Report—his salary is $40 a year, travel $12; Wm. Hicks, salary $62.50, travel, $100; Geo. Jeacle, one of the very best officers in the Dominion, salary, $125, travel, $85.75; John Moorehead, of Longpoint, salary, $40, travel, $13.50; Robert Poole, of Poole's Resort, salary $50, travel, $13.50; and J. G. Wallace, of Ivy Lea, salary $4.16, travel, $2.50.

Mr. GIBSON. Salary, $4.16 a year?

Mr. TAYLOR. Yes; Mr. Wallace was a lighthouse keeper, and was appointed fishery officer and given this nominal sum to look after that part of the St. Lawrence at the Fiddler's Elbow. These are the gentlemen residing in my county who were all dismissed by the circular dated 1st January, and received by them between the 3rd and 6th of January. The hon. Minister has not said whether he intends to deal fairly with these men and pay them a quarter's salary. I want to ask the Minister of Customs, who is so expert at figures, what is the difference between employing this old blind man who has been referred to at $80 to patrol a river in Nova Scotia and the $25 which was paid by the former Government for the same service? And I would like to ask him if he thinks the salaries paid in my own county to these officers from $4.16 to $125 too much for efficient and faithful service. When they were dismissed they had already entered upon a quarter, and in any case, as they were employed by the year, they should have at least three months' notice.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

Mr. HENDERSON. I understand the Minister to say that nets seized on Lake Erie are under the control of this Government. For the sake of information, I would like to ask who controls the size of mesh in nets used for fishing in that lake?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). The Dominion Government controls that. All regulations respecting the time and methods of fishing and the engines to be used in fishing are controlled by the Dominion.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. I think the hon. Minister is mistaken in regard to the way these accounts are kept. When he says that these tugs are charged to the fisheries protection service. A list of these vessels appears at K-92 of the Auditor General's Report. I find here the "Aberdeen," charged $26,050.31; the "Acadia," $18,355.90; the "Constance," $16,826.45; the "Curlaw," $9,864.01; the "Dolphin," $4,093.94; the "Kingfisher," $6,198.10; the "La Canadienne," $13,781.53; the "Osprey," $7,476.18; the "Petrel," $11,061.49; the "Stanley," $2,580.28; the "Victoria,"—and this is the one I shall particularly refer to—$4,544.91; the "Vigilant," $9.80. Then there is the fisheries intelligence bureau, $2,305.73, and general account, $7,209.42. Now, the "Victoria" is the only vessel that would at all answer the description of the vessel chartered for that purpose. That vessel was chartered at the rate of $300 a month, from Mr. Hood, of Shelburne, and $1,279 was paid. That is not the vessel the hon. gentleman had in mind. Then we take the general account and all these items, bringing us, I think, over the ordinary fisheries vote, which is $130,000. So, the hon. gentleman will see there does not appear to be one single item for a tug service. Surely the hon. Minister must be misinformed. The hon. gentleman told the committee that his idea was that these tugs had been charged to the fisheries protection service.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I supposed so. These tugs were not employed until after the 15th of July, when the season expired. They were not employed in the year you spoke of.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Then, the hon. gentleman is not referring to the fiscal year expiring last July.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The tugs that were employed last summer would not be in these accounts at all. The only boat I know of that was charged here, in Prince Edward Island, was charged to the other account.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. The question is, upon what vote are these tugs charged up? The Minister thought they were charged in the fishery protective service.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They are not charged to the other, as I say; but it does not matter.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. There is a charge in Ontario for "tug hire, T. H. Elliott, Sault Ste. Marie".

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That is for inland purposes.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. In the Quebec items there is another charge for a tug. In Prince Edward Island you have tug hire there. The hon. gentleman has used up over $100,000 for fishery protection service. Can he state definitely what the system is?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The system is to pay it out of the fishery protection service, and I assume that was done last year; it is part of the fishery protection. It is charged out of the fishery protection money, and that is why I ask for an increase this year from $95,000 to $100,000. The memorandum says, that this addition of $5,000 is to cover the expenses of the extra boats required for the protection of the lobster fisheries.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Will it be irregular in future to charge these tugs that are employed to the ordinary fishery votes for the provinces?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think it would be irregular. It could only be done in special circumstances. I do not think there are other tugs which are in the fishery votes. You have picked out Elliott. He may be going from one part of his district to another in a tug-boat, and for that he would charge. He has an immense coast; he may go 100 miles. If he charters a tug for the purposes of protecting the fisheries, it might go to fisheries protection. You cannot divide it as finely as that.

Mr. BENNETT. Some time ago, the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) asked a question relative to a sale of the steamer called the "Dolphin," which had been in the ownership of the Government, and the Minister stated that the sale had been made without tender, for $700. Can he inform us as to the circumstances under which the sale was made, and why public competition was not invited?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The boat was entirely useless. I did not expect to get rid of her at all. My officers said they could not sell her, and I offered her to the Ontario Government for $600. They sent a man to inspect her, and told me they would not take her at all. I then had an offer made by somebody in the locality, that they would give $700, and Captain Spain said: If you can get $700, close the bargain quicker than chain lightning, and I closed for it as quick as the telegraph could send a message back. I understood afterwards that the gentlemen who bought the boat, rued their bargain and tried to get out of it. I do not think my hon. friend, or anybody else, could say, that the boat was worth more than that. She had been offered in previous years for $500. She was originally a police boat in Quebec.

Mr. W. H. BENNETT (East Simcoe). It is quite evident that the Minister has been imposed upon by somebody in the sale of this boat. The boat is not at all of the class which he speaks of.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Then, all the officers of my department must have made false reports.

Mr. BENNETT. She was used on the Georgian Bay, where pretty high seas run, and carried a captain and crew of eight men.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. We spent $2,000 in repairing her to enable her to go out last season.

Mr. BENNETT. That goes to prove that a gross sacrifice was being made, when so much money was being spent upon her. I know something of the dealings of the Ontario Government in that neighbourhood, and they will have forty friends who would be very anxious to rent tugs to the department. The Minister, in reply to the question on the 19th of April, gave this answer to the hon. member for East Grey. That there had been spent on this boat, in 1895-96, $414; in 1896-97, $346; in 1897-98, $335. That totalled about $1,100. I have looked in the Auditor General's Report of the preceding year, and find no less a sum than $857 was spent in repairs; in all, about $2,000 have been spent on this boat in repairs. The boat was a very fine boat. The hon. gentleman says, that one of his officers advised him to jump at the chance of selling her for $700. Well, his officer may be entitled to his judgment, but I think the boat could have been sold for twice that amount, had she been offered at public competition. I can tell the Minister that the man who purchased the boat had no use for her. He is not in the fishing business; he simply bought the boat as a speculation. There was a great deal of disgust around Owen Sound, as I have been informed, not only among Conservatives, but Liberals, that this Mr. Harrison, who is well known, I have no doubt, by the Minister of Customs (Mr. Paterson) as a prominent Liberal, had been given this very decided snap on this valuable boat for $700. The hon. gentleman consented to the sale of that valuable boat for $700.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Thirty-eight years old.

Mr. BENNETT. I can tell the hon. Minister that so much of the boat as was below the water line would be as good as the day it was placed in commission. I can tell him further, that $2,000 had been spent in repairs in the last three or four years.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Captain Spain and Captain McElhinney advised me to sell it; that it would be a good bargain for the department. The Deputy Minister also advised me to sell the thing.

Mr. BENNETT. The boat was sold to Mr. Harrison, a prominent Liberal in Owen Sound, who was very much mixed up in the by-elections there.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I had no idea what his politics were.

Mr. BENNETT. I think there must have been some pressing request made.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Nobody interfered in the matter at all. He wrote a letter. I submitted it to Captain Spain and Captain McElhinney, and they said it was more than the boat was worth. It is more than the Ontario government would give.

Mr. BENNETT. We can understand why the Ontario government would not buy the boat, because it was their policy to provide for their own friends there. No less than $2,000 had been spent on that boat four years before in repairs. She was a fit boat to ply from the Sault and over the waters of the Georgian Bay at the worst season of the year, in the fall, when the worst storms are to be expected. The Minister knew that she was a sea-worthy boat.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I had a prickling conscience for sending her out at all, because I had been warned, more than once, that we were running great risks in allowing that boat to go out in the Georgian Bay.

Mr. BENNETT. If the Minister had such qualms of conscience about having her employed in the public service where was his conscience when he sold her to an innocent purchaser?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I knew he would have to spend a great deal of money on repairs before he could make her sea-worthy.

Mr. BENNETT.

Mr. BENNETT. This boat had been employed in the patrol service on the Georgian Bay and on the upper lakes. I know the boat well, and considering that $2,000 were spent on her in repairs it is nothing short of a scandal that she was sold to this man. I will accept the Minister's statement about the matter, but I believe he was imposed on.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. All the officers of my department must have been imposed on. They told me that if I was going to send her out this year I would have to spend a large amount of money on her in repairs.

Mr. BENNETT. What has become of all these repairs that cost $2,000 in three or four years before?

Mr. MORRISON. Can the hon. gentleman tell me what the dimensions of the boat are?

Mr. BENNETT. Yes, I think the boat was from 80 to 90 feet in length.

Mr. MORRISON. What tonnage?

Mr. BENNETT. I could not say as to the tonnage.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I think my hon. friend is wrong as to the length of her.

Mr. BENNETT. I think I am within the mark.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. She is perhaps not 90 feet, but she is more than 40 or 45 feet.

Mr. BENNETT. I have some idea of the value of tugs of this class. There is an idea on the Bay that this matter was not straight and above board. It was a matter of comment afterwards in the Owen Sound papers. When the Minister received an offer of $700 for that boat he knew that he was dealing with something tangible, something of value. He must have known that he had something to sell. If he had to place some buoys and the work did not cost more than $150 or $200 it would not be done without calling for tenders. I would like to ask the Minister if that is not the practice.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. As a general rule tenders are called for.

Mr. BENNETT. The Minister admits that if there were some buoys to be placed on the bay or the lake for which the expenditure would be $100 or $150, for the year, he is such a stickler for propriety and straightforward dealing that tenders must be called for, yet, when it comes to selling a vessel to a party friend for $700 he thinks no tenders should be called for. I know a great many pledges were made in Owen Sound, amongst others, to have a post office erected and dry dock built, and these pledges remain unfulfilled. Mr. Harrison, I am assured, was one of the most prominent politicians in Owen Sound and one of the most deeply concerned in that famous by-election carried on there. He was in the foremost of the van. Although he was not in this business at all, and although he had no earthly use for this vessel but simply bought her as a matter of speculation and he had so much of a party pull with this Government that he could make an underhand offer to buy a boat for the sum of $700 which, if public tenders had been invited, or if she had been offered at auction would easily have brought $1,500.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Will the hon. gentleman tell me whether, if a speculator has bought this boat, he has sold her and at what price?

Mr. BENNETT. I do not know whether Mr. Harrison has sold the boat or not, and I do not care. I do say that Harrison had no earthly business with the boat, and that he bought her simply as a speculation. The transaction casts some suspicion on the department which sold this boat at such a figure.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There is no suspicion at all. I offered here to Mr. Hardy. I asked him if he would take her, and he told me that he would go back and consult with his colleagues. Captain Spain and Captain McElhinney said that she was not worth $700, and I wrote and said that I would sell her for $600. They would not buy her at that. After that I got this offer of $100 more than I had offered her for, and I closed with it.

Mr. BENNETT. If this boat had deteriorated so much in price, how is it that the Minister said that in 1893 the department was offered $700 for her? The Minister answering a question asked by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) said that in 1893 the boat was offered for sale for $700.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The same sum we got for her in 1898.

Mr. BENNETT. And in the meantime $2,000 was expended on her in repairs. Have any other boats been sold by the department since the hon. gentleman became Minister?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. BENNETT. I acquit the Minister of any complicity in wrong-doing, because I think he was imposed upon, but I submit that, if he calls for tenders for a buoy service at $50 a year, then, when he has a valuable craft to dispose of, with a man running after him offering him $700 for it, it is a business proposition that he should call for tenders for that. If he was offered say, $2,000 for a high-class vessel, like the "Bayfield," would he sell that vessel without tender?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not think so.

Mr. BENNETT. Well, the "Bayfield" is as old as the vessel that was sold.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. She is a much better vessel. This vessel was offered by my predecessor for $700; it was then, on the advice of my nautical adviser, offered for $600, and then I got an offer of $700.

Mr. BENNETT. Since that offer of $700, $2,000 has been expended on her.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. And six or seven years have elapsed.

Mr. BENNETT. The men on the shores of the Georgian Bay who are the best judges of the seaworthiness of that boat, were never afraid to venture out to sea on her in tempestuous weather, in the months of November and December. But, at the request of a party friend, the Minister sold that boat for $700, without asking for tenders. If the Minister is going to do that, he had better drop tenders altogether and give contracts to party friends who make the price in advance.

Mr. J. GILLIES (Richmond). Does the Minister remember dismissing an officer in my county named Lenoir?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Yes, the papers were brought down last year.

Mr. GILLIES. They were not brought down here, although I asked for them.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They were brought down in answer to a motion in the Senate.

Mr. GILLIES. I went to the Senate last year, and I could not get them, and I asked for them here, and could not get them either.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. It is not my fault, for I brought them down.

Mr. GILLIES. I asked for the papers last year because I had reason to know that Mr. Lenoir had been improperly and unjustifiably dismissed. I knew him officially since the first day he was appointed, and that was before I came to Parliament at all, and I know that he did his duty well.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That was not the official report.

Mr. GILLIES. The Minister has no official report reflecting on Mr. Lenoir, and the Minister admitted to me, last year, that he had no report from Mr. Bertram, the fishery inspector, against Mr. Lenoir. Mr. Lenoir was under the jurisdiction of Mr. Bertram, and, if any report would come to the Minister, it would come from Mr. Bertram. But Mr. Bertram never reported adversely on Mr. Lenoir. Mr. Lenoir could only be dismissed officially on the official representation of Mr. Bertram, but the latter never reported against him. Will the Minister bring down these papers?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I delivered them last year, in answer to Mr. Miller's motion in the Senate, but I will have them copied again.

Mr. GILLIES. Mr. Bertram is an excellent officer, and he would at once report if Mr. Lenoir, were incompetent; but he did not do so, and so I want to know why this gentleman was dismissed.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. There are very few papers about it, and I will have them copied and brought down. He is one of the officers reported by Commissioner Prince as not being a good officer.

Mr. GILLIES. Professor Prince could not so report.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. What is the use of saying that, when I tell the hon. gentleman he did? When you get the report, you will be in a position to discuss it.

Mr. GILLIES. I am in a position to discuss it now, because there is no report, and the hon. gentleman knows it. The Minister knows as well as I do that there is no report from Mr. Bertram complaining of the efficiency of Mr. Lenoir.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I did not say there was.

Mr. GILLIES. How can Prof. Prince report to the Minister unless he has a complaint from the overseer of the district, Mr. Bertram? The Minister will search in vain for a report from any of the officers of his department complaining of the inefficiency of Mr. Lenoir. If the Minister will bring down these papers to-morrow, I will quit that part of my complaint just now. There is something else in this connection which I would like the Minister to explain. In looking over into the Auditor General's Report for this year, I find that D. B. Boyle, who was appointed in place of Mr. Lenoir as fishery overseer for the district of Isle Madame, was paid last year $336.12, whereas Mr. Lenoir was paid, in 1895-96, $125 of salary and $69.25 for travelling expenses, or a total of $194.25; and the year before the amount paid was just about the same. I find that Mr. Boyle was paid last year $213.12 for travelling expense. He was also paid $23 for rent of rooms for paying bounty claims, while Mr. Lenoir, during the whole currency of the time he was in office, was never paid a cent for such things.

Mr. GILLIES.

There was an increase to that one person alone of $141.87 in one year. I want the Minister to tell me—and I am entitled to the information, because this is in my constituency—what is the cause of this difference in payment for exactly the same work for travelling over precisely the same territory.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. The hon. gentleman has put the question and given the answer himself. These fishery officers are paid just the same salary, and they are paid so much for travelling expenses. Rightly or wrongly, Mr. Lenoir was reported to me as not being an efficient officer. This new man travelled more, he swore to his bill, he had it audited, and got it paid in the usual way. How can I go round and test for myself whether all these fishery officers did the travelling for which they charge? Does the hon. gentleman say that he did not do the travelling?

Mr. GILLIES. It strikes me as very peculiar that one officer should be paid so much more for travelling over precisely the same territory.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. One did it efficiently, I suppose, and the other did it inefficiently.

Mr. GILLIES. Does the Minister undertake to say that?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I do not know anything about it. By your own reading one travelled more than the other.

Mr. GILLIES. The Minister should immediately have inquired into the cause of this great increase in one year. The same question applies in the adjoining district the district from St. Peter's Canal down to the eastern end of the county, over which Mr. Brymer presides. His predecessor was Mr. Murchison, who died before the late Government went out, and before his successor was appointed. I find that Mr. Murchison's salary was $125 and his travelling expenses $113, whereas his successor was paid $125 of salary and $205.96 for travelling expenses as well as $14.50 for rent, for which his predecessor was not paid a farthing. That is, Brymer was paid $106.50 a year more than his predecessor, Murchison, for doing exactly the same work and travelling over the same territory. This is an extraordinary way to practise economy. When these charges come in, the Minister should have some system of investigating them and satisfying himself that the work was actually done, and he should require some very satisfactory explanation to show why the travelling expenses so greatly increased.

Mr. INGRAM. I understand that the department issues instructions to the different overseers as to how much they should charge the department for horse-hire, horse feed, meals and all that sort of thing. I would like to ask the Minister if the same system of rates applies to overseers all over the Dominion?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I know of no difference.

Mr. INGRAM. Surely the department issues a circular to these overseers informing them the rates they should charge the department, and that circular goes to every overseer in the Dominion?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Certainly.

Mr. BENNETT. A few years ago while the senior member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper) was Minister of Marine and Fisheries, a case which largely concerned the interests of the fishermen in the Georgian Bay came before his notice. I refer to what was known as the Noble Bros. case. It attracted a great deal of attention among the fishermen on the lakes, as well as in the public press, and it was made the occasion of an attack on the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries in this House. Noble Bros. were a very influential firm, and they were very prominent Liberals in the district of Algoma. The then Minister justified the course he had taken, I understood, on the ground that the inspector, Mr. Elliott, had justified to the Minister his action in making the seizures. The seizures were rather serious, involving a considerable number of sailing craft, and some two or three tugs. This matter of the Noble Brothers caused so much agitation, not only in this House, but in the press, that the Minister—I will not say in deference to the comments made, but more probably in a spirit of fair play to the firm of Noble Bros.—caused an investigation to be had, before which Mr. B. B. Osler appeared for the firm; and I think the report was of such a nature that the Minister felt justified in doing what he had done. After that there was a change, the hon. member for Victoria N. B. (Mr. Costigan) succeeding the previous Minister. Mr. Costigan, while not admitting that the department had been in the wrong, took a bond, and the boats were delivered over to Messrs. Noble Bros. I wish to learn first, whether any action has been taken by the hon. Minister since he has been in charge?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Nothing has been done at all, and the matter remains just as it was.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Let us vote all this except one item, it being understood that on that one item we shall be at liberty to discuss all the others.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. That will be satisfactory.

Mr. BENNETT. Has the Minister arrived at any decision with regard to Noble Bros.?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. No.

Mr. GILLIES. I wish to bring to the Minister's notice the fact that on the 19th of this month I drew his attention to the order for some papers in connection with the dismissal of a lighthouse keeper at Point Jerome.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. They are being copied.

Mr. GILLIES. They are very short and should have been here by this. I asked for them twelve days ago, and they were promised for last Thursday. Will the hon. gentleman touch up his officer?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. I will touch him up.

Mr. INGRAM. Will the hon. Minister charge his memory with respect to the legal expenses in connection with Item 208?

The committee rose and reported progress.

Mr. TAYLOR. When may I expect the papers with reference to the dismissal of Mr. Lake, postmaster at Morton?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mullock). I will make inquiry and tell the hon. gentleman during the sitting to-morrow.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. What will be the Government business to-morrow?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES. Grand Trunk and Drummond County Railway.

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies) moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and the House adjourned at 12.20 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

THURSDAY, 1st June, 1899.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

ALLEGED ELECTION FRAUDS IN MANITOBA.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER moved:

That the papers covered by the return to an order of this House dated 30th March, 1898, for copies of all correspondence, &c., in connection with the question arising out of the Dominion elections, 1896, in the province of Manitoba, be referred to the Select Standing Committee on Public Accounts.

He said: I will say in regard to this, that the return is very meagre; and I would ask the attention of the right hon. gentleman to the subject of a further or supplementary return in this connection, because there are no papers in this return relating to anything else than some observations connected with the taxation. The Orders in Council, for instance, are not included, nor are the letters that have been produced from official sources in the Public Accounts Committee, that is, correspondence between the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Interior (Mr. Sifton). The evidence that was reported last session shows that there was considerable correspondence on this subject. This return begins and ends with a few memoranda in regard to taxation.

The PRIME MINISTER (Sir Wilfrid Laurier). I understand that a good many of these papers are already before the Public Accounts Committee. Is that the case?

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER. Some were, but the evidence there refers to further correspondence, and also Orders in Council.

The PRIME MINISTER. I have since learned that a good many of these papers are with the Auditor General at this moment. I will inquire about it.

Motion agreed to.

MILITIA ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. DOMVILLE moved for leave to introduce a Bill (No. 135) to amend the Militia Act.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. DOMVILLE. I did not propose, Mr. Speaker, on the introduction of the Bill to go thoroughly into the subject, more especially as I now await papers passed by the House and to be brought down from the department, which I have no doubt will be down in a day or two, perhaps to-day. Until these are in my possession I am hardly in a position to explain the Bill as well as I could on the second reading. It is a very simple Bill, very short, and yet it contains a great deal. It provides for the amendment of the 4th section of the Militia Act, as there is some doubt about the relative position of the Minister and the General. I propose to set that at rest. The second section asks to relieve the disability of one of our own people, commanding our own forces, paid by our own people, and manned by our own people. If this will satisfy my hon. friends, I would ask the privilege, on the second reading of the Bill, to go into full particulars and give my views on the subject.

Motion agreed to, and Bill read the first time.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Picton).

DISMISSAL OF PREVENTIVE OFFICER CURLESS.

Mr. TAYLOR asked:

1. Has Mr. Charles H. Curless, chief preventive officer of inland revenue and special preventive officer of customs at Grand Falls, N.B., been dismissed?

2. If dismissed, for what cause, on whose report and by whom was his dismissal recommended?

3. Was there an investigation held?

The MINISTER OF INLAND REVENUE (Sir Henri Joly de Lotbinière). 1. In so far as Mr. Curless is connected with the Inland Revenue Department his services have been dispensed with. 2. He was not performing any duties and the department did not consider his services necessary. 3. There was no investigation held, because from the records of the department it was apparent that he was doing no work to entitle him to a salary.

DISMISSAL OF STATION AGENT ON INTERCOLONIAL RAILWAY AT TRACADIE.

Mr. McDOUGALL asked:

1. When was Mr. Frank A. Gillis, formerly station agent on the Intercolonial Railway at Tracadie, N.S., removed from that station?

2. By whom was such removal recommended, and on what ground was it made?

3. Who was appointed to succeed Mr. Gillis as station agent at Tracadie?

4. By whom was Mr. Gillis's successor recommended, and has he since been dismissed from the service?

5. If dismissed, what was the cause of his dismissal?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). 1. Mr. Frank A. Gillis was transferred from Tracadie station to Denmark station on the 16th March, 1898. 2. His transfer was made on responsibility of department. 3. Daniel R. McDonnell was appointed to succeed Gillis as station agent at Tracadie. 4. McDonnell was appointed in the usual manner. He has since been dismissed from the service. 5. He was dismissed because he was short in his cash.

BUOY SERVICE IN ANNAPOLIS AND DIGBY BASIN.

Mr. MILLS asked:

1. When did the contract of John McCarthy, of Annapolis Royal, for maintaining the buoy service in the Annapolis and Digby basin, expire?

2. Did said McCarthy do any work in taking care of said buoys after his contract expired?

3. Has he been paid for said work? If not, why not?

4. Were tenders asked for this service during the present year, and when?

5. Who tendered and what was the amount of each tender?

6. Who has the contract now, and for how long and how much?

7. Are the duties and work to be done under the present contract the same as required by said McCarthy's contract?

8. What is the difference, if any, except the amount and name of the contractor?

9. When were the said buoys first placed in position by the present contractor?

10. Has the Department of Marine and Fisheries been notified that any of the said buoys are not in proper position? If so, what buoys?

11. Has the said department been notified that the Black Point can buoy in said basin is missing altogether?

12. If lost, who makes good the loss?

13. Who are the bondsmen of the present contractor?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. 25th of January, 1899. 2. The department is not aware that Mr. McCarthy did any work in taking care of the buoys after his contract terminated. 3. No. No report was received from the harbour master that any work was done. 4. Yes. A post bill inviting tenders was issued 3rd March, 1899, inviting tenders up to 1st April, 1899. 5. Thelbert Rice, $185 per annum; Willard H. Anderson, $295 per annum; W. W. Hayden, $295 per annum; John McCarthy, $300 per annum; John W. Snow, $300 per annum; Daniel Parker, $455 per annum. 6. Thelbert Rice for three years, at $185 per annum. 7. Yes. 8. No difference in contract. 9. The exact date was not reported, but the buoys were handed over to the new contractor about the 20th April. Owing to the bad condition in which the former contractor left them, the new contractor was compelled to supply new chains and moorings at his own expense, which delayed the placing of the buoys in position. 10. One buoy lost. 11. Yes. Black Point buoy was a wooden-can buoy, very much worm-eaten, and it is supposed was sunk. 12. The contractor, if the department decides to replace it by the same kind of buoy. If an iron buoy is used, the department will supply the buoy, the contractor the moorings. A temporary buoy has been placed in the meantime. 13. W. W. Wade, merchant, Bear River; Edward E. Rice, broker, Bear River.

C. P. R. SPECIAL MILEAGE TARIFF ON HAY, STRAW AND GRAIN.

Mr. MAOLEAN (by Mr. Taylor) asked:

Has the special mileage tariff on hay, straw and grain, B. No. 307, at present in force on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, been approved of by the Governor in Council and published in the "Canada Gazette," as required by section 227 of the Railway Act? If so, in what number of the "Gazette" has said tariff been published? If not, is it the intention of the Government to require the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to comply with said section as regards said tariff?

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). The special mileage tariff on hay, straw and grain, B. No. 307 of the Canadian Pacific Railway, has not been approved by the Governor in Council. It is only the maximum rates that are approved by the Governor in Council, based on approved classification.

NEW FISH HATCHERIES ON THE FRASER AND SKEENA RIVERS.

Mr. PRIOR asked:

1. Is it the intention of the hon. the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to place a sum in the Supplementary Estimates for the purpose of erecting new fish hatcheries on the Fraser and Skeena Rivers?

2. If not, why not?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). Until the Supplementary Estimates are brought down, I cannot give the information asked for.

FORESHORE AND TIDAL LANDS BELOW STEVESTON, B.C.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER asked:

1. Under whose control (Federal Government or local) are the 37.29 acres of foreshore and tidal lands situated west of and immediately adjoining section 9, range 7 west, block 3 north, N.W.D., about two miles below Steveston, B.C.?

2. Was an application made to the Department of the Interior, or to the Department of Marine and Fisheries in 1892, for a lease of these lands, and if so, to which department was the application made?

3. Was application to either department, as aforesaid, made in 1896, and if so, to which and by whom?

4. Were other applications subsequently made, and if so, by whom?

5. If applications were made in any of the above years to either of said departments, what was the reply?

6. If any communication to any one has been made by either of the above departments on this subject, what is the purport of the last?

The MINISTER OF MARINE AND FISHERIES (Sir Louis Davies). 1. The lands being situate in the public harbour of New Westminster, are now under the control of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. New Westminster was established under the Harbour Masters Act, by Order in Council of the 23rd January, 1892. 3. Applications were made to the Department of the Interior in 1892, for the lease of these lands by W. H. Squair, 14th October, 1892. 3. On the 23rd May, 1896, an application was made to the Department of Marine and Fisheries by Bell Irving & Co.—Anglo-British Packing Company—for the grant of the land referred to, and this application was referred to the Department of the Interior. 4. Yes, an application to the Department of the Interior by W. H. Steves, on the 16th June, 1897. On the 13th May, 1899, an application was received from H. Bell Irving & Co., for the Anglo-British Packing Company, referring to an application made to the Department of the Interior in 1892 and in 1896, and stating that the provincial government had granted a lease of the land to Mr. Frank Burnett, and protesting against such grant. We know nothing of said lease being granted. 5. The papers in regard to several applications were transferred on the 25th and 31st ultimo, from the Department of the Interior to this department and no action has been taken in regard to any of them. It would appear, however, that the Department of the Interior recommended to Council a grant of the land in question to Mr. Thomas Watts on the 5th May, 1896, but as Mr. Watts had not complied with the terms of the purchase, the sale was not made. 6. On the 3rd May, 1899, Mr. Bell Irving was informed by the Deputy Minister of the Interior that the papers relating to his and other claims for foreshore on Lulu Island had been transferred to the Department of Marine and Fisheries. No action has been taken by this department as yet in regard to Mr. Bell Irving's claim or that of any other.

POSTMASTER OF LÉVIS.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Has P. A. Bourget, postmaster of Lévis, been granted an increase of $50 in his salary ?
2. If so, was the said increase based on a report on the revenue from his office ?
3. What is the amount of revenue on which the said increase was based ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. P. A. Bourget is not postmaster of Lévis, nor has any increase of salary been granted to the postmaster of Lévis. There is an A. Bourget, postmaster of Lauzon in the county of Lévis, but his salary has not been increased.

POSTMASTER OF METABETCHOUAN.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Was Jean alias Johnny Gauthier, the present postmaster of Metabetchouan (St. Jérôme, in the county of Chicoutimi), postmaster of the same place in 1893, or at any time ?
2. Was he dismissed, and if so, for what reasons ?
3. Was there an inquiry which resulted unfavourably to him, and why ?
4. Was his dismissal based on political reasons, or for shortcomings in the discharge of his duties ?

The POSTMASTER GENERAL (Mr. Mulock). 1. Yes ; Mr. Jean Gauthier was postmaster of Metabetchouan from March, 1890, to January, 1894. 2. Mr. Gauthier was removed from the postmastership of Metabetchouan on the ground of negligence in the performance of his duties. 3. The inspector reported that the postmaster did not give proper attention to the duties of his office. 4. The records of the department indicate that the postmaster was removed for the reasons above stated.

Sir LOUIS DAVIES.

PROSECUTION OF P. C. DUPUIS, OF CHAMBORD.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Has P. C. Dupuis, of Chambord, in the county of Chicoutimi, been prosecuted, since 1896, for selling liquor to Indians ?
2. If so, what fine was he condemned to pay ?
3. Did the Government grant a remission or suspend the payment thereof, and at whose request ?
4. Did the said Dupuis finally pay up ; and if so, what amount as fine and what amount as costs ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. Yes. 2. $75 and $11.10 costs. 3. Representations were made by the member for the district in favour of Mr. Dupuis ; action was stayed to admit of my going into the matter, and, after giving it consideration, I directed that in so far as the Department of Indian Affairs was concerned the law should be allowed to take its course. And the local agent was so instructed. 4. Yes ; $75 fine and $11.10 costs.

DR. FLUHMAN, PHYSICIAN TO INDIANS OF POINTE BLEUE.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Whether Dr. Fluhman, of Roberval, was in the service of the Government before June, 1896, as physician to the Indians of Pointe Bleue ?
2. If so, did he resign in favour of Dr. Constantin, or was he dismissed ?
3. In the latter case, for what reasons, and on whose recommendation ?
4. Were petitions presented to the Government asking for the said dismissal ?

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). 1. Yes. 2. He did not resign, nor has he been dismissed. 3. Answered by No. 2. 4. No.

ROBERVAL DREDGE—CONTRACT FOR LUMBER.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Whether the timber for building barges to accompany the Roberval dredge was prepared by day's work or by contract ?
2. If by contract, were tenders invited ?
3. What prices, per running foot or otherwise, were paid for the said timber, and how much for the whole ?
4. Who secured the contract, and on whose recommendation ?
5. What sums have been paid to one W. Donahue, of Roberval, in connection with the preparation of the said timber ?
6. Is the Government aware that Donahue contracted for the said timber at 10 cents per foot, with one Larouche, of Kenogami, and that the contract has been cancelled because the said Larouche is a Conservative ?
7. Was the Government consulted in the matter, and if so, was it on this suggestion that the Larouche contract was set aside ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). 1. By contract. 2. Yes. 3. $20 per thousand feet, B.M.—$920.06. 4. Mr.

Donahue. 5. None yet. 6. No. The Government is not aware that any contract for timber has been awarded at 10 cents per foot by Mr. Donahue. The department has been informed that the timber supplied by Donahue has been condemned, because it was not suitable, and not because Larouche is a Conservative, as there is good reason to believe that there are no more Conservatives in sympathy with the Opposition in the district of Saguenay. 7. The Government was not consulted, the resident engineer using his own discretion.

RIVIERE LA PIPE WHARF—COUNTY OF CHICOUTIMI.

Mr. CASGRAIN asked :

1. Whether one Gédéon Boivin furnished stone for the construction of the wharf at Rivière La Pipe, in the county of Chicoutimi, and if so, to what amount ?

2. Is the Government aware that the said Boivin had hauled stone to the value of $75 or thereabouts, and that the wharf superintendent, Pednault, has refused to allow him more than the small amount which was paid him ?

3. Is the Government aware that this has been done under pretext that the said Boivin is a Conservative ?

4. Would the Government be disposed to help the said Boivin in investigating this matter, and to pay him the amount to which he is really entitled ?

The MINISTER OF PUBLIC WORKS (Mr. Tarte). The name of Gédéon Boivin does not appear on any of the accounts yet transmitted to the department for this work.

REPORT.

Report of the Canadian Archives.—(Mr. Fisher.)

DOMINION LAND SURVEYORS.

Sir CHARLES HIBBERT TUPPER (Pictou). I trust I may be permitted to take a moment's time to make an appeal to the Minister of the Interior in regard to a case of hardship in connection with a candidate at a recent examination for Dominion Land Surveyors. This gentleman has written me a letter, which I will hand over to the Minister, or read it, whichever he desires. This candidate was a witness in a suit in which I was engaged, and we subpoenaed him as a witness at the time he was intending to go up for an examination that was held at Victoria in the month of February. As he desired to go to the examination, he intimated that he could not attend the court, and an application was made for a bench warrant, and his attendance was secured, much to his own disadvantage. He now writes the letter, in which he makes an appeal to have his papers examined. He afterwards got back in time to go through the examination, and, supposing that there would be a result with the other papers by this time, he made certain contracts for surveys, one in connection with lands in the railway belt; but he now finds that there is a possibility that his papers may not be passed upon until the regular meeting of the board, some time in August. That would cause serious loss to this man, as he explains, and perhaps the Minister of the Interior will give this matter his immediate consideration, if I send the letter across the House, instead of reading it. This gentleman states the facts in the letter, and I can personally vouch for them, so far as they relate to the reason why he did not attend on the first day of the examination.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). Very well.

JUDGE MAGUIRE.

The MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR (Mr. Sifton). In reply to the question asked by the member for Pictou (Sir Charles Hibbert Tupper), I beg to say, that Judge Maguire arrived at Dawson on the 26th February, 1898, and left there on the 16th of August, 1898.

I. C. R.—EXTENSION TO MONTREAL.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair) moved that the House resolve itself into committee to consider a certain proposed resolution declaring it expedient to confirm a certain leasing agreement entered into with the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada and Her Majesty, in the interest of Canada, for the extension of the Intercolonial Railway into the city of Montreal.

Motion agreed to, and House resolved itself into committee.

(In the Committee.)

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS (Mr. Blair). Mr. Chairman, the committee will remember, at least those who were present when I presented my statement in connection with the Drummond County Railway will remember, that I almost entirely, if not quite, abstained from making any reference whatever to the Grand Trunk branch of the Montreal extension arrangement. I did so because I felt that, while the general policy of the extension to Montreal would necessarily embrace the consideration of this question, it did not appear at all necessary that I should confuse them in the minds of the committee, since it became necessary that they should be dealt with separately by the House. I did, however, make what might perhaps be called one digression, for I referred at that time to a contract that had been entered into between the Railway Department of the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway. I did so because I was of the opinion that that matter was germane to the whole subject of the extension of the Intercolonial Railway, because I thought there was a misapprehension in the minds of members of Parliament and in the country at large with respect to the exact terms of that agreement, and because I felt—and it was the opinion of the officers and managers of the railway—that the Intercolonial had been, in a measure, at all events, handicapped in its operation by virtue of that contract. My hon. friend the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart), when he addressed the committee, seemed to consider that he was called upon to challenge the accuracy of the statement which I made in that connection. He seemed to think that he was sufficiently informed upon the subject to deny practically what I said, and in fact to put before the House a distinct challenge of my statement. Lest there should be any impression upon the minds of hon. members by reason of my hon. friend having been for many years head of the Railway Department of the Government, that he had some knowledge of the subject whereon he spoke, and that, therefore, I must have necessarily been in error, I shall occupy a few moments of the time of the committee in putting this question before it again, and in showing that my hon. friend was not well advised when he undertook to challenge the statement I made, I think, that he might as well have assumed that I would not have been likely to make a statement to Parliament so clearly and explicitly as I had done unless I knew something of the subject with which I was dealing. My hon. friend did not scruple to deny in toto what I said in that connection. He said there was no such contract in the terms I alleged. He said the Intercolonial Railway was not hampered or handicapped in any respect, because there was no agreement of neutrality, as between the Government on the one hand and the company on the other, which would have restrained in the remotest degree the freest action of the department in respect to the user of its own line for the carriage of its traffic. I stated that not only was that the fact, but that the department had acted on the interpretation which I had given to the contract, the only interpretation of which it was susceptible, and that the hon. gentleman himself had given instructions to his officers requiring them to see that this neutrality clause in the contract was faithfully observed by the agents and employees of the Government. On the challenge of the hon. gentleman, I fortified that by the statement that my chief engineer had informed me that such was the case, and that by the direction of the Minister he had so instructed the general manager of the railway. My hon. friend leaves me no alternative but to prove my position. I do not say that at this stage it is distinctly germane to the question before us; but the hon. gentleman has chosen to put his knowledge, his experience, his acquaintance with the workings of the department during the years that he was in it, against the statements I made; and

Mr. BLAIR.

I do not think he can complain, nor will the committee deem it amiss, if I devote a few minutes to proving what is capable of the clearest and amplest demonstration, that the hon. gentleman was not really aware, or if he was he has actually forgotten, what took place in his own department in this connection. Let us see what the contract says:

If the Government or any railway competing with the Canadian Pacific via Point Lévis or Chaudière Junction shall likewise establish such agencies at the same points, the conditions as to neutrality shall be observed by the station agents, local ticket and freight agents of the Intercolonial Railway at such stations.

That is the concluding portion of the 19th clause of the contract, and follows the general clause under which the Government bound itself that it would require of its officers the observance of the strictest neutrality between the Grand Trunk Railway, which took up our traffic at Lévis, and our own railway, which carried it to Lévis, on the one hand, and the Canadian Pacific Railway via St. John, on the other. I maintain, as was judged by the officers of the department, by the Department of Justice and by the hon. gentleman himself, as I shall show, that there is only one interpretation of which this section is susceptible, that is, that as between the Government railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway, so far as related to the carriage of its freight by the long haul and its delivery at Lévis, the officers and agents of the Government were not to be free to send business along the Intercolonial, but were to submit to the keen competition of the Canadian Pacific Railway as against the Intercolonial system. To show that there can be no question in the mind of any lawyer as to what that means, I will show you how it was interpreted in the department. I made a statement the other day, with regard to what my deputy stated to me of the conduct of the department on the subject, and I will read a memorandum which the chief engineer has placed in my hands, with permission to read it to the committee. It is to the following effect:

MEMO. FOR MINISTER

In reply to your inquiry, as to whether, or not, instructions were issued, in accordance with the terms of the traffic agreement, dated 1st July, 1890, between Her Majesty and the Canadian Pacific Railway for traffic on the line of the Intercolonial Railway east of St. John (as described in said document), for the station agents or local ticket and freight agents at stations to be strictly neutral as between the Canadian Pacific Railway via St. John, N.B., and the other lines competing with it, I may say I personally directed the chief superintendent, now the general manager of the Canadian Government Railways, on many occasions (as complaints were from time to time received from the Canadian Pacific Railway officers) to instruct the station agents, local ticket and freight agents to be strictly neutral, and that if he found them disregarding these orders to dismiss them, and to inform them that if they failed to so act they would be dismissed, and he, over and over again, reported to me he had done so, and that he believed they were acting up to the instructions.

C. SCHREIBER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Will the hon. gentleman allow me, because it is very important that this should be clearly understood. I did not catch, in anything the hon. gentleman has read as to the agreement, anything that affects the Intercolonial Railway. As I understood it, the clause as read—I may have misunderstood it—states that employees must observe actual neutrality between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Grand Trunk Railway or any other lines of railway competing with each other. I do not see anything in that to prevent the officers of the Intercolonial Railway doing anything they could for Intercolonial Railway traffic; but they were to observe absolute neutrality as between other competing companies, which appears to me to be all right.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. I am willing to give the hon. gentleman credit for not understanding the agreement as I put it to the committee; but he will pardon me for saying that none are so blind as those who will not see.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend is entirely wrong. I have every desire to see, and I shall be only too glad if he will point out the clause in the contract which states that the Intercolonial agents are precluded from taking anything they can procure in the way of traffic for their own railway.

The MINISTER OF RAILWAYS AND CANALS. If, to use the homely phrase, my hon. friend will possess his soul in patience, I will afford him the completest and amplest testimony of the truth of what I state. I see the ex-Minister of Railways (Mr. Haggart) smiling, as much as to say, that that does not establish anything. I will give my hon. friend, before I get through, so much proof, that I think he will not venture to affirm in this House that the statement I am now presenting to the committee admits of a shadow of doubt. I have gone over a portion of this contract, and since the hon. leader of the Opposition does not understand the effect, I shall endeavour to make it clear. The 17th clause of the agreement is as follows:—

The traffic affected by this agreement shall be handled by the Government without discrimination or preference, and the agents of the Canadian Pacific Railway engaged in the conduct of this traffic shall be given facilities equal to those accorded to the agents of the other companies doing business on this line.

Clause 18th, gives the basis of the neutrality arrangement:

The Minister of Railways and Canals shall use every endeavour to cause the station agents or local ticket and freight agents at stations on the line of the Intercolonial Railway east of St. John, excepting St. John, except as hereinafter provided, to be strictly neutral as between the Canadian Pacific Railway via St. John, N.B., and other lines competing with it, and to way-bill freight and sell tickets by such of these routes as may be indicated by shippers or passengers.
