ESSENCE OF SMOKE.

For the Smoking of Hams, Bacon, Fish, &c. &c. &c.

THE subscriber respectfully to announce to the public, that the Essence of Smoke has been extensively used throughout the Province during the past season, and that all those who have given a fair trial, recommend it as decidedly preferable to the old mode of smoking fish and meat.

House-keepers, Provision-dealers, and others can smoke any quantity of meat or fish, without the least inconvenience or loss of time, by attending to the following plain directions.—Wash the ham, &c. in cold water, and rub it with a dry towel, then wash it over twice or three times with the Essence of Smoke, allowing six hours to elapse between each washing, hanging it up, to dry slowly; it will then keep for years, and in any climate, and it will not rot or become rancid, as is the case with the Essence of Smoke.

Half a pint is sufficient for the largest ham.

More of Fish that has become tainted will be restored to a wholesome state in a few hours by being washed once or twice with the Essence of Smoke.

For its use in the cure of Rheumatism, Inflammation, Cuts, Burns, Sprains, and many other complaints, and also for its beneficial effects in the removal of diseases, and accidents to which horses and cattle are liable, see inflammatory sprains, &c. see handbills.

A liberal commission allowed to merchants and traders willing to become agents.

Sold by Thos. Walker & Son, J. & J. Alexander, Peter & Tilley, and G. Chadwick, St. John; J. Cook, Carlisle; Robert Boyle, Portland; Barnes, Travis, Indian Town; James P. Goss, Fredericton; G. F. ### ROMANCE IN REAL LIFE.

A romantic incident has just occurred in the Maritime Infantry. Ann Dempsey, a young and interesting girl, who has been the support of an aged mother, had gone into the infirmary for the purpose of undergoing an operation for the removal of a tumour, which had assumed the form of a large tumour. She was warned of the painful and even perilous nature of the operation, but she expressed her resolution to submit to it, owing to the ardent wish that her life might be spared for her mother's sake. The operation was accordingly performed in the presence of her mother and several eminent medical men. It lasted two hours and forty minutes, and the magnitude of the tumour taken from her may be imagined when it is stated that it weighed two pounds and a half of weight. Notwithstanding the long and painful operation, she related, this heroic girl never uttered a single cry, but at the conclusion there was observed falling down her cheeks, and being dried not to shed them, she replied that "she was tired of her freedom from the infirmity which had so long afflicted her." As she appeared to be in a sinking condition, the medical gentlemen, upon a consultation deemed a fresh infusion of blood into her veins absolutely necessary, the making inquiries as to whom they could procure to provide the blood, it appeared that two men were in an adjoining room, one 25, and the other between thirty and thirty-five years of age, and the latter was the surgeon in the first instance. Believing them to be relatives of the poor girl, they were ushered into the room, where they turned out to be the eldest son of her employer, for whom she worked at odd times, and the other a journeyman in the same office, both devotedly attached to the unfortunate girl. On being made acquainted with the state, and what was required to be done for the patient, they both simultaneously volunteered to supply the blood from their veins. Much hilarity of feeling and conversation between them ensued as to which should do it, which was put an end to by the decision of the surgeon in favour of the youngest, who having his arm into the veins of the poor sufferer, till the young man fainted from it. On this taking place, the elder brother implied permission to supply the blood, and the girl, who was in a delirious state, expressed her gratitude to the young man, who had lost his blood for her, and begged of him to be kind to her mother. She then entered into prayer with her mother, the chaplain to the work-house, and in the midst of it expired.

STANZAS.

Suggested by the destruction, at the recent fire at Donnopour, of the Plaza under which Nelson and Fomoth fought the battles of Trafalgar and Algiers.

By MR. ALBION WATTS.

Can it be in anger this
Britain's Ganges bids adieu;
Sweeping in her wrath from us
Trophies time can never renew!

Standards that o'er heroes wave
Whom'er they sweep the sea;
Breezes and battle, that have braved
The single speck, and the foe's eye.

We have seen Old England's flag,
Famed in song, renowned in story,
Trained beneath a rebel star,
Sole'd its folds, and dimm'd its glory.

Better perish in its fame,
Requ shore by the great and good,
Ere a single spot of its
On its hallowed folds intrude.

England, from thy trace awake,
Fate's heath hath challenged thee!
Not for the living's sake
For thy dead, who left thee free!

Warnings from the nations came—
"We listen to the call!"
It was meet a "tongue of flame"
Should at length arouse us all!

(From the London Shipping Gazette, Oct. 27.)

WARNING TO SAILORS.—Mittis.—My brother day gave an account of an inquest held at Cork, on the body of John Ward, one of the crew of the barque "Tranquiller," from St. John, N.B. The deceased had, at all intents and purposes, excited a mutiny on board the vessel, and led his deluded shipmates to acts of hostility against Captain Robert, who, as he was strictly justified in doing, armed himself to defend his person from violence, and to maintain, if need were, his legitimate control of the vessel. His prerogative was disregarded, his person insulted, his commands disobeyed, and his life placed in jeopardy; and having forewarned the witnesses that he was prepared and determined to resist them, he was at last coerced into an act of manslaughter, which the coroner's jury have very properly decreed to be "justifiable homicide."

We know, while we are writing this, that it will be read by thousands of seafaring men; and we had referred the melancholy story to press unnoticed. Not that we regard that a sentence has been shortened for it; the unfortunate man has his pity, but his crime shall not have our palliation. We would have sailors understood in a nation which is preyed upon by the prevailing mutiny, that in a ship wearing no pennant, they are not to be restrained in the perpetration of acts which, in the Navy, they would not, and dare not, contemplate. We wish sailors would view the offence which they commit in their own true light. We will display it, side by side, with piracy.

The pirate is detested and dreaded, and when overpowered, punished—but who pities him? He is a most universal outlaw. Cannot, then, sailors see that the pirate, in his robberies and murders, breaks no contract, betrays no trust, deserts no master? He has not contracted faithfully to serve, obey, and defend the man he serves, nor has he engaged to protect the vessels he plunders and destroys? But we will pursue this no further.

English Sailors should delight in doing their duty under any circumstances, even under the greatest provocation to do so; and not object to being punished for it, in a degree of honourable pride in the Merchant Navy, which will not suffer their falling off. The well-disposed of a crew should stand ready at the beck of their Commander, and not be so irresolute as to desert him, or to desert his vessel, or to desert his duty. Several were scolded so badly that they were raw from head to foot. Six or seven were instant-

Accident.

On the Danube, down to its mouth, thence to Constantinople, to Smyrna, to all the coast of Syria, and to Egypt. And in those days, once on the shores of the Mediterranean, we may proceed almost any where by steam.—Missionary Herald.

EXTRAORDINARY MATCH AGAINST TIME IS MADE. By the United States Gazette of August 14, we are put in possession of the particulars of a match against time, performed by Captain Horns, of the horse artillery, who backed his grey Arab horse, Jumping Jenny, to carry him down the river in four days, twenty hours, and fifty-five minutes, and both man and horse fit to go many miles further.

Naval and extraordinary Phenomenon.—An accident has led to the discovery that the steam which escapes from the boilers of steam-engines, in many cases develops or gives out great quantities of electricity. About a fortnight since, the engine-men at a stationary steam-engine, on a railway in the neighbourhood of Newcastle, happening to have one hand in a capacious jar of electricity, the jar was placed in accidental contact with the boiler, which applied his other hand to the lever of the safety-valve, experienced an electric shock. This led to the discovery that the electricity was given out by the steam very rapidly, and might be collected as from a powerful electric machine. It has been ascertained moreover, that the phenomenon does not occur in any circumstances peculiar to the boiler in which it was observed; for in many other boilers, which have since been tried, the same has been observed to develop electricity very copiously. The subject is being followed up here by experiments, and has been brought under the notice of some of the most eminent scientific men of the day. It is not unlikely that the newly discovered phenomenon may be applied to important results, in advancing our knowledge of the nature of the electric fluid, and in the development of electricity very copiously.
