The last month of summer has behaved respectably so far.

The Montreal Gazette rather enjoys Itself in advance over the lively time the Dominion Opposition is to have with the new Government. The Brantford Expositor says the session can no doubt be made lively enough-but with full revelations of hitherto only half-revealed orookednesses on the part of the Tupper Government. Perhaps the Gazette is wise in having its hilarity in advance, on the principle of the well known story of the man and the bull. The former, chortling in his joy, seized the horns of the latter, whereupon the bull promptly tossed the man over the fence. But the man was a philosopher all the same. "Faith," said he, after he had picked himself up, "it's as well I had my laugh first." The worst visitation of Asiatic cholera that ever afflicted this county occurred 62 years ago this summer. Do any of our readers remember the calamity?

One man-an engineer-failed to do his duty on the express train recently wrecked in New Jersey, and great loss of life ensued. All the precautions of the railway company, it eems, were of no avail to meet the fatal error of an individual, and as the grouse shooting season opens on he went down to death in the wreck August 12. an explanation of his conduct will never be forthcoming. A railway company which has careful and experienced engineers in its service cannot prize them too highly. When one of them errs, at a critical moment, it seems disaster cannot be averted.

His visit to England is to be as a national guest, the Queen, through Lord Salis-bury, having invited him to visit the country at the national expense. He will remain in England a month.

CHOLERA BEYOND CONTROL. London, July 8 .- Advices from Alexandria, Egypt, show that the cholera outbreak there has got beyond the control of the sanitary authorities. For nine months they fought the disease with energy, and as long as the in-fested areas were small the limited force of European doctors were sufficlent to handle it. Now, however, the dimensions of the outbreak forbid any successful attempt to stamp out the disease.

A doctor's boat was also on hand from the Hood. All the shops were closed, the houses were barricaded, the streets became empty of the populace, and full of troops, who with orderliness worthy of the highest praise, and headed by Abdullah Pacha, occupied the streets. The result was much noise and sensation. Turks and Christians were equally scared, the first to arrive Turks, who showed signs of the utmost fear. The danger of the situation lies in the fear that almost every inhabitant carries arms, and that at any hour one of these panics may develop serious results. Meanwhile reports came in that villages are burn ng in the neighborhood of the Candia district. The Christians affirm it is the doings of the Turks, while Turks say that it is the work of the

CLOSE OF THE SOCIALIST CON-

London, Aug. 3 .- At the closing session of the Socialist Congress on Saturday a Greek delegate tried to read an address of sympathy with the Cuban insurgents, but the delegates, desiring to wind up the congress, declined to listen. The congress decided to meet next year in a German ity, but the particular spot was not with the singing of "Auld Lang Syne. "Marseillaise," the "Carmognole," and with three cheers for the social

The organizers of the Socialist congress meant to identify, if they could, their proceedings with the trades unions of

There was a large assemblage of priests also. Later a permanent committee, includ-ing the rectors of the North American St. Boniface College, presented the pilgrims separately to the Pope. They offered to the sovereign pontiff a rich national banner, with the arms of the pilgrimage upon it. A lady of the party also offered an elegant purse containing the pilgrims' offerings. The Pope looked well and spoke kindly to

The soil at the park is sandy, and the water soaks through quickly. Consequently the moisture did it little tharm. The best proof of this is the fielding record. A carpet had kept the pitcher's box dry, and Fisher had some chalk in his hip pocket, which enabled him to get a good grip on the ball. That is more than the Guelph hitters could do.

Yes! the Port is very green this year, and the efficacy of kid-curlers, crimping-pins, curling irons and other irons, for grilling, frizzing and singeing purposes, has been put to the severest test, for Port Stanley weather finds out all the weak places in houses, tents, and-hair!

It is an improving sight, though of a damp evening, and see a woman trying to be sentimental or coquettish, with straight, dank locks hanging straight down from beneath her hat. Only a genius can accomplish it. But it has been wet all over this month, and one feels less bedraggled on the whole standing on lofty promontories, with a stiff breeze blowing off the lake, than puddling around at home, among the dirty streets, and the low, humid air. The wet moon this month had something to do with it, no doubt, and now that is almost over. But no amount of wet, it seems, is able to put an end to the popularity of the Fraser House hops. The house was full of guests, and in dancing hall just a few more couples and the room would have been overcrowded. She is an American by birth, but comes of good Scottish stock, her father being an Ayrshire man who traces his ancestry back to the days of Bruce. His daughter was fond of Scottish legends and tales in her youth, and at an early age was inspired by the ambition to become mistress of the melodious art of piping. She learned readily, and she is now sought all along the coast to give color to the gatherings of the men from the "Land of the Heather." > The Future of Canada Under Liberal Management.

> "Sanguine Sir Charles" Properly Sized Up at Ingersoll.

Ingersoll, July 31.-When Sir Richard Cartwright rose to speak at the great demonstration in his honor last night, two little girls, Miss Nora Wilson and Miss Louise Noxon, presented him with bouquets and received fabled demigod of old, power of turn- have occasion to come before you in a ting the Chaudiere Falls into these different capacity, and in that instinct plause. Sir Richard, when he rose to reply, was enthusiastically cheered. Sir Richard first thanked the good men of South Oxford for standing by him in the advocacy of Liberal prin- ed for some two or three parliaciples all these years. He also complimented the Conservatives on their courtesy by permitting his re-election by acclamation. It was the first time by acclamation. It was the first time act justly and do not number in that tonight of what we are going to do. It was the first time in 30 years that such a thing had occurred. He would not pretend to say that he was worthy of the eulogy of the address, but he thought he might claim, and he appealed to the record of the party while in Opposition and to the record of the Administration duced, by a number of promises, of which he had been a member in support of his contention, that the leaders of the Reform party are not, and were not, and would not be in the future, likely to bring the blush of shame to the cheek by any act of mal-administration on their part. It into power. When I look at the rewas impossible to avoid mistakes, but in the Administration which had been actual formed if mistakes were made they would not be made for the purpose of promoting their own private or party interests; they would be only the mistakes which might be inevitable in carrying on the government of a country so extended as ours.

LESSONS ON THE ELECTIONS. There were some things in the late stituency. It was a misfortune that two parties so closely allied as the Patrons and Liberals should be ar- tion to that, while we do injustice rayed against each other. It was a lesson which they would do well to take to heart. The result was to inflict injury on the Patrons themselves, and to give several seats which might otherwise have been held to the other party. "The chief lesson of the election," continued Sir Richard. "is that we have been too much in the habit of looking down on the sister Provinces, and of arrogating to ourselves a superior standard of political morality. One thing the peo-ple of Canada should rejoice in as an augury for the future is the noble example set to us by Quebec in the last election. (Applause.) I lay stress upon this because every possible means was taken to stir up the minds of the people of Quebec on subjects of race and religion, as to which they are naturally particularly sensitive. It is at one and the same time an extreme tribute to the personal qualities and genius of Mr. Laurier, and to the great qualities of the people of Quebec when properly appealed to, and in these circumstances Quebec, for the first time in its history, has rolled up the greatest Liberal majority Canada has ever seen. In that I see a pledge and an augury that the future Administration will be able to do more than we have been successful in doing in the past in welding Canada into one harmonious whole. The Canada that I hope to see, the Canada which ought to be, is a Canada in which every man shall be a Canadian first and an Englishman or a Frenchman, a Protestant or a Catholic afterwards. It is on this ground and on this only, that our nationality can hope to be built up firmly and strong-Though we have been accused in past times of taking a pessimistic view of Canada, of depreciating our country, of running down the resources and prospects of Canada, I repudiate for myself, and still more for the Liberal party, any such charge as that. On the contrary, the whole foundation of the policy of the Re-form party is this, that, given fair play, an equal chance by the people of Canada, whether they be artisans or manufacturers or farmers or fishermen, we hold that with fair play and with fair chances given to them, the Canadians are able, as they have demonstrated time and again, to maintain their own with any people on the face of the earth-(applause)and if there be one proof more strikir than any other, it lies in this fact, that while it is most unfortunately true that an enormous number of the youth of Canada, of the people of Canada, have for various causes in the past years found a home in the United States, the country which joins us for so many thousand miles, anyone who has paid the slightest attention to the records of the immigration from Canada into those States knows that I am speaking the simple truth when I say that a most extraordinary and unusual percentage of these who have gone to the United States have attained there positions of trust emolument and importance, in far greater proportion than an equal number of natives of the same country-(applause)-and if

ing at the present moment to en-large on the possibilities of preferheartily glad to welcome any movement that will extend our trade with the mother country. I am bound to ture rather than of the present. I am not aware of the extent to which the mother country will be prepared to go. If it will promote the interests of Canada the present Administration will not be so far behind their duty as to keep it back. Now, I do not pretend to say for one moment that everything has been going on as we would wish it to go in the United States. Of late years there have been faults, and considerable faults, in the various transactions that have occurred between us and our neighbors. I believe that it is vitally important to the best interests that great country, and it is especially desirable in the interests of the farmers of this peninsula that we should obtain for you free access to their markets. That, as you know, has been part of the platform of the Reform party. That is a thing that I have always striven to bring about, and that is an object that will commend itself to the Ministers at the first opportunity that we have of obtaining access to the United States markets on fair and reasonable terms.

CLEANING OUT There is one thing more, as my friend, Mr. Jones, the mayor, told you, we will have a good deal to do the stables. There is no doubt whatever that if we possessed, as did the public buildings we would find emer that is now going to waste there. There are all the corruptions which have been going on almost uncheckmentary terms, and still we will not shrink from doing our duty in that act justly and do not punish inno-cent men for faults that are due next three or four years; but if it be more to the faults of the Administration than to faults of their own. I will also remind you of this: Some eighteen years have passed away which we need not now recall, to commit themselves to a policy of extreme high taxation. One result has been to cripple to a very considerable extent the powers of usefulness of instruction to our Conservative friends, another Administration that comes I am perfectly certain that a little cord of the Administration I find your your nominal taxation has almost with an expenditure of $18,000,000 or put in his place men whose honesty $20,000,000. Even our opponents admit that there is a reasonable proselections as to which he desired to pect of our fulfilling our promises, say a word or two. He would not but so far as possible it will be our best endeavor to lessen the burdens that now press on the shoulders of no man or no class, we do intend is this: That when the people are taxed, and so far as the people are taxed, it is the duty of the Government to see to it that the taxation which is levied for them shall be expended for the benefit of all, and shall on no pretext be allowed to be used for the personal advantage of a few, no matter how wealthy, no matter how important, no matter how influential they may be That is our policy, involved in our platform; that it will be the duty, the intention of the present Government to carry out to the best of their ability I do not pretend to tell you for one moment, that it will be within our power to bring about these reforms, you must reform in a reasonable and natural way; you must proceed in a reasonable degree, step by step, endeavoring to see to it that in your haste for reform you do not inflict unnecessary injury to any class of the community, but remembering always that it is the duty of the representatives of the people of Canada to see to it that, first and foremost, above all things, and before all things, the public revenues and the public policy be so shaped that it may do injustice to no class in the community, and least of all to that great class in the miration. community whose interests perhaps have been lost sight of of late; I mean the agricultural class in the commumity, upon the prosperity of which, in the last resort, we all depend. (Cheers.) present Administration deserves well of the people of Canada, and from which the farmers may deduce an au-gury for the future of the Dominion, it is that we have taken pains to see that the man who is entrusted with the important post of Minister of Agriculture should be a practical farmer, a man who knows the needs of the farmers, a man in whom they have confidence, a man who will devote his time to the purpose of carrying out any project or any scheme that is liketo add to or increase in any way the resources of Canada from an agricultural point of view; and I believe that in Mr. Fisher the farmers of Canada have a representative of whom they may be proud and in whom they may place their trust. (Cheers.) The Reform party have laid down certain principles. These principles are clear. THE GOVERNMENT'S DUTY. It will be our duty as Ministers of the Crown and as representatives of the Reform party to endeavor to give them effect. And allow me to say to you, my friends, that if we fail in that duty it will be your duty to punish us for our neglect, and I hope and expect that you will do so. (Laughter.) No doubt, as our friend, Mr. Jones, remarked, there are obvious abuses which it will be our duty to abolish. There is no doubt that particularly in this Province of Ontario there is in operation a most iniquitous gerrymander act of which you yourselves have been a very prominent example for many years. I need not tell you that so soon as it is in our power the Raform Government will make an end of that act. The Franchise Act, its sister in rascality, will follow it. The extravagance and corruption which have unfortunately marked our public record for many years will likewise be put a stop to We will not be able to manage all many years, surely we Canadians these reforms at once, but I may safewill be able to hold our own. (Ap- ly say to you that in the new Governly say to you that in the new Govern-ment you will find the Administra-tion's chief aim will be to give you done by the new Government. It will be our duty to obtain for you freer markets for all that you have to dispose of in the markets of the world. The markets of the world. The people rich and prosperous. We markets for all that you have to dispose of in the markets of the world. As you well know, there is at present an agitation on foot in the mother country for the purpose of uniting more closely together the various portions of the empire. I am not going at the present moment to enlarge and the present make the people rich and prosperous. We may be able to point out a path by which you can better your condition; but it is upon the people rich and prosperous. We may be able to point out a path by which you can better your condition; but it is upon the people rich and prosperous. We may be able to point out a path by which you can better your condition; but it is upon the people themselves that a country must rely for prosperity will be found to depend upon the number of intelligent and indusential trade, or to make any more trious men and women that it con-reference to it than this: We will be tains, and it will be our desire to make Canada in the future a country in which its own people will be glad to remain, and to put a stop to that exodus say that up to the present time all these schemes have been of the fublot and a disgrace to us. There is no item of the wealth of the country which deserves for one moment to be put in comparison with the people. I do not suppose that we can put an end to that exodus all at once. But I do believe that we can, by wise and wholesome legislation, offer far better inducements to our own people to remain in or own country. While I am willing to welcome the people of other countries, still, as a Canadian, I feel it is far better to keep the people of Canada in our own country than to encourage, at great expense, immigration from foreign countries. I would far rather see our own people remain of the people of Canada that we should in all possible shapes and ways maintain friendly relations with daughters. Above all, and before all, daughters. Above all, and before all, the policy of our Government should be especially to keep Canadians in Canada, and it will be one of the objects to which the attention of our Government will be directed first, last and all

is the right and true sense of the term, not that we should exclude worthy citizens of other countries, but that we should retain the peo-ple of Canada. (Cheers.) And now, ladies and gentlemen, I can only to you in conclusion, that I feel extremely honored by the reception you have given me tonight. I was sorry that I was not able to be preat Ottawa in the way of cleaning out sent with you and to share with you in your rejoicing on the 23rd of but I had an instinct that I would soon have occasion to come before you in a at least I was not deceived. I rejoice ployment for a great deal of the pow- with you over the victory of June 23rd. The result of that day will be to place the politics and politicians of Canada on a higher plane than they have been fated to occupy for a number of years. I am not going to boast tonight of what we are going to do. It our fate to come back to you to seek your indorsement, I hope that I shall be able to come before you and say that we have tried to do our best to since the people of Canada were in- live up to the promises we made when We were in Opposition, and that the leaders of the Reform party have not stooped in any way to aggrandize their friends or themselves. It may be our duty to apply a little wholesome moral I am perfectly certain that a little period of Opposition will do a great deal to purify and uplift that party. At any rate, these gentlemen have had full opportunity of showing what they can do in the last eighteen years. In these eighteen years they have failed, and failed rotably, in carrying out doubled. I do not pretend to tell you the promises by which eighteen years that it will be as easy to deal with ago they induced the people to dismiss an expenditure of $40,000,000 as it was honest Alexander Mackenzie and to

was not so certain. SANGUINE SIR CHARLES. I notice that my esteemed friend, Sir Charles Tupper, takes a very saguine view of the situation. He was always a most sanguine man. It may comfort him in his old age to believe that rck he has met with will be only likewise to see to it that the reat of a temporary character. He exhibited body of the people shall have justice a great deal of personal pluck and done to them—(cheers)—for the policy curious thing that Sir Charles Tupper on that occasion appears to have given preference, so far as Quebec is con-cerned, to the saints over the sinners. (Laughter.) It is the first time he has done it, and it may be hoped to be the last. In this Province he did not rely on the spiritual weapon. He trusted to a more carnal kind. I have no quarrel with Sir Charles' views of the situation. If the Reform party live up to the discharge of their duties, if they do not flinch in carrying out the doctrines they have preached to you in the past, the Reform party are likely to enter on an era of government probably nearly as long, Sir Charles Tupper to the contrary notwithstanding, as their predecessors enjoyed in the last eighteen years. At any rate, we will endeavor to deserve that. I say to you, the electors of South Oxford, I feel it a very high honor indeed to be elected once more as your representative, and I will endeavor in the discharge of the duties that fall to my lot to handle them so that you on your part will have no cause to regret the confidence you have bestowed in me. (Loud cheers.) Short addresses were also delivered by Andrew Pattullo and Dr. McKay. M.P.P., both of whom spoke of Sir Richard in terms of the warmest ad-

Policemen in citizens' clothes are sent to all places of public resort frequented by malcontents and the lower classes generally. riarvey Found Guilty of Two Serious Charges.

Gets [Off Lightly for the Sake of His Family-Several Assault Cases Dealt With.

Bid Harvey, of Ontario street, who came from Woodstock about two years ago, occupied the attention of the Police Court for two full hours this morning. The first charge against him was that of stealing a violin from the house of Nellie Prior on Tuesday last. The girl swore that Harvey came to her place that day, and wanted her to take lessons in fancy work. She told him she had no time, and wanted him to go away. He made improper proposals to her, and she advised him to go away. When she would not submit, he picked up the violin and said he would take that. The girl tried to take it away from him, and he pulled out his knife and said he would disembowel her. She also got a knife, which Harvey took away from her. He cut her fingers In the tussle. When she cried out, Harvey went out with the violin, and left his fancy work in the house in another room. Harvey denied her statements. He had gone to the house about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, and offered to sell her the work he had for $3 50, or to teach her for $2. He said she told him she had no money, and made a proposal to him. She said she would not give him the work back again, and then he said to her, as he picked up the violin, "If you don't give It back to me, I'll take this." He took it, and the girl followed him out to the gate, but he refused to give it up until he got his fancy work, and so took the fiddle home. He said he had never been up before on any charge, and had a certificate of character from Dr. A. Beverley, of Woodstock. Mr. Love pleaded that no case had been made out against the prisoner, according to the circumstances, but the Magistrate thought it was a clear case, and found Harvey guilty.

THE SECOND CHARGE.

The second case was that of indecent assault upon Mary Maroeue, a Syrian woman, who came here from Stratford. She told the court a long story with the aid of Naf Saleum, an in-She said that Harvey brought her into his house and locked the door. He made improper advances, which she resented, pushing him away, and scratching his face. He threw her down, and when she screamed, he released her, and then she put her foot through the window. He let her out, and then she went for the hurry. Mr. Guest said he met the woman coming from the house, and she clutched him and shouted, "Police!" He understood her, and sent her to the house of Thomas Nickle, the detective. They telephoned to the station, and Sergt. Adams went out.

Harvey's story was that the woman had entered his place without knock-She persuaded him to buy a spool of thread, for which he paid her 5 cents. When he offered her this she wanted 7 cents. He said he caught her by the neck and went to throw her out. In doing this she put her foot through a pane of glass. He denied that he had taken any liberties with her, and had not torn her clothing. He told the magistrate that the scratches on his face were the result of a scuffle with her. the 5 cents she refused to give the thread to him until he gave her the other 2 cents. She scratched his face. He was an Englishman, 34 years of age. He came to this country ten years ago, and had worked at Toronto. Princeton, Woodstock and London. He married his first wife in October, 1887. and had two children

Mr. McKillop thought there was no doubt as to the prisoner's guilt. Mr. Love thought that the prisoner's story was the more reasonable, and said it was impossible for a man to commit an assault of that kind in a populous neighborhood in broad day-light.

The P. M .- I cannot think there is any doubt that the charge is proven. Prisoner-I have a wife and two children and hope you will let me off on these charges, anyway. My family is without support.

Mr. Love said the prisoner's wife was in delicate condition and thought the court should exercise leniency. The P. M. sentenced Harvey to the Central Prison for three months, on the charge of stealing the violin, and three months on the charge of indecent assault, the sentences to run concurrently.

prisoner pleaded that he be fined, but the magistrate thought he had shown sufficient leniency.

Thomas Murphy, who had been in jail for over a week on remands, charged with drunkenness, pleaded guilty. Fined $5 or twenty days in Murphy was also charged with assaulting his daughter, a girl under the age of 16 years, who had the custody of his children. This action was brought by Inspector Sanders, of Children's Aid Society. He sought to take the children away from his keeping altogether. This was submitted to, and Mr. McCann, who ap-

Quinn was discharged, but the magistrate advised him to keep away from Mrs. Brown. In the middle of the police court procedings, George Fuller, the man who was arrested on Saturday afternoon stood up in the dock, and, throwing up one arm, shouted: "Say, what is the charge against me? What is the charge, please?" Mr. McKillop asked that Fuller be remanded for a week to have his condition of mind inquired into.

On Saturday afternoon Fuller took a sudden crazy spell. He went about visiting his friends, of whom he has a great many, but this didn't seem to ease his mind. He walked along Dundas street, and when in front of Brown's shoe store pulled the big rubber on to the sidewalk and kicked it into the middle of the street. Then he started to shout up at the window, causing a big crowd to collect. P. C. Since Oulda made the announcement that she would devote herself to the writing of essays, in preference to novwriting of essays, in preference to nov-els, she has quite liberally fulfilled her to enrich those made richest through promise. One of her latest and most trenchant essays appears in the June Forum, under the title, "Ego, et Rex Meus: A Study of Royalty." She finds Saturday was notable at Queen's is logical; that the royalty, with its year, decade after decade, roll on, and Park for the completion of the magni- accompaniment, loyalty, of the Middle ficent new building in which the finet Ages, is beautiful if not logical; but cattle, sheep and swine in the country that the royalty of modern times is neither, and that it is an anachronism. with no true affinity to the social at-John Purdom never did a faster or a mosphere in which it is placed. She asserts that it is impossible for royalty to inspire unselfish devotion or ennobling feeling in modern times; but what it does inspire is a greedy, mean, and fulsome insincerity based on the intensity of desire to advance by royal favor. We quote: "The sovereigns and their scions may be all that is good, well-meaning, painstaking, amiable, or what you will in their own characters; but the snobbism which is engendered by them and which is inseparable from their proximity is most injurious to human nature. The fiction which sets them apart as something superior intangible, exalted, is a degrading and a foolish one for their peoples. The language and the attitude of men and women toward royalty is entirely wanting in self-respect. It may certainly be said that no one who respected himself, or herself, would prostrate himself with the sycophancy which is to be observed in all those who receive, or are received by, any royal persons.

"It will be objected that toadvism. flunkeyism, snobbism, are indigenous to human nature and would always be found in some degree somewhere, and this is no doubt true. But weeds which are recognized as weeds are not so baneful as weeds which are allowed to pass as flowers, and as such are cultivated. It will also be urged that an aristocracy is as harmful as royalty in its creation of these vices of servility and subserviency. But it is not so, because an aristocracy commands no obeisance and does not necessitate any formula. If the greatest seignfor in the world enter your house you receive him as you would any other gentleman, and need make no difference for him whatever. To a royal person, custom and etiquette exact a manner of greeting, a manner of speaking, a manner of writing, which are in themselves offensive to the self-respect and good sense of every independent person. You must wait for a royal person to begin the conversation; you must stand until the royal person tells you to sit down; you must say 'sir' or 'madam' continually, or their equivalents in whatever language you speak; you must receive none of your friends so long as the royal head be beneath your roof, ter being away at her mother's, who unless he has previously expressed a wish to see them; you must contravene the head, caused by falling down no royal opinion or desire however stairs. preposterous; you must let the poor royalty languish in ennui rather revive it by the galvanic shock of an opposition or innovation. You must and wife are holidaying here at presalso in writing to, or of, them, put ent. capital letters to the personal pronouns used to, or of, them, as people put a capital letter to 'Him' when they mean to indicate God."

Ouida here refers to the royal patronage of and participation in brutal- relatives. Izing pastimes that tend to the popularizing of such sports, and then proceeds: "Royal people are much to be pitied. o one ever tells them the truth; they are surrounded by persons who all desire to please, that they may profit by them. It is impossible for them to be certain of the sincerity of any friend. They are never alone, and they can scarcely escape in their sleep from the stare of watching eyes and the strained ears of eavesdroppers. They probably never in their lives get a genuine answer to any question which they may put. There is always a young Raleigh to throw a cloak over any gutter." We are next told that the weakned of every modern republic lies in its imitation of royalty-in its dim but servile reproduction of the person of the monarch in the person of the president. Having elaborated this idea, Outda next says:

"The trivialities of royalty become ludicrous in an age in which these have lost such symbolism as they once possessed. Their nomination of each other to honorary colonelcies in each other's regiments their wearing of each other's military dress, their dedication of regiments to hereditary foes, their fussing over ribbons and crosses and orders, present a picture of silliness and artificiality for the presence of which in its midst the world is distinctly the more foolish and also the poorer. On the outbreak of war these honorary colonels would endeavor to cut to pieces the foreign regiments they have commanded and the knights. foreign suzerains; but this absurdity does not prevent the solemn farce of year, century after century, in the same pompous, vapid, unmeaning, and progress of his pupils, 75 of them beimbecile parade. The comedy furnishes the actors in it with fresh uniforms; that is all which can be said for its use. The Emperor William likes to change his uniform half a dozen times a day, and has, it is said, more uniforms than there are days in the year. From this point of view. but from this alone, his continual nominlations to the command of foreign regiments can be of use to him; and to the guild of the army tailors. They show perhaps more philosophy than they are given credit for in supporting it. Human nature must seem to enter the precincts of a palace, and that the high spirit and self respect of those who are incapable of snobbism will resist the influence of palaces. But this is not wholly the case. The born snob will no doubt cringe and crawl before some delty or an-other, but the snob, like the microbe, increases only if the field receiving it be propitious to its growth, whereas in the atmosphere of courts one does see persons, whose birth and character should render them above such selfabasement, become servile and obsequious in their desire to gain or to retain royal favor. Courts are the field in which the bacteria of snobbism are most readily propagated. Fulsome sycophancy is sown by it broadcast like the murrain. In the recent nuptilals the Duke of York a dignitary of the English church was not ashamed to write an ode calling such a mar-'the fairest scene in all crea-Could sickly silly hyperbole swell itself to more nauseous folly? "What is strangest in all this is that the want of dignity and of decency in these customs seems never to be the same barbaric rites, the same mean and unworthy attitudes, continue precisely the same in precisely the same measure. QUESTIONS ANSWERED,

Hired Man .- A verbal arrangement is made between a farmer and his hired man that the laborer is not to be required to work long days. Can the farmer compel him to work after sunset, or say, 7:30 p.m., or is there any law establishing the number of hours in the day that a farm laborer is obliged to work where no definite agreement has been made between employer and employed? Ans .- A farm laborer, like a domestic servant, has no regular hours of service by law, and the arrangement made would not entitle the laborer to re fuse to work after sunset if there was any reasonable necessity for such work being then performed in the interest of the farmer.

BESET BY MOUNTAIN TURTLES. Two Men in Arizona Thus Attacked, and

oming over Needle Pass in Arizona a couple of weeks ago and there were only two people on board. One was were very slim. But they had to do Mike, the driver, and the other was it and started as soon as the wagon a man going out to work at the mine. He may have had more than one name, but he told the driver he was known as Jack, and that seemed to satisfy the man who handled the They were delayed by an accident until darkness came on, and then they decided to camp until morning in the pine woods. The horses were unhitched, and the two men spread their blankets and lay down.

It was their intention to sleep, but somehow their eyes were wide open, and the drowsy god refused to come their way. The strain had been very great on both, and a nervous condition was the result. And as they lay there looking up at the branches of the pines that glowed red from the firelight against a sky of inky blackness there was not much wind, but it was enough to cause the prick-ly needles to move against one another and produce a sound like the distant moaning of the ocean. Mike heard the sound, and listened to it in the hope that it would soothe his mind and cause sleep.

He paid particular attention to the change produced by every breath of air, and gradually became conscious of an increase in the volume of sound. It seemed to rise from the little breaker falling on the shingle to the giant wave dashing against a cliff before the fury of the hurricane. At first Mike thought that sleep was coming, and tried to help it along by continuing the thought, but as the sound increased he sat up and looked into the darkness. He could see noth-The sound grew louder, and he could hear the crackling of breaking branches. Jack also heard the sound and both got up thoroughly alarmed. The horses were shaking like leaves, showing plainly that they were lis-tening to a sound they did not un-

At first Mike thought it might be a storm, but there was absent that weird, whistling sound always an accompaniment to a storm in the pines. But what it was could not be determined, and each moment it be-But what it was could not be de-termined, and each moment it became more terrible.

"Let's 'run,' said Jack.

"That's good advice," replied Mike; but which way?' That was the worst of the mysterious sound; it seemed to be all around them at the same time, and it could not be told where it came from. One moment it came from the clouds, the next it was near their feet, and each thought it came from all sides.

Suddenly it struck Mike that it was a herd of wild beasts of some kind, but he thought it strange that there was no barking or growls; nothing but the incessant rumbling and cracking. The strain was becoming too intense, and Mike concluded to hitch up and be ready to leave. He threw several sticks on the fire and then went for the horses, while Jack got the harness in shape.

The animals were anxious to go, but before the harness was over their backs Mike heard a branch crack just behind him. He pulled his revolver and fired where the sound came from, This only increased the roaring sound until it was deafening, and an occasional hiss could be heard.

"Let us hurry and get out of this," was all each man could say to the other, as they backed the horses into position. But it was too late. Before they could realize what had happened the crackling and roaring was just beside them. Mike looked around, and on every side he saw dozens of strange creatures. A look convinced him that they were mountain terrapins. He had seen them before, but singly, and looked upon them as harmless. These were the animals that now threatened the two men, and in an instant it went through Mike's mind that they were different from those he had generally seen. They were surely older, and had very likely come from the gulf in a company and got lost. Now they were hunting, angry and hungry.

Nearer and nearer the turtles came, and Mike and Jack soon had to climb into the wagon to keep out of the way. The turtles crowded around the wagon, and the wagon was the only place of refuge. Mike thought that the turtles might move on, and did all he could to frighten them by shooting at them. It was almost dark, as the fire had been burning

Then they jumped from one turtle to another for some time, and it seemed to the men as if they covered the earth. But they kept on, and knew that unless they fell they were safe.

Soon there began to be a little space between the turtles, and it appeared as if they were getting to the edge of the herd, but they discovered that the turtles were also going in the same direction they were.

Still, there was nothing else to be done, so they kept on. It was hardly possible to see, but the two men were both aware that they were safe unless the turtles stayed around until they were starved. But there was a little water in the bottom of the canon, and down the turtles tumbled as fast as they could, appearing to have forgotten all about their possible victims. Most of them had reached the bottom but not before a rain storm came up, and as Mike and Jack were still unable to leave their place on the rock, they were drenched to the skin But that was better than being eaten by tur-

Suddenly there was a roar like a cyclone tearing through the forest, and looking up the two men saw a wall of water several feet high tum-

It was a cloudburst, that had caused a freshet, and it was all tumbling over the turtles like a Niagara, and in a moment they were all being But it only lasted a moment, and then the water rolled them down the canon out of sight of the two men on the rock But this time the rain had ceased and Mike and Jack went to look for

They were nearly through the pass and Kushat was about to ask Henry if the time for action had not come, when, quick as a flash, he bounded from her side, and with his uplifted rifle knocked one of the men senseless. He was in the act of raising his rifle again, when, with a cry of alarm, the other man leaped to one side, and, drawing a pistol, fired. So close was he that the shot would have been fatal had not Kushat, with the rapid spring of a mountain lion, thrown herself on his arm and sent the shot into the earth. The next instant the second outlaw was down and forever indifferent to Bouton and his plans. Before Louis Kyle could comprehend what had happened a knife flashed and the rope that bound his arms fell to the

"And you are still my brother," cried Louis, and he reached out his arms, for in the sweep of gratitude all the past of this brave though erring youth was forgotten. This was said with a dramatic intencity of voice that struck horror into the souls of Robb and his companions. Every one of them felt that the weather had become suddenly cold, and the bravest did not dare to make a reply. Louis followed this advice, and he felt again as he had felt in the past when his elder brother was his ideal of all that was brave and strong and handsome. The rising sun was flushing all the cloud patches floating in the upper blue and lighting up the crowns of the snow peaks when Louis Kyle woke from a refreshing sleep and saw his brother and the Sioux girl standing with their backs toward him and talking in low tones. Ku-shat brought some dried meat from her saddlebag, and of this the three made a meal which to the brothers was the sweetest they had ever eaten. When they had finished breakfast Louis laid his hand on Henry's shoulder and said: "Let us go to our friends. Let us find Capt. Brandon."

"I will put you on the road and watch you till out of all danger," replied Henry, "but do not ask me to go with you. ### A WOMAN WHO HUNTED COATS.

Mary Trowbridge Townsend's Account of Sport in the State of Washington.

"He scorns the protection of a coat which changes color with the autumn leaves, and proudly flaunts at all seasons the white of the everlasting snow. He has neither the fatal inquisitiveness of the plains antelope, the timidity of the deer, nor the cunning of the sheep. He is as deliberate as a bear, and, if approached from above, as reckless as a caribou. The Rocky Mountain goat is not a true goat, but an antelope that masquerades in goat's clothing. He is unique in living where other game would die, and dying where other game would live. He is not found in menageries. nor in circus tents. Only his mounted skin is found in such places."

Mary Trowbridge Townsend writes thus of animals which she sought and killed near Lake Chilan in the State of Washington, having hunted elk, sheep, and other big game so much that some new sport was wanted. She saw her first goat from the little steamer on her way to the lake, much the same as the tenderfoot visitor to the Adirondacks occasionally sees a deer from the stage, but it was not reduced some things one-half.

at once; if will pay you. Keene next day with a guide that she learned some peculiarities that makes goathunting different from most other kinds of hunting.

For instance, there was no special place for hunting. The goats were among the mountains high up, but in no particular place, and they had its uncomfortable position by the aid to be hunted on the hit or miss fashion of a tarpon fisherman. They traveled for hours over slippery pine carpets, over sharp loose shale, over hot, ragged rocks, zigzagging along and taking to a goat trail eagerly, since there the walking was easier. At night they camped without having seen a

Next day they started again, and saw a goat on a distant bench, acting as if he was meditating deeply, or in a sort of lethargy. On looking down they saw a small bunch of goats down, and when the 45-70 rifle rang out twice a nannie and a billy had died. It was compensating luck. The fatigue, the climbing, the thirst, and all the discomforts were forgotten in We have bought one hundred dozen the success as they stood beside the of the bankrupt stock of O. M. Law-dead game. But they had a weary over boulders. At last, abandoning the effort to get out that night, four miles from the home camp, they scraped a bed in the gully, rolled themselves up in their blankets, and went to sleep. In the morning a little stream of water was found to have started down the gully, and from this they quenched their thirst, and went on, soon getting to the lake. Mrs. Seleste Coon, Syracuse, N.Y., writes: "For years I could not eat many kinds of food without producing a burning, excruciating pain in my stomach. I took Parmlee's Pills cording to directions under the head according to directions under the head of "Dyspepsia or Indigertion." One box entirely cured me. I can now eat any thing I choose without distress-ing me in the least." These pills do not cause pain or griping, and should be used when a cathartic is required.

Christ Church Reopened After Notable Improvements,

The Dean Is Reminiscent - Rev. Thos. Wilson in the City-Anniversary of Mr. Talling's Induction.

Christ Church, Wellington street, was reopened yesterday after the renovations which have been carried on during the past few weeks. The church has been handsomely carpeted throughout; the pews have been grained; a new lectern and pulpit, with massive brass railings, have been placed in position, and the pipe organ has been artistically repainted, regilded and revarnished, and now stands at the north side of the building. The frescoing and painting of the walls, pillars and ceiling of the edifice have also been prettily touched

I can recall its consecration and opening by the Right Rev. Bishop of Huron, Bishop Cronyn. It was the second Church of England in London, then a comparatively small place with a population of about 12,000. I remember the heartiness with which the work was entered upon and carried to a successful issue without a cent of debt, and above all, I can see before me the faces of those earnest workers who worshipped in the congregation, and all of whom, I believe, were sincere and devoted friends of mine. DENOUNCING DANCING. The world, its amusements, the flesh and the devil were attended to by Evangelist Meikle, at St. Andrew's Church, last night. The clubs in London were not ties. The horse was extricated from better in his opinion than clubs in its uncomfortable position by the aid other places, which were general rum of planks. I tell you, we need the women and their refining influences. Men have no business to go away to places where there are no ladies, to give a right spirit to their transactions." Even the boys not out of their teens were forming clubs, he said. Worse sins than drinking and gambling were committed in and all under the guise of nice buildings and a little money.

Mr. Meikle then condemned the modern dance, which he said was a western invention-the devil's latest strategy. Men and women never danced together in eastern countries. Continuing he said:

"I believe it would do the young ladies a little good if they skipped and danced a little more than they do. "Society people say they cannot entertain their guests for a whole evening without a little dance. Well, all have to say is that it is a very poor compliment to the brains of society if they cannot spend an evening without getting up and hopping around like why, you could get a Punch and Judy show or something of that kind. The Church of Christ has been against the modern dance. I can tell

The speaker also alluded to dancing as a means by which women fell, and said that in the city of Ottawa 212 women passed through a Miss Wright's care in one year, and those 212 women were only the women who were tired of their immoral ways. The men who were sent to Ottawa to make the laws were the greatest violators of the law. The majority of the fallen women in cities came from country places. The theater was another wrong; it was rotten to the core. Men had tried to reform it, but gave the job up in despair. A reformed theater would not be popular.
