Traveller through these scenes of sorrow,

Weary with the march of life;

But renewed and ceaseless strife

Overwhelmed with grief and sadness,

Storm and tempest howl around thee.

Clouds obscure thy toilsome way ;

Gloom, and night, and fear surround thee.

Yet for light thou mayest not stay ;

Struggling through life's deepest dell. Scarce to reach its outlet hoping ;

Onward, 'mid the darkness groping.

Trembling pilgrim, " Is it well ?"

All that thou hadst craved possessing

Has been wrested from thy grasp;

Crushed with woes thou mayst not tell

All that thou hadst deemed thine own !

And beneath each fancied blessing

Thou hast found a hidden asp

Disappointed, worn and weary.

In Memoriam. "And I looked in and wishald myself an An eye to scan the shining path, An ear for heavenly song, A great imprisoned life that yearns To join the bliss-bathed throng .-A glorious hope again to meet Our kindred fied before,---These all bespeak a spirit made For God's own evermore.

O lovely faith I great gift of heaven ! By which we look within Yon flaming sapphire gates, and see Our kindred saved from sin, With garments pure, and orowns of stars, And reigning kings for aye. Their glories mingle with the light Of heaven's unfading day.

We see our friend and brother there Beyond the tide of time-Caught from the love that here By love far more sublime ; Caught from the vine so wont to ching Unto his manly form. That both might rest themselves on God, And live above the storm.

He sought the blood of Judah's Lamb, He found it ever nigh, Its power did help him well to live. And helped him well to die; He breathed no murmur or regret, So soon to gain his home, And while he hoping, waiting, lay, The chariot had come.

manity."

" I feel sure of it."

He gently loosed the hand he held-His own dear partner's hand,-For, O, a hand was reached to him Across from Cansan's land ; And there were sighs and tears below And hearts were wounded, riven. But there were smiles, and joys, and songs, And a new harp in heaven.

His noble nature now we miss,-We miss our husband, friend, But may not God depute him now, Sustaining grace to lend ? A tie that bound us to the earth Is sacred evermore, And fastened to the throne that stands On vonder song-bleat shore.

Happy the hosts inside the gates. Who see the glories there ! The feeblest glimpses are but ours, For more we could not bear ; But yet enough we see and know, To long for spirit light, And wish ourselves among the throng, Who walk with God in white.
