Selected Poetry.

THE HOUSE OF REFUGE.

Not a hand has lifted the latchet
Since she went out of the door—
No footsteps shall cross the threshold,
Since she can come in no more.

There is rust upon locks and hinges,
And mould and light on the walls,
And silence faints in the chambers,
And darkness waits in the halls—
Waits as all things have waited
Since she went, that day of spring,
Borne in her pallid splendour
To dwell in the Court of the King.

With lilies on brow and bloom,
With robes of alken shewn,
And her wonderful frozen beauty
The lilies and silk between.

Red roses she left behind her,
But they died long ago—
'Twas the odorous ghost of a blossom
That seemed through the dusk to glow.

The garments she left mock the shadows,
With hints of womanly grace,
And her image swings to the mirror
That was so used to her face.

The birds make insistent music
And the winds are merry and wanton
With the summer's pomp and pride.

But into this desolate mansion,
Where love has closed the door,
Nor sunshine nor summer shall enter,
Since she can come in no more.

—Louise Chandler Moulton.

Interesting Story.

Where Shadows Fall.

"It has been the hope of my life I have studied early and late, that I might the sooner complete my education. I have avoided society and all appearance of gaiety, that I might not forget the solemn obligation that lies upon me. I have carefully hoarded up my allowance of money from childhood, that I might have the means to spend upon my lifework. In fact, I have lived with but one object in view, and I shall never rest until my work is accomplished. Beyond that I have never thought—that is, never until I met you, my darling, and now with your love to cheer me on, and the promise of your sweet self, in the future, when my task is done—what more can I ask of fate? What sweeter recompense for my shadowed life?"

Slowly up and down the gravel path they walked—the stalwart man, the fragile girl.

The tall silver-leaved poplars, on either side of the pathway, stirred their white leaves tenderly to and fro. The fountain, in the midst of the grass plot on the right, splashed softly, and the arbor, covered with its mantle of white roses, arose like a monument on the left, and the whispering leaves seemed bidding a sad farewell to the waxen petals of the over-ripe blooms, as they yielded up their perfume, and beneath the weight of the evening, fell fluttering to the ground.

And over all the beautiful moonlight spread a silvery sheen—upon the crest of the man, as he bowed, speaking and lifted his hat to her forehead, and the slender white-robed form at his side it seemed to linger lovingly—caressing the golden hair, half hidden with the lace scarf, and making a blaze of the diamond that gleamed on one of the white hands clasping the arm of her lover.

They had stopped at last and he with his face upturned was gazing steadfast at the starry heavens, trying to pierce the future, and reasoning with a man's blind faith in the "why" and "wherefore"—that since all things must end surely the shadows that had darkened the morning of his life, must pass away and have a glorious afternoon—a rose-tinted evening. But the face of the girl at his side was upturned to his own, and the infinite faith of a woman's unquestioning love shone from her eyes, which looked not beyond the shrine of her heart's idol, for the fulfilment of love's promise.

Suddenly unnoticed by either a tiny cloud loomed up and in a moment obscured the moon—the two faces were darkened and of one accord the two watchers resumed their walk.

The girl withdrew her hand from the arm of her companion, and trembling as with a new-born fear, she gradually fell behind her lover, who seemed for the moment oblivious of his surroundings—he paused suddenly and turned quickly, came back to her and tenderly clasping her in his arms, er, whom she is wheeling up and down the walk in his chair.

Suddenly the young face flushed. She has spied her lover in the distance, and bending over her father she whispers, "Larry is coming papa; I will run and speak to him, and then come back to you." And away she skips.

"You are ahead of time, you naughty fellow; a whole half hour ahead!"

"Well, so I am; but time drags so when I am away from you."

"Ah! that comes of idleness; but I must run back to papa. I can't cheat him out of his airing, you know." You won't mind waiting in the library a little while, Larry?"

"O, no! if I can't stay here with you. Impossible! so I'm gone. I'll come to you in a half hour."

Slowly Larry Barlow goes up the broad steps, and into the cool hall. He pauses a moment in the doorway, and looks backward down the shady walk.

He notes the graceful form, the fluttering dress, and the gleam of golden hair, as the sunlight falls upon it. As though conscious of his gaze, Star turns, and lifting her finger-tips to her lips, throws him a kiss, and he with a gallant bow returns the salute, and then passes on to the library.

He has been in this room many times, and availed himself of Mr. Wayne's permission to use such books as he chose, and he goes now and mechanically opens one of the glass doors, and reaching up takes down a book. He knows not what, cares not. He is unconscious of what he is doing; he is thinking of what Star said last night, and wondering if after all he had not missed in his unloved and unloving childhood and youth, something for which even a happy future could not completely atone: the sweet spring flowers of happiness, that bloom only in the meadow of life.

His eyes are upon the book; he is turning leaf after leaf, but he sees them not until suddenly he draws in a quick, deep breath.

What is this before him? Only the orn page of the herbarium, and yet it holds the fate of more lives than one. Never the torn page of a book he has only seen before; as upper portion of a fern still clings to it; part of the lital letter and after it the whole of the letter W, part of a date, the last two figures of which are 56. He knows his search is ended; he takes from his notebook a piece of paper; it completes the torn page, the stem of the fern fits exactly to the upper part; the initials F. W. stand out plainly; the date is complete as is also the Latin name of the fern; and still he gazes, his face white with a stony horror.

He hears not when Star glides into the room and creeps up behind him, her face beaming with mischief, as she peers over his shoulder to see what she absorbs him. She sees the piece of paper he is holding in place so carefully, she sees the terror on his face, and there flashes suddenly over her memory the time when quite a child she had come across that book and asked her father some question about it, and he had taken the book from her, and murmuring something about the "dead," had sent her from the room.

Her eye caught the initials now, F. W., and her stiff white lips framed the words, "Frank Wayne," as she sank forward, and with a despairing moan went off into a death-like swoon.

And Larry, startled and bewildered for a moment, realized at last how terrible was this unlooked-for success of his lifework. He lifted the unconscious girl in his arms, and held her a moment, kissing her coldly, and murmuring incoherently, then laying her on the couch, he carefully replaced the fatal book on the shelf, and called a servant saying Miss Wayne was ill and then he left the house.

He stopped on the veranda and looked at the old man asleep in his chair. The poor sightless eyes were closed; the thick locks of white hair lay softly on the sunken temples; very lowly on the pale face, but a peaceful smile hovered around the withered lips.

And this was his father's murderer. Many times had he thought what he would say, when he came face to face with the wretch,—but not thus had he expected to find him; not this blind, helpless old man whom he had learned to love—the father of his darling.

O God; why must an evil deed leave so dark a trail behind? "God forgive me," he said, "but for ought that I shall do my father's murder must remain unavenged." And he past down the walk and the birds sang, the fountain splashed and the roses nodded in the soft breeze, but to Larry Barlow had come the bitterness of death.

His work was finished, his dream of happiness was over, and the next train bore him away from the place whither fate had led him.

There was no need to see Star again. He knew that by that one agonized moan that she understood that between them was blood—a father's blood—no word need be spoken—the shadow had fallen and love and joy were over for aye. Back to his childhood's home went the broken-hearted man. How silent the deserted house! how grim the face of the old servant who unbolted the door! how ghastly the gloom within! Even in his agonizing sorrow the stricken man feels a deeper pang, as he wanders from room to room, until at last he enters the room where his father breathed his last, and throws himself into the very chair where his father's fate came upon him, wishing alas! that death might come to him also.

The table is at his elbow and upon it there lies a package. He reads the address:

"To my dear son Larry Barlow—From his loving mother—To be delivered to him on his twenty-first birthday."

Ah! here was a message from the dead, which he should have received two years ago; but what matters it? Nothing can matter much, now that life is over for him. But at last he opened the letter, so faded, so feebly written, and read, not because he had any curiosity as to the contents, not from love of the parent whom he scarcely remembers; but from the desire to forget even for a moment his misery.

"O my son! forgive, forgive your poor, weak mother, for the sin of not confessing to the world, what she now confesses to you."

"They say I am dying from grief of your dear father's death; but, my son, grief alone seldom kills, and I am dying beneath the burden of the guilty secret which I am hiding. The night after your father's murder, my brother, my dearly-loved younger brother, Larry, for whom you are named, came to me and told me, that he had killed your father."

"Angry words had passed between them, and in a fit of ungovernable temper the deed was done."

"O! my son, much as I loved your poor dead father, I could not see my brother perish on the gallows, and I gave him money to flee the country. But no one ever so much as suspected him. He is gone, I know not where."

"The paper, which is supposed to be a clew, was torn from the book of a friend of your father's, who visited us years ago, and has been among your father's papers ever since. How it came to be in his hand at that terrible time I know not. And now, my dear son, I beg mercy for—"

And here we leave the message from the dead, as Larry did. There were many closely-written pages, but too long had they been delayed, and enough had been read to cause love and hope to revive and throb; and as fast as steam could take him, back to his lost darling he flies.

At last he reaches the gate, but what is this widening down the pathway? A sombre procession. His heart is in his mouth almost, as he stands aside, but a servant-whisperer to him, "It is the old man, sir, found dead in his chair on the veranda the very day you left. We would have sent you word, sir, but Miss Star is that crazy that she couldn't find out your address. Poor young lady, she has never seemed right since you left. She sits all day wringing her hands and talking of shadows; but now, you are come, sir, she will be better, sure."

Ten years have rolled away. It is another night in June, and up and down the path two forms are walking.

The trees on either side the path are larger now. The silver-lined leaves are thicker, but the fountain on the right splashes as softly as of old; the arbor on the left whiter perhaps, and the waxen petals of the roses are falling faster in the evening dew, and all the leaves are whispering very sadly. But the two in the walk are passing up and down, and to and fro; and he with his face upturned to heaven is wondering if it be a just God who smites the innocent with the heavy hand of affliction, and crushes the weak beneath the unmerited burden of the guils of others; but she at his side with her vacant face, and dull eyes, from which reason will never gleam again, asks in her plaintive childlike voice: "The shadows, Larry, are they falling?" And over all the moonlight falls like a shroud.

Advice to a Young Man.

And then remember, my son, you have to work. Whether you handle a pick or a pen, a wheelbarrow or a set of books, digging ditches or editing a paper, ringing an auction bell or writing funny things, you must work. If you look around you, son, you will see that the men who are the most able to live the rest of their days without work are the men that work the hardest. Don't be afraid of killing yourself with work, son. It is beyond your power to do that. Men cannot work so hard as that on the sunny side of 30. They die sometimes, but it's because they quit work at 6 p. m. and don't go home until 2 a. m. It's the interval that kills. Work gives an appetite for meals; it lends stability to your slumber; it gives the appreciation of a holiday.

There are young men that do not work, my son, but the world is not proud of them. It does not even know their names; it simply speaks of them as the So-and-so's boys. Nobody likes them, nobody hates them; the great, busy world does not even know that they are there. So find out what you want to be, and make a dust in the world. The busier you are the less deviltry you will be apt to go into, the sweeter will be your sleep, the brighter and happier your holidays and the better satisfied will be the world with you.—Bardette.

SOROFULA

I do not believe that Ayer's Sarsaparilla has an equal as a remedy for Scrofula. It is pleasant to take, gives strength and vigor to the body, and produces a more permanent, lasting, result than any medicine I ever used.—E. Haines, No. 124 South St., Boston.

I have used Ayer's Sarsaparilla in my family, for Scrofula, and know, if it is taken faithfully, it will thoroughly eradicate this terrible disease.—W. P. Fowler, M. D., Greenville, Tenn.

For forty years I have suffered with Erysipelas. I have tried all sorts of remedies for my complaint, but found no relief until I commenced using Ayer's Sarsaparilla. After taking ten bottles of this medicine I am completely cured.—Mary C. Amesbury, Rockport, Me.

I have suffered, for years, from Catarrh, which was so severe that it destroyed my appetite and weakened my system. After trying other remedies and getting no relief, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and in a few months, was cured.—Susan L. Cook, 990 Albany St., Boston Highlands, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is superior to any blood purifier that I have ever tried. I have taken it for Scrofula, Catarrh, and Salt Rheum, and received much benefit from it. It is good, also, for a weak stomach.—Miss Jane Pease, North Bradford, Mass.

Ayer's Sarsaparilla is prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Price 31¢ six bottles, $1.50.

THE ACADIAN.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., JUNE 8, 1888.

1888. ACADIA. 1888.

Last year we commemorated the Jubilee of the reign of our gracious Sovereign, Queen Victoria, and this year we celebrate the fiftieth anniversary of an institution which has become a household word throughout the Maritime Provinces, and is held in veneration not only by the adherents of the religious denomination in whose particular interest it was founded, but also by the many students of other sects who have studied within its walls.

Acadia College, which was founded in 1838, is a power in the church to which it is attached, and has sent from its halls no less than two hundred and fifty ministers of the Gospel, many of whom are now preaching with acceptance to large congregations. The command, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel," has been heard in Acadia and no less than fourteen of its students have left home and friends to enter the mission fields of India and Burmah. Not in theology alone has grand success been achieved, for Acadia College with its adjuncts, Acadia Seminary and Horton Collegiate Academy have sent forth many young men and women of brilliant minds who have won prominence in their varied occupations. It would take more space than we can spare at the present time to give even an outline of the "struggles and triumphs" of this well-regulated temple of learning, as our readers will in this issue look for an account of the closing exercises of the year which were held during the present week.

BACCALAUREATE SERMON.

A large audience gathered on Sabbath morning in Assembly Hall to listen to the Baccalaureate sermon by President Sawyer. After preliminary exercises, conducted by the Rev. T. A. Higgins, D. D., the text was announced, "And this I pray, that your love may abound yet more and more in knowledge and all discernment."—Phil. 1:9. The true life was shown to express itself in righteousness. There must be more than a reverent attitude toward God. The Scriptures everywhere demand right behavior toward man. Religion is practical. Its prohibitions and commands relate chiefly to this present world. In order to live this true life excellently, knowledge is necessary. The relation of man to man must be understood. Truth, and duty, and human dependence upon God, must be comprehended. But knowledge, being a guide only, is not sufficient alone. Ardent, impulsive self-forgetting love, carries the soul forward to fitting deeds and sacrifices. Both love and knowledge are needed—the one as a motive, the other as a guide. There is a theory of human life which makes it the result of inexorable laws—laws which human purposes are unable to affect. But this is not the theory of life according to which we form our judgments of men; it is not the theory of life revealed in the Word of God. Noble characters do not appear like blossoms in spring-time, obedient to the working of indiscoverable forces. Noble impulses, guided by true knowledge, are alone sufficient to produce a Shaftsbury, a Livingstone, or a Judson. If the young men now about to leave these halls of learning for the exacting duties of life are to attain to true nobility, they must seek, as did the wise king of old, not first of all, long life or riches, but that higher wisdom which is from God; they must seek that love which abounds "yet more and more in knowledge and all discernment."

HORTON COLLEGIATE ACADEMY.

The annual closing exercises of the matriculating class of Horton Collegiate Academy were held in the Assembly Hall on Wednesday afternoon commencing at 2:30 p. m. After prayer by the Rev. D. H. Simpson the following programme was carried out: Piano Solo, Miss Buttrick. Essay, England's Colonial Empire. Ernest M. McLeod, Brooklyn, N. S. Essay, John Milton. Richard R. Hutchison, Douglasstown, N. B. Essay, H. W. Longfellow. Archibald Foot, Mahone Bay, N. S. Music, Vocal Solo, Nazareth, Gounoud. Mr. H. N. Shaw. Essay, Manliness. Percy Huntley, Billtown, N. S. Essay, Labor. George Baker, Fairville, N. B. Essay, Chas. Haddon Spurgeon. Wm. J. Routledge, Lowell, Mass. Essay, United Action. Archie Tingley, Sackville, N. B. Music, Vocal Solo. Miss Hattie Wallace. Essay, The Ancient Greeks. Avar Pines, Church Street. Essay, Foundation Work. Arthur Newcomb, Wolfville. Essay, Popular Delusions. Miss May Bishop, Greenwood, N. S. Essay, "Go to the Ant." Miss Lillian Bishop, Greenwood, N. S. *Excused.

Mr. McLeod handled his subject remarkably well. Mr. Hutchison proved himself well versed in the life and works of the sublime poet he chose for his theme. Mr. Archibald Foot's theme was well written and showed careful study. Mr. Huntley's "Manliness" was a splendid effort and was well delivered. Mr. Routledge's "Charles Haddon Spurgeon" was undoubtedly the best essay of the day. It was well delivered and showed careful preparation. Mr. Arthur Newcomb's "Foundation Work" proved that he had carefully studied his theme and acted on it. Mr. N. is a fine speaker. Miss Lillian Bishop's essay was one of the best of the day and was exceedingly well delivered.

Several short addresses were delivered at the close of the exercises. Rev. D. H. Simpson was the first speaker. He regretted that he had not applied himself more closely to his studies during his four years in college. Speaking particularly to the matriculants, he informed them that the years spent in college would be in many respects the grandest years of their lives, as on the use they make of that time will largely depend their success in life. Rev. Atwood Cohoon congratulated both teachers and students on the success of the exercises. He had no confessions to make; he had always done the best he could. He advised the students not to be contented with well enough, but remember that it is the extra that pays and told several anecdotes to prove it. In closing he gave these two mottoes to consider during recess: "Dare to do right"; "Labor has sure reward." Dr. Hall of the Normal School spoke briefly and in a somewhat humorous vein. He said that one of the most pleasing memories of his college life was the fun he had there, and thought that fun in its proper place would help rather than hinder studies.

The total number of students enrolled during the year is 92—the same number as last year, which is much above the usual average. Sixteen students come from New Brunswick, one from Newfoundland, one from the United States, and the remainder are residents of this Province, of which nearly every county is represented. A new boarding-house which has been erected during the year at a cost of $10,000 supplies a long-felt want. Two teachers and the most of the students reside in this building.

ACADIA SEMINARY.

Wednesday evening, long before the hour of opening, crowds of people began wending their way toward Assembly Hall, and at 7:30 p. m. when the doors were opened, there were nearly enough people before them to fill the hall, and long before the hour announced for commencing every seat was filled. Precisely at the appointed hour (8 o'clock), the young ladies accompanied by their teachers entered and took the seats reserved for them in the body of the hall. The exercises were as follows: Processional March Meyerbeer—With Rapid Keel, Chorus Chopin—Fantaisie Impromptu, Annie O. Margeson Mendelssohn—March Capriccio, Op. 22 Misses Seabourne, Vaughan, Wood, and Margeson. Hilber a) Were I a Bird of Air Millard b) Arietta, Bessie Nelson Bach a) Prelude and Fugue, No 3 Mendelssohn b) Duetto, Bessie Vaughan Pinsuti—Good-bye! Beloved, Harriett E. Wallace Schumann—Andante and Variations, Frie D. Wood; 2d Piano, Miss Buttrick Wagner—Spinning Song, Chorus Beethoven a) Largo Sonata, Op. 7 Rubinstein b) Valse-Caprice, Harriett M. Eaton Verdi—Non Fu Sogno, Miss Vaughan Gottschalk, Tremolo Study, Miss Buttrick Essay, Toil, the Price of Excellence. Leonora G. Bradshaw. Essay, The Study of Nature. Katharine L. Ganong. Essay, The Private Sorrows of Great Men. Maude C. Graham. Essay, Magazine Literature. Annie M. Hickman. Essay, George Eliot. Annie M. Lovett. Essay, Jennie E. Rice. History in Words. Alice A. Pugeley. Essay, The Novel as a Moral Teacher. Alice A. Pugeley. Music, List-Spinneried. Jennie E. Rice. In the first part of the programme we expected a rich musical treat and were not disappointed: The graduates of '88 are in musical attainments fully equal to, we will not say superior, to their predecessors of previous years. We have often wondered why the college graduating class always go to the expense of bringing musicians from a distance for their annual concert when they have in their sister institution those that could with little difficulty provide a musical entertainment equal if not superior to many which have been given under its auspices. After the close of the first part of the programme, Dr. Jones took the chair and announced that but one of the seven essays on the programme would be read. The young ladies of the class had selected Miss Alice Pugeley as their representative. Her subject was "The Novel as a Moral Teacher." We will not attempt to describe it. It was a literary gem, to which nothing but a verbatim report could do justice. In doing she made a short, earnest and practical valedictory address in which she feelingly referred to two of her classmates who through affliction in their families were unable to be present. Dr. Jones in a few well-chosen words, on behalf of the Principal and teachers, presented diplomas to the graduates, with the exception of Misses Ganong and Giam, who for reasons already mentioned were unavoidably absent. After which by request he made a short address, taking for his theme that portion of Miss Pugeley's valedictory in which she stated that the members of the graduating class had not finished but really only just begun their education. He was glad to notice that the term "finished education" had become obsolete, and he regarded it as a favorable sign of the times that young ladies who had graduated no longer considered themselves as finely polished articles of furniture or works of art fit only to become ornaments of the drawing-room, but that fresh from the hands of their instructors they fully realized the responsibility that rested on them, and that they must think and act for themselves. He explained the difference between knowledge and wisdom. Knowledge is proud, she knows so much; Wisdom is humble, she knows so little. The value of the diplomas awarded this evening depended entirely on the recipients. They give worth to the diplomas; the diplomas do not give worth to them. The highest compliment that can be paid anyone is that she has done what she could.

GOOD.—The Western Chronicle says:—"The New Star refers to the ACADIAN as 'a juvenile.' This is like the street arab who calls his elders 'sonny.'" A very good comparison.

RECOVERING.—We are pleased to know that Mr. Wm Stewart, Sr., of Grand Pre, who has been ill for some time, is now able to drive out. Mr. S. B. Borden has been seriously ill at his farm at Sheffield's Mills. We are glad to hear that he is now recovering.

In a report of an entertainment recently given by this society the Greenville Progress says: "C. J. Fritze is an able writer. ACACIA VILLA SEMINARY.—The examination and closing exercises of Acadia Villa Seminary, Lower Horton, took place on Friday, May 25th, and were of unusual interest.

—We omit our usual quote of Berwick items this week to make room for the extra press of anniversary matter.

—Mr Parker has a fine show of furniture in his new warehouses. He represents this paper in Berwick and takes subscriptions for it and orders for advertisements and job printing.

—The buildings belonging to Mr Christopher Wilson, Garland, Kings county, consisting of dwellinghouse, large carriage and store house, and double barn 100 feet long, were burned at noon on the 6th inst.

—Mr McLeod, wife of A. J. McLeod, Esq., barrister, having spent the winter in Wilmington, North Carolina, with her son-in-law, Dr. Ellis, has returned from the "Sunny South," accompanied by her daughter Mrs Ellis and her child, for a few weeks' visit at the old homestead.

—We regret to record to-day the demise of one of our most respected citizens Wm H. DeWolf, Esq. He had been in feeble health for some time and passed away at 12:15 p. m. on Wednesday last in his eightieth year. Mr DeWolf was a son of the late Wm H. DeWolf and was born March 10th, 1809, at a farm now occupied by Mr Forsyth, near White Rock Mills. His father subsequently removed to the house (opposite Mr Charles Fitch's) now occupied by Mrs George Thomson.

William left home and began farming at Parraboro about 1830. In 1836 he was married to Sarah E., daughter of Luther Lauby, of Amherst. After a year or two he removed to Amherst where he engaged in business for some fifteen years. In 1848, he began business in Liverpool, England, where he remained for four years. In 1855 he came to his family to Wolfville where he continued to reside until his decease. When Mr DeWolf came to Wolfville he bought his late residence, which formerly belonged to his uncle, Elias DeWolf. He also bought the property formerly owned by his father, who was deceased, and that of his grandfather, the late Judge DeWolf, which is now owned by Mr Haliburton. Mr DeWolf has nine children seven of whom are now living. Of these one son in Liverpool, England. Of his five daughters one resides in Vancouver, B. C., one in Brandon, Manitoba, a third in London, England, a fourth in Halifax, and another, the eldest in, Wolfville. As a citizen Mr DeWolf was universally respected and his kindly face will be greatly missed from among us.

—We have to chronicle the sudden death of Mr George Strong, of New Minas, which occurred on Saturday last. Mr Strong had been in rather poor health during the greater part of the winter, but feeling better on Saturday he went into Kenville, transacted some business and returned to his home. He had occasion to go into an old house in the afternoon which belonged to him, and not being able to open the door, gained access to the house by the cellar-hatch, where he was found on the pillars of his body was discovered, as no one before his intention of going into the old building.

—An artistic sketch from the hands of an artist is a winter scene on exhibition at G. A. Harvie's, painted by Miss Lizzie Harris. Miss Harris has been teaching in Windsor nearly a year with excellent success, and at the present time has about as many students as she can well attend to who are all making very creditable advancement.— Tribune.

—MCDONALD—ROBINSON.—At the home of the bride, Hantsport, on Saturday evening, June 2d, by Rev. D. H. Simpson, B. D., Mr Ralph B. McDonald and Miss Rose A. Robinson, both of Hantsport.

—DIED.—STRONG.—Suddenly, at New Minas, of heart disease, on June 2d, George E. Strong, aged 47 years.

—DEWOLF.—At Wolfville, June 6th, Wm H. DeWolf, aged 79 years.

B. G. Bishop sells only first-class leads such as Brandram's Chemical Pure, and pure Oil.

A Worthy Undertaking.

On Saturday last, the first instalment of Ontario Salmon Trout were brought to this county for the purpose of stocking our natural waters, arrived by the morning express from the Bedford Hatchery.

Some 20,000 of them were given in charge of J. L. Gertridge Esq., of Gasquet, to be placed in the several lakes in this vicinity. Mr Gertridge has for a number of years past been much interested in the matter of fish culture and has been in correspondence with the managers of some of the most important fish hatcheries in the Dominion as well as in the United States, with a view of ascertaining the best kinds of fish to plant in our waters. From the information he has received, he is convinced that trout will mature in our waters equally as well as in Ontario, where it is often caught weighing 30lb and upwards, and is perhaps the best fish to import for this purpose.

There are a number of lakes of more or less magnitude on the South Mountain some of which are now stocked with native fish while in others, so far as known, there are no fish found. It is these latter lakes which Mr Gertridge proposes to stock first with these foreign fish; and with this end in view placed a portion of his allotment in each of the following lakes, viz.—Sunken, Moosehorn and Little River. Mr Gertridge deserves much credit for the interest he has taken in this very important matter of stocking our lakes and rivers with this valuable fish, having spent a large amount of time and money to accomplish what has already been done. We believe that it is largely through his efforts coupled with those of A. B. Wilnot, Esq., manager of the Bedford Hatchery, that these fish have been placed in our waters, and it is hoped that his most sanguine expectations may be realized.

B. G. Bishop sells only first-class leads such as Brandram's Chemical Pure, and pure Oil.

A Year's Experience. After nearly a year's use of SIMON'S LINIMENT, I have proved it to be what I supposed at first it was, an excellent Liniment to have about a stable. I have used it in cases of Cuts, Galls, Bruises and Sprains on my horses, and in every case found it to give relief at once, cleansing the cuts and bruises in their healed rapidly, and reducing the soreness in cases of sprains and bruises in a short time. Nothing has presented itself to me that so effectively relieves and prevents Horse Discomfort. I have also found it of very great service, both in my own family and in the families of my men, in cases for which it is intended to be used.
