Weak Women

It is said that no one sees any more or anything else in a view, or landscape, or event, or show of any kind, than what he brings to it. His mind is the measure of what he sees. However that may be, I hold that a benevolent tendency to see the good side of a people, and an appreciative sensitiveness to their efforts in art—architecture, sculpture and painting—and a sympathy with their religion and their consequent modes of thought and habits and manners, are the best disposition for one about to travel in a country like Spain.

And probably it was on this account that I saw much more than I expected, and things very different indeed from what I anticipated. In these strange things I do not speak of grand cathedrals or rich churches or marvels of architecture and wonders of painting. All this I was prepared for. But the chief source of my surprise is the mode of life of the Spaniards themselves as I saw it in the large cities of Grenada, Seville, Cordova, Toledo, Madrid, Burgos, and this present city of San Sebastian.

I say now with full deliberation and with a keen sense of the surprise that it may awaken in others, as it did in myself, that the Spain through which I travelled was the cleanest country that I ever journeyed in, the United States even not excepted. This was my wonder, and it was the greater as I had been led to believe that Spain and Italy were on a par in this respect and that of the two the latter was perhaps the cleaner. Paris is very clean; Rome is admirably kept both in and out of the houses; but they cannot show any cleanliness to come near that of Seville. A Dutch city where the inhabitants live in perpetual dread of seeing a speck of dirt inside or outside a house, is the only parallel I know to the cities I have seen in Spain.

In the south the houses are built around a patio. Edmundo de Amicis found it difficult to describe a patio, which is such an essential element in the domestic architecture of this part of the country. It is not a courtyard, nor is it a garden nor is it a hall, but it combines together the characteristics of all three. Between the patio and the street, which are usually closed toward the street by a gate in iron work of the most elaborate and artistic style. Some of these gates are of great price. On the four sides of the patio, rise rows of light columns, sometimes supporting Moorish horseshoe arches, at other times, Roman or Gothic arches. Above these arches rise a gallery closed to the courtyard with large windows, which can be opened for the admission of cool air in the summer nights. From this gallery iron rods stretch across the courtyard, and on these are stretched coarse curtains which form a roof to the patio in the summer when the people sit here. In the centre there is frequently a fountain, and in front of the columns are tubs, or large earthen vases, filled with orange trees and semi-tropical flowering plants. The columns are of marble, the paving of the patio of the same material. Not a dead leaf, not a speck or stain is allowed to rest on columns or pavement; and so clean is the place that you hesitate to advance lest your shoes should soil the spotless whiteness. Every house, whether rich or poor,

A Malignant Country.

It is built in this style, the decorations and the materials mark the difference between one and the other. The cathedrals and churches of Spain always occupy a large share of the attention of the traveller. The reason is obvious. The prominent building in a city, that indeed around which all the houses conglomerate, as obelisks under the wings of a hen, is the Cathedral. People in Spain evidently thought of Spain first, and thought no labor too costly or art too rich to adorn the house in which the Lord dwelt. It was their faith, translated into acts, which led them to expend their brightest and best in the adornment of their churches, and even in Italy there are but few churches that can compare with the great cathedrals of Spain.

I have just come from Burgos, the cathedral of which city was a worldwide renown. It was the rather free-thinking Theophile Gautier who described it in the most beautiful in the world.

And when you see the frequenters of the great church its purpose becomes clearer to you. At all hours of the day, from dawn to sundown, groups of kneeling figures may be seen about the altar, or in some silent chapel such as that of St. Thecla, which embraces El Santissimo Cristo de Burgos—the celebrated and lifelike image of the Crucifixion. Here the poor and lonely of the earth come, and they feel that this is a refuge for them, and that in their father's house they are not strangers. Even the chapel of the Royal Palace at Madrid is not closed to the public. Here, on the Sunday before leaving that capital, I assisted at the High Mass celebrated at the chapel royal, on the second floor of the Palace, and where the Queen Regent of Spain, with the By-king Alfonso XIII. attend. The Bishop of Madrid was present, as well as the Canons of the Royal Chapel, in white fur capes and red silk mantles, and with royal decorations hung by a white and blue ribbon on their necks. And there was no concession or privilege granted to me in being thus allowed to enter, what at least might be called a private house, and to assist at a religious ceremony within it.

The place was a most beautiful all, and the community of worship and the brotherhood of faith brought the peasant and the prince to the same level before God. And this truth was translated here into practical fact. Little ragged boys, with eyes and complexion that Murrillo would have loved to paint, pushed their way to the front over the silken skirts of kneeling senators and passed gentlemen of the court, with a freedom that was refreshing to see. It may be that they in Spain have solved the problems that rise from the application of "the brotherhood of man," of which the world has recently heard so much in poetry and tall talk. Anyhow, the juxtaposition of all social classes in the private chapel of the Queen Regent of Spain, appears to me worthy of serious consideration by our modern world-improvers. One might suggest to them in the old phrase, to go and do likewise, as a preliminary to the settlement of the social distinctions.

Indeed, throughout Spain I have noticed a consideration for "the people," as men say nowadays, which might serve as an example for other more boastful nations. Every city I have seen possesses its Alameda or garden walk, where seats are placed at intervals beneath awnings of umbrageous trees, and where, when the day's work is done—and it is done once a day in Spain—and their wives and children go to take the air, and listen to excellent music which a paternal municipal government—the members of which do not become millionaires—provides for the people out of the city taxes. Here, in this little city of San Sebastian, the population of which is no more than 30,000, there is a walk by the seaside which is cared for and adorned with a taste and a comfort that would make ordinary people stare. There are gardens devoid of hedges or fences, planted with the choicest flowers, and of course, open by night and by day. After all, the "effete monarchies of Europe," as the phrase goes, have a little consideration for the people they rule over. In Spain this is particularly evident.

In my journey through Spain, I depended for my information chiefly upon Spanish sources. I take it for granted that a nation, as well as an individual has the best right to be informed on its own affairs. Hence, when I could receive information from Spaniards I sought it, and then in the books and papers—the written voice—published in the country. Murray's Guide Book I set almost entirely aside, finding it full of prejudice, and disgraced by

AYER'S Cherry Pectoral.

Early in the Winter, I took a severe cold which developed into an obstinate, hacking cough, very painful to endure and troubling me day and night, for nine weeks, in spite of numerous remedies. Ayer's Cherry Pectoral being recommended me, I began to take it, and inside of 24 hours, I was relieved of the tickling in my throat. Before I finished the bottle, my cough was nearly gone. I cannot speak too highly of its excellence.

Three Masses at Christmas.

THE CUSTOM DATES BACK TO THE BEGINNING OF CHRISTIANITY.

The custom of celebrating three Masses at Christmas dates back to the very beginning of Christianity, and we find the Holy Pontiff Telephorus regulating the hours while giving a reason for the triple solemnity. The first Mass is to be sung at midnight, the second at early dawn and the third in the light of the risen sun. These hours harmonize with the liturgical character of the three-fold sacrifice on this day, but they are not essential to its mystical meaning, and hence the reason, be celebrated at any hour between sunrise and noon, even in immediate succession.

Nearly all the interpreters of the Christmas liturgy agree that the triple celebration of the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass on this day is intended to give expression to the three fundamental dogmas of the Catholic faith with regard to the doctrine of the Atonement. The regeneration of man by a new birth in Christ, brings us to the incarnation of the Divine Word, and this mystery in turn leads to the eternal generation of the Second Person in the Most Holy Trinity. In this triple truth we have the unfolding of the act of redemption; the Word begotten from eternity, true God of true God; next the Word made Flesh, and again the Son of God born anew in our hearts.

The second Mass emphasizes the three dogmas of the Eternal Generation, the Incarnation and the spiritual regeneration through the merits of Christ. These are the mysterious lights that come upon us in the midst of the shadows of death. The second Mass marks the triple effects of this three-fold mystery upon man, redemption, sanctification and adoption. The third Mass is the true Eucharistic sacrifice, or consecration, and the expression of gratitude for the three-fold birth of Christ. We have then the fact, the effect, and the acknowledgment on our part of both, in an act of worship, which, by confessing the dogmas realizes the effects. The fitness of this will be more apparent when we keep in mind that the Catholic ceremonial is at all times the form of worship and simultaneously the expression of dogma. This is eminently the case here where we have a real living sacrifice of infinite worth and a distinct act of atonement as well as of thanksgiving.

In the first Mass we have the dogmatic declaration of the Divine Sonship. This involves the eternal generation, the generation in time, and the spiritual generation of man, that is our adoption through Christ. The orations at the first Mass are in full accord with the dogmatic exposition of the mysteries as contained therein. The formulary of the second Mass opens with what may be called the introduction of the object addressed. Whereas, in the Introit in the first Mass, the fact of the eternal Sonship is announced, we have now brought out the effect, namely, that we are the ones to whom the mystery appeals, and who are the recipients of its fruits. "The light shall shine upon us today, since the Lord is born to us."

The state of the monastery at present is not enviable. It has been recently taken by the corrupt and unprincipled governor, and, contrary to all justice, spoiled of its revenue. The monks, however, were left in charge, and known as the "Custodi del Monumento." They number about 40, and as "Guardians of the Monument" receive yearly a small portion of the revenue of which they are annually robbed. But, in spite of this affliction, they endeavor to fulfill their mission, though the altered circumstances render it difficult. The monastery is still a nursery of virtue and learning. Two hundred young levites, destined for the diocese of Cassino, are lodged and instructed within its walls. Nor is the old time hospitality relaxed. All are welcome to its sanctuaries, and its fame attracts visitors from all over. The guest-book contains many illustrious names. Among others may be found the autograph of Gladstone. It is the single but expressive word forest. The monastery may not flourish while the enemies of faith and morality sway the helm of State in Italy; but their regime shall pass away as other eras of persecution have done, and then the forest of Britain's "grand old man" may be really verified! To Nursing Mothers!

A leading Ottawa Doctor writes: "During lactation, when the strength of the mother is deficient, or the secretion of milk scanty, WYETH'S MALT EXTRACT gives most gratifying results."

Christ and His Mother.

Central University, at Richmond, has become the possessor of probably the rarest and most valuable book in this country. It forms a part of the library left by the late Dr. R. W. Landis, of Danville, and will doubtless bring to Kentucky many bibliophiles and antiquarians...

But the title page now tells more; it records the ownership of the book, or part of it at least, from a time but little subsequent to the date of its publication. One of these inscriptions is engraved in a bold, masculine, evidently German hand, although the language, like the rest of the work, is Latin.

Following these come a number of the memoranda in the irregular clerical hand of Dr. Landis, concerning both the authority by which the date of the edition is established and something of the author of the work. Omitting the reference this reads:

"Anselm was born at Aosta in the year 1034, says Tiraboschi, and studied under Lanfranc at the monastery of Bec, in Normandy, where he afterwards, in his twenty-seventh year, devoted himself to a religious life. In these years he was made Prior and then Abbot of the monastery; whence he was taken in the year 1098 to succeed to the Archbishopric, made vacant by the death of Lanfranc. Here he remained until his death, in 1109; though often disturbed by dissensions with William II, and Henry I, respecting his immunities, etc.

"His theological works have much precision and depth, and it is the observation of many modern writers that the demonstration of the existence of God, taken from the idea of a Supreme Being, which Des Cartes is thought to have originated, was first suggested by Anselm."

The black letter of the volume is devoted to religious doctrine, and is supposed to be, so far as the abbreviation is concerned, an exact reproduction of the careful manuscript of the venerable Archbishop. That is very nearly so, there can be no doubt, since many of the abbreviations correspond to those used in MSS. written prior to the time of Edward I, granting both lands and privileges to monasteries. The latter monarch forbade these grants, and when they were again permitted, a different style of abbreviation had been adopted. The fact that it is nearly an exact reproduction of the ancient MSS. is also attested by hand illumination, which is very beautiful. The entire book is red-lined at the captions, whilst the paragraphs are marked in vermilion, azure, silver and gold. The subsections of the work are marked by flowing scroll-work and illumination that is said to compare most favorably with the best examples in the British Museum the same colors and effects being used in other portions of the work. The silver and gold are somewhat tarnished, except in the middle of the volume, but the colors

Dr. Robinson, and seemed to satisfy him of the authenticity of his copy. There is on the book no date, save the one that has been written there by Dr. Landis himself, yet, that there remains not the slightest doubt of its genuineness is attested by an offset of 85,000 copies, which was subsequently made by the British Museum. One of the strongest proofs of its being the edition of 1490, is found in the fact that Anselm was canonized in 1494, and on the title page the book speaks of him, not as saint, but merely as apostle, a term which was used to designate the fact of the author's death. This with other abundant evidence, establishes its claim to the date given without doubt. It is said by some who are quite familiar with the value of similar works, that this old book is worth even as much as $25,000.

A Great Catholic Soldier.

The Rev. William D. Hickey, who was associated with the late General E. Parker Scammon in 1880 as one of the professors in Seton Hall College, South Orange, N. J., contributes to the Catholic Columbian an interesting article on that great man's conversion to Catholicity. The writer says he shall not soon forget the vivid impressions that were then made on his mind by the noble character of this ripe scholar and devout Catholic.

Born in Maine in 1816, he entered West Point in 1833, from which institution he graduated in 1837—fifth out of a class of fifty-two. Such was the proficiency of the young cadet in mathematics, that he was immediately appointed as assistant professor of this branch and remained at West Point until the breaking out of the Seminole War in Florida, into which he rushed with all the enthusiasm of a young Lieutenant, winning his first spurs in active service. The war over, he was again assigned to a Professor's chair in West Point, and continued teaching there until 1847. It was during this period that he was admitted into the Military Academy, a young cadet from Ohio, who ever afterwards remained the fast friend; he was then called to the position of Chief Engineer of the Army and President of these United States. It was during this period of his stay at West Point that he became a Catholic, and he told me that the study of Cardinal Wiseman's lectures on the Blessed Sacrament was the first step in his conversion.

By the way, the perusal of Wiseman's article in the Dublin Review of 1837 on the Donatist heresy first showed Cardinal Newman the insecurity of his position in the Anglican Church, and was the starting point in the journey that led him seven years later to Rome. Before becoming a Catholic and while deeply engaged in the study of doctrinal subjects, the General carried on through the medium of the Protestant press a controversy with a writer in the Freeman's Journal on religious questions. Neither writer knew the identity of the other, and General Scammon after his confirmation by Bishop Hughes, made known to the other the identity of the other, and expressed a desire to learn the name of the writer on the other side, whose articles, he frankly avowed, had hastened his conversion, and was delighted when the Bishop disclosed to him his opponent's name. It is my impression, though, not sure of the fact, that he was received into the Church by another West Pointer, a former pupil or his, Father Deahon, now of the Paulists.

When the Mexican war broke out General Scammon felt that his patriotic spirit again stirring in his veins, and rushed to the scene of the fray. For his gallantry during the siege of Vera Cruz, and while on the staff of Major-General Scott he was promoted to the rank of Colonel. He was placed in charge as topographical engineer of the Government survey of the great lakes—a task which occupied his whole attention for seven years.

Leaving the military service for a while he entered upon commercial pursuits in West Virginia, and in 1858 was called by the late Archbishop Purcell to take the chair of mathematics in Mt. St. Mary's of the West. For his associates in the faculty he had Bishops Quinlan and Rosecrans, Doctor Pabich and Father Barry, and Doctor O'Leary, author of the Greek Grammar. The other members of the faculty were, as a matter of fact, a faculty whose collective ability has never been surpassed in any Catholic seminary in the United States.

General Scammon possessed all the absent-mindedness of the pure mathematician, and in this connection a story was told of him which I once admitted to us to be founded on fact. While occupied in teaching trigonometry one afternoon, a fire broke out in a neighboring dwelling and the students who were then the volunteer fire department of the hill, unobtrusively left the classroom as soon as the alarm rang out. So wrapped was the General in his problem on the blackboard that he never heard the alarm of fire nor noticed the abrupt departure of his class, until turning around after his solution, he was surprised to find the room empty. He ever retained a warm love for Mt. St. Mary's and delighted to speak of his happy days there. He used to say that two of the most brilliant students he had ever known in his career he met there in his declining years, students who would achieve high rank in any class in West Point, and their names were J. F. Callaghan and J. L. Spalding, one the former Secretary of Archbishop Purcell, and the present Vicar-General of the Diocese of Little Rock and the other the present scholarly Bishop of Peoria.

The Civil War broke out in 1861, and for a third time the General left the professor's chair to engage in the defense of his country. One of the first volunteers in Cincinnati, he was placed in charge of the Twenty-third Ohio regiment and assigned to Camp Chase, where his rigid discipline was long remembered by the new recruits. The character of this regiment may be inferred from the fact that out of its thousand men, it gave in after life a President of the United States, a Justice of the Supreme Court, two Governors and Lieutenant-Governors of Ohio, a foreign Minister and a Consul, and five or six members of the National Congress. He took part in the Virginia and Maryland campaigns, was made Brigadier-General for his bravery at the battle of South Mountain, and in 1864 was captured and sent to Libby prison. Released by exchange soon afterwards he was captured by the rebels a second time while in charge of the battery at Morris Island, during the attack upon Charleston, and upon the conclusion of the war was placed in the military command of Florida. He served for a while as Consul at Prince Edward Island, and then returned to New York to engage with his friend and fellow-Catholic, General Newton, in engineering work in the city of New York. He then tendered the chair of Mathematics in Seton Hall College by his friend, Bishop Corrigan, in 1875.

Here he lived in the cozy little village of South Orange with his family for ten years. During this time he regularly attended the 6 o'clock Mass at the seminary chapel and no seminararian was ever more punctual in attendance. He was in the habit of receiving Holy Communion frequently almost daily, and every day recited the office of the Blessed Virgin his Breviary as he called it. While waiting for breakfast, he was accustomed to drop into my room, and those were delightful half hours. He was a delightful raconteur of stories, and his thorough knowledge of history, the varied experience of his life in the service of his country, his wide acquaintance with Presidents of the United States, Generals on both sides of the war, and statesmen, as well as dignitaries of the Church, all fitted him to be one of the most interesting of conversationalists, and though possessed of youth's healthy appetite at the time, it was often sorry when the breakfast bell put an end to our chats. He was a true loyal type of the Catholic soldier; a Christian, cheerful, another, broad, walking out fear and without reproach, with open in the presence of God. Archbishop Corrigan once remarked that the General's military training had fitted him to be a good Catholic and a good soldier.

Christmas in Rome. HIS HOLINESS OPENS THE FEES WITH A RECEPTION. ROME, December 23.—The Pope held a reception in the throne room today to inaugurate the Christmas festivities. Twenty-two Cardinals, many other high ecclesiastics, noblemen and conspicuous Catholic citizens were present. Cardinal Raffaele Monaco Lavalletta in the name of his colleagues presented the best Christmas wishes to his Holiness. In replying the Pope emphasized the value of religious influence in the families and schools and governments of all countries. If there were no faith, he said it would be useless to put laws in force. He expressed the hope that he would close his Pontificate by realizing the union of the Roman and Eastern Churches. The address contained no political allusions.

Robert Louis Stevenson, the novelist, is dead. He was stricken with apoplexy at his home in Samoa. Many a prayer for the repose of his soul will be offered, not only by those who remember his defense of the leper-priest, Father Damien, from the aspersions of the Reverend Mr. Hyde.

The Methodists are adopting the Anglican Communion Service, and in one church in Omaha, with the full consent of the local bishop, this service is regularly held instead of the tame little picnic that has been the custom heretofore in Methodist churches. It won't be long before the Methodist dominions will be saying "Mass." They are able to do so every whit as much as their Anglican confreres. They have deaconesses; why should they not have priests? There is nothing in the name.

The people of Galway propose to erect a monument to the memory of Father Tom Burke, O. P., in that city, where he was born, where he received his early education, where his parents lived and died, and where his sister and the remaining members of the family at present reside. The memorial is to take the form of a marble altar, a pulpit, and a stained-glass window in the Dominican Church. A fund has been started, to which the friends of the great Friar at home and abroad are solicited to contribute.

The Emperor William has asked the Pope to establish a feast of praise and prayer for the Fatherland, intimating that if the Church leads he will see to it that Lutheran and all others follow. His Holiness has assented, and a note of German Thanksgiving Day will be inserted in the calendar of November. Protestant Germany ruled by the Pope! Slightly for the present. An interesting wedge.

Owing to the title of Venerable conferred by the Pope on Jeanne d'Arc, thus entitling her to recognition by the Church in a religious sense, there is greater enthusiasm than ever among the French Catholics all over the world for that heroine and martyr. A special service was recently held in New York in her honor, at which the French Ambassador and his staff were present, having come from Washington to assist at it. The French Consul and officials at New York, and all the French military battalions also attended in full uniform. Mgr. Goetsch, Bishop of Burlington, Vt., celebrated the High Mass, and the Rev. V. L. Sallia, Provincial of the Order of the Fathers of Mercy, one of the most eloquent orators of the order, preached the pane gytic.

Father John S. Vaughan once asked Cardinal Manning why when most persons are at the very point of death they do not seem to dread it. His Eminence answered: "The vast majority of persons do undoubtedly die calmly enough, and my explanation is briefly this: So long as God intends a man to live, He wisely infuses a certain natural dread and horror of death, in order that he may be induced to take ordinary care of himself and to guard against danger and needless risks. But when God intends a man to die, there is no longer any object for such fear. It can serve no further purpose. What is the result? Well, I take it that God then simply withdraws it." The explanation of the Cardinal pleased the priest well, and seemed to him not only to account for the strange phenomenon but also to place God in a peculiarly aimable and tender light.

People Who Weigh and Compare. Know and get the best. Cottolene, the new vegetable shortening, has won a wide and wonderful popularity. At its introduction it was submitted to expert chemists, prominent physicians and famous cooks. All of these pronounced:

Cottolene a natural, healthful and acceptable food-product, better than lard for every cooking purpose. The success of Cottolene is now a matter of history. Will you share in the better food and better health for which it stands, by using it in your home? Cottolene is sold in 3 and 5 pound pails by all grocers.
