Second, the Prime Minister, when speaking in Winnipeg on March 8, as reported in the press, said that all ethnic groups would be included in the proposed study of biculturalism. I feel that the very important ethnic groups in Canada will ask why it is they have no representation. I think, for instance, of those of German and Dutch origin who represent one and a half million of Canada's population. They have no representation. I think as well of the Indian population of our country. They have no representation on a commission which is most important to them.

Even yet I ask the government to give reconsideration to providing direct provincial representation. The premiers will be meeting here during the latter part of this week. Certainly they should have the opportunity of recommending the names of two or more representatives for this royal commission, where the consideration of matters which come within provincial jurisdiction is implicit.

Now, sir, I need not say what our attitude is on the subject of biculturalism or bilingualism; our actions during the period we were in office showed that. When confederation took place a new nation was created in the partnership of two basic nationalities and origins. I believe that when an important commission such as this is set up every endeavour should be made to secure the views of the provinces as well, with representation on the commission. This is a body which is looking at a national problem, the legislative power of which in those matters that affect biculturalism and bilingualism, such as education rests in the provinces, along with all those rights which are guaranteed under the constitution.

For that reason I have felt, and this party feels, that there should have been a meeting held, a great congress of the people's representatives both federal and provincial. The government, having decided on a royal commission, should make it an effective body by securing the appropriate and necessary membership of the provinces.

(Translation):

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, we are happy to hear the Prime Minister's statement. We are sure that the distinguished Canadians appointed to the commission are entirely qualified to do the very important task that awaits them. We hope that the commission will get going almost immediately. It is quite possible that the future of confederation rests to a large extent on its studies and recommendations.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, I should like to add a few words in what the Prime Minister described the other day as the other official language. I will not attempt to follow the right hon. Leader of the Opposition into a discussion of constitutional amendment, important and interesting though that subject is, but I too would like to say a word of caution. Royal commissions, Mr. Speaker, as this house well knows, have sometimes been used as an excuse for lack of action rather than for action. The contribution of this particular royal commission, however important it may be, will not absolve Canadians of both nations from a real effort of will and understanding.

If I may, for a moment, mention my own riding, it is one in which nearly all my constituents are of English and Scottish origin. There have been times, I believe, when they were rather less than interested in the good will of the other nation in Canada. However, today I believe there is a very great fund of good will not only in my constituency but throughout English Canada. But, Mr. Speaker, if I may lapse into my not too good French for one sentence unfortunately we are strangers in our own country.

(Translation):

(Text):

I should like to say, Mr. Speaker, that I believe our dual culture—our more than dual culture—if we have the will within us can be a source of mutual enrichment and not embarrassment. We in this party will wish the members of the commission the very best success in their task. We shall follow their deliberations with a close interest and with sincere good will. We too could suggest additional members, but we are impressed with the members who have been named and, as I say, we wish the commission the best of luck. It will make a great contribution to Canada if it has the good will and interest of Canadians in every part of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: It is not usual or customary for more than the representatives of each of the four parties to make short comments at this time, but in view of the importance of the announcement I wonder whether hon. members would agree to short comments from other representatives of the four different parties, if that is desired at this time?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, in view of this formation of a royal commission on biculturalism, I think you are completely right to ask some hon. members from French speaking Canada to express their own ideas on the matter.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, we cannot but congratulate this government for establishing a royal commission on biculturalism. This commission will be responsible for a survey of the present situation and for a definition of the policy for the years to come. In other words, we urgently needed some kind of a manifesto so that all Canadian citizens belonging to our two great cultures would know in the future how matters stand with regard to the two great nations which make this country.

Since I have come to this house Mr. Speaker, I have ascertained that it is possible to have understanding between our two great nations provided we know each other, but we have to know exactly what each of these two great nations wants and desires. Two hills never meet, but two human beings, two men, can meet. Such a meeting necessarily implies discussions and discussion means occasional differences but also agreements and concord. In a family, two brothers may fight once in a while, but their friendship will endure and their mutual assistance will continue.

When we talked about bilingualism and biculturalism in this house, we never did so with hate, we never said anything against the other great nation in this country. We have always met with sympathy and a desire of achieving some understanding from the members of that other great nation, but on the other hand, a manifesto is necessary to define the position of these two great nations.

In my opinion, that will be the responsibility of the royal commission on biculturalism. The commission will have to provide for that manifesto.

In conclusion, I hope that all Canadians, all public bodies, all associations and all the various groups in our country will lend a hand. I also hope its recommendations are not too long in coming and that they prove satisfactory for all Canadians.

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister's announcement is in no way disappointing and can only be approved. The gesture had been expected for a long time and quite a few people might consider it as the means of solving the problem which Canada's two great nations know today.

That is far better than nothing. As the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) mentioned earlier today, a royal commission does not always give results. He is an expert in the matter himself, as seventeen royal commissions have been set up under his rule to study certain problems, with more or less indifferent results.

Neither should that commission be an elegant way of delaying the solution of the problem, the seriousness of which is known to every Canadian. The commission would serve more accurately to define the wishes of the two different nations which form this country, and that is why recommendations in this respect should not be delayed, and it should more particularly not be said that the commission can not give any immediate results.

Moreover, the fiscal issue, which is also very important and does not come under the commission, should also be settled at an early date. Indeed, the commission will generally give no satisfaction to French Canadians throughout Canada, and more particularly in the province of Quebec, as long as the question of fiscal relations is not settled.

The appointment of some French Canadians to the commission was hardly a surprise for anybody. Following certain recent statements or interpretations in connection with the problem concerning our two great cultures several had already expressed a certain prejudice, which we thought would result in their imminent appointment to the commission. As far as I am concerned, and with the exception of Rev. Father Cormier whom I did not know, the others were from the start candidates for appointment by the Liberal party. And quite a few among the French Canadians of Quebec will be somewhat disappointed.

We must trust in everybody's good will and, in view of present happenings, more particularly hope that the present problems will be dealt with objectively and that the inquiry will bring some results at an early date.

(Text):

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): We all welcome the announcement concerning the appointment of a commission on biculturalism. I do not intend to repeat what has already been said, but I do want to express one hope; that is, that the terms of reference as affected by the meaning of the word "biculturalism" are not too narrow. I say this because although basically Canada is a country of two ethnic origins, English and French, there are many hundreds of thousands of people who make up, and who contribute to Canada who come from other countries also. I direct attention, if I may, to the constituency of Vancouver East where there are many thousands of people whose original homeland is Italy. Others in their thousands are Chinese. Still others are Germanic or Slavic in origin. These are Canadians who have also made their contribution to our nation and who have a culture which must be tied in with that which is French and with that which is English.

I wish to express the hope that this basic term "biculturalism" will enable the commission to consider the various cultures of the other countries which go to make up what we call Canadianism.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell us who will be the secretary of the royal commission which was announced a few minutes ago?

Some hon. Members: Mr. Pigeon.

Mr. Pigeon: You may be sure the commission will be a success, then.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): There will be joint secretaries, French speaking and English speaking. I hope to be able to give their names in a day or two. They have not been appointed as yet.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): May I ask a supplementary question of the Prime Minister. Were the provincial premiers consulted with regard to the persons appointed to the royal commission on biculturalism?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Joseph Slogan (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister inform the house whether the commission on biculturalism will have within its terms of reference authority to make recommendations regarding a distinctive national flag and a distinctive national anthem?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the terms of reference of the commission have already been made public and an order in council passed embodying them.

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—STATEMENT ON MARINE CASUALTIES

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I regret to have to report to the house a series of marine casualties that occurred late last week in the St. Lawrence river below Quebec. Throughout the period visibility was reduced by fog. Three sets of collisions took place and one ship was sunk with heavy loss of life. Damage to the other ships varied from heavy to minor.

The first collision took place about 10 p.m., Thursday, July 18, near Murray Bay. The vessels involved were the hydrographic survey vessel Cartier of the Department of Mines and Technical surveys and the cargo ship Seven Skies, understood to be of Swedish register. Damage was light; no personal injuries were sustained; both vessels proceeded under their own power.

The second occurred at the entrance to Quebec harbour about 5.45 a.m., Friday, July 19. The Canadian canal-type cargo vessel Calgadoc upbound and the Liberian-registered Bariloche downbound came in contact, with minor damage resulting. Thereupon occurred a further collision involving the Bariloche and a second upbound ship, the Canadoc, a large Canadian laker. More extensive damage resulted in this case although no personal injuries were suffered. All three ships proceeded to repair berths under their own power.

Shortly before 2 a.m. on Saturday, July 20, the third set of collisions occurred in the vicinity of Ile aux Coudres. The vessels first involved were the Bermuda registered ore carrier Tritonica, upbound loaded from Havre St. Pierre to Sorel, and the Northern Irish cargo vessel Roonagh Head, downbound. The Tritonica sank immediately. The Roonagh Head suffered extensive damage but anchored nearby and launched boats to pick up survivors from the Tritonica. The Roonagh Head herself suffered no personal casualties. Our latest report indicates that of a crew of 50 and one pilot aboard the Tritonica, there are 17 survivors, 18 known dead and 16 missing. The master was among the survivors but the pilot, Armand Lachance, 62, has not yet been found. It is understood that the ship's company of the Tritonica included four Caucasian officers, the balance being Chinese. I am sure the house will wish to join me in expressing sympathy for the families of the bereaved.

Shortly thereafter the Canadian laker Hallfax appeared on the scene and assisted with rescue operations. She was not involved in the collision and suffered no damage or casualties.

About two hours after the sinking the outbound Spanish cargo ship Conde de Fontanar entered the area at slow speed and came into light contact with the superstructure of the sunken vessel. She thereupon picked up over the bow further survivors who were clinging to the funnel of the Tritonica, which protruded above the water. The Hallfax continued on her way, the Conde de Fontanar returned under her own power to Quebec for inspection of possible damage, and the Roonagh Head remained at anchor awaiting assistance for the return to Quebec for repairs. The survivors from the Tritonica are now in the veterans military hospital, Ste. Foy.

On the report of this incident being received, Foundation Maritime were advised and dispatched their salvage tug. The Canadian coastguard ship Saurel also sailed to mark the site with the customary wreck marking buoy.

A preliminary investigation in accordance with the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act is being undertaken immediately to report upon the circumstances of the Tritonica sinking, and I fully expect that this will be followed by a formal inquiry also in accordance with the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act. Departmental investigations are proceeding with respect to the other collisions. It is understood that pilots were aboard all the vessels in collision except the Calgadoc and the Cartier.

The wreck of the Tritonica is in 10 fathoms of water and at this point the channel is some two miles wide. Thus other shipping will not be completely obstructed.

Mr. J. A. McBain (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the announcement just made by the Minister of Transport, may I say that I am sure we in this party appreciate having a report on the tragic accident that occurred in the St. Lawrence river. We wish to express our sympathy to the bereaved. We hope the Department of Transport will take every precaution necessary to see that further tragic accidents do not occur. We know that at a time of fog these extra precautions sometimes do not work as effectively as they should. We appreciate the fact that the minister has given us a full account of the tragic accident, and I am sure all hon. members of the house wish to express their sympathy to the bereaved.

(Translation):

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport following the statement he made a while ago about the maritime tragedy that occurred during the week end. Could he suggest or recommend to the owners of the damaged ship that they have her repaired in shipyards in the Quebec area?

(Text):

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice. I can understand the hon. member's interest in the subject.

(Translation):

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORRIS REPORT—APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COUNSEL

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, last Thursday I announced that in order to implement the recommendations contained in the Norris report, lawyers would be appointed to make a detailed study of all the facts and to see if legal action is warranted. I take pleasure in announcing to the house that Mr. Jean Martineau, Q.C., of Montreal, and Mr. J. J. Robinette, Q.C., of Toronto, agreed on Friday to perform this task. Copies of the report have been sent to them immediately and measures are being taken to allow them to go over the evidence.

(Text):

QUESTIONS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the following questions are being answered today: Nos. 777, 778, 846, 847, 848, 865, 907, 918, 921, 923, 924, 927, 929, 944, 945, 946, 949, 958, 960, 966, 967, 968, 971, 974, 979, 983, 985, 986, 989 and 990. There are no questions to be made orders for returns, and I would ask that all other questions stand except starred question No. 676.

Mr. Lambert: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the desire of the Secretary of State to expedite the business of the house but I am wondering whether he can assure the house that the practice he is now following conforms with standing order No. 39, which applies to the replies as well as to the questions.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think an order of the house was made last week with the approbation of the hon. gentleman's leader—probably the hon. member was not here at the time—

Mr. Lambert: I was here.

Mr. Pickersgill: —on an experimental basis to last until such adjournment as we may have for the summer. It seems to me that would supersede any technicalities in the standing order.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

RICHARD O'HAGAN

Question No. 777—Mr. Fisher:

1. What office does Richard O'Hagan hold in the government?
2. What is his age, place of birth, institutions of education attended and educational qualifications, governmental or business experience (position held, length of experience, name of firm or employer) and initial and present salary with the government?
3. What length of time has this gentleman undertaken to serve the government and/or what engagement in length of time was given to him?
4. In brief, what particular qualities of Mr. O'Hagan led to his engagement?

Answer: 1. Special assistant to the Prime Minister.

2. Thirty five; Woodstock, N.B.; primary and secondary schools, Woodstock, N.B., St. Mary's College, Halifax, N.S., Fordham University, New York, N.Y.; editorial staff, The Telegram, Toronto, 1949-56; New Brunswick Liberal association (3 months), 1956; MacLaren Advertising Co. Limited, September 1956 to January 1961 (manager, public relations department from January 1959); special assistant, Leader of the Opposition, January 1961 to April 22, 1963; $10,000—$10,000.

3. No specific period.

4. Capacity to discharge required duties.

Questions

TOM KENT

Question No. 778—Mr. Fisher:

1. What office does Tom Kent hold in the government?
2. What is his age, place of birth, institutions of education attended and educational qualifications, governmental or business experience (position held, length of experience, name of firm or employer) and initial and present salary with the government?
3. What length of time has this gentleman undertaken to serve the government and/or what engagement in length of time was given to him?
4. In brief, what particular qualities of Mr. Kent led to his engagement?

Answer: 1. Co-ordinator of programming, Prime Minister's office.

2. Age 41. Born in Stafford, England. Wolstanton grammar school and University of Oxford. M.A. (Oxon.). Positions: 1943-45, junior administrative officer, U.K. foreign office. 1945-50, Editorial assistant, Manchester Guardian. 1950-54, assistant editor, The Economist. 1954-59, editor, Winnipeg Free Press. 1959-60 assistant to the president and 1960-61 vice president, Chemcell Limited; director, Chemcell Properties Limited and director, Chemcell Securities Limited. 1961-63, special consultant to the leader of the Liberal party and the national Liberal federation. Initial and present salary $20,000.

3. One year.

4. Appropriate abilities and experience.

MONTREAL—ARRESTS AND DETENTIONS BY R.C.M.P.

Question No. 846—Mr. Orlikow:

Did the R.C.M.P. participate in a series of 15 detentions and imprisonments which took place on or about April 12, 1963, in the city of Montreal and, if so (a) did they have warrants for search and arrest (b) did any of the arrests take place between 4:30 a.m. and 5:00 a.m. and, if so, did the R.C.M.P. consider it necessary to conduct these operations at this hour of the day (c) did the R.C.M.P. seize copies of the N.D.P. program and Cité Libre magazines, course notes and other educational items and, if so, on what grounds were such items seized (d) what were the names of the persons detained or imprisoned, and for what period was each held in custody (e) has the R.C.M.P. laid any charges against any of the persons detained or imprisoned (f) did the R.C.M.P. inform any of these persons that questioning is a voluntary matter, and that they did not have to go to a police station unless they were willing to do so (g) were any of these persons permitted to call counsel and, if not, did the R.C.M.P. give any reasons for refusing this protection (h) have any superior officers of the R.C.M.P. or the Minister of Justice received reports of these detentions or imprisonments or in relation to the alleged unsanitary conditions under which some of these persons were detained (i) have any charges been laid against any of the R.C.M.P. officers who may have participated in this operation and, if so, what are the names of any such officers?

Answer: (a) The R.C.M.P. did not obtain search warrants or warrants to apprehend. Search warrants were obtained by the Montreal city police.

(b) R.C.M.P. made no arrests.

(c) Members of the R.C.M.P. did not effect any seizures.

(d) The R.C.M.P. did not detain any persons.

(e) No.

(f) No. Requests to proceed to the Montreal city police offices for interviews were not made by members of the R.C.M.P.

(g) No request made to R.C.M.P. for counsel as R.C.M.P. made no arrests.

(h) Superior officers of the R.C.M.P. were advised of the part taken by members of that force, but did not receive any reports relating to alleged unsanitary conditions.

(i) No.

[Mr. Fisher.]

ARREST OF EDOUARD CLOUTIER, MONTREAL

Question No. 847—Mr. Orlikow:

Did the R.C.M.P. participate in the apprehension, arrest or detention, on April 12, 1963, of Edouard Cloutier, 725 boulevard Saraguay, Pierrefonds, district of Montreal and, if so (a) in what capacity did they participate (b) did the R.C.M.P. tell him that he would be questioned for approximately 15 minutes at the police station (c) did the R.C.M.P. search Mr. Cloutier at the police station (d) did the R.C.M.P. hold him incommunicado (e) did they allow him legal counsel (f) on what warrant, and for how many hours did they hold him (g) was his counsel allowed access to police files and reports concerning his detention or arrest?

Answer: (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f) and (g)—Answered in part by the reply to question 846. Other than assisting the Montreal city police in conducting the search, members of the R.C.M.P. were not otherwise involved in the interview or detention of Edouard Cloutier, 725 boulevard Saraguay, Pierrefonds, P.Q.

ARREST OF JOSEPH LA RIVIERE, MONTREAL

Question No. 848—Mr. Orlikow:

Did the R.C.M.P. assist in the apprehension, arrest or detention of Joseph La Riviere, official reporter, superior court, Montreal, on Friday, April 12, 1963, and, if so (a) in what capacity did the R.C.M.P. act (b) were they equipped with a search warrant (c) was any literature of a religious nature confiscated by the R.C.M.P. (d) were any personal letters seized by the R.C.M.P. (e) did the R.C.M.P. consider that any of the items seized were of a subversive nature (f) where did the R.C.M.P. hold Mr. La Riviere (g) were the accommodations provided him sanitary (h) was he questioned at any time by the R.C.M.P. (i) was Mr. La Riviere permitted legal counsel?

Answer: (a), (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), (h) and (i)—Answered in part by the reply to question 846. Other than assisting in the search, members of the R.C.M.P. were not otherwise involved in the interview or detention of Joseph La Riviere, official reporter, superior court, Montreal.

FEDERAL PROJECTS, THAMES RIVER, ONTARIO

Question No. 865—Mr. Danforth:

1. What work has been carried out by the federal Department of Public Works on the Thames river, county of Kent, Ontario (a) before 1940, and (b) since 1940?
2. What was the approximate cost of each of these projects?

Mr. Badanai: 1.—(a) and (b)—Construction and repairs to Chatham retaining wall and dredging in the area.

2.

Fiscal Years	Construction	Repairs	Dredging
1884-1939	$100,289.80	$65,613.26	$100,751.57
1939-40			5,590.32
1945-46			229.00
1946-47			32,508.95
1947-48			60,297.14
1955-56	91.51
1956-57	26,346.83
1957-58	817.90
1958-59	11,102.79	810.00
1959-60	123.75
1960-61	167,200.75*
1961-62	4,928.09*		317.69

*This was a joint project by the federal and Ontario governments. In addition to federal share listed above the contribution by the province of Ontario in 1960-61 was $152,914.42 and in 1961-62 was $4,382.87.

TEACHERS IN NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Question No. 907—Mr. Prittie:

1. How many teachers are employed in the Northwest Territories by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources?
2. What has been the annual turnover of teachers in the N.W.T. during 1962, 1961, and 1960?
3. How many native Indian or Eskimo teachers, or teachers' aids, are employed by the department in the N.W.T.?
4. How many native Indians or Eskimos are in training to become teachers?
5. Apart from teachers, how many native Indians or Eskimos are in the employ of the department in the N.W.T.?
6. Apart from teachers, how many persons are working in the field of adult education in the N.W.T.?
7. What steps are being taken to encourage local manufacturing by native Indians and Eskimos in the N.W.T.?

Answer: 1. As of June, 1963, 226 teachers.

2. School year 1959-60 per cent resignations 33.0, 1960-61 per cent resignations 33.1, 1961-62 per cent resignations 30.5, 1962-63 per cent resignations 24.4.

3. Teachers, 1 Indian; teachers' aides, none; classroom assistants, 5 Eskimos.

4. While a few known Indians from the N.W.T. attended university last year, and a number of Indians and Eskimos are expected to attend in the coming academic year, the department has no way of estimating how many of these students may eventually choose teaching careers.

5. As of July 1, 1963, 330 known Eskimos and 76 known Indians.

6. 1 full time civil servant. Local persons when available are used occasionally as resource leaders for evening courses and are paid on an hourly basis.

7. Craft specialists, project officers, and co-operative development officers are stationed in the north to help develop local business ventures and cottage crafts. The department operates an Eskimo loan fund to assist local enterprises. In more than 20 settlements, small operations have been organized to process food, produce crafts and clothing, produce lumber and manufacture boats.

RUSSIAN SUBMARINES, BOMBERS AND MISSILES

Question No. 918—Mr. Churchill:

What is the approximate number of (a) U.S.S.R. ocean-going submarines (b) U.S.S.R. bombers capable of reaching half way across the North American continent (c) U.S.S.R. intercontinental ballistic missiles capable of reaching half way across the North American continent?

Answer: As any approximations or estimates made by this government of the numbers involved in the question raised are based on information given to us from various sources on a classified basis, it should be appreciated that it would be neither appropriate nor in the public interest for the government to release such information.

FEDERAL PAROLE OFFICERS

Question No. 921—Mr. Matheson:

1. What are the qualifications for a federal service parole officer class one?
2. What salary is paid to such an officer at the present time?
3. Has the government had difficulty in obtaining and retaining qualified people for such appointments?

Mr. Chevrier: 1. The specification issued by the civil service commission for parole service officer 1 reads as follows:

Qualification requirements: Graduation from a university with a post-graduate degree or diploma in criminology, law, pedagogy, psychology, social work or sociology. Ability to communicate effectively both orally and in writing. Personal suitability. Satisfactory physical condition.

2. The salary range for the classification of parole service officer 1 is as follows:

$4380	4560	4740	4920
5160	5400	5640	5880

(increases semi-annual to $5640)

3. Some difficulty has been experienced in obtaining qualified persons for employment as parole service officers. However, there has not been too much difficulty in retaining such employees.

STRIKING POWER OF RUSSIAN BOMBERS

Question No. 923—Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands):

1. As of January 1 each year from 1957 to 1963, approximately how many Soviet bombers by types, have been estimated capable of making at least a one-way attack on the main industrial areas of southern Canada and the northern United States?

2. Can each of these Soviet bombers carry H-bombs and, if so, (a) approximately how many H-bombs can each type of Soviet bomber carry (b) what approximately is the estimated total megatonnage of the H-bomb or H-bombs that can be carried by each Soviet bomber of each type?

3. What approximate percentage of these Soviet bombers is it estimated that the active air defences of NORAD would destroy (a) before they reach their target or bomb release position (b) before they reach the 54th parallel (c) before they reach the 60th parallel (d) before they reach mainland Canada?

Answer: 1, 2, and 3. As any approximations or estimates made by this government of the numbers involved in the questions raised are based on information given to us from various sources on a classified basis, it should be appreciated that it would be neither appropriate nor in the public interest for the government to release such information.

STRIKING POWER OF RUSSIAN MISSILES

Question No. 924—Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands):

As of January 1 each year from 1957 to 1963, approximately how many Soviet intercontinental ballistic missiles have been estimated capable of striking the main industrial areas of southern Canada and the northern United States?

Answer: As any approximations or estimates made by this government of the numbers involved in the question raised are based on information given to us from various sources on a classified basis, it should be appreciated that it would be neither appropriate nor in the public interest for the government to release such information.

RUSSIAN SUBMARINES, BOMBERS AND MISSILES

Question No. 927—Mr. Churchill:

What is the estimated number of (a) Soviet ocean-going submarines (b) Soviet bombers capable of reaching half way across the North American continent (c) Soviet intercontinental ballistic missiles capable of reaching halfway across the North American continent?

Answer: As any approximations or estimates made by this government of the numbers involved in the question raised are based on information given to us from various sources on a classified basis, it should be appreciated that it would be neither appropriate nor in the public interest for the government to release such information.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

RAMA, SASK., POSTMASTER

Question No. 929—Mr. Korchinski:

1. When was the final date for the acceptance of applications for a postmaster at Rama, Saskatchewan?

2. If no appointment has been made to date (a) what is the reason for the delay and (b) when will the appointment be made?

3. What were the names and addresses of the applicants for this position?

Mr. Denis: 1. There is no date limit.

2. (a) Making inquiries about applicants.

(b) After completion of inquiry, exact date cannot be forecast.

3. Mr. Alex Malowany, Rama, Sask., Mr. Jack Krawetz, Rama, Sask., Mr. Edward Kos, Rama, Sask., Mrs. Annie Melnyk, Yorkton, Sask., Mr. Owen Gunn, Lintlaw and Rama, Sask., Mr. Peter Woroniuk, Rama, Sask.

FEDERAL BUILDING, WALLACEBURG, ONT.

Question No. 944—Mr. McCutcheon:

1. Has any preliminary work been done during 1963 in Wallaceburg, Ontario, relative to providing a new post office in that municipality?

2. Are there plans of a specific nature for the construction of a new federal building in Wallaceburg?

3. At what date will construction commence?

Mr. Badanai: 1. Yes, a site has been acquired on William street between Elizabeth and Wellington streets.

2. Yes, preliminary design studies are under way.

3. It is planned to include an item for this project in the 1964-65 estimates.

LION'S HEAD, ONT. POST OFFICE

Question No. 945—Mr. Loney:

Is it the government's intention to proceed with the construction of a new post office building in the village of Lion's Head, Ontario?

Mr. Badanai: No, not at the present time.

R.C.A.F. STATION, SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I.—LEASE OF PROPERTY FOR SHOPPING CENTRE

Question No. 946—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

Has a lease been granted on Department of National Defence property at R.C.A.F. station, Summerside, for a shopping centre and, if so, what is the name of the lessee?

Answer: No lease has been granted on R.C.A.F. property for purposes of a shopping centre.

REPORTS ON UNIDENTIFIED FLYING OBJECTS

Question No. 949—Mr. Kelly:

Does the R.C.A.F., or any other government department or agency operate a centre for the compilation, collection and investigation of reports of unidentified flying objects and, if so (a) who operates the centre (b) are the reports of the investigations available to the public (c) how may these reports be obtained?

Answer: Yes, the R.C.A.F. While it is not the policy of the department to deny the public information on unidentified flying objects such reports are not produced in published form. Investigations to date have classified the sightings as of either man made objects of which we are aware, or of natural phenomena well known in scientific circles but unfamiliar to the general public.

RESTORATION OF H.D.-4 HYDROFOIL

Question No. 958—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. What progress is being made on the restoration plan for the H.D.-4 hydrofoil?
2. How soon will actual work take place on this project?

Answer: 1. Substantial progress has been made on the plans for the restoration of the H.D.-4 hydrofoil. All the field work has been completed and the reports, drawings and cost estimates, are now being prepared by a consulting naval architect. These should be completed this summer.

2. It is planned to begin the structural restoration work on the H.D.-4 in 1964.

COST OF LIVING INDEX

Question No. 960—Mr. Mather:

What is the relationship, percentage-wise between the June 1, 1963 cost-of-living index and that of June 1, 1939?

Answer: The consumer price index was 62.6 in June 1939 and 132.8 in June 1963 (1949=100). The index rose 112.1 per cent between June 1939 and June 1963.

C.B.C. HEADQUARTERS, OTTAWA

Question No. 966—Mr. MacEwan:

Has a contract been awarded for a new C.B.C. headquarters at Ottawa and, if so (a) what is the name of the contractor and (b) when is it expected that the work will be completed?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation as follows:

Yes. (a) Dell Construction Limited (b) December 1963.

C.B.C. HEADQUARTERS, MONTREAL

Question No. 967—Mr. MacEwan:

Is it the intention of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to call tenders for a new site for its headquarters in Montreal during the fiscal year 1963-64 and, if so (a) when is it expected that tenders will be called and (b) what is the estimated cost of this construction?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the answer is in the negative.

C.B.C. HEADQUARTERS, TORONTO

Question No. 968—Mr. MacEwan:

Is it the intention of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to call tenders for a new site for its headquarters in Toronto during the fiscal year 1963-64, and, if so (a) when is it expected that tenders will be called and (b) what is the estimated cost of this construction?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the answer is in the negative.

CHALK RIVER, ONT.—DEATHS FROM RADIOACTIVE EXPOSURE

Question No. 971—Mr. Peters:

From 1952 to 1963, how many deaths have occurred at Chalk River as a result of exposure to radioactive materials?

Answer: None.

HOWSE PASS ROUTE THROUGH ROCKIES

Question No. 974—Mr. Horner (Acadia):

Has the government received representation from persons and/or parties promoting the Howse pass as the second trans-Canada route through the Rockies?

Mr. Badanai: Yes, such representations have been received by the Department of Public Works.

MAIL CONTRACT, R.R. 2, AMHERST, N.S.

Question No. 979—Mr. Coates:

1. Are tenders to be called by the Post Office Department for mail delivery on R.R. No. 2, Amherst, and, if so, for what reason?
2. How many years has the present contractor, W. W. Embree, carried out the service of contractor for R.R. No. 2, Amherst?

Mr. Denis: 1. Yes. To secure a new contract to commence on October 1, 1963.

Present contract due to expire September 30, 1963.

2. 40 years.

FOX RIVER, N.S., POSTMASTER

Question No. 983—Mr. Coates:

Has a postmaster been appointed at Fox river, Cumberland county, Nova Scotia and, if so, what is his name?

Mr. Denis: No.

FISHERIES GUARDIANS, CUMBERLAND COUNTY, N.S.

Question No. 985—Mr. Coates:

What are the names of the fisheries guardians appointed for Cumberland county to patrol the areas, Maccan river, Shinimikas river, Tidnish river, and the river Philip, Wallace and Pugwash rivers?

Answer: Maccan river, Charles Blenkhorn; Shinimikas river, Arthur Pipes; Tidnish river, Norman F. McPhee; river Philip, Wallace and Pugwash rivers, Keith Parker.

EMPLOYMENT OF CARLSON NELSON, FISHERIES DEPARTMENT

Question No. 986—Mr. Coates:

1. Were representations received by the Department of Fisheries from any persons or associations for the removal of Carlson Nelson as cook-deckhand, on the fisheries patrol boat MYA II and, if so, what are the names of persons or associations making these representations to the department?

2. Was Carlson Nelson given the understanding when taken on strength by the department that he would be employed for the period April 16, 1963 to December 15, 1963?

Answer: 1. No.

2. This type of employment is at pleasure.

WHARF ADDITION, BADDECK, N.S.

Question No. 989—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

What consideration is being given to the addition of an extension and an ell to the public wharf at Baddeck, Nova Scotia, to easier facilitate the loading of pulpwood at that port?

Answer: This matter is now being investigated by department engineers.

AGRICULTURAL DEFICIENCY PAYMENTS

Question No. 990—Mr. Korchinski:

Does the government intend to provide deficiency payments which will protect farmers in seasons of price declines by calculating payments on a quarterly, instead of an annual basis, and, if not, what if any, difficulties prohibit the making of such payments?

Mr. Hays: The government does not plan to provide deficiency payments under the Agricultural Stabilization Act to farmers on a quarterly instead of an annual basis. Studies have shown that on the average deficiency payments on a quarterly basis, since this would also involve the use of a quarterly base price, would not provide any advantage from the standpoint of the producer. On the other hand payment on a quarterly basis would greatly complicate the administrative problem from the standpoint of both the producer and the government.

*SECRECY OATH, PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO FINANCE MINISTER

Question No. 676—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has it been the practice to administer an oath of secrecy to parliamentary secretaries upon taking office?

2. Was the oath administered to Mr. E. J. Benson because he was assisting with the budget?

3. Has an oath been administered to other parliamentary secretaries in the new government?

4. Was Mr. Benson's assistance with the budget a new departure for the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance?

5. Does the administration of the oath to Mr. Benson mark a change in the status of the office of parliamentary secretary?

6. Does the administration of the oath mean that the parliamentary secretary is now a member of the ministry?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. No.

2. Yes.

3. Yes, to the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State for External Affairs on July 4, 1963.

[Mr. Coates.]

4. No.

5 and 6. The status of parliamentary secretaries is set out in Chapter 15, S.C. 1959, the Parliamentary Secretaries Act.

(Translation):

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

REPORTED MEETING WITH PREMIER OF QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Did the minister accompanied by several other members of the present federal cabinet go to Quebec city yesterday to meet the premier of the province of Quebec?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer is yes.

Mr. Gregoire: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it true that the talks dealt primarily with the federal-provincial conference to be held this week and that they ended in complete disagreement?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the discussions were held in a friendly atmosphere and I would not hesitate to say that they were also fruitful.

(Text):

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORRIS COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Having regard to the serious situation in the great lakes shipping industry, may I ask the Prime Minister when he will be making some announcement as to what action the government intends to take regarding the implementation of the Norris commission report?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we will be making an announcement at the earliest possible date, but it is quite clear that the announcement will not cover the implementation of all the recommendations or, indeed, decisions with regard to all the recommendations. However, we are proceeding with this matter with all possible speed.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of my long standing interest in this problem. Will the Prime Minister assure the house that we will have ample opportunity to debate the contents of the Norris report and all the related circumstances?

Mr. Pearson: There should be ample opportunity when the Department of Labour estimates are before the house.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. In view of his previous answer would he tell the house whether the government intends to implement immediately, without awaiting the interdepartmental committee report or the reports of any other committees that may be established, the recommendation to set up a three man trusteeship to assume temporary control of the S.I.U. and the other unions mentioned in the Norris report?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it surely would be foolish to set up an interdepartmental committee to advise the government on this matter and then announce now that we are going to act before that committee's report has been received.

Mr. Martineau: Does the Prime Minister not admit the urgency of this particular situation?

Mr. Pearson: Of course I do, but I am also conscious of the necessity of acting with wisdom in this matter.

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING WITH U.S. SECRETARY OF LABOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the minister's announcement that he was going to meet with the United States secretary of labour, Willard Wirtz, following receipt of the Norris report, would he advise the house whether he has held this meeting with the secretary of labour and, if so, what was the outcome of the meeting.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker, such a meeting has not yet been held. It was understood, following previous meetings, that a further meeting would be held after presentation of the Norris report. We have not pressed from this end for an immediate meeting because of the present preoccupation of secretary Wirtz in his own country, but we hope a suitable time will be available in the near future for such a meeting.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO STRIKES BY LONGSHOREMEN AND FISHERMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the potentially grave situation in the lower mainland area of British Columbia because of the waterfront dispute, the fishermen's strike and so on, can the minister give the house some report on that situation and tell us what the prospects are for settlement?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I can report to the house on the situation existing on the waterfront. In so far as the longshoremen's union is concerned, I understand that normal operations on the waterfront were undertaken on Saturday last, and I expect the present negotiations will continue between the shipping federation and the British Columbia longshoremen's union. I think, in the light of the very lengthy negotiations that have taken place between the parties, there is still some expectation that a resolution of the dispute will be reached in this way.

FINANCE

INQUIRIES RESPECTING U.S. MODIFICATION OF TAX IMPOSED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister advise the house whether the negotiations of last week end with respect to the special excise tax on foreign investment proposed by the President of the United States involved any concessions by the Minister of Finance related to the withholding tax proposals in his recent budget?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): No, they did not, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister in connection with the announcement he made today concerning exemptions. Is the exemption which he mentioned applicable to all companies by regulation, or will the President consider each bond issue as it arises?

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps I might answer that question, Mr. Speaker.

There is no suggestion, as was pointed out in the Prime Minister's statement this afternoon, that there would be any rationing against individual purchases in the way the hon. member has suggested.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask a supplementary question. Do I understand, then, that the power of the President in this matter would enable him to decide which Canadian company or issue should be exempt from the regulation?

Mr. Gordon: There was no suggestion whatever of that kind.

[Later:]

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Who were the men who represented the Canadian government in the financial negotiations with the United States government, as announced this day by the Prime Minister?

Mr. Gordon: Well, Mr. Speaker, the names were mentioned in the communique which was issued last night at six o'clock here in Ottawa and in Washington. For Canada they were Ambassador Charles S. A. Ritchie; Mr. Louis Rasminsky, governor of the Bank of Canada; Wynne Plumptre, assistant deputy minister of finance, and Mr. A. E. Ritchie, assistant secretary of state for external affairs.

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of a report in this morning's Globe and Mail in which the minister is reported as saying that the United States administration has agreed that its proposed tax legislation will provide power for the president to establish exemptions from time to time on new Canadian securities issues floated on the United States market, does this give the President of the United States unprecedented power and control over the economy of Canada?

Mr. Gordon: I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that my hon. friend read the whole communique. If he does he will see that there is another statement, which perhaps I might read for his benefit:

> It is the hope and expectation of both governments that by maintaining close consultation it will prove possible in practice to have an unlimited exemption for Canada without adverse effect on the United States.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which is also supplementary to the earlier question I asked of the Minister of Finance. By way of clarification, and in order to ask the question, I would just like to read an item in the Gazette which is taken from his press conference—

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that we are not now on the question period at all but are embarking on a debate on a matter that is not before the house at the present time. The rules should be observed so that we can get on with the business that is prescribed for today.

Mr. Speaker: I must say I agree with the Secretary of State. If the hon. member has a question that is supplementary, would he make it short?

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. Aiken: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to get some clarification because I asked two original questions which are at variance with this report of the press conference, and I would like for clarification—

Mr. Pickersgill: This is a debate.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I must interrupt the hon. member. This is the question period and we are, as has been suggested, entering upon a debate. Has the hon. member for Acadia a supplementary question?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplementary to my original question, and I will make it brief. With regard to the unlimited exemptions wished by the Canadian government, can the minister assure us that an official statement will be issued soon by the United States government that unlimited exemptions will be made on behalf of Canada?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, the communique that was issued in Washington and in Ottawa last night made it clear that the United States authorities plan to include the provision that is set out in this communique in the proposed legislation to congress. I do not know whether I should add to that, except to say that the Canadian government proposes to be in continual touch with the United States government on this matter. I think most hon. members will agree that quite a lot has been accomplished to relieve the situation as it was announced at noon on Thursday of last week, and certainly the reaction of the security markets bears out that statement.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, having regard to the reply that has just been given. Did the Minister of Finance in a press conference state that a ruling would have to be made by the President of the United States on each bond issue?

Mr. Gordon: I have no record at the moment of the transcript of the press conference, but I have already stated in this house that that was not the intention and was not discussed at the conferences over the week end.

SPECIAL ASSISTANTS—CERTIFICATE OF DEPUTY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance based on sessional paper No. 39D, which was tabled on Friday, July 19, and in which it is indicated that no written contracts were entered into with the minister's special budget assistants. In view of earlier statements made to us I am sure the minister will agree that I might have made a question of privilege out of this, but I will leave that until later and will confine myself today to a question.

In view of the stipulation in section 32 of the Financial Administration Act, that payment for work under a service contract cannot be made until the deputy minister of the department concerned has certified that the service was rendered and that the price charged was according to the contract, may I ask whether the deputy minister of finance issued such a certificate before payments were made to the minister's special budget assistants?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I cannot answer that question today, but I will be glad to take it as notice and get an answer just as soon as I can.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NUCLEAR TEST BAN—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MOSCOW CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of an announcement today claiming that a treaty respecting a ban on nuclear testing in the atmosphere, in outer space and under the water has been agreed to in final form in Moscow. I should like to ask the minister if this final stage actually has been reached in the negotiations.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, when I came into the house today I made some inquiry. I am not aware that any definite agreement has been reached. However, the hon. gentleman may have obtained news of this over the wire since we came into the house. I think it would be preferable for me to postpone any statement until I have had an opportunity of examining the situation. Perhaps I could make a statement tomorrow.

HAILE SELASSIE—INVITATION TO VISIT CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the recent conference which resulted in the setting up of the organization of African unity was held in Addis Ababa, and that His Imperial Majesty Haile Selassie assumed the leading role in the calling of this first all-African conference; and in view of the fact that it has been publicly announced that the emperor will visit the United States in October, has the government given consideration to extending an invitation to Emperor Haile Selassie to visit Canada at that time?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the house will recognize the hon. gentleman's interest in the proposed visit of the Emperor of Ethiopia to the United States, because of the hon. member's long association with the public service of that country. I am happy to be able to announce that Emperor Haile Selassie of Ethiopia has been invited to visit Canada at the conclusion of the visit which the emperor will be making to the United States early in October.

I am sure all members of the house will join me in expressing the hope that the emperor, whose courageous leadership of his country has commanded world wide respect, will be able to accept this invitation.

WEST GERMANY—MILITARY AID TO AFRICAN COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of a statement by a representative of the West German government that it is granting military assistance to African countries with the agreement of its NATO allies, and in view of the fact that this was a subject of discussion at the recent meeting of the NATO council in Ottawa, will the minister inform the house whether the Canadian government gave its consent to the arming of African nations by West Germany?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend was kind enough to give me notice of his intention to ask this question. However, there are some implications of the question I would like to consider further. I shall reply at a later date.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO PAYMENT OF STAFF DURING RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron): I have a question for the Secretary of State and government house leader. Is it the intention of the government to retain the services of private members' secretaries with pay during the proposed summer recess?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not think this is a matter for the government as such. I think it would be a question for the commissioners of internal economy and possibly for the house, but I would hope that it would be possible to do so.

Inquiries of the Ministry

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ST. AUGUSTINE, QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF PLIGHT OF INDIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Will the minister look into the plight of 20 Indians, nine of whom are children, at St. Augustine, Quebec, who I am advised by telegram from a friend of mine who is fishing there are in very bad circumstances?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): I will take the question as notice, and I hope to be able to clarify the matter tomorrow.

FLAT RIVER, N.W.T.—CLOSING OF TUNGSTEN MINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has the minister any information to give the house relating to the operation of the Canada Tungsten mine at Flat River in the Northwest Territories?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I regret to have to confirm the announcement made by Mr. Hall, the secretary treasurer of the company, that due to economic conditions the mine has had to close down, throwing some 65 men out of work. This was due to the uneconomic price brought about by quotations from the Sino-Soviet block which have reduced the price of trioxide from $18.50 a unit to $7.75 a unit. In fact we have a situation in Canada where Canadian steel firms are buying trioxide from South Korea. The price is abnormally low, and the company in question could only operate at a heavy loss.

I am sure the interest of the house is in the investment which the Canadian government has made in that area, involving some $758,000 in all, in respect of an airfield and a road to the mine; but I am sure the hon. member for Northwest Territories will agree with me that work—surveys and that sort of thing—are going ahead at a very great rate in that area, and not all will be lost. We hope the investment there can be retrieved and that the economic position of this particular metal will return to the point where the mine will reopen.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

SUGGESTED EXTENSION OF ROADS TO RESOURCES PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. I wonder whether the minister would consider holding a joint meeting with the Minister of Public Works on the occasion upon which the Minister of Public Works will hold a conference with the provincial premiers or the ministers in charge in which they will discuss the second trans-Canada highway; and will the minister consider the advancement or the extension of the northern roads to resources program on that occasion, since there are programs—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the question has already been stated.

Mr. Korchinski: Well, what are they going to do about it?

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—DELAY IN UNIVERSITY TRAINING PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources related to the one asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam but relating specifically to the Northwest Territories. A week ago Friday I inquired concerning the fate of the university training program for the young people of the Northwest Territories. I am wondering whether the minister has any information for the house.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Brandon-Souris for having in effect served notice of this question. I am quite sure he is aware that under the territories act as it presently stands, the territorial government can give grants but they cannot extend loans. I am sure he is further aware that the necessary legislation to grant loans to students is dependant upon the early completion of the legislation to which we have now given first reading. I sincerely hope that he will persuade his followers on that side of the house, when later on this year we come to second reading, to get the legislation on the books quickly. I am most hopeful that the plan, which was initiated by the previous government and not by ourselves, to bring students from that area to the universities of southern Canada will be carried out.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Would the minister consult the house leader, the Secretary of State, and ask him when this legislation is going to be put on the order paper and brought forward?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary. Could not this matter be handled by the Northwest Territories council under the terms of the five year agreement that was made between Ottawa and that body last year? The reason I raised that question while the council was in session was to be certain that it would be dealt with at that time.

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the hon. gentleman's problem, and I will make inquiries.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO INITIAL PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Because of the approach of the new crop year, is the minister now in a position to tell us if delivery of the initial quotas of all grades of wheat will qualify for the $3 per bushel payment?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I expect to be able to make an announcement this week on the initial price, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. C. O. Cooper (Rosetown-Biggar): I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, but it was partly answered by the answer the minister gave to the hon. member for Mackenzie. I have had many letters from my constituents concerning the setting of the price of wheat. Many of my constituents thought that the price was set last February and March—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Cooper: —when $2 per bushel was promised as the floor price.

Mr. Speaker: Order. What is the question?

Mr. Cooper: My question is, as our crop year ends on the last day of July, does the minister intend to change this price at this late date?

Mr. Sharp: When I make my announcement the hon. gentleman's curiosity will be satisfied.

INQUIRY AS TO AVAILABILITY OF BOX CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce which has to do with box car allocation on the prairies. As the minister knows, an announcement by the Canadian wheat board as to the quota extension on the prairies to 12 bushels is just idle words when the wheat cannot be moved. The situation is such at the present time—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. McIntosh: —that there are no box cars. Would the minister assure the house that box cars will be available to all these points to take away the quota which the wheat board has now prescribed?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think the Canadian wheat board is well aware of the problem and is doing everything it can to make the 12 bushel quota available to all farmers. May I remind the hon. gentleman that even though a year ago there were no restrictions at that time and now there is a 12 bushel quota, in fact deliveries of grain in this crop year are 200 million bushels more than up to this time a year ago. In other words there is now more grain which has to be handled.

Mr. McIntosh: My question had nothing to do with the quota. I want to know if the wheat board is going to be able to move it. The quota means nothing to farmers.

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the end of the crop year is only eight days away, will he consider suggesting to the wheat board that the 12 bushel delivery privilege be extended past July 31, to ensure that all farmers throughout the country can have their crop handled?

Mr. Sharp: I will be very happy to make this suggestion, but I think the members of the board also read Hansard.

SUGGESTED TRANSFER OF WHEAT BOARD TO DIFFERENT DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Since there appears to be a huge wheat crop in the offing, would the Prime Minister consider the transfer of the wheat board once more to another department so that wheat sales, which contribute so much to our balance of payments position—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. What is the question?

Mr. Korchinski: —so that it may be under a minister who is prepared to assume responsibility, since the Minister of Trade and Commerce has repeatedly insisted that the wheat board, and not he, is responsible for the sale of grain?

Mr. Speaker: I did not ask the hon. member to repeat the premise. I asked what his question was.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that these matters have never been in better hands.

[Later:]

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I had in mind to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce pertaining to the price of wheat, but that question was asked by another hon. member. The answer given by the minister is not quite satisfactory to me because I have a reservation about this matter.

TRADE

LUMBER—U.S. DECISION TO MARK IMPORTS WITH COUNTRY OF ORIGIN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): My question is directed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister aware of a recent decision of the senate of the United States that all lumber imports to that country shall bear markings of the country of origin? Does he envisage an adverse effect of this decision on Canada's lumber exports to the United States, in the light of representations that were made seven months ago with regard to curtailing Canada's exports of lumber to that country?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am aware of what has happened in congress, and the Canadian government is continuing to make representations in the hope that before legislation becomes law this particular provision will be removed.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR FINANCING OF EXISTING HOMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. This question refers to the possibility of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation making loans on old homes, which I believe would be a wonderful thing, as many people have a limited amount of cash. Under conditions as they are now, these people have to buy new homes. Will the minister advise what his intentions are in so far as present loans are concerned?

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): I am afraid that I cannot satisfy the hon. member's curiosity today. As he knows, there are amendments to the National Housing Act on the order paper, and I am afraid he will have to wait until the legislation can be brought before the house.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

RADIOACTIVE FALL-OUT—RECOMMENDATIONS OF VOICE OF WOMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. My question is based on a brief addressed to her, under today's date, by the research committee of the Voice of Women, in support of which I understand representatives of that committee sought to see her today. Is the government giving consideration to the recommendations in this brief concerning the monitoring of radioactive fall-out and steps that might be taken to counter the contamination of food?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, may I say I have seen neither the delegation nor the brief, but I assume the latter will be somewhere in the department and it will be studied in due course.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NATO—POSSIBLE RECALL OF CANADIAN AIR DIVISION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister state whether the government is considering recalling to Canada the air division operating with NATO forces in Europe for tactical, strategic or other possible reasons?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Not at the present time.

Mr. Martineau: Is the minister considering it for the future?

(Translation):

POSSIBLE CLOSING OF RADAR STATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, I quite understand the reason for that applause. This seems to be the last parliament in which the Social Credit party will be represented.

I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Has the minister made any plan concerning the radar system which could affect the existence of certain stations, in particular that of St. Sylvestre, in the riding of Lotbiniere?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago the Minister of National Defence stated that in view of the developments and technical improvements achieved in the field of radar, the Department of National Defence would have to do an overall study of our detection system to determine whether it would not be possible to make some savings by eliminating any possibility of duplication without, however, reducing the efficiency of our national warning system.

No decision has yet been taken concerning our radar stations.

(Text):

REFUSAL OF INFORMATION RESPECTING RUSSIAN BOMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Since the government has authorized the publication of the estimated number of Russian divisions opposing our forces in Europe, the estimated number of Russian tanks and the estimated number of Russian ocean going submarines, why is it not in the public interest to let parliament and the public know the estimated number of Russian bombers that could reach this continent?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been gone into very carefully. As I indicated to the special committee on defence, it was considered that it would not be advisable for the government to confirm or deny specific figures with respect to the threat to North America.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the Minister of National Defence if it is his intention to discipline the chiefs of the navy and the army who have disclosed information concerning Russian divisions, Russian tanks and Russian ocean going submarines?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Speaker. The figures they put forward were given with my knowledge, but in future we will not follow this practice of making public even estimated figures on an unclassified basis.

Inquiries of the Ministry

APPEARANCE OF NATO COMMANDER BEFORE SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence whether consideration is being given to having General Lemnitzer, supreme allied commander of the NATO forces, meet with the special committee on defence in the course of his visit to Ottawa this week.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not think provision has been made for that, but I understand he is to deliver a message to the NATO parliamentary association on Wednesday morning, if I am not mistaken, and this will be open to all hon. members of this house. If it is like previous visits by former supreme allied commanders I would recommend that all members who can do so take the opportunity to attend and pose their questions to General Lemnitzer.

ADVERTISING

REPORTED STATEMENT AS TO PROPOSED FEDERAL EXPENDITURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the question I asked last week as to whether there are some French Canadian advertising agencies among the new agencies of his department, and in view of the answer of the minister that he would take the question as notice, is the minister now in a position to tell us whether there are some French Canadian advertising agencies dealing with his department?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have inquired, and I suggest to the hon. member that if he would state his question precisely on the order paper, it will be answered.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he had the time over the week end to check with Mr. Keith Davey, about whom we were asking questions on Friday, and determine how Mr. Davey came to make the announcement about government advertising expenditures. Could the Prime Minister give us any indication as to whether this was an accurate statement?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, Mr. Davey did not make a formal announcement on behalf of the government, and was not authorized to do so.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I also directed a question to the Prime Minister on the same subject, in that I asked whether it was the decision of Mr. Davey or the government to increase the expenditure on advertising from $7 million to $12½ million. I wonder whether the Prime Minister could now give me an answer to that question.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, only the government could make any such increase, but no such increase was in fact made in government advertising expenditures.

PUBLIC WORKS

CANAL BRIDGE, CHESTER, N.S.—INQUIRY AS TO REPAIR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. The canal bridge at Chester broke down in late April. It has been temporarily repaired by the provincial authorities, but in view of the fact that heavy tourist traffic now crosses the bridge daily, and it is a federal responsibility, would the minister give consideration to immediately carrying out permanent repairs?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Would he give the house today the answer to the question put to him previously by the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa, who is unavoidably absent? The question is of interest to many members of parliament and to all the people in Winnipeg; it deals with the report that is expected concerning the T.C.A. overhaul and maintenance base there.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the question appears at page 2338 of Hansard. It was:

—has the report of R. Dixon Speas and Associates been received to date and, if not, has the minister's office any indication when it may be expected?

I immediately had inquiries made on the subject, and regret to have to advise the house that R. Dixon Speas and Associates have advised Trans-Canada Air Lines that they require a portion of August to assure preparation of a suitable, comprehensive report.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

REPORTED GOVERNMENT INTENTION TO SET UP SCHOLARSHIPS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and ask him when we may expect some action to give effect to the announcement which he made in the Toronto Daily Star of May 1 regarding the government's intention of setting up 10,000 scholarships of $1,000 each.

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am quite certain that when this policy is announced it will be announced in the house.

An hon. Member: You announced it.

Mr. Laing: I will continue to do my best to see that the policy is announced at the earliest possible moment.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a very important question to the Secretary of State. In 1943 the government, by order in council, established the Canada medal. Is it the government's intention to award this medal to someone?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as this question has been outstanding for 20 years it does not seem to me to be urgent.

Mr. Pigeon: A supplementary question. Is it the intention of the minister to award this medal to Mr. Smallwood, champion of human rights?

POWER

SUGGESTED STUDY OF RUSSIAN METHODS AND TECHNIQUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. In view of the fact that United States Secretary of the Interior Udall sent some of his senior hydro engineers to the Soviet union to study their methods of river basin development, hydro plant construction and the long range transmission of power, does the minister consider it would be advisable that some of our employees in the water resources branch be provided with a similar opportunity to broaden their knowledge in this field?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having sent me notice of his question. I believe there has been a great deal of reciprocal work done in hydrology and electrical science generally between the western bloc and the eastern bloc, and I think it is probably a good thing if it continues. But if the hon. gentleman wishes to imply that their techniques are superior to those practised on this continent, I would not agree with him. He will recall that less than a year ago we had a visit in British Columbia from a group of Soviet electrical engineers and they were very high in their praise of what they found in Canada.

I can only tell him that if there is merit in this sort of thing we will certainly take it under advisement and try to obtain the opportunity of sending our own men abroad; but I think it is a matter of giving as much as we are getting in these affairs of the world today.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister of northern affairs whether, in the same vein, he is making any plans to try to get the Quebec water resources engineers back into the fold of co-operative study which Mr. Levesque announced some weeks ago was being ended?

Mr. Laing: I think that with the setting up of the resources ministers council with a secretariat in Montreal we are probably in a much better position to look forward to happier times in respect to the resources in all the provinces.

TRANSPORT

FERRY "BLUENOSE"—STATEMENT ON RESERVATION PROCEDURE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, on Thursday last, as reported on page 2339 of Hansard, two questions were asked of me in my absence. The first was by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg and concerned the procedure used by the company operating the Bluenose when making reservations. I have to advise him that that is a matter of internal operation for the Canadian National Railways, and I have directed the question to them. When an answer comes back I will be glad to pass it on.

AIRPORTS

POLICY WITH RESPECT TO PARKING LOT FRANCHISES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the other question was one asked by the hon. member for Port Arthur concerning whether there were changes in policy respecting airport parking facilities at the Ottawa airport since the new government took over. The answer to the question is no, but perhaps I should explain that parking lot charges may be varied from time to time, and that recently changes were made in Ottawa to bring the rates charged here into line with those charged at other airports.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INCOME TAX ACT

Resolved,—That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide among other things:

1. That with respect to new depreciable property of a prescribed class acquired in the period of 24 months commencing June 14, 1963 capital cost allowances be computed on a straight line basis at a prescribed rate not exceeding 50 per cent per annum if the property has been acquired by a taxpayer in a taxation year for a manufacturing or processing business in Canada and the taxpayer is

(a) an individual who was resident in Canada for a period of not less than 183 days in the year, or

(b) a corporation that in the year had a degree of Canadian ownership and control;

and for the purposes of this paragraph,

(c) a corporation has a degree of Canadian ownership and control in a year if the corporation throughout the 60 day period immediately preceding the year (or if the corporation did not have a preceding year, throughout the 60 day period commencing on the first day of the year) complied with the following conditions:

(i) the corporation was resident in Canada,

(ii) either

(A) not less than 25 per cent of its voting shares were beneficially owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, one or more corporations controlled in Canada or a combination thereof, or

(B) the voting shares of the corporation were listed on a recognized stock exchange in Canada and it is established, in prescribed manner, that no one non-resident shareholder owned beneficially, together with any other person associated with him at any time in the period, more than 75 per cent of the voting shares of the corporation, and

(iii) where the year commences after December 31, 1964, the number of directors of the corporation who were resident in Canada was not less than 25 per cent of the total number of directors of the corporation;

or complied with the conditions specified in clauses (i) and (iii) and was a wholly-owned subsidiary of a corporation that throughout the 60 day period complied with the conditions specified in clauses (i), (ii) and (iii); and

(d) a corporation is controlled in Canada at a particular time if at that time it complies with the following conditions:

(i) the corporation is resident in Canada, and

(ii) not less than 51 per cent of its voting shares are beneficially owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, one or more corporations controlled in Canada or a combination thereof.

2. That a taxpayer whose business in a prescribed area of Canada has been certified to be a new manufacturing or processing business that commenced commercial operations in the period of 24 months commencing with the date on which any enactment based on this paragraph is assented to be exempt from tax on the income from that business for a period of 36 months from the date certified to be the date of commencement of operations, and that the rate of capital cost allowances for new depreciable property of a prescribed class acquired by the said taxpayer in the said 24 months period for such business be computed on a straight line basis at a prescribed rate not exceeding 50 per cent per annum.

3. That with effect for 1964 and subsequent taxation years section 40A of the act, which provides for a deduction from the tax otherwise payable by a manufacturing and processing corporation, be repealed.

4. That with respect to expenses incurred after June 13, 1963 a corporation whose principal business is operating a pipe line for the transmission of oil or natural gas be allowed to deduct in computing income the drilling and exploration expenses, including all general geological and geophysical expenses, incurred by it on or in respect of exploring for petroleum or natural gas in Canada and the prospecting, exploration and development expenses incurred by it in searching for minerals in Canada.

5. That for the 1963 and subsequent taxation years a dividend received by a person resident in Canada from a corporation that throughout its taxation year in which the dividend is paid or credited

(a) is taxable as a non-resident corporation carrying on business in Canada,

(b) derives substantially all of its income from sources in Canada, and

(c) has its shares listed on a recognized stock exchange in Canada be deemed to be a dividend from sources in Canada paid or credited by a taxable corporation within the meaning of section 38 of the act.

6. That the 15 per cent rate of tax payable by a non-resident person on dividends paid or credited to him by a person resident in Canada be reduced to 10 per cent with respect to dividends paid or credited after June 13, 1963 by a corporation that in its taxation year in which the dividend is paid or credited has a degree of Canadian ownership or control within the meaning or paragraph 1.

7. That the 15 per cent rate of tax payable by a non-resident person on dividends paid or credited to him by a person resident in Canada be increased to 20 per cent with respect to dividends paid or credited after December 31, 1964 by a corporation that in its taxation year in which the dividend is paid or credited does not have a degree of Canadian ownership or control within the meaning of pargaraph 1.

8. That where a corporation resident in Canada that in any year before 1967 was not a corporation that had a degree of Canadian ownership and control, within the meaning of paragraph 1, becomes a corporation that in 1967 has such a degree of Canadian ownership and control, a non-resident person shall be entitled to a refund equal to

[Mr. McIlraith.]

(a) 5 per cent of any dividends paid or credited by the corporation to him after June 13, 1963 and before January 1, 1965, in respect of which he has paid a tax of 15 per cent to Canada, and

(b) 10 per cent of any dividends paid or credited by the corporation to him after December 31, 1964 and before January 1, 1967, in respect of which he has paid a tax of 20 per cent to Canada.

9. That where a corporation (other than a non-resident-owned investment corporation) paid or credited dividends during the period commencing on June 14, 1963 and ending on December 31, 1964 in taxation years in which it did not have a degree of Canadian ownership and control within the meaning of paragraph 1, the amount of which dividends exceeds five fourths of the amount of dividends paid or credited by the corporation during that number of days immediately preceding June 14, 1963 that is equal to the number of days in the period commencing on June 14, 1963 and ending on December 31, 1964 that were included in taxation years in which the corporation did not have such a degree of Canadian ownership and control, the corporation shall, on or before January 31, 1965, pay a special tax equal to 5 per cent of the amount of the excess.

10. That with respect to income earned after December 31, 1964 the 15 per cent tax imposed by part IIIA of the act on a non-resident corporation carrying on business in Canada be 20 per cent.

11. That with respect to income of a non-resident-owned investment corporation earned after December 31, 1964 the present 15 per cent rate of tax be 20 per cent.

12. That any amount paid or credited after June 13, 1963, by a person resident in Canada to a non-resident person, as or on account of a management or administration fee or charge, be subject to the 15 per cent tax on income from Canada of non-resident persons.

13. That with respect to interest paid by a person resident in Canada to a non-resident person on any obligation issued after June 13, 1963, if the non-resident person

(a) is exempt from income tax in the country in which that person is resident; and

(b) has obtained a certificate of exemption from the minister,

the non-resident person be exempt from the 15 per cent rate of tax imposed in respect of such payment.

14. That for the taxation years ending after November, 1965 a corporation shall during the 12 months period ending 4 months after the close of each taxation year, pay to the Receiver General of Canada

(a) on or before the last day of each of the first 10 months in that period, an amount equal to one twelfth of the tax as estimated by it at the rate for the taxation year

(i) on its estimated taxable income for the year, or

(ii) on its taxable income for the immediately preceding year,

(b) on or before the last day of the eleventh month in the period, an amount equal to one half of the remainder of the tax payable as estimated by it on its taxable income for the year at the rate for the year, and

(c) on or before the last day of the period, the remainder of the tax

and that for the taxation years ending after November, 1963 and before December, 1964 a corporation shall, during the 11 month period ending 5 months after the close of its taxation year, pay to the Receiver General of Canada

(d) on or before the last day of each of the first 9 months in that period, an amount equal to one twelfth of the tax as estimated by it at the rate for the taxation year

(i) on its estimated taxable income for the year, or

(ii) on its taxable income for the immediately preceding year,

(e) on or before the last day of the tenth month in the period an amount equal to one half of the remainder of the tax payable as estimated by it on its taxable income for the year at the rate for the year, and

(f) on or before the last day of the period, the remainder of the tax, and that for taxation years ending after November, 1964 and before December, 1965 a corporation shall, during the 11 months period ending 4 months after the close of its taxation year, pay to the Receiver General of Canada

(g) on or before the last day of each of the first 9 months in that period an amount equal to one eleventh of the tax as estimated by it as the rate for the taxation year

(i) on its estimated taxable income for the year, or

(ii) on its taxable income for the immediately preceding year,

(h) on or before the last day of the tenth month in the period, an amount equal to one half of the remainder of the tax payable as estimated by it on its taxable income for the year at the rate for the year, and

(i) on or before the last day of the period, the remainder of the tax.

15. That the return of income for a taxation year that is to be filed with the minister in prescribed form and containing prescribed information by or on behalf of a corporation be filed

(a) for taxation years ending after November, 1963 and before December, 1964 within 5 months from the end of the year, and

(b) for taxation years ending after November 1964 within 4 months from the end of the year.

16. That with respect to amounts received after June 13, 1963, where a taxpayer has received an amount in a taxation year,

(a) as consideration for the sale or other disposition of any shares of a corporation or of any interest in such shares,

(b) in consequence of a corporation having

(i) redeemed or acquired any of its shares or reduced its capital stock or

(ii) converted any of its shares into shares of another class or into an obligation of the corporation, or

(c) otherwise, as a payment that would, but for this provision, be exempt income, which amount, in the opinion of the minister, was received by the taxpayer as part of a transaction or series of transactions whenever effected or to be effected, one of the purposes of which was or is to effect a substantial reduction of, or disappearance of, the assets of a corporation in such a manner that the whole or any part of any tax that might otherwise have been or become payable under the act in consequence of any distribution of income of a corporation has been or will be avoided, the amount so received by the taxpayer or such part thereof as may be specified by the minister shall, if the minister so directs,

(d) be included in computing the income of the taxpayer for that taxation year, and

(e) in the case of a taxpayer who is an individual, be deemed to have been received by him as a dividend from a taxable corporation within the meaning of section 38 of the act.

17. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years where, in the case of two or more corporations, the minister is satisfied

(a) that the separate existence of those corporations is not solely for the purpose of carrying out the business of those corporations in the most effective manner, and

(b) that one of the main reasons for such separate existence is to reduce the amount of taxes that would otherwise be payable under the act the two or more corporations shall, if the minister so directs, be deemed to be associated with each other.

18. That upon any appeal to the Exchequer Court of Canada from an assessment in such case the court may confirm or vary any direction given by the minister as provided in paragraph 16 or 17, or may vacate any such direction where it determines that

(a) none of the purposes of the transaction or series of transactions referred to in paragraph 16 was or is that specified in that paragraph, or

(b) none of the main reasons for the separate existence of the corporations referred to in paragraph 17 is that specified in subparagraph (b) of that paragraph.

19. That for the 1963 and subsequent taxation years

(a) a business loss incurred in a previous year by a corporation may not be deducted in a taxation year if

(i) the business in which the loss was sustained by the corporation was not carried on by it in the taxation year, and

(ii) in the period between the end of the year in which the loss was sustained and the end of the taxation year control of the corporation has changed hands, and

(b) a business loss incurred by a corporation in a taxation year may not be deducted in computing the income of the corporation for that taxation year if the business in which the loss was sustained by the corporation was wound up or discontinued, and after such winding up or discontinuance control of the corporation passed to a person or persons who did not control the corporation in the year at any time when the business in which the loss was sustained was carried on; but this paragraph is not applicable where the change of the control of the corporation occurred prior to June 14, 1963.

20. That for the 1963 and subsequent taxation years section 18 of the act, which provides rules in the case of any lease option agreement, hire purchase agreement or other contract or arrangement for the leasing or hiring of property, be repealed, and appropriate transitional provisions be enacted in respect of any such contract or arrangement.

21. That for the 1963 and subsequent taxation years the benefits received by an employee from his employer's contribution to a group life insurance plan that are at present excluded from income be excluded only if such contribution is in respect of group term life insurance.

22. That, with respect to any annuity contract entered into after June 13, 1963, that part of the proceeds of the contract that consists of interest accumulated prior to the date on which the annuity commences be included in computing income of the recipient unless such proceeds are received as a life annuity or as a refund of premiums upon the death of the holder of the annuity contract.

23. That for the 1962 and subsequent taxation years the manner of taxing a bankrupt corporation, a bankrupt individual and a trustee in bankruptcy be revised and in particular

(a) that the trustee be deemed to be the agent of the bankrupt person for all purposes of the act;

(b) that section 63 of the act not apply in the case of any income of the trustee from dealing in the property of the bankrupt person or from carrying on the business of the bankrupt person;

(c) that the income of the bankrupt person be computed as if upon the occurrence of the bankruptcy the property of the bankrupt person did not pass to and vest in the trustee; and

(d) that the trustee be liable for payment of any tax payable by the bankrupt person to the extent of the property of the bankrupt person in the possession of the trustee.

Mr. Gordon: I wonder if paragraph 1 could stand? I will go ahead and make a statement about the next paragraph, tax incentives for new manufacturing and processing businesses in designated areas.

Mr. Monteith: Before the minister leaves the first paragraph there are one or two questions of detail I should like to ask. The hon. gentleman mentioned on Friday, I think, that anyone in a United States partnership opening a business in Canada would come under the provisions of subparagraph (a) as is ordinarily the case and be subject, I suppose, to the requirement of 183 days residence a year. But I am wondering how the provision for residence applies in this case. If a large United States partnership came to open a branch in Canada, would the department be considering the residence of the company or one partner alone, or would both partners live in Canada? Would a partner have to own the 25 per cent of the shares? Just how would it apply?

Mr. Gordon: I apologize to the hon. member but I do not understand his example. I wonder if he would mind explaining it again.

Mr. Monteith: I am thinking of a United States partnership, a large concern which opens a branch in Canada. This is a private company. Would it have to have a resident partner for 183 days of the year and would this partner be obliged to hold 25 per cent of the stock? How would this operate? I am trying to ascertain the residence requirement in the case of a branch of the United States partnership.

Mr. Gordon: Who is this United States corporation in partnership with? I do not have that point clear.

Mr. Monteith: This is a large United States company which is in the form of a partnership.

Mr. Gordon: In the United States or here?

Mr. Monteith: In the United States; they open a branch in Canada.

Mr. Gordon: A branch in Canada would, I think, be treated in exactly the same way as if the United States partnership in the United States were a corporation in that country.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Mr. Monteith: The 25 per cent shareholding qualification would operate.

Mr. Gordon: I am still not clear as to the situation the hon. member has in mind.

Mr. Monteith: It could come under subparagraph (b) or (a). The minister mentioned the other day that a partnership would normally be dealt with under subparagraph (a) for tax purposes, but how does the provision for a degree of Canadian ownership come into this.

Mr. Gordon: If a United States partnership opened a branch in Canada, then the branch in Canada would be treated, I suspect, as a wholly owned subsidiary. I find I am not the only one who is having difficulty with the hon. member's example. As I understand it, this is a United States partnership in an American corporation and this partnership opens a branch in Canada.

Mr. Monteith: Right.

Mr. Gordon: How does this branch qualify? I have suggested that in this case it would rate in the same way as a wholly owned subsidiary in Canada of a United States corporation.

Mr. Monteith: Then 25 per cent ownership would have to be in Canada.

Mr. Gordon: That is right. Obviously one cannot list the shares of a partnership on the exchange.

Mr. Nowlan: What about a consortium? What about an arrangement like Wabash mines? Would that come under this provision?

Mr. Gordon: "Consortium" is one of those words which I am sure the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings uses more often than I do.

Mr. Nowlan: My vocabulary is pure.

Mr. Gordon: It is one of those imported words. I have never known what a consortium is. I am not too clear about the Wabash iron set-up, but I think we all know that in this particular case a high percentage of the total is controlled in Canada, so it would qualify without question.

Mr. Nowlan: Shall we stand paragraph 1 and go on with the others?

Mr. Gordon: If that is agreeable to the hon. member for Perth.

The Chairman: Order. Are we moving to paragraph 2 of the resolution? In other words, we agree that we should postpone or adjourn consideration of paragraph 1.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Paragraph 1 stands.

On paragraph 2.

Mr. Gordon: Paragraph 2 proposes that new manufacturing and processing businesses in designated areas be exempt from payment of income tax for three years. That part is the same as the provision in respect of new mines and also for accelerated capital cost allowances with regard to certain capital assets. This incentive will be available to individuals and corporations established in designated areas. To claim, businesses will have to get a certificate from the minister of industry certifying that they are new and that they are manufacturing and processing businesses. In order to qualify for the purpose of this concession a business must meet the following tests:

1. At least 95 per cent of the machinery and equipment used in the business must be owned by the person carrying on the business.

2. At least 95 per cent of the depreciable property used in the business must be in the designated area.

3. At least 95 per cent of the depreciable property used in the business other than buildings must have been acquired after June 13, 1963, and this depreciable property must be new; that is, it must not have been used by anyone before its acquisition. This is to avoid somebody setting up a business by buying it from the fellow next door. If there is a newly incorporated company it is not necessary that its business be new in the sense of never having been carried on in the area before.

For example, new manufacturing and processing businesses established in the following ways could qualify. First, a company now operating in a designated area could form a subsidiary company which acquires new assets and carries on in the designated area a manufacturing or processing business that is either the same as or different from the business carried on by its parent company. Second, a company now operating outside the designated area could form a subsidiary which acquires new assets and carries on in the area a manufacturing or processing business that is either the same as or different from the business carried on by its parent company. Third, a company now operating a business either inside or outside the designated area could acquire new assets and establish a new business in the designated area; but in this case, where there is no new incorporation of the new business, the new business must be of a different kind from the other business carried on by the taxpayer. If an unincorporated taxpayer wishes to have a business certified as new it must be a new business different from any other business carried on by him anywhere else. In summary, a new business must be carried on with new depreciable property, and in addition it must be either a new incorporation or a different business from any other business carried on by the taxpayer. The definition of a manufacturing and processing business for purposes of this incentive will be the same as for the incentive described in paragraph 1.

There are three tax concessions proposed for designated areas, and I will be very disappointed if they do not prove to be very productive. First, this paragraph of the resolution proposes that a taxpayer in computing income will exclude the income earned by a certified new manufacturing and processing business during the period of 36 months after it commences operations. In order to qualify, a new business must commence commercial operations during the period of 24 months which commences on the date the legislation based on this resolution is enacted. The date of commencement of commercial operations will be certified by the minister of industry when he certifies a new business.

This paragraph of the resolution also proposes that new property of a prescribed class acquired by a taxpayer for use in a certified new manufacturing or processing business shall be eligible for accelerated capital cost allowances. The kind of property that will qualify is machinery and equipment that would otherwise fall in class 8 of the income tax regulations acquired for use in manufacturing and processing operations. The accelerated capital cost allowances are at the rate of 50 per cent on a straight line basis. In order to qualify for this accelerated write-off the machinery and equipment must be secured in the 24 month period which commences on the date the legislation based on this resolution is enacted. Incidentally, this gives people some time to prepare for this, although I would hope not an unlimited amount of time.

It will not be necessary for a taxpayer to take these accelerated allowances during the first three year tax exemption period. He can take them afterwards, as is the case with new mining properties. They may be deferred and deducted after that period. Unlike the incentive described in paragraph 1 of the resolution, this accelerated capital cost allowance is not confined to individuals resident in Canada or to corporations with a degree of Canadian ownership. It is available to all certified new businesses in a designated area.

I mentioned that there were three incentives. Although it is not a part of the resolution, it was also announced in the budget speech that new buildings acquired by taxpayers in designated areas would qualify for accelerated capital cost allowances at the rate of 20 per cent on a straight line basis. This straight line rate of 20 per cent compares with a normal rate on a diminishing balance basis of 5 per cent for most buildings and 10 per cent for buildings of frame or similar construction. As with the other incentives for designated areas, this right to accelerated allowances will not be confined to individuals resident in Canada or to companies with a degree of Canadian ownership, but will apply to all new buildings in the designated area.

I should perhaps add that this incentive is not part of the resolution because this is entirely a matter for regulations, and requires no amendment to the act. The accelerated capital cost allowance for new businesses is mentioned in the resolution because it is confined to a particular class of taxpayer to be described in the act.

I think those are the main points in connection with paragraph 2 which I thought I should bring to the attention of members of the committee. I will be glad to try to answer any questions that have occurred to anybody.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, there are one or two points about which I should like to inquire. I think this section operates somewhat differently from the other sections providing incentives, in that it comes into effect after the legislation has been approved by parliament. Usually matters of this kind come into effect when they have been brought down in the budget speech. I was wondering whether there was any particular reason that the clause is phrased in this way. I suppose it might very easily be that some companies might have started operations before the budget came down and they might catch a windfall. However, we do not know what the program of parliament may be. It may be some considerable time before this particular resolution is implemented, if it is implemented, and in the meantime other companies which might be commencing operations would not be entitled to this incentive. Although, as I said, it will probably be in the nature of a windfall, yet there are quite a few windfalls in this which are inevitable, as the minister knows, and I think this is a departure from the usual practice in income tax legislation generally.

The other comment I would make is that I agree with the minister and hope that this provision will be as helpful in developing the economy in these areas as the minister suggested. I think that his announcement today—I did not catch it on Friday until he explained it to me—that the depreciation can be carried forward and does not have to be taken within the period will tend toward that end, because obviously companies will not be taking the depreciation until such time as it is to their advantage to do so. They will have some latitude in this regard which will be of help. If they are not making money, of course, they cannot write it off anyway; but if they are not making a great deal of money they will wait until such time as it will be most helpful to them to write it off.

I am not at all certain what degree of incentive help is going to result from the three year tax holiday. I know we have a similar provision in the case of mines. It has been a matter of controversy and discussion between officials and individuals for a long while, as to just what benefits flow from that, but it might be helpful and undoubtedly would be to a small corporation starting business in a certain area. But it would appear to me that any corporation of any dimension, any corporation which is really going to make a substantial contribution to a community, an area, a province, is not going to be induced to commence operations simply because it is going to get a tax holiday for the first three years.

I can think of some that have started in Nova Scotia within the last few months. One or two of them are million dollar corporations. I am quite sure they would not have been influenced by the fact that they might or might not get a tax holiday for that period of time. As a matter of fact, they probably do not intend to make a profit during the first few years because the period of organization is a difficult one. The minister knows better than most of us the difficulties that confront them. Therefore I simply suggest that I hope his optimism is justified. I doubt very much that it is in that particular case, although I think it would be with other incentives.

Mr. Lambert: Before the minister replies, I have a related question to the first one put by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings. Would it be that this phrase "effective date" with respect to paragraph 2 of this resolution, indicating the enactment of the legislation, is related to the provision in the department of industry bill which creates the area development council, and which legislation comes into effect on proclamation rather than the other date? Therefore, you could not get a designated area until the department of industry bill becomes effective?

Mr. Olson: There is one point I wanted to mention and on which I should like some further clarification. It concerns this provision for a prescribed area in Canada. Does this mean an area of business, or is it confined to a geographical area? If it is a geographical area to which the minister is referring, what are the qualifications to establish a prescribed area? For example, how large must an area be? Must there be a certain degree, even though it is difficult to measure, of economic stagnation, if you want to call it that? Would the unemployment level in this area be a factor in determining it?

I think perhaps if the minister would give us a little bit more clarification concerning the qualifications for setting up a prescribed area, that may answer many of the questions I have. Perhaps if the situation is not clear then, I could ask him some more questions.

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps I should start answering a few of these questions before there are too many of them. The first question was, why wait for the enactment? I think one of the main reasons is that this is a complicated enough resolution because it covers a great many things. I am not just thinking of this paragraph, I am thinking of the whole resolution. It will be followed by a bill which will certainly call for pretty careful study by parliament before it is enacted. I would think it would be unwise for taxpayers to take advantage of this particular proposal until they see clearly in the bill just who is going to qualify and who is not.

The other point, of course, is that the designated areas had not yet been determined when this resolution was drawn. The department of industry bill had not been passed. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings mentioned Nova Scotia in a way which led me to think he assumed Nova Scotia would be included as a designated area.

Mr. Nowlan: Perhaps in part.

Mr. Gordon: Only in part, then perhaps—no, I will not go into that. I am not yet able to answer your question as to the definition of designated areas, because those will be determined after the department of industry has had a chance to consider the matter with the Department of Labour and the other departments concerned. Certainly, it will be based on geography, and the factors that will be taken into account are the question of economic development in the area, the question of the level of unemployment in the area, and so on. I would hope that the areas would not be too small. They should be substantial areas or else we will get into a great deal of trouble.

The point of this is to induce or persuade new enterprises to locate in the areas where they are needed most. I think it was suggested that this incentive may not be effective. This, of course, is a matter of opinion. There is no way of proving it. I have said before that, in my own personal view, this is probably the greatest inducement that could be given to business enterprises to locate in areas where new businesses are needed most. I hope very much that this will be a sufficient inducement to persuade a number of new enterprises to locate in the Atlantic area, for example. I am not suggesting the Atlantic area is the only one that needs this sort of thing, but it is the one that has been mentioned. I would hope this would be the deciding factor that would enable a number of corporations to establish subsidiaries or branch establishments in that area and, in that way, we could begin to make an effective attack on what is becoming, in some parts of the Atlantic provinces, chronic unemployment.

Now, there is no use trying to persuade ourselves that we can keep obsolescent industries in being indefinitely. Some of them, obviously, are less effective in providing employment now than they were 20 years ago. What is needed is to induce new industries to move in there in their place. The purpose of this paragraph is to do just that. As I say, I cannot promise it will be effective, but I hope that it will.

Mr. Olson: I am willing to accept the minister's statement that he cannot give a definition at this point of the qualifications for a prescribed area. However, I believe it would be useful to those people who are considering establishing new industries to give, as quickly as possible, what the qualifications will be, based on the many factors that will be taken in account when these prescribed areas are named. Certainly, we are not going to have industries of any magnitude set up within a few weeks or a few months after the government's intention is known.

I am a little disturbed, however, about one or two of the qualifications the minister did mention. He talked about the tests that would be applied before one could take advantage of the provision. One test was that 95 per cent of the machinery must be owned by the new corporation. Second, 95 per cent of it must be located in the area and, third, 95 per cent of it must have been acquired since June, 1963. There may have been other qualifications that he mentioned.

I think if we are going to give Canada a service, we have to be thinking more in terms of setting up industries that will have some continuity to them. In other words, if these prescribed areas constitute a sufficient inducement to attract industries, for reasons of a tax holiday and accelerated depreciation, that are not adapted to that area and do not carry on after these advantages have been used up, we would not be doing the Canadian economy a favour, or the people who had temporary employment there. In fact we would find ourselves in the position of having to deal with unemployed people who had been drawn into the area because of this provision here.

When we see, for example, that 95 per cent of the machinery must be acquired since June, 1963, and it must be a type of industry that has never previously been carried on in the area, we must agree that we are precluding industries that have not modernized to keep in pace with the cost of production factor, and which could carry on if they were enabled to modernize. This is something at which we should take a long look.

Next, what are we going to do about businesses that have been shut down and which would be able to re-establish themselves by means of refinancing? Such industries would be beneficial to an area and would have a reasonably good chance of carrying on after the advantages given here have been used up.

There is one case which is specifically interesting to me, as it happens to be in my constituency. It concerns a processing plant which became involved in litigation. All of the machinery is new and the plant itself is new; but because of the litigation their sales contracts became no longer valid, or at least the people involved in them were subject to litigation because of patent rights.

The machinery has been sitting there since long before June, 1963, but the plant has not been operating. Now, it might be a little difficult to have the area in which it is located designated to come within the ambit of these incentives, as I do not think its unemployment level is particularly high. However this is a processing plant that is particularly adapted to the area and which could make a tremendous contribution to its economy. There is no similar plant anywhere near it and I am wondering if it could possibly be included to take the benefit of these advantages.

The fact is that if some advantage is not given to it, the plant will not be operating and will not be producing any income tax. Therefore I think this is an opportunity to use some discretionary power, which would be a little wider than what is proposed, to enable industries to become established, industries that will increase local employment and which will not later on have their employees become a burden on the government because they were mislocated as a result of the inducements outlined in this resolution.

Mr. Harkness: Could the minister tell us whether this provision would apply to a factory where a change in operation takes place and an entirely new product is manufactured? Say, for example, there is a company manufacturing automobile components; it is sold to some other concern, and then they start the manufacture of electronic equipment. Would the provisions apply in a case like that, and if they apply in a case like that where a sale has taken place, would they apply if the same company merely changed its operation and went into a different type of manufacturing, new to the area?

Mr. Gordon: I presume that the new company would have to acquire new assets. In fact I am not clear how you can shift from producing automobile parts to electronic equipment without, for all practical purposes, being in a new business. If it is a new business under these definitions, then it would qualify if it were in a designated area. If it were not a new business and were not in a designated area, then it would not qualify.

Mr. Harkness: If there were not a sale to another corporation and the same company switched its operation into a new type of manufacturing, which would involve the buying of new machinery, although it would use the same factory plant and administrative offices, would it qualify then?

Mr. Gordon: The fact of the sale would not make any difference if it had not changed its nature and became a new business. The sale itself has no bearing on this proposal, and perhaps I might just add a word in a more general vein.

I think members of the committee are aware of the success that has been met in the United Kingdom and several European countries in re-establishing and reviving depressed areas. Now, we do not call them depressed areas in Canada. We call them designated areas, which is a more polite term, although pretty much the same. They are areas where high levels of unemployment have persisted year after year. How does one go about doing anything about that?

The temporary measures are fairly obvious. You try to spend more money on social capital projects of one kind or another, but if you are going to get at the root of the problem it seems to me you have to introduce new businesses into those areas, or alternatively the people are going to get fed up and move away. You can argue from the standpoint of economic theory, and so on, that it is better for people to move away, and that the more mobility there is in the country the better it is. But I suggest that when this happens we lose the investment that has been made in existing towns, cities and villages, which implies houses, schools and everything else, and apart from that people do not want to move away. Therefore, if there is anything we can do to introduce new industries into such areas it is surely a good thing. Otherwise everybody will end up in either Montreal, Toronto or Calgary.

Mr. Lambert: We realize that this provision deals with a specific economic ill, and that we are talking about areas which have been less developed than others. However there is one problem of a rather technical nature that I wish to raise. It has to do with paragraph 1 of the resolution as well, and is a matter to which I referred late on Friday afternoon. We need a definite definition of acquisition of property. We have to get some degree of exactness of what the legislation will mean by the acquisition of property within the prescribed periods.

We realize that one can take outright title and become outright owner; but does the acquisition of property envision, in those provinces outside Quebec, the acquisition of plant by way of agreement for sale, or conditional sale agreement, which may extend in the case of these special areas beyond the three years of non-profit? It may go on for four or five years, during which term payment will be made. We know that under the provisions of conditional sales contracts, title and ownership to property shall remain vested in the vendor. If it is stated that it is on the acquisition of property, with emphasis on the word "property" in its legal sense, then the effect of such a transaction will be a negation by the legislation, or vice versa.

There is another point I should like the minister to clarify. I refer to a method that is becoming more and more popular these days, which is the lease back. How will a lease back, if it will qualify at all, qualify under these provisions? There must be an inducement for investment in a new industry of the plant, the machinery. We know that there are lease back arrangements which could be used, by the terms of which lease, an accelerated lease payment during the initial years which would be comparable to the rate of depreciation that is permitted under this particular, shall we say, incentive. In any event, perhaps the minister could at this stage advise the committee what the thinking of the ministry is in this regard.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I could just add one other question to that, so that the minister could have it in mind. I am not sure that he wants to answer it now, but I think it might be a good thing for him to have in mind when the regulations are drafted. In this matter of acquisition there are problems which might arise. I am thinking particularly, again, of my own province and Industrial Estates, a crown corporation, which on more than one occasion has purchased machinery and equipment for a new entrepreneur and, something along the line suggested by my hon. friend from Edmonton West, there might be a lease back. I think the minister and his officials should take a very careful look at that situation in permitting a write-off, because there are various types of purchases that I know have been made. They have been very successful in some cases. There were 11 new corporations in Nova Scotia this calendar year. I would think it might be advisable to check with the officials of some of the provincial crown corporations which are in that business before definitive regulations are drafted in that particular area.

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I could take these three questions in order. When the hon. member for Edmonton West asked me about this on Friday just at the end of the day, I understood his question to be whether, to qualify for the increased allowance under paragraph 1, a taxpayer had to have the new assets delivered and installed within the 24 month period commencing June 14, 1963, or whether it was only necessary for him to enter into a binding contract within that period.

My answer on Friday was to the effect that the important thing was whether he had acquired title to the property in the 24 months. That was the point we were discussing when we adjourned. My hon. friend is now asking if this means, in the case of a conditional sales agreement under which title may not pass until after June 14, 1965, that the purchaser would not be entitled to the capital cost allowance at the 50 per cent rate. Is that, roughly, what the hon. member is asking?

Mr. Lambert: This is it. We are caught in the legal definition at this point.

Mr. Gordon: I am informed that in these circumstances the purchaser is usually considered by the taxation department to have acquired an ownership interest in the property when he takes possession of it. That is usually the way, as I understand it, the tax department rules for these purposes. If that occurred in the 24 month period, he would be entitled to the 50 per cent write-off. I think the hon. member will have to ask his colleague over here, who used to administer the tax department, whether I am right or wrong; but that is what I am informed as to the way it has been done.

Mr. Lambert: I agree; but if I may interrupt here, Mr. Chairman, I think there is a problem in the case where you have a contract for delivery, where you have a fully binding contract entered into between a proposed taxpayer and a supplier for the provision of machinery, which cannot be delivered at once. The minister said this provision applied when a person took possession. Possession connotes delivery; yet a taxpayer would be committed under a binding contract although he had not accepted delivery. That is the point.

Mr. Gordon: In that case, Mr. Chairman, I am informed that the tax department would not give him the depreciation. They will not let him depreciate the machine until it is a machine. The same applies to these lease back deals. I think the suggestion that there may be something special in the case that was mentioned, Industrial Estates, which have been doing a useful job in Nova Scotia—

Mr. Nowlan: I think there are others in other provinces, but I am not sure.

Mr. Gordon: I will certainly ask that this matter be looked into. But I think we also have to remember that you cannot get a write-off unless you have bought something. You cannot get a write-off if you have leased something that you are going to pay for over 25 years; you get that write-off when you pay your money. That probably is the distinction. I do not see how you can get any faster depreciation on a lease deal until you pay up.

In the Industrial Estates situation, if Industrial Estates supply machines to a business and the business does not have to pay for them, the only person that we could, presumably, allow the capital costs allowance to would be Industrial Estates, and it would not do them much good. The purpose of this, of course, is to add another incentive separate and distinct from the kind that the Industrial Estates people can give to new industry to locate in these areas. The form of the incentive is reasonably clear, to the extent that it means new construction and to the extent that it means the purchase of new equipment in Canada that will provide work in the plants which produce the equipment, quite apart from the area that is under consideration.

Mr. Lambert: I have a further point with respect to plant, Mr. Chairman. What is the critical date there? Must it be the completion of the plant, the complete erection and occupancy, or is there to be recognized a form of commitment between the taxpayer and the contractor under which the plant is being erected and will be occupied, say six months after the critical date? This is the point, because as we know there are various forms of building contracts whereby the property in the building materials passes to the owner on delivery to the site; and there are other situations in the province of Quebec where this may not apply, where they have the doctrine of revendication which does not apply in the common law provinces. I admit these are rather complicated problems, but I would like some clarification of them.

Mr. Gordon: They are complicated in a sense. The Department of National Revenue has established a series of rules and regulations over the years that are generally pretty well known to the taxpayers. In the case of a factory building, if that is referred to as plant, to the extent the factory building is completed, or the portion of it that is completed and paid for and recorded on the books, the taxpayer would be entitled to these write-offs. But he would not be entitled to a write-off on a commitment of a contractor to finish the plant over the next two or three years. That is there now. You could not have a separate set of rules to apply to this special incentive that does not apply to, I was going to say life in general, but I mean corporate life in general. These customs or rules or regulations are generally understood by most taxpayers, and if a taxpayer is anxious to get his new building or new plant recorded on the books within a certain year I presume, if he is ingenious enough, that he can do so up to a point. But he cannot do it merely by entering into a contract with a contractor to build him a plant next year and expect to get a write-off this year.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the incentive the minister is offering for new industry, but it does not appear to me to be large enough to develop any appreciable new industry. First of all the minister suggests that these incentives would be applicable in designated areas, but gives us no knowledge of the designated areas to which he refers. Some mention was made of the maritimes, and no doubt parts of that area would qualify. He said that he hoped the areas would be large enough. Two years ago the previous government brought in double depreciation in similar types of areas and there was a great hue and cry from the then opposition to get the government to name those areas. The opposition of that day said they could not judge the value of this measure unless the government named the areas, and they went to great lengths in promoting that contention. I think we should be given some idea where these designated areas are to be.

Then he suggested that the commencement of a new industry would mean the application to the minister for a certificate of qualification for the 36 months tax free holiday which this measure proposes. To me 36 months is not long enough for an absolutely new industry commencing operation, when you consider the fact that 95 per cent of the machinery must be bought from June 13 on, and that within a period of 36 months the industry has to get going and produce a taxable income in order to benefit from the tax free holiday. If it has no taxable income in the first two years the 50 per cent write-off would be of very little value. It may be of some value but not very great.

I think, Mr. Chairman, this proposed legislation would be far more beneficial to companies already established in other parts of Canada which want to establish a subsidiary company, or which are induced to establish a subsidiary company, in a designated area, or what they think would be a designated area. I suggest this would merely mean a different allocation of the working force and not nearly as great an increase of employed persons as would be desired by the minister or the Canadian people generally. I suggest that an absolutely new industry should have a tax free holiday of longer than 36 months and that the 50 per cent write-off should be applied when the industry has established itself and is in a position to pay income tax.

A lot of the measures which will come into force when this bill passes strike a strange theme, it seems to me, because who is to know when the bill will pass? I think the budget resolutions should be approved either on the day the budget is brought down—in fact, most of them are as a rule—or at a later date when the proposals are implemented by the minister, not at the sanction of the house.

Mr. Gordon: I would be glad to accept that suggestion, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I should like to see the minister go further than that and allow new industries to go back to the first of the year. If that were done, your machinery date and all the rest of it would have to go back to the same prescribed date in order to make all things equal. This measure will certainly be a big help to industries already established in Canada which wish to start another subsidiary plant in another locality, but I do not think it goes far enough. I do not think the 24-month period or the 36-month period is long enough for an absolutely new industry to finance itself, become operational and start to pay income tax. In most of these areas money lenders are very hesitant about lending money because, perhaps I might say, of the financial worth of such an area or to the risk involved. Therefore they hesitate to lend money for any length of time. It is quite common to spend six or eight months arranging capital to commence a new industry in what might qualify as a designated area. One would have to know before going too far whether one would qualify, and perhaps receive not formal approval but a nod from the minister with regard to whether one would get a certificate before actually signing the agreement and borrowing the money. Personally, I should like to see the minister name these designated areas. I think particularly of my own area of the east-central part of Alberta. Perhaps the maritimes would also qualify, as well as many areas in Saskatchewan. I know for a fact that many areas in Quebec would qualify. Various governments have from time to time announced their opinions that industry should be decentralized to quite a large extent. This could bring about a degree of decentralization if the designated areas were so distributed and the incentives great enough. I fear they are not and suggest the minister give consideration to lengthening the period of time and increasing the number of designated areas to as great an extent as possible.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I should just like to say that, as I understand it, buildings will be allowed depreciation at 20 per cent on the straight line method, and class 8 at the 50 per cent rate. Various classes of goods must be purchased within 24 months from the date the legislation is passed. Does the exemption apply to 36 months from the inception of the business, that date being set by the minister of industry, in the determination of the date on which the business is considered to have begun operation? I wonder if the minister had any criteria in mind? Does the business start at the time of incorporation? Does it start when the bricks and mortar have been laid, or when the company makes its first sale?

Mr. Gordon: The date would be the date when the company begins its commercial operation.

On the point raised about the designated area I would remind the committee that these areas have to be established by certificates issued by the minister of industry and, of course, the bill to set up the department of industry has not yet been passed. It has been passed by this house but not by the Senate.

Mr. Monteith: Let us say the company was incorporated in the middle of January and they decided that their year should end on December 31. But they do manage to get their building up and begin operations on November 1. Would they be free from income tax for one year, in which they had only been in operation for two months, and then for two years during which they would be in operation for 12 months a year; or would the time be calculated on the basis of two months, 12 months, 12 months and 10 months?

Mr. Gordon: The latter would be the case, 36 months.

Mr. Starr: There is a question I should like to ask about this tax free holiday, as the minister calls it.

Mr. Gordon: I was careful not to call it that.

Mr. Starr: During the term of the last government we set up a criteria by means of which areas capable of qualifying for double depreciation allowances could be designated. Applications came in from a municipality or area and the Department of Labour, together with the national employment service, immediately got to work to ascertain whether that particular area qualified in accordance with the criteria set up. This only applied to areas from which an application was made. It is difficult to see how the government will now be able to designate an area in the absence of a proper survey of all of Canada. Does the government intend to make a nation wide survey of all Canada based on the criteria they have in mind, or which they intend to set up? In other words, does the government intend to designate certain areas without having any means of knowing whether they will be eligible for this type of tax free holiday, or are certain parts of Canada expected to make claim under the criteria in order to be designated. I wonder if the minister would enlighten us on this matter.

Mr. Gordon: The hon. gentleman knows the difficulty about doing this because he has had experience of this work himself in the past. I do not want to move into an area for which the minister of industry will be responsible. It will be his responsibility to work this out, together with the Minister of Labour and all others concerned; but I can assure the hon. member that he will take into account all the information that is available. The objective is to encourage new industry into areas where unemployment is high.

Mr. Olson: There are three questions I should like to put to the minister. In the first place, I should like to ask him what consideration he has given to the re-establishment of businesses which have been shut down. Many such businesses could probably re-open if they had some new equipment and refinancing. In many cases this would seem to provide the most desirable types of industry which could be set up in an area, if only because of the continuity. If the minister intends to provide that in order to get assistance an industry must be one which has never been carried on in that neighbourhood before there can, of course, be no provision for re-establishing a business which has been shut down.

The second question I should like to ask is this: what is the target date when this scheme will come into being? I ask this so that people who are thinking about establishing an industry can be working toward it and doing some of the preliminary work.

My third question is: how long would the department be prepared to defer or delay the income tax incentive of which the minister spoke. I understood him to say it was not necessary for it to be taken advantage of within the first 36 months.

Mr. Gordon: First, as to the inquiry about a business which has been shut down. Such a business would qualify if in being set up again it had acquired a lot of new machinery. To the extent of the new machinery it would qualify if it were in a designated area. I cannot be more specific, because I would want to know a lot more about the business. There is nothing in this provision which would provide new capital for a business such as the hon. member mentioned in his example.

When this incentive will become effective will depend upon when the act is passed and proclaimed. I am sure the amendments to the Income Tax Act will be proclaimed immediately after they are passed. Until they are passed, I agree there will be an element of uncertainty because people will not know when they can take advantage of these incentives. There is one other thing: The minister of industry will also have to announce the designated areas. He will be planning to do so at the earliest possible date because this will be one of his important responsibilities.

As to how long a taxpayer can defer taking the higher rates of capital cost allowance, I am informed by the officials of the Department of National Revenue that he could defer them as long as he likes. Naturally, he would want to take them as fast as he can because this would save him money. But if he is losing money there is no reason why he should claim this extra capital cost allowance. If he does not turn his business into a profitable one he will probably never take it.

Mr. Olson: Did I understand the minister to say in his opening statement that in order to qualify an industry must be a type of industry which had never been carried on in an area before?

Mr. Gordon: I did not mean that to be a general statement. That is not the case at all. I think it did apply though in one particular instance, and I am trying to find it in these notes. It does not apply in general. There is no reason why it should be a new type of industry that is new to the area.

Mr. Olson: That is the point that was disturbing me.

Mr. Gordon: That is not so.

Mr. Noble: Did I understand the minister to say that the establishment of a new industry that would qualify would require a new building? I am thinking of an area which I would presume might be a designated area—

Mr. Gordon: No. I did not mean to give that impression.

Mr. Leboe: To follow up the point raised by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, I should like to ask the minister about depreciation. Can depreciation appear on the books as a loss and be picked up later? I understand the rate of depreciation is going to be 50 per cent. Can it be shown on the books as a loss and then be picked up at a later date under the Income Tax Act?

Mr. Gordon: I have not been giving tax advice for quite some time and I should not be doing it now. However, under the regulations, if a company writes off an asset or claims depreciation and writes it off in its books, and makes a loss, it is allowed a five-year tax carry forward of the loss, and it can pick it up in that period and in that period only. But there is no reason why it should write off the capital cost allowance in its books until it wants to and if it does not write it off it can claim it at any time it likes.

Mr. Leboe: I brought up the point because I understand the depreciation is on a straight line basis whereas in my experience with taxation of this type the allowance has been taken on the undepreciated balance each year.

Mr. Gordon: As the hon. member knows, depreciation used to be on a straight line basis at one time, but in this case for this particular incentive it will be on a straight line basis and taxpayers can claim it any time they like. There is no obligation for them to write it off quickly, but if they do write it off in their books then they are limited as to the period when they can claim it.

(Translation):

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister whether municipalities, that is municipalities in a prescribed area with a high level of unemployment, will be able to apply immediately to the minister of industry in order to get the required approval for this special assistance provided to industries setting up in that area. For instance, the Saguenay area in particular, which I consider as a whole, where unemployment has been high for several years, would well qualify, it seems to me, to obtain this assistance provided to industries. Therefore, could those municipalities apply immediately to the minister of industry in order to obtain such certification and approval?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: I suppose in a technical sense there is no minister of industry to apply to until the act establishing the department of industry has been passed, but I would not think that should restrain any enterprising municipality that feels it would like to get in on this as fast as possible. While I do not want to issue any invitations on the part of the minister who may become minister of industry, this is a free country and I presume anybody can go and see him who wants to do so.

The Chairman: Order. Has the committee concluded consideration of paragraph 2?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Paragraph 3.

Mr. Gordon: This paragraph proposes the repeal of section 40A of the act. Section 40A of the act is the section providing for the tax concession based on increased sales which was introduced following the 1962 budget. The concession was in the form of a deduction from tax otherwise payable if the taxpayer could show that his sales for a year exceeded his sales in a certain base period.

This particular concession was criticized on a number of grounds, first, that since dollar sales were the measure upon which the concession was calculated the emphasis was upon sales volume rather than upon efficiency. Thus taxpayers have an incentive to increase prices or to achieve increased sales in uneconomic ways in order to obtain some forgiveness of tax. I am sure they would not do that but there was that possibility.

Mr. Lambert: That is pretty specious.

Mr. Gordon: If the hon. member wants something that is not specious, there was the devaluation of the dollar. He will remember that that took place between the time the incentive was introduced in the budget and the time it was enacted. The result was that many people engaged in export businesses did get certain windfalls they were not expecting in the form of increased prices. If the hon. member for Edmonton West recalls the days when he was Speaker, he will remember there was some discussion about that particular point last fall.

Then there are other points. It provided an incentive for taxpayers to arrange to have high sales in one period and low sales in another, or otherwise to switch business from one year to another. Third, it was so complicated that many taxpayers said it was not worth the trouble to try to qualify. I do not know if I can substantiate that, but I have certainly heard it said. Fourth, the value of the incentive was low in the case of many companies. For example, the illustration used in the 1962 income tax bill showed that a company with sales of $1 million which increased its sales by 10 per cent would receive a tax concession of only $1,230, which is not a great deal on sales of $1 million.

Since this provision did not commence until April, 1962, very few companies have yet had one full taxation year under the scheme. Accordingly, there are no statistics available to indicate the amount of revenue given up or the number of companies deriving benefit under this section of the act. As I say, there can be no doubt that this provision afforded windfall benefits to a number of companies but it is doubtful that it provided a real incentive for any expansion or increased employment. It is proposed that it be withdrawn with effect for 1964 and subsequent taxation years.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take the time of the committee in commenting at any length on the dire, funereal record with which the minister has instructed the committee. I simply say in passing that I think almost every budget resolution of every minister is sometimes criticized. I suspect that some of the minister's budget resolutions have been criticized, and the mere fact that this one was criticized does not necessarily impair its effectiveness.

There is no doubt that there was some question as to the degree of incentive contained therein and, as the minister said, the figure set forth in the example perhaps is not one which would encourage a company to tremendous efforts. Nevertheless, I regret that he has seen fit to withdraw this incentive before there has been time for it to be considered on its merits, and I say that because a year has not yet expired. However, this has been a decision of the government and as far as we are concerned I do not see any point in discussing the matter further at this time. I regret that decision has been taken, but its having been taken I am prepared to accept and, subject to what other members may wish to raise, I am willing to move on to the next question.

Mr. Monteith: I should like to say a word or two following what the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings has said. The minister mentioned that one of the reasons for this was sales volume rather than efficiency. I hesitate to put much stock in that particular statement simply because no company is going to operate inefficiently if it means an extra dollar of savings. In so far as switching sales from one year to another is concerned, this always catches up with a company and I believe most companies have found that out over the years. The minister also mentioned that the benefits were so low for most companies, that they were not of much value. I should like to point out that some companies which may have enjoyed benefits under this particular piece of legislation will now enjoy no benefits. They will not benefit from any incentives.

I join, too, with the hon. member who has just spoken in voicing my opinion that the measure has not been given a fair trial. It came into force last year and it is being voided as of the end of 1964. I do not believe the rather vague criticisms which the minister made of section 40A justify its deletion at this time.

Mr. Lambert: I would certainly echo the statement of my colleague from Perth because I feel that, at best, a great deal of the criticism was theoretical and somewhat specious. I would say that the greatest measure of increased sales is the matter of price, and the measure of efficiency is really the quantum of your sales. I regret that this measure which has been given so little trial has been summarily buried, and especially on the basis of so little evidence.

There is a further point I should like to get clarified, and that is the reference to 1964. Is this the taxation year in respect of any company that wishes to qualify under this particular form of incentive? I do suggest to the minister that people will be sorry to see this provision go, because I think you are merely substituting another form of incentive for one that is already on the books.

Mr. Gordon: I do not want to repeat myself, and I do not want to go into the criticisms. I expect all hon. members know that this particular incentive was questioned rather seriously at the last meeting of the Canadian tax foundation, not on any political grounds or anything like that, but it was felt by a member of practitioners in this field that it would probably cost more to claim the incentives than it was worth. I do not want to pursue the matter, but that was the feeling of the people who, normally, I suppose would have been expected to be in favour of it. I do not believe there was enough in it to make it worth while.

The Deputy Chairman: Does that complete the discussion on paragraph 3?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Deputy Chairman: Then, paragraph 4.

Mr. Gordon: In this paragraph it is proposed that oil and gas pipe line companies be allowed to deduct, in computing income, drilling and exploration expenses they incur in prospecting for oil and gas or minerals, in the manner of the companies in the business of oil, gas or mineral production or exploration, who have for many years been permitted to deduct exploration and drilling expenses. It also permits companies in the business of processing mineral ores or recovering metals or ores or fabricating metals to deduct exploration and drilling expenses of those companies in discovering supplies of oil, gas or mineral ores, since the continuation of their business depends upon the continued existence of supplies of these raw materials. Similarly, a pipe line company depends upon a supply of oil or natural gas, and therefore it should be allowed to deduct the cost of searching for these supplies.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to congratulate the minister, particularly since he is dealing with a subject so dear to the hearts of the members of parliament from Alberta, and the petroleum industry. Perhaps I might just take a moment to read the resolution itself, and then I might ask the minister some questions about its wording. Paragraph 4 reads as follows:

With respect to expenses incurred after June 13, 1963—

This is the date of the budget.

—a corporation whose principal business is operating a pipe line for the transmission of oil or natural gas, be allowed to deduct in computing income the drilling and exploration expenses, including all general geological and geophysical expenses, incurred by it on or in respect of exploring for petroleum or natural gas in Canada—

Of course, it includes also other industries engaged in prospecting and exploration of minerals in Canada. In other words, I suppose what paragraph 4 says in a nutshell is that after June 13, 1963 a corporation whose principal business is operating a pipe line for the transmission of oil or gas, who decides to drill or explore for natural gas, shall be allowed to deduct in computing income the drilling and exploration expenses, including all general geological and geophysical expenses.

The first question that comes to my mind is the hope that the minister will be able to differentiate between what was done last year and what is being done this year. I do not say this in any political way. Before answering these questions, I should like to make a short statement on the industry itself. I suppose this provision is tantamount to a tax incentive to encourage the exploration of natural gas and petroleum by Canadians or Canadian industry. After all, if we accept the minister's word as contained in the budget itself and now in the resolution, that seems to be his ambition. The budget itself, of course, appears to have run into several shipwrecks in that regard.

In so far as natural gas is concerned in Alberta, it was often found when they had what they call a dry hole. Natural gas was not used or expected to be used for a number of years, and in fact was capped in most wells in southern Alberta and northern Alberta. Sometimes it was burnt off as a waste product. It was for this reason the former administration set up the Borden commission. Then, at that time we ascertained that in the province of Alberta we had known or proven reserves of about 23 trillion cubic feet of natural gas. I do not know whether anyone knows, certainly I do not, what a trillion looks like. However, it is a lot of natural gas. I am sure the minister will agree with me that natural gas does come from the province of Alberta.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: If I may speak seriously for a moment, it was as a result of the Borden commission that the national energy board was established. It was at that time that natural gas was exported from western Canada for the first time. Many people were pressing for this privilege for a number of years, long before the Borden commission was set up. The Borden commission designated the quantity of natural gas that would be needed for home consumption, and the quantity available for export. Of course one could go to the Canada Year Book which showed what our needs were in Canada, amounting to about 10 billion cubic feet per year, and that we had enough reserves for the next 30 years for foreseeable use in Canada. It is a good time to mention this because, coming back to the resolution itself, it has a laudable motive or objective, namely to give incentives to our own citizens to explore for natural gas and petroleum.

This is particularly encouraging because there was a lot of talk in the last few days about Americans controlling our industry. I do not suppose there is any industry which is more greatly controlled by American investment than the oil and petroleum industry. The reason for this is that they have been in that field for so many years and United States companies had the technicians and skill when they came into the province of Alberta. For this reason I say the resolution contains a laudable objective and ambition on the part of the government.

Also interesting to note is the "Short Term Energy Forecast 1960-66" study, authorized by the national energy board, which I got today for the purpose of making this speech. Quoting from page 8 it says:

Domestic demand for natural gas is expected to increase at an average annual rate of close to 11 per cent in the period 1960 to 1966—

In other words there is an expected increased demand of 11 per cent for each of those years, and there are three years still to go.

—compared with an average growth rate of 18.6 per cent in the preceding decade (1950-60).

I do not say this in an unkind or political way but I would like to point out, Mr. Chairman, that for many years, in fact right up to the previous provincial election, the Liberal party in Alberta, led by my good friend, Mr. Grant MacEwan, was the party opposed to the export of natural gas in Alberta. However there was pressure brought to bear by myself and all hon. members from Alberta, from 1958 onwards, to make certain that we got cracking on the export of natural gas, not only because of what it means to the economy of the province but because it helps Canada with its imbalance of trade, and in money relations with the United States. This study continues:

Natural gas markets in 1950 were restricted largely to the province of Alberta.

At this point I might say that there has been a tremendous development in the province of Saskatchewan in latter years. That development was delayed because of lack of confidence in the government which came into office in 1944, but since that time more confidence has developed and progress has been made in this field.

The rapid growth in the succeeding decade and in the forecast period can be related to vastly increased supply and the construction of large diameter, long distance transmission lines connecting western Canadian reserves to markets from Vancouver to Montreal.

The next part is very interesting:

Exports of natural gas rose from virtually nothing in 1950 to 110 billion cubic feet in 1960. By 1966 exports are conservatively estimated to be in the 400 billion cubic feet range. For the purpose of this study, it was assumed that no additional federal government licences to export gas would become effective in the next three years and that exports would approach the maximum allowed under licence, except for the interruptible volumes licensed for export at Niagara.

In the period 1960 to 1966 natural gas production is expected to grow at an average rate of 15 per cent per annum, compared with an average of 22 per cent per annum in the previous decade.

Just pausing there, Mr. Chairman, I would point out that there have been many plants built in the province of Alberta. Only last year a new $66 million petro-gas plant was opened north of Calgary, to handle by-products from this industry. It is these plants that have made the province of Alberta so economically sound. It is the royalties from the petroleum and natural gas industry that allow the government to develop the province extensively.

I am not going to take anything away from the provincial government in this regard. I could talk for a long time about differences of opinion with regard to oil policies, but I think the provincial government from the outset set about encouraging investment in the province, and one has to give credit where credit is due.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: I knew this would cause some excitement on my left, but I say this without any reservations whatsoever.

I am very happy to see the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, the former minister of trade and commerce, present in the chamber, because it was under his direction that the Borden commission came out with its report and the national energy board was established. I remember so well, and it seems such a short time ago, when he outlined the objectives and ambitions of the national energy board. We who live in the province of Alberta will always be grateful to him for getting cracking on the export of gas. We at one time went to bed with our coal reserve; we certainly did not want to go to bed with our natural gas reserves. We therefore approved the export of some.

As the minister said in reference to other resolutions, tax matters are very technical. I do not hold myself out as a tax expert in the field, but with reference to paragraph 4 I would like to ask what is the difference between it and the budget resolution passed last session in regard to write-off expenses? I am rather disappointed with paragraph 4 because it says—and here I come to grips with my main argument —

—with respect to expenses incurred after June 13, 1963 a corporation whose principal business is operating a pipe line—

Why cannot a syndicate of farmers in the province of Alberta, or other people with Canadian investments, have this write-off privilege against business expenses if they want to wildcat for oil and natural gas? It is these people whose fathers or grandfathers first started the great petroleum industry on the road in Alberta, at Pincher Creek and other places. They gathered in groups and said, "We will take a gamble; we will put up so many thousands of dollars and dig a well." It was afterwards that the big corporations moved in from the south when they smelt the wealth in the air.

If we are really ambitious and anxious to see Canadians take part in the development of their country, this clause should apply to anyone who honestly explores for petroleum and natural gas. I intend to go into this argument fully, but since I see it is six o'clock I shall stop now.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. May I advise hon. members of the committee that the committee will resume its work at seven o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, just before the short supper recess I was discussing resolution 4 and I was dealing with the resolution in this regard—if I might repeat myself briefly—that in respect of expenses incurred after June 13, 1963 a corporation whose principal business is operating a pipe line will be allowed to charge off certain geological, geophysical and other expenses. I said that certainly the resolution does not apply to all Canadians, to people living in Alberta and outside Alberta who wish to form a syndicate. I commended the minister on his action to have more Canadians invest in their own industry.

I do not suppose, as I said before the supper hour, that any industry is controlled more by outside, foreign investors than is the oil industry. It is only a month or two months ago that one of the last major Canadian oil companies in Alberta sold out to Shell. I was quite complimentary to the minister when I said that behind this measure, as was behind the policy of the previous government when they brought in a similar resolution with reference to these expenses, is the intention to encourage Canadians to invest in their own industry and to invest particularly in the exploration and discovery of natural gas and petroleum.

Before the supper adjournment I was speaking off the cuff when giving figures in reference to the Borden royal commission on energy in 1957. I have since had an opportunity to check these figures. I said there were 27 trillion cubic feet of reserves in Alberta. That should have been 23.3 trillion cubic feet. I pointed out at that time that the Borden commission stated that Canada needed approximately 10 billion cubic feet of natural gas per year for its foreseeable economic demands either domestic or industrial. I pointed out also that we were the only party that has been consistent in reference to the export of natural gas from the prairie provinces as being not only important to the economy of the west but also to the economy of Canada as a whole, because by the export of natural gas to the United States we would bring about a closer balance of trade relations with the United States and alleviate the imbalance in regard to foreign exchange between our two countries.

I pointed out, also—and I wish to repeat this and put it on record again—that other parties were just as consistent in the opposite philosophy. It was the Liberal provincial party that consistently throughout the years opposed the export of natural gas from the province of Alberta. They opposed it, I suppose, on grounds that they felt were justified in this regard, that we might run out of natural gas for the domestic and industrial use of Canada.

I have also pointed out today that we went to bed with our coal in Alberta. When I first came into the House of Commons, every newly elected Conservative member from the province of Alberta pressed our own government and others for action in the export of natural gas, because when there is a demand for a commodity, that commodity will be produced. When we talk about production of that commodity, then we will really get out and explore for it, irrespective of what the tax incentives may be.

It is rather interesting to put on record once again an article from the December 11, 1957 issue of the Calgary Albertan, which I placed on record on May 25, 1959, when I paid a most deserved compliment to the former minister of trade and commerce, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, the person who finally got the movement of natural gas out of the prairies so we would have a full economy in the west and be able to bring about economic stability not only here in Canada but between the United States and Canada. This is what was said in the Albertan:

> Last week end the provincial Liberal party had a meeting of sorts in Edmonton. Naturally it had to say something about gas. But a more meaningless and cowardly statement it could not have made. The party is still obviously confused, still hopelessly ignorant of the industry and issues.
>
> It called for a "maximum availability of natural gas for domestic and industrial users in the province, having regard to economics involved". Nobody disagrees. Nobody at all. But does the provincial Liberal party realize that the maximum local availability can only be obtained as the result of a vast and thriving export industry.

In other words, when you export a commodity and those people who were exploring and processing that commodity receive revenue from outside the country as well as revenue from industry inside the country, you can use that capital back to explore for that commodity to a greater extent. That is what brought about reserves of 23.3 trillion cubic feet of natural gas in Alberta.

> But does the provincial Liberal party realize that the maximum local availability can only be obtained as the result of a vast and thriving export industry.
>
> It called for a provincial gas policy—

They had been calling for that for 30 years:

> —which would "encourage the establishment of new industries within the province".
>
> There again, evidence is conclusive that the maximum local industrialization will come through a policy of maximum export. If the Liberal party agrees, why is it beating around the bush?

These are words contained in an editorial in the Albertan, which has never been unfriendly to the Liberal party, as the Secretary of State, who I believe just said something, knows. It is the mouthpiece of the Liberal party in the province of Alberta. They were prodding them on. This article continues:

> Finally, it says "any policy of gas export from Alberta shall first take into consideration the present and future interests of the province, and especially the matter of protecting the consumers of Alberta in the matter of costs".

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Woolliams: I have only a few minutes. Would you save your question until the end of my discussion.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think it will be relevant then.

Mr. Woolliams: It probably will not be, because many of your questions are never relevant to the issue before the house. I want to compare that article with a passage contained in the Canada Year Book. If I were to quote from some of the newspapers favourable to the Conservative party—and I have to admit that in the last year or so they are sometimes hard to find—then it might be said that that was a Conservative viewpoint. But I want to quote from the Canada Year Book. This is a work by people who have made a study of these things, and this is what they said about our policy as far as petroleum and natural gas are concerned—because we brought about a new national policy for petroleum, and I should like to ask the minister whether his government still favour that policy, and will they decide to continue it in the future? It is a policy which has meant much not only to western Canada but to Canada as a whole. When the Conservative government took office in 1957 following the Suez crisis there had been a rise in exports of crude petroleum from the prairies due to the upset in the oil industry in the Near East. With the straightening out of the foreign situation there was a decline in our markets. The former Conservative government moved into the breach, and this is what the Canada Year Book says about it.

Mr. Pickersgill: What year?

Mr. Woolliams: It is 1962. I do not know whether the 1963 edition is out yet, but I hope it comes out soon, as I know the Secretary of State is going to be interested in it. The Canada Year Book says:

> As a result of important new developments, 1961 was an exceptionally good year for many segments of the petroleum and natural gas industries. The production and transportation sectors of the petroleum industry benefited greatly from the federal government's national oil policy announced on Feb. 1, which was designed to achieve increased domestic production on a voluntary basis. Approximately one-half of Canada's crude-oil-producing capacity has been shut-in in recent years; the oil policy set production targets for Canadian producers so that a more favourable production-to-consumption ratio would be established.

Mr. Pickersgill: Was that the George Hees policy?

Mr. Woolliams: It may have been. It was certainly the Conservative policy. I know what the Secretary of State is suggesting; he resigned from the former government, but I am not going to get into an argument about that. George Hees was minister of trade and commerce at that time and was putting forward the ideas of the Conservative government; and no one on this side will suggest that during that time he did not do a good job. The Canada Year Book goes on:

> Specifically, output goals of crude oil and natural gas liquids were set at 625,000 barrels a day by mid-1961; 640,000 barrels a day for the whole year; and approximately 800,000 barrels a day by the end of 1963.

In other words, when we took office in 1957 the demand was such that we could only get rid of 300,000 barrels a day. Our target was set at 800,000 barrels a day. With our new policy we were able to bring it up to 625,000 barrels a day, and provided the policy is continued and we are able to keep our export arrangements for natural gas and petroleum to the western states of the U.S.A., it will increase. I say that because we made a deal in light of United States interests not only in Venezuela, but other oil-producing countries.

In western Canada we are in a different position. If we can produce 100 barrels a day in one well we are doing pretty well. We are competing against Venezuela which produces 1,000 barrels a day in one well. The cost of production of crude petroleum in western Canada is greater than it is in Venezuela and the near east. This goes to the meat of the resolution, because the idea is to give incentives for greater exploration. But when you have a demand people and corporations will explore the commodity in demand. The meeting of demand by supply has always been a good Conservative principle.

The Canada Year Book continues:

> In Alberta, the large increase in output did not result in a correspondingly large expansion of exploration and development programs during the year since production facilities and oil reserves were more than adequate to meet the increased market demand.

That is exactly what I am saying:

> In British Columbia, however, the stimulus of a new pipe line being built to make British Columbia oil available to Vancouver refineries caused a sharp increase in oil development drilling and installation of production facilities. The 1961 value of crude petroleum and natural gas liquids production was $509,834,660 compared with $438,978,707 in 1960.

In other words, for two consecutive years the return on petroleum and natural gas production on the part of western Canadian producers increased by $100 million under our national oil policy and because we had developed export markets for natural gas from that area.

Now let us take a look at the natural gas industry. Again, from the Canada Year Book:

> The natural gas industry had a highly successful year in 1961, both in terms of production and of capital investment. Production, valued at $63,607,157, amounted to 646,018,204 Mcf., a 24 per cent increase over the 1960 output and an all-time record. Thus, the large annual increases in natural gas production that have prevailed for the past decade continued without slackening, and the year-end completion of the Alberta-California gas pipe line ensures that the rapid expansion of output will continue through 1962.

Reference need only be made to page 496 of the Canada Year Book for 1962 to see that it has been predicted that with this program there will be further explorations and discoveries of petroleum and natural gas which will bring more wealth to the prairies and to Canada, giving us a better chance to balance our economic arrangements with the United States. I should like to ask an important question in discussing this resolution, Mr. Chairman, which is: Is the national oil policy laid down in February 1961 going to continue? This would mean more for production than any other measure we can take. We have only to turn to the northern part of the provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan for new development, because there is the supply. I am referring to the Athabaska sands. Syndicates and corporations are now willing to spend up to $600 million to develop the Athabaska sands. A recent article which appeared in the Calgary Herald on December 7 stated that a proposed commercial complex which would cost an estimated $356 million would produce 100,000 barrels a day of synthetic crude from the Athabaska tar sands by 1970. The government should give these syndicates and corporations the chance to make this exploration and development, and to process the by-products thereof.

I come back to section 4 of the resolution, which refers to a corporation whose principal business is operating a pipe line for the transmission of oil or natural gas. In other words, as I understand the resolution it applies only to those corporations operating a pipe line for the transmission of oil or natural gas. Why does it not apply to a group of farmers or businessmen who might wish to form a syndicate? These people would like the opportunity of reducing their tax problems and investing in the industry of this country and in the development of oil and natural gas. Only when there is a really solid incentive will we get the requisite Canadian investment. They are the people who should be mentioned in this paragraph. I am not belittling in any way the corporations engaged in the transmission of petroleum and natural gas, but let us give everyone a chance, whether they be a big corporation such as Shell Oil, Standard Oil of New Jersey, Imperial Oil, or whoever it is. It was not long ago that a group of farmers in the Drumheller area got together and purchased some leases. They wildcatted. They found crude petroleum. They found natural gas. They then sold that enterprise for $400,000 or $500,000. But more than 50 per cent of the income went from that syndicate to the Department of National Revenue by way of taxation because the Exchequer Court of Canada ruled that this was really not a capital gain.

Mr. Pugh: Would the hon. member permit a question?

The Chairman: Before the question is asked I think I should bring to the attention of the committee the fact that the time of the hon. member who has the floor has expired.

Mr. Pugh: We are in committee; I imagine I can ask him a question.

The Chairman: If we have unanimous consent that the hon. member may reply. Is that agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pugh: Does my hon. friend know, of his own knowledge, that these were Canadian citizens, the people who formed this group?

Mr. Woolliams: They certainly were. They were born Canadians, most of them in the province of Alberta.

Mr. Olson: I do not wish to enter upon a full scale discussion of the development of the petroleum and natural gas industry in western Canada or in Alberta in particular. However, the speech to which we have just listened contains so many contradictions not only within itself but on matters of fact that I think it would be well for me to spend a few minutes dealing with some of them.

First of all, the hon. member said the Progressive Conservative party was the only party which had consistently advocated policies which would lead to the expansion of the natural gas industry in Canada. Then, in the course of further remarks, he said—

Mr. Woolliams: I know the hon. member would not wish to misquote me. I said we were the only party which had consistently recommended the exporting of natural gas. I did not make such a reference to the expansion of the industry as is suggested. In fact, I told the minister that this was one method of helping the industry to expand.

Mr. Olson: I do not see any point of order there.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, let us get the facts.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member also said the building of the trans-Canada pipe line was one of the greatest moves in expanding the natural gas industry in Canada. I waited patiently to hear the hon. member say something about the famous pipe line debate of 1956 and the stand which the Progressive Conservative party took at that time. I was waiting to hear him explain the position his party took then with respect to this pipe line, after saying the Tories were the only people who had consistently advocated the expansion of natural gas through export.

He went on to refer to the Liberal party, particularly in Alberta, as being against the export of gas. I think if the hon. member will turn his memory back to years during which we were talking about the export of natural gas from Alberta he will recall that at that time we were talking about exports from the province, not necessarily about exports from Canada to the United States. Certainly, I agree with him that the establishment of the trans-Canada pipe line was one of the most important developments in expanding those exports. I think it is fair to say that the attitude of the Conservative party, which was in opposition in early 1956, was one of the most obstructive in the history of Canada as far as the export of natural gas is concerned.

I think it is important to remember that the findings of the Borden commission culminated in the establishment of the national energy board, and during the fall of 1957 the then hon. member for Calgary South speaking in this chamber pointed out that there was a need for Canada to study her energy resources and consider how these resources could best be used to meet the needs of the nation. At that time the then hon. member for Calgary South, pointed to the Alberta gas conservation board as an example for the federal government to follow in establishing the regulations needed to provide for the proper utilization and conservation of our natural resources in this respect. It is also interesting to note that the board was later headed by the man who was then chairman of the Alberta conservation board.

The demand for natural gas and petroleum is certainly increasing on the north American continent. I think there is a greater percentage increase in this field than in the use of any other energy source being used today. In line with this expansion there is a need for more exploration and for greater inducement to prospectors so that our reserves can keep pace with demand. Moreover, as has been pointed out, the export of petroleum and natural gas is one of the most important aspects of our trade with the United States. It earns us United States dollars, and were it not for the contribution of this industry the position in respect to our balance of payments would be much more unfavourable than it is at the present time. So I endorse this resolution to the extent that we do need to provide inducements for exploration because, as the demand increases, we need additional sources of raw material to enable us to keep pace with the need.

Mr. Orlikow: I am not surprised that the hon. member for Bow River should have endorsed this proposal, because it is not very different from similar proposals which were made by the former government last session. I must say I am puzzled by the argument the hon. member advanced in support of this resolution. He attributed the growth of the industry in the past half dozen years to the export of oil and gas, which was permitted and fostered by the former government. He said that expansion of the industry would follow the increased demand. I think that is true, in which case I can see no reason for providing further tax concessions to this industry. Tax concessions can be justified for poor areas. They can be justified for industries which are in difficulty. But here we have an industry which is growing at a phenomenal rate and making tremendous profits while keeping a substantial part of the profits it makes and increasing the assets of the companies.

The minister proposes that we give these concessions contained in this item at the same time that he is calling on the Canadian people to be realistic, to face the problems of Canada and to make sacrifices. Here is what the minister said in his speech on July 2, as found on page 1751 of Hansard:

> If the people of this country are not willing to back a government which has a program, and are not willing to pay more taxes in the interim, we shall have to go on drifting and inevitably, sooner or later, we shall end up on the rocks.

Later he said:

> —I am convinced that we shall all be worse off in the long run if we fail to face up to the problems that confront our country. We simply must begin to do something about them. In my opinion, the answer is not simply to let things rip. There are limits to the amounts of deficits, and I am thinking even more of cash deficits than budgetary deficits, which the economy can stand without getting us into greater trouble.

So the minister calls for an end to deficits and more taxes on July 2, but today he is presenting concessions which will cost the people of Canada millions of dollars. Is this a poor industry? Let us look at the facts. Members can find the facts if they will look at the annual survey of oils published by the Financial Post. I have looked at the record. Let us take Trans-Canada Pipe Lines. In 1958 that company lost approximately $48,000 but in 1962 it had a net profit of $4½ million. In 1958 its total assets were $282 million but by 1962 they had grown to $338 million. Imperial Oil, which has important pipe lines, had a net profit in 1958 of $50 million but by 1961 this had grown to $67 million. Their total assets were $861 million in 1958 but by 1961 they had grown to $938 million. Their earnings per share, which were $1.61 in 1958, had grown to $2.14 in 1961.

British American Oil Company had a net profit of $20 million in 1958 but by 1961 it had grown to $32 million. In 1958 their total assets were $511 million but by 1961 they had grown to $563 million. In 1958 their earnings per share were $1 but by 1961 this had grown to $1.59. Texaco of Canada Limited had a net profit in 1958 of $9 million but in 1961 they had a net profit of $10 million. Their total assets grew from $159 million in 1958 to $187 million in 1961. Their earnings per share rose from $2.86 in 1958 to $3.10 in 1961.

This is the industry, Mr. Chairman, which the minister picks to give tax concessions to. I do not suppose that the minister listened to his parliamentary secretary. In the last session the parliamentary secretary, at that time just the member for Kingston, had this to say about this very question when discussing proposals made by the former government, and I quote from pages 1464 and 1465 of Hansard:

> The oil and gas industry as such will contribute very little to the income tax revenue of the federal government even though its gross revenue exceeds $500 million. I can think of no other industry in Canada in this favourable position. It has been claimed that this industry needs further encouragement to find reserves. According to figures produced by the Canadian petroleum association, at the end of 1961 reserves on hand in Canada amounted to 18.9 years supply.

He also went on to say:

> What we need is more and faster growing markets for petroleum products. If we had these we would not need tax concessions to stimulate the search for oil.

I think this was a very good speech and the minister should have paid some attention to it. If he had I doubt that he would be proposing now that we agree to further tax concessions for an industry that is already doing extremely well. I am disturbed that we should be proposing tax concessions for an industry which is doing so well at the same time that the minister has said in effect during his budget speech that we simply cannot afford to do what is requested from us by the provinces.

I do not intend to make a speech about dominion-provincial relations today, but let us look at what the minister had to say about the desire of all provincial governments, regardless of their political colouration, for more revenue. Here is what he said as found on page 1,000 of Hansard for June 13:

> The summary of our financial position which I shall give shortly will make clear that the federal government is no less pressed for sources of revenue than are the provincial governments. This government assumes no rigid position on the sharing of joint tax fields. It is clear from the record of the past that readjustments of revenues and responsibilities are possible. But naturally no federal government can ignore the problems of federal finance in seeking to lighten the burdens upon provincial treasuries.

Having said this and having in effect told the provincial governments that he cannot see his way clear to meet their requests, he has given these concessions to the oil industry. I am not in the habit of quoting from the Bible, Mr. Chairman, but as I listened to the minister making his explanation I could not help thinking of that biblical saying that to him that hath shall be given and from him that hath not shall be taken away even that which he hath. Therefore I should like to move:

> That the income tax resolution be amended by deleting paragraph 4 therefrom and by renumbering the subsequent paragraphs.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, this is an interesting amendment. I had thought when I listened to the hon. member for Bow River that he might be working himself up to an amendment of an entirely different character. However, if he had the impulse he managed to suppress it.

Mr. Nowlan: We are very reasonable people over here.

Mr. Gordon: The suppression or the impulse? He talked a lot about the export of natural gas from Alberta and there was a time when I thought he was offering himself as a personal exhibit of that kind of policy. I will come to the amendment in just a moment, but there was a time during the speech of the hon. member from Bow River when I thought he had perhaps overlooked—

Mr. Martineau: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, should the amendment not be put before the committee before there is discussion on it?

The Chairman: Actually I must say I was under the impression that the minister was speaking on the amendment but I can read the amendment to the committee. It is moved:

That the income tax resolution be amended by deleting paragraph 4 therefrom and by renumbering the subsequent paragraphs.

Mr. Gordon: As I was saying, I thought that the hon. member for Bow River, when he was talking so much about various commissions, had overlooked in his reading a study made for another royal commission by the present member for Coast-Capilano who outlined the general policy that apparently the hon. member for Bow River approves.

I quite agree that the oil industry as such has been prosperous. However, I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg North will agree with me when I say that the great expansion, the great development expenditures of this industry, occurred some years ago. There has been an increase in production in recent years, but there has not been an increase in development and exploration expenditures. In fact, there has been a falling off. I have not the figures before me, but I think there is no question that this is true.

I hold no particular brief for this particular class of company. But if it is reasonable that companies in the oil industry should be entitled to explore for gas and oil and to write off their expenditures in this connection against their profits from that industry, then it would seem to me reasonable to include in that general category the pipe line companies that are vitally interested in the oil business. If there is not enough gas discovered, then their business will suffer. It seemed to me that it was reasonable that people or companies who were so directly involved and engaged in this industry should be given the same treatment as other people in industry.

Now, that is the purpose of this paragraph of the resolution. You might say that because this is a prosperous industry, that because it has been one of the successful industries in Canada, there may be an argument, one with which I would not go along, that steps should be taken to depress the industry, that steps should be taken to make it tougher for the oil and gas industry. I would remind hon. members of the committee, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North, that Canada as a whole, quite apart from Alberta, has gained a great deal from the success of the oil and gas industry in recent years. I do not really believe that it would be in the best interests of this country to do things that would depress one of our most successful industries. I would hate to see that done.

This particular provision, in my opinion, is not a very important one. Nevertheless, it will encourage certain companies that are definitely engaged in this industry and which incidentally, with one or two exceptions, are amongst those controlled in this country, to participate in the future development of additional gas and oil supplies in the western part of Canada. I used to have a better grasp of figures perhaps than I do at the moment. However, the hon. member for Bow River made one statement which I am sure he will correct when he has looked at the blues. I think he said that the production or development of natural gas in Alberta had increased from 600,000 trillion cubic feet to 320,000 trillion cubic feet, but I am sure he did not mean that.

Mr. Woolliams: I have not looked at the blues, but what I did say if the minister would permit me to interrupt, was that the known or proven reserves were 27 trillion cubic feet and the Borden commission says they are 23 trillion cubic feet.

Mr. Gordon: I do not want to get into a discussion on statistics, which I do not think would be very profitable. However, the fact is that this is one of the industries which it seems to me first of all, we should be encouraging. We should be proud of an industry that has made a real contribution to our balance of payments problem in recent years and which could make a further contribution in that regard. I should not like, therefore, to see us restrict certain companies that are very definitely involved in this industry and which are in a position to make a contribution to the future development of this industry. I should not like to see the house restrict their opportunities.

As I say, I do not consider this one of the more important paragraphs of this resolution. I suppose that this amendment is to the resolution itself, and it proposes that this particular paragraph be deleted. As I say, I do not think it is the most important paragraph in this resolution by any means. On the other hand, I think it is probably a useful incentive to the oil and gas industry and, to that extent, it seems to me it should be supported. I am afraid, therefore, that on behalf of the government I could not support the amendment that the hon. gentleman has just moved.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, the minister has given two reasons why the amendment should be opposed. He first suggests that this concession of allowing pipe line companies to charge their exploration and drilling costs against their income tax is already enjoyed by oil companies. I would remind the minister that last year we opposed this concession being given to the oil companies. The mere fact that the oil companies enjoy this very special privilege is no reason that we should compound that felony by giving the same privilege to the pipe line companies.

The second argument put forward by the minister is that, while these companies are certainly not poor by any stretch of the imagination, this might increase the exploration program and therefore cause a great impetus in the oil and gas industry. I would point out that the greatest period of expansion in the oil and gas industry was when they did not have this particular concession. In other words, the concession is not the thing that spurs oil exploration. What spurs oil exploration is when the company knows it has a market for its product. At the present time the oil and gas industry is not using all the reserves it has, but this is through lack of markets rather than through lack of any incentive to explore. I do not believe that giving these companies additional incentives is going to cause a great flurry of exploration and drilling.

When the minister speaks about this as a rather minor matter, I cannot help thinking of the great plea he made for the tax on building materials, that it was very difficult to get revenue and we must all, therefore, bear our share of the load of financing Canada. Surely if we are going to ask people to carry a very heavy burden by virtue of imposing the 4 per cent sales tax on building materials and production machinery, which will be increased later to 8 per cent and afterwards to 11 per cent, and on the other hand if we give some of the richest companies the incentives provided here, that already have large reserves of undistributed profits set aside for drilling and exploration, which work they are not carrying out, it displays a very poor sense of values?

We feel the very least the government could do would be to cancel this concession to the gas pipe line companies, and I would hope it would even take into consideration cancelling it to oil companies as well. If we are going to ask the little people of the country to carry some of the burdens implicit in the minister's objective, then we should not hand out, at the same time, large sums from the public treasury to oil and gas companies.

Mr. Woolliams: I would like to make a short reply to my hon. friend from Medicine Hat, if the minister will bear with me. Actually it is relevant in dealing with clause 4. The hon. member was talking about the pipe line debate, and all I want to say is that reading the pipe line debate I have found nowhere that this party is on record as opposed to the building of pipe lines.

We were opposed to the method of financing, and as will be found at page 83 of the 1957 royal commission on pipe lines, one of the first things the commission found out was that there were 55,000 shares given to a man named Tanner, former minister of natural resources in Alberta, at an option of $8 a share. At that time no other Canadian could get an option on those shares. He never had to put up any money. If he had put up the money it would have cost him $444,000, but when he unloaded them on the stock exchange at $34.50 he made a capital gain of approximately $1,457,500, and it was on account of that that we made our objection.

I would point out, Mr. Chairman, that in my opening remarks this afternoon I did compliment the provincial Social Credit government on assisting the development of the petroleum and natural gas industry. I want to repeat that. It has done a good job in this regard. I have not always agreed with everything it did politically, but basically it has done a good job when compared with sister provinces.

Now, I would personally go on record as opposing the amendment. Anything that helps the expansion of industry helps everyone. My hon. friend speaks about giving to the rich, but it must be remembered that corporations pay taxes and are economically responsible, and as they develop, more jobs are created.

I have only to draw an analogy to the coal operation in Alberta. When the coal companies could not sell their commodity there was no more exploration and no more new mines developed. In fact the mines closed and, as is the case in Drumheller, many of the men who lost their jobs are still unemployed today.

When a corporation is given an advantage to develop and explore for either natural gas or petroleum it can expand and give more jobs. In this way the country becomes more economically healthy, and on that basis I would oppose the amendment.

There is one question I want the minister to answer. As the law stands today, and as it would be amended by paragraph 4, does it mean that unless a group of people formed a company and went into the business of the transmission of oil and gas, they would be denied the privilege of writing this expense off any other business they have? In other words, does this prevent people who want to go into the wildcat business of drilling oil and gas wells? Do they have the same privilege under the law as it now stands and as it would be amended?

Mr. Gordon: I think the hon. gentleman probably realizes if he has read the amendment, that the people he refers to do not come under it at all.

Mr. Woolliams: Then this means that those corporations already in the business of transmitting oil and natural gas—even if they are foreign corporations and most of them are—will get this advantage, but a group of Canadians forming a syndicate to explore for natural gas, petroleum and other minerals will not be given the privilege under paragraph 4. If this is a budget to encourage Canadians to invest their own money then I say this provision should encompass everyone, and not discriminate one against the other.

Mr. Gordon: I do not know if the hon. member really intends this, but it is certainly not the intention of the government to create a class of Texas millionaires in Canada, as has happened in the United States. If one takes seriously the proposal of the hon. gentleman, what he means is that anybody who is in the top income brackets, anybody who is paying say 75 per cent or 85 per cent, can explore for natural gas and oil in Canada; and that he would let them do so anywhere they can by gambling 20 per cent of their own money and 80 per cent of the government's money. If they are lucky they make a fortune, and if unlucky they only lose 20 per cent. So far as this government is concerned it is against that kind of discrimination in favour of the rich.

Mr. Pugh: Just carrying on with what the minister has said, I gathered from his remarks that if you operate a pipe line, then you can start in on exploration for oil, gas and other minerals, but how far can a pipe line company go? Is there any geographical limit to it? If there is a pipe line company in Alberta, can it go for minerals in the Northwest Territories or in eastern Canada?

Mr. Gordon: Anywhere in Canada.

Mr. Pugh: Then this would automatically put them in a better position. The first thing to do is get yourself incorporated as a pipe line company and then start work on explorations outside the pipe line business, and you have a decided advantage over any other type of company in the exploration field. Is that not so?

Mr. Gordon: I think the hon. gentleman knows that any company in Canada can explore for gas, oil or minerals in Canada and deduct the expenses from the profits earned in that oil, gas or mineral business.

Mr. Pugh: I rather gathered from the minister's answer to the hon. member for Bow River that a person, group or syndicate who were in the exploration field were not in as good a position as those who had already incorporated as pipe lines. Was that answer given?

Mr. Gordon: The hon. member for Bow River was, I think, talking about a syndicate of farmers, although I suspect what he really had in mind was—

An hon. Member: Lawyers.

Mr. Gordon: I wonder whether he did not have in mind a syndicate of city slickers who are probably very well off, who are probably in the higher income brackets, and who would be put in the same position as similar people in the United States. There is an argument for this, but I do not find the argument very palatable.

Mr. Woolliams: May I just add to that little part of the minister's remarks that I think he fails to understand the petroleum and natural gas industry. For a few hundred dollars you can get a lease. That is what these people did in Drumheller. Then they farmed out agreements. They are not in the wealthy class; they are people probably making less than $5,000 a year. They were able to farm out their leases and under these agreements develop their property. It was from that property they made $400,000. I say that if this tax exemption extended to everybody—not the rich, millionaire companies the minister is talking about, but the average guys in Canada—so they could invest their money to develop these resources, the Liberal government would be doing a job for the average Canadian citizen.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, I do not know what the difference is between a Texas millionaire and Mr. Frank McMahon—

Mr. Leboe: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman; I was wondering, if the mover of the motion speaks now, will he not close the debate?

The Chairman: That is not my understanding.

Mr. Orlikow: I do not know what the difference is between a Texas millionaire and somebody like Mr. Frank McMahon. I do not know how many of the poor people who started this oil boom around Medicine Hat are left in it, because if one looks at the figures he sees that 80 per cent or more of the oil industry is now controlled by United States interests. Nothing which I or anybody in this group has said today or at any other time could be taken to mean that we are opposed to the expansion of the oil industry. But what we certainly expect from this industry, as from any other wealthy industry, is that they pay their fair share of the costs of carrying on the business of Canada.

The minister is proposing taxes, as the leader of this group has mentioned, for the building industry, and the Minister of National Health and Welfare is going to propose a tax of 1 per cent of income on everybody, including people with low incomes, to help pay for the pension plan. But here the minister is proposing that we give further concessions to a part of an industry which has done extremely well in this country. He says we ought to do it for these natural gas and oil transmission companies because we have already done it for the oil companies; but it seems to me that what we ought to be doing is correcting the mistake which we made last time, rather than extending the mistake as the minister is suggesting today.

We see no reason why we ought to be making these concessions to these companies. If the minister is right in saying that there has been a slow-down in exploration, I do not believe for a moment that the slow-down has been because there are not enough incentives. If there is a slow-down, it is because there has been a tremendous expansion of this industry not only in Canada but throughout the world. The Soviet union is expanding into markets which were traditionally held by western European companies and United States companies in western Europe. The United States companies are drawing increasing supplies from the South American countries, I suppose because they are worried about the long range political situation in South America more than they are worried about the political situation in Canada. I do not believe this extension of write-off privileges to pipe line companies will achieve any more exploration, and I think it is completely wrong to be giving concessions to these companies at the same time that we are asking for further sacrifices from people in the lower and middle income groups in this country.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, I would not have risen on this particular resolution had I not been prompted to do so by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and the mover of this amendment, the hon. member for Winnipeg North. I think it ought to be considered, when giving these so-called concessions to the oil and pipe line industry and natural gas industry, that one of the prime motives behind it, and a motive I would have thought the leader of the New Democratic party would have supported, is to put the Canadian oil producer and the Canadian pipe line company on a fair and equitable basis with his United States competitor. It was because of the lack of this type of legislation in the past that the United States companies were permitted to acquire about 85 per cent of the Canadian oil industry, because these so-called Texas millionaires were allowed to write off exploration charges, and so on, as an expense, whereas the Canadian competitor could not do so. Last year when a similar, truncated resolution was presented by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings we criticized that resolution because it tended to protect the status quo. It was only oil producers and exporters that had been established prior to, I think April 10, 1963 who were given the benefit of resolutions 5(b) and 5(c) under the earlier statute.

Mr. Nowlan: 1962.

Mr. Turner: Under the 1962 statute. We criticized that because it tended to protect the United States companies which were already there; but the basis of the legislation was surely good. What it tried to do, and what this resolution tries to do, is put the Canadian producer and the Canadian manufacturer in the position whereby he can compete with the larger companies in the United States.

Mr. Douglas: How many of our pipe lines are owned by Canadians?

Mr. Turner: We are talking now about the total philosophy of this question. If hon. members of the New Democratic party are serious about encouraging Canadian ownership, especially of primary resource industries, then the philosophy behind this resolution should meet with their approval.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words in connection with the amendment. First of all I would like to go on record as saying that it seems to be popular to condemn big business. I do not think it is a matter of popularity. I think we should consider some of the points of big business. Big business is absolutely necessary, the same as large aggregate is necessary when you are pouring concrete; you have to have the fine aggregate and the large. The larger companies we have in Canada today are public companies in which there are shareholders by the thousand. The hon. member for Winnipeg North mentioned Mr. McMahon this evening. I can say to the hon. member that Mr. McMahon eats three meals a day, the same as I do; he wears one suit of clothes at a time; he can drive only one car at a time. This is all he can do. He can only take so much out of life, and I am sure the people working in the industry he has built up are very, very happy to get the pay cheques they are getting.

I do not think we should be so narrow between the horns that we cannot see out of our eyes. I think we should be considering this from the broad base of the benefits that will come to Canada as the result of more exploration in the natural gas and oil industries. I come from a constituency that is thriving today on exploration. These people plow back a great deal of the money that is made. The gas and oil companies, as I understand it, are interlocked; they are bound together. In the fact that they are bound together we find that a great deal of the profits of the oil companies come from imported products; they do not come out of the exploration of gas and oil at all, particularly oil. We import oil in great quantities from other countries, and they certainly make profits on this oil as well as on other oils.

My understanding has been for many, many years that these oil companies have plowed back actually more into Canada than they have taken out of the resources they have explored and brought forth from the ground. Therefore I believe that this paragraph should stand as it is in the text. I believe it is a good paragraph. Furthermore, in connection with the oil and gas industries, particularly the gas industry, this paragraph will encourage pipe line companies to bring about the use of the natural gas, which is an expendable resource, while we are in need of this commodity. We hope nuclear fission will be developed to such an extent that we will be able to use it and eventually it will be cheaper than any of these products we have today. I think we should use these to the fullest extent.

Before I sit down, Mr. Chairman, I should like to suggest the possible extension of the principle of this paragraph. I see that the Minister of Forestry is with us and I should like the Minister of Finance to get his ear and talk to him. In the forest industry I think there is a case in principle with regard to access roads, and this type of thing, which are capitalized. As I understand it, today the forest industry is not allowed any concessions in respect to capitalization and giving over of access roads, which in a sustained yield forest become roads which remain more or less permanent after the operators have gone. Years pass by and these roads are continually used to prevent forest fires and to reach forest fires caused by lightning, or some other phenomenon. I think there is a principle here which should be looked at very carefully, with the idea of extending some relief in this respect on a long term basis.

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Herridge: I have just arrived at the appropriate moment, Mr. Chairman. As one who has opposed this type of taxation since it was first put into effect, I want to take this opportunity of saying that I heartily support the amendment moved by the hon. member in our group. I did attend this committee during the afternoon but I have been away on official business.

I have been reading about this matter, Mr. Chairman, and I have written some notes on it and I do not want them to be wasted. This amendment contradicts the feeble intentions of the Minister of Finance in his attempt to correct the imbalance of payments through his former takeover tax. In my opinion we should recognize that this amendment to the budget resolution will do more to preserve Canadian ownership and prevent United States companies from gradually increasing their capital in an unseen manner than anything else could at the present time. If a United States company operating outside of Canada wants to invest millions in Canada, it first sets up a Canadian—that is, a United States—company. Then it pays its profits into that company. Such profits are free of tax in Canada and so the entire profits can be invested.

This is what is happening with respect to the application of this resolution, as far as taxation is concerned. Big United States corporations that develop new mines, oil fields, etc., actually pay nothing in many cases for this development because our government allows them to deduct all such costs from their profits. They pay no taxation on that money which is invested in development and promotion. Thus a United States company can go on and on forever increasing its ownership of Canada without paying one penny by way of taxes to our country in this respect.

A brand new United States investment company developing resources in Canada can afford to spend huge sums of money for years on end before it starts producing and making cash profits. We had an illustration, Mr. Chairman, not long ago of a company which had developed a mine in this way, after having spent not one cent of its capital in developing the mine. Then because it was going to be affected by flooding, through some action taken by our provincial government, it turned round and wanted compensation for all the money it had expended. What do you think of that sort of thing, Mr. Chairman? As I said, a brand new United States company can afford to spend huge sums of money before it makes cash profits. When those profits start to pour in they are cancelled by Ottawa by means of the trick of deducting all the earlier expenses. In that way Canada fails to collect taxes on the fabulous profits made in our country by United States investors.

In my opinion this has been one of the most fortunate pieces of legislation for foreign investors to date. United States companies can set up oil and gas wells and pipe lines in Canada and deduct from their profits not only the things that actually wear out in use—the usual depreciation allowance, which is normal with any taxation system—but they can also make deductions of things they have not even started to use, even things they have not yet built. This unique Canadian device was introduced by Ottawa drastically to cut their taxes, although such methods are strictly illegal in the United States itself. There is no such system of taxation in the United States, and I challenge the Minister of Finance to tell us that there is before this amendment is voted on.

As soon as a United States company begins to make good profits in Canada it can split its stock. For example, with the stroke of a pen a company can create millions of new shares of stock and then sell them to the owners of the company for a small fraction of the market price of that stock. Thus the owners might pay $5 for a share of stock worth $25. This device distributes enormous Canadian wealth to United States company owners, and Canada does not collect one penny of taxes from it. This system is always used in applications of this type of resolution in a budget. United States companies that have large operations in the United States can afford to spend millions in Canada on what might be quite risky developments, such as exploring for new oil fields, drilling large prospective mineral deposits—what are generally termed venture investments. In fact, they are sure of their returns before they start. However risky such things are for Canadians, they involve no possible loss of money for United States citizens. They simply use millions which they otherwise would have to hand over to Washington in taxes on their United States profits. If the ventured money brings no valuable discoveries, nothing has been lost since only United States government funds or taxes were spent. If the venture turns out to be profitable, a tremendous profit can be made; and on the basis of the law of averages a tremendous profit is made. These large corporations can undertake this type of development and investment, which is beyond the capacity of any provincial government, because of the world-wide ramifications of these corporations and the application of this kind of legislation.

When United States companies start to develop large Canadian resources they are literally paid for doing this, both by the United States and the Canadian government. First, as they spend millions on mines, oil and gas wells and pipe lines they deduct the amount from their regular United States taxes on their profits made in the U.S.A. So they are actually spending United States government funds on Canadian developments. Second, after their new Canadian operations begin to make a profit, they again deduct all their original investment, this time taking it out of Canadian taxes which could be charged on profits in Canada.

Now, Mr. Chairman, over and above the profits they make from actual production in Canada these United States companies can increase their wealth to an unlimited degree just by proving that the Canadian resources which they have taken over and which they have been given rights to really do exist. And they know they exist in most cases before development has commenced. For example, an oil lease which at first is worth little as a venture property may climb to hundreds of millions of dollars in value. Such miraculous but real increases in wealth are called capital gains. In all countries with a modern taxation system, including the United States, such capital gains are heavily taxed. But not so in Canada. Here the United States owner is not charged one cent of tax on his capital gains, even if they rise to billions of dollars.

The newest American device is to set up an investment trust in Canada. We had an illustration of that in recent weeks in this house. Such a trust does no real investing or developing itself, but purchases large blocks of stock in Canadian-producing companies. United States owners of the trust, no matter how much profit they make, pay no taxes. They are even permitted to take their profits to buy up more Canadian holdings; and so it goes on and on indefinitely, building a pyramid of Canadian wealth to be owned entirely by the United States because, in essence, of this type of budget resolution, and the failure of any Canadian government to implement a capital gains tax.

I just want to express my views briefly. I do not wish to take up the time of the committee unduly. This wonderful system of regulations which has been worked out by successive Canadian governments, whether Liberal or Conservative, in intimate co-operation with Washington, I am sure, which has been responsible for the selling out of this country, does not apply to Canadians.

Mr. Gordon: Is the hon. gentleman suggesting I have been guilty of this.

Mr. Herridge: No, Mr. Chairman, not for a moment. I respect the minister as a man of integrity. This is the subconscious result, almost, of the type of association we have in this respect. The results of budget resolutions such as this, together with the fact that we have no capital gains tax, is the reason why United States corporations or their subsidiaries in Canada own 75 per cent of the oil and gas in the country. Canadians are able to accumulate billions of dollars to spend on defence. Why, then, do not Canadians develop Canada instead of the United States? The present tendency is, to put it simply, assured by such income tax laws as this, and by the great advantage which the United States enjoys over us in this respect.

I was told that years ago the principle behind these resolutions was to ensure expansion, to ensure development. What consideration does a farmer get when he clears an acre of land or irrigates an acre of land in order to improve production in Canada? All he gets, usually, is an increase in the taxes demanded of him by the provincial government. He gets no consideration, although he is usually a man with only a small amount of capital doing something to increase the productive capacity of this country. Why should not a small man in this position get the same consideration as do subsidiaries of United States corporations?

In addition, the people who take advantage of these laws bring their own labour with them, very often, from the United States under false pretences and do Canadian workmen out of employment. I have had some experience of them. In my own riding employees were brought in as landed immigrants. One cannot do anything about that under our present milk and water regulations. I thought I would check up on some of these people, so I asked the police to check their automobile licences. Practically all of them had asked for visitors' licences because they knew they would not be in Canada more than six months. The same attitude prevails with regard to our national employment service. I know the field managers of one of these corporations. They simply ignore our national employment service, and similar agencies. One of them told me: "I don't want anything to do with your little outfit. I want a group of men lined up in front of my office every morning seeking employment." He did employ Canadians for the week or so. Then he let them off and took on some more. The core of his whole organization consisted of United States citizens who had been brought into Canada as landed immigrants incorrectly and immorally. In my opinion, Canadians do not have the opportunity to develop Canada as they might because of a tax policy which stacks the cards against them. Only United States corporations are paid out of our taxes to take our country away from us.

I give wholehearted support to the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Winnipeg North. I urge the minister to give this question some consideration. Such measures as this, represent, on the whole, a handout to subsidiaries to United States corporations enabling them to finance the development of Canada in their own interest by the use of Canadian money.

(Translation):

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I only wish to say a few words to show how complex is this matter of taxation and how the royal commission on taxation is really needed.

A few days ago, Canadian citizens were complaining because the United States wanted to impose a tax on American investments in Canada and then, a few days later, the complaint is heard that the Canadian government encourages foreign investments in Canada.

Also, the N.D.P. members stated that the development of oil and gas industries, as far as drilling and well-sinking is concerned, does not depend on the reduction allowed in the payment of taxes, but rather on the development of the markets where to sell those products. Well, if the corporations are not interested in drilling, they will not do any, exemption or no exemption. The drilling and well-sinking will not be carried out by corporations that are not interested but by those that are.

It is not difficult to see that the majority of oil companies shares belong to Americans. However, we are in a given context and we must give everybody a chance, not in the development of profits but rather in the development of a new construction which shall be a new asset for the country.

Then, even if we do not like granting certain relief measures to the United States, I think we must vote against this motion.

(Text):

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Amendment (Mr. Orlikow) negatived: yeas, 10; nays, 107.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Paragraph 4 agreed to.

Mr. Gordon: Paragraph 5 of the resolution proposes an amendment to encourage Canadian individuals and companies to acquire shares in companies which, although not resident in Canada, carry on substantially all their business in this country.

Mr. Nowlan: I take it that this applies to a very limited number.

Mr. Gordon: Yes. It applies to such companies as the Hudson's Bay Company.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Paragraph 6.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, the minister has stood paragraph 1 and the definition which is incidental to No. 1 applies to 6, 7, 8 and 9. I wonder whether we would not make more progress at the moment if we stood 6, 7, 8 and 9, dealt with the rest and then came back to those four afterwards.

Mr. Gordon: I agree, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Is it the wish of the committee that paragraphs 6, 7, 8 and 9 stand?

Mr. Gordon: I wonder whether the hon. member would like to include paragraph 10 as well?

Mr. Nowlan: Yes, I intended to.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gordon: I am wrong. Paragraph 10 is not quite the same.

Mr. Lambert: Paragraph 10 is the surcharge on non-resident corporations.

Mr. Gordon: Paragraph 10 of the resolution proposes that the tax on branch profits of non-resident companies carrying on business in Canada be increased from 15 to 20 per cent at the same time as the non-resident withholding tax on dividends paid by certain subsidiary companies is increased to 20 per cent.

Mr. Lambert: It is a straightforward increase.

Mr. Gordon: Yes.

The Chairman: Shall we proceed to paragraph 11?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, paragraph 11 proposes that the rate of tax on non-resident owned investment corporations be increased from 15 to 20 per cent at the same time as the non-resident withholding tax on dividends paid by certain subsidiary companies is increased to 20 per cent.

Mr. Lambert: This is a parallel development to paragraph 10?

Mr. Gordon: Yes.

The Chairman: Paragraph 12.

Mr. Gordon: This paragraph of the resolution proposes that the non-resident withholding tax imposed on interest, dividends, rents and royalties paid by residents of Canada to non-resident persons shall also be imposed at the rate of 15 per cent on management or administration fees or charges paid to non-residents.

Mr. Lambert: Was this thought by the minister to be a loophole when he was tidying up the administration, or is this felt to be a new source of revenue that the minister wishes to tax?

Mr. Gordon: Yes. There has been a suggestion that when the rate of the withholding tax was increased to 15 per cent a year or two ago some companies may have avoided it by the payment of management fees. Some questions have been asked concerning the kind of payment that will be taxed as a management or administration fee or charge. It is the government's intention that a management or administration fee or charge is to be regarded as an amount paid for advice or direction pertaining to the operation or administration of a company, not including an amount paid for services to an independent firm and not including specified amounts paid for identifiable services such as transportation, insurance, advertising, accounting and research.

Payments to non-residents will be taxed in circumstances in which the label of management fees is being used as a façade for the withdrawal of profits which should be subject to the full non-resident tax.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, if this provision has been misused I agree completely with the idea of stopping the misuse. However, I wonder whether the minister has had any indication from certain foreign governments that possibly there might be more of these management fees paid, that possibly they should be larger, that certain companies are not charging any and they should be. Have there been indications that certain companies, according to certain foreign governments, may not be charging enough in this way?

Mr. Gordon: I have not heard the suggestion that certain companies may not be charging enough. It has been suggested in business circles that the incidence of these charges increased subsequent to the imposition of the 15 per cent withholding tax.

Mr. Monteith: I gather that increasing the withholding tax to 20 per cent means that possibly there might be a further increase in the incidence of these charges.

Mr. Gordon: I think that one step at a time would probably be the right way to approach this problem.

The Chairman: Clause 13.

Mr. Gordon: This paragraph of the resolution proposes that interest paid to certain non-residents be exempt from withholding tax. The Income Tax Act imposes a tax of 15 per cent on interest paid by residents of Canada to non-residents. This tax is withheld at the source by the Canadian payer. This paragraph of the resolution proposes that non-resident persons such as pension trustees or charitable foundations that are exempt in their country of residence be granted an exemption from this withholding tax. The objective of this paragraph is to broaden the market for Canadian securities in other countries and in this way to help in the policy of keeping interest rates in Canada at as low a level as possible.

Mr. Lambert: Can the minister tell us if the proposal by President Kennedy the other day, as modified by whatever agreement may have been reached between the Canadian and American governments, will affect this proposal by the minister in any way?

Mr. Gordon: When the President's statement was issued on Thursday there was no doubt that it would have modified this particular proposal, although the effect of this proposal would be greater than the offsetting tax proposed by the President of the United States. Since the president's proposal has been modified or clarified or amended, I think that the effect of this proposal will be or should be as great as it was when it was originally proposed on June 13, and it will undoubtedly make it easier to sell Canadian bonds in the United States because the effective market for them will be substantially greater than it has been. The net result will be to help keep interest rates down in Canada.

It will be necessary for the non-resident organization desiring this exemption to make application to the Department of National Revenue in Ottawa. This will be done, of course, through the investment dealers who are approaching these organizations. In its application the non-resident organization will have to show that it is a purchaser of bonds on its own account and that it is exempt from income tax imposed by the government of the country in which it is resident.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, this was one of the paragraphs in the resolution on which, before the events of the last few days, I was going to commend the minister, which will surprise him mightily. I realize that possibly the situation has changed materially. I think it is a good thing to provide for investment in depth in fixed income securities to provide a flow of money into Canada. This at least meets the minister's view with regard to not having takeovers or anything of that kind. I was going to make a suggestion to him, though possibly it may be a little bit outdated today, that the balance of payments situation was such in another country that they would not welcome any further opening of this kind. I would commend to the minister, as if and when he may have a chance to deal with another budget, that he deal with this situation in respect of pension funds. Now a pension fund, first, is one which does not contain the danger of a takeover, as I understand it, of any corporation. They invest to a very limited extent. There is no danger of any such situation developing as the minister has cause, perhaps, to fear in respect of the purchases of substantial amounts of Canadian equities. I would hope that arrangements might be made whereby we could have widened the section even further than it is today. There may be difficulties in the way in view of events of the last few days.

I would have hoped that pension funds which, after all, are one of the substantial reservoirs of investment funds, might have been permitted to buy equities of Canadian corporations. They do not buy to an extensive extent. They do not attempt to take over control. I think sometimes it might be of interest to Canadian corporations to have a corporation of another country with a certain amount of moneys invested in a pension fund. Obviously, a pension fund is distinct from an operational fund. I could imagine companies might be buying Canadian products—shall we thing of aluminum, nickel and such various corporations—and if there were an opportunity for them to invest in equities to a limited extent as they do in pension funds, this would provide for a reasonable flow of United States capital coming into this country. There would be no danger of any takeover. It might possibly facilitate the operations of the Canadian corporation in a highly competitive market.

I am expressing this thought, although it may be passé at the moment; but I should like the minister's comment, because he may like to have it in there for some future occasion.

Mr. Gordon: The purpose of this resolution is, of course, to make it easier or make it more desirable for pension funds in other countries to invest in Canadian bonds. As we all know, we are primarily interested in and thinking about the inflow of capital. Certainly, in totals and magnitudes, we are primarily interested in the sale of Canadian bonds abroad rather than Canadian equities.

Mr. Nowlan: Would the minister permit one question there? Surely he does not distinguish, even for pension funds, between investment in bonds and investment in equities, because they are both to a limited extent anyway?

Mr. Gordon: When it comes to investment in Canadian equities by pension funds or anybody else, I think it would be difficult to make a distinction. I am not at all sure that it makes much difference from the Canadian point of view whether the United States, British or French individual, or pension fund in one of those countries, invests in our equities, but it does make a major difference when it comes to investment in bonds. The amounts there are very substantial and if the pension funds in other countries find it difficult to invest in Canadian bonds, then for all practical purposes, something like 50 per cent or 60 per cent of the potential purposes or potential markets, certainly in the United States, are denied to the issuers of Canadian bonds. This was the purpose of putting in the provision. I think if you extend it to Canadian equities it could become much more complicated.

The Chairman: Shall the paragraph carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall we proceed to paragraph 14?

Mr. Gordon: This paragraph of the resolution proposes that the period within which corporations are required to pay their income tax be shifted forward two months so that they will be on the same basis, and treated in the same way, as individuals. Now, the end result is that in a two-year period the revenues of the government will be increased by this measure by about $200 million. Then, at the conclusion of that period, corporations will pay their taxes at the same time and in the same way as individuals, with this exception, that they will pay on a quarterly basis whereas the individual wage earners pay it on a monthly basis. However, they will have to pay up the final payment by April 30 as the individual does now.

May I just correct that? I am sorry I made a mistake when I said the corporation paid on a quarterly basis. I am wrong: They pay on a monthly basis, too.

Mr. Fisher: Has the minister anything further to add to the indication he gave on Friday, that he was looking into the problem created by this change in so far as it affected, you may say, the lone wolf or single accountant, or people who catered to both individuals and small businesses?

Mr. Gordon: This problem relates to the next paragraph, but perhaps I should say now that I thought the points made by the hon. member for Port Arthur, the hon. member for Perth and a number of other people were very well taken. With the approval of the committee, I would suggest that that be taken care of in the bill.

Mr. Monteith: I should like, Mr. Chairman, to take issue with the minister on one minor matter. He makes a comparison between the corporation and the individual. In this respect, I would point out that the individual is estimated to have his income tax paid 100 per cent by the end of the year, whether it be by tax deduction or quarterly payments, whereas the corporation is still not estimated to have its tax paid until four months following the year end. This may be a minor matter, but I do not believe that they can be put on a completely comparable basis.

Mr. Gordon: The hon. member is quite right.

Mr. Monteith: I should like to ask the minister if he has ever had any thought that perhaps some minister of finance in the future will move this date two months forward again, or perhaps four months?

Mr. Gordon: I am not in a mood to forecast the future, Mr. Chairman, but perhaps that might happen.

The Chairman: Shall we go to paragraph 15?

Mr. Gordon: As I said a minute ago, this paragraph covers the date for filing. If it will meet with the approval of hon. members of the committee, I would suggest that the point that has been raised be taken care of in the bill. In this way, the problem that has been mentioned will be looked after.

Mr. Monteith: Is it contemplated that the present six months leeway for filing will be continued?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, that is the way we are thinking about it at the moment, and that will take care of the problem of getting in these returns within the time limit. This will make life possible—

Mr. Monteith: For the small town accountants.

Mr. Gordon: —for the small town accountants, like the hon. member for Perth.

The Chairman: Shall we go to paragraph 16?

Mr. Gordon: This paragraph of the resolution proposes that where undistributed income of a corporation passes from the corporation into the hands of its shareholders in a way which would otherwise avoid tax, the Minister of National Revenue may direct that it be included in the income of the recipient. It is not intended that this provision should be a permanent fixture in the law. It is hoped that within a short time, perhaps with the help of the findings of the royal commission on taxation, a different method of taxing the distribution of the surpluses of corporations can be devised to make unnecessary this particular measure.

In any event in the administration of this provision it is not intended to apply it to cases where the series of transactions in question had commenced prior to budget night. I think this point was raised early in the debate on the budget. As I remember it there were two objections, one that in the original form it could be interpreted as being retroactive in its application, and this was not intended, and the other point which was raised by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings was that there should be an appeal from the ruling, and this was agreed to and will be provided for in the bill.

But quite apart from that, the hope is that this particular problem of extracting corporate surpluses without the payment of tax by the individuals who receive them will be dealt with in some more suitable fashion following the report of the royal commission on taxation. Perhaps this is being too hopeful, but I am still hopeful that the royal commission might be able to deal with this particular question in time, so that it could be dealt with in the next budget; but it may take a year longer than that.

Mr. Fisher: I would like to ask the minister a question. I note that at the sixteenth conference of the Canadian tax foundation last year, in the forum on undistributed income, chaired by Mr. R. MacKay, he is quoted as saying:

> As you may be aware, discussion of possible solutions to our undistributed income problem at the legislative level has been hampered to some extent by the unofficial knowledge that the Minister of Finance was provided with reports on the subject by four practitioners who have been bound to silence.

I am interested in this particular problem, particularly the part that is called surplus stripping or dividend stripping, because I happened to be in Montreal two years ago—

I think it was Montreal—where a very well known accountant by the name of Stikeman gave a paper on the question of ability to pay. He made reference to the number of ways by which what I term sophisticated accountants were able to find loopholes in the act.

Of course he went into whether this was a moral issue, and whether it was tax avoidance or tax evasion, and he gave some illustrations as to how taxation could be avoided and these surpluses stripped. It was quite apparent that this was a subject which the accountants themselves wanted to bring out in the open.

I noticed, even in the relatively small community in the business sense of the lakehead, that several years ago a number of fairly small companies were changing their corporate organization, and a company that would be, say, Blank Ltd. would become Blank 1961 Ltd. I inquired why this was going on and I was told this was the way in which corporations all across the country were, in a sense, distributing the surpluses that had been built up, and doing it through loopholes in the act.

I was sufficiently intrigued to make inquiries, and I put some questions on the order paper last spring. I put them on the order paper some months after Mr. Stikeman had set out pretty clearly the main ways in which surpluses are stripped under the act, and after someone who is an employee or perhaps a business partner of Mr. Stikeman, Mr. P. N. Thorsteinsson, at the 1962 conference went into great detail in setting out the two main ways in which surpluses are stripped.

Now that I know how much the accountants and the department have been involved in this matter, I am rather critical of the kind of answers I was given. My first question was:

> What is the definition given by the Department of National Revenue (taxation division) to the procedure known colloquially amongst taxation accountants as "surplus strips"?

The answer was:

> There is no specific definition of the term "surplus strips".

There may not be any specific definition of the term "surplus strips" but it is quite obvious that Mr. Stikeman and Mr. Thorsteinsson know there are surplus strips. The answer went on to say:

> It is frequently used to refer to any procedures that have been followed for the purpose of transferring surpluses from corporations to their shareholders with a minimum of tax payment.

My second question was:

> What estimate does the department make of the number of surplus strips carried out in Canada in 1961 and 1962, and the estimated amount of money saved by the corporate taxpayers from going into the taxation revenue?

The answer was:

The department can make no estimate of the number entered into in 1961 and 1962. Most returns for 1962 have not yet been filed.

And this is the point I want to bring to the minister's attention:

As regards 1961, it is pointed out that usually no income is reported from these transactions, and that the department could not list them without first investigating to determine the facts of each case.

I want the minister to note that, because I was told by someone who has some experience in taxation matters that the scale of surplus strips in the last couple of years has become very high. I have been told that it was estimated as much as $500 million had been distributed. That, of course, was a guess made to me by someone familiar with taxation matters, but it is an indication of what is in one accountant's mind regarding the scale of the stripping.

My third question was:

Has the department considered appealing any surplus strip to the income tax appeal board and beyond in order to determine the legality of such a procedure?

The answer was—and this is what makes me wonder whether this legislation we have here is necessary:

The department will assess, and carry through to appeal if necessary, for all taxes payable under the provisions of the act.

In other words, judging from this answer the department is not particularly concerned.

My last question was:

If so, what sections of the Income Tax Act and its regulations are considered relevant to the matter?

The answer was:

The relevant sections of the Income Tax Act, depending on the various circumstances are sections 6, 8, 16, 21, 22, 27, 28, 67, 68, 81, 82, 85I, 105, 105A, 105B, 105C, 108, 137, 138.

In other words it is an awful big chunk of the Income Tax Act.

Out of this discussion of the problem, and the apparent fact that the tax foundation and certain tax accountants have been both concerned and very explicit on the nature of this business, and because of the fact that there has been some indication that four experts have investigated this as a result of a request by the Minister of Finance, I would like to know more from the minister about the temporary nature of this resolution. How will it really work in blocking this up, and is it going to raise or put in question the processes that have been developed—the kind of processes developed by Mr. Stikeman and Mr. Thorsteinsson as outlined in their papers?

If it is going to do this, then the question arises, why would these just be temporary measures? I would like to ask the minister whether he is considering what has been done in the past, that is, making in effect in law some kind of special dispensation at a special dispensation rate, so that you could have these one-shot dispensations of surpluses, say, at the rate of 10 per cent or 15 per cent? If it cannot be done that way—and I would like to know whether the minister has considered it—how does he plan to handle this particular problem of the accumulation of surpluses within corporations and the distaste for distributing them through the shareholders because of the imposition of taxation upon the individual? It seems to me that this is a very real problem. I am interested in it, if I could make a bow to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, because of the point he raised as to the philosophical question that is involved here, which is very intriguing, in the sense that he indicated there was a real philosophy in connection with pipe line companies. I wonder whether the minister could give us more on the philosophy here.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to begin by saying that I doubt very much if Mr. Stikeman would like to be referred to as an accountant. He is a distinguished member of the legal profession and is not an accountant. I will not say any more about that. I believe the hon. member at one time enjoyed life as a librarian, and I can assure him that neither the accounting nor the legal profession are very similar to that of a librarian, and they are also very different as distinguished between themselves.

The hon. member referred to a report made to the minister of finance by four experts, and I would like to assure him that they were four experts employed by a former minister of finance. They did make a report on this general subject. I think he referred to the fact that the report was a secret one. I was asked if it might be made available to the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Ontario for them to study. I released it to them and made it public at the time, so there is nothing secret about it.

As to the way to deal with this problem, I think the best answer I can give to that question is that, as the hon. member will appreciate, the budget contained quite a number of provisions designed to plug loopholes. There were a whole lot of them and we will be dealing with them in the succeeding paragraphs of this resolution. One of the big loopholes was this question of dividend stripping. I do not know where the term originated. I am informed that it originated in the United Kingdom, where I believe they go in for that sort of thing to a greater extent than perhaps we do here.

Mr. Fisher: Is that what the members who attended the NATO parliamentarians meeting in Paris saw last year?

Mr. Gordon: I was not on that trip, but I understand from some of those who were that there was none of that sort of thing there. As the hon. member pointed out in quoting Mr. Stikeman and his associates, there are a variety of ways in which surplus funds can be withdrawn from a corporation without attracting tax in the hands of the recipient. There are, as he pointed out, a whole series of sections in the act which in one way or another were designed to stop this. They have proved to be less than successful. It seemed to me that there was no simple answer. I certainly do not know the simple answer to this problem. On the other hand I did not feel that in introducing a series of measures to plug loopholes it would be very realistic unless we did something about this one. So pending the more detailed studies that the royal commission is engaged upon, it seemed to me that the only practical approach for the time being was to suggest to the house that the Minister of National Revenue be given authority to look through these complicated transactions to see if the net result was that money came out of a corporation and into the hands of a shareholder without the payment of tax. I do not like this way of doing things any more than anybody else does, but until we found a solution that will work, I thought it was better for me to recommend to the house that some action be taken, rather than just to let the thing go scot free for another year or another two years.

I have no doubt that the fact the minister will be given power to look through these transactions will put a stop to these things, even if there is an appeal. I think there should be an appeal; I thought that was a good suggestion, because after all one man's interpretation of a set of facts may be different from somebody else's. But as long as there is an appeal on the tax so that the general public is protected, it seems to me that the government revenue should also be protected; and this is a good way to provide that protection until such time as the people who have been asked to study this question in detail can come up with a solution, which may or may not prove to be satisfactory to hon. members.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, there are one or two features about this question upon which I would like to comment. First of all, the minister did indicate that he thought the tax should not be retroactive. I think he will agree that it is.

Mr. Gordon: No.

Mr. Lambert: It is, in effect, to the point that the minister may examine any transaction where a payment may be effected. It says in paragraph 16(c):

> —which amount, in the opinion of the minister, was received by the taxpayer as part of a transaction or series of transactions whenever effected—

I cannot put any other connotation on that but that it predated June 13—

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, may I just answer the hon. member's question?

Mr. Lambert: Yes.

Mr. Gordon: I think that in reading the words the hon. member is entitled to interpret it that way. In my explanation I pointed out —I would like to repeat the words that I used—that, moreover, in the administration of this provision it is not intended to apply to cases where the series of transactions in question commenced prior to budget night. I wanted to put that on the record and to make it clear that it is not intended to make this provision retroactive.

Mr. Lambert: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say something about the question of appeal. I was glad to hear the minister say it was a good suggestion, particularly because in this paragraph it says "in the opinion of the minister". There are two points I should like to raise with regard to a right of appeal. Supposing you do have a right of appeal? You can never really upset, on appeal, a discretion that has been properly exercised. That is difficult, unless it is spelled out in statute. I hope that goes in. There is a great deal of law on this subject. I have appeared before the appeal board and they have pointed out that if it is an administrative discretion properly exercised, it is difficult to upset. Therefore how can a taxpayer appearing before the appeal board or the exchequer court ever win an appeal before those tribunals that a discretion has been improperly exercised under paragraph 16, unless there is something in the law to this effect? The courts have never said there is anything wrong in law if somebody pays the least amount of tax possible. But I realize the minister is trying to plug the loophole and—

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member will allow me to interrupt him and draw his attention to paragraph 18, which deals with this matter.

Mr. Woolliams: I realize that, Mr. Chairman, but I still say it is a question of law. There is nothing to prevent anybody appearing before the appeal board; but it is very difficult to prove that an administrative discretion has been improperly exercised.

There is one other matter which makes it difficult. I think we should appreciate it is really not the discretion of the minister but of someone in his department. Some bureaucrat—and I use the word with respect—says that a file will be reviewed. A year or two passes and there is a four-year limitation. What has been done is legal but actually the law has been circumvented. As the hon. member for Port Arthur said, the tax has been cut down and in effect we are legislators unto ourselves. Even though parliament has created the law, in the opinion of a bureaucrat what you have done is to cut your tax position. The amount of tax which goes to the Department of National Revenue has been cut down and a reassessment is ordered with a view to more tax being paid. Not only in this section but all through the Income Tax Act you run into this problem. You cannot upset this discretion in an appeal court or in the exchequer court, as I have tried to do on many occasions.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I should like to anticipate the debate on section 18 with regard to the question of the opinion of the minister. This is one of the few areas in which there is a discretion under the Income Tax Act, one which I think historically we could go into at great length. After my connection of three years with the Department of National Revenue, which true enough was not as close as it might have been at times, nevertheless I have sufficient insight to know that discretion is the one thing which the minister does not want. If he has a discretion he is put under intolerable pressure. Be that as it may, no opportunity is given to those assessors to say: "Yes, you reduced your tax liability but we think you should not; therefore we are reassessing you". The minister will also readily understand that he will never appeal under section 18. The person who has a favourable ruling also will not appeal. Therefore only the taxpayer who is disappointed by a ruling or has what he considers an adverse ruling will appeal. The appeal is only to the exchequer court, not to the tax appeal board. I suggest to the hon. member that he is using a mallet to do the job of a tack hammer in many instances. Conversely there is a discouraging of appeals by forcing a taxpayer into the exchequer court. I would have preferred to do away entirely with the question of opinion. It may be administratively difficult to lay down the four corners of the rules governing dividend stripping, but I suggest to the minister that in the long run this would be preferable. Even if some people did slip through there is always the chance of coming back next year and plugging the holes.

There is an omnibus type of regulation here which I think goes against the principle of a great deal of the Income Tax Act. We should remember that the onus will be on the taxpayer to prove that the minister exercised his discretion in the wrong way. If the minister has appeared before the courts he will know that this is almost impossible to do, because the courts will not substitute their discretion for the discretion of an administrative official or the minister, provided the discretion has been lawfully exercised. With the greatest respect to the minister and the people who drafted this provision, I do not think the question of appeal means very much, and really the objections in this regard have not been met.

Mr. Gordon: I should like to say two things. First of all, you can let this thing go, but the government have decided that there are a lot of loopholes in the act which should be plugged. This is one of the most glaring ones. It is fine to say that we should nail down the four corners; but a few minutes ago, in answer to the hon. member for Port Arthur, I said that this was a highly complex issue. Governments have been trying to nail this one down for a long time, without success. If my hon. friend doubts me I would refer him to Mr. Stikeman's dissertations, to which the hon. member for Port Arthur referred. Or if he wants to get through one of these things I might refer him to Mr. Stikeman. It is hoped that the royal commission on taxation will come up with a formula which will deal with this subject. The question is, should we leave the gate open until then, or should we try and close it in this way—because I know of no other way to do it quickly—for the time being?

As far as appeal is concerned, with the greatest respect to the hon. member for Edmonton West, I think that when we come to section 18 he will see that the appeal provisions are much wider and cover much more than just an appeal against the discretion of the minister. I do not know whether I should discuss this now or wait until we get to it, but it is really intended to cover a lot more ground than the hon. member dealt with.

Mr. Woolliams: Would the minister consider this question; it is a suggestion as well as a question. This can be done in the United States, I believe, but not here. If the taxpayer were able to go to the officials of the department and say: "If I move A, B, and C in business, will this be a capital gain or something else?" it might be clear. The trouble is that it is difficult to see whether businesses are taxable because of an honest movement to better the business and to make it more efficient. That is a problem which business runs into.

Mr. Gordon: Speaking personally, and only personally, I could not agree more with the hon. member. I should like to see the day when any taxpayer or businessman can go to the department and ask for a prospective ruling. I am not suggesting that at the moment because my hon. friend the Minister of National Revenue would point out to me that his department is badly understaffed and simply could not handle it. Perhaps the answer to it is to give him sufficient staff to deal with these matters in the way which has been suggested, but I am afraid that cannot be done right away. It takes trained and expert staff to handle these matters, and such people cannot be picked up off the street in a week or two.

Mr. Turner: Mr. Chairman, having received an invitation on philosophical grounds twice in one evening I find it difficult to resist confessing that I was rather disturbed to find the hon. member for Port Arthur could not remember the name of the constituency which I represent. Because in better days he knew that part of Montreal which I represent pretty well. It embraces, among other parts of the city, St. Catherine Street and St. Lawrence-Main where the strip is not entirely unknown.

Mr. Fisher: What about the Jacques Cartier bridge?

Mr. Turner: No, not quite the Jacques Cartier bridge. In any event, he invited me to provide some philosophical uplift to this debate. I would agree with the minister that this is a loophole which has to be closed, but as long as it remained a loophole in the Income Tax Act the taxpayer was entitled to take advantage of it, if you will, and to exercise his common law right, as expressed by a famous Scottish judge and member of the privy council at the turn of the century, a precept which is still accepted as part of the law of this country, namely that a man is entitled to arrange his affairs so as to involve himself in the least amount of tax. So that while that loophole existed the taxpayers of this country were quite legitimately exercising their common law right to reduce the amount of tax they had to pay to the department.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

On the subject introduced by the hon. member for Bow River and mentioned by the hon. member for Edmonton West, I would agree that before resolution 18 was added there might have been something in what he said. Had there been no provision for appeal in the resolution, a taxpayer would have been severely limited because the courts have held that where there is no provision for appeal a taxpayer cannot bypass a minister's discretion unless it has not been rightly exercised, or it has not been exercised honestly and fairly, or the principle of natural justice has not been brought into play. As the hon. member for Edmonton West knows, this is a virtually impossible task.

Now provision for appeal has been made in resolution 18 and there is to be a review of the minister's discretionary power. It may be that the wording of resolution 18 is narrow. It says there is an appeal to the exchequer court, but the court may vacate any discretion of the minister only where none of the purposes of the transaction was to effect a surplus strip. Since every corporate transaction has a number of purposes, the company will have to prove that none of them was for that purpose and it might be difficult for a shareholder or a taxpayer to provide such proof.

While I am on my feet—I notice this is the standard ploy for retaining the attention of the house, or the committee, for a further period, may I ask the minister this: in his opening statement he said that this resolution would not apply to any transaction which came into force prior to the night of the budget. Do I understand the hon. gentleman to mean that it applies to transactions executed or consumated before the budget date? What would be the situation if shares issued as a result of one of these transactions prior to the budget date were subsequently redeemed? If they came within the provisions of this resolution the resolution would, in effect, be a retroactive one.

The Deputy Chairman: Does that complete the discussion on paragraph 16?

Mr. Turner: I was wondering whether the minister would direct his attention to those points, then I would possibly wish to ask him another question.

Mr. Gordon: I do not particularly want to direct my attention to it. I do not think I have any more to say. This provision is not intended to be retroactive, which means it does not apply to any series of transactions which were commenced before budget night. It does mean that if there is anything more than a gleam in the girl's eye, it does apply.

Mr. Nowlan: How do they assess the gleam in a girl's eye?

Mr. Gordon: I am too old for that.

Mr. Turner: I must say, in answer to the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, that the courts have been inquiring into the state of a man's digestion. The gleam in a girl's eye is just another step beyond that.

This provision applies to any redemption of preferred shares as a result of any bona fide reorganization, whether or not such a reorganization arises out of what is called dividend stripping. I suggest a distinction should be made between a transaction where preferred shares are issued to clear out past surpluses, where you do have what is known as a strip, and a preferred share situation which is built up in order to meet future earnings. The latter situation is a common one and is a standard move for a parent company to take income out of a subsidiary. I submit that this type of transaction should not be caught by the motive behind the resolution.

I believe the Department of National Revenue will be faced with serious problems in dealing with legitimate cases of estate planning where a man tries to pass his business into the hands of his family by setting up a holding company and issuing preferred shares as a consideration for the value of that business. This type of completely bona fide situation might well be caught by the wide drafting of the resolution as it stands at present. I therefore respectfully say to the minister and his officials that care must be taken to draw a line between perfectly legitimate mergers or corporate reorganization plans, and the type of situation which it is sought to combat. If the ordinary estate plan is caught, if the ordinary corporate reorganization is caught, if the ordinary family business is caught, the small town counsel mentioned by the hon. member for Perth, the small business man, are among those likely to be in difficulty. They do not have available to them the more sophisticated advice which may be found in the larger cities. We should be careful in drafting to protect the average small businessman or the family man arranging his business affairs, because these are the people who have recourse only to the type of local advice described by the hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Nowlan: I think the committee owes something to the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George for having dealt with this situation as clearly as he has. I have been advised by lawyers who are dealing with these problems every day that in view of the possible meanings of this provision they cannot advise their clients to enter into any transaction of this kind in any circumstances unless they have had a declaration by the department that they would not be liable for tax. Some of us who have had dealings with the Department of National Revenue know how difficult it is to get a ruling in advance as to what may happen. Certainly we are dealing with a situation which is causing a great deal of concern to the learned fraternity, accountants and others. I appreciate the fact that the minister is attempting to deal with this situation and to deal with the criticism which was raised on an earlier occasion; but I wish to emphasize what has been said by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George. There is a very real problem here, with respect, not to any of these huge corporations, though they might become involved, but with respect to ordinary Canadian citizens as well as citizens in the United States I am not sure when the bill is coming in, but I would hope the minister would arrange to delay its introduction until after the discussion on the resolution so that some modifications may possibly be made. I would hope that when the bill comes in there would be changes or some elasticity in the wording of it which would meet the criticism that has just been made.

Mr. Fisher: I should like to return to the question I have been trying to put, probably ineffectually, to the minister. Why does the minister not consider a means of gaining some revenue for the crown, maybe on a one shot basis, from this situation where so many of these corporations are being driven to this dividend stripping process? I notice that Mr. MacKay said in 1952:

> The government is therefore now facing a problem, long overdue, of finding some way to allow accumulated income on hand to be distributed without the imposition of such burdens of tax as the shareholders would be unwilling to pay.

He goes on to point out that this problem was met on a number of occasions in the past, in 1929, 1939 and 1949, when special provisions were made. It seems to me that this is the logic of an outsider looking at the situation. If you dam the loopholes the accumulation is likely to go on, and that is not going to attain the objective, which I assume would be in the minds of the taxation officials, of getting an opportunity to tax the revenue.

If this is the situation, then is there not some incentive that can be given to have these surpluses disbursed to the shareholders by some particular measure such as has been taken in the past?

Mr. Gordon: There is provision, of course, that under certain circumstances the surplus can be withdrawn upon payment of the 15 per cent tax which people are apparently unwilling to pay. That is one of the troubles. The provision is there and it does not apply in all cases, but to a large extent this stripping is to avoid the 15 per cent tax.

I think that the hon. member's point is very well taken and I would hope that the royal commission would come up with a solution perhaps along the line suggested by the hon. member. But in the meantime what should we do? Should we leave the loophole open or should we try to plug it until we find a solution? This is one of the things that the royal commission has been asked to do since this government came into power. I have had conversations with the chairman of the royal commission and have suggested to him that this is one of the things on which we would like an early study and an early recommendation. If I had been confident that we would get a recommendation within a very short time, perhaps it would have been better to leave this, but I do not think we can be certain of that. So it seemed to me that it was better to do something to plug this loophole for the time being, although I admit this is not an appropriate permanent solution. As I expect the hon. member knows, any company that pays a dividend of say 50 per cent of its earnings can distribute the other 50 per cent on payment of a 15 per cent tax, but that is something people do not want to pay.

The Deputy Chairman: Does this complete the discussion on paragraph 16?

Mr. Lambert: No, Mr. Chairman. I am wondering whether the minister considered proposing as an alternative the charging of a flat rate, say a 15 per cent levy. Thereby those people would carry out their intentions and we would also avoid some of the pitfalls which it would seem to be indicated may be engendered by the resolution, if it is not too well drafted.

Mr. Gordon: That might be a rough way of dealing with this thing. It may be the proposal that the royal commission may come up with, for all I know; but in this case anyway I thought it might be better to wait until I had the advice of the royal commission, and not make a snap decision of that kind which might appeal to the hon. member for Edmonton West but perhaps might prove to have some weaknesses in it.

Mr. Lambert: With the greatest respect, there was no snap decision. I would have thought that perhaps the snap decisions were those of other people, and that one should not get into those troubles.

The Deputy Chairman: Does this complete consideration of paragraph 16? Paragraph 17.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, the next paragraph, which deals with associated companies, proposes that the Minister of National Revenue be given the authority to look at the arrangements where a company or an enterprise is split up into a number of companies in order to reduce its income tax. This is another measure to plug loopholes. The need for this amendment arises because the first $35,000 of taxable income of a company is taxed at only 21 per cent compared with a rate of 50 per cent, or 52 per cent in the case of Ontario and Quebec, on taxable incomes in excess of $35,000.

Because of this differential in rates a strong incentive is provided for companies to be split into many smaller companies, each having an income of $35,000 or less. This process has been developed and engaged in by a wide variety of people. It is a loophole. If there are eight or 10 companies that are clearly associated and each one's affairs are arranged in such a way that their profits come to less than $35,000, in the aggregate they only pay a 21 per cent tax, whereas if they were merged as they normally would be they would be paying a 52 per cent tax, or a 50 per cent tax in provinces other than Ontario and Quebec. This would seem to me like a pretty big loophole and there would be a fairly good argument for doing something about it. That is the purpose of this provision.

Mr. Monteith: Is not the determination of this matter made on the basis of whether or not the companies are at arm's length?

Mr. Lambert: There are two things I should like to say. First of all, I still have some objections with regard to a minister exercising his discretion in examining these companies to see whether there is in fact any association. Fundamentally, however, I have a much greater objection to the manner in which taxation is imposed so far as associated companies are concerned. This is no secret. It is not the first time I have expressed my opposition, and I think it arises fundamentally from the distinction between so-called small business and large business, with this wide difference in the level of taxation involving the two rates, 21 per cent and 50 per cent.

I think it would have been far better for the minister to take his courage in his hands and say: All right, we are going to tax at a rate of 18 per cent, 20 per cent or X per cent right across the board on all corporate profits, but then have a rather heavy rate of taxation on withdrawals in the form of dividends, and so on, together with appropriate incentives, on the other hand, to loosen up surplus accounts.

To my mind there is a case for the grouping together of associated companies. The government is simply saying these are various departments of one large business, so let us treat them all as an entity. I do not know what the situation is like in central Canada but I do know that in western Canada this type of taxation has done a great deal to deter equity investment by an individual who takes a portion of a company by associating himself with local capital and local management, and encouraging it. I know of any number of companies which went into a city or town and enlisted local capital with local management to give that incentive of local interest.

Frankly, under this provision it is becoming more and more difficult to do this because everything is deemed to be in the hands of the principal company or the principal investor. I would suggest to the minister that we are taking a retrograde step with regard to this type of taxation, and the sooner we get out of it the better off we will be. I am quite opposed to this idea.

Mr. Gordon: May I ask a question? Would the hon. member think it would be proper to tax all companies at the 50 per cent level? Is that what he wants?

Mr. Lambert: No, not at the 50 per cent rate; I think that is strictly punitive taxation. I would have thought it would be preferable to tax them at some lower rate, and then tax the withdrawal at a much higher rate so that you leave the capital. This, I think, would be an incentive to Canadian capital to build up within the corporation. Frankly, this way we are driving available capital out of our corporate structure. It was for the purpose of allowing smaller corporations to develop and build up that we instituted this lower rate of 21 per cent. This was certainly stated to be the purpose of it. I think we are defeating that purpose now by this business of association.

I reiterate my opposition to it, and I feel that there is a discretion. I do not believe the appeal provision is satisfactory. The onus is still on the taxpayer who has an adverse ruling to take the minister to the exchequer court, and in the case of a small company this is not a light burden.

Mr. Francis: I understand that by legislation effective January, 1963, a number of companies have been deemed to be associated and some dissociated. Does the minister intend to respect the decisions that have been made concerning associated and dissociated companies?

My second question is, does the minister intend to give any consideration to the fact that some of these companies may be engaged in different types of activities that, in effect, two companies may have very different purposes and be in very different types of business, and will that have anything to do with the decision that might be made?

Mr. Gordon: Well, in answer to the hon. member's question, the fact that companies have not been deemed to be associated in the past may have nothing to do with the fact that they are associated now.

Mr. Lambert: If in the past the treasury has deemed two or three companies are not associated, and the agreements they have had have been accepted, can the minister now review them?

Mr. Gordon: In the past an assessor had no right to say any such thing.

Mr. Lambert: There were certain regulations in respect of associated companies. Certainly, scores and scores of agreements were made in legal offices throughout the country whereby you worked around your shareholdings so you did not have associated companies within the meaning of the regulations as they stood prior to June 13. Now, if those agreements have been accepted by the Department of National Revenue as not being caught by the net, are they now going to be subject to review by the minister who says: Oh yes, I think they really are and that the true intent is they are associated companies and therefore subject to tax?

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question. Does he make any differentiation between a company that is splitting up its holdings into various companies and a company that is expanding by virtue of the proprietor saying that he will take out the dividends from his stock and take this money out of the company. Then, he puts this money into a new company, a completely separate entity. I think there is a vast difference between splitting up a company for the purpose of avoiding tax and a person taking his money or his profits out of a company and then putting it into a new company. He will become a major shareholder in both companies, but the intentions are vastly different because he is actually expanding the economy, whereas in the other case there is a division of companies to avoid the payment of tax.

Mr. Gordon: I think we should get back to the original intention when this lower rate of taxation was introduced. The purpose was to help the small businessman, the retailer or small processor, with relatively small profits.

I think, originally, the ceiling was set at $25,000, or it may have been $20,000. Then, a year or two ago it was changed to $35,000. The purpose was to assist the smaller businessman by providing a lower rate of taxation than was provided for the larger corporations. The purpose was to help the smaller businessman, not the man who had a lot of capital or the investor in either one large corporation or a series of corporations.

I think the point has been made that when you have this wide differential in rate of taxation, 21 per cent as against 50 per cent, naturally that difference is an encouragement to people to try to get around it. Perhaps there is something to be said for the hon. member's suggestion that there should be a uniform rate of taxation, but it certainly is not a suggestion that would appeal to the small businessman in this country.

Mr. Monteith: If it is lower than 21 per cent?

Mr. Gordon: I would remind hon. members it is fairly difficult to get revenues. I do not think if you levelled up the 21 per cent to a higher rate it would really mean that the 50 per cent rate could be reduced appreciably. I could find out.

Mr. Monteith: You would need a terrific amount of research and statistics to ascertain that.

Mr. Gordon: I think we have the statistics. Here, we have a choice it seems to me of raising the tax for the small businesses in the country that are incorporated or, alternatively, trying to do something about people who are essentially getting around this provision. This is the purpose of this resolution.

Mr. Leboe: Perhaps I am a little thick between the ears, but I do not understand this. We want to expand industry. In my proposition I am not considering the man who establishes a subsidiary company. This is one thing. I am considering an individual who has earnings from a particular company, which is separate from the corporation, and who takes his money out of that corporation. Then he pays his tax on the money he takes out, but he reinvests that money in, say, an apartment block. The question I am interested in is whether this man, if he reinvests in some other enterprise, is going to be on the same plane as a corporation that has a subsidiary? I do not think he should be, and there should be a difference.

Mr. Gordon: I think the hon. member's example represents a small businessman who is no longer a small businessman. He is two or three small businessmen. I do not think there is any perfection in this, but I suspect that this man was not the person for whom this lower rate of tax was designed. He is a graduate from that.

Mr. Leboe: I thank the minister, but what I am after here is that a corporation which divides a company for the avoidance of tax is in a different position from a person who takes his savings out and establishes a new company.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Shall I rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act respecting the Department of Industry.

An act to amend the Export and Import Permits Act.

An act respecting Canada Permanent Toronto General Trust Company.

An act respecting Confederation Life Association.

An act respecting The Great-West Life Assurance Company.

An act respecting Chartered Trust Company.

An act to incorporate Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec.

An act respecting The Canada Board of American Missions of The United Lutheran Church in America.

An act respecting The Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Canada.

An act respecting The Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Western Canada.

An act to incorporate Fidelity Mortgage and Savings Corporation.

An act respecting General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada.

An act respecting Quebec Fire Assurance Company.

An act to incorporate Standard Trust Company.

An act to incorporate Ukrainian Canadian Foundation of Taras Shevchenko.

An act to incorporate The Union of Slavic Churches of Evangelical Christians and Slavic Baptists of Canada.

An act for approving certain expenditures authorized for the public service, and the application of certain amounts in the accounts, for the financial year ended the 31st March, 1963.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the acting house leader if he has any profound changes in the business for tomorrow?

Mr. Garland: No, Mr. Speaker, no profound changes, simply the business indicated by the house leader on Friday last. We will proceed with the budget resolutions and then the bills.

It being twenty minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

STATEMENT AGREED ON 21ST JULY, 1963 BETWEEN REPRESENTATIVES OF CANADA AND THE UNITED STATES

Representatives of Canada and the United States met during the week end to appraise the impact on the Canadian financial markets of the proposed United States interest equalization tax.

The two governments recognized the need for effective action to improve the balance of payments position of both countries and are both equally determined that such action shall not impair the intimate economic relationships between the two countries, nor impede the growth essential for both economies.

For many years the capital markets of the two countries have been closely interconnected, and United States exports of capital to Canada have financed a substantial portion of the Canadian current account deficit with the U.S. This need continues. A portion of these flows must be supplied through the sale of new issues of Canadian securities in American markets. U.S. officials had considered that ample flows for these needs would continue under the proposed interest equalization tax. However, Canadian representatives stated that this would require a very substantial rise in the entire Canadian interest rate structure. It was recognized by both governments that such a development would be undesirable in present economic circumstances.

In the light of this situation U.S. officials agreed that the draft legislation to be submitted to the congress would include a provision authorizing a procedure under which the President could modify the application of the tax by the establishment from time to time of exemptions, which he could make either unlimited or limited in amount. The President would thus have the flexibility to permit tax free purchases of new issues needed to maintain the unimpeded flow of trade and payments between the two countries, and to take care of exceptional situations that might arise in the case of other countries. U.S. officials made clear that this did not modify their proposals regarding the taxation of transactions in outstanding securities; over the past year such transactions between Canada and the U.S. have not been a major factor.

The Canadian authorities stated that it would not be the desire or intention of Canada to increase her foreign exchange reserves through the proceeds of borrowings in the United States, and it is the hope and expectation of both governments that by maintaining close consultation it will prove possible in practice to have an unlimited exemption for Canada without adverse effect on the United States.

It was agreed that active consultations would continue to strengthen the close economic relations between the two countries and at the same time facilitate measures for making the maximum practicable contributions to economic expansion and the strength and stability of both currencies.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, July 23, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

Sixth report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. Wahn.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

LAOS—TABLING OF MAJORITY REPORTS OF INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): One year ago today, on July 23, 1962, an international agreement on the Laotian question was signed at Geneva. The 13 governments whose representatives signed that agreement solemnly declared that they would "respect and observe in every way the sovereignty, independence, neutrality, unity and territorial integrity" of the kingdom of Laos.

Unfortunately during the past year there has not been much progress in that direction. The administration and armed forces of Laos have not been integrated. The country remains divided and there has been a renewal, on a limited scale, of fighting. The international commission of which Canada, India and Poland are members, has not been allowed to circulate freely through the country in order to supervise the implementation of the agreement.

However, the international commission has made a number of limited investigations and on May 17, 1963, three majority reports were submitted by the Canadian and Indian commissioners, the Polish commissioner having declined to associate himself with them. In accordance with the Geneva protocol these reports are strictly factual, but from a reading of them it is quite clear that the Pathet Lao and their dissident neutralist allies are responsible for the recent deterioration of the situation in Laos.

I wish to table copies of these three reports numbered 22, 23 and 24. Canada will of course continue, as a member of the commission, to strive for Laotian unity and neutrality, the objectives of the Geneva agreement of 1962.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house consent to the tabling of these reports?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

28902-5—159½

FINANCE

INQUIRIES RESPECTING U.S. MODIFICATION OF TAX IMPOSED

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in connection with the discussions which took place in Washington either on Friday or on Saturday between the representatives of Canada and the United States regarding the financial payments question of the United States and the action being taken thereon.

While the communique makes no reference to this, is it a fact that the Canadian representatives agreed to strive for a modest decline in the Canadian interest rate as one of the conditions basic and precedent to the arrangements which were entered upon?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I will ask the Minister of Finance to answer that question. He is more familiar with the details of the discussions than I am.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the right hon. gentleman may have had reference to a press report during the morning respecting a statement that Secretary of the Treasury Dillon is reputed to have made before a congressional committee today. I do not think it was clear from the reports that came over the wires just what Secretary Dillon actually did say or in what context, but I can assure the right hon. gentleman that there was no undertaking by the Canadian representatives in the connection about which he has inquired.

In the course of the discussions in Washington, the Canadian representatives explained that Canadian monetary policy had been directed to encouraging credit conditions which would favour domestic economic expansion and employment while maintaining the international balance and stability of the Canadian dollar. What they did say and emphasize was that the imposition of the proposed tax on Canada would have resulted in a substantially higher level of interest rates in Canada, which it was obviously desired to avoid in present economic circumstances. But they did not make any definite statements, as suggested in these press reports, that Canada would be looking toward a lower rate of interest.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, may I also ask the Minister of Finance whether the report in the New York Times is correct to the effect that on Friday the Bank of Canada was forced to purchase $250 million in Canadian dollars to stabilize our dollar at the rate of 92.5 cents in relation to United States currency?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, it is not customary and I am not even sure if it is proper to announce the particular transactions on any particular day that have taken place in the exchange fund, but I can assure the right hon. gentleman that the report is highly exaggerated.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the negotiations held over the week end between Canadian and United States officials. Did these negotiations reveal whether the United States has a plan of administration to overcome the administrative difficulties that caused the withdrawal of the stock sales or transaction tax here?

Mr. Gordon: I do not think this particular question was discussed over the week end, certainly not in any serious way, although I think it is fair to comment that at least some of the difficulties that were encountered in connection with the proposed take-over tax in Canada will probably be encountered in connection with the United States tax. I do not think it would be appropriate for me to say any more than that, but there certainly will be difficulties.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Was there any quid pro quo concession made to the United States government in return for giving Canada a certain exemption under their foreign security tax?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Speaker. There were no arrangements or agreements or conditions or undertakings that were not set out in the joint communique.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Finance in connection with the exemption. Was the President's power of exemption of general application to all 22 countries, or was it applicable to Canada only?

Mr. Gordon: Well, Mr. Speaker, the reference to this in the communique was that the United States officials agreed that draft legislation to be submitted would include this provision. There was a reference later to the hope and expectation of both governments that by the maintenance of close consultation it will prove possible in practice to have an unlimited exemption for Canada without adverse effect on the United States. I do not think there is any question of this being done for Canada, but just what form the legislation will take I am not sure, because I have not seen it.

SPECIAL ASSISTANTS—CERTIFICATE OF DEPUTY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Finance if he is yet in a position to answer my question of yesterday regarding the certificates required under section 32 of the Financial Administration Act before payment is made for work done under a service contract?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I am not yet in a position to answer that question. It referred among other things to certain actions by the deputy minister, and I would wish to consult him before giving an answer.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NUCLEAR TEST BAN—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MOSCOW CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will he give the house a progress report on the test ban negotiations that are now proceeding in Moscow?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The house will recall that the hon. member for Medicine Hat asked a somewhat similar question yesterday. I said I hoped, perhaps today or later this week, to make a statement. I do not believe I can add anything to what I said last week in a tentative way with regard to the discussions that were then taking place, and which, as of this date, continue.

I can say now, however, that there is every reason to believe that great progress has been made with regard to a test ban in the three environments. I hope before the end of the week to be able to say something more concrete arising out of what I hope will be a satisfactory conclusion reached in Moscow.

STATEMENT RESPECTING FISHING WITHIN 12 MILE ZONE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): On Friday the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary asked me if nationals from other countries are still fishing within the 12 mile limit off Canada's coasts, according to historic rights. I now wish to make a reply as I promised.

Nationals from other countries are still fishing within the 12 mile limit off Canada's coasts. It will be recalled that the Prime Minister announced in this house on June 4 that the proposed 12 mile exclusive fisheries zone would be established as of mid May 1964. It is possible that some nationals from other countries contend that they are fishing within 12 miles of Canada's coasts in accordance with historic rights. It will be recalled that in the Prime Minister's statement he said that the government recognizes that the establishment of a 12 mile exclusive fisheries zone and the implementation of the straight base line system may necessarily have implications for other countries which have treaty fishing rights or claims to historic fishing rights off Canada's shores. Any action taken by Canada on these matters will take into consideration the interests of the countries thus affected.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

PERSONNEL OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON BICULTURALISM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I have a question I should like to direct to the Prime Minister. Having in mind that yesterday the Prime Minister announced the appointment of an excellent commission on the subject of biculturalism whose members come from the maritimes, the two central provinces and the prairies, will the government not consider taking a second look at completing the regional representation on this commission by appointing a member from British Columbia?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): It would, of course, be impossible to have every province represented on the commission as well as all ethnic—

Some hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Pearson: —as well as all ethnic and racial groups, without the commission acquiring a size which would make its operation unwieldy. In so far as a particular representative from British Columbia is concerned, I shall be glad to consider the matter in the light of the hon. gentleman's question.

(Translation):

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-l'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. With regard to the announcement concerning the inquiry on biculturalism, can the Prime Minister tell the house whether the members of the commission will work on a full time basis, and what will the remuneration of the members and co-chairmen be?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I cannot say whether all the commissioners will be occupied full time with the commission, but they will give all the time necessary, I am sure, for the discharge of this important duty.

(Translation):

INFORMATION REPORTEDLY GIVEN TO "TIME" MAGAZINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council.

With respect to the publication in Time magazine of details concerning the royal commission on biculturalism, can the President of the Privy Council explain why such information was given to Time magazine before being given to House of Commons or to Canadian journalists?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have not read the report published in Time magazine.

(Text):

[Later:]

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. When the Prime Minister announced yesterday the names of the members of the commission on biculturalism and bilingualism it was noticeable that there were only two members of European ethnic origin included—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member please state his question.

Mr. Rapp: Would the Prime Minister not give consideration to increasing the membership of the commission so as to have representatives from some of the larger ethnic groups in Canada? This would not only make the commission—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I have never shouted down anyone in this house as long as I have been here. Every time I ask a question, a proper question, I hear shouts and I am not in a position to bring my question to the attention of the minister. Would you please give me an opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to finish my question? I continue. This would not only make the commission a truly Canadian one but it would also have more appropriate representation.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if all the larger ethnic groups were represented I am afraid the commission might be unwieldy in size to do the job efficiently that it is meant to do for all Canadians.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. I notice from order in council No. 1106 dated July 19, 1963 that provision is made for the position of chief executive officer to the royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, and the co-chairman, Andre Laurendeau, has been appointed to this post. I would ask what are the duties of a chief executive officer on such a royal commission?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it has been felt that in a commission of this kind, of this importance and size, one of the members should have the administrative responsibility for the commission as one of the co-chairmen. That will be the main duty of the chief executive officer, to be in charge of the administrative activities of the commission.

(Translation):

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING WITH PREMIER LESAGE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Can the minister tell whether during the conference he and some of his colleagues had over the week end with Mr. Lesage in Quebec city, the setting up of a permanent organization for federal-provincial co-operation was mentioned, for instance a secretariat?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, because the discussions were of a private character.

(Text):

LABOUR CONDITIONS

GREAT LAKES—DELAY IN LOADING CANADIAN SHIP AT CHICAGO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the government planning further action to free the Canadian ship which continues to be boycotted in the port of Chicago, where she has been stranded for more than 80 days?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall turn that question over to the Minister of Labour.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the hon. gentleman I think it is inaccurate to use the words "to free the ship", because this ship is not imprisoned in the port of Chicago. It is true that the ship has gone there to be loaded and that the union has refused to load it.

As the hon. gentleman may know, as a result of what I consider to be extraordinary assistance from the justice department and the labour department of the United States, the Chicago court did issue an injunction which would have had the effect of ordering the affected union members to load the ship. However, the fact is that the union members refused to obey the injunction, and about three weeks ago, as a further legal step, the national labour relations board attempted to lay the foundation for contempt proceedings against the union members. As a result of legal difficulties that action was quashed, however, and no further legal action was taken on this particular legal injunction until today.

The Canadian government has made quite frequent representations to the United States authorities and has sought the co-operation of these authorities, particularly with respect to the port situation in Chicago, which is very difficult. I might add that this particular problem of the Howard L. Shaw appears to be a symbol of the general problem now engaging the attention of the government as a result of the Norris report.

Mr. Thompson: As a supplementary question, does the minister not regard this as a matter of extreme importance, in view of the fact that the ship is running out of coal and the members of the crew cannot even get water or food delivered on the ship?

Mr. MacEachen: It is serious, Mr. Speaker, because I understand that the owners of the ship must make a decision within the next day or so as to whether they ought to take the ship out of that port because of a shortage of coal. My information is that the ship cannot take on coal because of the refusal on the part of the people who load the ship. However, I have not been told anything about lack of food or water for the crew members.

Mr. Thompson: As a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—I had intended to ask this as a separate question but it relates directly to this problem. In its review of the Norris report recommendations and the continuing urgent situation regarding great lakes shipping, is the government considering legislation which would require trade unions operating in Canada to have their head offices in Canada, that their elected officers be Canadians, and that their assets be retained in this country?

Mr. MacEachen: The Canadian government has not undertaken any examination of this larger problem of controlling Canadian unions beyond consideration of what action might be taken to deal with the rather extraordinary situation that now prevails in great lakes shipping.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Labour a supplementary question with respect to this very important matter. Would the minister ask the secretary of labour of the United States to hold a joint meeting with him as quickly as possible, and when that joint meeting is held would he impress upon the United States government the necessity of taking more positive action than has been taken up until now to end the harassment of Canadian ships in United States ports?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, at present arrangements are being made to convene a meeting with the secretary of labour of the United States as quickly as possible and as the opportune time arises. The Canadian government has attempted to secure, and I think successfully, the co-operation of the United States authorities. But as the United States authorities state, they must operate within their own law as it applies to this particular situation in Chicago.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. May I ask the Minister of Labour how soon he expects to be able to bring down measures designed to implement the recommendations of the Norris commission.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I should like to tell my hon. friend that at present the interdepartmental committee is meeting regularly to consider the report. I expect that very soon a preliminary report will be made to me, which I will bring to the government for consideration as quickly as possible.

(Translation):

THREATENED STRIKE ON U.S. RAILROADS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. It deals with an article published in La Presse on Monday, July 22, 1963, about the possibility of a railroad strike in the United States.

Has the government taken any measure with regard to this possible strike that would affect Canadian railway lines running through the United States?

(Text):

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I would prefer to take that question as notice.

(Translation):

UNEMPLOYMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO IMPROVE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

In view of the increasing number of unemployed in Canada, and especially in the province of Quebec, can the minister tell the house whether the government intends to take definite actions to correct this alarming situation?

(Text):

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on June 10 I made a statement to the house with respect to special employment and manpower development programs. These programs will be prosecuted vigorously by the government. At present a number of those programs are under examination, which will allow us to announce, I hope at an early date, regulations applying to them.

Mr. Ricard: A supplementary question. Can the minister assure the house that these programs will be ready for next winter?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the purpose in making the announcement at such an early date, earlier than ever before, was to make it possible to have these programs available and ready for implementation long before the onset of seasonally high winter unemployment.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Is it not a fact that seven of the nine programs announced were put into effect by the former government and are still in existence now?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, that is what one would call a provocative question.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour concerning the answer which he gave a while ago. Is the government intending to apply as quickly as possible some of the recommendations made in the Gill report on unemployment across Canada at the moment?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. MacEachen: The principal recommendations of the Gill committee report have to do with far reaching changes in the method of applying unemployment insurance. These recommendations are presently under consideration. They are not intended, in themselves, to deal with the problems referred to in the previous questions. I might add, however, that one or two recommendations of the Gill committee are under immediate consideration and it may be possible to make an announcement at an early date with respect to those.

(Translation):

PUBLIC SERVICE

GLASSCO COMMISSION—IMPLEMENTATION OF THERRIEN REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council. Can he tell us if the special committee set up within the cabinet to apply the recommendations of the Therrien report will continue its work? Can he tell us also whether steps have actually been taken concerning the implementation of the Therrien report?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, twice already I have informed the house that a special committee of the cabinet had been set up for that purpose, that it was pursuing its work, that it intended to go far beyond the recommendations of the Therrien report and that, by September, we hope to have a general plan which could be applied by stages in our country.

(Text):

WORLD FAIR

APPOINTMENT TO FILL VACANCY ON BOARD OF DIRECTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. G. Hahn (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. I would like to ask him when the vacancy on the board of directors of the Montreal world fair is going to be filled.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it will be filled very shortly, within a day or two, by the appointment of Hon. George Hees.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Can he inform us whether it is true that Mayor Jean Drapeau, of Montreal, intends to inaugurate by an official ceremony the start of work on the Montreal world fair?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I think I can answer this question in the affirmative. The ceremony will take place on a date that remains to be decided upon.

(Text):

PENSIONS

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. Has the Secretary of State yet had an opportunity to consult his colleagues as he promised he would, about the possibility of again bringing before the house before the summer recess the resolution regarding the Canada pension plan? If so, can he say whether this resolution will again be before us shortly?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, it is quite correct that I gave such an undertaking to the house, but the hon. gentleman will remember that I gave it in a certain context. It did not seem to me that until the meeting with the premiers had taken place I could have very useful consultation with my colleagues. As soon as that meeting has been concluded I will have the consultation I promised.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Secretary of State as house leader tell us where we can get extra stenographic help to answer all the letters we are getting from disappointed old age pensioners?

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman is getting the same number of letters as I am, he will find the existing staff can deal with them. I believe the public generally are quite convinced of the sincerity of the government and need no further reassurance.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REPORTED ACTIVITIES OF U.S. HYDRO ENGINEER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources a question of national significance based on local incidents. In view of the fact that Dr.

Krutilla, a well known United States hydro engineer, and a representative of the B.C. hydro authority under the sponsorship of Dr. Keenleyside have been visiting Arrow lakes points trying to persuade local residents that the proposed draft Columbia river treaty will be of great advantage to Canada and to them, would the minister inform the house whether Dr. Krutilla's intervention in Canadian affairs has the blessing and approval of the government of Canada?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think this question involves the conveyance to the house by the hon. member of further information concerning the Columbia river treaty. I must admit that much of the information the hon. member has brought to us so far has been authentic. As of this moment I have no knowledge whether Dr. Krutilla is in Canada; therefore I do not know what he is saying or whether he is saying anything. Further than that, I might remind the hon. member, that if that gentleman should be in the employ of the province of British Columbia I would not be disposed to agree that he is intervening in Canadian affairs, because that government and other governments and individuals have brought in authorities from outside. However, I will endeavour to obtain some information for the hon. member and try to let him know tomorrow.

TRADE

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH RED CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister bring the house up to date on the proposed wheat sale to China, which some time ago was being finalized and which means so much to western Canada? Can he assure the house that the wheat board is being given all necessary credit in order to finalize this deal, because of its very necessity in view of the large crop in western Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am not sure now what the question was, Mr. Speaker, but I can assure the hon. member that negotiations are proceeding in what I consider the normal way and I am getting regular reports. I have never at any time suggested that these negotiations were not going to be very difficult, because they are; but I am hoping that shortly—I do not know when it will be because it depends on when the Chinese and the wheat board conclude their negotiations—I will be able to make an announcement in this house.

INCOME TAX

QUEBEC—REPORTED DELAY IN MAKING REFUNDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): I wish to address a question to the Minister of National Revenue. Can the minister take steps to correct the situation existing, especially in the districts of Saguenay and lake St. John, concerning delays in making refunds of income tax in those areas?

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): All the action which can be taken has been taken, but I should be glad to bring the hon. member's question to the attention of our officials. If the hon. member has any specific case in mind I would be glad to deal with it.

TRANSPORT

USE OF DEPARTMENTAL PLANE FOR TRIP TO QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): May I ask the Minister of Transport whether he authorized the use of a Department of Transport aircraft last week end by some of his colleagues to make a trip of a private nature to Quebec?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): It was not of a private nature.

Mr. Aiken: I did not hear the reply the minister made.

Mr. McIlraith: It will be printed in Hansard.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, a few minutes ago, in answer to a question by my hon. friend from Parry Sound-Muskoka, I distinctly heard the Minister of Transport say something, but his reply was not loud enough to be heard by most hon. members. He was asked by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka if he would repeat his answer, but again there was no audible reply. So I suggest with all deference to the minister that he be courteous enough to repeat his original answer.

Mr. McIlraith: On the point of order, we have a situation here where the hon. member put a question without notice, but to which nevertheless I gave a clear and definite answer.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. McIlraith: I regret very much if the hon. member did not hear it. It must have been due to noise beyond my control, because I certainly gave an answer in a sufficiently loud and clear way.

Some hon. Members: Answer.

Mr. McIlraith: I have not the question which was asked. If the hon. member would care to pose his question again—I would ask him to put it in the identical language which he used before—I will give him the answer again.

Mr. Aiken: My question was, did the Minister of Transport authorize the use of a Department of Transport aircraft last week end for some of his colleagues to make a trip of a private nature?

Mr. McIlraith: My answer was, the trip was not of a private nature.

Mr. Martineau: On a question of privilege, a few minutes ago I asked the Minister of Justice for some information with regard to that trip. I asked him if the question of setting up a permanent organization for consultation with the province of Quebec was discussed with Mr. Lesage in the course of the meeting, and the Minister of Justice definitely answered "No, because the trip was of a private nature".

Some hon. Members: No.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Apparently the hon. member did not listen to the answer I gave, otherwise he would not have prefaced his question of privilege in the manner he did. My first answer to the question was no, but I said the discussions were of a private nature.

An hon. Member: Entirely different.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask the Minister of Justice this. If he and the other ministers discussed with the premier of the province of Quebec matters connected with public business, what was the purpose of this discussion? It was not a private meeting. Therefore the question put by my hon. friend was perfectly proper.

Mr. Chevrier: Is the Leader of the Opposition making a point of order?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am asking a question.

Mr. Chevrier: If he is, he is clearly out of order, as was the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: No lesson.

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. gentleman says "no lesson". Certainly there is no lesson to be taught by the other side of the house, particularly so far as the use of planes is concerned; and I have been reminded that the Leader of the Opposition should be the last one to refer to trips to the city of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me we are embarking on a fishing trip. Has the Leader of the Opposition anything to add?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise on a question of privilege and say to the hon. gentleman that this kind of smokescreen does not meet the situation. As far as the use of aircraft is concerned, I am willing to have that looked into at any time, and to deal with the trips of members of the former government, the St. Laurent government, to Florida and elsewhere.

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. In connection with the authorization given by the Department of Transport to enable the present government to use its aircraft, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice how he could obtain an authorization of the Minister of Transport who at that time was flying in another jet in western Canada?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the second part of the question, the hon. member should put it to the responsible minister. As for the first part, there is no doubt that, along with the other ministers, I was fully authorized to fly in an airplane of the Department of Transport to go to Quebec city last Sunday.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question? Since the Minister of Justice said that his meeting was of a public character, could he tell the house what was the purpose of that meeting?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I never said what the hon. member has just mentioned in the preamble of his question. Apparently, the hon. member did not understand my first and second answers. Nevertheless, as I said a moment ago—

Mr. Grafftey: Then, give the answer.

Mr. Chevrier: If you would kindly wait, I shall give the answer to you who are jumping like a—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chevrier: I wish to remind you that the questions—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I had hoped at five minutes after three that we were reaching the end of the question period, and I was about to congratulate hon. members.

Mr. Pigeon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I think we have gone far enough into this matter. Two ministers have attempted to reply, and surely hon. members must be satisfied. The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Martineau: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the minister started to give an answer to my question, and I hope he will at least be permitted to terminate his answer.

Mr. Chevrier: If the hon. member would put his question clearly so the house could understand it perhaps I could then deal with it.

Mr. Martineau: I would be very glad to do that.

An hon. Member: No preamble.

Mr. Martineau: What was the purpose of the minister's week-end meeting with Premier Lesage?

Mr. Chevrier: I have replied to that question on three occasions both today and yesterday. The meetings were of a private nature and dealt with federal and provincial matters.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A private meeting at public expense.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Pigeon: On a point or order, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: It is my right to raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker, and you will then decide.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: It is my right to submit a point of order. The Speaker will decide.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I will listen to the point of order.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I raise a point of order. The Minister of Justice mentioned that he travelled with his colleagues in a Canadian government aircraft paid for by the Canadian taxpayers. If they did so on the occasion of an official visit, I feel it is in the interests of the Canadian people to know the reason why the minister went to Quebec. I maintain that we are entitled to know.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. There is no point of order there.

COMMUNICATIONS

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO CONTROL OF NEWS GATHERING AND DISSEMINATING MEDIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Some time ago, when the Prime Minister was in hospital, I directed a question to the Minister of Justice asking whether the government would consider the establishment of a royal commission to determine whether the concentration of control of news gathering and disseminating media had reached a point at which it was a menace to the public interest. At that time the Minister of Justice said he would refer the matter to the Prime Minister on his return. I wonder whether the right hon. gentleman has had time to take it under consideration.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, I am afraid I have not had time to give consideration to that very important matter.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Justice a question following on the one relating to a commission to examine the trend of the press toward consolidation. I should like to ask the minister whether the restraining order of the restrictive trade practices commission with regard to Pacific Press has been outmoded or is no longer in effect as a result of the purchase of the Vancouver Sun by F. P. Publications?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I shall have to take that question as notice and give my hon. friend a reply later.

GRAIN

WHEAT—REQUEST FOR FORECAST OF EXPORT VOLUME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the large wheat crop expected in the prairie region this fall, would the minister care to forecast the expected volume of wheat to be exported in the crop year 1963-64 beginning August 1?

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I do not think it should take a question on the order paper to ask the minister to forecast what he thinks will be the volume of wheat exported.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this is obviously not a question of urgency since the new crop year has not yet begun. The question the hon. member asked me was, would I care to make a forecast, and the answer is no.

(Translation):

NATIONAL DEFENCE

BAGOTVILLE, QUE.—STORAGE OF NUCLEAR ARMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the Minister of National Defence? Will the minister take into consideration the strong representations submitted by individuals and public organizations of the Saguenay area concerning the storage of nuclear warheads at the Bagotville military airport?

(Text):

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we listen to all representations from all parts of the country.

Mr. Pigeon: The Voice of Women, too?

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INCOME TAX ACT

Resolved,—That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide among other things:

1. That with respect to new depreciable property of a prescribed class acquired in the period of 24 months commencing June 14, 1963 capital cost allowances be computed on a straight line basis at a prescribed rate not exceeding 50 per cent per annum if the property has been acquired by a taxpayer in a taxation year for a manufacturing or processing business in Canada and the taxpayer is

(a) an individual who was resident in Canada for a period of not less than 183 days in the year, or

(b) a corporation that in the year had a degree of Canadian ownership and control;

and for the purposes of this paragraph,

(c) a corporation has a degree of Canadian ownership and control in a year if the corporation throughout the 60 day period immediately preceding the year (or if the corporation did not have a preceding year, throughout the 60 day period commencing on the first day of the year) complied with the following conditions:

(i) the corporation was resident in Canada,

(ii) either

(A) not less than 25 per cent of its voting shares were beneficially owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, one or more corporations controlled in Canada or a combination thereof, or

(B) the voting shares of the corporation were listed on a recognized stock exchange in Canada and it is established, in prescribed manner, that no one non-resident shareholder owned beneficially, together with any other person associated with him at any time in the period, more than 75 per cent of the voting shares of the corporation, and

(iii) where the year commences after December 31, 1964, the number of directors of the corporation who were resident in Canada was not less than 25 per cent of the total number of directors of the corporation;

or complied with the conditions specified in clauses (i) and (iii) and was a wholly-owned subsidiary of a corporation that throughout the 60 day period complied with the conditions specified in clauses (i), (ii) and (iii); and

(d) a corporation is controlled in Canada at a particular time if at that time it complies with the following conditions:

(i) the corporation is resident in Canada, and

(ii) not less than 51 per cent of its voting shares are beneficially owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, one or more corporations controlled in Canada or a combination thereof.

2. That a taxpayer whose business in a prescribed area of Canada has been certified to be a new manufacturing or processing business that commenced commercial operations in the period of 24 months commencing with the date on which any enactment based on this paragraph is assented to be exempt from tax on the income from that business for a period of 36 months from the date certified to be the date of commencement of operations, and that the rate of capital cost allowances for new depreciable property of a prescribed class acquired by the said taxpayer in the said 24 months period for such business be computed on a straight line basis at a prescribed rate not exceeding 50 per cent per annum.

3. That with effect for 1964 and subsequent taxation years section 40A of the act, which provides for a deduction from the tax otherwise payable by a manufacturing and processing corporation, be repealed.

4. That with respect to expenses incurred after June 13, 1963 a corporation whose principal business is operating a pipe line for the transmission of oil or natural gas be allowed to deduct in computing income the drilling and exploration expenses, including all general geological and geophysical expenses, incurred by it on or in respect of exploring for petroleum or natural gas in Canada and the prospecting, exploration and development expenses incurred by it in searching for minerals in Canada.

5. That for the 1963 and subsequent taxation years a dividend received by a person resident in Canada from a corporation that throughout its taxation year in which the dividend is paid or credited

(a) is taxable as a non-resident corporation carrying on business in Canada,

(b) derives substantially all of its income from sources in Canada, and

(c) has its shares listed on a recognized stock exchange in Canada be deemed to be a dividend from sources in Canada paid or credited by a taxable corporation within the meaning of section 38 of the act.

6. That the 15 per cent rate of tax payable by a non-resident person on dividends paid or credited to him by a person resident in Canada be reduced to 10 per cent with respect to dividends paid or credited after June 13, 1963 by a corporation that in its taxation year in which the dividend is paid or credited has a degree of Canadian ownership or control within the meaning of paragraph 1.

7. That the 15 per cent rate of tax payable by a non-resident person on dividends paid or credited to him by a person resident in Canada be increased to 20 per cent with respect to dividends paid or credited after December 31, 1964 by a corporation that in its taxation year in which the dividend is paid or credited does not have a degree of Canadian ownership or control within the meaning of paragraph 1.

8. That where a corporation resident in Canada that in any year before 1967 was not a corporation that had a degree of Canadian ownership and control, within the meaning of paragraph 1, becomes a corporation that in 1967 has such a degree of Canadian ownership and control, a non-resident person shall be entitled to a refund equal to

(a) 5 per cent of any dividends paid or credited by the corporation to him after June 13, 1963 and before January 1, 1965, in respect of which he has paid a tax of 15 per cent to Canada, and

(b) 10 per cent of any dividends paid or credited by the corporation to him after December 31, 1964 and before January 1, 1967, in respect of which he has paid a tax of 20 per cent to Canada.

9. That where a corporation (other than a non-resident-owned investment corporation) paid or credited dividends during the period commencing on June 14, 1963 and ending on December 31, 1964 in taxation years in which it did not have a degree of Canadian ownership and control within the meaning of paragraph 1, the amount of which dividends exceeds five fourths of the amount of dividends paid or credited by the corporation during that number of days immediately preceding June 14, 1963 that is equal to the number of days in the period commencing on June 14, 1963 and ending on December 31, 1964 that were included in taxation years in which the corporation did not have such a degree of Canadian ownership and control, the corporation shall, on or before January 31, 1965, pay a special tax equal to 5 per cent of the amount of the excess.

10. That with respect to income earned after December 31, 1964 the 15 per cent tax imposed by part IIIA of the act on a non-resident corporation carrying on business in Canada be 20 per cent.

11. That with respect to income of a non-resident-owned investment corporation earned after December 31, 1964 the present 15 per cent rate of tax be 20 per cent.

12. That any amount paid or credited after June 13, 1963, by a person resident in Canada to a non-resident person, as or on account of a management or administration fee or charge, be subject to the 15 per cent tax on income from Canada of non-resident persons.

13. That with respect to interest paid by a person resident in Canada to a non-resident person on any obligation issued after June 13, 1963, if the non-resident person

(a) is exempt from income tax in the country in which that person is resident; and

(b) has obtained a certificate of exemption from the minister,

the non-resident person be exempt from the 15 per cent rate of tax imposed in respect of such payment.

14. That for the taxation years ending after November, 1965 a corporation shall during the 12 months period ending 4 months after the close of each taxation year, pay to the Receiver General of Canada

(a) on or before the last day of each of the first 10 months in that period, an amount equal to one twelfth of the tax as estimated by it at the rate for the taxation year

(i) on its estimated taxable income for the year, or

(ii) on its taxable income for the immediately preceding year,

(b) on or before the last day of the eleventh month in the period, an amount equal to one half of the remainder of the tax payable as estimated by it on its taxable income for the year at the rate for the year, and

(c) on or before the last day of the period, the remainder of the tax

and that for the taxation years ending after November, 1963 and before December, 1964 a corporation shall, during the 11 month period ending 5 months after the close of its taxation year, pay to the Receiver General of Canada

(d) on or before the last day of each of the first 9 months in that period, an amount equal to one twelfth of the tax as estimated by it at the rate for the taxation year

(i) on its estimated taxable income for the year, or

(ii) on its taxable income for the immediately preceding year,

(e) on or before the last day of the tenth month in the period an amount equal to one half of the remainder of the tax payable as estimated by it on its taxable income for the year at the rate for the year, and

(f) on or before the last day of the period, the remainder of the tax, and that for taxation years ending after November, 1964 and before December, 1965 a corporation shall, during the 11 months period ending 4 months after the close of its taxation year, pay to the Receiver General of Canada

(g) on or before the last day of each of the first 9 months in that period an amount equal to one eleventh of the tax as estimated by it as the rate for the taxation year

(i) on its estimated taxable income for the year, or

(ii) on its taxable income for the immediately preceding year,

(h) on or before the last day of the tenth month in the period, an amount equal to one half of the remainder of the tax payable as estimated by it on its taxable income for the year at the rate for the year, and

(i) on or before the last day of the period, the remainder of the tax.

15. That the return of income for a taxation year that is to be filed with the minister in prescribed form and containing prescribed information by or on behalf of a corporation be filed

(a) for taxation years ending after November, 1963 and before December, 1964 within 5 months from the end of the year, and

(b) for taxation years ending after November 1964 within 4 months from the end of the year.

16. That with respect to amounts received after June 13, 1963, where a taxpayer has received an amount in a taxation year,

(a) as consideration for the sale or other disposition of any shares of a corporation or of any interest in such shares,

(b) in consequence of a corporation having

(i) redeemed or acquired any of its shares or reduced its capital stock or

(ii) converted any of its shares into shares of another class or into an obligation of the corporation, or

(c) otherwise, as a payment that would, but for this provision, be exempt income, which amount, in the opinion of the minister, was received by the taxpayer as part of a transaction or series of transactions whenever effected or to be effected, one of the purposes of which was or is to effect a substantial reduction of, or disappearance of, the assets of a corporation in such a manner that the whole or any part of any tax that might otherwise have been or become payable under the act in consequence of any distribution of income of a corporation has been or will be avoided, the amount so received by the taxpayer or such part thereof as may be specified by the minister shall, if the minister so directs,

(d) be included in computing the income of the taxpayer for that taxation year, and

(e) in the case of a taxpayer who is an individual, be deemed to have been received by him as a dividend from a taxable corporation within the meaning of section 38 of the act.

17. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years where, in the case of two or more corporations, the minister is satisfied

(a) that the separate existence of those corporations is not solely for the purpose of carrying out the business of those corporations in the most effective manner, and

(b) that one of the main reasons for such separate existence is to reduce the amount of taxes that would otherwise be payable under the act the two or more corporations shall, if the minister so directs, be deemed to be associated with each other.

18. That upon any appeal to the Exchequer Court of Canada from an assessment in such case the court may confirm or vary any direction given by the minister as provided in paragraph 16 or 17, or may vacate any such direction where it determines that

(a) none of the purposes of the transaction or series of transactions referred to in paragraph 16 was or is that specified in that paragraph, or

(b) none of the main reasons for the separate existence of the corporations referred to in paragraph 17 is that specified in subparagraph (b) of that paragraph.

19. That for the 1963 and subsequent taxation years

(a) a business loss incurred in a previous year by a corporation may not be deducted in a taxation year if

(i) the business in which the loss was sustained by the corporation was not carried on by it in the taxation year, and

(ii) in the period between the end of the year in which the loss was sustained and the end of the taxation year control of the corporation has changed hands, and

(b) a business loss incurred by a corporation in a taxation year may not be deducted in computing the income of the corporation for that taxation year if the business in which the loss was sustained by the corporation was wound up or discontinued, and after such winding up or discontinuance control of the corporation passed to a person or persons who did not control the corporation in the year at any time when the business in which the loss was sustained was carried on; but this paragraph is not applicable where the change of the control of the corporation occurred prior to June 14, 1963.

20. That for the 1963 and subsequent taxation years section 18 of the act, which provides rules in the case of any lease option agreement, hire purchase agreement or other contract or arrangement for the leasing or hiring of property, be repealed, and appropriate transitional provisions be enacted in respect of any such contract or arrangement.

21. That for the 1963 and subsequent taxation years the benefits received by an employee from his employer's contribution to a group life insurance plan that are at present excluded from income be excluded only if such contribution is in respect of group term life insurance.

22. That, with respect to any annuity contract entered into after June 13, 1963, that part of the proceeds of the contract that consists of interest accumulated prior to the date on which the annuity commences be included in computing income of the recipient unless such proceeds are received as a life annuity or as a refund of premiums upon the death of the holder of the annuity contract.

23. That for the 1962 and subsequent taxation years the manner of taxing a bankrupt corporation, a bankrupt individual and a trustee in bankruptcy be revised and in particular

(a) that the trustee be deemed to be the agent of the bankrupt person for all purposes of the act;

(b) that section 63 of the act not apply in the case of any income of the trustee from dealing in the property of the bankrupt person or from carrying on the business of the bankrupt person

(c) that the income of the bankrupt person be computed as if upon the occurrence of the bankruptcy the property of the bankrupt person did not pass to and vest in the trustee; and

(d) that the trustee be liable for payment of any tax payable by the bankrupt person to the extent of the property of the bankrupt person in the possession of the trustee.

The Chairman: Order. When the committee rose last evening we were discussing paragraph 17. Shall we now proceed to paragraph 18?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, this paragraph of the resolution proposes that a taxpayer who is dissatisfied with the direction of the minister in connection with dividend stripping or associated companies may appeal to the Exchequer Court of Canada.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I spoke at some length on this matter when we were dealing with the budget speech per se, and I do not intend to repeat now what I said on that occasion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nowlan: Well, if there is to be noise over there I will. I think the minister has attempted to improve the situation by the insertion of this appeal section, but I doubt very much that it achieves the purpose. As was pointed out by other members in the discussion last night, I do not think any appeal provision will meet the situation. However, I think the proper thing to do is to wait until the bill is before us, when we will have the various sections of the bill rather than spending considerable time in dealing with resolutions which, although important, are not effective in the same way that clauses of a bill are. So as far as we are concerned I think we are prepared to let the matter stand until we see the bill.

Mr. Lambert: In preparing the bill I wonder whether the minister would be willing to consider that the appeal should start at the tax appeal board level rather than in the exchequer court. The provision here is a specific one for an appeal to the exchequer court rather than to the tax appeal board and so far as many smaller taxpayers are concerned I think there might be a good deal of merit in allowing them at least to start with an appeal to the tax appeal board.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, there would be no objection to that, except that in the discussions it was felt that the tax appeal board was probably not in a position to deal with these matters as expeditiously or perhaps as fully as the exchequer court. However, I would be glad to consider the matter and look into it more carefully between now and the introduction of the bill.

The Chairman: Shall we proceed to the consideration of paragraph 19?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, this is another section that is designed to plug a loophole. It is an amendment to stop a device whereby a company that has experienced a loss is purchased by somebody else for the purpose of applying the loss against income from another business.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I fully understand the minister's thinking concerning the plugging of loopholes, but might not this first business be sold to another business for a quite legitimate reason? Is there any protection under those circumstances?

Mr. Gordon: There might be occasions where this could happen. I think the hon. member will agree with me, though, that in the vast majority of cases, particularly in recent years, this practice, which has been an ever-increasing one, has been for the simple purpose of avoiding taxes in future for profitable concerns.

Mr. Monteith: I do not agree entirely. I feel that because of succession duties and all sorts of things there have been many cases in the past where a corporation, even though it has suffered losses in the previous year, may be sold to some other concern which has every right to take the losses in the previous year of the first company into consideration. I just do not like to see us put in the position where this may be forbidden.

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps I should have explained that this only applies in a case where the first business has been discontinued. It does not apply if the business is a continuing one with some losses that can be applied in the future. It is restricted to a case where the corporation has gone out of business with heavy losses. There used to be a regular market for such corporations.

Mr. Lambert: It should be clearly understood that when the legislation comes before the house the provision will be clearly identified. One can readily envisage the condition referred to by the hon. member for Perth, where you might have two related businesses.

Mr. Gordon: It is not intended to cover those at all.

Mr. Lambert: Of course we are fully aware that there was some, shall we say, plucking of ripe plums from certain trees by people who were rather astute at picking up tax losses of one company to the benefit of another. On the other hand, this legislation might become far too wide. A successful merger might be made of one or two unsuccessful businesses with one that is quite successful, or there might be the gathering together of two or three rather rundown businesses with a view to putting them on their feet, as long as there was a certain amount of working capital that might be introduced by the fourth corporation.

Mr. Gordon: I think it is fair to say that this would stop the most blatant cases, but there might be a more sophisticated situation of the kind the hon. member has just described that would probably get through the net.

The Chairman: Shall we go to paragraph 20?

Mr. Gordon: This paragraph of the resolution proposes that section 18 of the act which deals with lease operations be repealed. This is another major plugging of a loophole and one that has been taken advantage of to an increasing extent in recent years.

Briefly, section 18 provides that lease options or similar agreements under which the lessee has the right to purchase shall be deemed to be agreements for the sale of the property. The lessee is not permitted to deduct the rent he pays for the use of the property, but he may deduct the cost of capital allowance. The original purpose of this section was to block arrangements under which contractors were leasing equipment and paying a rental which was sufficient to pay for the equipment in two or three years, after which the contractor had the right to buy the equipment for a nominal sum. This had the effect of allowing the contractor to deduct the cost of the equipment under the guise of rent over a very short period, and then write off the cost for tax purposes at a faster rate than would be allowed.

Mr. Nowlan: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gordon: I see the hon. member who for some years administered this act recognizes some of the cases to which I am referring. The contractor would then write off the cost at a faster rate than would be allowed under normal depreciation allowance for whatever equipment had been purchased.

In 1948 the section was rewritten and an attempt was made to prevent the purchase price of land being deducted under the heading of rental payments. It has been found that the section has a number of serious deficiencies, and it interferes with legitimate business transactions. On the other hand it provides a way for substantial tax avoidance. It is believed it would be extremely difficult to devise an amendment to correct the deficiencies of the section without interfering further with legitimate business arrangements and making an already difficult section incomprehensible. I do not think that is an exaggeration.

A brief submitted by a joint committee representing the Canadian Bar Association and the Canadian Institute of Chartered Accountants for the last two years has urged repeal of the section.

Mr. Nowlan: I quite agree that there have been occasions when it might have been abused. The practice to which the minister has referred was a fairly ancient and shall I say honourable tradition. At any rate, it is one which has been in effect for a long while. I am particularly intrigued by the wording in one part. What does the minister mean by "appropriate transitional provision"? This is something I have not seen in resolutions heretofore, and I would hope that the section, when incorporated in the act, would translate "appropriate transitional provision" into a regulation which would enable us to know specifically with what we are dealing.

Mr. Gordon: I think the point that has been raised is a very good one. I will indicate, with the approval of the committee, three of the types of measures that are proposed. First of all, in those cases where rents already paid in previous years exceed capital cost allowances that have been deducted in those years, the excess of rents shall be deductible in the year first affected by the repeal of the section. Second, in those cases where the capital cost allowances deducted have exceeded the amount paid in rents, the excess shall be recovered by adding it to income. The taxpayer should be given the right to elect to spread this additional income over the previous five years in accordance with section 43.

Third, where the financing of ships built in Canada has been facilitated by an agreement under section 18, no recapture along the lines indicated is required, and instead, any subsequent payment of rent, charter party fees, shall not be deducted until the total of such rentals exceeds the capital cost allowance. The final adjustment shall be made at the termination of the agreement.

Mr. Lambert: This may be a rather technical point. I take it that the provision for spreading the recapture over the previous five years does not in fact open up the assessment in the fifth year so there can be a full reassessment which goes beyond the four year statutory limitation.

Mr. Gordon: I am afraid that the significance of that question has escaped my officials. Perhaps the hon. member would be kind enough to repeat it?

Mr. Lambert: I am just worried that by spreading this recapture over five years, by going into the last year, the furthest year, you are in effect having a reassessment, and by so doing even at the option of the taxpayer you may be reopening an assessment that had been closed beyond the statutory period.

Mr. Gordon: This would only be done at the option of the taxpayer. It is proposed that he have this option so that if he is stuck he can spread the additional cost over a reasonable period of years. Perhaps the hon. member would prefer to limit it to four years, but the intention is just to produce an average rate.

The Chairman: We shall now proceed to paragraph 21.

Mr. Gordon: This paragraph of the resolution provides that the present concession to exclude from the income tax of an employee certain benefits he receives from an employer through contributions to a group life insurance plan will be allowed only if the contributions are for term life insurance. That is to say that they would not be for permanent life insurance, because this may mean unduly large benefits for selected employees. This is just another loophole.

The Chairman: Paragraph 22.

Mr. Gordon: This paragraph of the resolution proposes an amendment to ensure that interest earned on amounts paid to purchase an annuity contract will be taxed where proceeds of the contract are taken in a lump sum rather than in a life annuity. It is the same principle. This is another measure to close a loophole.

Mr. Lambert: I take it that the time at which the income is computed by the recipient is when he receives the lump sum, and it will be deemed to be income within that taxation year.

Mr. Gordon: That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Paragraph 23.

Mr. Gordon: This paragraph of the resolution proposes that a set of rules be added to the Income Tax Act to deal with certain taxation problems which arise when a person becomes bankrupt. At present it does not include special provisions governing a trustee of a bankrupt corporation or an individual, and as a result the trustee in bankruptcy must be taxed under the provisions of the law applicable to an estate or trust. This leaves uncovered a wide range of situations.

Moreover, if a trustee earns any income, and they often do, he would be taxed at the individual rates without exemptions, even when the bankrupt person is a corporation and frequently the trustee continues the operation. In the past, returns have been made and filed on assessment of what seems to be the most reasonable basis for handling the situation. However, the basis used has been questioned and there is need for more detailed law.

The Chairman: Have we completed discussion of paragraph 23?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

The Chairman: Then I should inform the committee that in the course of the discussion paragraphs 1, 6, 7, 8 and 9 were allowed to stand.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, this might be an appropriate moment to call to the attention of the committee what I consider to be some of the omissions in the resolution. We have been dealing at some length with provisions which affect corporate taxpayers, and according to the minister we have been attempting to plug some loopholes. Under other provisions we have been concerning ourselves with the granting of certain taxation concessions to corporate taxpayers, and it might be appropriate if we were to spend a little time concerning ourselves with matters relating to the far larger number of individual taxpayers. To my mind the resolution has some serious omissions in this connection.

In my experience during the time I have been in this house, this seems to have been an all too prevalent condition pertaining to the income tax resolutions and bills introduced by various ministers of finance, and the particular matter to which I make reference is certainly not new so far as I am concerned. I am sure the former minister of finance will recall that during a somewhat similar discussion last year I raised a question in regard to limitations on exemptions of expenses incurred by individual taxpayers in the course of earning a living, because of the restrictions in section 5(2) of the Income Tax Act.

Perhaps the present minister may recall that last year I introduced an amendment in the committee stage of the bill which the chairman ruled out of order; and in spite of my plea to the then minister of finance that he accept my motion, and thereby put it in order, he indicated in a genial way that he did not see fit to adopt that suggestion. In passing I may say I have had a rather similar experience with quite a number of ministers of finance. I recall that when the first Conservative minister of finance of the current era in Canadian politics assumed office we had a similar discussion, and I remember saying at that time that apparently I was going to have to start all over again on a new minister of finance. I only hope that my starting on the present minister will be more effective than my previous experiences.

In this connection I would like to draw to the attention of the minister a statement which was made in this chamber by Mr. Harris, the then minister of finance, as recorded at page 3034 of Hansard, 1957, volume III. He was the last previous spokesman on behalf of a Liberal government in that portfolio, and on that occasion he had this to say:

> The hon. member argues, in any event, that on social grounds it is desirable that full income tax should not be charged to men who are away from home because they ought to have a home life and be able to return and have some money with which to do it. I recognize both these arguments and I can assure hon. members that the subject is not closed.

It appears to have been closed during the period since 1957.

> It is one of the problems to which we have to find a proper answer, but I am not prepared to make any recommendation to the committee at the present time.

In reply to that statement I had this to say, as recorded at page 3036 of Hansard:

> I welcome the statement which the minister has made in part, because up until this year the only thing I have been able to get in the way of an answer from the opposite side of the house has been a few inconclusive words from the minister's parliamentary assistant on the subject. The one point to which I want to make reference, seeing that the discussion has gone this far, is this.
>
> I agree in part with what the minister has been saying, namely that this problem is not something which is unique to the construction industry.

The present minister may recall that there was a great deal of discussion in respect to this sort of exemption being applicable to the construction industry. Following the taking of office by the Conservative administration, subsection 2 of section 5 of the act was introduced, and it does provide some consideration for construction workers in respect to the deduction of expenses. In fact, as I recall the debate which occurred during that particular session, and from the records which I have been quoting, some of the then front bench members of the Conservative opposition dealt with the subject at considerable length, and I have always surmised that when shortly afterward they found themselves sitting on the treasury benches they could not do any more than show good faith in the course of action which they had been advocating so vigorously a short time previously.

The then minister of finance was trying to point out that this was not a problem confined only to the construction industry. As I was saying, in speaking at that time I said this:

> I agree in part with what the minister has been saying, namely that this problem is not something which is unique to the construction industry. As far as I am concerned, it applies equally, and as seriously, for example to the logging industry. In my opinion from the study I have made of the matter over the past several sessions, this whole question can be resolved only by a suitable amendment to the Income Tax Act, one that will remove what to me is a discrimination that now exists against the expenses that are incurred by those on wages and salaries in the course of earning a living.

While no action has been taken by parliament in regard to legislation since the amendment covering construction workers was introduced by the Conservatives, this matter has not been allowed to lie dormant. I am not sure whether in the voluminous correspondence the Minister of Finance has been receiving in connection with budget matters he has had an opportunity of personally examining a brief which was submitted to him very recently, dated July 8 of this year, from what is referred to in British Columbia as the loggers' local of the international woodworkers of America. This particular brief merely reiterates the case that this local union, on behalf of its membership, has been placing before the minister of finance in Ottawa for quite a number of years.

While it is concerned primarily with the situation of the loggers on the Pacific coast, large numbers of whom have to spend most of their working life away from their homes and families and have to undertake expensive air travel as well as having to incur expenses for the special tools of their trade, nevertheless it is in line with the argument I have been attempting to present in the house and which was concurred in, in part at least, by the former minister of finance, Hon. Walter Harris, when I suggested that the only proper way to deal with this matter was to provide the same rights of deduction for all people in the same or equivalent situations.

I am sure that people on wages and salaries in this country will have noted with interest the brave efforts of the present minister to curb what he termed expense account living; the suggestion that no one should be able to have a car valued at over $5,000, as I recall his figure, and write it off to expense. But I would urge that the minister consider that as long as any form of expense account living is allowed in this country, then under the same terms and conditions expenses incurred in the course of earning a living should be allowed to more Canadians no matter what the source of their income may happen to be.

It is for that reason, and in the hope that the present Minister of Finance will give a really sympathetic hearing to this argument that I have been presenting and perhaps agree that this should be incorporated in his proposed amendment to the Income Tax Act, that I would like to move:

> That the resolution be amended by adding thereto after item 23 the following:
>
> 24. That for the 1962 and subsequent taxation years, the existing limitations in section 5 of the act with respect to allowable deductions from taxable income of those whose income is derived from salary or wages be changed to provide for the deduction by each such taxpayer of the following:
>
> (a) Expenses necessarily incurred by him for board and lodging by reason of his employment at a distance from the place where he maintains a self contained domestic establishment.
>
> (b) Expenses incurred by him for transportation between his ordinary place of residence and his place of employment where, by reason of distance, he is required to live away from home to perform the duties of his employment.
>
> (c) Expenses incurred by him for depreciation and replacement of tools and special equipment or clothing which are necessarily required by him in the performance of the duties of his employment.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, before putting the motion I hope Your Honour will consider whether or not it is in order.

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps I should read the proposed amendment to the committee. Mr. Barnett moves:

> That the resolution be amended by adding thereto after item 23 the following:
>
> 24. That for the 1962 and subsequent taxation years, the existing limitations in section 5 of the act with respect to allowable deductions from taxable income of those whose income is derived from salary or wages be changed to provide for the deduction by each such taxpayer of the following:
>
> (a) Expenses necessarily incurred by him for board and lodging by reason of his employment at a distance from the place where he maintains a self-contained domestic establishment.
>
> (b) Expenses incurred by him for transportation between his ordinary place of residence and his place of employment where, by reason of distance, he is required to live away from home to perform the duties of his employment.

(c) Expenses incurred by him for depreciation and replacement of tools and special equipment or clothing which are necessarily required by him in the performance of the duties of his employment.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, as I think the hon. member pointed out, the brief submitted to me on this subject was dated July 8. I have not had a chance to study it. It came in after the budget was presented. I would be only too pleased to consider it carefully before the next budget, but I would respectfully suggest that this particular motion is out of order at this stage because it would upset the balance of ways and means.

The Chairman: After considering this motion it seems to me it should not be too difficult for the Chair to render a decision in connection with the proposed amendment. It is quite obvious that it is imposing a charge on the treasury, and it is a well known principle that only the crown can initiate a financial proposal such as this. I think, therefore, that the amendment cannot be proposed to the committee. Moreover, it is introducing an entirely new proposition; therefore it is irrelevant.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I cannot say that your ruling has taken me altogether by surprise in view of the experience I have had. However I would suggest, as I did last year to the then minister of finance, that the minister on his own initiative should do something about this matter. I would be pleased to assist him by providing him with a copy of the draft amendment to the clause of the bill. I think this might cut down the amount of time necessary for his consideration. I have here—and I would be glad to send it across to him—a suggested draft amendment to clause 5 (2) of the bill for his consideration, in the hope that before we get to the committee stage he will have had an opportunity to take a good look at it and perhaps agree that it would be appropriate that it should be brought in with his consent. I will be quite happy to give the present Minister of Finance full credit if he will be the minister who finally completes the consideration begun by his predecessor, Hon. Walter Harris.

Mr. Gordon: Would the hon. member allow me to ask him a question. In connection with this information which he has been kind enough to send me, I wonder whether he could give me some estimate of the cost in terms of government revenue which an amendment of this kind would represent. As he may remember, I am little concerned about a number of things in the economy, but one which has some bearing on this situation is the extent of government revenue and expenditure. I should like to know whether he has any estimate of the effect of this on government revenue.

Mr. Barnett: I cannot say that I have any estimate I would consider accurate enough to suggest to the committee. I am sure the minister has much better facilities than I to arrive at such a figure; but I am convinced, particularly if one gets down to considering the kind of detail which would be included in the actual text of a clause—and my draft is based closely on existing subsection 2—that with the restrictions and safeguards in such wording the effect would be quite insignificant in comparison with some of the other things which the minister has been prepared to undertake.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I am disappointed with the response which the minister has made to this point. Not that I expected him to take it up, but it does get a little tiresome for representatives of the people, as we all are here, to keep taking this particular issue to ministers of finance and officials of the Department of Finance. On one occasion a few years ago representatives from the logging industry of Ontario and Quebec sat for more than an hour in the office of the minister of finance, and we were told—I do not think this is confidential any more—by a senior official of the department that the present situation was not fair in equity. The reason it is not fair is that construction workers have the privilege of charging expenses incurred by living away from home as a deductible item, yet people doing exactly the same kind of work in the logging and the bush industry cannot take advantage of this privilege.

The reason the logging industry missed out when the Canadian Construction Association and the Canadian Labour Congress managed to convinced Mr. Fleming a few years ago that they deserved this particular advantage is something that I have never been able to get clearly in my head. But I know from conversations we have had with department officials and with Mr. Fleming that the Department of Finance was perfectly aware that inequity exists in this matter. Therefore for the minister to say to the hon. member, who has brought this question up several times, as have I and other hon. members, "How much is it likely to cost?", is surely not good enough.

Last year I understand the Canadian Medical Association sponsored a seminar which took place on board a boat on a trip to Hawaii. Wives were allowed to go along and everybody had a good time. The seminar, of course, enabled the worthy doctors to charge the trip as an expense. I know we smile at these things, but they come up all the time. We have had some vitriolics from the minister already with regard to expense accounts, but what we have in Canada today is a situation where people in professional occupations band together in organizations and hold conventions, and you have the old expense account business. They are able to take advantage of the act in a way that the ordinary guy—the little fellow, in the Prime Minister's words—has no opportunity to do at all.

I should like to point out that if the minister accepts the sort of amendment offered by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni he will be doing something for the genuine little guy in this country. By no stretch of the imagination are people like the loggers on the west coast and the bush workers of Ontario, Quebec and the maritimes the kind of people who, for example, are going to be able to have seminars on their way home from Hawaii.

I suggest to the minister that if he checks with his officials he will find that they were disturbed when this exemption was extended to the construction workers. This is my opinion and I may be wrong, but I think the minister will discover that to be the fact. I will not say that the minister masquerades about this; I think he genuinely feels that as minister he has to be fair to all the people in this country. But as long as the logging workers and the bush workers cannot take advantage of this exemption, although their situation is in every way on all fours with that of most construction workers, then we have a real injustice embedded in the Income Tax Act.

The workers in my part of northern Ontario bring cases to me every year which I usually take up with the Department of National Revenue, and these workers cannot see why, if they have to go 300 miles from the city of Port Arthur to work as bush workers at a site which is right next door to a hydro construction project which is being carried on for a considerable length of time, they cannot deduct the cost of their board and room when they are also keeping a home in Port Arthur.

Yet the construction workers across the road from them are entitled to this benefit under the act. I hope the minister will get around to examining this, not from the point of view of removing from construction workers the entitlement they now have but from the point of view of extending it to other workingmen. Because this is the kind of group which needs assistance.

There is another group of workers in Canada with whose position I am quite familiar; that is the railway workers. In the main they are taken care of under the act when they find themselves on the go most of the time. So far as the woods industry is concerned, that is the basic industry in our country. All other arguments about farming or anything else to the contrary, that is the basic industry. The men who prime the whole thing are the guys who go into the woods, get the trees, load them and get them out to the landings. They are the people who in so many cases do not have the opportunity to live at home; they have to go away to some kind of temporary camp in some other part of the country. Although there may be a trend this way, it is not yet the case in Canada that loggers live at the place they work. I think it is about time these people received some justice under the Income Tax Act, as the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has said.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I rise at this time to support the argument which has been put forward, coming from a part of the country which produces a great deal of lumber. I do not know whether the minister is aware of it, but the city of Prince George is the western white spruce capital of the world as far as we are concerned. The situation which has been disclosed certainly merits the attention of the minister, and again I am pleased to see the Minister of Forestry is with us. I do hope he will whisper in the ear of the Minister of Finance and give a little support to this case. I know the minister is well aware of the situation. So I rise to support the contention which has been made. I think the arguments have been well put, and I hope the hon. gentleman will give serious consideration to providing some measure of relief for these people.

(Translation):

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, after listening to what the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) had to say about a trip made by some physicians on a ship bound for Hawaii, I would like to point out that, as far as I know, expenses incurred through the presence of ladies on board cannot be deducted for income tax purposes.

Besides, many workers can take such trips if they are members of a labour union or a group which enable them to hold seminars. And if they want to choose Hawaii as their destination, I do not think that the Department of National Revenue sees any objection to it.

In addition, I must say that Social Credit, in its election platform, had a plank advocating an income tax exemption for equipment that workers must own. I fail to see also why the minister should not grant an income tax exemption with regard to transportation costs incurred by workers when they have to earn their living away from their own home. Contrary to what was suggested to me by an hon. member a moment ago, it is not a matter of taking an exemption away from those who enjoy it at the present time, but rather to extend it to workers who are entitled to it also as Canadian citizens and human beings.

(Text):

Mr. Moreau: Previous speakers have been championing the cause of the lumber workers. I would ask the Minister of Finance to consider the position of the people working in the field of exploration. Their case is even more deserving than some of those which have been mentioned many times today. As a rule they live in much more difficult circumstances. The camps in which they stay are almost invariably slight and temporary in nature by comparison with logging camps. Their expenses are considerable and they often work under conditions of great hardship, molested by flies and subject to all the inconveniences of life far from the comforts of civilization. These people, too, usually have to retain a permanent establishment in some place or other, and I trust the minister will consider their case when he is giving attention to other workers who come within this general category.

Mr. Herridge: I just want to add my voice to those of other hon. members who have spoken on this subject. I support the remarks which were made in connection with the situation in the forest industry. I can speak with some knowledge of the forest industry, because I cut my first log in 1907. I have talked a lot about logs and I have written a lot about logs. I am not an academic logger.

I also wish to support the remarks made with respect to the mining industry. There are many employees in this industry who should receive special consideration because of the extra expenses they must incur by reason of their occupation.

I also wish to make a plea on behalf of the smelter workers. I am glad to see the minister look in my direction as I mention the smelter workers. I never rise to speak in this chamber on a question such as this without having in mind the industry at Trail, and I think of those men tramping up the hill to the smelter each day. Many of them, owing to changing circumstances of life and the difficulty of securing a place to live, have to stay in some cases 30 miles from their place of employment, and I suggest that consideration be given to the recognition of these unusual travelling expenses occasioned by the circumstances in which many of these men live.

When one considers that a commercial traveller, travelling long distances to sell, on occasion, quite unnecessary commodities, or insurance agents travelling all over the country, are allowed to deduct the cost of travelling from their income as a legitimate expense, I think the minister might well be asked to give consideration to the situation of those groups of employees which have been mentioned by previous speakers, and more recently by the hon. member for Kootenay West.

(Translation):

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, I would not like to see this debate come to an end before having had an opportunity to say a few words, since the Saguenay area of which I represent a county has lots of pulpwood. There are in fact several lumber companies operating mills and therefore a great number of cords of wood are cut there each year.

The lumber companies, for some time now, have changed their way of doing. The method of cutting wood has changed and the workers now must get rather expensive power saws which do not last very long. I feel that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett) makes a very important point since the lumber companies are in fact the only ones to benefit from mechanization.

Workers probably work less hard physically but, on the other hand, the work periods in the bush are shorter and expenses higher. The lumber companies no longer build camps where they have their logging operations; the workers must therefore get there by truck and give the contractor what it costs to take them from the camp to the work site. In my opinion, the situation having changed, the Minister of Finance should really consider the advisability of extending those exemptions to the bush workers who are quite often far from home for rather long periods and who are unable, because of that recent change, to bring home as much money as they used to.

I understand that this would entail a loss of revenue for the department but I feel that the act works against the small wage earners while sources of revenue that could greatly help the Minister of Finance to balance his budget are disregarded.

I find it strange that, during this debate, there was hardly any talk about how it would have been advantageous for Canada if the Minister of Finance had imposed a tax on capital gains. I am aware that Canada is one of the few countries where capital gains are not taxed. Such a tax is levied in Europe and in the United States but not here in Canada. It is claimed that to impose a tax on capital gains would drive American investments away from Canada.

Well, if the minister felt it was appropriate, in the earlier introduction of his budget, to levy a 30 per cent tax on the sale of Canadian securities to Americans, if the United States government is now levying a tax on American investments in Canada, I feel that it would be wise for Canada to consider levying a tax on capital gains. I realize that it would be difficult to apply and that it would cover an extensive field because capital gains can include gains on the sale of capital investments, of buildings of any kind.

In my opinion, this tax could be levied against gains which accrue from stock market transactions. That sector remains untouched at present. Yet, it is a domain where huge benefits are made at the expense of the small man. As things stand at present, in Canada, when we have to find new revenue sources for the government, I feel that the minister would have been much wiser if he had levied a tax on the benefits made on stock market transactions instead of establishing an 11 per cent tax on building materials.

Mr. Chairman, it is my opinion that this matter should be looked into.

I realize that this matter was discussed neither by representatives of the Conservative party nor by those of the Liberal party, because they seem committed to the protection of the interest of large investors, more particularly the funds handlers.

I think that our party is in a good position, as I am myself, to suggest to the government to consider the opportunity to impose a tax on profits arising from the sale of corporation bonds and shares on the stock exchange. Those sales constitute a source of revenues which seems important, and the imposition of a tax would probably prevent many transactions which, at the present time, are certainly not made with a view to contributing to the welfare of industry or of the Canadian people.

(Text):

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Mr. Chairman, representations have been made with regard to those workers who have to leave their homes to carry on their way of life. I should like to say something on behalf of the railway workers. In this day and age when so many changes and abandonment of railway lines are taking place, many elderly railway workers have found themselves faced with the necessity of moving to another place of residence. To them this is not economically sound. They feel they would like to retain their homes where they have lived for so many years, but they have to move to some other area to carry on their work. Many of them have complained to me about the fact that, like members of parliament, they have to maintain two places of residence.

In my view some consideration should be given to workers of this type who not only have to maintain the residence they have had for so many years, but have to move from there because of the fact that their employment has disappeared in the place where they have lived so long. I would ask the minister to give consideration to workers of this type.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I too should like to support the representations made by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and others who have spoken more recently, but I rise at this moment to ask the Minister of Finance to take a look at still another subject when he reviews the whole matter of the Income Tax Act. I refer to the right that is accorded to trade unionists and others to deduct their dues for income tax purposes. As the minister knows, that right is spelled out in subsection 10 of section 11 of the Income Tax Act. It is accorded not only to members of trade unions as defined in the act, but also to members of various other kinds of associations to which people belong for the purpose of improving their conditions of employment.

However, subsection 12 of the same section limits to a certain extent the amount of the dues that can be deducted. There are three limitations set out in subsection 12. The first two have to do with superannuation funds, pension funds, annuities and so on, and one can readily understand those limitations. As a matter of fact, unions that have pension plan payments included in their dues usually get deductibility for the payments into those pension plans under legislation with regard to pension plans as such. But the third limitation reads as follows:

> (c) for any other purpose not directly related to the ordinary operating expenses of the association or trade union to which they were paid.

Under this limitation it has been provided somewhere, by regulation or administrative decision, that trade unionists are not permitted in most cases to deduct the full amount of the dues they pay to their unions. I should like the minister to take a serious look at that situation. I do not expect him to have the answer at this moment, but perhaps this can be notice to him that when we get to his estimates I should like to have a discussion of this matter.

For example, there are unions that go in for the construction of buildings which are necessary as part of the work of the union, and the members are required to pay a portion of their dues for these building funds. There are also other purposes that arise. Strike benefits sometimes impose an extra charge on members of unions. It seems to me that in all cases these payments come under the definition of money that members are required to pay to promote the improvement of members' conditions of employment and of work, and I regret that it has been found appropriate to make the kind of deductions that are made under the provisions of subsection 12, paragraph (c).

The result is that among trade unionists the percentage of their dues that they are allowed to deduct varies. Some are permitted to deduct quite a large percentage of their dues and some a much smaller percentage. As I say, this is a situation that has existed for quite some time. As far as I can ascertain, there has been no change in the practice since this provision was first brought in by Mr. Abbott when he was minister of finance I think the present Minister of Finance is undoubtedly looking for places to improve this kind of legislation. I hope he will take a good look at this point, and that if he cannot do something about it in the bill to be brought in momentarily he will be prepared to discuss the matter when we reach his departmental estimates.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I am grateful to all hon. members of the committee for their contributions, and I can assure them I will take their views into very serious consideration; not, I am afraid, before the bill is introduced, which I hope will be momentarily, but certainly before the next budget. I hope that very early in the fall any hon. members who have any suggestions to make respecting changes in the existing tax legislation will give me the benefit of their views well before the budget is put together.

(Translation):

Mr. Perron: Mr. Chairman, since we are now discussing section 11, paragraph 10, of the resolution concerning the Income Tax Act and because my riding, instead of enjoying the benefit of having vast industrial empires, has for the most part low income workers, especially bush workers who, most of the time, have to leave for the United States where they barely manage to earn a living and suffer from the devaluation of our Canadian dollar compared to the U.S. dollar, I have a few comments to make.

Those people who, like many others, wish to come back home for the week end to discharge some of their duties as fathers, must pay for their transportation. It was pointed out a while ago that travelling salesmen, insurance agents and persons employed in several other fields, such as salaried workers and employees paid on commission, benefit from income tax deductions.

On behalf of the bush workers in my riding and the surrounding area—those people who, for over 20 years, have been given to understand that means are being sought to have them benefit from unemployment insurance when they come back for six months in their country—I cannot let this opportunity go by without asking for the revision of the income tax form for the low salaried workers and particularly the lumberjacks. In the Social Credit program there is an article which provides for the deduction from gross income of the cost of machinery and equipment that lumberjacks must get to work in the woods.

We also feel it would be advisable to revise the Income Tax Act as regards the salary of garage employees. Most of those employees are required today to have $300, $400 or $500 worth of tools, which they often break while doing their work. So if, in the case of certain jobs, the cost of equipment can be deducted from gross income, I think the time has come to consider giving bush workers and garage employees the right to deduct from their gross income the cost of the machines or tools they use in their work. Moreover, the 11 per cent tax, called the sales tax on building materials, also affects the bush workers of my constituency.

Most of the time the small wage earners—who are already sadly tried as they hardly work more than six or seven months a year, after which unemployment insurance is their only income—are unfortunately those affected by that tax.

I wonder if we should not take this fact into consideration and allow these workers, when in April they file their income tax return, to deduct the cost of the equipment they use to earn their living since the government must refund the entire amount collected during their period of employment.

In my opinion, the Income Tax Act should be completely revised as far as low income groups are concerned, those who earn only $2,000, $3,000 or $4,000 a year.

I am not going to suggest that taxes should be imposed in other fields, since I support in this house the Social Credit doctrine, because we have advocated some other formulas likely to balance government budgets without resorting to taxation, which has become a heavy burden for all classes of society, but mainly for the little people, the lower income groups who bear most of it through direct or indirect taxes included in the cost of goods and services.

It is easy to pretend that taxes will be paid by large companies, but through the process of accounting—

The Chairman: Order. May I point out to the hon. member that his comments should deal more specifically with the resolution before the committee. It seems to me that the remarks he has just made refer to the imposition of taxes in general, but he should restrict himself to the resolution now under consideration by the committee.

Mr. Perron: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was just coming back to it, and I was giving as an example the cost of tools, machines and equipment of the loggers. In the last five years the price of the chainsaws used by the bushworkers has nearly increased by 25 per cent, not on account of direct taxation, but probably because of indirect taxes. Bushworkers, small wage earners, all those who suffer most from the high cost of living, because they do not have the necessary income to meet it, should at least benefit from the amendments to the Income Tax Act.

I feel that the suggestions we heard this afternoon should be seriously considered, and I hope that in the not too distant future the necessary adjustments will be made on the income tax form.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to delay the study of this resolution but I cannot miss this opportunity of passing on to the Minister of Finance the request from the low income citizens of my constituency.

As the minister knows, people with a small income find it very difficult to make both ends meet at the end of the year. Therefore I would ask the minister, on their behalf, to consider raising personal exemptions to $3,000 for married people and to $2,000 for unmarried people for, as the cost of living goes on increasing, people in the lower income brackets have a hard time making both ends meet.

That is why, without making a long speech, I would ask the minister to consider immediately such a possibility.

(Text):

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I should like to raise one other matter for the attention of the committee, in case it might have been lost in the shuffle of the political events that have occurred in the not too distant past. On February 4 of this year I received a joint communication from four volunteer fire brigades in my district. I had to reply on February 6 that, because of circumstances beyond my control, I could not do anything for the time being about the suggestion they brought to my attention. I do not know whether the present Minister of Finance has had any representations along these lines, but I have had a communication on the same subject from the same source since he took office.

I think perhaps I can briefly set out the point best by putting on the record a resolution which was passed by the British Columbia fire chiefs association in respect of volunteer firemen. It reads as follows:

> Whereas the Department of National Revenue has recognized that all volunteer firemen have expenses in connection with their services, and
>
> Whereas many volunteer firemen are not reimbursed for such expenses while others are, and
>
> Whereas only volunteer firemen receiving remuneration up to a maximum of $300 per annum are eligible to claim tax exemptions, and
>
> Whereas this discriminatory section of the Income Tax Act is not in the best interests of the Canadian fire service,
>
> Therefore be it resolved that the B.C. fire chiefs association request the Minister of Finance to take whatever steps are necessary to have the Income Tax Act amended to allow a basic tax exemption of $300 per annum for all volunteer firemen.

I think it is obvious from the text of this resolution, and from the source from which I received it, that this is a matter which is of concern principally to the smaller brigades across the country who feel that they have been left out of the expense allowance which, in fact, is given to the members of the larger forces. I hope that this is a matter to which the minister will give his attention, as he suggested, prior to the introduction of the next budget.

The Chairman: Have we completed the discussion on paragraph 1?

Mr. Nowlan: No, Mr. Chairman. We had a long discussion on this item on Friday and I do not propose to take much of the time of the committee in going over the ground which we covered on that day. This section, as we pointed out on that occasion, deals with the principle of incentives under certain circumstances and to businesses of certain classes. It also has combined with it the definition of a corporation which has a certain degree of Canadian ownership.

The minister, in the course of a long discussion and questioning which we had on Friday, stated that one of the principal purposes of the provision was the modernization of Canadian plants and Canadian equipment. He pointed out that with a highly competitive economy it was very necessary to have the most modern, efficient plants and equipment. I think that is something with which every member of the committee would be in full agreement. He stated also that the other aim of the resolution was to create employment and stressed again, as he did in his budget speech, the fact that unemployment was one of the main problems of the nation. He suggested to the committee that when this resolution was enacted it would go some considerable degree towards the relief of unemployment, or in other words that it would contribute to a greater degree of employment.

At this time I am not discussing the principle of incentives. There are differences of opinion as to how much incentives may accomplish, but I am taking the minister's statements on these two points, (a) the modernization of equipment and (b) employment, and I say to the minister that if we accept that, as I am sure we all do, then it certainly is not necessary to have coupled with this paragraph the definition of a degree of Canadian ownership. The reason is that every plant in the country engaged in production, whether it be owned by a Canadian or somebody else, should have the most efficient machinery and plant possible. In other words everybody who can be employed should be employed.

To use the illustration I gave the other day, the mere fact that one person is working for General Motors and another person is working for Ford, and one company has a degree of Canadian ownership and the other does not, is a factor which has no relation to either of the persons who have jobs.

If this resolution is going to accomplish what the minister said it would, then I would suggest it should be given the widest possible scope and should apply to all plants regardless of ownership, provided they are operating in a legitimate manner in Canada. That can be done very easily when it comes to the bill, by the minister simply amending the resolution before us by deleting the definition in this paragraph. We all know the minister has strong opinions in this field, but if he is determined to go ahead with the propagation of his belief at this time, I would suggest that he simply drop the rest of the paragraph and carry it over to the one dealing with the withholding tax, where it properly belongs. I suggest it has no place whatever in this paragraph, in view of what the minister himself said was the purpose of this part of the resolution.

He could accomplish the same purpose if the paragraph stopped after the words—

> —if the property has been acquired by a taxpayer in a taxation year for a manufacturing or processing business in Canada.

If this were done it would cover all Canadians and would be of great assistance to both efficiency of plant and employment. I hope that when the minister brings in the bill he will consider this; but I repeat that if he feels strongly about this matter, as I know he does, then this definition properly belongs with the withholding tax and not here. I cannot help feeling that some draftsman in a hurry stuck it on the wrong paragraph, and that is all I have to say.

Mr. Monteith: The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings mentioned the possibility that the minister might consider segregating these two parts of paragraph 1. I would be heartily in accord with that suggestion, in that I think that if more employment is to be arrived at there must not be any differentiation between two companies of a comparable basis, as for example General Motors and Ford.

With regard to the suggestion that the definition clause apply to paragraphs 6, 7, 8 and 9, I agree that the minister should give further consideration to this so that when he brings in the bill there will not be this discrimination and penalty against those now owning United States subsidiaries in Canada.

Let us consider for a moment what might happen if a company, in order to meet the requirements of this provision, were to dispose of some of its Canadian holdings. What would happen to the funds? They would go to the United States if it were an American concern. They would automatically go out of the country, and this would create a further strain on our foreign exchange. Also, if a company were to dispose of part of its Canadian shares I think it would undoubtedly take whatever surpluses there were in the company to the United States before disposing of Canadian shares, and this again would be a drain upon our foreign exchange.

I suggest that the minister give further consideration to this suggestion so that he might amend this paragraph to a degree that it would not be a penalty against foreign controlled companies. The incentive should be to Canadian investors to invest in equities in Canada.

I shall not say any more. I agree entirely with what the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings said earlier about segregating the two parts of the paragraph, but I also feel that if the minister is going to go ahead with this, then at least he should give some further consideration towards amelioration of the severity of paragraphs 6, 7, 8, 9 and 10 as they now stand.

The Chairman: Is consideration of the paragraph completed?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Paragraph 6?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Paragraph 7?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Paragraph 8?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Paragraph 9?

Mr. Nowlan: I have just one word to say in connection with all these paragraphs which deal with the withholding tax and the change in the rate, in some cases dropping down to 10 per cent, or alternatively going up to 20 per cent under certain circumstances. I spoke about them at some length previously and I do not propose to repeat my arguments.

This is a bad principle. The minister is committed to it, but in view of the developments of the last few days in the situation vis-à-vis the United States, and having to deal with that country in many involved financial matters, it may be recalled that something was said about the Secretary of State for External Affairs having a discussion with the ambassador. We know that later on there were discussions with Dillon, George Ball and others in Washington.

I can quite believe the retort which one might get in such a discussion, "Very well, Mr. Canada, but you have yourself imposed certain forms of taxation and have taken certain action—"

Mr. Gordon: Would the hon. member permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Nowlan: Right.

Mr. Gordon: There have been very important discussions with the American authorities over the last week. They were very cordial discussions and, as I said before, the American officials have been more than co-operative. Is he suggesting that this subject was raised?

Mr. Nowlan: I am not suggesting it was raised at that time, but I would be very much surprised if it were not. I cannot imagine your sitting down with the financial officials of the United States and talking about financial problems without talking about this phase of them.

But I am saying that when we do raise these problems we might very easily be faced with the fact that because of our action in incorporating this principle it is very difficult for us to object if a similar form of action should be taken by the United States or any other country. We have the problem of renegotiating treaties. I am not going into the details here, Mr. Chairman. In his answer the other day the minister said no action had been taken with respect to renegotiation of the treaty or abrogation of its sections. I think it would be easy enough for us to renegotiate the treaty between today and the date the penal effect would become effective. I wonder whether any consideration has been given to that matter.

I remember a time not too long ago when we in this country had a succession duty treaty with the United States. As hon. members know, parliament in its wisdom decided to change from the principle of succession duty to that of estate tax. It was a different form of taxation but the principle was exactly the same. But what happened? We had a treaty, as I said, in which the words "succession duty" were used. We had to renegotiate another treaty with the United States incorporating estate tax. There was no objection to it in the United States; it was a relatively simple amendment to make; but I happen to know that the life of the minister of national revenue of that time was made miserable for two or three months by people who had been having taxes imposed without the benefit of a treaty, because they just could not find time, despite their willingness to co-operate, to get it through on the floor of the United States senate. This is not easy to do, despite the level of friendly relations that may exist between our two countries, and despite whatever promises may have been given by the executive. I presume promises have been given to deal with this matter rapidly. However, Mr. Chairman, I am suggesting that there will be difficulty in getting the treaty through on the floor of the senate, no matter how co-operative they want to be. We know how long it takes sometimes to get legislation through this house.

I think it would have been much better to have had the renegotiation take place before the cut off date, if any, is reached. We have given notice of it anyway. I think this would be better, rather than putting the cart before the horse and committing ourselves to doing certain things by a certain date, and wondering afterwards whether we are going to be able to renegotiate the treaties in order to do them.

I will not spend any more time on this question now, Mr. Chairman; I think we have already spent sufficient time on it. We will see the legislation when it comes before us. I simply want to say that we on this side of the chamber do not approve of this principle; we think it is bad. I suggest that this matter should be given further consideration. I read a newspaper article the other day which said the minister has had this principle in mind for ten years. I refer to the principle of greater Canadianism, which is a good principle. But if he has had it in mind for ten years, a few more months will not be much of a delay and it might be better to wait, say six months, to savour the atmosphere, find out what the developments are going to be and arrange for renegotiation of the treaties. Then things will move much more smoothly and quickly for the improvement of the economy of our two countries than I fear will be the case if we go ahead on this basis.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Resolution agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

EXCISE TAX ACT

The Chairman: Order. House in committee of ways and means to amend the Excise Tax Act. Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I think there is some question about which resolution is before the committee and I wonder whether there could be the same agreement that there was before, that without any additional formalities we would consider the resolution of which my hon. friend gave notice on July 8.

Mr. Nowlan: That is agreeable to us, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that the committee shall consider the resolution as submitted on July 8?

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, if in effect the government is asking unanimous consent so to do, we are prepared to give that consent.

Mr. Nowlan: Without restricting the debate in any way.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think it is understood, Mr. Chairman, as my hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis-Kings has said, that there shall be no restriction of such debate as anyone would have wished on the earlier motion.

Mr. Lambert: On the Excise Tax Act resolution.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, Mr. Chairman; as the hon. member for Edmonton West has said, on the Excise Tax Act resolution. We do not want to open up the income tax and customs tariff resolutions again.

EXCISE TAX ACT

Resolved,—That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act and to provide among other things:

1. That the present exemption from sales tax for certain building materials be withdrawn by repealing the exemption for all goods mentioned under the heading "Building Materials" in Schedule III of the said Act and by repealing the exemptions for

(a) "Creosote oil and other wood preservatives when for use exclusively in the treatment of timber, poles or lumber;"

(b) "Railway ties;"

(c) "Goods for use as part of sewerage and drainage systems, and articles and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture thereof;"

2. That any enactment based on paragraph 1 of this resolution provide that

(a) goods for use as part of sewerage and drainage systems be exempt from sales tax when sold to or imported by a municipality for its own use and not for resale;

(b) any transfer of a sewerage or drainage system to a municipality by any person within two years after the completion thereof, pursuant to a bylaw of or agreement with that municipality under which that person is required to instal such system and transfer it without charge to that municipality after the completion thereof be deemed, for the purpose of section 46 of the said act, to be a sale to the municipality for its own use and not for resale of goods for use as part of a sewerage or drainage system, and that any agency operating a sewerage or drainage system for or on behalf of a municipality may be declared by the minister to be a municipality for the purpose of this paragraph.

3. That any enactment based on paragraph 1 of this resolution provide that drain tile for agricultural purposes and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture thereof be exempt from sales tax.

4. That any enactment founded on paragraph 1 of this resolution provide that where materials have been purchased by or on behalf of a school, university or other similar educational institution for use exclusively in the construction of a building for that institution and the tax imposed by Part VI of the said act has been paid in respect of those materials, the Minister of National Revenue may upon application by the institution in such form as the minister prescribes made to the minister within two years from the time the materials were purchased, pay to the institution an amount equal to that tax.

5. That any enactment founded on paragraph 1 of this resolution provide that a person who

(a) manufactures or produces a building or other structure, in competition with persons who con- or erection thereof, in competition with persons who construct or erect similar buildings or structures not so manufactured or produced,

(b) manufactures or produces otherwise than at the site of construction or erection of a building or other structure, structural building sections for incorporation into such building or structure, in comptetition with persons who construct or erect buildings or other structures that incorporate similar sections not so manufactured or produced, or

(c) manufactures or produces concrete or cinder building blocks, be deemed for the purposes of the said act not to be, in relation to any such building, structure, building sections or building blocks so manufactured or produced by him the manufacturer or producer thereof.

6. That the present exemption from sales tax for "Seventy five per cent of the sale price if manufactured in Canada, or seventy five per cent of the duty paid value if imported, of trailers for use as homes" be changed to read "Twenty five per cent of the sale price if manufactured in Canada, or twenty five per cent of the duty-paid value if imported, of trailers for use as homes".

7. That the present exemption for certain machinery and apparatus to be used in manufacture or production be withdrawn by repealing the exemption for all goods mentioned under the headings "Machinery and Apparatus to be used in Manufacture or Production" and "Engines" in Schedule III of the said Act and by repealing the exemptions for

(a) "Seismic shot-hole casing and materials used in the manufacture thereof;"

(b) "Tires and tubes for use exclusively on the machinery enumerated in Customs Tariff Item 411a."

(c) Goods enumerated in customs tariff items 399a, 399b, 399c, 411a, 417, 431h, 439c, 848, 848a and 848b.

8. That any enactment founded on paragraph 7 of this resolution provide that traction engines for farm purposes and accessories therefor (not including machines and tools for operation by such engines) and complete parts of all the foregoing, and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture of the said engines, accessories or parts be exempt from sales tax.

9. That any enactment founded on paragraph 7 of this resolution provide that farm wagons, including four-wheeled farm wagons equipped to be tractor drawn and farm sleds, and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture thereof be exempt from sales tax.

10. That the present exemption from sales tax for "Photographs, paintings, pastels, drawing and other art work and illustrations of all kinds, whether originals, copies or proofs, and printing plates made to reproduce the same, for use exclusively as non-advertising news pictures or for illustrating non-advertising articles or stories in periodical publications enjoying second-class mailing privileges, the pages of which are regularly bound, wired, stitched or otherwise fastened together;" be changed to read "Typesetting and composition, metal plates, cylinders, matrices, film, art work, designs, photographs, rubber material, plastic material and paper material, when impressed with or displaying or carrying an image for reproduction by printing, made or imported by or sold to a manufacturer or producer for use exclusively in the manufacture or production of printed matter."

11. That feeds for fish, supplements for addition to such feeds, and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture of such feeds or supplements be exempt from sales tax.

12. That the exemption from sales tax for materials for use in the equipment and repair of ships over ten tons net register tonnage be restricted to materials for use in the equipment and repair of ships to be used exclusively for commercial purposes.

13. That the present exemption from sales tax for "Bakers' cakes and pies including biscuits, cookies or other similar articles;" be changed to read "Bakers' cakes and pies including biscuits, cookies and similar articles but not including simulated chocolate bars or candy bars;".

14. That the export duty of three one hundredths of one cent per kilowatt hour on electrical power exported from Canada be repealed.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

15. That any enactment founded on paragraphs 1 to 13 of this resolution be deemed to have come into force on June 14, 1963, and any enactment founded on paragraph 14 of this resolution be applicable in respect of electrical power exported after June, 1963.

16. That with respect to the period commencing June 14, 1963 and ending March 31, 1964, the rate of tax payable under Part VI of the said act in respect of any goods for which exemption from tax was withdrawn by any enactment founded on paragraphs 1 and 7 of this resolution be four per cent instead of eight per cent, and that with respect to the period commencing June 14, 1963 and ending December 31, 1964 the rate of tax payable under subsection (1) of section 10 of the Old Age Security Act in respect of any such goods be nil.

17. That the said measure further provide that

(a) where any tax under Part VI of the said act has become payable by any person in respect of any goods for which exemption for tax under that part was withdrawn by any enactment founded on paragraphs 1 and 7 of this resolution, which goods were, not later than December 31, 1964, sold and delivered by that person, or applied by that person to a use resulting in the property in the goods passing from that person, pursuant to a bona fide contract in writing

(i) that provided for the sale of those goods or their application to that use for a fixed amount stated in the contract and that did not permit the adding of the tax to the amount payable to that person under the contract, and

(ii) that was signed by the parties thereto

(A) on or before June 13, 1963, or

(B) after June 13, 1963, if the contract was entered into in accordance with the terms of a tender in writing submitted by that person on or before that day whereby that person undertook to enter into such a contract and in default of so doing to incur or cause to be incurred a pecuniary penalty whether by forfeiture of a security deposit or otherwise,

a refund, or deduction from any of the taxes imposed by the said act, of the tax or such part thereof as could not under the contract be added to the amount payable to that person thereunder may be granted to that person; and

(b) where any goods for which exemption from tax under Part VI of the said act was withdrawn by any enactment founded on paragraphs 1 and 7 of this resolution were, after June 13, 1963 and not later than December 31, 1964, sold and delivered by any person, or applied by any person to a use resulting in the property in the goods passing from that person, pursuant to a bona fide contract in writing

(i) that provided for the sale of those goods or their application to that use for a fixed amount stated in the contract and that did not permit the adding of any tax under that part that became payable after June 13, 1963 in respect of those goods to the amount payable to that person under the contract, and

(ii) that was signed by the parties thereto

(A) on or before June 13, 1963, or

(B) after June 13, 1963, if the contract was entered into in accordance with the terms of a tender in writing submitted by that person on or before that day whereby that person undertook to enter into such a contract and in default of so doing to incur or cause to be incurred a pecuniary penalty whether by forfeiture of a security deposit or otherwise,

an amount equal to the tax or such part thereof as could not under the contract be added to the amount payable to that person thereunder may, where application therefor is made to the Minister of National Revenue by that person in such form as the minister prescribes within two years from the time the goods were delivered by that person or applied by him to that use, and the minister is satisfied that the tax has been paid, be paid by the minister to that person.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, the Excise Tax Act resolution which is now before the committee sets forth a variety of proposals in 17 numbered paragraphs. Before considering these individually it might be helpful for me to make some comments on the resolution as a whole. The most important provisions are in paragraphs 1 and 7, which provide for the withdrawal of the present exemptions for certain building materials and construction machinery with the effect of imposing a manufacturers sales tax on these commodities. Provision is made for new exemptions and for the continuation of existing exemptions as follows:

In paragraph 2, for municipal sewerage and drainage systems; in paragraphs 3, 8 and 9, for certain materials and machinery for agricultural purposes; in paragraph 4, for schools, universities and similar educational institutions; in paragraph 5, for certain components of buildings manufactured off site in competition with components manufactured on the construction site and exempt from tax; in paragraph 10, for materials used in newspapers and periodicals; in paragraph 11, for feeds for fish. Paragraph 12 proposes the withdrawal of exemption from sales tax for materials entering into the equipment and repair of private yachts and other non-commercial ships. Paragraph 13 is introduced to provide a greater measure of equity for the manufacturers of candy bars by withdrawing exemptions for certain confectionery products which resemble candy bars. Paragraph 14 repeals the existing export duty on electricity. Paragraph 16 provides for the application of the sales tax to previously exempt commodities in three stages, 4 per cent until March 31, 1964; 8 per cent thereafter until December 31, 1964; and 11 per cent from the beginning of 1965. Paragraph 17 provides relief in respect of goods sold and delivered prior to December 31, 1964 under certain fixed price contracts or tenders involving pecuniary penalties which were in effect prior to the budget.

It was indicated in the budget speech that the withdrawal of exemptions from building materials and production machinery could not be expected to be a popular move. I do not think that was an exaggerated statement. Tax increases are never accepted easily, particularly by those directly affected, and this is understandable. Nevertheless it was and still is my considered judgment that these amendments will be less harmful to the economy than the alternatives of obtaining similar amounts of revenue from any other tax sources. In order to obtain the additional revenues expected from withdrawing the exemptions for building materials and production machinery it would have been necessary to increase other taxes by very substantial amounts. For example, the government might instead have recommended a 33⅓ per cent increase in the rate of sales tax; that is, from the present 11 per cent to 14½ per cent. But to do this would have enhanced the marginal inequities which now exist between commodities subject to the sales tax and those which are exempt; and of course any move of that kind would have borne particularly heavily on people in the lower income groups. The government could have recommended the addition of a 20 per cent surtax on personal income taxes. This substantial increase would have had to be applied even at the lowest levels of income and this would have undoubtedly involved very severe hardship. In the present circumstances the government would not be prepared to recommend a measure of that kind. The government could have proposed the addition of 9½ points to the rate of corporation income tax, which would have had the effect of increasing the top rate—that is, the 50 per cent rate—by 23 per cent. The economic effect on corporate industry of a measure of this kind would have been very damaging and the effect on employment would have been worse. Criticisms have been made of the measures we have put forward, and I dare say there will be more of them during the course of the discussion in committee. I suggest that anyone who wishes to criticize responsibly should try to indicate as clearly as possible—and I must say this was done by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands—the alternative course which he believes should have been adopted.

In addition to the measures and reliefs set forth in the resolution, hon. members may find it useful to be reminded of others. Special measures were announced in the budget in connection with interest rates and other terms of lending applicable to N.H.A. mortgages. These are designed to relieve the purchasers of new houses financed in this way from most of the burden of the increased sales tax on construction materials, and certainly all of the burden at the 4 per cent or even the 8 per cent rate. Important continuing exemptions from sales tax have been left untouched, including those for hospitals and those for homes for the aged. In addition I should refer to the exemptions in respect of farm machinery, crushed stone, sand and gravel and a list of goods purchased by municipalities.

Excise Tax Act

Dealing with the first paragraph of the resolution, Mr. Chairman, this proposes that the exemption from sales tax for the building materials listed in schedule III of the Excise Tax Act be withdrawn. This withdrawal covers the materials listed under the heading of building materials in the schedule, and three other items listed elsewhere in the schedule. With regard to the sales tax it might be useful to hon. members if I said a word or two about its origins. The sales tax was introduced in May 1920 at the rate of 1 per cent. As originally introduced it gave an important advantage to retailers, who could purchase directly from the factory, and the tax lasted less than a month in its original form. In June 1920 the then minister of finance introduced important amendments to change the tax into a modified form of turnover tax. The present form of single stage tax dates from 1924. There was no exemption for building materials till 1938 when a list of items described as the major products used for the building of houses were made exempt. These exemptions were withdrawn in April 1941 but were reintroduced in May 1945. The rate of sales tax imposed by the Excise Tax Act has been 8 per cent since May 1936, except for the period April 10, 1951 to December 31, 1951, when it was 10 per cent. Commencing on January 1, 1952 the rate of tax under the Excise Tax Act reverted to 8 per cent, and an additional 2 per cent was imposed under the Old Age Security Act. In April 1959 the tax imposed under the Old Age Security Act was increased to 3 per cent to produce a combined total rate of 11 per cent, which still prevails.

I think I should put on the record the revenue from sales tax, and with the approval of the committee I will do that now. Before broadening the base of the tax by withdrawing the exemption for building materials and production machinery, the sales tax was expected to produce in 1963-64 for budgetary account some $840 million, and for the O.A.S. fund an additional $315 million, for a total of $1,155 million. In 1962-63 the sales tax produced 44 per cent of the total revenue from old age security taxes, and 15 per cent of the total budgetary tax revenue. In order to obtain $360 million additional revenue which is expected from withdrawing the exemptions for building materials and production machinery, alternative tax changes would have to be introduced of the magnitudes to which I referred a few minutes ago.

The withdrawal of the sales tax exemption will eventually add an amount to the price of building materials equal to 11 per cent of the manufacturers' selling price of these goods. The tax will not be 11 per cent of the retail price; nor should it be as much as 11 per cent of the price which building contractors pay for building materials. Moreover, building materials seldom account for more than half the cost of a building, and not all materials used in buildings were exempt from tax before the budget. Therefore the withdrawal of the exemptions announced in the budget is not likely to add as much as 5 per cent to the cost of buildings even when the tax is in effect at the full rate. I am supported in this statement by the Canadian construction association, for example, which in its brief which it presented some weeks ago estimated that the addition to construction costs will be somewhere between 4 and 5 per cent.

It has been charged that withdrawal of the exemption for building materials will seriously reduce investment and employment, yet repeated increases in construction costs exceeding 4 or 5 per cent have been experienced in recent years as a result of increases in other costs, including wages, and these have not restricted construction. It is estimated that the withdrawal of the exemption for building materials announced in the budget speech will ultimately raise the selling price of houses—I emphasize this is ultimately, by 1965—by between 3½ and 4½ per cent. In other words, the increases might be as follows: The price of a house now selling at $13,000 might be increased by $520; a $15,000 house might rise in price by $600. On the other hand, the proposals to reduce the down payment and lower the rate of interest in connection with mortgage loans made under the National Housing Act will to a large extent offset these additions to the original cost.

I should also like to point out to hon. members of the committee that the sales tax was always intended to be a tax of general application. Some exemptions, such as those for foodstuffs, are necessary to prevent placing too heavy a load on low income groups, and other exemptions tend to create anomalies and unfair competitive positions.

The sales tax, since its beginning, has applied to many commodities which are as important as housing, if not more important than housing to certain people, yet this has not had adverse effects on the economy. For example, the following have been subject to tax for many years:

All clothing, including boots and shoes; furniture for the home or office; home appliances, including cooking stoves, refrigerators, washing machines, television sets and radios; home furnishings, including curtains, drapes, bedding, towels and rugs; automobiles, gasoline and automobile parts and accessories.

The exemptions for building materials before this year's budget did not apply to all materials used in building a house. For example, all electric wiring and electric fixtures were taxed. All pipes in a plumbing system, other than drainage pipes, were taxed. All fasteners, including nails were taxed.

The budget speech announced that the National Housing Act would be amended in such a way as to reduce the down payment required in connection with mortgage loans made under it. National Housing Act loans will be extended so as to cover 95 per cent of the first $13,000 instead of the first $12,000 of the value of a house and the maximum loan amount will be raised from $14,900 to $15,600.

Second, it was announced in the budget speech that a reduction would take place in the National Housing Act lending rate from 6½ per cent to 6¼ per cent. Third, shortly before the presentation of the budget, the government announced a program to encourage house building in the winter months. Fourth, the introduction of the tax in stages commencing at 4 per cent will greatly reduce its initial impacts and give business an opportunity to adjust to the change. Fifth, the introduction of the tax in stages will provide a strong incentive to proceed with building construction immediately and should be an important stimulus to the economy of this country. Sixth, the exemption in respect of building materials for the construction of buildings for schools, universities and similar educational institutions provides an important concession in an area where there is a special need for construction.

Paragraph 1(a) deals with creosote oil and wood preservative. This is a form of building material. It is used to treat wood and timber. Since paint is to be taxable this product should also be taxable.

The exemption for creosote oil was added to the law in 1955 to remove an unfair competitive position between timber creosoted in Canada and imported creosoted timber. Before 1955, the creosote or preservatives used to treat timber in Canada bore tax but no tax could be imposed on the creosote in imported timber.

Now that imported timber, including the creosote, is to be taxed this unfair competitive situation has disappeared. In future, manufacturers of taxable timber will be able to buy creosote and other wood preservatives free of sales tax under their sales tax licence. If a timber exporter sends timber to someone else to have it treated with creosote before export he will be able to obtain a drawback of the sales tax resulting from the creosoting operation when he exports the timber.

Logs and unmanufactured timber, including fence posts, telephone poles, etc., remain free of sales tax. If creosote is bought to treat these it will be taxable, or if the poles are sent to a creosoting company the creosote used will bear tax.

I could go on to the other divisions of this paragraph, but perhaps hon. members will prefer me to stop at paragraph 1(a) until they have had a chance to reply to my opening remarks.

Mr. Starr: We have listened while the minister has told us why he is imposing this tax on building products and industrial machinery used by two of our largest employers in this country—the construction industry and the manufacturing industry. This is the type of argument the minister has been putting up ever since he presented his budget. He has been explaining to us which is the less harmful tax and which is the more harmful, and why one should be applied rather than the other. In other words, he seems to have the impression that no one understands what he is doing and that he is the only one who is right, that everyone else must be wrong in the attitude they take with respect to this tax.

I saw a cartoon in the Globe and Mail the other day which, I think, reflected the hon. gentleman's attitude very well. It shows the minister driving up the wrong way on a one way street. The car he is driving is all battered; his glasses are shattered. A police officer, evidently, is nearby and the minister is saying to him: "But officer, you just don't understand". This is the situation which has been created in Canada by the application of the sales tax, whether it is levied in one lump sum of 11 per cent as originally intended or whether it is applied in stages. However it is put into effect it is bound to have a most harmful result in these two areas which employ so many Canadians. Instead of those industries moving ahead they will be restricted in their forward movement, and in the employment they are capable of offering, as a consequence of the application of this tax.

But the government has placed this parliament in a most peculiar position, because we have before us a set of budget resolutions which has replaced the original set. We agreed to this being done. It was done on the basis of unanimous consent. But this has given rise to a very strange procedure, particularly in view of the fact that the resolutions which were first presented formed the very basis of a budget. With these resolutions which we now have before us, we virtually have a new budget. This situation was pointed out in the Globe and Mail of July 10. The phrase was used—and I quote—"The second budget of Finance Minister Walter Gordon". If that is so, one is tempted to ask: what happened to the first budget? Well, it has been removed by a process which is strongly reminiscent of sleight of hand. There are those who have been telling us that the Minister of Finance is a financial wizard. Well, when it comes to making budgets disappear with nothing up his sleeve, the phrase certainly applies. I might say he is more than a wizard—he is a magician.

What is the position now with regard to the budget? After all, it must not be forgotten that the budget presented on June 13 received a vote of confidence. I might add that the party I represent did not participate in according this vote of confidence. But following that vote, the government expressed lack of confidence in its own budget by withdrawing the budget as it had been presented. Never, I submit, has there been such a situation of confusion compounded. The government has shown a complete lack of confidence in its own budget. It has swept it under the rug, I submit. The natural consequence should have been the removal of the minister responsible for the production of the budget or the resignation of the government. But neither of these courses has been followed. I want to emphasize that the responsibility does not rest entirely upon the Minister of Finance. Full responsibility rests upon the Prime Minister and his cabinet colleagues. It is a fact that the budget was not presented to the House of Commons without the Prime Minister's consent, and his approval of what it contained.

But neither of the courses I have mentioned has been followed. The government is going on as though nothing had happened. What it is saying in effect is: Let us forget about budget No. 1 and let us deal with budget No. 2. So this is the situation, the incredible position in which the parliament of this country finds itself owing to the ineptitude and confusion displayed by the government, an ineptitude and confusion unprecedented in parliamentary history. This confusion and ineptitude has been shown in the short space of time of two months since parliament convened.

These are the same people who accused the former government of creating confusion and indecision. All one has to do is to sit in the house and ask questions of importance to the nation. What do you get in reply from a government that was elected as a government of decision? We are told that a decision has not yet been made, that the matter is still under consideration.

The budget presented to parliament on June 13 last aroused a storm of protest such as has never been experienced before in the country. It was more than protest: it was revulsion. It swept across all party lines. It came from business groups and organized labour. It came from provincial governments, and that is still going on, I might say. It came from municipalities and the stock exchanges. It came from all those who believed that what was needed was a fiscal and monetary program which would contribute to the expansion of the economy and provide employment.

Mr. Pugh: It came from a lot of Liberals too.

Mr. Starr: Responsible individuals, responsible and representative groups of people with no partisan axe to grind, all knew when the budget was presented that it would not accomplish the objective of providing employment. They all knew that the budget as presented was going to bring about the opposite effect. They all knew that it was a bad budget.

This agitation by all these people throughout the country, which was stirred up regardless of their political affiliation, penetrated finally to the inner councils of the government. When I say "inner councils of the government" I mean that rarefied stratum where only the planners and the economic manipulators are persona grata, that haven of the theorists and the collectivists.

Mr. Byrne: Whom are you reading from?

Mr. Pugh: Not your book, anyway.

Mr. Starr: After the budget was presented the Prime Minister stated—

Mr. Byrne: It sounds like Shakespeare.

Mr. Starr: —that before another budget was presented in the future he was going to seek advice from the business community and industrialists in the country as to what type of budget should be presented. Upon questioning in the house he agreed that probably other groups also such as the agricultural sector—

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman—

An hon. Member: Sit down.

Mr. Byrne: On a point of order, I suggest that the hon. member for Ontario, who was at one time a minister, should know the rules of the house and that he should refer to a minister as the honourable minister and not as he or she or it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, after that nonsensical intervention I think I may carry on. Upon being questioned in the House of Commons the Prime Minister agreed that he would also seek the advice of organized labour and the farmers. And why not? When the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance present another budget why should they not ask the advice of these people? It has been proven they were not able to do it on their own, even though they had the advice of whiz kids and students from universities.

We have been told that this budget is directed toward creating employment and cutting down on unemployment. This is the government that prior to and during the election campaign promised the people of the country that they would create full employment. All they wanted was a chance, 60 days of decision, and they would bring about full employment in the country.

Mr. Lamontagne: "No one will suffer".

Mr. Starr: I must say that this budget has been created to create unemployment instead of employment. Regardless of how the 11 per cent sales tax is applied, whether it is applied in three stages or one as was originally intended, the budget still is not one designed to create employment but rather to create unemployment. The 11 per cent tax applies to the construction industry, one of the biggest employers in the country in that it provides work for some 600,000 Canadians. One would have thought that a government that had in mind the creation of employment would have given an incentive, a boost, to that industry so that it would have been able to employ more people. But they have not done so. They have laid a tax upon this industry in order to keep it from expanding.

The government talks about giving an incentive to secondary manufacturing industry in Canada, an industry that employs Canadians on a year-round basis, an industry that was given incentives by the former government to the extent that they were able to increase employment by at least 2 to 2½ per cent each and every year. That industry is now taxed so that it cannot expand, so it cannot maintain the percentage of increase that the former government was able to provide. Here are the two largest employers in Canada taxed by this government in such a way that they will not be able to expand.

The Minister of Finance has made some retreats in one or two areas from his original budget but he has not retreated from the imposition of the sales tax. All he has done is to modify it. He is going to apply it in three stages. This sales tax affects the workingmen of the country, but there is no retreat by the minister. He and the government are determined to tax the working people of this country and not give them any relief.

This was supposed to be a 60 days of decision government. Ninety days have now gone by and all one has to do is to look at the record and he will find that it is a government of 90 days of indecision and confusion, of one fiasco after another. They do not need any help to create these fiascos. I submit that because of their actions and because of their failure to introduce proper legislation to help the unemployment situation they will go down in history as the government of unemployment. This government is now engaged in the business of crippling the economy of the country. All I have to do is read to hon. members some of the things that have been said in respect of the imposition of the sales tax. In the Ottawa Journal of July 11 the following appeared:

> L. G. McKimmie, president of the Canadian Lumbermen's Association, said Wednesday the government's revised application of the sales tax on building materials and production machinery will continue to work hardships on the lumber and allied industries. He added that many small operators would be forced out of business.

That means lay-offs of men who are now employed.

> The remarks were included in a letter sent by Mr. McKimmie to finance minister Gordon.

Did he pay any attention to them? He did not. Somebody gave him the idea that if he would modify this proposal and put it into effect in three stages, then the heat would be off and representations would stop.

According to the Toronto Telegram of July 10, the Toronto metropolitan homebuilders association intend to keep after finance minister Walter Gordon until it gets the budget sales tax on building materials wiped out altogether. I submit to the minister that this is good advice and he should take this advice if he is interested in promoting employment in this country and not promoting unemployment.

I should like to quote from an editorial in the Winnipeg Tribune of July 9:

> Mr. Gordon has in effect brought in four budgets. The first he brought down on June 13. The second came in on June 19 when he rescinded the proposed 30 per cent takeover tax. The third was read for him on June 24 by revenue minister Garland. The fourth came on Monday evening.
>
> It must be admitted that Mr. Gordon improves as he goes along.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that is good advice to the Minister of Finance and if he wants to improve further along this line he should retract this tax which is going to be such an imposition on the economy of this country. I should like to list some of the protests from some of the industries in this country. I want to read extracts from a publication entitled "Industry", which is published by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association. I read this from the issue of July, 1963:

The measure of manufacturing industry's disappointment with the new federal government's first budget is the measure of the high hopes with which it was awaited—

Alas for great expectations. The dynamic incentives which industry, rightly or wrongly believed it had good reason to anticipate are not so dynamic after all. True, there are a number of corporate inducements of one kind or another in the budget but, for the most part, they prove upon examination to be restrictive and narrow in their application and consequently of limited value.

They say, in effect, they will be paying the tax twice over. This is not just, it is not wise and it is certainly not expansionist. If the Minister of Finance does not want to take advice from others, he should listen to us because we are in direct communication with the people in our ridings and the industries in our ridings. We know what they think about it. Certainly, at least, the minister should take the advice of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, because they are most reasonable in their representations, as history has proven.

In so far as my own riding is concerned, for instance, Ajax Magnethermic Canada Limited, an industry which has located in Ajax, Ontario, sent a letter to the Minister of Finance protesting this tax. They have pointed out that this is a tax which will lose employment for Canadians, and it is a tax on their income. It is a tax that has permanently lessened the prospects of employment in the purchaser's plant. They followed this up with a telegram which I received the other day. It reads in part as follows:

Further to our recent discussions budget apparently requires payment of sales tax on engineering drawings purchased from our U.S. associates so that we can build equipment in Canada. This increases our cost unfairly in competition with foreign competitors selling into Canada and furthermore constitutes double taxation since the added cost is reflected in our price on which we must collect sales tax from the purchaser.

Then, the automotive parts manufacturers association of Canada is protesting this tax. They have made representations to the Minister of Finance. A. C. Coulter, of Coulter Manufacturing Company, Oshawa, sent the following telegram:

Effect of sales tax provision on production machinery and tools is to worsen competitive position vis-à-vis imports of auto parts.

Then, we see more protests coming as listed in the Globe and Mail of June 18, 1963. In that issue of the newspaper we find Mr. McConnell of Edmonton, president of the national house builders association, protesting the imposition of this tax.

Mr. Gordon: I wonder if the hon. member for Ontario, since he has referred to Mr. McConnell, would like to put the whole story on the record from Mr. McConnell or if he would prefer that I do this at the end of his remarks?

Mr. Starr: This is an extract from Mr. McConnell's statement published in the Globe and Mail by the writer, Mr. Kenneth Smith. I see the date of this article is June 18, and no doubt Mr. McConnell is one of the persons who, in discussing these protests with the Minister of Finance, suggested the tax might be applied in three stages.

Mr. Gordon: I will be glad to say more about Mr. McConnell and the national house builders association when the hon. member has concluded.

Mr. Starr: Then, we have the Canadian Federation of Mayors and Municipalities protesting against the imposition of this tax on building materials purchased by municipalities. The very capable mayor and capable members of the Oshawa city council have endorsed a resolution, a copy of which has been passed on to me to bring to the attention of the government. They feel that the imposition of the 11 per cent sales tax will be a great detriment to that municipality as well as other municipalities across the land.

However, the government has adopted a new attitude, a new technique. They say to the people of this country, we will give you this with one hand and take away even more with the other hand. We have the example of the municipal loan fund which is now being held in abeyance. The government promised that they would lend money to the municipalities at a low rate of interest and, as a result, there may be a saving of 1 per cent. There is also a forgiveness clause in this measure, the details of which we are unaware at the moment. They give this to the municipality, and then they turn around and tax the municipalities on the materials the municipalities are going to use as a result of the granting of these loans. Will there be a saving? This is something into which the municipalities will have to look very closely because you have the government giving them something with one hand and taking it away with the other.

All of these measures in the budget, naturally, have an effect on the employment situation, which is the prime concern of all Canadians and should be the prime concern of this government as it was of the former government. As a result of the actions we took we were able, for almost 24 months to decrease unemployment in this country month by month as compared with each month of the previous year. We find that since this government has taken office we have had an increase in unemployment for two months in succession now, as compared with the same months last year. We are hoping that this trend does not continue, that this government will come out of its lethargy and introduce legislation containing incentives to the economy of this country that will overcome the situation I have described.

As an example of the very definite action we took while we were in office, directed at alleviating the situation of our economy, I would cite housing. House construction was undertaken on a scale on which it had never been undertaken in the history of this country. There was the drive for exports and the increase in labour-management co-operation which we brought about in this country through the productivity council. This council, which has done so much in this field, has now been discarded by this government. Our incentives to industry resulted in an increase in employment of 2½ per cent every year. Then, there was the winter works program which provided jobs for 100,000 every winter. This government has adopted this program, but has curtailed its effectiveness by shortening the applicable period by six weeks. These six weeks are the most productive of this program, and yet the government has shortened it by six weeks. What will the result be? Will 130,000 Canadians be able to get jobs under the program this winter? I doubt it very much. They have curtailed this program, not to help unemployment but rather to worsen it.

With regard to technical schools we provided space for 138,000 Canadians to learn new trades and skills, and the present government has adopted this program and added nothing new. Some 4,000 unemployed were trained in Canada in 1957; but last year, because of our incentives to the provinces, 38,000 Canadians were trained.

The government has also taken over our sewage disposal program. Our subsidies to the shipbuilding industry helped create employment in it, and we gave aid to the provinces and helped tremendously in the social justice field. Then there were our wheat sales; but now the Minister of Trade and Commerce says he is not responsible in this area.

What has the government done since it came into office? The most outstanding things have been the appointment of the cabinet and the two trips made by the Prime Minister. The Minister of Labour brought in nine points, but seven dealt with existing programs inaugurated by the former government, and two were gimmicks, one being the $500 for houses built within certain winter months.

What will this mean? There will be a tremendous bureaucracy of inspectors going around checking each and every home, when it was started and completed, to see whether it was built under N.H.A. standards and to find a reason not to give the builder the $500. It is nothing but a gimmick. Here is a case where the government offers something with one hand and takes it away with the other. It offers $500, and takes it away in the sales tax on building materials. A sales tax of 4 per cent can add $2,000 to the cost of a home. On a $40,000 house it will mean an extra $1,600, and it must be remembered that construction costs in the winter months are higher than during the summer. Will people build in the wintertime to get this $500, in view of the extra cost and the imposition of the sales tax?

There is another gimmick in the nine points announced by the Minister of Labour, the $75 bonus to an employer who employs workers over 45 years of age during a certain period. Where are the new programs the government was going to bring into effect?

Mr. Gordon: Would the hon. member be willing to answer a question? Do I gather from his remarks that he is opposed to the suggestion that this measure should be introduced, which would give employment to people over 45 years of age?

Mr. Starr: I did not say that. I said that this was one of the two new points—

Mr. Gordon: You called it a gimmick.

Mr. Starr: Both of them are gimmicks. It is just a gimmick because it would take a great army of inspectors to go around to every establishment in the country that employs people to find out if they have lived up to the regulations, which have yet to be drawn, in order to qualify for this $75.

What has the government done? It has amended the Atlantic Development Board Act to give six new Grits a position on it. It has given that board $100 million for a period of six years, and restricted expansion in the Atlantic provinces. The department of industry has been established, but even the Liberal senators in the other house were against it.

Mr. Byrne: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman; I am sure if the hon. member were kept in order he would be making very little of his speech this afternoon. There is a well known rule—

Mr. Pugh: What is your point of order?

Mr. Byrne: —that no hon. member should reflect on any act of parliament that has been passed in the current session of the house. That is one of the points on which the hon. member is out of order, and I would like to bring it to the attention of the committee at this time.

An hon. Member: Which measure?

Mr. Byrne: The Atlantic Development Board Act and the department of industry and commerce.

Mr. Starr: I want to thank the hon. member, and I will keep that in mind.

Mr. Byrne: I ask that the hon. member obey the rules, and then I am sure his speech will be short.

Mr. Starr: I thank the hon. member and I will try to keep the rules of the house. I am sure, Mr. Chairman, if I digress too far from them you will bring them to my attention. The government has introduced nothing new to deal with the economic situation of the country. As I have said, the municipal winter works program has been cut by six weeks and—

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order—

The Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, Your Honour is rising on a point of order?

The Deputy Chairman: No, I am not rising on a point of order. I rise to inform the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to reply to the hon. member but he did mention the name of Mr. C. J. McConnell, president of the national house builders association, and I would just like to point out that the national house builders association presented a brief, in which they said that if the proposed tax could not be withdrawn altogether they would be grateful if it could be introduced in stages, and they thought it would be much easier for the industry to absorb it in that way. I notice that the hon. member read from and referred to a—

Mr. Byrne: That was out of order also.

Mr. Gordon: Don't say it was out of order before I read mine.

Mr. Pugh: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, may the minister refer to something which was out of order, as admitted by the parliamentary secretary on the other side? May he refer to it at this time as being out of order?

Mr. Byrne: I suggest that the previous speaker's speech would be stricken from the record if he were to be held out of order at every point on which he contravened the rules.

Mr. Gordon: I do not propose to get into a wrangle over these points, but I would like to draw the hon. member's attention to a statement made by Mr. McConnell, as reported in the Edmonton Journal of July 9, in which he said:

> We are gratified that Mr. Gordon has seen fit to comply with this request so the industry can become acclimatized to the higher costs.

While I am talking about Mr. McConnell I wonder if I might be permitted, with the consent of the house, to read a telegram which he sent me today. It reads as follows, and in its ending has a very direct bearing on the subject under discussion:

> Congratulations on success of negotiations in Washington over week end. National house builders association commends your prompt and effective action on proposed American security tax. Your achievement already reversing approved lenders' decision to divert available funds from N.H.A. mortgages to bonds to take advantage of more attractive investment.
>
> C. J. McConnell, P. Eng., President,
> National House Builders Association.

Mr. Starr: I would just like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he was in Washington or not?

Now, Mr. Chairman, this was supposed to be a government of boldness and imagination.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I understood the hon. gentleman's time had expired.

Mr. Starr: That is fine. I am starting again.

Mr. Pickersgill: Really, Mr. Chairman; I hope that if the hon. gentleman is going to go on speaking he will be asked to speak, like other members of the committee, to the resolution before us and not make a speech on the address which was passed some month and a half ago.

Mr. Starr: The resolution before us has a direct effect upon the employment and unemployment situation in this country. This was stated very dramatically by the Minister of Finance when he introduced his budget and said that these measures were to deal with these very important aspects of our economy. In order to deal with that situation thoroughly and completely it is necessary to review what the government has done in its bold and imaginative approach to economic problems.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I rise again on a point of order. The hon. gentleman was allowed to proceed without interruption for about half an hour making a speech which was almost totally irrelevant to the business before the committee. The budget has been adopted—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: —and we are in committee of ways and means on the resolutions. The government indicated clearly, with the unanimous approval of the committee, that there would not be any technical restriction on the debate—

Mr. Pugh: Closure.

Mr. Pickersgill: —so far as the earlier resolution was concerned; that any reference to that resolution as compared with this one would be considered in order. But the hon. member for Edmonton West drew my attention, and I underlined it, to the fact that we were not opening up the resolutions that had already been dealt with, nor other fields beyond the Excise Tax Act resolution.

If we are ever to make any progress, Mr. Chairman, surely the rules must be abided by in a reasonable manner. The effect of these proposed taxes upon the economy could be discussed. I would not object in the least to the hon. gentleman doing that, but when he starts talking about the department of industry and things of that sort, which have no relation whatever to this matter and about which the house—indeed, both houses—made a decision and respecting which there has been royal assent, those matters are totally irrelevant. It seems to me that if we are to have any order in parliament at all, some attention must be paid to the rules, especially by those senior members and privy councillors with great experience, who almost invariably invoked the rules in the narrowest possible spirit when they sat over here.

Mr. Starr: Speaking on the point of order, Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of State mentioned that these resolutions are as a result of the budget that was presented. I submit that this is not so; these are not the resolutions which represent the budget. The budget, in other words, has been withdrawn by the presentation of these resolutions. These are modified resolutions which have been presented and they will have an effect upon our economic situation, and employment and unemployment in this country.

The Secretary of State says we are experienced privy councillors. I would like to refer him to the fact that he and his colleagues have been referred to as old pros. Well, we know where old pros end up—in the bush league. As a matter of fact I can go even further than that and call them the three G's, the Grit-gimmick-government.

Mr. Olson: Mr Chairman, on the point of order raised by the Secretary of State, I think most of us would agree that the hon. member for Ontario has been ranging far and wide in some of the arguments put forward on this matter. However, when the Secretary of State says the budget has been adopted, I must disagree with him. I think the only thing that has been adopted is that the house agreed it should go into committee to consider the budget resolutions. Certainly the budget itself has not been adopted. Also, of course, we have to take into consideration the fact that since that vote new and different resolutions have been introduced. Therefore, while I have some sympathy with him because of the wide latitude given to the hon. member for Ontario, I cannot accept his statement that the budget has been adopted.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, just before Your Honour makes a decision could I say a word on the point of order raised by the Secretary of State. I am a rather new member here, but I listened for five years to the hon. gentleman in opposition. If my memory serves me correctly, on more than one occasion, in fact probably on hundreds of occasions, there was no restriction whatever on debate. Debate on a subject can come in one way or another. I suggest to the hon. gentleman that whenever he wanted to discuss a problem, he was able to bring it in. But to come right down to the point of this strip-tease budget that we have had right down the line, we still do not know where it is going to end.

Mr. Pickersgill: Just like strip-tease.

Mr. Pugh: We are on the budget resolutions at the present time, and they refer back to the budget. It is true that we voted on the budget in this house. But if this is so, how can the government change the budget without further debate? It has been said that the hon. member for Ontario has been engaging in a far ranging debate, but there was to be no restriction on this debate and the hon. member has touched upon nothing outside the budget or outside those things which pertain to the budget, because the budget goes to the financial arrangements that this government proposes for Canada. On that assumption I say that from now for the period of the next four or five days we will probably have a very wide ranging debate, and I think it is proper to discuss these things at this time.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The Chair can understand how easily one can, when speaking on these resolutions, stray away and perhaps not adhere as closely as he should to the question in hand. I would suggest that in the interests of economy of time we adhere as closely as possible to the topic under discussion. We are now discussing paragraph 1 of the Excise Tax Act resolution. The hon. member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I think I can agree with the hon. member for Ontario when he suggests that no proposals have created so much public protest as the ones introduced under the Excise Tax Act resolution back on June 13. I believe, too, there has been a definite withdrawal of some plans that had been made for construction within Canada as a result of the budget resolutions introduced at that time.

However, if we are to accept the premise that something needed to be done by the government to bring the budget more in balance, I suppose we must also accept the argument put forward by the Minister of Finance that some measures had to be taken which would broaden the base for revenue and taxation. I think we have to consider both these things in balance. One is sometimes led to believe that the imposition of new taxes, certainly if they have been suddenly imposed at a rate of 11 per cent, might have the effect of being a tax of diminishing returns, to the extent that additional government expenditure would be required to take care of unemployment resulting from imposing these taxes.

Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I had just begun my remarks respecting the excise tax resolutions when the committee rose at six o'clock. At that time I was discussing the point of diminishing returns with respect to the government's stated intention of attempting to balance the budget, or of bringing the budget closer into balance. I believe it is fair to say that the government in its dealings with Canadian citizens cannot approach these matters in exactly the same manner as a corporation. In other words, one cannot look at the books and say that there are millions of dollars worth of sales, and that if a tax of 11 per cent, or any other percentage, is applied one can then multiply the tax by the previous year's sales and expect a revenue on that basis. We also have to realize that in the public affairs of this country sometimes a situation could develop whereby government expenditure would be greater than the anticipated revenue because of some disruptions in the economy affecting employment, and so on.

In addition to that, Mr. Chairman, I think we should accept the argument that the Minister of Finance has made that we need to do something to lower the deficits which Canada has experienced in its national affairs over the last few years. I believe that if we look at the increase in the national debt, the debt service charges which have been building up so rapidly, we cannot help becoming alarmed at the situation, and certainly any move to balance the budget or to try to balance the budget is a step in the right direction in slowing down this acceleration. However, I should like to suggest to the minister that increasing taxes—in other words, trying to increase revenue—is only one way of attempting to bring the budget into balance. We should also be looking at ways of eliminating expenditure which is equally as important as the other side of the ledger.

Looking back over the last few years, Mr. Chairman, we have seen enormous increases in the contribution paid by the Canadian people to the national debt. We have seen this in absolute terms of dollars and cents, and we have also seen the percentage of the interest charge on the national debt increased. I think the now famous conversion loan of 1958 added more to the expenditure side of the national account than any other single action of any government in Canadian history outside of wartime. I believe it is fair to say that this particular action of the government not only added a great deal to the debt service charges of that year, but that its effects will be with us in some cases for 25 years to come. While Conservative members are trying to make a lot out of the public protests which arose because of some of these additional taxes which were proposed by the minister of finance, they should remember that they did in fact create a situation in Canada during the last five or six years where it was necessary for a minister of finance, no matter to which party he belonged, to increase the revenue to take care of this additional expenditure. We in this party do not believe that that action was necessary. We do not believe it achieved any beneficial purpose for the Canadian people, and if it did it has not been thoroughly and adequately explained to this date. Perhaps here was another case of the government taking what was called bold, imaginative action and having it backfire on them, and consequently on the taxpayers of the country.

We in this party have over the years advocated that there should be some other source of funds available to the government so that this tremendous increase in the debt service charges of the national treasury will at least be slowed down a little. We have said time and again that the Bank of Canada could be used to provide some of this capital which the government requires to expand the social services of this country. There are hon. members of this house and Canadian citizens outside this house who I believe do not quite understand just what it is the Social Credit party have been proposing with regard to having this capital supplied to the government. On occasions, some people just ridiculed the proposals we made. On others, people honestly and sincerely recognized the problem but did not understand the suggestions we were making as to ways of meeting it.

I have before me a series of articles written for the Winnipeg Free Press. They were carried on the pages of that paper in October and November, 1961. I am sure the minister would agree that the editorial writers and other writers on the staff of the Winnipeg Free Press are certainly not pro-Social Credit in their views. In fact, if anything can be said about them it is, I think, that they have unfalteringly supported the Liberal party over the years, whether right or wrong. So if I read certain excerpts from these articles I do not think the minister will brand them as additional Social Credit propaganda which can be dismissed as ridiculous or without foundation in fact. I want to read some of these passages so that we may lay a foundation for the proposals we are trying to make —a foundation which will gain some credence among people outside the Social Credit party.

Experts who are skilled in such matters will find that the relationship between currency, monetary inflation and sales of government bonds is direct and easily established. All that is necessary is to compare the amounts of the inflation with the government's offering of bonds and a little later, with increases in the assets of the chartered banks.

First comes the inflation—baiting the hook, so to speak. Then comes the bond issue. The public buys little. But the next time the assets of the banks are reported they show a corresponding gain in the holding of government bonds.

Here is another excerpt:

There is a wealth of statistics on money supply going back to early days. The pitfall for the unwary is that the only set of statistics which is based on a comparable dollar is the work of the research experts of the Bank of Canada, and have never been published. This set is available at the Bank of Canada at Ottawa but cannot be referred to usefully in this article because readers cannot easily verify the figures.

Accurate statistics for the years prior to the creation of the Bank of Canada are conveniently available in Professor Knox's study published by the Rowell-Sirois royal commission in 1940. Later figures are available in the statistics of the Bank of Canada.

The present figures appearing in the Bank of Canada weekly, monthly and annual reports go back only to 1947. These are readily available at any good library. For present purposes the record can start in 1950. Generally speaking, the years 1950 to 1957 when the government changed were —except for 1950—good years. The growth in the money supply was the normal growth required by a growing population and a growing national output.

Then follows a list of the total money supply for each year from 1950 to 1960. I do not intend to read this list now, because there is a summary at the end which I shall quote.

It will be seen that the increase under the Liberal government, after 1950, was about $500 millions per year, except for 1955 which brought an upward spurt of $1 billion. This is a period of just over six years. Except for one year—1959—the increase in money supply under the Diefenbaker government has been very great. Indeed, there have been two great inflationary splurges. In 1958, the increase was $1,324 millions.

I just put this on record so that the public of Canada may know that there is an increase in the money supply every year in a normal, growing economy and that there are years in which such an increase is substantially above the $500 million which is the average rate of increase during that period of time.

In this series of articles, the writer sets out to explain the technique used by the Bank of Canada to expand the money supply. He says:

The best way to explain . . . is to give an example. The bank is the agent of the government. The government in the present year—

The year referred to is 1961.

—is spending $980 millions more than it receives in revenue from taxation. The government must, therefore, raise money by selling bonds and thus be able to pay its bills.

The article goes on:

In the illustration given, the government needs $250 millions. It is afraid to take a chance on the open market and so increases the money supply.

The Bank of Canada puts in an order with financial houses to buy any given amount of government bonds—say $20 million worth. The bond houses go on the open market and buy these bonds. They present themselves to the Bank of Canada the next morning and say "Here are the bonds you ordered. You owe us $20 million".

The Bank of Canada accepts the bonds and pays for them with a cheque—a small piece of paper worth, perhaps, 2 cents. The investment houses can do only one thing with that cheque—deposit it in a chartered bank. And the chartered banks can do but one thing with the Bank of Canada cheque. They present themselves before the teller's wicket in the Bank of Canada and deposit it in their account. The chartered banks are to the Bank of Canada what the mass of the people are to the chartered banks—customers.

I continue to quote.

Under the Bank Act, the chartered banks are required to hold cash or Bank of Canada deposits equal to 8 per cent of their own deposits from the public. This means that once the $20 million is deposited with the Bank of Canada the chartered banks can expand their own deposits by 12½ times this amount—or by $250 millions.

The money supply is thus expanded by $250 millions by the stroke of a pen.

The chartered banks suddenly find themselves in possession of $250 millions of money or credit which they can lend. But they already had met all the credit-worthy demands. They had not been short of money.

So it follows, the banks use the $250 millions of new money to buy the $250 million bond issue which the government promptly issues. The government's accounts with the banks go up by this amount.

What has happened is that the chartered banks have increased their deposits by $250 millions and the money is thus dispersed all over the country—to contractors, manufacturers, civil servants, old age pensioners, and so on.

That is the end of the article. The point I wish to make is this: If this is correct—and we believe this is the way in which the increase in the money supply takes place—then why in the name of common sense cannot the Minister of Finance and the federal treasury go directly to the Bank of Canada, which is a publicly owned institution, and get the money there in the first place? If this were done, then the interest paid on this increase in the money supply would accrue to the Bank of Canada, which must turn its profits over to the treasury annually. I do not understand why we cannot use this means of increasing the money supply rather than having the chartered banks create an increase and then obliging the government of Canada to pay interest to them on something they did not have before this transaction took place.

Possibly there is a good, solid reason why this cannot be done, in which case I should like the Minister of Finance to explain to us. I bring this matter up at this time because we are interested in the minister's argument that something ought to be done to balance the budget—that something ought to be done to halt, to roll back, this tremendous increase in the debt service charge which is piling up year after year.

I think it is interesting to point out at this time that the increase in debt service charges for all of the years since 1958 is nearly equal to the deficits that have been incurred for those years. Even if this is so, if we had done something basic along the lines of what I am suggesting now so that the increase in the money supply would be made available to the government rather than coming to them as a debt, we would not be faced with nearly $900 million in interest charges this year and the deficit that the minister is forecasting simply would not have been necessary.

I wanted to bring this out, Mr. Chairman. It is not Social Credit propaganda. It was written by a man who has supported the Liberal party all through the years. We cannot undo or change something that took place years ago but we think that this can be done now. We are faced with this problem. We have got to meet the commitments that previous governments have made to the bondholders, but even a trip of a thousand miles begins with the first step and we can start now to do the financing of the federal government through this kind of action.

An hon. Member: Just like Aberhart.

Mr. Olson: There are some gentlemen to my right who are using the same old kind of ridicule that we have been experiencing for the last 28 years. If it is ridiculous, I wish they would come forward with some kind of solution for the tremendous increase in the debt that has been accumulating, and the interest charges on it.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the member for Medicine Hat a question. Is he against increasing old age pensions or baby bonuses? You cannot have your cake and eat it. If you are going to have these social services you have got to pay for them. If you are against any increase in social services, let us hear it tonight.

The Chairman: Order. I suggest to the hon. member that perhaps he should address the Chair.

Mr. Woolliams: I am sorry, sir; I should have done that. That is right. I agree with you and I am sorry.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Woolliams: Let us have an answer.

Mr. Olson: Again, of course, the hon. member is trying to throw up a smokescreen. I have not said anything about increasing social services. I have been dealing with the problem that has been building up with regard to the tremendous increase in debt service charges. I think all members of the house are concerned about it, even though they try to blow it away by suggesting that we are not in favour of social services. I see no relation between the two points. I might say to the hon. member that if we did not have to pay $890 million odd in interest charges this year we would have a whole lot more money to do many things that are necessary.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I wonder whether the hon. member would permit another question.

Mr. Olson: One more, but I should like to continue my speech.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member has the floor, but he may yield, of course.

Mr. Woolliams: He has yielded.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I wish to thank the hon. member for Medicine Hat for yielding the floor. I realize that all Canadians are concerned about the debt. I also realize that in the budget a deficit of approximately $650 million was forecast, and yet he voted for it. How can he explain voting for a deficit of that amount and at the same time speaking against debt and deficits generally?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, the answer to that is very simple. We could have done the irresponsible thing his party did last winter—

Mr. Woolliams: You voted for it then.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You were responsible.

Mr. Olson: Certain items in the whole government policy were picked out on which the government was brought down; but now we have come back here and are picking up where we left off. We did not solve anything. As a matter of fact, the former government managed to play around with the public business of Canada to the extent that we never even had an opportunity to look at the estimates for the whole fiscal year 1962-63.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I wonder whether the hon. member will permit another question.

The Chairman: Order. As the hon. member for Acadia knows, he can ask the hon. member who has the floor whether a question may be asked, but if the member who has the floor does not yield he should be allowed to continue his speech.

Mr. Olson: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I have asked and I hoped he would yield, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Olson: I want to deal with some of these matters. As a matter of fact, in my view the previous government had a responsibility to deal with the estimates, the budget and all of the other matters of public business before they saw an international exchange crisis coming and quickly closed up shop and ran to the people.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You are wrong.

Mr. Olson: No.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Permit me to ask one question.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): If I am wrong, permit me to ask one more question.

Mr. Olson: The hon. member will have full opportunity to make a speech.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I acknowledge your fear.

The Chairman: Order. May I bring to the attention of some hon. members who are interrupting unduly and perhaps unfairly, that the member who has the floor should be allowed to continue with his remarks freely and uninterrupted.

Mr. Olson: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I hope you will take into consideration the loss of time they have caused me. The point I was about to make was that if the government would adopt some of the proposals we have suggested with respect to finding social capital or social credit—call it whatever you like—for the municipal development fund, that proposal would be one of the most far reaching and beneficial introduction by any government in a long time. I am not going to get into a discussion of that matter, because it will be coming up later; but the fact is that when the money supply is increased we believe it could be done directly by the Bank of Canada, and thus we would not have to sink deeper into the mire of debt where we are committed to pay increasingly large debt service charges.

In his opening remarks the minister asked for some alternatives and I suggest that he consider this proposal very seriously as an alternative, as a means of bringing the budget closer into balance. That is why I respectfully submit this to him.

There are one or two other matters I want to discuss with respect to the excise tax resolutions. One of them has to do with the administrative problems that the minister encountered respecting what is now referred to as the 30 per cent takeover tax. I realize it was withdrawn, but I bring it up now because the President of the United States has apparently proposed to congress a tax that is going to involve almost the same kind of administrative problems. As I see it, the major difference is that the tax will be 15 per cent rather than 30 per cent on sales of stock that would in effect transfer ownership of Canadian companies to Americans.

The other major difference is that the United States government and the United States treasury will be collecting the revenue, rather than the Canadian government under a proposal which, if enacted, will encounter the same kind of problem. If the President of the United States and his advisers have worked out some method of execution, if one may call it that, to overcome these administrative problems, I think it would be well for the Minister of Finance to find out what it is, because if the Canadian economy is going to have to deal with measures to restrict foreign ownership and foreign investment it seems to me it would be beneficial to the Canadian government and treasury if they could collect the revenue, rather than the United States government, because the effect is going to be the same. They are measures designed to inhibit the flow of capital from the United States and expand the ownership of Canadian industrial establishments in Canada. I realize, of course, that President Kennedy's proposals are much expanded over what the Minister of Finance brought in because they include bonds and securities as well as equity issues. In so far as this new plan will apply to equity stock, I think we should have some explanation of how the United States government plans to administer the collection of this tax and still avoid the administrative difficulties that caused the minister to withdraw his proposal. It would be interesting to know how this is done.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, may I say that I think we have to realize that there is no balance between the $500 bonus that the department intends to extend to new home-builders and the imposition of the excise tax on the building material that will be going into these homes. As the hon. member for Ontario pointed out, there will likely be at least $500 additional cost of construction simply because construction will take place during the winter as opposed to being undertaken during the summer. If one accepts that, and I think it is a reasonable deduction, then you are right back where you started. However, the addition of the 4 per cent tax on the cost of the material going into that home is going to be hung on to the mortgage, so the home owner will eventually have to pay, that is by the time the mortgage is paid off, at least $500, $1,000 or several times that amount.

In closing, may I say that I think we have to accept the argument that something ought to be done about this tremendous increase in the debt, and debt service charges. I urge the minister to give some attention to the administrative problem that will be encountered in connection with any particular measure before he introduces this in the house, because once a measure of this nature is introduced there are repercussions in the economy and in the stock market that are not easy to overcome. The other thing I should mention is that there have been some windfalls to wholesalers, and in some cases I do not believe the tax will be refunded to the customer.

This is not quite fair. I think the problem of imposing this 30 per cent takeover tax should certainly have been given far more consideration before it was introduced, in spite of the "60 days of decision". There were some rather heavy losses and some substantial gains as a result of the few days it was talked about in the house. The government did not increase its revenues as a result, but there were some people hurt while other people made fortunes to which they were not really entitled.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, the particular section of the Excise Tax Act now before us, of course, deals with the removal of the exemption of building materials, and it is to this I should like to address myself. This matter has been so widely discussed in the house and in the press that it is difficult to say very much about it now without endlessly repeating the arguments that have been made before. I, therefore, do not intend to take very much time of the committee. I will merely summarize our unalterable opposition to this tax and state that we will not vote for it when the resolution is called. Indeed, I hope to move an amendment at the conclusion of my remarks to emphasize our opposition to this tax.

We do not want to repeat arguments that were used in the budget speech, although since that time there have been certain changes in the budget resolutions. Some people have referred to this as almost a baby budget. Presumably, the baby is needed to take care of the miscarriage that happened to its predecessor. I listened to the remarks of the minister this afternoon with a great deal of attention, hoping that we would hear from him some clear, precise, intelligent and cogent arguments that would convince us to support this particular measure. As I understand the minister's position, his argument in favour of the tax is twofold.

First, there was his basic argument that we must somehow begin to move towards a balanced budget and cut down the national deficit and, second, that in order to do this we must find new sources of revenue. The tax that is being imposed in this resolution is the least unpleasant one that the minister could think of under the circumstances. Mr. Chairman, with both of those propositions we are in complete disagreement. We do not accept the premise that what is needed at the moment is a balanced budget. When you have a condition of chronic unemployment and regional underdevelopment such as we have discussed in this house, this myth of a balanced budget is a form of economic lunacy. What is really needed at the present time or in the near future in Canada is a large, healthy deficit. We feel that a great infusion of capital should be made available; social capital is what we have called it. We have been asking for this since the commencement of the session, for large doses of social capital to be injected into the Canadian economy.

The member for Medicine Hat, who spoke before me devoted a great deal of his speech to outlining his party's fears of large national deficits. Other hon. members have done the same. I would only point out to the hon. member that this fear is not shared by many of the progressive governments of Europe. They have consistently run deficits for 10 or 12 years and, at the same time, have managed practically to wipe out unemployment and to have these social security benefits. The only thing about a deficit is that the percentage of your gross national product required to service it should remain practically constant. So long as this is done, large deficits present no problem, either in their financing or in their strain upon the economy of the country.

We do not accept the proposition of the minister, that what is required today is a balanced budget. We think this is a myth, economically unwise and unjustifiable. We also disagree with the particular form of taxation imposed here. This is a sales tax. As we said during the budget discussion, the sales tax is the most regressive form of taxation possible because it affects everybody in the community in a similar way regardless of the size of his income. We feel it is an unfair form of taxation. It is particularly unjustifiable in the case of a national government. Our provincial governments have to impose sales taxes, and have been forced into doing so because of their restricted revenue raising base. However, in so far as a national government is concerned, with all of the tax raising methods at its disposal, it is completely unjustifiable for that government to introduce a sales tax at this time.

For some strange reason the government has seen fit to single out for this new regressive tax one of the most sensitive sectors of the Canadian economy, and by that I mean the building and construction industry, and the manufacture of machinery for industry. It seems to us that by singling out this very sensitive section of the economy the government is setting in process of movement changes that will increase unemployment, decrease employment and cut the over-all revenue. We feel that to have singled out this particular industry is extremely unwise.

This action is 100 per cent incompatible with the government's expressed goal of full employment, because it holds out to us the hope of increased revenues while at the same time it is setting in force movements and trends in the economy which will result in less employment and eventually less income to the government. It is a self-defeating piece of economic lunacy, shortsighted, incredible, discriminatory and just plain illogical.

Since it has been proposed there has been a wave of protests from coast to coast. I am not going to place them on the record because I am sure the minister himself has received far more than other hon. members, but all of us have been deluged with opposition to this particular measure, urging us to oppose it as strongly as we can. For example there was an editorial in the Globe and Mail on June 26, and I may mention in passing that this was a newspaper which performed the interesting feat in the last election of changing its party without changing its principles. In this particular editorial it dealt with the sales tax and said:

> The sales tax can only be interpreted as an expedient to raise revenue, in the area of the economy where expansion would be most likely to create jobs. Yet the finance minister has admitted that taxes are already too high, and that unemployment is Canada's major problem. The best that can be said of the budget in this respect is that there will certainly be no unemployment among chartered accountants and lawyers, as they sort out the confusions and plead the contradictions.

As I find myself in the latter category I might almost welcome that particular suggestion but, Mr. Chairman, in the Gazette of Wednesday June 26, its financial editor, Mr. John Meyer, attacks this proposal, registers his objections and concludes by saying:

> The point here is that the opposition, in forcing the withdrawal of these measures, can accomplish a valuable service—

We would very much like to accomplish that valuable service, tonight if possible.

This afternoon the minister outlined what he felt was the compensating factors for this new tax, namely the changes in the income tax regulations, the reduction of one quarter of 1 per cent in the interest rate and the enlargement of the amount of mortgage with a consequent reduction in down payments. I hope that before this debate concludes the minister will give us some facts and figures to substantiate this bland assumption, because all of our calculations indicate that by the time you are through with this arrangement your down payments will be higher, your monthly carrying costs will be higher, and the number of people qualifying for loans will be lower because the income requirements will be higher.

I hope the minister will give us some evidence to indicate that this is truly a compensating factor; but previous speakers have pointed out that this one quarter of 1 per cent reduction is more than offset by the increase in the cost of a home caused by this sales tax, and the increase in construction costs during wintertime.

We are not prepared to accept the bland assurance of the government that this is a wise tax. We intend to oppose it for the reasons I have stated: 1, it is based on the wrong philosophy; 2, it will curtail expansion and increase unemployment; 3, it will reduce government income; 4, by its nature it is a regressive, discriminatory and unfair tax, and 5, it will have a drastic effect on one of the most sensitive sectors in our economy, the building and manufacturing industry. For those reasons I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands:

That the Excise Tax Act resolution be amended by the deletion of paragraph 1.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I would certainly think this amendment is out of order because it most assuredly would have a major effect on the balance of ways and means. I would like to say a word or two about the hon. member's remarks. He is a man with whom I quite often agree and sometimes disagree, but I was surprised that he quoted the Globe and Mail editorial with such enthusiasm. I am sure this will be looked upon with considerable satisfaction by the editors of the Globe and Mail, who perhaps until tonight might not have thought that the hon. member for Danforth and his party always agreed with their economic points of view.

By the same token it surprises me to think that the editors of the Globe and Mail and the progressive and very sincere members of the New Democratic party might now be described as being, if not in bed together, at least contemplating an accouchement of that type. This is a development of the debate that I had not foreseen and I am sure it will be looked upon with interest, and in some quarters perhaps with some slight raising of the eyebrows, if not amusement. When I think of the editor of the Globe and Mail, whom I have known for some time and who I sometimes think—

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, I wonder is the minister speaking on a point of order or on the amendment. I gathered the impression that he was going to speak on a point of order.

Mr. Woolliams: I take it he likes the Globe and Mail.

Mr. Gordon: It all depends on the day of the week; but I think the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka made a good point and perhaps at the moment I should only speak on the point of order. I shall restrain myself until Your Honour has ruled on it, and after that I may have a little more leeway to discuss the amendment, if Your Honour has not ruled it out of order. If Your Honour does rule it out of order, then I shall not have the opportunity of saying any more about the Globe and Mail.

Mr. Aiken: I wonder if I might assist the minister.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the hon. member addressing the Chair on a point of order?

Mr. Aiken: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I would particularly like to point out the provision in Beauchesne, fourth edition, page 221, citation 265 which reads:

No member other than a minister of the crown may introduce a bill for the reduction of duties. The government must take full responsibility for the taxation levied to provide the revenue. But the house enjoys complete freedom to make every representation possible to the government with regard to the manner in which the ministers discharge this responsibility. This duty the members may perform by moving amendments to reduce the taxes proposed by the administration.

I would say, Mr. Chairman, that since the amendment has the effect of deleting a tax, therefore it is in effect a motion to reduce taxation and would be in order.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, I merely wish to observe that a somewhat analogous motion was made yesterday by my desk-mate when we were dealing with these budget resolutions. It is reported in Hansard at page 2479. A motion was made to delete one of the paragraphs of the income tax resolution, and it came to a vote in the committee. It is not completely on all fours with the amendment we are now discussing, but it seems to me that, taken in conjunction with the representations of the last speaker, this amendment should be ruled in order so that we might hear the interesting comments of the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, I submit that it would be interesting, as it has been up to now, to hear the observations of the Minister of Finance. However, I submit also that this is not a good reason for abrogating the rules and practices that have been established in the house over many years. I am sure that most hon. members who were in the house during the session of the last parliament will recall a similar discussion on a similar point of order. But if I may go back to 1948, a similar point of order was then raised and determined by a vote of the house; that a resolution presented—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What page of Hansard?

Mr. Byrne: —by the Minister of Finance by way of a resolution that was segregated into paragraphs by numbers was in effect the same as any other resolution presented by a minister and no portion of that resolution could be dealt with paragraph by paragraph in committee of the whole.

In the 1951 Debates of the House of Commons, volume III, it will be seen that the then minister of finance protested a ruling of the Chair. A vote was taken in committee of the whole and the minister appealed the ruling of the Chair that a vote may be taken paragraph by paragraph. At page 2662 of Hansard of that session hon. members will see that a vote was taken and the decision of the Chair was reversed. There are a number of such rulings which have substantiated this premise, and as recently as the last session of parliament a matter of a similar nature was discussed. The hon. member for Winnipeg South, speaking to the question that was before the committee—that is, on the point of order that was before the committee as to whether the resolution should be dealt with paragraph by paragraph—had this to say. It will be recalled, of course, that the hon. member for Winnipeg South was on the opposite side of the house at that time. He sought to prevent a vote being taken on the resolution paragraph by paragraph, and pointed out substantially what I said earlier, that the excise tax and income tax resolutions are segregated for clarification and for no other purpose. I will read from Hansard of November 9, 1962, page 1477:

> Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to add one point to the very learned discussion we have had, contributed to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I wonder whether he has considered this fact. Although he was quoting from Bourinot with regard to a motion which might be divided into two or more distinct propositions, we are here dealing with a resolution, and a resolution is brought into the house and is followed by a bill. If the hon. member will look at the order paper he will find several resolutions there which contain several propositions; but the resolutions are written as a paragraph, divided by semicolons. It appears to me from a consideration of this matter that the budget resolutions are, for the convenience of the house, divided and numbered, rather than written all in one distinct paragraph with just the separation of a semicolon. Rather than being a whole series of distinct propositions, it is a resolution, just as other resolutions are, on which subsequently a bill will be founded and in which distinct measures are brought forward. That is perhaps a portion of the argument that was overlooked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre when he was speaking on this matter.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this argument applies equally to this proposition, and that this amendment is strictly and completely out of order having regard to the rules of the house.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I do not claim to be an expert on all the citations that could be referred to with respect to the point of order that has been raised. When we look at citation 263 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, in paragraph 2 we find these words:

> The principle that the sanction of the crown must be given to every grant of money drawn from the public revenue, applies equally to the taxation levied to provide that revenue.

Citation 265 quoted by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka seems to not altogether contradict that, except as regards the status of paragraph 1 of the excise tax proposals that are before us. It says, of course, that no member other than a minister of the crown may introduce a bill for the reduction of duties. However, further down it says:

> This duty the members may perform by moving amendments to reduce the taxes proposed—

I do not believe that in so far as the committee is concerned the provisions contained in paragraph 1 have actually come into law, according to the stage we are at in this committee. In other words, the Minister of Finance is asking for the repeal of certain exemptions that were previously in effect; therefore they must be classified as "proposed" taxes, and if we are to accept the last sentence of citation 265 it would appear to me that the amendment moved is in order.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Hear, hear for the Social Credit.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I, too, would like to speak on the point of order. May I first point out the very great importance of this point of order as indicated by the citation in Beauchesne already referred to by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka. The point he makes in this regard is supported in the following phraseology, which indicates the importance of the matter before Your Honour.

Mr. Woolliams: What page is that?

Mr. Brewin: It is page 221 of Beauchesne, citation 265, which reads as follows:

> But the house enjoys complete freedom to make every representation possible to the government with regard to the manner in which the ministers discharge this responsibility.

Upon this ruling depends the exercise of what is described as the complete freedom of the house, which surely should be interfered with only in the clearest of instances. The citation then goes on with a surprising and delightful clarity which, Mr. Chairman, must make your task an easy one. It says:

> This duty the members may perform by moving amendments to reduce the taxes proposed by the administration.

That, Mr. Chairman, is precisely what the motion of the hon. member for Danforth does. The resolution proposes what is in effect a new tax. It is perfectly true that it takes the form of calling for the removal of a previous exemption from taxation, but the excise tax which is proposed is clearly an imposition of tax. Ask the building industry and the construction industry of Canada if this is not the imposition of a new tax. It being thus, the freedom of this house to perform its duty by proposing amendments to reduce the taxes proposed by the administration is clearly indicated by this passage in citation 265. The prohibition referred to by the hon. member for Kootenay East—for a moment I almost mixed him up with the hon. member for Kootenay West, which would have been a horrible mistake—related, as I see it, to the sole responsibility of the government in levying taxes. We could move no amendment as private members which would levy a new tax, but in my submission it is perfectly clear from this citation that this historic freedom of the house is involved in this ruling which you are now called upon to make, but in which you are, as I said, relieved from anxiety in the matter by the clearcut terms of this citation.

Mr. Lloyd: Mr. Chairman, perhaps my perplexities as a new member may only add to the confusion but I would refer to Beauchesne's fourth edition, page 222, citation 268(1), which reads:

> Though it is the function of the committee of ways and means to impose rather than to repeal taxes, example of the repeal of taxation effected in this committee are to be found upon the journals. Proposals for the variation or modification of taxation can therefore be made in the committee, but these proposals must be grafted upon the financial scheme submitted by the government, and must not affect the balance of ways and means voted for the service of the year. Amendments, therefore, can be proposed to substitute another tax, of equivalent amount, for that proposed by the government, as an alternative duty, the necessity of new taxation, to that extent, being already declared on behalf of the crown.

If this were not so it would destroy the means of recognizing the responsibility of the government in financial matters.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Chairman, I should like to add my remarks to those made by my hon. friend the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Labour. Hon. members opposite have referred to citation 265 of Beauchesne's fourth edition. It is quite apparent from reading citation 265 that that is making reference only to bills and not to resolutions in committee of ways and means. Throughout it is clear that it refers to the power of the house in dealing with a bill, and we are a committee of ways and means, a committee of the whole house dealing with a resolution. Beauchesne is quite clear on this point, where in paragraph (4) of citation 266 he says:

> It is not in order to move the deletion of a particular clause in an excise tax resolution because it alters the balance of ways and means.

That is a very clear statement of what this committee can do and clearly shows that the amendment before us is obviously out of order.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Greenwood said that it would be a very grave error to get me mixed up with the hon. member for Kootenay West. I can assure him that I would feel very badly about that, but the mistake would be in his favour. I want to point out, in support of the argument of my hon. friend from Vancouver-Burrard, that the point of order is not that we will be so much impeding the balance of ways and means, but rather that this is a resolution not a bill and cannot be voted upon clause by clause. It can be agreed that discussion cease on various clauses, but there can be no determination by a division of the house on the resolution stage. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that you have no alternative but to rule this amendment out of order.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I marvel at the number of members on the government side who think this matter is clear and straightforward. I suggest that the hon. member for Kootenay East has come close to the heart of the point, but he has come at it from the wrong side.

Mr. Byrne: I am not a left winger; I am a right winger.

Mr. Knowles: I hope that remark is on the record. To get back to the point of order, hon. members realize that if the objection to this amendment is sustained we are put in the position which the hon. member for Kootenay East said we should be put in, namely that we have no right to express ourselves as a house on paragraph 1 of the Excise Tax Act resolution. In my view we are still suffering from the mistake which was made in 1948 when the house, by a vote, reversed a ruling which had been made by the chairman of the committee of ways and means at that time. Up to that time we had followed the simple, logical, understandable course of voting on the separate paragraphs of a budget resolution as they came along.

What is before us now is paragraph 1 of the Excise Tax Act resolution. It is a proposition complete in itself. Yet the hon. member for Kootenay East says that somehow the rules must be interpreted in such a way as to prohibit us from having the chance to vote on this section of the resolution. Because we are caught with that ruling of 1948—actually it was not a ruling, but a vote by the majority of the house against the ruling of the Liberal member who was in the chair at that time—because we are stuck with that, we have no other way to get a decision on individual paragraphs than by moving, as the hon. member for Danforth has done, that a particular paragraph be deleted.

I submit that after all the citations have been read on both sides the simple, common sense, logical position is that the House of Commons of Canada ought to have the right to vote on this proposition by itself. I submit that the most recent precedent occurred in this very committee only yesterday. Yesterday, my hon. friend from Winnipeg North moved by way of an amendment that paragraph 4 be deleted from the income tax resolution. The hon. member for Kootenay East was not on his feet then telling us we could not do it, and all these other people were not raising points of order. Of course, there were only a dozen or so of us who were prepared to vote for that amendment; but I submit that since the Chair yesterday allowed the hon. member for Winnipeg North to move the deletion of a paragraph from the income tax resolution a similar view should be taken today with respect to the excise tax resolution.

In both cases an attempt is being made to do a simple, common sense thing, namely to vote on the proposition which is before us. The minister has placed his thoughts before us on paragraph 1, and if we are no longer permitted to vote on these resolutions paragraph by paragraph, then I submit we should follow the precedent set yesterday when an hon. member moved to delete the paragraph.

The Chairman: I wonder if we have not heard sufficient argument on this point. As to the proposed amendment, I must say the Chair is ready to make a ruling and that additional argument would not be helpful in any way.

I should like to refer first of all to the point just made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who referred to the fact that yesterday the committee was allowed to vote on a similar amendment. The Chair was well aware of the difficulties which might arise from the standpoint of correct procedure in connection with that particular amendment; but as everyone knows, who was in the chamber at the time, no point of order was raised in connection with it and I felt I should not intervene by bringing up the question. That is why I allowed the committee to divide on the substance of the amendment. However, I do not think a precedent was set. As I say, I was fully aware of the implications of what was done yesterday. I had before me then the decision reported in Hansard of November 9, 1962, and I felt then, as I feel now, that no precedent was set.

To come to the particular point involved: paragraph 1 of the resolution before us proposes a tax. The amendment, to my mind, has an exactly opposite effect. Indeed, it destroys the proposal we have before us. It is not properly speaking, an amendment. It is a negative. In other words, it is an entirely new question which is now proposed and it would appear to me, if only for this reason, that this is sufficient ground for reaching a decision that this is not a proper amendment.

A moment ago the hon. member for Kootenay East brought up the point to which I referred, with regard to the decision of the house made last year. This decision can be found in Hansard of November 9, 1962 and I should like to read in part the ruling which was then made by Mr. Chairman Chown who said at page 1477:

> While I rose, perhaps instinctively, on the suggestion there should be a division on the section, I realize that I moved in haste and overlooked the authorities in support of the point of view I am now making, namely, that there should not be paragraph by paragraph division.
>
> My authority for that, briefly, is May's sixteenth edition, pages 411 and 412. Perhaps I might read a very brief portion of this passage on page 412 which is helpful to us.
>
> "The house does not recognize the right of individual members to insist on the division of motions moved in committee of the whole house or of motions giving special facilities for the transaction of public business—"

Of course, I am quoting only in part. I should like to refer directly to page 411 of May's sixteenth edition where we read:

> In 1770 a motion "That it is the rule of this House, that a complicated question which prevents any member from giving his free assent or dissent to any part thereof ought, if required, to be divided," was negatived on a division. As late as 1883 it was generally held that an individual member had no right to insist upon the division of a complicated question.

For these reasons, the Chair cannot put this amendment before the committee.

Mr. Scott: With great respect, Mr. Chairman, I appeal your ruling to the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker resumed the chair and made the following report:

> The question is an appeal to the house as follows:
>
> When a resolution to amend the Excise Tax Act was being considered in committee of ways and means, the hon. member for Danforth moved the following amendment:
>
> "I move that the Excise Tax Act resolution be amended by the deletion of paragraph 1."
>
> The Chair decided that the amendment was in effect a negative and was out of order as in accordance with recent practices and decisions of the house a vote could not be called on a particular section of a budget resolution. Whereupon the hon. member for Danforth appealed to the house from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

When the resolution to amend the Excise Tax Act was being considered in committee of ways and means, the hon. member for Danforth moved the following amendment:

"That the Excise Tax Act resolution be amended by the deletion of paragraph 1."

The Chair decided that the amendment was, in effect, a negative and was out of order as in accordance with recent practices and decisions of the house a vote could not be called upon a particular section of a budget resolution. Whereupon, the hon. member for Danforth appealed to the house from the decision of the Chair.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace)
Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe)
Badanai
Basford
Batten
Beaule
Bechard
Beer
Berger
Blouin
Boulanger
Brown
Byrne
Cadieux (Terrebonne)
Cameron (High Park)
Cantin
Caron
Carter
Chapdelaine
Choquette
Chretien
Côté (Longueuil)
Cowan
Crossman
Cyr
Davis
Deachman
Denis
Deschatelets
Dube
Dupuis
Emard
Ethier
Eudes
Favreau
Forgie
Foy
Francis Garland
Gelber
Gendron
Godin
Gray
Greene
Groos
Guay
Habel
Haidasz
Hahn
Harley
Honey
Jewett, Miss
Kelly
Klein
Lachance
Laing
Lamontagne
Laniel
Laverdiere
Lessard (Lake St. John)
Lessard (St. Henry)
Loiselle
Macaluso
Macdonald
Mackasey
MacNaught
McIlraith
McMillan
McNulty
McWilliam
Marcoux
Matheson
Matte
Mitchell
Moreau
Morison
Mullally
Munro
Nicholson
O'Keefe
Ouellet
Patterson
Pearson
Pickersgill
Pilon
Plourde
Richard
Rinfret
Rochon
Roxburgh
Sharp
Stewart
Tardif
Temple
Thompson
Tremblay
Tucker
Walker
Watson (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Whelan—100.

NAYS

Messrs:

Aiken
Alkenbrack
Barnett
Brewin
Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Cantelon
Chaplin
Chatterton
Churchill
Clancy
Cooper
Crouse
Danforth
Dionne
Doucett
Douglas
Fairweather
Fane
Fisher
Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke)
Flemming (Victoria-Carleton)
Hales
Herridge
Horner (Acadia)
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Irvine
Kennedy
Knowles
Laprise
Loney
MacEwan
MacLean (Queens)
Macquarrie
McCutcheon
McIntosh
Madill
Mandziuk
Martin (Timmins)
Martineau
Mather
Monteith
Moore
More
Muir (Lisgar)
Nasserden
Nesbitt
Noble
Olson
Pascoe
Paul
Perron
Peters
Pigeon
Pugh
Rapp
Ricard
Scott
Slogan
Southam
Starr
Stenson
Thomas
Vincent
Watson (Assiniboia)
Webb
Webster
Weichel
Winch
Winkler
Woolliams—70.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted to uphold the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Gordon: I was paired. If I had voted, I would have voted to uphold the ruling of the Chair.

And the house having resumed in committee:

The Chairman: Does the resolution carry?

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fisher: It is nice to know, Mr. Chairman, that the boys are in here earning their $10,000 tonight. I wish to bring up a particular matter relating to paragraph 1, although it specifically deals with paragraph 4 of the resolution. It is the question of what classification the institutions known as public libraries will receive under the general purposes of the first part of the resolution.

I suppose the minister is aware that the way the provision reads at present, any kind of university construction would be entitled to the exemption. Therefore a university library would be entitled to it. Libraries within colleges and universities will have the exemption, but the public institutions supported by communities or municipalities, or even endowed, will not be able to take advantage of it.

The minister must be aware that a public library to all intents and purposes is accepted as an educational institution. It is certainly accepted as such by the teaching profession. I took the trouble to call the Department of National Revenue, but the official who is supposedly responsible for interpreting this part of the resolution gave me to understand that public libraries would not be exempt.

I also think the minister is familiar enough with the penury of public libraries. He has an example in his own city where Toronto public library recently had difficulties in getting funds, and he must know that this imposition will hurt the construction of public libraries much more than it will secondary and primary schools in some parts of the country. Indeed, in Toronto itself the board of education has more facilities in terms of finance and the capacity to raise capital than the public library board.

For that reason the minister should give us some kind of declaration, right at the very beginning, as to what consideration he is going to give to classifying public libraries as educational institutions.

I know that if someone speaks about public libraries someone else is likely to bring up the question of art galleries and museums, but in effect throughout most of the country public libraries serve as museums and art galleries, and I think in general that part of the community which reads, studies and is interested in adult education would approve very heartily of public libraries being exempted.

I understand the minister has received representations on this point from the Canadian library association, and I can tell him that in my own constituency two communities intend to extend their library facilities within the very near future. From experience I know that the library boards in these communities have much more difficulty than boards of education in raising money. They will be especially hurt if public libraries are not included under the exemption set out in paragraph 4 of the resolution.

Mr. Gordon: I wonder if I might reply to this question now?

Mr. Aiken: I just have a few remarks to make on the same point. I was going to leave them until we had reached paragraph 4 where universities and educational institutions are defined, but I want to support the plea made by the hon. member for Port Arthur. Generally speaking libraries are in the same classification as educational institutions. They do have unusual difficulties because in many cases they are not part of municipal councils or municipal set-ups, and in some cases they form a more or less volunteer organization. They perform a very good public service at a very low cost, and I would certainly support the proposal of the hon. member that libraries should be specifically included in the definition contained in paragraph 4.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, before the minister replies I wonder whether I may have about 45 seconds to ask him—

An hon. Member: To clear yourself.

Mr. Olson: —this question. I was going to wait until clause 4 was under discussion to raise this question with respect to public libraries; however, there is one specific question I wanted to ask the minister. Is the government taking into consideration the limit on financing imposed by reason of a bylaw in a municipality which has been passed to provide the authority to borrow funds to build a library? I ask this question because the municipality and the local library board are confined to the limits imposed by the bylaw. Of course, if they classify them as educational institutions, that automatically takes care of the matter. On the other hand, if the minister does not intend to designate libraries as educational institutions, I wonder whether he would care to comment on what consideration the government will give to these bylaws which impose limits.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I think all hon. members will appreciate the fact that there is no complete equity in taxation, and as soon as you start to grant exceptions it is a question of where you draw the line. This particular problem of the libraries has been raised with me over the last several days by the hon. member for York-Humber, who is particularly concerned about a public library that is contemplated in the town of Mimico.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gordon: The hon. gentleman laughs, but I am being quite serious. This is a point, and I have been giving it consideration. My difficulty is that if the line of exemption is moved, the question is where do you draw that line? Unfortunately, or fortunately, all public libraries are not operated in the same fashion. In some cases everything is free; in other cases only certain things are free. Then, of course, you get to the stage where it is operated on a semi-commercial basis. I can assure my hon. friend that the members on this side of the house are very interested in libraries and in books. I believe it has been mentioned that some of us have even had the temerity to write books. We do not think that is anything to be ashamed of. I think it is fair to say that quite a lot of us read books, as do many hon. members across the way. But this is a difficult point upon which to draw the line, and we have decided that the line cannot be extended.

Mr. Weichel: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to have the opportunity of speaking on the budget resolutions, as my constituency is a growing industrial centre with approximately 350 diversified industries. My remarks will be mainly centred on objections and criticisms as expressed to the government and myself by many people in my constituency of Waterloo North and, no doubt, thousands of people across Canada, regarding the sales tax on building materials and machinery. These objections are growing daily in spite of the proposals announced by the Minister of Finance on Monday, July 8 that the tax will come into effect in stages.

Many of my people say that such proposals may tide them over for a while, but the final outcome will be the same. As was previously mentioned, this sales tax is of great concern to thousands of businessmen in my constituency as this area has a record of stability in industry and business. The people of Waterloo North are a fine blend of many nationalities and are progressive, hard working folk with a great record of industrial development. At the present time we enjoy the distinction of being an area with one of the lowest rates of unemployment in Canada. Mr. Chairman, with the 11 per cent sales tax added in stages, this fine record may be in jeopardy. Some of the remarks I will make later will substantiate the views of myself and others on this additional tax. The Minister of Finance, in his speech of July 8 as reported in Hansard at page 1950, had this to say:

> The old saying that only he who wears the shoe knows where it pinches has always been as true of taxes as of most things.

I would like to say to the minister that thousands of my constituents are now wearing these pinched shoes and are not very pleased with this condition. Yes, these objections are serious, as my constituency of Waterloo North is made up of many industries, contractors, home builders, etc.

This government went into office with the expressed intention of curing any unemployment which exists, but this new tax provision will cause further unemployment. Some builders in my home town of Kitchener-Waterloo have already announced a curtailment in their 1963 building programs of as much as 50 per cent. One builder who planned the construction of 250 homes this year has announced that he will now build perhaps 100. Another said he would take a holiday throughout the winter. He said, "I will not put in a foundation for winter construction. I have 25 houses under way now, and when they are completed I am going to sit back and see what happens". What a situation, Mr. Chairman.

The other measures of the government that affect the building industry, the $500 grant for buyers of winter built homes and the reduction of the National Housing Act interest rate from 6½ per cent to 6¼ per cent, have met with very little enthusiasm. A headline in the recent edition of the Financial Times states "Month of May in housing in Canada was up a startling 25 per cent over last year". This headline might read something like this in the future, "Construction dips again in wake of paralysing sales tax". I have received a copy of a resolution which the Kitchener-Waterloo house builders association sent to the Prime Minister. Because it reflects the opposition builders have to this tax I wish to read it at this time:

> The officers and members of the Kitchener-Waterloo house builders association were profoundly shocked upon learning the provisions of the current budget announced by the Minister of Finance on Thursday. This association is composed of building contractors, subtradesmen, suppliers and professional associates. The 48 builder members account for perhaps 90 per cent of all house construction in the cities of Kitchener and Waterloo.
>
> We deplore the action of the government in imposing a startlingly increased burden on the construction industry. The sales tax on building materials will result in such higher house costs as must increase consumer resistance and reduce house sales.
>
> A careful consideration of the reported budget terms would suggest that the government is using the construction industry as a lever for the economy. We believe that the new budget terms will stifle rather than stimulate house construction.
>
> We regret the imposition of sales tax and the change in National Housing Act mortgage terms at a time when most house builders have made mortgage financing commitments and firm contracts for sales of houses not yet constructed.
>
> We greatly fear serious disruption and financial embarrassment in the house building industry in this area.

That is signed by John J. Schnarr, president of the Kitchener-Waterloo house builders association. This resolution points out the great concern of this association and thousands of others across Canada. People from my home town of Elmira and district were alarmed to hear that an industrialist had dropped plans to build a metal factory. Our local newspaper, the Elmira Signet, carried the following news on June 26, 1963:

> The new government tax structure has reached Elmira and it does not help the growth prospects of the town any.

In a letter sent to the town council, Mr. Carl Deckert, president of Life Lyner Mufflers Limited, Elmira, announced that he is giving up the option held on two acres of industrial land from Forbes Motors earmarked for building a plant this summer. Mr. Deckert states that as a result of the current federal budget and the resulting increased costs on building and machinery this company has decided against proceeding with expansion plans at this time, and they therefore requested cancellation of their option on the two acres of industrial lots. Our hard working mayor, Fred Howard, said he was sorry that this had happened, as it would be a good plant for Elmira. He said the new tax would not help our town, and that if the council saw fit it might have to make some concessions to prospective industries for the town.

Mr. Chairman, this again is placing a greater burden on the smaller towns. The mayor also said it was a heavy blow for smaller towns. He said that if you consider that 80 per cent of all industries in Ontario are located in the metropolitan Toronto area, and the number of municipalities that are after the remaining 20 per cent, it can be understood what it means for a small town to lose a good prospect. Mr. Deckert said this tax that applies to machinery and building was quite a setback and that the whole thing was very discouraging. What is the sense of working hard and taking chances if the government curbs the initiative? Mr. Deckert further mentions that he had also discovered that according to the tax regulations importers will not be paying as much for mufflers as local manufacturers. It is hard to believe, but he said that he had it in writing in front of him. Yes, Mr. Chairman, the government is actually discouraging Canadian production.

The board of trade in my town has joined the rising chorus of protest against the federal government's extension of sales tax on building materials and industrial machinery. Mr. Donald Martin, chairman of the board's industrial committee, had this to say:

> An industrialist will not build a new plant now. I was prepared to report two or three industries which were interested in coming to Elmira, but they have sure cooled off now at this tax. It is going to stop industrial growth. I would never build a new plant. I will find an old shack somewhere and operate out of it.

He felt that the tax was penalizing those who wish to expand properly, placing the country's growth in jeopardy.

Recently, Mr. Chairman, I received a letter from the Industrial Construction Company, Division of Westmont Enterprises Limited, of Kitchener, Ontario. This refers to the new sales tax on building materials, and specifically where fixed contracts are involved. The contents of this letter are as follows:

> Dear Mr. Weichel:
>
> Confirming our telephone conversation of yesterday, I will appreciate it if you will register the strongest possible protest regarding the application of the new sales tax on building materials and specifically where fixed contracts are involved.
>
> It is my information that there are more than a billion dollars of fixed contracts in effect in Canada on which companies, such as ours, will be required to pay the sales tax and then make application for the recovery of this tax.
>
> Already we have literally hundreds of invoices on which the 11 per cent tax has been charged to us and we are endeavouring to obtain refunds reducing this amount to 4 per cent. In these cases, it is our opinion that this tax has been charged by many suppliers on inventories on which they have not paid any sales tax, yet we are entitled to recover this sales tax because of our firm contracts. The suppliers have been issued letters which state that they are required to add the sales tax to their prices, yet when we ask them to give us an affidavit that they have actually paid the sales tax, they say they are not required—

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Byrne: I hesitate to raise this point of order against the hon. member for Waterloo North, but I think it should be drawn to the attention of the committee that it is against the rules of the house to quote from a document which reflects upon proceedings which are taking place at the time. If I may quote citation 149 of the rules of the house, there are a number of rules or prohibitions, and (1) says that a member must not:

> —read from a printed document or book commenting on any speech made in parliament during the session;—

I might also refer to Beauchesne's third edition, page 802. According to that page Mr. A. E. Ross, the acting deputy speaker, ruled that it was out of order to quote in committee articles from newspapers commenting on the proceedings then under consideration. Objection was taken and a division followed, and of course the ruling was sustained. I suggest that if the hon. member were going to limit his quotations to one or two documents, that would be all right; but to make up almost his entire speech from quotations from people not participating in the debate is completely contrary to the rules.

The Chairman: The point taken by the hon. member is a good one, to a degree, and I am sure that the hon. member will want to keep that in mind in the course of his remarks.

Mr. Weichel: Thank you, Mr. Chairman; and I hope the hon. member who was speaking will do the same when his turn comes.

In writing to the Minister of Finance on June 29, 1963, Hogg Fuel and Supply Limited of Waterloo voiced its objections in this way:

> I would like to voice our opinion in as strong words as possible, our objections to this sales tax on building supplies and machinery. Not only ourselves but the whole industry is in a state of confusion. We can get no answers from anyone. Our serious belief is that you will kill industry and business. The cost and uncertainty of this tax is terrible. Our belief is that our business is going to suffer extremely through this tax, and therefore profits will drop and defeat the purpose of this tax.

Mr. Ray Bauer of Bauer's Limited, Waterloo, manufacturers of cotton felts, automobile pads, and so on, sent me a copy of a letter which was sent to the Canadian Manufacturers' Association at Toronto, in which he asked for clarification of the 1963 federal budget and the proposed amendment to the Income Tax Act. He also stated that his firm considered the repeal of the sales tax exemption on building materials, and especially on production machinery and processing materials, to be a very retrogressive step, to say the least. He said it would add considerably to the manufacturer's cost of production and be yet another handicap in his fight against imported goods. He also added that the government not only proposes to increase his costs drastically, but is also proposing to reduce our tariff protection under tariff item 559g from 20 per cent to 17 per cent, most favoured nation. Mr. Chairman, there is not much consideration for Canadian industry in this budget.

Mr. Vincent McHale of the Siegner Lumber Company of Kitchener, in a letter to the Minister of Finance, had this to say:

> It is my contention that by placing this sales tax on building materials you are penalizing the person who wishes to buy a home, who under most circumstances is the most productive and the type of citizen Canada needs and wants.

Mr. Chairman, the lumber industry is one of the few, outside of mining, which contributes considerably more to the provincial and federal governments than it gets in return.

The automotive parts manufacturers association (Canada), of Toronto, of which many firms in Kitchener and Waterloo are a part, have written to me concerning this sales tax. They expressed their views in these words:

> It is the belief of the automotive parts manufacturing industry that the present increase in taxes from zero to 11 per cent can only lead to increased prices which cannot be tolerated in this industry. The automotive parts manufacturers association of Canada has requested the hon. Minister of Finance to repeal the withdrawals of the exemptions.

[The Chairman.]

Another copy of a letter of interest sent to me, addressed to the Minister of Finance by Mr. Jean-Guy Maheu, executive vice president of the shoe manufacturers' association of Canada, which has a large number of firms located in my area, gave his impressions concerning this tax in these remarks:

> Faced with intense competition and rising imports of foreign made footwear, our Canadian manufacturers have successfully held the price line for footwear in the past as industry profit margins have dwindled. The new sales tax, however, contributes substantially to our factory costs of operations, and footwear prices will soon reflect this new federal tax burden.

In addition, several companies report that they will defer or cancel orders for new machinery as a result of the new tax and this action will, in time, leave them with less than the best of equipment to compete with foreign footwear at this critical time.

Another important association which has protested this cost increase and which is well represented in Waterloo North is the Canadian Construction Association. They have urged that the proposed application of the federal sales tax to all construction materials be deleted from the budget resolution. These people play a big part in the economy of our country, and I hope the minister will give serious consideration to their request. Objections I have received from my riding include those from such well known firms as Canada Barrels and Kegs, Waterloo, the Sign Association of Canada, represented by A-K and Lippert Plastics in Kitchener, Sehl Engineering Limited, Kitchener, under the management of Mr. John Vingoe, and Campbell Machinery Limited, Kitchener. These firms have lost a number of orders already, and feel that the new sales tax will affect them considerably, both in buying and selling. Some even find they will come to a standstill.

I am sure the minister will realize that with such criticisms and objections coming from the many firms I have mentioned, and others too numerous to mention, it could well be that our unemployment situation will rise. We will be paying out huge sums of money through our unemployment insurance fund to these many unfortunate people without work, people who could, with the cancellation of this tax, be making a real contribution to the growth of our country and a happier life for themselves and their families.

An editorial in the Kitchener-Waterloo Record of July 11, said the measures introduced in this lamentable budget were obviously ill suited to the task of raising money. Their long range effects may even be highly detrimental to the general economy. Another paragraph with which I heartily agree said:

> It has been remarked by more than one Canadian that an increase in the income levy would be fairer and surer. There would have been protests but it is almost certain they would have died away after a relatively brief time.

When the budget came out and, again, when changes in it were made there was criticism that fortunes had been won and lost in the fluctuations of the stock market.

There is a parallel situation here in respect of this 11 per cent sales tax, even when applied in stages. A lot of money is being made by building supply dealers with big inventories, just because the budget provisions concerning this tax were not clear when they were imposed. While some dealers have not raised their prices, others have, and the tax now applies to building supplies which might have been in their inventory for months. It is just like found money, Mr. Chairman. These dealers are lining their pockets with money which should be going to the government.

While the government has made these moves, which will definitely hinder building activity, it has done nothing in the way of allowing the refinancing of older homes—a move which would do more to help the housebuilding industry than any $500 bonus the government could devise.

Government spokesmen promised during the election campaign that the refinancing of older homes under the National Housing Act would be made possible. Why is not such a system in operation here? It has worked well for years in the United States. I suggest to the government that some consideration be given to a plan whereby older homes could be refinanced under National Housing Act regulations, though it might be wise to look into it more thoroughly than were some of the budget regulations before the legislation is enacted.

The Minister of Finance mentioned in his address of July 8, 1963, that the government proposes two changes of substance in the excise tax resolutions. The first of these concerns schools and universities and similar educational institutions. This is a step in the right direction and should assist my two universities in my riding of Waterloo North, the University of Waterloo and the Waterloo Lutheran University along with collegiates and other schools. The previous government did much to help universities, and I hope the present government will continue to make such assistance available.

My remarks have been of a constructive nature, Mr. Chairman, and have, I hope, brought to the attention of the government the sound thinking of thousands of Canadians concerning this unfair tax. I sincerely hope the government will reject this tax so that the people of our country may know, finally, where they stand economically in the coming year.

Mr. Noble: In speaking to this resolution, Mr. Chairman, I shall express my views on the matter and make some reference as to how my own area will be affected. Many observations have been made on the budget and on its preparation. One which was of particular interest was made by the Prime Minister recently when he said that the traditional methods of producing a Canadian budget were no longer adequate to the country's needs. The right hon. gentleman suggested that changes would be made in procedures so as to enable the government to consult with business before another budget is prepared. That is nothing more or less than a smokescreen.

This government did not make use of the information and knowledge which are readily available to them. The personnel of the finance department are in possession of a wealth of experience accumulated over a long period of years. Without a doubt, they are keen students of our economy and its requirements. Given the opportunity, they could have charted a safe course for the Minister of Finance and thereby averted the severe set-back in our economy, as well as the many unnecessary inconveniences caused by the current budget. The minister preferred to make a bold new approach by consulting amateurs who led him down the garden path to budget chaos.

On launching his budget, the Minister of Finance told us that someone had given him his horoscope for that day, which read, "Don't worry over money matters". The measures proposed in the budget would indicate that the minister had, indeed, been heeding such advice during the period of its preparation. He made many decisions on money matters which at the time did not worry him, but which have since given the Canadian people much worry, and himself a severe headache.

The three ghost writers must have absorbed a good part of the worry in connection with the budget during the course of its preparation. However, Mr. Speaker, it appears that they shared the mental lapses of the minister and between them they came up with a document that, had it not been for last minute adjustments, would have made a complete shambles of the economy which a Conservative government had well on the way to boom proportions.

Perhaps the most flagrant disregard for what the repercussions might be was the introduction of the 30 per cent takeover tax. This measure immediately created confusion and frustration on our stock markets and Canadian stocks in foreign markets suffered drastic depreciation. The finance minister admits mistakes and makes all sorts of excuses, one of them being that the budget was prepared in great haste. Why was such an important document given a deadline? Did it have a date with those historical 60 days of few decisions? Was it to finish those dismal days in a blaze of glory, with the minister emerging as a great hero and perhaps making his first step toward fulfilling his aspirations to the Liberal throne? Rather, Mr. Chairman, he took a step backward. Instead of a crowning achievement, he produced a document which gave his government a severe jolt and which is unacceptable to the Canadian people.

After several days of creating havoc to our prestige abroad, and after much pressure from financial circles and the upper echelons of Liberal supporters, the minister proceeded to make another unforgiveable mistake. This was the timing of the withdrawal of the 30 per cent takeover tax—50 minutes before the Toronto and Montreal markets closed.

These acts of indiscretion have created deep doubts as to the ability of this government in the minds of our people and the world at large. The speculation that other similar incidents could follow has created a state of demoralization in Canada. Financial circles will now be reluctant to place confidence in this regime. Furthermore, it is now evident that any prestige the Prime Minister gained from his recent trips abroad has been nullified.

At this point I should like to quote two Ontario newspapers representing quite a large area of Ontario. The first excerpt is from the Rodney Mercury and explains why there has been a reversal in editorial opinion in recent months.

> When this is taken into consideration, plus all the other poorly conceived tax changes in the budget, some of which have had to be modified or thrown out, is it any wonder editorial opinion has reversed and the situation has caused many raised eyebrows in this country and around the world?

The second excerpt is from the Listowel Banner, which sees changes in taxes and personnel as a result of the budget.

> One of the most glaring faults is the imposition of the 11 per cent sales tax. This fault is being greeted with so much opposition outside the government that it may be safe to bet that Prime Minister Pearson will also find a convenient way to banish it, as well as Mr. Gordon.

I should also like to quote an excerpt from "Industry", a publication of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, which was not unfriendly to the government earlier in the year. They state in an article headed "Opportunity Lost":

> Manufacturers already are required to pay the sales tax on the goods they produce; they are now to be made to pay it on the machinery used in the production of these same goods. In effect, they will be paying the tax twice over. This isn't just; it isn't wise; and it certainly isn't expansionist.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us take a look at another measure that strikes a severe blow at the very heart of the economy. The 11 per cent tax on building materials shocked the country. People in all walks of life and of all political affiliations looked on this measure as a stab in the back so far as our progress is concerned. This government professes its eagerness to reduce unemployment. Yet it proceeded to knock the props from under our building program.

Within hours of this announcement telegrams and telephone calls poured into Ottawa from every part of Canada and from many elements of our economy denouncing this ridiculous move. Members from all parties gave full support to these protests and the minister was again forced to retreat, with much embarrassment to his government.

The new system of applying the tax on a graduated basis over the next 18 months before finally establishing the 11 per cent level gives speculators an opportunity to take advantage of the situation. In the process of stocking up, a false demand will be created which will boost the price of many articles in the building trade, so that the extra cost to ultimate consumers could be 20 per cent.

Our housing industry will suffer the most and it is the key to a wide field of industry. Houses require a great variety of equipment, and this tax at every turn on building materials will kill the goose that lays the golden egg.

The minister may point to the $500 bonus for winter house construction, but this to the housing industry is tantamount to administering soothing syrup to a man dying of cancer. In most areas of Canada the cost of construction for protection against weather, and the cost of the required heat, would be far beyond the bonus, so it is only window dressing.

My deep concern is for my own area where, under a Conservative government, we not only had a successful housing program but a great surge forward in the production of summer homes. The Grey and Bruce shoreline is blessed with some of the finest beaches on this continent and an excellent development was in full swing. The tax on building materials will set this development back many years in this area where we have so much to offer and in which we take great pride and, most important, which has such great potential for our economy.

What about our farm people, Mr. Chairman? Under an 11 per cent penalty will they continue to extend their barn and housing facilities, repair or build new fences, paint their buildings or keep up usual repairs? I am afraid they will not, because in this budget they are almost a forgotten people. I heard one of the government members, when questioned why agriculture was not given more consideration in the budget, reply: "Why should we? The farm people did not do anything for us last April."

I can recall four or five incidents that have happened in my riding since April which are tainted with miserable political expediency. If this is the game this government is going to play with the Canadian people, their limited time in office will be too long.

Of course, by continually casting reflections on the former administration in his budget speech the minister indicated that the government would use every opportunity to try to brainwash the Canadian people. In making this attempt at political play the hon. gentleman has confused and frustrated many, including members of his own party. The position they now hold and which they are desperately trying to consolidate is being tumbled into ruins by their own arrogance.

The Canadian people expected something much better than this from what was once a great political party. They expected great forward looking programs of human and resources development. Our people visualized a continuance of at least the good policies of the last government. Many things could have been proposed which could help our economy and our way of life. I will mention a few: More incentive to our own investors; provision for an accelerated program of roads to resources; roads to tourist attractions; more national parks; projects to divert more water from such areas as the Albany river watershed and the many other lakes and rivers that might be channelled into the great lakes for the purpose of bolstering water supply and water levels, something so badly needed in Ontario at this time; concentration of incentive for industry everywhere, and at least an even break for agriculture.

What did we get, Mr. Chairman? In a few short words we got a disappointed, frustrated, confused Canadian people. As for the government, their 60 days of hope, promises, trials and tribulations have boiled down to 60 days of desperation.

In my opinion, sir, the budget should have been a sacred manuscript. It should have offered the Canadian people an honest and sane contract in a spirit of good faith. It should have been the essence of justice and good judgment, with the assurance that the contents of this important document in its finality were known only to the minister. Nothing less has been acceptable to our people in the past and this occasion should be no exception.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I thought for a little while this evening that the debate had proceeded to the point of a detailed consideration of some of the issues in the resolution, but I find that it has now turned back to a more or less general discussion of the principles involved. I am glad, because this gives me an opportunity to take part in the debate and outline in a general way our position relative to some of these matters.

I think it is doubtful that any proposal in the field of taxation has ever met with such a storm of protest as the one before us tonight, the withdrawal of the sales tax exemption on building materials and production machinery. I agree with the Minister of Finance, of course, when he says that no tax is popular, but it seems to me this one is especially obnoxious in that it not only reduces still further the purchasing power in the hands of the people but also threatens the very objectives it proposes to realize. If I understood the statement made by the Minister of Finance correctly, he pointed out that one of the objectives was the balancing of the budget or at least bringing our financial affairs into closer proximity to a balanced budget. The second was the creation of employment opportunities. Another one was the expansion of the economy. I am sure that these various matters to which the minister has called attention are of vital importance and they have been dealt with by various speakers throughout the day.

I should like to refer, first of all, to the announced intention of endeavouring to balance the budget. I know that the hon. member for Danforth ridiculed this idea. He said it was not desirable, and it was something that should not be sought after. But I believe that the present picture as it relates to our national debt, and to the cost of servicing the national debt, would point up very definitely the importance of doing something in this field of endeavouring to balance our budget. I should like to refer to the statement made by the hon. member for Medicine Hat. The hon. member made some suggestions and asked the minister if he would reply to those suggestions. Unfortunately, the Minister of Finance has not done that as yet. This reminds me of the fact that a number of years ago Social Credit members in the house made some suggestions relative to monetary and financial reform. A great deal of criticism was levelled against us, not only by members of the house but by some of the newspapers.

A newspaper in eastern Canada, the Fundy Fisherman—I am sure many of us know who is the publisher of that paper—in an editorial said that it would take more than ridicule to get rid of Social Credit proposals in the field of monetary and financial reform. I recall another occasion when I was speaking in the house and I asked the then minister of finance if he would outline his views relative to the proposals we were advancing. We received the same silent treatment as my colleague from Medicine Hat has received today in relation to his request. I would suggest that before this debate is brought to a conclusion, the Minister of Finance should reply to my colleague and give some reason for his inability to accept these suggestions. He should outline the weaknesses in these proposals so that, at least, if they are not satisfactory we will know there is no use proposing them again. So long as we are met with silence in connection with our proposals, we are likely to keep pounding along making them time and time again until perhaps we do get some response from the Minister of Finance.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that since this measure has been outlined as one of the measures that is aimed at the objective of balancing our budget, then these things should be taken into consideration. I believe that the steps that have been taken will lead us to the point of diminishing returns. The minister pointed out a number of rises in the cost of material and indicated they had not caused any disruption so far as construction is concerned. In other words, he seemed to imply he was going to work on the principle of putting on as many taxes as the traffic will bear. I suggest if we take that attitude, if we continue with that principle, then we are going to reach the point where we stifle production, where we stifle construction and instead of increasing our revenues we will find our revenues decreasing.

In so far as employment opportunities are concerned, it would seem to me that the implementation of the proposals now before us would just work in reverse. I, as well as many other members in the house, have received many communications. I am not going to read them, I am not going to give them by name. I just refer to this matter and say we have received these communications indicating that project after project has been shelved or delayed and, in some cases, businesses have been closed up, productive enterprises have ceased to exist, men have been thrown out of employment.

Of course, when men are thrown out of employment they go on the unemployment insurance list and receive payments, thus putting a further strain on a fund that has been in serious difficulty in the past. It would appear to me, Mr. Chairman, that the objections that have been raised, so far as this particular aspect of the resolution is concerned, are very sound, and instead of promoting employment opportunities they are going to throw men out of employment, cause further unemployment.

The third point was a reference to the expansion of the economy. I believe the periodical "Industry" published by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association was referred to today. I should like to quote this very short paragraph from the periodical:

> In short, the effect of this extension of the sales tax can only be to slow down economic activity, hold down employment, inhibit competitiveness, retard productivity improvement and generally act as a depressant rather than a stimulant.

Now, that seems to sum it up. The minister may take objection to some of those suggestions, but nevertheless I think they should be given consideration. I had a communication from Mr. Pybus of the industrial development commission of greater Vancouver with reference to this whole matter of expansion of the economy. Perhaps I should just make a brief reference or two to this particular letter. He says:

> We in British Columbia, as across the prairies and in the maritimes, are fighting to expand and develop new secondary industries in order to create job opportunities for our young people and our growing work force and a better balanced economy. We cannot reconcile this setback for growth in job-creating industries with the Liberal party's espoused sympathy for and policies to expedite economic growth which gave much hope to the great numbers in need of work.

Now then, what are some of the categories that are affected by the removal of the sales tax exemption from this particular item? First of all, we think of the potential home owner. I recall many members in the house in other days speaking of the importance of our people owning their own homes, emphasizing the fact that every encouragement should be given to our people to own their own homes, because it gave them a sense of security and well being that nothing else could give. I am sure that today we all agree with the desirability of home ownership. We think of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, an institution which I believe is designed to make home ownership possible. On the other hand, when we look at the other side of the picture we find that the imposition of this tax is going to work in the opposite direction. It has been pointed out that a $500 bonus has been offered to people who build in the wintertime. Well, of course, that is used up by the extra cost of building in the wintertime.

One hon. member referred to the fact the government had made certain amendments to the National Housing Act in order to lower interest rates and extend the period of amortization. I would suggest that this is not going to solve the problem or meet the need. It may be a matter of putting a little money into one pocket and taking it out of the other, but it will not accomplish anything so far as the potential home owner is concerned.

Even those who are remodelling or repairing their present homes will be affected. I had a letter from one of them who said he could not proceed to do necessary renovations to his home because of the imposition of this tax.

Mr. Chairman, there is an industry to which not too much reference has been made in this debate, and which is subject to this tax. I have here a telegram from Mr. L. P. Starck, of the Giant Mascot Mines Ltd. at Hope, British Columbia, and I want to read part of it as it points out something that has not been referred to in the course of this debate. It reads:

> As western Canada's only nickel mine we wish to protest the imposition of 11 per cent tax on equipment and supplies used in manufacturing. Pyramiding effect of tax through all levels of manufacturing will ultimately increase material cost by some 15 to 18 per cent. This conservatively means cost increase to our company of $9,000 per month. Due to low prices and lack of markets in Canada we must sell our production to Japan on a long term fixed price contract without escalator clauses for increased cost. As we cannot pass increased cost on to consumer we must effect them by reducing crews and curtailing development and exploration projects. This means reduced employment. Ultimately this could result in closure of operation which would mean the loss of 150 jobs and a payroll of $80,000 per month in Hope.

As I say, that is just part of the telegram, and it asks for the repeal of this resolution.

Reference has been made to its effect on the entire construction industry, but I believe it will have a very detrimental effect right through our whole economy. We appreciate some of the changes that have been made since the introduction of the original resolution, and we appreciate the exemptions that are being continued. They will be of real importance in British Columbia. There has been some discussion tonight about universities and colleges, and in British Columbia plans are already under way for the erection of additional universities. This exemption will be of real benefit to such projects.

We also appreciate the exemptions now being provided to various municipalities, and are appreciative of the fact that the minister has indicated the imposition of the tax will be phased, with 4 per cent this year, another 4 per cent next spring and the remainder at the end of December 1964. However, even though this is appreciated, I do not think it is going to meet or answer the need of industry across the country. It is rather like the fellow who is going to cut his dog's tail off and he decides he will cut it off in little pieces because it would not hurt so much. That is the same principle which the minister is applying, to accomplish the same objectives in the final analysis.

Once again I would urge the minister to look at this situation and see if he could not discover some other more satisfactory way of obtaining the necessary revenue than by the imposition of a tax of this nature. I would remind him of the suggestions made by my colleague, the hon. member for Medicine Hat, and I ask him to give these careful consideration because they would be an effective alternative to the proposal now before us.

Mr. Irvine: Mr. Chairman, would I be out of order if I suggested that we call it ten o'clock?

The Deputy Chairman: I think you had better go ahead.

Mr. Irvine: Under ordinary circumstances, even an opposition member might be expected to congratulate a minister of finance upon the presentation of one of his first submissions to the house. As the member for London, and anticipating an opportunity to participate in this discussion of the 11 per cent tax, I considered this an ordinary and a proper courtesy; but after due consideration I have come to the conclusion that neither proprieties of the house nor the dictates of common courtesy impose any such obligation.

Mr. Chairman, speaking on this resolution, let us not delude ourselves. This is still an 11 per cent tax, an escalator tax and, as the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings suggested some time ago, it is a tax that is a part of a budget of deceit and deception, of fiction and of fraud.

The Prime Minister once had an enviable reputation as minister of external affairs, as a diplomat, and as a Canadian. I was prepared to accord him every respect in his office of Prime Minister. This is only as it should be, regardless of what I might consider the inaccuracies and fallacies of the right hon. gentleman before and during the recent election campaign; but the Prime Minister must share with his Minister of Finance responsibility for the budget in all its details, including this 11 per cent escalator tax. The office of Prime Minister is now to be equated with the ineptness of the Minister of Finance.

For the average Canadian this tax is one part of a budget of disreputable gimmicks, even as the Liberal campaign in the last election was a campaign of phoney truth squads and colouring books. The committee is being asked to vote confidence in the government by giving its approval to this resolution. But, sir, it is a tax in which the government itself is already beginning to show signs of no confidence.

From individual builders, construction groups and manufacturing concerns all across the country, there has come a tide of protest against the imposition of this tax on building materials and production machinery. If one were to take the file of letters, telegrams and submissions that I have in my office, and multiply them by the 265 members in the Commons, it would represent an amazing array of protest and indignation.

This is the strangest of all the manoeuvres of the minister and his three budgeteers. The government wants to get the economy rolling; it wants to stimulate construction and increase employment. Yet it imposes an 11 per cent penalty upon business expansion in the form of new plant facilities. To help still further to increase employment and stimulate production, it slaps a similar tax on the very tools of industry, new production machinery and equipment.

I recently had a delegation from London, from an automobile firm which was contemplating a $2½ million expansion program. They had already drawn plans for the building, but since then have cancelled the whole plan and are going to make automobile parts in an American plant and bring them in duty free—which they are able to do, and of course at a lower price than they can make them in Canada. All this is as a result of this prohibitive tax. That is only one item. Multiply it again by 265 ridings across the Dominion of Canada and immediately we have a loss of well over half a billion dollars, to say nothing of the loss of potential work for many thousands of people for years to come. I submit that this is a gigantic retrograde step.

A few moments ago the hon. member for Port Arthur mentioned public libraries. I raised this matter in the house at one time. I learned something on that occasion. All hon. members learn as they go along, or hope they will. I have received representations from the Canadian library association and from the London library, the main library in my constituency. May I refer to paragraph 4 of the resolution which refers to "a school, university or other similar educational institution". I am wondering just how similar it has to be, and just how more similar an institution that supplies learning for people from the time they go to kindergarten until they go to the grave could be to a school, university or other similar educational institution. I have no doubt that the minister thinks he knows all the answers, but there is an old saying that goes something like this: "When you review the things you think you know, you get to know the things you thought you knew".

Across the country business and industry contemplating new plant and equipment will start to prune and trim capital outlays. The deeper and more drastic the pruning, the less will be the minister's estimated revenue flow from that source. More important, millions of dollars in orders for materials, machinery and equipment will be cut back. With these cut-backs will be applied the brake to supplying industries and providing employment. Just as in the case I have cited with regard to the automobile supply firm, Eaton Automotive Company of London, I can only regard this as one of the most disastrous decisions taken by this government within its vaunted 60 days of decision. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that this is a vicious and unwarranted tax brought to bear upon one of the most sensitive sectors of our economy. It is a reprehensible tax imposed by a discredited minister and a discredited government. In the best interests—

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member what is discreditable about placing equipment supplies and construction material industries in precisely the same position as other industries?

An hon. Member: Put it on the order paper.

Mr. Irvine: Mr. Chairman, there are people who have sat in this house for so long they have become benevolent in their thinking. I do not exactly know what the hon. member said because he was not very clear. But I will talk to him again some other time. I was just saying that in the best interests of the country and the government itself, the Minister of Finance should withdraw this tax or resign forthwith.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Irvine: Nothing he can now say or do will ever restore confidence in him as a finance minister in the tradition of Canada and the Canadian parliament. Mr. Chairman, when this tax was introduced the minister, with that brand of narrow partisanship with which he has so characterized himself, trumpeted that the brain truster would seek out any and all skeletons from the Conservative fiscal closet. It seems to me that the minister himself is the one that is haunted; he is haunted now by the spectres of the three hired budgeteers, the clatter of the ticker-tape machines making fortunes for the big speculators as a consequence of his ignorance and thoughtlessness. It is the minister who is harried by thoughts of what may next plop out of the Liberal closet of ineptitude and gimmickry. Mr. Chairman, Britain has its Profumo case. Canada has its "perfumo" case, in this whole tragic and demoralizing episode of an excuse for a budget. In short, sir, this is part of a tainted budget contrived by a discredited minister and a government in bad odour.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, may I call it ten o'clock?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. McIntosh: Argue the point now. Keep it going until ten o'clock.

(Translation):

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, upon rising to make a few remarks on the resolution now before us, I cannot help taking this opportunity to recall the election campaigns of 1962 and 1963 and to compare them with what happened on the eve of June 13, 1963.

If you remember, Mr. Chairman, during both last election campaigns, the team now sitting on the treasury benches had led the population of Canada to believe that a Liberal administration would cure all ills and that its coming into office would change Canada in such a way that it would become a new Eden.

However, the people were bitterly disappointed when they learned, since June 13 last, what the Liberal team was up to.

Budget night was remarkable in its own way for the people of Canada, because it gave birth to dissatisfaction and doubt about the economic future of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, may I point out that it is now ten o'clock?

(Text):

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, would the house leader—

Mr. Churchill: Do you want to ask it? I will give you the opportunity.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, this is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre speaking for the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and asking what the business is for tomorrow and the next day.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I would hope that tomorrow we would complete the resolution, so we could then proceed. If we do complete it before the end of the day tomorrow, we would ask to have first reading of the bill based upon it. Then if the committee felt so inclined, we would hope they would do what they did with the Customs Tariff, give second reading and go right ahead with it. But if there were any inclination on the part of the house not to do that, we would go back to the economic council. The same situation would apply if as I hope will not happen, we go over to Thursday with the excise tax resolution. As soon as it is completed we would seek leave to proceed with the bill. If leave is not given we would go on with the economic council. If a great deal of progress is made I am sure the government can scrape up some other business to keep the house occupied.

Mr. Churchill: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre got as long and as involved an answer as I get, normally.

It being two minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, July 24, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

Fifth report of standing committee on banking and commerce—Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace).

GRAIN

WHEAT, OATS AND BARLEY—ANNOUNCEMENT OF INITIAL PRICES

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a statement about Canadian wheat board initial prices to producers for western wheat, oats and barley for the crop year beginning August 1, 1963. These are being fixed at $1.50 per bushel for No. 1 Manitoba northern, basis in store Fort William-Port Arthur or Vancouver; 60 cents per bushel for 2 C.W. oats, basis in store Fort William-Port Arthur; 96 cents per bushel for 3 C.W. six-row barley, basis in store Fort William-Port Arthur. These are the same levels as for these grades during the crop year which is now drawing to a close. Initial prices for other grades of western wheat, oats and barley will be announced later by the Canadian wheat board. Although the government takes full responsibility for the level of initial prices, under the Canadian Wheat Board Act the Canadian wheat board was, as is customary, asked to make its recommendations which were in accord with the government's decision.

Before reaching its decision on initial prices and on other aspects of the government's program which I shall refer to later, the government made a careful reassessment of the rapidly changing grain situation, and consulted not only with the Canadian wheat board but with a number of farm leaders from the prairies. Taking into consideration the stocks on hand, the record grain crop that appears likely to be produced on the prairies this year, the uncertainties created by the results of the United States farm referendum, and the negotiations now going on in Geneva under the auspices of GATT for new international arrangements for the marketing of cereals, the government came to the view that the initial prices should remain unchanged for the coming year. The government shares the opinion of major farm organizations that efforts should be concentrated on moving as much grain as possible.

There are two sides to this matter of our wheat marketing, supply and demand. Taking one year with another and a variation in yields which must be expected, we should aim to avoid the production of unmanageable surpluses and through appropriate crop diversification be in a position to meet changing domestic and foreign demand for wheat, coarse grains and livestock. Our production policies, including the various programs affecting wheat and other grains, must be designed to achieve these objectives. The government has initiated a review of these policies and programs to determine in what way they might be adjusted to achieve a better balance in agricultural production and the avoidance of burdensome surpluses. For example, the government considers that we should be in a better position than we are at present to meet the expected increase in demand for livestock and feed grains. On the demand side, the government is making every effort to help the wheat board to increase to the maximum commercial sales in markets throughout the world, wherever they are to be found.

The government has decided that the time has come to move forward on another front which should prove of both short run and long run advantage to western wheat producers. To help meet the food needs of the developing countries, Canada for many years now has been making wheat and flour available as part of our Colombo plan assistance. I wish to announce at this time the intention of the government to ask parliament to provide for a program of supplying wheat or wheat flour to international agencies, including the world food program, and to developing countries which are not now commercial markets or where commercial exports are limited by capacity to pay. Something can be done this year. The intention is on a progressive basis to increase the amount of Canadian food aid in appropriate relationship to the total of our assistance activities. It is expected that the total allocation for this purpose might rise to a level of around $40 million per annum over the course of the next few years.

The actual amount of wheat and flour to be made available for assistance purposes in the next crop year will depend on the needs of the world food program and the absorptive capacity of the developing countries we wish to assist. Safeguards will be introduced to ensure that the provision of additional Canadian wheat and flour does not interfere with the normal commercial marketings of Canada and other exporting countries whom we shall be consulting as appropriate. I am confident all members of the house will agree that food aid, in particular the provision of wheat and flour which we are so well placed to produce, should be a continuing and important part of our external development assistance programs as long as the need for food exists.

This enlarged program of food aid, in combination with the efforts that are being made to maintain and increase commercial sales, to gain access to import markets and to stabilize international trade at reasonable prices, seems to the government to represent the right approach to the problems that confront western grain producers under present circumstances. I feel confident it is an approach that will commend itself to western producers and to hon. members on all sides of the house.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as I listened to the unveiling of this plan I could not but recollect that when we were in office we were criticized for assistance by way of wheat, grain, flour and the like to needy countries. I, and all hon. members of this party, are very happy at the conversion of those in the Liberal party who previously held the very reverse of the opinion inherent in the announcement today.

It will be recalled that we gave strong support to the setting up of an international food bank in order to provide assistance and aid to needy countries, and at the same time to permit the setting aside of surpluses which otherwise would hang over the market price. Furthermore, we greatly expanded assistance under the Colombo plan to nations within the commonwealth. We increased this aid from $30 million to about $50 million. Last year, by reason of special circumstances, we reduced that amount, but it was still approximately $7½ million or $10 million more than had been the case when we came into office.

The minister also made reference to the need to expand our markets, and we are also in accord with that. We recall so well that during the days of the previous Liberal government the then minister of trade and commerce stated "If they want our wheat let them come and get it." That was not the attitude of the government of which I had the honour to be head. We expanded our markets, and we are now glad to hear that the present government intends to follow in our footsteps and will make available the necessary credits to those nations which because of their peculiar economic conditions would be unable to make the required purchases.

I have nothing to say in regard to the initial price. The ultimate determination as to whether what is being done is worth while so far as the farmer is concerned will await the final payment, which will indicate the actual price the farmer will be receiving. However, I am sure no one will be surprised when I express the view that the western farmer will be taken aback at the complete failure of the government to carry out one of its major agricultural promises—

Mr. Mandziuk: Commitment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —"commitment" is the word, whereby it undertook to pay $3 per bushel for the initial unit of 300 bushels. That seems to have joined the ranks of the forgotten promises, as well as the promise of a floor of $2 a bushel. It was singularly absent from the announcement made by the minister, and indicates that these two promises of $3 for the first 300 bushels and a $2 floor have joined the ranks of the forgotten promises of a few months ago.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, we in this group welcome the announcement that has just been made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce respecting the initial prices to be paid for wheat, but I think that welcome will have to be confined to the fact that it was announced a little earlier this year than it was last year. It is exactly the same as it was last year and, as the Leader of the Opposition has just pointed out, it appears to be a major retreat from the promises that were held out to the western farmers, first of all for $3 a bushel on the initial quota; and in so far as the $2 a bushel is concerned, being the floor price that was promised, I suppose we will have to wait and see what the final payment will be before we pass judgment.

I hope that the efforts of the Canadian wheat board in selling wheat and wheat flour in the international market will be supported by the government in allowing the wheat board to be more competitive; that is, to offer more competitive terms, which I think all hon. members realize are necessary in the international wheat market today. Credit, of course, is one of the very important terms that must be offered if we are to be competitive. Of course there are other things as well that should be taken into consideration.

The minister pointed out that there is a need for balancing the production of farm products; that is, to try to shift some of the emphasis to livestock products, for which he suggested there is a demand. I suggest to him that this may be well so until we reach the point where we have a surplus in this area of farm production also. While the beef industry particularly is the only part of farm production that is in a healthy position today, I suggest to him this is so because there has not been overproduction of this product. It seems to me it is rather important that we consider keeping a healthy industry healthy.

Regarding the matter of offering food in the form of wheat and wheat flour to countries as aid, I would say on behalf of this party that we welcome this program. We have suggested over the years that this is an area to which the Canadian government should really be paying a little more attention. I hope when they do make these offers they will take into consideration the depressed condition of the flour milling industry across Canada and perhaps put a little more emphasis on offering the product that is processed in Canada rather than the raw material, which has been the case in the past. I might also say in closing that we were a little perturbed about the cut made in the Colombo plan last year by the previous government. We are happy to see that the government is moving into this food aid program even though it may be in a different channel.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the prairie farmers generally will be disappointed at the announcement that has been made with reference to the initial price that is going to be paid on this year's crop. A former agricultural spokesman for the Liberal party used to describe such announcements as peanuts.

Mr. Woolliams: That is right.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: Certainly that would be a very apt description of what is being proffered today. I would have hoped the minister would say something about the very definite commitment made to prairie farmers by the Prime Minister in his statement in Saskatoon on March 6 last. That commitment involved two things. It involved first of all a guaranteed payment of $2 a bushel for wheat, basis Fort William; it also involved a two price system for wheat under which the wheat consumed in Canada would be estimated on the equated price and the extra money would be paid to the farmers on their initial delivery quota.

The minister has made no mention of either of those commitments, nor has either the minister or the Prime Minister at any time said this is now accepted as part of the Liberal commitment and that if it is not going to be done now, it will be done in the near future. The government has simply ignored its commitment, but I think it will not be allowed to forget it by the great bulk of the farmers of the prairie provinces.

With reference to the proposal that additional wheat and wheat flour should be given to emerging nations, I am sure this will have the support of the people of Canada. Certainly I can assure the government that it will have the support of the members of this party. At a time when we have surplus food in Canada one of the great weapons of democracy is to use this surplus food to help strengthen the emerging nations and help them in this period of transition through which they are now passing.

However, I do not think forty or fifty million dollars worth of wheat or wheat flour is going to solve our problems, and I hope the government will be giving some consideration to following the program which the United States has followed of making wheat available to countries who need it in exchange for foreign currency, or even on a barter basis, and certainly on a long term credit basis.

Unless this wheat can be moved it is going to create a very serious economic problem for the people of Canada. But the immediate problem, the problem to which I think the government ought to give its attention, is the price for the farmers. The bright promise which has been made by the government of a $2 a bushel guaranteed payment and a two price system is something to which we hope the government will give attention, and give assurance to the house that this will not be merely a forgotten promise.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. D. Clancy (Yorkton): May I have your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, because of the fact I am not sure to whom I should address this question. Is there any truth in the rather substantial rumours in western Canada that the cash advances are going to be subjected to 4 per cent interest this year? Second, in so far as the announcement by the Minister of Trade and Commerce is concerned, can he assure us that the wheat board will be reimbursing the farmers by at least the price under the international wheat agreement for the wheat and flour that is given away?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The answer to the first question is that there is no substance to the rumour.

The answer to the second question is that the wheat board sells for cash and, so far as I know, always at the same price for the same grade. The wheat that is given in aid or used for developmental assistance will, of course, be paid for at the going price at the time.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): May I ask a supplementary question concerning the initial price of wheat. The minister said he had consulted the leaders of western farm organizations. Were their suggestions in line with the prices he announced today for wheat, oats and barley?

Mr. Sharp: Some of them were.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether the provisions concerning wheat flour which he announced today for the world food program are in addition to the commitment already made, or are they part of the original commitment?

Mr. Sharp: The statement I made was that I hoped we would build up our food assistance in the form of wheat and flour to a level of about $40 million a year.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): May I ask a supplementary question. In view of this strong shift to giveaways in connection with wheat and wheat flour, particularly under the world food program, will this be done at the expense of our previous commitment to provide dairy products?

Mr. Sharp: The short answer to the hon. member's question, Mr. Speaker, is no.

[Later:]

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who has given us a very disappointing announcement regarding the initial payment for wheat. My question arises out of the fact that he stated he was worried about the unmanageable surpluses. My question is, what surpluses did he have in mind, and what scheme would the government have in order to manage these surpluses; or is it like the old Liberal government of bygone days, where they paid—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Mandziuk: Where they paid for keeping the land out of crop.

Mr. Speaker: Order. You have stated your question, let the minister answer.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure what the question was. I listened to a speech. However, I do suggest that when the farmers of western Canada know about the program I have announced today to extend more food aid to the needy countries of the world, and thereby increase the markets for Canadian wheat and flour, they will not be disappointed.

I think the second part of the question had something to do with what I stated about unmanageable surpluses. What I had in mind was the possibility that if we do not follow appropriate policies we might have unmanageable surpluses.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Why didn't you think of that before the election?

Mr. Sharp: I say to the hon. member who has just interrupted, I do not think it helped greatly when the former minister suggested the farmers should grow all the wheat they could, and that he would sell it for them.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): And he would have, too.

Mr. Mandziuk: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Might not the Minister of Trade and Commerce be well advised to get Alvin Hamilton to help him sell the wheat?

Mr. Woolliams: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think this is becoming in the nature of a debate. The hon. member for New Westminster.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. It is not a question of debate. My supplementary question is briefly this—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Woolliams: How many million bushels does the minister say his policy will help get rid of; how many million bushels will they export?

Mr. Mandziuk: None.

NATIONAL PARKS

NOVA SCOTIA—ANNOUNCEMENT OF ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW PARK

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce to the house the approval in principle by this government of the proposal of the government of Nova Scotia for the establishment of a new national park in Nova Scotia. This announcement is being made simultaneously by Hon. R. L. Stanfield, premier of Nova Scotia, for the government of Nova Scotia, and by myself and on behalf of my colleague the Minister of Labour for the government of Canada. At this time I want also to thank for their co-operation and assistance members of parliament from the province of Nova Scotia who sit both to your right and to your left.

The proposed national park is to be established at Kejimkujik lake in western Nova Scotia and becomes the first national park to be established since the creation of Terra Nova national park in Newfoundland in 1957. The proposed national park is 38 miles south of Annapolis Royal and 150 miles west of Halifax. It is considered to be an outstanding example of Nova Scotia's beauty of forest and sea. More than 20 lakes, some with excellent beach potential, and a number of connecting rivers are the heart of the park proposal. In addition to the lake area, a representative section of Nova Scotia's Atlantic shore line will be preserved as part of the new national park. Kejimkujik lake will be the site of the national park in Nova Scotia and the nineteenth national park in Canada. Cape Breton Highlands national park on Cape Breton island, Nova Scotia, was established in 1936.

On behalf of the people of Canada I wish to express our gratitude to the government of Nova Scotia for having made available, free from encumbrances, these scenic lands which will henceforward be dedicated to the people of Canada. Both this government and the government of Nova Scotia have proceeded as expeditiously as possible to settle the final details of the arrangements. We hope for a conclusion in the early months of this fall so that this important project can be placed in motion.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house will have been interested in the announcement just made by the minister, and that the members from Nova Scotia will have been delighted. He will understand, of course, from his reference to the name of Annapolis Royal that I have more than a mere academic interest in this matter. This is one of the decisions of the government of which I can fully approve. In fact this step may have been recommended by my colleague the former minister, and in that connection it adds to my interest.

This will be a great addition to the tourist industry of Nova Scotia. The selection is one which, sited as it is in an area in the southwestern part of the province, will have a great impact on various constituencies represented here, and one which the government of Nova Scotia have fully approved and recommended.

I commend the government for having proceeded in this way by bringing the proposal forward as soon as possible.

QUESTIONS

Mr. Pickersgill: The following questions are being answered today: 472, 813, 837, 858, 916, 925, 926, 936, 948, 951, 953, 961, 978, 980, 981, 984, 992, 993, 1026, 1029, 1030, 1033, 1037, 1038 and 1041.

I wonder if the following questions could be made orders for returns: 437, 816 and 950.

The following are additional questions for which returns are being tabled immediately: 869, 934, 937, 938, 939, 940, 941.

Would you please call starred questions nos. 912, 932, 955, 1042? The remaining questions stand.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

FEDERAL SHIPBUILDING SUBSIDY

Question No. 472—Mr. Fisher:

1. How has the federal shipbuilding subsidy worked, by year, in providing more ships and employment, in terms of scale of subsidy, scale of private spending to get subsidy, type and size of vessel constructed, place of construction and estimated man-days employment?

2. Has the maritime commission noted a trend to take less advantage of the subsidy and a preference of shipowners to buy old ships from foreign owners and, if so, what explanation does the commission have for this trend, with comments on what part the shipbuilding subsidy may play in this matter?

3. Has the commission under consideration any recommendations to the government regarding the subsidy or its legislative basis and, if so, when does it estimate these considerations will be completed?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. The following is a summary of vessels built and delivered and subsidy paid under the ship construction assistance regulations for the fiscal year 1961-62 and the fiscal year 1962-63:—

Fiscal Year 1961-1962

Area	Total Construction (in dollars)	Subsidy Paid (in dollars)
West coast	929,738	371,895

Fiscal Year 1962-1963

Area	Total Construction	Subsidy Paid
West coast	17,863,090	6,951,235
St. Lawrence gulf to east coast	8,033,462	3,315,136
St. Lawrence river and interior	24,846,283	6,083,725
Totals 1962-63	50,742,835	16,350,096

Types of Vessel

Of a total of 98 vessels built and delivered during fiscal year 1962-63, there were 12 fishing vessels other than trawlers, 6 trawlers, 19 tugs, 4 ferries, 4 tankers, 1 seaway bulk carrier, 5 coasters and 47 non-self propelled. During 1961-62, 10 non-self propelled vessels were built under the regulations.

With respect to employment, it is estimated that each one million dollars of ship construction provides 110 to 140 man years of work, taking into account both shipyard labour and labour in related industries.

2. No.

3. The Canadian maritime commission maintains a constant review of the subsidy program and of the ship construction and ship operating industries generally.

FREE TRADE WITH GREAT BRITAIN

Question No. 813—Mr. Mather:

Is the government giving consideration to the standing offer by Great Britain of free trade with Canada?

Answer: 1. I am not aware of any standing offer by Great Britain of free trade with Canada. As I reported to the house on May 24 Britain, the United States, Canada and other GATT countries have agreed that comprehensive trade negotiations, to be conducted on a most favoured nation basis, are to begin in May 1964.

(Translation):

AIR TERMINALS, ROUYN AND VAL D'OR, QUE.

Question No. 837—Mr. Caouette:

Has the government received any representations for the construction of air terminals at Rouyn and Val d'Or and, if so, what were the answers to these representations, and what action does the government intend to take in this matter?

Mr. McIlraith: Reprentation was made in September of last year to the department in regard to the provision of an air terminal building upon Val d'Or airport. The reply given to this representation made note that this airfield is a military establishment, and that any outlay of funds towards meeting civil aviation requirements upon the airfield must be undertaken in full cognizance of the overall objectives of the Department of National Defence and the Department of Transport. It was further noted that discussions were underway between the two departments in an examination of development planning of the civil aviation area.

The discussions on this matter between the Department of National Defence and the Department of Transport are continuing, and upon resolution, will leave the way clear to allow the planning and programming of new air terminal facilities.

There has been no representation received regarding air terminal requirements upon Rouyn airport.

(Text):

INVESTMENT IN PRICE SUPPORTED COMMODITIES

Question No. 858—Mr. Mather:

What is the total of federal investments in price-supported commodities?

[Mr. McIlraith.]

Mr. Pickersgill: At the close of the last fiscal year of March 31, 1963, the total of the federal investments in price supported commodities administered by the Department of Agriculture was one hundred and forty million, seven hundred and six thousand three hundred and eight dollars and sixty eight cents; by the Department of Fisheries, nil.

*PAROLE OF LEOPOLD DION

Question No. 912—Mr. Marcoux:

1. Who recommended the parole of Mr. Leopold Dion of Pont Rouge, Quebec, sentenced to life imprisonment in 1940?

2. What were the reasons given in support of this parole?

3. At the end of 1962 or the beginning of 1963, who recommended a new parole for the same man?

4. What were the reasons advanced in support of this parole?

5. Will a general investigation be made of the national parole board?

Mr. Macdonald: As to questions 1, 2, 3 and 4 I must reply that it is not the policy to disclose information contained in parole files because of the confidential nature thereof. In order that the national parole board may receive as complete information as possible, both good and bad, from all possible sources, the policy is to regard all information and representations contained in such files as confidential. Nor is it the policy for the board to disclose the specific grounds of parole in an individual case.

In order, however, that hon. members may fully understand the situation, I should like to add the following.

Under the terms of the Parole Act the board, with exceptions which are not relevant here, "has exclusive jurisdiction and absolute discretion to grant, refuse to grant or revoke parole" (section 5). The act also provides that the board shall, at the times prescribed by the regulations, review the case of every inmate of a penitentiary serving a sentence of two years or more, "whether or not an application has been made by or on behalf of the inmate" (section 6). The regulations provide—as far as present purposes are concerned—that, in the case of an inmate serving a sentence of two years or more, the board shall review the case at least every two years.

Review of such cases by the board is therefore not dependant upon any representations being made to the board and any such representations, whether emanating from the inmate or his friends, are taken merely as indicating an active interest on his part in obtaining a parole.

Coming now to question No. 5 the answer is that no intention has been formed to direct a general investigation of the national parole board. I need hardly say with what horror we all regard the deaths of the four boys in Quebec city, to which the question obviously relates, or what profound sympathy we feel for their families. I intend, however, to await the outcome of the police investigation and the inquests, and any subsequent court proceedings, before making any further comment on this tragic case, except to say that I made a point of examining the files of the national parole board and, whatever the merits of the decision to grant parole in this case, I find, as I had anticipated, that the case was considered painstakingly and in complete objectivity by the board.

GRANT OF $100,000 TO B.C. INDIANS

Question No. 916—Mr. Howard:

Is the grant of $100,000 to provide for additional services to Indians of British Columbia earmarked for special purposes and, if so, what are those purposes?

Mr. Munro: Yes. The promotion of agriculture and irrigation, as well as other programs designed to promote the economy of the Indians of British Columbia such as fishing, logging, hunting and trapping.

Since 1959 an Indian advisory committee, comprising three members selected by the Indians themselves and representative of the Indians of the coastal, northern and mainland portions of the province, has been advising and assisting the Indian commissioner for British Columbia in the planning and allocation of funds granted for the purpose.

(Translation):

YIELD ON GOVERNMENT BONDS

Question No. 925—Mr. Martineau:

1. What was the average yield on ninety day government of Canada treasury bills for the period between July 3 and July 10?

2. Was the average yield higher than it was during the previous corresponding period?

3. What was the yield on 4 per cent government bonds due May 1964 during the period between July 3 and July 10?

4. Was this an increase over the previous corresponding period?

5. Has there been a general rise in interest rates during this period and, if so, (a) what is the reason for such a rise (b) is the government and/or the Bank of Canada taking any measures to stem any such rise in interest rates?

Mr. Gordon: 1 and 2. The average yield on 91 day government of Canada treasury bills sold by auction at recent weekly tenders has been as follows:

July 11, 3.39 per cent per annum; July 4, 3.26 per cent per annum; June 27, 3.24 per cent per annum.

3 and 4. The yield on 4 per cent government of Canada bonds due May 1, 1964 on the basis of closing Wednesday mid-market quotations in recent weeks has been as follows:

July 10, 3.83 per cent per annum; July 3, 3.53 per cent per annum; June 26, 3.60 per cent per annum.

5. Market yields on government of Canada securities rose generally during the period between July 3 and July 10. Because of the variety and constantly changing character of influences operating in the market it is not possible to state precisely the reason or reasons for any given change in prices. The Bank of Canada's holdings of government of Canada securities increased by $28.4 million in the week ending July 10, and net purchases of such securities by the bank which had not yet been delivered to it amounted to $60.9 million on July 10 as compared with $1.0 million on July 3; these figures are taken from the "Weekly Financial Statistics" release published by the Bank of Canada.

GILBERT AYERS—EMPLOYMENT BY C.N.R.

Question No. 926—Mr. Drouin:

Is Mr. Gilbert Ayers employed by the Canadian National Railways and, if so (a) what is his position (b) when was he appointed (c) when does his term of appointment expire and (d) what is his annual salary?

Mr. McIlraith: No. A Mr. Gilbert Ernest Ayers, Lachute Mills, Quebec, was appointed a director of the Canadian National Railway company for a term of three years, effective October 1, 1961, at a salary of $5,000 per annum, by Order in Council P.C. 1961-1382 of September 27, 1961.

(Text):

*CASH ASSETS IN CONSOLIDATED REVENUE FUND

Question No. 932—Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi):

1. What is the total of cash assets in the consolidated revenue fund?

2. What is the amount of "bank money" or of the credit created or issued by the chartered banks since 1954?

Mr. Gordon: 1. As of July 15 $565,401,180.22.

2. The chartered bank component of "Total currency outside banks and chartered bank deposits" which is usually used to measure the "total money supply" amounted to $8,856 million at the end of 1954 and $14,104 million at July 3, 1963.

These figures are published regularly by the Bank of Canada in its "Weekly Financial Statistics" and in its monthly "Statistical Summary".

INCOME TAX COLLECTED, MONTREAL, TORONTO, WINNIPEG, VANCOUVER

Question No. 936—Mr. Basford:

For the taxation year 1957-58 and subsequent taxation years, what percentage of total personal income tax paid was paid by the residents of Metropolitan Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver and Winnipeg?

Mr. Garland: The percentages of personal income tax and old age security tax assessed on residents of Montreal, Toronto, Vancouver and Winnipeg for the years 1957 to 1960 are as follows:

	Taxation Year
	1957 %	1958 %	1959 %	1960 %
Montreal	14.07	13.69	13.24	13.50
Toronto	18.98	20.06	18.30	18.59
Vancouver	6.65	6.53	6.49	6.11
Winnipeg	3.34	3.63	3.77	3.66

SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I. LOBSTER CARNIVAL—MILITARY BANDS

Question No. 948—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

1. Has the Department of National Defence received requests for military bands to be present at the Summerside lobster carnival, July 15 to July 20, 1963, and, if so, what military bands have been requested?
2. What military bands have been made available for this purpose?

Answer: 1. Yes, but no specific bands were requested.

2. The Canadian army and Royal Canadian Air Force bands were already committed for the dates involved, and although the Royal Canadian Navy band from H.M.C.S. Stadacona could have been made available for the 15 and 16 July provided the sponsor assumed the travelling cost involved, the sponsor declined this offer. However, arrangements were made for the Summerside voluntary brass reed band to participate in two parades.

MOTION PICTURE PRODUCTION

Question No. 951—Mr. Thompson:

1. How many original motion pictures were produced by the national film board in each of the years 1957-58, 1958-59, 1959-60, 1960-61, and 1961-62?
2. In the same years, how many original motion pictures did the national film board contract out to private Canadian film production companies?
3. Is it the purpose of the national film board, among other things "to promote the production and distribution of films designed to interpret Canada to Canadians and to other nations" and, if so, does the government intend to place a more reasonable proportion of government film production in the hands of private companies?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. 1957-58, 129; 1958-59, 104; 1959-60, 95; 1960-61, 83; 1961-62, 93.

2. Originals		Revisions, versions, etc.
1957-58	0	33
1958-59	1	5
1959-60	1	8
1960-61	1	3
1961-62	3	4

[Mr. Basford.]

3. The board was established "to initiate and promote the production and distribution of films in the national interest—films designed to interpret Canada to Canadians and to other nations". The policy of the national film board is to operate at a level which permits economic utilization of its existing facilities. The board tenders out production work whenever the volume or schedule of production places a project outside the normal operating capacity of the board. The royal commission on government organization agreed with this policy as may be seen by its recommendation: "The national film board stabilize its film making at a level to provide economic utilization of present facilities".

(Translation):

UNIVERSAL DAYLIGHT SAVING TIME

Question No. 953—Mr. Marcoux:

Is it the intention of the Department of Transport to urge Canadian railway companies to use daylight saving time instead of standard time in those areas where there is a difference between the two?

Mr. Cantin: This would be a matter for consideration by the Railway Association of Canada and the hon. member's inquiry will be drawn to the attention of the association.

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO BRIDGE, QUEBEC CITY

Question No. 955—Mr. Marcoux:

1. Is the Department of Public Works paying part of the cost of the new bridge between the city of Quebec and the south shore and, if so, what part of the cost is it paying?
2. Does the Minister of Public Works intend to follow the recommendation of the mayor of Levis with regard to the site for the bridge?

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Speaker, the answer is as follows:

1. No.

2. Since this is a provincial project, the federal government has nothing to do whatsoever with the selection of the site.

(Text):

H-BOMB EFFECTS

Question No. 961—Mr. Douglas:

What is the approximate or estimated effect, with regard to blast, burn, and immediate radioactive fall-out, of the following categories of H-bombs when exploded at 40,000 feet, 60,000 feet, 80,000 feet and 100,000 feet (a) 1 megaton (b) 2 megaton (c) 5 megaton (d) 10 megaton (e) 20 megaton (f) 100 megaton?

Answer: Blast: Using as a criterion the bodily removal of exterior wall panels of a frame house, which occurs at overpressure of 2 pounds per square inch, and which is classified as severe damage, the following are the distances from a point on the ground directly below the burst at which this severe damage will occur.

Height of Burst—ft.	40,000	60,000	80,000	100,000
Yield of Weapon MT	Miles	Miles	Miles	Miles
1	*	*	*	*
2	1	*	*	*
5	7	*	*	*
10	11	6	*	*
20	17	12	6	*
100	35	35	25	20

*indicates that the overpressure on the ground does not reach 2 p.s.i.

Immediate fall-out: For all the yields and heights specified, immediate radioactive fall-out is negligible, because the fireball does not touch the ground, and the burst takes place above the regions of the atmosphere in which our weather is formed. For a 100MT explosion, there will be very little immediate fall-out for all heights above 18,000 feet.

Thermal radiation: Using as a criterion 8 calories per square centimeter, at which level human skin will suffer injury corresponding to severe sunburn with blistering, and light kindling materials will ignite, the following are the distances from a point on the ground directly below the burst at which this damage or injury will occur.

Height of Burst—ft.	40,000	60,000	80,000	100,000
Yield of weapon MT	Miles	Miles	Miles	Miles
1	3	*	*	*
2	8	2	*	*
5	14	13	10	*
10	20	20	20	22
20	28	28	28	27
100	63	63	64	64

*indicates that 8 cals per square centimeter is not reached on the ground.

BREAKWATER REPAIRS, WEST ADVOCATE, N.S.

Question No. 978—Mr. Coates:

1. Have repairs been completed to the breakwater at West Advocate, Nova Scotia?
2. What is the estimated total cost of these repairs?

Mr. Badanai: 1. No, the work is about 70 per cent finished. It is expected to complete it later this summer.

2. $10,000.

Questions

FEDERAL BUILDING, AMHERST, N.S.

Question No. 980—Mr. Coates:

Are plans going forward on the construction of a new federal building in Amherst to replace the old federal building, and when is it expected that tenders will be called for this facility?

Mr. Badanai: The department is proceeding with studies to determine the exact nature of the accommodation required at Amherst and it is expected that new construction will be required probably in the 1965-66 fiscal year. However it has not been decided yet whether to erect a new building or to add to the existing building, known as the new federal building, or to do both.

FEDERAL BUILDING EXTENSION, AMHERST, N.S.

Question No. 981—Mr. Coates:

Is an extension planned to the new federal building in Amherst?

Mr. Badanai: See answer to question No. 980.

WHARF IMPROVEMENTS, JOGGINS, N.S.

Question No. 984—Mr. Coates:

1. Have representations been received for the improvement of wharfage facilities at Joggins, Nova Scotia?
2. What are the names of individuals, associations, or concerns who have made representations for the improvement of these facilities?
3. What action does the government plan to take, in this regard?

Mr. Badanai: 1. Yes.

2. From Robert C. Coates, M.P. (Cumberland) who also forwarded copies of representations from Sifto salt division of Domtar Chemicals Ltd. and Enamel and Heating Products Ltd.

3. No decision has yet been reached.

ARDA PROJECTS, ALBERTA

Question No. 992—Mr. Horner (Acadia):

What are the names of the projects in Alberta for which assistance has been asked, and granted, under ARDA by the federal government, and what is the total amount of assistance required for these projects?

Mr. Hays: Three projects have been approved in the province of Alberta under the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act. The projects, the total cost of each, and the amount of federal assistance is as follows:

Project	Total Cost	Federal Assistance
To develop marginal lands as the Seven Persons irrigated grazing reserve near Medicine Hat	$23,500	$11,750
To develop marginal lands as the Wanham grazing reserve near Wanham	14,000	7,000
To develop a soil capability inventory of agricultural lands in Alberta	18,500	18,500
TOTALS	$56,000	$37,250

TRANSFER TO CAPE BRETON OF "SILVER DART" REPLICA

Question No. 993—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Is the government prepared to arrange for the transfer of the replica of the Silver Dart which was displayed at the national aviation museum up until approximately three weeks ago (now stored in Hull, Quebec) to Cape Breton for permanent display?

2. Is the government prepared to arrange for the transfer of any other replica of the Silver Dart for the above purpose?

Answer: The replica is a part of the collection of the national aviation museum housed in the national capital area. It has been donated to the national collection of aircraft. We know of no museum in Cape Breton, including the Alexander Graham Bell museum, which could house such a full scale replica on a permanent basis.

2. See 1.

LAMPREY CONTROL PROGRAM

Question No. 1,026—Mr. Peters:

1. Has the lamprey control program of the federal government been successful?

2. How far north in Canada have lampreys been observed?

3. Have lampreys infested any new areas in the past five years?

Answer: 1. From the information presently available a good degree of success is indicated. In 1962 and 1963 in lake Superior, the experimental area, the number of adult marine lampreys was reduced by at least 80 per cent.

2. There are several species of lamprey one of which appears in Arctic waters. The sea lamprey—the great lakes predator—is found in waters tributary to the Atlantic ocean ranging from southern Labrador to Chesapeake bay.

3. They have appeared in some streams tributary to lake Superior where they were not found five years ago. This is attributed to control measures in their original streams. While they may exist unnoticed in some other areas there has been no indication of major expansion into new areas.

WORLD FAIR GUIDE SERVICE

Question No. 1,029—Mr. Peters:

Is it the intention of the federal government to provide a guide service to assist visitors during the national centennial celebration similar to that supplied at the world's fair in Brussels and, if so (a) how many guides does the government intend to train (b) what will be the age limit of these guides and (c) is it the intention of the government to provide special uniforms and training for this purpose?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am informed by the national centennial administration that apart from meeting the needs which may occur in connection with specific projects, there is no intention at the moment of providing a guide service for visitors during the national centennial celebration.

The national centennial administration, however, does not speak for the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation.

BRUCELLOSIS CONTROL, TIMISKAMING DISTRICT

Question No. 1,030—Mr. Peters:

1. Is it the intention of the Department of Agriculture to establish a brucellosis-free area in the district of Timiskaming and, if so (a) when is it expected that the tests will be undertaken, and (b) at what date is it expected they can be completed?

2. Is it the intention of the department to use federal veterinarians, or is it anticipated that local veterinarians can provide this service?

Mr. Hays: 1. It is the intention of the Department of Agriculture to establish a brucellosis-free area in the district of Timiskaming.

(a) It is expected this area test will commence early in 1964.

(b) The date of completion cannot accurately be predicted as progress will be dependant on the staff available and the extent to which private veterinary practitioners participate.

2. It is the intention of the Department of Agriculture to use some federal veterinarians, but all local veterinarians will be afforded the opportunity to participate in the program and will be offered employment by the department as casual veterinarians.

FALL-OUT SHELTERS, NORTH BAY

Question No. 1,033—Mr. Peters:

Has the emergency measures organization explored the possibility of providing fall-out shelters for those citizens resident in the expected point of contact north of the Bomarc missile base at North Bay and, if so, have the possibilities of fall-out shelters using the abandoned mines at Cobalt and Kirkland Lake been assessed, and what mines, if any, have been found suitable for this use?

Mr. Drury: As has been stated previously, there is no government program to build shelters for the public; however, various possible approaches are under study. In this context, the possible use of mines will be considered.

It will be recalled that, in 1962, the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys conducted, on behalf of the emergency measures organization, a survey of all active mines and some inactive mines of the adit type which were readily accessible and which might serve as fall-out shelters. The actual development of such mines as fall-out shelters would depend on each being studied separately to determine what additional features would be required to provide a safer environment. These features might include lighting, ventilation and, in some instances, pumping equipment. The survey did reveal that, at Cobalt and Kirkland Lake, there were underground workings which, if suitably equipped, could serve as fall-out shelters for the population of these two communities.

As much of the information which was provided by mine owners was on a confidential basis, it is not possible at this time to name these mines.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP OF COMPANIES

Question No. 1,037—Mr. Lambert:

1. Has a study been completed of the proposals referred to under the answer by the Minister of Trade and Commerce to question number 424 and, if not, when is a decision expected?

2. Has the extent of foreign ownership among any of the proposing companies yet been determined and, if not, when is this information expected to be available?

Mr. Drury: 1. Completion of the study is expected in the near future.

2. The extent of foreign ownership, if any, of any company whose proposal is accepted will be made known at the time of the announcement of the decision.

BUTTER PRODUCTION

Question No. 1,038—Mr. Hamilton:

1. What is the estimated production and consumption, by months, of dairy butter in dairy years (a) May 1, 1957 to May 1, 1963 (b) months since May 1, 1963 for which figures are available?

2. What was the surplus of butter and butter oil as of May 1, 1957 and each May 1 in succeeding years to May 1, 1963?

Answer: 1 and 2. See attached statement.

1. (a) and (b) Estimated Production and Consumption of Dairy (Farm-Made) Butter, by months, May 1957 to May 1963 inclusive.

	Dairy Years
	1957-58	1958-59	1959-60	1960-61	1961-62	1962-63	1963-64
	'000 lb.	'000 lb.	'000 lb.	'000 bl.	'000 lb.	'000 lb.	'000 lb.
May	1,148	1,074	917	829	763	663	454
June	1,202	1,092	964	842	735	670
July	1,160	1,045	948	816	735	581
August	1,142	1,027	938	802	718	570
September	1,144	1,014	951	844	757	533
October	1,127	1,046	947	849	752	526
November	1,062	987	845	760	653	471
December	904	908	810	688	583	503
January	869	788	757	635	542	486
February	799	769	738	590	530	361
March	898	790	815	658	570	384
April	1,018	865	787	705	592	416

2. Stocks of butter and butter oil, May 1, 1957 to 1963.

	May 1, 1957	May 1, 1958	May 1, 1959	May 1, 1960	May 1, 1961	May 1, 1962	May 1, 1963
	'000 lb.	'000 lb.	'000 lb.	'000 lb.	'000 lb.	'000 lb.	'000 lb.
Butter	36,927	35,416	62,375	80,599	85,602	81,860	101,480
Butter oil	—	—	—	104	24,889	82,202	81,818

Orders for Returns

ACCESS TO BALLAST GROUNDS, NORTH SYDNEY, N.S.

Question No. 1,041—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

What progress is being made in the negotiations between the Department of Public Works and owners of the properties concerned regarding an access road to the ballast grounds at North Sydney, Nova Scotia, for the purpose of eliminating the inconvenience caused to fishermen?

Mr. Badanai: The department has received an offer to sell property that would provide access to the ballast grounds and an independent appraisal of the fair market value of the land is now being made. Negotiations will continue when the results of the appraisal have been received.

*LAMPREY EEL PROGRAM, GREAT LAKES

Question No. 1,042—Mr. Nixon:

1. What success has been achieved by the government program for the extermination of lamprey in the great lakes?

2. Does the federal government intend to continue this program and, if so, could the Minister of Fisheries bring the house up to date on its present operation?

Mr. Robichaud: 1. In 1962 and 1963 in lake Superior, the experimental area, the number of adult marine lampreys was reduced by at least 80 per cent. With this reduction in numbers, wounding of lake trout has dropped, their availability—catch per given yardage of net—has increased and larger trout are appearing in the catches.

2. The program is being carried out in accordance with the terms of the great lakes fishery convention between Canada and the United States. This convention remains in force until October 1965. The convention provides for a joint review in the eighth year of the activities of the commission appointed pursuant thereto to determine the desirability of continuing, modifying or terminating this convention. This review will be completed later this year.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

CONDITIONAL AND UNCONDITIONAL GRANTS TO SASKATCHEWAN

Question No. 437—Mr. More:

1. (a) What are the amounts paid by the government of Canada to the province of Saskatchewan in conditional grants in each of the years 1953-1962 inclusive (b) what were the specific programs and what was the amount of expenditure under each (c) what was the total amount for the period 1953-1957 inclusive (d) what was the total amount for the period 1958-1962 inclusive?

2. (a) What were the amounts paid by the government of Canada to the province of Saskatchewan in unconditional grants in each of the years 1953-1962 inclusive (b) what was the total amount for the period 1953-1957 inclusive (c) what was the total amount for the period 1958-1962 inclusive?

3. (a) What were the amounts of federal capital expenditures and grants made to the city of Regina in each of the years 1953-1957 inclusive (b) for what purpose, and under what program, and in what amounts were expenditures under (a) made (c) what were the amounts of federal capital expenditures and grants made to the city of Regina in each of the years 1958-1962 inclusive (d) for what purpose, and under what program, and in what amounts were expenditures under (c) made?

*PROTEST AGAINST SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Question No. 816—Mr. Martineau:

1. Has the Minister of Finance received any protests and/or representations in regard to the withdrawal of the exemption of the 11 per cent sales tax in regard to building materials and production equipment and machinery and, if so, what is the number of persons, associations, corporations or other bodies that have voiced such protests or made such representations, giving in each case their names or description?

2. Have such persons, associations, corporations or other bodies informed the minister of any building, construction or other project which may be cancelled, postponed or set aside because of the proposed withdrawal of exemption of the said sales tax and, if so, what is (a) the total number of such projects (b) the total value thereof (c) the total number of jobs that may be involved by such proposed cancellation or postponement?

TARIFF ON BOOKS

Question No. 950—Mr. Harley:

1. What is the tariff rate on books?

2. In the year 1962, what revenue did this tariff yield the government?

3. What is the purpose of such tariff?

4. Is there any consideration being given to changing the tariff on books?

5. What is the value of total book sales in Canada for 1962?

6. How many people are employed by book publishers, printers, and binders?

7. How many original works were published in Canada in 1961, and 1962?

AIRCRAFT CRASHES IN CANADA

Question No. 869—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the Department of Transport a record of all aircraft crashes in Canada and, if so, how many crashes have occurred in each year since 1959, including the first six months of 1963?

2. In investigating the reasons for crashes, has the department found that any have been caused by aircraft hitting cables and wires and, if so, what accidents, where, involving what persons and planes, to what cost in lives and damage?

Return tabled.

PENSIONS OF ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Question No. 934—Mr. Knowles:

1. What is the average annual pension being paid, by rank, to permanent armed forces personnel retired in 1947?

2. What is the average annual pension being paid, by rank, to permanent armed forces personnel retired in 1962?

3. Have any adjustments been made, since they were retired, in the pensions of permanent armed forces personnel retired in 1947 and, if not, is consideration being given to such adjustments in the case of those retired (a) in 1947 or earlier (b) since 1947 and prior to 1962?

Return tabled.

NATIONAL CENTENNIAL ADMINISTRATION

Question No. 937—Mr. Basford:

With regard to the national centennial administration, to date (a) how many board of directors meetings have been held (b) on what dates were these meetings held (c) which directors, if any, were absent from any such meetings (d) if any directors were absent from any such meetings, what were the reasons for their absence (e) who are the members of the executive committee (f) how many executive committee meetings have been held (g) on what dates were these meetings held (h) which members, if any, were absent from any meetings of the executive committee (i) if any members were absent, what were the reasons for their absence?

Return tabled.

GRANTS BY CENTENNIAL ADMINISTRATION

Question No. 938—Mr. Basford:

With regard to the allocation of grants by the national centennial administration (a) to date, what applications have been received, and what is the amount of the grant applied for in each case (b) to date, what applications have been approved, and what is the amount approved in each case (c) when was the "first come, first served" policy of distribution of centennial grants established (d) what is the commencement date for the operation of this policy (e) apart from the seven principles set out in appendix I of the annual report of national centennial administration 62/63, will any other principles apply and, if so, what are they (f) will any effort be made to evaluate one local centennial project by comparing it with other local centennial projects?

Return tabled.

CENTENNIAL ADMINISTRATION—PROVINCIAL MACHINERY

Question No. 939—Mr. Basford:

With regard to the national centennial administration (a) how many provincial governments, and which ones, have established acceptable machinery for the processing and approval of local centennial projects (b) what efforts are being made to encourage provincial governments to establish such machinery (c) when was the last meeting with representatives of the government of British Columbia for the purpose of establishing such machinery (d) when is the next meeting for such purpose scheduled (e) if no such meeting is scheduled, is there any reason for not holding such meetings?

Return tabled.

CENTENNIAL ADMINISTRATION—GRANT TO VANCOUVER

Question No. 940—Mr. Basford:

Has the city of Vancouver made formal application to the national centennial administration for a centennial grant and, if so (a) for what purpose (b) at how many, and which meetings of the board of directors has this application been discussed (c) at how many, and which meetings of the executive committee has this application been discussed (d) what is the present status of this application (e) does this application presently comply with the seven requirements set out in schedule I of the annual report 62/63 and, if not, which of the said seven requirements does the application not comply with?

Return tabled.

LOCAL CENTENNIAL COMMITTEES

Question No. 941—Mr. Basford:

With regard to the national centennial administration (a) how many local centennial committees have been established in Canada (b) how many local centennial committees have been established in British Columbia (c) if the answer to either part (a) or part (b) is unknown, are such figures collected (d) what efforts are being made to establish local centennial committees (e) have any brochures, pamphlets or other informational material (apart from copies of speeches) been prepared for the guidance of citizens or citizens' groups wishing to (i) apply for centennial grants (ii) commemorate our centennial (f) if the answer to part (e) is in the negative, is the preparation of such material being considered and, if so, when may such material be expected to be available?

Return tabled.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

(Translation):

THETFORD MINES, QUE.—CONSTRUCTION OF "MANÈGE MILITAIRE"

Motion No. 50—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all telegrams, letters and other correspondence exchanged between different members of the Canadian Army staffs and the Minister of National Defence, the Minister of Defence Production, and their assistants, concerning the construction of the future "Manège Militaire" of Thetford Mines, P.Q.

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, I got in touch with the hon. member for Megantic and, since we are to meet about that motion, he has agreed to withdraw it.

Motion withdrawn.

(Text):

GLASSCO COMMISSION STUDIES RESPECTING C.B.C.

Motion No. 52—Mr. Douglas:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all studies done by the Glassco commission in respect of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Lamontagne: I thought we had agreed that this motion would be withdrawn.

Mr. Douglas: I would ask leave to have the motion withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

EDMONTON MUNICIPAL AIRPORT

Motion No. 55—Mr. Lambert:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all telegrams, correspondence, reports, briefs and memoranda, and any replies thereto, received by the Minister of Transport or any minister of the government or any government official, from the city of Edmonton, the Edmonton municipal airport authorities, or any other interested parties since January 1, 1954, to date, relative to the continued use and development of the Edmonton municipal airport.

Mr. McIlraith: There is no objection to this motion, subject to the usual reservation as to privileged or confidential material.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any objection to the reservation as stated by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CENSURE MOTION BY QUEBEC LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY

Motion No. 57—Mr. Martineau:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of the censure motion adopted by the Quebec legislative assembly on June 26, 1963, sent to the Prime Minister on July 11, 1963, as well as a copy of the covering letter.

Motion agreed to.

PUBLIC WORKS, COAL HARBOUR, B.C.

Motion No. 60—Mr. Leboe:

That an order of the house do issue for copies of all correspondence exchanged, since June 1, 1962 between Coal Harbour Investments Limited (Vancouver), the city of Vancouver and the federal government concerning public works at Coal Harbour, B.C.

Mr. McIlraith: In the terms of this motion as presented there is no correspondence available. I wonder, therefore, if the hon. member would drop his motion. There is information available on a related subject. I have spoken with the hon. member about it and perhaps he would care to put forward a new motion for consideration.

Mr. Leboe: That is satisfactory.

Motion dropped.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL—CORRESPONDENCE WITH B.C.

Motion No. 61—Mr. Basford:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, documents or notes, exchanged between the government, the President of the Privy Council, any member of the staff of the privy council office, the commisioner or deputy commissioner of the national centennial administration or any employees thereof, and the government of the province of British Columbia, concerning the centennial of Canada's confederation.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable to the government subject to obtaining the consent of the government of British Columbia.

[Mr. Lambert.]

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation stated by the minister, is the motion agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

ACCEPTANCE OF CHANGE IN NORTH PACIFIC FISHERIES TREATY

Motion No. 62—Mr. Barnett:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency for a copy of the cabinet minute or other official document which authorized the Secretary of State for External Affairs to notify the executive director, the international north Pacific fisheries commission, by telegram under date of May 10, 1963, that the commission's recommendations for the removal of the halibut stocks in the Eastern Bering Sea and the herring stocks west of the Queen Charlotte Islands from the annex to the convention had been accepted by the government of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the minister has spoken to me about this motion, and I would ask that it be allowed to stand until next week.

Motion stands.

LEASE OF PORTION OF R.C.A.F. STATION, VANCOUVER

Motion No. 63—Mr. Basford:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, documents or letters (not previously laid before this house) exchanged between the government, the Minister of National Defence, employees of the said department, and the city of Vancouver or any branch or board thereof, relative to that portion of R.C.A.F. station, Vancouver, Kitsilano site, most recently leased to the city of Vancouver.

Motion agreed to.

MAINTENANCE OF ALASKA HIGHWAY

Motion No. 64—Mr. Nielsen:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all documents, reports, engineering or other surveys, communications, correspondence or other papers, with respect to the (a) all weather maintenance of the road from Haines Junction in the Yukon Territory to Haines in the state of Alaska, U.S.A. (b) existing maintenance costs of the northwest highway system in maintaining the said road by the northwest highway system of the Canadian army and (c) paving of the said road.

Mr. Speaker: I understand that the hon. member for the Northwest Territories is standing in for the hon. member for the Yukon. Is it agreed?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, in the circumstances perhaps these motions could stand until the hon. member is here.

Mr. Speaker: The three motions in the name of the hon. member for the Yukon will stand.

Motions stand.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS TO CANADIANS IN U.S.

Motion No. 67—Mr. Perron:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence and documents exchanged between the government of Canada or any of its agencies and American states and/or of minutes of proceedings of the meetings held between representatives of Canada or any of its accredited agencies and representatives of any other government in connection with the extension of unemployment insurance benefits to Canadians working in these American states.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I understand that my parliamentary secretary has had discussions with the hon. gentleman with respect to this motion. Subject to securing the consent of the state of Maine and confining the motion to that state, it is acceptable.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING U.S. EXCISE TAX

Motion No. 68—Mr. Martineau:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house copies of all correspondence, telegrams, letters and other documents exchanged between the governments of Canada and the United States, or between officials of the said governments, relating to the new excise tax on the purchase by United States residents of Canadian securities and those of 21 other countries proposed by President Kennedy on July 18, 1963.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman and I have discussed this matter and he has kindly agreed to let the motion stand.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fluidity of the situation I can understand the government's request, and I consent.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I don't know what that means.

Mr. Pearson: It does not mean anything.

Motion stands.

WINTER WORKS INCENTIVE PROGRAM

Motion No. 69—Mr. Starr:

That an order of the house do issue for copies of all correspondence and telegrams received by the Minister of Labour or any official of the Department of Labour in respect to the municipal winter works incentive program between April 22, 1963, and July 22, 1963.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, this motion is acceptable subject to securing the consent of the provincial governments.

Mr. Speaker: Is there any objection to the reservation stated by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

(Translation):

CANADIAN REPRESENTATION AT VATICAN

Motion No. 70—Mr. Marcoux:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, letters and other documents exchanged between the Department of External Affairs or any other department and the Holy See or any of its representatives, from October 14, 1957, to July 15, 1963, concerning the establishment of Canadian representation to the Vatican.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, in principle, according to our rules, that question is out of order. Be that as it may, I wish to say that, to my knowledge, no letters or other documents were exchanged between the Department of External Affairs or any other department of the government and the Holy See or any of its representatives, from October 14, 1957 to July 15, 1963, concerning the establishment of Canadian representation to the Vatican.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: The motion is withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

(Translation):

BRIDGE BETWEEN QUEBEC CITY AND SOUTH SHORE

Motion No. 71—Mr. Marcoux:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the Department of Public Works or any other department and the government of the province of Quebec, between April 22, 1963, and July 19, 1963, concerning the construction of a bridge between the Quebec city and the south shore of the St. Lawrence river.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, there would be no objection to producing all correspondence, letters or telegrams requested by the hon. member except that, to my knowledge, no such documents exist. Therefore, I would ask the hon. member to be so kind as to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is withdrawn.

(Text):

C.B.C. TELEVISION STATION, QUEBEC CITY

Motion No. 72—Mr. Marcoux:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the Department of the Secretary of State or any other department and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, from April 22, 1963 to July 15, 1963, in order to speed up the establishment of a C.B.C. television station in Quebec city.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, it has always been considered that correspondence between a minister or the government and the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation is privileged, and such motions are not complied with. If the hon. gentleman would prefer to have the motion stand that would be agreeable, but if not I wonder whether he would consider withdrawing it.

Mr. Marcoux: If it is impossible to have any information I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. Speaker: Withdrawn.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the hon. gentleman.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

CONSTRUCTION OF RAILWAY BETWEEN MATANE AND STE. ANNE DES MONTS, QUE.

Motion No. 73—Mr. Marcoux:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, letters, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the Department of Transport or any other department and the Canadian National Railways between April 22, 1963 and July 19, 1963, relating to the construction and the operation of a line of railway in the province of Quebec between Matane and Ste. Anne des Monts, as provided in chap. 13 of the statutes of Canada, 1962.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, it will be seen that this motion relates to correspondence between departments of the government and the Canadian National Railways, and such correspondence has always been considered privileged in the same way as correspondence between departments. In the circumstances I would ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Speaker: Withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

FINANCE

INQUIRIES RESPECTING U.S. MODIFICATIONS OF TAX IMPOSED

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make further reference to a question I asked the Minister of Finance yesterday regarding an alleged agreement entered into between the governments of the United States and Canada for Canada to accept lower interest rates in return for certain changes to be suggested to congress by the President. In view of the fact that newspaper headlines read "Dillon Says One Thing, Gordon Says Another", has the minister anything further to say by way of clarification in order to bring about some degree of certainty in this regard?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would refer the right hon. gentleman to the joint communique issued at 6 p.m. on Sunday in Washington and Ottawa by the representatives of both the Canadian and American governments. That contains the only understandings and agreements that were entered into, and the right hon. gentleman will see that it makes no reference to Canada reducing interest rates. What we were trying to do was to prevent them going up.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, with further reference to the same matter, was there any agreement between United States and Canadian officials whereby Canada undertook not to use any exemption or alteration in the general policy of the United States to build up its foreign exchange reserves?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, that is clearly set out in the communique. I do not think there is anything I can add except to suggest that people refer to the communique in which that particular subject is dealt with.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the minister think Mr. Dillon—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —has not read the communique?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, Canada has had the most co-operative and helpful consideration from Mr. Dillon, and I just hope nobody will see fit to criticize him for giving up his week end to get us out of this trouble.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I agree with everything the minister said about Mr. Dillon and his part in the conference that took place over the week end, but would the minister reconcile the evidence given by Mr. Dillon before a Senate committee with the official communique issued on Sunday?

Mr. Gordon: I do not think I have anything more to add.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not think you can.

[Later:]

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I ask the Minister of Finance to tell the house if it is his understanding that the exemption from the United States tax on the purchase of Canadian securities arranged over the week end is dependant upon the Canadian government being able to effect the modest decline in interest rates suggested in Mr. Dillon's reported statement?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is no connection between the two. As I said yesterday, I am afraid I do not know what Mr. Dillon said or what the context of his statement was. As I have also said, there were no undertakings by the Canadian representatives other than those set forth in the communique.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to bring the Minister of Finance back to the question I asked him. Are we to understand the minister is informing the house that this is an incorrect report from Washington, where Mr. Dillon is reported as saying that they—speaking of the Canadian government—felt that by a modest decrease in their interest rate "they could reduce the incentive to borrow in the United States. That was more or less the arrangement arrived at." Are we to understand that was an incorrect report?

Mr. Gordon: I am not going to comment on the correctness or incorrectness of the report. What I have said was that there was no such undertaking given.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): As a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister whether in fact the government is moving to lower interest rates in Canada.

Mr. Gordon: Well, Mr. Speaker, the monetary policy that has been followed by the Bank of Canada in recent months has been designed to provide the amount of credit needed to expand the economy.

Mr. Martineau: Has there been any change in that policy since the week end?

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Did the governor of the Bank of Canada give any such undertaking, when he was in Washington over the week end to the effect that Canada would lower its interest rate if the United States government were prepared to exempt us from the foreign exchange tax?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, the governor of the Bank of Canada has informed me categorically that he gave no such undertaking.

SPECIAL ASSISTANTS—CERTIFICATE OF DEPUTY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): May I reply to a question that was asked me on Monday by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, Mr. Speaker. He asked whether the deputy minister of finance had certified payment for the special assistants who were attached to the Department of Finance during the first two months of this parliament.

Mr. Knowles: The first days.

Mr. Gordon: I do not remember that being included in the question, Mr. Speaker. In reply I can assure the hon. member that before payments were made to the special assistants the necessary certification was signed by the departmental officer authorized by the minister to sign such certification as required by section 32 of the Financial Administration Act.

I would remind him that this section provides that—> —the deputy of the appropriate minister or other officer authorized by such minister——must certify that the work has been performed.

In the case in question, certification that the work was performed was given by officers of the department authorized by the minister to perform such tasks.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NUCLEAR TEST BAN—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MOSCOW CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the progress that has been made in the test ban talks during the last few days, and in the light of the fact that Secretary of State Rusk has held briefing sessions with the members of congress, is there not some information or report that the minister might have for this house?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman will recall that during the past ten days there have been a number of questions on this subject, one by the hon. member for Medicine Hat last week. I indicated the general attitude of the government of Canada toward talks in which we were not a direct participant but about which we have, as every member in this house has an understandably vital interest. These talks are taking place among the United Kingdom, the United States and the Soviet union. Canada is not a participant in these talks which have to do with a proposed agreement with regard to certain aspects of nuclear testing; neither is France, nor are other countries of the international community.

When agreement is reached among the three participants there will be an opportunity to evaluate the effect of the agreement.

Its implications will be discussed in the council of NATO. Canada has already, as I have previously intimated, given an outline of its views with regard to the desirability of a complete or partial nuclear test ban. Until such time as we have a full statement I can say no more than I have already. We believe it would be in the interests of the peace of the world that there should be a nuclear test ban. We hope it may go beyond the three areas mentioned and we will follow with interest any other proposals which have to do with the current discussions.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask a supplementary question. In the light of the statement the minister has just made about Canada supporting a test ban agreement and expressing the hope that there may be an early agreement, does he consider that the Canadian government might give some leadership in this matter by revising its policy in regard to acquiring nuclear arms for Canada?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. gentleman has already asked that question and has received a rather effective answer.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to ask the Secretary of State, in view of his reply and the tremendous importance of this test ban treaty to Canada, and in view of the fact that a press report says that Mr. Rusk had a draft test ban agreement that he presented to the senate, whether Canada had a copy of the draft treaty at which the government could look.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We would not be one of the original signatories of a test ban treaty which we hope will eventuate, but Canada has, as my hon. friend knows, exhibited great interest in the matter. We have made our views known. We have reason to believe that the views we have stated are being carefully considered by the interested parties.

CANADIAN MEMBERSHIP IN ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs which has to do with an article in Sunday's New York Times in reference to the organization of American states and Canada's membership therein. I wish to ask the minister, first, whether there has been any urging on the part of the United States for Canada to join this organization; and second, whether this brief statement made in the article is correct, that Mr. Martin—that is the minister—was reported to have indicated that active consideration to join the organization of American states would be given only after the organization has decided to accept Jamaica, Tobago and Trinidad as members?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have had my attention drawn to this particular item, and I can say that I do not know the basis for it, because there has been no statement given by me in public that would warrant such a conclusion.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Was there any such statement made to the secretary general of the organization of American states to that effect when he was here?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the other day I was asked a question about this and I indicated that it was not the custom to disclose the nature of conversations between an ambassador and a foreign minister.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then what consideration is the government giving now, if any, to joining; and has there been any discussion with the United States department of state in this regard?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, there has been no discussion with the state department in the United States. As I indicated early in the session, this matter, along with others, continues to receive serious consideration.

HONG KONG—CONTINUATION OF EMERGENCY RELIEF MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the statement made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce on emergency food aid, has the government now decided to continue the program of emergency food assistance to Hong Kong which was inaugurated by the former administration, rather than discontinuing it, as he indicated in reply to a question the other day?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I hope to be able to say something in answer to this question, and a related question, at a later date.

ASSISTANCE BY CANADA TO UNDER-DEVELOPED COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the report on the C.B.C. news at eight o'clock this morning that Canada is at the bottom of the list of western industrial countries in terms of contributions to underdeveloped nations, can the right hon. gentleman say what Canada is doing in response to representations that we should increase the aid we are providing in this direction?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I can tell the hon. member what I am doing. I am checking the accuracy of those statistics.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORRIS REPORT—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour, in view of the latest outburst from Mr. Banks of the S.I.U., whether the government is willing to take positive action on the Norris commission report before this session recesses.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): As I indicated to the house yesterday, the findings of the Norris commission are receiving most urgent consideration, and when it is possible to bring proposals before the government, that will be the time to determine whether action can be taken within the time limit suggested by my hon. friend.

NORRIS REPORT—DISCUSSION ON C.B.C. PROGRAM "VIEWPOINT"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as a farmer, a some time employer and an old time trade unionist, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the fact that persons other than members of parliament have been interviewed on the C.B.C. program "Viewpoint" with respect to the Norris report, and in view of the fact that there are members of parliament who would welcome a similar opportunity, with equal time, including the hon. member for Kootenay West, would the minister inform the C.B.C. of our unsatisfied desires in this respect?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to let the C.B.C. know of the hon. gentleman's urge for self advertisement.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—STRIKE BY FISHERMEN AND ALLIED WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to direct to the Minister of Fisheries, notice of which I have given. I wonder whether the minister could report to the house today on the situation in British Columbia where several thousand fishermen and allied workers are on strike, and in particular can he clarify the advice which his department reportedly gave to those in the dispute, that they seek to settle their differences through the proper authorities? My understanding is that while tendermen and shore workers are a provincial responsibility, fishermen are somewhat a federal responsibility.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for sending me notice of his question, which was handed to me on my way down to the chamber. However, I wish to report that I have been kept continuously informed on the situation since a strike was declared on Saturday, July 13 affecting 10,000 British Columbia salmon net fishermen and allied workers. On Friday last the negotiations broke down between the fisheries association of British Columbia and the united fishermen and allied workers union. While realizing that a dispute of this nature comes under provincial jurisdiction, I sent a telegram to both parties suggesting that every possible action be taken to bring price and wage negotiations to a successful conclusion, and resume operation as soon as possible.

On Monday of this week an agreement was reached with the Prince Rupert co-op. affecting 600 to 700 fishermen, who resumed their fishing operation at once. Yesterday, realizing that the loss to the British Columbia economy had already reached the vicinity of $4 million and could lead to a total loss of $12 million to $14 million, I sent a second telegram to both parties expressing my concern about the present and future economy of the fishing industry unless every effort were made to reach a settlement. I further suggested that I would welcome reference to proper authorities in order to bring about action necessary to reach agreement.

In reply to the second part of the hon. member's question, I wish to clarify this advice and particularly my reference to proper authorities. The united fishermen and allied workers union is certified under the provincial laws of British Columbia as bargaining agent for tendermen and workers in most fishing plants of that province. While they are not certified under the labour laws for bargaining on behalf of fishermen, section 25 of the province of British Columbia fisheries act, chapter 150, revised statutes of British Columbia provides for arbitration procedures, provided they are asked for, and this is agreed by both parties involved. As there is no federal legislation to cover such a situation, this is what I had in mind when I suggested reference to proper authorities in order to bring about action necessary to reach agreement.

AGRICULTURE

MILK—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRAM FOR SCHOOL CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I want to ask in French.

(Translation):

Can the minister inform the house whether he has been in touch with the provinces concerning the establishment of a system of free milk distribution in schools?

(Text):

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): In reply to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker, may I say I have discussed the matter indirectly with all provincial ministers of agriculture. When the problem has been resolved I will bring it before the house.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ST. AUGUSTINE, QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF PLIGHT OF INDIANS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I would like to answer a question which was put on Monday by the hon. member for Grey North (Mr. Noble), and which was taken as notice by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing). It related to the alleged plight of 20 Indians, nine of whom are children, and who the hon. member was advised were in very bad circumstances. The answer is as follows.

These Indians are a small group who left their reserve at Romaine this year to make their way to St. Augustine, where they once lived. They left behind them at Romaine homes, services and the regular attention of agency staff. The department maintains no staff at St. Augustine, but the provincial department of youth and welfare and the diocesan social agency at Hauterive were informed and are aware of this situation.

The department has made it clear that it will defray the costs of transportation in order that these Indians may return to their homes at Romaine. The Indian affairs regional office in Quebec and the Indian agency office at Seven Islands, on my personal instructions, are looking into this matter further, and I shall be pleased to give the hon. member further details when a report from my officials has been received.

[Mr. Robichaud.]

LIVESTOCK

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—REPORTED OUTBREAK OF ANTHRAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture, of which I have sent him notice. It arises out of a further outbreak of anthrax in buffalo herds in the Northwest Territories. What is being done to eradicate this disease and, more important, to prevent its spread to domestic animals and the human population?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to thank the hon. member for sending me notice of his question. The recent outbreak of anthrax in the Northwest Territories is in the Fort Smith area and is similar to the larger outbreak a year ago.

Anthrax is a reportable disease under the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, and the health of animals branch of the Department of Agriculture has a veterinary officer in the area working with the northern affairs wildlife people on control measures. Anthrax does not spread from animal to animal but is a soil borne disease. Animals become infected by picking up the organism from the soil. Once the organism is established in the soil it may exist there for many years.

There are periodic outbreaks of anthrax in other areas of Canada, and in these cases the safe disposal of infected carcasses and the cleaning and disinfection of the infected premises are supervised by department veterinarians, and at the same time other cattle on infected premises are vaccinated. The department, under the provisions of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act, is attempting to institute these same principles of control in the Fort Smith area. All infected carcasses are being buried. Attempts have been made to keep the buffalo out of the infected zone, and last fall attempts were made to burn off the infected area in order that buffalo would not return to it.

I might say further, Mr. Speaker, that I do not know whether you have ever had anything to do with the buffalo, but he is a pretty wild bird; and if we could get the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) to use the lariats he was talking about recently to rustle them, then I think we could vaccinate them.

[Later:]

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I tried to catch your eye earlier in regard to a supplementary question I wished to ask the Minister of Agriculture. It may be too late now, but I ask Your Honour's indulgence. Does the minister's announcement in regard to anthrax mean that there will be 60 days of "anthraxion"?

INDUSTRY

STEEP ROCK IRON MINES—INQUIRY AS TO FREIGHT RATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys a question based on my understanding that the minister has been working on the matter of lower freight rates for the Steep Rock iron range. Has the minister anything to report in the way of progress in this matter, which is so important to his own constituency and the general area?

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Port Arthur was kind enough to send me, about a month ago, copies of letters he had initiated to Canadian National Railways with respect to a freight rate that might make the transfer of pelletized ore advantageous from this area. I have lately told him in writing that this was not at the moment an impediment to any further industrial advancement in this area.

I am told by the officials of Canadian National Railways that the rate that would apply there to rough ore would also apply to the rate on somewhat refined ore if a pelletizing plant were provided at Atikokan. That is not the problem at the moment; the problem is to be able to sell competitively all the ore that Atikokan could produce on the present basis.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the minister whether the lower freight rates which he has investigated, may not be a factor in being able to sell competitively.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform my colleague from the adjoining riding of Port Arthur that I have been giving this matter great study, and I am told it is not a selling factor at the moment.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Would he tell us whether the government is considering appropriating funds for the national gallery to purchase the Dr. Ward picture of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I have one short, quick question to the Minister of Agriculture. Due to the presence in Ottawa at this time of the former member for Assiniboia, can the minister confirm or deny persistent and authoritative rumours that he is going to be hired as the minister's special assistant?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Silence is consent.

TRADE

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH RED CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has an agreement covering sales of grain been arranged with China by this government?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have been asked a question about these negotiations every day, and I have replied that they are still continuing. I can assure the hon. member that as soon as the negotiations are concluded there will be an announcement in this house.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre.

Mr. Nasserden: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the hon. member has received a full reply.

Mr. Nasserden: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member would contain himself until later today or until tomorrow.

(Translation):

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

REPORTED STATEMENTS BY MEMBERS OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Is he aware of the statements made and of the interviews given by the newly appointed members of the royal commission on biculturalism, and could he tell us whether he approves this practice, on the part of the commissioners, of commenting on the questions they will be called upon to look into?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of these statements.

(Translation):

SUGGESTED APPOINTMENT OF FRENCH CANADIAN FROM ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. Does he intend to increase the membership of the royal commission on biculturalism by appointing a French speaking commissioner from Ontario, in order to comply with the request of the "Association canadienne-française de l'Éducation de l'Ontario"?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have nothing to add to what I said yesterday with regard to this matter.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question arising from the answer he gave the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) a moment ago? Does he agree with Mr. Jean Louis Gagnon who says that Canada should be divided into cantons?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: I have not seen the suggestion, so I do not think I should comment.

(Translation):

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

RENEWAL OF APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister.

Can he tell the house if he intends to renew Mr. Donald Gordon's term of office as chairman of the board of the Canadian National Railways?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, an announcement may be made in the House of Commons on that matter in due course.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

COLLINGWOOD, ONT.—REPORTED LAY-OFF OF SHIPYARD WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour and I have given him notice of it. Is he aware of the fact that 325 employees were laid off last Thursday in Collingwood by Canadian Shipbuilding and Engineering Limited, and the future employment of the remaining 526 employees is precarious? What steps, if any, are to be taken to assist in dealing with this situation, which is rather serious for the economy of the community of Collingwood?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for sending me notice of his question. I certainly share his interest in unemployment, or threatened unemployment, as a result of this lay-off, and I wish to inform him that I have asked the national employment service to provide me with a report on the nature and extent of this lay-off. Following receipt of the report my departmental officials will consider what action, if any, can be taken to assist in this situation.

THREATENED STRIKE ON U.S. RAILROADS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Megantic.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I have been bouncing up and down for the past hour. I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport in connection with one I asked him yesterday about the possible railroad strike in the United States. What does he intend to do with regard to our own railroads in the United States in the case of a strike?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I will take this question as notice.

PUBLIC SERVICE

GLASSCO COMMISSION—IMPLEMENTATION OF REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the President of the Privy Council. In view of the creation and the setting up of a new government department, the department of industry, can the minister inform the house when he might be able to report on the government's initial decision regarding the implementation of the Glassco commission report?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for sending me notice of his intention to ask this question. The special cabinet committee, with the assistance of the interdepartmental committee of officials, which has been set up to consider the recommendations of the Glassco commission, are proceeding with their work, and I expect to be in a position to make a more detailed report to the house on this most important matter when parliament reconvenes, after the recess which we may all be fortunate enough to have.

SHIPPING

LUNENBURG, N.S.—LAUNCHING OF REPLICA OF "BLUENOSE"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Is the minister aware of this morning's launching in Lunenburg of the exact replica of the world famous racing and fishing schooner Bluenose, which raced undefeated for many years, which was lost at sea in 1944, and the picture of which has appeared on the Canadian 10 cent piece for many years?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, the minister is well aware of the launching of the new schooner Bluenose which took place in Lunenburg this morning. I had an invitation to attend the launching but unfortunately I had to express my regrets. I wish I was there today to enjoy the sea breezes of the great Atlantic, where on a day like this air conditioning is provided by mother nature.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

LEGISLATIVE PLANS FOR CURRENT PORTION OF SESSION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there naturally arises at this time the question of the general plans for the remainder of this portion of the session. Would the Prime Minister be in a position tomorrow to generally outline the program the government has in mind and which it will expect to have completed by the time of the adjournment, and can he give the house a general idea as to when parliament will be reconvened? I do not know whether he can do this today, but possibly he might be able to do it tomorrow.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, discussions are going on among representatives of the four parties which have a bearing on this question. Perhaps I had better take advantage of the right hon. gentleman's suggestion and make a statement on the matter tomorrow.

(Translation):

REQUEST FOR REPLIES TO QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should have liked to put my question to the Postmaster General, but in his absence I shall direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Is it intended to answer the series of questions Nos. 506 to 537 inclusive, dated June 17, on the order paper, before the end of this session?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I take the hon. member's question as notice and the Postmaster General will answer it later.

(Text):

POWER

REPORTED REDUCED COST OF PRODUCTION IN U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stuart A. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke:) Mr. Speaker, may I address my question to either the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources or to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Would one or the other inform the house whether recent scientific developments in the United States have brought about such a reduction in the cost of producing thermal or atomic electrical power that there is now virtually no possibility of the sale of British Columbia surplus power in the United States at a price of five mills?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It seems to me that when we have reached the point when an hon. member does not know to which minister to address a question, and when the question is obviously in the form of a debate, perhaps the house should proceed to the orders of the day and debate what is supposed to be before it, instead of debating a different subject. The period before orders of the day is one for urgent questions, not for debate.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order; I am afraid the ignorance in this case lies with the Secretary of State. Thermal power is produced from coal, and this comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys; hydro power comes from the use of water, which comes under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, who controls the water resources branch of the department. So either minister could answer this question.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I submit that the question is not urgent and should not be put at this stage of our proceedings.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Without taking sides, naturally, I should like to point out that this is a short day, that we have had a particularly long session of questioning this afternoon, and that it is now four o'clock and we adjourn at six.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, with the greatest deference, if you would hear me a moment, I agree that the question period has gone on for a long time and I regret that I find it necessary to introduce this question at this late hour in the day. However, it is of substantial concern to the province of British Columbia whether negotiations which are supposed to be taking place do have any real merit in them, or whether they are a further hoax on the people of that province.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

RADIOACTIVE FALL-OUT—RECOMMENDATIONS OF VOICE OF WOMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the alarming increase in Canada of contamination from radioactive fall-out, could I ask what steps her department is taking to promote a system of decontamination of milk and to establish a more effective monitoring system, as requested by the Canadian Voice of Women?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend does not expect to have such a question answered on orders of the day. If he takes time to put it in the form of a written question I shall be very pleased to have it answered.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

ONTARIO—INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS WITH PREMIER ROBARTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he has sent a delegation of Ontario members of his cabinet to meet with Premier Robarts and discuss with him federal-provincial relations prior to the meeting which is to take place shortly.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I had a discussion with Premier Robarts myself a few weeks ago. I think I am the only member of the cabinet who has discussed this matter with him.

(Translation):

SHIPPING

PROTECTION OF SHIPS FROM WRECK IN ST. LAWRENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Beaule (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport or to his parliamentary secretary? Have measures been taken to protect ships from the wrecked Tritonica in the St. Lawrence river?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): I think that question has been answered already.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

REQUEST FOR INCREASED FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question? Does the government propose to grant the request of the Canadian teacher's federation and increase its financial aid to the universities and, in a general way, its financing of education.

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The question of increased federal assistance to education is under consideration.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Batten in the chair.

EXCISE TAX ACT

Resolved,—That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act and to provide among other things:

1. That the present exemption from sales tax for certain building materials be withdrawn by repealing the exemption for all goods mentioned under the heading "Building Materials" in Schedule III of the said act and by repealing the exemptions for

(a) "Creosote oil and other wood preservatives when for use exclusively in the treatment of timber, poles or lumber;"

(b) "Railway ties;"

(c) "Goods for use as part of sewerage and drainage systems, and articles and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture thereof;"

2. That any enactment based on paragraph 1 of this resolution provide that

(a) goods for use as part of sewerage and drainage systems be exempt from sales tax when sold to or imported by a municipality for its own use and not for resale;

(b) any transfer of a sewerage or drainage system to a municipality by any person within two years after the completion thereof, pursuant to a bylaw of or agreement with that municipality under which that person is required to install such system and transfer it without charge to that municipality after the completion thereof be deemed, for the purpose of section 46 of the said act, to be a sale to the municipality for its own use and not for resale of goods for use as part of a sewerage or drainage system,

and that any agency operating a sewerage or drainage system for or on behalf of a municipality may be declared by the minister to be a municipality for the purpose of this paragraph.

3. That any enactment based on paragraph 1 of this resolution provide that drain tile for agricultural purposes and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture thereof be exempt from sales tax.

4. That any enactment founded on paragraph 1 of this resolution provide that where materials have been purchased by or on behalf of a school, university or other similar educational institution for use exclusively in the construction of a building for that institution and the tax imposed by Part VI of the said act has been paid in respect of those materials, the Minister of National Revenue may upon application by the institution in such form as the minister prescribes made to the minister within two years from the time the materials were purchased, pay to the institution an amount equal to that tax.

5. That any enactment founded on paragraph 1 of this resolution provide that a person who

(a) manufactures or produces a building or other structure otherwise than at the site of construction or erection thereof, in competition with persons who construct or erect similar buildings or structures not so manufactured or produced,

(b) manufactures or produces otherwise than at the site of construction or erection of a building or other structure, structural building sections for incorporation into such building or structure, in competition with persons who construct or erect buildings or other structures that incorporate similar sections not so manufactured or produced, or

(c) manufactures or produces concrete or cinder building blocks, be deemed for the purposes of the said act not to be, in relation to any such building, structure, building sections or building blocks so manufactured or produced by him the manufacturer or producer thereof.

6. That the present exemption from sales tax for "Seventy five per cent of the sale price if manufactured in Canada, or seventy five per cent of the duty paid value if imported, of trailers for use as homes" be changed to read "Twenty five per cent of the sale price if manufactured in Canada, or twenty five per cent of the duty-paid value if imported, of trailers for use as homes".

7. That the present exemption for certain machinery and apparatus to be used in manufacture or production be withdrawn by repealing the exemption for all goods mentioned under the headings "Machinery and Apparatus to be used in Manufacture or Production" and "Engines" in Schedule III of the said Act and by repealing the exemptions for

(a) "Seismic shot-hole casing and materials used in the manufacture thereof;"

(b) "Tires and tubes for use exclusively on the machinery enumerated in Customs Tariff Item 411a."

(c) Goods enumerated in customs tariff items 399a, 399b, 399c, 411a, 417, 431h, 439c, 848, 848a and 848b.

8. That any enactment founded on paragraph 7 of this resolution provide that traction engines for farm purposes and accessories therefor (not including machines and tools for operation by such engines) and complete parts of all the foregoing, and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture of the said engines, accessories or parts be exempt from sales tax.

9. That any enactment founded on paragraph 7 of this resolution provide that farm wagons, including four-wheeled farm wagons equipped to be tractor drawn and farm sleds, and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture thereof be exempt from sales tax.

10. That the present exemption from sales tax for "Photographs, paintings, pastels, drawing and other art work and illustrations of all kinds, whether originals, copies or proofs, and printing plates made to reproduce the same, for use exclusively as non-advertising news pictures or for illustrating non-advertising articles or stories in periodical publications enjoying second-class mailing privileges, the pages of which are regularly bound, wired, stitched or otherwise fastened together;" be changed to read "Typesetting and composition, metal plates, cylinders, matrices, film, art work, designs, photographs, rubber material, plastic material and paper material, when impressed with or displaying or carrying an image for reproduction by printing, made or imported by or sold to a manufacturer or producer for use exclusively in the manufacture or production of printed matter."

11. That feeds for fish, supplements for addition to such feeds, and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture of such feeds or supplements be exempt from sales tax.

12. That the exemption from sales tax for materials for use in the equipment and repair of ships over ten tons net register tonnage be restricted to materials for use in the equipment and repair of ships to be used exclusively for commercial purposes.

13. That the present exemption from sales tax for "Bakers' cakes and pies including biscuits, cookies or other similar articles;" be changed to read "Bakers' cakes and pies including biscuits, cookies and similar articles but not including simulated chocolate bars or candy bars;".

14. That the export duty of three one hundredths of one cent per kilowatt hour on electrical power exported from Canada be repealed.

15. That any enactment founded on paragraphs 1 to 13 of this resolution be deemed to have come into force on June 14, 1963, and any enactment founded on paragraph 14 of this resolution be applicable in respect of electrical power exported after June, 1963.

16. That with respect to the period commencing June 14, 1963 and ending March 31, 1964, the rate of tax payable under Part VI of the said act in respect of any goods for which exemption from tax was withdrawn by any enactment founded on paragraphs 1 and 7 of this resolution be four per cent instead of eight per cent, and that with respect to the period commencing June 14, 1963 and ending December 31, 1964 the rate of tax payable under subsection (1) of section 10 of the Old Age Security Act in respect of any such goods be nil.

17. That the said measure further provide that

(a) where any tax under Part VI of the said act has become payable by any person in respect of any goods for which exemption for tax under that part was withdrawn by any enactment founded on paragraphs 1 and 7 of this resolution, which goods were, not later than December 31, 1964, sold and delivered by that person, or applied by that person to a use resulting in the property in the goods passing from that person, pursuant to a bona fide contract in writing

(i) that provided for the sale of those goods or their application to that use for a fixed amount stated in the contract and that did not permit the adding of the tax to the amount payable to that person under the contract, and

(ii) that was signed by the parties thereto

(A) on or before June 13, 1963, or

(B) after June 13, 1963, if the contract was entered into in accordance with the terms of a tender in writing submitted by that person on or before that day whereby that person undertook to enter into such a contract and in default of so doing to incur or cause to be incurred a pecuniary penalty whether by forfeiture of a security deposit or otherwise,

a refund, or deduction from any of the taxes imposed by the said act, of the tax or such part thereof as could not under the contract be added to the amount payable to that person thereunder may be granted to that person; and

(b) where any goods for which exemption from tax under Part VI of the said act was withdrawn by any enactment founded on paragraphs 1 and 7 of this resolution were, after June 13, 1963 and not later than December 31, 1964, sold and delivered by any person, or applied by any person to a use resulting in the property in the goods passing from that person, pursuant to a bona fide contract in writing.

(i) that provided for the sale of those goods or their application to that use for a fixed amount stated in the contract and that did not permit the adding of any tax under that part that became payable after June 13, 1963 in respect of those goods to the amount payable to that person under the contract, and

(ii) that was signed by the parties thereto

(A) on or before June 13, 1963, or

(B) after June 13, 1963, if the contract was entered into in accordance with the terms of a tender in writing submitted by that person on or before that day whereby that person undertook to enter into such a contract and in default of so doing to incur or cause to be incurred a pecuniary penalty whether by forfeiture of a security deposit or otherwise, an amount equal to the tax or such part thereof as could not under the contract be added to the amount payable to that person thereunder may, where application therefor is made to the Minister of National Revenue by that person in such form as the minister prescribes within two years from the time the goods were delivered by that person or applied by him to that use, and the minister is satisfied that the tax has been paid, be paid by the minister to that person.

The Deputy Chairman: When the committee adjourned last night we were considering paragraph 1 of the resolution.

(Translation):

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, when we adjourned last night, I was saying that the budget introduced by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) has spread confusion, anxiety and suspicion in all classes of our society. Today, I would like to discuss a few articles published in certain papers in order to prove my argument: for instance, in Granby's La voix de l'Est we find in an editorial dated July 6, 1963, that the Minister of Finance was harshly criticized on three points. The first title says, for instance:

Mr. Gordon has to give up 11 per cent tax.

And the text of the article says, among other things:

For that tax imposed on investments and production is prohibitive and harmful, the more so as it will be applied at a time when new investments in industry and business and an increase in production are needed to develop our economy and fight unemployment.

And under this second title:

Violent protests.

[Mr. Pearson.]

We find this and I quote:

Quebec hydro will have to pay an additional $60 million over the next five years. The Quebec government would also see a large increase in its expenditures due to its large investments.

And a third title:

An incompetent minister.

We find this:

This tax is, in fact, a very heavy burden for governments and businessmen. It discourages all investment, even of the most essential nature. Being an obstacle to the expansion plans of the provincial and municipal administrations, it practically leaves no possibility to businessmen to compete with foreign production.

Well, Mr. Chairman, those were the remarks found in the newspapers about the budget submitted by the hon. Minister of Finance, which, according to the minister's own words, was supposed to give some impetus to allow for the progress of Canadian business and industry.

I have here a communication addressed to the Minister of Finance by the Canadian shoe manufacturers association:

Allow us to voice the deep concern of the Canadian shoe industry about the serious effects of your decision to extend the 11 per cent tax to machinery, equipment and industrial supplies.

Faced with keen competition and increased imports of foreign shoes, our Canadian manufacturers have been able to maintain the price of shoes, even though their profits have dwindled.

The new sales tax will considerably increase our costs and the price of shoes will soon reflect the new federal tax.

I could easily go on for quite a while, and quote other newspaper stories, blaming the stand taken by the hon. Minister of Finance during his budget speech, on June 13.

However, I shall be content to quote the headlines of articles by Mr. Laurent Lauzier, in La Presse. On July 6, 1963, his headline was:

A new period of uncertainty.

On the 16th, he wrote:

A rather gloomy prospect.

Again, on the 19th, his headline ran:

The situation is deteriorating.

And so forth. Mr. Chairman, these are comments on a budget which was going to give Canada, or so we were told, a new look. It was going to open up new foreign markets, create new jobs and cure unemployment.

However, having carefully studied the various observations bearing on the tax levied by the hon. Minister of Finance, we are led to believe that far from creating new job opportunities, the measures submitted by the minister will, to the contrary, breed unemployment.

On that matter, I should like to read into the record what the leaders of one of our labour unions, namely the Canada building workers' federation, said in a letter sent to the Minister of Finance. I quote:

> To lay out a nine point plan to fight unemployment and at the same time undermine the foundation of the industry in which large projects can be carried out to fight unemployment would only mean to run around in circle, in a vicious circle. The building workers' federation is conscious of the present situation of the national economy and does not believe that your proposal is likely to improve it.

There, Mr. Chairman, you have people who certainly know what they are talking about because they are involved in the building industry and who can also appreciate the effects of the imposition of the new tax, even if it is relaxed or applied gradually.

And what about the reaction of provincial, municipal and school authorities concerning this tax? At this stage, may I recall the remarks made by the Quebec minister of natural resources when he learned about the imposition of that new tax. He passed a very severe judgment on the proposal, stating that it would lead to increased costs and would hamper progress in the province of Quebec.

I have in my hand an article published in the paper La Voix de l'Est following an interview with the mayor of St. Hyacinthe.

(Text):

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, last evening when the hon. member for Waterloo North was speaking I drew the attention of the Chair to the fact that it was quite outside the rules of the house for a member to read documents and newspaper articles that reflect upon the proceedings of the current session of the house. I did not press the matter at the time because the hon. member for Waterloo North, like myself is a backbencher. But what has happened this afternoon, as happened yesterday afternoon in the case of the hon. member for Ontario, is that speeches are being made based almost entirely upon articles which members have read from various newspapers or on letters that have been directed to certain individuals.

I think it is an understood proposition in the House of Commons that a member is elected to represent every section of the economy within his riding and is certainly to receive representations from each, but he is not here to be the voice of every special interest before the House of Commons.

An hon. Member: What a point of order.

Mr. Byrne: The member himself is to prepare his own speech and to present it to the house. If what I am saying requires proof, Mr. Chairman, I would refer to chapter III, rules of debate, in Beauchesne, fourth edition, citation 149 reads as follows:

> Besides the prohibitions contained in standing order 35 it has been sanctioned by usage both in England and in Canada that a member, while speaking, must not:
>
> (l) read from a printed document or book commenting on any speech made in parliament during the session.

There are other citations relevant to the hon. member's speech which I might read but I will refer only to paragraph (o), which is in these words:

> (o) read from a written, previously prepared speech.

That is also not within the rules. I simply bring that to the hon. member's attention, although I am not making a point of it. Last evening I also read a ruling by Mr. A. E. Ross, acting deputy speaker, made on March 1, 1933 and found on page 802 of Beauchesne, third edition. It is in these words:

> It is out of order to quote in committee articles from newspapers commenting on the proceedings then under consideration.

Since the hon. member is a frontbencher I would expect that he would prepare his speech and try to stay within the rules of the house. So I am going to ask the Chair to insist that he do so.

Mr. Paul: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, the member who just spoke is perhaps the voice crying in the wilderness, because ever since we started consideration of this budget resolution, he has tried constantly to prevent opposition members from commenting on the resolution.

(Text):

Mr. Byrne: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman, that is quite improper.

Mr. Nesbitt: We listened to you. Now you listen to him.

Mr. Byrne: I have not attempted to stop members from doing anything except what is not within the rules of the house. I suggest that the hon. member has no right to reflect upon my intentions because all I am doing is insisting that the rules of the house be followed.

(Translation):

Mr. Paul: Might I suggest to the hon. member that he study the rules of the house? The hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) who has the floor at present has obviously the right to quote the comments which were made on this tax. I can understand that this does not suit my hon. friend who has intervened, but I would suggest that when he rises on a point of order or a question of privilege, he should do so for a good reason, not only to distract the chairman or to interrupt the member who has the floor or because he does not agree with his political opinions.

(Text):

Mr. Weichel: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say to the hon. member that I prepared my own speech and when I was speaking last night I was expressing the opinions not only of thousands of Canadians in my own riding but in all of Canada with regard to the betterment of this country. I was not trying to dictate.

An hon. Member: For the withdrawal of the tax.

Mr. Byrne: I did not suggest that the hon. member for Waterloo North had not prepared his own speech. I do suggest that the hon. member read articles from newspapers and letters addressed to other people in complete contravention of the rules of the house.

Mr. Lambert: You are talking blatant nonsense now.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I recognize that it is necessary at times to support an argument a member is making by reading articles from newspapers if the member wishes to do so. I also recognize the authority cited by the hon. member for Kootenay East. In addition, I have in mind citation 157 in Beauchesne, fourth edition. I am sure the hon. member for Kootenay East will appreciate that this is a very difficult decision for the chairman to make. I would say to the hon. member who is now addressing the committee that it would be pleasing to the Chair if he would refrain from making too many of these quotations, but I understand that he wants to support the argument that he is making.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, you will have noted that some time has been taken by this point of order and I trust that allowance will be made for that in deciding when my time runs out. I should like to say to the hon. member for Kootenay East that before trying to lecture somebody else he had better learn his own lessons. He said a while ago that I was reading my speech. I never prepare a text; all I have is a few notes. If he cannot say anything in this house without reading it, then he had better go outside and learn his lessons before he comes here.

[Mr. Paul.]

I also feel that I am speaking on behalf of somebody, because the mayor of St. Hyacinthe is certainly representing a city of 35,000 people. When I quote members of trade unions or federations or construction associations, they in turn are speaking on behalf of other people. They are all speaking on behalf of someone. If the hon. member for Kootenay East does not know this, then I suggest he sit down and remain silent or learn his lessons before he opens his mouth.

Mr. Byrne: I am quite happy to receive this lecture from the hon. member.

An hon. Member: You deserve it.

Mr. Byrne: However, I want to draw to the attention of the house once more citation 157, despite the fact the chairman overruled my objection, because this still does not give an hon. member licence to read without qualification, and base the major portion of his speech on articles that have been prepared by persons other than the member himself. I believe this is a rule of the house, and if we are going to make honest decisions then we should hear the honest opinions of the members themselves. A member should, in the main, prepare his own speech and not read almost entirely from articles.

Mr. Ricard: You never have to refer to anyone because you have got enough to satisfy your own needs.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, to go on with what I was saying a moment ago, I have here a copy of an item which says that the mayor of St. Hyacinthe called the tax an obstacle and a hindrance to the establishment of industries in the city of St. Hyacinthe.

He was not the only one to make such a remark, as I also have here the opinion of a contractor, Mr. Gaston Maillotte, who heads an important industry in St. Hyacinthe and who stated that, because of that new tax, the building industry will experience a considerable slowing down which will increase unemployment in the months to come.

I also have here a communication from the knitwear union of St. Hyacinthe, which wanted to put in a protest to protect its members. When something is said on behalf of 450 employees and if we take for granted that each one has an average family of three persons, this means a good many tax-paying citizens—I think it represents a great number of people.

I also received a great number of letters of protest against such unfair imposition of industry. For instance, Mr. Benoit Lainesse wrote me to say that the considered enlargement of his industry, which was to give work to at least 10 more employees or so, has necessarily been postponed, because he cannot, at this time, afford the luxury of additional taxation.

All that, Mr. Chairman, to remind you that when presenting his budget, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) stated that he would give a new impetus to our economy and fight unemployment by imposing a 30 per cent tax on foreign purchases of Canadian securities.

Since then, all we have learned from the Minister of Finance is that during the coming year, the best that the Liberal government can do—we must not forget their rash promises during the election campaign—is to foresee a 5 per cent increase in the gross national product. If we consider that in 1962 there was an 8 per cent increase, then we can say to the magicians in front of us that they have much to learn from their predecessors and that they might well use the methods of the Conservative party during its six years in office.

To regain control over our future. The Minister of Finance has levied, as I said a moment ago, a 30 per cent tax which he withdrew under the pressure of big financial interests in Canada. It should be noted, Mr. Chairman, that it was not as a result of representations from the ordinary citizens that the Minister of Finance yielded, but rather following the protests raised by the mighty.

To fight unemployment. Well, in many industries, as mentioned in a telegram I received from the homebuilders association of the district of Montreal, employers have already been forced to lay off some of their employees and they are also afraid that, sooner or later, they might have to let go of others to whom they would have liked to give work during the winter months.

During the 1961 and 1962 sessions, we heard the Liberal team tell us that they had on file the required programs and projects to get this country moving again as never before, once they were brought back in office, and that those measures would reduce unemployment. And yet, Mr. Chairman, if we look at the statistics for the last two months, we find that unemployment has kept on increasing.

And now what about the world of business? I have with me a report from the newspaper La Presse which tells us that commercial bankruptcies during the last two months have risen to 200, the highest figure since 1961.

All this is the consequence of a hasty and ill-conceived policy on the part of people who were supposed to transform our country into a Garden of Eden.

Mr. Chairman, after his first mistake, the minister retreated once more when he decided that the tax would be applied progressively, that is from 4 to 8 per cent and then from 8 to 11 per cent. It still remains that building materials, machinery and all the commodities which are used by our industries will be subject to the 11 per cent tax. This will certainly have disastrous effects and far from helping Canada, it will hinder our economic growth and industry in general.

In addition, the progressive introduction of the tax will lead to abuses on the part of unscrupulous speculators.

How could the government prevent speculation on the eve of the day that the tax will pass from 4 to 8 per cent and later when it is increased from 8 to 11 per cent?

Small income earners will certainly be unjustly charged a tax by unscrupulous businessmen and dealers who care only for profits and have no regard for their fellow men.

It is a well known fact, Mr. Chairman, that during the debate no backbencher on the government side has dared state his opinion on this tax. It is obvious that they do not like the tax but they have to toe the party line. They were told: "Shut up. This tax must be levied as we have decided".

During their conversations between themselves, Mr. Chairman, the backbenchers protested against their party policy, but they do not dare say a word because they are afraid of retaliation.

Once again, the team now in office gives evidence that for this political group, the interest of the party comes before that of the country.

We had proof of this during the vote on nuclear arms. All Quebec members, especially, had pledged their word to their constituents that they would object to nuclear arms. However, when the question was put, they were all in favour of them.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member who has the floor claims that all hon. members who represent the province of Quebec on this side of the house have declared themselves opposed to nuclear arms during the last election campaign. As far as I am concerned, I can state that such a statement is false because I, for one, never took a stand against them.

Mr. Ricard: Here is a new admission, Mr. Chairman. It resembles that made last night by a member of the Social Credit party who said that, after seeing the Liberal party in action, he was very sorry he had had anything to do with overthrowing the Conservative government last year. And it is only after seeing the Liberal team now in charge that one realizes how wisely public affairs were run under the previous administration.

Mr. Chairman, I will end my remarks by saying that the confusion that followed the presentation of the budget, the indecision, the withdrawals and the errors that marked the first 60 days of the present government, have led the people of Canada to realize quickly how well they were administered under the government headed by the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker).

I do not hesitate to say that the people are waiting for an opportunity to put their faith once more in the Conservative party, because they now see what the Liberal party can do in office. It is quite a different thing for the Liberal party to administer when in opposition and when in office. That party does very well in opposition but when the time comes to implement its program, that is another story.

Mr. Chairman, as I say, the Canadian people are anxious to have again a Conservative government to lead the country.

(Text):

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, in speaking about this budget and more particularly paragraph 1 of the excise tax resolution, one can only conclude from the many editorials that have been quoted, and from those that have not been quoted, that it certainly was not a popular way of raising money. In fact the minister admitted this and went on to say that no tax was popular, but this was the best of all evils. In defending it he said he still supported the 11 per cent initially announced, which is now down to 4 per cent but will later rise to 11 per cent.

Perhaps the opposition may take some credit for having it reduced a little for the time being, but this is not enough. The Canadian people want it taken off altogether, and they have strong reasons. We are told many things by the Liberals before and during the election campaign, but since taking power they have found that some things are hard to do.

While this may not deal strictly with the excise tax, the farmers were told this afternoon that they could forget all about the $3 per bushel for the first 300 bushels of their wheat and the $2 per bushel floor price. Instead they were informed that they will get $1.50 initial payment, the same as last year, and that is all. It is another broken promise, and in a sense the budget is a complete broken promise to the Canadian electorate.

I know the hon. member for Kootenay East is a very careful guardian of the house rules and suggests hon. members obey the rules at all times. Therefore I am not going to quote editorials at length, even though there are many which could be read into the record. However there is an interesting one in today's Globe and Mail. I do not intend to read it all but it says:

> The Liberal government rode into power last April 8 on a theme that was summarized by Prime Minister Lester Pearson in the sentence, "I don't think that we should spend a nickel after the election unless it contributes to the expansion of the economy."

That one sentence is sufficient to define the point I am trying to make, that expansion of the economy was what the government wanted. Therefore we must ask ourselves how this first paragraph of the resolution will aid in the expansion of the economy.

During the election campaign we were told that the economy was stagnating, and that, even though it had a growth rate of 8 per cent last year, this was not sufficient. However the budget now forecasts a 5 per cent increase in the gross national product. Is this bringing us out of the stagnation of the economy? Certainly people across the country who are giving some thought to the economy do not think so. Certainly the general public who went out to buy lumber after June 13, when this budget resolution was immediately implemented by lumber dealers, do not think so. In fact they said they would not buy lumber or cement.

What did the Canadian Chamber of Commerce have to say about it? This, Mr. Chairman, is a body which generally issues wise and carefully thought out statements. This appears in the July 5 edition of Time magazine. I will read just one brief sentence:

> The Canadian Chamber of Commerce said the tax would hurt Canadian sales abroad and slow the pace of the economy.

That is it, in one brief sentence. This will hurt and slow the pace of the economy. This is an economy slowed down by a Liberal government which promised the electorate before April 8 that, because the economy was not moving fast enough, they would speed it up. They have done nothing to speed it up. This resolution, in particular, does nothing to speed it up. It is all well and good for the hon. member for Leeds to say, as he did last evening, why should not the building trades be taxed the same as all other trades in Canada. This to me was a rather irresponsible question. It shows what little thought they gave to the employment problem of this country; it shows what little thought they gave to economic conditions facing Canada today, with a greater increase in the labour force occurring every year.

We must be prepared to move in the proper direction so that these people can expect a better position in life in Canada, so they can expect a job in Canada. We must move in the direction of creating those jobs. Where, I ask you, Mr. Chairman, can a person look for work? Where can a person going out into the labour force today be expected to find a job more easily than in the building trades and the building industry across Canada generally? This is where the greatest growth rate in employment has been over the past two years, and it will continue to be, because Canada is a growing nation. We are a growing nation in spite of this budget and in spite of this tax on the building industry of Canada.

We have heard some talk about deficits and what a terrible thing is deficit budgeting. This was said yesterday by members of the Social Credit party to my right. They went on at great length to say what a terrible thing is a deficit budget and they realize this is a deficit budget. They voted for it, and they agreed that the minister should implement new taxes. I am glad they voted for this tax because they will have to return to the electorate of Alberta some day, and perhaps to the electorate of Quebec. Also, the government of the day will have to return to the electorate and explain to them that they wanted Canada to grow, but taxed the very growth they wanted. It is, and will be, a diminishing tax. Coming back to the question of deficits, Mr. Chairman, I would like to quote some figures from the Canada Year Book of 1962, page 1038. The net debt per capita for each of the years 1952 to 1956 was well over $700, ranging all the way from $773 to $701. From 1957 to 1961 it was well under $700, being approximately $650 per capita. This explains whether there was or was not a growth in net debt. Certainly we have had deficit budgets. This was part of a policy to develop Canada; it was aimed at promoting economic growth to the extent of the 8 per cent which we were finally able to achieve. We brought in a devaluated dollar in 1962, which they criticized. What, in a sense, did that devaluated dollar do? I know, as a member from western Canada, that it aided the general agricultural picture in that area. It also aided the manufacturers in eastern and western Canada; in fact, throughout Canada.

Quoting from page 1472 of Hansard, the Minister of National Revenue had this to say in explaining this particular budget resolution. This is to be found almost at the top of the left hand column:

> I should point out that it is a manufacturers' tax—

I think those brief words explain what we are debating today. It is a manufacturers' tax. Where, I ask you, Mr. Chairman, does Canada hope to achieve the required growth in employment today? We must industrialize; this has been said from one end of the country to another. We must increase employment in our secondary industry and in our manufacturing industry. I ask the committee, in the light of many statements made in this regard, how can the government justify imposing a manufacturers' tax on the manufacturing industry of this budding, young country—

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Certainly. I hope my hon. friend from Renfrew South has learned something about the tobacco industry since the last question he put to me.

Mr. Greene: I do not smoke, Mr. Chairman. But my question is not about the tobacco industry. I would like to ask the hon. member whether or not his party advocates deficit financing in each year and increasing deficit financing in each year.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): This is a rather simple question. Certainly we think a deficit budget is sometimes needed. I am prepared to support it and I am certain this party is prepared to support it. If Canada needs development, if Canada needs more jobs, this is the time and place for deficit budgeting. But we have heard a great deal of talk about indecision, the stalemate the country is in and how things had come to a complete standstill. What about the last three months? Every paper you picked up in the last three months said the country was in a state of flux because industry did not know what to do about the 11 per cent tax or the 30 per cent tax. I look at today's Globe and Mail. The headline is, "And prices go up and down". This article says:

> The bond market moved up and down, like a yo-yo—

How long has it been doing this? It has been doing it ever since June 13. The bond markets, the stock markets generally have been sluggish and moving up and down like a yo-yo. This article continues:

> —in response to statements first by treasury secretary Dillon in Washington and then by finance minister Gordon in Ottawa.

They are in a state of great concern as to where we are going, and certainly when one looks at this resolution he can realize why they are in such a state of great concern, because I say again that the government's own definition of it is that it is a manufacturers' tax. I want the people of Canada to know exactly what it is classified as; it is classified as a manufacturers' tax. This is what the Minister of National Revenue, when explaining it, pointed out very clearly as is reported at page 1472 of Hansard. It is a manufacturers' tax on manufacturing; I cannot repeat that too often, because I think it explains what this is. This is why I take the strongest exception to it, because it is in secondary and manufacturing industry that I have always thought and hoped Canada would grow to become perhaps an industrial nation in the years ahead.

We have heard a lot of talk about increased spending and increased deficits. There has been some indecision as to whether this tax should apply to hospitals or old folks' homes. It has finally been taken off schools and universities. Why not take it off churches and municipal buildings. Why not take it off all non-profit buildings?

An hon. Member: And libraries.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Yes, and libraries. The hon. member for Leeds, since my speech and the one yesterday by the hon. member for London, has changed his mind and now agrees with me and says, why not take it off everything.

Mr. Matheson: On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman, I by no means have changed my mind. I think it is a basic proposition that essentially one strives to tax equitably and equally; and in a competitive system, when you pick out one sector and give it special treatment there must be a compelling reason for so doing. My intervention last night was addressed to this precise point.

[Mr. Horner (Acadia).]

Mr. Chairman: Order. I am just wondering what is the question of privilege upon which the hon. member is rising.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member twice, in the course of this debate, referred to my having changed my mind with respect to a question that I raised last night. I think it is proper and fitting, in the circumstances, to remind the committee exactly what my interjection was. I do not take it back—

The Chairman: Order. I understand the point that is being made by the hon. member for Leeds. Perhaps there is no point of privilege there. I am wondering whether just saying that an hon. member has changed his mind justifies raising a question of privilege. My suggestion would be that the hon. member for Acadia be allowed to continue his remarks.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I want to assure the hon. member for Leeds that he should not feel self-conscious about changing his mind, because in recent days many hon. members on that side of the house have been changing their minds, particularly since June 13. Perhaps we on this side are encouraged by that, because we hope to have many hon. members on that side change their minds, and particularly the Minister of Finance, in connection with resolution No. 1.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Chairman, my point of privilege was that I have not changed my mind, and I do not intend to change my mind on this matter. I am against continuing and growing deficits.

The Chairman: I am sure the hon. member for Leeds, who knows the rules of the house so well, realizes that if he wants to make the point he is now making under the guise of a question of privilege, he will have his opportunity in committee when this speech is concluded.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I know of the hon. member's continuing interest in the Liberal party and his secondary interest in Canada, and perhaps he will take part in the debate and explain the statement made last night which appears on page 2556 of Hansard.

When this resolution was first implemented a great hue and cry rose across the country. Time magazine of last week reported that the minister received, on the average, 350 protests a day regarding this resolution. They were protests from all walks of life. This is what Time magazine says, and I will paraphrase it because the hon. member for Kootenay East does not like to hear people reading from magazines. The hon. member can read it if he likes. The minister can also deny it if he wants to. I accept what I read and I accept this statement. Some 350 letters and telegrams are sent to the Minister of Finance each day, mainly on this particular resolution.

Mr. Gordon: May I ask the hon. member a question. I presume they include the telegrams which were heartily in favour of this particular way of raising revenue?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): This is a very interesting interjection from the minister. He seems to be capable of making interjections which deepen himself in the well in which he has sunk since June 13. I would ask the minister right now to tell us how many are in favour, or to produce the copies of the ones he has received in favour of this particular resolution. Let the house and the country decide whether or not, on his particular Gallup poll, this resolution has found favour. As I said in my opening remarks, a great hue and cry has been raised across the country against this particular tax. The resolution ended by saying that all agricultural machinery would be exempt, and all farm buildings or buildings on anyone's property would have to be taxed.

Then on July 8 the minister reduced the tax to 4 per cent, and said, "Catch as catch can". He told the people they can collect from the retailers the other 7 per cent they had paid. He said that if they had bought a house he was sure that the builder would be a good fellow and return the $500 to $1,500 which this 7 per cent tax would represent. But he did not offer, nor did the Department of National Revenue, to see to it that this tax would be returned.

Mr. Garland: Would the hon. member permit a question? Would he mind repeating what he said about the effect of the 11 per cent tax?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): If I recall my remarks I said that the 11 per cent would amount to between $500 and $1,500 on the average house purchased since June 13, and if the minister would like to dispute that I will be glad to listen to him.

Mr. Garland: I think the hon. member realizes he is in error there.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): No, I had not realized that. I was informed of that by my constituents. If a person bought a house for $7,000, then 11 per cent would be well over $700. That is it in a nut shell. This has happened to constituents of mine who produced the figures and facts. They have been charged $700 on a $7,000 house. I told them they would get that back and they asked me how. I said I would look into it and try and find the proper way. But I am sorry to say that I have not been able to ascertain for certain how this particular constituent of mine will get back in excess of $700 tax paid, owing to the indecision and the retreating change of mind of the Minister of Finance.

We talked of indecision in the April 8 election campaign. This country has never seen 90 days of more indecision and mumbling and more state of influx of the economy. As the Leader of the Opposition stated, there was a statement made by the United States government some time ago about a pat on the head at Hyannis Port, and a kick to the Canadian economy. We have received more kicks to the economy in the last 90 days than we have ever received at any time in past history.

Mr. Greene: What about the "state of influx"?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The constituency of Renfrew South is in a state of influx. We have heard talk about home construction in this resolution, yet two or three days before the budget the Minister of Labour stated that $500 would be given to new home construction started in the winter time. Everybody thought: "Oh boy, this is a real handout". It had nothing to do, of course, with the statement of the leader of the government in today's Globe and Mail, in which he referred to no more give-aways. He summarized the theme of the April 8 election in one sentence, and I want to repeat it because it is a good one to repeat often to those now embarked upon give-aways of one sort or another, to undo the harm they did with the other hand, one might say. He said:

> I do not think we should spend a nickel after the election unless it contributes to the expansion of the economy.

In what way does $500 toward home construction in the wintertime offset this tax of something like $700 on a home, whether it is built in the winter or the summer? In what way does $500 on a home built in the wintertime compensate for construction in the wintertime? I have received many telegrams opposing this gift of $500 toward home construction. What does it do? It does not offset this tax. According to the Minister of Labour's own admission in this house it does not do that. What it does is to take $500 off the value of every home already built, and it taxes those same home owners so as to pay for the $500 the government is willing to give new home builders in the wintertime.

This business of the right hand giving one thing and the left hand taking a little more back, Mr. Chairman, certainly reminds an old farmer like myself of driving two balky horses and getting nowhere—one trying to go ahead and one back. I am sure many hon. members, particularly the Minister of Agriculture, have witnessed or endured the task of trying to get somewhere with a team of horses like that. I suggest to the Liberal party that they should get together to get rid of the balky horses, because one cannot have an economy which will grow and provide all the jobs needed by the people who are newly entering the labour force unless everyone is pulling together and every measure introduced is designed to secure a better growth rate in Canada—a rate of growth even faster than the 8 per cent we had in 1962. It may be that the dismal efforts in these resolutions account for the minister not forecasting an increase of more than 5 per cent during the present year, but I hope Canadians will have enough faith in their country to invest in it and enable our gross national product to grow fast enough to absorb those who are added to our labour force every day.

The minister has reduced this tax from 11 per cent to 4 per cent.

Mr. Woolliams: No. He has not reduced it. He has amortized it.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The minister has tried to clear up certain of these definitions. I know that many items of interest to agriculture are taxed, as things now stand, but I hope the definitions will be further clarified and that the taxes can be reduced in the months ahead. Agricultural buildings and all buildings put up by non-profit organizations should be exempt. Church buildings as well as schools and universities should be exempt. Certainly, we should not tax the generous gifts and donations made to these worthy institutions. We should at least move in the direction of allowing such things as these to grow and flourish. There is a place in Canada for churches, religions and libraries. We should be big enough to allow them to be free of the particular building tax which is now proposed.

The minister may sit and smile about his conceited ideas as to how Canada should grow. I have not written any book on how it should grow but I have had some definite ideas. We see in Time magazine that even the Prime Minister at one time questioned his great economic adviser, the Minister of Finance. He asked him: "Have you lost confidence in yourself?" The minister replied: "No, I have taken so many knocks during my 57 years that I can take one more". Well, the hon. gentleman has taken a good many knocks since June 13. I do not want to be the final straw or anything like it, but I do wish to say that the committee should give serious consideration to measures such as this which will hinder or halt the rate of economic growth in Canada, which is so vital to a young country such as ours.

Once again, I would ask this government to correlate its actions and its thoughts. Some time ago we heard a lot of talk about unemployment. Hon. members opposite said it was the primary concern of our country. Well, unemployment seems to have been replaced in these days by balance of payments problems. As I say, I hope the government will correlate its thinking and its actions so that our rate of economic growth is at least as high as it was last year. That is what I look forward to. But I do not think it will come about, and that is why I am strongly opposed to these resolutions.

An hon. Member: We have gathered that.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Hon. members over there can laugh and smile. They will have to face the public sooner or later. That is the great thing about politics. Sooner or later they will have to face the music.

An hon. Member: Not worse than listening to you.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): They can make all sorts of snide remarks, but I believe the public is fully aware of what this tax means. It is a manufacturers' tax which is unwanted and unwarrantable in Canada today.

Mr. Matheson: I do not wish to take up the time of the committee for too long but in view of the amiable remarks of the hon. member for Acadia I feel I should intervene briefly.

I think it is clear that the purpose of this budget is twofold. The first intention is to stimulate the economy, but in order to do this we have to meet the obligations of the country. We, as a party, have to do this whether we want to do it or not. Looking at the white paper, I find, as set down on page 68, that we are now paying 14 per cent by way of public debt charges. Following the interesting series of speeches which were read into the record last night in connection with this matter, I put a question on the order paper. I have not yet had an answer to this question, but the question relates to federal, provincial and municipal debt in Canada and the servicing charges in connection therewith. In addition, it seeks information about private debt in this country.

I am old fashioned enough to think that some day we shall have to pay for these continuing deficits. It would be delightful if we could always be in the position in the business cycle where we could apply

Keynesian deficit financing, but there are many who think that the snap has gone out of the elastic—

An hon. Member: Why did you make all those promises, then.

Mr. Matheson: I am speaking only for myself and on behalf of my constituents. I earnestly believe we will have to face these debts some time and I am surprised that in the old Conservative party not one voice has been raised since this parliament was called to express concern about whether we shall ever balance our budget.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Matheson: I think I can say without reservation that not one member over there has supported any one of these taxes.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Leeds has the floor and he should not be interrupted.

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member declared that no member on this side has mentioned the question of balancing the budget. I would ask the hon. member to read my speech with reference to the setting up of a department of industry.

Mr. Matheson: I believe I can say that no member of the Conservative party has to date, either in committee or in the house, given active support to any of the taxes proposed in this budget.

None of us likes these taxes. There is not a Liberal member in the house who has not had on his desk letters, telegrams and notes of telephone calls from constituents disturbed by these budget suggestions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Matheson: We know that, and we know there has been the best-organized lobby in connection with this matter that Canada has ever witnessed on a budget. I just want to say to the hon. member for Port Arthur that my reaction last week end, and the week end before that, was that among a lot of common, ordinary folk in Canada there is a great deal of respect and admiration for this man Gordon.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Matheson: We had quite a sensation in the house when it was first suggested by the two reverend gentlemen over on the extreme left that perhaps there was something dishonest going on, some kind of leak. That was quickly picked up by the leader of the official opposition. The suggestion was that perhaps there was something indecent about the fact that people came in to give advice; but that has very quickly gone by the boards.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I think that the hon. member for Leeds is straying from the subject. He is reviving a subject that has been dealt with before, and that is not within the purview of this debate.

Mr. Matheson: The suggestion of impropriety has gone by the boards. Now the suggestion is that the minister is a jackass or does not know where to tax. I am very sorry that any additional taxes had to be imposed.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): So are we.

Mr. Matheson: May I ask hon. members, what is discreditable about placing the equipment and supplies and construction materials industries in precisely the same position as other industries? I wish we could have avoided this tax. It would have helped me very much with some of my friends and constituents. But if a tax has to be imposed, does it not make sense that at least we should deal equitably with all sections of industry? Surely the Conservative party in their economic philosophy must entertain some kind of support for the proposition of maintaining competitive enterprise. Competitive enterprise surely means the interplay of the market forces, supply and demand. Any time we intervene by way of a tax law and make changes to stimulate one sector of the economy as against another, or one area of a sector of the economy as against others, we create some kind of distortion. Surely at times we do that because, as the hon. member for Acadia said, there are areas where such stimulus does in fact do some economic good.

Perhaps it is in the secondary manufacturing sector where there is a large element of labour in relation to production. In these areas, of course, we are deeply concerned about employment. But surely as a basic proposition it makes sense that in our economy we should strive to deal equitably and fairly with all areas. If additional tax had to be imposed, does it not seem just and reasonable that at least the tax gaps should be filled?

I have not heard yet in any of the contributions of Conservative members any suggestion as to where, alternatively, they would have liked the additional tax to be imposed. Is it their proposition that it should have been in the form of additional income tax? Should it be by way of still higher sales tax elsewhere? Should it be in the form of higher tariffs?

Mr. Grafftey: You are the government.

Mr. Matheson: We are the government, but I am outside the establishment. I am just a private member of parliament. But I am deeply concerned about the fact that in less than six years we have accumulated deficits in excess of $2.9 billion. It seems to me that at some time we are going to have to pay for these deficits, just as I think that at some time we are going to have to pay for the cost of fighting world war II.

We have heard speeches by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, the financial critic for the New Democratic party. He spoke very cleverly on this matter. I do not subscribe to his economic theories but essentially they are that we are living in a neo-Keynesian world where we do not have to consider balancing budgets any more. These responsibilities do not enter into his philosophy, which is apparently that we can live in a continual state of deficit financing. Perhaps he does not go quite that far, but the implication is there; and I certainly recall that the leader of the New Democratic party said something very similar. He suggested that respected economic opinion today suggests that we do not need to worry about balancing our accounts any more. I happen to be old-fashioned enough to think we do and that if we actually spend more than we bring in by way of revenue essentially we are in trouble.

The armed forces are an illustration of this. I am not going to digress but I simply wish to give the facts. In the last six years we have actually failed to equip our army, navy and air forces properly. They have tended to fall down and down in the ratio of equipment to manpower. This is what is happening in our economy with regard to replacing our capital, and worse still even to the extent of not meeting our debt obligations.

I do not subscribe to everything Social Credit members say, but they are right in emphasizing the added burden to Canadians of debt charges. These debt charges are growing sharply. Considering our small population, this is a burden, and I am with the Minister of Finance in any form of discipline that needs to be imposed on the Canadian economy to make competitive enterprise more competitive and to allow us to move into the world economy with our heads held high, as I think we must do.

I am not going to carry on further. I do not like this tax. I do not think there is one member on our side who does; but before these deliberations are finished I should like to hear some suggestions from the Conservatives, an old party which I always thought believed in the principle of conserving—"conserving", meaning to save, to keep, to protect, to hold, to husband. I do not see much sign of that in their economic philosophy, and I should like to see some evidence of it. I should like to see some of their members suggest where and how we are going to conserve Canada for the future along the lines that I think have been indicated by the Minister of Finance.

(Translation):

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Chairman, I would not like the discussion of the budget resolutions to be concluded without making a few remarks, for, once again, it has been proved that taxes are never popular, so that the 11 per cent tax on building materials, which the Minister of Finance announced in his budget speech on June 13 last, raised such a flood of protest on all sides, that the minister had to make us swallow it in stages.

As far as I am concerned, I received letters and telegrams of protest from all parts of the country, and more particularly from my riding. Anyway, I find myself that the home building industry is the most affected by the new tax, because it directly affects those who were planning to build a home or, as the case may be, to make some renovations.

As that new tax will slow down any new building activity as well as repair work in existing property, construction workers will inevitably find it more difficult to find employment in that industry.

Those who, directly or indirectly, are responsible for the marketing of building materials, as well as those who normally look after their transportation, will also be hit by the tax.

Mr. Chairman, for a number of years we have been facing this serious problem of unemployment, which, instead of diminishing, is getting worse, more particularly in the province of Quebec. As a matter of fact, the last figures which were submitted to us indicate that unemployment has increased in an alarming fashion during the month of June 1963, in comparison to June 1962.

We believe that instead of interfering with the normal progress of the building industry, the government should use appropriate steps, such as fiscal incentives or other means to promote it.

Why discourage those who intended to become home owners in the near future? And why forget the old adage: activity in the building trade is a sign of prosperity?

A great deal was made of the $500 bonus this government intends to grant those who will build during the four less favourable months of the year. Now, Mr. Chairman, I myself am a construction worker, and I know that it is much more expensive to build during the winter months. As a matter of fact, it is necessary to heat the water and the aggregate for the foundations of new buildings. It is necessary also to surround the house with a temporary shelter to keep out the cold. All this causes additional costs in housing construction, not to mention the fact that the workers do not work in comfort during the winter months. Consequently, this $500 bonus is greatly reduced because of the increased costs of construction.

Mr. Chairman, I also note that this new 11 per cent tax on building materials does more to cancel that bonus than any other tax.

Mr. Chairman, every family is entitled to a decent shelter, and it has been established that he who owns a small plot of land is more eager to defend his country against subversive doctrines, because he owns a share in his country. We need accommodation everywhere. Our cities, villages and rural areas are full of slums that we must plan to replace as soon as possible, because, after all, human beings should be better sheltered than animals.

The area I represent will be seriously affected by this tax, particularly on account of the tornado which hit the region at the end of June with indescribable force, specially in a part of the provincial riding of Abitibi West, spreading death and desolation.

In fact, over 350 farmers in 15 localities suffered losses. Barns, sheds and houses were torn down, and those buildings must be reconstructed.

Last July 3, I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) whether he considered exempting from the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials those who had suffered from that tornado. At that time, he answered that he would have a statement to make on Monday, July 8. After listening to his statement and reading it over, I found in it nothing very encouraging, except for a temporary alleviation on the 11 per cent tax.

We must realize that without assistance, even if they are full of good will, most of them will not be able to recover from the losses suffered because of that tornado.

Mr. Chairman, as can be seen on page 1950 of Hansard, the minister stated:

Since the budget was brought down on June 13, the government has received representations and suggestions for changes from members of all parties in this house, and from many people outside.

That means, Mr. Chairman, that there was no lack of suggestions to the Minister of Finance to amend his budget. And we think that it would have been wise for him to consider some of those suggestions which, if carried out, would have allowed him to look forward to larger revenues.

The taxes which we have to pay, and which we cannot get used to, are, after all, levied to get the necessary revenue to cover the various departments' expenses.

The minister of finance of a country holds the key to the administration, and the Minister of Finance of Canada has that key, which is the Bank of Canada. He has the power to use that key, the Bank of Canada, to create an economic climate reflecting the true wealth of our country and, at the same time, to put that wealth to the service of all Canadians. In that way, he would save headaches to other ministers who, I believe, would like to do more but are limited by their meagre budget; they establish their programs according to the amount the Department of National Revenue allows them, while they should have the possibility of establishing programs according to the needs of the country.

The budget has been meeting with such an opposition that the Minister of Finance cannot indefinitely continue to put up with our sick monetary system. He will have to adopt the monetary theory of the Social Credit party, for it is impossible to go on governing the country with taxes and loans as it is done now.

Since confederation we have had 72 budgets showing a deficit. Seventy two out of 96. Those budgets left with us a gigantic debt of $24,182 million, as can be seen on page 124 of the public accounts for 1962-63. That debt will force us to pay this year the amount of $882 million in interest only. That is enough to make us think.

The Minister of Finance should use the Bank of Canada to finance the government's expenses rather than following a policy of taxes and loans. We would thus have a balanced economic policy for all Canadians.

(Text):

Mr. Nesbitt: This afternoon and during the various stages of the budget debate, we have heard quite a number of economic theories. Economic theories, of course, can be varied depending, I suppose, upon whether one follows the London school of economics, the Harvard school, the Chicago school or some other school.

Mr. Fisher: And the Leeds school.

Mr. Nesbitt: Yes, as the hon. member for Port Arthur mentions, the Leeds school. A few moments ago the hon. member for Leeds suggested that no one on this side of the house had made any suggestion as to the alternative method the Minister of Finance might have used to raise the necessary funds to cover the government's increased expenses. Well, in a few moments I will be pleased to offer some suggestions to which some consideration might be given. In addition to that, I was rather surprised by the request for suggestions by the hon. member for Leeds because I recall that a few months ago his party was the one that was supposed to have all the answers. This does not seem to have proven to be the case.

This question of deficit financing was mentioned by the hon. member for Leeds. I do not believe this is exactly the place to get into an argument on the economic theories of public finance. However, there did seem to me to be some confusion in the hon. member's mind as to the difference between external debt of the country and internal debt. However, be that as it may, a great deal has been said about this 11 per cent sales tax on building materials. I feel that to date practically everything that could be said has been said, and I do not wish to take up the time of the committee by reiterating what has already been said.

My only comment is that I was interested to hear the Minister of Finance say this afternoon that he had received letters of commendation on this tax. I find that interesting, and I say I am quite sure that none of them came from the part of the country I happen to represent. It is quite true that this sales tax of 11 per cent on building materials has been altered to some degree by the minister and is now being imposed on the instalment plan. I suppose one might refer to that as paralysis of industry by instalments rather than in one fell swoop.

As I said, many comments have been made on this subject and, apart from the fact that I agree thoroughly with the criticism of this tax, that is all I wish to say in that regard.

As I recall it, the Minister of Finance said in one of his speeches that this tax now being imposed on building materials and production machinery was being imposed on these items because they had been exempted to date, and for that reason it was only fair that they be taxed. This was the implication I gathered from the minister's remarks. On the face of it, if one has to raise additional revenue, it sounds very reasonable; but it is not as reasonable as it sounds.

The building and secondary manufacturing industries have not paid this tax over the years, and as a result have become adjusted to not paying it in relation to the rest of the economy. To use the ordinary term, they are what might be called vested interests and have become adjusted to our taxation system as it existed until now, and of course to our various customs tariffs.

The economy could be likened to a pile of bricks. If you pull out two or three of the important and largest bricks you disturb the whole pile and all the others have to readjust themselves into a new heap. If you start shifting around one or two of the major props to the economy this has effects and ramifications all through the economy, and by changing the tax structure with respect to these industries you unsettle the whole economy.

Secondary industry, which is the type we must depend on for further development of the economy, has had a bit of a boost during the last year or two, largely as a result of the revalued dollar, both with respect to imports and the developing export business. However I feel I must ask the minister for some clarification of what secondary industry will pay in the form of this new taxation. There is already a great deal of confusion in secondary industry, and if the hon. member for Kootenay East does not object I should like to quote from two letters with respect to the tax.

The letters are from two very large secondary industries, in one case from the general manager and in the other from the owner. One is a machine tool industry which employs close to 1,000 people, and I might say in passing that all industry is not located in Montreal or Toronto, as we are sometimes led to believe in this house. The other is a large manufacturer of automobile parts and aluminum tubes.

The first letter is from Standard Tube and T.I. Limited in Woodstock, and it says in part:

> Our company is constantly in competition with United States on fabricated tubular products, particularly in the automotive industry. On many occasions, equipment and tooling involved for Canadian production is costly and the imposition of 11 per cent sales tax may well cause us to lose potential business. In effect, imported parts are now given a substantial cost advantage over Canadian made parts.
>
> In conjunction with other automotive parts manufacturers, we have recently entered into certain reciprocity contracts involving export of materials to the United States. Here again, the 11 per cent sales tax now represents an extremely serious obstacle to the furtherance of such badly needed export business.
>
> Already we have been obliged to review our capital outlay budget. Of necessity, certain items must either be cancelled or delayed as the additional tax involved on production machinery causes us to exceed original and approved estimates.

The other letter is from Mr. Harold Wilson, who is general manager, and I believe principal owner, of the Morrow Screw and Nut Company Limited, which is a very large machine tool company. He says:

I feel the situation as regards the 11 per cent sales tax is going to be not only intolerable but very disastrous to our industry. As I think I said before, any increase in our costs can only be reflected in loss of the new export market which we have begun to develop and even greater losses in our own domestic market. In connection with our parent organization, the Ingersoll Machine and Tool Company, it would appear that we may be faced with the loss of major portions of our steering gear business as the automobile manufacturers compare our prices against laid down prices from their own American plants, and naturally an increase in our price is going to swing the balance towards importation.

I have investigated carefully the clause which seems to re-establish the exemption on materials expended in production. Although at first this was thought to represent some improvement, on more careful study this would appear to be not too great an improvement. As we read the paragraph the exemption is only applied to materials, which I gather are raw materials, which are expended in manufacturing operations. It would appear that this exemption does not apply to other expendable items such as perishable tools. This item of perishable tools alone is one of our most severe manufacturing expenses. The application of the tax to this alone will add a very severe burden to our cost structure. I feel that it is necessary for industry to be supplied with a very careful directive advising how this exemption is or is not applied and to what. The word "material" just is not good enough to cover all the ramifications of this question.

There seems very little doubt that the imposition of this tax on production materials and machinery used in manufacturing will have a very serious effect on our balance of payments.

In regard to this question of our balance of payments there is one way in which matters could be assisted, and I refer to the question of travel in the wintertime to the West Indies. I think increased subsidies on air fare would help this, and it would certainly help our balance of payments if the commercial banks in Canada were advised to recommend the purchase of travellers cheques in Canadian funds instead of American dollars, to people visiting countries other than the United States. This is something which could be done in every branch of every bank.

I think everybody will agree with the minister when he said he felt it was necessary to try to raise additional funds to help balance the budget. No one would seriously disagree with that objective, but it is a question of how he might have gone about it. As I recall it, he outlined in his budget speech certain alternatives to which he had given some consideration. One that I recall was an across the board increase in income tax, an increase generally in sales tax, and the like. These various suggestions were cast aside by the minister and his advisers as being unsuitable. I would agree with the minister's decision on that. I think increased taxes in these fields would have done more harm than good and, as I say, I have no quarrel with that decision. But I would have thought the minister and his assistants might have explored a little more thoroughly some other source of revenue or perhaps a combination of certain other sources of revenue.

I would say at this point, Mr. Chairman, that the suggestions I should like to place before the minister for his consideration are my own personal suggestions. There may be others who will disagree with me, but for what they are worth I would like to suggest them. In the first place, I would have thought an increased tax on alcohol, or liquor, might have been a very good source of revenue. There is a fairly inelastic demand for liquor, and although people might not like it very much, I do not think many would seriously object if an extra 25 cents or 50 cents tax per bottle were levied.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, does the hon. gentleman mean that an extra 50 cents should be added to the price of a bottle of beer?

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I would hope the Secretary of State would know better than that, and I am sure he does. I was referring to alcohol—

Mr. Pickersgill: I am asking a question.

Mr. Nesbitt: —or spirits. I said, a bottle of liquor. If the Secretary of State does not know the difference between a bottle of liquor and a bottle of beer, I would suggest that he inquire of some of his colleagues. To make it very clear, I am referring to a 25 cents or 50 cents levy on a bottle of whisky, gin, rum or other commodities generally known as spirits. I am told that a tax imposed at the rate of 25 cents a bottle would bring in aproximately $25 million a year. If this figure is not correct, I would be very glad to be corrected. If the increase were 50 cents a bottle, it might come close to $40 million or $50 million a year, due to, perhaps, some decrease in consumption.

I do not think an increased excise tax on tobacco would produce very much revenue, in view of the advertising campaign of the Minister of National Health and Welfare with regard to smoking. Also, inasmuch as there is a reasonably elastic demand for cigarettes, I do not think an increased tax would bring much additional revenue to the treasury.

Mr. Gordon: That would be discrimination.

Mr. Nesbitt: I suggested a tax on spirits. I would think—

Mr. Roxburgh: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Nesbitt: Certainly.

Mr. Roxburgh: Is the hon. member in favour of increasing the tax on tobacco?

Mr. Nesbitt: If the hon. member had been listening, he would have heard very well what I said. I have just pointed out that no benefit would be derived from placing an increased tax on tobacco; the treasury would get no more money, and it would be very inadvisable. I hope I have made myself clear this time. I was not, like the hon. member opposite, trying to cut off loans to farmers under the Farm Credit Corporation. Mr. Chairman, I should like to return to the suggestion I placed before the minister for bringing more money to the treasury. I think increased income taxes at some levels might have been considered by the minister, in combination with the other taxes I have been suggesting.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member be specific and give us figures?

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I am not in the least interested in hearing the comments of the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand. As the hon. member for Leeds was asking for suggestions, I am merely trying to accommodate him and pass on a few. Some hon. members opposite do not wish to hear these suggestions; nevertheless, I am going to continue. There is another method which I think might commend itself to the minister. It is perhaps a different or unusual source of tax revenue. This would be, to evolve a method —and I am sure the minister and his associates could devise some means of doing this —to try and shake loose some of the large funds held by insurance companies, for the purchase of common stocks. As I recall it, insurance companies can invest 15 per cent in common stocks. In the United States they are allowed to invest 25 per cent, but it is 15 per cent in Canada. The information I have is that only 4 per cent of these investments are at the present time in common stocks; the rest are in bonds, mortgages and first mortgage bonds which, compared with good common stocks, have a relatively low rate of return.

If means could be devised—and there are always good tax ways of doing these things —to encourage the loosening up of these funds for investment in common stocks, this would have a threefold effect. First of all, insurance companies have hundreds and hundreds of millions of dollars available for investment, and if this suggestion were put into effect it would undoubtedly increase the extent of Canadian ownership in Canadian industry. This would be a very good thing in the long run, of course, for our balance of payments problem, in particular with respect to exporting dividends abroad. Second, the increased returns to the companies holding these stocks would provide a higher rate of profit and the Minister of National Revenue would be able to collect more corporation tax. Third, another effect would be that with an increased ownership by these companies of Canadian common stocks, the dividends would be paid into Canadian companies and would be taxable, instead of going abroad and being subject only to the 15 per cent tax.

There are one or two questions I would like to put to the Minister of Finance, and perhaps the Minister of National Revenue, for clarification. Many people are uncertain in this regard, and I have not been able to obtain any clarification on just what goods used in manufacturing and production are to be taxed. Does this apply to such things as sulphuric acid, hydrochloric acid and various solvents used in industry? In some cases these commodities can be used several times. Are these things to be taxed? These are questions manufacturers in secondary industry would like to have answered. My second question is with regard to such items as saws, drills and various pieces of machine tools that are used up in the manufacture of other tools. There is still a great deal of confusion in this regard and perhaps before the resolutions are passed we will obtain some clarification from one of the ministers I have mentioned. I think this would bring back a great deal of confidence on the part of these industries. One of the problems is not so much that they have to pay a tax, because if they have to pay it, they have to pay it; but some of these companies would like to know what they have to pay the tax on. This doubt has created a great deal of delay in planning in secondary industry, which will be very detrimental to our economy. If the Minister of Finance or the Minister of National Revenue could clarify these matters, it would be very helpful indeed.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, in the few short moments left at my disposal I would like to say a few words on the budget resolutions. There are times in this house when I feel very much alone, in view of the fact that I am the only manufacturer of printed material, as far as I am aware, in the House of Commons. Hon. members can well imagine the volume of telegrams and representations that I receive from representatives of the graphic arts industry. There are times, too, when I envy the lawyers—and we seem to have a preponderance of them in the house —because they seem to know just where to put the commas and the semicolons in these resolutions. But as a manufacturer I think I have some knowledge of the implications of the budget resolutions because they concern me very much in the very small business of which I am proud to be president.

When the minister originally introduced his budget he left unanswered a lot of questions in the minds of hon. members, and that goes for the backbenchers on this side of the house as well as members on opposition benches. But subsequently at various stages I think he has cleared up many of these unanswered questions. For instance, the question is asked why, instead of increasing taxes on production machinery he did not increase the income tax. To that question he answered that in his opinion it would have required too drastic an increase to get the required result. He also checked into the possibility of raising the excise tax where applicable to 12 or 13 per cent, but came to the conclusion that again this would hurt the average Canadian. He also investigated the possibility of raising corporation taxes, but found that this obvious source of revenue had been taxed to its capacity. If I am not mistaken he mentioned cigarettes and alcohol, but came to the conclusion that there again further taxation would only result in diminishing returns. The idea of taxing insurance as advocated by the hon. member for Oxford would no doubt result in an increase in insurance premiums which the average Canadian would be called upon to share. I think the danger into which we are falling at the moment, and one I suppose which the Minister of Finance cannot do anything about, is that we are discussing a budget resolution by resolution and forgetting the effects of the budget, good and bad, in the over-all picture.

I should like to deviate from my notes, because time is short, to mention one or two specific things which have occurred in my riding in the last few days. I was called Saturday to discuss with a manufacturer who was contemplating cancelling an order for $150,000 worth of production machinery. This was because of the 4 per cent tax. On the surface I could hardly blame him because he had contemplated buying this machinery before the increase in the budget and was faced with the expense of finding an extra $6,000. When I spoke to his chartered accountant and the board of directors and investigated the accelerated depreciation which was now at the disposal of this manufacturer, he turned to the vice president in charge of purchasing and said: "We have a fixed contract for a portion of our equipment which will not be subject to the 4 per cent. I want you to phone up Monday and have this fixed contract broken because I want to pay my 4 per cent so that I can take advantage of accelerated depreciation on all the equipment I am going to buy".

Mr. Starr: Would the hon. member permit a question? How did the person he was talking about know that the area in which his plant was to be located would be a designated area by the government for the purpose of this depreciation?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, I have read the bill perhaps a little closer than the hon. frontbencher on the other side has. In my opinion the accelerated depreciation has nothing to do with depreciated areas, the areas of high unemployment, which benefit from tax relief provisions, as I understand it. As a matter of fact, I think the Minister of Finance pointed out last night that this particular manufacturer I am talking about is not even obligated to take the accelerated depreciation immediately, if it is not in his best interests.

Another manufacturer is anticipating a sizeable order, and if he is successful in his tender this going concern is investigating the possibility of moving a small company to Amherst, Nova Scotia, so as to take advantage of an area which is considered one of aggravated unemployment, and thus obtain the tax holiday. That is another example of the way the budget is helping small industry. I have personally—and I think this is the duty of every hon. member, once he goes home and forgets party politics—found jobs in the last few months for at least 75 people in my riding who are over 45. I received the help of the unemployment insurance commission, and found jobs for people whose unemployment insurance benefits will have run out by the time the winter months set in. As we know, small companies are being encouraged by the grant of a subsidy of, I think, up to $75 a month to hire people over 45. In most cases I have found that those companies which depend on climatic conditions, such as snow removal companies, garbage companies, fuel oil companies, and dry cleaning companies, which are affected detrimentally in the summer and normally find their peak season in the winter, and require extra help, have in previous years customarily taken youngsters who should be at school because they can get them for a small sum, and make them do small clerical jobs around the office, answer the telephone or fill fuel oil orders. By making this personal canvass in my area I have found jobs for a lot of people, mostly in these small fuel oil firms; and while this may not contribute an awful lot to our unemployment problem, it is very important that somebody helps people out of work. This is one way in which we can help.

In summing up, Mr. Chairman, while it is the prerogative of the house to scrutinize minutely every stage of the budget, I think in all fairness to the Minister of Finance we should look at the budget as a whole, objectively, take advantage of the provisions for accelerated depreciation and the tax holiday, and accept the fact that basically this is a good budget for Canada.

Mr. Fane: Mr. Chairman, I have half a minute left to discuss the things I intend to discuss, so would the committee permit me to call it six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: It being six o'clock, shall I rise, report progress, and request leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I presume the house leader will tell us that we will go on with the present resolution tomorrow. Supposing we finish it, has he anything else to suggest?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, sir, I have. We will go on with these resolutions and if they are completed I intend to ask the unanimous consent of the house to proceed immediately with the bills. I hope that might be forthcoming, but I am not asking for that now. We would also take the bill respecting the surcharges and the economic council, and I would think that that would probably occupy us most of the day. If perchance we have a little time in the last hour of the day we could perhaps occupy it with the transport estimates.

As for Friday, I should like to confer with hon. gentlemen opposite before I try to forecast any business for that day.

It being two minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, July 25, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1963-64

A message from His Excellency the Deputy Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates B for the financial year ending March 31, 1964, was presented by Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

(Translation):

PRIVILEGE

MR. RONDEAU—REFERENCE TO REMARKS BY MEMBER FOR ARGENTEUIL-DEUX-MONTAGNES

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, on July 17 last, while I was away from this house on account of illness, the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Drouin) took advantage of that fact to behave childishly and indulge in silly remarks about me, besides insulting me.

As can be seen on page 2292 of Hansard, besides holding me responsible for a misprint in the Canadian Parliamentary Guide, he even accused me of trying to give myself out as a Liberal.

The insult is too great and my dignity as Social Credit member for Shefford riding demands a reparation.

As regards the misprint in the Parliamentary Guide, I should point out to the hon. member that as early as May 17, I sent a letter to Mr. Pierre G. Normandin, to make him aware of the misprint that had slipped into the French version of my biography.

I have here an acknowledgment of that letter from Mr. Normandin, who gives me the assurance that the error will be rectified in the guide supplement. I have that supplement in my hand and it can be seen on page 21 that the editor carried out my request and rectified the awkward error which had crept in.

The hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes lacked judgment when he thought that I could be responsible for an error committed by a printer. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I ask him to withdraw his remarks.

(Text):

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NUCLEAR TEST BAN—ANNOUNCEMENT OF INITIALLING OF AGREEMENT

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all hon. members of the house will welcome the agreement which was initialled today in Moscow for the cessation of nuclear tests in the atmosphere, in outer space and under water. This achievement, when it comes into force after signature, will be of the greatest importance not only in removing a major source of harmful radiation but because of the prospect it holds out for further improvement in east-west relations. The participants in the Moscow negotiations are deserving of our deep gratitude and our warm congratulations.

Despite the optimism which has justifiably been generated by the agreement concluded in Moscow, it would be unrealistic to ignore the fact that it is no more than a first step in the direction of the much more basic accord which will be needed to ensure world peace and security. We have still to remove the difficulties which stand in the way of a more comprehensive test ban, including underground tests. It is imperative, moreover, to ensure that any such agreement will command world wide support. Indeed, it will require universal acceptance if it is to be truly effective.

Moreover, even in agreeing to a comprehensive test ban binding on all states, we shall have dealt only with one small segment of the problems involved in working out a program of general disarmament and effective methods for the peaceful settlement of disputes. To accomplish this complex task will require prolonged and patient effort. We must not allow the present atmosphere of success to mislead us into thinking that it will be easily or quickly achieved.

At the same time we should in no way underestimate the importance of this unprecedented first step. It not only provides the momentum for further advances, but demonstrates that they are feasible and can be achieved through the realization of a common interest and by a concerted and determined effort. Significant changes in the thinking of the Soviet leaders, of which there are signs, could hold out still greater prospects for a far reaching east-west settlement.

A balanced appraisal of the present international situation should not for a moment suggest that all barriers to a genuine détente are down. It would be naïve and even dangerous to have any such illusions. But what has happened does make plain that no one can afford to ignore any opportunity to press forward with negotiations aimed at a broader international understanding. So far as this government is concerned, and indeed I think it would be true of any Canadian government, we shall use to the utmost whatever influence and power we can bring to bear in assisting the speediest possible realization of this objective.

I understand that the present treaty will be open to all states, and it is to be hoped that the original signatories will make every effort to encourage the widest possible participation. I wish to assure the house that for its part the Canadian government is ready now to become a party to the agreement.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there will be general agreement in this house with the announcement made by the Prime Minister. My one regret on this occasion is that the former member on this side of the house who contributed so much in his courageous efforts on behalf of disarmament, Hon. Howard Green, is not here to speak on behalf of the party.

The Prime Minister has pointed out that this is a great forward step. It does not, of course, include underground testing, but even in that regard there are arguments pro and con as to whether the inclusion of underground testing is entirely necessary to assure international and national security. This is the beginning, I hope, of wider negotiations. Certainly the events of the last few weeks have brought about, among all of us in the western world, a hope that we are entering a new era. The signing of this test ban agreement, limited as it is, is a significant step which may presage a new spirit of negotiation.

It has been interesting to follow the statements of Chairman Khrushchev in recent days. About ten days ago he stated that he would permit foreign inspectors to take up stations at Soviet air fields, railway stations, highways and ports to prevent secret concentrations of troops for surprise attack. This offer and his further request for consideration being given to a European non-aggression pact are matters that deserve to be carefully examined. One of the major steps forward yet to be taken toward international disarmament is the control of outer space; agreement among the nations that this infinite area shall not be used for military purposes.

The Prime Minister said in the course of his statement that the present treaty will be open to all states, and that it is to be hoped there will be the widest possible participation. With that view I entirely concur. I think Canada, because of the closeness of its relationship with France, should be able to do something to bring about an agreement to include France within the purview of this treaty. Certainly the Secretary of State for External Affairs is one who I feel could do a great deal in this connection, to bring about agreement on the part of France through discussions held with General de Gaulle.

Then I think there is a further matter that deserves consideration at this time. That is the question of communist China, a country of 700 million people. By pretending to ignore its existence we do not in fact ignore the tremendous threat that becomes more apparent day by day. Only in the last few days relations between the U.S.S.R. and communist China have indicated a strong division as between those two countries in their thinking. Chairman Khrushchev contends that there is no need to bring about war in order to advance communism; communist China takes the view that revolutionary war is the sole basis for expanding communism. This presents dangerous possibilities. Within a year or two communist China will have nuclear weapons, it is expected.

I think a major challenge is presented to the nations of the western world today. Canada, the United States and other nations will have to take another look at our policy regarding communist China. We will have to review our thinking. We will have to consider the problem, and it is a tremendous one, in the perspective of changing events, and particularly in view of this agreement; because unless it includes communist China—and I do not want to mention France in the same paragraph—and we are able to secure the adherence of communist China, the threat of nuclear war will hang over us to a degree that we can only anticipate with foreboding, horror and overwhelming fear.

I think that the conclusion of this agreement, as the Prime Minister has said, represents what can be achieved by those who are prepared courageously to follow a course of action. Whatever the fears, whatever the setbacks, the word "never" is no longer in the vocabulary of our relations as between east and west; that has been shown by the signing of this test ban. I hope, and I know the house does, that all of us will be able to make our contribution to assure the removal of the threat, which is overshadowing all mankind, of the thermonuclear destruction not only of our country and the free world but of mankind itself.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all hon. members in this house join with the Prime Minister in expressing their satisfaction, and the renewed hope for world peace which have been raised in their minds as the result of the announcement which we have just heard and the news which has been coming to us in the last couple of days of the test ban negotiations which have been carried on in Moscow. I am sure that all Canadians, peace loving as we are, look forward with much expectation to this significant step toward bringing about a realization of what we hope for, not only for our country but also for the whole world.

I note with satisfaction, however, that the Prime Minister has been careful to caution us about any degree of overoptimism. Certainly no successful test ban arrangements and no successful disarmament treaty can mean anything unless all aspects are taken care of. While we agree that this is a tremendous step forward and that there is obviously general agreement about the arrangements for a ban on nuclear testing in the three areas which have been mentioned, the fact remains that modern instrumentation has made possible the detection of any such type of testing in any part of the world from any other part of the world. What is being covered now is nothing more nor less than what can be covered by other means as far as the opposing elements of this test ban agreement are concerned.

Therefore, while we do observe this hopeful note, it is imperative that we heed these words of caution, particularly in view of the fact that any agreement of this type must be multilateral; it cannot be unilateral in any of its aspects. I think we all hope within ourselves that this first step might be the beginning of a greater degree of agreement amongst the nations of the world, particularly between the eastern and western elements, toward the objectives of world peace and total disarmament.

I think it is well for us to remember that the problem involved is not just one of nuclear armaments, nor is it just one of general disarmament. The cold war is rapidly taking on new aspects. We must take note of the fact that the Chinese brand of communism and the Soviet brand of communism are at odds with each other. The differences run very deep, perhaps deeper than we realize. Yet there is no evidence that the objective of world communism, whether it is sought through the militaristic attitude of China or through the ideas of co-existence which, apparently, we find in the Soviet union, does not differ in any way. The basic objective in both cases remains the destruction of capitalism and the free way of life which we enjoy in our country, as well as those individual rights which we regard as sacred.

Another aspect of this question which is important is this, and, we are not concerned here with military strength alone. Bound up with the military aspect of this situation are the foreign policies of all the various governments concerned, as well as their economic policies. I am concerned that the economic side of these relationships is rapidly becoming even more important than the military aspect. It has been said that the world is dividing itself into three basic blocs, the communistic states of the east, the free democratic countries of the west and the emerging nations. The attention of each of these groups will be increasingly related to the success of the efforts which are being made to raise economic standards and to improve the standard of living of the individuals composing them. Success in this direction will be the basic element involved if we are to meet the threat posed by communism to our free way of life.

We must, moreover, take careful note that we cannot separate our trade policies, our foreign policies and our defence policies. They must go together. Fragmentation of the over-all picture would merely add to the weakness we have exhibited many times in the past. Thus, while we are pleased with the progress which has been made, we must at all times be cautious to keep the basic issues in correct perspective.

We are grateful to the Prime Minister for bringing this statement to the attention of the house, and we completely agree that Canada should take immediate action to be one of the signatory powers. And if the time should come when there is a break in the wall which tends to divide the people of the world today, we should be there to play our part and do whatever is our responsibility to do.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the initialling of the test ban agreement by the representatives of the governments of the United States, the United Kingdom and the Soviet union represents an important milestone in man's march toward peace on earth and the rule of law. Now that the ice jam has been broken it may be possible to move toward greater achievements in establishing peace throughout the world. Undoubtedly the logical next step would be to work for nuclear disarmament among the nuclear powers.

However, before this is possible the proposal of Premier Khrushchev will have to be considered, namely a non-aggression pact between the NATO nations and the Warsaw pact powers. I hope that Canada as a member of NATO will exercise all its influence toward that end. I think we have reached the stage where we can no longer continue to posture in rigid, fixed positions. I hope that Canada will use its influence to see that a non-aggression pact between NATO and the Warsaw pact countries is not held up merely in order to preserve the myth that East Germany does not exist.

I was glad to hear the Prime Minister say that Canada would subscribe to this agreement. I hope, however, that we will do much more. At the present time the warm winds of understanding and tolerance are beginning to blow across the cold war. This is the time for nations to take the initiative and to remove the clouds of suspicion that have covered the eyes of the nations. Canada could do much by taking the initiative in this regard.

I think Canada ought to reconsider its position with reference to the recognition of red China and the admission of red China into the United Nations provided, of course, she is prepared to become a law abiding member of the world community. As I have said repeatedly in the house, I think this is an excellent opportunity for the Canadian government to say that in the interests of stopping the spread of nuclear arms in the world, Canada is prepared to reconsider its position with reference to the acquisition of nuclear arms. I am sure that if in the course of the next few days or weeks the Prime Minister was prepared to make an announcement that Canada was reconsidering its position in the light of the improved international situation and was prepared as its contribution to forgo the acquisition of nuclear arms, this would do much toward promoting the kind of understanding and good will which are basically essential to any further progress on the road to peace.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

THE MINISTRY—BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have a statement to make on government organization and one to make on house business. Perhaps I may be permitted to combine them. The first one is very short. I wish to announce that The Department of Industry Act was proclaimed yesterday, that Hon. C. M. Drury, Minister of Defence Production, was sworn in today as Minister of Industry and that David A. Golden is to be deputy minister.

Ministerial responsibility for the department of public printing and stationery was transferred today from the Secretary of State to the Minister of Industry in accordance with a recommendation of the Glassco commission report and, I may add, with the approval of the Secretary of State.

Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition asked me about the general plan of the government for the remainder of this portion of the session, and also asked when the government expected that parliament would reconvene. I undertook to make a statement today, and I now propose to do so. The house leader, the Secretary of State, has been in regular consultation with representatives of the parties opposite in arranging the business of the house and has, I understand, given them a general indication of what the government hopes to accomplish before we adjourn for what is left of the summer. I believe I can summarize this very briefly.

Today we are going on with the one remaining budget resolution, to be followed by the excise tax bill. The government also wishes to complete consideration of the bill respecting the surcharge order and the committee stage and third reading of the bill respecting the economic council. As for the municipal development and loan board bill and the resolution respecting the Canada pension plan, these, as hon. members know, are to be the subject of consultation with the premiers of the provinces tomorrow and Saturday. I believe it will be a courtesy to the provinces to reserve any statement regarding the government's plans with respect to these two matters until Monday, when a statement can be made in the light of this conference.

The government will also ask for interim supply for the months of August and September. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, we plan to bring in a supplementary estimate which will be largely concerned with the maintenance of employment, and which it would be the hope of the government that the committee of supply would adopt so that this item could be included in the interim supply bill. The government has not yet completed its consideration of the Norris report, and it is possible that we may be in a position next week to ask the house to consider a measure arising out of the recommendations of that report.

I know of no other business that the government feels it should be necessary to have completed before the adjournment, except for two items which we would like the house to be able to deal with in this part of the session. Subject to further consultation between the house leader and hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to procedure, the government is ready to take the responsibility tomorrow of proposing certain changes in the remuneration and pensions of members of parliament, and we would like at the same time to deal with certain amendments to the Judges Act which, in the opinion of the government, should be made before the adjournment if possible.

It would be the hope of the government that with the co-operation of all hon. members we might complete the business of this part of the session by the middle or latter part of next week, and in that case it might be possible to adjourn until Monday, September 30.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Prime Minister for his outline. While I am in entire agreement with the date fixed for adjournment, if the program to which he has referred is to receive the proper attention that parliament must give to it then it would seem that, as has happened so often in the past, prime ministers are often too optimistic in setting dates for the termination of sessions.

In so far as the house business is concerned, I feel that any action to be taken should be in accordance with the usual method and should follow the rules. There was a suggestion that tomorrow, provided there was consent, certain matters could be proceeded with. Now that we are in the middle of the budget discussion I believe we should continue with that and that the government in the regular course should place on the order paper whatever motion it desires to place thereon. Certainly there will be no great delay.

I am sure we would be subject to a great deal of criticism if the house were to decide by agreement that the rules are to be set aside in respect of a matter particularly affecting the house. People across the country would say "You delay other matters because of the necessity of compliance with the rules, but on matters affecting each and every member of the house and the Senate you have no qualms in asking for consent consideration immediately". In my view a motion could be made returnable on Monday in the regular course of events, in which case that argument could not be used because the regular processes of parliament would have been followed.

I suggest to the Prime Minister in all sincerity that the course suggested by him could only lead to people believing that when we deal with matters affecting ourselves the rules are brushed aside. One extra day's consideration through a motion being properly placed before the house will meet any such general criticism.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I wonder if I might be permitted to say a word. Of course in view of what the Leader of the Opposition has said there would be no thought whatever of proceeding tomorrow with these matters. However, I should remind the right hon. gentleman and the house that because of the conference it will not be possible to proceed with budget matters tomorrow and they will have to be set over unless, as I fervently hope, they are completed today, and as I have good reason to believe they will be.

Under the circumstances perhaps I should give hon. members as much warning as possible that the government's wish would be, subject to anything other hon. members might wish, to take the supplementary estimate which was tabled today. If there were agreement to take that we would like to have the whole amount passed, since it is entirely for employment. Then we could include it in interim supply. If there were an understanding that we should do that, then we would go on with the estimates of the Department of Transport in the hope that we might complete that department tomorrow. Perhaps I should add, sir, that if there is any disposition on the part of representatives of parties opposite to suggest some other alternative course that might make greater progress, I would be happy to consider it.

There is one further caveat I am obliged to enter. My hon. friend the President of the Privy Council also has to be at the premiers' meeting, otherwise we would like to take the economic council measure.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We realize the need for the Prime Minister, the president of the council and other ministers to be present. In our desire to co-operate we will do nothing that would prejudice them during their absence.

ESTABLISHMENT OF ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is it still the government's intention to set up a commission to look into the redistribution of federal constituencies? If so, does the Prime Minister intend to bring down legislation in that regard soon after the house reconvenes at the end of September?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is indeed our intention to do that. We had hoped it might have been possible in the first part of the session. Certainly we will be bringing down legislation for that purpose in the resumed session in the autumn.

PROTECTIVE STAFF—REQUEST FOR SUMMER WEIGHT UNIFORMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, my question might not be of great national significance, but I am sure it will be locally important. I should like to direct my question to the Secretary of State. I am wondering if the minister could take up with the proper officials the possibility of securing light weight uniforms for the protective staffs of both houses of this parliament.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I am sure Your Honour, although you cannot be questioned directly, will nevertheless give the matter consideration, especially bearing in mind the temperature today.

(Translation):

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

LEOPOLD DION, INVESTIGATION INTO PAROLE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Justice a question of which I have unfortunately been unable to give him notice.

Yesterday, it was stated in reply to a question of mine, that the case of Mr. Leopold Dion is being considered by a coroner in the course of an investigation. Now, according to the newspaper L'Evenement, of Quebec city, and the Gazette of this morning, Mr. Dion is held criminally responsible.

I should like to ask the minister whether he intends to carry out an investigation within the national parole board to reassure the families concerned which live in various ridings, namely Quebec-Montmorency, Quebec East, Portneuf and all the counties of the Lake St. John district.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I feel that the question just asked by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency is of the utmost importance, especially after what happened during the coroner's investigation.

When my parliamentary secretary (Mr. Macdonald) rose to reply to the question yesterday, he said that the government was not considering the holding of an investigation within the national parole board.

However, I feel that we must take into consideration the fact that the prisoner has made a confession. The board did make a thorough examination of the Dion case but in such circumstances, when a prisoner is mentally unstable, it is always dangerous to free him on parole. In this instance, a minute examination was made before the prisoner was set free. However, as I just said, since a confession has been made and in view of the circumstances surrounding this horrible crime, which I consider as extremely serious, I am asking a lawyer and a psychiatrist to examine the file immediately and to advise me as to whether too great a risk was taken in this case, in their opinion.

(Text):

FINANCE

INQUIRIES RESPECTING U.S. MODIFICATION OF TAX IMPOSED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question further to the statement he made to the house earlier this week. Will he continue to press for full exemption from the proposed United States tax upon the purchases of Canadian securities by United States residents, and will he advise the house whether any progress has been made in that direction to date?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The hon. gentleman may have noted that the secretary of the treasury has expressed the hope to congress that such full exemption will be achieved. I think this is some progress.

Mr. Martineau: How does the Prime Minister reconcile the answer he has just given with the statement—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. member please put his question? He is entering into an argument.

Mr. Martineau: I should like the Prime Minister to inform the house whether he has any comment to make upon the statement made by the under secretary of the treasury of the United States, Mr. Robert V. Roosa, to the effect he has made it quite clear there would be no further exemptions?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, I have no comment to make on that.

[Later:]

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Has the minister received a copy of the President's revised draft legislation to the United States congress relating to the securities tax?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not received it myself.

Mr. Aiken: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statement by Mr. Dillon, secretary of the United States treasury, that Japan could apply for an exemption in the same manner as Canada, can the minister now verify the fact that the exemptions do not apply solely to Canada?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I am not quite clear whether or not this is a hypothetical question.

Mr. Aiken: No.

Mr. Gordon: The hon. member says no, but it is based on whether or not there is legislation before congress. To my knowledge the legislation is not yet before congress.

[Later:]

Mr. Martineau: Can the Minister of Finance inform the house whether, in the course of the discussion on finance which took place in Washington during the week end, the possibility of unpegging the Canadian dollar was raised?

Mr. Gordon: I shall be delighted to answer that question, but I should like to place the answer in the proper context.

In the week end discussions in Washington there was a full and frank discussion between Canadian and United States representatives of all aspects of the payments position of the two countries. This naturally included a discussion of the capital movements between the two countries and of the various factors affecting them. As members of the house are aware, one of these factors—by no means the only one, but an important one—is the relative level of interest rates in the two countries.

The Canadian representatives explained, as I had informed the house on the evening of June 13, that the monetary policy of the government and, of course, of the Bank of Canada was directed to achieving the kind of credit conditions which would favour economic expansion in Canada while keeping the needs of the balance of payments situation in mind. They pointed out that there had been a progressive reduction for some time in the level of interest rates in Canada and in the spread between interest rates in Canada and the United States, and said that in the present economic circumstances of large unemployment and substantial unutilized capacity it would continue to be the aim of Canadian policy to encourage credit conditions which were at once stimulating to the Canadian economy and compatible with exchange stability and balance in our international accounts.

The United States representatives were naturally interested primarily in the effects of the policies followed on their short term liabilities to Canada in the form of Canada's holdings of United States dollars which together with our gold holdings, constitute our exchange reserves. The Canadian representatives pointed out that during the latter part of 1962 it had been necessary to encourage a volume of borrowing abroad sufficient not only to cover our current account but also build up our depleted exchange reserves, and that this had led temporarily to abnormally large borrowings in the United States; that once the reserves had been rebuilt to more satisfactory levels, the policy had been, in the prevailing circumstances, to achieve a capital inflow no more than sufficient to cover the reduced current account deficit, and the success of this policy was reflected in the fact that during the first half of 1963 Canada's exchange reserves had remained very stable if one excludes the receipt in January, 1963, of the second half of the $250 million United States loan arranged in September, 1962. The Canadian representatives were accordingly authorized to provide the assurance, which is reflected in the communiqué, that it was not the desire or intention of Canada to take advantage of unlimited exemption from the proposed United States tax to increase her foreign exchange reserves through the proceeds of borrowing in the United States. This has, in any case, not been recent Canadian policy.

Exemption from the United States tax will undoubtedly enable Canada to maintain a lower level of interest rates than would have been possible if the tax were applied to us, and the general level of interest rates in Canada will be lower than it would have to be if we were aiming at increasing our exchange reserves by encouraging a volume of borrowing which, when taken in conjunction with the net of all other capital movements, was more than sufficient to cover our current account deficit. But members will, I am sure, realize that no one can forecast with certainty what the precise level of interest rates in Canada will be, since this depends on a variety of factors which cannot now be foreseen, including the trend of interest rates in the United States and elsewhere. Consequently it would not have been possible for any undertaking to have been given regarding the future of interest rates in Canada.

Now, to answer the hon. member's question about the exchange rate, there has been some question as to whether the possibility of Canada abandoning the fixed rate of the Canadian dollar was raised in the Washington discussions. The answer is in the negative. I have stated in the house that it is the policy of the government to maintain and defend the fixed exchange rate for the Canadian dollar at its present level, and this policy was not called into question by United States representatives in the Washington discussions. The last sentence of the communique issued after the talks records that active discussions will continue to strengthen the close economic relations between the two countries and, at the same time, facilitate measures for making the maximum practicable contributions to economic expansion in both countries and the strength and stability of both currencies.

SUGGESTED CANADIAN TAX ON FOREIGN INVESTMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the announced intention of President Kennedy to impose a 15 per cent tax on new United States investments abroad, will the minister take under consideration the possibility of imposing a similar new tax on Canadian investments abroad in order to encourage Canadian investment in Canada?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member may have misunderstood the purpose of President Kennedy's proposed tax.

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF INTEREST CHARGES ON SMALL LOANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Solicitor General concerning the business of the house and ask the minister whether he would attempt to speed up the proposal, I think it will have to be called, of a committee that was going to consider all the bills dealing with interest charges on small loans and related matters, because of the allegation made before the Ontario committee the day before yesterday and yesterday that there were some exorbitant interest rates being charged; and further, that the chartered banks are circumventing the statutory limit of 6 per cent interest on loans, which is of course a federal act.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, that resolution will be brought forward as soon as more pressing business in the house has been disposed of.

Mr. Olson: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the minister whether he thinks the evidence would justify him initiating an investigation to ascertain whether this statutory limit of 6 per cent has been violated.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be appropriate for a minister of this government to comment on revelations, shocking though they may be, made before a committee of another legislative body.

AGRICULTURE

REPORTED RESIGNATION OF ACTING ASSISTANT DEPUTY MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister received a letter of resignation from the acting assistant deputy minister, Dr. Kristjansson?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Not to my knowledge.

[Mr. Mather.]

Mr. Hamilton: May I ask a supplementary question. If the minister has not received the letter himself, personally, will he give assurance to the house that the commitments made in solemn meeting between the federal government and the ten provincial governments that nothing in ARDA would contravene the principles of the resources for tomorrow conference will be maintained?

Mr. Hays: In reply to the hon. member, I may say I will take note of what he has said and we will keep it in mind.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): May I ask a supplementary question. I should like to place the matter more directly before the minister. Is it his intention to change or alter drastically the ARDA program? If so, does he intend to introduce legislation this session to bring such changes into effect?

Mr. Hays: If there are any changes they will be a matter of government policy and will be introduced to the house at the proper time.

Mr. Fisher: As a further supplementary question, in view of that answer I would like first to direct the minister's attention to the kind of stories that caused the question of the former minister of agriculture, and ask if the minister can confirm that a number of resignations are in hand from people in the ARDA program because of their feeling that the government was intending to blot that program?

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, I know of no intention on the part of anyone to resign. Everyone seems very, very happy.

Mr. Hamilton: In view of the importance of this matter, I wonder if the minister would give me a commitment today that if there is a letter of resignation he will make it available to the house?

LABOUR CONDITIONS

MEETING WITH LABOUR CONGRESS OFFICERS—CANADIAN SHIP AT CHICAGO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Would the minister care to advise the house of his recent meeting with officials of the Canadian Labour Congress, and whether there are any new developments regarding the release of the Canadian ship at Chicago?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I had discussions with the executive officers of the Canadian Labour

Congress. These discussions were confidential and it is not possible for me to advise the house as to their nature.

I have nothing further to report today in connection with the Howard L. Shaw.

THREATENED STRIKE ON U.S. RAILROADS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. I did not send him notice of the question in view of the fact that I asked this question yesterday and the day before and was told that it would be taken as notice. Is the government considering action regarding the possible rail strike in the United States, and considering the position on our own railroads in the United States at the moment?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the question is hypothetical, but I would point out that some of the railways in the United States are owned by Canadian National Railways, and I assume that the hon. member is referring to this. While the question as worded by him deals with action to be taken in the event of a strike, I would point out that if a strike does take place it will affect certain railroad operations in Canada. But beyond that, the question of a strike in the United States affecting railways being operated in the United States by United States employees is a matter over which we do not have jurisdiction.

GRAIN

SASKATCHEWAN—REPORTED INABILITY TO DELIVER QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Today I received the following wire from Fairmount, Saskatchewan:

Point congested. Approximately 30,000 bushels to be delivered on present 12 bushel quota. This point on restricted list—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. I regret having to interrupt the hon. member but he should not read telegrams of that nature. He should state his question, and this is quite clearly set forth in the rules.

Mr. Cantelon: Since order No. 1,000 applies to this point among others, and some farmers are unable to deliver their quotas because the elevators are plugged, would the minister instruct the wheat board to review its policy on order No. 1,000, and remove it where deliveries are impossible because all elevators are filled?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have been in touch with the wheat board from time to time in recent days about the delivery situation, and they have assured me they are doing everything possible to maintain equity between producers consistent with their overriding responsibility to put grain into position to meet market demands. I shall bring this complaint to the board's attention.

PRIVILEGE

MR. ROXBURGH—REFERENCE TO REMARK IN DEBATE BY MEMBER FOR OXFORD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack Roxburgh (Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege to raise with regard to a statement made by the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Nesbitt), reported at page 2598 of yesterday's Hansard as follows:

I was not, like the hon. member opposite, trying to cut off loans to farmers under the Farm Credit Corporation.

That is an untrue statement. This is what I said in my speech regarding the tobacco situation, as reported at page 1416 of Hansard for June 20:

I think one of the most important factors is to stop further expansion of tobacco growing. I should like to repeat that tobacco farmers in Ontario produce 99.9 per cent of the tobacco Canada uses. If all these facts that the medical profession claim are true, and I am not denying them, then why should this or any other government—

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order—

Mr. Roxburgh:

—allow the Farm Credit Corporation—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Roxburgh:

—and other corporations to lend money to people to grow more tobacco.

That was to advance it to the farmers. In my first speech I spoke of the Farm Credit Corporation and—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Roxburgh: —all they have to do is read it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand the hon. member has finished with his point of privilege, if there was one.

[Later:]

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, a point of privilege was raised a few moments ago by the hon. member for Norfolk. The hon. member was explaining some misunderstanding on a previous occasion and was reading a paragraph from his own remarks of a prior date. Unfortunately, Your Honour, he did not get an opportunity to finish the paragraph, and in fairness to the hon. member I was wondering whether on his behalf I might complete the sentence that was not read.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Nesbitt: Your Honour—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member for Norfolk must take his own responsibility.

Mr. Nesbitt: I quite agree with that, Your Honour, but the hon. member for Norfolk made the statement in this house that a remark I made was not true; then he proceeded to read part of what he had said and did not get a chance to read the cogent sentence, and I would like to put that on the record. The sentence reads:

—why should this or any other government allow the Farm Credit Corporation and other corporations to lend money to people to grow more tobacco?

It is just that simple, Your Honour; that is the end of the quotation.

Mr. Roxburgh: Mr. Speaker—

An hon. Member: It is not funny, is it?

Mr. Roxburgh: No, not when it is not true. On a question of personal privilege, Mr. Speaker, this is exactly what the hon. member for Oxford said—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I suggest to both hon. members that they keep their family squabbles out of this house.

[Later:]

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, to inform the house that the family squabble on tobacco between the hon. member for Norfolk and the hon. member for Oxford has been settled with the result that there will be a modest increase in the funds of the Canadian Cancer Society.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORRIS REPORT—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour. In view of the urgency which is apparent in the findings of Mr. Justice Norris, is it not the intention of the government to bring before the house, prior to the closing of this part of the session, some measures to meet the terrible situation inherent in the findings of that commission?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as the Prime Minister indicated in his earlier statement, the government presently has the Norris report under consideration and, as the Prime Minister also stated, the consideration of that report is not yet completed. When the consideration is completed it will be possible for the government to reach decisions, and it will only be possible at that time to determine whether any proposed measures can be brought to the house within the time limit suggested.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As a supplementary question, in view of the continued disorder that prevails on the great lakes, is it not possible to accelerate the deliberations of this committee? Because, if we are going to wait until fall, very serious results may follow inaction now.

Mr. MacEachen: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the right hon. gentleman that this matter has been treated, both by the interdepartmental committee and by the government, as a very urgent matter, and I am sure it would be the wish of the government to bring forward any measures as quickly as possible. I shall add that the government is fully aware of the implications of any delays in this matter.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—INQUIRY AS TO ACQUISITION BY CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the statement made by the right hon. Prime Minister in reference to test banning, I wish to ask whether nuclear weapons have been acquired by Canada for use in Canada or outside the country?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INQUIRY AS TO RENEGOTIATION OF TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the general interest in the question, could the minister inform the house when further meetings between representatives of Canada and the United States will take place with respect to the renegotiation—I am using the Prime Minister's words—of the Columbia river treaty?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): If my hon. friend will allow me I shall tell him something of interest. We have just concluded another satisfactory meeting with the representatives of the government of British Columbia and, as a result, we hope to be meeting with our opposite numbers in the negotiations with the United States, perhaps about the middle of next week.

Mr. Herridge: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does this mean that Premier Bennett has his five mills and his money?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It means, Mr. Speaker, that the negotiations that have been carried on in a co-operative way between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia are bearing results.

(Translation):

TRADE AND COMMERCE

PUBLICATIONS OF TRAVEL BUREAU IN BOTH LANGUAGES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, as I wish to promote bilingualism in Canada, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Could he tell the house whether it is his intention to have published in French in the near future the magazine entitled Circle Tour from Trans-Canada Highway, recently put out by the tourist bureau of the Canadian government?

(Text):

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. gentleman will allow me to take this question as notice.

(Translation):

BROADCASTING

REQUEST FOR SETTING UP OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State, who is the minister responsible for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Does the government intend to establish a special committee to examine every aspect of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation activities, or to set up a royal commission?

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam addressed a similar question to the Prime Minister some time ago and the Prime Minister's reply, if I remember it correctly, was that the matter was under consideration. I would hope that before the government felt it necessary to bring in any motions to set up any more special committees, we might make a little progress with those that are now on the order paper.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. That would not apply, however, to the setting up of a royal commission. Has the government given some thought to the possibility of setting up a royal commission on broadcasting?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I did make a statement about that before the house met, at a meeting in Toronto at a time when I invited three gentlemen to look into this matter. I think it would be premature to attempt to reach any conclusion on that subject until I had some indication from those gentlemen as to answers to the questions I put to them, because I think the answers to those questions would undoubtedly have some influence on the terms of reference of any royal commission that might be considered.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Secretary of State how soon he expects to get a report from the three gentlemen in question.

Mr. Pickersgill: I have not been in communication with them very recently, but I would hope it would be some time in September.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

INQUIRY AS TO CRASH OF PLANE IN SARDINIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. Could the minister tell us what was the type of jet aircraft which was unfortunately lost, together with the life of the pilot, at Decimomannu in Sardinia, and if the cause of this accident has been determined.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I understand it was a CF-104. The cause of the tragic accident has not yet been determined. An investigation has been commenced.

Mr. Harkness: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What was the F-104 doing at Decimomannu?

Mr. Hellyer: It was engaged in practice operations, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Harkness: I wonder whether I might ask, what kind of practice operations?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Hellyer: Profile bombing practice operations.

INDUSTRY

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER FOR AREA DEVELOPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry. Since this question will give the minister an opportunity to make his maiden speech in his new role, perhaps I might be permitted to offer him my warm congratulations. As a matter of fact my congratulations are double barrelled; I congratulate him on being the Minister of Industry and I also congratulate him on having responsibility for that most important function so far as parliament is concerned, namely the printing bureau.

My question to the minister is this. Could he tell the house how soon he expects to be in a position to recommend the appointment of a commissioner for area development, so that this phase of the work of his department might get under way?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, a search is already under way for a suitable appointee as commissioner for area development, and I hope shortly to be able to make an announcement in this regard.

FORESTRY

CAPE BRETON—INQUIRY AS TO IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fred T. Armstrong (Shelburne-Yarmouth-Clare): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Forestry. Would the minister advise the house if any progress is being made in discussions with the government of Nova Scotia related to the forest stand improvement program in the Cape Breton area of that province?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be able to inform the house that the government has approved the extension for another year of the agreement with the province of Nova Scotia covering the forest stand improvement program for Cape Breton. Under the new agreement the federal government undertakes to pay 80 per cent of the miners' salaries and wages, and 50 per cent of all other expenditures in respect of stand improvement projects up to a total of $210,000. The remaining costs will be assumed by the province of Nova Scotia. Displaced miners seeking employment will be hired from the national employment service.

[Mr. Hellyer.]

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO CANADA'S CONTRIBUTION TO WORLD FOOD PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. Jorgenson (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in relation to the statement made yesterday concerning Canada's increased contribution to the world food program. Has he consulted with Dr. Sem, director general of F.A.O., or Dr. Burmah, director of the world food program, in relation to this matter?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, I personally did not have any talks with them on this particular subject. The officials of the government are, of course, in constant touch with the officials of the food and agriculture organization.

Mr. Jorgenson: A supplementary question. Would the minister give an assurance to the house that the commitment as to the ratio between food and cash assistance by the previous minister of agriculture will be maintained?

Mr. Sharp: I suggest that that question be put on the order paper so that it can be put precisely. It must be related to some particular program.

Mr. Jorgenson: A further supplementary question. Were there consultations between President Kennedy or Secretary of Agriculture Orville Freeman with regard to the impact of Canada's enlargement of giveaway programs, and their pledge not to extend United States giveaway programs following the vote on the referendum which was held in the United States?

Mr. Sharp: No. As I said yesterday our program of expanded aid, which will take the form of further shipments of wheat and flour to needy countries, will be expanded in consultation with other countries, including the United States, and it will be done in such a way as to give ample protection to the markets of those countries as well as ours.

NATO—SUGGESTED NON-AGGRESSION PACT WITH WARSAW PACT COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In the light of the encouraging and momentous statement made today by the Prime Minister, is it the intention of the government to express to its allies in NATO the belief that a non-aggression treaty between NATO and the Warsaw pact powers might make a useful contribution to the easing of tensions between these two blocs?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the conference to which the Prime Minister directed our attention earlier today has concluded. The negotiators are returning to their respective governments. In the communiqué which has been issued, they have indicated that they will report afterwards to the members of the NATO council, and the Soviet union will report to the members of the Warsaw pact.

When those reports take place Canada will be fully informed. The government has already indicated that subject to obligations and positions taken with regard to the problem of a divided Germany, we see advantage, all things considered, in a reaffirmation by the nations that they will not commit aggression. Before a final position can be taken, my hon. friend will understand that we will have to await the report to the NATO council and the attitude taken by other member states of NATO.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question. Might I ask the minister what commitments Canada has with reference to a divided Germany?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, Canada has no commitments. Canada has stated her views in this house, as it did through the previous government. We will have to give these views consideration before a final position can be taken. I would not want what I have said to be interpreted as meaning that it would not be possible to make a declaration on the part of members of NATO and members of the Warsaw pact which would take into account the considerations I mentioned a moment ago.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—DELAY IN UNIVERSITY TRAINING PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the minister of northern affairs and ask him whether he can confirm the report, notwithstanding the answer given in the house last Monday, that the Northwest Territories council, before it adjourned, did in fact provide a sum of $4,600 for the university training program for students in the Northwest Territories?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am unable to confirm that. This matter was up some time ago. I think the hon. member raised it on July 22, and the opinion given at that time was that the authority to set these moneys aside for purposes outside the territories was beyond the capacity of the territorial council. I think the answer was also given that it would depend on the furtherance of the legislative program now before this house. I will make inquiries to see whether they have in fact set this money aside with the intention that it be used for this purpose, and I would think if it is within the bounds of legality the government would assist them in so doing.

(Translation):

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

REPORTED STATEMENTS MADE BY MEMBERS OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Following the question which I asked him yesterday, can the Prime Minister tell us whether he is now aware of the various statements made by the appointed members of the commission on biculturalism, and has he any comments to make on that matter?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have no comment to make on that.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Does he find it normal that Mr. Andre Laurendeau, co-chairman of that commission, has made the following statement: "This inquiry will make of us more earnest separatists"?

HIGHWAYS

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS WITH MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works.

Can the minister tell the house whether, following his meeting with the Montreal authorities and the provincial minister for highways, important projects will be carried out concerning access roads to Montreal, which will be paid in part by the federal government?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, there were discussions today with the provincial minister of highways, the Hon. Mr. Pinard, and the chairman of the executive committee of Montreal, Mr. Paul Saulnier. Following these discussions which were very friendly, we decided on another meeting with our respective federal, provincial and municipal officials. When we have all the technical information, we shall be able to come to a decision as to the request made by the province of Quebec for a change in the lay-out of the highway which will pass through Montreal to reach the Boucherville bridge.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Following Mr. Pinard's statement to the effect that he had not yet received any invitation, will the minister take advantage of his meeting with this gentleman to invite him to attend the discussions which will take place with regard to a national highway project?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I am very happy that the hon. member has raised this question, because it enables me to inform him that the government has adopted no course of action with regard to a national highway policy.

First of all, we asked our officials to meet with those of all provinces, in order to inform themselves. Later on, the highway ministers of the various provinces as well as the federal Minister of Public Works will meet and exchange their views, without, however, a specific order of the day being prepared.

However, I should tell the hon. member that no province has as yet been invited to that conference, the date of which has not yet been set. But, when the time comes for such a meeting, all provinces will be invited at the same time.

(Text):

ROYAL CANADIAN NAVY

REPORTED REFUSAL TO PERMIT RE-ENLISTMENT OF PETTY OFFICER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Some time ago the hon. member for Winnipeg North asked if I had received a report of the review of the circumstances relating to the termination of Mr. Eric Petersen's service in the Royal Canadian Navy. As the hon. member knows, the occurrence took place in 1961, but I can now give the house the following information.

Non-commissioned officers and men enlist for a fixed period of years, and when that period expires it is at the option of the service involved and of the man whether re-engagement is offered or accepted. In the case of Mr. Petersen, re-engagement was not offered and he was given an honourable discharge without any qualifications that might prejudice either his future employment elsewhere or his standing in whatever community in which he might choose to reside. Having looked into the matter thoroughly, I do not intend to alter the decision taken by the Royal Canadian Navy at that time.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Was it because this man was considered to be a security risk that an offer of continued service in the navy was not made to him?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not think it would be in the interest of Mr. Petersen or in the public interest to add anything to what I have said.

Mr. Douglas: Does the minister condone this practice of gathering security files on a man in the service and then allowing a cloud of suspicion to hang over him without there being an opportunity to clear it up?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not think that question is in order.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR MEETINGS OF STANDING COMMITTEES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry, and at the same time to congratulate him on his appointment to this new position.

My question is this. I have inquired of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who has much more experience in this house than myself, when the standing committee on debates last sat. I think it was approximately 10 years ago. I was wondering whether it could not meet once in 1963. I am not suggesting that it meet during this part of the session but rather after the adjournment, and possibly the minister could say whether the standing committee on debates could meet then.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State as house leader. Can he explain why so many of the standing committees of the house have not yet been called into session, even for organization purposes? I refer in particular to the estimates committee and the public accounts committee, whose responsibilities are such that they require not only weeks but months to fulfil their obligations.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am very thankful that my responsibilities are in and to the house and not for the conduct of committees. I am afraid I do not know the answer to the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. Winch: A supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Who has the basic responsibility for calling the first meetings of the standing committees of the House of Commons?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I can give an accurate answer to that question. I will be glad to do some research, but I would suppose that any member of a committee can call a meeting, and that there is a special responsibility on the chairman.

Mr. Winch: There is no chairman until the committee is called, and the chairman almost always comes from the government side.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, that is why I thought I would have to do some research.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

EXCISE TAX ACT

Resolved,—That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Excise Tax Act and to provide among other things:

1. That the present exemption from sales tax for certain building materials be withdrawn by repealing the exemption for all goods mentioned under the heading "Building Materials" in Schedule III of the said act and by repealing the exemptions for

(a) "Creosote oil and other wood preservatives when for use exclusively in the treatment of timber, poles or lumber;"

(b) "Railway ties;"

(c) "Goods for use as part of sewerage and drainage systems, and articles and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture thereof;"

2. That any enactment based on paragraph 1 of this resolution provide that

(a) goods for use as part of sewerage and drainage systems be exempt from sales tax when sold to or imported by a municipality for its own use and not for resale,

(b) any transfer of a sewerage or drainage system to a municipality by any person within two years after the completion thereof, pursuant to a bylaw of or agreement with that municipality under which that person is required to instal such system and transfer it without charge to that municipality after the completion thereof be deemed, for the purpose of section 46 of the said act, to be a sale to the municipality for its own use and not for resale of goods for use as part of a sewerage or drainage system.

and that any agency operating a sewerage or drainage system for or on behalf of a municipality may be declared by the minister to be a municipality for the purpose of this paragraph.

3. That any enactment based on paragraph 1 of this resolution provide that drain tile for agricultural purposes and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture thereof be exempt from sales tax.

4. That any enactment founded on paragraph 1 of this resolution provide that where materials have been purchased by or on behalf of a school, university or other similar educational institution for use exclusively in the construction of a building for that institution and the tax imposed by Part VI of the said act has been paid in respect of those materials, the Minister of National Revenue may upon application by the institution in such form as the minister prescribes made to the minister within two years from the time the materials were purchased, pay to the institution an amount equal to that tax.

5. That any enactment founded on paragraph 1 of this resolution provide that a person who

(a) manufactures or produces a building or other structure otherwise than at the site of construction or erection thereof, in competition with persons who construct or erect similar buildings or structures not so manufactured or produced,

(b) manufactures or produces otherwise than at the site of construction or erection of a building or other structure, structural building sections for incorporation into such building or structure, in competition with persons who construct or erect buildings or other structures that incorporate similar sections not so manufactured or produced, or

(c) manufactures or produces concrete or cinder building blocks, be deemed for the purposes of the said act not to be, in relation to any such building, structure, building sections or building blocks so manufactured or produced by him the manufacturer or producer thereof.

6. That the present exemption from sales tax for "Seventy five per cent of the sale price if manufactured in Canada, or seventy five per cent of the duty paid value if imported, of trailers for use as homes" be changed to read "Twenty five per cent of the sale price if manufactured in Canada, or twenty five per cent of the duty-paid value if imported, of trailers for use as homes".

7. That the present exemption for certain machinery and apparatus to be used in manufacture or production be withdrawn by repealing the exemption for all goods mentioned under the headings "Machinery and Apparatus to be used in Manufacture or Production" and "Engines" in Schedule III of the said act and by repealing the exemptions for

(a) "Seismic shot-hole casing and materials used in the manufacture thereof;"

(b) "Tires and tubes for use exclusively on the machinery enumerated in Customs Tariff Item 411a."

(c) Goods enumerated in customs tariff items 399a, 399b, 399c, 411a, 417, 431h, 439c, 848, 848a, and 848b.

8. That any enactment founded on paragraph 7 of this resolution provide that traction engines for farm purposes and accessories therefor (not including machines and tools for operation by such engines) and complete parts of all the foregoing, and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture of the said engines, accessories or parts be exempt from sales tax.

9. That any enactment founded on paragraph 7 of this resolution provide that farm wagons, including four-wheeled farm wagons equipped to be tractor drawn and farm sleds, and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture thereof be exempt from sales tax.

10. That the present exemption from sales tax for "Photographs, paintings, pastels, drawing and other art work and illustrations of all kinds, whether originals, copies or proofs, and printing plates made to reproduce the same, for use exclusively as non-advertising news pictures or for illustrating non-advertising articles or stories in periodical publications enjoying second-class mailing privileges, the pages of which are regularly bound, wired, stitched or otherwise fastened together;" be changed to read "Typesetting and composition, metal plates, cylinders, matrices, film, art work, designs, photographs, rubber material, plastic material and paper material, when impressed with or displaying or carrying an image for reproduction by printing, made or imported by or sold to a manufacturer or producer for use exclusively in the manufacture or production of printed matter."

11. That feeds for fish, supplements for addition to such feeds, and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture of such feeds or supplements be exempt from sales tax.

12. That the exemption from sales tax for materials for use in the equipment and repair of ships over ten tons net register tonnage be restricted to materials for use in the equipment and repair of ships to be used exclusively for commercial purposes.

13. That the present exemption from sales tax for "Bakers' cakes and pies including biscuits, cookies or other similar articles;" be changed to read "Bakers' cakes and pies including biscuits, cookies and similar articles but not including simulated chocolate bars or candy bars;"

14. That the export duty of three one hundredths of one cent per kilowatt hour on electrical power exported from Canada be repealed.

15. That any enactment founded on paragraphs 1 to 13 of this resolution be deemed to have come into force on June 14, 1963, and any enactment founded on paragraph 14 of this resolution be applicable in respect of electrical power exported after June, 1963.

16. That with respect to the period commencing June 14, 1963 and ending March 31, 1964, the rate of tax payable under Part VI of the said act in respect of any goods for which exemption from tax was withdrawn by any enactment founded on paragraphs 1 and 7 of this resolution be four per cent instead of eight per cent, and that with respect to the period commencing June 14, 1963 and ending December 31, 1964 the rate of tax payable under subsection (1) of section 10 of the Old Age Security Act in respect of any such goods be nil.

17. That the said measure further provide that

(a) where any tax under Part VI of the said act has become payable by any person in respect of any goods for which exemption for tax under that part was withdrawn by any enactment founded on paragraphs 1 and 7 of this resolution, which goods were, not later than December 31, 1964, sold and delivered by that person, or applied by that person to a use resulting in the property in the goods passing from that person, pursuant to a bona fide contract in writing

(i) that provided for the sale of those goods or their application to that use for a fixed amount stated in the contract and that did not permit the adding of the tax to the amount payable to that person under the contract, and

(ii) that was signed by the parties thereto

(A) on or before June 13, 1963, or

(B) after June 13, 1963, if the contract was entered into in accordance with the terms of a tender in writing submitted by that person on or before that day whereby that person undertook to enter into such a contract and in default of so doing to incur or cause to be incurred a pecuniary penalty whether by forfeiture of a security deposit a refund, or deduction from any of the taxes imposed by the said act, of the tax or such part thereof as could not under the contract be added to the amount payable to that person thereunder may be granted to that person; and

(b) where any goods for which exemption from tax under Part VI of the said act was withdrawn by any enactment founded on paragraphs 1 and 7 of this resolution were, after June 13, 1963 and not later than December 31, 1964, sold and delivered by any person, or applied by any person to a use resulting in the property in the goods passing from that person, pursuant to a bona fide contract in writing

(i) that provided for the sale of those goods or their application to that use for a fixed amount stated in the contract and that did not permit the adding of any tax under that part that became payable after June 13, 1963 in respect of those goods to the amount payable to that person under the contract, and

(ii) that was signed by the parties thereto

(A) on or before June 13, 1963, or

(B) after June 13, 1963, if the contract was entered into in accordance with the terms of a tender in writing submitted by that person on or before that day whereby that person undertook to enter into such a contract and in default of so doing to incur or cause to be incurred a pecuniary penalty whether by forfeiture of a security deposit or otherwise, an amount equal to the tax or such part thereof as could not under the contract be added to the amount payable to that person thereunder may, where application therefor is made to the Minister of National Revenue by that person in such form as the minister prescribes within two years from the time the goods were delivered by that person or applied by him to that use, and the minister is satisfied that the tax has been paid, be paid by the minister to that person.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, my first words must be to thank the hon. member for Vegreville for giving me the opportunity to speak at this time in view of an appointment I have a little later. I repeat that I thank him most sincerely, and I know he will have an opportunity later this afternoon to deliver his speech, which I hope to be able to be present to hear.

This afternoon what I intend to do is review very briefly some of the events that have taken place since the budget was first introduced; in other words, in discussing this particular item to review the changes and alterations that have taken place from the time the budget was first introduced. It was introduced on June 13. The securities tax of 30 per cent was withdrawn on June 19. On July 8 the minister tabled revised budget resolutions withdrawing the sales tax on newspaper materials and schools, universities and similar educational institutions. In addition there were a variety of other changes including something that had never taken place before, the graduation of the 11 per cent tax divided over a period of time and extended in accordance with the resolution before the house.

In other words, Canadians found themselves in a position where they were being subjected to a form of staggered taxation. The changes that have been made in the budget, unparalleled in the past, show how little thought was given to the consequences and, indeed, how the course followed was one of experiment, trial and error. The result has been the bewilderment of the Canadian economy because businessmen everywhere are in doubt as to what the changes of tomorrow will bring about. Indeed, in this catalogue of unsurpassed incompetence one can only be amazed that any government would introduce a budget with terms—I am referring particularly to the resolution we are dealing with—so absolute in their wrongness, so colossal in their ineptitude.

What has been the result? Waffling, retreat, confusion, great recantations. Today across the country there is the same fear that there was three or four weeks ago as to the uncertainty of this government and the perplexity of the course it has followed. The result has been detrimental to the economy. That has already shown up in the increase in unemployment; for businessmen across Canada, employers of workers, have no idea what the morrow will bring.

I wonder why we have this trifurcation of the tax with 4 per cent until March 31, 1964, 8 per cent thereafter until December 31, 1964, and 11 per cent from the beginning of 1965. No one can look into the future, but there are many who feel on the basis of what has happened here that actually a 4 per cent tax is going to be imposed, that there is going to be a change in the finance ministry and any subsequent minister will not be bound. The result would be that there would be a 4 per cent increase and no other. The expectation is that when the rumoured changes take place the government will thereby have retreated from its 11 per cent tax while pretending in the retreat that 11 per cent is still to be imposed.

Trial and error; that has been the record of this government not only in the budget but in other legislation to which, of course, I will not make allusion at this time, but everyone will recognize to what I am referring.

Second, in addition to the detriment to the economy the tax has brought about a frightful administrative mess. Ask the businessmen across Canada. Do they know what the morrow will bring? One of them was in touch with me. He relied on the fact that a tax of 11 per cent was going to be imposed and sent out a new catalogue with the 11 per cent sales tax included. Then a change was made. Now the catalogue is as useless as his old one. But he is not going ahead with another one until he finds out finally what further migrations and transmutations are going to take place in this tax.

What about refunds? That is the third point. I am going to deal with that a little later. Millions of dollars were collected between June 13 and the day of the first reformation. At one time I estimated the amount to be about $250,000 a day. I think that was an underestimate. When we asked, "What are you going to do about it" the answer of the Minister of National Revenue, and I shall deal with that, was, "We cannot become involved in relations between vendor and purchaser".

This system of taxation on building materials and production machinery is the most shortsighted action that any government could take if it had in contemplation the objective the minister has stated, namely the expansion of the economy. I listened to one hon. member yesterday who said that in his constituency there was widespread approval of what had been done, and of the courage of the Minister of Finance. Well, apparently things are different in that constituency from any of the others. This is not the case elsewhere. They are not saying elsewhere, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians." They are saying "What are you going to do about this? Can you not bring about changes? Is it not possible to secure further amendments?" The attitude this opposition has taken is that in its present expurgated form the budget should be withdrawn altogether. We should start over.

What have you got? Well, you have a few ribs which still remain, but the flesh is all gone. The alterations make the original unrecognizable. The Minister of Finance said today that the objective is to bring about an expansion in Canada. I was glad to notice the reformation on the part of the government with regard to the pegging of the dollar. A few minutes ago they said they were not going to change that. Do you remember what they once said, Mr. Chairman? One minister sitting over there made the statement that this pegging of the dollar was too much for the average Canadian to bear. Another said it was a sign of the greatest weakness, and that it represented the degradation of the Canadian economy. That which they condemned, they now embrace. Indeed, they would give us to understand that the paternity was theirs, although responsibility was ours.

I listened to the minister today answering questions. I have a great deal of admiration for the capacity he has for answering questions. The answer he gave a few minutes ago bore no relationship to the question. After all, you see, he anticipated what the question was going to be, so he had a general answer available on the subject of interest, and at the end of it he tacked on an answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue. The purpose is to expand the economy. I think the first thing the Prime Minister should do is to cut the Gordian knot and put an end to this budget in its present form. By that I do not mean the removal of the Minister of Finance, because I do not know what we would do if we did not have him to blame for the mistakes that are being made for the government. He is not responsible directly for many of them, but he is now the involuntary recipient of criticism in every part of Canada.

What is our stand? Number one, we say the budget should be withdrawn. We realize that the government having backed up, receded and retreated will not be able to go that far. They will not be able to do that. But I still think they should give consideration, if they want the economy of Canada to expand, to the withdrawing of this tax on building materials and production machinery. If they do not do so, the events of the last few weeks indicate that a body blow was struck by the budget to economic expansion, the purpose for which the budget was established.

In so far as this budget is concerned, the longer it is being considered the more it is being criticized. It is a self emasculating instrument, detrimental to the Canadian economy. The purpose was to build, and the effect is to diminish. I ask, Mr. Chairman, who, in a desire to expand capital investment, ever taxed the investment itself? I am not going to go back on that in detail. This tax against capital investment is wrong in principle. The fact that it was wrong in principle was shown by the retreat. Does it become right because it is being applied in instalments?

Surely the statistics of the last few weeks should cause this government, even now, to stop to consider. They cannot hurt their reputation for retreats. It is impossible to do that. This would be an act of courage, for there is no courage in stubbornly adhering to a policy which in every part of Canada is recognized as deleterious to the expansion of our country. The sales tax, under the instalment plan, is not as severe at it was originally. However, the graduation of the tax compounds its inequality, to use an expression of the financial critic of the Montreal Gazette. It is a tax on jobs in every part of Canada.

What has been the effect on industry? In the month of June there was a falling off in building contract awards of almost 20 per cent, according to the statistics that are available. The government says it wants to make industry competitive in a world in which the challenge from other parts of the world becomes greater and greater. Do you make industry competitive by adding an extra cost on industry by taxation on machinery of about $100 million? The position of the opposition—and I summarize since I am not going into detail because the subject has been covered in detail by various members who have spoken—is that the objective is denied by the imposition of this tax. They used to speak about how bad things were in Canada. They shouted "Get the economy rolling." They have now got it on the way downhill; that is the easiest direction.

I repeat only in one particular what I said the other day. When we had an addition of 8 per cent to the gross national product last year, they said the economy should be set rolling. They spoke about indecision and inaction, but this year they predict an increase of only 5 per cent. They said we should expand construction expenditures across Canada. Last year they increased 5.2 per cent, but before the tax was imposed the estimate for this year was reduced to 4.5 per cent.

They said business capital expansion would be right around the corner if they got into office. It was 7 per cent last year, and according to the estimate it will be 5.5 per cent this year. They said "Let us expand exports." We found markets for our exports, but they said we were not expanding fast enough. The increase in exports last year was 7.8 per cent over the previous year, but this year the estimate is that it will be 5 per cent.

There were some corporations in the larger cities across Canada who said they could not give us support because they were not doing as well as they should. However, their corporation profits last year amounted to 11 per cent. This year the estimate is 6 per cent to 7 per cent, not because prices have gone up or down, but simply because of the fact that the economy is not rolling except in the one direction. That is why we ask the government to give leadership in this regard. That is why we suggest action be taken now before it is too late. It is all very well to have an objective, but when you see the objective is not being met it is the height of dangerous obstinacy to follow a course which the experience of only a few weeks has shown to be wrong.

When I take that stand, Mr. Chairman, remember that is the stand this party took from the beginning. On the night the budget was introduced I issued a statement and said it was a retrogressive budget and would interfere with expansion. When it came to a vote, the Conservative party voted solidly against the budget. They did not have any uncertainty about it; they knew it was bad. The Social Credit party talked eloquently against it but then swallowed their beliefs by voting for the budget which they now criticize.

Mr. Leboe: Let's be honest, John.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let me say to my hon. friends that their conduct in the last few weeks has shown they have become a dilapidated annex of the Liberal party.

An hon. Member: Rubbish.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I know it is difficult. I know how you feel because you did not vote as you said.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, yes, you did. If they voted as they said, then I do not understand the kind of arithmetic that causes a party to say it does not believe in these things and then vote for them. That is beyond me.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, is there not a rule about reflecting on votes of the house, a rule of the house that the right hon. gentleman in his passion seems to have transgressed?

The Chairman: Order. I am sure that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition realizes the importance of abiding by that rule.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I was not commenting on a vote of the house in a way that transgresses the rule. So far as the hon. gentleman opposite is concerned, he is up all the time. The first time you are here you are impressed, as the cuckoo is heard in June but not regarded in July. Why is there this tremendous interest on his part in bringing before the house the impossible position in which the Social Credit party is? So far as the N.D.P. are concerned, they have strong views. They did not vote at all.

Mr. Chapdelaine: We voted with you last year.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I can only let them explain the reason for that peculiar, unusual and rather unexpected course.

Mr. Chapdelaine: We did not agree with you, but we voted with you last year.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman says "We did not agree with you last year but we supported you." Does not that indicate a concept regarding the serious responsibility of individual members of parliament? I am glad to have that admission, and I welcome any further interruptions of the kind.

Mr. Chapdelaine: You liked it last year.

The Chairman: Order. May I suggest that we should have order in the committee.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I could not better like interruptions such as the hon. gentleman's contributions. I welcome them at any time, because he lets the cat out of the bag. He is just showing how consistent they are. Last year they did not like us and they voted for us; this year they did not like the budget and they voted for it. How can anyone call that inconsistency?

To return to my speech after this interesting interlude, I want to ask the government what is being done in connection with the very important matter of those refunds. On July 9 the Minister of National Revenue said:

> When refunds are made to the manufacturers, importers or others who have remitted the tax to the department, or where they have made deductions from the tax they would have had to pay and thus achieved the same result, it will, of course, be expected that they will pass on these benefits to those to whom they sold goods during this period.

It is natural that when one is in public life, one gets letters criticizing things, and businessmen across Canada are asking what is going to be done about this. It is the government that made the mistake. It imposed an 11 per cent tax and told business people, "Start collecting it tonight." The people of Canada relied on the government. The 11 per cent tax was collected, but what attitude did the government take then? As reported at page 1974 of Hansard of July 9, the hon. member for Wellington South asked this question:

> Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Revenue following the announcement just made by the Minister of Finance. Would the Minister of National Revenue advise the house as to the procedure an individual would follow to obtain a refund in excess of the 4 per cent rate, as announced last night?
>
> An hon. Member: Hire a lawyer.

The advice is good. You and I could not disagree with that, Mr. Chairman, but that is not very fair to the person who has been taken as a result of the changed attitude on the part of the government. Then the Minister of National Revenue said:

> Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member who has asked the question will appreciate that as a federal government we cannot enter into the relationship between the vendor and the purchaser, but I did rather anticipate that a question along this line might be asked today and I would be happy to tell him this, if I have permission.

I had better read it all, because I do not want to delete any part of it. The minister went on to say:

> Last evening the Minister of Finance indicated that refunds would be made to those who during the period from June 14 to July 9 have actually remitted sales tax at the full rate on goods they had sold or imported that were previously exempt. When refunds are made to the manufacturers, importers or others who have remitted the tax to the department, or where they have made deductions from the tax they would have had to pay and thus achieved the same result, it will, of course, be expected that they will pass on these benefits to those to whom they sold goods during this period. In fact it is expected that these benefits will be passed along to the final purchaser. The extent to which this will happen will depend to a considerable degree on the legal and even the good will relations between the vendor and the purchaser.

That is quite inexcusable. There is no co-operation at all in that. They say, "You should be getting it". What happens to the man who bought lumber from the lumber yard in those days?

Mr. Garland: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

Mr. Garland: To what part of my reply does he object?

Mr. Monteith: You pulled a boner.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I object to the utter effrontery of saying to the people of Canada who paid 11 per cent, "Try and get it back in the best way you can. We will not give you any assistance whatever, because this is a vendor and purchaser relationship, with which we cannot become involved". That is what I say. I know the difficulties, but I know how reasonable the minister is at all times and I ask him to see whether he cannot bring about some plan of regulations which will enable the original purchaser, the intermediary and finally the retailer, to receive the amount of the rebate, for unless there is assistance on the part of the federal government millions of dollars are going to be in the hands of those who collected them and there will be no place to hand them back.

Mr. Garland: Mr. Chairman, I know the former prime minister wants to be fair in this. Does he not fully appreciate the fact that the tax collected for the dates he has referred to is not even due until the end of this month?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, now; it was collected day by day after the 13th day of June in every part of this country. They were directed to do so. I say, what is going to be done on the part of the federal government to help the various levels of purchasers to recover the amount of, I do not know how many millions but it certainly must be $7 million or $8 million on the basis of there being a reasonable degree of equality of purchase throughout the year.

I impress upon the minister to come down from that throne on which he seated himself in those remarks in the house and do something to bring about a fair degree of distribution of the excess that was extorted from the Canadian people, not because of any wrongdoing on the part of any of the wholesalers or the retailers but because of the ineptitude of this government, which acted before it thought.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman says, "Why, we do not have to worry about that until the end of this month". Let me read to him the representations of the Canadian construction association.

Mr. Garland: Mr. Chairman, as the Leader of the Opposition must know, I did not say that at all.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, Mr. Chairman, if I misunderstood the hon. gentleman, I would like to know what he did say. I give him an opportunity of clarification.

Mr. Garland: I will be delighted to explain it again. I said that the tax collected to which the right hon. gentleman is referring and which he says many of his fellow Canadians are misusing and making a windfall of—he has said this on other occasions also—actually is not payable by the parties concerned, to the federal government, until the end of this month.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I say at once that I never did say they were going to be crooked about it. I said there was no assistance on the part of the federal government to arrange for the compensation in the appropriate manner of those who paid that tax; who because of the change that took place now find themselves having overpaid a matter of 7 per cent. Let that be clear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, would the right hon. gentleman permit a question? Could he explain to us how his government did it with respect to the surcharges?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, there is nothing as helpful as a beneficial interruption. The surcharges were imposed—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —applied, according to law—

Mr. Pickersgill: Applied by order in council.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —with the power given to the government to act. We acted accordingly. Now you are going to try and play a game of pretending that we illegally extorted it, in order to prove the one thing you said during the campaign about which you know nothing and the criticism of which was completely unjustified. You gave us the power long before we came into office, and we exercised that power. You had to find some excuse, and you are going to introduce some formal legislation to legalize what was legal, in order to justify the partisan way in which you conducted your criticism.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps the right hon. gentleman, having dodged my question, will now come back and answer it. It was, how did you arrange for the refunds in those cases?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That has no application at all.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I venture the opinion that the puppet chorus over there never even read the order in council or knows anything about it. I simply say that the question has no application at all and it is quite in keeping with some of the questions the hon. gentleman raises from time to time.

Some hon. Members: Answer the question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They will do anything to get away from facing a situation. The answer given by the minister was, "It is not collectible by us until the end of the month".

Some hon. Members: Answer the question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let me read what the Canadian construction association says. This brief was written on July 18 and is headed, "Re: Revised budget resolutions". This has not anything to do with the original resolutions; this applies to the revised version. We are wondering whether it is going to be the authorized one too; whether it is going to be final. The Canadian construction association says:

> Whereas the imposition of the tax by stages announced by you on July 8 . . . a most welcome development, the fact remains that the Department of National Revenue has been unable to issue sufficient rulings as to the application or administration of the 4 per cent sales tax or to establish practicable refund procedures so that the construction industry has any degree of firm guidance on current projects or those now out to tender.

In other words, the Department of National Revenue, the minister, has failed; that is what they say. He joins the Minister of Finance in the failure. He just brings up the rear, as it were; he takes whatever is left over. But the fact remains that it is he who is criticized. Then it says:

> This is not meant to be an adverse criticism of federal taxation officials; they are literally so swamped with questions and requests for rulings and the problems of setting up the new procedures that the new sales tax policy necessitates that it will inevitably be months before the present turmoil, confusion and inability to get decisions being experienced within our industry can reasonably be expected to be overcome.

Listen to these words. I could not possibly equal the strength of the attack of the construction industry in these words, "confusion, turmoil, inability to get decisions". These be the magic workers who, a few short months ago, told us to just sit there and watch things go. Then it goes on:

> These words—

They are the words "turmoil, confusion and inability to get decisions being experienced within our industries"—

> —describing conditions in the industry were not selected lightly. A good many tender calls and contract awards are being held up.

What I rise to ask for, in connection with that, is that the government let us know what is going to be done. Let them raise the curtain of secrecy in connection with the regulations. What has been done towards drafting them? What are the general conditions to be followed? I made it perfectly clear when I raised the matter in question form some weeks ago, that there was leadership needed on the part of the government to protect Canadians from the mistakes of the government, from its lack of decision, from its vacillating stands, and from the regular alteration of various sections of the budget.

I go on, Mr. Chairman, to deal with the lumber industry. I mention the lumber industry because it has been seriously affected, and I refer to the Canadian Weekly highlights in which the following appeared with regard to British Columbia. It deals first of all with the expansion of foreign trade and says:

> Total foreign trade in the first five months of 1963 reached a new high of $5.1 billion. These results are very encouraging and the Canadian dollar discount has been a most favourable factor. Further improvement appears in prospect over the balance of the year.
>
> Lumber shipments: British Columbia saw mills shipped 1,968 million board foot of lumber in the first four months of 1963, an increase of 7.1 per cent over . . . the like 1962 period . . .
>
> The gain to date is impressive but is not expected to continue at this rate in view of the new tax on building materials, recently reduced from 11 per cent to 4 per cent.

That is British Columbia.

With regard to the maritimes, the maritime lumber bureau said this as of July 17:

> Marketing of lumber, in comparison to other materials, is recognized as a highly specialized operation. Because of its versatility in use, it is marketed in different sizes—

And so on. And it goes on to say this:

> In the Atlantic provinces, particularly, there are a thousand saw mills alone, besides dressing mills and woodworking shops in almost every village.
>
> As the tax is set up, with all its complicated applications and exemptions at each level of lumber's manufacture and processing, it becomes quite evident to the lumber industry that it is impracticable and unworkable—

That is the considered opinion of the maritime lumber bureau, a completely non-partisan body, and it must soon be apparent to the department that net returns to the government will not warrant the expense of administration. This report goes on:

> We believe that lumber associations across Canada will have to continue to move against this tax for sheer survival.

That is how serious is the situation, but the only answer I get from the other side of the chamber is jeers when I suggest that even yet the sales tax on building materials should not only be abrogated but abolished. The report concludes:

> Certainly the maritime lumber bureau in the interests of the Atlantic provinces must continue the battle until this most injurious and unacceptable load on the industry is removed.

Then it sets out the great difficulties in a previous report dated July 12, which I will not read because the minister has a copy.

He mentioned yesterday that he had received a host—I take it of favourable letters, but I should like him to lay them on the table of the house because they will earn a distinction which no other letter has. Favourable comment has not been our experience on this side of the house, and it has not been the experience of Liberal private members. Those representations are before the government, and I do no more than reiterate them. If they place this $100 million tax on the machinery of production, what happens to the competitive power and the ability of Canadian industry which, in order to improve its position, makes the necessary changes in the machinery it has? I sometimes wonder who it was who concocted all this. Certainly from June 13 to the present day I have never seen in the country the same resentment and attitude of mind without regard for party considerations. In every walk of life it is felt that what is being done strikes at the heart blood of this nation, industrially. We also have a responsibility from the point of view of trade and expansion strongly to oppose this tax. We intend not only to talk against it but to vote against it. We also intend to move certain amendments so far as this tax is concerned. When we have the opportunity on third reading we are going to give those members supporting the government an opportunity to vote in favour of legislation which will have a tremendous effect, as it already has, on Canada's economy. It is recognized that they have already monkeyed with the tax, reducing it from 11 per cent to 4 per cent, restoring the other 7 per cent in instalments. In the interests of Canada, in the interests of industry, and in the interests of keeping the economy rolling as well as it was under the government to which I belonged, I again ask the government to take one further look at this tax and remove it from the list of resolutions.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, in his quiet and tolerant speech, demonstrated once again it seems—at any rate it seems to me—that his well known talents for histrionics are greater than his understanding of statistics and economics.

I do not propose to make a long speech because I have already discussed the purposes of this resolution when presenting it to the committee. However, there were one or two things the Leader of the Opposition said which, it seems to me, were inaccurate. I am sure he did not mean to be inaccurate, but it seems to me they should be corrected. The first thing that needs to be corrected is his suggestion—I am not sure whether I have taken down his words exactly, but this is the general sense of what he said—that fear is spreading all across this country because of the course this government has taken and because, he said, there was some increase in unemployment last month. With the greatest respect to the right hon. gentleman I would suggest that that is a greatly exaggerated statement. I might add that after last week end quite a lot of relief is spreading across this country because of something which was avoided in certain discussions.

The Leader of the Opposition at another point made the suggestion that millions of dollars had been collected between June 13 and July 8 in taxes which should never have been collected. This is another point at which I suggest correction is desirable so that everyone may know what the actual facts are. As my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, has pointed out, taxes under the Excise Tax Act for the month of June do not become payable until the end of July, so I cannot see where all these millions of dollars could have come from.

Mr. Churchill: Extra charges to the purchaser.

Mr. Gordon: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre—I sometimes mix him up with another hon. member for Winnipeg and I apologize to them both for doing so—says he is talking about charges to the purchaser. I do not know if it is fully realized that most lumber dealers sell their products on the basis of a 2 per cent discount for 30 days and I doubt very much if many of them changed their prices in the meantime. But if they did—and some of them did—I would expect that most of them have done their very best to refund the difference. I might recall, too, that it was only about a year ago that a surcharge order was introduced. No provision was made for refunds at that time and, believe me, everybody in this country got stuck for that one.

Not only that, when the surcharge order was taken off in the course of the election campaign—

Mr. Diefenbaker: The last day of the fiscal year.

Mr. Gordon: I do not recall any refund being offered on that occasion.

Mr. Winkler: Why would there be?

An hon. Member: It was an illegal tax.

Mr. Churchill: You will never get this resolution through.

Mr. Gordon: Who started this?

Mr. Churchill: The Secretary of State started it.

Mr. Gordon: I just want to make one other point. I am only replying to one or two of the statements which were made by the Leader of the Opposition. I am sure that if they are not completely accurate he would wish them to be corrected.

Mr. Starr: By whom?

Mr. Gordon: Preferably by himself.

Mr. Starr: You are doing it, or trying to, and you should be the last to correct anybody.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There have not been any corrections so far.

Mr. Gordon: Some reference was made to a statement that building contracts had fallen off by 20 per cent since the budget. I suspect this had some reference to an article which appeared in a Montreal newspaper on July 17. It refers to Maclean's building reports which said construction contract awards were down by 21.2 per cent in June, 1963, as compared with June, 1962. It should be pointed out that contract awards in May, 1963, were up by 30 per cent over the figures for May, 1962. This was due to the inclusion of one or two large items in that month.

An hon. Member: Before your budget.

Mr. Gordon: That is right. I hope the hon. member will bear with me. This underlines the wide swings which can take place in construction contract awards over a short period and emphasizes that a comparison on a monthly basis can be misleading as an indication of the basic trends in the construction industry.

I would also point out that the Maclean's building report for June covers the period from mid-May until mid-June. It does not cover the month of June. It is for the period from the middle of one month until the middle of the next.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not what John Meyer says.

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps it is not what John Meyer, or whoever the hon. gentleman mentioned, says, but it happens to be a fact. I would like to point out that this period from mid-May to mid-June contains only one or two days of the period after the budget was introduced so I think the inference that the budget may have had something to do with this particular fluctuation in this particular series of statistics could be misleading, if it were not explained in just this way.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the hon. gentleman not think that the financial editor of the Gazette had available to him the information upon which his statement was made on July 17?

Mr. Gordon: Well, I was a little surprised to read the article in question, and when I had read it I went to the source. The source, it seems to me, was the one I have given.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did the writer mention the source in his article?

Mr. Gordon: If he did not do so, perhaps he should have. I do not know. There are no other figures covering the calendar month of June so I presume these are the only figures which were available. I simply say it is my information that there are no other statistics relating to construction starts, so I assume he was referring to those referred to.

An hon. Member: Five o'clock.

The Chairman: It being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair so that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members' business.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, pursuant to special order made July 10, namely, private bills, public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As there are two private bills for consideration in committee of the whole, is it agreed that in accordance with section 1 of standing order 54 they be referred to committee of the whole in one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill S-25, respecting the board of trade of metropolitan Toronto.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill S-27, to incorporate Kinross Mortgage Corporation.—Mr. Francis.

Private Bills

SOVEREIGN LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

Mrs. Margaret Konantz (Winnipeg South) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-29, respecting the Sovereign Life Assurance Company of Canada.

She said: Mr. Speaker, this bill was passed in the Senate on July 11. It is a very simple bill in that its purpose is to add a French version to the name of the Sovereign Life Assurance Company of Canada. This is a medium-size life insurance company whose headquarters are in Winnipeg. It does business throughout Canada except in the maritimes, with a substantial amount in Quebec. Of the 9,331 shareholders, 8,319 are Canadians holding four fifths of the company's stock. There are 813 American shareholders and 199 other foreign shareholders. I should like to think that hon. members will accept second reading of this bill and allow it to go to the committee on banking and commerce where counsel for the company will be able to answer any questions on its business transactions.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

GOOD NEWS BROADCASTING ASSOCIATION OF CANADA

On the order:

Private bills—Consideration of Bill S-15, an act to incorporate the Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada.—Mr. Enns.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, in connection with this bill I am asking on behalf of the sponsor, and with the agreement of those opposite, that this item stand on the order paper until after the summer adjournment. This is with the consent of the government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Order stands.

MARGARET CATHERINE SMITH

On the order:

Private bills—Second reading of Bill SD-1, an act for the relief of Margaret Catherine Smith.—Mr. Wahn.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the sponsor of Bills SD-1 to SD-50 and as vice-chairman of the committee of which he is chairman I would ask for an order that Bills SD-1 to SD-50 be considered together.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Bill SD-1, for the relief of Margaret Catherine Smith.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-2, for the relief of Gladys Noreen Monette.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-3, for the relief of Joseph Leo Gerard Bougie.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-4, for the relief of Nicholas Cimbru Chambers.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-5, for the relief of Madeleine Francoise Hankowski.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-6, for the relief of Suzanne Chasse.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-7, for the relief of Esther Wertheimer.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-8, for the relief of Lygery Varverikos.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-9, for the relief of Frank Hamilton Mingie, junior.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-10, for the relief of Rosemary Beatrice Clare.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-11, for the relief of Marie-Paule Jacqueline Lorette Champagne.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-12, for the relief of Klara Brody.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-13, for the relief of Bernice Bordensky.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-14, for the relief of Jacqueline Belanger.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-15, for the relief of Christina Aube.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-16, for the relief of Brigitte Dophide.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-17, for the relief of Anita Margaret d'Esterre.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-18, for the relief of Gladys Jean Desjardins.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-19, for the relief of Sylvia Dankner.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-20, for the relief of Florence Patricia Da Silva.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-21, for the relief of Judith MacBeth Cuggy.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-22, for the relief of Guiseppe de Cristoforo.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-23, for the relief of Beverley Hayden Crerar.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-24, for the relief of Paulyne Leblanc.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-25, for the relief of Gabriela Kiwitt.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-26, for the relief of Dorothea Margaret Kay.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-27, for the relief of Wilma Karls.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-28, for the relief of Felix Hollinger.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-29, for the relief of Abie Herscovitch, otherwise known as Allan Herscovitch.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-30, for the relief of Doris Sibyl Jane Hassall.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-31, for the relief of Ezreh Harry Herscovitch.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-32, for the relief of Robert Fleischer. —Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-33, for the relief of William Rankin Edmondson.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-34, for the relief of Leonard Emond. —Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-35, for the relief of Dorothy Irene Marjorie Adams.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-36, for the relief of Zbigniew Stanislaw Janicki.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-37, for the relief of Harry Hyman. —Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-38, for the relief of Nadia-Anne Hruszij.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-39, for the relief of Christine Johnson.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-40, for the relief of Arlene June Kaczur.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-41, for the relief of Mary Teresa Hough.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-42, for the relief of Bernard Hebert. —Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-43, for the relief of Catherine Harper.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-44, for the relief of Wilhelmina Grundy.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-45, for the relief of Edith Diane Greenberg.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-46, for the relief of Catherine Mildred Gray.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-47, for the relief of Nancy Ruth Grabina.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-48, for the relief of Lucille Goresky. —Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-49, for the relief of Constance Valerie Laurie.—Mr. Wahn.

Bill SD-50, for the relief of Ellen Chase McKellar.—Mr. Wahn.

ALLSTATE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed from Thursday, July 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ryan for the second reading of Bill No. S-28, to incorporate Allstate Life Insurance Company of Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, last week when it was brought before the house, we heard this bill being opposed by some hon. members, including the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire). The latter raised several objections which, I feel, should be questioned if we are to entertain good relations with the various countries which do business with Canada.

Surely, we are obliged to accept the fact that foreign capital, especially from the United States, should further Canada's economic development. It is to be regretted that the Social Credit doctrine is not yet in force, for that is why we have to use foreign capital if the affairs of our country are to run smoothly. However, the fact should have been emphasized, during the discussion of this bill, that Canadians should adopt a positive attitude, not a negative one, as regards those who wish to settle here in Canada. Canadians themselves should be proud to be Canadians and should encourage Canadian companies to make their investments work for Canada and not for foreign countries.

In my opinion, it is unthinkable that Canadians should adopt legislation to prevent other companies from settling in Canada, especially when we know very well that a foreign company can sell insurance in Canada without being incorporated. Of course, that makes things harder, but nothing prevents Canadian citizens from taking insurance policies with American companies, even if they do not have offices in Canada. That Simpsons-Sears is affiliated with Sears-Roebuck, that it is to a large extent controlled by American citizens, those are facts that we must deplore as Canadians but, in my opinion, companies that have decided to invest in our country should not be penalized.

Counter insurance sale was mentioned. Well, that is an economical way to sell insurance and nothing prevents Canadians from doing the same.

Instead of always approaching the problem in a negative way, again I am of the opinion that we should stimulate the pride of the Canadian citizen and urge him to buy his insurance at home, from a Canadian company, which will enable him at the same time to invest in his own country.

The hon. member for Lapointe said last Thursday that insurance companies represent one of the largest pools of savings that can be used for the economic development of a nation. That is true and I think that the legislation could perhaps favour a little more the economic development of Canada if, for instance, the government decided to require of foreign companies that profits made in Canada should be re-invested in our country, in Canadian industries. That would be a much more positive action, more in favour of Canada than action directed against foreign countries or against foreigners who wish to invest in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I feel that we cannot oppose the passage of this legislation.

But since we are on second reading, we can express our views about the principle governing all those American corporations who come to do business in Canada.

And what is most amazing is the fact that one day we are complaining that there is too much American capital in Canada and the next we complain that the U.S. government wants to prevent American citizens from investing in our country. Therefore we are wondering whether we are not actually simply arguing negatively against all and any motion introduced. Despite all our qualms about incorporating the Allstate Company in Canada, I believe that in all fairness and sincerity, it is most difficult to oppose the measure, since the corporation must follow rules established by the Canadian government.

However, I hope that the Canadian government will in the future accept its responsibilities and insert both in the insurance companies act and the act regarding companies intending to invest in Canada a clause to prevent the management of foreign corporations investing in Canada to return home with the profits they have made on the premiums and interests paid by Canadian citizens.

Mr. Speaker, those were the few remarks that I wanted to make, even though several parts of the speech of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) could be taken up. Besides, I feel that we should always take positive action so as to favour Canadian citizens, instead of taking a negative position which would prevent people from other countries from investing money in Canada, especially when we realize that they have to comply with the regulations established by the Canadian government.

(Text):

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, wonders never cease. In this end of the chamber, you are witnessing the early effects of the ferments of biculturalism, bilinguism and bipartisanship so far as this private bill is concerned. We witness it in our mutual position on this bill. At least we have found one point on which we can stand together so far as the members of this group are concerned, and the members of the Social Credit party. It is nice to know that we have at least agreed this one time because we differ in many other respects.

I was interested to note the almost apologetic approach of the sponsor of the bill when he was introducing it. He was embarassingly apologetic in pointing out to the members of the house the deficiencies in this legislation, which he readily admitted, and in the ownership of this company. We have, in principle, serious objection to the bill. I am very pleased to note that some of our good friends opposite are listening intently to what we have to say in this corner of the house.

First of all, I was struck with the admission of the sponsor that 87.5 per cent of the shares of this company are owned in the United States.

I would almost think it would make any Canadian member of parliament blush to introduce such a bill. This means complete control of the company in the United States; and to talk about the balance of the shares being owned in Canada is simply nonsense. It is just a token; it means nothing at all in reality. For all we know the percentage of shares owned in Canada may be signed over to people in the United States. This may be just a façade or front, and I have seen this sort of thing happen before.

This is not a company that is being incorporated under the usual excuse for using United States capital. They are not going to build a plant to go into manufacturing and provide employment. There is some argument for using United States capital to develop our natural resources, because there are some side or beneficial effects to that sort of development. But this United States company will simply duplicate services that are presently provided to better advantage by numerous other companies in Canada.

This is simply to provide the opportunity to mobilize Canadian savings to the advantage of the company. There is a very big difference between an insurance company and a company interested in production.

Mr. Ryan: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Herridge: Yes.

Mr. Ryan: Does the hon. member realize that the superintendent of insurance for Canada has recommended this bill?

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I am not one who, throughout the years, has accepted the decisions of the superintendent of insurance as always being for the welfare of the Canadian people. We are more inclined to accept the opinions of the Canadian people themselves on these questions, rather than the opinions of those who have to perform their duties according to laws which we are trying to change.

As I said before, the only function of this United States controlled insurance company is to mobilize Canadian savings as a result of selling insurance. This is a duplication of services being performed by other companies which have a much larger Canadian content in their ownership.

On this occasion members of both this party and the Social Credit party are in agreement that it is about time Canadians began to realize they can provide this type of service themselves. It is something that can be done by Canadians. We have the capital available. There is no lack of capital in Canada. There is something like $1,400 million in personal savings accounts in the banks, in addition to savings in other countries and reserves in various places, but there is no attempt being made by the government to mobilize these savings and direct their investment into socially desirable channels.

This would be a socially desirable channel in which Canadian funds could be invested.

Mr. Ryan: Would the hon. member permit another question?

Mr. Herridge: Love it.

Mr. Ryan: Does the hon. member know that as much business is done in life insurance by Canadian companies outside Canada as is done in Canada by the British, American and all other foreign companies? They just about balance, and this gain of 12½ per cent to the country would help the Canadian balance. I am not blushing or apologizing for anything.

Mr. Herridge: This is not a valid argument. It is like those persons who say there is a larger content of Canadian investment in the United States than there is in Canada, in certain instances, but you have to take the relative populations before comparing these figures.

Mr. Ryan: Then we are ahead.

Mr. Herridge: I am glad that for the first time in my 18 years in this house I have the co-operation of members of the Social Credit party, by promptings from the rear. I appreciate and welcome them.

Insurance is simply the application of the law of averages for the benefit of many, as a result of co-operation, organization and so on. We believe this particular type of company provides a splendid opportunity for such co-operative action on the part of private investors in Canada. From our point of view it also provides a splendid opportunity for government action in respect to insurance, the lead having been taken so successfully in automobile insurance by the government of Saskatchewan.

It also provides a splendid opportunity for credit unions to invest their funds. I have often wondered why we did not mobilize some of their funds and use them for the development of Canada through an insurance company such as this. If that were done we would not have hon. members sponsoring bills like this with, I presume, certain reluctance, embarrassment and stifling of conscience.

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak very briefly on this bill, and although I am in complete agreement with the remarks made by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) in his objection to the bill, I think he presented his views very much as a party argument. When this bill comes to a vote he will find there was no party unanimity on this side as to the desirability of having an 87 per cent foreign owned insurance company incorporated in Canada.

Mr. Herridge: We welcome allies.

Mr. Moreau: Speaking only for myself I feel some objection to the bill but I do not criticize the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Ryan) for introducing it. This company, like any other, has a right to apply for a charter of incorporation, but I do not propose to vote for it.

I do not agree with the idea that the Saskatchewan plan is the end all of all plans.

Mr. Herridge: It is the beginning of all plans, not the end.

Mr. Moreau: We have a number of Canadian companies operating in this field at present and, by and large, they are doing a pretty good job. In fact the competition seems to be quite active, and sometimes I wonder if it is not a little severe, considering the number of insurance agents who call on us. On that account I propose to vote against the bill, and I would point out to hon. members opposite that we on this side do not all share the view that they have been crediting to us. I think there are some other hon. members on this side who do not agree with the bill, and will vote against it.

(Translation):

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, last week when the motion for second reading was before the house, our party objected through our colleague, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) who stated at one time that we would block this bill.

We do not wish this bill to be passed for several reasons. Up to now, several members spoke on the bill and I am quite aware that there were some repetitions. Moreover, I would like to comment on what the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Ryan) said last Thursday, when introducing the bill in the house.

For example, he said, among other things, that the Allstate Company was selling fire insurance, accident insurance and health insurance. He also added that another company also called Allstate was dealing in life insurance. And now, there would be another company bearing the name of Allstate and which would also solely deal in life insurance.

I wonder what is the purpose of this application for incorporating a corporation which will keep the same name as the two above-mentioned and which will sell exclusively life insurance.

I know that the hon. member will say that this Allstate Company which deals at present in life insurance is an American company and that its directors want to set up a Canadian corporation which will take the name of Allstate Life Insurance Company and will restrict its operations to life insurance, accident insurance and health insurance.

I should like to point out, Mr. Speaker, as many others have already done, that if the present Liberal government expects to meet part of the problems facing our country by establishing a planned economy, I feel that it will have to extend its planning to the field of insurance. Some might say that this is going a little too far. May I point out, Mr. Speaker, that I have been engaged for a good many years in the implementation of a planning system, and that I am consequently well aware of the implications of such a system. If the government intends to give us a planned or directed economy, the necessary measures must be taken to attain that goal.

I feel that various factors in the insurance field will have to be considered by the government, if it is really concerned about this country's economy.

[Mr. Moreau.]

Insurance has, at all times, been recognized as a source of capital funds, a sort of well into which flow the country's savings, and from which one can draw investment funds.

Mr. Speaker, hundreds, not to say thousands of insurance companies are found today in Canada. They spread over a wide range of activities, and offer a vast gamut of protection systems. But now we are asked to accept a newcomer. To make matters worse, its ownership would be 87.5 per cent American.

As far as I am concerned, I hold that the relative proportion of the Canadian ownership must be a little more than 12½ per cent, as this percentage is rather small.

If the government has seen fit now to levy a tax upon the dividends of corporations the owners of which hold bonds within a proportion of 25 per cent, well, I wonder what will happen if we are to allow companies with a Canadian ownership of only 12½ per cent to be incorporated in Canada. It seems to me that such a course has been followed too long already and I believe that an awakening is taking place at present.

Our group, with the support of some others, does not intend to set up methodical obstruction to every project, but this is a particular one which we intend to oppose as it establishes a principle. We do not oppose particularly the Allstate company but the principle of the bill which is before us.

The hon. member for Spadina told us that the Allstate Company was doing business in Canada, that it had 700 employees, that it expected to increase its staff to more than 1,000 and that more than 150,000 Canadians were insured with this company.

All this is very nice, Mr. Speaker, but I do not think that it is the right way to improve our economic position. Too many Canadians are insured with American companies whose profits go to the United States. I am of the opinion that we must prevent this great amount of Canadian capital from crossing the border.

We were told that this company rendered great service since they were selling over the counter. Our friend from Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) brought precisely to our attention that point concerning the notorious sales over the counter and we realize today the problems experienced by the people who used that means of protection.

Mr. Speaker, in fact, by talking against that bill, we do not want to criticize the hon.

member who introduced it in the house, far from it. He was asked to present this bill and he duly did so. There is no question of objecting to what he did personally. However, the basic principle of this bill must be considered and our group, for one, intends to discuss the purpose of the measure and even to oppose it. We must object to it unless we are given really acceptable reasons and assured that this company will soon become a true Canadian firm, whose profits will remain in Canada. Well, that is not something which the hon. member for Spadina is in a position to confirm at the present time, and I am not holding that against him. In fact, if that company belongs to Roebuck, an American firm, I do not think it will ever become Canadian.

In Canada, we want to become a little more independent; we are not anti-American, we do not want to wage an economic war against our neighbours to the south. But I feel that at this time we have to acknowledge this awakening, and I do regret that such a fact is not recognized by all the parties represented here. That awakening is a must, at the present time, if we wish to keep our capital in Canada. I would even go so far as to say that we have to create our own capital in this country.

This is not a new problem. But it is getting more and more obvious and the hon. members opposite as well as those of the official opposition must face it.

Our country has been confronted with a financial dilemma for a number of years and the future is not very reassuring. Moreover, last week we found that the United States administration is also confronted with a financial dilemma. Its intention is to establish surcharges in order to stop the flow of capital outside its own borders.

Then, on the basis of those facts, we must, as Canadians, take the necessary steps to avoid the increasing outflow of our own capital.

We could say that, after all, Canadians are responsible because they chose themselves to buy insurance from that company. It could even be said that we have no free enterprise. True, people must be allowed to act as they please but the theory of free enterprise is not the equivalent of a free-for-all.

I appreciate that we live in a free country at present. It still remains, however, that there are traffic lights in the streets and even though they restrict my freedom, I am not allowed to ignore them. The restriction in that case is for my own good.

It is the same thing here. The freedom of certain people is restricted in the better interests of all Canadians.

I know this is only one of thousands of insurance companies but it is our duty to plug the gaps one after the other so as to be able, one day, to solve the over all problem.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I suggest to the hon. member for Spadina to withdraw this measure since, after all, it is not going to serve Canadians or the country as a whole. It would be another matter if the company which is represented here by the hon. member—

(Text):

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Yes.

Mr. Ryan: I can understand the hon. member's concern when considering this matter and probably not knowing all the history or the facts about it, and I certainly cannot hope to give them all to hon. members. This bill was considered in the other place and in committee, and there is about a 10-page report on it. I may be giving the wrong impression but—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The hon. gentleman is now making a second speech on second reading when he asked permission to ask a question. Will he come to his question.

Mr. Ryan: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. Would the hon. gentleman consider letting this bill go to the standing committee of the house on banking and commerce, where witnesses can be cross-examined, the whole thing thrashed out and a proper determination made by the members of the committee who would have all the facts before them? It might still be thrown out or passed at that time.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): I am not a member of the committee on banking and commerce. If I attended the committee I would not be allowed to ask any questions, so I think I might settle that matter right now. I would ask, what is this company going to consist of? Will it be a truly Canadian company and not just 12½ per cent Canadian? I can imagine these fellows who put their names to their bill intend to move to obtain this result. If I may be allowed to speak a little longer, I will continue in French and explain why we object to the bill going to the committee on banking and commerce.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, when he asks us that this bill be referred to the banking and commerce committee, where officials of this company could be heard, I realize that the hon. member is only doing his duty. His request is a reasonable one. However, I have always noticed that when such measures are referred to the banking and commerce committee, only a few members have the opportunity to defend their views, and they are submerged in the group which is in favour of the measure under consideration. The same applies to similar bills. We shall certainly not win our cause. And even if the proposed amendments are rejected in this house—for they must be accepted by the house—this will not change anything since, in the last analysis, we intend to vote against the bill, especially as far as its principle is concerned.

If the hon. member can vouch that the company will have a Canadian content of at least 51 per cent—I should like to see it 100 per cent Canadian, but I am prepared to go half way—then, the bill can be redrawn, brought before the house once again, and we would probably let the bill pass because the legislation would be profitable for all Canadians.

There is another reason for us to object to the bill now before us and it is the principle behind it.

We notice that more and more private bills of that kind are put on the order paper of the house. We had a host of them last year and it is the same this year. We notice that those companies now wish to go French, that is they want a French name besides the English name they already have. We welcome this situation but actually, I say there is a little too much traffic. I think there is a little too much ground covered in that field.

To come back to what I was saying a while ago concerning the direction our country should take, I think that if we want to attain the objective aimed at by the group I belong to, we should see to it that such things do not happen.

In objecting to this bill, I think we are doing all Canadians a service. And the other companies waiting at the door to introduce similar proposals will have to think things over and change their attitude. They will have to consider themselves as Canadians. And not only 12 per cent Canadian, because that is not enough. We want those companies to be more Canadian.

In the future, when similar bills are brought before the house, we will make sure that those companies and the individuals concerned will take the necessary steps to ensure that the project is Canadian and that in fact, the interests of Canada are safeguarded.

(Text):

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, there are obviously very serious reservations on the part of all parties of the house with regard to this bill. There has been an expression of objection by members of all parties to certain aspects of the corporate structure and ownership of the company concerned. I think there would be some value in the suggestion that this bill be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce. There are some rather interesting aspects with respect to the profit-sharing plans of this company with their employees, for example, about which I personally should like to have the opportunity to ask the officials of the company. However, I appreciate the position of hon. members of this house who are not on that committee and their concern with the explanation they have received thus far. The sponsor of this bill claimed that he could not give a detailed explanation about all these matters, and I can appreciate that. I think it would be a little better if we had the officers of the company before the committee where we could subject them to questions which would give us direct and detailed explanations about the corporate structure of this company. If upon examination we found that 87½ per cent of the stock or ownership is to be vested in the United States, and that as a result of that 87½ per cent of the earnings will be exported to the United States, we must certainly agree with the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard) when he expresses concern about this aspect.

I think there is some merit in having the officers of the company come before a committee of this house to make these explanations. On the other hand, if they are not prepared to make some major changes in the explanations which have been given thus far, I think it may be, as the hon. gentleman has just mentioned, a matter of adding more time to kill the bill, eventually, anyway.

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, I would be far happier if our hon. friends opposite were talking this bill out for some specific reason or concrete purpose, other than the fact that some considerable portion of this company is to be owned by citizens of the United States. There may be good reasons why hon. members opposite feel that this company should not be incorporated in Canada, but this business of "Yankee go home" is not necessarily a good thing. We on this side of the house know that it is government policy to encourage a greater Canadian participation in our corporate entities which do business in this country. I do not think this necessarily implies that we do not wish or need or want to encourage further foreign capital to enter this country so as to create jobs for our people.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Greene: It is very peculiar that those people who cry the hardest against foreign capital coming into our country to create jobs do not say anything about the price we would pay by not having that foreign capital. It is clear that since the war the standard of living of our people would have been far lower if it had not been for the entry of foreign capital into this country.

Mr. Chapdelaine: Would the hon. member permit a question? Does he know that what is invested in these insurance companies is Canadian money which is then lent out to Canadians at interest for the benefit of the United States owners. This is money which formerly belonged to Canada.

Mr. Greene: I am not familiar with the investment policy of this particular company. I know of some companies which have put back every nickel they have earned in Canada so as to create more jobs here. I do not know whether the policy of this particular company is inclined in that direction. However, I think that to speak against a company for no other reason than that it is a United States company is wrong. There are many unemployed people in my riding and as far as I am concerned I would be happy to see anyone creating the plant which could provide them with work. I do not care who puts up the original capital. I would be happy, of course, if the profits were put back to create more jobs, but if some of those profits went to shareholders in the United States rather than to shareholders on Bay street I would still feel that it is better to encourage growth, wherever the investment comes from, as long as my people are working.

We on this side of the house are in favour of encouraging a greater participation by our own people in the financing of our corporate structures. Sometimes, good ideas come from the other side of the house. I heard a suggestion made on the other side of the house a few nights ago to the effect that the insurance companies which today tie up so much of the wealth of the country should be obliged by law to put a great deal more into the development or growth of our nation than they presently do. I think there probably is far too large a percentage of the savings of our Canadian people tied up at the present time in the funds of insurance companies, chartered banks and trust companies which, by law, must invest in directions which are not particularly productive and which create very few new jobs—they can scarcely go into any risk area other than the building of plushy office blocks for the companies themselves. I think we should encourage these institutions to invest a greater proportion of these savings in direction which would create new jobs and contribute far more to the growth of our economy.

There may be a valid argument which could be used against individual foreign corporations investing capital in this country because of the way in which they operated, or disposed of their profits, but I think the tendency today should be toward one world; there should be encouragement of greater participation by one country in the affairs of another. I am not a subscriber to what I call the "Little Canada" theory—the theory that we do not want anybody else here. If we were honest we would have to admit that, were it not for foreign investment, the standard of living of our people would have to be cut. If we were willing to build up an iron curtain around Canada we could, probably, develop our own resources, but it would have to be done far more slowly than we are doing at the present time. I do not think we need a curtain of this kind. I think we should proceed gradually, increasing the control of our own economy by stages. I do not think we need any flag waving, or any "Yankee go home" attitude. We need to ensure that these funds are used to promote the continued and orderly growth of our economy for the benefit of our people, and I suggest that to a large degree the United States capital which has been invested in this country has served both these purposes.

I contend that the American, British and European capital which has come into this country has not bled our people or exploited our economy. I think most of our corporate citizens, irrespective of their national origin, have been good corporate citizens. It may get votes on the hustings to wave the flag and cry, "Yankee, go home" but I have yet to hear examples of foreign capital, or United States capital, exploiting our people or doing anything but good by coming here, building plants, and bringing in the know-how and the machinery to provide jobs for our people and help expand our economy.

It has been said, as was said on one occasion with regard to the Chrysler corporation, that too many of the exports of these companies go from the United States rather than from subsidiaries in this country. But surely we could legislate so as to assure ourselves of a better deal in this respect, without frightening away foreign capital which would help provide more jobs for our people.

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Mr. Ryan: On a question of privilege, I am afraid that in asking a question of him I may have given the impression to the hon. member for Kootenay West, and others, that the superintendent of insurance gave reasons for recommending the incorporation of this company as a life company. I may have been unfair in making that suggestion. I would have put it more properly had I implied by my question that he gave reasons for not opposing the incorporation of this company. Those reasons appear in the proceedings of the banking and commerce committee of the Senate for Wednesday, November 14, 1962.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being six o'clock, the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired and the house will revert to the business which was interrupted at five o'clock.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Batten in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

Mr. Fane: Mr. Chairman, I am glad that at last I am able to take up the caveat I registered last night on some time in the debate today, and I hope to continue the address which was received with such great approval on both sides of the house last night. I hope that when I have finished my address it will receive the same approval, but I doubt it. It was a pleasure to give up my allotted time this afternoon to the leader of my party. It is a very difficult thing to follow perhaps the most able debater in Canada and what I will have to say will probably be somewhat of an anticlimax to his speech. However, I feel that at this time I should say something about the resolution, and particularly the budget.

[Mr. Greene.]

I was, I must say, more than surprised by the budget when it was presented by the Minister of Finance. What surprises me more than anything is the stony silence that has prevailed throughout on the part of the front-bench members of the government. Not one of the old pros in the government has risen to speak on behalf of the Minister of Finance, although he has been found fault with and criticized by almost everybody in Canada.

The minister says that he has some telegrams and letters commending him for his budget, but that is not the kind of letters and telegrams I have received. The 11 per cent tax on building materials and industrial machinery has been watered down a bit, of course, but I presume that in the course of time it will reach the full 11 per cent again. The fact that the tax has been criticized by almost everybody in Canada and that it has caused so much unemployment that was not in evidence before, and for which there was really no reason, is very bad advertising for the new government, the Minister of Finance and, of course for Canada.

So far as the 30 per cent withholding tax is concerned, the minister withdrew that very quickly on the request of a few of his millionaire friends and it certainly did not take him very long to do that. However, it took over a month and perhaps half a million requests from people all over Canada to get him to change the effect of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials, even to the extent that he has.

It is a very bad thing when everybody in Canada complains about a budget. It may be it was a good thing to impose a tax that affects almost everybody, but it is also a very bad thing in that it taxes one of the activities that the government was hoping would cause more employment in Canada and a great deal more activity. The fact is that in the result it has not helped to relieve unemployment at all.

Another thing I am very surprised at is that the revaluation of the dollar to 92½ cents in relation to United States currency during the Conservative regime was left alone, in spite of all the complaints and criticisms that the Liberal party and the Minister of Finance himself, notwithstanding his attitude in his book, "Troubled Canada", had levelled at the former government. They complained about it and said it would ruin Canada's economy.

I trust you are not going to stop me talking about that, Mr. Chairman. That is one of the very bad results of the budget and of these taxes. I noticed you were getting to your feet, Mr. Chairman. I presume you do not like me talking about the whole budget, but everybody else has been doing so, so I do not see how you can stop me.

A budget is supposed to be the brainchild of the Minister of Finance and perhaps the Prime Minister, in any event, of the government. When this budget was brought in it was not the brainchild of the government. It was brought in by the Minister of Finance, but apparently neither the Prime Minister nor any of the other ministers had ever heard of it before it was presented, because members on this side could see the look of dismay on their faces. It was something to behold, believe me.

The Minister of Finance has admitted, and it has been proven, that the budget was prepared by four assistants who were not members of the civil service. This, in itself, is an insult to the civil service, which has given such great service to Canada, and especially to the deputy minister of finance who has since left the department. He may have been given a promotion or he may not. It may have been at his own request; who knows? In any event, this budget that was presented was definitely not a budget that represented the feelings of the government. If the Minister of Finance has to consult other people, he could have consulted some 90 members of the Liberal party who occupy the back benches. He would have obtained a great deal better advice than he did from the members of financial houses in Toronto. He would have had a budget that was representative and approved by the people of Canada. This is one of the things he has learned, and believe me there are a lot of other things he must learn.

Of course, I have referred to this budget as the illegitimate brainchild of the four members of the financial houses in Toronto, and it has occurred to me that perhaps we should now question also the parentage of the minister's book "Troubled Canada". Canada really now has more cause to be troubled than she ever did before because the Minister of Finance has not realized he was supposed to present a budget that would be acceptable to the people of Canada and that would really help the economy of this country. It seems that now we have a government by Gordon, ghostwriters and gimmicks instead of, as in former times, government by crystal ball.

As I have remarked before, all the fault does not lie with the minister. Some of it must lie with the other members on the front benchers, because they allowed the minister to bring down a budget like that and, therefore, they could not have known what was in it. This must be one of the things that is worrying them now because not one of them has stood up to defend the Minister of Finance. This is something about which the people of Canada are wondering. Of course, the Secretary of State has given the minister answers when he has been asked questions, but he has not got up to speak in defence of the Minister of Finance. Of course, you could not expect anything else. The old pros in the front ranks of the cabinet are the same old pros as were there in 1957 when the government was thrown out of office by the people of Canada. There are two missing. The former prime minister is not here to hold them together, and neither is that man who was the government of Canada. He has gone to his great reward. I am referring to the late Hon. C. D. Howe. He was, at that time, the government of Canada and he ruled the roost. There was not any question about that.

I do not propose to take much more of the time of the committee. However, I am wondering how in the name of heaven the Minister of Finance proposes to legislate the people of Canada into investing their money in Canada. The trend seems to be that people who have money to invest invest it in places outside of Canada. They do not support industries in Canada. Whenever an industry in Canada is for sale, it is the people from outside the country who buy it. One has only to look at the case of Cockshutt Plow Company, which was the only Canadian implement company left, to find they sold out to foreign buyers.

If today the Canadian National Railways were put up for sale you would not find a buyer anywhere that would pay a proper price for it. However, if the Polymer Corporation, which is another child of the government, were put up for sale you would find plenty of buyers from all over the world. I do not know whether you would find any people from Canada willing to buy it, but it is a going concern. It pays its way. Why is it that Canadian businessmen who have money to invest, will invest in stocks or shares from other countries rather than invest their money in Canada? Perhaps the shares pay a quarter of 1 per cent more interest or dividend. This is something that I have never been able to understand. Why do people in Canada who have money to invest not invest that money in Canada?

I suggest also to the minister that if he wanted to impose a new tax that would be quite unpopular, but which is really a tax that should be in effect, he should investigate the possibility of taxing capital gains. I know that would meet the approval of my friends to the far left, but it might not meet with the approval of too many people who have money to invest in Canada. This is a place where a tax could be imposed that would be a fair tax.

Now, having made these few remarks, I shall conclude. I do not intend to lengthen this debate and I do not want to be accused of delaying this measure.

(Translation):

Mr. Beaule: Mr. Chairman, in his speech this afternoon, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) made a few insinuations about our attitude in the house. I will therefore take the liberty of asking him where his main lieutenants were, last Tuesday night, when there was a vote on the Speaker's decision. Only 54 Conservative members were here to cast their vote, although there were over 65 before the question was put. Were those members afraid to assume their responsibilities or were they prevented from voting freely?

What happened to the 208 seats they held in 1958? Where are the 50 members from the province of Quebec?

The Conservative party has lost the people's confidence because of the inaction and the indecision shown by its leader.

We are accused of voting for measures that go against our principles. Mr. Chairman, during the last session—

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I would like to remind the hon. member that the remarks he intends to make to the house must be confined to the resolution under consideration. I think the hon. member will not want to go against the rules of the house.

Mr. Beaule: Mr. Chairman, I shall—

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: On the point of order which has been raised, since the right hon. gentleman was allowed to make an attack on hon. gentlemen opposite, I am astonished at the intervention made by the hon. member. It seems to me that all hon. members of the house should be treated in the same manner and the hon. gentleman should not be interfered with.

Mr. Martineau: In reply to the Secretary of State, if any attack was made on hon. gentlemen it should have been raised at the time by way of privilege, and should not enter into the orbit of the debate on the budget resolution. I think the Secretary of State will admit that.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I will not admit anything of the kind. I did raise a point of order, and notwithstanding the point of order I raised the right hon. gentleman was allowed to proceed. I insist, sir, that we should treat ordinary hon. members of the house in the same way as the right hon. gentleman, because all of us are elected and all of us in this house are equal.

(Translation):

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, after listening to the remarks of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), one is led to believe that this afternoon the chairman of the committee may have transgressed the rules of this house, but if a mistake was made this afternoon, would we be justified to tolerate a second one tonight?

The Chairman: Order. I do not believe it would be advantageous to go any further along this line.

I admit that this afternoon the Secretary of State raised a point of order. There is no doubt that standing order 35 to the effect that no member may criticize a vote of the house did apply. When the hon. member raised the matter this afternoon I therefore confirmed his point of order in what may have been a diplomatic way, by inviting the right hon. Leader of the Opposition to abide by the rules and I believe that after this call to order he heeded the ruling of the Chair and did not try to continue the remarks he had started to make along those lines.

I believe that, in order for the debate to be continued in an orderly manner, it would be advantageous if the hon. member for Quebec East would abstain from pursuing the remarks he had started to make in reply, I grant, to what the Leader of the Opposition had to say this afternoon.

Mr. Beaule: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, but the Leader of the Opposition still had time to make his remarks.

I simply want to say that if we were unable to vote on a budget last year it was because none was submitted to us. In short there was no vote because it was an election year and they were afraid to take their responsibilities.

Today, if the government in office has imposed taxes it is to pay for the blunders of the previous administration.

Mr. Chairman, the matter before us, namely an amendment to the Excise Tax Act has caused lots of articles to be written.

On June 13 last, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) submitted a budget to the house. In that budget was a resolution to impose a 30 per cent tax on foreign takeovers; but he had to withdraw that resolution from his budget due to the pressures of one Mr. Kierans who is the agent of big financial interests in the United States.

Afterwards, the minister specified that he had withdrawn this budget resolution due to administrative problems and hardly a week ago, we noted that the administrative problems were in fact the imposition by the United States government of a 15 per cent tax on American investments abroad.

Well, if you like, I will tell you about a case where the most influential financiers of the twenties failed.

In 1923, an important meeting was held in the Edgewater Hotel in Chicago. There were present 10 of the greatest financiers in the world.

The group included:

1. The president of the largest steel-works of the United States.
2. The president of the National City Bank.
3. The president of the largest public utility company.
4. The president of the largest gas company.
5. The greatest speculator on wheat.
6. The president of the New York stock exchange.
7. A member of the presidential cabinet.
8. The director of the most powerful monopoly in the world.
9. The most famous bear of Wall street.
10. The president of the international exchange bank.

It must be admitted that this meeting grouped the most highly rated men in the world, at least men who knew how to make a lot of money.

Twenty five years later, an investigation was made to see where success had led those men.

The president of the largest steel-works of the United States, Charles Schwab, had died in poverty and lived from borrowed money the last five years of his life.

The president of the largest public utility company, Samuel Insull, had died in a foreign country after fleeing from the law of his country.

The president of the largest gas company, Howard Hopsom, was declared insane.

The largest speculator on wheat, Arthur Cotton, died debt-ridden outside the country.

The president of the New York stock exchange, Richard Whitney, was just out of Sing Sing.

A member of the presidential cabinet, Albert Fall, died at home shortly after having been released from jail on parole.

The most famous Wall street bear, Jesse Livermore, committed suicide.

The head of the most powerful monopoly in the world, Ivar Kreuger, shot himself through the head.

All those men had discovered the secret of how to make money but none of them had learned the art of living.

This interesting study was published in The Whizz, a monthly bulletin of the Rotary Club of Winnipeg.

Mr. Chairman, if their ideas were taken too seriously, where would they lead us?

Let us think for instance about the 11 per cent tax we are studying at present. Instead of levying it at one go, the government decided to proceed by easy stages. The minister probably thought that, when applied step by step, that measure would seem less painful than if the government went at once the whole hog while the net result would be the same.

I wonder if after having spoken to the president of the Canadian builders' association, the minister would have agreed to strike out the new 11 per cent tax from the budget, as he did with the 30 per cent tax on foreign control?

Those who hold the purse strings and who control credit are granted preferential treatment, but the government certainly hits the bull's eye when it comes to taxing the average taxpayer. The 11 per cent tax on building materials has affected our construction workers, and the new tax will certainly slow down our building industry, the price of one family dwellings will go up at least $500, and the increase might reach $5,000 on apartment houses.

Such a slowing down in the building industry will cause greater unemployment in that field, from the manufacturer down to the worker.

We can understand that a family man with an average income who wished to have a house of his own, would have changed his mind since the imposition of this new 11 per cent tax.

And what about the firm that wanted to expand or to buy some equipment? It will have to wait before risking its capital on account of this 11 per cent tax.

On the other hand, had the government introduced a budget in accordance with the people's needs, which would have included resolutions providing an increase in the personal base income exemption, an increase and extension up to the age of 18 of family allowances, those resolutions would have enlarged the purchasing power and this country's economy would be much better off.

In addition, if the government had provided for the financing of the national debt, a vast program of public works, municipal loans, etc. through the Bank of Canada and on the basis of services and national product, the country would be in a much better position.

Mr. Chairman, if the government had worked through the Bank of Canada, as I have said, to set up a vast program of public works instead of establishing this 11 per cent tax, it would have solved to a great extent the problem of unemployment in Canada which will only be made worse by this new tax. This problem is of the utmost urgency because the situation is alarming.

If we consider that, in 1962, there was on the average 391,000 unemployed in Canada, it means that on the basis of 250 working days per year, we lost 97,750,000 man-days of work because of unemployment. Those are significant figures. That is why we must deal with unemployment immediately and it is not by imposing new taxes that we will improve the situation.

An extensive program of public works would be welcomed by all Canadians, and particularly those of Quebec city where unemployment is also present. The city of Quebec needs an incentive to develop its industrial and commercial activities. It needs the help of federal government, for instance, for the reclamation of St. Charles river, that has been for many years a political football of the old political parties.

It is inconceivable that, in 1963, in Quebec city, the cradle of American civilization, one of the greatest tourist centres, an agreement has not yet been reached to solve that problem, a thing that the people had been expecting for many years.

Mr. Chairman, what prevents the development of the commercial district of Quebec city at the present time is the problem created by the St. Charles river and the railroad crossings. When we consider the estimates of the Department of Transport, I will come back to that matter.

At this point I would like to congratulate the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Cantin) on his appointment as parliamentary secretary of the Minister of Transport. He is in the right place to intervene with the minister so that the work can be completed as quickly as possible because, as member for Quebec South, I think that part of his constituency is also affected by the railroad crossings and the St. Charles river. If I am not mistaken—

The Chairman: I wonder if the hon. member for Quebec East could explain how his present remarks are related to the resolution under study?

Mr. Beaule: I am coming to it, Mr. Chairman.

The hon. member for Quebec South spoke about restoring old Quebec, in a televised program during the last election campaign. I hope that in his plan for the restoration of the old Quebec, he will not forget to add the necessary amounts for the development of St. Charles river and the removal of railway crossings.

Mr. Chairman, if the government intends to alleviate unemployment, it is the moment to prove to the people its good intentions and it is not with a levy of new taxes that things are going to improve. On the contrary, that 11 per cent tax interferes with construction and I hope that the government will find a way to balance its budget in making use of the Bank of Canada so as to eliminate, some day, that 11 per cent tax on building materials and equipment.

(Text):

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Chairman, there are a few aspects of this resolution that I wish to discuss this evening. However, I shall attempt to be brief in order to facilitate the work of the committee. It still remains a mystery to most Canadians why the exemptions applied to building materials should be withdrawn at this particular time. The fact that the building and allied trades constitute one of our best means of creating employment makes it even more mystifying. The reduction from 11 per cent to 4 per cent—a concession, I might say, that was wrung from the minister—while cushioning the immediate impact of the full tax on construction does not alter the fact that a good many people in this country who had intended to build or renovate property are having second thoughts in this regard.

The minister's explanation that this particular tax was necessary to help reduce the budget deficit, it seems to me, is certainly shortsighted, because a reduction in the construction program across the country will reduce, rather than add to, the taxes forthcoming from this particular industry. Surely there were other means of finding revenue that would not adversely affect employment and private and industrial development as much as this one. In addition the construction industry lost three vital weeks during the debacle that followed the introduction of the budget—a budget, I might say, that ran counter to the government's boast that they would increase employment and get the economy rolling. The removal of the tax exemption on building materials on an escalating scale starting at 4 per cent certainly does not give any encouragement for expansion in that industry.

The gimmick type of approach used in the budget leads one to believe that it was written up or put together by a group of inept merchandisers rather than fiscal experts. A case in point is the $500 prize offered for winter construction, a measure that has been rather effectively erased by the imposition of the tax on building materials. The gimmick approach seems to have set the theme for the whole affair and has now become the symbol of the Liberal party—gimmicks born of ineptitude out of expediency. I would like to quote what Mr. John Meyer, the financial expert for some of the leading eastern newspapers, had to say recently in the financial column of the Ottawa Journal:

> Whatever the explanation, the tax has to be withdrawn in all its new applications and as quickly as possible, whatever the cost in budget calculations and political embarrassment. Mr. Gordon shouldn't be allowed to wait until a round of price increases forces his hand as the stock market break forced his hand in the withdrawal of the takeover tax. Deferred or cancelled construction and equipment contracts could still be reinstated if the tax is quickly withdrawn. If Mr. Gordon is allowed to hold to it, through the tolerance of the government or division in the opposition, he will have the distinction of having braked a national economy to a standstill all by himself.

Tinkering with the former government's economic program in a desperate, but mistaken attempt to equal last year's gross national product, and at the same time find more money for their gimmicks by the tax on building materials and production machinery, may very well have set the wheels of progress in reverse. Of particular concern to people hoping to modernize their home and business places in areas other than incorporated towns—and I hope the minister is listening to this, because I think it is very important—or municipalities that are not affected, is the provision under paragraph 1(c) repealing the exemptions for goods used as part of sewerage and drainage systems. I would just like to read for the record what paragraph 1(c) provides:

> 1. That the present exemption from sales tax for certain building materials be withdrawn by repealing the exemption for all goods mentioned under the heading "Building materials" in schedule III of the said act and by repealing the exemptions for

And this is what subparagraph (c) provides:

> "Goods for use as part of sewerage and drainage systems, and articles and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture thereof;"

This tax places an added burden on home and business owners located in rural areas and where municipal sewerage systems are not feasible. It will add to the capital costs of establishing motels in some of our tourist areas where the total cost of a sewerage system must be borne by the owner himself.

With these illustrations in mind, I think it is only just to say that this particular item is discriminatory in that it does not recognize the difference between those who have these services provided for them out of general taxes and those who have to pay for these services themselves, sincle clause 2 exempts municipalities from application of the tax.

We would be interested to hear the minister's views on this item and we are sure that a lot of people in the rural areas who have been looking forward to being able to afford a few of the amenities of life, of which a decent sewage system is one, would be interested too. We are certainly hoping that the minister will seriously consider the discrimination imposed on the rural people by paragraph 1(c) and have it withdrawn. As I have mentioned, the building and allied trades have proven to be an important factor in the creation of employment and economic expansion. Cognizance of this is reflected in the hundreds of telegrams received by hon. members on all sides of the house from across the nation, and many of our people close to the situation fear the consequences of the tax in terms of construction, employment and economic well-being. The result may well be that the government's boast to get the economy rolling may turn out to be as empty as the proverbial cupboard.

The facts, officially confirmed, show that 1962 was a year when all segments of the economy forged ahead to new plateaus under a government program designed to stimulate progress in both domestic and foreign trade. If this government is going to assist the economy in trying to maintain a healthy growth, they would be well advised to cancel the taxes they have imposed on building materials, including all of paragraph (1) of the amendment to the Excise Tax Act, and give the nation some practical leadership so sadly lacking in their so-called 60 days of decision.

There is another section of paragraph 1 of the resolution which I should like briefly to discuss, and that is that having to do with the treatment of timber poles and lumber. As I understand it, under paragraph 1(a) of the resolution, even fence posts when not in the raw state—that is to say, with the bark on them as the wood is taken from the tree—are subject to tax. That includes posts split, peeled, sharpened and creosoted. It seems to me that when the minister has to reach down to the lowly fence post to find extra taxes, it is time the government took a summer holiday, as suggested by the Prime Minister this afternoon, in order to clear the cobwebs from their collective thinking, drop this nefarious tax, and come back with new measures designed to assist rather than deter the economy of this great country of ours.

(Translation):

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, we have been discussing for several hours the matter under study and we all seem to agree in opposing this 11 per cent tax on building materials.

After our public protest against that tax, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) seemed to retreat, but it was just a strategic move for a better sprint towards taxation, and besides all will admit that this is the method of the old-line parties. It is not by compelling us to go to the scaffold, step after step, that we will forget what is in store for us up there, and in some way the people will eventually have to pay that 11 per cent tax imposed by the budget.

However, what shocked me most at first was the way the minister yielded to the American financiers, when Mr. Kierans came and had him erase by a stroke of the pen the 30 per cent tax on Canadian stock sales to non-residents, and his rather disturbing stubbornness in maintaining the 11 per cent tax on building materials. If it displeases American finance, then everything must be sacrificed to prevent such a disaster, but if it means acting outrageously against those who sent us here, then it has no importance at all. The hundreds of representations coming from every part of Canada cannot move the Minister of Finance.

Is the minister aware that building timber is the main industry in my own riding of Roberval? More than 50 per cent of the mills have already closed up or cut down production, leaving hundreds of families apprehensive about the future. It is humanly impossible to foresee the coming of winter under these conditions. The minister has received representations from all public bodies and industrialists of my area. Is he oblivious of the fact that notwithstanding the needs for taxation, there are thousands of men, women and children hoping to receive a human answer from his government.

I hope that the Canadian people will finally understand the great truths that we, of the Social Credit, have been advocating for 20 years, namely that the worst enemies of economy are the old-line parties who listen much more readily to the financiers' whims than to human needs. The minister might say that it is precisely to help the people in their fight against unemployment that he levies this 11 per cent tax. The aim is surely commendable, but the means taken to attain that object are wrong. We can compare that situation to someone who says to a man who has no money to buy bread: "Give me $5 and I shall give you back $2 so that you can buy bread."

I am addressing myself to the present minister, as I would to any minister from the two old line parties, because their solutions, when they are in power, are always one and the same, that is, taxes.

They succeed each other in turn, and each blames those new taxes on the other.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

Listen to what this government tells us. The Minister of Finance explains that he has to impose a sales tax of 11 per cent on building materials, to correct the mistakes of the Conservatives. The Conservatives certainly did make mistakes, and more particularly the failure to present a budget. In that respect, we waited patiently for one, two, three, five or six months, and we even still believed their seventh promise. And the play on words went on.

What was the reason which forced them to play at hide-and-seek? Did they find their last year in office so troublesome that they were unable to come through with a budget? Or, rather, were they somewhat embarrassed not to be able to lay the blame on the Liberals, an advantage which the Liberals are now exploiting to the hilt.

Mr. Chairman, one thing is certain, if ever a city council behaved like the former government, and never produced a budget, I would pity that mayor and those councillors when they had to face the people. Logically, we should have had no excuse for tolerating such behaviour on the part of the central government.

The parties which are guilty of such action should at least go and hide their shame and stop blaming those who actually prevented a social suicide.

Mr. Chairman, we are opposed to the 11 per cent sales tax. All our fellow citizens are also against it.

An hon. Member: We would like to know about that.

Mr. Gauthier: Wait a minute, you will soon get the information. And I hope that I will not have to read again for the minister's benefit all those protests I forwarded to him. Besides, I would be unable to do it, because some government members are always raising a point of order when we dig up some evidence too conclusive looking. Therefore, I will avoid giving them that chance because this has become a sport with some members of the government.

The three opposition parties stated their opposition to the 11 per cent sales tax, but each in its own way.

And now I come to a most important point for the opposition because it is very well to say no, that we are against this or that, but what is more important, in my opinion, is to offer an alternative.

The fact, therefore, is well established, the Liberals have imposed an 11 per cent tax because they wanted to balance their budget and reduce unemployment.

Therefore, if we oppose this means of collecting future budgetary funds we must absolutely find an alternative way acceptable to our people. That is the problem.

Unless I am mistaken, the members of the New Democratic party oppose the 11 per cent sales tax and some of them even suggested an alternative: "We should accumulate increased deficits".

At first sight, that suggestion looks strange and even ludicrous. As a matter of fact, the New Democratic party seems to be suggesting: "You want to find the funds to balance your budget? You do not have to tax, there is only one way to do it: increase your indebtedness. You need money? Borrow some. You need more money? Borrow some more, do it until there is no money at all left to be borrowed."

Maybe they have found a magic formula which will enable a country indebted to the full extent of its national assets to start all over again from scratch? In that case, we should try to reach that maximum before everybody starves to death.

Nevertheless, that was a suggested solution. It was a doubtful one but still it was a worthy effort.

However, I admit that I was quite taken aback by the amendment they moved the other night, when they simply asked for the deletion of the paragraph on the 11 per cent sales tax, without any alternative suggestion. This does not look at all like N.D.P. policy.

The mover must have known that he was unable to move an amendment to do away with essential budget revenue without first suggesting an alternative to raise such revenue.

So, the chairman had to rule the amendment out of order.

The Conservatives have also in part stated their views on the 11 per cent tax. But as always, they opposed it just to be against something. They must do so because they are the official opposition. They do not ask themselves why and they have not thought about making a concrete proposal to replace the 11 per cent tax.

An hon. Member: What is your proposal?

Mr. Gauthier: You will know it at the end of my remarks. Besides, I am quite sure that in the same circumstances, the Conservatives would have imposed the same taxes as the Liberals, because both do the bidding of the same vested interests. For the time being, their role is to be against and to play politics in order to dazzle the people. We had a good example of that from the Leader of the Opposition himself (Mr. Diefenbaker) this afternoon.

In fact, the lamentable incident of this afternoon has done much to disillusion a young member. When you expect so much from the former leader of the country, and you see him go so low for the purpose of playing vulgar politics, I can tell you it is a heart-breaking spectacle.

And I say to the Leader of the Opposition that he should set an example for his supporters instead of making an exhibition of himself.

The House of Commons is not a show place and the Leader of the Opposition should be old enough to realize that.

As far as I am concerned, I always considered him as a real gentleman among parliamentarians until today, but I say sincerely that my opinion has changed very much since this afternoon.

I think that this afternoon we saw the true face of the Leader of the Opposition, I wish I had never seen it, to keep the image I had of him. I even wonder why the house tolerates such vulgarity? A reform is imperative. People do not speak the truth—but at the same time they pretend they are telling the truth—to try and hoodwink the people. Or they make statements which smell politics for miles, like the ones made by the hon. member for Acadia (Mr. Horner) on the evening of July 24—that is their job, all right—when he knew perfectly well that the question put was on the ruling of the chairman concerning the adherence to the standing order and an N.D.P. amendment which I myself considered as incomplete.

The hon. member for Acadia shouted in the house that the Social Crediters had voted for the 11 per cent tax. His leader confirmed that statement this afternoon. It is a shameless lie. You said the worst abominations during the election against our group because we did not have the American funds you had to defend ourselves.

The Chairman: Order. May I point out to the hon. member that he seems to wander farther and farther from the resolution before the house. I would ask him to co-operate with his colleagues in this house and confine his remarks to the resolution.

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, may I say one word in reply to the remarks made by the hon. member for Roberval?

The Chairman: I called the hon. member to order and I do not think there is a debate on that point.

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I shall hurry up a little because some people want to know what suggestions I have to make to replace this 11 per cent tax.

But I wish to mention that I made those observations in self-defence. You gave full latitude to the Leader of the Opposition this afternoon, and I do not see why those who only take the floor once in a while should not have the right to defend themselves.

Therefore, to come back to the attacks of the hon. member for Acadia—you will notice that I have left the Leader of the Opposition and changed the subject to come back to those attacks—I say that if his shoes hurt his toes, he should stop yelling at his neighbour and find out what is wrong in his own bailiwick. Are your provincial wounds still burning?

I have too much respect to ask you why some of your Conservative members did not vote that night. But, at least, do stop lying to the house by stating that the Social Credit members voted in favour of the 11 per cent tax.

Now I am getting to my subject matter.

You know very well that it is absolutely false, because we voted to support a decision rendered by Mr. Speaker on a point of order.

If those who are taking notes, looked up Hansard, they would see that six of my colleagues voted—I say six and therefore not all the Social Credit members—six of my fellow members voted to sustain Mr. Speaker's decision, while the others voted against it.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question?

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Gauthier: Later, when I have finished my remarks, because an hon. member asked me three times what my suggestion was, and I shall tell him.

Five others voted against the decision; they were entitled to do so, as we have no party dictatorship in our ranks. As far as I am concerned, I did not vote at all because I had not quite sized up the chairman's decision. I do not usually feel responsible for other people's houses, but when somebody comes and dirties my doorstep, I do not allow him to do so.

I say to the hon. member for Acadia that we are just now discussing the 11 per cent tax in the house. He did criticize it again at length yesterday, but what positive steps did his party take to remedy the situation? None at all. Hot air and words, that is the limit of your objectivity. We shall forgive you, but do not do it again.

We are also opposed to the 11 per cent tax, but we are suggesting to the government a substitute.

An hon. Member: What for instance?

Mr. Gauthier: The solution might not be quite to the liking of a few petty millionaires, but it would bring us the necessary funds to balance our budget which must stop showing a deficit. We of the Social Credit party at least believe that when somebody has debts, he is not going to pay them off by piling up new ones.

The minister is asking for suggestions? At this stage, he does not necessarily need suggestions, but just some individual faith, assurance and national confidence.

As a people, we are mature, at least that is what we are told, and we should no longer believe the old tales of the wicked fairy.

I believe that our Minister of Finance is still beset by a primitive fear of the myth of the American financier. We should free ourselves from those traces of colonialism and apply ourselves to control our economy by our own means. Let us stop borrowing the neighbour's car when we can buy our own. Will we dare drive it at last?

This is what we expect of your government, Mr. Minister.

When you go back before the people, they will not ask you how many votes you carried in the house, but to what extent you enabled Canadians to control their own country.

It is not by depriving someone of his property that he is made to own it, but by exerting every legitimate effort to give him back what was taken away from him.

You know very well that by levying an 11 per cent tax on building materials, even though our economy is based on the construction industry, instead of creating jobs and alleviating unemployment, you will force many industries to close down and to increase the number of men laid off, thus undermining our last hope of seeing the economy get moving again.

It would be possible today to go through the Bank of Canada—that is the solution, sir—to create new credit needed for our economic recovery.

We will soon be considering an amendment to the Bank Act; that is a unique opportunity for your government to take over the very control of our economy.

I need not labour today the idea of monetary reform advocated by our group. You have heard about it more than once.

If I have still to convince you, at least read the writings of a former governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Towers. You will certainly get in that way an inkling of the reform needed if the Bank of Canada is to play its true part in the Canadian economy.

Thus, we may hope that one day we will no longer be at the mercy of some financiers who set the degree of our vitality. We will be able to live in freedom in our country, only when all the members of parliament understand the importance of that reform.

(Text):

Mr. Chaplin: Mr. Chairman, in taking part in the debate on this resolution dealing with the excise tax, I should like to commence by extending my congratulations to the Minister of Finance on his appointment to this high office. I should like also to take this opportunity of wishing him well. Since I have just returned to the house, I have not been able to do that before. As I say, having been away for some time and judging from what I have read, the minister might be reasonably happy to have some good wishes extended to him, regardless of the quarter of the house from which they come.

The point has been reached, however, where the niceties and amenities that we observe and expect in this house clash headlong with the realities of the situation that has developed. I regret, very sincerely that I am unable to extend congratulations to the minister upon his budget or upon the manner in which it has been presented to this house. There are many people in this country who would like to forget the resolution with which we are now dealing, and I am sure there are a great many members opposite who would like to forget the whole budget. This budget is going to be remembered in this country for a long time to come. As long as it is remembered, the anniversary of the date of its introduction, June 13, will be recalled, I am sure, as amateur night in Canada.

I have a certain sympathy with the apparent objectives and aims of the minister. For example, I think I would have no quarrel with the long term objective of repatriating Canadian industry. However, I was greatly surprised at the method by which it was attempted, in that it was obviously punitive, discriminatory and largely directed against the United States. I had rather expected a system of incentives for Canadians. It was quite apparent that the takeover tax was doomed to failure from the very start, primarily because the ideas of the minister proved to be impractical and unenforceable.

When dealing with another section of the Income Tax Act, the minister put great stress on certain incentives that were contained in the budget and the beneficial effects they would have on expansion of Canadian industry. I feel the minister was overstressing the value of those incentives. In fact, I feel that he will be very disappointed in the results arising therefrom because, in my opinion, those incentives will be valueless unless the government itself creates a climate of confidence in this country. The businessmen, the manufacturers of this country will not use those incentives unless they have confidence in the future. This budget, and particularly this resolution, with its backing and filling, has created doubt and confusion. It has inspired distrust in the business community of this country and in a wide segment of industry throughout Canada. The backing and filling, the ineptitude with which this budget has been prepared, has created doubt and uncertainty, and the results are now becoming apparent to the people of Canada in the appalling lack of decision on the part of the government. That is underlined in this very resolution.

I have some letters here from various companies in my constituency with which I should like to deal, if I may take some time. The hon. member for Waterloo North dealt with a number of industries in his constituency the other evening, and I should like to mention one or two in mine to stress the points I have in mind. I am sure that I shall have the blessing of the hon. member for Kootenay East in that regard.

Mr. Byrne: Don't be too sure.

Mr. Chaplin: In this respect, I should like to quote from a letter from Galt Metal Industries, one of the large companies in my constituency. This is what they have to say about this measure:

> In the business in which our company is engaged, that of the manufacture of automotive parts, we are competing with manufacturers in other countries who import into Canada. In addition to the depressing effect that the sales tax added to production machinery and supply will have on other industries, our industry, and particularly our part of the automotive parts industry, will be severely affected when it comes to being required to add 11 per cent to the cost of our tooling. As you perhaps know, the cost of tooling is a very large part of the cost of producing automotive parts particularly in our low volume Canadian production.
>
> Because of the action taken in November of 1962 which established the export credit program to offset duty on automotive automatic transmissions, our company has gained considerable export business into the U.S. It is highly doubtful that had we been required to add 11 per cent to the cost of tooling that we would have been able to obtain this business.

I should like to quote from another letter from Babcock-Wilcox and Goldie-McCulloch Limited.

The new sales tax on building material and equipment for the production of goods has a very serious effect on our company position and therefore, employment in South Waterloo.

The new sales tax has a twofold effect on our position. Firstly it results in an 11 per cent increase in price to almost all our customers; this has caused cancellation of purchases and will continue to restrict the demand for our products. Second, it has increased our own operating costs by the new tax of 11 per cent on plant machinery, repair parts and shop supplies.

The new tax can only have a serious detrimental effect on the community. You personally are aware that we are the major industry in Galt as far as male employees and family income is concerned.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have many such letters. I have more than I could read, but I do not want to take up the time of the committee. I am only reading these to illustrate the points I have in mind. I am sure that the minister himself has had communications of this kind. It is true that these letters were written before the tax was reduced to 4 per cent and when we were still talking about an 11 per cent tax. However, the basic complaints and arguments that they make are still valid.

I realize that the minister can probably make a very good case for the elimination of all excise tax exemptions. As the hon. member for Leeds said last night, I believe, there is no reason for any one industry or segment of our economy, such as the building and construction industry or capital goods industry to have exemptions that do not apply to other industries. This may be true, Mr. Chairman, but I think that the timing of the removal of this exemption is most unfortunate. One of the great problems we face today, as the Minister of Finance has said on so many occasions in the past, and particularly during the last election campaign, is the elimination or attempt to minimize unemployment in this country. The exemption of the building industry from excise tax was originally designed to stimulate that industry and to stimulate employment. If that is true and it has worked out to advantage, as I believe it has, then it holds that the cancellation or elimination of this exemption will have the opposite effect. It will be restrictive and will reduce employment.

So far as the capital goods industry is concerned, we have an unusual situation. We have the Minister of Trade and Commerce telling secondary industries that they must increase their efficiency because we are going to reduce tariffs, and Canadian industry, to a greater extent than ever before, will have to face competition not only in the markets of the world but in our own domestic markets. The government, which is piously urging manufacturers to reduce costs, is at the same time arbitrarily increasing them, and this cost increase will apply to exports as well as to domestic sales. That is a strange way to assist Canada's export drive.

How does the Minister of Finance propose that industry become more efficient? How does he propose that it meet the type of competition envisaged by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. We certainly cannot meet this kind of competition by cutting or decreasing our labour rates. In fact possibly the only way open to us is increased modernization and efficiency through the use of new capital equipment. This is the area to which we must turn to meet the specifications laid down by the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and this is the very area in which costs are so important that we should not be increasing them but should be striving in every way we can to lower costs on capital equipment.

We were led to believe, particularly during the last election campaign, that the government's policy would be expansionist. Instead of that it is restrictive, and in my opinion restrictive to a very dangerous degree.

Then we come to consumable products and processing materials used in the production of goods. As I understand it, the government has backed down in removing the exemption from such products, but this concession is not really as wide or comprehensive as manufacturers had been led to believe. I have received communications from factories and companies in my constituency asking for clarification as to what items are exempted from duty. They have also written to the Department of National Revenue and have received numerous answers that have been confusing in themselves. Why is this? It is not because of any inefficiency on the part of the officials of that department, but simply because they are just as confused as everybody else in the country.

My own impression is that the sales tax is now to be applied on a wide list of goods that were formerly exempted; but this again is just another example of the utter confusion that seems to permeate the whole government. Actually there is an air of unreality about the whole budget. It is a Walter in Wonderland budget.

We all recognize the fact that the minister must find sources of revenue for the needs of his government. In this respect we are now discussing a further increase in taxes, and to the best of my knowledge there has never been any suggestion by the minister—I qualify that by saying there was a suggestion by the Prime Minister today—outlining any possible economies in the operation of government itself. If there were a reduction in that direction shown by the government, then I think the people of the country would respond much more readily to the raising of these taxes. It also seems to me that the implementation at this time of certain recommendations of the Glassco commission would help to restore faith and confidence in the country and, incidentally, in the government itself.

Another feature of this resolution is the progressive nature of the sales tax and the manner in which it is being applied. I do not think the minister should be applying taxes to take effect two years hence. He has changed his position from the original budget. He has reduced the tax from 11 per cent to 4 per cent for the immediate future, and it progressively builds up to 11 per cent over the next two years. I submit he made these changes under pressure, and they have in effect been a face-saving device.

There is no assurance that the minister will be in that particular office a year hence, and it could well be that to impose future taxation of this kind would only embarrass his successor and inhibit his usefulness. When I look across at the benches opposite and see that hungry expression on the face of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I would only suggest that there are perhaps only a few months of usefulness left to the hon. minister.

Mr. Sharp: I had a good dinner.

Mr. Chaplin: Oh, indeed; from here it is hard to see that. The Minister of Finance has pointed out that by applying this tax over a period of time it will soften its impact on industry. I agree with him in this. It may be so, but it brings to my mind another problem to which serious consideration should be given. Having fixed and specific dates on which this tax is to be increased could well be an invitation to excessive inventory speculation. This could be particularly so in building materials, and might readily have the effect of stimulating the economy until such time as the tax was increased. It could also have a very depressing effect, once the increases came into force.

If this does result in excessive inventory speculation it will be the big corporations that will benefit. It will be the big companies and big operators with cash available who will get the benefit of this, and again it will be the small businessman who will suffer in his inability to compete with the price advantages which the big companies get by meeting this tax.

In closing, one of the other areas of omission in the budget is that it seems there has been no provision or attempt to correct our trade balance with the United States. That unfavourable balance is a most serious problem for the government and the country. The Minister of Finance has not faced up to the situation; but now, with the restrictions that have been threatened by the Americans on the movement of capital to Canada, I hope the government will recognize the problem, will take cognizance of it and take some constructive action in this area, because I believe it is of the utmost seriousness to Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I promise not to waste the valuable time of the house. I only wish to do justice to those who have appealed to me to defend their opinions. I also wish to speak on behalf of the Quebec district in addition to the metropolitan area of Montreal who does not have the privilege of being represented by a member in the opposition who understands the views of the industrialists, manufacturers and people in the construction industry.

I neither wish to repeat nor hack all the arguments put forward by the members who have wasted much of our time. However, I must say, like everybody, that I have received many letters, telegrams and telephone calls.

Moreover, I would like to quote two prominent figures in the province of Quebec who have objected to that 11 per cent tax being applied all at once or gradually during a three-year period which amounts to the same thing. Those people talked about amounts of which they would be deprived for a period of five years each. I am thinking of Mr. Rene Levesque who stated that Quebec's hydro projects would have to be curtailed because of this tax, bringing about additional expenses amounting to approximately $10 million a year. In passing, I might mention to the hon. Minister of Finance that Quebec hydro is an agency which should be very familiar to him since his accounting firm is keeping books for them.

Let me also quote His Honour the Mayor of Montreal, Mr. Jean Drapeau, who said that this tax puts Montreal in an intolerable situation and will force the city to spend $30 million more in the next five years.

I would like to suggest to the minister that even without following the Social Credit theory, any increase in the building sector would bring about an increase in employment, and in the amounts paid to the workers which never escape the clutches of the Department of National Revenue; therefore the taxes which would be paid by the workers would make up for the amount lost through the repeal of that 11 per cent tax.

However, I shall not make lengthy remarks on the subject. I simply wanted to join all those who objected, to let the minister know that should he decide to withdraw that tax, he would find himself in good company since millions of Canadians are in favour of the withdrawal of that tax. He would not have to have any fear about the next election; nobody would ever criticize him for that.

(Text):

The Chairman: Has the committee completed discussion on paragraph 1?

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, in speaking to this resolution I have nothing but sympathy for the Minister of Finance. I think we all realize that he has an uncomfortable job. It is an uncomfortable job to have to raise the funds with which the government can carry on. But I think we must also keep in mind that many Canadians voted for members of the present government on the promises, even commitments, of its candidates to get the economy going, to increase employment and to balance the budget. I will not go any further into other promises or what the people expected of the party which formed the government. Perhaps people are now beginning to realize that they bought the Brooklyn bridge. In the first place, this government will finish out its fiscal year with the biggest deficit in the history of this country. My prediction is that because of the methods being used there will be more unemployment, and this budget has already gone down in history as the worst one ever brought in since confederation. To substantiate this, if it needs any substantiation, one needs only to read from a little booklet published by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association called "Industry". This article is entitled "Opportunity lost", and says:

From the manufacturing standpoint,—

An hon. Member: Is there a doctor in the house?

Mr. Rynard: They need several:

—however, the most dismaying and least forgivable feature of the budget is the extension of the 11 per cent sales tax to machinery and apparatus—

This, of course, was before it was reduced to 4 per cent:

—and processing materials used in the production of goods, and to building materials used in the construction of new factories and plant extensions.

Manufacturers already are required to pay the sales tax on the goods they produce; they are now to be made to pay it on the machinery used in the production of these same goods. In effect, they will be paying the tax twice over. This isn't just; it isn't wise; and it certainly isn't expansionist.

The likely corporate reaction is all too predictable. In reviewing, as they will be bound to do, their capital spending intentions, some companies will reluctantly decide to defer the purchase of needed plant and equipment and to "make do" for a while longer. Still others with plans for expanding their capacity or building plants may well decide that the higher outlay compels them to hold off for now. There is evidence that these things are already happening.

In short, the effect of this extension of the sales tax can only be to slow down economic activity, hold down employment, inhibit competitiveness, retard productivity improvement and generally act as a depressant rather than a stimulant.

"Regressive and regrettable" was the budget night comment of H. Roy Crabtree, president of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association—

In my humble opinion the Minister of Finance would not be in the difficulties in which he now finds himself had he used the wisdom and experience of his own department. Surely there are few people with as much experience as the people in the finance department, who have years of experience behind them in preparing budgets. They are in possession of a wealth of experience and have unquestionably studied the economy at length. They would have charted a much safer course for the Minister of Finance. Instead he was led down the garden path into the briar patch by a group of amateurs. This is, of course, what one could really call the second budget because in this resolution the tax on building materials has been reduced from 11 per cent to 4 per cent. However, this is just not good enough; it should be eliminated completely for at least a year, because at the present time there is nothing but confusion in the minds of the people.

This tax is restrictive because it hits the manufacturing industry and the construction industry, two of the biggest employers of labour in this country; and let us not lose sight of the fact that the ordinary individual ultimately pays the shot. I would like to ask you, Mr. Chairman, how in the world can you stimulate trade and provide employment when you put a deterrent in the market place? The construction industry employs well over 600,000 people in this country. Anything that will restrict this industry will certainly lead to more unemployment; and this was the very thing this government gave its pledge to the Canadian people to reduce. Let us take a classic example of a man who was going to build an "L" wing to his house. His family had increased in size and he was going to put two additional rooms in this wing, the construction of which would cost him about $5,000. When this tax was imposed he decided he was not going to build the "L" extension. While it is true that this tax amounts to only a few hundred dollars, to a man measuring his dollars and cents and raising a family it is quite a sum. This is one tax that makes no exemption and bears the hardest on people with limited income. It so happens that this man is working in a factory which has recently been taken over and which is going to require a lot of new machinery. They will have to pay tax on these new machines, they will have to pay tax on the product they sell, and the fear of one of the men in that business is that when they are through with all this they may have a product priced out of the market, and will not be able to sell what they are producing. If that is the case, Mr. Chairman, then this man will even lose his job. That is the sort of thing which increases unemployment, in a vicious circle.

I do not want to be unjust to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Chairman. I believe he is an honourable gentleman. But we must remember that all the senior members of the cabinet, including the Prime Minister, saw this budget before it came into the house. While the Minister of Finance must bear the brunt of criticism, nevertheless he has my sympathy. Unquestionably he will have the biggest deficit in history, and I do not believe that deficits are worse than mass unemployment. In spite of the promises of the Liberal party in the last election that they would balance the budget, in this day and age where most people buy on finance plans I believe that it is not a bad plan to have deficit financing, if that deficit financing does not go beyond your gross national product and the growth of your country. I think if I were to choose between unemployment and a deficit budget, I would take the deficit budget.

I should like to deal with another feature of this resolution. I find myself asking the question, when a young couple buy a home and make their down payment, which has been decreased as has the interest rate also, if their down payment does not just cover the present tax. In other words, have they any real equity in this house or have they just paid the sales tax? The same thing occurs, in my opinion, in the attempt to stimulate employment by the building of a house in the winter months. I think you will agree with me that building in the winter months in this country raises the cost at least 10 per cent, depending on the area you build in. The government have the audacity to offer a fellow $500 to build a house in the winter time, knowing full well that if he is building a $20,000 house the house will cost him $2,000 more to build. In other words, in effect they are taking $2,000 out of one of his pockets and putting $500 into another.

I should like to touch on another problem which indicates to me a complete lack of understanding on the part of the present government. This tax will largely destroy the efforts of industry and labour to make themselves more competitive in the export markets. It is a tragedy, when industry and labour have worked so well together in the last few years to make themselves competitive—and Mr. Chairman, they were getting there—that the government in dealing with them now has not shown more leadership and common sense. As I have said before, I sympathize with the Minister of Finance. Money has to be raised, but surely it could be raised in fields which are not so restrictive to employment. For example, I note that the federal government in 1961 raised $110 million on their excise tax on spirits. I do not believe that it would do any particular harm, and certainly would not be restrictive, if they increased these taxes; and there are other fields they could have tapped, in the same way.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I feel that the minister should completely eliminate his tax on building materials for another year at least, if not forever. If he has to go on with it at that time, however, people would have time to become informed and to realize the procedures involved. This would preclude the great uncertainty which now prevails as to this resolution and it would help temporarily to soothe the general revulsion of the man on the street, as well as the anxiety of the stock exchanges. The man on the street believed sincerely that he had voted for a party which would at least bring in sound fiscal and monetary policies.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, we have had such sorrowful sounds of melancholia from the other side of the house that I think it would not be amiss if I dropped a word of cheer to these sorrowful gentlemen, these new prophets of doom and gloom that we have sitting across on the other side. It would appear that now the Conservative party is on record as being the party of fiscal irresponsibility; that several large and ever-growing deficits when they were in office were a monument to that irresponsibility; and we now hear them advocating the removal of all taxes and hence, apparently, a larger deficit than even they were able to produce. It would appear that the new philosophy of the Conservative party is: Govern now and pay later. This is a peculiar philosophy indeed for that party which was once the party of orthodox finance. I feel so badly for these lachcrymose and melancholic gentlemen, and in particular for the right hon. Leader of the Opposition who was wailing so mournfully over there this afternoon, that I would just offer a word of cheer to the effect that they may have noticed that housing starts were up in the month of June.

Mr. Stenson: Mr. Chairman, in speaking to this resolution I should like to express my views and make some reference to how my own area will be affected. Since June 13, when the budget was brought down, I have had many letters and briefs complaining about the taxes it contained. I have discussed the situation with different plant managers and I am at a loss to know why the Minister of Finance feels he is helping the economy of the country and promoting employment. This feeling is non-existent in my riding.

The Minister of Finance said on budget night that in order to encourage employment by reviving private capital expenditure, which he said had lagged so conspicuously for the past six years, he would propose important new tax concessions. Effective on the date of enactment, new manufacturing and processing enterprises located in designated areas of slower growth would be given exemption from income taxes for three years from their inception. He also proposed that such enterprises be entitled to write off new machinery and equipment. Another proposal was that any taxpayer be entitled to write off the cost of new buildings located in designated areas of slower growth at the rate of 20 per cent annum, or in as little as five years.

After these budget statements I would like to ask the Minister of Finance what areas he has designated as slow growth areas, when during the last election campaign most of the Liberal members claimed to have slow growth in their particular areas and, at times, even stagnation

Does the minister feel his area of Davenport is a slow growth area? He said, and I quote: "My own riding of Davenport is a high unemployment area". Just how will he designate these areas? Can he refuse these tax exemptions in his own riding? Can he refuse them in any metropolitan Toronto riding? I would like to know exactly where I stand in my own riding regarding new industry, and what is offered to establish a new manufacturer. In Peterborough we have found that the best expansion does not always come from new industries, but from industries which are already established. But there is no help for them. The hon. gentleman went on to say:

> It is intended that the measures I have mentioned so far should provide an immediate impetus to increased activity. Accordingly, new assets must be purchased and new businesses must be certified to have come into existence in the period of 24 months following the initial date of these measures if they are to qualify.

Now, Mr. Chairman, with the restrictions the minister has placed on industry, the tax on machinery, and the tax on building material, how does the government expect any new industry to develop in this country in the next 24 months?

I would like to bring just one instance to the attention of the committee. A small industry in Peterborough employing approximately 75 people saw fit to expand their business, and erected another building last year. They have been disturbed since the budget was brought down because, although they are a Canadian firm with 100 per cent Canadian capital, they feel it would be better to carry out their operation in the United States since 80 per cent of their produce is exported, 65 per cent of it going to the United States. Here is a portion of a letter from them:

> Our firm is one hundred per cent Canadian. We have developed the manufacture of machines and consumable items, and export the major part of our output to the United States and other countries, over tariff barriers ranging up to 45 per cent.
>
> The cost of production equipment that we must purchase has always been much higher in Canada than it would be if we were located in the United States. With this, and other disadvantages, working against us in Canada, particularly when engaged in export, the budget proposal to tax the means of production another 11 per cent comes as a distinct shock.
>
> The provisions in the budget for rapid depreciation, while welcome, are only beneficial to firms that are in a secure profit position. We feel that comparatively few small Canadian firms are in that position.
>
> We wish to submit facts pertaining to our business which we feel, indicate the problems and possibilities for manufacturing in Canada. Adversity, if made too severe, will cancel the prospects. Twenty years have been required to develop our business to a profitable level.
>
> The pressing need of our business is to acquire the best available equipment for efficient production and be able to retain sufficient earnings to pay for it, as well as to continue the development of our products.
>
> Our considered view is that the recent turn of events poses a serious situation for us, as well as for many other Canadian manufacturers, and merits your urgent consideration.

This is just one instance, and I doubt very much if there is a single member sitting on the government side who does not have a similar situation in his own riding. How can hon. members opposite go back to the people and claim to support these budget measures when they know they are posing a serious threat to our industrial economy? Small manufacturers who have to purchase production equipment out of Canada have to pay as much as 30 per cent more than in the United States and we find they are exporting to the United States 65 per cent of their output. How can this government expect to expand industry by burdening such companies with an additional 11 per cent tax? The government should realize that they are forcing this type of Canadian manufacturer into other countries to produce. I would like to take the Minister of Finance or his officials to my constituency to discuss the measures they have levied on these particular industries.

The Minister of Finance has admitted in his revised budget that the 11 per cent tax will have an immediate and sharp impact on some industries, and I agree with him. Industries in the export business competing against foreign manufacturers will also feel the 4 per cent tax and they have further increases hanging over their heads in the next 18 months.

All the other letters from Peterborough manufacturers find fault with the 11 per cent tax on building materials, machinery and equipment. I would like to read a few quotations from another letter.

> The additional 11 per cent sales tax on building and processing materials and equipment will add great expense to our costs. We are in a competitive market with imported materials and this is not going to make our efforts any easier.
>
> The new additional withholding tax will make it such that our parent company would be reluctant to invest further money in Canada.
>
> As you know in recent years we have expanded greatly in the Peterborough area and we would like this to continue but it does not look possible.
>
> As a Canadian I can quite appreciate the desire to have Canadians participate in the industrial expansion of Canada. However, this isn't practical in all cases and I feel that ours is one of them.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this particular company has contributed much to the economy in our area. In the last four years they have increased production, increased the number of employees, and expanded the company. This tax could be considered as a slap in the face to their efforts.

I have spoken to the manager of one of Canada's largest electrical manufacturers, located in Peterborough. This company is a substantial contributor to the employment and welfare, not only of our community, but of the Canadian economy as a whole. The company has, since its inception, devoted itself to integrating its own interests with the developing Canadian economy. They have carefully assessed and supported Canadian government policies developed in the interests of Canada's growth and employment, in the sincere belief that these were also in the interests of the company. Their policy of reinvestment of earnings in Canadian operations has resulted in an average of approximately 72 per cent of earnings being reinvested in Canadian operations over the past ten year period.

The company's total employee compensation last year of just over $87 million, and its expenditure for materials, supplies and other costs of $163 million, give some indication of the impact of the company's activities on the total Canadian economy. The money paid employees as well as the money paid to a vast multitude of suppliers throughout all communities of this country, has become an important factor in our industrial life.

The sales tax amendments in the budget are estimated to increase the company's cost as a purchaser by something over $1.5 million a year. In addition, the additional tax that must be collected and billed to customers will reach in the order of $8 million per year.

These budget revisions will add very materially to costs, and industry costs generally, without any improvement in output and will, therefore, reduce the efficiency of Canadian industry significantly at a time when improved efficiency is very much required. In keeping with the government's policies over recent years, they have on their own initiative gone into world markets and expanded their exports very significantly. While this has been done at extremely low margins, they have just managed to compete.

With the recent increase in costs resulting from budget changes they may find it puts them in a non-competitive position and their program would be in danger of failure. This is a paradoxical case in which the government is exhorting them to expand their exports and is at the same time proposing legislation which will inhibit their ability to carry out this policy. Those importing products into Canada will obtain an advantage, in so far as their costs are not increased in proportion to the increase in costs of Canadian manufactures due to these budget proposals.

I should like to emphasize that they recognize and appreciate the need for action to help balance the budget and the need for additional revenue. However, they feel that the additional revenue must come from growth and cannot come from hidden extra costs which are bound to inhibit and actually may seriously destroy the very growth that is needed. They sincerely believe that there is a real question whether increased revenue can actually result from the sales tax amendment in the budget.

With regard to the income tax amendments, they are concerned with the discriminatory nature of these amendments. Over the years reinvestment of a large portion of the earnings of their company has been a major part of their policy and has been a major factor in providing employment in this country and our community. The company has exerted itself to be a good Canadian corporate citizen through its reinvestment policy, through the employment of Canadians on its board of directors, through its expansion of export trade and support of Canadian government policies. They sincerely believe that growth and employment in our community and throughout this country will be seriously and adversely affected by the budget measures and would appreciate recognition of these views in connection with forthcoming government policies.

I should like to suggest the complete withdrawal of this tax so that industry in this country will again have confidence in the Canadian government and expand as it has in the past six years. This course of action will not only help our manufacturers but will be a boost to the economy of our country, which in turn will give more employment to those out of work. I feel that this is the most important objective that the government should strive for at the present time.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to speak at this time but I was prompted to do so by the actions and the words of the last speaker on the government side. This budget reminds me of the poet Browning. Someone asked Browning what he meant by one of his poems and he looked at it and said: "When I wrote that, only God and I knew what I meant but right now only God knows what it means". I think that is the attitude of the Canadian people with regard to this confused budget. I believe it was said this afternoon that the best course that could be taken would be to withdraw the budget entirely or, failing that, to exempt all building materials and production machinery.

It has been intimated that the department is swamped with applications at the present time but when the truth is actually known they will not think they were swamped now because there are many other things that have not come to light yet. I have one case here that I want to bring to the minister's attention involving an order or contract which I think will stand up in court. An order was placed by a Canadian company with an American firm for the production of a piece of equipment known as a self-propelled oil well servicing and workover rig. This order was placed with the American company on May 13, 1963 and was confirmed by the American manufacturer on May 22, 1963. The machine went into production on that date and delivery was to be on June 28.

The total cost of this equipment was in the neighbourhood of $65,000. A deposit was paid making the transaction binding. The purchaser's cheque was deposited by the American firm in the National Bank of Tulsa, Oklahoma, on May 20, 1963. I have a letter here from the manufacturer which states that the order was accepted on May 13 and was secured by a cash down payment. They consider that the order contract was firm and binding on both parties. I also have the cancelled cheque which was deposited in the American bank on May 20. In other words, I believe that those with legal minds will say that the company concerned had a fixed price contract.

The Minister of National Revenue stated the following in his prepared statement as recorded on page 1472 of Hansard of June 24 last.

An hon. Member: I thought you were not going to speak.

Mr. McIntosh: Haven't you fellows said enough tonight already?

An hon. Member: We have heard enough.

Mr. McIntosh: You have not heard half of what you are going to hear. This is what the minister said:

> In order to be of assistance to persons who believe they are entitled to relief because they are a party to a fixed price contract, as explained earlier, the department is willing to examine their contracts if they wish to forward them to the customs and excise division in Ottawa before they go to the work of preparing their refund claims.

In this case the minister's offer of assistance was accepted. The company concerned made representations to the department, through their member of parliament. The final reply from the minister on the subject reads in part as follows, and it is very surprising.

An hon. Member: I thought you were not going to speak.

Mr. McIntosh: I said I was not going to speak unless I was prompted by you fellows.

An hon. Member: You cannot say you were not prepared.

Mr. McIntosh: That is right. I am prepared to make you fellows sit still. This is what the minister said in part, in his letter:

> The sales tax relieving section of the budget resolutions, presently before parliament, provides sales tax relief to a Canadian vendor selling under a fixed price contract entered into prior to June 14, 1963, signed by the parties thereto and which does not permit the vendor to add the extra tax to his sale price. However, this relief does not extend to persons who import goods for own use even though the importer may have a contract with the foreign supplier.

In other words, the department implies that the contract with the foreign supplier is firm and binding but adds this rider, which I imagine was added by the officials of the department:

> —this relief does not extend to persons who import goods for own use—

This is a new angle. I wonder how many other angles are buried in this resolution that will not be unearthed until we start getting letters from our constituents. It will not be just the opposition members who will be getting them. All you backbenchers on the government side will be getting them too. In so far as opposition members are concerned, all we can do is sympathize with our constituents, but you fellows have to make excuses for the members of the cabinet. I suggest that this is a discriminatory revision, and I do not believe the minister wants to put this type of legislation through.

For example, take the hypothetical case of two purchasers of a like piece of machinery or equipment. One orders through another party and the other orders direct from the manufacturer. Now, the one ordering direct for his own use is charged the additional sales tax, but the one ordering through the third party does not have to pay this tax. In the case to which I have referred, this order that I have here, the additional cost to the one firm that will have to pay, would be in the neighbourhood of $7,000.

I could not find any place in the minister's remarks a statement to the effect that importation for end use was not exempt. I am wondering if this is another bureaucratic decision or regulation. Perhaps I could explain just what I mean by a bureaucratic decision. I have had experience with this department on a number of occasions. I think a reference was made in this committee the other day to farm implements. I think the minister should be very careful of the words he uses in these acts. I have another complaint, Mr. Minister, concerning tuned hand bells, which come under tariff item 696. The answer I got was that it was not a philosophical or scientific apparatus or instrument. If you look at the dictionary, it is considered so there, but evidently not by your officials. I think, in these cases, your definitions should follow the dictionary meaning of these words which you are going to use.

I have said before that these regulations are stronger than the acts we pass in this House of Commons. I say again that the ministers are captives of their own departments in that the officials write these letters and then the ministers sign them. I come back as an example to the first dispute I had with the department concerning agricultural implements. I refer to this tariff item 409f, which is in two parts. There is one item shown thereunder, gravity discharge farm wagon boxes. I tried to get one of these into the country a short time ago, and the only difference was that ours was called a truck box. In the west, they do not use wagons any more. I understand that the French translation of wagon is lorry, but not speaking French I did not know that at the time. Is that not correct? They said it did not come under that item because "wagon" did not mean "truck". The reason we wanted to import it under this item was that all articles brought under this item had what they called an end user's certificate. However, this truck box could have been used for other purposes. We admit that. If the purchaser was forced to sign an end user's certificate, that would have been fine.

However, the officials would not even allow it under that. We go down a little further and there is another item which says, "all other agricultural implements or agricultural machinery, n.o.p.". I understand these letters mean, not otherwise provided for. It certainly should have come under that. I went to a lot of trouble to try to influence the department as to the definition of "farm implement".

Some hon. Members: Question, question.

Mr. McIntosh: You will get the question. Now, looking at any dictionary I find that an implement is defined as a thing of necessary use in any trade. This might be an education to some of you people. The word "necessary" is defined as those things to the doing of a thing which are reasonably required. Then, I went to the law clerk of the House of Commons. I did not tell him what my problem was, but I asked him to give me a definition of an agricultural implement. He said that anything that is mainly used for agricultural purposes becomes an agricultural implement.

In Funk and Wagnall's ready reference dictionary, implement is defined as a means or agent for the accomplishment of a purpose. In McGoldricks hand book of the Canadian Customs Tariff and Excise Duties, recognized as an authority or guide by Canadian industry, starting on page 267, there is a general heading "Agricultural Implements". This same heading of implements is carried on for seven pages, listing hundreds of items considered as agricultural implements by legal authorities and industry.

Then, I went to the library of the House of Commons and I got all of the legal dictionaries I could find there. I took these definitions to the officials of the department and said, "These are all the definitions I could find." At that time, they did not say no, they are not right. They said, "Look, you go over to the Department of Finance; they are the ones who determine what will go into these tariff items." I went to the department and they said, it is in there. They pointed out these two items to which I have just referred, the steel grain wagon box or the other agricultural implement. I went back to the Department of National Revenue and I told them what the Department of Finance had told me, that it was covered by the tariff. They said, "No it is not." I said that finance thinks it is in here; they put it in. They said, "Yes, but we have the job of interpreting what finance puts in". I said that I had all these definitions which I had looked up—"Will you not accept one of these"? They said, no.

Do you want to say something, Mr. Minister? I will sit down if you do. Finally, I said to the departmental officials, "O.K., you have me beat; it does not come under any of these headings. I will have to write back and tell my constituents about this. But before I do, I should like you, as officials of the department to give me your interpretation of what these two headings mean. What is an agricultural implement?" They said, "We do not have to do that". In other words, they can just sit there and arbitrarily tell me that all these definitions I have found in these dictionaries do not define agricultural implements. Apparently they have that power and the minister will do nothing at all about it.

I may have a few more remarks to make on this item when the bill comes before the house. I think, however, before the bill comes before the house the minister should give some consideration to withdrawing the budget altogether. He would then stop all this confusion that has been obvious in the committee tonight and during the day. We know there is going to be more confusion after the bill is introduced and after our constituents are confronted with problems such as the ones I have outlined tonight. Just wait until your backbenchers start getting letters from your constituents. I hope you can explain things to them.

(Translation):

Mr. Latulippe: Mr. Chairman, the new Kennedy tax and the 11 per cent Gordon tax are uniting to hit Canadians directly. This leads us to believe that our politicians want for our people the same fate as the world boxing champion had in store for the challenger, that is to knock our people out in the first round.

First round here, first budget of the new Liberal administration, first series of taxes, general retreat under pressure brought to bear by outside forces, general loss of confidence, panic in some cases, rejoicing in others, in short, the ropes of the economical ring choke the contenders, goodwill alone is not enough, they begin to realize that what is physically possible must also be made financially possible.

Lack of money must not prevent progress any more, but how they hesitate before taking a decision, because they are afraid to do wrong to the signs cult. They are busy drawing dollars from everywhere they can find them before considering making more, because they are afraid that dollars might become less rare, less valuable. If they increase the signs to make it possible to use things, they increase debts at the same time in order to keep the means of decreasing the signs, to prevent the individuals from freeing themselves.

The lift-pump operates in all corners, in all pockets: direct and indirect taxes, increased prices, the taxpayers, the consumers, emptied to the last drop, do not know what to do; government taxes at all levels, bank taxes, trust taxes.

The privileged financier does not even have the trouble of manoeuvering the debentures that cost him only a stroke of the pen and a few accounting operations and that assure him a primary right on the public income. The financier is beaming, he is the first to be served, and in the name of the law too, by the manager of a struggling society, the Minister of Finance.

Joe works, Banco does the business.

Joe pays, Banco picks up.

Joe is deprived, Banco enriched.

Is he not the one who made the required money come out of his ink-stand? When he is about quits with his government, Joe takes a look at his electricity bills, his waterfalls, his mines, his soil and his subsoil, and he wonders what imps have installed such a perfect pumping system, that he does not understand too well but whose existence he is well aware of and which his common sense tells him is undesirable.

Joe looks at his house, his industry, his business, his municipalities, his schools, his bridges, his roads, his universities, his sons who have to set up a family on terms and who have to look up to finance companies for a small measure of respite. Alas, they find only a father who works devoutly for a finance company and who is tied to the latter by a chain whose links he has forged himself. Banco empties the pockets through the respectable offices of the public treasury; and the trusts, which are the offsprings of the fertile banks, get rich because they are crafty, they share a part of their bounty with the big political parties to be sure of continued protection. With those funds, the political parties are able, during an election, to impress and comfort Joe with their eloquence.

This 11 per cent tax is the result of such a financial system. The Minister of Finance was firmly decided to give to the people what they can rightly expect from the government.

The local, provincial and federal governments are faced with problems which impede their action. This disastrous tax will lead to inflation, to an increase in the cost of living, to the restriction of credit, not to speak of the numerous additional difficulties it will create for both the public and private sectors of production.

According to Hon. Rene Levesque, this tax is a straight punch on the nose; he said that the development of the entire province of Quebec will suffer from it. But some sectors, such as the building industry, are more adversely affected, as shown by the many telegrams we received on the matter. Personally, I got a few dozen telegrams, as many phone calls, as well as letters on the subject.

On the other hand, we can easily be misled by the latest statistics on unemployment. Figures released by the Department of Labour and the d.b.s. show that the rate of unemployment in Canada went down to 4.4 per cent of the labour force in June. It is said to be an increase of 43,000 jobs compared with the previous month. In the province of Quebec, there were 113,000 jobless in June, a gain of 17,000 over the previous month. But this gain does not really mean much when we consider that out of the 113,000 jobs created during that period, 79,000 were for students. This proves that the effects of that tax, as evidenced by the telegrams, are most harmful and make an alarming situation even more serious.

The steady increase of indebtedness at all levels of our economic society makes the picture even darker. According to tentative figures which were provided by the Department of Finance, Canada's public debt was as follows as of March 31, 1963: unmatured debt, $17,961.8 millions; gross liabilities, $24,811.9 millions; net debt, $13,937.1 millions. On the basis of the population figure for April 1963, the per capita distribution was as follows: unmatured debt, $953.08; gross liabilities, $1,316.56 and net national debt, $739.53. The following are only tentative figures concerning the interest paid on the debt in 1962-63: unmatured debt, $709 millions, and gross liabilities, $882 million. On the other hand, the total amount of money in circulation in Canada compared to the public debt, in March 1963, amounted to 86 per cent of the unmatured debt, 63 per cent of the gross liabilities and 111 per cent of the net debt.

The situation is anything but bright, judging by the statistics which I have just quoted. The increasing burden of taxes of all kinds as a result of which many homeowners lose their homes, farmers their farm, industrialists their industries, irrevocably crush all of us, except those who, on account of their unlimited power, are indirectly responsible for the levy of these taxes. In the province of Quebec alone in 1962, the apparent losses from bankruptcies, non-summary procedures, namely 543 bankruptcies, amounted approximately to $15,695,662 and losses from 915 summary procedures reached $5,779,801.

The financial incapability of extending social measures, according to genuine needs, and of maintaining them in relation to the increase of the cost of living also results from such a state of affairs. This tax will increase the financial needs of hospitals and educational institutions. Those are all financial problems and cannot be blamed on inadequate means of production. But if the sources of production are ample enough to fill quickly all the orders, public and private, the source of payment facilities, on the other hand, is soon dried up. The total capacity to produce and the total capacity to pay do not balance, far from it, and that balance will always remain harder to achieve with those new taxes, be they direct or indirect.

So, even before the new taxes, there was a discrepancy between the physical possibilities, which are immense, and the available financial means, which are limited, and that is what brings about conflicts where every one wants his share of an insufficient whole.

If everything that is physically possible were made financially possible, the scarcity complex which sharpens conflicts would disappear, since the production system shows no signs of finding it difficult to meet the demand, wherever it comes from.

Nothing obliges a full-fledged organized community, to gear the use of its vast physical assets to its limited financial assets. Rather, the financial machinery should be geared to the possibilities of implementation.

A financial organization which would faithfully reflect its actual wealth, would provide the means of payment in accordance with the production of all sorts of goods and would withdraw those means of payment only in accordance with the consumption of all sorts of goods. The matter of financial problems would not likely come up any more and the only possible difficulties would concern production, but those do not seem to be a source of trouble today.

It is a crime today to regulate and ration money already in insufficient quantity compared to an affluent production, to let human beings suffer, in order to abide by heartless measures concerned only with the mighty dollar. And the government which thus allows the money and credit controllers to let the people go hungry is guilty of condoning their cowardice.

Instead of imposing taxes, they should have adjusted family allowances in line with the cost of living and assured to each citizen the required vital minimum.

Money is not a sacrament, neither a police nor a government. Its function is not a moral but an economic one; it must be used for the exchange of products.

Abundance is not due to a particular political party, nor is the lack of money due to a party, it is due to a system that is both illogical and inhuman and which no change of parties in power has changed.

What is needed is an addition of new money, to finance production restrained for lack of money, and an addition of new money added to the insufficient purchasing power of consumers, instead of taxes, to enable them to obtain products, to distribute the money that is missing in order to distribute the abundance that is offered, so it will not be a struggle between parties which will distribute abundance and will ensure a decent living to each family, to each citizen of this country.

On the contrary, it is by joining forces throughout the country, by co-ordinating the actions of governments and others, in order to eliminate the merely financial problem from politics and from economics that we will be able to correct this situation. Bring finance to the pace of realities, realities in men, realities in things, realities in needs and realities in goods.

We have been requesting for a long time the undertaking of this urgent operation. We know that this request follows the wish of all Canadians, except perhaps the high priests of the system and their attendants.

One fact remains which nobody can deny, and it is that the present economic system does not work well. It leads to excessive taxes and credit restrictions, to poverty, to unemployment and to the inconsistency of hardship in the midst of abundance.

The great brain-washed geniuses tell us that we know nothing about the banking system, but we are all aware of the great potentialities of Canada which could easily maintain three times its present population and our population has the right to insist upon an economy which will put order between purchasing power on the one hand and consumption on the other, leaving to individuals the right to free enterprise and giving them security and liberty, without paralysing them with taxes like this 11 per cent tax that the government is trying to justify.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: Does this complete discussion on paragraph 1?

Paragraph agreed to.

Paragraphs 2 to 15 inclusive agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Paragraph 16?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, in connection with paragraph 16 I would—

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I wish to direct the attention of hon. members to the change in the method of calculating—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Would the minister tell me what paragraph he is referring to, please.

Mr. Gordon: I am referring to what I hope will be paragraph 18, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Starr: I do not think we have reached paragraph 18 yet.

The Deputy Chairman: We are on paragraph 16.

Mr. Starr: On paragraph 16, Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the Minister of Finance whether he has given consideration to the suggestions of the Canadian Construction Association as to possible amendments in order to clarify many of the matters that have to do with this tax and the procedure in respect of paragraphs 16 and 17. I think the minister has received their suggestions; they were submitted to him.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, we have received the suggestions and considered them carefully, but I do not think we are in a position to meet them.

Paragraph agreed to.

Paragraph 17 agreed to.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I wish to direct the attention of hon. members to the change in the method of calculating the sales tax on gasoline which was announced in the budget speech. The action proposed is to withdraw a discount heretofore granted for sales tax calculation purposes. Because this was an administrative change which would not require an amendment to the act, no paragraph relating to this measure was placed in the excise tax resolutions. I have come to the conclusion, however, that the implementation of this administrative change should be accompanied by a change in the application of the tax to imports of gasoline and related fuels.

It is considered advisable to license importers of gasoline, aviation fuel and diesel fuel and to require these importers, instead of paying sales tax on the import price at the time of importation, to pay tax on their selling price at the time these products are sold by the importer or put to his own use. If this is to be done—and it is being done to put them on a comparable basis with domestic producers—the Excise Tax Act must be amended to place the importers of gasoline and related fuels in the same position as manufacturers or producers, for sales tax purposes. Although this is a part of the administrative change that was announced earlier, this step will necessitate a change in the act. It is customary to give notice of such amendments in the resolution, and therefore I wish to bring the matter to the attention of the committee and to ask that an appropriate paragraph be added to the resolution.

Mr. Garland: I move:

That the following paragraph be added to the excise tax resolution:

"18. That the said measure further provide that where a person has imported into Canada for sale or for his own use gasoline, aviation fuel or diesel oil and the aggregate duty paid value of the goods so imported by him in any period of twelve consecutive months commencing on or after August 1, 1963 exceeds three thousand dollars, he shall, for the purposes of Part VI of the said act, be deemed to be the manufacturer or producer in Canada of the goods so imported by him in that period, and not the importer thereof."

Amendment agreed to.

Resolution agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

EXCISE TAX ACT

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-90, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): When shall the said bill be read a second time?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Pickersgill: By leave.

Mr. Gordon moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could make a suggestion to the house, that we give second reading, go into committee, and there will be no exception taken to any reasonable speeches on the first clause in committee?

Mr. Churchill: That would be agreeable, Mr. Speaker, if you would put the motion again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Mr. Gordon moves that Bill No. C-90, to amend the Excise Tax Act, be now read a second time.

Mr. Churchill: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, just before we proceed I wonder whether it would be agreeable to the committee to go on, say, till half past ten to see if we could make some progress?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that the committee shall carry on till 10.30?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Slogan: Mr. Chairman, in rising to say a few words on this bill I might say that I would describe it as a G-string bill, trying to dress up the body of a budget which is now pretty nude. In discussing this first clause perhaps we could look toward the objectives outlined during the last campaign by the Minister of Finance and other spokesmen for the Liberal party. The present minister of external affairs said that the object would be to create a million jobs in the next five years, and that this object would be obtained. It seems to me that the provisions of this bill will do nothing of the sort but will tend to do exactly the opposite. Hon. members talked of increasing trade, of stimulating a stagnant economy and of balancing the budget. I think this bill which is before us will do nothing of the sort. Certainly some of the provisions are designed to stimulate the economy; but on the other hand the government has done so much to harm the economy that it is very doubtful that it will reach its objective. Indeed, I am reminded of the story a professor tells of a frog, where if you put a frog in a pan and you pour hot water on it, it will jump out; but if you put the same frog in a pan and you start with cool or lukewarm water and keep making the water hotter, it sits there and is roasted. Now that is exactly the position of the Canadian taxpayer. When this 11 per cent tax was placed on him all at once, he jumped out of the pan. Now the government is using a more scientific approach. It is starting at 4 per cent and it tends to make it hotter and hotter until the Canadian taxpayer is roasted.

It is hardly necessary to repeat all that has been said about the harm these measures are doing to the Canadian economy. When I listened to hon. members opposite speaking during the election campaign I was under the impression that they intended to get their increased revenue by expanding the gross national product, increasing the tax base and so on. I certainly never heard anything during the campaign about increasing taxes. Now it is almost an obsession with them that nothing can be done to expand the economy unless taxation is increased. There was the $500 incentive toward house building in the winter months. There was a lowering of the interest rate and a lowering of the down payment—all positive measures. At the same time, the government brings in measures such as this tax on building materials which will cancel out all the goods which those incentives might have produced.

The hon. member for Lisgar mentioned unorganized territories and I would appreciate it if the minister would take into consideration the exemption of local government districts in the same way as municipalities with regard to sewage and drainage systems. I think there is no reason why people who do not have many of the amenities provided by municipalities should be bearing a larger tax in this respect and for this reason I should like to add my word to the remarks of those who have urged the minister to make this exemption.

What has this budget actually accomplished? First, I think it has created a great deal of uneasiness in the country. It has increased the burden on the average taxpayer. It has done something to destroy incentive as far as housebuilders and others in the construction industry are concerned, and employment is higher than it was last year. Where are all these answers which the Liberal party had to the problems of our economy? They said the economy was stagnating, even though under the previous government there was an increase of 8 per cent in the gross national product last year. This year, despite all the answers the Liberals pretended to have, the gross national product is expected to be less—something like 5 per cent. The measures in this budget have undone a lot of the good which was done by the former government in trying to provide incentives. The national house builders association has told us that the tax will add to the price of a home almost twice the amount by which the industry has reduced the cost in recent years as a result of research into new methods and materials.

I do not think there is anything in this budget which is comforting to the taxpayers of Canada. It all boils down to the bumbling, as it has been called, of the minister—the fact that he did not consult those people who could have advised him properly but that, instead, he brought in these amateurs. I do not think the Prime Minister can escape responsibility for the actions of his colleague. I think responsibility must be placed directly on his shoulders, along with those of the Minister of Finance and the Liberal party as a whole.

The actions of the minister have brought discredit on the government and his party. I think the people of Canada have lost confidence in the hon. gentleman. I believe that if he had taken the honourable course he would have resigned and made way for somebody who would have taken a new approach towards the problems which face us today. I think the Prime Minister must share some of the responsibility because he did not take the opportunity to shift the minister to a more pleasant post.

I do not intend to hold up this bill for very long. I could read a lot of letters which I have received from my constituents and others but I am sure the hon. member from Kootenay East would object. Besides, I do not think there is any necessity for me to do so because other speakers from this side have already done a very good job in bringing these points of view to the attention of the government and of the people of Canada. All I want to say is this: I hope the government will not compound mistake after mistake. I hope they will adopt some of the structive suggestions which have been put forward by some members of parliament, including, indeed, some which have undoubtedly been made by their own backbenchers. They have some able men over there and I think they should be taken into the confidence of the government and that consideration should be given to their views which, I believe, are not unlike our own on these matters, since they reflect public opinion.

This is a budget which has certainly been bungled, a budget such as we have probably never seen in Canadian history. If the party now forming the government cannot handle the affairs of the country in a much better way, the best thing it could do would be to resign and make way for a government which can. If they are so confident, perhaps they should take these measures before the people of Canada and let them reach a decision.

Mr. Leboe: I rise to say a few words on the first clause. I am reminded that the hour is late and therefore I will perhaps be a little more brief than I would otherwise be. I do not think I will take any more than half an hour.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Leboe: When I heard the tirade which came from the Leader of the Opposition this afternoon I was reminded that those who sit in minority parties in this house must have tough hides. With this statement I will pass over the comments of some hon. members of the opposition. I will only say that we who sit in minority groups feel in many instances that it is a matter of the skunk saying: "I smell something". The charges and countercharges which are going back and forth across the house make us wonder what the ultimate goal of some of the people in parliament really is. With that, I will leave that part of the business and go on to deal with what I want to say to the Minister of Finance. He has been waiting for some time now for me to make a speech and I do not want to disappoint him too much. I believe the minister said there were three avenues open to him in the raising of revenue, an increase in the income tax, an increase in the sales tax across the board or an increase in the corporation tax. I should like to say to the minister that I do not believe it is necessary to increase taxation at all. I think that what we needed to do was not to increase taxation but to put the unemployed back to work, so that instead of these people being a drain on our economy they would be producers and taxpayers and thereby we would not need this increase in taxation.

I certainly believe that if we continue the concept that the minister has put forward, and I think he is sincere, we are going to pile tax on tax until finally we will find ourselves in a state of collapse, because we will not be able to carry on with increased unemployment and more people as a drain on the public treasury, which is actually the economy, and also be developing a situation where there will be fewer taxpayers. If we are going to solve this problem, surely we must have more taxpayers and fewer people out of work. This is the objective.

Having said that, I believe that a solution to the problem can be found. I think the problem can be met through a public works program that will put people to work. I do not say that all our unemployed people can be employed in this way, but certainly if a number of them can be employed in this way they will become markets, as I said before in another debate, for goods and services to which industry would respond. Therefore we would be getting taxes from these people who were on payrolls and we would also be getting taxes from industry that would be producing the goods to supply the needs of these people. Therefore I think we should be looking in this direction.

I am trying to hurry along. The question comes up: Where are we going to get the money? Where does the money come from? I am going to ask the minister to tell me when he gets up to speak on this matter where money comes from. I would ask him to explain to the committee in detail where money comes from, and it should not take him any more than about 15 words to do so. I am not telling him but I would hope that he would tell the committee.

I come from bush country and I have seen a lot of trees, but I have never seen money growing on them. If we need more money, I would certainly expect that the minister would be able to tell us where that money is going to come from. When we bring in outside capital, about which we hear so much, we are monetizing our resources. I used to explain this in a neat little hypothetical way, but it brings home the point. I used to draw a picture of a stump and I would ask the individual whether or not he knew what it was. He would say it was a stump. I would then draw a picture of a factory and I would say, "What is that?" He would say it was an industry of some kind. I would say that the stump is what the outside investor sits on while we in Canada build factories and industries with our own hands and our own resources, and after we have built them with our own labour and our own resources the fellow from outside our country sitting on the stump owns them.

This is the point. If we know where money comes from and it takes capital to put our people back to work, surely we do not have to depend on outside sources. Suppose Canada were the whole world. What would we do for money from the outside? There would not be any such money. Surely we must find out where the money is going to come from. I expect the minister is going to tell me where it comes from, but in case he needs a little help I should like to put on the record a few quotations. First of all, I should like to quote from the minister, because at this time I do not know anybody better to quote than the minister himself. This is what he had to say, as found on page 1000 of Hansard of June 13 last:

> I wish to say a further word about the relationship between the government and the Bank of Canada. In the last analysis it is the government that must take responsibility for monetary policy . . . There can be no misunderstanding on this score.

I was glad to hear the minister say that because it really did my heart good.

> At the same time the government recognizes that this does not relieve the bank of its own responsibilities in these matters.

Those are good words. I should like to link them with words of a former governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Graham Towers. They are found in the proceedings of the committee on banking and commerce in 1939, and I refer to page 29 where Mr. Towers had this to say.

It has been quoted before but I should like to do so again. He said:

A government can find money in three ways: by taxation—

That is what my friend over here is working on. Apparently that is as far as he got in reading Mr. Towers' remarks. He just got as far as the first method.

—or they might find it by borrowing the savings of the people—

I do not know whether he has any idea of dipping into them. He has not said so in this debate.

—or they might find it by action which is allied with an expansive monetary policy, that is, borrowing which creates additional money in the process.

We can get money here, it seems to me, but I would hope that the minister would not borrow from the chartered banks. I would hope he would borrow from the Bank of Canada which can do exactly the same thing as the chartered banks if he will only let the Bank of Canada do it. I should like to say here that I am only thinking of borrowing for public account, public capital, and not for industrial capital. I should like to make it clear that we believe we have one of the best banking systems in the world right here in Canada.

In addition, the industrial development bank as it is constituted today is an organization that we should seriously consider replacing with a municipal development bank. Let the banking system look after the needs of industry. Let us broaden our base, if necessary, and that will give industry a better chance to grow. It will give them a little bit of leeway so they can breathe better. I think this makes common sense and I believe that on reflection the minister will agree that this is so. As found on page 238 of the same committee proceedings Mr. Towers had this to say:

When a million dollars worth of bonds is presented—

By the government.

—to the bank a million dollars of new money or the equivalent is created.

So we find that there is a place to get money. Therefore if we can get money so these people can go to work they will become taxpayers and will broaden the tax base so that we will not have to have this tax about which the hon. gentleman is worried. I know he has been worrying about it because there have been a lot of people worrying him about it. I will not say anything more because he has had a hatful of worries. There is no doubt of that. I am not egotistical enough to think what I say tonight is going to make any impression compared with the presentations made to him so far.

[Mr. Leboe.]

An hon. Member: Favourable letters too.

Mr. Leboe: I do not think the favourable letters were very many. I am quite certain about that. Otherwise he would not have had the worried look he has had for the last few days. The little stroke of business that took place last week end has helped him somewhat, but that was only a sort of sidelight. We have found out where we can get the amount of money that is needed to put people to work. The amount of money that is needed can be actuarially determined. If, with our computers, we can make mathematical calculations to the extent that we know when the eclipses are going to occur and where they are going to cross the earth, surely we can calculate how much money is going to be needed to carry on our economy in a healthy condition.

This brings me to a consideration of the words "inflation" and "deflation". I believe that the only way to deal with the proposition of money at any time is to deal with it in the light of inflation or deflation. It has been said many times that as Social Crediters we want to get the printing presses going to run off money by the bushel. Well, that is just so much nonsense. No Social Crediter ever had that thought. If he said that he was a Social Crediter, he was only a disguised Liberal or Conservative. We know so well we have to have some balance in connection with the creation of new money. I do not believe the minister will deny the fact that when a chartered bank buys a bond, that is a government bond, it creates the money it uses to buy that bond. I do not believe he will deny that. I think if you transfer the position of the chartered banks to the Bank of Canada, then when the Bank of Canada buys the bond it will create money against the assets, the bond, thereby increasing the money supply.

This practice is the same in Canada as it is in the United States. I should like to put on the record something which has been put on the record before in this connection, but I believe it is worth repeating. Some people do not read the same parts of Hansard. As a matter of fact, I believe few people read it. Robert B. Anderson, secretary of the treasury, was speaking before the Associated Press of New York city on April 20, 1959, and this is what he said:

Now, suppose I wanted to write cheques for a hundred million dollars—

They speak of big money, these fellows.

—starting tomorrow morning, but the treasury was out of money. If I called up a bank and said, "Will you loan me one hundred million dollars at 3½ per cent for six months if I send you over a note to that effect?" the banker would probably say, "Yes, I will."

You see, he is a good banker.

"Where would he get the one hundred million dollars with which to credit the account of the United States treasury? Would he take it from the account of someone else? No, certainly not. He would merely create that much money, subject to reserve requirements, by crediting our account in that sum and accepting the government's note as an asset."

So, you see, he created $100 million. He goes on to say this:

"When I had finished writing cheques for one hundred millions, the operation would have added that sum to the money supply. Now certainly that approaches the same degree of monetization as if I had called down to the bureau of engraving and printing and said, 'Please print me up 100 million dollars worth of greenbacks which I can pay out tomorrow'."

Then, we bring in the need for alertness, so far as inflation is concerned. Certainly, we must know that this creation of money will not be so great as to cause a rise in prices. We are under contract today which does not allow the free flow of prices up and down according to the money supply. I think the minister will agree with this. The paper companies on the west coast were accused of having a combine in connection with their prices. However, the investigation went right from the cutting of the log, and the transportation of the log to the putting of it through the pulp plant, and it was ascertained each pulp mill had the same costs all the way down the line. The end price was the same. All these items were under contract prices, so we have a basis of price control by the fact that the costs of these operations of these companies are controlled. We have, therefore, a measure of price control imposed upon us. There is no such thing as the free play of supply and demand.

Now, in so far as this business of writing cheques is concerned, I have handed the minister this piece of paper before. However, he was kind enough not to say anything to me, in case I took it up in this speech. Someone just handed me a note to the effect that the chartered banks have created $5,241 million from January 1, 1955 to July 3, 1963, an eight-year period.

The minister has stated, Mr. Chairman, that he would like to see the time when we could balance our budget. We know that this balancing of budgets is wrong; that is not going to bring prosperity. History tells us that. The United States, for instance, has a debt of $300 billion. Lots of people who call themselves economists will relate this to the gross national product. What they are saying, in effect, is this: If I go out and hew a thousand ties, I must owe somebody for the thousand ties. This is not common sense, but this is what they are trying to tell you. We must expand our money supply through a debt system, and it is all right to expand it according to the gross national product.

I say to the minister we do not need to go into debt at all for the public capital which is necessary to put these few people I am talking about to work, so that they will become taxpayers and we will be able to take them off the backs of the present taxpayer. We can talk about pensions, portable pensions and all this type of thing. I want to tell you a pension is no good unless there is somebody producing to meet the demands of that pension. We all know that. The fellow who was lost in northern British Columbia and had a lot of money and a lot of time to think, would take these thousand dollar bills out and count them one at a time. He was as hungry as all get out. It did not help him very muct.

We can talk about all kinds of pensions, but if we had inflation, it would rob our pensioners. The type of policy that is being followed here, Mr. Chairman, is one that eventually will rob our pensioners more and more. The cost of living is bound to rise under this structure of taxation. Let us get these people building schools, hospitals, roads, bridges, court houses, wharves, airports, airstrips, trails in the forest for the protection of our forests and so on. Let us do some of these things. Then, we will have an asset for the work they have done, and in return for that asset we will pay them from money that is raised in exactly the same way as we can raise it here. If we insist on increasing the national debt to have prosperity, instead of having it in the manner I have outlined, then I will go along with my friends to the left and say let us do it, and let us get prosperity.

However, let us get away from this taxing ourselves to death. If we carry on in this way we are going to find ourselves taxed to the point where our whole economy is going to collapse. We have to put our men to work. We have to make taxpayers out of them so that they can carry on in the normal way and live a decent life.

I should like to make just one short reference before I sit down, and that is a reference to British Columbia. The other day I whispered quietly to the minister that he should have Bennett over here to talk to him. I see that he has skipped out somewhere and will not be here for the conference. I had hoped he would be here so that we could get together and do something about this matter. I see that, according to the press, British Columbia has a budget surplus of $56 million for last year. Now, this is quite a sizeable budget surplus. I think the Minister of Finance could get some business along that line if he wanted to use the Bank of Canada. However, perhaps his hands are tied. I cannot see from here, but perhaps his hands are tied.

I shall just quote this and then sit down. We have heard that British Columbia has some sneaky ways of keeping its accounts. Well, Mr. Chairman, the Financial Times of August 7, 1959, had this to say in a first line editorial:

> Perhaps the showmanship on the occasion of B.C.'s bond burning last week was extravagant but the achievement was real.
>
> When Premier W. A. C. Bennett of British Columbia, in an elaborate ritual—and it was elaborate, I saw it myself

> —consigned some $70 million of cancelled bonds to the fire, thus wiping out the balance of the provinces direct debt which stood at $191 million seven years ago, he accomplished something which taxpayers all over Canada wish could be done in the name of their own provinces (and of Ottawa too).
>
> But politics creates strange moods. There has been an extraordinary amount of carping; charges of trickery have been raised and fingers are pointed at the direct or contingent debt of the province. The critics have really made hay out of their disapproval of the Bennett claims, although they are on very poor ground indeed.
>
> There is a difference, a very real difference, between direct and contingent debts; between debts the service of which is a direct charge on all government revenues on the one hand, and debts which are largely, or wholly, self-sustaining, occasionally even self-amortizing, such as the bonds issued by provincial power commissions, toll highway commissions and similar government agencies.
>
> An indirect provincial debt is simply one the service of which is guaranteed by the province in the unlikely event that a power commission, etc., would default on its own obligations.
>
> In times of generally rising government direct debts and the steady growth of interest requirements on such debts, one would have thought that B.C.'s achievement would be greeted with serious interest. However, the fact that it was done by a government that happens to label itself "Social Credit" was enough to bring out venom and ridicule.
>
> It is said that substantial sales taxes were needed to retire the debt. But at least these taxes did have this result. We note very high sales taxes in other provinces (and in Ottawa) without any evidence that a similar result is even contemplated. This is one instance where emulation rather than carping is definitely in order.

Here we have an example of a good province, a real up-and-coming province, a province that is not afraid to tackle the Peace river dam at a cost of $600 million and the Columbia river dam at a cost of another $600 million. It is a province that has got drive and ambition.

In closing I would like to say that if we think we can kill unemployment in British Columbia by our expansion, we know very well we never will. That would be the craziest thought, because everybody wants to come to British Columbia.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

[Mr. Leboe.]

Mr. Korchinski: The point I want to raise, substantiating the argument raised by the hon. member for Lisgar a few moments ago, is in connection with the installation of sewerage and drainage systems in an area which is not an organized municipality. It seems to me that the provisions are somewhat discriminatory against those areas that at present cannot qualify for a government grant. I am thinking in terms of small villages, hamlets, and in particular farm installations.

In the province of Saskatchewan the present hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam made quite a big issue at one time of the fact that he was going to get rid of the old-fashioned outhouses. He got quite a reputation for that. However since he came to Ottawa he seemed to have lost his desire to get rid of them.

I would like the minister to comment on this particular point because these little villages need more improvements than perhaps some of the larger organized areas, and would be discriminated against if the present tax is left as it is.

Mr. Simpson: I would like to add a few thoughts to what the hon. member for Mackenzie has said in respect to exemptions which apply to municipalities. I know it is unreasonable to assume the budget can be changed to suit everything, but when worthwhile suggestions are put forward we certainly hope the minister will give consideration to them.

At least three quarters of my constituency is composed of areas which are rapidly developing but which are not considered to be municipalities. Many of them are classed as local government districts, and according to the bill these areas will not have the same advantages as organized or recognized municipalities. I wonder would the minister tell us whether these areas, which are already set up under provincial status as local government districts, would be considered in the same light as municipalities in regard to certain exemptions, particularly those relating to sewerage and drainage systems.

Mr. Gordon: I will be glad to look into this, but I am afraid I cannot answer the question right at the moment.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 and 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Refund of tax paid on goods for use in sewerage or drainage systems.

Mr. Simpson: This is the particular clause in which I am interested. It is difficult to allow it to pass unless we can be assured that some consideration is being given to the pleas made. Many of the areas in northern Manitoba—and of course I realize in other parts of Canada as well—are not considered to be municipal bodies, but they are administered under provincial status as local government districts. The officers in charge, and in some cases the elected representatives, are carrying out the same duties as people elected in municipalities. However these areas are not municipal districts, but despite this fact they should be given the same consideration. I hope the minister will give an appropriate answer very shortly.

Some of these areas are fairly well developed. Others have plans for putting in sewerage systems, and it is going to be very difficult for them if they are to be taxable while adjacent municipalities are not.

Mr. Gordon: I think the hon. member will agree with me that this is a very complicated and complex question. It is difficult to know where to draw the line, but I would be glad to see that this matter is studied very carefully before the next budget is brought down.

Mr. Pugh: I wonder if the minister, at the same time, could consult with the Minister of Public Works under which C.M.H.C. operates. The C.M.H.C loans are restricted as well.

Mr. Pickersgill: National revenue.

Mr. Pugh: Thank you; national revenue. The reason for raising this question is that, for example, there are places in my constituency and others such as Churchill to which loans are not available for this purpose. It is most important from the point of view of early planning. If you can look ahead and feel that money can be raised at an early stage rather than later on, these areas, when they do become municipalities, will save a considerable amount of money.

Mr. Gordon: I will be glad to look into that question, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I will be just about 30 seconds. Perhaps it would be helpful if the minister would consult with the provinces and be prepared to accept the exemption for materials purchased in the name of the province, if they declared them for municipal purposes. I wonder whether the department would accept this declaration.

Mr. Korchinski: I have just one more point, Mr. Chairman. In his considerations I hope the minister will remember that there are places such as one I can think of particularly in my area, which is along the roads to resources program where there is a new resort springing up. It will take quite a few years before this becomes an organized area. Would the minister take that type of situation into consideration?

Mr. Gordon: I will be glad to do so.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Chairman, I would like the minister, when considering this matter, to realize that these places I am talking about are, as I mentioned, being developed rapidly. In northern Manitoba, for instance, there is the new townsite of Thompson, with a population of well over 8,000 now, I would say, which is not in a municipality; it is in a local government district. We have Snow Lake, Lynn Lake, the townsite of Churchill and others. These places are now being administered by a local government administrator appointed by the province of Manitoba. They are established towns; some of them are fairly heavily populated. I think they should therefore be given every consideration that a recognized municipality is given under this act.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I thank the hon. member for his suggestion.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister's advisers could answer this question. I wonder if there is not a point here as to the definition of "municipality". The definition of "municipality" may well be wide enough to include these unorganized areas. What is the definition of "municipality"?

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, a number of questions have been asked and I would like to hear an answer to some of them. The hon. member for Medicine Hat asked a question, as did other hon. members. Could not the minister answer the questions he has been asked?

Mr. Fairweather: What is the definition of "municipality"?

Mr. Gordon: If I may answer that question first, Mr. Chairman, there is not a definition of "municipality" under this act, because they are different in each province. That may be the reason. As far as I know, there has never been a definition in the act.

Mr. Korchinski: For example, we could have in the province of Saskatchewan the situation where the province buys some material and an individual goes to the province to purchase whatever is necessary for the installation of a sewerage system. Would that person be exempt from this tax, or not?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I suggested a few minutes ago that I think the minister can get around all these problems if he will accept the declaration of the province that these materials will be used for municipal purposes, even though they are used in a local improvement district, or in some provinces what they call a local government district, and so on. In Alberta they happen to be called local improvement districts, but they operate in the same way except they are administered by the different municipal districts rather than the local government.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, the reason I am hesitant to accept all these suggestions at the moment is that this is really a rather complicated subject. I am grateful for the suggestions, but I would like to have an opportunity to study them carefully before reaching a conclusion. I think the suggestion of the hon. member is a good one to study, but I am just a little fearful that it may have some hooks in it or some complications, and I would like a chance to look into it.

Mr. Olson: I can appreciate that, Mr. Chairman, but I wonder whether the minister would undertake to answer the questions that have been raised on clause 4 at some stage before this bill is passed through committee and given third reading?

Mr. Gordon: I will be glad to do so on third reading, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fairweather: I think there is a point here, Mr. Chairman, that tomorrow it is our understanding that there is to be a conference between the federal and provincial people on the municipal loans fund. Here, surely, is a perfect opportunity for the ten provinces and the federal government to come to an agreement as to what is a municipality. Perhaps if we stood the clause until we have had the assistance of the provinces, we would make some progress.

Mr. Gordon: I doubt whether at this conference tomorrow the provinces will get down to this question, Mr. Chairman. If they do, I will be delighted.

Mr. Fairweather: I thought that was the point.

Mr. Gordon: It is just possible, though, that it will be a short conference, and there are two rather important subjects which have to be considered. If there is any possibility of raising the point the hon. gentleman has mentioned, I will be glad to do that.

(Translation):

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that my hon. friend from Royal (Mr. Fairweather) has raised a very important matter. In fact, if we passed that section as it stands now, we would give the minister the right to define what is a municipality and we would thus encroach once again on provincial jurisdiction, because everyone knows that the municipalities are the creatures of the provinces.

I am convinced that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Favreau), who is listening now, agrees with me. That is why I hold that this important question should be submitted to the federal-provincial conference that will be held tomorrow. I submit that it deserves special consideration, even if we do not go as far as letting that article stand tonight.

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Chairman, there has been a suggestion that the minister should consider accepting the decision of the province as to whether these places that I have mentioned are to be given the same consideration as will be given to municipalities. I am quite sure that if we could obtain some assurance that a plan of this nature would be adopted, we would be quite willing to go along with it. But I think we would have to have some assurance that some such plan would be adopted for the protection of these various places which at the present time are not considered to be municipalities.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I have undertaken to study this matter. There will be a record in today's Hansard of all the suggestions that have been put forward. But I do not think I am in a position to give any undertakings. For instance, the hon. member mentioned Thompson as one of these areas. It may be that the International Nickel Company is building the sewerage systems there; I dare say it is, but I do not know. This is the sort of thing I should like to look into before reaching any conclusion.

Mr. Simpson: Mr. Chairman, I can accept that reply to a degree, because to a certain extent this is being done under agreement. But I am quite sure we all realize that this will not continue indefinitely in Thompson. The population is 8,000 now, or somewhere near that figure, and it is expected to reach 20,000 or 25,000. If it remains a local government district, the people are going to have to pay for those additional installations. As I said, this also applies to Snow Lake, Lynn Lake, Churchill, and many of the areas in the Swan river valley which are not municipalities.

Mr. Barnett: It seems to me the subject matter which has been raised with regard to what are referred to as near municipal situations, which apparently in the province of Alberta as well as British Columbia are referred to as local improvement districts, is quite an important subject. My understanding is that certain arrangements covering these things have been worked out. There is an accumulation of experience in the field of municipal winter works programs, which have also been arranged so that in some cases our Indian reserves have been able to qualify. It seems to me that a simple rearrangement of the drafting of this might make it possible under legal regulations that these matters could be included. As I recall it, it was agreed that we would sit till 10.30 and we have gone considerably past that time now. I think if we were to recess now we can proceed later with the remaining clauses. We certainly got past clause 1 very quickly and the minister should be able to bring in any minor modifications which might be required to meet any objections. Therefore I suggest that we should, to use a colloquial expression, call it a day.

(Translation):

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, I readily endorse the remarks made by the hon. member for Royal (Mr. Fairweather) and the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau), and I wonder whether the minister would not consider the advisability of replacing the word "declared" which appears in the last line of section 4 by the word "recognized".

By complying with this suggestion, I do not believe that the minister would be making a municipality out of an agency, but on the contrary, he would recognize an agency already established by a province. Indeed, if we read the text as it is drafted, we find there is some danger that this interpretation would constitute an interference in the legislation pertaining to municipalities which comes under provincial jurisdiction, whereas if the minister would recognize the existence of a municipality, it would simply be a recognition in fact rather than the establishment of an agency by right.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I agree with the views expressed by the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere (Mr. Paul) and I suggest the amendment he put forth be accepted.

I would suggest, however, that the words "for the purposes of this act" be added. In that way, the minister would not take the place of the provincial authority, for if he incorporated a municipality or declared an agency to be a municipality, in my humble opinion, he would be going beyond his powers.

(Text):

Mr. Fairweather: I know this problem is sticky—

Mr. Knowles: Ten thirty.

Mr. Fairweather: Thank you.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Fairweather: Could the minister not accept the definition of a municipality as one which is duly declared to be such by the minister of municipal affairs for the respective province? The municipalities are the creatures of the provinces. A conference is being held tomorrow to iron all this out, and I should like to see a little more leeway. The minister is being sticky on this and I should like to see some leeway.

Mr. Gordon: With the greatest respect I am not trying to be sticky. I think we are all feeling a little sticky in this kind of temperature. All I said was that this was a complicated subject, and I should like to take all the suggestions which have been made into account before arriving at a snap judgment.

Mr. McIntosh: We are asking for a definition of one word, and responsible ministers are concerned. Rather than take the definition of one of the officials or of the minister, why not consult a specified dictionary? The minister can take a choice and we will accept it. Because there are other words which have not been defined and about which we are going to argue. We have been caught on this before and do not want to be caught again.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, this is a complicated matter. Moreover, as someone has called it 10.30 perhaps the minister would consider it overnight and tomorrow come up with a suitable amendment, which would certainly be accepted by us on this side.

Mr. Olson: The last four lines of this clause have already provided for what we are asking, as far as I am concerned. This is a matter of definition. The last four lines read:

> —and for the purposes of this subsection any agency operating a sewerage or drainage system for or on behalf of a municipality may be declared by the minister to be a municipality.

If a province declares a local improvement area, a local government area, or some other area to be a municipality for the operation of that area, I think the minister has made provision here; but we need to have some assurance that we will not run into this problem of definition.

Mr. McIntosh: You said "I think" at the end of the sentence.

Mr. Barnett: I agree in part with what the hon. member for Medicine Hat is driving at, but as I read that clause it appears to me that if the words "for or on behalf of a municipality" were deleted, the clause would then read:

> —any agency operating a sewerage and drainage system may be declared by the minister to be a municipality.

That wording appeals to me as moving in the direction argued for by the hon. member for Medicine Hat.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 4 carry?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Churchill: May I make a suggestion here for consideration. I think an important point has been made by various members. If there is no controversy with regard to clauses 5, 6, 7, 8 and 9 we might pass those tonight and stand clause 4. Overnight let the drafters get busy and produce, as they always have in the past, a solution to this problem.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that is an admirable suggestion.

Mr. Fisher: I have an amendment I want to move to clause 5. If you are going to stand clause 4 you might as well stand clause 5.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that the committee shall stand clauses 4 and 5?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clauses 4 and 5 stand.

On clause 6.

Mr. McIntosh: I should like to have a definition of a "farm wagon".

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, it is now ten minutes to eleven and a number of matters remain to be dealt with. I think we should call it 10.30 as agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think it seems pretty evident that we have made a fair amount of progress and there does not seem to be much prospect of making any more, so I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again on another day.

Clause 6 stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Would the leader of the house outline the business for tomorrow?

Mr. Pickersgill: Before doing that I should like to express genuine appreciation for the co-operation which hon. members have given on a day when, perhaps, co-operation was not as easy as it might have been on some other days when it was a little cooler.

Tomorrow, as I indicated earlier in the day, the government would like to take the supplementary estimate which was tabled today, unless there is any objection to doing so, with a view to adding it so that it might be included in the interim supply to be considered next week. Then we will go on with the estimates of the Department of Transport.

I am advised that there is agreement among all parties that I can make a motion to refer the report of the chief electoral officer to the committee on privileges and elections at the beginning of proceedings tomorrow and that there would be no debate. If that understanding is correct, I appreciate it very much and will be glad to do this.

Mr. Churchill: That is agreeable as far as we are concerned.

Mr. Thompson: That is agreeable to us.

Mr. Knowles: The same with us.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then, on Monday, I am advised there is general agreement on all sides of the house that if the government will put on the order paper the motion regarding the remuneration and pensions of members of parliament there would be no objection raised to going ahead with all stages except third reading on Monday. The third reading would be held over until the next day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: If that correctly represents the sense of the house, and it can be so ordered, I will undertake that notice of the resolution will be given tomorrow evening so that it will appear in Votes and Proceedings. That provides the 48 hours' notice required by the rules. I have not sought unanimous consent for this, but I intend, also, to put in a notice respecting the Judges Act and I would hope it may receive similar treatment. I am not asking that this be done, but I would just hope it would be the case.

After those two matters have been dealt with on Monday, if there should be any time left, I know the Minister of Finance would like to complete this bill. We have made very good progress on it this evening. Then, perhaps, we could consider which of two other measures we might take, whether the surcharge legislation or the measure dealing with the economic council. I would consult with hon. gentlemen opposite if there were need for anything further to be added.

(Translation):

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. In the French version of the Votes and Proceedings of the house, there is an error in the second part of question No. 1,080. Instead of Minister of Transport, it should read Minister of National Revenue.

I would be happy if that correction were made when the question is put on the order paper.

(Text):

It being fifty five minutes after ten o'clock, the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, July 26, 1963

The house met at 11 a.m.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

AUSTRALIA—TABLING OF RESOLUTION ON DISARMAMENT

Mr. Speaker: By leave, I would like to lay on the table a copy of a resolution concerning world wide disarmament agreed to by the House of Representatives of the parliament of the Commonwealth of Australia on May 23, 1963, which has been forwarded to me by the Speaker of that house under cover of a letter dated July 18, 1963.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to refer to the document which Your Honour tabled at the opening of today's sitting. In view of the interest I am sure there will be in the document you received from the commonwealth of Australia, I wonder whether the house would agree that it be printed as an appendix to today's Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to have the document tabled this morning printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of document above referred to, see appendix.]

NEWFOUNDLAND SAVINGS BANK ACT

REPEAL OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (for the Minister of Finance) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-4 (from the Senate), to repeal the Newfoundland Savings Bank Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

HARBOURS

APPROVAL OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND ONTARIO RESPECTING PUBLIC HARBOURS

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-5 (from the Senate), to approve an agreement between the government of Canada and the province of Ontario respecting public harbours.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NUCLEAR TEST BAN AGREEMENT—POSSIBLE ADHERENCE OF FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and ask him whether representations have been made to President de Gaulle by the government of Canada with a view to securing his adherence to the nuclear test ban agreement. I realize that only a matter of hours has gone by since the signing of this agreement by the three nations concerned, but prior to that time had he discussed this matter, and what are his views as to the hopeful possibility of the adherence of France to the agreement?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I want the Leader of the Opposition to know that I did note carefully what he said yesterday regarding any overture or initiative which might be taken by Canada concerning a matter as important as this. When the French foreign minister was in Ottawa two months ago I had an opportunity to discuss over a wide area a number of matters with him. The Leader of the Opposition will appreciate that in such a discussion matters of this kind were carefully canvassed. I would not want to be more specific in my reply at this time. May I add that on June 8 last, when speaking in Quebec I made this observation: Canada, as a North American country with its precious heritage of two cultures from its two mother countries, can play a useful role by exercising a discreet influence in order to bring about a still better Atlantic understanding. But, the task will not be easy. I am sure the Leader of the Opposition will understand that I cannot say any more at this time.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question following the answer given by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I should like him to tell the house whether preliminary negotiations are now under way for a meeting between the Prime Minister and President de Gaulle this fall.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, there have been some discussions about a visit by the Prime Minister some time in the course of the next four or five months. Some arrangements have also been tentatively made for a visit by the Secretary of State for External Affairs some time in the month of December.

INQUIRY AS TO CANADA'S CONTRIBUTION TO WORLD FOOD PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of his statement on Wednesday, July 24, when he said:

It is expected that the total allocation for this purpose—

He was referring to gifts of food, and to wheat in particular.

—might rise to a level of around $40 million per annum over the course of the next few years.

I wonder if the minister could indicate the target he has in mind for the year commencing August 1.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker. It would be much too early to make such an estimate. We shall be consulting with a number of other exporting countries and with the wheat board to make sure that we do not spoil any commercial markets by our aid. I would hope that after we have had these consultations we shall be in a position to have a more definite program than we have at the moment. However, as I said in my statement, and as has been emphasized by some hon. gentlemen opposite, it is most important when we undertake this program that it should result in a genuine increase in the disposal of Canadian wheat and flour.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Has the department prepared a list of countries to which these gifts would go?

Mr. Sharp: We shall, of course, be examining a list of many countries. I do not think it would be in the public interest or in the interest of the wheat board to make public such a list.

IMMIGRATION

VISA EXEMPTIONS FOR TOURISTS FROM CERTAIN EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration or, in his absence, to the acting minister. Does the minister intend to exempt from visa requirements the citizens of Spain, Italy and Greece coming to Canada as tourists for periods of less than three months, as has already been done in the case of citizens of a group of other European countries?

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Acting Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration has been giving consideration to this problem, and I think he has the intention of making a statement on the mater, perhaps on Monday. I will bring the matter to his attention.

LABOUR RELATIONS

ACCEPTANCE BY UNIONS OF TEMPORARY GOVERNMENT TRUSTEESHIP

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Labour. Has he received assurances from the C.M.U., the national association of marine engineers and the Canadian merchant service guild that they would accept a temporary government trusteeship over their unions in accordance with the Norris report recommendations?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this is one question I should like to take as notice because I should like to review the file on this particular matter to be absolutely sure.

Mr. Balcer: A supplementary question. I wonder whether the minister could tell us whether he has sought such assurances and has asked the unions for them?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker, I have not sought the assurance of any of these particular unions.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Has the minister not been in consultation with the heads of various unions, and in particular with the C.L.C., in this regard, and has he received from the president of the C.L.C. acceptance of the principle of the appointment of trustees?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I did have a meeting two days ago with the executive officers of the C.L.C. and we did discuss a number of matters, particularly the recommendations of the Norris report. I understood on my own part that these discussions were confidential, and that it would not be appropriate to report the attitude taken at that meeting by the officers of the congress.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Was it as a result of these conversations that there has been what I think is a delay in bringing before the house legislation in this regard? Is the delay and the examination now being made by the various officials a result of the representations which were made by the C.L.C.?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, if delay is defined as a lapse of time, then there has been delay in the discussion or consideration of the recommendations of the Norris report. I think hon. gentlemen generally would agree that because of the far reaching nature of the recommendations and the complexity of the whole problem, considerable care has to be taken in reaching what would be an effective decision in this matter.

Having said that, I should like to tell the Leader of the Opposition that there is no relationship between the length of time spent in considering this problem and the conference with the executive officers.

(Translation):

TRADE

SUGGESTION TO SELL BUTTER TO UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture, but since he is absent I shall direct it to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the shortage of butter in Europe at present, and especially in the United Kingdom, can the minister tell us whether he thinks that Canada will be able to sell butter to that country, as the previous government did in 1959, when sales of that product to England totalled $4 million?

(Text):

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I do not think we shall lose any opportunity of selling butter anywhere in the world but, as the hon. gentleman knows, the price of butter in Canada is higher than the world price generally. This does present a problem, because in order to meet competition in other parts of the world our butter has to be sold below its cost.

(Translation):

Mr. Vincent: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. According to the information I was given, if the price of butter increased a little in England, because of that shortage—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. The original question was really one for the order paper. If the supplementary is pressing, would the hon. member please present it; if not, would he kindly put it on the order paper?

(Translation):

EXPORTS OF DAIRY PRODUCTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my last question for today to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. What steps does the minister intend to take to export our surplus dairy products?

(Text):

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was very kind in giving me notice of this question. In addition to the normal functions of the department in promoting trade, its main function being to keep industry aware of and to seek export opportunities, efforts are continuing on behalf of the dairy industry to secure more favourable terms of access for dairy products, particularly into the United States. Through the trade fair program Canadian dairy products, especially cheddar cheese, are being promoted in Japan, Australia and West Germany. A foothold has been obtained in the Nigerian market for sales of consumer sized packages of both skimmed milk powder and cheddar cheese. Prospects for the sale of dairy products through the establishment of milk recombining plants in newly developed countries, particularly in Africa, are being carefully studied and the industry is being kept informed of these developments.

The government also assists the industry to sell dairy products abroad through an export sales program on concentrated milk products. Quantities of dairy products are being made available also for use under the world food program. As I said earlier in reply to a question from another hon. member, the sale of Canadian butter abroad has been difficult since our domestic price level exceeds the world market price.

UNITED NATIONS

CANADIAN POSITION ON ADMISSION OF COMMUNIST CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I should like to address a question to the Minister of External Affairs. Is it the intention of the government to recommend the admission of communist China to membership in the United Nations?

(Translation):

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I feel I should let the hon. member know that, to my mind, his question probably stems from what I had the occasion to say yesterday before the committee on national defence.

I pointed out that my comments should not be interpreted as a proof that a new policy has been adopted concerning our relations with communist China, but that it was imperative to acknowledge the dangers inherent in communist China's attitude towards nuclear warfare.

If I am not mistaken, that is precisely what the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) had in mind yesterday, when he made, in the House of Commons, the following statement to be found on page 2602 of Hansard:

> I think a major challenge is presented to the nations of the western world today. Canada, the United States and other nations will have to take another look at our policy regarding communist China. We will have to review our thinking. We will have to consider the problem, and it is a tremendous one, in the perspective of changing events, and particularly in view of this agreement; because unless it includes communist China—and I do not want to mention France in the same paragraph—and we are able to secure the adherence of communist China, the threat of nuclear war will hang over us to a degree that we can only anticipate with foreboding, horror and overwhelming fear.

Mr. Speaker, I wish the house to know that I support unconditionally the words of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

(Text):

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate very much the lengthy quotation which made it possible for an intelligent answer to be given, but I am interested in knowing what the answer is to the question that was asked.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question. Does the Canadian government intend to establish diplomatic relations with communist China?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I already said yesterday that the government has no such intention. In addition, the question has not been discussed by the cabinet—

(Text):

For the benefit of the Prime Minister, what I said in French—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: He understands French very well.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —for the benefit of the Leader of the Opposition, what I said was that there had been no discussion involving a change of policy in this matter. The quotation I used and which I applauded was, I believe, a wise statement made by the right hon. gentleman yesterday, and it was the kind of statement that I, less succinctly and less lucidly, I admit, made in the defence committee.

AIRPORTS

THE PAS, MAN.—REQUEST FOR IMPROVEMENT OF RUNWAYS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that certain types of aircraft, particularly the Viscount, which normally fly a regular scheduled air service into the Department of Transport airport at The Pas, Manitoba, have recently been curtailed due to the deterioration of the runways, can the minister tell me what plans the department may have for rectifying this situation?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would be content to have me deal with that matter on the estimates, which will be the first item of business called today. I could give him better information then than by attempting to answer the question now.

Mr. Simpson: If they are coming up today that will be fine.

FINANCE

REPORTED VIOLATION OF INTEREST CEILING BY CHARTERED BANKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a question to the Solicitor General respecting an allegation that the statutory limit of 6 per cent on loans by the chartered banks had been violated. His answer was that it would not be appropriate for a minister of the government to comment on such revelations. I wonder whether he would, on reflection, consider initiating some kind of investigation to ascertain whether the allegation is true, inasmuch as it involves the alleged violation of a federal statute.

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I shall refer the matter to my colleague the Minister of Justice, under whose jurisdiction it would more properly come.

(Translation):

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

REQUEST FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF A FRENCH-SPEAKING ASSISTANT TO THE MINISTER OF INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister may I ask a question of the Acting Prime Minister.

Could he tell the house whether a French-speaking assistant will be appointed to the new Minister of Industry in order to "promote" the interests of French Canada since it was not deemed appropriate to appoint a French speaking deputy minister?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe that the Prime Minister intends to answer this question probably next week.

(Text):

PARLIAMENT HILL

SHORTAGE OF PARKING SPACE DURING CHANGING OF THE GUARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to that natural negotiator, the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Last Thursday I asked the Minister of Public Works whether during the changing of the guard here on the hill the tourists, for that half hour, might be allowed to use the parking space reserved for the diplomatic corps, which was seldom occupied. The minister replied that the question was being considered. I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he would ask his friends in the diplomatic corps to volunteer this space, which they never use at this hour anyway, for the accommodation of tourists.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I think my friend will appreciate that his question has implications which even I cannot understand. I think the question had better rest there until Monday.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

CANCER—CHEMICALS IN INSECTICIDES AS POSSIBLE CAUSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): In the absence of the Minister of National Health and Welfare I will address this question to the parliamentary secretary. I am wondering if the department has given any recent attention to a report from the United States that certain chemicals being used in insecticides are suspected of causing cancer in humans. I regret that I did not have the opportunity to give the parliamentary secretary notice of this question, and he might want to take this as notice.

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this question as notice.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

INQUIRY AS TO MEETING WITH PREMIERS AND FURTHER APPOINTMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Would he care to make a report to the house on the meeting with the premiers of the four Atlantic provinces relative to the Atlantic development board? He might also be able to inform the house when we can expect the appointment of the six additional members to the board.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, there was a meeting yesterday for little over an hour with the Atlantic premiers and my colleagues from the Atlantic provinces, the Minister of Industry and the chairman and director of the Atlantic development board. I think it was generally agreed that there was a very useful exchange of views. Certain explanations were given about the plans the government hoped to see carried out by the department of industry, the area development agency and the Atlantic development board. I invited the premiers, as I said I would do here in the house, to appoint liaison officers to deal with the board to ensure continuous consultations and co-operation. The invitation was accepted by the four premiers.

In so far as the appointment of additional members to the board is concerned, I hope that as soon as the legislation, which has now been approved by both houses, has received royal assent it will be possible to make those appointments without any delay at all so that a meeting of the board may be held at the earliest possible moment.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS

CAMPOBELLO ISLAND—PUBLIC ACCESS TO ROOSEVELT HOME

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries in his capacity as the minister representing New Brunswick. Will he take immediate steps, in the spirit of Hyannis Port, to clear away international red tape, which sounds more ominous than the national variety, and thus permit the public to visit the late President Franklin Roosevelt's summer home?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that does not come under the jurisdiction of the Department of Fisheries. I really doubt if there is such international red tape, but I shall bring the matter to the attention of the proper authorities.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO INVITATIONS TO YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. On July 18 the Prime Minister promised me he would look into the possibility of having representatives of the Northwest Territories and Yukon governments participate in this conference today.

Inquiries of the Ministry

I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister could let me know whether that promise has been translated into any kind of action.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I will bring this matter to the attention of the Prime Minister immediately, and I am sure he will deal with it on Monday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

STANDARD OF DRESS IN CHAMBER AND GALLERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to address a question to a responsible minister and ask that consideration be given by Mr. Speaker to a problem that I think concerns all of us. In view of certain temperatures and humidities in the capital city, will consideration be given to what is known as conventional dress in the House of Commons, in view of the continual breakdown of the air conditioning system? At the same time, will the minister responsible for making representations to Mr. Speaker also give consideration to the situation, in the light of the temperature and humidity, when members like myself have guests from constituencies 3,000 miles away who are denied admission to the house on your invitation and signature, sir, because a teen age boys does not have a jacket and because the father is not wearing conventional trousers but is wearing shorts? I think, sir, we would all be interested in having Mr. Speaker take these questions under immediate advisement.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I am sure Mr. Speaker has heard the point.

Mr. Speaker: I have heard the point.

AIR CONDITIONING FOR TRANSLATORS' BOOTHS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Public Works, and I trust Your Honour might take note of it. In view of the fact that the present extreme heat wave is likely to last until the end of this part of the session, would the minister take into consideration over the week end installing, perhaps on a rental basis, air cooling devices in the booths where our translators have to do their work? I understand the present interior condition of these booths is like that of the black hole of Calcutta.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, in answering this question I might also answer part of the question asked by the hon. member for Vancouver East. I shall immediately bring this matter to the attention of the chief architect of the Department of Public Works.

[Mr. Rheaume.]

I might also say that we have already prepared a plan for general improvement of the building, so far as air conditioning is concerned, for the benefit of hon. members in their offices and also in the elevators. There are other improvements which we think ought to be carried out in the building. It is an old building which needs modernization, but we do not want to do it piecemeal.

I hope that when the house meets again in the fall we will be in a position to disclose the plans we have and, Mr. Speaker, we intend to proceed immediately with this work for the benefit of all hon. members.

Mr. Winch: As a supplementary question, in view of the statement made by the Minister of Public Works, and relating to the question I asked a few moments ago, when His Honour the Speaker is considering the members of the House of Commons and those in the gallery, will he also give consideration in dress to the members of the press gallery, who have to steam under even greater hardship than we do?

INQUIRY AS TO IMPROVEMENT OF PARKING FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. My question is supplementary to the announcement he made to the effect that the government is preparing long range plans for improvements in the parliament buildings. In view of the parking problem on parliament hill, is the government giving consideration to the provision of underground parking as a means of increasing the amount of parking space available on the hill and at the same time preserving the beauty of the grounds that we have at this historic site?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, this is an important matter, no doubt because the parking facilities on the hill have developed into a very serious problem. For the past three weeks we have been considering three different plans, and one of them refers to underground parking. We think we will be in a position, perhaps within a month, to arrive at a decision as to which plan would be the best and would suit the present conditions. No doubt when hon. members return in the fall we will have a definite plan. I hope we will get it under way as soon as possible, because as I have said before, this is a very serious problem and something should be done this year.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON DISCUSSIONS WITH NATO COMMANDER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I should like to ask a question of the Minister of National Defence. Following his talks with General Lemnitzer, the supreme allied commander for NATO, is he in a position to tell the house what will be the future role of the air squadron stationed in France?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, there is no immediate plan for a change. As I have already told the house, the entire purview of national defence policy for the future is under review.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister give some report on his talks with the general?

Mr. Hellyer: We had very interesting talks ranging over a wide variety of subjects of mutual interest. We discussed all the current problems involved in the defence of the central European area and how Canada could best contribute to it. I think the talks were very helpful to us in planning for the future.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask another supplementary question. In the course of the wide ranging talks, can he say if the question of equipping these Starfighters with nuclear arms came up?

Mr. Hellyer: Well, I would not care to recapitulate all the subjects that were discussed. We had a very good exchange of views on all these important matters.

SHIPPING

INQUIRY AS TO OWNERSHIP OF S.S. "TRITONICA"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. My question has reference to the Tritonica, one of the ships to the sinking of which the minister referred in this house on Tuesday. In view of the fact that he gave us certain information, namely that the ship was registered in Bermuda, that it was manned mainly by a Chinese crew and that it was plying between two Canadian ports, can he also tell us who owned the ship?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I cannot give that information at the moment. I had it the other day but I have forgotten it. I will provide it later today.

Mr. Knowles: Will the minister find out if it was Canada Steamship Lines?

Mr. McIlraith: I will get the information later today and supply it to the hon. member.

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF DELIVERY PRIVILEGES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister now in a position to answer the question I asked him last week regarding the possibility of wheat delivery privileges being extended past July 31, the end of this crop year, for those who have been unable to deliver their full crop quotas?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have been in communication with the wheat board fairly continuously over the last few days over this problem of deliveries, and I hope to be able to make a statement setting out the position early next week.

(Translation):

NORTHERN AFAIRS

POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF NORTHERN QUEBEC ESKIMO AFFAIRS TO THE GOVERNMENT OF QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, I would like to address my question to his parliamentary secretary. Since the officials have completed their reports in connection with the possible transfer of Eskimo affairs to the government of the province of Quebec, when will there be a meeting of representatives of the federal and provincial governments to effect the transfer?

Mr. J. N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, when the date is set, it will be announced in the house in the usual way.

PENSIONS

COMMUNICATION FROM A COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, before we proceed with the orders of the day, I have a question I should have liked to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In her absence, I shall direct it to her parliamentary secretary. Has the minister received any communication from the firm of Alexander & Alexander Services

Limited concerning the Canada pension plan and, if so, does she intend to inform the house about it?

Mr. Stanley Haidasz (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I shall take the hon. member's question as notice and pass it on to the minister.

(Text):

TRADE AND COMMERCE

PUBLICATIONS OF TRAVEL BUREAU IN BOTH LANGUAGES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot asked me whether a publication entitled Circle Tour from Trans-Canada Highway would be published in French. As hon. members know, the Canadian government travel bureau is concerned with attracting tourists to Canada; therefore this publication, which was directed particularly to the United States, was published only in English.

Recently the bureau has been extending its activities into Europe. It has an office now functioning in London, and shortly we intend to extend the travel bureau's activities to France and Germany. This will, of course, make necessary the publication in French and German, and perhaps in other languages, of the publications which hitherto have been directed particularly to the United States.

PUBLIC WORKS

CANAL BRIDGE, CHESTER, N.S.—INQUIRY AS TO REPAIR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, on Monday last the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg asked whether repairs to the canal bridge at Chester were under consideration. The answer is that permanent repairs to the existing bridge are not considered feasible. Construction of a new bridge is now under investigation.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

REPORTED STATEMENTS BY MEMBERS OF COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister, and I may say he is P.M. to all of us at all times, and has been all his life. I want to reciprocate his kind references to me in that regard, and ask him whether any consideration has been given to an examination of the rather unusual statements, prejudging the bicultural commission, made by Mr. Andre Laurendeau, Mr. Jean Louis Gagnon, Mr. Jean Marchand, Mrs. Laing and Mr. Royce Frith. These observations indicate a prejudgment of the task these people have, and I am wondering whether an examination has been made of them?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I say first of all to my right hon. friend that if I have always been his P.M. I cannot say that he has always been my P.M. I may say to him quite sincerely that, notwithstanding our political differences, I have always regarded him in the friendliest way, and I know he has so regarded me.

I should like to take advantage of the question which the Leader of the Opposition has put, in order to read the comments which he says have been made and which I have not seen. I shall bring them to the attention of my colleagues in the government.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY BRANCH LINES—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the large number of applications for railway line abandonment pending before the board of transport commissioners, awaiting government consideration of the MacPherson royal commission report, could the minister bring the house up to date on what action the government contemplates taking with respect to this very important matter?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is not a matter of a large number of rail line abandonment applications awaiting hearing before the board. It is rather a case of large numbers of notices of intention to apply having been filed with the board. This was done at the request of the government so there would be available, when policies were being worked out, some idea of what was involved, and in this way there would be an appreciation of the possible problems facing the policy makers. It is quite improper to refer to these as applications for abandonment, because great numbers of them may never become applications for abandonment and may never be proceeded with. But getting the notices of intention forward so we would have some idea of what could be involved in the problem is very important.

Coming to the other part of the question, Mr. Speaker, it is, as I think I indicated earlier, the intention of the government to proceed with legislation on many parts of the MacPherson royal commission report, including of course this whole matter relating to rail line abandonment, later this session.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign the Prime Minister undertook to set up a committee for the purpose of looking into the whole question of railway line abandonment. Has that committee been set up?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Leader of the Opposition, I think the reference he has in mind was made in the Prime Minister's speech at Selkirk. Action was taken on that matter very soon after the government was set up; I am not sure whether it was at the second or third meeting of the cabinet.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is it a ministerial committee?

Mr. McIlraith: It was done by creating a transport committee of cabinet, and that committee has been quite actively engaged. I can assure the Leader of the Opposition that this subject has been receiving very close and very active consideration since the very first days this government took office. When I say that, I am not only referring to the policy matters, but in regard to proceeding with the preparation of the appropriate legislation, consultations with the premiers of those provinces most directly concerned and consultations with the various provincial government officials concerned with this problem at the working level.

CANADA ELECTIONS ACT

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE ON PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State) moved:

That the standing committee on privileges and elections be empowered to study the Canada Elections Act, and the several amendments thereto suggested by the chief electoral officer; and to report to the house such proposals relating to the said act as the committee may deem to be advisable.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

FINANCE

Contingencies and miscellaneous—

50b. Miscellaneous minor or unforeseen expenses —to extend the purposes of vote 50 of the main estimates to supplement, in such amounts and in accordance with such terms and conditions as the treasury board may prescribe, the estimates of other departments in order to provide for an accelerated construction and repair program and to provide a further amount of, $7,000,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I may just say a word about this item, which will then be explained by my colleague the Minister of Labour. It will be noted, sir, that this is an item to supplement the miscellaneous minor or unforeseen vote of the Department of Finance which appears in the main estimates. While it is quite unusual for a supplementary to be voted before the main item is voted, this is partly the result of the calendar and the fact that we had an election and the estimates are not coming along at the ordinary time.

The purpose of this vote is to provide funds to carry out one of the programs announced by my hon. friend the Minister of Labour on June 10 last. It was thought that in order to be quite sure there would not be any financial problem about going ahead with any of this work, it should be brought before the house at this stage. That is the reason for doing it. The reason for putting it in this particular vote is that it is contemplated that the actual expenditures will be made, as is the case with this vote ordinarily, in various other departments and transferred from this finance vote to the other departments in the normal way of which hon. members who have sat on treasury board are well aware.

We were advised by the officials of the treasury board that under our procedures this was the most satisfactory way of dealing with this problem. I had some doubt, I must confess on reflection, after making the announcement last night that I would ask for the vote, about whether I had been properly in order since the Department of Finance have not been called after the supply motion. I spoke to the hon. gentlemen opposite and also consulted the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who I readily admit knows a lot more about the rules than I do—

Mr. Knowles: Only when he agrees with the minister.

Mr. Pickersgill: He is not always right either—and he persuaded me that it is probably in order, almost certainly in order in a technical sense, to proceed with this vote. I am prepared to say that if any hon. member, because of the unusual character of the procedure, felt that it was not a proper thing to do at this time the government would not proceed with it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, it is so unusual to hear the hon. gentleman speak with uncertainty of his opinion that I am sure the house would, under the circumstances, be willing to do anything to approve a request on his part. He usually lectures the house as to what it should or should not do, and speaks with an extra authority. Today he spoke with that diffidence and concern with which all good house leaders speak when they have to bring about something that is not altogether proper. That he should have made an error in his interpretation of the rules has always been excusable, because after all Homer himself once nodded. Having said that, I think we on this side of the house, in view of the explanation, would be entirely prepared to go on with this procedure.

Mr. Pickersgill: I want to thank the right hon. gentleman without any reservation for his kind, and I think salutary, observations.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, might I have the privilege of saying a word or two along this line. I think of occasions in the past when as house leader I suggested even minor alterations in the business which was before the house, and I was from time to time subjected to considerable invective and sharp attacks from the present Secretary of State and his colleague who is now Minister of Justice. I also carried the burden, in certain reports which appeared publicly, of delaying the business of the house and indulging in wrangling. I hope the present house leader will now realize some of the difficulties which confront the government house leader and that next year, when he will be house leader of the Liberal opposition, he will realize that co-operation with the government house leader is sometimes the best way of expediting the business of parliament.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I will endeavour at all times, as long as I am on this side of the house, to show the same humility the hon. gentleman showed when he was here.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, if there is any problem as to the propriety of taking this action today we in this group would give unanimous consent, although we do not think there is any difficulty in that respect. I should like to comment for a moment on the remark made by the Secretary of State to the effect that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre knew a whole lot more about the rules than he did. He also added that he is sometimes wrong. The only deduction I can make is that when the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is wrong he knows it.

Mr. Pickersgill: So do I.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I guess I had better stay out of this, although I would say to the present house leader and the former house leader, who have been having a very friendly exchange, that if at any time they are in difficulty and need someone to mediate between them I will be quite glad to offer my services. We too are quite prepared, if it is necessary, to give unanimous consent to this procedure, but I am positive that this is not necessary. Rule 56 (6), which need not even be read, says quite clearly that a supplementary estimate is in the same category as interim supply, and I suggest that it is quite in order to go ahead.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, I should just like to ask the Secretary of State something for clarification purposes. Order No. 18 on the order paper refers to:

> —main estimates and supplementary estimates (A) and (B) referred.

If I heard the chairman correctly he called only supplementary estimates (B) and we have them before us. I should like the Secretary of State to identify for us supplementary estimates (A) and tell us whether they are under consideration, or what they refer to.

Mr. Pickersgill: Supplementary estimates (A) were the supplementary estimates which were tabled before we last asked for interim supply, and they covered all or most of the departments of government. The estimates for my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce have already been voted from (A). I take it that when, which I hope will not be long from now, we reach the estimates of my hon. friend the Minister of Transport, supplementary estimates (A) as well as the main estimates will both be before the committee when the items are called. We just wanted to dispose of this one first, and it was called separately. I think that is the correct explanation, and the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre seems to be indicating concurrence. I hope now, sir, that my hon. friend the Minister of Labour can tell us what the vote is about.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, my remarks on this item will be very brief. The house will recall that in June the government indicated that it intended to bring forward additional projects that had not been provided for in the main estimates. The purpose of this program was to help to alleviate particularly the problem of high seasonal winter unemployment.

The main estimates provided among other matters for both building and construction programs. I have been authorized by the government to ask various departments to bring forward additional projects for which moneys are not provided in the main estimates. The purpose of this item is to provide the moneys that will allow these projects to go forward. I should simply like to add that I have asked the various departments of government to bring forward projects which are justified on other grounds and which are in a state of readiness but which have not been provided for in the main estimates.

The item provides that these programs are subject to approval by treasury board, but I should like to add that they will also come forward to the Department of Labour for examination. The Department of Labour will attempt to assess the acceptance of these programs on two counts; first, that there should be sufficient labour content or employment content in these programs to justify their acceptance as an employment measure; and second, that these projects be undertaken in areas of high unemployment. It will not be the intention to bring forward additional projects under this item in areas in the country where there is not a specially high rate of unemployment. In other words this is an effort to deal with unemployment by providing additional programs with a justifiable labour content and to apply them in areas of high unemployment.

Mr. Starr: I should like to add just a few words to this discussion in view of what the Minister of Labour has said in trying to explain to the committee what this $7 million is intended to provide. All I have been able to gather is that this sum is being provided for the purpose of alleviating high seasonal unemployment and that certain departments are to undertake projects in order to help in this worth-while cause.

However, I feel we are being asked to approve an item which is somewhat hypothetical, at least with respect to the actual construction which is to be carried out by the various departments. Ordinarily public works required by each department are provided for in the main estimates, although occasionally supplementary estimates are introduced. It is usual for these projects to be carried out, at the request of the Department of Labour, at the time when seasonal unemployment is at its peak in order to help tide over that period. However, it seems that this is an additional amount, and the question which arises in my mind is this. Have the departments already planned certain projects, and what are those projects? What departments will be taking part in the expenditure of this $7 million?

It also seems odd to me that approval is apparently being sought for the expenditure of this $7 million without prior approval having been given by treasury board. The course usually followed, I believe, is that the department puts forward an estimate of expenditures. The estimate is approved by the treasury board, and only then is it brought before parliament for final approval. Here the minister is saying that parliament should approve first of all and that the item would then go before treasury board for approval. I wonder if the minister could tell us what specific projects will be undertaken, which departments are likely to be participating, and what plans they have with respect to the expenditure of this $7 million. I should also like the minister to give us some idea of the number of man hours of work the expenditure of this money is likely to provide.

Mr. Lambert: Like my hon. friend the member for Ontario I am somewhat puzzled by the procedure which is being followed. We are being asked to vote $7 million under an item which was really not designed for the purpose to which the minister has referred. We know the purpose of the schedule of items in the estimates, and this is not the one normally used to help deal with employment problems. In effect we are being asked to write a blank cheque to the extent of $7 million, and obviously we should like to know which departments are likely to take advantage of this provision. After all, an estimate of $7 million has been made, so unless someone has picked the figure out of a hat and said "We shall hold them down to this" it should be possible to give the committee some idea of how the money is intended to be spent as among the various branches of government. In the light of the new love for planning which seems to have developed in certain quarters I would hardly think this is the way in which the government would have proceeded. Is most of this money likely to be spent by the Department of Transport, or by the Department of Public Works, or by—

An hon. Member: Northern affairs.

Mr. Lambert: Well, the department of northern affairs in the wintertime? That may be, but normally it would not be. I think the minister should give us some further information, because it seems to me we are being asked to write what is in effect a blank cheque for a grab bag fund.

Mr. Fairweather: I am interested in the formula which the department proposes to use in defining an area of high unemployment. What is the size of such an area likely to be? Would it be a constituency, or would it be larger? Finally, would the national employment service give the hon. gentleman advice on this matter or would it be some other branch or department?

Mr. Herridge: I listened with interest to the minister's brief statement, and I want to take this opportunity to ask him a question or two because there seems to be some interesting happenings under the winter works program. When the hon. gentleman comes to reply, will he inform the committee as to the types of community organization other than incorporated municipalities which are entitled to qualify for grants under this program? I am thinking of privately owned organizations. My second question is this. Is there any co-ordination between the Department of Labour and other departments of government when consideration is being given to the making of these grants?

I want to bring these circumstances to the attention of the minister. A certain fruit growing area in my constituency which has a considerable irrigation system was informed by the water controller of the province of British Columbia that it would be unwise for the growers to undertake any extensive or unusual repairs to the system because it was likely they would be flooded out in a year or two. Consequently no repairs were made. Then a hint was given that it might be possible to rebuild this irrigation system under the winter works program. An application was made accordingly, and I do not blame these people one bit for doing so. They proceeded to rebuild the irrigation system as a result of the assistance they received from the federal and provincial governments even though they had been previously informed by another department that it would not be required in another two or three years.

So we have the Secretary of State for External Affairs doing his best to see that these people are flooded under 25 feet of water, and at the same time we have the Department of Labour making grants to them against the advice of water board officials to assist them to rebuild a system which, it has been said, may not be needed. I would ask the minister to explain what degree of liaison there is among the various departments of government, who now appear to be working at cross purposes, and to tell us what types of organizations other than municipalities are entitled to receive grants under the winter works program.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I am going to begin by saying that the Minister of Labour is one minister who always tries to answer questions directed to him, and I have found that to be his regular course. It is in that spirit that I now ask him to inform the house how this $7 million is to be expended. What is the general plan? There must be something in mind. Surely it is not to be a case of expenditure without a policy. How is the amount going to be divided? Is it to be a melon that is to be cut in various segments depending upon the demand in the particular departments?

I am sure we could reduce the amount of debate very greatly if the minister would tell us what the circumstances are that have impelled this unusual course. What is the extra amount going to be used for? What department is it expected will be making the expenditure? I put this in capsule form and ask him if he will not give hon. members this information now rather than wait, for after all the house has a right to know why such an unusual procedure of asking for $7 million over and above the regular amount of $3 million provided in the estimates is being followed. Would he be willing to advise the house now?

As the hon. member for Edmonton West has said, is this a blank cheque? My memory takes me back a few years to 1930. I recall the tremendous fulminations in the session in the fall of that year by the Right Hon. Mackenzie King when he spoke with authority and knowledge of the practice from the days of Runnymede to 1930, the need of parliament to have the fullest information, and said that nothing was more detrimental to responsible government than blank cheque advances made by parliament. I would ask the minister to give the house the fullest information he has. I am sure he must have it. The government is not asking for $7 million for the fun of it. It must know what it is going to do with it. The Minister of Finance has shown a propensity this session for asking for things about which there was no clarity in advance. I am sure the Minister of Labour does not want to join in the same company.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Chairman, when the minister was speaking he expressed his desire that this money be spent on works with a very high labour content. I should like to remind the minister and his colleagues that the shipbuilding industry has the highest degree of labour content, and that if he refers to the Department of Transport and the Canadian maritime commission he will find a large shelf of plans for ships that could be quickly built. I know that $7 million will not build many ships, but having regard to the conditions in the country I am sure we will be faced with further supplementary estimates. Furthermore, now that the minister has been in charge of the department for some time and perhaps knows something about employment conditions in the country, I think it might be wise if he were to again look at the length of time that the winter works program will be applicable. If he could give the municipalities some assurance that the program would be extended they could then do a lot of planning for winter works now.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I am quite agreeable to joining in the various suggestions that have been made that we get from the minister as much information as possible as to the purposes of the vote. I also support the suggestion made by the hon. member for Kootenay West that there should be careful scrutiny and examination of the manner in which this money is spent.

However, in view of what I regard as the very modest sum being proposed in relation to the purposes outlined in an earlier statement to the house by the Minister of Labour, I was a little puzzled by the suggestion of the hon. member for Edmonton West that the whole question of planning was involved in the expenditure of this sum. If we were being asked to appropriate $700 million, then I should think that would be a very legitimate approach to take to the question. Somebody used the word "peanuts" the other day in the house, and in relation to the scope of the problem that needs to be dealt with it is my view that this item is really very modest.

If the minister were to request me to offer suggestions, I am quite sure I could put forward proposals with regard to my own constituency that would eat up most, if not all, of the $7 million. I am sure the minister is aware of the fact that we have a somewhat milder climate on Vancouver island than do some other parts of Canada, and that this would be a very pleasant place for some of those who in the past have normally been unemployed in the winter to find useful occupations. I think most hon. members are familiar with the fact that the level of unemployment in British Columbia in the wintertime tends to rise for the very reason that many Canadians are inclined to migrate or drift to that part of the country during the winter season.

As far as I am concerned, my reaction to this vote is that it is altogether too modest for the purposes which, according to the statements made by the Minister of Labour and the Secretary of State, the government has in mind. The Minister of Labour said something about accepting suggestions from the various departments of the government. I am not sure that he will be willing to accept suggestions from all members of the house in connection with the spending of this money, but I do know that in my own constituency, for example, there are a number of very useful public works projects, some of them with a substantial labour content, that have been postponed for one reason or another. Some of them went by the board because of what was referred to in the last parliament as the austerity program but which to me represented unnecessary delay in the provision of needed community projects and public services. I should like to suggest that the Minister of Labour should have raised his sights a little higher when he was suggesting to his colleagues that this item should be brought forward in this way at this time.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I will try to answer as well as I can the questions that have been raised by my hon. friends in connection with this item. I am sure that all of us are concerned about the prospect of seasonally high winter unemployment that has been characteristic of the Canadian economy. With that in mind I hope I can make the purpose of this item clear to hon. gentlemen.

There is now provision in the main estimates as we now have them for various projects. The officials of the Department of Labour and myself were of the view that it might be possible to bring forward additional projects for which funds were not provided in the main estimates. We had in mind that in the various departments there might be projects that were in a state of readiness and that could be brought forward quickly as a means of helping to relieve unemployment if additional funds were provided. There will be some departments that are especially affected, for example public works, transport, northern affairs, forestry and others.

I will ask all departments to bring forward projects that have not been provided for in the main estimates and which are in a state of readiness and capable of being put into effect during this winter period. I hope these projects will come forward and, as the hon. member for Ontario said, they will go before treasury board for justification just as other projects go before treasury board. At the same time there will be the additional provision that these projects will have to be justified, in so far as the labour department is concerned, from two points of view. First of all they must have sufficient labour content to justify them as job creating projects. I can imagine a project that could be brought forward that could be justified on other grounds but would not create any substantial amount of employment, or create relatively little employment. That is what will be done.

Then, where will these projects go? I want to assure the house that they will not be placed in various parts of the country on the basis of arbitrariness or caprice. The Department of Labour has developed over the years a concept of surplus manpower areas, related to the extent and duration of unemployment in those areas. When the former government brought in its double depreciation program this definition was changed and enlarged to designate areas that would be eligible for the double depreciation allowances.

Now, as you know, the present government, in line with this concept, has mentioned on several occasions that it is proposing programs for special application to designated areas. Currently this concept of areas of high unemployment as defined by the Department of Labour is under review. There will be, when that review is completed and approved by the cabinet, particular areas in the country that are to be eligible for these special programs. It is to these areas that this special program will be applied.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And not outside?

Mr. MacEachen: Not outside of those areas; it is not intended to use this money except to assist unemployment in a manner that will be defined by the government through its designation of these areas in elaboration of the concept that was followed by the former government.

It is my hope that the department will be able to bring forward a sufficient number of projects that all this item will be used up. However, I cannot give that assurance today because I do not know what projects will ultimately come forward and be approved. It would be my hope that a large number of projects would qualify so that this total amount would be used up. Certainly, in so far as I am concerned, if it proved successful I would not mind asking my colleagues to provide an additional amount.

In essence that is the extent of the program or the purpose of the program. I agree that there is a certain element of the unknown in this because I cannot assure the committee what particular projects will qualify or whether the total sum will be completely used up, or indeed whether it is sufficient. I have attempted to indicate the general policy that will apply under this particular item.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister allow a question? Has there been any projection made by the Department of Labour as to the expected unemployment next winter? Has that been done as yet, and if so what is the number?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I should like to tell my hon. friend that I have not recently received from the officials of the department any indication as to the extent of winter unemployment. I must say that shortly after I entered this office I had a discussion with my officials and the intimation at that time was—this is subject to my own memory—that the problem of unemployment might be greater this fall or next winter than it had been. This was the original indication I received from the officials of my department.

Mr. Lambert: Perhaps during the course of his replies to other questions the minister will tell us or have his colleague the Secretary of State do so, why this rather extraordinary procedure was adopted. This is an item of the unforeseen kind under the Department of Finance. Why not be straightforward and say this is a special project under the Minister of Labour?

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I could answer—

Mr. Lambert: If I may finish, this intrigues me a little because frankly the one who is going to be spending the money or to have the authority to spend the money is the Minister of Labour, acting on behalf of other ministers. Why not say so and put it in his own estimates, rather than have this usually minor catch-all provision under the Department of Finance?

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to say that I have a great deal of sympathy for the hon. member for Edmonton West, because that was the original idea that was held when this project was first brought forward. I do not want to take refuge behind officials. I was an official once myself, and I always believed that the minister should take responsibility for these things. We were advised that from an administrative point of view it would be easier to do it this way. There is an "unforeseen" vote anyway in the department. I will come to the word "unforeseen" in a minute.

As the hon. member does know, because he has probably attended treasury board meetings assiduously, the amounts that are spent from the unforeseen vote are later charged back to the department concerned, and were the funds in the Department of Labour or any other department this course would mean another administrative process. We were advised that it would be easier administratively. It will be the intention, of course, to have these projects performed by the Department of Public Works or the department of northern affairs or the department under which they would normally come. The Department of Labour comes into the picture by giving a statement that there is enough labour content, that the project is in the right part of the country where the labour shortages are. Otherwise the projects will not be accepted by treasury board.

This is my understanding of the mechanics. The money will be paid out of this vote and then charged back to the appropriate department at a later stage in the financial procedures for accounting to parliament. It is just to conform with the normal mechanics of government. The hon. gentleman will see that because of the phrase "unforeseen" the wording of the vote is expanded so as to indicate that it is not wholly unforeseen. The only unforeseen element in it, as my hon.

friend has just explained, is that he is collecting a list of projects, but we cannot specify the projects until they have gone through scrutiny.

I think hon. members know that the government has not got power to get started on these things unless there is some vote from parliament authorizing it to do so. If we are to take a recess and not come back until the end of September, we would not want to hold up getting these projects ready and organized so that the actual work could start as early as possible in October and toward the beginning of November, when they would really be needed. I think that is the mechanical side of it.

Mr. Lambert: These items will be charged back to the department in the usual course of administration?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Lambert: Then is it the intention of the government that parliament will be informed of this particular group of projects, rather than having them lumped together with others and then saying, "Oh, yes, we put up a building for the Department of Agriculture, but it appears under the usual construction items in the vote for the Department of Agriculture"?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will give an undertaking on behalf of the government that either on the main unforeseen vote of the Department of Finance when it comes before the house, or on the vote of the Department of Labour, on the administrative item, whichever seems to be the more convenient and whichever comes at an opportune time, the government will give a full and detailed account of what projects have been selected, the progress that has been made on them, and the amounts involved.

Mr. Winkler: Did I understand the Minister of Labour to say that it has been projected by his officials that they anticipate a higher degree of unemployment this fall?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I replied to the right hon. gentleman who asked me whether my officials had given me any projection of prospects for unemployment, and I said I had no recent projection. However, I told my right hon. friend, and I repeat this subject to confirming it through notes which I have, that shortly after I became Minister of Labour it was indicated to me that the projections at that time were for greater unemployment this fall and possibly next winter.

Mr. Winkler: That is exactly what I thought I heard. I do not want to become contentious today, because everything so far has been in a more courteous vein than in the last few days, but this statement by the minister is of great significance, and accordingly I think I would agree that the way the spending of this money is being projected is probably a very good idea at this stage. Further, the way the matter was projected by the Secretary of State is worthy of consideration.

I do not want to beat a dead horse, but if the projections are in this direction then it seems to me both ministers should use their influence and good offices to get this sales tax measure removed. They would achieve a much higher degree of employment by doing that and would be much more popular throughout the country.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. MacEachen: I do not want to take the floor from my hon. friend, but I was asked a question which I had hoped to answer. However, I interrupted my own statement to answer a question put by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. In connection with the winter works program, which is a separate program from this particular one, I understand it is possible for an application to be made by a province on behalf of an unincorporated municipality.

For example, in certain parts of Newfoundland municipal organizations do not exist in the accepted sense, but upon inquiry I am informed that on at least one occasion it was possible for a province to make an application for assistance under the winter works program, on behalf of an unincorporated region, or an area that was not a municipality in the usual sense. That is the only information I can give to my hon. friend today, but I would be glad to make further inquiries so I could advise him at a later date.

Mr. Herridge: I thank the minister for that explanation, because that has occurred in my constituency where the owners of privately owned irrigation systems have received assistance. There are a number of other bodies waiting to make application, and I will welcome further information.

The only other question I wish to bring again to the minister's attention concerns co-ordination and co-operation among the departments. I have a concrete illustration of officials of the Department of Agriculture urging certain people to increase production by extending and improving their irrigation system. I have proof of other departments telling them not to increase production and saying "Leave your system alone; we are going to flood you out." However, I found that the Department of Labour did give a grant to these very same people, who received this contrawise advice, for the improvement of their irrigation system. I would like the minister to explain what is the co-ordination which makes it possible for three departments to be working in different directions with respect to the application of the winter works program.

Mr. MacEachen: I certainly agree with my hon. friend that it is very important that all departments of government co-operate with a view to adjusting and developing their programs, with the problem of unemployment and the creation of further employment in mind. At present there is an interdepartmental committee involved with the development of projects that might be applied under this particular item, and this committee has as its job the reviewing of all departments and the bringing forward of projects that might assist employment.

From that point of view it seems to me that this committee ought to be the vehicle through which the proper co-ordination of departments is achieved for the purpose of creating employment opportunities. I hope this particular emphasis will be increased rather than decreased, because I believe that further progress can be made along those lines. If that is what the hon. member has in mind, then I certainly accept his suggestion and agree with it fully.

Mr. Aiken: I am sure, Mr. Chairman, all hon. members have excellent ideas on how this comparatively small sum of money could be spent, and assist the national economy, but I would like to point out one matter that would be especially valuable to the objective the minister has outlined. It concerns the construction of small tourist wharfs. Recently I put a number of questions on the order paper concerning a program of small docks and launching ramps projected for my own area and, I understand, for most other areas.

The answers I received to those questions indicate that there has been a very serious cut back in this program from what was planned last year. Most of these jobs are small—in that they would cost anywhere from $5,000 to $15,000. Most of them are in small communities, where the navigation for tourists particularly is uppermost in the minds of the local people. They meet most of the essentials the minister outlined; they are small jobs, a large number of which could be carried out with a small amount of money. I urge that a review of the Department of Public Works tourist works program be undertaken when this vote is passed, because I am given to understand that it was cut back very drastically, not at the request of anyone in particular but merely because the money was not available. If this money is now being made available I should like to see it used in these very useful projects, which have always brought good results to small communities and have created employment because they involve the provision of local labour and materials.

Mr. Hales: Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a few words on this vote. It seems to me a very unusual request is being put before parliament at this time. We are being asked to sign a blank cheque for $7 million, and we are not told what projects it is for or where those projects are to be located. I think we should know this. We may not agree with the projects or we may not agree with their location. In view of some of the sad experiences of this house recently with regard to government planning and the government then having to back track, and one thing and another, the minister should have come forward with some definite projects which they have in mind. He should tell us what they are and where they are to be located. This situation seems to me to be the same as that of a sales manager going to the manager of the company and saying, "I want $7 million", and when the manager asks him what it is for he says, "I do not know, but I think we will need it".

I think we are being placed in a rather unusual position in being asked to endorse this supplementary expenditure of $7 million. The minister, rather than cutting back the winter works program as he did, would have been better advised to leave it as it was. This in itself would have helped the employment situation quite a bit. I for one, Mr. Chairman, do not like the way in which we are being asked to accept this vote.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I find it very difficult to understand why the minister and the government have not been able to give us more information as to the projects they have in mind. The minister indicated that it is approximately three months since they were advised of the likelihood of an increase in unemployment this winter. Surely during that period some advice could have been received from the departments with regard to projects that were available. If I understood the minister correctly he indicated that there was already a shelf of projects available to be undertaken under this program in the various departments of the government. It may be a nagging thought, but we wonder why something has not been done along that line so the minister could have brought to our attention at this time some of the projects they are thinking of undertaking under the program.

I have one or two questions I would like to ask the minister. I wonder whether any limit will be placed upon the amounts that will be available for any one project. Another question that might be of interest to the committee is whether there is any particular type of project that will be excluded from this particular grant of money. Perhaps the minister could answer those questions.

Mr. Rynard: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister whether any of these projects had been planned prior to his taking over as minister. I would also like to ask him whether there has been any consultation with the provinces with regard to the spending of this money. I suggest to the minister that the great increase in boating demands a larger number of docks than we have at the present time. Some of these docks would be small, but in the building of them—and I could name dozens of places where they are needed—there is a great deal of labour involved. I would ask the minister to discuss with the Department of Public Works those projects that were cut off after having been planned, or which for some reason or other have been shelved, and to reconsider the building of these docks.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Mr. Chairman, the minister seems to be rather vague about the type of projects and works that may be carried out under this $7 million vote. I wonder whether he can give us any definite information as to what the percentage of labour content should be in a construction project that is being considered, to make it eligible to participate under this vote.

Mr. More: Mr. Chairman, there has been reference during this discussion to the amount of $7 million being rather small. It may be, in the light of the problem that some members of the government foresee; but I think we should bear in mind that $7 million of the taxpayers' money is quite a large sum. In fact 30 years ago in my province of Saskatchewan, at which time we had close to the population we now have, that was half the budget. I hope the minister understands that the matters being put forward at this time are being put forward responsibly because of the apparent situation.

I am not quite clear about this and I want to ask the minister one question. Do I understand that this $7 million is desired for projects only in areas that qualify as surplus manpower areas? I am not clear on this point from what has been said so far. I formed that opinion, but some of my colleagues have indicated that this is not so. I am also interested in the matter of labour content, which I think is very important. Also, would the minister tell us whether this is to be solely an expenditure by the federal government, or will any of it be used in sharing programs that will provide employment?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, may I call it one o'clock—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lambert: —because there are two or three other matters here that should be considered. I would ask hon. members opposite not to fret. They are asking us to accept this vote; a new procedure is being followed, and I think we should be quite careful with it. We can continue with it at 2.30.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is one o'clock.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. The house in committee of supply, supplementary estimates (B), Department of Finance, vote No. 50b.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, after conferring with hon. gentlemen opposite at one o'clock it seems there is a feeling that it would be preferable to have more information about this particular vote than it is possible for the government to give at the present time, for reasons which my hon. friend the Minister of Labour gave and which, I think, are well understood to the hon. member for Ontario who formerly occupied that portfolio. The government has no desire whatsoever to ask the committee to accept any vote without adequate information and explanation. As I explained when the vote was introduced, it is not essential that it be passed at this time. It was thought it would be a convenient thing to have it passed because it is for the purpose, and solely for the purpose, of attempting to alleviate the exceptional unemployment which this country unfortunately has experienced for quite a number of years in the winter months. I do not anticipate there will be any shortage of funds before it is necessary for the government to ask once more for interim supply, particularly as I understand it will be necessary to do so as soon as the house resumes on September 30. Therefore I would ask that this item be allowed to stand and that we proceed to the Department of Transport.

Mr. Starr: If I may say a word before you make your decision, Mr. Chairman, we realize the necessity that something be done during the winter months, as we have done in the past, in order to alleviate the seasonal unemployment experienced. We put forward programs to this end. However, there is just not enough information available to members of this committee at this time for them to pass a definite sum of $7 million for something which may be determined in the future. My understanding is that these projects can be assembled and approved by treasury board and proceeded with, so that there will be no lessening of any attempt to do something about winter unemployment. These projects can be proceeded with, and when this parliament returns in the fall then the Minister of Labour can put forward the $7 million, or probably even more. From the projects listed and their estimated cost I think probably more will be needed, and every member of the committee will be well enough informed to be able to vote with some intelligence upon a sum of money such as has been suggested. So the work can go on and we can pass the estimates when we come back in the fall.

Mr. Pickersgill: I just want to say one word. I can assure the hon. gentleman from Ontario and the committee generally that the government has no intention of seeking to take any partisan advantage in this matter whatsoever. I have indicated quite clearly that through interim supply the funds will be available which will be required in the meantime. I detect nowhere in the committee any opposition to the objective of this vote, so that I do not think the government should feel inhibited about going ahead with the program. If there is any dissenter in the committee I wish he would speak up, because I think every hon. member of the house is anxious to do everything he can to see that unemployment is reduced as much as possible in the winter months. Therefore the government will assume that getting interim supply next week gives it a mandate to go on with this program which was outlined by my hon. friend the Minister of Labour. Before we ask parliament finally to determine this matter, we will be very happy to let it stand over till more detailed information is available to parliament.

The Chairman: Is it agreed that vote 50b stands?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item stands.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

1. Departmental administration, $3,388,600.

The Chairman: The committee will now proceed to the consideration of the estimates of the Department of Transport, vote No. 1, departmental administration. Shall this vote carry?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, during the question period today two questions were asked of me. At that time I assumed that the estimates were being called as the first item of business, immediately after the question hour, otherwise I would have answered one of them forthwith. The other one asked for information of which I was not sufficiently sure to give an accurate answer.

As to the question asked by the hon. member for Churchill having to do with the condition of the runways at the airport at The Pas, the situation is that these runways deteriorated very rapidly and present a real problem. At the moment engineers are trying to assess what requires to be done in the matter. There is not much more useful information I can give him at the moment.

As to the other question asked by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre concerning the ownership of the Tritonica, the owners are Snowberry Shipping Co., Hamilton, Bermuda. That company being a limited company, I do not know who the shareholders are but I have every reason to believe they are not Canadian.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, I welcome this opportunity to say a few words on the estimates of the Department of Transport. In my opinion this is one of the more important departments in the federal field, even more so because ever since the report of the MacPherson royal commission was presented to the government it has been apparent that some of the suggestions or recommendations were of such magnitude and of such far reaching significance that it is almost unbelievable they would be implemented.

For instance, in Saskatchewan alone close to 14,000 farms will be affected by railway abandonment. More than 1,274 miles of railroad are likely to be abandoned and approximately 156 towns would be directly involved. In addition, 318 grain elevators would be put out of commission. All this presents a most serious problem as far as Saskatchewan is concerned. It was said at the turn of the century that if Canada was to take her proper place in the world, her commerce must be increased. The way of bringing this state of affairs about was to build these railroads so that grain could be transferred at low cost to foreign markets. The same basic situation prevails. The grain will still have to be brought to the seaports and if these railroads are abandoned, many farmers, in future, will not be able to deliver their grain.

There may be justification for abandoning some rail lines which run parallel to others, say 15 miles apart. But if communities are left 50 or 60 miles from the nearest railroad, farmers are going to be hurt very badly. The benefits of the Crowsnest pass rates would disappear. This is a problem which cannot be handed to the transport commissioners for them to solve. It will have to be tackled as a matter of government policy. The government will have to see that these places are not left without a railroad service.

A few days ago I placed a bill before this house seeking to have a grain terminal built at Tisdale in an area which, in the past, could never deliver the same amount of grain as other areas in Saskatchewan. One purpose of my bill was to enable shipments to be expedited through Port Churchill. Should these abandonment proposals go through, the three western provinces would, I think, need many new terminals. In former years when there was a surplus of grain the federal government had to pay as much as $50 million in storage charges to the grain companies. A terminal built by the government would cost approximately $2 per bushel stored, a cost of, say, $10 million. In years of surplus the government would not have to pay for storage in federally-owned elevators and this saving would, in itself, justify building such terminals as I have proposed. It has been said that private companies would provide storage on railroads which have not been abandoned. This might be so, but some of these places could easily be 50 or 60 miles away from the farmer concerned. If it were not economic for private companies to build grain elevators at such places, then government terminals should be built.

It was thought by some people when I introduced my bill that this was an exaggerated idea and that the government could not build these inland terminals. But in the light of the fact that as many as 15,500 people might be affected, it is not hard to see that a time may be coming when governments will have to start building these publicly-owned terminals.

I know the minister is anxious to get his estimates passed and I do not want to elaborate on what I have said because I did present the case on an earlier occasion. At the same time I would urge the hon. gentleman to see that the abandonment of railway lines is not left for some such body as the board of transport commissioners alone to deal with. The government itself must outline a program to see that the farmers will not be deprived of their privileges, deprived of the benefit of the Crowsnest pass rates and deprived of the opportunity to get their grain to market as cheaply and efficiently as possible.

Mr. Nasserden: I should like to congratulate the hon. gentleman on his appointment as Minister of Transport, one of the more important departments of government and one of particular interest to western Canada, especially at this time, for reasons which have just been given by my hon. friend from Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale in his comments on rail line abandonment.

We in western Canada know there are some lines which will have to be abandoned because of economic reasons. At the same time we want to be sure that such abandonment as may take place does not in any way cut into the benefits now enjoyed by farmers in western Canada under the Crowsnest pass rates agreement. I wish to underline this statement because some of the intentions which have recently come to light indicate that the railways are not taking into consideration the long distances some farmers will have to cover in order to get their produce to the rail lines which remain in existence. I was greatly heartened by the minister's statement this morning during the question period when he indicated these were only intentions, and that many of these lines would not necessarily be abandoned in the period that lies ahead.

Another matter that is requiring a great deal of consideration at the present time is the continuing of the program for the elimination of grade crossings. As all hon. members know, during the past several years quite a problem has developed in the vicinity of many of our towns because of the use of diesel engines, in that sometimes there will be three or four engines pulling as many as 200 cars. It is a difficult problem both for the crew of the train and the people wishing to use the crossing. I urge the minister and the government to consider a greatly expanded program for the elimination of these crossings by providing underpasses or overpasses, whichever may be suitable. This might be one of the programs that might be undertaken in connection with the item that has just been allowed to stand.

There is another matter that comes under the Department of Transport in which there is a great deal of interest in my area. I refer to the provision of airstrips for private aircraft. Many people are looking to the government to provide greater assistance than in the past, in order to facilitate the development of transportation by this means. A greater number of people are purchasing their own aircraft, and many more would do so for their private use if they were assured that municipalities could secure some assistance in the provision of suitable airstrips. There are a number of other things I will deal with when we are discussing the individual items, but that is all I wish to say at the moment.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I should say something at this point, since the remarks pertaining to the railways are of a general nature and not specifically dealt with as such. I thank hon. members who have just spoken for their kind references to the department. There is one thing I think I should say about the remarks of the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale, in which he set out absolute figures as to the numbers of elevators involved in the abandonment of railways lines. I wish to warn against anyone accepting such figures as absolute because we do not yet know what lines, or what mileages are involved in any possible program of abandonment. Therefore any figures given now might very well prove to be inaccurate.

Hon. members are perfectly correct in describing the problem as one of very great importance to the prairie provinces. There is no doubt about that at all, and I do not think anyone is more willing to recognize that fact than I am. The situation is simply that in 1959, presumably because of the complexities of the problem, the former government appointed the MacPherson royal commission to examine railway transportation matters. The committee finally made a report and no action was taken before the former government left office. In fairness, however, I must say there is every indication that they were seeking to take action and had legislation on the subject in the course of preparation, although that legislation was never in any way made public.

Since taking office the present government has given a great deal of attention to this matter. As I indicated in my opening remarks on the estimates, the legislation on the subject which I hope to bring before this session of parliament is complex and difficult. On two major points it would involve some difference in thinking from what I take to be the position of the former government. That can be explained however either on the basis of a difference in point of view or as the result of further examination of a very difficult and complex subject. In any event, there is the clearest possible recognition of the fact that what is needed is to rationalize any program of rail abandonment, to coordinate it and carry it out in such a way as to result in the minimum of adverse consequences in the areas concerned. That is the purpose of the legislation.

It is not proper for me to anticipate at this time legislation not yet before the house, but in order to allay any misconceptions or undue fears about it I think I should give some indication of what our thinking is in preparing the legislation. Legislation is being prepared in close co-operation with the prairie provinces and the maritime provinces, these provinces being more directly concerned, and after consideration of the many representations received from some of the provincial premiers and their officials in the provincial departments dealing with this subject. I hope that when we have the legislation ready for submission to the house it will reflect adequate consideration of their points of view, and the great knowledge they have of this subject because of their concern with railway problems over the years.

There are, of course, other recommendations of tremendous importance in the MacPherson commission report which deal with the methods of setting freight rates. I am not unaware of the complexity of this subject and I hope I am not unaware of the things that will have to be avoided in bringing in new legislation on the subject. I thought I should make these remarks at this stage so that there would be no undue fear on the part of members or the people in the areas vitally concerned with this problem.

Mr. Balcer: May I ask the minister a question on this very subject? In answer to a question on the orders of the day this morning he stated that the government had formed a cabinet committee to deal with branch line abandonments, and that this was in accordance with an election promise of the Prime Minister. We had a similar cabinet committee in the past when we were in office. That committee met with the premiers of the provinces to discuss this very subject and also had an opportunity to discuss it with officials of the provincial governments and other interested ministers. Can the minister tell us if the cabinet committee of the present government has had meetings with the premiers of the prairie provinces on the matter of branch line abandonment?

Mr. McIlraith: The meetings were conducted on an individual basis, not with the premiers collectively, and the form of meeting varied with the different provinces. In the case of Alberta I met with the premier and the provincial government agent alone. Then the officials continued to work on it at their level. In the case of Saskatchewan my colleagues and I on the transportation committee met with the premier of the province and a delegation. In the case of the province of Nova Scotia I may have been alone; I am not sure. Two representatives of the maritimes commission, I believe, were there as well. Then, in the case of Manitoba, I did not meet with the premier, but what he described as I believe his working team of experts from the government met with the officials of the department. This has been done in other areas with the premiers concerned.

In other words I thought that because railway problems vary from province to province, it would be more effective to meet the provincial representatives individually, rather than meet a collective group. One province will be more concerned with one aspect of railway problems than another. I would not want it to be thought that the only railway problems discussed were those related to railway line abandonment. Problems inherent in rate making and things of that sort were also discussed at some length.

Mr. Balcer: I gather from what the minister has said that the great plan announced by the Prime Minister during the election concerning this commission of the federal government to meet with the interested provinces has not materialized so far. The minister has been meeting from time to time with representatives of the provinces and the new government has been doing less, so far as talks with the provinces are concerned, than was being done under the old government?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Chairman, that would be a completely wrong assessment of the situation. I took the trouble, when starting into this subject, to check as closely as I could on what had been done by the former government in this area. I cannot speak for the former government. I can only say what I found when I took over and what information could be obtained from records and talking with people who were there at the meetings. The procedure we have adopted is the converse of that situation under the former government.

As I understand it, the former government confronted the provinces with proposals for legislation that were a fait accompli. The provinces were confronted collectively. What I have been seeking to do is the very opposite. In working this plan out—and we have tried to be very careful because I think it is of vital importance to the provinces—we tried to arrive at a plan that would meet the wishes of the provinces and other organizations as well, such as the wheat pools and others. We have brought them in to get their ideas, to discuss the kind of legislation that they think will meet the problems as they see them. While it is quite true we will have to take responsibility for the legislation, it should be legislation prepared as a result of consideration of the arguments that these representatives put forward. Furthermore, we are following this up by having the working people of the department at the technical level follow the consultations through.

I am hoping that in this complex and difficult subject we will get better results in the end. In saying that, I do not mean to imply criticism of the former government in that respect. I must say that this method of proceeding was worked out while having the benefit of knowing how the former government had proceeded, and having the opportunity of deciding what I thought could be improvement in the method of dealing with the provinces on this point.

Mr. Balcer: I do not want the minister to leave this impression—

The Chairman: Order; I recognized the hon. member for Churchill.

Mr. Simpson: There are several points I should like to bring to the attention of the minister while we are discussing item 1 of the estimates of this department. First of all, I should like to refer to the minister's reply concerning the condition of the runways at The Pas, Manitoba. I appreciate the information that the engineers are looking over these runways in an endeavour to see what can be done. I know the people will be gratified with this information. I understand also that since they are making this investigation we can be reasonably sure every effort will be made by them to turn in a report on the work which is necessary. However, I am hoping that, when it is proven this work is necessary, there will be no hold-up along the line anywhere. This is extremely important, not only to the people of The Pas but to various people in all parts of northern Manitoba.

The aircraft which has been making the regular scheduled flights into The Pas, as I mentioned this morning, was a Viscount, but it is unable to land at The Pas. The company that operates this service has inaugurated a shuttle service with DC-3's between Thompson and other points in the north, bringing passengers from those points into Flin Flon. They are just coping with the situation on a temporary basis, but that is disrupting many things right at The Pas airport.

As the minister probably knows, this airport was constructed somewhere around 1942, and was taken over by the Department of Transport at a later date. Since then, industry has built up in northern Manitoba and several small businesses have sprung up in the area of The Pas airport as a result of the increase in passenger services. If something is not done to have these services resumed as quickly as possible, these people are also going to suffer considerable financial loss. I would hope, therefore, the minister would seriously consider this report when it is available and take the appropriate action as quickly as possible.

There is another airport in northern Manitoba which is extremely important, namely the one at Thompson, Manitoba. I understand that plans are under way for the hard surfacing of the runways at this airport. I ask for the utmost co-operation from the minister in seeing that there are no road blocks put in the way of this work going ahead as rapidly as possible. I do not know what the situation is at the present time. However, the last time I inquired it was hoped the hard surfacing could begin this year, and I sincerely hope that will be the case.

My congratulations go out to the officials of the minister's department for the very splendid work they have carried out on airstrips in northern Manitoba in recent years. At both Flin Flon and Lynn Lake we have new 5,000 foot runways, forming part of a network of airways throughout northern Canada. These strips are widely used and appreciated by the people of the area. They are a credit to the department, and I can assure the minister that the planning and engineering which went into them left nothing to be desired. Both the headquarters staff and regional staff at Winnipeg worked in close co-operation in doing this work.

However there is one thing which does create a problem for the local authorities in the operating and maintenance of these airstrips. It is a problem well known to the officials of the department, that which local authorities have of finding enough money to operate the strips.

I know there are regulations under which subsidies are granted, and in the case of Flin Flon everyone is quite happy with the type of system that is in effect. In fact, much to the surprise of some people, I believe they have found it economically profitable to operate the airport there. As against that there are places like Lynn Lake which have repeatedly sought, and in some cases received, assistance in the form of snow removal equipment for the maintenance of runways. This is a bigger item than a lot of people realize because the runways must be maintained in perfect condition throughout the winter. Snow removal must be kept up almost daily and it becomes very expensive.

I would ask the minister to give this problem his utmost consideration, and when requests of this nature come in I would ask that he send recommendations to the officials concerned to co-operate in every possible way.

I have found that many small places in the north which have local airstrips also have very ambitious flying clubs which provide good community service to adjacent areas. These clubs in many cases are desperately in need of some sort of assistance, and I do not know where else they can get it except from the department. However, from inquiries which I have made, I have discovered that the regulations do not permit the department to grant some of the assistance which has been requested.

As an example I mention Swan River in Manitoba, where on many occasions members of the local flying club have in emergencies flown patients out to various hospitals, and have provided other public services to the community. The club has been requesting the department to supply it with a temporary lighting kit so that the airfield, when necessary, could be used for night flying. But the regulations do not permit the department to supply any equipment of that nature to anything other than a municipally administered airport, or to a Department of Transport airport. This is something which should be examined so that if by chance the department has surplus equipment of this kind it could be made available to recognized and authorized flying clubs, on either a loan or rental basis, as the department may see fit.

This is very important as such clubs cannot expect too much aid from municipalities. They are not costing the treasury of Canada anything, and small requests of this nature should be met if at all possible.

There is only one other matter I wish to mention, and I shall be brief because I understand the hon. member for the Northwest Territories has something to say about it. It has been suggested to me on many occasions, particularly in the north, that the possibility be examined of providing, under conditions set out by the department, some search and rescue, or homing equipment for private aircraft operating in the northern areas.

Hon. members who represent northern constituencies have from time to time experienced the anxiety, and in many cases the tragedy, of planes going down in the bushland. In many cases long searches are necessary before these planes and the survivors, if any, are found. Many of the bush flyers have brought it to my attention that if this equipment were installed on their airplanes very little time would be lost in finding the wreckage if they were forced down. However the small operators feel this equipment is a little too expensive.

One of the main items of expense arises from the fact that the batteries are costly and do not last very long. However I understand that many of these so called SARAH sets are available, and if the Department of Transport could compel all pilots flying in designated areas to have this equipment, and further, could supply it to them on a loan basis, we might find that the savings which would result from the money now spent on air search and rescue would be sufficient to cover a plan of this nature.

In conclusion I would like to mention rail transportation. I shall not deal with the freight rate situation, as I dealt with this some weeks ago when speaking in the house on the desirability of equalization of freight rates. At that time there was some opposition from the parties to my left because I did not offer any concrete solution for the problem, but I did point out that it was gone into very thoroughly by the MacPherson royal commission, and I said certain of its recommendations should be examined closely.

In my area there is little highway competition for the Canadian National Railways, and in practically every place where there is no competition from highway traffic there is no free pickup and delivery of express or l.c.l. freight. The moment the road goes in, the railway generally puts in a system of free pickup and delivery of express and l.c.l. freight. I think this is a matter that should be looked into by the minister so that all points served by Canadian National Railways receive the same consideration in this regard.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, I should like to take a few moments to bring to the attention of the minister an airport problem concerning the greater Vancouver area. Before I do that, my colleague the hon. member for Port Arthur, who is not here this afternoon, asked me to ask the minister when he may expect a specific answer to his question No. 963 on the order paper.

In recent years the air traffic at the Vancouver international airport has become such that there has been a move to remove the smaller, light aircraft away from that very busy airport. With this object in mind, a few years ago a new airport site was selected for light aircraft at a place called Pitt Meadows about 25 miles from Vancouver. The site is not a very good one in the view of many people. The body charged with regional planning for that area of British Columbia, the lower mainland regional planning board, specifically recommended against the choice of this site for more than one reason. They felt it was not a good site for aircraft and it would be spoiling an otherwise good industrial site. The minister has recognized the fact that it is not a very good site. He was out there last week to open this new, light aircraft airport, and this is the report contained in the Vancouver Province of July 22 in connection with that visit:

Transport minister George McIlraith said before the opening ceremonies that he did not know why Pitt Meadows was chosen for an airport.

"It was one of the things I inherited from the last government", he said.

The light aircraft operators are divided on this topic. One group has moved to the new airport and another group, the B.C. aircraft owners and pilots association, has refused to move. There is another airport available in the area. This is at Boundary Bay, British Columbia, which was built during the war as an air force training airport. It is a very large site. In recent years it has been used as a wireless station by the Department of National Defence. The light aircraft association has asked the Department of National Defence if they will give up part of this site —it is no longer used as an airport—for the use of light aircraft. It is much more handy to the main population centre and I believe it has much less rainfall than the site at Pitt Meadows. The Department of National Defence have replied that they cannot give this site up, for security reasons, because this wireless station is supposed to be so very secure. In order to test the security of this installation the Vancouver Province newspaper sent two reporters out there. They were allowed past the gate without giving in a pass. They drove around this supposedly secure place. They took pictures. They drove at 60 miles per hour on runways, and they eventually left without giving in a pass. The matter was brought to the attention of the Department of National Defence and the commissionaire on the gate was fired. However, the reporters made the point that civilians go in and out all the time and that just a mile from there is a small, private airfield with 25 aircraft which fly over this site all the time. The point, of course, is that it really does not need to be so secure as the Department of National Defence would have us believe.

The B.C. aircraft owners and pilots association have suggested to the Department of National Defence that some arrangement could be made whereby this site could be used both for the wireless station and by the light aircraft owners. I realize that this involves the Department of National Defence, but it also involves the Department of Transport and I hope the minister will speak to his colleague about this matter at some time. The Vancouver Province of July 16 summarized the situation in this way, in question and answer form, putting forth the views of the Department of National Defence and those of the light aircraft owners:

Here are the arguments:

Government: It would cost too much money to move the installation at Boundary Bay and a better site is not available anyway.

Pilots: Don't move it; there are 825 acres and lots of room for both of us. Just fence it at our expense.

Government: The runways are in bad condition and not suitable for landing small aircraft.

Pilots: The runways are excellent, once a few weeds have been removed.

This resulted from the testimony of the reporters who looked at it:

Government: The small aircraft would represent a threat to national security; it is a wireless station—not an airport.

Pilots: It has always been an airport and the presence of a public skating rink, and hundreds of civilians has not been termed a risk up to now.

Government: The flight of small aircraft will cause an electrical disturbance that will interfere with the wireless operation.

Pilots: There are 27 aircraft based about a mile away and have been for some time. The field is in the flight paths of a great deal of activity from Vancouver airport and the Seattle-Tacoma airport.

Government: There is too much fog at Boundary Bay and the weather conditions are not as good as at Pitt Meadows.

Pilots: There is far less fog at Boundary Bay; Ladner nearby gets only 36.23 inches of rain a year as compared to 88.94 inches at Pitt Polder near Pitt Meadows.

What makes this a rather important problem in our area is that the lower mainland of British Columbia is a relatively land poor area. It is surrounded by mountains, the ocean and includes the United States border, and there is not very much land. This site would, I am sure, make an excellent site for light aircraft. The people who use these aircraft generally live in the metropolitan area. They would not have so far to travel, and the site is a better one from the point of view of weather.

I would conclude my remarks by appealing to the minister to consult with his officials and with his colleague the Minister of National Defence to see whether the two positions cannot be reconciled. The light aircraft owners have suggested a means whereby the wireless station could be fenced and made perfectly secure, and the runways could be used by the light aircraft owners. I would hope the minister will give this matter some consideration and speak to the Minister of National Defence about it.

Mr. Kennedy: Mr. Chairman, what I have to say concerns what was discussed a little earlier, the question of railway line abandonment. This is a matter which is not on nearly as large a scale in my area as it is in western Canada, but it is none the less important to us in the east. At the present there is an application before the board of transport commissioners to abandon about 25 miles of railway line between the villages of Tatamagouche in the constituency of Colchester-Hants and Scotsburn in the constituency of my colleague the hon. member for Pictou. This rail line abandonment would isolate some communities on that north shore, and—and this is important—it will isolate a farmers' co-operative which deals in western feed grains.

Also of great significance is the fact that this line connecting, as it does, Oxford and Stellarton, provides an alternate route into the province of Nova Scotia. Although it is not of the standard of a main line, it has been used on many occasions as an emergency route when there has been a blockage of the main line. In the last few days there was a serious derailment on the main line and according to press reports passenger traffic was routed over this alternate route. If this abandonment is allowed it will remove 25 miles from the centre of this line and will break this link. I think it is rather important to remember that not only would this link serve southern and eastern Nova Scotia in an emergency, but it would also connect the routes leading into Newfoundland. I might add I noted yesterday that the municipal council of Colchester county endorsed a resolution opposing this abandonment. I just wanted to bring this matter to the attention of the minister so that when consideration is given to the over-all problem of rail line abandonment he will also consider this question, not only in the light in which it is held locally but also having in mind the fact that it is an alternative route into that part of the country.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might answer one or two of these questions now, and I will try to do so as concisely as possible. One matter I forgot to mention to the hon. member for Three Rivers is that the committee on transportation, now in full operation, meets, I think, what was put forward by the Prime Minister in the election campaign. I did examine the point quite carefully and am satisfied about that.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond raised the point about the satellite air station at the international airport at Vancouver. The problem there is quite simple. There is a great deal of traffic involving large aircraft coming into Vancouver airport. The take-offs and landings of small aircraft which use the satellite airport have been as high as 620 in a single day, so that the hon. member can see the need for taking action. The former government did take action, it is true, but I did not want to take the responsibility for the accuracy of the report in the Vancouver Province because I have not seen the report. It may or it may not be accurate. I did mention the subject when opening Pitt Meadows airport on Saturday, but I do not recall any reference to the subject mentioned by the hon. member. He referred to light aircraft. Great numbers of these light aircraft people are very enthusiastic and keen about the Pitt Meadows airport. The small aircraft owners association, headed by a gentleman, who I think I can say without impropriety, was rather vocal on the subject, for some reason refuse to accept the simple statement of fact that it is not possible to have the military air base at Boundary Bay vacated for use as a statellite airport. That is not possible. I tried to make that point clear in all interviews, whether with the press or the radio and television people, in Vancouver on Saturday. Flying into that airport and using only part of the field, and so on, is not possible. The unfortunate part of it is that the Department of National Defence has not been able to give as fully as it might wish, the reason it is not possible to make this airport available; I think I should make that clear.

While I said it is quite true that the Pitt Meadows airport was chosen by the former government and work was undertaken on it, I can see nothing in the files which would lead me to believe other than that there was very careful consideration of the alternative. The other alternative was to locate in an area where there are a great number of residents, and the university there would have been interfered with rather seriously. I am sorry that this lack of understanding about the non-availability of Boundary Bay airport has not been made clear before, and I hope my remarks today will tend to provide an appreciation of that point.

As to the reference to distance with regard to the Pitt Meadows airport, as the hon. member knows from living in the area, there are new road construction programs under way in Vancouver. Accessibility to the airport from the centre of the city on the new roads I am sure will be much better than the accessibility of the airport with the existing roads today.

The hon. member for Colchester-Hants made reference to rail line abandonment in his particular area. I have to confess that I simply have no knowledge of that particular abandonment, and I would be less than frank if I said otherwise. But I can tell him that I am a little partial to his part of the country and I would like to make a personal inspection of it one of these days. I could think of nothing more pleasant. In any event the matter is before the board of transport commissioners at the present time, and I hope he has made his point of view clear in the appropriate way.

Another hon. member asked me about a question on the order paper; I have forgotten the number. I expect the answer to that rather lengthy question to be available next week.

The hon. member for Churchill asked about the Thompson airport and the paving contract. The tender call for that will be going out next week.

(Translation):

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, the few observations I have to make this afternoon might be more properly made at a hearing on bilingualism and biculturalism, but since they concern more particularly the C.N.R., I shall make them now.

As the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) is aware, I have exchanged a few letters with him where I suggested to give a more bilingual character to the administration and the operation of the railway. In fact, I think we could use the national railways as a means to promote bilingualism all across Canada.

But, when you travel by C.N.R., you are forcefully made aware of the fact that you are entering wagons which are owned by only one group of the population and I think that the use of a little more French besides English would further the cause of bilingualism. If he did that, the minister would create quite a reputation for himself as champion of that cause, and some of the honour would be reflected on his parliamentary secretary (Mr. Cantin) who could claim also some credit for himself.

In the answers the minister sent me, I found nothing to show that my suggestions would be welcome. And if I raise the matter in the house, it is because I think the minister answered in such vague terms that I cannot know whether the responsible authorities will take them into consideration.

In fact, if I refer to the letter the minister wrote me on June 17, 1963, here is what I find:

> Be assured that I will be glad to take it up with the management of the company right away.

And in his letter of July 3, 1963, the minister told me:

> Be assured that I immediately brought to the attention of the management of the company your additional remarks.

Mr. Chairman, what I would like to know from the minister is whether he has given instructions or whether he intends to give any to the appropriate authorities of the Canadian National Railways in order that, in the future, posters, boards and signs be written in both French and English, in the stations and on the C.N.R. cars.

It seems most abnormal, for instance, to see in all C.N.R. stations in the province of Quebec signs and posters in English only; since the present government has decided to create a royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, I believe that it has a wonderful opportunity to give convincing concrete evidence of its desire to take action.

In addition, I say once more to the minister that he would acquire an enviable reputation for himself and for his parliamentary secretary if he acted in furtherance of the various suggestions I made to him.

(Text):

Mr. Rideout: In view of the fact that I have the honour to represent the largest railway terminal in Canada on a per capita basis I feel that I should draw a few matters to the attention of the minister. First of all, I should like to express my thanks and appreciation for the fine co-operation I received from the hon. gentleman's predecessor, the minister of transport in the former government. He was always most genial and kind and he understood my many problems.

During his period in office we discussed, among many other things, the lengthening of the runways at Moncton airport and I was given to understand that they would be lengthened this year. However, I am afraid that provision for this will not appear in the estimates. Moncton airport is one of the largest in Canada on the basis of arrivals and departures. It is my understanding that we rank eighth. It was clearly brought home to us not long ago, however, that modern facilities at Moncton are sadly lacking. We had arranged a board of trade mission to the old country and it was necessary for us to leave from the city of Halifax because the airstrip at Moncton was not adequate to handle DC-8 aircraft. I bring this to the attention of the minister because this airport serves not only Moncton and the surrounding area but also, to a large degree, the province of Prince Edward Island as far as air travel is concerned.

Our terminal facilities are antiquated. They are not in keeping with today's standards. The minister has told me that some effort will be made to deal with this in 1964. Restaurant facilities are in another building and passengers are called upon to climb several flights of stairs before they can get coffee or a meal. This is certainly not the situation in other parts of Canada, and it should not be the case at an airport such as Moncton, having regard to the volume of business which is done there.

[Mr. Ricard.]

Now I should like to say a few words about the Canadian National Railways, because we have some 7,000 employees of the Canadian National in my constituency. I know we are all very much interested in employment at this time. I have taken note of the overtures made by the city of Winnipeg concerning the removal of terminal maintenance facilities from Winnipeg to Montreal. I should like to protest a move which took place some three years ago which resulted in our Canadian National passenger car shop going from Moncton to Winnipeg, closing out our entire operation in this regard. Fifteen years ago we had about 3,000 people working in our main shop. Now we have about 850. I should like to draw the attention of the minister to the importance of having this shop reopened. Passenger traffic has increased by 250 per cent in the Atlantic region and this work should be done in Moncton. It would not only be good for employment there but it would mean a saving to the C.N.R. of the cost involved in transporting equipment to Winnipeg and then returning it to Moncton for service.

Another matter I should like to mention concerns the contract entered into by the C.N.R. under which the company was to develop 25 acres on Moncton's main street. This work was to be completed by June 1, 1963. There has already been built, and I commend those responsible, an eight storey palatial office building in Moncton which certainly is a credit to our city. But when is this $15 million development project to go forward? Work on this project has been stopped without any reason being given. People in my constituency are continually asking me when it will go forward or whether a hitch has occurred in the plan. No distinct stand seems to have been taken by the railway company. Work has been started on the C.N.R. station. I have received protests from the city council to the effect that this station is far too small and that it will not accommodate the present passenger traffic, let alone the traffic which they expect in the future.

A number of hon. members on the other side have spoken about rail abandonment proposals. Perhaps to a lesser degree, we in the maritime provinces have a similar problem. In some cases the abandonment of lines may be necessary but I feel that in others the board of transport commissioners are too hasty in approving abandonment proposals. I do not think there is any doubt that the board is pro-railway. They go out and hold hearings. Then they come back to Ottawa and pontificate. They say: "Yes, you had better abandon that line". It all seems a form they run through. The line is abandoned, many people are put out of work and commerce is in some cases reduced to a standstill.

I am sorry the hon. member for Port Arthur is not here today. He referred to me a couple of weeks ago in the course of some comments he had to make about the morale of railway workers. I have to agree with him that it is not as it should be. This is not due to top management but rather to the fact that in some cases men with 25 or 30 years service have been laid off. This is not a good situation. Hence we have bills coming before this house saying that people who have been hurt in this way should receive compensation.

I know of no finer way in which to relieve unemployment than to use this crown corporation. It is fairly well organized and has been going on for a great number of years. There are many avenues in the lumber industry and in other industries across Canada that are yet untouched and which Canadian National Railways could assist in developing. If we are going to close down railway lines all the time in this young country of ours it is a very great mistake. We have found that out already in many cases. In some cases where lines have been abandoned it has been revealed later that they never should have been closed down. However, the railways will not admit this. These are a few of the smaller items that I should like to draw to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Rheaume: Mr. Chairman, in rising to speak on this item I feel I do so from a good position, because I am the representative of a constituency of 1,300,000 square miles, give or take 50,000 or 60,000, roughly the size of the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia put together. I mention this because if the Northwest Territories have anything in real abundance it is distance, and this has tremendous implications for the future development of the aviation industry in the Northwest Territories. In my view the Minister of Transport has an opportunity to play a vital role in assisting in the development of the 40 per cent of Canada that lies north of the 60th parallel.

At the present time almost all phases of development in the Canadian north are directly dependant on aircraft. The great surge of northern development occurred in the wake of the use of aircraft. It is probably true to say that every producing mine in the Northwest Territories owes its existence to the fact that aircraft were available initially to take in prospectors to remote areas and then played a vital and continuing role during the construction and operation phases of all mining communities in the north.

In terms of government services, and the minister is well aware they have been expanded many times over during the past five or six years, every one of our major services in the north is directly dependant upon aircraft. Our health services are dependant on aircraft for the transportation of hundreds of people from the remote areas of the constituency to larger centres for medical treatment. Our educational system in the Northwest Territories is dependant on aircraft to be able to move hundreds of children thousands of miles each fall into the larger centres where there are schools, and to return them home in the spring for their summer holidays. Government administration could not be carried on in the Canadian north without aircraft.

I have risen at this time to ask the minister a few questions in relation to aircraft. The first thing to which I should like to refer is a matter that was raised by the Minister of National Defence relating to the partial closing down of the distant early warning line in the far north. The closure of some of these sites raises the question of alternative uses. I think it also points up that the writing is on the wall so far as the remainder of the distant early warning line is concerned. I hope that the Minister of Transport will be in continuing consultation with the Minister of National Defence with regard to alternative use of the hanger facilities and refueling and telecommunication facilities that the distant early warning line could provide for commercial operators who are attempting to provide service in the far north.

I would be interested in having the minister tell me something about his plans for airports. Many northern communities are at present cut off from all medical and other supplies for almost four months of the year during the periods of freeze-up in the fall and break-up in the spring. In 1963, when it is possible to send a cosmonaut in orbit around the world in one day, then send up a girl to find out how he is doing and retrieve both of them safely several days later within a few yards of waiting newsmen, I find it inconceivable that thousands of our northern Canadian citizens should be in precarious isolation for 25 per cent of the year.

I suggest to the minister that a massive program of airport development is now required for the far north. I am not referring to paved runways with strobe lights. I am talking about smaller emergency type strips adjacent to the 20 or 30 northern communities that have absolutely no airport facilities whatsoever at the present time. I would hope that the Minister of Transport would also be in close consultation with the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources with a view to co-ordinating work projects in the north to provide these emergency airstrips.

I should like the minister to support an increased program of aids to navigation. By this I mean nothing more than the provision of navigational beacons. I should like to give the minister one example of what I have in mind. During the spring campaign I had occasion to fly in a single engine aircraft from Yellowknife, Northwest Territories, 600 miles due east to Baker Lake, Northwest Territories. The present aids to navigation in that entire 600 mile trip consist of the Thelon river which has been there many thousands of years. The position of travellers in the Canadian north, who quite frequently go on trips that take them thousands of miles, is rendered that much more insecure and unsafe by the failure to provide adequate aids to navigation. I would hope that the minister would have the appropriate section of his department look into the possibilities of providing better service to the bush pilots by making available information on such things as upper atmosphere winds.

A matter that is, perhaps oddly enough, of immediate concern to those of us who make our homes in the western part of the Canadian north is the fate of the municipal airport at Edmonton. I would hope that the minister's department could clear up this matter rather quickly. As he may be aware, those people who live along the Mackenzie river depend almost entirely on the service provided by Pacific Western Airlines flights to bring them mail and supplies. It is important to Pacific Western Airlines and therefore to the people of the north that the municipal airport in the heart of downtown Edmonton be available. It is important to us, because we depend on arrangements for the transportation of supplies on a daily basis to Pacific Western Airlines at the municipal airport for furtherance to the north. We consider that any move to Nisku airport would increase the costs of freight handling for us. We know for certain it would be much more inconvenient.

I should like to have the minister tell us something about the plans of his department for the provision of safety equipment for commercial operators in the Northwest Territories. Some time ago I received a return to a question concerning the cost of R.C.A.F. search and rescue operations in the Northwest Territories. The total cost in 1962 was well over $250,000. I predict that in 1963, R.C.A.F. search and rescue costs in the Northwest Territories alone will exceed $1 million. It seems to me that the Department of Transport must examine this very carefully to find if there might be a way of not only providing commercial operators in the far north with safer equipment in terms of rendering air travel more secure, but also in terms of saving the Canadian taxpayer a good many dollars.

I also raised a question some time ago about the firefighting equipment available at those air terminals that are in existence along the Mackenzie river. The answer I received was that the standard of equipment at these airports was not adequate to meet the minimum standards of the department, but that the department would look into it. I hope this situation can be corrected immediately, especially at a time when Pacific Western Airlines, who serves the western part of the north, are providing DC-6 service on a daily basis to many of our northern communities. We would hope the department would take immediate steps to provide the kind of firefighting equipment necessary at the terminals at which these aircraft arrive.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I want to make a passing reference to the resignation of Mr. Paul Davoud, who was chairman of the air transport board and who was known by a great many northerners. We notice his resignation with some regret. His efforts as chairman of the air transport board were appreciated by everyone who was interested in northern Canada. We hope his successor will bring to the position the same kind of enthusiasm and effort to a very demanding job.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I should like first to congratulate the minister upon his appointment and to thank him for his prompt attention to any matter I have brought to his notice. I should like also to say I appreciate the co-operation and good work of the permanent senior officials in Ottawa and throughout the country. I might say these gentlemen carry on the administration of this department behind the scenes. They are like flowers that bloom unseen and waste their sweetness on the desert air. Frequently I have to deal with matters of national and international scope, but this afternoon, because of the nature of these estimates and the type of constituency I represent, I will apologize, Mr. Chairman, if you think on occasion I am somewhat parochial.

I am going to deal with my complaints in sequence because I think the minister can deal with them better under these circumstances, and this method avoids interruption when the items arise. The first matter I wish to bring to the attention of the minister is the question of continued passenger service on the Kettle Valley Railway. I have mentioned it on previous occasions in this house. I continue to receive letters in this respect from chambers of commerce, trade unions, women's organizations, and boards of trade, and they all say, "Whatever you do, Bert, don't give up on the Kettle Valley Railway." So, I am raising this matter.

I wish to bring to the minister's attention certain changed circumstances that have to be considered by the board of transport commissioners when they are giving consideration to the application of the Canadian Pacific for the withdrawal of this service. I have a letter here from the local chairman of the brotherhood of railway trainmen. I should like to quote from one paragraph, because this information changes the whole circumstances and removes the reason given for changing the service some years ago. This information removes the argument advanced by the Canadian Pacific at that time. In so far as the financial argument is concerned, if the company would not divorce the passenger service receipts from the revenues of the company as a whole, this is one of the most profitable lines in Canada. The company is located in an area which returns the greatest profit to the C.P.R. because of its association with Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company. I quote the following paragraph from the letter from W. H. Towhey:

> The R.C.M.P. have taken off all railroad bridge guards and the C.P.R. will have all walking track patrols taken off by August 15, 1963. This means that after August 15, 1963, the areas between Nelson, Midway and Trail will be back to the normal police protection, the same as it was back in 1952. There will be no rail bridge guards or track guards or patrols night or day.

In other words, Mr. Chairman, this means we have returned to normal in Kootenay West so far as railway traffic operations are concerned and the hazards that were related thereto. I do hope the board of transport commissioners will give consideration to these changed circumstances when considering this application. I am not going to repeat my arguments. The minister knows this is the only all-weather transport available to 100,000 people in the interior of British Columbia. The population is producing hundreds of millions of dollars worth of material from the mines, smelters, forests and agriculture. I do hope that the minister will see my point of view. My spirits have risen since his appointment. I hope he will discuss this matter with the board of transport commissioners so that we will have at least a daily train service with one day coach and a combination cafe and sleeping car to make certain the people of southeastern British Columbia will be able to travel under all weather conditions. Because of weather conditions, air transport is somewhat irregular in the winter months. Because of winter conditions our roads, particularly over the Princeton highway, are blocked on some occasions. I wish therefore, to make another appeal to the minister and I trust this will be my last.

I should like to direct the minister's attention to the excellent administration of the Castlegar airport which is owned by the municipalities of Nelson, Castlegar and Kinnaird. There has been a great deal of voluntary labour put into this airport. I like to see that. I think it is good and should be encouraged, especially when we have many citizens who are willing to devote their time and money to certain local projects. I know the department has rendered excellent assistance. There have been improvements in recent months and these are appreciated by the airport committee and by the communities that are dependant upon that airport. But I do suggest, because of the uncertain traffic during winter months, further consideration be given to the study of facilities that would make it possible for traffic to land even when the mountains are covered with clouds. At the present time no aircraft attempts to land if the clouds are lower than the surrounding peaks. I understand that problem has not been settled. It is particularly difficult in this district because of the terrain and the narrowness of the valleys. However, I do urge, on behalf of the different communities concerned, further consideration and study to improve this situation.

Now, in addition to that, because of the terrain and nature of our country, we have —I do not know their technical designation because I am a backwoodsman and I find these technical terms difficult to grasp—airports for the landing of aircraft on water, when they are equipped with water skis. We have one at Nakusp and at one or two other places. When these are being proposed I urge the minister to give assistance by way of advice in respect to their location and maintenance. The local groups who build them do so at no cost to the department or the people of Canada, and they are providing a very necessary service. The same applies to one or two smaller ports for planes that land on wheels. The officials of the department should render any assistance they can with respect to the location of these fields and their operation.

I have found in one or two cases that the people concerned were rather ignorant of the regulations and things of that sort. This is not an expensive matter and it is a service that would be much appreciated.

In recent months and years certain companies in the forest industry have been granted booming rights in bays along the Kootenay lake, the Arrow lakes and the Columbia river. This is very necessary for the storing of logs, but I would ask the minister to tell his officials to make certain that the navigable channels on the Columbia river, between Revelstoke, and Arrowhead are kept open for water craft, and to see that no booms are allowed to be strewn across these channels which would prevent craft travelling through them.

Where this has happened it is possibly due to the oversight of some local official who does not understand the law or the regulations, and I urge that the officials be advised to see to it that these booms do not affect the navigable portions of the channels.

A year or two ago I brought up the necessity of having luminous plates placed on booms and boom anchors. These anchors are usually logs tied to a cement post in the bottom of a lake, or are heavy objects to which the booms are chained. When the booms are taken away a single log is left, and in some cases these single logs have proved to be a great hazard to navigation.

There are several near navigable channels on Kootenay lake, and the companies now operating on that lake place these phosphorescent plates on stationary booms and boom anchors. They can be seen at night by people navigating small craft, and I ask that the same regulations be enforced on the Arrow lakes and the Columbia river. The number of these booms is increasing, and sometimes the single anchor is left a long distance from shore and cannot be seen on a dark night by persons navigating small craft. All that is required is that a plate be attached to either side of the anchor or boom.

Another matter which should receive attention is the acceptance of responsibility for the clearing of snow from wharves, and the sanding of wharves. I am speaking of wharves constructed by the federal government, which I understand come under the administration of the Department of Transport, which usually uses the local public works supervisor, or someone like that, as its agent.

Some of these wharves have a 10 per cent grade and are used by people loading ships and barges. They become very icy and dangerous, and no one has assumed responsibility for clearing the snow from all these wharves. I think the department should make certain that in all cases they are properly cleared of snow and sanded when required for the safety of the public. In some instances the provincial authority does this work because the local foreman sees it as his responsibility; but this is not certain enough.

I also suggest signs should be placed on all wharves to prevent caterpillars, used by logging companies, travelling over them and damaging them with their very sharp cleats. Most of the operators are very good in that respect and lay down planks so that the cats can load onto barges or ships without cutting a wharf to pieces. But it only takes two or three trips with a 35 ton or 40 ton cat to rip the deck of a wharf to pieces. In this connection more attention should be paid to the enforcement of regulations governing travel of caterpillars over government wharves, because with their large cleats they can do so much unnecessary damage.

I am trying to be as brief as possible, as usual, but there is another matter I wish to bring to the minister's attention, concerning the operation of the Great Northern Railway between the international boundary and Nelson. This railway is owned in the United States and administered in Canada by a superintendent in the United States. I have found on one or two occasions, and in fact reported it to the board of transport commissioners, that the superintendent has ignored the request of ranchers along the railway to undertake to do the fencing required by law. In fact ranchers have lost cattle which were killed on the track because the Great Northern Railway, United States owned and administered, does not provide the fencing that is required by law.

I suggest that the minister's officials keep a close watch on the superintendent who is in charge of this division in Canada. He has admitted some responsibility but is a little inclined to drag his feet. I suggest that the minister give him a bit of a shove from behind.

Another thing I wish to bring to the minister's attention concerns the freight rates charged on this railway. There are people in the area who ship forest products on it, particularly fence poles and posts to the prairies, but the freight rates charged by the Great Northern to transport these forest products from a point near the international boundary to Nelson, where they are transferred to the Kettle Valley Railway, are so high in relation to the rest of the transportation that it makes it almost impossible for these persons to operate at a profit.

I had one letter of complaint in the early part of the session with regard to this matter, and I have had another letter from a second man since then. The board should keep a sharp eye on the administration of this small railway—it is about 30 miles long—to see that Canadian citizens' rights are not overlooked, just because the line is administered by officials in the United States.

There are a large number of launch clubs in the Kootenays. In fact people have taken a greatly increased interest in small water craft since the second world war, and groups have formed clubs to develop this interest as recreation for the people of the communities concerned. In addition there are large numbers of commercial craft, small tugs and things of that sort, which have replaced the stern-wheelers that operated on the rivers up until 1957.

A great number of people have been concerned about the possibility of accidents with these small craft. In fact we had one unfortunate drowning a year or two ago because a boat was not equipped with the equipment required by law at that time. I urge that the department take a strong stand with respect to regulations governing the equipment that should be carried by these small craft, and governing their operation. I think the police get their best co-operation from the organized groups of launch clubs and organizations of that kind. The need for this type of strict enforcement is growing daily; that is why I bring it to the attention of the minister. I know he is interested, and I know about the conferences; but I want him to know about these things because in the district I have the honour to represent many people are concerned about them.

I have two other points, Mr. Chairman, with respect to aids to navigation. We are getting a great number of water craft coming up the Columbia river from as far south as Portland. As a matter of fact my son-in-law had 22 United States craft tie up at his residence on the Saturday before last Labour day which had come from as far south as Portland along the Columbia river. I understand that a total of about 175 such craft came up this river last year. These people had just begun to realize where the Garden of Eden is situated and where there are opportunities for 300 miles of magnificent water transportation.

These people require navigation aids. Quite a bit has been done by the department in installing navigation aids between the international boundary and in the narrows between the upper and lower Arrow lakes and between Arrowhead and Revelstoke. I brought this matter to the attention of the former minister and his officials and, as I say, quite a lot has been done. But more could be done, particularly in the narrows between the upper and lower Arrow lakes. The department should make sure that signs are erected which people can understand. It is not good enough to put an oil can up on a tree and paint it red. A man comes along often knowing nothing about this route and he wonders what he should do when the sign says he is supposed to go so many chains, where he should turn and steer to a white cross. I think more of these markers should be erected; a map should be made available for people to purchase and upon it these markers should be indicated. This should also be done in connection with the Kootenay river and Kootenay lakes. People should be able to understand what these signs mean. We have had a number of craft run aground between Arrowhead and Revelstoke because people simply did not understand what the signs meant. They got out of the channel and on to sand bars, and so on. I do urge that greater consideration be given to more adequate markers on the river and the issuance of maps showing what these markers mean.

The mines and technical surveys branch have promised for some time to publish a map of this sort. When inquiries have been made as to why this has not been done, the answer has been that they have been too busy on other things. Surely someone in the department could be given the job of marking these markers on the map and writing a code thereon as to what they mean. I do urge, Mr. Chairman, that this matter be brought to the attention of the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys.

My final recommendation is this. The activities of the Department of Transport cover a very wide field and what they do affects a large number of people. To realize that this is right one has only to look at the row of handsome officials in the gallery this afternoon.

Mr. Knowles: Order.

Mr. Herridge: My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre says order. I am not supposed to mention people whom I am not supposed to see; but I cannot help seeing them. There are a great many people in various departments that are concerned with these matters, who have the responsibility for the regulations covering the operation of small water craft, and so on. People are uninformed in many respects as to what the department is doing and the information that it available. I do suggest that the minister give consideration to having appropriate officials give an occasional talk to suitable organizations in various communities that are particularly concerned with the administration of the Department of Transport in so far as it is related directly to their daily lives. With those few remarks, Mr. Chairman, I conclude this spontaneous address.

Mr. Cashin: Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a few remarks about the ferry service between the mainland of Canada and Newfoundland. At the present time there is one car ferry in service between Port aux Basques and North Sydney. It has been noted that during the summer months this ferry is not able to cope with the demand for service and this need will undoubtedly increase, now that the trans-Canada highway is being proceeded with at a more accentuated pace in the province of Newfoundland. The suggestion has been made within the province that the real need is for additional service between North Sydney and Port aux Basques. While I do feel strongly that the present service is inadequate and this will become more apparent, as I have suggested, I do not think that ferry service between Port aux Basques and North Sydney should be confused with the need for an east coast ferry to the province of Newfoundland. This matter has been discussed and I understand that a great deal of work has been put into it. For this we must congratulate the former minister of transport and his department. I am sure the present minister is giving this matter his full attention, but I would like to say a few words about it.

The second ferry to Newfoundland will provide an alternate route and a service to the residents on the east coast of Newfoundland. I am informed that the great majority of the cars which now travel to the island do not proceed all the way to the east coast. Undoubtedly with a paved road across the island this will change somewhat. But I feel the addition of the east coast ferry will mean that a greater number of people will be attracted to travelling all the way across Newfoundland because they will be able to return by a cheaper and shorter route, the east coast ferry.

I am concerned, and I think this concern will grow when the road is completed, as I have suggested, that an east coast ferry in addition to the existing service between North Sydney and Port aux Basques will be inadequate. In fact it is inadequate at the present time. I would therefore make two suggestions for the consideration of the minister. One is that the possibility of purchasing a second hand ferry should be looked into. This ferry need not be of the icebreaker type because it would only be needed, primarily at least, in the summer or fall months to meet the demand which exists at that time of the year. I understand that these ferries can be purchased in a number of places in the world at a very nominal price.

There is some suggestion that this is not a popular move because these things should be built in Canada. If we are already undertaking a sizeable expenditure to provide a second ferry to Newfoundland, it would seem to be in order, to meet the growing need, that a second hand ferry be purchased to go into operation, I would suggest, between North Sydney and Argentia, and at a later date it could go into operation between North Sydney and Port aux Basques. One other suggestion I would like to make is this. It has been suggested to me as a possibility that we could make use of, I believe they are called C-44's, the aircraft that is capable of carrying 10 to 12 cars. I think it would be a wise course if this suggestion were looked into as a possible means of transportation between Sydney and Stephenville airport on the west coast of Newfoundland. This type of service may reduce the overload on the existing ferry and may in some way be an attempt to meet the growing demand for service between the ports of Port aux Basques and Sydney.

I would say in closing, Mr. Chairman, that the people of Newfoundland are very anxious to have this matter of their ferry service taken care of. They are continually reminded of the fact that between the provinces of Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia there are five ferries, I believe, in operation and they do not understand why it is they have only one. Therefore, I hope that very shortly we shall have an announcement pertaining to the east coast ferries and that the minister will find time to look into the two matters I have suggested.

Mr. Clancy: Mr. Chairman, on item 1 I am sure the minister is faced, and will be faced, with a great many applications from the railways to abandon certain sections of their lines. This is a complex problem and a very perplexing one which will not be the subject of any quick decisions. However, I have one or two matters I would like the minister to consider. When a railway gets permission to abandon a line, does the right of way revert to the crown? Do the mineral rights on the right of way also revert to the crown? All hon. members are reasonably familiar with the development of rail transportation in western Canada, and the government of the day gave large grants of land to encourage the railways to provide a service to the people and for the future. They gave both the surface rights and the mineral rights. I agree that 60 years ago those mineral rights did not appear to be valuable, but the surface rights were important. I feel that today when a railway receives permission to abandon a section of line providing a service for which they were paid, an adjustment should be made so that the mineral rights, or at least a percentage of them, will revert to the crown.

Mr. Stenson: Mr. Chairman, in taking part in a discussion of the estimates of the Department of Transport I should like to discuss the Trent canal and its possibilities for increased tourist trade. In my constituency the main tourist attraction is the Trent canal system. This deep-water system consists of many locks linked by various rivers and narrows, as well as the locks and channels of the Trent canal. The canal lift lock at Peterborough which lifts boats to a height of 65 feet, is the highest hydraulic lift lock in the world, and I was very glad to see that the minister has in his estimates $175,000 for the work on this lift lock. I should like to ask the minister to attempt to have the work started as soon as possible after the close of the season so as not to interrupt travel on the Trent next spring.

The Trent canal attracts the largest number of pleasure craft in Canada. In 1959 the lockage of the Trent canal was 61,935, the highest in the nation. This figure was more than three times the 20,510 recorded in 1954. The canal system was built over 50 years ago and is a compliment to the engineering of that era. The money which the Conservative government set aside to beautify and restore this system during the last parliament should not be pared in any way, because this system brings to Canada millions of tourist dollars each year. It has been said that 24 tourists daily equal a $100,000 industry. This should be very interesting to the new Minister of Industry. More than 450 resorts and camps cater to visitors in the Kawartha lakes area, and the permanent summer population of tourists and visitors is more than 100,000 people. Our summer visitors in the Peterborough area total many more than one million each year. This is why we feel we should not pare estimates for our canal systems. Canada has in the Trent a tremendous tourist attraction which is only now approaching its potential as a tourist dollar earner.

Now that I have spoken of the potential of the Trent as a tourist dollar earner I should like to point out the inadequacies of the methods employed on the Trent system. I refer particularly to the opening and closing of the locks. I do not think it is fair to these employees to subject them to the drudgery of opening locks in the same manner as they were opened over 40 years ago. There has been a start made to electrify them, but this should be speeded up. I understand the hon. member for Northumberland is opening a new lock at Fenelon Falls tomorrow.

Mr. McIlraith: I should like to be there.

Mr. Stenson: Perhaps we should all be there. I feel the system has been neglected too long, both from the standpoint of the people operating the locks and from the standpoint of the people operating the boats.

I also want to make reference to the low level bridges which are found on the Trent system. There are several of them in my constituency. Surely it is about time in this day and age that we eliminate these places where boats have to stop in order that bridges may be turned. These are things which hurt our tourist industry. Both boats and highway traffic are held up while bridges are being turned. I know of two such places in my riding on busy highways, and I understand the Ontario department of highways has plans to correct this if they get support from the Department of Transport. Such things are very annoying to our tourists. I feel that we should get rid of these obstacles so that we can invite tourists from the United States, who are used to electrification of locks, to enjoy our canals. The prospect is that many more boatmen from the United States will use this water highway.

I should like to refer to the recommendations in volume 3 of the Glassco report, where they recommend a toll system to assist in the cost of operating our canals. I am afraid this will cost the Department of Transport more in supervision than they could realize from the rentals. An alternative to this problem, which I feel would help to give some revenue to these systems and to the tourist industry, is the tax that the Ontario government refunds on gasoline used for marine purposes. If this amount of money were put back into the upkeep of these canals for our tourists there would not be a need for tolls or wharf rentals. In Ontario for the year ending March 31, 1962, the government refunded to the boating public the sum of $610,000, and it was estimated that another $600,000 was not claimed. This amounts to $1,210,000. This money is realized from an 11 cents per gallon refund on gas used in motor boats. At the present time I have not the figures of refunds received by people in the province of Quebec or the other provinces across Canada. To bring these tax refunds into the federal system, it would mean an adjustment between the provincial and federal governments. We realize that the boating industry is growing every year. Lockage on the Trent system is increasing by 10 per cent every year. Along with this increase in the use of the Trent, the operation and maintenance costs of the system have increased. In addition to this there are costs of rebuilding and replacing the locks. This has been estimated over a ten-year period to be over $12 million.

In conclusion, may I say there are a few other areas of this waterway in which I should like to see some improvement. There should be sewage disposal tanks provided in appropriate areas so sewage could be pumped from boats. No sewage should be emptied from cruisers or houseboats into our canal systems.

Our locks should be open from early morning until sundown to service the public properly. Men working on the locks should not be asked to work seven days a week from eight in the morning until late at night. If there were a double shift, it would be a help to the men operating the locks and give better service to the tourists. In closing, I should like to say that we should get on with the completion of this waterway in order to help balance our tourist trade with the United States.

Mr. Regan: I am anxious to make a few comments with reference to transportation because questions of transportation are, indeed, the essence of the economic problems in the maritime provinces and, in particular, in my constituency of Halifax.

The present freight rates policy of this nation coats the martime arteries of transportation, interfering with the economic and healthy flow of goods through those arteries. As you know, Mr. Chairman, the Atlantic development board has already indicated it will investigate the effect of the St. Lawrence seaway both in the past and in the future upon the maritime economy. I hope the Minister of Transport will pay close attention to the results of this investigation because, if we in the maritimes are to be helped, the greatest thing that the Atlantic development board or the area development agency of the new Department of Industry or, indeed, any other branch of the government could do would be to use the transportation facilities which exist in this nation, and particularly the government-owned railway, so as to provide something closer to a postal stamp system of freight rates so that manufacturers in all parts of the country would have an equal opportunity to ship their goods elsewhere. This would be the best way of making the maritime region self-supporting and prosperous, along with the rest of Canada. If this were done we would find there would not be these large areas which lag so badly behind the rest of the nation in economic development, as do the Atlantic provinces and some other areas.

In the constituency of Halifax our largest industry, and the backbone of our economy, is the port of Halifax and the handling of the goods which historically go through our waterfront, both in the course of importation to Canada for use in the central Canadian market and in the course of export by the manufacturers of Ontario, Quebec, and the central region. The handling of these goods both coming and going provides employment on the waterfront of Halifax. Traditionally, Halifax, along with Saint John, New Brunswick, has been the major winter port of this country. But there is no rail or freight subsidy on goods imported or exported through maritime ports. These goods are carried at the normal freight rates of the railway. We have been placed in an increasingly disadvantageous position and have suffered economic hardship because of the growing extent of subsidies to other means of transportation, particularly since the completion of the seaway. Throughout the length of the St. Lawrence we see a subsidy on navigation aids. Aids must be given to navigation from the time a ship enters the St. Lawrence river proper to the time it reaches Montreal and, of course, beyond that, on the seaway itself.

Another subsidy to transportation on the St. Lawrence river is in the form of dredging, which is done at federal expense. Another is the use of icebreakers, which has increasingly lengthened the St. Lawrence shipping season to the disadvantage of the maritimes. Another subsidy to transport on the St. Lawrence river is pilotage in the river proper, as distinct from pilotage in the harbours which are on the way. This type of expenditure is not needed outside harbours in the Atlantic region because pilotage is not necessary on the open sea. In addition, on the seaway itself we have artificially low tolls which do not return the amounts of money which have been invested in this great and forward looking water system.

As a result of all these circumstances, the port of Halifax is this summer suffering from loss of business. We have had in the Halifax area the quietest summer along the waterfront in many years. Each year has become a little worse. Even within the past month or two, shipping lines which carry goods to Africa have found there are competitors who are willing to go to the head of the seaway. I do hope that while he is waiting for the results of this over-all investigation by the Atlantic development board the minister will consider immediate measures to stop any further erosion of business from our port at the present time. Of course, every ship which changes its ports of call and abandons the port of Saint John or the port of Halifax makes the situation more acute because frequency of sailing is about the most important thing a port can offer when it goes looking for goods to be shipped. If a port cannot offer frequent sailings it cannot interest manufacturers, exporters or importers in using its facilities. Thus, when we lose certain ships or established lines there is a chain reaction which hurts us in other ways.

We heard the Minister of Trade and Commerce announce in this house two or three days ago that the government intended to spend $40 million in new or extra aid to underdeveloped countries by providing them with food, presumably flour and wheat. I would urge the government to consider channelling a large proportion of these additional exports through the maritime ports. In this way we would receive some measure of immediate help. I know that recently there have been instances of shipments of grain and flour specifically destined for Poland having gone through the port of Vancouver, even though Vancouver was so busy that ships were waiting to be loaded. I hope that the Minister of Transport will continue to keep a close watch on this situation and do everything possible for the assistance of transportation in the maritime provinces because only when we have a comprehensive freight rates system, indeed something close to a postal stamp type of freight rates system, will it be possible for the maritimes to be prosperous again. In this regard I also want to say that the continued use of the port of New York both for the export of Canadian goods and the import of goods into Canada should be curtailed in some manner by the government for the greater economic benefit of Canadian ports.

To turn to one other subject very briefly, Mr. Chairman, there is in the Department of Transport estimates the usual deficit, although not a large one, for the ferry operating between Yarmouth and Bar Harbor which transports passengers, passenger cars and trucks. The service provided by the motor vessel Bluenose is of very great importance to the tourist industry in Nova Scotia, but I feel that at the present time it is inadequate and there is great need for a second ferry, particularly for the summer months, on the run from Bar Harbor to Yarmouth. The Bluenose has been successful on this run, where earlier attempts at a ferry service between New England and Nova Scotia resulted in astronomical losses. The present service operates between the closest two points, thus enabling the Bluenose to make a return run the same day. In the days of the service from Boston this was not possible, and I submit that if a second ferry is added at any time it should also operate with Bar Harbor as the United States terminal.

The recent announcement of a new national park in western Nova Scotia adds importance to the service of the motor vessel Bluenose because it will be a further impetus for tourists from the United States to come to that part of the province. In connection with the present operation of the service I should like to say that from my own very recent experience I do not feel that tourists and other passengers intending to travel on the boat receive the attention and courteous service at the Bar Harbor terminal in Maine that is necessary, if they are to have a good initial impression of Canada when they arrive in Nova Scotia. While this terminal may be operated by the American authorities, I do not think the average traveller fully realizes this, and it is very much to the advantage of this country in helping to develop the tourist industry that we impress upon those connected with the terminal at Bar Harbor that people travelling to Nova Scotia should be treated with the utmost courtesy.

There are also some other flaws at that terminal. I am informed by people who made the trip during the past week that the motor vessel Bluenose sailed on two or three occasions at least from Bar Harbor, with less than her capacity of cars, even though there were tourists waiting in the area to travel on the boat who then had to wait until the next day. This inefficiency should certainly be remedied.

My final words, Mr. Chairman, are with reference to the Canadian Pacific Railway ferry service between Digby and Saint John. As hon. members know, the Princess Helene was recently retired from service and replaced by the former Princess of Nanaimo, now renamed the Princess of Acadia.

Mr. Winch: A good ship.

Mr. Regan: That may be. While I am sure that the Princess of Acadia has a very large capacity for passengers, those who live in the area say that she does not carry enough trucks. Again, this is a problem of transportation for western Nova Scotia in that we should be able to ship our fish and all our goods as easily as possible. If the Princess of Acadia cannot carry an adequate number of trucks, then she is not providing the necessary service. Indeed, the necessary service to afford efficient transportation will never be provided until we have a car ferry operating between Digby and Saint John. Only then will Nova Scotia have ferry service provided by the two railways rather than ferry service provided by one railway plus a service in the form of a loose liaison between the Dominion Atlantic Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway through the use of the Princess of Acadia.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a word or two on a project which I am sure will be close to the heart of the minister, inasmuch as he is an Ottawa valley member and has always taken quite a personal interest in it. I am speaking of the Ottawa river seaway from Montreal to Georgian bay. I do not want to embarrass the minister at this time about canals because I know he already has a canal in Quebec, the Soulanges, which he is trying to get rid of, but with no bidders. However, I want to bring this project to his attention. He is familiar with many of the details and I am also quite sure he is aware that a year or two ago his department undertook a survey to determine the economic possibilities of the Ottawa seaway. I know that the survey was undertaken but I do not know what stage the survey has reached. Perhaps the minister would like to inquire about this and report to me or to the committee any findings which his officials have made.

In that connection he may also recall that the Department of Public Works undertook a feasibility survey of the Ottawa river seaway from the engineering point of view. This survey was based exclusively on engineering data already in the possession of the department and consisting primarily of a report made in 1908 following a very extensive survey instituted by the government of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, which took four years. This was followed by another survey in 1927.

As a result of the survey made last year I believe the engineers of the Department of Public Works were in agreement that from an engineering point of view there was no insurmountable obstable to the canal being built. This more or less placed the onus upon the Department of Transport, which is interested in the economic aspects of the project.

There are various steps, of course, by which this project may be achieved. One of the first steps would be to make the city of Ottawa accessible to sea navigation by making the city of Ottawa or some port in the neighbourhood on the Quebec side into a seaport accessible to ocean going traffic. I think this is a practical project. Although no official report has been issued as far as I know, the information I was able to obtain from the Department of Public Works indicated that it would cost about $100 million to achieve this first stage of the over-all project which would open the whole of the Ottawa river and lake Nipissing and the French river to ocean navigation, right through to Georgian bay.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the minister in his investigation of the matter to determine the economic benefits to be derived from the projects might also take a look at another proposal which, in my view, is closely linked to the Ottawa river seaway. I refer to a proposal known as the Grand canal which is being promoted in a very vigorous manner by an engineer from Sudbury, Mr. James Kierans. This project, if implemented, would provide a means of paying for part of the cost of the canal. The plan would be to divert waters that are now flowing uselessly into James bay into the Ottawa river system and eventually having that flow of water reach the great lakes to replenish the low level of water that exists in the great lakes now. This need has reached crisis proportions, especially for cities such as Chicago on the south side of the great lakes.

As the minister knows, there has been extensive lobbying in the United States to permit the lowering of levels in the great lakes. So far, the pressure in that direction has been resisted. At one stage I believe the then president of the United States, Mr. Eisenhower, vetoed a project which would have enabled the cities in the United States along the great lakes to take a greater supply of water, thereby lowering the general level of the great lakes. The current project envisages the flow of great masses of water down the French river and into the great lakes, and also it envisages the possible sale of water. Water is a raw material, and it is a much needed raw material that is becoming in shorter supply as the years go by and as the need for it increases.

This project I believe will bear investigation by the officials of the department, especially in the light of the possibility of opening the Ottawa river to deep sea navigation. This project, of course, has been mooted with varying degrees of intensity throughout the years since confederation. I believe the time is fast approaching in this country when we should make greater utilization of the very important natural resources which we have for water transportation. Water transportation is more and more being exploited in the United States, and particularly in Europe. Certainly if there existed in Europe any waterway with potentialities for navigation, such as the Ottawa system, it would have been utilized long ago. I know the conditions are not the same. I know the minister will say it is going to be a costly project. This is true, but it is a project that must be visualized not only for tomorrow or the next ten years, but perhaps for the next 50 or 60 years.

One result of the construction of this project, as the minister is aware, would be the opening of great sectors of northern Ontario and northern Quebec to intensive industrial development. If a seaway of the proportions of the St. Lawrence seaway is not possible at this time, then at least some start should be made on opening the Ottawa to barge traffic. There is quite an amount of bulk traffic that could be carried by that means. I hope, therefore, the minister will ask his officials to intensify and accelerate the economic survey in order to determine what steps in the project could be implemented now, what possibilities there are for water traffic, what possibilities there are for the development of new hydroelectric power from the project and also what possibilities there are of making a deal with the United States for the purchase of new fresh water supplies.

I believe this summarizes my thoughts on the subject. I know the minister has a personal interest in this matter, and I feel he will be doing something along these lines.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, the next time the minister has an opportunity to answer points that have been raised, I hope he will make a statement on two matters about which I should like to remind him. First, I wish he would bring us up to date on the T.C.A. maintenance and overhaul base at Winnipeg. As the minister knows, all of us from Winnipeg, indeed all of us from Manitoba, who were present when the Manitoba delegation appeared before the government on June 18, were delighted with the statement made by the Prime Minister. We were led to have hope that the employment provided at the T.C.A. base in Winnipeg would be retained there. There have been indications, even since then, that something is being done about this matter. Perhaps the minister could bring us up to date. Perhaps he could tell us how the firm of R. Dixon Speas and Associates is getting along with the inquiry it is making. Perhaps he could tell us what the situation is with regard to this matter, which is of great importance to the employees who are affected and, we feel, of importance to the aviation picture in Canada.

The other matter about which I should like to hear from the minister is related to the pension situation of Canadian National employees who are already retired. As the minister knows, this is a subject which has often been raised in this house over the past years. On April 13, 1962, the then prime minister announced in the house changes that had been made in the pension plan of Canadian National Railways, improving the pension position of those who were still employees. Although the announcement was made on April 13, the effective date of those changes was April 1, 1962. At that time the former prime minister was asked what was being done for those who were retired prior to April 1 of that year. Of course, the answer was that that was another matter that had to be looked into upon another occasion.

I make two points in connection with the announcement made by the former prime minister on that occasion. The first is that it is always contended, and I agree, quite properly, that this is a matter that is in the hands of the management of Canadian National Railways. I also have in mind the role of pension committee. Nevertheless, when the former prime minister made his announcement in 1962, he indicated a decision had been arrived at as a result of discussions between the Canadian National Railways and the government. Since the government came into the picture on that occasion, it seems to me that it might well come into the picture with regard to the matter of improving the pensions of those already retired.

The other point I wish to make arising out of what was said on April 13, 1962, is that an improvement was then made with respect to service that had been given many years before. We are frequently told when we raise questions about the pension position of people who are about to retire, or are already retired, that there is a contractual element in all of this and that we must not hope to have it changed. But certainly on that occasion the contractual element, so far as early years of service was concerned, was changed, and I think that is something that is not unreasonable for us to request for employees previously pensioned.

As a matter of fact in 1959 this was done with respect to retired employees of the federal civil service. We have often been told when we plead for an improvement in the position of retired government employees that this would interfere with the contractual arrangement, but at least the former government did find a way in 1959 to improve the position of civil servants already retired. This was done through the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act of 1959.

Because something was done to improve the position of Canadian National employees still to retire, with respect to their earlier service, and because something was done by the federal government to improve the position of civil servants already retired, I think it is not unreasonable for us to continue asking for an improvement in the pension position of Canadian National Railways employees already retired.

As the minister knows, because it was his parliamentary secretary who placed the facts on record in Hansard, there is quite a bit of information on the present situation to be found in Hansard of June 3, 1963, at pages 542 and 543. That information was given in answer to perennial questions of mine regarding the amounts of pension being drawn by retired C.N.R. employees.

If I may summarize the figures from the pages I have just noted, there would seem be a total of 23,833 persons drawing Canadian National Railways pensions. These vary from very small amounts to larger sums, in fact sums of $200 a month and over; but I emphasize the fact that of this grand total there are 377 persons who are drawing pensions of less than $25 a month. There are also 2,559 whose pensions are just $25 a month.

There is a footnote on pages 542 and 543 which explains why some of these people are drawing such small pensions, but even the foonote does not explain away the fact that pensions of these amounts are very low. If one looks further at these tables and does a little simple arithmetic, he discovers that out of the 23,833 pensioners 7,148, or 30 per cent of them, are drawing pensions of less than $50 a month. I offer one further statistic. Out of that same total of 23,833 some 12,357, or 56 per cent, are drawing pensions of less than $100 a month from the Canadian National.

I submit that in this day when we are moving into an acceptance of the view—and I am very happy to see it—that the pensions of people who have worked should be pensions that provide adequate retirement, these amounts being drawn by people who are already retired should not be left that way. In passing may I say that I hope the discussions that are taking place today not far from this building will not interfere with certain plans to provide adequate retirement pensions.

However, I must insist that it is not good enough just to improve the pension plans of those still working. It is not good enough to just say that people who will retire 10 or 15 years from now will do pretty well. This is no consolation to those already retired who through their efforts have brought the Canadian National Railways, our economy and our country to the position that now obtains.

I urge the minister not to give the stock answer, that this is something to be left to the Canadian National Railways. The former government met the management and came up with an improved pension plan. It also did something for retired civil servants, and I shall have something more to say about retired civil servants when we come to the item covering them.

At this time we are talking to the head of the Department of Transport and I urge that he bring up in cabinet the whole question of what might be done to augment the pensions of these retired C.N.R. employees, and particularly of those in the lower and middle brackets.

I am interested in many aspects of the work in the minister's department, but on this occasion I thought I would just ask for a statement on these two important subjects, the question of retaining the T.C.A. maintenance and overhaul base at Winnipeg, and improving the pensions of C.N.R. employees already retired.

Mr. Greene: With respect to the closing of railway lines, some have been closed in my constituency and at present there are two stations in process of being closed. The closing down of one of these will cause great inconvenience to the local citizens, who will have to travel some 15 miles to the nearest station. I am referring specifically to the station at Douglas, which is actually located in North Renfrew but is very close to the borders of my constituency. If this station is closed the citizens will have to travel some 15 miles to Eganville, and this will be a great inconvenience.

I appreciate that railroads have to be put in a more economic condition than they are in at present, but I suggest it is not purely and solely a question of balance sheet economics. Those of us who have appeared before the board of transport commissioners when the closing of stations or lines was contemplated, have seen that the yardstick is apparently the balance sheet, how many dollars can we save, the question of present use, public convenience and necessity, but there are other considerations which must be taken into account at the policy making level, the cabinet level. These questions concern the future growth and future need of areas for railway service.

One thing that appears to be happening, which is not in the best interests of the country at large, is that this closing of stations and lines, as I understand it, is apparently only one aspect of the recommendations made by the MacPherson commission, and I suggest that those recommendations, if they are to be implemented, should either be implemented in toto or generally revised.

In that connection I would point out that in this session of parliament there has been demonstrated on this side of the house the fact that we are committed to short range and long range planning, and that we intend to see to it that the country develops along some planned scheme and not helter-skelter, as has been the case in the past. This being so, I suggest the question of railways should be treated in the same way.

We should not implement one small facet of the MacPherson report, namely the closing of stations or lines for economic reasons, unless we have a broad, new, comprehensive and planned railway policy which will include the social ramifications of the closing of these lines and stations. In other words, I do not think it can be purely a matter of dollars and cents and the immediate return or reward to the railways, as we are now considering it. In particular in the west end of my riding I have a situation, Mr. Chairman. This part of the country, the area around Barrys Bay, Killaloe and Brudenell used to be a very profitable and prosperous lumbering area. There was a day when this created employment and prosperity for that area, and now to a very large degree the forest resources have been depleted for many years and no secondary industry has come in by virtue of distance from markets, and the fact that there is no trained labour pool. Industry is not going to come into these areas unless some encouragement is provided. I think such plans as the economic council, the Department of Industry and the new tax concessions may provide that type of incentive. But at the same time I do not think we should forget the transport aspect in this regard; that in these areas even roads are inadequate.

Surely we cannot hope to have secondary industries coming into these areas in the future unless there is adequate transportation for them both by road and by rail, and adequate service by way of stations situated in localities which will best serve the communities. Even though today it might be more economic for the railways to close these stations, I think we should look at the long term and the planning aspect and see whether, if we intend these areas to survive and develop economically in the future, we should not preserve the railways where they are needed for that future growth. I would remind the committee, Mr. Chairman, that at the time these charters were granted to the railways they were given monopolies and they made very large profits in some of these areas, particularly in areas such as the west end of my riding. When the lumbering industry was at its peak the railways were very happy to have those monopolies and to make these very large profits in those areas.

Such being the case, I do not think we should look only at last year's balance sheet. We should see whether those railways have made profits in past years, and if so, surely it is not asking too much to have them put back something from those profits they made in past years into these areas for future development and to encourage their future growth and industrialization. In these areas even some slight factor might make the difference between obtaining or not obtaining industry. Goodness only knows, there is little enough incentive for secondary industry to come into areas such as the west end of my riding. Hydro rates are higher than those in the metropolitan areas. If we take away this last resource of rail transportation and rail service we are in effect abandoning these areas in so far as future economic growth is concerned.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to say one word in respect of the Ottawa river, which is also in my constituency. It bounds my constituency and that of my hon. friend from Pontiac-Temiscamingue. There we have a community of interest.

An hon. Member: And Carleton.

Mr. Greene: The river does bound Carleton, but Carleton is my neighbour to the east. I was very interested to hear the remarks of the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue in this regard and I certainly associate myself with those remarks. I will be glad to provide any humble support that I can in respect of the request he made. Even before we reach the, I think very lofty and proper goal that he has as an end, I would suggest it would be in order, and should be done in the immediate future, in this area for the Department of Transport to embark upon a plan for building more wharves and loading devices along that river. There was a day when the Ottawa river was purely and simply a vehicle for the lumbering people to carry their logs to market. I think if one were to total up economically the value of the Ottawa river today, it would be found to be far more valuable as a tourist asset, as a summer resort asset than it is even to the lumbering industry. I suggest this has been accomplished with but little help from any arm of government; that by virtue of its natural attributes the area has developed as a tourist resort. But I think at this time help is needed to develop it even further. I remind the committee that this is an area of low employment. If we are to develop this area even further as a tourist resort, I suggest that the Department of Transport would contribute something very valuable in doing the following things. These can be done more immediately, possibly, than the long term plan which has been mentioned.

We could immediately build more wharves and loading platforms in this area. I think this would be extremely important to the growth of tourism. We should have a method whereby boats can be immediately transported over the dams and rapids. I think there are methods by which this can be done economically. I am instructed that it could be done very economically with the installation of a narrow gauge rail, so that boats could be transported across the hydro dams and so that tourists might travel, without the necessity of great expenditures in pleasure craft all the way from the St. Lawrence river to lake Temiscamingue. This could be done without the expenditure of a great deal of money. The first thing would be more wharves and more loading platforms for boats. The second thing would be a method of transporting boats across the present hydro dams so that a vast area which is today of only limited access to tourists and the boating public could be opened up, and a new era of tourism could loom in the future for the Ottawa valley. I think this could be done, as I have said, without spending a great deal of money and at the same time it would be a very facile and ready way of creating immediate employment which is now so badly needed in the area.

In the west end of my riding the areas of Combermere and Barrys Bay are a potential and undeveloped tourist paradise. A great deal could be done by the Department of Transport in building more wharves, more loading devices for boats, more locks so that one could travel from one lake to another. I think this would attract a great deal more United States tourist money in that area, which we need so very badly in order, among other things, to help us with our international balance of payments. This could be done without embarking upon any great program of expenditure. There is already on the books a plan for the building of a dam at Galeairy lake, Whitney. In spite of my efforts to that end to date, these plans have not been brought to fruition. I think these things should be hurried. If we are to be progressive, if we are to provide employment, this is the kind of thing we should do, and at the same time we would be developing a very important industry and a new area which has not to date been sufficiently opened to tourism.

One other aspect of the matter I should like to bring to the attention of the minister is this. I again go back to the question of the Ottawa river and the fact that its chief economic use is now as a tourist resort. Over the years the logs have come down this river in order to reach their ultimate destination, and many of these logs have sunk to the bottom of the river and today are sticking up all over the place, embedded in the bottom, some for hundreds of years. They create a very serious menace to the boating public. There have been serious accidents and it may be that some day there will be a fatal accident if these things are not looked after.

Here, I suggest, is where the Department of Transport could play a very valuable and useful part in opening up this area to more attractive tourism. It would create a new and interesting attraction to the tourist industry in this particular area where the great opening of the Ottawa river is, at Chats lake with Norway Bay on the Quebec side and Sand Point, Braeside and Arnprior on the Ontario side. If the river at this point could be cleaned up and the deadheads taken up from the bottom, this would improve the situation. The Department of Transport is in charge of navigable streams, and although this is not an easy job it would create employment for many people for a considerable period of time. It would also remove a hazard in the river and achieve the economic objective of creating a new and attractive tourist resort. I think this would be in the interests of the country as a whole, and the people of that area in particular.

[Mr. Greene.]

(Translation):

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, at this stage of the debate on the estimates of the Department of Transport, I should like to draw the minister's attention on two matters which are of particular interest to my constituency: air lines and the Canadian National Railways.

As far as air lines are concerned, we do not seem to mean much today, because even if for the past few years we have had a magnificent landing strip located, to be more exact, on the limits of the town of Roberval, we have not yet succeeded in obtaining a regular service.

The minister will recognize that if the previous government had found it advisable to provide the necessary grants for the construction of that landing strip, it is because its need had been established for a long time. Then why is it practically deserted today, since it only accommodates the flow of tourists who, each year, invade the lake St. John area to head for our lakes and streams which, for fishing, are known as the best to be found in the province of Quebec.

This airport is an important asset for our tourist trade but in order to make our tourist service complete, we must think necessarily of an airport located within Dolbeau itself, because at the present time, in our opinion, the Roberval airport is quite inadequate by itself to meet the demand of the U.S. visitors who pour into our district. That is why we are asking the minister to investigate the situation.

I made a survey of my own in order to find out why the regular air transport companies did not use the Roberval airport and I beg of the minister to lend me his valuable assistance in order to settle this problem because it is unthinkable that such a deficiency should be allowed to continue. To begin with, I do not understand why the present service between Ottawa, Montreal, Quebec city up to Seven Islands through Bagotville should not also include on its route, the Roberval airport.

In fact, the people of Roberval and vicinity are always reluctant to go to an airport located four counties away in order to catch a plane when it would be so easy to authorize the scheduled flight to make a stop-over in Roberval. I ask you a question, Mr. Minister, and the people of Lake St. John are anxious to receive an answer. We are not begging, we are merely asking a very logical thing. I hope that you will not forget to take this request into consideration when allotting your estimates.

I know that some people will object that such a service would be uneconomic, without even trying to support their allegation. Moreover, certain administrators can only give one answer: not profitable. It is much simpler than to make some effort to provide an adequate service in every area. The minister is convinced, I am sure, that an efficient service is essential to transportation. Every effort should be made to achieve that aim.

Mr. Chairman, as far as the C.N.R. is concerned, I inquired last year about having repairs made to our railway tracks and the only answer I got was an acknowledgment. Public bodies have also taken some steps in that connection, and I have here the last letter from the chamber of commerce of my county, of which I sent a copy to the department.

It was said, among other things:

> We, of the Roberval chamber of commerce, propose, as part of our next year's activity, firmly to approach the board of transport commissioners finally to settle the renovation of our national railways line, Quebec via Dolbeau and Chicoutimi. We are already working on a well-informed brief which we will, in due time, transmit to you in order to support and defend that most important cause in our district. Among permanent projects, we do not believe that there are any more important projects than that one to give work to our unemployed on a permanent basis, at least for a few years to come.

I received such letters, sir, from nearly every town and city asking me to exert some pressure on the C.N.R. in order to have our lines improved.

Today, I see that your government is broad-minded enough to understand our needs. You may be assured, sir, that the whole district will be happy to know of your effort to further the use of railways as means of transportation.

It may be said today that the railways are having fewer customers. But there is a reason for it. It is probably due—and I do not know whether you have already wondered about it—to the fact that the real object of a railway company has been forgotten, which is to give adequate service. It is all very well to build skyscrapers, to pour the taxpayers' money into terminal buildings in the larger centres, which buildings are getting the more vast and splendid as our local stations disappear. But I think that some mistake was made in this respect, in that the money has been all invested in those grand buildings while the main thing was forgotten, that is to improve the tracks.

I am of the opinion that if stations had been built for the railroad and not the railroad for the stations, the C.N.R. would not have to regret a loss of patronage.

If you want to be convinced of my allegations, you need only to come to my riding, not in the luxurious car of the president of the C.N.R., but in the ramshackle car used by private members of parliament. I am convinced that when you arrive at Dolbeau, you will say, like 50 per cent of railway patrons: I will not be caught at it again. I wish to draw the minister's attention to this: they should put more emphasis on service, as service means improvement of the railway.

Even if railway officials have plush offices in skyscrapers, if they force patrons to travel in 30-year old cars, they will always have to face the same problem.

I have mentioned to you those two important points, sir, and I am sure that you will take my remarks into consideration.

(Text):

Mr. Mather: I have one brief question I should like to direct to the minister. I wonder if when he replies to the various questions which have been directed to him during the afternoon he would answer this one. Can he give us any fresh information or encouraging word as to progress in the construction of that great project, the Vancouver international airport?

Mr. Nesbitt: I have a few brief remarks to make on a subject which, according to the papers at least, is very close to the minister's heart, namely the work of the research and rescue organization on the great lakes. My own interest in the subject has existed for a good many years. In 1954, I brought this question before the house in a motion and later on, in 1956, the minister of transport of that day, Mr. Marler, took a considerable interest in the matter and was responsible for drawing up a number of regulations concerning the use of small boats. Later still, the minister of transport who succeeded him took a similar interest in the subject and extended the search and rescue organization on the great lakes. I believe one or two ships are under construction and that one of them is already in service.

Such measures are obviously necessary because in the last ten years the number of small boats on the great lakes has, I suppose, quadrupled. I know that as many as 1,600 small boats go out on lake Erie from one little port, Turkey Point, when the bass fishing opens. Every week we read the accident toll on the water during the week end, and the loss of life through drowning and accidents involving small boats has begun to reach a scale we associate with the highways. I know the minister is interested in this subject. I have read in the papers reports of what he is doing and I hope he continues on this course. Many newspapers have carried editorials on this subject lately, requesting more action. We all know that everything cannot be done at once but as long as we can continue to make steady progress in this field it will be to the advantage of all the people of this country. Only yesterday I read an editorial on the subject in the London Free Press. Articles on the subject frequently appear in the Toronto Globe and Mail as well as in other papers. There are many organizations which help look after research and rescue work on the great lakes. Apart from the Department of Transport ships there are the Ontario provincial police, the R.C.M.P., volunteers from R.C.A.F. squadrons and so on. Various municipalities also have facilities for helping to rescue people who meet with accidents on the water.

For the sake of hon. members who are not familiar with the great lakes, let me say that these large bodies of fresh water can become exceedingly rough in a very short period of time. I do not wish to spend much more time discussing the situation because I have spoken about it repeatedly over the years and I know the minister has these things at heart. But there is a suggestion I should like to make to him. I have already mentioned that there are facilities to assist search and rescue work carried out by Department of Transport boats, R.C.A.F. teams, local authorities and the like. One of the problems seems to be that if anyone gets into trouble no one knows who to get in touch with. What is needed is a co-ordinator who has had some brief training so that he or she would know immediately whom to contact. Since most of these problems arise during the summer months I agree it would not be practicable for the department to take on a large extra staff of co-ordinators. What could be done might be to use senior university students. They could receive a brief course before taking up their work and act as co-ordinators, on the lakes, on other large inland waters and perhaps even on the seacoast as well. These would be third or fourth year students, and they would be engaged in the summer months to co-ordinate all the assorted search and rescue facilities I have mentioned. If anything happened, if someone got lost, or a boat overturned, it would be reported to the co-ordinator who in turn would immediately contact the proper facilities. Many drowning deaths arise because it takes too long to rescue the victims. What is really needed is a co-ordinator and I think such a person could be most helpful.

Mr. Winch: May I take just a few minutes in which to express the hope that the minister will give consideration to a matter which I believe requires his immediate attention. Though I do not know the exact figures, I presume millions of dollars are spent on air search and rescue. I know we all agree that a magnificent job has been done by those who take part in air search and rescue, and it will continue to be done. But is it not high time more effort was made, by law or by regulation, to place responsibility upon those who operate private planes and who are responsible for the majority of the air search and rescue work which takes place? It is my understanding that in British Columbia this year there have been seven crashes and that they involved a number of deaths. Yet in looking over the situation I am surprised to find that in a great many cases American private planes that come into Canada do not have to file a flight plan and do not have to advise anyone exactly how long they are going to be in Canada. So we have the situation of a private plane crossing our border, not filing a flight plan and not advising anyone as to where it is going or how long it is going to be in our country. The result is that in the event of an accident we are faced with a great expenditure.

I have also had it brought to my attention that far too many of those who pilot private planes in Canada do not file flight plans. In addition, although we have certain regulations with regard to safety equipment on private planes many of these planes do not have this equipment on board and there is practically no checking of private planes to see that they have the required equipment.

In view of the extensive cost to the government and therefore to the taxpayers of Canada of air search and rescue, surely we are not unjust in insisting on proper equipment in private planes, proper inspection of private planes and that when a plane leaves the ground somebody should be told where the pilot thinks he is going and when he anticipates arriving there.

I do not want to hold up the committee, but I feel that such a piece of equipment as the SARAH would be most useful. From all I have read it would appear that this very cheap electronic equipment is crashproof, and in the event of a crash it automatically sends out signals that can be picked up by those who are conducting the search. I simply want to bring this matter to the attention of the committee because air crashes and fatalities are reaching substantial proportions and the higher they go the greater the cost to the government and the taxpayers. If these people will not do these things voluntarily, surely we have a right to ask that there should be regulations and laws to bring about conformity to common decency in the operation of planes in Canada.

Item agreed to.

45. Canadian coast guard—construction or acquisition of ships and equipment, $12,842,000.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, apparently I did not speak loudly enough, but I wish to say something on item 45. I just want to ask one question. I notice that it includes provision in whole or in part for the construction of two west coast weather ships. I should like to know whether one of these is to replace the existing weather ship or whether the result of this program when it is completed will be that we will have two additional weather ships. I believe this program was undertaken during the period when I was not a member of the house, and I should like to know what the net result will be when the program is completed.

Mr. McIlraith: The situation is that the two ships are required by the weather service to replace the frigates now doing the work. The contract for one of them is now before treasury board for approval. The other one will go to tender this fall.

Mr. Barnett: Will this mean that when the program is completed there will be two weather ships on the west coast or three? Is one of them to replace the existing weather ship? That is my understanding. We have had one in operation for a number of years.

Mr. McIlraith: There is not one existing weather ship. There are three frigates doing the work now and when the two weather ships are completed they will rotate and replace the existing three frigates.

Item agreed to.

65. Construction or acquisition of auto-ferry vessels and equipment as listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended upon individual listed projects, $1,375,000.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether this item could stand because there is somebody who wants to ask some questions with respect to it. If it could stand it would be helpful.

The Deputy Chairman: Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item stands.

65a. Construction or acquisition of auto-ferry vessels and equipment as listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended upon individual listed projects, $20,000.

Mr. Churchill: This item should stand too.

Item stands.

120. Railway employees' provident fund—to supplement pension allowances under the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Employees' Provident Fund Act so as to make the minimum allowance payable in the calendar year 1963 $30 per month instead of $20 per month as fixed by the said act, $7,000.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, somewhere in these estimates we would like to have the minister reply to some of the points that were raised. This looks like the item where he might answer my question about the pensions of Canadian National Railway employees, unless he can tell me a better item under which he could give a better answer.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I might make a suggestion. I suggest that any items on which members wish answers be allowed to stand and that we carry the items on which no one wants an answer. Then we would ask the committee to rise and take the others on another occasion.

Mr. Knowles: That would be satisfactory to me, if the minister would state which of these three pension items he would like to stand for the purpose of dealing with the question I raised.

Mr. McIlraith: I think 120 is the correct item.

Item stands.

130. Air services administration, $1,995,600.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I should like some item to stand on which the minister can make a statement about the T.C.A. maintenance and overhaul base at Winnipeg.

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder whether I could give a short answer now. The hon. member may have noted the other day that in answer to a question on the orders of the day I said that I regretted to have to advise the house that the Dixon, Speas firm had advised T.C.A. that they would require until the early part of August to have their report ready for submission. So the matter will have to stand until we get that report. I am looking forward to getting it and I must say I am a little disappointed it has not been submitted earlier. That is the short answer.

Mr. Knowles: We can take it in the meantime that there is no modification of the statement made by the Prime Minister on June 18 to the Manitoba delegation.

Mr. McIlraith: That is right.

Item agreed to.

140. Control of civil aviation including the administration of the Aeronautics Act and regulations issued thereunder, $5,211,100.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to the minister. Is he considering the possibility of changing the name "Trans-Canada Air Lines" to "Air Canada" which would be bilingual? I might add we have heard about that for a certain time.

(Text):

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I should like to answer this question in a more extended fashion than I will now, but perhaps I can abbreviate my reply by saying that this matter is receiving very active consideration at the present time. I am sympathetic to the quite numerous representations I have been getting on the subject. The way the matter stands at the moment is that T.C.A. is examining exactly what is required to be done within the organization itself. Then, of course, it is a matter for the T.C.A. directors to consider, and the government to decide, to make the necessary statutory changes. The complexity of making the change, particularly in the international field, will be easily seen. For safety reasons, one cannot have two names on the side of an aircraft. There must be one name only. I cannot say when the decision will be taken, but it is very much a live issue at the moment.

(Translation):

Mr. Boulanger: Perhaps I could suggest to the Minister of Transport to defer consideration of item 140 until next week, so that he can have the opportunity to give us either an affirmative answer or a more definite one.

(Text):

Mr. McIlraith: I should like to make a fuller reply.

Item stands.

145. Airports and other ground services, $22,532,100.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if that item could stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item stands.

155. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment with respect to national airports (as determined by the Minister of Transport) and related facilities; contributions towards construction done by local or private authorities with respect to such airports, amounts to be paid in settlement of claims for compensation by persons whose property is injuriously affected by the operation of a zoning regulation made under authority of paragraph (j) of subsection (1) of section 4 of the Aeronautics Act and authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, to make commitments for the current fiscal year not to exceed a total amount of $41,360,000, $38,477,000.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Leboe: I wonder if item 155 could stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item stands.

160. Contributions in accordance with terms and conditions approved by the governor in council, to assist in the establishment or improvement of local airports and related facilities, $168,700.

Mr. Nasserden: I wonder if the minister could let us know what is required for assistance under item 160?

Mr. McIlraith: Perhaps we could let the item stand. It is a rather lengthy document.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item stands.

165. Grants for the development of civil aviation, in the amounts detailed in the estimates, $360,000.

Mr. More: I wonder if this item could stand? I do not want to delay the committee but I should like the opportunity of asking some questions on this item.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item stands.

200. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $2,300,500.

Mr. Simpson: I wonder if item 200 could stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item stands.

Air transport board—

205. Salaries and other expenses including the Canadian delegation to the international civil aviation organization, $622,400.

Mr. Barnett: May item 205 be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item stands.

Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada—

212. Amount to be credited to the railway grade crossing fund, in addition to the amount to be credited to the fund under the Railway Act in the current fiscal year; and, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, to authorize an increase to $24,067,000 in the commitments (in addition to any commitments in respect of which amounts are appropriated under this or any other act) that may be made in the current and subsequent fiscal years, $100,000.

Mr. Nasserden: May this stand, please?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item stands.

C—Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada—

213a—To provide payments to companies subject to Order Number 96300, dated November 17, 1958, of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada of an aggregate amount of $20,000,000 in respect of the period April 1, 1963, to March 31,

1964, to be paid in instalments at such times as may be determined by the said Board for the purpose of reimbursing the said companies for such diminution in their aggregate gross revenues during the said period as in the opinion of the said Board is attributable to such companies maintaining the rate level for freight traffic at an 8% increase instead of 17% as authorized by the said order; and to provide payments to the said companies of an aggregate amount in respect of the calendar year 1963 of $50,000,000 to be paid in instalments at such times and in accordance with such methods of allocation as may be determined by the said Board for the maintenance by such companies of the rates of freight traffic at the said reduced level, $70,000,000.

Mr. McIlraith: May this item stand?

Item stands.

National harbours board—

225. Advances to national harbours board, subject to the provisions of section 29 of the National Harbours Board Act, to meet expenditures applicable to the calendar year 1963 on any or all of the following accounts:

Reconstruction and capital expenditures—
Halifax	1,477,600
Saint John	217,000
Quebec	1,785,000
Prescott	40,000
Churchill	815,000
Generally-unforeseen and miscellaneous	200,000
	4,534,600
Less—amount to be expended from replacement and other funds	1,458,700
	$3,075,900

Mr. Simpson: May item 225 be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Item stands.

Mr. McIlraith: I do not want to delay members, but I should like to express very briefly my personal thanks for the co-operation and courtesy hon. members have shown today, having suffered from two or three days of intensive heat and humidity beyond that which most of us like to endure.

Progress reported.

Resolutions adopted in committee of supply this day reported and concurred in.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Since we have had such wonderful co-operation today, I wonder if there would be unanimous consent to the taking of item 14, to establish the committee on drugs? I would be glad to move the motion on behalf of the hon. lady. I believe no one wishes to debate it, and it might be possible to get the committee organized next week.

Business of the House

HEALTH AND WELFARE

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE ON DRUGS AND CHEMICAL FOOD CONTAMINATION

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved:

That a special committee be appointed to consider and report on (a) the hazards of food contamination from insecticides, pesticides, and other noxious substances; and (b) the safety and cost of drugs; that the committee consist of 24 members to be designated later by the house; that the committee be empowered to send for persons, papers, records, and to report from time to time, and to print such papers and evidence from day to day as may be deemed advisable; and that the provisions of standing orders 66 and 67 be suspended in relation thereto.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Will the house leader, in view of the heat wave, give us a very short statement of the business for Monday only?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will endeavour to be brief. According to an order issued last night by the house, on Monday we will take the various stages of the resolutions and bills respecting the remuneration and pensions of members of parliament. Then, if there is the consent of the house, we will take the same stages in the judges' measure. In any event, we will certainly take the resolution stage. I would not want to ask for third reading of either of those two bills because I believe they should stand over until the following day. We would like, if we could, to finish the excise tax in committee, and if the house were agreeable to have third reading.

Then there is a bill on which I believe there would be almost no debate. It is required under law that if a bridge is to be built over the St. Lawrence river there must be a statutory provision for it. The bill has passed the other house and has been before us for some time. I believe the work is being held up because we have not acted, and I would hope there might be a possibility of facilitating it without too much delay.

After that, if there should be any further time, we would start the committee stage on the economic council. I would prefer not to say anything about any day after Monday because the Prime Minister promised to report to us.

It being thirteen minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Supply—Items Passed

[The following items were passed in committee of supply]:

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

A—Department—

1. Departmental administration, $3,388,600.

Marine services—

5. Administration, including agencies $1,113,900.

Aids to navigation—

10. Administration, operation and maintenance including fees for membership in the international organizations listed in the details of the estimates, $6,620,600.

15. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $5,320,000.

15a. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $600,000.

Canals—

20. Administration, operation and maintenance, $2,489,200

25. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, including payments to provinces or municipalities as contributions towards construction done by those bodies, $1,862,400.

25a. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $200,000.

St. Lawrence and Saguenay rivers ship channels—

30. Administration, operation and maintenance, $1,352,600.

30a. Administration, operation and maintenance, $136,800.

35. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $3,280,000.

Canadian coast guard—

40. Administration, operation and maintenance including authority, notwithstanding section 30 of the Financial Administration Act, to make commitments for the current fiscal year not to exceed a total amount of $22,851,300, $21,679,800.

40a. Administration, operation and maintenance, $498,400.

45. Construction or acquisition of ships and equipment, $12,842,000.

Marine regulations including pilotage and marine reporting services—

50. Administration, operation and maintenance including grants and contributions as detailed in the estimates and the payment of expenses, including excepted expenses, incurred in respect of Canadian distressed seamen as defined in section 306 of the Canada Shipping Act, $3,154,500.

55. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $286,500.

Railway and steamship services—

Newfoundland coastal services—

60. Construction or acquisition of passenger-cargo vessels and equipment and harbour facilities, $196,000.

65a. Construction or acquisition of auto-ferry vessels and equipment as listed in the details of the estimates, provided that treasury board may increase or decrease the amount within the vote to be expended upon individual listed projects, $20,000.

Railway and steamship services—

70. Construction of dock and terminal facilities at Port aux Basques, Newfoundland, $82,200.

Newfoundland ferry service—

73. Federal government's share of the cost of containers for the transportation of freight and express, $212,000.

73a. Federal government's share of the cost of containers for the transportation of freight and express—to extend the purposes of vote 73 of the main estimates, 1963-64, to include other appurtenances and the conversion of railway equipment, $63,000.

75. Construction of dock and terminal facilities at North Sydney, Nova Scotia and Argentia, Newfoundland, $190,200.

80. Payments to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport made by the company to the Minister of Finance, to be applied by the company in payment of the deficits, certified by the auditors of the company, arising in the operations in the calendar year 1963—Newfoundland ferry and terminals, $8,675,500.

85. Payments to the Canadian National Railway Company (hereinafter called the company) upon applications approved by the Minister of Transport made by the company to the Minister of Finance, to be applied by the company in payment of the deficits, certified by the auditors of the company, arising in the operations in the calendar year 1963—Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals, $3,894,000.

Prince Edward Island car ferry and terminals—

90. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $1,147,200.

95. Yarmouth, Nova Scotia—Bar Harbor, Maine, U.S.A., ferry service—deficit, 1963, $241,000.

Maritime Freight Rates Act—

100. Payment to the railway companies operating in the select territory designated by the act, of the difference occurring on account of the application of the act, between the tariff tolls and normal tolls under approved tariffs (estimated and certified to the Minister of Transport by the Canadian National Railway Company and approved by auditors of the said company respecting the eastern lines of the Canadian National Railways and in the case of the other railways by the board of transport commissioners for Canada) on all traffic moved during the calendar year 1963, $12,700,000.

105. Repairs and expenses in connection with the operation and maintenance of official railway cars under the jurisdiction of the department, $61,000.

107. Payment to the Canadian National Railway Company in the current and subsequent fiscal years of amounts in accordance with an agreement, entered into with the approval of the governor in council, providing for the termination of the collection of tolls on the Victoria jubilee bridge, Montreal, from such time and date and subject to such terms and conditions as may be specified therein; amount required for the current fiscal year, $3,453,000.

Pensions and other benefits—

115. Amount required to pay pensions at the rate of $300 per annum to former pilots: Raoul Lachance; Jules Lamarre; Wilhelm Langlois; Auguste Santerre, $1,200.

125. Supplemental pension allowances to former employees of Newfoundland railways, steamships and telecommunications services transferred to Canadian National Railways, $157,000.

AIR SERVICES

Administrative branch—

130. Air services administration, $1,995,600.

135. Construction services administration, $3,970,600.

Civil aviation branch—

150. Air traffic control, $8,596,100.

160a. Contributions in accordance with terms and conditions approved by the governor in council, to assist in the establishment or improvement of local airports and related facilities, $22,800.

170. Payments to the other governments or international agencies that are detailed in the estimates for the operation and maintenance of airports, air navigation and airways facilities, including authority to pay assessments in the amounts and in the currencies in which they are levied, notwithstanding that the total of such payments may exceed the equivalent in Canadian dollars, estimated as of December, 1962, which is, $238,000.

Telecommunications and electronics branch—

Radio aids to air and marine navigation—

175. Administration, operation and maintenance, $20,745,600.

180. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $9,124,200.

Radio Act and regulations—

185. Administration, operation and maintenance including Canada's share of the costs of the international radio, telegraph and telephone organizations listed in the details of the estimates, $3,009,300.

190. Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, $216,600.

192a. Gift of furnishings to the headquarters of the international telecommunication union at Geneva, Switzerland (revote), $10,000.

Meteorological branch—

195. Administration, operation and maintenance including Canada's assessment for membership in the world meteorological organization and $86,000 for grants in aid of meteorological research in Canadian universities, $18,310,200.

C—Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada—

210. Administration, operation and maintenance, $1,221,600.

D—Canadian maritime commission—

215. Administration, $196,135.

217. Degaussing Canadian government ships and Canadian-owned merchant ships, of 2,000 gross tons to 20,000 gross tons, of Canadian registry or of United Kingdom registry if subject to re-transfer to Canadian registry under special intergovernmental arrangement, $165,000.

220. Steamship subventions for coastal services, as detailed in the estimates, $8,361,370.

220a. Steamship subventions for coastal services as detailed in the estimates, $189,228.

222. Capital subsidies for the construction of commercial and fishing vessels in accordance with regulations of the governor in council, $18,000,000.

222a. Capital subsidies for the construction of commercial and fishing vessels in accordance with regulations of the governor in council, $12,000,000.

E—National harbours board—

225a. Advances to national harbours board, subject to the provisions of section 29 of the National Harbours Board Act, to meet expenditures applicable to the calendar year 1963 on any or all of the following accounts:

Reconstruction and capital expenditures—
Saint John	(13)	83,000
Quebec	(13)	1,400,000
Churchill	(16)	62,000
		1,545,000
Less: Amount to be expended from replacement and other funds		550,000 $995,000.

227a. Payment to the national harbours board to be applied in payment of the deficits (exclusive of interest on advances authorized by parliament and depreciation on capital structures) incurred in respect of the calendar year 1962 and expected to be incurred in the calendar year 1963 in the operation of the Champlain bridge, Montreal harbour, $92,000.

F—St. Lawrence seaway authority—

230. Operating deficit and capital requirements of canals and works entrusted to the St. Lawrence seaway authority with the approval of the governor in council, and to authorize, notwithstanding the Financial Administration Act or any other act, the disbursement by the authority of revenues derived from the operation and management of such canals and works, $2,788,000.

LOANS, INVESTMENTS AND ADVANCES

Transport—

General—

L63a. Advances to the Canadian National Railway Company, pending the enactment of the Canadian National Railways Financing and Guarantee Act, 1962-63, on such terms and conditions as the governor in council may approve, $26,000,000.

Canadian overseas telecommunication corporation—

L65. Loans to the Canadian overseas telecommunication corporation in accordance with section 14 of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act for additions and betterments to facilities $7,710,000.

L65a. Loans to the Canadian overseas telecommunication corporation in accordance with section 14 of the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation Act for additions and betterments to facilities, $3,284,145.

National harbours board—

L70. Advance to national harbours board, subject to the provisions of section 29 of the National Harbours Board Act, to meet expenditures applicable to the calendar year 1963 on any or all of the following accounts:

Reconstruction and capital expenditures—
Three Rivers	$ 845,000
Montreal	8,116,500
Vancouver	2,026,000
	$10,987,500
Less—Amount to be expended from replacement and other funds ..	5,083,500	$5,904,000

L70a. Advances to national harbours board subject to the provisions of section 29 of the National Harbours Board Act, to meet expenditures applicable to the calendar year 1963 on the following account:

Reconstruction and capital expenditures—
Montreal	$1,994,000

St. Lawrence seaway authority—

L75. Loans to the St. Lawrence seaway authority in such manner and subject to such terms and conditions as the governor in council may approve, $1,500,000.

APPENDIX

DISARMAMENT RESOLUTION PASSED BY AUSTRALIAN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

House of Representatives,
Parliament House,
CANBERRA, AUSTRALIA.

18th July, 1963.

Sir,

I have the honour to bring to the attention of your parliament a resolution agreed to by the House of Representatives of the parliament of the Commonwealth of Australia on 23rd May, 1963. The resolution is as follows:

That—

(1) World-wide disarmament is now a condition of survival for all mankind;

(2) Regional disarmament arrangements cannot give security while the danger of attack from other regions continues to exist;

(3) No program of disarmament can be effective without proper safeguards;

(4) Proper safeguards are impossible without inspection and verification on an international basis;

(5) Therefore, agreements on the measures for the inspection and verification of the successive stages of general and complete disarmament are a necessary first step toward this objective;

(6) Such agreements on international inspection and verification would afford evidence of good faith and willingness to implement positive measures for disarmament and would thus tend to reduce international tensions; and

(7) Believing in these principles, this house desires Mr. Speaker to communicate this resolution to the parliaments of all members of the United Nations.

I have the honour to be, sir, your most obedient servant.

J. McLeay,
Speaker.

The Speaker,
House of Commons,
OTTAWA, ONTARIO, CANADA.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, July 29, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SESSIONAL EMPLOYEES TO BE KEPT ON STRENGTH DURING SUMMER RECESS

Mr. Speaker: It might interest hon. members to know that following a decision taken by the commissioners of internal economy, our sessional employees who may wish to work during the next summer adjournment of the house will be kept on strength.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1963-64

A message from His Excellency the Deputy Governor General transmitting supplementary estimates "C" for the financial year ending March 31, 1964, was presented by Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance), read by Mr. Speaker to the house, and referred to the committee of supply.

(Translation):

PRIVILEGE

MR. MARCOUX—PAROLE GRANTED LEOPOLD DION

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Even though this matter does not concern me personally, I presume that the house will give me its unanimous consent.

Over the week end my residence was deluged with visitors and phone calls concerning the case of Leopold Dion who was found guilty of the murder of four children.

Last week, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) promised me to appoint a lawyer and a psychiatrist to look into Dion's record.

I am not raising this matter now since it is sub judice, but I am referring rather to the evidence taken following those tragedies. Dion himself stated that he had corrupted 21 youngsters since his last parole. Will they be 21 future criminals?

Allow me to quote the opinion of Hon. Justice Lucien Cannon who had recommended life imprisonment, in Dion's case.

On June 2, 1940, he had stated, according to L'Action of July 2, 1963:

> In such a case, parole should never be granted.

According to Le Soleil of July 26, 1963, Charles Edouard Cantin, assistant solicitor general of the province of Quebec, had applied for the repeal of Dion's ticket-of-leave, in order that he serve his life sentence. Even Le Devoir of this morning pointed out that Mr. Cantin had objected to Justice George Street, but he noted that the judge did not remember his former protests.

Mr. Roger Champoux wrote in La Presse of July 26, 1963:

> But until the outcome, how many mysteries remain to be solved, how many concerns have to be quieted and how many questions asked will never receive a clear and definite answer.

Considering that the Profumo case has given rise to a royal inquiry in Great Britain even though there has been no loss of life, I respectfully submit that the national parole board should also be subject to a full royal inquiry.

I understand that the board is supposed to be independent but, in view of the circumstances, we need more than just a simple investigation.

Even though there are political differences between the hon. members for Quebec East, Portneuf and Saguenay and myself, I am sure that they will agree with me on that point because some of their constituents are directly affected by that tragedy.

Considering that sexual perverts are mentally sick, probably the Criminal Code should be amended so as to provide complete and adequate therapy for such people before they are eligible for parole.

As a doctor, I appreciate that psychopaths cannot be treated the same way as run-of-the-mill prisoners.

I therefore appeal to the feelings of the Minister of Justice because his children or his grandchildren could be the victims of such a tragedy just as well as ours.

Before I conclude, I should like to say that it might be appropriate to consider the resignation of Justice Street since he seems to have made a decision without even having all the facts before him.

So I ask the Minister of Justice to order a royal inquiry regarding the national parole board.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not object to the hon. member raising that matter in the house, even though I do not believe the case at issue warrants a question of privilege.

Be that as it may, as I was entering the house, the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Marcoux) supplied me with a copy of the statement he intended to make in this chamber to ask that a royal inquiry be made into that matter.

As I have already said, the government and the Department of Justice feel that is a most serious matter. Furthermore, and having read as the hon. member did the statements published in the week-end newspapers about it, I inquired and prepared a few notes I should like to put on record.

As I just said, I read in the week-end newspapers certain statements attributed to the assistant attorney general of the province of Quebec concerning the case of Leopold Dion. The various press reports do not establish clearly whether Mr. Charles Edouard Cantin is of the opinion, first, that his department ought to be consulted each time a request for parole is being considered and that the opinion given by his department ought to bind the national parole board or, second, that his department should be permanently represented on the board and thus share the responsibility for the decisions taken.

Besides, Mr. Cantin criticized the watch that was kept on Leopold Dion and expressed the opinion that, generally speaking, supervision should be provided by his own department.

Last Friday I informed the house that a lawyer and a psychiatrist would be asked to review that file to determine if, in this case, too great a risk was taken, in view of all the circumstances.

The policy of the former remission service and that of the present national parole board is to obtain, as soon as possible after an inmate is admitted to a penitentiary, a report from the police officers who made the investigation and one from the judge who passed the sentence. This is done to establish the circumstances surrounding the offence and what the sentence is meant to achieve. A date of eligibility for parole is set up within six months following imprisonment, in accordance with the act and the rules. That date, according to an understanding that went into effect on January 1, 1963, is made known—and I would like the house to take note of that—to the department of the attorney general of the province of Quebec in case it should ever want to express its views about a parole that might be granted to an inmate. I am advised that since then no special communication has been received.

The department of the attorney general in a province, as Mr. Cantin said, must prosecute lawbreakers in order to protect society. I will add that it must also put at the disposal of the court, through specialized officials, information that enables the judge or the magistrate to pass the appropriate sentence. Finally it must give inmates living conditions that will facilitate their rehabilitation.

The national parole board takes into account the views, opinions and recommendations submitted by the police officers, the judge, the jailer. When it renders a decision, it has information on the offender's status before his imprisonment, it knows also the progress he has made in the penitentiary as well as his plans when he is released. It must also protect society and choose only cases that seem to warrant such a parole. If by means of preliminary consultations or a permanent representative, the department of the attorney general for the province of Quebec wishes to share the responsibility of the decisions of the board, I believe that it can be arranged easily and the board will welcome such an offer of co-operation. However, it remains to be seen if such a representative from the department of the attorney general will be able to never make a mistake. He will have, of course, to accept to be jointly responsible for the majority of decisions of the board.

I shall add only this, Mr. Speaker. Since I have already announced the appointment of a lawyer and a psychiatrist to study the case, I believe that before taking any other measures, I should wait at least for the result of that investigation.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Does the minister expect he will soon be in a position to announce the names of the lawyer and the psychiatrist chosen to inquire into the case of Leopold Dion?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped I could do it before today, but unfortunately, there were discussions concerning some psychiatrists and some lawyers. In any case, I hope we can arrive at a decision soon.

Mr. Paul: I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker. Could he give us the assurance that the lawyer chosen will be an expert in criminal law?

Mr. Chevrier: That is what I am looking for at this time, Mr. Speaker.

(Text):

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

REPORT BY PRIME MINISTER ON MEETING IN OTTAWA

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I should like to present a report on the federal-provincial conference which took place in Ottawa last Friday and Saturday. I shall do so only briefly because, as the house is aware, the government proposes to proceed tomorrow with the legislation concerning financial assistance to municipalities which was the main subject, as it turned out, discussed at this conference. The practical results of the conference will thus be determined by parliament itself.

What the conference achieved was all that it, in itself, could achieve. That is to say, it produced what we consider to be a very satisfactory understanding with the provincial governments about the proposals that the federal government will make to this parliament. The decisions then will be in the hands of parliament.

The understanding between federal and provincial representatives can best be summarized by reading the communiqué which was approved at the concluding session by all members of the conference. That communiqué reads:

> The meeting of federal and provincial governments has concluded with full agreement on the proposal of the federal government to promote employment by financial assistance, with provincial approval and co-operation to municipal capital works.
>
> The federal government indicated to the provinces that it will propose, in the legislation to be discussed in parliament next week, features which will enable the measure to be applied in forms adapted to different conditions in the various provinces.
>
> The federal government will propose that the range of municipal works covered in the program will be broadened so as to include in any province all those municipal works which the province and the federal government believe to be productive of increased employment.
>
> In response to suggestions from a majority of the provinces, the federal government will also propose that, if a province so wishes, it will be able to make with the proposed municipal development and loan board an agreement whereby the province is responsible for granting and administering the loans to municipalities, subject to such safeguards as are necessary to enable the board to report to parliament that expenditures have been properly made according to the purposes of the legislation.
>
> It was agreed by all the governments that this proposed legislation can operate satisfactorily, with the agreement and co-operation of the provinces, to promote employment in Canada.
>
> The conference also discussed the Canada pension plan recently put forward by the federal government. The discussion was conducted in the spirit of the common interest of federal and provincial governments in ensuring satisfactory provision for old age security and other welfare measures in Canada. It was agreed that further discussions between federal and provincial representatives should take place at an early date.
>
> There was also agreement at the conference that more regular federal-provincial meetings should be held, and that it is desirable to establish more adequate machinery for maintaining federal-provincial contact between such meetings.

That, Mr. Speaker, was the agreed communiqué. There is just one thing I would add to the communiqué at this point, and that is to express in the house my warm appreciation to the eight premiers and to the representatives of the two other provinces who attended the conference. The discussions were frank, fair and friendly, and in my view were exactly what such discussions should be.

In recent years we have all had reason to become increasingly conscious of the difficulties in federal-provincial relationships. That is the reflection, fundamentally, of changing conditions, of growth and development in our country. The difficulties are not to be regretted provided that we know how to respond to the inevitable challenge which they create. The recent conference has confirmed in the fullest possible way my own faith that the challenge will be met.

The success of any form of government depends fundamentally on those it puts into positions of responsibility. In the governments of the provinces of Canada there is the spirit of co-operation, the understanding and farsightedness which Canadians need in order to improve and advance our confederation. In expressing to the provinces, as I did, my appreciation of the spirit in which they took part in the conference, I should like to say above all that it will be the steady determination of this government to act in that spirit. I believe we can look forward to close and regular consultation which will be productive of the kind of co-operative federalism that will serve the aspirations of all Canadians.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with the objective that the Prime Minister enunciated in his concluding words there will be general agreement. He has spoken of the fine spirit of co-operation between the federal and provincial governments as evidenced by the issue of the communiqué to which he made reference. That is all to the good, because a matter of three or four weeks ago one would have thought that as between the government of Canada and one or two of the provinces there was not close consultation and a hot line should have been established, similar to that which was brought into being as between Khrushchev and Kennedy. However, everything is fine now according to the Prime Minister.

We are naturally pleased that consultation took place with the provinces. When this question was first before the house Her Majesty's loyal opposition asked what consultation had taken place, and there was an obvious resentment on the part of ministers of the crown to the suggestion that it should take place. We feel that consultation should be a prelude to rather than a consequence of legislation brought before parliament. I should like to add as well that what has happened has been that in almost every particular the haphazard pieces of legislation or resolutions to bring about legislation have been set aside and the demands of the provinces have been met 100 per cent.

There has been some reference to the high quality of the diplomacy exhibited by the Prime Minister at this conference.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Applause is always welcome from where'er it comes. If to bargain diplomatically is to completely surrender everything for which the government of Canada stood, then this indeed was a victory for diplomacy, and provincial diplomacy at that. Having regard to the manner in which the plan of the government has been dissected, if not completely set aside, I should think the government might very well withdraw the resolution that it has presented and introduce another one, instead of amending this resolution; because the amended resolution will bear little relationship to the original plan of the government.

We are glad to see that there has been agreement. If there had been previous consultation no doubt there would have been agreement; because the provinces, as I said a moment ago, succeeded 100 per cent in attaining their objective. What is going to happen is that the provinces will have available tremendous amounts of money from the federal government, not only for the purposes originally decided upon by the government for the projects which were referred to, but for a whole lot more projects. This was one of the suggestions we in the opposition had made, that this plan should not be restricted and further projects should be included.

Furthermore, I would add this. The plan is very much the plan we brought into effect under the winter works program. If imitation is the highest form of flattery, the high point was reached in the degree to which this plan is similar to the winter works program put in by the government of which I had the honour to be the leader. We consulted, and they agreed. We gave them control over the spending of the money, subject of course to the necessary safeguards of the federal interest. I think all of us realize that now, as a result of this conference having brought about this degree of unanimity, how much better it would have been in the interest of good feeling between federal and provincial governments if consultation had taken place in advance.

The subject of pensions was glided over by the Prime Minister with almost equal finesse to that displayed by the communiqué. It is very apparent that the provinces have grave doubts about the plan advanced by the federal government. That plan was introduced with a great fanfare of trumpets. It has been examined in the light of experience, and has certainly not been found to be worthy of the high commendation given to it when the resolution was introduced.

However, the provinces did not touch that. They were dealing with another large matter, the matter of securing funds to be loaned to the various municipalities. That being so, and having regard to some of the expressions of those present at the conference, I reiterate that the pension plan is going to take a long time, and full examination, to implement. I repeat what I have said on more than one occasion, that it will be months and months, if not years, before this pension plan in its entirety can be successfully launched, and the government should arrange at once for the payment of the $10 increase to the old age pensioners of Canada.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, the results of the conference on Friday and Saturday have been observed with much interest not only by those of us in the Social Credit party but by all people across the country. In the statement the Prime Minister has made he has given official confirmation to the actions which were taken. Indeed, it was the stand taken not only by myself but also by a number of other speakers on behalf of our party, when this legislation was introduced, as we were strongly in favour of the action which the government has now taken. We stressed the need that the autonomy of the provinces must be respected, and that too often the federal government disregards the position and responsibility of the provincial governments.

It is essential that we give more serious thought to this aspect of consultative government. It would have saved the government a great deal of grief with regard to the budget if just a few more people had been taken into consultation, and certainly the problems which the government has faced with respect to the municipal development and loan fund would have been eased considerably if this consultative aspect had been implemented before the legislation was introduced.

There is an interesting point here that I think important to mention. It is that a great deal can be accomplished by men of good will, even though they may have various differences, by getting together and attempting to solve their mutual problems in a spirit of harmony. The Prime Minister, the premiers and representatives of the provinces should be complimented for the progress they have made in this regard.

There are several other points in the Prime Minister's statement that are significant. He mentioned the need for more frequent provincial-federal meetings. We feel this is most important. He also mentioned the need for adequate machinery to provide for such meetings, and I would remind him that one of the suggestions we have been making for the last year or two is that there ought to be a full department of government, a ministry of provincial-federal affairs, set up to care for the problems that arise when the responsibilities of the two levels of government overlap.

I trust that the government will now give serious thought to setting up some such permanent machinery that will be adequate to take care of this very important need, a need which is growing as governments become more powerful.

With regard to the question of municipal finance I would just like to mention that the municipal development and loan fund, that has been dealt with over the week end, is only a temporary measure. It is to relieve problems of unemployment in the months ahead. Unless there is some permanent machinery set up to solve the problem of municipal finance we are going to have a repetition of this situation year after year. I hope that when we return next fall the government will see fit to introduce legislation to set up a municipal development bank that would provide a source of social or public capital to take care of the public needs on a continuing basis.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has touched on so many of the bases that are critical of the government in this matter that it does not behove me, as the representative of my party, to follow his lead, except to say that he missed working in any talk about the spirit of Hyannis Port being replaced by the spirit of Jean Lesage.

Our general feeling is that the Prime Minister's announcement is a good one. We are pleased that the unemployment measure is going to be introduced, although it is also quite apparent that in achieving this the Prime Minister and his colleagues undoubtedly gave something away. I do not know what it was they gave away, but we know they gave it away in the spirit of co-operative federalism. However, when the legislation comes before us we would like to know what it was they gave away.

So far as the pension part is concerned, I agree with the Leader of the Opposition that it was certainly slipped over in the remarks of the leader of the government. He gave us to understand, as have many other hon. members of the house, that the Canada pension plan was the cornerstone for the new Liberal government and its program and policies. Now we find that the cornerstone has not even been laid and that it is likely to be a very, very long time before it is to be set in position. That being the case, it seems to me we are justified in turning to the general promise that was made that there would be an across the board increase for old age pensioners of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $10 a month.

We will look forward to supporting the legislation this coming week or the week after, and we would be interested in knowing what changes will be made necessary in the parliamentary schedule by the fact that we can now proceed with this legislation as well as all the other pieces of legislation with which we must deal.

When the legislation is put before us we will look forward to finding out just what was the amelioration of the original proposal that led Premier Lesage and Premier Robarts in particular suddenly to become so co-operative.

Senate and House of Commons Act

(Translation):

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question resulting partly from the statement he made earlier this afternoon about co-operative federalism and also from the remarks he made over the weekend about the desirability to review the constitution. Could he tell the house whether he intends to introduce some specific measures in this respect?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Obviously, Mr. Speaker, this is not a question which could or should be dealt with on the orders of the day.

(Translation):

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council. Can the minister explain why, in reply to a C.B.C. reporter, he stated that the majority of the provinces request an amendment to the act concerning municipal loans because:

they are afraid—

and rightly so,

—of the control of the federal government over municipalities.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that this question is out of order at this time.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I very respectfully submit that the decision as to whether or not this question is in order lies with you rather than with the member for Outremont-St. Jean, from whom even we on this side of the house have no lesson to receive.

(Text):

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SESSIONAL ALLOWANCES, TRAVELLING EXPENSES, PENSIONS, ETC.

Right. Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee later this day to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act

(a) to increase the sessional allowances payable to members of the Senate and House of Commons;

(b) to provide for the payment of an additional allowance to each leader of a party in the House of Commons, other than the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, that has a recognized membership of twelve or more persons in the House of Commons;

(c) to provide for the payment of an additional allowance to the members occupying the recognized positions of chief government whip and chief opposition whip in the House of Commons;

(d) to provide for the payment to members of the Senate and House of Commons of such actual transportation and travelling expenses and telecommunication expenses as the Senate and House of Commons may order;

(e) to provide for the payment to each minister of the crown, the Leader of the Opposition and the Speakers of the Senate and the House of Commons of a motor vehicle allowance;

(f) to increase the allowances paid to the members of the Senate and the House of Commons for expenses incidental to the discharge of their duties;

and to amend the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act

(g) to increase the amount of contributions to be paid by members into the consolidated revenue fund, to provide for the payment of an allowance to the widows of members of parliament where such members have made or elected to make additional contributions under the act and to make changes in the amount of the retirement allowances payable to members;

(h) to provide for the payment of an annual allowance out of the consolidated revenue fund to persons who have held the office of prime minister for four years and to the widows of any such persons;

and to provide further for other related and incidental matters.

Motion agreed to.

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALARIES, ADDITIONAL JUDGES, ETC.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee later this day to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act to increase the salaries of judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, the Exchequer Court of Canada and the superior and county and district courts of the provinces; to provide salaries for eight additional judges of the superior court of Quebec, two additional judges of the supreme court of Nova Scotia including one chief justice, one additional judge of the queen's bench division of the supreme court of New Brunswick, one additional justice of appeal of the court of appeal for British Columbia, one additional judge of the supreme court of British Columbia, one additional judge of the court of queen's bench for Saskatchewan one additional justice of appeal of the supreme court of Alberta and one additional puisne judge of the supreme court of Newfoundland; and to make certain consequential amendments to the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the following questions are being answered today: 901, 952, 982, 998, 1,025, 1,031, 1,032, 1,039, 1,043, 1,047, 1,048, 1,059, 1,060, 1,065, 1,068, 1,073, 1,074, 1,079, 1,082, 1,090.

With regard to question No. 453, if it could be made an order for return the return would be tabled immediately. Would Your Honour be good enough to call starred questions Nos. 964, 970, 1,051, 1,055, and 1,056. I would ask that the other questions stand.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, before Your Honour calls the starred questions I wonder whether I might ask the Secretary of State a question under this order. He knows that many of us appreciate the answers to questions that are being placed on Hansard this year rather than being made orders for returns. But last Wednesday, under the practice now being followed, a question of mine, No. 934, was made an order for return and was tabled that day as sessional paper 92a. It is a bit lengthy, but it is not nearly as lengthy as some others appearing in Hansard. There is fairly general interest in the subject of my question, and I wonder whether the Secretary of State would be willing now to agree to question 934 of last Wednesday being included among those being answered on Hansard today.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I would be very happy indeed to comply with that request, if it is the wish of the house. I think the hon. gentleman's point is well taken.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

IRRIGATION AND WATER CONSERVATION EXPENDITURES

Question No. 901—Mr. Gauthier:

What amount has the Department of Agriculture paid in Canada as of March 31, 1963, for irrigation and water conservation, and, of this amount, what has been paid in the province of Quebec for that purpose?

Mr. Hays: Expenditures made by the Department of Agriculture under provisions of the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act for irrigation and water conservation projects amounted to $176,487,000 during the period 1935 to March 31, 1963. Included are those expenditures made in connection with major projects undertaken by agreement with specific provinces. None of the amount was spent in the province of Quebec.

PENSIONS OF ARMED FORCES PERSONNEL

Question No. 934—Mr. Knowles:

1. What is the average annual pension being paid, by rank, to permanent armed forces personnel retired in 1947?

2. What is the average annual pension being paid, by rank, to permanent armed forces personnel retired in 1962?

3. Have any adjustments been made, since they were retired, in the pensions of permanent armed forces personnel retired in 1947 and, if not, is consideration being given to such adjustments in the case of those retired (a) in 1947 or earlier (b) since 1947 and prior to 1962?

Answer: 1, 2 and 3. The attached table details the average annual pension being paid, by rank, to permanent armed forces personnel retired in 1947 and in 1962. Under the pension adjustment regulations, 2 October, 1958 which were later replaced by the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act, 8 July, 1959, increases in pensions in amounts from 1 per cent to 32 per cent, depending upon the date of retirement, and the basis upon which the original pension was calculated, were authorized. This authority did not provide increases in cases where

(i) the contributor was released subsequent to 31 December, 1952;

(ii) the contributor's pension at time of release was $3,000 or more;

(iii) the pension payable to a widow was $1,500 or more;

(iv) the the pensioner or his widow was employed in the public service of Canada; or where two or more pensions were in pay, the total which equalled

(a) in the case of an ex-member, $3,000;

(b) in the case of a widow of an ex-member, $1,500.

RANK (Navy and RCAF Equivalent)	ARMY			NAVY			AIR FORCE
	Pensions Payable Personnel Retired 1947	Adjusted Pensions Per PSPAA	Pensions Payable Personnel Retired 1962	Pensions Payable Personnel Retired 1947	Adjusted Pensions Per PSPAA	Pensions Payable Personnel Retired 1962	Pensions Payable Personnel Retired 1947	Adjusted Pensions Per PSPAA	Pensions Payable Personnel Retired 1962
Lt. General	7,649.22	7,649.22	—	—	—	—	7,603.08	7,603.08	—
Maj. General	5,653.72	5,653.72	8,177.96	6,413.71	6,413.71	12,600.00	5,210.04	5,210.04	—
Brigadier	3,616.57	3,769.24	8,526.99	—	—	7,056.80	—	—	7,771.89
Colonel	3,675.22	3,741.57	5,632.29	4,673.56	4,673.56	4,926.91	3,249.72	3,375.78	6,250.59
Lt. Colonel	2,845.61	2,974.91	4,723.62	—	—	4,145.77	2,537.31	2,658.36	5,128.43
Major	2,021.74	2,420.71	4,119.86	—	—	3,981.66	2,050.35	2,513.84	3,755.48
Capt	1,521.24	1,887.54	3,452.55	2,256.49(1)	2,795.62(1)	4,135.24	1,637.12	1,942.17	2,848.95
Lieut	825.81	1,035.35	2,733.38	1,776.08(2)	2,203.17(2)	—	1,438.14	1,623.07	2,526.90
WO I	1,158.73	1,462.12	3,404.69	1,330.10	1,691.28	2,916.61	1,236.93	1,480.21	3,082.71
WO II	832.80	1,180.94	2,467.30	—	—	2,571.48	1,050.22	1,323.91	2,614.04
S. Sgt	882.54	1,107.01	2,125.48	1,078.39	1,357.55	2,305.58	—	—	2,252.40
Sgt	753.58	954.49	1,806.37	899.35	1,117.64	1,928.82	1,007.76	1,249.66	1,915.37
Cpl	571.63	732.73	1,345.52	905.01	1,140.31	—	—	—	1,415.41
Pte	729.74	915.08	1,110.28	—	—	—	—	—	1,143.41

NOTES: (1) and (2) denote personnel retired in the naval ranks of commissioned officer or warrant officer respectively.

COMMITTEE ON DEFENCE SPENDING

Question No. 952—Mr. Smith:

1. How many members are on the committee that will review defence spending under the chairmanship of Dr. R. J. Sutherland?

2. Is the chairman of the chiefs of staffs committee a member of this committee?

3. Are the chiefs of the staff of the (a) navy (b) army (c) air force members of this committee?

4. In addition to Dr. Sutherland, how many civilians are members of this committee?

5. Are all these persons civil servants?

6. Are any members of the national research council members of this committee and, if so, how many?

7. Are any members of the defence research board members of this committee and, if so, how many?

8. Have any persons not normally employed by the government been hired or (contracted with) for the purpose of serving on this committee either as a member, secretary, or researcher?

9. Is the scope of this committee limited to the review of defence spending and, if not, what are its terms of reference?

Answer: 1. There are six members of the committee including representatives of the armed services, defence research board and the deputy minister's staff.

2. No.

3. No.

4. Two.

5. All are public servants. Employees of the defence research board are not technically civil servants, but are employed under separate regulations similar to those governing employment by the national research council.

6. No.

7. No. However two employees of the defence research board are included in the membership.

8. No.

9. The instructions given to the ad hoc committee are as described in the statement of 27 June 1963 by the Minister of National Defence to the special committee on defence:

"To assist in the review of current procurement programs and in the consideration of future policy a special advisory group has been set up in the department under the chairmanship of Dr. R. J. Sutherland, chief of operational research in the defence research board. This group has undertaken a number of studies intended to demonstrate the reasons for and against a particular course of action and to list the available options. It does not make recommendations."

The task of the ad hoc committee is essentially analytical. Advice to the Minister of National Defence on questions of defence policy remains the responsibility of senior officers and officials and, in particular, of the chiefs of staff committee.

*C.P.R. PLAN FOR RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT

Question No. 964—Mr. Cantelon:

1. Has the C.P.R. filed with the board of transport commissioners or the Department of Transport an overall plan for rail line abandonment and, if so, what are the details of such plan?

2. If no plan has been filed, will the government undertake to obtain the details of such plan for the information of members of this house?

Mr. Cantin: 1. No.

2. This refers to a matter within the competence of the C.P.R. but we will be glad to take this matter up with them.

*ACTUARIAL BASIS, PORTABLE PENSION PLAN

Question No. 970—Mr. Rynard:

Has there been an actuarial calculation made in considering the proposed bill for portable pensions and, if so (a) has this actuarial basis been discussed with Canadian Life Underwriters or Canadian Life Insurance Companies and (b) are they in agreement that the proposed actuarial basis is financially sound?

Mr. Haidasz: Yes, by qualified actuaries in the department of insurance.

(a) No.

(b) Question not applicable.

NOVA SCOTIA—SUBVENTIONS TO CUSTOMERS UNDER POWER DEVELOPMENT ACT

Question No. 982—Mr. Coates:

1. What is the total subvention made available to industrial customers, under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, in Nova Scotia in the years 1959, 1960, 1961, and 1962?

2. Is consideration being given to providing subventions under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act on a k.w.h. basis rather than on the gross subvention basis?

Answer: 1. The following amounts were made available to the province of Nova Scotia under the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act: 1958-59*, $1,239,999; 1959-60, $898,591; 1960-61, $1,102,792; 1961-62, $1,004,-302; 1962-63, $1,078,427.

*—includes period December 1, 1957 to March 31, 1958.

2. The subvention being paid on Atlantic provinces coal consumed there in the generation of electricity is based on the formula to equate the cost of such fuel there to the cost of coal for thermal power production in Ontario.

(Translation):

PUBLIC WORKS EXPENDITURES, MONTMAGNY-L'ISLET CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 998—Mr. Berger:

From 1957 to 1963, how much did the Department of Public Works spend for the maintenance and repair of the wharves in the constituency of Montmagny-L'Islet, and what wharves were affected?

Questions

Mr. Badanai: $50,090.10.

Wharves at Montmagny, L'Islet, St. Jean Port Joli, Isle aux Grues, Lac Trois Saumons.

(Text):

DOCK REPAIRS, HAILEYBURY, ONT.

Question No. 1,025—Mr. Peters:

1. Is it the intention of the Department of Public Works to make repairs to the dock at Haileybury this year and, if so, have the tenders been called for this project?

2. If it is not the intention of the department to make repairs this year, what is the disposition intended by the government of this dock?

Mr. Badanai: 1. No.

2. The department has advised the town of Haileybury that should the municipality wish to take over these structures arrangements may be made through the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation or if preferred, consideration would be given to their complete removal by the department. No answer to this proposal has yet been received.

CONSTRUCTION OF DOCKING FACILITIES, MOOSONEE

Question No. 1,031—Mr. Peters:

Has the Department of Public Works undertaken an engineering and architectural study for the construction of a new dock or facilities at the port of Moosonee and, if so (a) what is the estimated cost of this reconstruction and (b) how soon will work commence on the project?

Mr. Badanai: A proposal is being studied to replace the existing small wharf at Moosonee with a removable pontoon.

(a) $50,000.

(b) This project is being considered for inclusion in the 1964-65 main estimates.

NORTH COBALT, ONT. POST OFFICE

Question No. 1,032—Mr. Peters:

Is it the intention of the government to build a post office at North Cobalt, Ontario, this year and, if so, when is it expected the tenders for this project can be let?

Mr. Denis: No.

4-H CLUBS

Question No. 1,039—Mr. Hamilton:

1. On what date was the name "4-H clubs" adopted in Canada?

2. What was the estimated number of members of 4-H clubs in Canada, by years, and provinces, since that time?

3. What has been the dollar amount of grants by the federal government in each of the fiscal years since 4-H clubs as such were started?

4. What is the amount in estimates for the fiscal year 1963-64 for this purpose?

Mr. Hays: 1. The name "4-H club" was adopted in Canada on May 20, 1952.

2. The estimated number of members of 4-H clubs in Canada since 1952, by years and provinces is as follows:

Year	B.C.	Alta.	Sask.	Man.	Ont.	Que.	N.B.	N.S.	P.E.I.	Nfld.	Total
1952	1,480	5,887	5,885	7,337	9,413	7,812	2,818	7,693	1,941	—	49,966
1953	1,693	6,974	6,347	8,164	11,196	8,198	2,866	7,566	1,686	666	55,356
1954	1,930	7,498	8,928	8,581	10,493	8,269	3,364	7,411	1,957	532	58,963
1955	1,966	7,793	10,747	8,430	11,156	8,951	3,006	7,803	2,091	419	62,362
1956	1,917	6,855	10,550	8,623	12,973	7,932	3,000	6,966	1,983	369	61,168
1957	1,973	6,604	10,800	8,566	13,465	7,942	2,506	6,552	2,191	960	61,559
1958	2,222	6,279	10,620	8,213	13,535	8,625	3,031	6,746	1,918	773	61,962
1959	2,310	6,931	10,745	8,790	17,658	8,578	2,828	6,150	1,910	786	66,686
1960	2,769	6,846	10,182	8,495	19,279	8,960	3,001	5,938	2,178	660	68,308
1961	2,950	7,285	10,539	8,762	20,210	9,103	2,418	5,954	2,203	1,399	70,823
1962	3,240	6,837	9,580	8,958	20,844	8,306	2,552	5,999	2,075	1,082	69,473

Questions

3. The dollar amount of grants paid by the federal government in each of the fiscal years since 1952 are as follows:

Fiscal Year	Grants to 4-H clubs organized in co-operation with the Canadian council on 4-H clubs	Grants to Canadian council on 4-H clubs
1952-53	$ 28,155*(a)	$ 10,000*(b)
1953-54	22,490*(a)	10,000
1954-55	40,125	10,000
1955-56	56,300	10,000
1956-57	72,160	10,000
1957-58	83,824	10,000
1958-59	74,985	10,000
1959-60	125,064	11,449
1960-61	100,000	11,450
1961-62	119,986	12,450
1962-63	119,998	12,500
	$843,087	$117,849

Note: *(a) Payments made to the provinces for assistance in connection with boys and girls club work.

*(b) Grants were made to the Canadian council on boys and girls club work.

4. Amount of estimates for the fiscal year 1963-64:

Fiscal Year	Grants to 4-H clubs organized in co-operation with the Canadian council on 4-H clubs	Grant to Canadian council on 4-H clubs
1963-64	$120,000	$ 18,400

TOURIST EXPENDITURES AND RECEIPTS

Question No. 1,043—Mr. Hamilton:

1. What are the estimated amounts of money spent by visitors to Canada in the calendar years 1953 to 1962 inclusive?

2. What are the estimated amounts of money spent by Canadians abroad in the calendar years 1953 to 1962 inclusive?

3. What amount has been spent by the Canadian tourist bureau in the fiscal years 1953-54 to 1962-63 for (a) advertising in commercial media (b) literature and mailing service (c) maintaining offices abroad (d) total expenditures?

Answer: 1. and 2.

1953	$302	million	$365	million
1954	305	"	389	"
1955	328	"	449	"
1956	337	"	498	"
1957	363	"	525	"
1958	349	"	542	"
1959	391	"	598	"
1960	420	"	627	"
1961	482	"	642	"
1962	560	"	610	"

[Mr. Hays.]

3. (a) The Canadian government travel bureau spent the following amounts on advertising in commercial media during the fiscal years 1953-1954 to 1962-63:

1953-54, $896,184.19; 1954-55, $952,824.81; 1955-1956, $948,024.92; 1956-57, $929,352.67; 1957-58, $1,252,500.72; 1958-59, $1,366,944.19; 1959-60, $1,415,938.58; 1960-61, $1,581,995.42; 1961-62, $1,673,893.02; 1962-63, $1,817,451.02.

3. (b) The Canadian government travel bureau expended on literature and on mailing service the following amounts during the fiscal years from 1953-1954 to 1962-1963:

	Publications	Postage	Freight, express & cartage
1953-54	$193,583.62	$ 1,550.89	$ 4,890.65
1954-55	$181,684.45	$ 1,868.62	$ 5,445.32
1955-56	$132,413.81	$ 2,600.14	$ 5,998.98
1956-57	$187,931.92	$ 2,945.45	$ 7,377.73
1957-58	$184,000.00	$ 2,374.75	$ 6,334.83
1958-59	$278,800.35	$ 3,325.46	$11,297.57
1959-60	$308,692.92	$ 3,096.07	$11,900.00
1960-61	$437,455.76	$ 3,603.66	$19,157.17
1961-62	$436,554.05	$ 7,194.77	$31,472.93
1962-63	$410,946.99	$12,342.72	$32,740.99

3. (c) The cost of maintaining Canadian government travel bureau offices abroad during the fiscal years 1953-54 to 1962-63 was as follows:

1953-54	$ 48,004.28
1954-55	$ 60,713.74
1955-56	$ 69,002.03
1956-57	$ 73,762.04
1957-58	$ 92,010.06
1958-59	$139,166.71
1959-60	$126,545.24
1960-61	$140,711.37
1961-62	$228,304.74
1962-63	$422,327.19

3. (d) The Canadian government travel bureau's total expenditures during the fiscal years 1953-1954 to 1962-63 were as follows:

1953-54	$ 1,442,655
1954-55	$ 1,500,503
1955-56	$ 1,458,252
1956-57	$ 1,546,283
1957-58	$ 1,930,766
1958-59	$ 2,206,129
1959-60	$ 2,299,939
1960-61	$ 2,682,516
1961-62	$ 2,974,851
1962-63	$ 3,341,428

ACQUISITION OF WEST COAST INDIAN COLLECTION, NATIONAL MUSEUM

Question No. 1,047—Mr. Fisher:

Did the national museum buy or receive as a gift, the Lord Bossom collection of west coast Indian material and, if the former, when, and what was the price paid?

Answer: The national museum of Canada purchased the Lord Bossom collection of west coast Indian material on May 5, 1955, at a price of £8,500 ($23,900), which was very considerably below the market value at that time.

(Translation):

POST OFFICE CARETAKERS, L'EPIPHANIE AND ST. DONAT, QUE.

Question No. 1,048—Mr. Pigeon:

1. Were public tenders let for the appointment of a caretaker for the post office at L'Epiphanie, Assomption county, and for the post office at St. Donat, Montcalm county, and, if so, what are the names of the tenderers, and the amounts quoted in each case?

2. Does the Department of Public Works intend to award these contracts to the lowest tenderers and, if so, when?

Mr. Banadai: 1. Yes. The department called for public tenders and received the following tenders:

L'Epiphanie: Sylvio Riopel, $75 per month; Paul Bernier, $90 per month; Marcel Lafortune, $100 per month; Leo Seguin, $116 per month; Andre-Claude Riopel, $125 per month; Mrs. Jeanne Riopel, $150 per month; Emmanuel Poitras, $500 per month; J. R. Lafortune, $1,450 per month.

St. Donat de Montcalm: Joseph Rivest, $72 per month; Eugene Charbonneau, $75 per month; Yvon Forget, $100 per month.

2. The contracts have been awarded to the lowest bidders, as follows:

L'Epiphanie: Sylvio Riopel, July 22, 1963; St. Donat de Montcalm: Joseph Rivest, July 11, 1963.

(Text):

*ASSISTANT DEPUTY MINISTERS, NORTHERN AFFAIRS

Question No. 1,051—Mr. Pigeon:

1. What are the terms of reference of the assistant deputy ministers' positions in the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources?

2. How many of these positions are now filled by bilingual civil servants?

3. How many of these positions are now vacant, and how many are expected to be vacant by July 1, 1964?

4. When these vacancies occur, is it the intention to fill them by open competition?

5. Has the membership of all or part of the selection panel or panels for any of the assistant deputy ministership vacancies already been decided and, if so, what are the names of the members, their positions, and the names of their immediate superiors?

Questions

Mr. Laing: 1. Under direction of the deputy minister to be responsible for the general administration of the department; to undertake studies, make policy recommendations and prepare reports for the deputy minister as required; to co-ordinate departmental activities throughout Canada; to carry out reviews of the organization and procedures of the department and to make recommendations thereon; to represent the deputy minister in discussions, negotiations and on committees as directed; to perform such other duties as may be required.

2. Of the two positions, none at present.

3. One now vacant; second vacancy expected in November 1963; both expected to be filled before July 1, 1964.

4. Yes.

5. No.

*APPLICATION FOR WATER DIVERSION BY NORTH WEST POWER LTD.

Question No. 1,055—Mr. Herridge:

1. What is the date of the application by North Western Power Industry Limited, a subsidiary of Ventures-Frobisher Company, made to the government of Canada or any department thereof for authority to divert the waters of the Yukon river to the Taku river in Alaska?

2. What are the conditions prescribed in the permit or other authorization to carry out the investigation or studies related thereto?

3. What is the name of the officer of the government of Canada who recommended or issued the aforementioned permit or other authorization?

4. On what date was the permit or other authorization terminated, and by whose order?

5. What are the reasons for the termination of permit or other authorization?

6. How long did the official who recommended or issued this permit or authorization remain in the employ of the government of Canada after the licence or authorization was terminated?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I would like the consent of hon. members, because the reply to this question extends to some three and a half pages, to having it taken as read. Perhaps the house would consent to having it printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

1. (a) No application was made by Northwest Power Industries Limited for authority to divert the waters of the Yukon river to the Taku river in British Columbia. Under the terms of the Dominion Water Power Act and regulations a final licence is required for diversion, use or storage of water for power purposes when such water is located on lands belonging to Her Majesty in right of Canada. Such a final licence is not granted until completion of the project. The normal sequence of events is for the agency or company interested in developing a water power project which falls within the purview of these regulations to apply for a survey permit which permits the applicant to enter upon lands belonging to Her Majesty in right of Canada to survey and investigate the project for a period of up to three years. Survey permits are issued by the director of water power.

(b) On completion of these preliminary surveys and investigations and subject to the conditions set forth in the regulations, the applicant may apply for a priority permit which shall give the applicant priority over other applicants in the consideration of his general layout plans if filed within the time specified in the permit. A priority permit is issued by the minister and is effective for a period of up to one year; it may be extended for a period of up to one year under certain conditions. Such permit shall in no case be construed as binding the minister to issue an interim licence nor as giving the applicant any exclusive claim or right.

(c) The minister may issue to the applicant an interim licence for the carrying out of the proposed development when he is satisfied that the proposed development is the best possible in the public interest.

(d) On completion of the project the minister may issue a final licence covering it for a term not exceeding 50 years from the date fixed in the original interim licence for the completion of the initial development.

(e) On 6 July 1954 Northwest Power Industries Limited applied for a priority permit which was issued on 18 August 1954 by the minister, Hon. Jean Lesage.

(f) On 22 July 1955 the company applied for an extension of this permit and such extension for a period of one year was issued by the acting minister, Hon. J. J. McCann.

(g) On 20 August 1956 the company applied for a new priority permit on the grounds of the magnitude of the surveys and studies required on which it already had spent $812,000 and this second priority permit was issued on 28 August 1956 by the minister, Hon. Jean Lesage.

(h) On 16 August the company applied for an extension to the second priority permit and a one year extension was granted on 28 August 1957 by the minister, Hon. Alvin Hamilton.

(i) On 22 August 1958 the company applied for a third priority permit for the same reasons covering its application for the second priority permit and this third permit was issued on 11 November 1958 by the minister, Hon. Alvin Hamilton.

[Mr. Speaker.]

(j) On 5 November 1959 the company applied for an extension to the third priority permit which was not granted as the company produced no evidence of having incurred additional expense on the survey and study under the third priority permit. However, a fourth priority permit was issued to the company on 6 January 1960 by the minister, Hon. Alvin Hamilton, with the advice that this fourth priority permit was the last that would be issued to the company or its associates for this project on the basis of the investigations and studies carried out by the company to that date.

2. The conditions prescribed in the permit are those contained in the regulations.

3. The names of the two ministers and one acting minister issuing the four permits and extensions are given in 1 above.

4. As stated in 1 above, a priority permit can be issued only for a maximum of one year with an extension for a maximum of one year also.

5. Permits and extensions expired—see answer to 4 above.

6. The ministers concerned left office at various dates in accordance with constitutional practice.

*APPLICATION FOR WATER DIVISION BY ALUMINUM COMPANY

Question No. 1,056—Mr. Herridge:

1. What is the date of the application by the Aluminum Company of America to the government of Canada or any department thereof, for authority to divert the waters of the Yukon river to the Taku river in Alaska?

2. What are the conditions prescribed in the permit or other authorization to carry out the investigation or studies related thereto?

3. What is the name of the officer of the government of Canada who recommended or issued the aforementioned permit or other authorization?

4. On what date was the permit or other authorization terminated, and by whose order?

5. What are the reasons for the termination of permit or other authorization?

6. How long did the official who recommended or issued this permit or authorization remain in the employ of the government of Canada after the licence or authorization was terminated?

Mr. Laing: The same applies to question No. 1056, Mr. Speaker, except that the answer extends to 3¾ pages.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that this answer be printed in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

(1) Information with respect to authority to divert waters which are contained within lands belonging to Her Majesty in right of Canada is given in the answer to part (1) of question No. 1055. On 4 May 1949 the Aluminum Company of America applied for a survey permit to investigate possibilities of diversion of water from the Yukon Territory to the Taiya river in Alaska. This survey permit was for a period of one year and was issued in the name of Mr. Bethume L. Smith, K.C., solicitor for the company on 10 June 1949 by the late Mr. Norman Marr, then director of water power and acting controller of the dominion water and power bureau.

On 1 May 1950 the Aluminum Company of America requested the renewal of this survey permit for a one year period and on 15 May 1950 this renewal was refused by Mr. Marr as arrangements had been made to conduct surveys in the same area under government auspices.

On 14 November 1952 the Aluminum Company of America applied to the then minister, Hon. R. H. Winters for approval of the plan to divert the Yukon river headwaters into the Taiya river. No permit was awarded in response to this application.

(2) The conditions in the survey permit were those contained in the Dominion Water Power Act and Regulations.

(3) Mr. Norman Marr as stated in (1) above.

(4) The survey permit was for one year only and expired on 9 June 1950.

(5) See answers to (4) and (1) above.

(6) Mr. Marr was continuously in the employ of the government of Canada until his death in April 1954. He became controller of the dominion water and power bureau in July 1949. The name of this position and that of the bureau were changed on 1 April 1950 to chief of the water resources division, in which capacity Mr. Marr served until his promotion in May 1952 to director of the engineering and water resources branch of the department of resources and development. This latter name was changed to northern affairs and national resources in 1953.

REGIONAL SUPERINTENDENT OF AIR REGULATIONS, TORONTO

Question No. 1,059—Mr. Aiken:

1. Has an appointment been made to the position of regional superintendent of air regulations in Toronto to replace Mr. M. Louch?
2. If so, what is the name of the new appointee, and what was the number of the civil service competition?
3. How many applicants were there for this position?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. An appointment has been made to the position of regional superintendent of air regulations, Toronto, to replace Mr. M. Louch but the officer has not yet reported to assume the duties of this position.

2. The name of the new appointee is Mr. Herbert John Taylor. This is a horizontal transfer in that Mr. Taylor is presently employed with the department at Ottawa and holds the same classification as that authorized for the regional superintendent of air regulations, Toronto, to which he is being reassigned.

3. Not applicable.

TRAVEL ADVERTISING IN EUROPE

Question No. 1,060—Mr. Thompson:

1. How much is being spent in the current financial year, and in what forms of publicity, to attract European tourists to visit Canada?
2. What is this amount as a percentage of the total expenditure of the Canadian travel bureau?
3. Does the government have plans to do more to encourage European tourists to visit Canada in the future?

Answer: 1. The Canadian government travel bureau will spend an estimated $330,538 during 1963-64 to attract European tourists to visit Canada. This amount is broken down as follows:

London travel counselling office	$128,538
Publicity program, including release of travel stories and photographs to newspapers and magazines	$ 40,000
Visits of British travel writers and agents to Canada	$ 5,000
Advertising in Britain in newspapers, magazines and trade press	$150,000
Travel promotion literature	$ 55,000
Total	$378,538

2. The Canadian government travel bureau's estimated expenditures for Europe represent 10 per cent of its 1963-64 financial budget.

3. Yes. In the current fiscal year the Canadian government travel bureau expects the civil service commission to select a general manager (Europe) and travel promotion officers for Paris and Dusseldorf. Consideration will be given to further expansion of the bureau's work in Europe by extension of its advertising and public relations activities in the estimates for 1964-65.

LABOUR FORCE AND UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Question No. 1,065—Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron):

1. What was the total labour force in Canada as of May 31, 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962 and 1963?
2. What was the balance in the unemployment insurance fund as of April 8, 1963 and June 30, 1963?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. Week ended May 24, 1958, 6,120,000; week ended May 16, 1959, 6,186,000; week ended May 21, 1960, 6,391,000; week ended May 20, 1961, 6,542,000; week ended May 19, 1962, 6,590,000; week ended May 18, 1963, 6,658,000.

2. The information regarding the balance in the unemployment insurance fund as of April 8, 1963 is not available. The balance as of June 30, 1963, was minus $24,777,-135.85.

STRATEGIC AIR COMMAND—WITHDRAWAL FROM FROBISHER BASE

Question No. 1,068—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Has the strategic air command made the decision to withdraw from the air base at Frobisher and, if so, when will this withdrawal take place?
2. What property will be made available to the government of Canada as a result of the withdrawal, and what will be the terms of the transfer?
3. Does the government intend to integrate these properties and facilities with the development program for Frobisher approved in 1961 and, if so, was such integration allowed for in the original planning?
4. What effect will these changes have on the (a) extent of the development program and (b) cost of the program?

Answer: 1. Yes; operational use by strategic air command of the base at Frobisher Bay ceased on 1 July, 1963, and removal of U.S. government equipment will be complete by the end of the current shipping season.

2. Under the terms of existing agreements between the two countries, all buildings and other fixtures became available to the Canadian government without charge.

3. Yes; while this development was not specifically allowed for, planning for Frobisher has been sufficiently flexible to allow the government to take advantage of it.

4. The integration of these properties into the development program is at present being studied in detail by an interdepartmental committee. It is expected that the extent of new construction necessary will be considerably reduced, resulting in substantial savings in the cost of the program.

WORKS PROJECTS, FORT AMHERST PARK

Question No. 1,073—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What are the plans of the government for restoration of the military fortress which once stood in what is now Fort Amherst historic park?
2. What other projects will be carried out in the park during the present calendar year?

Answer: 1. Archaeological investigations are currently being carried out at Fort Amherst national historic park. When these investigations are completed, the results will enable the character of the original fort buildings to be determined, and an assessment of the feasibility of restoration to be made.

2. The amount of $5,500 was provided this year for Fort Amherst, to undertake the access road and parking area.

[Mr. MacEachen.]

WINDOW CLEANING CONTRACT, FEDERAL BUILDING, NEW GLASGOW, N.S.

Question No. 1,074—Mr. MacEwan:

1. What were the names of the tenderers, and the amounts of the various tenders, for cleaning windows at the federal building, New Glasgow, Nova Scotia?
2. To whom was the contract awarded?

Mr. Badanai: 1. The tender of Mr. John Andrews of New Glasgow for $1,600 was the only one received in response to public advertising.

2. Mr. John Andrews.

FUEL OIL SUPPLY, NATIONAL DEFENCE ESTABLISHMENT, NICOLET, QUE.

Question No. 1,079—Mr. Vincent:

Has a contract been awarded by the Department of Defence Production for the supplying of fuel oil to the proving and development establishment of the inspection services of the Department of National Defence at Nicolet, Quebec, for the year 1963-64, and, if so (a) what is the name of the firm which was awarded the contract and (b) what are the names and addresses of all the tenderers, and the prices quoted?

Mr. Drury: 1. Yes (should read proof and experimental establishment).

2. Texaco Canada Limited, 1425 Mountain street, Montreal 25, Quebec.

3. (A) 135,000 gals. fuel oil, type 2 (burner)

	Prices	Terms
1. Texaco Canada Ltd., Montreal	$0.1239	2% 30
2. Imperial Oil Limited, Ottawa	0.1268	Net
3. Les Petroles de la Rive Sud., Nicolet	0.129	Net
4. The British American Oil Co. Ltd., Toronto	0.1344	2% 30
5. Canadian Oil Co. Ltd., Toronto	0.135	Net
6. Shell Oil Co. of Can. Ltd., Toronto	0.14	Net
7. Irving Oil Co. Ltd., Saint John	0.1435	Net

(B) 1,000 gals. fuel oil, type 1 (stove)

1. Texaco Canada Ltd.	0.1635	2% 30
2. Canadian Oil Co. Ltd.	0.174	Net
3. Imperial Oil Limited	0.179	Net
4. The British American Oil Co. Ltd.	0.179	2% 30
5. Les Petroles de la Rive Sud.,	0.20	Net
6. Shell Oil Co. of Can. Ltd.,	0.209	Net

FLUORIDATION OF WATER, NATIONAL PARKS

Question No. 1,082—Mr. Lambert:

1. Has the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, or any of his officials, received any representations with respect to fluoridation of domestic water supplies in the national parks, particularly Banff national park and Jasper national park?

2. If so, has any decision been reached with respect to the introduction of fluoridation?
3. If not, when is a decision in this regard likely to be made?

Answer: 1. Yes.

2. Yes; until there is more specific indication that the principle of fluoridation of public water supplies has gained general public acceptance in Canada, it is considered that fluoridation of public water supplies in the national parks should not be implemented.

3. See 2.

SALE OF FEDERAL BUILDING, SPRINGHILL, N.S.

Question No. 1,090—Mr. Coates:

Has the old federal building at Springhill been turned over to crown assets disposal corporation for sale and, if so, have any requests related to the purchase of this building been received by crown assets disposal corporation?

Mr. Drury: No.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

MAIL CONTRACTS

Question No. 453—Mr. Valade:

1. How many contracts for the carrying of rural and city mail have been (a) renewed (b) cancelled since April 8, 1963?
2. How many contracts for the carrying of rural and city mail have been awarded since April 8, 1963?
3. What is the name and address of each person to whom contracts have been awarded; what is the amount involved in each case, and have public tenders been called?
4. If public tenders were called, what is the name, the address, and the amount tendered by each of the bidders, in each case?
5. Have mail contracts been awarded since April 8, 1963, through direct negotiations and, if so, what were those contracts; with whom were they negotiated and, what amounts are involved in each case?

Return tabled.

FINANCE

INQUIRIES RESPECTING MODIFICATION OF U.S. TAX IMPOSED

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance and ask whether he has any observations to make on a letter which he allegedly received from Mr. Eric Kierans of Montreal, a prospective Liberal candidate in the Quebec provincial by-election, which letter was released to the press last Friday night.

Will the minister assure the house that the consequences foreseen by Mr. Kierans—that is, the potentially catastrophic consequences for Canada, to use the words of Mr. Kierans—of the message sent by the President to the congress of the United States regarding foreign securities are justified; and what is being done by the government to avoid the consequences that Mr. Kierans has warned of in such strong language?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I should comment on the particular language that Mr. Kierans uses in his communications. I think this is a serious matter. As the right hon. Leader of the Opposition knows, a week ago Sunday the announcement was made of the exemptions which the United States authorities said they would recommend, and the Prime Minister on the following day, Monday, July 22, as reported at page 2438 of Hansard, said that the government would continue to seek exemption for such transactions. In fact I think it is generally known that we have been seeking complete exemption from this particular measure that is proposed by the United States administration.

Since last Monday some useful representations have been received from a number of quarters, and not only from the president of the Montreal stock exchange. The matter is being further discussed with the United States authorities this week. A senior official is leaving Ottawa for Washington later today, and I am looking forward to discussing the matter myself with officials of the United States administration later this week. Meanwhile further studies are being made in this complex field.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister a supplementary question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask a supplementary question. Would the minister say whether he agrees in general with the statements made by Mr. Kierans; and would he be willing, because of the questions asked on this matter and the interest in the subject, to have the contents of this particular letter printed as an appendix to Hansard of today?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I would say in answer to that question that I think this whole discussion of the United States proposal is most serious for Canada. I have said that before. I think we should continue to press for complete exemption. I do not know whether I should—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gordon: I was consulting the Secretary of State about this matter—

An hon. Member: As usual.

Mr. Gordon: —because I am somewhat uncertain about the rules that apply in this particular case. There were communications from others, as I have said, last week. I do not know why at this particular time the right hon. Leader of the Opposition would wish to give publicity to Mr. Kierans; but I think the matter has been well publicized and anybody who is really interested in reading the contents of the letter can get a copy of almost any paper of last Saturday and they will see it printed in full.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like the minister to inform the house whether he has received any assurances that the interdepartmental committee to be set up in Washington as a watchdog will not mean a rationing or licensing of new Canadian borrowings on the United States market.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, the United States treasury informed us on Saturday that they were setting up an interdepartmental committee. They emphasized that the committee will be concerned with implementing the arrangement jointly announced on Sunday, July 21 under which a general blanket exemption from the proposed interest equalization tax is to be provided for new Canadian security issues. No limitation to or derogation from that agreement is involved. The new committee would not be involved in considering and approving particular Canadian security issues. Such activity would be incompatible with the general blanket exemption to be provided for new Canadian issues.

I think it is fair to say that we can welcome the proposed interdepartmental committee if it leads to a serious and continuing study of the Canada-United States balance of payments position by several United States departments and agencies concerned. Our case for the proposed blanket exemption, including outstanding securities as well as new issues, is very firmly based on the facts of the special, in fact I might say the unique, position of Canada-United States relationships. It is desirable that these facts should be understood as widely as possible in Washington and elsewhere.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Has the government been advised of a decision of the U.S. government, reported in yesterday's New York Times, that no further exemptions will be considered in connection with the securities tax?

Mr. Gordon: As I have just stated, Mr. Speaker, the government was advised on Saturday of the setting up of this interdepartmental committee. At the same time we were advised that it was hoped that the legislation itself would be available for presentation to congress on August 5, at which time we will know exactly what is proposed and be able to assess the position a little more completely than we can without having seen the legislation.

Mr. Martineau: A supplementary question. Does the minister know whether the interdepartmental committee will study the possibility of exempting outstanding securities?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I know that this will be urged as strongly as possible on behalf of Canada.

SALES TAX EXEMPTION ON MATERIALS USED FOR FARM STORAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has he had any representations from farm organizations, and if so is he going to recommend exemption from sales tax of building materials used for the farm storage facilities that will have to be built this fall to handle the millions of bushels of grain that will be left on the farms as the result of the failure of this government's agricultural policy?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was rather hoping we would resume the debate on the bill in question very shortly.

REPORTED VIOLATION OF INTEREST CEILING BY CHARTERED BANKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice based on the replies I got from the Solicitor General last Thursday and Friday. Is the minister prepared to undertake an investigation to establish whether there is any substance to the allegations that the chartered banks are in fact circumventing and violating the statutory 6 per cent interest rate limit on loans?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I am prepared to undertake an investigation, but surely the hon. member knows that there is a royal commission on banking which is sitting from one end of the country to the other, and surely representations of the kind he has brought to the attention of the house can be made to that commission. However, I did discuss the matter more particularly with the deputy minister of justice, and I am informed by him that subsection 2 of section 93 of the Bank Act authorizes a bank to charge for the keeping of an account of a customer where the charge is made by an express agreement between the bank and the customer. Such a charge is usually made in connection with keeping an account established at the time a loan or advance is made by the bank. If the agreement with the customer for the keeping of the account is an "express agreement"—the quoted words are those used in subsection 2 of section 93—a bank is entitled to make the charge agreed to expressly with its customer notwithstanding that interest of up to 6 per cent may also be charged in respect of the loan or advance.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I realize that there is going to be a revision of the Bank Act and that there will be an opportunity for us to review its provisions, but the allegation that has been made is that violation of the present statute has been taking place.

Mr. Chevrier: I have seen the press statement to which my hon. friend refers, and if it is the same one which he has in mind what was said was "Strictly speaking it may be said that we are breaking the Bank Act". But when one looks at subsection 2 of section 93 there is unquestionably a right to make such a charge over and above the 6 per cent referred to in the act.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORRIS REPORT—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the interdepartmental committee has now had a number of weeks to study the report of the Norris commission, is it possible that the government is willing to act upon these recommendations before this session adjourns?

Mr. Pearson: You are thinking of the Gill committee.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to give that assurance to my hon. friend.

ACCEPTANCE BY UNIONS OF TEMPORARY GOVERNMENT TRUSTEESHIP

On the orders of the day:

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Three Rivers asked me whether I had received assurance from the C.M.U., the national association of marine engineers and the Canadian merchant service guild that they would accept temporary government trusteeship over their unions in accordance with the Norris report recommendations.

I wish to reply to the question as follows. I have received no communication from the Canadian maritime union as to their attitude in this matter. In so far as the national association of marine engineers and the Canadian merchant service guild are concerned, both these unions have expressed their willingness to have their unions under temporary government trusteeship.

TRADE

CANADA-U.S.—STATEMENT BY AGRICULTURE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister aware of the contents of the speech delivered by the Minister of Agriculture at Waterton Lake over the week end, and would he indicate to the house whether he considers the views expressed by the Minister of Agriculture on the nature of prospective trade relations between Canada and the United States to represent present government policy?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not had the pleasure of reading that speech yet.

RAPESEED—REQUEST FOR AID IN SALE TO JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Perhaps in his absence the parliamentary secretary would take it as notice.

Some time ago the hon. gentleman told the house he would ask the Canadian trade commissioners to look into the matter of sales of rapeseed to Japan and other Asian countries. May I ask him if he has done this and, if so, what are the details concerning such sales? This refers to a previous question which I addressed to the minister.

Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): I shall be glad to take the question as notice.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—INQUIRY AS TO ACQUISITION BY CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Prime Minister, a question which I ask full of hope. Was the report correct which we heard on the C.B.C. news at eight o'clock this morning, that the signing of an agreement between Canada and the United States for the acquisition by Canada of nuclear arms has been delayed indefinitely; and is this related to the signing of the three power test ban agreement?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, that report in the terms in which it has been put forward by my hon. friend is not accurate, in that negotiations are still proceeding.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister mean that negotiations to sign an agreement are proceeding or the negotiations to delay signing the agreement are proceeding?

Mr. Pearson: Negotiations, Mr. Speaker, to sign an agreement.

INTRUCTIONS TO ARMY PERSONNEL RESPECTING EVIDENCE IN MURDER TRIAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister give the reasons for the department instructing army personnel not to reveal information in their possession to a court hearing a charge of murder against an army sergeant? What type of information could possibly be classified—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question, if it is in order at all, obviously should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I understand that this case is now before the court, and I think the matter is important.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

AGRICULTURE

COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER WESTERN VETERINARY COLLEGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is he now prepared, or when will he be prepared, to name the committee to select a site for, and to consider other matters with respect to, a veterinary college in western Canada?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the committee to make recommendations on the site of the western veterinary college consists of the deans of the four western agricultural colleges and Dr. J. S. Henderson of the Ontario veterinary college. The committee is expected to start its work in about a week or ten days.

PUBLIC WORKS

PURCHASE OUTSIDE CANADA OF STEEL FOR WHARF REPAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Is it permissible for a contractor to buy steel necessary for government dock building or repairs outside Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question is obviously one for the order paper.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

YUGOSLAVIA—INQUIRY AS TO CANADIAN ASSISTANCE FOLLOWING EARTHQUAKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister with regard to the terrible catastrophe experienced in the Macedonian city of Skoplje, Yugoslavia. I understand that a telegram has been sent to this country expressing the sympathy of all Canadians. Has the government given any consideration to financial assistance or other help needed in this area?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, a telegram has been sent and the government has also agreed to send financial assistance to the victims of this horrible tragedy.

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTION TO UNIVERSITY SERVICE OVERSEAS WORK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that a financial campaign is at present being conducted to collect $185,000 to meet the needs of young graduates recruited by the Canadian university service overseas for work in underdeveloped areas of the world, does the hon. gentleman not think this appeal is worthy of at least a token contribution from the federal government?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I agree that this project which has been formulated by voluntary action is a very worthy one. There are other similar projects in the country in addition to that commendable project undertaken by the Canadian university students organization. These matters are under review and are being looked at sympathetically by this government.

REPORTED REPLACEMENT FOR HIGH COMMISSIONER IN LONDON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is there any truth in the news item that Mr. Donald Gordon, president of Canadian National Railways, will soon replace Hon. George Drew as Canadian high commissioner to Great Britain?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the news item was the first I had heard of this matter.

INDUSTRY

REPORTED INCREASE IN PRICE OF GASOLINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. What action, if any, does the minister propose to take with regard to the announced increase of four tenths of a cent on gasoline, as announced today by the major oil companies as a result of changes in his budget?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is no price control in Canada. I was interested in this announcement, particularly as some of the companies in question seem to be doing reasonably well.

TRENTON, N.S.—REQUEST FOR ORDER FOR RAILWAY CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I wonder if the Minister of Transport is in a position to answer the question I asked him the other day respecting C.N.R. rolling stock orders for the Eastern Car Company at Trenton, Nova Scotia.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): The question was, as I recall it, whether the C.N.R. proposes to place an order for rolling stock with the Eastern Car Company. The answer is that the C.N.R. has no orders in prospect in the immediately foreseeable future for this Trenton company.

HOUSING

REGULATIONS RESPECTING BONUS ON WINTER CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr Speaker, I address my question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the general concern and confusion existing throughout the country regarding how the government intends to handle this $500 allowance for winter home construction, when does the minister propose to clarify the picture not only for this house but also for the construction industry?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my colleague the Minister of Labour will agree with me when I say "at the earliest possible moment".

(Translation):

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCE

ROYAL COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF SECRETARIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is it his intention to announce before long to the house the appointment of the two secretaries to the royal commission on biculturalism?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I hope that can be done very shortly.

ROYAL COMMISSION—REQUEST FOR APPOINTEE FROM BRITISH COLUMBIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I have a question I wish to direct to the Prime Minister. Last week the right hon. gentleman said in response to a question that he had no objection to considering whether it would be feasible to appoint some person from British Columbia to the "B and B commission", the commission on biculturalism and bilingualism. I wonder if the Prime Minister has taken a second look at this and come to a decision.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker; no decision has been reached as a result of that second look.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—REPORTED LAY-OFF OF DOCKYARD WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct my question to the Minister of Transport. I have just received this telegram; therefore I did not have an opportunity of prior communication with him. The telegram comes from six railway unions at the St. John's dockyard in Newfoundland. There 200 job opportunities have been reduced to 130 by two lay-offs, and a further lay-off is expected. The average length of time that the employees concerned have been in the service of the Canadian National Railways is about 15 years. Is there something that can be done in this connection to provide either for their continuing or for their alternative employment?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not received the telegram in question, but this is a matter having to do with the internal management of the Canadian National Railways and I question the propriety of having the matter dealt with by asking a question of the Minister of Transport. I base that statement on the precedents of the former government. However, I will look at the matter and see what is the situation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, with respect to the reference of the hon. gentleman to the former government, the propriety of the attitude taken by the government was challenged by the hon. gentleman over and over again.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—VISIT TO B.C. BY EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address to the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question of great importance to this house, though it is one which has local application. My question is based on telegrams I have received from the Columbia conservation federation and follows wide publicity concerning trips which the minister, the hon. member for Kootenay East and various senior officials apparently intend to make to the area. I should like to ask the minister this question because I have to send a telegram immediately after I have received his reply.

Is it the minister's intention to visit the Kootenays in the near future? If so, would he inform the house of the purpose of his visit, the places he intends to visit, and whether he is prepared to meet delegations at those points?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Some time ago I did accept an invitation from the province from which the hon. member comes, and I thought while there I might take advantage of the opportunity to examine, with certain officials, some of the existing installations and some of the proposed construction areas in the Columbia river basin. As the hon. member knows the treaty, if and when it is before this house as a result of the conclusion of successful negotiations yet to be determined, would be submitted for examination by a committee of this house and it is, of course, the prerogative of such a committee to decide how to conduct its examinations. I am sure, however, that in accordance with our practice the committee will give all who wish to make representations, one way or another, an opportunity to be heard.

(Translation):

SOCIAL SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF CLARK REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Could she inform us whether this government has maintained or carried out some of the recommendations contained in the report on social security prepared by Professor Robert Clark in 1959, a report which was prepared at the request of the previous government; and if so, to what extent were they carried out?

(Text):

Miss Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): I am afraid I do not understand the hon. gentleman's question. It is my recollection that no recommendations were asked from Dr. Clark and none were made. However, if the hon. gentleman wishes further information I would be pleased to give it to him directly, or he could put a question on the order paper.

(Translation):

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Does he intend to meet the Quebec authorities as early as possible in order to transfer to them questions relating to the New Quebec Eskimos, in view of Mr. Levesque's contention that the federal government is putting off on purpose a new meeting between the federal and the provincial authorities?

(Text):

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): My attention has been drawn to the press report to which the hon. member makes reference. I thank him for having given me prior notice. I am unable to find any basis for the report as it exists. There have been discussions with Mr. Levesque and with other members of the Quebec government, but at no time could any of those discussions be dignified by calling them negotiations with respect to this matter.

My colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration was in touch with Mr. Levesque only about ten days ago to discuss other material which should be considered by the federal and provincial ministers at their next meeting, and it was agreed amicably at that time that a further meeting date would be agreed upon after consultation.

I am at a loss also to understand the press statement which implies that the federal government has been involved in northern Quebec with matters other than Eskimo affairs. As far as my department is concerned, we are involved in northern Quebec only with Eskimos, for whom the federal government is responsible under the constitution. The buildings in that region have all been built for Eskimo use or for the use of government personnel who are providing services to the Eskimo people.

We are at all times ready to co-operate with the government of Quebec, which is commendably anxious to provide normal provincial services in this part of the province. To this end we have, where possible, made accommodation available at cost to the Quebec government, and my departmental staff in that area has instructions to co-operate with provincial personnel in every possible way.

Mr. Pigeon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When does the minister expect to have another meeting of the federal and provincial officials?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, I had a discussion on the telephone with Mr. Levesque some three days before he went away on his holidays. That was a week ago last Wednesday, and I do not know whether he has returned yet.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ST. JOHN'S, NEWFOUNDLAND—CONSTRUCTION OF TELEVISION STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question based on a communication bearing 22,000 signatures from the St. John's citizens committee supporting a second television station in Newfoundland. Would the Prime Minister give the house and so the citizens of Newfoundland an answer with regard to the delay by the C.B.C. in proceeding with this projected station, whose establishment was approved by the board of broadcast governors?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into the matter and take it up with the Secretary of State who is the minister responsible for taking it up with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Fisher: Is the Prime Minister cognizant of the fact that the reason I was asked to put the question to the Prime Minister was that this particular committee feels that the Secretary of State has a conflict of interest in this matter?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING NEW AGRICULTURE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. When does he intend to present to members of the house item No. 10 under government orders, having to do with a new minister of agriculture for eastern Canada?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in answering this question may I express to the hon. member our great pleasure at seeing him back in the house and I hope in good health. We hope to deal with item No. 10 on the order paper as soon as possible, but that will require action in regard to certain other items which at the moment have priority.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, arising out of an article in the July issue of Country Life in British Columbia. Would the Prime Minister consult with the farm organizations of British Columbia to get their opinions before this measure is brought before the house again?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the government will be glad to hear from all organizations which are concerned with this matter. We have already heard from a good many of them.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

RADIOACTIVE FALL-OUT—RECOMMENDATIONS OF VOICE OF WOMEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has she had time yet to read the brief presented to her last week on behalf of the Voice of Women by Dr. Ursula

Franklin, which points out serious shortcomings in her department's monitoring system? If so, is she taking any steps to take account of these criticisms?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the hon. lady considered, in view of the successful negotiations with the provinces on other matters, approaching the provinces to take the positive action that is recommended by these very reputable scientists of using the now perfected method of removing strontium-90 from milk?

Miss LaMarsh: As I informed my hon. friend, I have not yet read the brief, so I could not have taken action with respect to this recommendation.

[Later:]

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a question for the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the parliamentary secretary read the brief to which I referred, and mentioned to his minister the well documented criticism of the government's monitory plan?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I rise on a point of order in respect of this question. The Minister of National Health and Welfare is in the house. This is a period devoted to inquiries of the ministry, and I submit the question is out of order.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): There is a well established rule of the house that it is in order to ask questions of private members if they are about matters about which they could be expected to have knowledge. I submit that the hon. member for Parkdale could be expected to have knowledge about this matter and the question, I submit, would be in order.

PENSIONS

INQUIRY AS TO FURTHER CONSIDERATION OF RESOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question either to the Prime Minister or to the Secretary of State. My question arises out of the statement the Prime Minister made today with regard to the conference over the week end with the premiers of the provinces. Has a decision yet been taken, as was promised by the Secretary of State on July 18, at page 2377 of Hansard, and again on July 23, at page 2506 of Hansard, on the matter of bringing before parliament again before this session recesses the motion for the introduction of the Canada pension plan so that a decision can be reached on the amendment that is before the house?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government hopes to be able to proceed with this whole matter at the earliest possible date after the resumption of the session this autumn.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If there is to be this delay in connection with the whole plan, will the government consider bringing in this week a special provision for paying the $10 increase which might be passed without debate?

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO RELIEVE CONGESTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the government planning any new legislation to alleviate the serious plight of western growers arising out of the widespread grain congestion problems which have resulted from the failure of the government's sales efforts?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the last part of the hon. gentleman's question makes it undesirable for me to answer the first part.

(Translation):

IMMIGRATION

VISA EXEMPTIONS FOR TOURISTS FROM CERTAIN EUROPEAN COUNTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I wish to answer a question asked in my absence by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso) on the exemption from visa requirements for non-immigrants coming to Canada as tourists.

I am happy to inform the hon. members that, as from September 15 of this year, the citizens of Italy, Greece, Portugal, Spain and Turkey will be able to enter Canada without a visa for visits of three months or less. Italy, Greece, Portugal, Spain and Turkey are, as well as Canada, members of the Organization for European Economic Cooperation. The Canadian government's decision is consistent with one of the general purposes of that organization, as it promotes easier travelling between citizens of member countries.

This decision represents another step forward in the Canadian long-term program tending to exempt from visas the non-immigrant tourists who are on a short visit in Canada. Experience has shown that this method is very convenient, as it simplifies the admission formalities.

This country thus carries on with its efforts to attract travellers to Canada.

(Text):

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SESSIONAL ALLOWANCES, TRAVELLING EXPENSES, PENSIONS, ETC.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act

(a) to increase the sessional allowances payable to members of the Senate and House of Commons;

(b) to provide for the payment of an additional allowance to each leader of a party in the House of Commons, other than the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition, that has a recognized membership of twelve or more persons in the House of Commons;

(c) to provide for the payment of an additional allowance to the members occupying the recognized positions of chief government whip and chief opposition whip in the House of Commons;

(d) to provide for the payment to members of the Senate and House of Commons of such actual transportation and travelling expenses and telecommunication expenses as the Senate and House of Commons may order;

(e) to provide for the payment to each minister of the crown, the Leader of the Opposition and the Speakers of the Senate and the House of Commons of a motor vehicle allowance;

(f) to increase the allowances paid to the members of the Senate and the House of Commons for expenses incidental to the discharge of their duties;

and to amend the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act

(g) to increase the amount of contributions to be paid by members into the consolidated revenue fund, to provide for the payment of an allowance to the widows of members of parliament where such members have made or elected to make additional contributions under the act and to make changes in the amount of the retirement allowances payable to members;

(h) to provide for the payment of an annual allowance out of the consolidated revenue fund to persons who have held the office of Prime Minister for four years and to the widows of any such persons;

and to provide further for other related and incidental matters.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, the resolution on the order paper which I have the honour to move, seconded by the hon. member for Laurier, involves perhaps the most difficult of all tasks which members of parliament have to discharge; because in dealing with this resolution they are, of course, dealing with their own personal interests. But I am confident, Mr. Chairman, that no member of parliament, no single member of parliament, whatever attitude he may take, will approach this task or come to a conclusion in regard to it in any selfish or self-centred way.

This resolution, Mr. Chairman, involves a responsibility which, if action is to be taken at all, cannot be escaped either by the government of the day or by parliament itself, since it cannot be delegated to any other body. If any decision is to be made in these matters covered by this resolution, that decision has to be made here. I indicated, Mr. Chairman, on Thursday last, and I quote from Hansard, page 2604:

Subject to further consultation between the house leader and hon. gentlemen opposite with regard to procedure, the government is ready to take the responsibility tomorrow of proposing certain changes in the remuneration and pensions of members of parliament,—

The government is not seeking to avoid its responsibility to recommend and I am quite happy, as it is indeed my duty as leader of the government and speaking on behalf of the government, to put this recommendation before the committee. We do not ask opposition parties to share the responsibility of making the recommendation; that is our responsibility. But we did inform representatives of all parties, representatives who were entitled to speak for those parties, as to what the government intended to propose, through the usual channels of communication between the house leader and representatives of parties opposite.

I am advised by the house leader that he received an assurance that none of the three parties opposite would oppose the measure which is being proposed in this resolution, and it is because of that fact, as well as for other reasons, that this resolution is being moved by me, the leader of the government. While it was indicated that there was not agreement to proceed on Friday last, the house leader did receive an assurance from all parties that there was agreement to proceed today, and that agreement is recorded in Hansard for Thursday last at page 2662, as follows:

Mr. Pickersgill: Then, on Monday, I am advised there is general agreement on all sides of the house that if the government will put on the order paper the motion regarding the remuneration and pensions of members of parliament there would be no objection raised to going ahead with all stages except third reading on Monday. The third reading would be held over until the next day.

He went on to say:

If that correctly represents the sense of the house, and it can be so ordered, I will undertake that notice of the resolution will be given tomorrow evening so that it will appear in Votes and Proceedings. That provides the 48 hours' notice required by the rules.

That has been done, Mr. Chairman, and it is on the basis of that decision of the house that the government is proceeding in this matter today.

If this resolution is accepted by the committee then there will be opportunity to deal with the details of the legislation subsequently, and I do not propose to go into these details this afternoon. Indeed, it would not be appropriate in discussing the resolution itself. The resolution is before the committee, and I think it is pretty clear in its terms.

As a result of our views the government has come to the conclusion to proceed to put the matter before parliament. It seems to the government that action on this matter is needed, and that it is needed now.

Perhaps I might be permitted to mention briefly some of the reasons why, in our view, such action is required. It is not primarily because of individual considerations. That is certainly an important consideration and none of us wish to escape from that consideration, but it is because the action we recommend will, in our view, increase the effectiveness of our parliamentary institutions.

In the first place there has been no revision of members' indemnities since 1954, almost ten years ago, despite very marked increases in remuneration in other fields of activity, and despite the fact that the increased cost of living during those 10 years has been recognized in so many fields of activity, and rightly so. Costs, as we all know, have gone up during those 10 years. Not only have the expenses of members as members, and the expenses of members as individuals, increased during that time, but the sessions of parliament have grown steadily longer. Although we hope shortly to set up a committee which will go into the whole question of parliamentary procedure and perhaps reshape our parliamentary institutions to make them more effective, nevertheless it does not seem to me that anything we do in this connection is likely to shorten the length of sessions of parliament in Ottawa to any considerable extent because of the increasing responsibilities of government and the increasing responsibilities of parliament. I myself cannot think that these responsibilities are likely to be diminished in the years ahead.

Therefore we have to face the fact that members of the House of Commons, to all intents and purposes, now have a full time occupation which is very different indeed from the situation which existed not so very many decades ago. This means that practically all members, except those fortunate enough to live in Ottawa or very close to it, have to maintain two residences. There is all that this involves in terms of expense, as well as inconvenience, and indeed some sacrifice that has to be made to maintain two residences for the greater part of the year.

I think it is correct to say, Mr. Chairman, and I mention this with some hesitation because it does involve the personal affairs of members, but it has a bearing on this matter, that in order to discharge their responsibilities in parliament as members would wish to see them discharged, many members, especially new members who have come down here recently, find themselves in debt and they have made, and are making, many financial sacrifices which they should not be asked to make.

There is evidence on all sides, and a lot of it has been given to me in confidence—indeed I have been very much impressed and a little distressed by it—to support that statement that a great many members are making financial sacrifices which they should not be asked to make, quite apart from the additional sacrifices of disruption of family life, difficulties of education and that sort of domestic problem.

There is also a further consideration which perhaps it is appropriate for me to mention, and maybe those who have responsibilities in other parties will be able to confirm this—I know I certainly can confirm it from my own experience—that it is becoming increasingly difficult to attract or to secure candidates because of the direct financial loss involved, especially for young candidates and young members with young and growing families. There is this financial difficulty, and it is compounded by the difficulty of making provision for old age and other hazards.

Surely it is important to make sure that parliament does not lose its truly representative character because a financial barrier is added to other difficulties in devoting the time and energy which is required to public service. It seems to me if we do not discharge our responsibilities along the lines of this resolution at this time, we may soon find it will be impossible for some citizens in this country to make the financial sacrifices which they would like to be able to make, and which are involved in standing as a candidate for the House of Commons and acting as a member of the House of Commons. In that case, if it does reach that point, then the broadly representative character of the house will be changed, and we will find it becoming increasingly representative of those who can afford to make these sacrifices and those who perhaps are a little older, who have retired from business and are in a position to accept the responsibilities and sacrifices involved.

It seems to me quite clear that no one is likely to become rich, or even to save money, out of the proposed remuneration if he or she discharges responsibilities to the people that he or she represents, as they should be discharged, and as members of the house do their best to discharge in present conditions. I think it will certainly be agreed there is a real need in these difficult days in our democratic and parliamentary institutions, when their effectiveness and representative character are questioned on so many sides, to attract men and women of ability to parliament and public life. I hope the resolution which I have the honour to move this afternoon will help in that regard and will make it possible for these men and women to accept and discharge the tremendous responsibilities placed upon members of parliament today.

Then, Mr. Chairman, there is the question of pension arrangements, which will be dealt with in the bill which will follow this resolution if the resolution is acceptable to the house. These pension provisions would be consequential upon the scale of remuneration, with one change, and I think it must surely be a change that will commend itself to us all, especially in the light of experience in the past. There will be provision made for widows of members of parliament. The lack of any such provision in the past has, I know, been a continuing source of anxiety to members for a good many years. Some of us have had personal experience of that anxiety and, indeed, of the suffering that can be caused and has been caused on one or two occasions in recent years by the fact that members' widows have been left almost destitute.

This resolution is in my name but the bill itself is in the name of the Secretary of State, who was delegated by the cabinet to work with officials in preparing the measure and who is available to the committee and the house to explain the details at the appropriate time.

Mr. Chairman, I recommend this resolution to the house. I think it would be false economy not to take action at this time which will enable members of parliament to discharge their increasingly onerous responsibilities without the financial worry that so many of them now have. In that way we will be making the House of Commons more effective, and in making the House of Commons more effective we will be making it possible for ourselves as members of the House of Commons to do more, and to do it more effectively for the people of Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, while ordinarily it is not expected that the terms of a bill will be revealed at this stage, I think it would have been most helpful and beneficial had the house been given an indication of the terms of a bill such as this, especially as to the amounts the government had in mind both for the indemnity and the pension.

I begin by saying that I am in agreement with the Prime Minister when he says the responsibility must rest upon the government. That responsibility is theirs. On the other hand the matter is one that, being concerned with personal interest, denies consideration being given on a partisan basis. In other words, each and every member should be in the position of determining for himself or herself the attitude to be taken on this matter.

I intend to review something of what took place in the past in this connection; the attitude taken by Liberal leaders in previous years in this regard and the course followed by them and by a Conservative prime minister, Sir Robert Borden, in 1920 when a similar type of legislation was before the house. I agree with the Prime Minister that legislating to one's own benefit is something that must be subject to the conscientious viewpoint of each and every member. It cannot be decided on the basis of party considerations or party purposes. That has always been my conviction in this regard. All through my political life I have endeavoured to act in accordance with my convictions, even though following that course has not always been politically remunerative.

I say at once that in the past the consultation between the opposition and the government and between members of the various groups was always as between the leaders. I also say immediately that the course followed this time was not similar to the course followed in 1954. Then the prime minister, Mr. St. Laurent, having had decided in cabinet the stand to be taken by the government, advised the leader of the opposition as well as the leaders of the other two parties.

As to any agreement entered into, may I say at once that I accept what the Prime Minister says, that it was agreed that this matter would be raised today and that we in the opposition would accept the discussion of this matter today. Beyond that there was no agreement whatsoever, nor was there consultation between the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition. When this matter was called on Thursday I felt it would be injudicious for the members of this house by agreement to set aside the rules so that it could be raised on Friday. Then the regular course was followed of giving 48 hours' notice, and those are the circumstances under which this matter is now before the house.

I agree with the Prime Minister when he speaks of the need of assuring that the membership of this house shall be representative of all parts of our country and, as far as possible, of all the various segments of our people; and that poverty should not be a detriment to membership in the house. To say otherwise would be to make wealth a passport to public service. I also recognize that a number of younger members find themselves in a difficult position in dividing their home life, having now to live in Ottawa for a period of months whereas in former years that was not the case. Today is the 52nd day of the session. In 1920 the then prime minister stated that the length of a session could be measured at 50 days.

That participation in public life is a sacrifice is a truism. My father, who was a teacher, impressed upon the students he taught the need for participation in public service. Indeed, long since gone, I think of him in that little school house in East York where there were 28 students, pupils in all grades. Out of that number of 28 came four members of the House of Commons. We sat here in 1940; Joe Harris, Robert McGregor, George Tustin and myself. That was the atmosphere in which I was raised; the atmosphere of the public service which it was necessary for men and women with the necessary qualifications to give in the interests of others.

All of us have known occasions when we could have left public life and been better off financially than we are today. I had that opportunity in large measure in 1942, when had I left public life and entered one of the great law firms of this country I would not be in the same financial position today. But I wanted to be in public life; you do not try five times before you succeed, Mr. Chairman, without having the desire. As I look back over the years I can say that whatever the vicissitudes of public life, however great the difficulties of being elected, if I had my life to live over again, with on the one hand all the remuneration which might have been available and on the other hand the life I have lived in public service, I would have no reason to change the ambition that was mine to become a member of the House of Commons.

I think that would be so with all of us. We have all talked about the sacrifices. None of us is conscripted to serve, but there is something about public life which keeps us participating therein even though recognizing those difficulties that are inherent in its participation. Until very recently there was the added fear expressed by the Prime Minister that should one pass on his widow would be left in an impossible financial position. As far as the pension plan is concerned, I do not know what are its terms but that portion of it is certainly something which is overdue.

The Prime Minister said in effect that parliament must not become a place for only those financially able to become its members, either by the beneficence of heredity or by the practice of one's vocation. Over the week end, Mr. Chairman, I read the biography—one of the most interesting biographies written—of the Earl of Rosebery. In the United Kingdom they had a different view, even in the late nineties. The author said this at one point:

> Financial independence can be the most invaluable asset for a public man, and Aristotle's philosophy that statesmen should not have to bother about bread and butter matters so that they can devote all their energies to affairs of state is often quoted as a counsel of perfection.

The Earl of Rosebery was one of the wealthiest, if not the wealthiest, of all the British prime ministers. The author then views the matter from another side and mentions:

> The other temptations of wealth particularly indolence or the cultivation of diverse interests which sap personal ambition, for, and even interest in, public life do not require emphasis—

But, Mr. Chairman, that view is changing. If you went across the United States today you would almost conclude, not only in the highest positions in the federal system but also in the governorships, that massive wealth is no longer a detriment in securing the franchises of the people. However, Rosebery had an income of £500,000 a year, and the author concludes that with it and having ambition he was able to do many things in the field of public service which would otherwise have been denied him.

In the United Kingdom, of course, without the payment of any indemnity at that time there was greatness in the House of Commons. Their position is different from ours. There for generations there has been the aristocracy of public service from father to son, men dedicated to serving the public weal. It is only comparatively recently that any indemnity was paid. Indeed, I believe even today there is no indemnity paid to the members of the House of Lords.

In Canada there has been a development of continually rising rates of indemnity from the time of confederation. That is understandable. The Prime Minister mentioned the ever decreasing value of money and purchasing power, and as well the ever increasing responsibility of members of parliament. It is interesting to go back to 1867. The indemnity then was $600. That did not prevent the House of Commons of that day from having among its members the Macdonalds, the Browns, the Cartiers and all the other greats of that generation. In 1873 it was raised to $1,000, in 1901 to $1,500, in 1906 to $2,500, and in 1920 to $4,000. In 1945 an extra $2,000 expense allowance was paid, and then in 1954 the indemnity was raised to $8,000 plus $2,000 expense allowance.

As I go back over the years I find that almost the identical words spoken by the Prime Minister today were spoken by prime ministers of other days. I am not going over the debate on June 29, 1920.

Among those who spoke on that occasion was Mr. Mackenzie King, then leader of the opposition, and he said:

> I think the indemnity should be sufficient to enable members who come to this parliament to give all their time that may be necessary to public business.

He also said this—that unless the indemnity question was before the people during an election campaign it should not be brought into effect; it should not become effective until after an election. And he said this, too, as reported at page 4433:

> I think this is a matter which should not be regarded as a party matter.

Again, I repeat what I said. I think this is something which each and every one should determine for himself or herself. Then, Mr. Mackenzie King went on:

> My position, in a word, is this: I think the indemnities should be increased, and that the salaries of the ministers and of the leader of the government and the allowance to the Leader of the Opposition should be increased. I express myself more freely in this because what I say in regard to the salaries of the ministers, I wish to apply equally to the salary of the Leader of the Opposition. I think that while these increases are justifiable on the merits of the case, they should not take effect during this parliament but should come into effect after a general election, when the country has had an opportunity to return to parliament members in whom it has confidence under the new legislation as passed.

There was disagreement at that time. That view was not shared by Mr. Lapointe. Mr. Lapointe's contention was that it should come into effect immediately—a further indication of the suggestion I am placing before hon. members in a matter such as this, namely, that this is no party issue and that it is a question for the individual. It is also of interest that during the course of that discussion Mr. Lemieux, afterwards a distinguished Speaker of the house, made a statement that with the increase in indemnity to $4,000 there would never be any difficulty in the future with regard to election expenses. He said this was "settled once and for all." Well, expenses seem to have gone up too, with the increase in the cost of living in the intervening years, as can be seen if we examine the terms that are shown.

I underline what the Prime Minister said, that something must be done on behalf of parliament and its members. I do not know what the suggested amount is. All I know is what I read in the newspapers, but I say that if it is $18,000 after the increase there will be widespread questioning across this country and that that is an amount which will be found difficult of justification at this time.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: As I say, I do not know. But I was myself sympathetic in the last parliament to action being taken. I frankly told my colleagues that something would have to be done on behalf of private members. My own idea was that we would bring that in just before the election. But as it turned out, we did not have very much latitude in determining when that election would be held. I agree with the Prime Minister when he says there is a continual need to rejuvenate the house, to bring in new ideas, as young men and women do.

I do not intend to refer to any of the other provisions because at the moment they are still in general form. I will mention one, however, which has to do with former prime ministers. I do not expect this is going to apply to me, because I have other hopes. The fact that it is to apply to prime ministers who have held their position for four years seems to indicate that the present Prime Minister believes that with the support of other parts of the house he will be in office for that length of time.

I am interested in this proposal for the payment of leaders of parties other than the official parties. Both of those hon. gentlemen are estimable. Both of them are a credit to the House of Commons. But I would point out one fact: Under our parliamentary system this would indeed be a divergence from the whole concept of parliamentary government in the British tradition. Our system recognizes only the government and the opposition party which has the largest number of members. It is interesting to go back and find out how the opposition came by its name, and it is very pertinent today. The title "Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition" goes back to the year 1826, when Mr. Hobhouse, one of the greatest parliamentarians of his time, afterwards Lord Broughton, while engaging in an attack on Mr. Canning used these words:

It is said to be hard on His Majesty's ministers to raise objections of this character but it is more hard on His Majesty's opposition to compel them to take this course.

Canning referred to the use of this expression and stated in his reply:

My right honourable friend could not have invented a better phrase to designate us than that which he adopted. That we are certainly to all intents and purposes a branch of His Majesty's government its proceedings for some time past have proven. Although with the gentlemen opposite in office, we are in power, the measures are ours but the emoluments are theirs.

That was in 1826, and that has been the designation since. If a means can be reached whereby these two gentlemen could be helped to provide those services which are necessary for them I would say nothing to the contrary. But if, as a result of this action, the entire background of our British parliamentary development which contemplates a government that governs and an opposition, composed of the largest group, which opposes, were to be set aside, then I merely point out that the government may well be introducing a multiplication and proliferation of parties in the years ahead and that our system does not work as effectively as it would if we had two-party government.

I say this with the greatest respect to those in third parties because I know very well that, had there not been a third party in the 'twenties the old age pensions legislation would never have gone through. But Mr. King needed two or three votes and Mr. Woodsworth and Mr. Heaps provided those votes in return for action. When I make this statement I am not in any way being critical of them or of their ability and capacity. I am simply pointing out that this will be a step toward a multiplication of parties within our political system. It is a step which some may feel would be a worthy one. My reading of history and my experience do not place me among those who are its proponents. I realize too that if this legislation were delayed until after the next election, I guess we would not get it through at all because there are members in some of the parties who would not feel constrained to support the government until such time as another election took place.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has stated that this is a responsibility we cannot put off on others. The provision as to ex-prime ministers is one that causes me concern, whatever the future may bring, in that by casting my vote for it I would actually be placing myself in the position of voting for my own benefit, provided I were to qualify, as I hope I never do. That is the position with many members of the house.

When the matter came before the house in 1954 Mr. St. Laurent made a speech that in many particulars has its facsimile in the speech delivered today by the Prime Minister and in turn they are reproductions of the speeches of Sir Robert Borden, and also Mr. King in his time. When the motion was made to go into committee to consider the resolution Mr. Drew, then leader of the opposition, moved, seconded by myself, that this item be not now considered but that its consideration be postponed so that the subject matter thereof might be referred for inquiry and report to a royal commission to be appointed by the government. Objection was taken to the amendment and when it was ruled out of order Mr. Drew suggested that we should follow the system that is followed in the United Kingdom. True enough, it places a special committee of the House of Commons set up for the purpose in the position of securing evidence and making a recommendation, but when its report comes back to the house it represents the consensus of the views of the special committee. It takes evidence of the need and enters particularly into the question of the amount fixed for the indemnity.

The amendment was ruled out of order. A select committee to conduct an inquiry as in Britain was not considered appropriate. I think it would not have held up consideration of the matter for any length of time at all. I think it would have been very beneficial and educational, if you will, for the people as a whole if a committee of inquiry similar to the select committee set up by the House of Commons at Westminster in March, 1948, had been established. In that case the report of the committee composed of members of the various parties recommended that the salaries of members should be increased to £1,000 a year, of which £500 should be allowed to all members as an expense allowance free of income tax. In other words, they examined the matter and they heard evidence. Their meetings were open and the people had the evidence before them.

I can see a great deal of criticism in connection with the proposal now before us. I asked a question today regarding the $10 increase in old age pensions. The amount of the increase in this proposal compared with that increase is many times greater, but none the less parliament must not only act justly but must also act so that what it does can be interpreted justly.

Mr. Pearson: Would the right hon. gentleman permit a question? I should like to ask him if he is now recommending that this whole matter be postponed for consideration by a select committee?

Mr. Diefenbaker: No. I say at once that has not taken place. That has not taken place, but that has been the system in the United Kingdom. The recommendation there was accompanied by a unanimity of public opinion. This is what we should try to attain, and from the Prime Minister's opening words I took it that his desire was to secure a reasonable degree of public support. There will be time enough later to deal with the discussions that took place in 1954 and also in 1945. I simply say that I know the difficulties. I recognize the problem. Unless some action is taken parliament will suffer. On the other hand, I say that we in parliament as trustees for the people should make the most careful examination of the courses we take to the end that we mobilize public opinion for what we do, however justifiable that action may be.

Indeed, I speak now of the Prime Minister. He occupies the official residence. I followed the course that had been arranged in that connection by Mr. St. Laurent of paying $5,000 a year toward the cost of operating that residence, and at the same time I had to pay income tax on that amount because it was not a deductible expense. I am not complaining about it but simply mentioning it. The other day several members asked that there should be a change in this regard.

I remember the last speech that Mr. King made in parliament in which he endeavoured to give parliament the benefit of his years in public life. He spoke of the overwhelming need to assure that the closing of the door of parliament should not mean the opening of the door to the poorhouse for those in public life. I think it was one of the most impressive and emotional speeches that he ever made. He was describing Laurier house and the terrible difficulty he had in financing it. He said in part:

> There is an impression among a great many people in this country that Laurier house has been maintained by the state. It has been maintained by myself personally out of my own pocket and my own income, and if I have not been able to invite my hon. friend and some members who are about me at the moment and many others as often as I should like to have done and extended as much in the way of hospitality as I should like to have done, that is one of the reasons.

I remember that speech in which he told parliament of all the financial difficulties that are incident to high position in the state. As a matter of fact, I surmise that out of that came the establishment of 24 Sussex street as the official home of the Prime Minister.

There is very little more I can say at this time because the resolution will have to be amplified in detail before the committee will know what is, in effect, being done. I simply place before the committee my own views in this connection. I am as anxious as anyone to maintain a constant influx of youthful ability and new blood. I am also fully aware of the very serious problems faced by a number of members, many young members. It is because of that I believe some action should be taken. However, there are certain portions of the resolution which, when translated into bill form and made clear thereby, will need careful consideration and examination at that time.

I want to say to all members in all parts of the house that the manner in which they received the introductory words of the Prime Minister showed a reserve and self-control that was most admirable. At no time was there anything approaching applause except when he came to the provision for the widows of departed members. This is something upon which there is general agreement. I am not going to say more at this time. I have simply stated that this is a matter for the conscience of each member, to be determined by him in accordance with his conscientious views and desires to insure that this institution will always be a palladium of freedom. It cannot be that, unless it regularly has an infusion of new intellect, new idealism, new forcefulness. All of these things young men and women bring to this chamber. They cannot be induced to make this contribution unless they are at least assured a reasonable opportunity to serve without unnecessary sacrifice.

Mr. Thomas: I rise on a point of personal privilege, Mr. Chairman. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition has expressed on several occasions during the course of his remarks that he thought this subject should be treated on an individual basis rather than a party basis. So far as I am concerned personally, I should like to see that made—

The Chairman: Order; would the hon. member state his question of privilege? In my opinion, there does not appear to be a question of privilege. I am sure each individual member will have an opportunity to express his point of view.

Mr. Thomas: My point of privilege is this; normally, we are working as a party and the leader of each party expresses the stand of that party on any matter. I do not believe in this case, as the right hon. Leader of the Opposition has inferred, this is being done. It seems to me he is leaving each member to follow his own conscience. He is not speaking for the party.

The Chairman: Order; I recognize the hon. member for Red Deer.

Mr. Thompson: It is my intention to speak directly and briefly to the principle and basic intent of this resolution. I will in no way attempt to enter into political debate. In our opinion, the time has come, if not already overdue, when the remuneration of members of the House of Commons should be increased. It is well known the present cost of living, and the essential expenses of members of parliament, are in most cases more than they receive. An increase is necessary, first of all to enable members of parliament to pay their way. It is essential also in order to attract and to hold the type of people that Canadians need as their representatives in this House of Commons.

I believe it would be wrong to make politics in Canada a money-making proposition and to eliminate entirely the public service motive. On the other hand, if members of parliament are not paid proportionately to their worth and their expected duties and expenses, this chamber will become a collecting point for the well-to-do, for those who have private means. It will not any longer be a representative assembly of the people. While we have not been informed beforehand of all of the details of the legislation which this resolution will introduce, the Social Credit members in caucus have decided that they are in favour of the principle of this measure. After considerable discussion our house leader and our party whip have so informed the government of the discussions which were conducted. As a party, we are prepared to shoulder our share of the political responsibility for this decision. The decision of our party in caucus was not made with complete unanimity, but the decision to which we have come is, I believe, the right one.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the Social Credit party I lend my support to this resolution.

Mr. Fisher: The members of our party in caucus meeting, after a very thorough discussion and apparently unlike the members of the other two opposition parties, aware of the details as they were forwarded to us through the courtesy of the house leader, have approved this proposal of the government to improve the salaries, expense allowance and pensions of members of parliament and other features of the resolution as indicated, including a pension for former prime ministers. I have difficulty, Mr. Chairman, restraining myself at this time from making remarks of sheer, bitter anger after listening to the Leader of the Opposition. It somehow seemed to me he wanted to draw into this discussion the definition of politics as the conduct of public affairs for private advantage.

I do not see this resolution, the purposes that it intends, and the members of all parties in this parliament as being in a position to need that kind of line drawn for them today. I know it may be presumptuous of me to say that, but I could review all the discussions regarding salary increments over the last three or four years, and I can inform the committee that I had some part in them, as an interlocutor at least, because I first introduced the matter as a private members' grievance about four years ago.

As a consequence I was supported—and I have the letters to show it—by members of all parties, including a great many members of the party represented by the Leader of the Opposition. I happen to know that several times in the ensuing years there were tentative negotiations carried on by private members supporting the government, to try and get something done on this matter. They were always full of optimism but they were not getting anywhere.

When I think of the turnover we have had in membership of the house in the last few elections I realize why so many of these people came and went. Many of them were supporters of the Leader of the Opposition but now they have departed, and many of them departed very bitter over the fact that nothing was done and that there was no co-ordinated or co-operative approach on the part of all parties to do something about members' indemnities.

In the four elections we have had in the past five years there has been a tremendous turnover in membership of the House of Commons. When I got up and spoke in the house in favour of more money for members of parliament, and repeated that several years later in the form of a resolution, I did not get much in the way of obvious support. However I think most hon. members came along to me later and said it was a great idea, but they thought I was a knucklehead and that I was throwing away an opportunity for re-election.

In this connection I would like to point out to those hon. members, who may be apprehensive of the fact that some people will tell them that what we are doing is an unprincipled thing, that in two election campaigns my actions were used against me and I did not have much trouble surviving them. I am not saying this is a pattern for all hon. members of the house, but I want to make it clear that this tremendous fear, that especially seems to be built up amongst older members of the house, that this is a terrible thing with which to face our electors, is much overdrawn and exaggerated.

I think the people of the country to whom we are looking for an interest and support in politics will understand and appreciate that this is not only something to improve the calibre of the House of Commons but it is something which has been necessary for a long, long time.

One of the most apparent consequences after listening to the Leader of the Opposition is to ask the question, why did he not introduce the select committee? Why did he not do something about a select committee to have an open discussion about salaries of members of parliament? I am sure the situation was almost as serious a little over a year ago when my resolution was before the house; but the word went out that there was to be no discussion on it, and after one limp little speech by the mover of the resolution, that was it.

It seems to me that in this, as in so many other matters, you cannot have it both ways in the house. You cannot play it along both lines. Either you are for or against something like this, and I know the majority of the members are not only behind the resolution but behind the measure in general as the details have come out; and this will be proved if it is put to a vote.

One of the things that follows from what I think will be generous and sizeable increases in our emoluments, which will enable us to do a better job, is that we will have to meet a higher standard. I know from my own sizing up of the situation in my constituency, and from talking to members of other parties, that the increments that will be available if this measure is passed will induce a great many people into running for the candidacies for all parties. This will be good. In other words, instead of improving our own chances, in many ways we are hurting them.

If that argument is worth anything, then I think we need to acknowledge we are not the most brilliant assemblage in the world. We know the House of Commons could be much more representative of Canada, and I think most of us will agree that this measure will do something about bringing people with wider backgrounds, wider experience and more knowledge into the political field. So far as we are concerned, that will be all to the good.

The attitude may develop out of the discussion which takes place today that for some months we must face a raging debate, back and forth across the country, on whether members of parliament have been shameful in supporting and putting through such a measure as this. I do not believe for a minute that such a debate will continue if each of us has the courage, as individual members, to go out and face our constituents and let them know why this is done. I appeal as an individual member—not as a member of my own party—to all members of all parties to do this, because I am afraid that it may get to be nasty and difficult if the pattern that was set by the contribution of the Leader of the Opposition should be carried any further.

We in this party support the intention of the resolution. So far as we know them we support the details, although we might have had some quarrel about some of the levels if we had received more consultation. However, we do not propose to put up a great many speakers on the motion. We are all for it, and I think future parliamentarians of the country will be grateful to us for supporting it.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Pickersgill thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-91, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act and the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Pickersgill moved the second reading of the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Churchill: Distribute the bill first.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think we should wait until the bill is distributed before it is adopted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand the bill is now being distributed. Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, with two minutes to look at a bill containing 14 clauses I am not very well informed as to its details; that is, shall I say, its minor details and those provisions which are particularly related to the pension aspects of the bill. I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the previous speakers and I have given a great deal of thought to this difficult, decuple and delicate question during recent months. As one who has a Victorian appreciation of the value of money, the virtues of simple living and who suffers the pinpricks of a combined Anglican and socialist conscience, I have made several agonizing reappraisals of the situation in recent months. I am speaking now to express my point of view and to be as fair as possible. I wish to give a brief review of the history of sessional indemnities. It has been mentioned in some respects previously, but I have been asked to do this by persons outside the house.

In the first instance I understand that members of parliament received about $600 per annum as a sessional indemnity; later this was raised to $1,000 and then $4,000 for a number of years. Then on December 13, 1945

—I remember the day well, Mr. Speaker—the Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King made a motion to provide an allowance of $2,000 for incidental expenses in addition to the $4,000 indemnity. Mr. MacInnis, the then hon. member for Vancouver East, and the member for Kootenay West were, if I remember correctly, the only two who spoke against and voted against this increase. It was a most interesting debate. The prime minister in reply disagreed strongly with our arguments and later ticked me off when replying to what I had said on that occasion. I want to bring to the attention of the house the fact that prior to introducing that resolution the prime minister of the day informed the Canadian people, during the election campaign, of his intention to provide for an expense allowance.

The next increase came as the result of a resolution, introduced by the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent on January 26, 1954, of which the prime minister of that day had given the electors notice in a radio broadcast in which he said something to the effect that he was going to make the responsibilities of members less burdensome. At this time the sessional indemnity was increased from $4,000 to $8,000, thus making a total of $10,000. The then hon. member for Vancouver East, Mr. MacInnis, opposed the increase and voted against it.

Then we have had the recent efforts of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) who on April 28, 1959 urged an increase of the sessional indemnity to $12,000 and an expense allowance of $3,000. I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that I give him credit for his courage in bringing forward what was considered to be a very delicate and risky question under those circumstances. He was supported by the then hon. member for Winnipeg North.

I think that was the end of the support. Then on December 19, 1960 the hon. member for Port Arthur asked a question of the prime minister as to whether a parliamentary pay raise would have to be a package deal which would include a daily roll call. On March 19, 1962 he moved a simple resolution and proposed an increase of the sessional indemnity to $10,000 and an expense allowance of $3,000. He mentioned at that time that this increase would be sufficient to meet his particular needs and problems.

On January 28, 1963 the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) asked the minister of justice to protect certain members of his group against certain acts of violence that might occur as suggested by a very famous newspaper columnist if there were any attempt to oppose an increase in sessional indemnities. Numerous editorials have been written across Canada on this question, both for and against. I have seen two such editorials recently, one representing the Conservative view, and entitled "A Conservative view", by Mr. Frank McGee, in the Daily Star of July 27, 1963, and the other by the hon. member for Port Arthur entitled "Now we'll have to earn our pay"—I agree with him on that point—in the Telegram of July 27, 1963.

There are arguments for and against on this question. The arguments in favour of an increase have generally been, I think, that first it makes it possible for any person with limited means to be elected to parliament. I think that is a reasonable and sound argument. A second argument is that it makes it attractive to the well-to-do, almost a bait to the well-to-do, to run for parliament. I do not think that is a sound argument because throughout the years we have had a good number of well-to-do persons who have represented Canadians in this house without, I am quite sure, any regard to the sessional indemnity and things of that sort. A third argument is that it is necessary to ensure the independence of members. I think that is right; I think it is very necessary that members of parliament should receive an indemnity and an allowance that remove any possibility of temptation for a weak man.

Then again, Mr. Speaker, the argument in recent years has been that a great many members in this house actually need an increase in order to meet their living expenses and other costs. I agree with that argument and I think that is generally accepted. I realize myself, although I am one who has given a great deal of thought to this question, it is a difficult thing for members to decide. I have been most reluctant psychologically, you might say, to come to certain conclusions. I know this is a sound reason for increasing the indemnity. Fortunately money is not always attractive either to the rich or poor. Our history is replete with the names of first-class people both rich and poor who have served this country in parliament since confederation. I refer to such men as Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and then the late J. S. Woodsworth, who I remember made a great sacrifice to serve the Canadian people. I have known of him travelling on day coaches day after day, rather than take a sleeper in order to save that additional expense to the C.C.F. club paying his expenses. There have been numerous people willing to make some sacrifice in connection with representing the public. I remember the efforts made by the late John MacNicol with respect to the question of the conservation of Canadian resources. I think he was a man of some substance who between sessions travelled through western Canada lecturing and doing whatever he could, far beyond the bounds of duty, because of his particular interest in this question.

The arguments against an increase, Mr. Speaker, are usually two, from what I have read and heard. First of all, the members entered into a contract with their electors during the last election to serve on the basis on the present indemnity and allowance. Some newspapers have supported this point of view. Some radio talks have supported the same point of view. Second, on moral grounds, therefore, any increase should only become effective after the next election. I believe an increase is a problem which has been dodged by members for two or three years and should have been dealt with before this.

Now a few words with respect to this bill. I have not read it, although I know the main substance of it. I usually like an opportunity to read a bill carefully before speaking on it in the house, but I trust that as we go through the committee stage we will have the opportunity to ask questions and to find out what we see through a glass darkly at this time.

First of all, let me say that I think it was unfortunate that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the leader of the Conservative party did not during the election campaign do as the former Right Hon. Mackenzie King did and as the Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent did, and announce to the Canadian people during the campaign that they believed that members of parliament should have an increase in their indemnities and expense accounts. I think in that respect they failed to inform the people. I am firmly convinced that many members of this house cannot make ends meet on the present indemnity and allowance. I know as a result of discussions that various members, especially the younger members with families who are required to establish two residences and move their children backwards and forwards sometimes between their constituencies and Ottawa, have incurred very serious and in some cases quite large obligations. In fact, I was almost shocked to hear of the way a few members have got into debt as a result of becoming members of parliament and performing their functions as such. I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that there will be quite a number of bank managers in Canada who will give a sigh of relief when this legislation has been adopted by this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: I see that strikes a chord in the hearts of some members of the house.

After careful consideration of the question I have come to the conclusion that a total of $15,000 would be an adequate raise; that is to say, $10,000 indemnity and $5,000 expense allowance. I think there are members of all parties who thought that they would be fortunate even to get that amount. I am one who feels that there should always be an element of sacrifice on the part of those who enter any level of public life; otherwise being a member of parliament or a member of the legislature simply becomes a profession and the spirit and the willingness to serve is lost. I believe there is still a place for honour in this dollar-hungry materialistic world, an honour that prompts thousands of Canadians to serve without any thought of remuneration on school boards, hospital boards, irrigation district boards and in many other community organizations. It is very fortunate for us that we have these people who regard it as an honour, a privilege and a duty to serve their districts and their communities.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, and I am speaking frankly, this is a very generous increase, more than was expected, as I have said before, by some members of all parties of the house. In my opinion, to justify it we will have to do certain things. First of all, I think we will have to recognize from this point on that being a member of parliament is a full time vocation that presents a particular challenge under the circumstances of today. Second, Mr. Speaker, I believe that it should provide for an attendance regulation which will end the Thursday to Tuesday club, and I hope that the regulations are such that this will result. Third, this increase should make it possible for all members to employ a secretary in their riding during any recess of parliament. Members often require a secretary. Those of us who live in country ridings often have to travel for a week or so at a time, returning home without a secretary, having to pound away at the typewriter for several days, which has been my experience, and then leave on another trip without any opportunity for leisure, recreation and so on. Fourth, I think this generous increase will make it possible for all members of parliament to meet the normal and usual requests for donations to good causes without any financial discomfort. It provides a greater opportunity in that respect. Fifth, it does provide a glorious opportunity for those who do not require more than $15,000 to use the balance in support of worth-while community enterprises. I am sure there are some hon. members of the house quite willing to carry on with what is required here and to use any surplus they have to the advantage of the communities in which they live.

Sixth, I am very glad, Mr. Speaker, that the legislation will provide for a survivors' pension plan. I am sure we all have personal knowledge of widows of members of parliament being left in very difficult and unfortunate circumstances. I am pleased that a pension plan is being placed on a sound actuarial basis and that the means test on members' pensions is being removed. You know, Mr. Speaker, there are only two categories of persons under pension in Canada who are subject to a means test. The first are members of parliament, and the second the recipients of war veterans allowance. I hope and trust the removal of this means test from members' pensions points to a similar consideration being given to the recipients of war veterans allowance; and I see the Prime Minister is taking a great interest in what I have to say on this point.

Regardless of any difference of opinion as to the amount required to meet members' costs, living expenses and allowances, this increase can only be justified, in our opinion, if first we stand up for Canada as a free and independent nation with the right to develop its own foreign and defence policies. We are not a great military power but we can be a great moral force by giving leadership to all those nations who look to us for that leadership in the promotion of world peace through the strengthening of international organizations and responsibilities. Second, we must make certain that parliament provides every Canadian with a standard of living and the basic security to which a free industrious and independent people living in a land of plenty are entitled. Third, we must make certain to conserve our natural resources to the advantage of this and future generations of Canadians, including the surplus waters of the Columbia and the Kootenay rivers, which will be required by the Canadians who live in the Okanagan valley and on the prairies in the years ahead.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I say simply this: If we fail to do this, then by accepting this increase we shall be guilty of accepting money under false pretenses.

(Translation):

Mr. Jean-Louis Frenette (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief.

I am glad to take part in this debate as I wish to say, on behalf of our group, that we are happy of the offer which is being made to us today. To be honest, I feel it is in order to commend the Liberal party for the courage it has shown under the circumstances.

Mr. Speaker, the whips of the various parties agreed to support this bill when it would be introduced in the house. That is why I would not take kindly to anyone who would rise to speak against this legislation which is of the utmost importance on many points.

Members of the House of Commons should be well paid and, in my opinion, this fact should have been recognized a long time ago. I feel that the main argument in that respect is that more competent men will be attracted to politics and will thus participate in the conduct of the affairs of the country. Then, thanks to the increasing competence of the representatives of the people, we shall be in a position to make of Canada an even greater country, where each and every one will work together towards its development.

It has been pointed out, and it must be admitted, that public men have not always enjoyed the reputation they would have liked. This may be prejudicial to our chosen profession, but all the same, I believe that if members of parliament are well paid, they shall then be able to meet their obligations as heads of families and their duties as public men within society. With a more adequate income, members of parliament will be encouraged to be more honest in the performance of their duties.

It should also be mentioned that a sufficient income will enable many of us to give up the practice of a profession or the operation of a business which takes up a considerable part of their time and compels them to be too often away from the House of Commons.

We hear sometimes comments which are not always favourable to members, Mr. Speaker, especially by visitors attending the sittings of the house and who note with disappointment and dismay how empty is the house when very serious problems are under consideration. Well, I believe that the absence of many members is precisely due to the fact that they have to earn a living as it is impossible for them to meet their obligations on the salary they get as members of parliament. So, Mr. Speaker, I am happy to see that the members' salary will allow them from now on to provide duly for the needs of their families.

As the hon. member who preceded me was saying a moment ago, members of parliament are always requested to donate to various philanthropic institutions. Should there be some members among us who are opposed to the increase, they could always give that excess money to those philanthropic societies or institutions, or give it to the poor people in their constituency. They would thus acquire many friends who might prove useful during election campaigns.

Mr. Speaker, if fate has it that those who favour the increase in salary should be defeated for that very reason in the next election, they will be able to find some comfort in the thought that their successors will have a decent remuneration and be able to better discharge their duties, as they will be in a position to meet their obligations.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Pickersgill: Would you call the yeas and nays, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question? All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Pickersgill) which was agreed to on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Addison
Aiken
Alkenbrack
Armstrong
Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe)
Badanai
Balcer
Baldwin
Barnett
Basford
Batten
Bechard
Beer
Belanger
Bell
Berger
Bigg
Boulanger
Brewin
Brown
Byrne
Cadieux (Terrebonne)
Cameron (High Park)
Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Cantin
Cardiff
Cardin
Caron
Carter
Cashin
Casselman, Mrs.
Chatterton
Chevrier
Chretien
Churchill
Coates
Cooper
Côté (Chicoutimi)
Côté (Longueuil)
Crossman
Crouse
Cyr
Danforth
Davis
Deachman
Denis
Deschatelets
Doucett
Drury
Dube
Dupuis
Emard
Ethier
Eudes
Fairweather
Fane
Favreau
Fisher
Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke)
Flemming (Victoria-Carleton)
Forest
Forgie
Foy
Francis
Frenette
Garland
Gauthier
Gelber
Girouard
Godin
Gordon
Granger
Gray
Gregoire
Groos
Guay
Habel
Haidasz
Hales
Hamilton
Harkness
Harley
Hayes
Hellyer
Honey
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Irvine
Jewett, Miss
Jorgenson
Kelly
Kennedy
Klein
Knowles
Konantz, Mrs.
Korchinski
Lachance
Laing
LaMarsh, Miss
Lamb
Lambert
Lamontagne
Lamoureux
Laniel
Latulippe
Laverdiere
Leduc
Lessard (Lake St. John)
Lessard (St. Henry)
Lloyd
Loiselle
Loney
Macaluso
Macdonald
MacEachen
MacEwan
Mackasey
MacLean (Queens)
MacNaught
MacRae
McBain
McIlraith
McIntosh
McLean (Charlotte)
McMillan
McNulty
McWilliam
Madill
Martin (Essex East)
Martin (Timmins)
Martineau
Mather
Matheson
Matte
Millar
Mitchell
Monteith
More
Moreau
Morison
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Muir (Lisgar)
Mullally
Munro
Nesbitt
Nicholson
Nixon
Noble
Nowlan
Nugent
O'Keefe
Olson
Orlikow
Ouellet
Patterson
Paul
Pearson
Pennell
Pepin
Peters
Pickersgill
Pigeon
Pilon
Plourde
Prittie
Pugh
Regan
Rheaume
Ricard
Richard
Rideout
Rinfret
Roxburgh
Ryan
Sauve
Scott
Simpson
Southam
Starr
Stefanson
Stenson
Stewart
Tardif
Teillet
Temple
Thompson
Tremblay
Tucker
Valade
Vincent
Wahn
Walker
Watson (Assiniboia)
Webb
Webster
Weichel
Whelan
Willoughby
Winch
Winkler
Woolliams—200.

Division

NAYS

Messrs:

Caouette	Horner (The Battlefords)
Clancy	Langlois
Diefenbaker	Nasserden
Dionne	Pascoe
Gundlock	Rapp—10.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Speaker, I have a long-standing pair with the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace (Mr. Asselin). Had I voted I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

The Chairman: It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

On clause 1.

(Translation):

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, we notice the following amendment in section 1 of the bill now before the house:

This amendment increases the sessional indemnity of members of the Senate and of the House of Commons from $8,000 to $12,000. The proposed increase is payable from April 8, 1963.

This afternoon, I voted against this raise of the parliamentary indemnity because I stated several times in this house and outside that we are not against the principle of the bill—we are in favour of it—but that we would prefer to begin with to see an increase in the family allowances in Canada, after which we would accept an increase in the members' indemnity.

I am the first to recognize that with an indemnity of $10,000 a year, once the income tax is taken off, when a member has a family to support at home and expenses to pay here in Ottawa, it is important that he should get a reasonable indemnity. But this increase of the parliamentary indemnity could have come after an increase of the family allowances.

A few days ago, they were talking about increasing old age pensions for the year 1964. Now, they are asking today for an increase in the members' indemnity from April 8, 1963. Yet, our older citizens, just as our family heads, in our province and all across Canada also need an increase in their revenue. Everyone has to face the same problem, the lack of money, as the hon. members.

When we tell our electors that we came here to represent them, it does not necessarily mean that we came here to vote ourselves a raise in pay. It should be pointed out that the Liberals remember what they promised, because they promised heaven on earth. However, those same Liberals never told their electors that they were going to increase their sessional allowances.

An hon. Member: Yes, Mr. Caouette.

Mr. Caouette: You told the electors just the opposite.

Mr. Chairman, such was the stand we took, and I feel it is urgent, and important, that the house should adopt, for example, a measure which instead of saying:

The proposed increase is to be made payable from April 8, 1963, would provide that the proposed increase be made payable from the time family allowances have been increased in Canada.

Let us increase family allowances from April 8, and I shall support this bill 100 per cent.

It is odd that they cannot find the necessary money for the families of our ridings and that, on the other hand, they find enough to raise the members' salaries.

They will find the money required to increase the old age pension only next year, but not this year. Then, they take offence if somebody votes against this measure.

The member for Villeneuve will probably be called a demagogue, as my friend for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) is wont to call him.

An hon. Member: He has not been here since that time.

Mr. Caouette: That is it, he has not been here since that time. Mr. Chairman, there is no question here of being a demagogue or of raising the passions of the people; absolutely not. The point at issue is to appreciate the population's needs. And family allowances are precisely the means by which every single human being can be reached throughout Canada.

Mr. Boulanger: Who gave family allowances in the past?

Mr. Caouette: In reply to my friend from Mercier, (Mr. Boulanger), the Liberal party, in 1945.

However, we had also asked the Liberal party to increase family allowances, and they agreed, in 1953, to increase them by $1 a month—

The Chairman: Order. I apologize to the hon. member for Villeneuve for interrupting him but I feel it is my duty to remind him that the principle on which this bill is based has passed second reading. In consequence, a member is not allowed to start a new debate on the principle which has been agreed to, and the hon. member is well aware of that. Hon. members must restrict themselves to the clause now under consideration.

Mr. Caouette: Thank you, Mr. Chairman, I will keep to the principle of the bill. And I would ask my hon. friends on the government side not to lead me into another field where they might trip themselves.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I will not spend more time on the principle of this bill. I only wanted to explain my point of view and the stand I took this afternoon when the question was put. I had to vote against this bill authorizing an increase in the members' indemnity, not because I do not need the money, because I do as much as any member in this house, but because, in my opinion, we must first look after the families, the old people, the disabled, the veterans; afterwards, we can think about increasing the members' indemnity.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, first I should like to say that I am happy to see here today the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). I should like also to congratulate him for the courageous stand that he took in the course of this debate. It was according to his conscience and under the democratic rights of the house that he voted against the motion before the second reading of this bill.

Personally, according to my own conscience and under the democratic principles of the house, I supported this bill. This means that, in our party, we respect the freedom of speech, the freedom of thought and that we respect also this democratic freedom.

An hon. Member: The fight is on.

Mr. Gregoire: There is no fight at all. If I ever had any admiration for the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), it is indeed on this occasion, because I realize the stand he took on that matter and I challenge any member to act with as much sincerity. Those are his ideas and his opinion.

I do not think that the hon. member who just made that remark would have shown the same courage as the member for Villeneuve. Besides, all Liberal members gave the impression that they were subservient and cringing before their leader. Things are different in our party, and that is why I am proud to be a Social Crediter and I am proud of our deputy leader.

The Chairman: I would ask the hon. member to come back to the discussion of this bill.

Mr. Gregoire: I wish to point out that if there was not always a young smart alec of the Liberal party trying to make us drift from the subject—

Mr. Laniel: May I ask a question, Mr. Chairman? Can the hon. member for Lapointe tell us whether the hon. member for Villeneuve has expressed his opinion about the amount? We are not yet on third reading, we are discussing the details of the bill. I understand that the hon. member for Villeneuve, according to what he just said, is personally in favour of $18,000—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member asked permission to put a question and not to make a speech. I see that he has now finished his comments.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, such is not the matter now under discussion. It would be better for the hon. member to stay quiet and remain seated if he has only questions of that kind to ask. It is inconceivable that such a question should be directed to the hon. member for Villeneuve. The hon. member who asked it does not know him. Otherwise, he would realize that the member for Villeneuve is so broadminded that he would not forgo principles for any amount of money.

I voted in favour of the bill this afternoon but I must tell you this. Previously I asked the advice of my organizer and of my constituents. I am but a private member who represents his riding; it is in that capacity that I went to see my organizers and asked them what they thought of an increase in members' allowances. They told me that I, Gilles Gregoire, member for Lapointe, surely deserved an increase. I cannot assure you that your constituents would tell you the same thing but that is what my constituents said to me. That is why, Mr. Chairman, I felt free to vote in favour of the bill in spite of what may have been said in the past. It was said this afternoon that it was contrary to British tradition to pay an additional amount to each opposition party leader in the House of Commons—other than the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition—who has at least 12 recognized members in the house. If this is said to be contrary to British tradition, I find it somewhat odd. To my mind, the Leader of the Opposition did not think it over long enough. If some Canadian voters think fit not to support either of the two old parties, it is their democratic right. If some voters decide to send a third and fourth political party with leaders to the house, those leaders will have from then on, added expenses and additional responsibilities. Now, I think that the item included in the bill is fully justified, the more so because this year fortunately we have leaders of a second and third opposition parties, as the leader of the official opposition does not do his job and is lost in old time theories. The leader of the official opposition is very remote from the business of the house; he is lost in obsolete concepts; he is a has-been. Fortunately, we have the leaders of the second and third opposition parties, and I commend this government for having thought fit to grant them an additional amount.

Mr. Chairman, I do not want to linger over section 1, but I want to stress that I voted for the principle of the bill, because considering all the time we members spend in Ottawa now that sessions last most of the year, and the expense caused by our stay in Ottawa—considering also that some federal civil servants' salary is five times as high, for instance the president of the C.N.R. who gets $75,000 a year only to show an annual deficit of $65 million at the end of the year, then, I say that we who are here trying to avoid any deficit, even if we experience great difficulty with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) should be entitled to higher sessional allowances.

Before voting in favour of the bill, I obtained the assent of my voters and organizers. That is why I thought free to vote in favour of the principle of the bill.

(Text):

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word or two on clause 1. I believe completely in the principle of the bill. I think something should be done, but I reserve the right to criticize individual clauses, to discuss individual clauses, to examine them closely, and to ask questions of the minister who is piloting the bill through the house. Some rather irrelevant points have been made tonight by the two previous speakers, but I do not intend to go into them; I am speaking about this particular bill only. The previous speeches in connection with family allowances, and so on, have some merit, and also my leader this afternoon pointed out, although this is somewhat irrelevant, that there was a certain implied promise to the elder citizens of this country. I should like to ask one simple question on clause 1. Why is the bill made retroactive to April 8, 1963?

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman would look back at the debate which took place when the remuneration of members of parliament was last dealt with in 1954, he will see that a change was made at that time from the old system of sessional indemnities, in the course of which on some occasions two indemnities were paid in a single session, a fact which began to raise questions in some minds. I do not want to go into a whole lot of ancient history but it was felt better at that time to base these indemnities on an annual basis and to date the payment of the indemnity from the day of the election. Never yet having been defeated I had not had occasion until recently, to find out whether the new member or the old member was paid for election day, but I was advised by the officials when I was helping to prepare this bill that the defeated member does not get paid for election day; it is the successful one who does.

In order to simplify the measure—this is the same answer as Mr. St. Laurent gave in 1954—it was felt it would be better to take it from the day of the election, which is the date from which the indemnities and expense allowances are claimed. It did not appear to us that this was seriously retroactive since it would apply only to the present parliament. It would also make very much easier the transitional phase of the pensions because a fundamentally new pension scheme is incorporated in this bill, and to have calculated the days between June 1 and August 1 on the old basis and the others on the new basis would have been a complex matter though not necessarily, of course, an impossible one.

Mr. Monteith: Why June? You mean April.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sorry; I have the months mixed up.

Mr. Nowlan: You were thinking of another June a year ago.

Mr. Pickersgill: That was the 10th. I remember it, as I am sure do most hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. Nesbitt: I wonder if the minister can give us some explanation how the figure of $12,000 per annum was arrived at.

Mr. Pickersgill: These things are, of course, to a certain extent, arbitrary. In 1920, the prime minister of that day, Sir Robert Borden, as we have been reminded this afternoon, suggested that the indemnity be increased from $2,500 to $4,000. In 1954, it was increased from $4,000 to $8,000 and it was felt that the sum now proposed would be a reasonably proportionate increase.

If I may go a little beyond this clause, it was felt by the government that a certain amount of the remuneration should be taken in the form of an allowance which is taxable, and a certain amount in the form of a payment in lieu of expenses which we all know we have, and which never enter into the income of our families at all. To arrive at a certain figure there had to be a division between these two. I would be dishonest if I tried to pretend that a lot of careful and mathematical calculation went into this.

Mr. Monteith: Like the Canada pension plan.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think the analogy is really accurate. Not so long ago, a good many of us were over there—

Mr. Churchill: You are on your way back, too.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I doubt it after today. But I must not allow myself to be diverted by the genial member for Winnipeg South Centre. It seemed reasonable to fix this figure and I feel I could not really add to that, even if I went on talking for a long time.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—Deductions for non-attendance.

Mr. Thompson: It has been said this afternoon that one of the basic reasons for this increase is because the previous remuneration did not cover the expenditure which had to be incurred by hon. members and still leave a sufficient amount for family expenses. As a result, many members found it necessary to carry on other forms of gainful occupation in order to meet their expenses, and all too often this has resulted in many absences from the house. I would say that this increased remuneration brings with it an increased responsibility to make sure we do spend our time in this House of Commons as those who elected us expect us to do.

I do not like to think in terms of discipline, but I think it would do a measure of good if there could be brought back into the operation of this house some attendance check. Perhaps this could not be done in the bill itself. I do not think such a thing has ever been done before, or that it would be entirely proper to do so now, but I would suggest to the minister that it would be an important expression of good faith from those of us who are members of parliament to subject ourselves to the discipline of indicating that we have been in attendance. It seems reasonable that we might give this expression of good faith not only to our electors but to ourselves, collectively, since we have this responsibility together.

Mr. Knowles: This clause, taken with a later clause, has the effect of raising the amount which a member has deducted from his remuneration when his absence exceeds 21 days in the session. The total would now be $120 for each such day and I am sure we all agree that taking into account such a generous allowance, namely 21 days absence during which no deduction is suffered, this is a proper figure.

I would like to endorse what the hon. member for Red Deer has said, namely that with the kind of remuneration we will now receive we should take more seriously than we have sometimes, perhaps, in the past, our responsibility to be here. I agree that this is not the kind of thing to put in a bill but I would offer two suggestions. First we might consider this matter in the special committee on procedure, whenever that is established. Even in the other place they have a form of roll call. The attendances are kept and recorded in each day's Minutes of Proceedings of that other unmentionable place. The other suggestion is that perhaps this is a matter for discipline within each of our party organizations. I do not think it is my place to stand here and preach to members of other groups, but I can tell the members of my own party that as party whip, the whip will crack a lot more after this.

Mr. Churchill: I did not wish to intervene in this debate and I should not have done so but for the remarks made by the hon. member for Red Deer and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. The difficulty in parliament is that if one does not rise and state an objection, people say, subsequently, that nobody was opposed to it. I stake out a claim right now against the proposition put forward by the hon. member for Red Deer and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and I will fight them on it in the rules committee if it is ever set up.

I have heard it said often in the past that members must answer a roll call in the House of Commons to let everyone know that they are in attendance. I have spent a great deal of my life under discipline of one sort or another, whether in school or in the army, and I react strongly against suggestions that there should be this type of discipline for members of parliament. This is an institution unique in this country and if members do not have a sense of responsibility, their constituents will soon discover it and they will retire them, as has happened to so many people who were in this chamber.

Mr. Woolliams: And they do it so graciously.

Mr. Churchill: Yes, and they tell you afterwards how sorry they are that they had to vote against you. There is no use raising the example of the other place. The very fact that there is an attendance roll there is never held up as an instance of the achievements of that honourable institution, and I am finding no fault with it at all.

Mr. Nowlan: They have not got the discipline of an election either.

Mr. Churchill: Like other members of parliament, perhaps if I ended up in the other place I would gladly sign the roll, but nevertheless let us not hold that up as an example of what should be done here. I firmly believe in the parliamentary system. I believe in the responsibility of the member of parliament to his constituents and I believe in the good common sense of the voters of this country to retain in the house those people who they believe will perform their duties properly for the constituency and for the country. Therefore I reject completely any nonsense about a roll call or being subjected to as is the army to a sergeant's check of a platoon.

Mr. Knowles: Will my colleague permit a question?

Mr. Churchill: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Does my friend from Winnipeg South Centre take the same attitude toward the fact that we have to sign an affidavit at the end of every month stating whether or not we were present? Is that not a form of discipline?

Mr. Churchill: That is all right, and there is a penalty here in the bill. If people are not diligent in their attendance they pay a certain penalty. But the suggestion of a daily roll call for mature people who are members of parliament is to my way of thinking a bit of nonsense. In any case, if you have a daily roll call there are ways and means of evading this responsibility. I do not suggest that anybody in the present parliament would do so, but a person could be in attendance for a roll call and absent for the rest of the day. That is not a solution to the maintenance of this institution.

In any case, and finally because I do not want to prolong the debate, I am just giving notice that I will oppose such a suggestion in the future if it comes up again under the proper circumstances. This institution has survived for a good hundred years, and its predecessor before that, without a roll call and without harm to the people of Canada, and I think it can go on for another 100 or even 300 years without the necessity of imposing that type of restraint upon responsible members of parliament.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I am glad that the house leader of the official opposition has stated his position because I must say I find it very difficult to see any merit in it at all. I can remember going to the accounts office, as I am sure many other hon. members have done—this occurred not after I had been here a few weeks or a few months but after I had been here three or four years—and asking the accountant who a certain gentleman was and being informed that he was the member for such and such a riding. Yet I had never seen him. I am sure there are other occasions when members, after having been here for six or eight months or a year, will look around and wonder who the member is sitting in a particular seat and think that it would be a good opportunity to rise and say that there is a stranger in the house.

An hon. Member: Who are you?

Mr. Woolliams: Raise a point of privilege.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, with the remuneration we previously received I was quite happy in seeking election on a number of occasions to declare my attendance in the house and I have always been happy to do so. I know there are those in the house who know much more about legislation than I do, and who will say that you cannot write these things into a bill. Maybe we should not have put any amount of money in the bill either. Maybe we should have left these things up in the air. Then if the accountant found that the money in the treasury was sufficient to give us a certain amount that could then be done. However, it has not been thought right to do that and I do not think there are many members who would support a proposition of that kind.

I do think we have an obligation to the country at least to provide a record of attendance in the house although I admit at times members may be somewhere else for legitimate reasons. There are members who have said over the years that they have had to supplement their incomes elsewhere, and I think this may have been true. It is quite true that some have a higher standard of living than others and if you become accustomed to a certain standard of living it is not very pleasant to have to reduce it. Being a member of parliament certainly has meant a reduction in the standard of living of many people, even a reduction in my standard of living as a trade union representative, because I believe my take-home pay here is less than what I received in that job. If this is true in my case, I am sure there are many professions where the difference is greater. Therefore someone would say, perhaps legitimately, that he could not be here on Monday because he had to be in his office and he might also say that he could not be here on Tuesday, Thursday and Friday because he had to be in his office.

There may be some justification for that; but if we pass a bill of this type providing fair and reasonable remuneration, then we also have an obligation to the country to show that there is some method of recording attendance. I have heard the former prime minister, the member for Prince Albert, say on several occasions that there should be no restrictions placed on a member so long as he could say that he was working in the interests of his constituents, and that he could be doing so either in Ottawa or in his riding. With that I agree, but this is where I think a problem will arise.

I was given the opportunity of addressing a meeting the other day that involved many of the representatives of the municipalities in my riding. The problem concerned me and I was asked to discuss these matters with them. I would think I did so in my capacity as their representative in parliament. It is probably true that I was in my riding when certain bills were being dealt with here that I should have been present to discuss, but I think there are times when matters are being dealt with in your riding that are as much your responsibility as your duties in the House of Commons. I think that is where the dilemma will arise.

It is difficult for me to decide whether he should be at a fall fair or at the opening of a bridge or in the House of Commons. I think this is where the member's own responsibility and integrity will come into the picture, when he makes a decision as to where he is going to be. In my view there can be no objection to a roll call. I have been associated with many organizations where there was a roll call of the officers at every meeting. Every officer was not always present, but quite often someone would rise and say that brother so and so is not here because he is at work or attending to something else. Honest, legitimate reasons were given for his not being there. I do not know how we can arrive at that in the House of Commons. If the 21 days are tied to the roll call it may be that that would be unfair. We are very stupid in devising solutions for something that does not appear to be obviously easy, and so we may have difficulty in arriving at a solution in this regard.

But, Mr. Chairman, I think we have an obligation to the country and to parliament itself to ensure that attendance in the house is maintained. It really is no joke when you hear the expression "T to T boys". I think it is a disgrace to parliament and it has only been justified by the fact that many members were unable to carry out their responsibilities with the remuneration they received.

In making their recommendation I believe that the government has considered the job of a member of parliament to be a full time one, and therefore the representatives of the people should be prepared to give at least the major part of their time to the duties that have fallen upon them as a result of being elected to parliament. I believe that we must arrive at a much better method than this one of signing an affidavit. I am sure some members know of other members who have been signing these affidavits under what would be considered elsewhere to be dubious circumstances.

I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this matter will be given consideration. I would particularly urge that the minister piloting this legislation try to insert something in clause 2 that would strengthen the interpretation of public and official business. I feel that each member will represent his constituency in a different manner from that of his fellow members even in the same party. I hope it will not be left to the whips themselves to police this provision because that will cause a great deal of dissension. I do think that they will strengthen public support for the institution of parliament, and support that will be necessary to those members participating in this debate if they wish to return to this house, if we give the public assurance that we have provided the necessary safeguards to ensure active attendance in this place.

Mr. Monteith: I do not intend to prolong the debate on this clause. I gather, however, from the remarks of the hon. member who has just spoken that he is in favour of regimenting everybody and everything. I could not agree more with the remarks of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre in this respect.

I should like to ask a question, however. Apparently clause 2 which amends section 36, contains words referring to a member who does not attend a sitting of the house of which he is a member because of public or official business. I am asking for clarification of this, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand that for a number of years now there have been appropriations made to cover this kind of thing, that is attendance at United Nations, going to NATO and various things of this sort.

Mr. Monteith: The member mentioned a fair in his riding.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I would not think that would come within the terms of this clause. I think it would cover something to which the member goes as a representative of the government or the House of Commons; that is my understanding. This has been covered by an item in the estimates, and it was thought when we were amending the act we should bring it up to date.

Mr. Nasserden: I was going to bring up that point, because I believe there are times when a member of parliament's attendance at some function in his riding is just as important as his attendance here in the House of Commons. There have been times when I have read the affidavit we have to make and I have wondered just what we are signing. I have wondered whether it includes such particular things. I would not try to convince the Secretary of State, but there are times when a person should be in his riding at some of these functions, and that would be just as important in terms of fulfilling his duties as being here in the House of Commons.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would consider, sir, when we are allowed 21 days before this clause is effective, that would be sufficient. I think I am about as assiduous a representative of my constituency as anyone, but I believe there could not be 21 fall fairs, even in the Rosthern constituency, so important that the hon. gentleman would have to attend.

Mr. Patterson: I should like to ask the Secretary of State if he could tell us the relative length of the session at the time this 21 days absence was set. Were the sessions at that time as long as they are now? Has there been any increase from the original figure that was set concerning days absent? Just what is the relative position?

Mr. Knowles: It was changed in 1954 from 15 days to 21 days.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am speaking from memory, but my recollection is it was 15 days when I was elected to parliament in 1953. It was changed to 21 days at that time because it was thought the sessions were getting a little longer. They have been getting a lot longer since 1954, and I hope that has nothing to do with my being in the house. I think 21 was about in proportion to the increased length over the period when 15 days was set. The government, at the present time, is not suggesting that 21 should be changed.

Mr. Thomas: I should like to say a word about this public service provision. Those who live a long distance from Ottawa cannot get home to a fall fair within a day, whereas those who live close to Ottawa can take a half day off, spend part of the time in parliament and still attend the fair. Those of us who live in the area of West Middlesex must be absent a whole day to attend a fall fair, unless we fly both ways.

Now, I believe these circumstances make a difference in the manner in which this particular clause should be interpreted. I know the people in most of these constituencies do like to see their member come into the constituency to attend these functions. They invite the member to do that. If we are going to limit this provision to 21 days, I know from my own experience that 21 days will not begin to cover the events to which a member in that area is invited. I think it is much better to leave the interpretation of those words "public business" to the member. I know when I am conducting public business or when I am acting in my own interests. I think a member should be allowed reasonable leeway in making an interpretation of that term "public business".

Mr. Nesbitt: I should like to say a word about the interpretation of this particular clause relating to public or official business. If a person is a member on the government side of the house, he often has to represent the government at one place or another. Nobody would argue about that. Members of opposition parties, all three of them in this case, are invited to attend functions, whether they are fall fairs or hearing representations from labour groups or manufacturers groups. The reason you are invited is that you are a member of parliament for the area. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that in those cases such attendance would be interpreted as attendance on public business. It is quite clear that you would not be invited unless you were the elected representative. I think there is some need for clarification in connection with this matter, and I hope the Secretary of State will provide it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the simplest thing I can say is that, although this provision has not been in the statute before, it has been in the appropriations for several years. I do not think there is any thought of changing the interpretation that has prevailed up to now.

Mr. Nesbitt: Is the interpretation I have suggested one with which the Secretary of State would substantially agree?

Mr. Pickersgill: I have never had to do the interpreting, and I hope I never have to do so.

Mr. Pigeon: If a member of parliament were sick for one, two or three years I hope the government would not charge him $60 a day after this first period?

Mr. Pickersgill: I understand you can be sick as long as you like.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not want to prolong this too much, but I feel some of the hon. members have laboured the question of attendance too heavily. I have often wondered whether members of parliament should not think as businessmen. Being a businessman does not necessarily mean sitting at a desk acquiescing in what might be done or acquiescing in what is not being done. That situation may arise, but I am not suggesting that a person could hold a seat in the House of Commons for any number of years by doing that. The measure of a member should be the responsibility he takes, and his accomplishments. These are more important than actual physical attendance, and if an hon. member can accomplish something on the broad scale for his country, his province or his constituency, then he is doing a good job.

A second thought which occurs to me is that asking the Secretary of State for an interpretation is putting him on the spot, because all our statutes are interpreted by the judiciary, whose function that is. If we are to get into a dispute of what public business means it will have to be determined by a higher body than the House of Commons or the Secretary of State.

Mr. Winch: In view of what has been said during the last few minutes I think we have to be very careful in considering this. I have been here 10 years, sir, and upon occasion I meet people and discover they are members of the house, but I cannot remember ever having seen them here.

I come from Vancouver and that is a long way from Ottawa. I say our job is here, and this allowance of 21 days before an hon. member is fined for not being here, is about right. If you cannot do it in 21 days you are not on public business; you are campaigning, and you yourself know it.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Travelling expenses.

Mr. Knowles: I would like to say a brief word on this clause. I am glad to see that what was provided for in the estimates of 1931 is at last being written into our statutes, in what I think is the proper place. I am referring to the provision of a motor vehicle allowance for members of the cabinet.

Some of us have been here a long time and know that this matter has been discussed on previous occasions, as to whether it was proper to carry it forward from an item which Mr. Bennett put in the estimates in 1931. It is now put in this statute where it belongs.

Mr. Monteith: Maybe the minister would explain how this is going to operate—this new motor vehicle allowance for the Senate, House of Commons, ministers and so on.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is absolutely nothing new whatsoever. It is, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, transferring it from the appropriation account of 1931, where it has been all these years, into this statute where it ought to be. I am of course referring to subsection 2, but with regard to subsection 1 perhaps the hon. member for Perth would like to say something first, because I may want one of my colleagues to propose a small amendment. It concerns something which was drawn to my attention since the bill was introduced this afternoon.

Mr. Monteith: You go ahead.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to ask my colleague, the Minister of Finance, to move that clause 4 of the bill be amended by adding thereto, immediately after the word "residence" in line 42 thereof, the words "or his constituency."

Mr. Gordon: I move:

That clause 4 of the said bill be amended by adding thereto, immediately after the word "residence" in line 42 thereof, the words "or his constituency."

Mr. Pickersgill: I may say, sir, that it has been drawn to my attention that there might be some question about the residences of certain hon. members from the point of view of what is intended in this clause, and perhaps one of these hon. members would be the member for Bonavista-Twillingate. It is really intended that the travelling expenses should provide for travel between Ottawa and their constituencies. This might be interpreted in a narrow sense without the amendment. I do not know precisely what the law would say about "residence," and there are one or two hon. members who actually do not have residences in their constituencies but who are re-elected pretty regularly. In fact I am sure that those who do not live in their constituencies have all the more need to travel to them.

Mr. Monteith: I am quite happy to accept the amendment suggested, but with regard to subsection (1) I am a little concerned about the phrase:

> —and such actual telecommunication expenses incurred while in Ottawa, as each house may by order prescribe for its own members.

We all have certain telephone calls coming in collect, and we have to accept that type of thing. We also must, of necessity, make telephone calls elsewhere; but I feel there should be some indication of the lines that should be followed in setting these amounts. I am not suggesting anybody will overdo the matter, but there should be some limit.

Mr. Pickersgill: I imagine the initiative would be taken by the commissioners of internal economy, and they would make a suggestion to the house which would have to be approved by the house. It was represented to the government by a number of hon. members in all parts of the house that for a member, say, from Vancouver, the problem of telecommunications was very different from that of a member, say, from Russell, who at most might have to pay 20 cents to call some place in his constituency.

There is a real inequality there, and it is my hope that the commissioners of internal economy will act in a thoroughly responsible manner, and that there will be no abuse whatsoever of a provision that is really meant to take into account the vast extent of our country and the inevitable inequalities between those who represent constituencies a long way from Ottawa and those who represent constituencies nearby.

Mr. Thompson: One of the most difficult inequalities for hon. members arises over the question of distance. The travelling expenses for hon. members living in St. John's or Victoria are certainly very different from those who live in Ottawa, Toronto or Montreal. This likewise applies to telecommunications, and one of the fairest aspects of this legislation is this very thing which is being suggested with respect to transportation and telecommunications. I would suggest to the minister that if this could be applied in terms of usage rather than in terms of dollars it would be much more equitable.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): As the provision now stands the motor vehicle allowance paid to ministers is $2,000, which is not taxable income, and I think it is only proper that it be placed in this statute where it should be. Under the act as it now stands it was recognized, apparently that ministers of the crown should receive an automobile allowance which was untaxable. In addition to that, since they are on government business a great deal of their time rather than on constituency business, there is an allowance for the expenses they incur while on government business. It was felt, apparently, that in the case of the $2,000 expense allowance for members of parliament who are also ministers of the crown, this amount should be taxable. I notice this is being eliminated from the act and I would appreciate it if the Secretary of State would give an explanation as to why it is considered that this past conclusion is no longer valid.

Mr. Pickersgill: The government did give a good deal of consideration to the point raised by the hon. member for Queens. It was felt that there was no less expense to a minister of the crown than there was to any other hon. member in representing his constituency, and probably rather more because of the fact that he did have to spend, necessarily, so much of his time, even when parliament was in session, in Ottawa, and that this was not a very equitable provision of the law.

The hon. member for Queens will remember that last time the remuneration was changed there was an increase in the salary of the prime minister and in the salaries of ministers, and no such proposal is being suggested at the present time, notwithstanding the fact that ministers' salaries are just as much out of line with other remuneration as are members' indemnities. But the government has no thought and no suggestion of proposing any changes in them whatever at the present time. However, it was thought that what seemed to be in a way a discrimination against ministers of the crown and against the Leader of the Opposition, who is also elected in a constituency—and against the Speaker as well, I believe—should be changed and this disparity reduced.

Mr. Monteith: Then am I to understand that in the future ministers of the crown are going to receive a total of $8,000 tax free?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, that would be correct.

Mr. Monteith: A private member receives only $6,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: I beg the hon. member's pardon?

Mr. Monteith: I was replying to the undercover remark of the hon. member for Niagara Falls.

Mr. Pickersgill: Of course, the $2,000 which was appropriated in 1931 for an indefinite period thereafter is not being changed in any way.

Mr. Monteith: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is being continued as it was.

Mr. Monteith: Am I to understand, however, that the private member receives $6,000 under this proposed clause, tax free, and a minister of the crown actually receives a total of $8,000?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is correct.

Mr. Willoughby: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the Secretary of State, in connection with clause 4 (1), whether he would clarify for me the interpretation of the term "actual moving". Does it mean household goods in that case?

Mr. Pickersgill: I may say to the hon. member for Kamloops that the language in subclause 1 is exactly the same as it has always been except for the words that are underlined. The words "travelling expenses" and the reference to telecommunications are the only new part. I am advised that whatever has been done in the past with respect to moving or transportation will continue to be done. Nothing new is being imported into the act because of the amendments.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I would like to have an explanation from the Secretary of State in connection with clause 4 (1). In the French translation of the act up to this time there has been included the phrase "une fois l'année au retour", but this does not appear in the new clause. Does it mean that a member will have his travelling expenses paid to go to his constituency every week end or so?

Mr. Pickersgill: The actual number of times that it would be possible to have this privilege or right, or whatever one likes to call it, would be determined by each house separately; that would be determined by the house itself. At the present time, under an arrangement that was made by the previous administration and proposed in this house by a former minister of transport, I think there are three occasions, or something like that, in addition to—

An hon. Member: It is four at present.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am not even sure what the number is, but there is a certain number. They are determined by the house; they are not in the legislation. The same practice would be followed hereafter; the commissioners of internal economy will make a recommendation to the house, which will be accepted or rejected.

(Translation):

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I feel that an interesting suggestion could be made to the government on that point. It has often been said that we discuss legislation in this house but that we have not enough contacts with our constituents. Does the Secretary of State not think that it would be advisable to provide members with airplane passes between Ottawa and their ridings so that they could keep in closer touch with their electors?

For instance, Mr. Chairman, when I visit my constituency, which is situated in the Saguenay-Lake St. John district, I must leave the capital on Friday afternoon at ten minutes to five and I get home only the next morning at nine o'clock, after having spent a rather uncomfortable night because the railway is in a pitiful condition in that area. So, on Saturday, I have to spend the whole day at my office and then get ready to come back at a time which is not too convenient. Travelling in such a way, I am only able to sleep at home one night out of three. So if members who live some distance from Ottawa had the privilege of free travel aboard planes, it would be possible for them to leave Friday evening at six o'clock and to get to their constituency that same night. They could then sleep at least two nights at home and they would have two full days to devote to their electors.

As for me, at the present time, I am in contact with my electors only every fortnight, and that after having spent two nights on the train and not to mention the work I have to do right here. You will understand that such a schedule is rather tough, especially with sessions as long as they are now.

So I wonder whether the Secretary of State would consider the possibility of supplying especially those members who live rather far from Ottawa with a pass to travel by air.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: I may say, sir, that is precisely the object of the amendment.

Mr. Rheaume: Mr. Chairman, when the Secretary of State is considering these things I would ask him to consider that there is, as he is undoubtedly aware, a special problem with the Northwest Territories in that at the present time Trans-Canada Air Lines dumps me off approximately 600 miles south of my constituency if I happen to be travelling west, and quite often the member for the Northwest Territories also has to travel east to Montreal to get to the constituency, which as some hon. members may know is, at its easternmost point, east of the city of Halifax. I wonder whether this will be considered at the time air transportation is being considered.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, the amendment that my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has just proposed and which the committee has just accepted will take care of precisely the case of the hon. member for the Northwest Territories, which certainly should be taken care of because I think we all recognize that he has perhaps the most difficult problem of all, although not much more difficult than the problem of my hon. friend from Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, before we pass this clause I would like to have one clarification. At the end of the old section 44, subsection 4, as appears on the right hand side of page 3 of the bill, it refers to ministers of the House of Commons and members of the Senate. Does this mean there will be a certain amount of tax free money for the members of the other place?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that is a correct interpretation.

Mr. Monteith: How much is this going to be?

Mr. Pickersgill: The allowance proposed for members of the Senate is half of that proposed for members of the House of Commons.

Mr. Monteith: That is going to be tax free?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Monteith: Was the $2,000 car allowance they received an expense?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think the senators—

Mr. Monteith: It was taxable before?

Mr. Pickersgill: The senators do not receive a car allowance.

Mr. Monteith: They just receive a straight indemnity of $10,000 which was all taxable?

Mr. Pickersgill: The remuneration of senators under the present law is $8,000 sessional indemnity plus $2,000 so-called expense allowance which is taxable.

[Mr. Rheaume.]

Mr. Monteith: And in future, as I understand it, it will be $12,000 plus $3,000 which is not taxable?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, that is right, and this is half that proposed for the hon. members of this house.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 4 as amended agreed to.

On clause 5.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, there is rather a lot of technical language here and we have not had much opportunity to study the bill. We had an hour over dinner time to have a sandwich, although some of us did not get that opportunity. Would the minister outline in brief form the new pension scheme?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I could do that, and I think the suggestion of the hon. member for Perth is a good one. As I am not an expert and do not claim to be one on these matters, I hope hon. members will forgive me if I hesitate a little and get a little prompting from time to time.

Mr. Monteith: We expect that.

Mr. Pickersgill: As hon. members know, the pension at the present time is, as I understand it, based upon a contribution from members of 6 per cent of one half their sessional indemnity; that is to say, of the $4,000 which has been the sessional indemnity since 1920. The maximum pension available is three quarters of that indemnity, or $3,000, which is arrived at after about 16 or 17 years; in any event, it is longer than I have been here. There is no pension for widows. The pension is reduced by the amount of the old age pension for anyone receiving the old age pension after the age of 70. It is proposed for all members of the house with respect to the pension with which they have paid before April 8 that they will have three options. They can either freeze the benefits they have earned up to now just as they are for themselves alone—

Mr. Southam: That would be hard on the widows.

Mr. Pickersgill: The other two are not so hard on the widows. In the second place they can convert the benefits they have earned up to now, so that there is a survivor clause in it, without paying any additional money; so that instead of getting three quarters the pensioner would get five twelfths of his contribution as a pension and his widow would get three twelfths.

Mr. Crouse: Three fifths.

Mr. Pickersgill: Three fifths of his or three twelfths of the whole. I am advised by the experts that that arithmetic is correct.

Mr. Woolliams: Is not three twelfths one quarter?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes. The hon. member for Bow River is better with lassoos than I am and I suggest he let me do my arithmetic slowly by myself. Then instead of freezing his benefits under the one way or the other a member has a third option, and any of these options can be exercised within a year. The third option is to pay the contribution with interest on the other $4,000 indemnity since 1954, or any part of the period since 1954 when he was a member. If he does that he can double the benefits he would get for the period since 1954, but he can only do it for a survivor pension; he cannot do it for himself alone.

Mr. Monteith: Just one brief question arising out of that. Under the third option he can double his own pension, and would that automatically include his wife?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes. He will get only five twelfths instead of three quarters.

An hon. Member: What if he is a bachelor?

Mr. Pickersgill: Then presumably he would not be very much interested in worrying about his wife.

Mr. Monteith: It is five twelfths of the increased amount?

Mr. Pickersgill: Of the whole amount. If a member chooses to augment the pension he earned before April 8, the whole amount must be converted into a survivor pension; that is, what he has now and any augmentation.

They are the three alternatives as far as the past is concerned. From now on a member will be obliged to contribute 6 per cent of $12,000, or $720. That contribution will go on as long as he is a member. The maximum pension he can earn will be $9,000 and it will take about 30 years' membership in this house to earn it. It is not expected that many hon. members will ever attain the maximum.

Mr. Monteith: It would not include the previous pension earned up to April 8, the $9,000 maximum?

Mr. Pickersgill: The $9,000 is the maximum regardless of whether part is earned before April 8 or after. Three quarters of the present indemnity is the maximum pension, and I doubt whether there are two members of this house who would ever attain the maximum. For a widow the maximum is $5,400. I think that is about as succinct an explanation as I can give.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, let us have a little further enlightenment on this matter. Assuming a member is defeated or retired, if he has converted his pension, including the survivor clause, I understand he will qualify for five twelfths of his contribution and the wife for three twelfths?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, the widow.

Mr. Thomas: Do I understand that they draw it at the same time?

Mr. Pickersgill: Oh, no. The wife has to be a widow before she draws it.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Chairman, I have two or three questions in connection with this matter which I should like cleared up. First of all, I should like to say that I thoroughly approve of this legislation, and the questions I am asking are for clarification rather than in criticism of it. In the case of a member of the house—I might say here that I happen to be one of the people who have been here longest, I think; only seven members of this house have been here longer than I—who has completed his payments under the old pension system, as some of us have, if that member elects to remain on that system and not take the option of paying in so much in a lump sum in order to cover the period from 1954 to the present, is the old age pension which he would not have received under the old system still subtracted from what he would receive, or does this legislation wipe that out?

Mr. Pickersgill: This legislation wipes that out completely, not merely for members of the house but for existing pensioners as well. Many representations were made to the government from all sides of the house as it was felt most unfortunate that this particular provision was in the law. This is one thing which is being done for the pensioners as from the date of the passing of this bill. The old age pension will not be subtracted from any pension.

Mr. Harkness: If I have understood the minister correctly, members of parliament now in receipt of retirement allowances will be entitled to the present $65 a month which they are now getting if they are over 70 years of age. I am glad to hear this. The latter part of clause 6 says—> —an amount equal to 6 per cent of the sessional indemnity payable to that member in respect of that period minus the amount contributed or that could have been contributed by him in respect of that period.

Would the minister tell us what is meant by the expression: "that could have been contributed"? I am thinking of my own situation and of the situation of a number of hon. members who have not been contributing to the pension fund for the last two or three years or more, and of the effect this will have as far as future contributions are concerned, if an election is made.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am informed that in the case mentioned by the hon. member for Calgary North it would have no effect at all. From April 8 on, the hon. gentleman would pay 6 per cent of the new sessional indemnity. But if a member chooses to leave his pension or convert it without augmenting it —the pension he earned before April 8— this would have no effect.

Mr. Harkness: I am a little puzzled as to the arithmetic in regard to this and, probably, the minister's arithmetic is no better than my own. But it would seem to me that those of us who are in the position of having completed our payments under the old pension system, and who, if we had retired, in the last few years, would have been entitled to $3,000 a year, would be required to pay, if we made this election, $2,160 plus interest for the last nine years. Having done that we would be entitled to a pension of $2,566, rather than $3,000. We would, of course, have gained a survivors benefit. Is that more or less correct?

Mr. Pickersgill: Subject to the hon. gentleman's figures being correct, that is correct. And that, I am informed, is actuarially sound.

Mr. Churchill: Does not this place the present member of parliament who is new to this institution in a better relative position? Within 10 years a new member, if he survives that long—and it is not easy, of course—will qualify for a $3,000 pension. The man who has been here for 17 years and who is now qualified for $3,000 is not really any further ahead despite these back payments that he makes, except, of course, for the allowance for the widow. There is no actual increase in the pension for the person who has paid in for 17 years as a member of this house.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not in respect of past services, apart from the ability to pay on the extra amount. I think the hon. member for Calgary North will appreciate that if he paid on the extra 9 years, that would be an addition to the converted value of his $3,000 —it would not be in place of it. He could convert the $3,000 for which he would now be eligible to the lower rate, to the five twelfths instead of three quarters, with three twelfths for his widow, without paying any more, if he wanted, and he could also pay in respect to the other $4,000 year for the last nine years and do that on the survival basis only.

Mr. Weichel: The Secretary of State mentioned a while ago that the old age pension would not be affected by these payments and he said this would apply to all such pensioners. When he said "all pensioners" did he mean war pensioners or war veterans allowance recipients?

Mr. Pickersgill: I was speaking about this bill only.

Mr. Churchill: I have one further question. Was any consideration given to older members of the house paying back, perhaps, more money so that they would be put in the same position as new members are now on the basis of, say, 15 years' service? Fifteen years service under the new plan means a pension of $4,500. Members of this house who have had 15 or 20 years service, possibly by paying back extra money, might be put into the same relative position as the people who will be here 15 years from now.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think there would be great difficulty about doing that. After all, these pensions are related to the indemnities. They are based on a 6 per cent contribution. The maximum indemnity paid up to April 8, 1963 was $8,000 and I think it would be hard to suggest that members of parliament should be put into the position of being able to make contributions in relation to something they never did receive. It is going quite far to say that they should be allowed to make contributions on the extra amount.

Mr. Starr: The Secretary of State said members should not be allowed to contribute more than the charge on the indemnity they have been receiving. When the increase in the indemnity was made we were only paying 6 per cent on the $4,000 up to 1954. We have been receiving an additional $4,000—

Mr. Pickersgill: And you can pay on that. That is precisely what this bill will allow members to do. It will allow the hon. member for Ontario to pay 6 per cent of the other $4,000 for the last nine years either in a lump sum or in instalments, and earn that much extra pension. But I do not think we could go beyond that.

Mr. Starr: There is not much extra pension as far as the member himself is concerned. In my case, on retirement, it is about $2,050. If I paid that $2,160 plus interest I would also have the privilege of getting a survival benefit—

Some hon. Members: Oh no.

Mr. Starr: By doing that my pension would actually be reduced by some $16 a year.

Mr. Nowlan: That is the understanding which I have of this. If we go back and back, in my case, to 1954, we find at the moment I am entitled to X dollars. Somebody speaking on the radio yesterday morning said this was the most generous pension system the world had ever heard of. Well, I do not think so, and I would hate to think that the guild was getting one on the same basis. One has to win three elections to get a pension at all, which is not too easy, and having won them, one has to stay here for a good many more years. I have been here since 1948, and I can now get a pension somewhere in the neighbourhood of $2,600. If I pick up the option my pension would be a little less than than, but my wife would have the benefit of a survivor's pension. So that although I would get a little less, ultimately, according to the ordinary law of nature, she would get a bit more.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is perfectly clear that I have not made myself clear. In addition to realizing a benefit for oneself alone, there are two operations. One is just to convert and that means that your pension will be less. The other is both to convert and to augment by paying the back contributions on the other $4,000, and if you do that for that nine years the pension, of course, will be double what it would be if you did not augment.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Nowlan: I should like that to be cleared up because my understanding is exactly the reverse. For the sake of argument, suppose that I am prepared to go back to 1954 and to pay up everything. In other words, I am prepared to double. I have got my impression simply through casual conversation and I am not at all sure of my facts, but it is my impression that if I do that I will get a lesser pension should the bill go through and should I elect. If I should retire immediately afterwards I would get a lesser pension than if I did not elect at all. I am not critical but, as my colleague said, some of us were hoping there was an option whereby we could get survivorship and at the same time augment the rather meagre pension.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is precisely what there is. I think you have got to look at the two cases. There is the case of mere conversion without paying any more money. If one is in the fortunate position of the hon. member for Calgary North with his $3,000 pension he has three quarters, and if the officials will tell me what five twelfths will be it will be much easier for me to go on from there.

Mr. Nowlan: You mean that by conversion you simply hold it where it is?

Mr. Pickersgill: You just hold it where it is. You do not pay in another cent.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words—

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether I could answer this question before I have another one to confuse me.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): I think I have a simple explanation that will clarify this very point. Members like myself who have been here some six years have earned a pension of some $90 a month, if they wish to retire without paying anything additional.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interrupt, but the Secretary of State has had a question put to him by senior members and I think that should be clarified before we clutter up the record with more facts. I make this as a suggestion.

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps we could allow the hon. member for Timmins to continue until such time as the Secretary of States is prepared to reply to the particular question put to him a moment ago.

Mr. Martin (Timmins): Possibly the hon. member for Bow River did not realize I was not asking a question. Without making any additional payments the members' pension on the joint basis would be reduced to $50 a month, but in the case of his death his widow would receive $30 a month as long as she lived. If he wants to increase his pension he can pay in some $1,440 and that would increase his eligible pension to $100 or twice what he would now have and it would increase his widow's pension to $60 or twice what she would have now. I think that should clarify the matter.

Mr. Nowlan: If that answer will be accepted by the Secretary of State—

Mr. Pickersgill: I have had the arithmetic done and I am told that if you have paid enough to qualify for the $3,000 pension the survivor pension would be $1,667 for a man and his wife and for his widow it would be $1,000. This pension is already earned without paying in anything more. Without paying in another cent that is what you would get. If you want to contribute at 6 per cent on the $4,000 additional that you received as indemnity since 1954 you would get five twelfths of the additional contribution for yourself and three twelfths for your widow over and above what you have already earned.

Mr. Nowlan: I never was any good at mathematics and I am not going to carry on a discussion with the Secretary of State. I do not know what the situation is if you have a $3,000 pension. The Secretary of State says that you will be able to do so and so. I do not have a $3,000 pension but I have one a couple of hundred dollars less and I am told the situation is entirely different. I am sure there must be some misunderstanding. I do not suppose we can clear it up tonight. We will have to leave it to the officials. Will the Secretary of State assure the committee that there are three options open to us?

Mr. Pickersgill: There is absolutely no question that there are three options open. The pension earned up to April 8 can be left just as it is, or the pension can be converted from three quarters of the contributions to five twelfths for the husband and three twelfths for the widow. I admit that is a considerable reduction in the amount of the pension but it is a survivor pension and I am told it is an actuarially sound conversion. It is also open to contribute on the $4,000 additional that any member has received for any year since 1954 when the allowances were last increased, with interest, and that additional contribution would earn a pension of five twelfths of the contribution for the contributor and his wife and three twelfths for his widow.

Mr. Churchill: Do the figures that were put on the record by the hon. member for Calgary North hold, namely that the paid up pension now of $3,000 together with the amount paid back for the nine years would result in a pension entitlement of $2,500 plus survivor benefits?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am told that those figures are approximately correct.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, we seem to have got into a fair amount of arithmetical confusion, but I want to say that I think the provisions of the bill in this respect are very fair and I do not think there is any discrimination against the older members compared with the newer ones as was suggested by my neighbour, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Churchill: I did not use the word "discrimination".

Mr. Knowles: All right, it was not the word "discrimination", but the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre said that members who are here now will earn in 10 years a $3,000 pension. He said that seemed to be unfair, considering the fact that we old timers took 16⅔ years to earn a $3,000 pension.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Nowlan: Without survivorship.

Mr. Knowles: I am one of the old timers and in addition I have not only been able to study this matter in academic terms but I have had experience with it. I was given a holiday in 1958 and one of the things that went with that holiday was to go on the pension for the time I was out of the house. I had been here long enough before the election of 1958 that when I went on that holiday I drew the full $3,000 pension, because I had paid in the full $4,000. In fact, I had paid it in by 1956. I understand that if I simply choose the option to convert and nothing else my pension when I leave again 20 or 30 years from now on the basis of that former pension would be only $1,667. That sounds like quite a drop but I suggest it is a very small price to pay for the guarantee that for my widow there will be a pension of $1,000. I suggest that not only is this well worked out actuarially but that it is very fair and a good bargain for any member to purchase for his potential or prospective widow.

Now, the member for Winnipeg South Centre says a young lad can come in now and is going to be able to earn $3,000 in the next ten years. So am I. If I am here for another ten years I can earn another $3,000 pension and have $3,000 plus the $1,667 that I have already earned from the old scheme. I have got more than that, because I can pay the 6 per cent on the $4,000 upon which I was not allowed to pay from 1954 to 1958. I suppose I could also pay on the $8,000 on which I did not pay anything at all, because I had paid the full $4,000 allowed under the former act. If I pay up, ten years from now my pension entitlement and my widow's potential pension entitlement will be a lot better than that of the young lad who has just come in.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre did not like me calling it discriminatory, and I withdraw that word. But I do not believe there should be a suggestion that there is any unfairness in this to old timers like the hon. member for Calgary North and myself. We earned a certain pension for the service we put in here at the rate for the job at that time. We are now being given an opportunity to enhance that pension through payment on the portion on which we did not pay. We are also being given this other option, which is to accept a lower pension for ourselves in order to have a guaranteed pension for our widows. I think even the member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings will discover, if he has his case worked out, that with what he is able to pay back on the $4,000 he was not able to pay on, and the fact that he may stay around a year or so or maybe another term, the pension he will have earned and the pension he may leave for a potential widow will be pretty good.

I do not believe we should go any further in the matter of trying to enhance the pension by going back prior to April 8, 1963. I think this will be found to be very fair to all of us.

Mr. Nowlan: I believe I should say that no one on this side of the house was trying to enhance it. What we were trying to do was get the situation clarified.

Mr. Starr: I understood the Secretary of State to say that there were three alternatives. The third alternative was, if a person had a pension of $2,000 paid up he would have the option of going back to 1954 and paying 6 per cent on the $4,000 indemnity for each year. This would cost him about $2,160 and would earn him an additional pension of five twelfths of that amount which would be about $900. He would, therefore, increase his pension to $2,900, approximately. At the same time, his widow would have a survivor's benefit of three fifths of the $900, which would give her $540. Is that correct?

Mr. Pickersgill: I believe the $5,000 is on the whole amount. I am not sure whether fragmenting it makes it correct or not.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): This is the very thing which needs clarification. Perhaps I can simplify it a bit. If one considers the pension which one earns by one year's service, he finds that last year he paid a contribution on half of his indemnity of $4,000 at 6 per cent which would make him eligible for a pension of $180 a year for that one year. Does this mean he can now contribute twice that amount and double his pension; is that one of the options?

Mr. Pickersgill: We did not think, whether we were wise or not, that we should permit the augmenting of the pension unless the survivor benefit was included. An hon. member can freeze his pension for himself or he can freeze it for himself and his wife, or he can augment for himself and his wife, but he cannot augment it just for himself.

Mr. Nugent: You cannot augment it as a bachelor?

Mr. Pickersgill: This is a sort of tax on bachelors.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): In the case of a member who tries to pay back and contributes on the extra $4,000 a year upon which he did not contribute formerly, is his pension reckoned on the basis of five twelfths of only $4,000 or is it five twelfths of the $8,000?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is five twelfths of the whole amount he has contributed.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Then he can only augment his own pension by $20 for the five previous years' service.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member is not recognizing the very real value of the widow's survivor pension.

Mr. Aiken: I want to ask the Secretary of State about the effect of this clause on former members who draw a pension. Can they get the survivor benefit and can they make any additional payments?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, the only advantage that former members have is that when they reach 70, if they do, there will be no deduction of the old age pension.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 6 to 14 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALARIES, ADDITIONAL JUDGES, ETC.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act to increase the salaries of judges of the Supreme Court of Canada, the Exchequer Court of Canada and the superior and county and district courts of the provinces; to provide salaries for eight additional judges of the superior court of Quebec; two additional judges of the supreme court of Nova Scotia including one chief justice, one additional judge of the queen's bench division of the supreme court of New Brunswick, one additional justice of appeal of the court of appeal for British Columbia, one additional judge of the supreme court of British Columbia, one additional judge of the court of queen's bench for Saskatchewan, one additional justice of appeal of the supreme court of Alberta and one additional puisne judge of the supreme court of Newfoundland; and to make certain consequential amendments to the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, the bill to be founded on this resolution has two main purposes. The first purpose is to increase the salaries of judges of superior, district and county courts in Canada. Salaries for the judges of these courts were last increased in 1955, and I think most persons will agree that these salaries are at present inadequate.

Judicial salaries ought to be in keeping with the dignity of the bench and should be adequate to attract leaders at the bar. At the present time the financial sacrifice that must be made by many of the outstanding lawyers of Canada who desire judicial appointment is greater than they can reasonably be expected to make. The increases that will be proposed will be fair and more realistic than the present salary scale and will, I am confident, enable us to continue to have in Canada a judicial service of the highest integrity and quality.

The second purpose of the proposed bill is to provide salaries for the additional judges mentioned therein, and for which provision has been made by the legislatures of the provinces concerned.

The bill also includes some consequential amendments to the definitions of the courts and Criminal Code, made necessary by certain changes in the organization of the supreme court of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to say at this point to delay the passage of the resolution. It is one in which some of us have had a substantial interest for a considerable time. I realize there has been a great deal of pressure to augment some of the salaries in some of the courts, and in dealing with a widespread country such as we have it is difficult to lay down a uniform rule from Atlantic to Pacific.

There may be some judges who feel perfectly happy to go on the bench under the remuneration paid at the moment. There are others in different regions who feel they cannot afford to take an appointment to the bench. It is difficult to differentiate between one area and another, and on the whole this is a resolution which should commend itself to the committee. I personally, and I think my colleagues and associates, would be prepared to support it at this time.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Just a few words, Mr. Chairman, to say that we can only approve this resolution, which will be followed by a bill, because it is admitted that the number of judges is insufficient, especially for the superior court in the province of Quebec.

However, before the bill is before us, I should like to submit one idea or two to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) who perhaps will be able to take them into consideration, and if necessary, propose the necessary changes.

The particular point I want to raise at this time concerns the appointment of eight new judges for the Quebec superior court. Has the minister made any inquiry, in view of the number of cases pending before the courts in the province of Quebec and of the waiting period before the cases are heard, which is sometimes one year and a half, two years and even two years and a half?

Furthermore, does he think that the appointment of eight new judges will be enough to catch up with the cause-list in the superior court of the province of Quebec?

Does the Minister of Justice believe that eight new judges will be enough to enable reasonably prompt hearing, at least more prompt than at present, of cases now on the rolls of the superior court of Quebec?

Mr. Chairman, I raise this point because we are dealing now with a resolution providing for the appointment of eight new superior court judges in the province of Quebec and I am wondering whether this number is enough. The minister will undoubtedly reply that it is following investigations he carried out, because I do not believe he would have mentioned such a figure, eight new judges, without previously inquiring to determine whether the number would be enough, not only to catch up with cases presently pending, but also taking into consideration the fact that there is a constant increase of the number of cases submitted to the superior court of the province of Quebec.

Consequently, I would ask the minister to tell us why he suggested the appointment of eight new judges and why he selected this number.

(Text):

Mr. Brewin: I hardly anticipate that discussion of this item will arouse quite the same interest as discussion of the last item to come before us. Nevertheless I should like to say a few words on the resolution before it passes, and it then may not be necessary to speak at any length on the bill when it is introduced.

Generally speaking we in this party agree with the resolution. I do not believe anybody in the house will disagree with the proposition that one of the pillars in our democratic system is an independent and highly qualified judiciary. The rates of salary therefore must do two things, enable men of high standing in the profession to be available, and to give those appointed as judges reasonable financial security.

As some hon. members know the practice of law produces fairly high financial rewards. Some people may not like that. In fact there are several members of my own party who are not particularly enthusiastic about it, but whether we like it or not it is one of the facts of life. When judges are appointed to the bench it is a tradition that they should be prepared to accept financial sacrifice; but nevertheless there is no benefit to the country, and indeed it would be very injurious, if the degree of sacrifice were so great that some qualified men could not accept judicial office or, if they did, were burdened with financial anxiety.

It was suggested, with regard to the bill and resolution increasing the salaries of members of this and the other house, that there was a proper corollary, namely, that they should be expected to attend more regularly to their duties and give a higher degree of performance. It would be obviously improper to attach any such corollary to the proposed increase in salaries of judges. In fact, as I myself might have to return to practice I would be the last to make any such suggestion, but nevertheless I think there is a useful corollary to this resolution that could be added if these salaries are increased.

It is that appointments to the bench at the higher rate of salaries should be made strictly on the basis of merit without any reference to political patronage. I have been informed that this has occasionally crept into appointments in the past. I suggest that with this resolution should go the corollary that appointments to the better paid judicial posts should in future carry with them the fact that they are such that it could never be suspected by anybody that they were rewards for political service.

We in this party are filled with the equalitarian philosophy and a deep sense of justice. For that reason we are particularly anxious to see that the bill takes care of those on the lower level of judicial salaries and in the so-called lower ranks of the judges, county and district court judges, who have a greater burden of work than those in the higher realm of appellate courts. We are anxious to see that the bill is fair to those on the lower level, rather than is sometimes the practice of increasing the salaries at the top and not paying too much attention to those on the lower level.

I also notice the resolution provides for the appointment of quite a number of additional judges. That may be necessary, but I suggest to the Minister of Finance that he should at the same time discuss with the provincial attorneys general a series—

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps the Chair might be allowed to bring to the attention of hon. members the fact that quite a few conversations are being carried on in the chamber, which makes it difficult for the Chair to follow what is being said.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I opened my remarks by anticipating that discussion on this subject would not receive the degree of attention that was given to the previous subject. Nevertheless I thank you, sir, for reducing the competition. I was just going to finish my remarks by saying that the overburdening of the courts today is largely due to the fact that in many instances they are performing functions which could far better be performed by others, namely administrative tribunals. I am referring to the heavy burden imposed on all our courts by motor accident cases, often tried with juries, which is a most antiquated, inadequate sort of procedure for dealing with the type of problem that is involved in these so-called negligence cases.

If we were to find out from our judges how much of their time is devoted to this perfectly useless and inadequate procedure it may be that the provincial governments could be persuaded to hand over actions of this type to administrative tribunals, such as the workmen's compensation board which now deals with industrial accidents. If we had a board to deal with motor accident cases, they would be solved much more quickly, cheaply and satisfactorily. It would relieve the burden on the courts and we in this house would not be asked constantly to provide for the additional judges to perform this type of function.

Mr. Chairman, I thank the committee for its close attention to my words. I conclude by saying that in general we approve of this resolution.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I rise just to say I am very disappointed in this resolution because I see no additional judges are to be provided for the exchequer court. All hon. members will be aware of my reason for being disappointed that this has not been done. I would have thought this would have been the ideal time to appoint additional exchequer court judges and it could have been fitted in with the judicial program of the Minister of Justice. However, that is not really my reason for rising to speak. The minister can make these additional appointments at any time and perhaps he thinks the exchequer court already has such a limited amount of work at certain periods of the year that no additional judges are necessary.

I rose to say, again, that some consideration should be given by the government as to the type of people they appoint as judges, particularly in the lower courts. We have some terrible magistrates in this country. I can remember an old magistrate about whom everybody used to say it depended on the state of his ulcers as to the kind of a disposition he would make of a case. There are others today that to my knowledge fall within the same category. There is one particular judge to whom I think the minister should give some attention. He has sat on an arbitration case for something like 11 months. It is this sort of work that is being asked of judges. Of course, it has to be approved by the minister, as I understand it, or one of his officials before they can take on this extra work. It is not work that we would like to eliminate completely because there are times when a judge sits on a labour dispute or matters of this type, such as Mr. Justice Norris who sat on the recent commission, and does a remarkable job and a job that one should be quite proud of. But there are other cases where judges are taking on extra work outside the judicial field, which I believe is not in the interests of justice and where in many cases a judge is not really required to decide the issue.

I have raised this matter previously and I know it was considered by a former minister of justice. There was some review of the number of outside jobs judges were allowed to take on. I am sure the minister has this matter in mind and there will be some tightening up of the extracurricular work judges are allowed to undertake, in the interest of justice and in the interest of other jobs they may be called upon to perform.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Chevrier thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-92 to amend the Judges Act and the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time.

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Speaker: By unanimous consent.

Mr. Chevrier moved the second reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the salaries of federally appointed judges were last increased by parliament in 1955, at which time a flat increase of $2,500 per annum was provided for each judge. I think most persons would agree that salaries which might have been adequate in 1955 are no longer adequate in 1963. It is important, also, that judicial salaries should be high enough to attract the best lawyers so they can accept a judicial appointment without making a greater financial and personal sacrifice than should be expected of them. While the details of the bill should not be discussed on a motion for second reading, perhaps I might be permitted to indicate to the house at this stage and in a general way what they are, as I propose to make some comparisons of the amounts that are paid in this country as compared with those paid in the United Kingdom and the United States.

The bill before the house proposes to increase the salary of the Chief Justice of Canada from $27,000 per annum to $35,000 per annum and to increase the salary of the other judges of the Supreme Court of Canada from $22,500 to $30,000 per annum. With respect to the provincial superior courts, it proposes to increase the salaries of the chief justices of these courts from $18,500 to $25,000 per annum and to increase the salaries of all puisne and other judges of those courts from $16,900 to $21,000 per annum.

With respect to county court and district court judges it is proposed to increase their salaries from $10,500 to $16,000 per annum. The new salaries proposed are, in my judgment, more realistic than the present salaries and are comparable to judicial salaries in the United States and in the United Kingdom. In the United States, for example, the salary of the chief justice of the supreme court is $35,500, and that of associate chief justice $35,000. The lord high chancellor is paid a salary of £12,000 and a lord of appeal in England receives a salary of £9,000. The amount paid to chief justices of state courts varies from state to state. In the state of New York it goes as high as $39,000. The master of the rolls of the English court of appeal is paid £9,000 and the lord chief justice of England £10,000. Puisne judges of the English court of appeal and queen's bench are paid £8,000.

If we are to obtain persons of the calibre we feel is essential for members of the bench in Canada, the salaries paid to these persons must be sufficient to induce them to accept such appointments. It is not enough, I suggest, to expect that such persons will find the prestige of the position or their desire to render public service alone sufficient to persuade them to give up the freedom they enjoy in the private practice of law or to give up earnings which are considerably higher than the salaries presently paid members of the bench. In accepting an appointment to the bench these persons will be required to sacrifice much of their leisure time, their social contacts and their general activities. I am sure that the amounts proposed in this bill will commend themselves to hon. members as proper recompense to be paid to members of the bench.

Finally, with respect to the salaries for additional judges provided for in the bill, each of the provinces concerned has reported that the additional positions be established and requested that salaries be provided for these judges. Under section 92(14) of the British North America Act the provinces have exclusive jurisdiction over the administration of justice in the province, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of provincial courts. By section 96, however, the judges of the superior court, district court and county courts in each province are to be appointed by the governor in council, and by section 100 the salaries, allowances and pensions of the judges must be fixed and provided by the parliament of Canada. Several of the provinces have by reason of increased judicial work provided for additional judges, and it is now necessary for parliament to authorize payment of their salaries when they are appointed.

There were three matters raised by hon. members at the resolution stage, and perhaps I might deal with them now.

(Translation):

The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) has asked whether an inquiry had been made as regards the appointment of those eight new judges for the province of Quebec and whether the Minister of Justice was of the opinion that eight new judges would be a sufficient number.

I hope I have answered those questions in the comments I just made. Otherwise, I would add that under the constitution, the province itself determines the number of judges it needs. It must pass an act authorizing the federal government to appoint a sufficient number of judges for the administration of justice in the province.

As regards the province of Quebec, this act has been passed and this is why this bill is now before us.

(Text):

The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) made some reference to discussions that might be held or which were held between the Minister of Justice and the attorneys general of the various provinces. All I can say in that respect is what I have already indicated in my remarks with reference to second reading: that is the prerogative of the provinces by legislation to indicate to parliament whether or not additional judges are required. I do not think that in itself is sufficient. I still think that, notwithstanding that, although the provinces may not agree with this, there is a certain responsibility thrust upon the Minister of Justice to make inquiries. I may say that I have made inquiries of the chief justices of some provinces, the attorneys general of other provinces, and the associate chief justice in other cases.

In so far as the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) is concerned, who complained that one judge has been sitting on an arbitration for 11 months, this unfortunately is the case from time to time. But it is not the general rule. There are exceptions, and I am sure the house would be the first to appreciate, and I believe approve, in certain cases at least, the appointment of judges to certain tribunals having to do with arbitration. But I presume there will be a greater discussion of this when we get into committee and discuss the clauses.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, this is technically the second reading of the bill, but it is much easier in a clause by clause study to deal with it in detail in committee rather than when discussing the general principle. I intend to take only two minutes on second reading just to follow up the suggestion of the minister on a matter to which I think he should give pretty careful consideration. I have just glanced over the suggested increases and I think the house will agree that they are on a reasonable but fairly generous scale. As some of us know, there have been cases in the past where judges have had to take on extra curricular activities, shall we say, either because it was of the custom in the area, or because in other cases quite frankly they needed to earn additional money. It would appear to me that the salaries which are suggested here—and I know a certain predecessor of the minister felt very strongly about this matter—are such that the minister should be very careful in exercising his discretion in permitting judges to undertake any extracurricular activities outside of their appointment to the bench.

That is, of course, a matter with which the minister will have to deal. I realize there are cases where it is desirable in the public service that certain judges be authorized to do that; but there have been many complaints from some areas of judges spending so much time on commissions and on various references that they either did not have much to do on the bench, or if they had they did not spend much time on it because they were spending too much time off the bench.

Second—again this is a matter for committee—there is no reference to pensions. I know that pensions in some cases are automatic under the statute. Probably the minister has been told that there were certain classes of judges, from whom I have heard very often, as I am sure he has both in his present position and before he sat where he is sitting now, where an increase has gone through for county court judges and district court judges with no corresponding increase in the pension, and they felt that an injustice had been done. I think that complaint has some merit, and when we get into committee the minister can discuss further with us the question of pensions for the judges.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have just a few remarks to address to the house on second reading of this bill. I think all hon. members will agree that justice delayed is justice denied, and I must commend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) for carrying out a great deal of the work which had been done by his predecessor toward achieving the result arrived at at the present time. We know that in many provinces, because of increased population and business activity, and what have you, there are interminable delays in hearings as a result either of a paucity in the number of judges or because some judges, as my colleague from Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) indicated, have been occupied with matters outside their normal judicial functions. The minister has rightly said that the question of increases in the numbers of judges in the various provinces is one for the provincial legislatures concerned. I commend him for his attitude, that the role of the Minister of Justice in this regard should not be entirely passive. I have had some experience with my own province in this connection and I know that a prod from the Minister of Justice can bring about appropriate results. I believe this applies, also, to the other provinces.

Another point with which the minister might concern himself has to do with the administration of justice generally. It goes to the question of whether justice is done. Unfortunately, there are a certain number of judges who show a degree of procrastination in getting out judgments. Some judges are more notorious than others in this regard. I think a periodic review of some sort might be undertaken; a prod here and a prod there from an official source might help to remedy the situation. We know that judges working on crowded calendars tend to deal with those matters which are relatively simple and to lay aside those which are complicated. The first thing we know is that, notwithstanding all the goodwill which exists, there is an accumulation of reserved judgments. I suggest the minister might look into this and institute a periodical review.

An increase in the number of judges in Alberta at the level of the court of appeals as well as an increase in the salaries has been much in the minds of the hon. members from the province. A number of us are lawyers and we have continuing contact with the courts of that province. I should like to point out that the hon. member for Bow River has been a member of the committee of the Canadian bar and has made recommendations with regard to this question in the past. I think that with the level of salaries now proposed we should be able to attract the right type of man. There are things that a man has to give up when he leaves private practice to become a judge. This is only a measure of compensation. With regard to the proposed increase in the number of appeal judges in Alberta, may I say this will be of great help because it would permit the court to sit in two sections and do more than double the work the present court can now accomplish.

With these few remarks I commend the government on the introduction of this bill and express the hope it will readily pass.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): I have here one of two notes I should like to interpolate for the house. I had an idea, earlier, of making an extended address. However, I see it is getting late.

I wish to indicate immediately my support for the purpose behind this bill. As a member of the New Brunswick bar I have long felt that judges of the superior, district or county courts are grossly underpaid and I am pleased the government has recognized this fact. The Canadian Bar Association has recommended, I understand, that the increase be 50 per cent of present salaries. The bill before us does not provide quite this amount but it is still an indication that the government recognizes the seriousness of the situation which exists as far as the bench of Canada is concerned.

The national commission for the administration of justice has been studying what it feels to be the vexing problem of judicial districts. I hope the Minister of Justice will vigorously pursue the objective of redefining the area of responsibility of county and district judges in consultation with provincial attorneys general. It seems to me that in 1963 county judges must have over-all jurisdiction within the province and not be confined as they are at the present time within ancient boundaries no longer having any relevance in these days of rapid communication and changing living patterns. As an example, in my province of New Brunswick, the superior court and the county court meet on Tuesday of the week. If one is a historian and investigates this, he finds it is because it was the feeling of the officials that judges could not get to their respective county seats before Tuesday, having in mind the transportation facilities available. This, of course, is an ancient clutter of the law. There is no reason why courts should not start their work on Mondays. I hope the minister will look into this situation.

I have here a comment concerning the amendment to the Judges' Act which was passed in 1960, and I see I have classified this as an urgent matter. That amendment made it compulsory for superior court judges to retire at 75 years of age. I had the privilege, when I was in another office, of recommending this change to the cabinet of New Brunswick and it was unanimously adopted by all the provinces as well as by the government of Canada. I think it was sensible legislation but I will allow my heart to rule my head for a few minutes. It seems to me that this legislation might well benefit those judges who have retired between 1960 and today. I intend to ask the minister if he would find out for me how many judges were affected by the amendment to the British North America Act and whether the public treasury would be subject to an intolerable burden if these judges or their dependants could be brought under a scheme enabling them to enjoy the wider benefits which are inherent in the present legislation.

The hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) who is now surrounded by a covey of advisers, in a most interesting address at another stage of this bill mentioned the subject of judges who were given other responsibilities, and I feel this is a matter which the house should consider. Here I am treading on Ontario soil, and I am told that for a lower Canadian to tread on Ontario soil is dangerous. I am told there are district court judges in Ontario who have other responsibilities; that there are some, for example, who are chairmen of liquor boards. Then, in a most interesting juxtaposition there are others who are chairmen of milk boards. Whether this is a puritan counterposition I do not know. I am new at this; but I feel that if judges are to become chairmen of provincial boards they should be required to withdraw their demands on the public treasury in relation to their judicial functions. Either they should be chairmen of milk boards and liquor boards or they should be county or district court judges. I know that the national association for the administration of justice has considered this matter and is concerned about the extracurricular duties of judges. I have in mind two rather recent instances of judges serving in other capacities. One is a highly respected judge of the supreme court of New Brunswick who was called upon to be chairman of a commission to investigate the liquor laws of that province. I think this justice was placed in a most invidious position. I am speaking here with all the protection afforded by this house, but I think that this is a wrong avenue for judges to exercise their responsibilities. I have no criticism of the particular judge. I admire him; but I think that judges should not be called upon to exercise duties for which the provincial authorities seem unable or unwilling to find people to carry out these responsibilities, and so they slough them off on our supreme court judges.

Although I have no evidence to support my statement, I understand that some of the wealthy provinces, such as British Columbia —here I am looking at the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Nicholson)—pay their superior court judges extra—well, I will just say "extra" in quotation marks and leave it dangling like that.

Mr. Nicholson: The hon. member is wrong. It is county court judges, and it is paid for doing surrogate court work.

Mr. Fairweather: I am not going to argue with the hon. gentleman whose experience is much vaster than mine, but may I put it this way: There are provinces in Canada that pay an extra amount to judges. I am not going to single out any province, but I think this is quite wrong in principle. This is a multi-provincial problem and it should be faced in the same way across Canada. I hope the minister will keep this in mind when he is making appointments. In the first place, judges should not be paid anything extra because of the province in which they happen to serve and, second, they should not be asked to carry out extracurricular duties by reason of their independent status.

Lastly, may I make a plea with regard to judges' expense accounts. I was going to refer to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Favreau) with a pleasant adjective and I cannot think of one, but the feeling is in my heart. He has had experience in the Department of Justice and I say to him: For heaven's sake, can we not allow judges to submit their expense account without having some official check them? The position of judge is the most senior position at the hand of the Prime Minister and the cabinet. Surely if we trust judges to administer the law and to make decisions affecting our lives and liberties we can trust them to furnish expense accounts that do not need to be checked by officials. This is quite a serious thing with many of our judges, and I hope that under the administration of the present minister this petty problem will be solved at an early date. This matter has also been discussed by the national commission for the administration of justice. I think that judges should not be subjected to this invidious checking by people who have no idea of the problems that judges have to face.

To sum up, may I say that I am in favour of the increases. I had hoped they would be those that were recommended by the Canadian Bar Association, namely, 50 per cent of the present stipend. May I urge the minister to check on the problem of extracurricular milk and liquor board duties that are engaged in by some of our judges. Lastly, I ask the minister to respect judges' expense accounts by not checking them.

(Translation):

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Quebec bar, I am pleased to congratulate the government on this sound initiative following on the legislation adopted by the province of Quebec to add eight new judges to the present bench of the superior court. In the second place, I wish to congratulate it for having understood the truly remarkable task performed by the judges of the superior court in the province of Quebec. Their work is sometimes very heavy and, unfortunately, it should be added that their task is not always easy, due to the lack of co-operation on the part of the members of the bar who too often find some reasons for not proceeding, with the result that, in almost all judicial districts, there is an incomprehensible load of pending cases. It happens at times that contending parties have to wait 18, 20 and even 24 months before their case is heard before the judges of the superior court.

As far as Quebec is concerned, a suggestion might be made, which does not concern federal authorities, but which nevertheless deserves consideration. It would be advisable to extend the jurisdiction of the magistrate's court to cases involving up to $500 instead of $200, which would help clear out the rolls of the superior court, in addition to permitting the dispatch of cases pending before our courts.

Judges of the superior court, the itinerant judges as well as those residing in the city of Montreal who must visit many judicial districts, carry out a truly remarkable task, because they are very humane in the performance of their duties and anxious to help lawyers, especially those from the rural areas.

To my mind, and whether my colleagues in the large cities like it or not, hon. judges very much like to have members of the rural bar plead, because the latter are, perhaps, those who prepare their cases best. And here, I would be remiss not to suggest to the Minister of Justice to give special consideration to a request which was unfortunately not granted by the last government, that is the perpetual request by the rural bar association of the province of Quebec for better representation and better treatment as far as the choice of superior court judges is concerned.

I have great respect for the large city lawyers, more particularly for those in Montreal; but the recruiting is, from my humble point of view, too frequently limited to the city of Montreal, whereas members of the rural bar are overlooked in appointments to the superior court. Every year, or at least almost every year, a resolution is passed by the rural bar association to that effect, but the government, whichever it may be, does not seem quite to realize the significance of that issue. I think that the members of the rural bar are entitled to a better treatment than the practising members of the rural bar in the judicial districts of the province of Quebec are now getting.

Those are, Mr. Speaker, the few remarks I wanted to make in the house, and I am sure that the judges of the superior court and of the court of appeal in the province of Quebec will be delighted with this legislation which was needed for quite some time, and which is particularly well deserved because of the truly magnificent work accomplished by the judges of those two courts.

I trust that the Minister of Justice, when he will consult his cabinet colleagues, will look after the needs, and more particularly the very legitimate claims of the rural bar in the province of Quebec. It would be desirable that at least three of those eight judges be chosen among the members of that bar, when the government proceeds with the needed appointments.

(Text):

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I join with others in congratulating the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier). I think that all members on both sides of the house certainly must commend the minister today upon bringing forward this particular bill relating to our judges. I think a member who has sat in this house for even the short time I have appreciates that the Minister of Justice is a man who is equally fluent in the French and English languages, is perfectly bilingual, and that all lawyers respect him as one of our gentlemen members of the bar. We are very happy to see him in his position of Minister of Justice.

I know the minister would not mind me saying at this time that a lot of credit is due the Canadian Bar Association and particularly Mr. Pattillo, who worked with this committee, and met not only with this government but the previous government to discuss problems relating to increases in pay for those people who are dedicated to public service, the members of our judiciary. I listened with great interest to an hon. member who is also a member of the Alberta bar. I may say to the minister that in the province of Alberta we feel we have a very fine court of appeal. I do not believe we have ever had a complaint from the Alberta bar or the Canadian bar in reference to our court of appeal. They have always given good service not only to the members of the Alberta bar but to the members of the bar of other provinces. They have always been prompt in delivering their judgments.

I think, too, we have been very fortunate in that province in the calibre of the men we have had, no matter which government has made these appointments. Our judges are of a high standard, not only in the court of appeal, the trial division, but in our county courts as well. There have been occasions when we have had the odd judge delay a judgment. I think, when it comes to getting work done the most important position in these courts is that of the chief justice. If the chief justice organizes the work with the members of the bar, they can avoid a lot of headaches. I know that many of our judges, particularly in the trial division, state that on some occasions there may be nine or ten cases set down for trial during a week. When the cases are called there are only three or four ready to go ahead. In some cases it is not the fault of the members of the bar, but their clients or witnesses are not ready for litigation at this time.

So far as the bar of Alberta is concerned, I can safely say they get good service from the court of appeal, the trial division and district courts. I should like to mention also that I feel the three most important things to consider in choosing a judge are the character of the person, his experience and his understanding of human nature. Of course some people say, probably in a humorous vein, that if they have a little knowledge of the law that is helpful also. Seriously, so far as that province is concerned, I do not believe we have any complaint.

I should like to pay respect to two men who have dedicated their lives to the service of the bench. I practised in Saskatchewan for ten years and I have practised ten years in the province of Alberta. The chief justice of Saskatchewan, Mr. Justice Martin, served his province for, I think it was 25 or 30 years on the bench. He did a tremendous job and left an impression not only on most members of the bar who appeared before him but other members of the bench. I should like to mention also Chief Justice Clinton Ford of the province of Alberta.

I do not want to delay this measure, but I should like to congratulate the minister once again. I do not think anyone could say that there has not been action on the part of the government today. This should go down in the history of Canada as one of those days that was very important to those men who serve the interests of the public.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I did not intend to say a word in this debate, but I rise to say one or two things that have come to my mind this evening. First of all, like other members of this group, I support the principle of this bill. I must say that I have had very happy associations with a number of supreme court judges and county court judges in British Columbia and realize the valuable work they have done and the valuable function that they perform on behalf of our democratic society. I think Canadians, in the last week or two, must have had that brought to their particular attention because of the illuminating report of Mr. Justice Norris in respect of the ruthless dictatorship of Mr. Hal Banks over the members of the seafarers international union.

Then, this evening we heard of the decision of Mr. Justice Lett of the supreme court of British Columbia in respect of Premier Bennett's acts of piracy in connection with the takeover of B.C. Electric. I think in one instance we found one justice protecting human rights, civil rights, and the other one protecting property rights in the right sense of the word. We are all in favour of public ownership, but we believe in the rule of law, and those things being done so that everyone's rights are respected. When things are brought to a conclusion, everybody realizes they have received justice under the law.

I rose, Mr. Speaker, simply to make these few comments on this particular situation that exists this evening.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Salaries of judges of Supreme Court of Canada.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not know whether the minister is prepared to deal with detailed questions at this time. I certainly do not want to go into too much detail anyway, but I mentioned earlier that the statutory provisions for pensions of judges are separate and apart from the salary schedule which we have before us. However, I can remind the minister fairly forcibly, as I have been reminded forcibly by friends of mine on the bench, that at least on one occasion when an increase was put through in the salaries of judges someone overlooked amending the pension statute. Although the judges, in this case the county court judges, received a salary increase from $8,000 to $10,000, the pension remained payable and is still payable on the basis of the original statute.

I would hope that amongst the matters with which the minister will deal will be the pension legislation. I hope it will be amended so that, if necessary, it will reflect the increase in the salaries, if that is the desire of the government and I presume it is; and I would suggest to the minister that he look also at this matter to which I referred, namely the increase in salary for county court judges some years ago. Since I came here I have been told very forcefully, one might say blasphemously but of course judges never swear, that the increase in salary was effective, but someone overlooked the increase in the pension. That was one category of judges to whom the increase did not apply. I would hope the minister would take a careful look at this point.

Mr. Chevrier: I can assure the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings that there was careful consideration given to the question he has raised with respect to pensions. Not only was consideration given but representations were made by several groups. However it was thought inadvisable to put them in this bill.

If one looks at the increases, which the hon. member earlier said were on the generous side, then one can come to no other conclusion but that the annuities, because of the increases, will be increased as well; but the whole question of pensions, annuities and survivor benefits would have meant a tremendous increase in the cost to the treasury, and after careful consideration the government decided to present the bill, as it now is, to the house.

Mr. Nowlan: You might take a look at that one particular class to which I have reference, the county court judge class.

Mr. Chevrier: I should be glad to do so.

Mr. Fairweather: Is the minister in a position to answer my question about judges who might have retired as a result of the amendment to the British North America Act, and the consequent amendment to the Judges Act, retiring judges at 75 years of age?

Mr. Chevrier: The hon. member for Royal has posed a number of questions and I do not know whether he wants answers to all of them.

Mr. Fairweather: I do indeed.

Mr. Chevrier: I am hoping it will be possible to get this legislation through tonight; if not, I will be in the hands of the house. His main question related to how many judges were affected by the amendment to the British North America Act, passed in 1960. The answer is 160. Then there was also the question of the cost. I am unable to give the amount but I would say there would be a fairly substantial amount of money involved.

Mr. Fairweather: Could the minister advise whether these judges who are presiding over milk and liquor boards in Ontario will be entitled to this increase, and at the same time be milk men and liquor men?

Mr. Chevrier: This question of the extracurricular activities of the various judges affects not only the judge or judges which the hon. member has in mind but, as I said earlier, there are not nearly as many as the committee might think. In the case of Ontario I do not think there are more than three or four, and this bill does not affect them. In order to do so I think one would have to amend the act, and the government did not see fit to do this because of the small number of them.

If the act were amended, then they would have to cut out these extracurricular activities, and I do not think we would be prepared to do this because of the numerous demands that come in from provincial governments and which are sometimes difficult to resist. The appointments are made by the governor in council, on recommendation of the Minister of Justice after careful consideration; but the one my hon. friend has in mind was made some time ago.

Mr. Fairweather: I know the minister is anxious to have the bill pass, but it seems to me that some years ago there was a feeling there would be an option for these judges. I am glad the minister tells us there are only a few of them, and they could either put up or shut up, if that is a judicial term to use. They could either accept this increase and get out of their extracurricular activities, or else not be obliged to receive the extra indemnity. To me this would be reasonable.

Perhaps this is the wrong place to discuss it, but for instance the judge of the county court of York, as I understand it, earns more than the chief justice of Ontario, with extra and fringe benefits. This is a wrong principle and I hope the minister will courageously pursue the ending of this system. Does he earn more than the chief justice of Ontario?

Mr. Chevrier: Is the hon. member referring to the chairman of the liquor control board in Ontario?

Mr. Fairweather: Yes.

Mr. Chevrier: Under the new bill he will not.

Mr. Fairweather: How close will he come under the new bill? I think it is quite a wrong principle.

Mr. Chevrier: I have no objection to discussing this, if that is the wish of the committee, but I would bring it to the attention of the hon. member that if we are to go into these extracurricular activities, then one cannot select one particular judge. One must go over the whole field; and then if we get down to police magistrates we will find that there are police magistrates in certain parts of the country who are getting far more than judges.

Mr. Fairweather: That is quite correct.

Mr. Chevrier: But police magistrates do not come under the jurisdiction of this parliament. They fall under the jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures, and certainly this is the case in Ontario.

(Translation):

Mr. Paul: Could the minister inform the house whether the government of the province of Quebec has officially informed the Department of Justice, in Ottawa, about the passing of the bill so that they could proceed with the appointment of superior court judges for the province of Quebec?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, a bill was passed by the province of Quebec legislature, and it is for that reason that we are discussing this bill at this time, the second part at least, together with the recommendations made by the other provinces.

Mr. Paul: But was the Department of Justice officially informed by the province of Quebec legislature of the adoption of such a measure?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, and later on through conversations I had with the attorney general.

Mr. Paul: Does the bill provide for the appointment of judges for designated judicial districts?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

Mr. Paul: Does the minister intend to proceed with the appointment of those judges before the opening of the courts?

Mr. Chevrier: Well, if this bill is adopted, I should like to see these judges appointed for the fall sittings.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Could the minister tell the committee to what judicial districts have been assigned the eight judges of the superior court?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes. There are three for the Quebec district, three for the Montreal district, one for the district of Hull, and one for St. François-Bedford district.

Mr. Forest: Mr. Chairman, on behalf of the hon. members who sit on this side of the house, I would feel remiss were I to let this opportunity go by without congratulating the Minister of Justice for this bill concerning the salary of judges in the different courts.

Due to the late hour, I will have only a few words to say on this bill which not only provides for a well deserved salary increase for the judges in the various courts, but deals also with the appointment of eight new judges to the superior court to fill a very great need. As you know, this is a civil law court in the province of Quebec. I also congratulate the minister for acting with such speed.

I remember that for many long years members of the bar, with the support of the newspapers, the trade unions and a host of public authorities, have been requesting the appointment of additional judges to the superior court. However, it was only in the last few weeks that the premier of Quebec, Mr. Jean Lesage, realized the situation and authorized the appointment of eight new judges in the districts mentioned by the Minister of Justice, particularly the district of St. François-Bedford. I am sure that the appointment of a judge in the St. François-Bedford district will greatly speed the administration of justice.

I take this opportunity for congratulating the Minister of Justice who, in such a short time, has done all he could to help the administration of justice. This is characteristic of the dynamic spirit of the federal government.

In addition, I hope the Minister of Justice will appoint those judges to the superior court before the fall sittings, which will make for a better administration of justice at the very beginning of the court hearings in September.

Since I do not want to delay the passage of this bill, I conclude my remarks by offering, on behalf of the lawyers from the province of Quebec and the hon members sitting on this side of the house, my congratulations to the Minister of Justice for this timely legislation.

(Text):

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to hold up the bill and in order to accelerate its passage I just want to ask the minister a question regarding clause 5.

Mr. Chevrier: Could we get clause 1 through first?

Mr. MacEwan: If you wish to take it that way, that is fine.

Mr. Chevrier: I would prefer to do that.

Mr. MacEwan: All right; as long as clause 5 does not pass until I have raised this question.

Mr. Baldwin: I have just one question, Mr. Chairman, in the light of what the minister said when he introduced this measure. With regard to the two sections of the British North America Act dealing with the administration of justice and the appointment of judges, I wonder whether the minister would find an opportunity before this matter is completed to obtain an opinion from his officials as to whether or not under section 96, dealing with the appointment of judges, the Minister of Justice has the right to indicate what should be the limitations upon the duties of judges so far as matters apportioned to them by provincial governments are concerned.

This is a matter I have had under consideration for some time. I know that in our province, for example, the surrogate and estate court work is something in regard to which county court judges have been assigned duties, and it functions very well; but under section 96 I am wondering to what extent the minister, in making an appointment within the four corners of that section, can limit what shall be the duties of the judge.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, my understanding from the officials of the Department of Justice is that the sole right of the Minister of Justice is to appoint.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take up any time on this matter but I would like to move an amendment as follows:

That following subsection (b), clause 5, in section 1 of part 1, add subsection (c);
"one puisne judge, for divorce, each $21,000".

The argument could be made that this would be adding to the expenditure of the government, but I would maintain that in view of the resolution preceding the bill this amendment would be in order and could be accepted on the basis of being covered by the original resolution.

Mr. Chevrier: If I might just say one word, Mr. Chairman, this amendment is clearly out of order for the reason that it is not covered by the resolution. It not being mentioned in the resolution, I do not think the hon. member has the right to move such an amendment, because this will mean an additional expenditure to the treasury. Therefore I submit, with deference, that the amendment is out of order.

Mr. Peters: I would be happy to accept the minister's position without any argument and would suggest he could move this amendment and it would not then be out of order. I would be quite happy to have that done.

Mr. Chevrier: I am very grateful to the hon. member for his suggestion, but I am afraid I could not accede to it, at this time at least.

The Chairman: Order. The Chair will rule immediately on the amendment. I think it would probably be admitted by the hon. member who moved this amendment that it is clearly out of order because it introduces something entirely new to the resolution which was before the committee. Shall clause 1 carry?

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 5—Salaries of judges of supreme court of Nova Scotia.

Mr. MacEwan: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister if he would clarify the change in section 10 of the Judges Act regarding the provision of two additional judges for the supreme court of Nova Scotia. As I understand it, and it is clear here but I am a little thick in the head at times, the present chief justice of Nova Scotia would then become the chief justice of the appeal division, one new judge would be appointed to the appeal division and a judge from the present trial division would also be added to the appeal division of the court; so that finally there would be three judges in the appeal court, including the chief justice, and a chief justice and five judges, instead of the present six, in the trial division of the supreme court of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Chevrier: My understanding is that there will be two additional judges and that new commissions will have to issue. I think the explanatory note is quite clear as to what the intention is. The judicature act of the province of Nova Scotia provides for this. It does not follow that this will be done; it will depend upon whether or not the act is proclaimed by the province of Nova Scotia. If it is, then consideration will have to be given to these appointments by the federal government.

Mr. MacEwan: I understand there was legislation before the house in the twenty fifth parliament regarding this matter and it was certainly conditioned on the proclaiming of the Nova Scotia judicature act. But there was legislation before the twenty fifth parliament in this regard.

Mr. Chevrier: Yes.

The Chairman: Shall clause 5 carry?

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 5 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. Churchill: Next sitting of the house.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I have two questions for the house leader. One, what is the business for tomorrow; second, is he prepared to give us a forecast of the business for the rest of the week so we can determine how long the session will continue?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am really grateful to the hon. gentleman for putting the question the way he has, because I think I had better indicate first, as clearly as I can see it now, just what business there still is that the government feels must be done, if at all possible, before we have an adjournment.

There is the third reading of the two bills that we completed in committee stage today, which normally are not even announced but which would be the first things taken tomorrow. Then there is the completion of the committee stage and the third reading of the excise tax bill; there is the committee stage and third reading of the economic council bill; and second reading, the committee stage and third reading of the municipal development and loan board bill. There is also the bill on the surcharge order, which I think is on the paper for second reading at the moment. Then there is the bill about the bridge across the St. Lawrence river which has already passed the other place, and I am very hopeful the house will be able to find a few minutes to dispose of it.

Mr. Nowlan: Interim supply.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Let us do the bridge bill now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, as it does not have to go to the other place, if hon. gentlemen are in a mood to put anything through we might put the economic council through now.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Pickersgill: The only other item I can think of, and I am speaking from memory because I went over the order paper not long ago, is the possibility that there may have to be a request for some legislation arising out of the Norris report, but I am not able to say more than that.

Mr. Knowles: Has the minister not forgotten one important item, interim supply?

Mr. Pickersgill: There was an exchange between the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings and myself that the hon. member perhaps did not hear. No, I have not forgotten that. So I think the order will be as follows: the excise tax, the economic council, the municipal development and loan bill, the surcharge order, interim supply and the bridge bill. There may be something arise between now and the end of the week which none of us can foresee, as has happened before, but I sincerely hope there will not be.

Mr. Churchill: We will try to think of something.

It being fifteen minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, July 30, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

Seventh report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. Wahn.

DRUGS AND PESTICIDES

PERSONNEL OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. Alexis Caron (Hull) moved:

That the special committee on drugs and pesticides appointed July 26, 1963 be composed of Messrs. Armstrong, Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe), Baldwin, Basford, Cashin, Casselman, Mrs., Côté (Longueuil), Enns, Fairweather, Francis, Gauthier, Harley, Howe (Hamilton South), Mitchell, Nesbitt, Orlikow, Patterson, Pennell, Pilon, Roxburgh, Rynard, Valade, Whelan, Willoughby.

Motion agreed to.

(Translation):

CANADIAN FLAG

INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION BY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can he tell the house if a ministerial or interdepartmental committee has been set up to study and prepare a preliminary design for a distinctive national flag?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, there has been no subcommittee of the cabinet appointed on this subject.

(Translation):

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. Can the Prime Minister assure the house that the country will be given a distinctive national flag on or before April 8, 1965, as he has already promised?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that question in the affirmative. I am glad to repeat the answer now.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Will it be the same with regard to the adoption of an official national anthem?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, the same stand was taken in regard to a national anthem.

AGRICULTURE

CHEESE—REASON FOR REDUCTION IN SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Was the 1 cent taken off the cheese export subsidy to save the government $200,000, or was it done on the advice of the national dairy council to force the cheese producers to price themselves out of the United Kingdom market?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): In connection with the question of the hon. member, there is a long and complicated story as to how the stabilization board operates so far as cheese is concerned, but the answer to the question is that there was a subsidy of 4 cents a pound on cheese which was recommended by the stabilization board. The stabilization board felt there should be a reduction of 1 cent because it was not required any longer with Canadian cheddar cheese, which was selling at a premium in Great Britain; so they recommended that the 1 cent be taken off.

I can assure the hon. member that Canadian cheese in Great Britain is selling at a premium, and there is a big difference between New Zealand cheese and Canadian cheese. He might also be interested to know that the price of milk used in the manufacture of cheese is now higher than it has been for a number of years. I think the producers are quite happy about this, and there is still a big demand for Canadian cheddar cheese.

With regard to the second question, I can assure the hon. member that the cheese board have no intention of putting anyone out of business. All they are interested in is selling as much Canadian cheese as possible, and this is being done. We could sell more cheese than we are manufacturing, and we are trying to convert from butter to cheese. In this regard we had a big disappearance of butter from the market last May and a larger one in June.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): A supplementary question. I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether any special concerted action is being taken to sell some of the surplus Canadian butter in Britain, where at the present time there seems to be a shortage.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Hays: This matter is under study. I believe the Minister of Trade and Commerce was asked about this matter on July 26, and he suggested that there were some complications with regard to selling butter, but that the matter was under review. We will certainly sell butter wherever we can.

IMPLEMENTATION OF FARM CREDIT ACT IN EASTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Minister of Agriculture. Can the minister inquire and report to this house why there are so many delays and refusals in the implementation of the Farm Credit Act in eastern Canada, and especially in the districts of Lake St. John, Saguenay and in my constituency of Lapointe?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any delays, but I will be glad to take the question as notice and look into the matter.

Mr. Gregoire: If the minister is not aware of that, is it because he has no time to take into consideration the problems of eastern Canada, or because he thinks there are no problems? I think we need a second minister, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

EARLY APPOINTMENT OF MINISTER FOR EASTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

In view of the pitiful condition of agriculture in eastern Canada, could the Prime Minister assure the house and especially the members from the eastern part of the country, that one of the first pieces of legislation he will introduce when the session resumes next fall will be the bill to appoint a minister of agriculture for eastern Canada?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We hope to do this very early in the resumed session.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Does he still intend to appoint the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane as minister of agriculture for eastern Canada?

[Mr. Olson.]

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: That will be made clear in due course, Mr. Speaker.

OLD AGE SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO EFFECTIVE DATE OF INCREASED PENSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. May I say that I am not seeking an answer today; I am merely asking that this matter be considered. In view of the statement made yesterday by the Prime Minister that the legislation regarding the Canada pension plan would not be brought back until the fall, will the government consider announcing before this session recesses the actual date on which the $10 increase in the old age security pension will be made effective? As the Prime Minister knows, the Minister of National Health and Welfare said that it would be some time early in 1964. I am asking the government to consider bringing that date forward, but whatever it does, will it let the house know before the session recesses what the date will be?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Well, we will certainly consider that, Mr. Speaker, and I hope the date will be earlier than my hon. friend fears.

GRAIN

WHEAT, OATS AND BARLEY—FURTHER INQUIRY AS TO INITIAL PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. As a guide in determining whether wheat, oats or barley should be delivered on the initial quota, will the minister inform the house whether consideration is still being given to the initial price, including the $3 a bushel for wheat, or is this idea completely shelved?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The other day I made a statement about the initial prices of wheat, oats and barley for the present year, and I have nothing further to add at the moment.

SASKATCHEWAN—REPORTED INABILITY TO DELIVER QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. As of noon today I was informed by his department that there were still 29 points on a 10 bushel quota.

Since there is only one day of the old crop year remaining, how does he expect to meet his goal of 12 bushels, and how does he expect the farmers to deliver the two bushels in the one remaining day if there are no box cars?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, on Friday the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre asked a similar question and I promised I would have a statement early this week. I should like to make that statement now in reply to this question. I regret that the statement is rather lengthy, but I feel the subject is probably important enough to warrant it.

The Canadian wheat board has advised me that as at noon today there were 1,891 delivery points in western Canada on a quota of 12 bushels per specified acre out of a total of 1,942. Of the remaining 51 points, 22 of these have been closed and 29, as the hon. member for Mackenzie said, are still on a quota of 10 bushels per specified acre. Of those points on a 10 bushel quota, 25 are located in the province of Saskatchewan and 4 in the province of Alberta. Despite the concentration of shipments between now and the end of the crop year, some of these 29 stations will still be on a 10 bushel quota at the end of the crop year on July 31.

Early in June the board forwarded special questionnaire No. 3 to all delivery points requesting agents to estimate the quantity of all grains deliverable by producers in the 1962-63 crop year. The information received by the board from the agents as a result of this questionnaire showed the following estimates as at June 7, 1963:

	Millions of Bushels
Wheat	430.8
Durum	59.3
Oats	95.1
Barley	77.0
Rye	9.6
Flax	13.7
Total	685.5

Producers' marketings to June 7 totalled 475.4 million bushels, leaving a total of 210.1 million bushels to be delivered between June 7 and July 31 to take all grain off farms. After considering the disappearance in export and domestic markets during the period June 7 to July 31, 1963, it was apparent to the board that it would be impossible to provide space for the delivery of 210.1 million bushels of grain within the period June 7 to July 31. However, in order to permit producers deliveries to the maximum possible, the board decided to set as a target a quota of 12 bushels per specified acre for all delivery points by July 31, 1963, which would involve the delivery of about 153.1 million bushels, thus leaving approximately 57 million bushels on farms at the end of the crop year.

The necessary shipping orders were placed to meet this target and the railways were requested to exert every effort to supply box cars in order that the goal of 12 bushels per specified acre could be attained. The Canadian wheat board states that the co-operation received from the railways has been excellent and the railways are continuing to supply box cars to the maximum extent possible.

However, in an operation of this magnitude it is inevitable that difficulties will arise which will adversely affect some areas. While, in the opinion of the board, these difficulties have not been major, nevertheless they have had the effect of hampering the attainment of the target quota. The latest records available to the board indicate that as of July 24 the estimated quantity still to be delivered to complete a 12 bushel quota was approximately 29 million bushels. The railway companies are maintaining shipments at maximum, and a considerable portion of this 29 million bushels will be delivered to country elevators by the end of the crop year.

In summary, the majority of the shipping points in western Canada will, by July 31, have marketed a full 12 bushel quota. Some points, while on a 12 bushel quota, will not have the opportunity to deliver all the grain represented by that quota, but they will have had the opportunity of delivering all grain represented by an 11 bushel quota. As previously stated, a minimum number of stations will still be on a 10 bushel quota.

The target of 12 bushels per specified acre was based on the information contained in special questionnaire No. 3, to which I have already referred; but since the results of this questionnaire were received a great many points have advised that additional quantities have been revealed which were not reported to the board in the questionnaire.

The board has taken the stand that it cannot give effect to these additional quantities of grain in its computations, as to do so would completely disrupt the plans that were laid with the railway companies to provide box cars on the basis of information previously received as at June 7. There is no doubt this situation has developed because of the excellent crop conditions now prevailing, and producers therefore have decided to deliver stocks which they had been holding in reserve.

The board also advises that instructions in regard to quotas have been issued to the trade that the present crop year will end at midnight on July 31. The board is not prepared to extend the year end date, as previous experience in this regard has shown that any such action unduly delays the delivery of the unit quota in the new crop year.

The board regrets that this action will doubtless adversely affect, to some degree, a limited number of producers, but in the main this decision will be in the best interests of producers as a whole.

Mr. Korchinski: As a supplementary question, can the minister assure us that the grain will be taken out of these points in such a way that when the new crop comes in the initial crop will be able to be sold?

Mr. Sharp: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I did not understand the question.

Mr. Korchinski: The question is, can the minister assure us that the box cars will be allotted to any of these points that have not been able to deliver in such a way that the initial delivery can be made?

Mr. Sharp: I am sure this will be the intention and objective of the board.

BRIEF RESPECTING ELEVATOR HANDLING AND STORAGE CHARGES

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture which is somewhat related to the statement on wheat made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister any information on the brief presented in Winnipeg to the board of grain commissioners, which is under his department, regarding grain elevator handling and storage charges for the crop year which begins on August 1?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pascoe: Will the hon. gentleman make some inquiries and report to the house on this matter?

Mr. Hays: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—CONSTRUCTION OF TELEVISION STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph P. O'Keefe (St. John's East): I have a question for the Secretary of State. My question is, what is holding up approval of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation television station in St. John's, Newfoundland?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I see no more reason why the question asked by the hon. member for St. John's East should be put on the order paper than the question asked yesterday by the hon. member for Port Arthur. I am very pleased, particularly in view of what I thought was an uncalled for reflection by the hon. member for Port Arthur, to which I took no exception, to have an opportunity to put the record straight in connection with this matter.

I might start by saying that the board of broadcast governors has not yet given approval to this matter, and therefore it is not yet within the power of the government to take any action with regard to it. The fact is that certain conditions were attached to this recommendation of the board of broadcast governors on April 5. I could give the house these conditions, but I do not want to go into all that detail. Then on April 17, five days before the present government came into office, the board received a letter from the deputy minister of transport asking to have a clarification of those conditions before a recommendation was made to the Minister of Transport. I am not suggesting this was done by any minister; all I am pointing out is that it was done before the present government came to office. I just want to make the date clear. The chairman of the board replied on April 13 to this effect:

> I shall, as soon as possible, write you further on the other conditions which the board recommended by application in the case of the St. John's station.

I consulted the chairman of the board of broadcast governors this morning and he informed me that on June 28 he wrote to the vice president, corporative affairs, C.B.C., as follows in reply to a letter received from the corporation:

> We are reluctant at this time to spell out more precisely the general conditions attached to the board's recommendations in this case. The expansion of C.B.C. facilities with consequent disaffiliation of private stations is among the matters being discussed by Mr. Ouimet, Mr. Jamieson and myself at the request of the minister (the Secretary of State) and with a view to reporting to the minister. The procedures involved in expansion of the C.B.C. facilities including alternative network service to the disaffiliated stations the availability and economical use of microwave facilities, the relation of assisting rebroadcasting stations to the extension of alternative service, etc. are important. While individual cases may differ in some respects it seems desirable to establish some principles applicable to all cases of the expansion of second service into smaller centres, including St. John's. Agreement on these principles should, we believe, precede a more precise definition of the conditions applicable to the St. John's case and, therefore, we feel we are not in a position to meet the request of the Minister of Transport at this time.

Now, until the board has made that recommendation the government has no legal authority to act.

Mr. C. R. Granger (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): A supplementary question. May I ask the Secretary of State what progress may have been made toward the establishment of radio and television facilities in western Labrador?

Mr. Pickersgill: I made an inquiry some time ago about that, and I know the C.B.C. has given consideration to this matter. I also know there is a large and growing community in this area which has neither radio or television facilities and which is most anxious to get them. As one of the members for Newfoundland I confess I am a little disappointed that this is not going ahead a little faster.

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Can the Secretary of State tell us what arrangements have been made to supply the residents of southwestern Saskatchewan with these facilities?

Mr. Pickersgill: As the hon. member knows I am rather familiar with and quite sympathetic to the problems of the people of southwestern Saskatchewan. I shall make some inquiries, because I have not informed myself within the last day or two.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): May I ask a supplementary question.

Mr. Speaker: Is the question urgent? Because this is taking on the nature of debate. If it is urgent, yes.

Mr. Pugh: You may not deem this question to be one of urgency, Mr. Speaker, but I would say it is just as urgent as the other questions have been. Has the Secretary of State looked into the television difficulties of the Boundary section in my constituency of Okanagan Boundary?

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be glad to do so.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I have a supplementary question on this matter. I wonder whether the Secretary of State could tell us whether any further consideration is being given to the problem of establishing a French television station in the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Pickersgill: I could not give an answer to that offhand, but I can inquire.

(Translation):

WORLD FAIR

REPLIES TO INVITATIONS TO PARTICIPATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jean-Pierre Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Could the minister advise the house as to whether he has received replies, in the affirmative or the negative, from the various countries which were invited to participate in the world fair which will be held in Montreal in 1967?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Great Britain and Belgium have accepted. Cambodia, the Dominican Republic, Laos, Morocco and Uganda have declined the invitation.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION RESPECTING FUND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour.

In view of the report which was published today in La Presse to the effect that the unemployment insurance fund is $25 million in the red, what steps does the minister consider taking to replenish the fund?

(Text):

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, usually at this time of the year the fund begins to replenish itself, and action at the present time is not required in order to assure that benefits will be paid in the usual manner.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

INQUIRY AS TO PURCHASE OF CARAVELLE PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is the minister in a position to tell us whether T.C.A. has decided against the purchase of the Caravelle, which was to be built 100 per cent in Montreal, in favour of two other types of medium jets of which only a smaller percentage would be built in Canada, as reported in La Presse of Saturday?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I did not see the report in the paper on Saturday, but no decision has yet been taken on the purchase of additional aircraft by T.C.A. That matter is not yet ready for decision. The reference to the Caravelle is not accurate because the matter has not come forward for decision.

Mr. Balcer: As a supplementary question, could the minister tell us whether the government has asked T.C.A. not to go ahead with any purchase without referring the matter to the cabinet for approval?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the government has asked T.C.A. not to proceed with the signing of any purchase order until the government has considered it, with particular reference to the Canadian labour content of any possible purchase in Canada.

COMBINES

REQUEST FOR SETTING UP OF MARKETING ADVISORY COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Justice and ask him whether the government is prepared to accede to the request of the distributive trades advisory committee which presented a brief on July 8 last in which they asked the government to step up a marketing advisory council and to repeal section 34 of the Combines Investigation Act.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, an official of the Department of Justice and the minister listened to the representations that were made on that occasion and are giving careful consideration to the request presented at that time.

(Translation):

STORMS

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Real Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. Will the victims of the tornado which struck the counties of Chapleau and Villeneuve on June 30 last, sweeping hundreds of farms and causing over $2 million damage, obtain some assistance from the federal government to enable them to rebuild the farm buildings destroyed?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government will follow the normal course in this matter; that is, await the request from the provincial government for supplementary assistance to that government. That is the constitutional procedure. We have had no request from the provincial government for that kind of help.

(Translation):

Mr. Caouette: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the government take due consideration of requests made by members of parliament when they ask for assistance on behalf of persons of any county in Canada who have suffered some damage? Are those requests duly considered by the government?

[Mr. Balcer.]

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: No. Mr. Speaker. We can only act in regard to this matter when we have received a constitutional request from the province.

(Translation):

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO AMENDMENT OF BANKRUPTCY ACT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Does he intend to bring in some amendment to the Bankruptcy Act in order to prevent the existing abuses?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that matter is under study. I must point out to the hon. member that a committee of the Department of Justice has been studying for quite some time the amendments to be made to the Bankruptcy Act.

In this connection a bill was introduced in the other place, and in due time that legislation will be brought before this house because it has to do with an amendment proposed to the Bankruptcy Act.

(Text):

INQUIRIES RESPECTING U.S. MODIFICATION OF TAX IMPOSED

On the orders of the day:

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance a question with respect to a news story which appeared in the press this morning as to a proposed meeting or conference between officials of the Department of Finance and United States treasury officials in Washington. Is the news story substantially correct; when will the meeting be held; what does the minister envisage will be the topics which will be discussed at that meeting and over what period will the meeting take place?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was not quite clear about which news story or what the subject matter was.

Mr. Nowlan: Are you having more than one conference in Washington over the week end?

Mr. Gordon: As I announced yesterday, a senior official of the Department of Finance went down to Washington yesterday afternoon, and I am planning to do down on Friday morning to discuss with the officials of the United States administration the whole subject of their proposed tax on foreign securities.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Finance be able to say whether discussions are continuing among the various nations in the western world to liberalize the machinery of the international monetary fund to provide for increased world liquidity? Is this matter receiving attention; and what is the general view of the government in this connection?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, this matter is being considered and discussed by most of the countries of the western world. It is being considered by this government, and we hope that within a short time we will have some announcement to make about it.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister say which officials will accompany him on his Washington trip?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe it is customary to name the officials, but as it has been announced in the press I have no hesitation in saying that Mr. Plumptre, the assistant deputy minister, will be one of the officials.

Mr. Pigeon: And experts?

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister inform the house whether the United States officials have indicated that they have encountered any of the difficulties he encountered in administering the proposed tax?

Mr. Gordon: Not to me, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR RELATIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—STRIKE BY FISHERMEN AND ALLIED WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. I am wondering whether the minister is able to give the house a report on the possibility of a settlement of the British Columbia fisheries strike.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I am not in a position at this time to give a satisfactory answer as to the immediate possibility of a settlement of the British Columbia fishing strike. However, with the permission of the house may I read a press release that is being issued at this very moment. It is a joint press release issued by the federal government and the government of British Columbia, and reads as follows:

The federal Minister of Fisheries and the minister of labour for British Columbia met all day yesterday in Vancouver to consider the present crisis in the British Columbia fishing industry. The current dispute is primarily concerned with the minimum prices to be received by fishermen from the sale of fish and no effective procedures presently exist to resolve this problem. In considering the current serious situation it was agreed that the fishermen should be urged to return to work forthwith. While there may be a valid dispute between the union and the fisheries association, it does however prevent the harvesting of this valuable resource. Unless fishing is resumed immediately some runs will be missed completely and some may be damaged by excessive spawning escapement.

The fishery resource is one whose harvest must be kept under strict control. Failure to harvest, with overseeding of spawning beds, could be as disastrous as overtake. A balance has to be maintained to keep stocks at a high productive level.

It is the joint recommendation of both governments that fishing be resumed immediately and that the matters in dispute be submitted to arbitration for final and binding decision. To expedite the proceedings the federal and provincial governments are prepared to appoint on request, if the parties agree, a single arbitrator to commence hearings immediately.

However, no further losses to the workmen, the industry or the national economy should be allowed to continue and hence the recommendation that fishing be resumed forthwith. To seek a long term solution to the problem the federal and provincial governments have agreed to appoint a committee consisting of three representatives of the federal government and three representatives of the provincial government to examine in detail the problems concerned with price and wage disputes in the British Columbia fishing industry and to submit to both governments recommendations of action necessary to minimize interruptions of fishing operations in the future.

[Later:]

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries arising out of the announcement he made earlier today concerning the appointment of a committee or commission to make a long range investigation into the fishing industry in British Columbia. I should like the minister to inform the house in a more specific way as to the nature of this commission and its terms of reference. If the members have already been chosen I, for one, would certainly like to have that information also.

Mr. Robichaud: In reply I wish to say that the personnel has not yet been chosen, and when the terms of reference have been decided on an announcement will be made.

Mr. Barnett: Can the minister not indicate to the house, at least in a general way, the nature of this commission? Is it to be a joint royal commission set up by the federal and provincial governments, or is it to be a study by a working committee at civil service level to advise the two governments?

Mr. Robichaud: If possible the committee will be formed of civil servants at high level from the Departments of Justice, Fisheries and Labour.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Barnett: Can the minister advise the house under which department of government responsibility for this committee will lie?

Mr. Robichaud: That decision will be made later.

Mr. Douglas: Will the report of this committee be published?

Mr. Robichaud: I understand the meetings will be held in camera. If the report is to be made public, a decision will be reached at the time in co-operation with the provincial government.

[Later:]

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to direct to the Minister of Fisheries in connection with the joint statement being made by the federal and provincial authorities urging striking fishermen in British Columbia to return to work pending settlement of their dispute.

My question is, has this recommendation been made directly to the fishermen's association in British Columbia and the fishermen's union, or will they merely read about it in the press release?

Mr. Robichaud: I am sorry, but I could not hear the last part of the hon. member's question.

Mr. Mather: I said, has the recommendation been made directly or formally to the disputants in the proceeding, or will they simply read about it in the press release?

Mr. Robichaud: No, Mr. Speaker, the two parties have not been notified of the decision made by the two governments. They must know by now, since the release was made at three o'clock today.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask a supplementary question? Have any of the federal government's conciliation services been made available to these two groups?

Mr. Robichaud: No, Mr. Speaker.

NORRIS COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Last week the right hon. gentleman indicated that there might be legislation arising out of some of the recommendations of the Norris commission before the summer recess. I wonder if he is now in a position to say definitely whether such legislation is likely to be brought down.

[Mr. Robichaud.]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, but I hope to be in a position to do so tomorrow.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—EFFECT OF JUDGMENT OF B.C. COURT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is topical. In view of the news that according to the judgment of Mr. Justice Sherwood Lett the greater portion of the property of the British Columbia hydro authority is illegally held, under these circumstances does the minister consider it legal, ethical or wise to continue discussions with the co-chairman of the British Columbia hydro authority with respect to the Columbia river treaty?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as my hon. friend knows the attorney general of the province of British Columbia has announced that the government of that province has decided to appeal the judgment of Chief Justice Sherwood Lett. The matter is therefore sub judice and, of course, does not in any way affect the procedures which I outlined to the house some time ago.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it would not be sub judice to ask the hon. gentleman this question. In view of the serious consequences that will flow from this judgment, is it the intention of the government of Canada to be represented by counsel on the appeal?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will discuss the matter with the Minister of Justice, but I should not think there would be any representation by counsel of the federal government in the matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is it not a fact that if this judgment stands—and I am not criticizing it in any way—it pretty nearly puts an end to the relationship in so far as the Columbia river project is concerned and the co-operation between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman is of course aware that the province of British Columbia continues to be the owner of the resource, and no judgment of any court can alter that constitutional fact.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I know the minister cannot deal with any discussion going on between nations or between powers, but is it right to assume that there are discussions going on between the hon. gentleman in his capacity as Secretary of State for External Affairs and the representatives of the United States, to arrange for a postponement of any action which otherwise would be determined upon until this matter goes through the courts, which may take some months or some years?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. gentleman is quite wrong in the conclusion he draws.

Mr. Nowlan: Which one?

AIRPORTS

THE PAS, MAN.—REQUEST FOR IMPROVEMENT OF RUNWAYS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Could the minister advise the house whether he has anything further to report concerning any plans there may be for either the repair or the replacement of the runways at the Department of Transport airport at The Pas, Manitoba?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, but I will look into the matter and see whether I can give some more information before the house adjourns for the summer vacation.

Mr. Simpson: A supplementary question. Is the minister in a position to say whether there are any other Department of Transport airports in Canada where it has been necessary to place restrictions on aircraft on account of deterioration of runways?

Mr. McIlraith: There undoubtedly are restrictions on some airports in Canada as to the weight of the planes using the airports; but I will follow up on the question of the particular airport in which the hon. member is interested and get whatever information is available either tomorrow or the next day.

(Translation):

HOUSE OF COMMONS

SUGGESTED CHANGE RESPECTING INDEMNITIES TO PARTY LEADERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State? In view of the report published in a Montreal newspaper to the effect that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) yesterday headed a group of ten members who voted against the parliamentary indemnity increase, could the minister tell the house if he intends to amend the bill to reduce from 12 to 10 the number of members a party must have if its leader is to receive the additional amount of $4,000?

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would think the life expectancy of this group is so short that it would not be worth while.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that is the first time I have ever heard the minister refer to those associated with him as "this group".

Mr. Pickersgill: On a question of privilege, sir, I think the right hon. gentleman must have misunderstood the question. It was the group associated with him to which the question related.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, you cannot fix it up.

(Translation):

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I raise a question of privilege. It concerns the question asked by the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Chapdelaine). Since both the question and the reply referred to a vote taken in this house and our standing orders state that hon. members cannot comment on the stand taken by a member when a question is put to the house—

An hon. Member: What about your leader?

Mr. Valade: I would rather refer to my leader than to yours. The question asked by the hon. member for Sherbrooke was out of order and, therefore, so was the reply. I would point out to the house—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I have the floor but the Liberal party are obstructing me all the time, as they always do. I believe I have as much right, Mr. Speaker, to raise a question of privilege as the funny man from Bonavista-Twillingate, who raised a point of order. My question is—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I have been listening attentively to the interesting remarks of the hon. member for Sherbrooke and also the hon. member for St. Mary. I think we should leave it there.

Mr. Valade: I did not conclude my question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, because of the obstruction from the other side.

Mr. Speaker: If there was a question of privilege it certainly evaporated in the ensuing discussion.

Inquiries of the Ministry

INQUIRY AS TO PAY INCREASES FOR CERTAIN STAFF MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister yet in a position to indicate whether a decision has been made regarding pay increases for those members of the House of Commons staff who were to get increases along with those given to group D of the civil service?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member that the matter has not been overlooked, and I would think that Your Honour may have some announcement to make in due course.

Mr. Knowles: Could the Minister of Finance say how long "due course" is in this case?

Mr. Gordon: I am hardly in a position to speak for His Honour on that question.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO INVITATIONS TO YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, on several occasions in this house I have asked the Prime Minister about the possibility of allowing the governments of the Yukon and Northwest Territories to participate more actively in federal-provincial conferences. I wonder whether the Prime Minister is in a position to advise the house of the result of his investigations.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question of their participation in the conference which met last week end was examined, but it was decided not to extend an invitation for this conference. For one thing it would have required the approval of all the provincial representatives. This question has arisen previously, in 1960, when the government of that day decided it was not appropriate to extend invitations of this kind. We are having the question looked into in view of the next provincial conference; but in any event, whether or not the Yukon and Northwest Territories are represented, we will make sure that they are informed of what happened last week end, and that all information which bears on their problems will be sent to them by the minister of northern affairs, who was attending the conference.

[Mr. Speaker.]

BRIDGES

CHAMPLAIN BRIDGE, MONTREAL—ABOLITION OF TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Transport and receive a direct answer. Can the minister inform the house whether the tolls on the Champlain bridge will be abolished? Yes or no?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member evidently has not read Hansard carefully or he would have seen that this question was raised earlier in the session, and I answered that the matter was receiving attention. It is under consideration now.

Mr. Pigeon: That is not yes or no.

(Translation):

IMMIGRATION

REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING RELATIVES OF CHINESE IN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Did he receive a brief from the leaders of Chinese communities in Canada asking for an improvement in landing conditions of relatives in Canada? If so, could he tell the house what action he intends to take in that regard?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question before I entered the house.

I take this opportunity to inform the house that some ten days ago the hon. member for St. Paul (Mr. Wahn), accompanied a delegation of Chinese group leaders from Toronto, Hamilton, Montreal and Ottawa, and I wish to call the attention of the house to their serious and reasonable behaviour and representations.

We had quite a long discussion and I pointed out to them that of their three suggestions, two were raising problems of government policy which were at present under study by the officials of my department following instructions I had given them.

As for their third suggestion, it was in connection with problems or difficulties raised by the overflow, shall we say, of procedures to be followed in Hong Kong.

At the present time I am considering the opportunity and even the necessity to delegate one of my officials to Hong Kong and, if it is possible, to go there myself soon in order to see whether the delays could not be reduced.

In any case, my hon. friend and the other members can rest assured that this complex and human interest issue shall be extensively considered and that as soon as it is possible to arrive at a solution, that solution will be submitted to the cabinet in the shortest possible time.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. Did the minister or the government give those people assurance that an independent tribunal would be established shortly to look after those applications for admission?

Mr. Favreau: No, Mr. Speaker, I gave no assurance that any particular tribunal would be established. I simply stated that one of the numerous possible solutions which we would have to consider was the establishment of a tribunal or a near-judiciary body which would advise the minister, or some kind of a system of appeal from the decision of the officials. However, no decision has been announced because, of course, until the government has adopted some specific measure, I shall be unable to inform the house; besides, I would not be allowed to do so before a decision is reached.

(Text):

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

WHOOPING CRANES—REPORTED DECREASE IN NUMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): I have a question to ask the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has the minister taken note of the current references in the press to the gradual reduction in the whooping crane population which has now declined from 38 to 28—almost in the same ratio as the decline of the N.D.P.—and can he advise what new steps are being taken by the wildlife branch to preserve these rare and curious birds?

An hon. Member: Which; the birds or the N.D.P.?

Mr. Douglas: I can assure the hon. member that the N.D.P. are in no way related to wildlife.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ST. JOHN'S, NFLD.—REPORTED LAY-OFF OF DOCK WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister received any communication or request from representatives of the unions at the C.N.R. dockyard in St. John's, Newfoundland, pertaining to recent lay-offs? If so, would he be willing to meet with a delegation from those unions to discuss this problem?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): The answer to the first question is no. The answer to the second question is yes. But I should add that the Leader of the Opposition asked a question on this subject yesterday. I am trying to get full information to answer that question, and also to see if there is any work available which could be put into that dockyard.

FORESTRY

ONTARIO—RESEARCH INTO DUTCH ELM DISEASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Temple (Hastings South): I have a question for the Minister of Forestry. In view of the rapidly increasing prevalence in Ontario of Dutch elm disease, is the minister's department conducting any research into this serious problem?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Minister of Forestry): I thank the hon. member for having given me verbal notice of this question. The answer is yes. Although responsibility for the protection of shade trees rests primarily with the municipalities, the Department of Forestry has been conducting intensive research to improve control practices and to develop a cure for this very serious disease. As a result of work done at the forest research laboratory in Quebec a species of elm resistant to the disease has now been developed. These trees are being tested to determine the degree and permanence of the resistance. Upon request the Department of Forestry will provide technical assistance, including diagnostic services, to municipalities and others who are interested in control procedures.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, today the Minister of Fisheries and the Minister of Forestry have both made statements of the type usually made on motions. These statements have been made, however, in answer to questions. I refer particularly to the statement made by the Minister of Fisheries in which he said an announcement was being made simultaneously. I wondered at the time whether he would have made the statement in any case if he had not been asked the question. I should merely like to raise the point of order at this time that long and extended statements of government policy ought to be made on motions and not in answer to planted questions.

Mr. Speaker: I think the point taken by the hon. member is quite correct. They were allowed due to the anticipated adjournment of the present session. In view of the fact that there may be only a few more days I thought it would be advisable at this time to let the statements go, but I think the point is well taken. Statements today have been long. If they are going to be that lengthy in the future I do think they should be made on motions, and if questions are to be short I think that replies should be short also, if possible.

(Translation):

PENITENTIARIES

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL—STEPS TO ENSURE SAFETY OF GUARDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice.

Does the minister intend to implement the recommendations made by the wives of the guards at the St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, in order to ensure the security of their husbands?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am unaware of representations made along the lines indicated by my hon. friend. When those representations are brought to my attention, I can assure him, as well as other members who would be interested in the matter, that those representations will receive careful study.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice.

Can the minister tell us the source of the article published in today's La Presse, on page 3, in which it is stated that the minister received a delegation of the wives of the penitentiary guards, in Ottawa?

Mr. Pigeon: It is rather the Voice of Women.

Mr. Chevrier: I am not responsible for articles appearing in La Presse, the great press.

[Mr. Aiken.]

(Text):

INDUSTRY

DEVELOPMENT BY JAPANESE FIRMS OF NORTHERN IRON DEPOSITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of Industry. In view of the fact it is generally reported that three Japanese steel firms are planning to take part in the development of the iron ore deposits in the Yukon-Northwest Territories border area, with pipe line connections both for ore and oil to the United States coast, could the minister inform us what action the government is taking to see that both the steel processing and oil refinery are established on Canadian soil?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I am not entirely familiar with these negotiations, but I would ask my hon. friend to bear in mind that it is the Japanese companies which are proposing to purchase and develop the iron ore. Perhaps the Canadian government is not in a preferred position to demand from them concessions of the type the hon. member mentioned.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

GOOSE BAY—RELATIONS BETWEEN SERVICE PERSONNEL AND CIVILIANS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister agree to investigate the report carried in yesterday's Montreal Gazette of strained relations between the R.C.A.F. and civilians at Goose Bay, where the disruption has been sufficient to cause the intervention of Premier Smallwood and the making of charges of harassment and countercharges of a vendetta?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen the report referred to but I shall look into it.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR RE-ESTABLISHMENT OF CANADA-U.S. PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the strained state of Canada-United States relations, would the Prime Minister consider activating the Canada-United States parliamentary group with a view to alleviating this situation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I do not know of any strained relations since April, Mr. Speaker, but I hope that this joint committee of congressmen and parliamentarians will be able to meet very shortly.

Mr. Nasserden: A supplementary question. If there are no strained relations then why is the Minister of Finance going to the United States?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Perhaps I can satisfy the hon. member. I have been in active communication with my counterpart in the United States and tentatively the month of January is set as a possible time for a meeting.

PENSIONS

STATEMENT BY MINISTER RESPECTING COST OF PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of her reported statement that Premier John Robarts and a group of actuaries were "guessing and guessing wrongly" about the proposed cost of the pension plan, will she tell the house upon what basis her own costs compilation was made?

SHIPPING

ASSISTANCE FOR SHIP CAUGHT IN NORTHERN ICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport arising out of a newspaper report last evening that the 4,000 ton Danish freighter Helga Dan is trapped in the ice some 160 miles east of Resolute bay. Will the Minister of Transport assure me that the services of the icebreakers of his department will be made available to this ship in distress?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker, but I am not sure from the newspaper report what the exact situation is and what is required to free the ship.

TRADE

RAPESEED—REQUEST FOR AID IN SALE TO JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale in my absence yesterday asked me to report on the inquiries I had been making about the sale of rapeseed to Japan and other countries. I should like to inform the hon. member that in recent months my departmental officials in Ottawa have been in contact on numerous occasions with our trade commissioner's office in Tokyo as well as with Japanese government officials regarding prospects for the sale of Canadian rapeseed to Japan. There is every indication that Japan will import a greater volume of rapeseed from Canada this year than last year. Sales are being negotiated by Canadian exporters with Japanese buyers as well as with European buyers, and it would appear that there will be little difficulty in marketing the Canadian rapeseed crop in our usual export markets, including Japan.

O.E.C.D.—PARLIAMENTARY RATIFICATION OF INCLUSION OF JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is it the intention of the government to bring before parliament ratification of the inclusion of Japan in the O.E.C.D. and, if so, when?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this matter is now being considered, and I may have something to say before we adjourn.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR PROTECTION OF PASSENGERS ON CHARTER FLIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fred F. Stenson (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice. Has anyone approached him in regard to some type of protection for people taking charter trips out of this country who are being left stranded many miles away from home, such as the group in Britain at the present time?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no, and I take it the reason is that a matter of this kind would normally come under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport, which I think authorizes trips of this kind. If there is a question affecting the Department of Justice and the hon. member will bring it to my attention, I shall be only too pleased to look into it.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CONSTRUCTION OF FRIGATES FOR CANADIAN NAVY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence if he can tell the house whether he will be in a position to announce a decision on the matter of the frigates and submarines for the Royal Canadian Navy before the recess, or is he going to make this decision public while the house is not sitting?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I do not think it will be possible to make any announcement before the house rises, Mr. Speaker, but I hope that a decision will not be too long delayed.

(Translation):

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

OTTAWA AND QUEBEC CITY—ISSUE OF SUMMER CLOTHING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. Is he aware that letter carriers in Ottawa and Quebec city have not been given summer shirts for more than two years and does he intend to remedy soon that anomalous situation?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I inquired into the matter. Unfortunately, because of some delay in the carrying out of that contract, the issue of those summer shirts has been somewhat late. However, I am under the impression that there is a sufficient quantity of those shirts today for all those who need them.

(Text):

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SESSIONAL ALLOWANCES, TRAVELLING EXPENSES, PENSIONS, ETC.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State) moved third reading of Bill No. C-91, to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act and the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Diefenbaker: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING SALARIES, ADDITIONAL JUDGES, ETC.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-92, to amend the Judges Act and the Criminal Code.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

EXCISE TAX ACT

The house resumed, from Thursday, July 25, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-90, to amend the Excise Tax Act—Mr. Gordon—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 4—Refund of tax paid on goods for use in sewerage or drainage systems.

Mr. Gordon: During the consideration of clause 4 of the bill last Thursday evening there was considerable discussion concerning the fact that certain areas are not called municipalities, and a number of hon. members offered suggestions about what should or should not be classed as municipalities. I promised to look into the matter, and I have had an opportunity of doing so in the meantime. I have been able to examine carefully the various suggestions put forward by hon. members, and I now have an amendment which the Secretary of State wishes to place before the committee to define the scope of the term "municipality".

When we began to examine this matter, even before Thursday, we found it to be more complicated than at first it appeared. On Thursday evening several members, including the hon. member for Churchill and the hon. member for Royal, suggested that anything which a province declared to be or designated as a municipality should also be classed as a municipality for the purposes of the Excise Tax Act. We found, however, that the provinces sometimes defined municipalities in different ways for different purposes in different acts. There would have been some uncertainty as to which definition would apply. Moreover, there is no uniformity among provinces in the way in which they define municipalities. Therefore to accept a provincial definition might have given more generous exemption in one province than in another.

Now, in searching for a definition we had to keep in mind that there must be some government body to which the exemptions could be extended or refunds paid. The exemption from sales tax for certain municipal purchases is not a direct exemption for individuals, although of course individuals residing in the municipalities benefit. This is an exemption for a governing body to help it meet the serious problem of financing the expansion of public services in its area.

Subject to this requirement, it was our aim to make the definition as broad as possible. We are therefore proposing a definition of municipality which will be very similar to the definition which it is proposed to use in the municipal development and loan act. The definition proposed refers to city, town, village, district, rural municipality or other incorporated municipal body; that is, it refers specifically to all the forms of organization generally regarded as providing local government. However, because of the difficulty of foreseeing or describing other kinds of local authorities which may develop from time to time, it is proposed, if this is agreeable to hon. members of the committee, that the definition contain a provision giving the governor in council power to determine that such other local authority as the governor in council may determine, shall be a municipality for the purpose of this act.

It is a question whether the members of the committee wish to give this power to the governor in council. Short of that it will be very difficult to arrive at a definition that will cover every conceivable set of circumstances. I think it should be noted that the definition proposed will apply to the important list of exemptions for municipal purchases already in the Excise Tax Act as well as exemption for materials for sewerage and drainage systems described in the bill now before the committee. For that reason it is suggested that the clauses be renumbered so that this definition will appear at the beginning of the bill. The words which appear at the end of clause 4 read as follows:

> For the purpose of this subsection any agency operating a sewerage or drainage system for or on behalf of a municipality may be declared by the minister to be a municipality.

These words were added to the act in 1958, when the exemptions for materials purchased by municipalities for sewerage and drainage systems were included. The purpose of these words is to extend the exemption to agencies such as the Ontario water resources commission, and it is proposed to retain these words in the existing clause 4.

Mr. Lambert: Will the minister agree this presupposes the existence of a municipality?

Mr. Gordon: That is correct.

Mr. Lambert: And if you have not got the initial municipality you cannot have an agency.

Mr. Gordon: As the hon. member for Edmonton West has pointed out, this is the problem and it is a very difficult one. There must be some agency of some incorporated body to whom the refunds can be made. It is not intended to make these refunds payable to individuals, and this I think will cover the points that were raised on Thursday.

Mr. Simpson: Could the minister say whether in his opinion this new amendment would apply to the provincial bodies I mentioned, such as local government districts? These areas are eligible under the winter works program. They are not municipalities in the correct sense of the word, but they are eligible under the winter works program, and I would hope they would be included in this.

Mr. Gordon: Before we talk about it I wonder if we could have the amendment read. I think it will be a little easier then; but to answer the question quickly, it will be possible under the proposed amendment for the Minister of National Revenue to recommend that this be done by order in council. It will be the intention to cover the kind of municipalities which the hon. member has in mind. I do not know any other way of bringing them in under the net except by doing this.

Before I ask the Secretary of State to move this amendment concerning municipalities I should also like to say that I have reviewed the representations made by hon. members, especially by the hon. member for York-Humber and the hon. member for Port Arthur, and by the others outside the house, to the effect that the exception for building materials for schools and universities should be extended to cover building materials for use in the construction of public libraries. We have come to the conclusion that such an exemption should be provided, and when the amendment concerning municipalities has been dealt with and we move on to clause 5 we shall put forward an amendment to that effect.

Mr. Rynard: Sometimes under the law a person is forced by the health act of a province or municipality to put in a sewerage system, and I would ask the minister whether some clause could be introduced to give the same treatment to an individual as to a municipality.

Mr. Gordon: That would open the matter up further than I think the government would be prepared to go. There are all sorts of restrictions and rules imposed, not only by the municipalities, but by the provincial governments. For example, there are building regulations which require individuals to build certain types of houses, and it would not be the intention in that case to relieve them of paying this particular tax. The great trouble about this as I think we all appreciate by now, is the question of knowing where to draw the line. In this case it was thought we would be in difficulty if we went further than the amendment which the Secretary of State was on the point of moving a few moments ago.

Mr. Rynard: I know of a case where a man is being forced to do this work. If he comes within the two years he is all right, but if it is over that he is caught and the municipality will be taking over the area and incorporating it. This is going to be very unfair on an individual who is living on the outskirts of a municipality. If a provincial or municipal board of health forces a person to do this then, with all due respect to the minister, I feel we should give the individual a break.

Mr. Korchinski: I would like to ask the minister how much revenue is involved in this obviously complicated clause. If it is not such a huge amount perhaps he might consider other points, and might even consider withdrawing it.

Mr. Gordon: It is a substantial amount. I do not think anybody can tell exactly, but if we start to make exemptions for people living in rural areas there will be quite a conflict with people living in urban areas, and the hope is that they will be treated on substantially the same basis. That is why if we start making exemptions for individuals, we will be in real trouble unless we make them for all individuals, and if we make them for all individuals then there is no point in distinguishing whether the work is for a drainage or sewerage system. You might as well apply the exemption to all building materials, and the first thing we will know is that we have not got a tax at all.

Mr. Korchinski: Could the minister indicate any round figure of revenue?

Mr. Gordon: I do not think there is any way of giving an estimate that I would be happy about. It depends on how far the exemption suggested by the hon. member for Simcoe East would go. I do not think you can limit it to people in rural municipalities.

Mr. Korchinski: This is an unusual situation. The minister proposes to introduce a tax and he has no idea how much revenue will be brought in by it. If he has no idea then maybe it will not bring in anything. On the other hand it may bring in $100 million. If it were something like $500,000 then it might be unnecessary because it would cost a lot of money to collect it.

Mr. Gordon: We have some estimate of the totals involved. At 4 per cent the totals involved come to something over $100 million for all the things that will be covered. One would have to be very precise in knowing what the additional exemption might involve before any kind of estimate could be made about that, but the more exemptions are made the more difficulties are encountered.

Mr. Willoughby: Mr. Chairman, earlier this session I asked the Minister of Finance a question similar to the one I am going to ask now. The minister referred the matter to the Minister of National Revenue at that time. I do not see it mentioned in the bill that is before us, so I would like to get some confirmation on whether consideration has been given to municipalities which have committed themselves, not by tender but by bylaw, to putting up public buildings such as city halls, where the actual contract has not been submitted. They will now be caught between a fixed price under the by-law and a contract price that has been called. I asked at the time whether it would be possible under circumstances of this type to have it considered as a contract. It is definitely a contract between the municipal and city authorities.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member would be willing to wait until we get to the clause of the bill dealing with refunds generally. I think it is clause 9.

Perhaps before this particular amendment is moved I might also refer to the question of certain building materials that are competitive. We have tried to take into account those situations where the imposition of the sales tax on building materials may result in serious competitive inequality where goods fabricated off the site of construction compete directly with goods that can be constructed on the site. In line with this purpose the bill contains a provision to provide that prefabricated buildings will not be taxable on their selling price, and the manufacturers of such buildings will have to pay sales tax on the materials they purchase. Similarly the manufacturers of structural building sections such as precast, prestressed concrete building sections or pillars are not regarded as manufacturers for sales tax purposes because these products compete with concrete sections that can be poured as the building is erected. The same rule will apply for manufacturers of concrete or cinder building blocks because these compete with poured concrete walls.

It has now been brought to our attention that a similar situation exists with respect to structural steel for buildings, which of course competes directly with prestressed forms. It is usual for the steel that goes into a building to be designed and cut to size on the premises of fabricating companies and delivered to the building site ready for erection. This steel competes directly with reinforced concrete poured on the site. In the case of concrete poured on site the labour involved does not enter into the base for sales tax. In the case of steel the labour involved in fabricating does become part of the price that is subject to sales tax. It is therefore proposed that an amendment be made which will have the effect of excluding from the base for sales tax that part of the selling price of steel which arises from the fabricating work done off the building site. It will take the form of a further paragraph to the new subclause (2b) added by clause 2 on page 1. The effect of this amendment will be that fabricators of structural steel for buildings will buy steel on which the sales tax is imposed but will not have to pay sales tax on the fabricated structural steel they sell.

Mr. Olson: There is one other area, Mr. Chairman, where I think there is an unfair competitive advantage. This matter has been brought to my attention since we passed clause 2, and I am very happy that the minister has mentioned it. I refer to the unwarranted competitive advantage given to what may be interpreted as building bricks or concrete bricks and cinder blocks. Over the past few years—I think it is fairly recent—the concrete block industry have developed a product that is very, very similar to the burnt brick in colour, size, etc. In the case of burnt brick the manufacturers are required to pay sales tax, I understand, under the bill that is being considered, on the clay, firing, labour and all the other component costs that go into the finished product; whereas with a concrete brick or block they are exempt from sales tax, I take it, in relation to the labour and the aggregate, which is the block, of course. The only thing they would pay sales tax on would be the cement that went into the concrete block.

I know there are going to be problems in making a ruling and an interpretation that would not change the competitive factor between these two types of bricks. But I would like to point out to the minister that there is very definitely, I think, an unwarranted competitive advantage given to the manufacturers of this type of brick in relation to the situation that existed previously. I wonder whether the minister would care to comment on this matter.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member has very successfully pointed out—more successfully than perhaps I have—the difficulty of knowing where to draw the line in these things. As I said, the reason for the exemption being given to concrete blocks, which are not quite, as I understand it, comparable with bricks, was that you can either make a concrete block in a separate plant or you can pour mixed concrete on the site. If you extend this to ordinary bricks that are fired or burnt in a kiln, then I presume the next question would be, should you not exclude lumber or steel siding or any of the other building materials that can be used as alternatives. This is a difficult problem. I do not think I would be prepared to go further than this at the moment.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, it might be unusual, but I do not believe I am asking for more exemptions. It might even be interpreted that I am committing suicide by asking for a tax to be placed on something so the competitive advantage will not be changed. The aggregate that goes into these concrete bricks is exempt at the present time; in fact everything that goes into the construction of these bricks is exempt except that they may have paid sales tax on the cement that went into them.

The point I am trying to make is that the minister is changing the competitive advantage for those types of concrete blocks that are used in the same way as concrete poured on the site. But this is not the kind of brick I am talking about.

Mr. Gordon: If I may deal with that point, Mr. Chairman, there is a distinction between a concrete block and a concrete brick. The concrete brick is subject to tax, just the same as the burnt brick. The exemption does not apply to concrete bricks.

Mr. Weichel: Mr. Chairman, I would like to direct a question to the minister. He mentioned previously something about a tax exemption on libraries and schools. Would that also include houses of worship, churches?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, the minister made reference to the proposal that prefabricated structural steel forms would be exempt, if I heard him aright, and I listened attentively to him as he outlined his proposal. The question that arises in my mind as a result of his remarks is, what is the situation with respect to laminated wood forms such as are coming into quite frequent use for roof structures?

Mr. Gordon: It was not proposed that the exemption be extended that far.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to see some distinction drawn between the functions of prefabricated structural steel forms and prefabricated wood forms. I think the minister understands that as a member from British Columbia I am quite interested in the use of such wood forms, which are manufactured in my province. The minister also knows that we have not anything by way of a steel industry in British Columbia compared with other parts of Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, may I make a few observations with a view to obtaining the minister's reasons for not granting a blanket exemption on all building materials purchased by local and provincial governments, as well as by provincial crown corporations such as Quebec hydro?

When the minister announced that 11 per cent tax, which has been reduced to 4 per cent, the Quebec premier judged it rather harshly. He mentioned, among other things, that it ran counter to provincial autonomy in general, and more particularly to the autonomy of Quebec.

If the minister really wishes provincial and municipal governments to start building programs on a large scale, I suggest that the government would be wise to exempt completely from the tax all building materials they will need. The government would collect the tax anyhow, in a roundabout way, as those programs would put people to work and the workers would pay income tax.

Actually, it would be an excellent thing. I also would like the minister to tell us, according to his own estimations or those of his officials, how much that new tax—I mean the 4 per cent tax on building materials—might bring in per annum?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: If I might answer the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm first, the total sales tax changes are estimated to increase the revenue over the current fiscal year by $70 million and next year by $285 million. That is the total.

In reply to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, in dealing with these different alternative forms of construction materials, an attempt is being made to place the material that is usually constructed off site, but could be constructed on site, in essentially the same position as those materials which are normally constructed or formed on site. That means that a concrete block is essentially the same as poured concrete on site. The next item which was considered was concrete slabs or concrete forms which could be produced on site but, like prefabricated houses, are sometimes produced off site. Because they are essentially the same as poured concrete they could be constructed on site. These items are directly in competition with the steel beams which are probably under pretty heavy pressure these days from concrete, and it was decided, as I said, to suggest an amendment which would take care of them.

The laminated wood forms mentioned by the hon. member are not, and I do not think could be, manufactured on the site. I agree it is a complication, but it is one that I am certainly not sufficiently familiar with at the moment to feel confident to exclude. I am reasonably confident about the others because I have gone into them very carefully, but on the point raised by the hon. member I think I should like more time to go into it with the industry concerned than is possible now. I can only undertake to do it before the act comes up for revision next time.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, just one matter. When the legislation was at the resolution stage the matter of mobile homes and travel trailers was raised, and I believe the minister said he would study it. Compared with a house built on site where the sales tax is paid on the material, the competitive position of a trailer or a mobile home which is built off site, and a good part of the cost of erection of which represents labour costs in making windows, doors, different mouldings and so on, I think requires consideration. I understood the minister would look into the problem of this particular industry.

Mr. Gordon: Would the hon. member allow me to wait on that till we come to the clause of the bill dealing with that particular point?

Mr. McIntosh: I was going to ask whether we were still on clause 4 or speaking generally.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, if you would let me move the proposed amendment we could dispose of clause 4 and get on to another clause.

Mr. McIntosh: Before the amendment is moved dealing with the definition of certain terms within the bill I should like to say a few words about certain terms in other sections of the act which I hope to have included in the amendment.

Mr. Pickersgill: This amendment relates only to paragraph 4, and I was wondering whether we would make more progress if we focused our attention on one clause at a time.

The Chairman: My understanding of this amendment is that it relates to the definition of the word "municipality" and has nothing to do with other clauses.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid I spoke a little hastily. The Minister of Finance has reminded me that the amendment, with which I am not very familiar, not yet having read it, will be to insert a new paragraph 1 which will provide a definition of "municipality". This might abbreviate some of the other discussion, and if the committee would like me to move it now I shall be very glad to do so. I will read it slowly so that everyone will be able to absorb it, including the mover. I move:

That Bill C-90, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act, be amended by renumbering clauses 1 to 9 thereof as clauses 2 to 10 respectively and by adding thereto as clause 1 thereof the following:

1. Subsection (1) of section 2 of the Excise Tax Act is amended by adding thereto, immediately after paragraph (b) thereof, the following paragraph:

"Municipality".

"(ba) "municipality" means (i) an incorporated city, metropolitan authority, town, village, township, district or rural municipality or other incorporated municipal body however designated, or

(ii) such other incorporated local authority as the governor in council may determine to be a municipality for the purposes of this act;"

Mr. Gregoire: In connection with that amendment, may I ask how it is that the federal government can define what is a municipality? I think it is the responsibility of the provincial authorities to determine what is a municipality. Here a decision is, apparently, to be made by order in council, and there is no reference to provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Gordon: I think the hon. member could not have been here when I was explaining this.

Mr. Gregoire: I was.

Mr. Gordon: Then he will remember that I said the difficulty about relying entirely on the provinces in this matter is that they have defined municipalities in different ways in different acts; it is a question of which provincial definitions could be used. Apart from this there is considerable difference between the definitions used by some provinces and those used by others. The definition proposed here includes all incorporated bodies which could conceivably be called municipalities now, but it does leave some leeway in case some situation develops where there is in fairness an obvious need for exemption to put some new body on the same terms as existing ones.

As I said earlier, if members of the committee are prepared to accept this proposal we would be glad to see it go through; but if hon. members do not like it, this part would have to be dropped.

Mr. Gregoire: Can the minister assure that under this definition no municipalities considered as such by any province in Canada will be left out?

Mr. Gordon: I certainly can give that assurance.

Mr. McIntosh: The minister is attempting in this amendment to clarify the definition of certain words. I think they are not the only phrases to need clarification. When this bill is passed by this house in its final form it becomes law under the title, "An act to amend the Excise Act". It is obvious, if we recall the debates and the remarks made by the minister, that there are parts of the bill we do not understand, in particular the definitions of certain words or terms. If this measure is passed without amendment or explanation the confusion which will exist when the public and the officials of the department begin dealing with these terms can readily be imagined. How can we, as members of parliament, expect the public and the officials to understand the act if we do not understand it ourselves?

The minister could prevent much of this confusion if he would insert a short clause to the effect that in the absence of definition in the Excise Tax Act, the definition of any term will be that found in an accepted dictionary. If such a proposal as this is not included we might as well scrap the entire wording of this bill and insert just two lines to read "The act is amended as interpreted by the official dealing with the subject matter contained in the act". I make this comment because, in reality, this is what we are doing; we are passing the buck.

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps the hon. member—

Mr. McIntosh: I am not yet finished. I would say that by our actions we are making a bureaucratic dictatorship out of our civil servants. The fault does not lie with the civil servants, but with the past and present members of this house. Too often in the past, as is evidenced by the contents of other acts, we have transferred our responsibilities as representatives of the people of Canada over to the bureaucrats. One of the results of our irresponsible actions is that the public takes its problems or cases to the tariff board or to the courts of the land, a costly procedure to the federal treasury as well as to individuals trapped by careless legislation. I am informed that under certain sections of this act, sections which parliament has passed, the public is not given the right to appeal to the courts but must, by law, accept the decisions of the officials.

I am sure many of the officials themselves do not relish the task of having to make decisions relating to so many of these undefined terms in the act. They feel, and rightly so, that this is the responsibility of parliament. This was referred to in a letter I received from an Ontario citizen which reads in part:

> Naturally, I felt that at least our government should be as fair as companies doing business. I went to Ottawa and had an interview with Mr. ..... but he put all the blame on the members who had approved the paragraph in the tax bill.

And rightly so. There are a number of terms contained in clause 6 which, if not defined, will lead to a great deal of misunderstanding between the public and the officials of the department. Some of these misunderstandings, I have no doubt, will result in costly court cases. I refer to such words as "wagon" and "manufacturers". I know one citizen from my constituency who spent an amount in excess of $500 endeavouring unsuccessfully to get a ruling from the department on the meaning of the term "wagon". Because the department will neither accept any legal interpretation nor provide a definition which they will accept, all farmers purchasing steel grain truck boxes must pay an additional $300 to $400 on such a purchase.

On page 694, volume 1, 1952, Revised Statutes of Canada, under the Canadian Grain Act, "wagon" is defined as any vehicle used to deliver grain to the country elevators. The Department of National Revenue will not accept the definition of the word "wagon" contained in the Excise Tax Act, nor any dictionary definition.

Members of the minister's own profession are greatly concerned about the misunderstandings caused by the lack of definition of terms used in this act. I refer the hon. gentleman to an article which appeared in the publication entitled "The Canadian Chartered Accountant", volume 2, No. 5, dated May, 1953. The heading is "Sales Tax—Who is a Manufacturer?" I should like to read part of this article. It says:

> The most important taxing provision in the Excise Tax Act, section 30(1)(a), imposes a consumption or sales tax on the sale price of all goods "produced or manufactured in Canada". Since this tax is payable by the "producer or manufacturer", it frequently becomes important to know whether a particular person is a manufacturer for sales tax purposes or whether he is merely a distributor, jobber, retailer or consumer, none of whom are liable to pay sales tax under section 30(1)(a).
>
> In this article, the term "manufacturer" should be understood to refer to a "producer or manufacturer" for the purposes of the Excise Tax Act.
>
> The statutory provisions, regulations and rulings dealing with this question are unusually complex. Although the Excise Tax Act contains no general definitions of the expressions "produced or manufactured" or "producer or manufacturer", there are a number of provisions in the act and in the regulations and rulings made under its authority stating that such diverse activities as packaging candies, setting diamonds in rings, repairing fur garments and printing stationery are to be treated as manufacturing operations for sales tax purposes, but that making popcorn, cider or false teeth or developing and printing photographs are not to be so treated. In addition, there are a considerable number of decided cases in which the courts have been asked to rule on such activities—

I could go on and inform the minister of what his colleagues have said about this act but I think I should say the sales tax should be imposed upon persons who manufacture foods and not upon one who merely provides a service. The difference between a contract for the sale of goods and a contract for services or for labour and materials is well known in common law but apparently not by the Department of National Revenue. Once you are designated by the department as a manufacturer, whether you are or not you are compelled to take out a manufacturer's licence. You are then subject to further rules and regulations compiled by the officials of the department. I refer now to such regulations as regulation 2 contained in circular ET.1, which is all-powerful and generally not known to the public but only to the retailer, jobber or distributor who is compelled to enforce the provisions of the regulations.

Under these regulations, with special formula compiled by the officials, the retailer is forced to impose an additional hidden tax on the consumer, an additional 4 per cent sales tax calculated on the cost of the article plus the added amount of 11 per cent sales tax already included in the cost price. Possibly the reluctance to define these terms is for a purpose. Because they are not defined the department has made use of this method to collect many thousands of dollars for the federal treasury. Although I agree the treasury needs the money, this is no manner in which to collect needed revenue. I would urge the minister to specify in the bill as I have suggested a source of interpretation acceptable to his department as well as to the Department of National Revenue.

I have some things I want to say on clause 6 when it comes up in regard to some of the terms that are used there, but at this time I would ask the minister if he would accept the suggestion I have put forward.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I am not a member of the legal profession, and I think that is something I may share in common with the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. I am informed by members of the legal profession that the suggestion made by the hon. member, to which I must say I listened with great interest, would not be entirely satisfactory. I am sure we would not be able to recommend an amendment here that had not been approved by the Department of Justice. That is the difficulty.

I think that some of the points the hon. member made are very pertinent and understandable, but I am afraid that if we embarked upon a complete revision of the Excise Tax Act at this particular stage we would find that a great deal of preparatory work was needed before this committee could usefully deal with that kind of task.

Mr. McIntosh: I am very surprised the minister says that the legal department does not consider this possible because the very article from which I quoted states that when these cases are taken to the courts the judges look first to the ordinary dictionary definitions to make their rulings. If the federal treasury is going to be put to the additional cost of taking cases to court and the public also are going to be put to the cost of taking cases to court only to have judges resort to dictionaries to define the meaning of certain words, why can we not put it in the act in the first place?

Mr. Gordon: I am afraid I have not been here long enough. I do not know who passed the act in the first place, but in dealing with amendments to the act I do not think we should include a wide variety of definitions that might upset a series of legal precedents on this very point that the hon. member has raised.

Mr. McIntosh: I will not argue about the rest of the act, but will the minister do it for the part contained in this bill?

Mr. Gordon: I am afraid that if we tried to include definitions in the bill that applied only to certain sections or subsections of the act we would be in a great deal of difficulty.

Mr. McIntosh: Would the minister not agree with me that if these terms cannot be defined there is no use putting them in the bill? We do not know what they mean.

Mr. Gordon: I think all I can say is that many of these words have been interpreted in the courts over a long period, but I am not a lawyer and I cannot answer the question more specifically than that.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, if I may speak to the amendment that has been moved, the minister asked a few minutes ago if the committee was prepared to accept this interpretation with respect to municipalities. In the first part of this interpretation or definition I think he has spelled out nearly every type of municipality or local government structure that exists today. The question I raised the other day had to do with the definition and the application of these exemptions to local government areas that were near municipalities or somewhat lesser organizations than are spelled out in the first section. I am satisfied that the second section will take care of those near municipalities or local areas that are administered by provincial municipal departments. If the minister will now tell us that they are prepared to accept the recommendations, if you like, of provincial governments with respect to purchasing sewer tile and various other things needed in small towns, hamlets and so on in these unorganized districts administered by the municipal affairs departments of the various provinces, then I think that is what we asked for and this is adequate.

Mr. Gordon: So that there will be no misunderstanding at all, the hon. member will see that the second section applies to "such other incorporated local authority". It does not include a wide area that has no status as such under provincial law. The reason for that, as I have said before, is that if the provinces concerned do not look upon the area as some official kind of area which they are prepared to incorporate it will not qualify under this provision.

Mr. Starr: I wish to say a few words on that point. I think the whole matter could be clarified if certain words were deleted from subsection 2 of this amendment. An incorporated municipality is one that has been given permission by a municipal board to incorporate itself. But an unorganized territory is one that is under the direct supervision of a municipal board where a trusteeship is set up to look after the area. An example of that is Elliot Lake and other areas of that kind. They are directly responsible to the municipal board. They are not responsible to the electors of the district at all. If the words "incorporated local" were deleted the section would then read:

> (ii) such other authority as the governor in council may determine to be a municipality for the purposes of this act.

In most cases the province acts on behalf of these areas. The province calls for tenders for any construction work that is to be done or any improvements that are to be made.

Mr. Gordon: May I answer both hon. members. If the province is acting for these areas, then I think they are exempt because provinces are exempt. Certainly, therefore, the type of area to which the hon. member for Ontario referred, which I think he said would be administered by the province, would be exempt because the province would be doing the buying. I think probably the same answer applies in your case, too.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): This is a question of the minister relating back to the explanation he has just given. I hope the exemption is not limited to the province doing the buying on behalf of some of these communities because in British Columbia there are communities, not organized territories, not incorporated communities, but unorganized territories in which the taxes are collected by the province and such administration as there is is the responsibility of the provincial department of municipal affairs. However, there might be in a number of the communities, a fire district, for instance, the creation of a committee to provide fire protection or the creation of a committee to provide a water system, sewerage system and so on. Under the winter works program, a number of these communities in British Columbia were able to participate on the recommendation of the department of municipal affairs. I assume the same condition would apply under this definition?

Mr. Gordon: As hon. members of the committee will appreciate, after this subject came up on Thursday the officials of the department, the Minister of National Revenue and myself went into it rather thoroughly. We discussed it also with the Department of Justice. It is our understanding that this definition includes everything that is incorporated as a municipality by the provinces or is administered in any way by the provinces. Perhaps I should say it does not include areas that are administered by the provinces, because it does not need to, in view of the fact anything the province administers is exempt anyway.

I can only say that to the best of my understanding all the cases that have been raised are exempt, if we are talking about areas or communities and not individuals. The provision is not intended to apply to the individual.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): There is one other point I should like to raise, and I do not want to prolong the discussion. My point arises out of the remarks of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek in which he drew attention to the problem of interpreting words in the act. I wonder if the minister would give consideration to the possibility, later this year or at the first available opportunity when parliament is in session, of referring the Excise Tax Act and similar legislation to a committee of this house in order to secure advice on the interpretation of words in the act and perhaps provide recommendations that would, in turn, provide clarification?

Mr. Gordon: I would be glad to consider that, Mr. Chairman, and discuss it with my colleagues. I point out, however, there is a royal commission on taxation sitting and I presume it will be going into this particular form of taxation, as well as all other forms. I am sure the commission will be receiving many representations along the lines of those made by the hon. member who has just spoken, and the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. I shall be glad to send the commission copies of Hansard so that they will have the benefit of the suggestions that have been put forward.

Mr. Barnett: I should like to say that, as I read the proposed amendment, it meets the situation I was trying to bring to the attention of the minister last Thursday. I think it covers water improvement districts, fire improvement districts and so on in British Columbia which I believe are actually incorporated under our British Columbia water act. So far as I am concerned, I am quite happy with the amendment proposed to the committee, and I would be quite happy to see it pass.

However, I should like to suggest that if we pass it at this time, for the purpose of continuing our discussion in the committee perhaps we might deem that part of the amendment that renumbers the section as being not effective until the committee reports to the house, so that we will not develop hopeless confusion as to which clause of the bill we are discussing.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Renfrew South.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if, before the hon. member for Renfrew South speaks, I could move another amendment? I move:

That Bill C-90, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act, be amended by striking out the word "or" at the end of line 32 on page 1 and adding the word "or" at the end of line 2 on page 2 thereof, and by striking out lines 3 to 7 inclusive on page 2 thereof and inserting the following:

(d) manufactures or produces from steel that has been purchased by or manufactured or produced by that person, and in respect of which any tax under this part has become payable, fabricated structural steel for buildings, he shall, for the purposes of this part, be deemed not to be in relation to any such building, structure, building sections, building blocks or fabricated steel so manufactured or produced by him, the manufacturer or producer thereof.

The Chairman: I understand that this is an amendment to clause 2. Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Nasserden: I wonder if the minister would just explain what that means?

Mr. Gordon: I explained it a few minutes ago at some considerable length.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Greene: Are we still on the first amendment to the definition?

The Chairman: No, we are not; we are on the amendment which has been moved by the Secretary of State.

Mr. Greene: I was going to speak to the first amendment. I understood the Secretary of State asked leave to bring in this amendment before I spoke.

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not rise until after the amendment had been carried.

The Chairman: We are now returning to clause 4.

Mr. Nasserden: I am sorry, but I was out for a minute or two and missed that part. I wonder if the minister will repeat it?

Mr. Gordon: Since the amendment has been passed and I think all other hon. members of the committee heard it, I wonder if I might send my notes to the hon. member, if that would satisfy him?

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, we are still considering clause 4. I have only one point to raise, on which I should like to have the comments of the minister.

When the tax was announced by the minister in his budget speech, the premier of Quebec made a violent attack against that tax which, at that time, was 11 per cent and is now reduced to 4 per cent, although it is always there.

The premier of Quebec said, among other things, that it was a serious blow to the autonomy of the province of Quebec. If the premier of Quebec made a justified statement, then it would be logical that the minister comply with the requests of the provinces, for instance, and give complete exemption on all building materials that will be purchased by municipalities and provinces, and even the provincial crown corporations. And if Mr. Lesage's policy is justified, as I said, the minister has just to retreat. But if Mr. Lesage's statement is unjustified, then I am of the opinion that the minister is attacked personally. If such is the case, I should like him to answer the violent attack of Mr. Lesage, in order to clear himself.

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: I do not know of any attack. I had the great pleasure of spending two days with Premier Lesage over the last week end. I found him in his usual affable frame of mind, and we seemed to get along very well. We agreed to meet at frequent intervals, and I suspect that perhaps he is unaware of the fact that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm—

Mr. Pigeon: I have only a question to address to the minister.

(Translation):

Has Premier Lesage of the province of Quebec, or the premier of another province, asked the Minister of Finance to abolish that tax on all materials that will be bought by the provinces or by the crown corporations of those provinces?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: Well, they have not asked me, Mr. Chairman. Perhaps I should explain that the provinces themselves are not taxed.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: For all materials, including the crown corporations for those provinces?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: The crown corporations are taxed.

The Chairman: Has the hon. member unanimous consent to revert to the amendment on clause 4 for a question he proposes to put to the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(Translation):

Mr. Frenette: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, but I lack experience in these committee discussions. A while ago, I failed to ask a question; I wanted to direct a question to the Minister of Finance when he introduced the amendment to section 2, pertaining to concrete blocks for construction purposes.

If the committee would allow me to do so, Mr. Chairman, I should ask my question now.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pigeon: Has the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Frenette) only one question to ask?

Mr. Frenette: Yes. I wish to thank the members of the committee as well as yourself, Mr. Chairman.

My question deals with concrete blocks used as building material. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether in referring to concrete blocks he had in mind also what is called in the industry "artificial stone".

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Chairman.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 5—Payment to educational institution of amount equal to tax.

Mr. Gordon: My colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, has an amendment to clause 5, dealing with public libraries, to which I referred earlier.

Mr. Garland: I move:

That Bill C-90, an act to amend the Excise Tax Act, be further amended by striking out lines 39 to 43 on page 2 thereof and lines 1 to 5 on page 3 thereof and substituting therefor the following:

47A. Where materials have been purchased by or on behalf of

(a) a school, university or other similar educational institution for use exclusively in the construction of a building for that institution, or

(b) any organization for use exclusively in the construction of a building for that organization that is to be used exclusively or mainly as a public library operated by or on behalf of that organization on a non-commercial basis, and the tax imposed by Part VI has been paid in respect of those materials, the minister, may, upon application of such institution or organization in such form as the minister prescribes made to the minister within two years from the time the materials were purchased, pay to such institution or organization an amount equal to that tax.

Mr. Weichel: On July 8, regarding the schools and universities, the minister indicated that construction materials for such projects could be exempted, as in the case of hospitals which have a 100 per cent exemption. However I feel that the tax means that schools and universities will be paying 11 per cent on such major items as electric fixtures, freight and capacity elevators and air shafts, hot water heaters, floors, air conditioners, pipes, valves and fittings, sprinkler systems, cupboard doors, hinges, nails and other fasteners. This also applies now to libraries. Is that correct?

Mr. Gordon: It sounds to me as if those words are familiar. I think they were contained in a brief forwarded by the Canadian Construction Association.

Mr. Weichel: That is right.

Mr. Gordon: But the facts are as represented.

Mr. Starr: So, in effect the impression given by the minister that schools and universities would be exempted in the same way as hospitals is not true, because whereas hospitals have a 100 per cent exemption, these have not. I think there is confusion created in the minds of people with regard to this particular aspect.

Mr. More: I have had several representations from steel fabricating people in regard to reinforced structural flooring, roof decks, wall panels and so on. Would this amendment exempt any of those materials used in these buildings?

Mr. Gordon: Yes it would.

Mr. Gregoire: I would like to suggest that the minister change a few words in this clause and amendment. For instance, the terminology used states:

The minister may, upon application of such institution or organization in such form as the minister prescribes—

By using the word "may", the minister is not obliged to do this, and I ask why not use the word "must".

Further on it says:

—pay to such institution or organization an amount equal to that tax.

Why not use the same expression as used in clause 4, "refund", instead of "an amount equal to that tax"? As it stands now, especially in the French translation, it means that the minister may, if he wishes, give a grant or an exemption to such institutions. I am asking the minister to consider changing those words to mean that in fact an institution will be entitled to a refund of tax which it would have paid on building construction.

Mr. Gordon: I have not the advantage of the hon. member for Lapointe because, as he knows, I am not a member of the legal profession; but these particular words to which he has referred are used in other places in the bill, and I think they are inserted in the amendment for that purpose. My hon. friend, the Minister of Forestry, has the advantage of being able to discuss these matters on the same ground as the hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. Gregoire: These words may be used in some other places, but when the question of schools and universities is involved I think the words should be changed. For example we have the words "the minister may" in the English version and in the French version we have the words "le ministre peut". This means that he is not obliged to do it; he may do it if he wishes. It then becomes some kind of a grant to universities and schools, and that is exactly what we will not accept.

I would like the minister, of his own volition, to change the words in this clause and propose an amendment in order to achieve this. Would the minister agree to do that?

Mr. Garland: Mr. Chairman, perhaps as another non-lawyer I might be permitted to say that it is not automatic that this tax shall be refunded; the minister must satisfy himself that there is entitlement.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, in the Interpretation Act the word "may" is defined as "shall", is it not?

Mr. Gregoire: If it means "must" in the English version and the French version, I am satisfied.

(Translation):

The verb "peut" means is free to, is not obliged to. So, from the constitutional point of view, it might be preferable in this instance to substitute to the word "peut" in the French text, the words "il doit" as, otherwise, it implies that he is not obliged to do it.

(Text):

Therefore I would ask the minister whether he would agree to change that word. Also, with regard to the other words "pay to such institution or organization an amount equal to that tax", I do not know whether the minister would agree to change that to "refund that tax", the amount paid as tax.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, we have in this house a good lawyer in the Minister of Public Works and we would appreciate very much having his point of view on this question.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Chairman, if I may attempt to deal with the difficulties confronting the hon. member for Lapointe, I would point out that it says in the last few words "the minister, may upon application by such institution or organization in such form as the minister prescribes". There are certain conditions that have to be complied with. That is why the word "may" rather than "must" is generally used in our statutes.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, that does not answer the question I asked. This clause should read "the minister must, upon application by such institution or organization in such form as the minister prescribes". If the word "may" is changed to "must" the minister is obliged to do this; if the word "may" is used, he is not obliged to do it. That is exactly what I mean. I would like to know whether the minister is ready to change that word.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I understand this has always worked satisfactorily in the past. I am hesitant to change the drafting at this stage, being a layman, because it would apply not only to this clause but I would be afraid it might apply to other sections or that it would not follow the wording used in other sections. Therefore I would prefer to leave it the way it is at present.

Mr. Gregoire: This is an important matter because it concerns the question of education and our schools and universities. This wording gives discretion to the minister and is an interference in a matter that falls under provincial jurisdiction. I ask that the minister change the word "may" to the word "must", and also the words "pay to such institution or organization an amount equal to that tax" should be changed to "pay to such institution or organization a refund of that tax". If the minister would agree to move this amendment himself, I would not have to move it.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, could this matter not be decided by the Interpretation Act? "May" is permissive; "must" is mandatory. It then becomes a question of whether the minister intends that it shall be permissive or mandatory.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the advice of the Minister of Fisheries on this question.

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Chairman, I think the advice has been given by the hon. member.

Mr. Gordon: I think there is another point that should be made here, Mr. Chairman, that this permits the minister with the approval of the people concerned, to make a payment to the institutions which is the equivalent of the tax that may have been incorporated in the materials they purchased. It does not mean a refund of the tax, because they are not the taxpayer. The manufacturer pays the tax. The contractor pays a price to the manufacturer and that price includes the tax; but—

Mr. Starr: Are you sure, now?

Mr. Gordon: —this gives the minister power to make a payment to the institution in lieu of the tax.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out to the minister that there are two words that should be changed; first, the word "may" should be changed to "must". I would like to know whether the minister wants to keep a discretion with regard to these refunds or whether there is to be an obligation upon him, as would be the case if the words were changed to read "the minister must, upon application by such institution or organization in such form as the minister prescribes". Does the minister intend to keep a kind of discretion on that point, or should there not be an obligation upon him to do this? If there is to be no discretion, why use the word "may"; why not use the word "must"?

Mr. Gordon: If the conditions are met, Mr. Chairman, I am informed by my legal advisers that the payment must be made.

Mr. Gregoire: Then would the minister agree to include the word "must" instead of the word "may"?

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the minister for including the words "public library" in this clause of the bill. Certainly our public libraries are part of our educational system and should be included in the provision providing a refund of this tax.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I asked a question of the minister and I think he was ready to answer it. I would like this point to be finished before we go on to another point.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I am informed by the lawyers surrounding me that I cannot accept, much as I would like to, the hon.

member's proposal because it would prevent the minister making a payment to the institution in this case; and if he is not allowed to do that he will not be able to administer this particular clause.

Mr. Gregoire: I fail to see how including the word "must" instead of the word "may" would prevent the minister making payment to these institutions if they made application. I think the lawyers surrounding the Minister of Finance should reconsider their position on this point.

Mr. Gordon: Again, Mr. Chairman, my counsel in this case says that the word "must" is never used in the statutes, in this sense.

Mr. Gregoire: This point is important, Mr. Chairman, because it is concerned with the question of education and we do not want to leave any discretion in the minister on this matter. The word in French means what it means—"may", "peut". As the clause is now written the minister has a discretion in this matter. If the minister will not move an amendment of his own accord, I will move that the word "may" be changed to the word "must" or, in French "peut" par le mot "doit".

I move it as an amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the hon. member that there is no thought or suggestion of the Minister of National Revenue or any other member of the government using this discretion to interfere with education in any province.

Mr. Gregoire: I have lots of confidence in the Minister of Finance but I do not know who will come after him or how long he will remain Minister of Finance. Therefore I should like to protect the position in the future with regard to discretion over according grants to universities. That is why I move that we change the word peut par le mot doit.

Mr. More: Just while the amendment is being considered I should like to say that I have had experience with representations, and my understanding is that goods used in these buildings must pay tax. Then application is made to the minister for an amount equal to the tax paid. What I have in mind is this. I know of a case where a very large water softener was installed in a hospital. The manufacturer of the water softener got the order from the contractor and it was stamped "Hospital, tax exempt". He shipped the water softener to the contractor who installed it in the hospital, and then the department came along and he had to pay the tax. He asked the contractor to apply for a refund and he said: "No, I won't; I didn't pay you the tax. I finished my job; to heck with you". He asked the hospital to apply and they said: "No, we don't pay tax; you do what you like about it". If the tax has to be paid this is not generally understood, particularly by small manufacturers. They get stuck and it is quite a job to get an understanding from the department about their position, although there is no question in this case about the making of the equipment, about its being installed in the hospital and about no tax being received. I know of this specific case where this man had to pay the tax when the inspection was made, and neither the contractor nor the hospital would make an application to the department. They said they had no right to make one. This concerned a large amount and was a pretty onerous penalty.

Mr. Lloyd: Mr. Chairman, I do not think we should change the wording of this bill without examining the entire legislation on the subject. Other provisions may be found where a conflict might arise, and which the minister would have to resolve, involving a somewhat similar case to that described by the hon. member. I think these present words have been traditionally used so as to avoid a conflict of law or possibly a dual claim for a refund of tax.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, if we are not ready to proceed with the amendment I should like to go back to the question raised—

The Chairman: Order. If I may suggest this to the hon. member and the committee, I think for the proper order of business we should try to dispose first of the amendment to the amendment which we now have before us which has been proposed by the hon. member for Lapointe. If I may be allowed to do so, I will read the amendment as it has been proposed to the committee.

(Translation):

In clause 5, change the word "peut" for the word "doit".

(Text):

Amendment to the amendment (Mr. Gregoire) negatived: Yeas, 6; nays, 75.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment to the amendment lost. The question is now on the amendment.

Mr. Fisher: I should like briefly to say that I was rather brutal to the Minister of Finance about his failure to include public libraries. Now that he has undertaken to do so I wish to withdraw my unkind remarks and express the appreciation of the libraries and of someone representing a city which hopes to construct a public library very soon, as well as the Canadian library association. I should also like to let him know that he has somewhat reaffirmed my faith in his executive assistant.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I should just like to say that over the last few weeks I have made representations to the minister by letter, over the telephone, in committee, and in every other way I know of to communicate with him. Now that the amendment has been moved he has met all my representations, and on behalf of the people for whom I made them I wish to thank him.

Mr. Gordon: May I say I appreciate these words which have been uttered by the two hon. members who have spoken, both on my own behalf and on behalf of my executive assistant.

An hon. Member: Does one have to be brutal to the minister?

Mr. More: Has the minister an answer to the question I posed to him?

Mr. Gordon: I think the question posed to me had to do with the situation where somebody sold a water softener to a hospital and failed to get a refund of tax. The only thought which occurs to me as to why he did not get it was that perhaps the certificate made out by the hospital was not in proper form. Apart from that I do not know why he did not get the refund.

Mr. More: I do not think the minister has understood me correctly. It is not a question of the hospital not getting a refund. The purchase order came to this person and stamped on it was "No tax, for use in hospital", or something like that. I saw the purchase order. This man filled it on that basis, having checked that hospitals were exempt from tax. He shipped it to the contractor who installed it in the hospital. Then the inspector of the department came along and told him that he had not collected the tax on it. He replied that it was for a hospital. He was told that as he had shipped it to the contractor he must pay the tax. The contractor said that the job had been done, and the hospital said that they had the softener.

Mr. Gordon: If the hon. member would give me the particulars, the name and date, I will be glad to take it up with the Department of National Revenue and find out what happened.

Mr. More: I have tried to tell the minister what happened. I will go further and say that this man did get his refund. There was a great deal of trouble. He did not get it on his own. I am not taking any credit; I happened to be involved. What I want on the record is an answer to a straight question. As I recall it, in these circumstances he has to charge the tax and the institution has to make an application. He cannot supply these goods without the tax being collected. Is that correct?

Mr. Gordon: That is correct in the case of schools.

Mr. Thompson: I should like to have the minister clarify a question which arises in my mind. It relates directly to the amendment before us and the matter which was raised originally by the hon. member for Waterloo North. Did the hon. minister's explanation mean that only the material actually used in the construction of schools and universities would be exempt from tax? Does this exclude all those other materials which are used in construction? It is not clear.

Mr. Gordon: It includes all the things which were listed under the heading of building material prior to the presentation of this bill. It certainly would not include refrigerators.

Mr. Thompson: Would it include refrigeration?

Mr. Gordon: No, it would not.

Mr. Thompson: Nor hardware?

Mr. Gordon: Just a moment. I am afraid I will have to check that.

Mr. Thompson: Electrical fixtures?

Mr. Gordon: No, it would not include electrical fixtures.

Mr. Thompson: Automatic fire sprinkler arrangements?

Mr. Gordon: No.

Mr. Thompson: Plumbing?

Mr. Gordon: Has the hon. member got a list of the things about which he wishes to inquire?

Mr. Thompson: Well, the minister referred to the same list as was mentioned by the hon. member for Waterloo North. These things definitely are used in the construction of a building.

Mr. Weichel: Hardware was not mentioned on the list I gave the minister.

Mr. Starr: What the Minister of Finance is now, in effect, admitting is that his statement, when he exempted schools and universities, and that they would be placed in the same category as hospitals, was not correct. I think this matter should be straightened out so that those who are engaged in the construction business may know definitely that they are not in a particularly select category as far as the application of sales tax is concerned. I might add, with regard to the congratulations which were extended by the hon. member for Middlesex West to the minister for exempting public libraries, that libraries are not exempted from the payment of federal tax on many of these things.

Mr. Gordon: We are talking about the tax on building materials to be used in schools, universities or public libraries. I am not talking about the tax which applies to some of the things which may be incorporated, though they may be necessary as part of the building. I am talking now about the things that are being exempted from tax.

Mr. McIntosh: I wish to raise a matter in connection with the question asked by the hon. member for Regina on the subject of rebates. From time to time in the course of revision of this act, certain items have been deleted. Nevertheless, a number of citizens have continued to pay tax, sometimes for as long as four years. Then they suddenly find that though the department has been accepting the tax they should not have been paying it. They make an application for rebate but the department can only pay rebate in respect of two years. Why cannot the entire sum which the citizen has overpaid been refunded?

Mr. Gordon: The reason is that there is a statutory limitation in the act which limits the refund to payments over two years.

Mr. McIntosh: I know that such a provision is in the statute. I want to know why it is in the statute.

Mr. Gordon: I am informed it corresponds with the refund sections in the Customs Tariff, but I think the hon. gentleman's question could apply to that just as well. I do not know.

Mr. McIntosh: If a citizen can prove he has overpaid the government and the government accepts his explanation, and they have taken his money without advising him that he need not pay it, why not refund that man's money?

Mr. Gordon: All I can say is there must be some practical limit on the time. As for a citizen not knowing about these things, I think that in the case of this particular withdrawal of exemption from sales tax most citizens have, by this time, heard something about it and I hope all of them will know exactly what is involved.

Mr. More: Some citizens have had the experience of receiving advice from darned good accountants and they still have not known about it.

Mr. Willoughby: I wonder whether I might at this point reintroduce a question I asked earlier about public buildings which were not contracted for but in respect of which by-laws were passed.

Mr. Gordon: I think that comes under clause 9.

Mr. Gregoire: I should like to suggest another change in wording to the Minister of Finance and I think the minister might accept it because the wording used in clause 4 is exactly the same as I would like to see in clause 5. In clause 4, line 28, the word "refund" is mentioned. A refund may be granted by the minister. In clause 5 it says the minister may "pay to the institution an amount equal to that tax". Would the minister not agree to use in clause 5 the same words as appeared in clause 4 and say, "refund to the institution an amount equal to that tax"? Then the government would be repaying something, not paying it to the institution.

Mr. Gordon: The difficulty is that one cannot refund a tax to an institution if the institution has not paid the tax. That is why there is a difference in the wording.

Mr. More: I should like to point out to the minister that many farmers are facing a serious problem in connection with the need for farm storage. The price of prefabricated granaries and building materials has increased sharply. This extra storage may only be needed for one year; there is not too much need for buildings of this type otherwise. Could the minister not consider exempting prefabricated granaries of steel and lumber bought by farmers in this fall period?

Mr. Gordon: This clause deals with schools and universities, and there is a difference between them and the kind of storage to which the hon. member is referring.

Mr. More: Can the minister indicate what clause this might come under?

Mr. Gordon: I think we might discuss it on clause 6, the next clause, if we pass this one.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 5 as amended agreed to.

On clause 6.

Mr. Greene: I should like to say a few words with regard to clause 6, Mr. Chairman. From reading the supplementary budget speech I understand it was intended to remove the sales tax on materials consumed or expended in a manufacturing process and I believe subclauses 5 and 6 of clause 6 carry out that intent.

I understand that previously machinery and apparatus to be used in manufacture or production were in the same category as there was no object in distinguishing the two. As a result past decisions by departmental officials have determined that certain things are machinery and not materials used or consumed in production, even though those materials may be consumed within the period of a year. I think there have already been decisions on such items as papermakers' felts. How papermakers' felts could be machines I do not know. In any event, this had to be determined. I am wondering why there could not be a simple definition. Any past definitions are obviously an anachronism because of the new concept that production machinery must be made deductible in order that our manufacturers may be competitive and in particular that they may be able to compete in world markets, which is so necessary.

We certainly do not want to impose a tax on production materials that are consumed by calling those materials machinery and forcing the manufacturer to depreciate them over whatever period of time depreciation may be allowed. I wonder whether we could not implement the distinction already in the Income Tax Act with regard to materials that must be depreciated and which can be called an expense in one year under that act. In other words, if a material is consumed or expended in the taxation year, and normally in one year, then it is a production material consumed in production. If, on the other hand, the item lasts more than one year in the normal course then it is machinery and must be depreciated.

This is the case under the Income Tax Act and I suggest with respect that it would obviate a great deal of difficulty in fighting over every little item to determine what is machinery or materials consumed in the period of one year. I think we would save our industrialists a great deal of concern and possibly a great deal of expense. In my view the departmental officials would have something much simpler to work with if we merely used the same definition as is found in the Income Tax Act. If it is normally consumed in one year it is a production material and is deductible; if, on the other hand, it lasts more than one year it is machinery. I would ask the minister to take that point into consideration and, if it is valid, come up with a definition along those lines, because I think it would simplify the matter a great deal.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the hon. member for Renfrew South because I have a point to bring up with regard to production machinery which is along similar lines. I notice that in clause 6 there is a long list of food products both for man and beast, and a long list of machinery pertaining to the production of foods for man and beast. I also notice that around line 30 on page 3 there is provision for the exemption of farm produce sold by the individual farmer of his own production. The result is that one of our basic industries is well protected by way of exemption. In line 21 on page 4 there is a reference to sap spouts and sap buckets. My grandfather used to call sap spouts spiles, but that is an almost forgotten word. However, the department correctly lists them descriptively as sap spouts, and refers to other things that are used in connection with our basic maple sugar and syrup industry.

We have another industry that is probably not so productive in dollar value as the maple syrup industry but yet is a very basic industry and one which is vital to some of our agricultural people. In addition, it is found in many parts of Canada such as British Columbia, Ontario and Nova Scotia. I refer to cider production. I notice there is no consideration given here to the cider producers, the farmer or orchardist who produces cider from salvaged windfall apples for his own use and for local sale. I am sure if the minister had ever had a drink of freshly pressed cold sweet cider produced by the farmers of Prince Edward county. Ontario, not Prince Edward Island, he would readily grant a little protection to these people who have to buy the necessary cider presses and tanks in order to make the product.

I simply bring forward this point for the minister's consideration. I should like to see clause 6 amended on page 4 somewhere near the maple syrup item, because the point I am trying to make is that there is an affinity between maple syrup and cider manufacturing. In both cases the producers are usually farmers who are producing a primary product, and I submit that the cider producer deserves as much consideration as the maple syrup producer who has been protected from sales tax for a good many years. I have had two appeals on the part of farmers and orchardists during the past eight months who have strongly protested the fact that they have to pay 11 per cent sales tax on cider press machinery. My amendment to clause 6 would be as follows:

> Apple pulp grinders, tanks and presses and complete parts thereof, when used exclusively by farmers and orchardists on their own premises, for the production of apple cider for non-alcoholic use.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, I think the minister will realize that some of us are not too happy with his excuse that he is not a lawyer when we ask for the interpretation of certain terms. Now that he has his battery of lawyers and consultants in front of him, who I imagine drew up the bill, he should be able to get a legal interpretation of some of these terms. On page 3, line 24, the phrase "boxes for farm wagons" is used. Would the minister take the definition in the Canada Grain Act for the definition of a wagon? In that act a wagon is defined as meaning "any vehicle used to deliver grain to a country elevator". I should also like to draw the minister's attention to page 4, line 7, where the words "logs and round unmanufactured timber" appear. I wonder whether fence posts, which are small logs sharpened to a point on one end with an axe, are manufactured or not manufactured?

I should like also to draw the minister's attention to line 25, page 4, where a reference is made to forage wagons for off-highway use. I wonder how the department is going to determine whether or not this equipment is for off-highway use. Is there going to be an end user's certificate required, or what procedure will be followed by a person requesting this exemption?

I should like to draw the minister's attention to an item on page 5, line 8, where there is a reference to soft drinks. Line 7 refers to bases or concentrates for making soft drinks, and these are not included. Perhaps the minister has not had any representations from the soft drink manufacturers, but his predecessor had, and it was contended this was a discriminatory tax because they are directly competing with the retailers of tea and coffee. These people asked why their beverages should be taxed while tea and coffee were not taxed. I hope the minister will have an answer in connection with that item.

Then, on page 6, line 20, there is a reference to the term "manufacture" and I hope the minister, with his battery of legal experts there, can provide me with a definition of "manufacture". On page 9 there is a paragraph reading:

The minister shall be the sole judge—

Personally, I do not like this particular phrase because, in my opinion, that does not give the minister the power to be the sole judge but gives one of his officials the power to be the sole judge, thereby contributing to what I call bureaucratic dictatorship. I hope the minister will eliminate that phrase altogether.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Saint John-Albert.

Mr. Bell: I wonder if the minister wants to reply now?

Mr. Gordon: I would not be anxious to eliminate that clause altogether because it includes a lot of products and I am sure the people interested in those products would be dissatisfied if we eliminated them. I presume we are still talking about clause 6, which was the one we were dealing with a few minutes ago.

Mr. Nasserden: A few minutes ago the hon. member for Regina referred to prefabricated wood or steel buildings for grain storage. Would the minister care to say a word about that?

Mr. Gordon: I will take the item under advisement and look into it, but certainly I am not in a position to make any particular comment upon it now.

Mr. Bell: I have a question to put to the minister that is occasioned by some correspondence. If a company in Canada purchased some plant machinery in the United States before budget time and delivery has not taken place as yet, what is the position with regard to this tax? Does the minister's statement of July 8 have any effect or is the deciding factor the old standard test of in transit, the signing of the original agreement or actual delivery? I may say that I bring this matter forward because I think there is a principle involved if the budget had a retroactive effect. This type of machinery might have been purchased ahead of time and it would be an uneconomic proposition for the company were the tax imposed on it afterwards.

Mr. Gordon: The tax would not apply if the item in question had been cleared through customs at the date of the budget; otherwise, it would.

Mr. Bell: I just want to say, Mr. Chairman, that this brings out the hardship to which I referred. Here is a company which, with good intentions, purchased a piece of machinery in the United States. Naturally, the company would take into account the fact that it would cost so much to deliver the machinery. However, delivery was impossible, for justifiable reasons, and now the company is caught by this provision of the budget which has a retroactive effect. I would think some consideration should be given to this anomalous situation. It is not as if the company was aware that the sales tax or excise tax would be imposed. This would have been a consideration for them.

I am quite prepared to give this problem to the minister if this makes it easier. Perhaps he might have had correspondence with this company, but I did want to point out the unfairness of the retroactive feature of the budget and the effect that has on those who, with good intentions, have ordered machinery which could not be delivered.

Mr. Gordon: I am afraid that whenever there is a change in a tax of this kind or whenever there is a change in the tariff, and there have been some recently, those changes come into effect immediately. They apply to all importations after the date of the budget or the imposition of the tariff change, whichever it may be. It would be very difficult, I think, depending on the circumstances, to handle it differently. However, I am glad the hon. member brought this to my attention and if, in other cases, anything can be done about it in the future, I shall be glad to consider it. The precedents of the past have usually been that when a tax or tariff change is made, they apply from that date forward.

Mr. Harkness: I should like to say a word or two about the proposal to tax rebuilt items, particularly rebuilt engines. In dealing with this proposal, I believe the minister said it was put forward because this type of remanufacturing, as I believe he called it, created unfair competition for the manufacturers of new items. I believe that is a debatable proposition. However, even if that view is accepted, there are two other principles in regard to this matter which I think are of importance.

In the first place, I should like to refer to the engine rebuilding plants which exist in western Canada, that part of the country with which I am familiar. Perhaps the situation is a little different in Ontario where you are closer to the factory that builds new engines. These rebuilding plants perform a very important service for farmers, contractors and country elevator people who use these engines. They are small industries which need to be encouraged.

The other point is that, as I say, these are all comparatively small industries and to apply a tax to them really amounts to discrimination in favour of the large engine manufacturers. I believe this policy will also create a large number of anomalies and I would hope, therefore, the minister and the government would give further consideration to the matter, particularly to the withdrawal of this tax in so far as rebuilt items are concerned, at least the rebuilt engines.

Mr. Herridge: I rise to ask a question of the minister and to seek an explanation regarding clause 6. I refer to the words——forest products when produced and sold by the individual settler or farmer.

I am very interested in that because I represent a good number of people who produce forest products. What is the interpretation of the word "produced"? Does that include any element of manufacture of forest products, such as the manufacture of cedar poles? In some cases now they use mechanical devices for the peeling and splitting of shakes. There is quite a market in California for shakes. You will find that quite a number of people buy cheap asphalt roof shingles which only last a little time, and we are selling our good shakes to the south. Is there a distinction between "produced" and "manufactured"?

Mr. Gordon: I think the hon. member appreciates that this clause is listing the things that were exempt from the tax, and they still are. I am not in a position to define the point he raised, but I shall take it up with the officials and see that he gets an answer tomorrow or the next day.

Mr. Harkness: Would the minister comment on this rebuilt item proposal?

Mr. Gordon: I shall also be glad to take that up with the Minister of National Revenue, and I would like to examine the words in Hansard when I get it tomorrow. As the hon. member knows, this is not an item in this bill, but I shall follow it up and let him know the decision.

Mr. McIntosh: Would the minister comment on the items I brought to his attention? I took it for granted he was taking a record of all these various items. If not, I want to go back to where I referred to boxes for farm wagons, and I do not want to go into a long story of why we do not use wagons in western Canada any more. We have very few horses now, and the wagons are being replaced by trucks.

If the minister does not accept the definition used in the Canada Grain Act, for the western producer and western farmer, would he consider adding boxes for farm wagons and trucks? I do not want to go into an argument about a truck being a vehicle, because that would take a long time.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): In connection with this rebuilt engine problem that the hon. member for Calgary North brought out, I know that there is considerable confusion in the trade with regard to these rebuilt items. When a generator or something of that type, or a motor in a car is rebuilt and the sales tax is charged in one way, and a customer comes in and trades in an old transformer or generator, and gets a rebuilt one, is there a rebate of tax to the customer on the old motor he trades in for the rebuilt item?

Mr. Gordon: There is an allowance for what they call the core. I am trying to get the answer for the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek, but I have not yet succeeded.

Mr. McIntosh: In the meantime could the minister answer my question about the logs and round unmanufactured timbers for fence posts. Do they qualify under that, or not?

Mr. Gordon: I understand that an ordinary fence post is exempt.

Mr. Herridge: Most of our fence posts are three-sided and manufactured with splitting machines. Would they come under this clause?

Mr. Gordon: That is manufacturing, and subject to tax.

Mr. Nasserden: I do not think I am going to change the minister's mind, but with reference to the steel granaries and other prefabricated wooden granaries, I would point out that there is an exemption on pens and parts thereof for confining livestock, and there is not too much difference between them and the steel granaries used in western Canada.

The companies manufacturing them are contributing something to the steel industry of Canada, and pricewise there is quite a spread between a steel bin and another type of bin. These companies are finding some difficulty in meeting that competition, and I would like the minister to give some consideration to including this item under the exemptions, if not at this time then in the very near future.

Mr. Gordon: I shall be glad to do that.

Mr. McIntosh: This question about farm wagons and trucks is a very important one, and if the minister cannot at present give us an assurance that trucks will be considered as wagons then I would like to see him stand this clause until he gets a ruling from the department. I understand that many times when his department puts items under these regulations, the interpretation of what his department proposes is entirely up to the Department of National Revenue. I want it thoroughly understood by the Department of National Revenue that if the Department of Finance considers a truck as a wagon then the Department of National Revenue will fully realize it.

Also before the clause carries I would expect the minister to give some explanation as to why soft drinks are not included, the same as other food beverages.

Mr. Gordon: On the first question, Mr. Chairman, farm wagons have been in the Excise Tax Act for a long time, and the definition is not being changed in any way in this bill. I would suggest that the hon. member, and anybody else who wishes to make representations on this matter, should do so to the Minister of National Revenue, so that the matter can be studied and considered before the next budget is introduced.

Mr. McIntosh: I realize farm wagon boxes have been in—

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Mr. Pickersgill: May I interrupt the hon. gentleman, for a moment? If it would be possible to complete the committee stage in about two or three minutes perhaps we could do it, but if that would not be possible, and having consulted with hon. gentlemen opposite, I would suggest we rise, report progress and ask leave to sit later this day so that we could take a moment to pass the St. Lawrence bridge bill, which I understand no one wants to debate. It is a pure formality but there are reasons for wanting to have it passed today.

Mr. McIntosh: I might point out to the Secretary of State that this item is very vital to a lot of my constituents. On one occasion it cost them $500 to get a definition of this, unsuccessfully, and I do not think they should again be subjected to that type of treatment by the department. That is why I am very concerned that some definition be given before the clause is passed.

Mr. Pickersgill: In that case I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again in a very few minutes, and perhaps we could pass the bill and go back into committee before we adjourn. Also we could adjourn until five minutes after seven o'clock before coming back.

The Chairman: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

BOUCHERVILLE ISLANDS BRIDGE AND TUNNEL ACT

CONSTRUCTION OF A BRIDGE AND TUNNEL

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (for the Minister of Public Works) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-16, to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge and tunnel across the St. Lawrence river at the Boucherville islands, in the province of Quebec.

(Translation):

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, will the minister give us some explanation on this bill?

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Perhaps I could give an explanation, sir.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) is piloting this bill through the house and I think he should be able to explain it.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman did it merely to oblige, because the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) happened to be out of the house temporarily, I could—

Mr. Martineau: I accept the minister's explanation, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, as no doubt the hon. gentleman knows, being very learned in the law, no bridge can be built over any navigable system in Canada without an order in council under the Navigable Waters Protection Act, except in the case of the St. Lawrence river where the governor in council has no such power and there has to be an act of parliament.

Mr. Martineau: Yes, but I would like to ask the minister whether he would give some assurance that the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act and all the other statutes have been observed and that there will be no damage to navigation, communications, and so on, as a result of this bridge being constructed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am advised by the Minister of Public Works, who asked to have this bill facilitated, that all the necessary precautions were taken.

(Translation):

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, could the minister tell the house whether the introduction of this bill has anything to do with the holding of the Montreal world exhibition?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): I do not think so, Mr. Speaker. Besides, even though the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) is not in the house at present, he informed me earlier that he had discussed this bill with the hon. members opposite—

Mr. Pickersgill: With the hon. member for Three Rivers.

Mr. Lamontagne: —and that it had been agreed to pass this legislation as quickly as possible, without discussion.

I do not know to what extent one can depend on such agreements.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that the remarks just made by the President of the Privy Council cannot in any way interfere with our right to inquire about the why of the measure, the need for it and the advantages it offers.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I am told that bridge has nothing to do with the world's fair in Montreal.

(Text):

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if, for my own edification if for no other purpose, the minister could indicate to us under what constitutional or statutory provision it is necessary for us in this chamber to deal with the construction of a bridge over the St. Lawrence river when apparently we do not have to go beyond the provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act in respect of other navigable rivers such as, for example, the Fraser river in my own province.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, my understanding is that normally any construction over navigable waters, as the Secretary of State has stated very rightly, would be simply subject to the ordinary provisions of the Navigable Waters Protection Act. But in the case of a bridge over the St. Lawrence this procedure is required, probably because of circumstances inherent in navigating that river, currents and so on. This would apply more particularly in the present case because the province is being authorized to construct the bridge and the province, being the body so authorized and, it being the intention of the law that it be subject to the provisions of the act, I think it is preferable that an act of parliament be passed authorizing the province so to do and declaring that Her Majesty, if you like, in the right of the province shall be obliged to submit to the governor in council maps, plans and other information making it certain to the satisfaction of the governor in council—as appears from clauses 3 and 4 of the bill—that the provisions of the relevant act for the protection of navigable waters have been complied with. In other words, it is a formal act authorizing the province to construct, and also providing that notwithstanding it is the province which will be authorized to construct the bridge, the provisions of the act, this notwithstanding, will apply, and sufficient information will have to be given to the governor in council.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

(Translation):

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I take a special pleasure in speaking on this bill, as, several years ago, that is in July 1960, I asked the federal authorities, in this house, to look into the question of building a tunnel bridge under the St. Lawrence.

If one looks up Hansard, one sees that, on that occasion, some hon. members, who are now sitting on the other side of the house, had found my suggestion rather odd. Some even went as far as to say that it was an impractical idea and that it was impossible to think of building a tunnel bridge under the St. Lawrence.

I am therefore the more pleased to see that the idea has gained ground and that, today, the provincial authorities consider that, for the esthetic appearance of the city of Montreal and a better access from the south and north shores, a tunnel bridge, as now planned, will serve the people of the city of Montreal and those who live on the south shore to greater advantage.

Of course, the purpose of the bill before us is limited. As I understand it, it is only a question of authorizing the provincial government to build that road under the St. Lawrence, and the federal government has only to accede to that request or to reject it.

I know that this government, being politically well disposed towards the provincial government of Quebec, will certainly not reject a project initiated by the Conservatives, which once more will prove the foresight of hon. members sitting on this side of the house who a few years ago were seated on the government side.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that hon. members from the city of Montreal, who are now in this house as representatives of the city of Montreal, Canada's metropolis, should intervene and energetically speak up on this legislation.

As I said and now repeat, the sole purpose of the bill is to authorize or legalize a contract which will enable the provincial government to build that tunnel.

I would like the responsible minister to tell the house whether the site, which has been chosen or is to be chosen is the most appropriate one. I do not know whether this comes under the minister, but I would like to know, as the representative of a county of the city of Montreal, who will be affected by that project, whether the province of Quebec has considered demographic conditions before deciding to build this tunnel at the designated site?

I understand that the bill does not exactly determine the site of that tunnel bridge, but it is a most important factor, because the 1967 world fair will bring a surplus of traffic, and the city of Montreal may suffer from rather considerable bottlenecks if the two approaches are too near to each other, that is to say the Jacques Cartier bridge and the proposed tunnel bridge.

So I wonder whether the minister is in a position to tell us if that road will be built in the near future, if it will be completed in time for the 1967 world fair and if the Canadian metropolis will benefit from its location?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, following the remarks just made by the hon. member for St. Mary (Mr. Valade) I should like to say this.

As regards the site of the tunnel and bridge, both in Montreal and in Ville Jacques Cartier, I must say the choice was made by the province of Quebec. Federal government engineers examined the site selected and were perfectly satisfied that the tunnel and bridge would not hamper navigation. That is why, when the bill was discussed in committee in the other place, those explanations were given by the engineers themselves. So much for the location and the site.

Now, as for the project itself, the construction of the tunnel and bridge is expected to be completed by 1967 if the work is done without delay and not hindered by anything unforeseen. Therefore, the bridge is to be ready for the 1967 world fair.

I hope that my remarks answer the question of the hon. member.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, would the minister allow me to ask a few other questions?

I know that the minister, who is a fellow member from the metropolis and whose county is located very close to the one I represent, is certainly aware of the traffic difficulties at the approach of the Jacques Cartier bridge where Dorchester boulevard ends. The planned bridge tunnel will result in bringing traffic to a place where the roads are very little developed and are, in my opinion, quite inadequate to absorb the excess traffic at certain hours of the day.

When I spoke on this matter a few years ago, I asked the minister of public works whether he would consider the possibility of building a super highway around the city of Montreal so that we would have, as in the large cities such as New York, a boulevard which would provide an easy access to all the exits from the city of Montreal.

Therefore, I am wondering whether the Minister of Public Works could not take this opportunity to tell us—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Valade: —whether he has acted further—

The Chairman: Order. I do not want to interrupt the hon. member, but I must remind him that we are at present discussing legislation which has nothing to do with the construction of any super highway through the city of Montreal. I would therefore ask him to deal with the subject matter of the bill now before the committee.

Mr. Valade: I wish to thank you for your remarks, Mr. Chairman. However, in my opinion, this matter is closely related to the bill we are discussing at present, because the bridge will inevitably open on a congested artery in the city of Montreal.

If the federal government has authority to authorize the city of Montreal to build a tunnel bridge, it also has authority on the Montreal harbour, which is federal government property, and it should facilitate access to that bridge tunnel. I believe that both problems are related, because one depends on the other. If the government does authorize a bridge giving on a dead-end, I am of the opinion that the people of the city of Montreal will be ill-served. Could the minister enlighten the house in that respect?

Mr. Deschatelets: May I remind the hon. member that responsibility in that field belongs to the province and the city of Montreal? Even though the question raised by the hon. member goes beyond the proposal in this bill, I could still tell him that we have received a proposal from the province of Quebec in connection with the trans-Canada highway. This proposal mentioned that the entrance to this tunnel will communicate with an expressway in Montreal, going in an east-west direction. I trust this will answer the hon. member.

Mr. Valade: I will end by congratulating the federal and provincial authorities for having accepted to make this improvement suggested to them by the Conservative party, which shows that the Conservatives are better law-makers.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Chairman, allow me to say a few words in reply to the remarks made by the hon. member. My hon. friends opposite often make beautiful plans but, on the other hand, we, the Liberals, are always there to implement them.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, the minister's reply forces me to ask him if unemployment is one of the projects implemented by the Liberal party?

The Chairman: Clause 1 is agreed to.

(Text):

Clauses 2 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. Pickersgill: Now, by leave.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, since it is not a contentious bill I think hon. members would like third reading to be called now.

(Translation):

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works) moved the third reading of Bill S-16, an act to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge and tunnel across the St. Lawrence river at the Boucherville islands, in the province of Quebec.

Motion agreed to, bill read the third time and passed.

(Text):

EXCISE TAX ACT

The house resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-90, to amend the Excise Tax Act—Mr. Gordon—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 6.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-90—

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, since it is past six o'clock and the committee will again resume at seven, would it not be possible to defer the seeing of seven o'clock till, say, a quarter past seven, as some of us have to be here at the resumption?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I would be in complete accord with the hon. gentleman, and if Your Honour could see it was seven o'clock only at 7.15 it would give us time to eat.

The Chairman: Order. House again in committee of the whole on Bill C-90, to amend the Excise Tax Act. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7.15 p.m.

The Chairman: Shall clause 6 carry?

Mr. McIntosh: I am sorry, but I cannot allow this clause to be carried unless I receive an explanation from the minister with regard to the term "boxes for farm wagons".

An hon. Member: I thought it was boxes for sardines.

Mr. McIntosh: I think the hon. member across the way should be recognized, Mr. Chairman. I do not know what his constituency is.

With regard to these boxes for farm wagons, we in the west, as I said before six o'clock, do not use wagons any more on our farms. We use trucks. This term "wagon" is not defined by the Department of National Revenue in the same way as it is defined in the Canada Grain Act, namely as any vehicle which will take grain from a farm to an elevator. As a result, the farmers of western Canada are having to pay between $300 and $400 in tax on these articles for lack of a suitable definition. As I said earlier, one of my constituents spent more than $500 trying to get an explanation of this term "wagon". We cannot understand why the Department of National Revenue would not accept the term as defined by the Department of Finance. We have been told by officials of the Department of Finance that "wagon" does mean "truck"; but the Department of National Revenue would not accept that. They would not accept that a box for a wagon or a box for a truck are exactly the same thing and are intended for the same purpose. In the light of the cost-price squeeze problem which we are facing in western Canada I cannot accept this clause as it is set down here, unless an explanation is forthcoming from the minister.

Mr. Gordon: I think it is fair to say that the hon. member has explained his case very clearly, but the fact is that this reference to wagons has been in the act for a long time and is not being changed by this amending bill. It is not proposed to change it. There is no suggestion of changing it here. It is not proposed by the government to make a change in this particular item. A farm truck is a wagon and although wagons are exempt we must draw the line at making trucks exempt. A farm wagon is dedicated to use on the farm. A truck, on the other hand, is used for many other purposes besides agriculture. I am sorry that the government is not prepared to accept the hon. member's suggestion that this particular item be extended.

He also asked me before the adjournment why soft drinks are not being made exempt. All I can say in reply is that soft drinks have been subject to the tax for some time. To exempt them would cost the treasury about $12 million and in my opinion the treasury is not in a position to suffer a loss of revenue to that extent.

Mr. McIntosh: I do not think the minister got my point. I have no quarrel with him when he says that trucks should not be exempt. I am talking about the boxes that go on the truck or on the wagon. It is a grain box, and whether it is on a wagon or a truck should not make any difference. I should like to get that point across to the minister. I am not saying that trucks should be exempt.

I have had the same argument with the department before. They have maintained time and time again that the box is part of the truck. To me the box is not part of the truck. It is not manufactured by the people who manufacture trucks. When a farmer goes to buy a truck with a grain box on it he has to make two separate purchases. The box is not made by the same people who make the chassis of the truck. He has to buy it from an implement dealer, and then we get into the argument about what an implement is.

I have a great deal of correspondence before me in connection with the argument I have had with the department before. I am not talking about a truck. I am talking about the box that goes on the truck or the box that goes on the wagon. The minister has said that this provision has been in the act for a long time. I realize that; but the point is that since it was originally put in the act progress has been made in farming. We do not use horses any more. If it is a wagon it is drawn by a horse. Now we have trucks that use the same type of box formerly used on a wagon. I see no difference in the box at all, and all I am talking about is the box that goes on the truck.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I think the point brought up by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek is an important one because these boxes found on trucks today are taking the place of boxes that used to be on wagons in years gone by. The minister said that the legislation has not been changed over a long period of years. Surely during such a long period of time there must be progress somewhere along the line. We are not going to sit back and take everything that was brought forward over the last 60 years and continue it simply because it has been in effect for a long period of time. That is a weak argument. A change has been suggested by the hon. member—

Mr. Gordon: With the greatest respect, the hon. member had six years in which he could have done something about it. I am perfectly prepared to consider this point very carefully but not at this moment.

Mr. Korchinski: The tone in which the Minister of Finance speaks would indicate that he is not prepared to take a few extra minutes to deal with the problem presented by these members. It is a good case and the minister should take a few extra minutes to consider it. I assure the minister that if he had taken a few extra minutes on some of these other items he would have had a lot less trouble.

Mr. Gordon: I am perfectly prepared to do that, but before making a change of this kind I would really like to know not only all the arguments in favour of the proposition but what arguments, if any, there may be against it.

Mr. McIntosh: Then is the minister willing to stand this clause?

Mr. Gordon: I recognize the difficulty here. As the hon. member said a few minutes ago, he is not arguing that the truck should not be taxed but he is arguing that the box that goes on the truck should be free of tax. So you have a beasty or you have an article, the basic part of which should not be free of tax, but it is argued that a piece of it should be free of tax. It seems to me, with all due respect to the hon. member, that this drives us into a rather difficult position, and it is for that reason that perhaps I have been less enthusiastic about accepting his proposition than I might otherwise have been.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Chairman, if the box was imported and there was an end user's certificate that it would only be used for agricultural purposes I think that would solve the problem. To me it does not make any difference if the box goes on a wagon or a truck, but apparently the minister is prepared to say that if it goes on a wagon it is exempt but if the same box goes on a truck it is taxable, which does not seem reasonable.

Mr. Gordon: Because the wagon is exempt and the truck is not. I can see the hon. member's point of view, but I presume he can also see the point of view I am trying to present, that we are dealing with a wagon that is exempt and a truck which is not. The hon. member has suggested that if the box goes on a wagon it is exempt and therefore if it goes on a truck it should also be exempt. I am putting the point of view that the complete article, wagon and box, is exempt. The hon. member has pointed out that it is obsolete in the west but it still may be used occasionally in some other parts of Canada that are perhaps less progressive. But if we get into a situation where we are dealing with a hybrid, the main part of which is subject to tax and part of which is not, I am sure that in the end we will end up with a worse situation than if I had not accepted the proposal.

Mr. McIntosh: Let me try to clarify this point. I have contended in the past that the box is neither part of the wagon nor is it part of the truck, and so that I do not go off on a tangent I should like to read a few paragraphs of a letter I wrote to the department trying to put across my argument. They contend that the box is taxable under tariff item 438f. In my letter I said:

> Item 438f deals with parts of motor vehicles.
>
> A box is not a part of a motor vehicle.
>
> I contend that a steel truck, grain or livestock box is not part of what is considered a motor vehicle or the chassis thereof, but rather an article to be mounted or attached thereto. Item 438a states such articles shall be valued separately and duty assessed under tariff items regularly applicable thereto.
>
> In western Canada—
>
> As I said before.
>
> —and the same may be said of eastern Canada,—
>
> I am not too sure about that.
>
> —automotive dealers very seldom sell a farm truck or vehicle with steel grain box attached. If the farmer requires a grain box the normal procedure is for the farmer or dealer to obtain one from an implement dealer. Grain and livestock truck boxes are usually manufactured by those specialized in manufacturing agricultural implements and not from automotive manufacturers. Most automotive dealers price sheets list chassis only and do not include a price for a grain or livestock box.
>
> Therefore, I contend a grain box should not be considered as a part of the truck, or vehicle, but considered under some other heading.
>
> I do not care under which heading we consider it.
>
> I further contend a steel grain or stock truck box could be included under the heading of agriculture implements—
>
> This is already in the tariff item.
>
> —for the following reason. In legal dictionaries, the term implement is defined as a thing of necessary use in any trade.
>
> Certainly, a truck box is used in the trade of agriculture.
>
> The word necessary is defined as those things to the doing of a thing which are reasonably required.
>
> A box is essential to the truck if it is going to be used to haul grain. You can put the same box on a wagon or a truck with certain modifications. I do not see why you differentiate between the two.

Mr. Korchinski: I should like to add a few words to what has already been said by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. You can take the same box and put it on a truck, a wagon or a sleigh for that matter. Surely, the minister himself can see that this is the type of unit that can be used for agricultural purposes. The minister is saying that this is a complicated procedure through which we have to go before we can get an exemption. I recall, for example, that during the war the procedure was very simple. Eaton's and Simpson's had a blank form in their mail order catalogue and all you had to do was fill out the form to indicate that you were a farmer and that the particular item you were buying was for farm purposes. This was all that was required during the time of war. This method was devised by people who were getting a dollar a year. Now, however, we find this is an extremely complicated problem and the matter cannot be looked at for another year. This does not make sense.

This is an item that is being used on a farm. A man can take that same box off a truck and put it on a wagon or put it on a sleigh and use it for the same purpose. The only difference is that he uses a different method of propulsion. It seems to me that it would only take a few minutes for the minister to say that if a form were filled out signifying the equipment was for agricultural purposes, it would be exempt.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): A few minutes ago the minister mentioned that a box for a wagon was exempt. So far as we are concerned in the west, when we think of a wagon we naturally think of the old steel wheeled wagon and that has been out of existence for a long time. The truck has now replaced it. However, if you wanted to get a truck the same size as the old wagon you could still buy this same wagon box for the now extinct wagon, put it on the truck and you would be home free. However, as a result of the fact that trucks today have a larger capacity you have to have a box of a larger size.

These boxes are for farm use almost entirely, I would say, and usually of wooden construction. The steel box is the only box that might have a dual purpose. I think it is just a matter of realizing that the wagon has almost disappeared as an implement for hauling grain. It is still used for small jobs around the farm, but for the purpose of hauling grain off the farm and into the elevator it is no longer used.

Mr. Baldwin: I think this is a good place for me to intervene since I have practised law as well as done a little bit of farming. It seems to me that the government should give consideration to the changing conditions as the result of rail line abandonment. The original purpose of a farm wagon was to draw grain a distance of seven miles which, under the Railway Act, was the shortest distance between two elevators. Obviously the grain is going to have to be drawn anywhere from 30 miles to 40 miles if this rail line abandonment legislation proceeds.

I draw to the minister's attention the phrase which has been referred to by my hon. friend, that this is a box for a farm wagon. This indicates the boxes are individual items. Perhaps the minister would agree to simply adding after the words "farm wagons", the words "farm trucks". He would then have an amendment which would be quite plain. These would be separate items used either for farm wagons or farm trucks. I do not believe there would be any great difficulty about agreeing to that simple amendment which would meet the very reasonable request made by the hon. member.

Mr. Nasserden: A minute ago the minister mentioned the last six years. I do not know whether or not that was an invitation to discuss some of the events that took place during that period. We on this side of the house would be very glad to make reference to some of the things that are done in this particular bill. Reference has been made by the hon. member for Peace River to rail line transportation which bears directly on the changed situation in connection with agriculture in western Canada as it affects this particular item. For that reason, we would like the minister to give some recognition to this problem, at least more recognition than he has indicated in his remarks this evening.

Mr. Korchinski: There is another point that comes to mind in connection with this farm wagon question. Reference has been made to something that is tractor drawn. I know many of the truck manufacturers like to refer to their trucks as tractors. If one were to argue the point further he might say, for example, that if all trucks are to be referred to as tractors, then a tractor which happened to have more horsepower and greater tonnage would be included. I would say if we took the truck of ten-ton capacity, then it would be exempt because of the phrase "tractor drawn". Now, if you happened to hitch up a tractor and trailer unit, then I would say that kind of truck would be taxed. This does not seem to me to be right. I wonder if the minister could give us any information on that?

Mr. Gordon: I think all I can say is that I do not believe this is the time to make representations on this matter. If hon. members will make representations to me, I will go into them very carefully but I do not believe we can do it tonight.

Mr. Korchinski: We will make representations if the minister will give us an opportunity two months later to have another budget.

Mr. McIntosh: This is not the first time we have approached the department on this issue. I believe the hon. member for Peace River has brought up a very important point because in some parts of Saskatchewan some of these rail lines have been abandoned, necessitating the haulage of grain in bigger quantities longer distances. I say this is the place and the time is now, for making representations. I do not believe the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Peace River would be out of place. I believe, actually, we are talking about the same thing. It is just a matter of interpretation so far as the department is concerned. I think the minister has recognized, essentially, that a box for a truck, a wagon or a sleigh is the same thing. There should be no discrimination between them.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. McIntosh: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: He said he made representations to the department previously. Could he tell us whether Mr. Fleming or the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings were tougher?

Mr. McIntosh: I realize why this question was asked by the Secretary of State. He is trying to make it a political question and I am trying to stay away from making it a political question. However I will say this, that I was just as annoyed with the previous administration as I am going to be with this one if it does not do this, and if the Secretary of State is as true a Canadian as he professes to be he will prevail on the Minister of Finance that this is a necessity. If he wants his government to help western Canada he will see that this is put through.

Mr. Nasserden: Not only that, but it would be a feather in his cap if he did.

Mr. Pugh: I am wondering if the Minister of Finance has gone into the request made a week or so ago, when this was at the resolution stage? At that time a good deal was put forward with regard to wagons, and I am wondering whether the government has given any further consideration to the possibility of an amendment?

Mr. McIntosh: I might also say that I recognize the necessity of protecting eastern industry, but if the minister will go back into the history of the question he will find that eastern industry has been protected for over two years on this very item, and none of those engaged in manufacturing this type of box in eastern Canada found enough volume to necessitate manufacturing it. With the two or three years protection they have had we could now import them from the United States tax free, if there are only a few of them, in the same way as anything else.

The Chairman: Shall the clause carry?

Mr. Pugh: May I have an answer to my question?

Mr. Gordon: What is your question?

Mr. Pugh: The question I am asking is this: because of representations made on the floor of the house in committee, in the last week or two when on resolution stage, has the government done anything about considering an amendment?

Mr. Gordon: I wonder if the hon. member would refer to the page in Hansard where this was mentioned.

Mr. Pugh: I do not have it. However I asked the question myself, as did possibly three other members who were present at the time.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could the hon. member look it up?

Mr. Pugh: I do not think it is necessary. Apparently the government did not pay attention to what was said, but I am sure we could have an answer to the question. The hon. member for Peace River has brought forward a most important point, that because of rail abandonment a farmer has to truck more than seven miles. Therefore it is something that should be considered, and the government has had notice of this within the last week or two.

The Chairman: Shall clause 6 carry?

Mr. McIntosh: No. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Peace River:

> That clause 6 be amended by adding after the words "boxes for farm wagons" the words "and farm trucks."

Mr. Gordon: I wonder if Your Honour has considered whether the amendment is in order?

Mr. Baldwin: Might I make a submission on that point. I think it has already been noted by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek that it has been indicated by one of the departments that such an interpretation as we are striving for now might be accepted. We are not trying to add anything which was not included before. We are merely attempting to clarify an existing definition.

Mr. Gordon: I want to make it quite clear that farm trucks are not included.

Mr. Baldwin: We are not asking for farm trucks. We are asking that boxes attached to farm trucks be included in the definition of boxes presently used.

The Chairman: In the opinion of the Chair the proposed amendment extends the scope of the resolution and is therefore out of order and cannot be put to the committee.

Mr. McIntosh: I disagree with your ruling.

Division

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

In committee of the whole when Bill No. C-90 was being considered the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh) moved the following amendment:

"That clause 6 be amended by adding after the words "Boxes for farm wagons" the words "and farm trucks".

The Chair ruled the amendment out of order on the ground that the proposal was outside the scope of the resolution adopted in committee of ways and means on which the bill was based, whereupon the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek appealed to the house from the decision of the Chair.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house that the chairman's ruling be confirmed? Those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Addison
Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe)
Badanai
Basford
Batten
Beaule
Bechard
Beer
Belanger
Berger
Blouin
Boulanger
Boutin
Brown
Byrne
Cadieux (Terrebonne)
Cameron (High Park)
Cantin
Caouette
Caron
Carter
Chapdelaine
Choquette
Chretien
Côté (Chicoutimi)
Côté (Longueuil)
Cowan
Crossman
Cyr
Davis
Deachman
Denis
Deschatelets
Drouin
Dube
Dupuis
Emard
Ethier
Eudes
Favreau
Forest
Forgie
Frenette
Garland
Gauthier
Gelber
Gendron
Godin
Granger
Gray
Greene
Gregoire
Groos
Guay
Habel
Haidasz
Hahn
Harley
Hays
Hellyer
Honey
Jewett, Miss
Klein
Konantz, Mrs.
Lachance
Laing
Lamontagne
Laniel
Latulippe
Laverdiere
Lessard (Lake St. John)
Macaluso
Macdonald
MacEachen
MacNaught
McIlraith
McMillan
McNulty
Matheson
Matte
Moreau
Morison
Mullally
Munro
Nicholson
Nixon
O'Keefe
Olson
Otto
Patterson
Pennell
Pepin
Perron
Pickersgill
Pilon
Plourde
Richard
Rinfret
Rochon
Rondeau
Rouleau
Roxburgh
Ryan
Sharp
Stewart
Teillet
Temple
Thompson
Tucker
Wahn
Walker
Watson (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Whelan—113.

NAYS

Messrs:

Alkenbrack
Baldwin
Barnett
Bigg
Brewin
Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Cardiff
Chatterton
Churchill
Clancy
Coates
Crouse
Danforth
Doucett
Fane
Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke)
Forbes
Grafftey
Gundlock
Hales
Herridge
Horner (The Battlefords)
Howe (Wellington-Huron)
Irvine
Jorgenson
Kennedy
Knowles
Korchinski
Loney
MacEwan
MacLean (Queens)
MacRae
McBain
McIntosh
Madill
Mather
Millar
More
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Nasserden
Nesbitt
Orlikow
Pascoe
Paul
Peters
Pigeon
Prittie
Pugh
Rapp
Rheaume
Ricard
Rynard
Smith
Southam
Starr
Stefanson
Stenson
Valade
Vincent
Watson (Assiniboia)
Webb
Webster
Weichel
Willoughby
Winch
Winkler—66.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the ruling confirmed.

Mr. Cashin: I was paired. Had I not been paired I would have voted to uphold the ruling.

Mr. Gordon: I was paired. If I had not been, I would have voted to uphold the ruling.

Mr. Thomas: I was paired with the hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace (Mr. Asselin). If I had voted I would have voted against the ruling.

Mr. Mackasey: I was paired. If I had not been paired I would have voted to sustain the ruling.

(Translation):

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cardin). Had I voted, I would have voted against your decision.

Mr. Gerard Ouellet (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay). Had I voted, I would have voted against your ruling.

(Text):

And the house having resumed in committee:

On clause 6.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I do not think the House of Commons has seen a minister deal with a matter of such importance to the agricultural industry in such a cavalier fashion as did the Minister of Finance this afternoon and this evening.

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member will recognize that he should be talking about the bill and not about the attitude of hon. members of the house.

Mr. Nasserden: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to talk about the particular item before us at the present time. I want to draw on the history of the Liberal party—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member realizes that when he prefaces his remarks by saying that he wants to go over the history of the Liberal party is immediately going beyond the bounds of clause 6.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I thought hon. members opposite would welcome it, but I see that they do not so I will try to keep away from it. I should like to say though that one of the precepts that has been recognized by the parliament of Canada over a number of years has been that agricultural implements should enter this country free of excise taxes. In this instance boxes for farm trucks are being denied this preference. That has been the substance of the argument put forward by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek and other members from farm constituencies in this debate.

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps hon. members would like to co-operate with the Chair and with the hon. member who now has the floor so that we will have the opportunity to hear him out.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, before the hon. gentleman resumes what he has to say, perhaps it might be drawn to Your Honour's attention that Your Honour ruled that a certain amendment was out of order as being irrelevant to the bill, and if it was out of order to move the amendment as it was irrelevant to the bill it would appear to me that what the hon. member is now saying is equally out of order.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, it is quite clear that the Secretary of State has raised a point of order which has no application in the present case. Surely we are not going to be prevented from discussing a clause that is pertinent to the bill. I might remind the Secretary of State that we have not yet passed clause 6 and as the remarks are relevant to the discussion of clause 6 the discussion should therefore be permitted.

Mr. Pugh: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether Your Honour has made up your mind or whether you wish to hear more, but there is no question but that we are still talking about farm boxes. An amendment was put forward and turned down which had to do with bringing them in free of charge. We are still talking about farm boxes as far as I can see and I think the hon. member is quite right in going ahead.

The Chairman: Order. I think hon. members will agree that a decision has been reached on that very point and the Chair does not consider that the point can be reintroduced now. However, I am quite disposed to hear further from the hon. member for Rosthern to determine exactly what his proposed argument is going to be, and a ruling can be made then as to whether or not he is out of order.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, the point I was trying to make, and it may not be recognized by some as very valid, was that throughout the years parliament has recognized the fact that farm implements should enter the country free of duty. While the act has been interpreted in a certain way for a number of years, quite a change has taken place in the agricultural industry in recent years and the result is that a situation has come about with regard to interpreting the intent of parliament in this particular instance which in the minds of the farmers of western Canada at least approaches bureaucratic arrogance and stagnation. It was that point I was trying to draw to the attention of the committee and particularly to hon. members opposite who from time to time have been very loud in their boasting that it was their party that brought these benefits to the agricultural community of Canada.

Mr. Stenson: Mr. Chairman, this afternoon the hon. member for Saint John-Albert spoke about importing machinery and I understood the minister to say that the tax would be levied as of the date the budget was brought down. Does this cover the importation of machinery and equipment for dairies?

Mr. Gordon: It depends a good deal on the kind of machinery about which the hon. gentleman is talking. If it was taxable under the budget proposals it became taxable on the date of the budget. If it was not taxable it still is not taxable.

Mr. Stenson: It was not taxable before the budget was brought down but I understand there will be an 11 per cent tax.

The Chairman: Order. The Chair has recognized the hon. member for Kootenay West. Perhaps we can come back to the hon. member for Peterborough in a moment.

Mr. Herridge: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I have been trying to restrain myself as much as possible and to rise only to seek information or to advocate a cause. I wish to refer to the provision having to do with "boats bona fide purchased by fishermen for use in the fisheries", and so on. I have the honour to represent some farmers who have to use boats as the only method of transportation in going to the villages or in transporting their supplies, cattle, fruit and things of that sort. Has consideration ever been given to the farmer who has to buy a boat and in some cases operate a small barge to transport his produce by way of extending the same exemption to him as in the case of fishermen?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I think this is the first time, as far as I know, that the proposition has been presented, so I am afraid that no consideration has been given to the situation to which the hon. member has just referred.

Mr. Herridge: Would the minister consider for inclusion on another occasion bona fide cases of persons who are confined to water transport?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, I would be very glad to. Perhaps a little later we might have a discussion about this matter and the hon. member might inform me in a little more detail about the problem.

Mr. Herridge: I thank the minister. There are only a few cases, but I think persons living under these circumstances are entitled to every consideration. They are on the frontier and are rendering a great service.

Mr. Stenson: I had reference to machinery or dairy equipment being brought in. In discussing the matter with the Department of National Revenue on June 25 they agreed that the tax would be refunded. These people had a contract price for the equipment.

Mr. Gordon: I presume in that case it was being imported by a wholesaler of some kind for resale, in which case that would be the proper interpretation.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct the minister's attention to an item on page 5, line 20, where there is a reference to soft drinks. I realize this matter has been referred to before and I heard the minister's statement in this regard. It was rather revealing. He may say when I have finished that I should have taken up this matter with the previous administration when we formed the government, so let me assure him immediately that I did. I feel that if the items included under flavourings, extracts, emulsions and powders are not taxable, then soft drinks should not be taxed either because of the discriminatory nature of such a tax.

I am sure that the minister will find some support for my argument from his colleague the Minister of National Revenue. I do not say this by way of advertisement for the Minister of National Revenue, but we all know he is a big Pepsi-Cola man. I am sure the Minister of National Revenue will agree with me that this is a discriminatory tax when we consider that these drinks for children such as Fizzies and Kool Aid are not taxed, and they are sold in great quantity. If these items are sold to the public tax free, then I feel the soft drink industry should have the same consideration. All I am asking is that the area of discrimination be eliminated. Either this tax should be imposed across the board or we should extend the extension to soft drinks. I am thinking here of the advantage to the industry, Mr. Chairman, because the minister has indicated that the revenue from that particular industry is in the neighbourhood of $12 million. Is that correct?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Winkler: This is a lot of money to receive as revenue of the country. I just ask that consideration be given to relieving the discrimination against one of these industries.

Mr. Gordon: I wonder if I might ask my colleague, the Minister of National Revenue, to reply to that comment?

Mr. Garland: Perhaps I should use this opportunity to correct the impression that may have been left by what the hon. member said about my connections with the soft drink industry. Prior to joining the cabinet, I resigned from all my directorships and active management of my soft drink business.

Now, dealing specifically with this question, I might say I do not believe the hon. gentleman has fully appreciated what is intended here. Food flavourings, extracts, emulsions and powders, not including those for beverages, are mentioned. Soft drinks, as such are taxable. These ingredients that go into these soft drinks are exempt, because the manufacturer of soft drinks can purchase these items tax exempt under licence.

Mr. McIntosh: I do not believe the minister's explanation is correct because the item says, "not including bases or concentrates for making soft drinks". They are not exempt, therefore.

Mr. Garland: There again I do not believe the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek fully appreciates the situation. These bases and concentrates of course, are taxable. But when they are turned into the finished soft drink the soft drink manufacturer is able to purchase them tax exempt. You are talking about two different things. You are talking about the bases and syrup that go into the drink and confusing them with the finished soft drink.

Mr. Winkler: I would not want the Minister of National Revenue to think I am trying to put across the idea that there is double taxation. I am saying there should not be tax discrimination against the manufacturer of soft drinks as opposed to other beverages which compete on the market in precisely the same field.

Mr. Gordon: I should like to assure the hon. member that alcoholic beverages are, in fact, taxed to quite an extent, if he is thinking about that.

Mr. Winkler: That is an absolutely irrelevant argument. I am talking about soft drinks, the item here. If the minister becomes involved in any more irrelevant discussion, Mr. Chairman, you should set him down. I am only referring to the two kinds of soft drinks a consumer may purchase in a shop. One is taxable and the other is not. This is discrimination against the soft drink industry.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I should like to direct a question to the minister which departs from the present discussion but does relate to the exemption provided by clause 6 of the bill. What is the position of a municipally or provincially owned public utility, apart from sewage disposal utilities that are provided for in the bill, for example a utility generating electric energy from thermal or other sources, so far as exemption from this building materials and production machinery tax is concerned? Does the public utility producing electrial energy qualify for exemption from taxation or is it taxable?

Mr. Gordon: It is taxable, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): May I ask a supplementary question? Does that mean a project such as the Columbia river project in British Columbia, which is presently under negotiation and is a provincially owned utility, would be subject to tax on both building materials and production machinery?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Korchinski: I do not believe the Minister of National Revenue completely understood the argument presented by the hon. member for Grey-Bruce. I am sure he is quite familiar with the problem. The complaint is that the manufacturer of soft drinks pays the tax but any vendor of lemonade or Kool Aid does not pay the tax. The suggestion is that either this tax should be removed or both people should pay the tax. This is the only point of argument that has been presented, so far as I am aware.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, all these products are taxable. In the case of some of them you only buy a little powder and there is no tax on the water that goes with it.

Mr. Byrne: Since the discussion has ranged from dump boxes to soft drinks and to cabs over caterpillars and tractors, I want to bring to the attention of the committee the fact that this objection to the tax on soft drinks is not a new one. I can recall that 10 or 12 years ago I endeavoured to persuade the then minister of finance that there was discrimination in respect of the tax on soft drinks. I am sure the soft drink industry does create a large amount of employment as compared with the industry which manufactures these powders. The mixing, bottling, washing of the bottles, packaging and distribution by truck all provide a considerable amount of employment and these employees contribute greatly to our tax return.

I was disappointed, Mr. Chairman, that you ruled the hon. member for Rosthern out of order, because I do think that a history of the—

The Chairman: Order. I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member uselessly, but we have already decided that we should not go over the ground which has been decided upon by the vote of the house.

Mr. Winkler: If the hon. member is prepared to move an amendment I would be very pleased to support it.

Mr. Byrne: I would be delighted to move an amendment, but I bow to your ruling, sir, that an amendment affecting the balance of ways and means would be out of order. Since you have ruled the matter of dump boxes out of order, I am wondering whether it would be in order to remind the committee that the hon. member for Marquette, on July 16, was in favour of imposing an excise tax on the cabs that go over trucks and tractors and other machinery. Really, the only difference between a cab and a metal box is that the cab is a box upside down. Therefore there is no real difference, and the Conservative party is not unanimous in opposing excise taxes on farm machinery.

Mr. Winkler: Did I understand the minister correctly? Did he tell me that there is a tax on these small packaged drinks sold in grocery stores?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Winkler: At what stage?

Mr. Gordon: Manufacturer's selling price.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I would like to come back to the answer the minister gave a few moments ago regarding the imposition of a tax on building materials and machinery as related to provincially and municipally owned electric producing utilities. Is it not true that, prior to the introduction of these amendments, building materials and production machinery used in the construction of hydroelectric and thermal electric producing plants were exempt; and is it now the purpose of this bill to add on to the cost of the development of such plants an additional 4 per cent, 8 per cent or 11 per cent, depending on their timing? Does this not defeat the very purpose of the minister's declared intention, on the introduction of the budget, that we wish to encourage secondary industrial development in Canada?

If we, by the introduction of this tax, attack the very root source of energy for secondary industries, which I can only assume is the outcome of the minister's answer to my question, then do we not attack the very basis of his intention to build a flourishing and developing economy?

Although I feel this ought to be done for private industry, if it cannot be done for private industry then at least it should be done for public industry owned by provinces and municipalities. Surely this should be re-assessed, and if it cannot be done now it should be done at some future time.

If we impose 11 per cent, or as is the case 4 per cent in the immediate future, of additional cost on a major public utility such as the Columbia river project or the Peace river project in B.C., where hundreds of millions of dollars of capital development are involved and where loans have to be secured and amortized over 20, 30 or 40 years, and if that initial increase in cost occasioned by this tax has to be amortized at 4 per cent over the same period, then it is possible some of the major developments in the country will be brought to a standstill because the power produced from them will be uneconomic. Costs are being imposed on these projects that had not previously been considered because there was no federal tax on the cost of building materials and production machinery.

I do not want to impute any motive whatever to the minister. I do not want to suggest that there has been carelessness here. I only ask whether consideration has been given to the effect of the imposition of this tax on the cost of installation and operation in respect of projects as large as the Columbia project in British Columbia will be, or as large as the Peace river project is at present?

Mr. Herridge: I briefly want to support the hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke in his appeal to the minister to reconsider this matter. I do urge that he use this new period of restagnation to give it very serious consideration.

Mr. Pugh: The hon. member for Okanagan-Revelstoke made a rather good point, and I wonder if the minister could give us any information as to whether officials from British Columbia or any other province have made representations to the government asking that the 11 per cent tax be taken off building materials and production equipment used in this type of project? I am reliably informed that the additional cost on the Peace river project will be $18 million.

Mr. Gordon: Representations were received; they were considered carefully and, as hon. members are well aware, certain modifications were made in the application or implementation of the tax. It is the policy of the government to proceed with it on this basis.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): If such representations from provinces and municipalities have been rejected, then apparently there is no hope for private investors such as those who, during the last eight or ten months, indicated that they intended to proceed with the development of pulp mills at Kamloops, Prince George, and several points on the coast, projects which to the best of my knowledge would cost over $200 million. I believe that the projected costs of the development at Kamloops run as high as $26 million; at Prince George, $50 million and on the coast a further $100 million, approximately, by various companies. There has been the suggestion of potential development at Kitimat, taking advantage of the power available from the Alcan power production capacity there.

Does this mean that private industry in Canada which is prepared to invest substantial sums in the development of secondary industry, and in British Columbia particularly in the pulp and paper industry, where approximately $200 million, it has been announced, may be invested in the next 12 month or 18 month period, does not have any hope of relief whatever from this taxation on building materials and production machinery; that not even the provinces and municipalities which are endeavouring to provide the energy with which secondary industry can be developed, sustained and increased, can expect sympathetic consideration or relief from the additional capital cost that will be imposed by this tax? If this is the case, this bill, if it is passed must mean that we are going to strangle or at least diminish the benefits to be derived from industrial expansion both public and private from this time forward. Are these to be the consequences of the bill?

We have heard a great deal of discussion about exemptions to be provided for agriculture, the fishing industry and other industries. Coming from an agricultural riding as I do, I do not for a moment attempt to diminish the importance of the criticisms that have been made or the attempts to secure exemptions for agricultural machinery and other items that are covered. But now we are dealing with something that goes far deeper and has a far wider application. This bill, if passed in its present form, attacks the very foundation of industrial development in Canada; it attacks the root of energy; it attacks the very basis upon which industry can be built; it attacks the power upon which industry will depend. I say this because if you consider a development as large as the Columbia development is believed to be, if the present difficulties between the federal and provincial authorities can be reconciled and if that development goes ahead in the treaty projects alone, something like $400 million will be spent. If the total river can be developed it will be $1,300 million. If you add 11 per cent to that you are adding $110 million or $125 million to the cost of the project; and if you amortize that at even as little as 4 per cent or 3½ per cent over a 20, 30 or 40 year loan period you are perhaps making it impossible to continue to even contemplate the development of that resource. This is the possible consequence of the bill before us.

Hon. members across the floor can smile and make remarks to one another as they are doing at the moment. But let them come into British Columbia and talk to the people there about developments of this size; let them go abroad in any province in this country and talk to the people who are depending upon that kind of development; let them have a look at the development of national resources which are now having imposed upon them an additional cost of 11 per cent, and then let them smile, because the people will not comprehend or understand their attitude.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to inject a note of political partisanship into this debate. I am only concerned at this moment that perhaps not sufficient attention has been paid to the implications of the implementation of this bill. What do you do to the cost of the kilowatt hour; what do you do to the cost of a kilowatt of power of the Columbia river development if you add 4 per cent, 8 per cent or 11 per cent to the capital development cost of the project? What do you add to the kilowatt hour cost of the energy if you add this capital expense, and project that expense over the period of time the loans that are necessary to develop the river have to be amortized? These are matters about which I am concerned. I am only interested in whether by implementing this bill and making it an act we may inadvertently—because I do not think the government would do this deliberately—stop or remove from all possible consideration the development of these major river systems which remain in Canada to be developed, which remain in British Columbia particularly to be developed, because there are many river systems and many possibilities of development. But if the government is going to add 11 per cent to the capital cost, what happens to the unit cost of the energy that is developed from it?

Mr. McBain: Mr. Chairman, I wish to come back from British Columbia to Ontario. My question concerns farm wagons, including four-wheeled farm wagons equipped to be tractor drawn. This question is relative to the southwestern Ontario area where the farmers use anhydrous ammonia in the production of corn. I might explain that anhydrous ammonia is a liquid fertilizer which is applied by an applicator and has to be stored in storage tanks. These tanks are put on the farm wagons that I understand come in duty free. The tanks remain on these wagons probably for the life of the tank and the life of the wagon. They are used for agricultural purposes only, but they are subject to the excise tax. I wish to ask the minister whether consideration will be given to allowing these tanks used by the farmers of the southwestern Ontario area for the application of anhydrous ammonia to be imported duty free? I might mention that very few are manufactured in Canada and they necessarily have to be imported from the United States.

Mr. Gordon: As far as I know, Mr. Chairman, there have been no representations of any kind about the particular tank to which the hon. member has just referred.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 6 carry?

Clause agreed to.

On clause 7—Application and coming into force.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, my colleague the Minister of National Revenue would like to move a technical amendment on this clause which has to do with renumbering.

Mr. Garland: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That Bill No. C-90, to amend the Excise Tax Act, be amended by striking out line 44 on page 9 thereof and substituting therefor the following:
"(2) Subject to subsection (3), section 1 and sections 3 to 7".

Mr. Gordon: It is just a difference in numbering.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 8—"Designated goods" defined.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, clause 8 (1) (c) refers to:

—goods for use as part of sewerage and drainage systems, and articles and materials to be used exclusively in the manufacture thereof.

I imagine that at the present time quite a lot of revenue is secured from this item, but I should like to point out that there are many people who are trying to make improvements in the plumbing in their homes, particularly in rural areas, where the cost is already considerably higher than it might be in urban areas where houses are located closer together. Has the minister given any consideration to any alleviation of this tax with regard to the situation in rural areas, where a group is working together on a co-operative basis?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I went into this at some length this afternoon at the same time as I dealt with another matter, sending a memorandum over to the hon. gentleman concerned. I went into this subject at the same time.

Mr. Douglas: Has the minister made a statement about the matter I raised earlier concerning mobile homes and trailers? I believe he was giving some thought to it.

[Mr. McBain.]

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, this was one of the items covered under clause 6, which for some reason was not raised at the time when we reached that clause, but perhaps I might be permitted to give the explanation.

Before 1957 trailers of all kinds were subject to sales tax on their full selling price, but in March 1957 an exemption was introduced for 75 per cent of the selling price or the duty paid value of trailers for use as homes. It is believed that parliament did not provide this exemption for 100 per cent of the selling price because trailers are different from houses and because some building materials and appliances entering into the construction of trailers would not have been exempt from tax if used in the construction of a house. Now that building materials used in house construction are to be taxed, trailers for use as homes should also be taxed.

It is recognized, however, that the selling price of these trailers includes a considerable amount of labour, and therefore taxing the full selling price would tax trailers for use as homes more heavily than houses. On the other hand, trailers for use as homes require in their construction a larger taxable content than houses. For example, they usually contain stoves, refrigerators and built-in furniture and furnishings, and they require wheels and tires. The application of the tax to 75 per cent of the selling price is believed to be a reasonable level of taxation for these manufactured mobile units which provide a special kind of living accommodation. This exemption for trailers for use as homes does not apply to camping equipment, such as units to be placed on trucks or trailers which are merely converted into overnight shelters. Manufacturers of trailers will, of course, buy their materials free of sales tax, but they will pay sales tax on 75 per cent of the selling price.

Mr. Douglas: Does that equally apply to mobile homes, the homes which are moved on foundations?

Mr. Gordon: This just applies to trailers.

Clause 8 agreed to.

On clause 9—Refund of tax.

(Translation):

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, as for clause 9(1)(b)(ii), this is a case where a tender in writing would have been submitted by a contractor before June 13, or before the budget, but which would not have been accepted by that date.

According to the bill, if the tender contained a pecuniary penalty or provided for the forfeiture of a deposit sent with the tender in the case the contractor withdrew his tender before it were accepted, instead of withdrawing the tender, the contractor could leave it as submitted. Then, he would have been able to take advantage of this tax exemption.

Now, in my opinion, the words after the word "contract" in line 14 are restrictive and of such a nature as to cause a real injustice to the contractor. I mean the words:

—and in default of so doing to incur or cause to be incurred a pecuniary penalty whether by forfeiture of a security deposit or otherwise.

Apparently, the minister's position has been that a tender did not really constitute a contract and therefore that the party sending in a tender could withdraw without any penalty except in cases where a penalty clause had been written in the contract and except, in addition, where the tender called for the forfeiture of the deposit in case of withdrawal of the tender before acceptation.

Now in my opinion, such an interpretation is not in accordance with current practices in the building industry.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, deposits are usually required or this pecuniary penalty clause is written only in the case of companies whose solvency or reputation has not been satisfactorily established. In the case of a recognized contractor, such a clause is generally not required.

Second, that section counters the existing rules with regard to contracts in the province of Ontario.

And third, in respect of the province of Quebec, such a restrictive interpretation is, I think, contrary to the economy of the civil code, in connection with contract obligations and, more particularly, to sections 984 and 1079 of that code.

Indeed, under section 984, a contract is perfected by the parties' consent; section 1079, which concerns conditional clauses and obligations, reads as follows:

—an obligation is conditional when it is made to depend upon an event future and uncertain, either by suspending it until the event happens, or by dissolving it accordingly as the event does or does not happen.

Now, when interpreting section 1079, I submit that here we are facing a contract with suspensive effect, and authorities have commented on that section as well as the legal aspect of a tender.

I am more particularly thinking of Castel who, in his treatise on the civil law system, explains the difference between a simple pollicitation and an offer which cannot be withdrawn once it has been made, until expiry of the period of time provided in the offer.

Indeed, the learned author tells us that, in such a case, there is much more to it than a simple pollicitation and that there is a contract divided into two parts, the first of which represents the contract itself, or the tender, and the other the pre-contract, which constitutes a binding agreement by the party submitting the tender, from which he cannot withdraw without being liable to damages.

In view of those authorities, in view of the well established practice, as recognized in the province of Ontario, in view of the economy of the civil code, I think that those who tendered before June 13 last, but whose tender had been neither accepted nor rejected before June 13, are in a position where they cannot claim a refund of that tax. I think that if the minister does not grant them that exemption, they will suffer a real prejudice.

I know that there are here, in front of me, legal authorities of great competence and great renown. I refer particularly to my friend the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Favreau) whose legal and constitutional authority is recognized. I am sure he will agree entirely with my observations and that he will recommend to the Minister of Finance to accept the amendment I wish to move.

I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere (Mr. Paul), that section 9, subsection (1), subparagraph (b) (ii) be amended by striking out the words:

—and in default of so doing to incur or cause to be incurred a pecuniary penalty whether by forfeiture of a security deposit or otherwise.

which appear immediately after the word "contract" on line 14 of page 11 of the said bill.

I have no doubt that after seeing the amendment, the minister will be willing to accept it.

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: I think the hon. member was, perhaps, paraphrasing a brief which has been circulated recently by the Canadian Construction Association and a letter to the Canadian Construction Association from Messrs. Stikeman and Elliott solicitors, Montreal. The Canadian Construction Association has, I expect, made representations to all members of the house. Certainly, they have made representations to the government about this particular item and about a number of other items that are being proposed.

I suppose that whenever any new tax is introduced the people affected find it burdensome. I believe that in this particular case the construction industry will find that this is an added cost, which no doubt in most cases they will be able to pass on to their customers in the same way as they pass on other additions to their costs which they face from time to time. I would point out that it is customary, when a new tax is imposed on commodities, to apply it to goods sold after a certain date. The general rule for federal sales and excise tax changes is to have the new tax apply with respect to sales made, or goods cleared through customs, after midnight of the day on which the budget speech is delivered. In this way all persons are treated alike.

In the case of this year's tax changes, the sales tax on building materials and production machinery is intended to apply on and after June 14. In accordance with the usual rule it was not intended that the fact that goods had been ordered or prices quoted before June 14 would affect the imposition of the tax on goods sold after budget date.

It was recognized, however, that some manufacturers and some contractors would be caught in a very difficult position because of the imposition of the tax on all sales after June 13. If a manufacturer who was required to pay tax on goods sold by him after budget date was also required to sell those goods under the terms of an enforceable contract at a price which did not include the tax he might suffer a severe loss.

Similarly, a building contractor who was required to construct a building at a fixed price under an enforceable contract would find the price of his materials increased by the amount of the sales tax and because of this squeeze might be placed in a difficult financial position.

The government recognized these facts and the budget speech promised relief for those who were bound by fixed price contracts entered into on or before budget date. It should be noted that the purpose of this relief was not primarily to protect the eventual purchaser of goods. If the purchaser has a fixed price contract he is already protected. The purpose was to help the person caught between the tax and a commitment to supply goods at a price which did not permit addition of the tax.

In determining under what kinds of fixed price contract relief should be granted, consideration had to be given to the difficulties of ascertaining what were legally binding situations from which the vendor or contractor could not escape without having to absorb the tax himself or suffer some pecuniary penalty.

It became evident that bona fide contracts in writing signed by both parties prior to the budget date were capable of being both ascertained and verified. The same could be said of tenders made in writing prior to June 13 whereby the person submitting the tender was bound to enter into a contract and in default of doing so, would incur a pecuniary penalty, whether by forfeiture of a security deposit or otherwise.

It was realized when the line was drawn to include only these two types of formal contractual obligations that there would be a number of closely related or borderline cases where the commitments lacked the contractual characteristics of those just mentioned. For example, the government has been urged to accept as grounds for relief contracts which have arisen out of offers, or tenders made orally, and contracts which have arisen out of tenders not binding in the sense that the person making the tender would suffer a pecuniary loss if he did not proceed to sign a contract. It has also been asked to grant relief in respect of contracts with a guaranteed upset or maximum price, cost plus contracts and contracts related to leased property. All these requests have been examined carefully but it has been concluded that it would be unfair and unmanageable to base tax relief on any contracts other than those concluded in writing before June 14 or those concluded after that date in accordance with the terms of a tender in writing which committed the person who submitted the tender to a pecuniary penalty if he failed to stand by his bid. Such contracts may include certain upset or maximum price contracts that have the elements of a fixed price contract, but would not include cost plus or percentage fee contracts.

To go beyond what I have indicated would open the door to claims in respect of a wide range of transactions where the manufacturer, contractor or supplier is not prevented from passing on the tax to the purchaser or user of the goods in question.

Although it is realized that this may not be an entirely satisfactory solution, particularly for those firms who conduct their affairs in a more informal manner and do not always put commitments down in a written contractural form, it must also be accepted by those who have given this matter careful thought that it would be administratively impossible to do other than rely on independent documentary evidence.

The fact that many people had made plans or had entered into arrangements which have not the necessary legal formalities to qualify for relief was an important consideration in the decision to introduce the tax in stages commencing at 4 per cent. This provides an important measure of tax relief for all concerned.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask the minister another question? In view of his remarks, I wonder whether he believes that a tender can in no case have a binding effect until it has been accepted?

Mr. Gordon: Certainly, and that is what I said—I did not quite get the implication of the question.

Mr. Martineau: In view of the minister's remarks, is it to be concluded that a tender cannot in any event be an enforceable document?

Mr. Gordon: I am not prepared to give a legal opinion in this matter.

Mr. Martineau: I understand that the minister is not a lawyer but we do have a battery of very learned lawyers sitting on the front benches opposite and I think they should be prepared to defend this clause of the bill which the minister has admitted is a very important one. He has stated he has received representations from the Canadian construction association representing the Canadian construction industry, and there is a very important point involved. There is real hardship incurred by those who have made tenders and who may not, according to good business practice and even according to the law withdraw from that tender until the expiry of the acceptance date without incurring a penalty even if there is no penalty clause inscribed in the tender; because even without such a penalty clause the person to whom the tender is made has recourse in damages if the tender is withdrawn under certain circumstances.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, under the provisions of clause 9 I think there is a need, with or without the amendment, for a great deal of clarification and explanation by the minister and the officials of his department. I am not demanding an explanation tonight but I think the provisions should become a matter of general public knowledge so that municipalities and contractors all across Canada will know what the situation is. For example, will a limit imposed by a bylaw of a municipality be considered as confining the amount of money and therefore imposing a limit within which the contractor must remain to claim the sales tax exemption, if the bylaw has been passed before June 13?

I know that in the bill there are many provisions exempting the materials that municipalities buy for sewer systems, and that materials for schools, which are the responsibility of local government, are also exempt. But there are occasions when municipalities undertake to build civic centres and there may be some that have been approved recently. There are municipalities that undertake to erect sports stadiums, swimming pools and so on, and I think it is essential for this information to be known.

Mr. Martineau: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member but before he goes on with what he is discussing I think we should restrict the discussion until the amendment has been disposed of.

The Chairman: If the hon. member wishes to speak to the amendment I would invite him to do so.

Mr. Olson: I am not exactly sure, Mr. Chairman. We have not been supplied with the amendment. I do not have one in the English language and I have a little difficulty in translating it. But I think the remarks I am about to make apply to the amendment as well. I have reference to the staging of the sales tax that is going to be imposed at different levels. Clause 9, without the amendment and perhaps with the amendment, takes into account the deadline date of June 13. There can be some exemptions made and the penalties will not apply if there was a firm contract prior to that date.

But I think that the construction industry must know the exact situation. For example, let us say that between June 13, 1963 and March 31, 1964 contractors enter into contracts but do not expect to buy all of their materials in that period. Do they have to estimate their costs upon the basis of 4 per cent for the amount that will be purchased during that period, 8 per cent for the amount of building materials purchased between March 31, 1964 and December 31, 1964 and 11 per cent for those building materials that will be purchased after December, 1964? As I said, I do not expect the minister to explain all of this tonight, but the information is essential to the construction industry so that they will know what figures to use in estimating their costs for tendering.

Mr. Gordon: I am glad to have that suggestion and I will most certainly take it up with the Minister of National Revenue. I agree that this matter should be made perfectly clear to all the people who will be affected.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Edmonton West.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I will speak after you have dealt with the question raised by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue and with his amendment.

Mr. Favreau: May I be allowed to put a question to the hon. member? Is his amendment directed expressly at the case where a tender, not containing a provision for a specific penalty or forfeiture but being otherwise binding either because there is a fixed period set or because it has been accepted after June 13, has the effect of a contract, all the provisions whereof have been specified before June 13? It that it?

Mr. Martineau: That is right.

(Translation):

Mr. Paul: I have listened carefully to the comments of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) who has certainly examined the brief submitted by the Canadian construction association, but in my opinion, the minister has taken a position contrary to the spirit of the Quebec civil law. There is in civil law, what is called pollicitation; now legal consent is the expression of agreement on an object or a cause and as long as the agreement has not been worked out, there are only parties in pollicitation.

I know that the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Cantin) will try later on to refute this legal point, but I maintain that as long as the parties have not reached an agreement, there is no contract; but however, the parties are bound by this pollicitation and such is the case with which we are now dealing.

The Minister of Finance, in his mathematical and accounting statement, was in disagreement with the spirit of the civil law of the province of Quebec, and the effect of the amendment moved by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) is exactly to legalize the statute law of our Canadian courts concerning pollicitation.

It actually happens that contractors submit a tender, discussions are held and the coming into effect of the contract is delayed, while the parties are still bound by pollicitation. Now, this contract comes into effect when the parties have made up their minds, and even though one of the parties withdraws his consent, the party responsible is liable to a claim for damages and the courts in the province of Quebec have recognized the validity of such a contract.

I know that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Favreau), as well as the hon. member for Quebec South (Mr. Cantin), are familiar with the Sanschagrin case which is referred to in the 1928 summary of jurisprudence. It was in the case Renfrew Flour Mills v. Sanschagrin that the courts recognized the existence of a contract with pollicitation.

By virtue of this jurisprudence which has never been changed since, neither by the appeal court nor by the supreme court, we are therefore in the existing legal situation in the province of Quebec. The minister, in trying to give a strict interpretation of the law, by establishing other limits for the refund of this tax, is thereby rendering useless and inoperative that provision in our civil law and consequently, the minister interprets a provision of our civil code which contradicts the opinion of the judges of the supreme court and of the court of appeal of the province of Quebec.

This interpretation will cause serious prejudice to those having contracted by pollicitation. Now, the effect of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue is precisely to invite the minister to recognize the existence of a contract, notwithstanding the fact that it was not a written one, because under the provisions of the code, that contract exists and is binding upon the parties, although a clause may be suspensive, inoperative or expired. If the minister wants to give a restrictive interpretation of that provision of the civil code of the province of Quebec, I am of the opinion that he is doing irreparable wrong to the numerous contractors. And I understand that the minister in his remarks a while ago, has mentioned the justifiable reaction of those who are affected by a tax. That is normal.

In this case, it is much more than a reaction to the economy; the point is to give a constitutional interpretation to existing legislation in the province of Quebec.

The civil code is recognized in the province of Quebec where it has force of law. I do not see why the minister would not accept the proposed amendment, which is entirely in order as, in my humble opinion, it is a matter of clarifying an existing situation and of giving legal interpretation to a clause which, as it now stands, cannot in any way affect the balance of ways and means.

I am sure that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will be able to give us his views on this vital constitutional question since it compels, as it were, the minister to give a legal interpretation other than the one found in the majority of the provinces under common law, which is greatly different from the exacting provisions of our civil code.

That is why we are asking, on behalf of the population of the province of Quebec, not a preferential treatment but the recognition of an existing legal provision, sanctioned by our courts and which, if it were rejected, could mean, for many contractors, hardships which, in my opinion, would not happen in the other provinces, because, as far as I know, they do not have that pollicitation provision.

That is why we are confident that the legal experts from the province of Quebec, our hon. friends opposite, will support the remarks made by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue, so that the proposed amendment be accepted, for it is in conformity with the civil code and the standing orders of the house.

(Text):

Mr. Martineau: Speaking again to the amendment, I should like to refer to some remarks made by the Minister of Finance a few minutes ago. I believe he was under the impression that the amendment would create undue administrative difficulties for the officials. Possibly he was under the impression that the passage of this amendment would mean, as he said, that verbal tenders would come within this provision or people who did business in a less formal way could use this provision as a loophole to claim exemption.

I would point out to the minister that such is not the purpose of the amendment. It would only apply to written contracts evidenced by a binding tender, and therefore the officials would have no difficulty in establishing the contract was made before June 13 because they would have written proof of that contract.

Mr. Favreau: I do not intend to offer a legal opinion to this house because that is not my business, especially since becoming a minister I have relinquished the practice of law and my opinion now might not be as good as it was when I was practising law. However, I believe it is my duty to discuss the point raised by the hon. member from the standpoint of an individual citizen who looks at this act.

I agree with the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue that there might be cases not covered by the clause as it is presently drafted. It is true that in Quebec there are tenders which contain a period for their acceptance and the condition that they be not changed subsequently, which is fully binding on the tenderer. If these tenders were made before June 13 then there might be some difficulty if a contract is afterwards signed.

However, I have some misgivings about the type of amendment proposed, which consists simply of deleting all the words in clause 9 (b) (ii) after the word "contract". I think there should be some notion conveyed in the amendment that the tender, if it does not contain a forfeiture or penalty clause, should be such that if accepted it binds the tenderer, and if he did not carry it out he would incur some kind of pecuniary consequences by way of damages or otherwise.

My feeling is that the clause is now too limited in that it is restricted to those particular tenders which actually contain a penalty clause. I do not want to move an amendment, but this is what I suggest if I were to submit one. I would delete lines 14, 15, 16, and 17 in the subclause and make it read like this:

—into such a contract and in default of so doing may incur a pecuniary penalty, forfeiture of a security deposit, damages or other pecuniary consequences.

This I think refers to any type of a tender. In other words, it is a bona fide tender from which the tenderer may not back track.

Mr. Martineau: So far as I am concerned I would be willing to modify my amendment to conform with the wording suggested by the minister. I think that wording would serve the purpose of the original amendment, and would ensure that anyone who had submitted a tender, from which he could not withdraw even though it is not an express provision in the tender, without involving some penalty or damages, would have his claim for refund or exemption of tax recognized.

Mr. Lambert: I am wondering if the minister went a little too far in his suggestion regarding pecuniary consequences. I do not think anybody can show what these are. Would he consider this—and in default of so doing to incur specified or unspecified damages either by forfeiture of security deposit or otherwise?

Mr. Macdonald: Does the hon. member think the ejusdem generis rule would apply?

Mr. Lambert: I think specified and unspecified damages could get into these pecuniary consequences.

Mr. Favreau: Then you only have to say "secure specified or unspecified damages so long as they are real pecuniary consequences."

Mr. Macdonald: My understanding of the law is that a penalty as such is distinguished from damages as awarded by a court. A penalty is something which may be awarded irrespective of damages suffered by either party.

Mr. Lambert: I take it that the amendment has been withdrawn.

The Chairman: I have to wait for the hon. member to advise me whether he is forcing his amendment or not, but I understand he is awaiting advice from the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration before he reaches his decision.

Mr. Martineau: That is not exactly correct. I am waiting for the draft he made to make sure I have taken it down properly.

Mr. Chevrier: I think the proper procedure is for the hon. gentleman to withdraw his amendment and, having withdrawn it, if the minister wants to make a proposal it is up to him; but there cannot be two amendments before the Chair.

Mr. Martineau: If what the minister has said is correct, he was not going to propose an amendment. He read it very slowly but I have not got all the words. If he has a draft I will replace the one already before the committee with the one that has been suggested.

Mr. Olson: While they are preparing this new amendment, if I may call it that, I am not sure I understand all of the implications here. But, if it is the intention of a new amendment to open up the field and have the government responsible to pay a refund in the wide open field of general damages that could be ordered by a court, then I think some caution should be exercised.

Mr. Chevrier: May I suggest that this clause stand for the time being so that we would have an opportunity of considering it between now and tomorrow.

Mr. Martineau: If the minister has not finished his draft, then I am willing to propose a substitute amendment which would correspond roughly to what the minister implied would be acceptable. Subject to these observations I therefore withdraw the amendment already moved, and propose an amendment in these words—

The Chairman: Has the hon. member the unanimous consent of the committee to withdraw his amendment?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Amendment (Mr. Martineau) withdrawn.

Mr. Pickersgill: In order to make sure that we have a draft which means what we really want, the government feels it would be desirable to have professional advice, and I wonder if the committee could not rise—

Mr. Pigeon: Experts.

Mr. Pickersgill: Professional advice is what I said. I wonder if the committee could not rise now and report progress on the understanding that the rest of the work of the committee is completed, except consideration of this clause and the amendment thereto.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I certainly would go along with the proposal made by the Secretary of State.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I have a question that is not related to this particular amendment. It is a question for information which the minister might be able to give us. The other day we were discussing the matter of goods ordered prior to June 13 which could not be delivered, and what was to be the criterion if they had been bought under a conditional sale agreement. I remember the minister said, "Well, I suppose the crucial date, or the limitation date would be when property passes". I was wondering whether he has taken this point into consideration. I have tried to spell it out. I think the clause does cover it but I would like to have that assurance, because if December 31, 1964 is the operative date for property passing, this would mean no machinery or heavy equipment would be covered if it had been purchased under a conditional sale contract the terms of which extended beyond a period of 18 months. This is the matter I would like to guard against, because we know there are many instances of production machinery being purchased under contracts which provide that payment may be spread over a period of four or five years. This is the point upon which I seek assurance from the minister, that these goods will not be caught by reason of the fact that property does not pass, under the conditional sale agreement, if payment is completed after 18 months.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I am afraid the goods in question would be caught.

Mr. Lambert: In other words, the long term payment machinery is caught; the medium term payment machinery is not caught. Well, I think we should rise and report progress, Mr. Chairman. The answer the minister has given calls for more discussion.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report progress and ask—

The Chairman: Order. Before we take the motion perhaps I should bring to the attention of the committee that one point has not yet been disposed of. I am referring to that part of the amendment to clause 1 dealing with the renumbering of the original clauses in the bill. This point was left standing to facilitate the work of the committee. Therefore I would suggest that the committee could now agree to that part of the amendment which had been set aside and left standing earlier today. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether in view of the fact that all of us, I think, would like if at all possible to complete the work of this part of the session in the current week, the house would consider sitting for another half hour and making a start on the committee stage of the economic council bill. We might at least dispose of clause 1, the more general part of the bill, and make some progress toward the conclusion that I think all of us want to achieve.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT AND DEFINITION OF DUTIES

The house resumed from Wednesday, July 17, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of an economic council of Canada—Mr. Lamontagne—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, in our desire to co-operate the house from time to time gets taken by surprise, as we did just before six o'clock by a switch of business. We are now on the economic council bill which was last discussed on July 17, when the second reading stage was concluded; then we went into committee on the bill and rose after standing clause 1. My purpose in speaking now is to provide hon. members with a chance to locate the bill with which we are dealing, and if they refer back to Hansard of July 17 they will see what was going on at that particular period.

The economic council of Canada proposal, of course, is very much what we proposed last session and were close to having accepted, but there was an unnecessarily prolonged debate on that bill although members on the other side of the house were in agreement with the proposition. Had the normal course been followed the bill would have been on the statute books last winter and would have been in effect. We are not following that practice this session; we are giving an example of a much more responsible opposition than the one which faced us last winter.

Mr. Pepin: Politics.

Mr. Churchill: Somebody says "politics", as if that is not our lifeblood in this chamber. Is there something wrong with politics? I think there is something good about politics. Part of the practice of politics is to accept responsibility whether you are on the government or the opposition side. That was the point I was making. Last session I was not impressed with the attitude of the opposition.

The bill we have before us has adopted our proposal, with some modifications which do not necessarily improve the bill. The name has been changed around and a few other matters have been dealt with, put the general purpose, as I see it, is pretty much what we had in mind when we first put the proposition before the House of Commons. We may want to examine the bill as we go through it now to see whether unnecessary additions have been made to some of its clauses. Our hope when we introduced this measure was that the economic progress of Canada would be benefited by setting up a council which would advise the government of the day as to progress that might be made in various sections of our country, and assistance that might be given in order to improve economic conditions. There is a very wide field of activity essential here, and this council, I presume, would be of very considerable assistance to other departments of government, particularly to the Department of Industry which was recently established. In fact, the danger may be that there will be overlapping of functions and duplication of tasks with a Department of Industry and an economic council; but only time will tell whether or not that will happen, and we will have to hope that the good sense of the government will be in evidence and that overlapping will not occur.

My introductory remarks, Mr. Chairman, have served, I think, to let the committee find its place with regard to this bill and give consideration to a matter which is of very considerable importance. We are taking the position that the economic council of Canada should be supported, and we may have certain suggestions to make as we work our way through the bill clause by clause.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, when we were discussing the second reading of this bill I put some questions to the minister which I do not believe were answered. Perhaps he would permit me to put them again in general terms. On second reading of the bill I said that we felt the bill was a combination of a piece of legislation which is already on the books and the proposed bill that the government introduced last year in connection with the establishment of a board. What I said at the time was that the only difference between the two pieces of legislation which the Conservative government had brought forward and this piece of legislation was in the objects of the bill, mostly as set out in clauses 9 and

10. I said then that our great fear was, in view of what the minister had said as to the theoretical approach that might be taken to this legislation, that the ideas of planning might be more compulsive than necessary, and that we should like to have some assurance from the minister that, while the bill was very broad in its terms, caution would be observed in proceeding with it. I said at the time that what we feared most was a proliferation of government forms to be filled out by both small and private business; more and more interference with private business, especially small businesses.

Before proceeding further, perhaps the minister at this point would give us some assurance that so far as possible the bill will not be an excuse for an advanced series of planning measures requiring the co-operation of business in making more returns and more investigations into their business; in suggesting things that they ought to do without the consent of such businesses. I should like to place this before the minister now. We feel that planning has its place, and a very important place, in the business world; but we also feel that at this time, when business is making an effort to recover and to produce more and obtain access to export markets we should not unduly burden it with non-productive work or the proliferation of office work. I feel that to a large extent business wants to be left alone, and that the planning involved in this measure should proceed with as little interference with production as possible.

These are the points I asked the minister to clarify for us. I might say that some of us on this side of the house feel that the minister perhaps moves a little too fast, or is moving a little too fast, in his ideas, and that he may be more theoretical in his approach than practical—and I do not say that unkindly. But our fear is that he may bring into this bill a series of planning measures that will not be useful at this particular time in our economic progress. If the minister would like to comment on this matter I would appreciate it.

Mr. Lamontagne: Well, Mr. Chairman, my comment will be very brief. I can assure the hon. member that the council is not designed to interfere with small business and that it has no compulsory powers, so that the kind of interference the hon. member may fear will not I am sure become a reality.

(Translation):

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, the other day, the minister presented his bill and, needless to say, took that opportunity to make an authoritative speech which has some fine points, I will admit. But I was surprised to hear him say that the measure meant the setting up of a planned system in Canada. In other words, under this bill, the country is subjected to planning. Consequently, I ask the minister to give us more details and, in particular, to let us know in a few well chosen words—he is very good at it—the elements of planning he is considering for Canada. He should not limit himself to generalities and tell us that it is a kind of planning meant to stimulate, to indicate, in short, that is not binding. He should give us the details, the elements of that plan, because I believe that the members of the committee want to know what it is.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I just want to say that I thought the remarks of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) most interesting, more particularly in view of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) inviting him the other night to give us a fuller explanation of the philosophy on which the government has based its planning.

And, with regard to this matter, I wonder if the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) and the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) recall certain words of the minister. I apologize, Mr. Chairman, for a slight impingement on the rules by quoting certain words which the minister used when discussing the motion for second reading. According to page 2087 of Hansard, he said:

> To overcome our present difficulties, we need new policies, applied in a new spirit and within new administrative structures. In other words, we need a plan so that the various aspects of the economic policy will be well co-ordinated and so that the private sector can work in the same direction as the government towards the common objective of harmonious growth.

Mr. Chairman, I think that those fine words aim at full planning, and that this is only an effort on the part of the minister to tell us that the aim and philosophy of the economic council are complete planning in the public or private sectors.

I believe no one could infer anything else from these remarks.

(Text):

I was also referring to certain statements made by the minister the other day. There was some indication he felt the private sector of the economy had been deficient. We wonder how he felt we might be able to cure these so-called economic ills which, he says, came about because of stagnation in the private sector. Is there to be an artificial stimulation of the private sector or is it through the stimulation of the public sector that we hope to bring about a reinvigoration of the economy? Is it perhaps, by a combination of both? I think the answers to these points would be most constructive and it is most important we should get some clarification with regard to this. In the light of some of the philosophy which has permeated the Liberal party in the last couple of years and which has been evident in the speeches of Liberal party spokesmen old and new, but chiefly new, it seems we are entering upon an era of the planned economy. This is something I want to know: are we to have planning and, if we are to have planning, how is the government to guarantee the efficacy of the planning unless there is an effective degree of control? I am sure all hon. members will agree that controls breed controls, and if there is anything which is debilitating to the economy it is control and supercontrol. These are matters in which both businessmen and private individuals are deeply concerned. They are concerned at the direction which policies have tended to take and they have been interested in certain legislation which has been proposed, including provision for an economic council. I think we could perhaps have some light thrown by the minister on the future of this council.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): While it is true that we in the opposition may have reservations about certain particulars in this bill, while we may feel there are provisions contained in it which are not sufficiently precise and which do not indicate how far the government is prepared to go in implementing the recommendations of the economic council, I think we are nevertheless encouraged by the fact that the government is prepared to create an economic council for Canada.

If the policies of the last two months to which we have been exposed in this house are any indication of the government's ability to govern this country in the absence of advice, then we look forward to the creation of a council which may provide hon. gentlemen opposite with an opportunity to accept advice enabling them to avoid some of the errors of the past ten weeks or so. We have in the course of this very evening considered certain government policies whose implementation can only have the effect of diminishing growth and retarding progress. In this bill, on the other hand, we find that if this economic council is created as outlined it will be entrusted with responsibility for advising, recommending, studying, exploring, encouraging, fostering, promoting and so on. All these tasks are being given to the council to do so as to encourage the government to find out what its responsibility is to the people of Canada and to the growth of the Canadian economy. On the face of the performance of the government since this session began this is essential because when one considers that as a consequence of policies so far announced it is conceivable that major developments in the province of British Columbia and, by projection, in other provinces throughout Canada could be retarded, it becomes clear that this government requires the assistance of recommendations, inquiries and so on by qualified people.

We do not know, of course, at this moment who the government intends to appoint to provide this assistance and advice. In order to know how effective this economic council may be, we shall have to be given some idea of the people who are to provide this advice to the government, and what their qualifications are. At the moment it is probably incumbent on us to be reasonably hopeful—to be encouraged by the fact that the government has taken up an idea from the former administration and is prepared to create a council to advise, to encourage, to promote and to study. We shall not argue with these objectives. At the same time we might ask: will the government pay any attention to this advice? On the basis of what we have seen so far, is it to be expected that this council will have any effect on policy? Will it, in fact, be able to persuade the government, on the basis of its studies, that there is a necessity in Canada for a fresh approach to the problems which confront us?

The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka spoke of the undesirability of imposing on businessmen small or large the necessity of filling out more forms and questionnaires most of which do not seem destined to serve any practical purpose. Most hon. members are aware from their own experience or from the experience of others that in relation to one branch of government alone, the dominion bureau of statistics, a great many merchants and businessmen of one kind or another are required to devote a substantial part of the annual cost of their operations to filling out forms to provide information which apparently it never used or, even after it is assembled for use, is not comprehended. There are a great many businessmen in this country who are sympathetic to the idea of the government acquiring information on which to base policy, which would make it possible for them to thrive and prosper. But when they find that a substantial part of their time is devoted to doing the bookkeeping for the government, resulting in the services of many of their staff being effectively removed, they tend to question the efficacy of the type of legislation we have before us at this moment.

The idea of an economic council drawing upon the best advice that business and the professions in every phase of our economy can provide is a sound idea, but I think we also need some assurance that if we do draw on this experience, if we do draw upon the competence of qualified men from every segment of the Canadian economy, when they make recommendations they will be heeded, for if they are not this is an exercise in futility. I do not wish to unduly emphasize this, but if we go back to the business that has been under discussion in the house earlier tonight and the business that has been done in the house over the past two months we must realize that the present government has taken advice from no one who understood what policies are essential to the development of the economy of Canada. If they had taken such advice they would surely never have introduced some of the policies, either budgetary or legislative, that have been brought into the house in the last two months.

I can only say, Mr. Chairman, that this idea is a good idea in essence. Potentially it is an excellent idea, but if it is only a measure brought in here to keep the people quiet, to make it appear as though something is being done, then the people of Canada are going to be misled and further disillusioned, for I believe there is a great deal of disillusionment in the country now. We must avoid creating another government body whose function is to do nothing but advise and be ignored.

Therefore we will need assurance from the minister that when the council is created, not only will it be given the authority to assemble all of the information, to bring together all of its strength and its resources and the benefit of all its wisdom but that having done that, having evolved ideas that can assist the government in creating policies for the development of Canada, its recommendations —for only the government can take the responsibility for policy—will be heeded, and that the government will not legislate for the country as it has done during the past two months.

(Translation):

Mr. Beaule: Mr. Chairman, we now have before us Bill C-72, an act to provide for the establishment of an economic council of Canada. I hope that the purpose of this council is not to give rewards to those people who have served the party well, but on the contrary, that it will find solutions to stimulate our economy.

[Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke).]

Mr. Chairman, I think that our first task is to restore our own confidence in our country and to decide what part we want to play in this rapidly changing world. Our country still possesses the same tremendous resources and the same people, while offering even greater possibilities than ten years ago, when its reputation was at its best, when we looked at the future with confidence and when the whole world considered us as the country which offered the best hopes and promises.

It is worth while trying to find out why confidence in Canada has declined. The main reason of the present lack of confidence in our country is the fact that we have failed to choose a formal and clear policy in the field of trade. The reason for this concern is of course that Canadians, as most other people, take an intelligent interest in their own financial affairs.

It may be that the reason for this lack of a well-defined economic policy lies in the fact that such a policy requires nowadays that difficult options be made concerning trade in a rapidly changing world and that those alternatives require necessarily that decisions be taken which might cause discomfort in some fields, in some industries and would inevitably require that sacrifices be made in the interest of the general economy. Many disappointments face the ambitious persons who are not ready to make sacrifices. The true freedom is to make a choice and not simply to have a choice to make.

Mr. Chairman, we can no longer be satisfied with making mere distinctions between primary and secondary industry or between domestic and export industries. They are all interdependent. In most cases, the same company manufactures products to sell in Canada or outside and could not, therefore, without undergoing grave strains argue some day in favour of a freer trade for export products and try the next day to obtain more protection for its Canadian markets. Our industry provides a good example of that situation.

We have an important part to play in our economy. Should we fail to play that part, to take position on the important questions of today, in that case, if things went worse, we should have no one to blame but ourselves if, later on, the decisions made were not to our liking; and even if everything worked out for the best, our national effort would be weakened by the indecision and the silence of the businessmen. It is imperative that there be some communication between the public and the private sectors but the voice of business on important questions has too often been confused and weak.

Mr. Chairman, the minister said that he wanted a planned economy. The word "planning" nowadays has a strong emotional connotation. It is being used indiscriminately and brings about violent reactions, which are either favourable or unfavourable.

The concept of national economic planning seems to have gained much more with us. But we are still very evasive when it comes to giving an exact definition of what we really mean by economic planning.

Is there one successful company without planning? We must reckon with the human element and individual freedom to decide what should be done to serve a company's best interests. The second prerequisite is to define a company's objectives. A man gives his best when he has been assigned definite objectives, knowing that he is free to attain them on his own initiative.

Both conditions are important. If you set objectives and limit the freedom of the individual trying to attain them, in general, he will never succeed. On the other hand, if he is given full freedom of action without any definite objectives, you will have confusion.

Both conditions are also necessary on a national scale. The objectives must be well defined. In other words, we have to do some planning; all sectors of our economy, that is, industry, labour, agriculture, etc., must be left free to experiment and choose with a view to attaining the national objectives. Such planning on a national scale is not synonymous with socialism and does not mean that the state must take over and control our economy. As a matter of fact, socialism, in its strictest meaning, carries the germ of its own defeat and not only on the theoretical level, because we think that it entails an inferior way of life, but on the level of practical achievement, since an economy where administration is too centralized and controlled will be less successful, produce less and will be less efficient than the one where the individual is left free to choose and make his own decisions.

But personal initiative has little chance to give the best results on a national scale unless objectives are clearly set out. And such national objectives can only be established when the government has clearly defined and explained them and shown their benefits, after having consulted all economic groups.

We are today facing a serious problem of surplus capacity which, for several years, will cause serious difficulties in the marketing field. During those years, we should be able to rely on a national policy ensuring a freer and easier access to world market for our products, on a fiscal policy enabling us to maintain employment, to improve our equipment and productivity and, lastly on a transportation policy which will permit us to compete in Canada and abroad.

Finally, we must, because of the size of our industry, establish and publicize our objectives five to ten years ahead, so that the government, as well as industry and labour, can take the necessary steps to reach this goal.

Mr. Chairman, it is to be hoped that when the minister is talking of economic planning, these are the directives which he intends to give to the economic council. But I doubt that the economic council will reach its objectives, because the minister has not provided in the bill for the necessary financial reforms, in order to make the responsibilities of the Bank of Canada more flexible, to increase the purchasing power, in brief to achieve the production level which would make financially possible what is physically desirable in Canada.

(Text):

Mr. Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause agreed to.

The Chairman: Clause 2?

Mr. Churchill: No, we shall stop there. It is 10.30.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, before I say anything about the business for tomorrow, I want to express appreciation of the co-operation in getting this extra half hour and getting a start on this other bill. I did raise a question with my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre about sitting tomorrow evening. I gather that would be inconvenient, but I wondered about the possibility of perhaps sitting until seven o'clock, which might not inconvenience members unduly and might make the difference between getting through and not getting through.

Business of the House

Mr. Churchill: I regret that it would be inconvenient to sit tomorrow night. I have an alternative proposal which we might confirm after each party has a caucus tomorrow. We would give consideration to extending the hours even further on Thursday, and really extending them on Friday to see if we could not wind up this week. I am not making any commitment at this stage, but I am prepared to discuss that with my colleagues, and later tomorrow confer on this proposal.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can assure hon. members on the other side of the house that I believe I can speak for everyone on this side of the house when I say we are willing to sit whatever hours hon. gentlemen on the other side are willing to sit this week, with a view to completing the work of this part of the session before the end of the week. If hon. members would consult in caucus and let me know after the caucuses tomorrow, I would be glad to make the necessary proposal tomorrow to the house.

Mr. Thompson: I believe that all members in this house are interested in getting through the work which is before us as quickly as possible. I can assure the house leader that we will discuss this tomorrow morning, but I can say now that we will join in any general agreement to extend the hours in order that we can get through the work as quickly as possible.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps the four of us who deal with these matters might meet for a few minutes when the house rises so we will know what it is we are going to discuss in our caucus meetings tomorrow morning.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is a very good idea.

Mr. Churchill: I hope, with all this preparatory work, the house leader will not add another item to the business he has already proposed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am happy to say that I can subtract one because we got through the bridge bill today. Tomorrow we will complete, I hope, the excise tax bill. Then, we will go back to the economic council bill which we have been discussing. Then, after that, we hope to start and perhaps complete second reading at least of the municipal development loan bill.

Mr. Churchill: That is enough for Wednesday.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, that is enough for Wednesday. I perhaps might indicate we will continue on Thursday with the same order I outlined, the municipal loan bill and then the surcharge order. Unless I am mistaken, the only other thing is interim supply. However, I must enter the same caveat as I entered last night, about which the Prime Minister will make a statement tomorrow.

Mr. Thompson: I wonder if I might ask the house leader a question concerning the business for tomorrow? Would it inconvenience his plans too much if we went on with the economic council measure tomorrow after orders of the day in order that we might carry through with what we have been talking about tonight?

Mr. Pickersgill: I must say that if that would meet the wishes of the members of the house, and I take it there is nothing more in the committee stage of the tax bill except the one amendment that is under consideration, and if it is felt the continuity would be better if we took the economic council first, the government would not mind at all.

Mr. Churchill: You cannot get exact continuity because first, you have the interruption tonight, then questions on orders of the day, and so on. Let us finish off the excise tax bill first and take things in the order the house leader has suggested.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps it could be clearly understood that we could go right on with the excise tax bill for third reading after the committee stage?

Mr. Churchill: Not necessarily; I do not think you should have third reading when there is an amended bill.

Mr. Knowles: I think we had better have the meeting.

Mr. Pickersgill: Perhaps I had better stick to the order of business I announced at the beginning. I want to thank the hon. member for Red Deer for his co-operation.

It being twenty two minutes before eleven o'clock, the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, July 31, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, July 31, 1963

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Wilfred Judson, judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 31st July, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF PAY INCREASES FOR CERTAIN STAFF MEMBERS

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday an inquiry was directed to the Minister of Finance concerning pay increases for certain employees of the House of Commons who are ordinarily referred to as group D employees. May I be permitted to inform the house that the commissioners of internal economy have approved pay increases for these employees in line with the increases authorized for group D employees of the public service.

For the information of hon. members perhaps I might, by leave, table lists in English and in French covering the salary revisions.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask the Minister of Finance whether he can tell the house the effective date of the increases in pay for House of Commons employees, to which Mr. Speaker made reference?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): October 1, 1962.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

Sixth report of standing committee on banking and commerce—Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace).

BANKRUPTCY ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ADMINISTRATION OF SMALL ESTATES

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-2 (from the Senate), to amend the Bankruptcy Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the following questions are being answered today: 631, 795, 827, 832, 884, 891, 915, 928, 942, 943, 954, 959, 963, 969, 972, 987, 991, 994, 995, 996, 997, 1,034, 1,045, 1,050, 1,052, 1,053, 1,061, 1,069, 1,072, 1,076, 1,077, 1,091, 1,092, 1,093, 1,106, 1,112, 1,113, 1,114, 1,117, 1,125, 1,127, 1,128, 1,132, 1,137. If question No. 454 could be made an order for return the return would be tabled immediately. I would also ask that question 1,111 be made an order for return. If Your Honour would be good enough to call starred questions Nos. 1,080, 1,124 and 1,138, I would ask that the remaining questions stand.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if I may speak to this matter, there are quite a number of questions the answers to which are falling far behind. I can understand that some of these questions are difficult to answer, but it would be most helpful if it could be done even though the number may be great. Question No. 832 standing in the name of the hon. member for Oxford reads as follows:

How many letters or telegrams have been received by the Prime Minister in criticism of the imposition of the 11 per cent sales tax on (a) building materials (b) production machinery?

Question No. 833 requests similar information of the Minister of Finance. That is information that should be readily available, however numerous these letters and telegrams might be. Then there is question No. 477, which has been on the order paper since June 13. This is one about which there should be no difficulty in answering because it relates to the number of the present ministers of the crown who were employees of the federal public service.

Furthermore, I feel it would be most helpful if most of the remainder of these questions could be cleaned up now. I know what difficulties the printing bureau have and when, day after day, 50 or 100 questions are simply put over until another day, this imposes an extra burden upon the printing service.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not think I can allow the right hon. gentleman's observations to pass without a comment. In so far as the first two questions to which he referred are concerned, I suppose it is a matter of the utmost public interest that the number of telegrams received should be communicated to the house. I will ask the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance if they could not have them counted.

As for the record generally, I suggest that the number of questions that have been answered, in relation to the total volume of written questions in this session, will compare favourably with any other session in the last quarter of a century.

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I support the observations just made by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), more particularly concerning other questions which have been on the order paper since June 13 last and to which it would be relatively easy to give an answer.

I wonder whether the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) could explain why the replies to those questions are delayed when some of them involve information quite easy to obtain. For instance, I notice that question No. 508—and there are several in the same class—deals with the number of deputy ministers in the Post Office Department. Well, I am convinced that there are not so many. I think the Secretary of State would prove his good faith by answering questions to which answers can be easily provided.

I think that those questions have been on the order paper long enough and that the members who asked them are entitled to answers. I therefore would ask the Secretary of State to explain why the government delays the answers.

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: I explained to the hon. gentleman before, and I should like to explain to him again, that the government has been giving very careful consideration to the most satisfactory means of providing the information that I think is honestly and rightly desired. However, the actual form of the questions makes the compilation of the information somewhat difficult, and I had planned, even before the hon. gentleman raised his point, to ask the hon. gentleman if I could have a little time to discuss these questions with him and perhaps with one or two of his colleagues this afternoon. I should like very much, and I know the government would like very much, to give satisfactory answers to these questions before we adjourn. If I could see the hon. gentleman I would be only too happy to discuss the problem with him.

Mr. Gregoire: We will accept that, and even if we do not have answers to all these questions we will be satisfied.

Mr. Valade: I should like to say a word on that point. My question No. 477 is quite different from the one that was contemplated by the Secretary of State. I am sure he knows his colleagues and, since my question has been standing for a month and a half, I think I should get an answer from him. I would be surprised if the hon. gentleman does not know his own colleagues.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, if the hon. gentleman would get the Parliamentary Guide and spend half an hour studying it, he could probably find the answers himself.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give consent to questions 454 and 1,111 being made orders for returns?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. While the Secretary of State is working in an effort to clear up answers to written questions would he also hasten the provision of returns to orders for the production of papers, so that as many as possible might be made before we adjourn?

Mr. Pickersgill: They are being hastened, and I think the proportion of returns will be found to be as high as it has ever been.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): The question I wanted to ask was this. Following the course the hon. gentleman always adopted when he was on this side of the house, I wish to ask him if he will table tomorrow a list of the orders for returns which have been asked for and have not been made, and indicating when these returns may be brought down.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be able to give the same kind of return that was given by the right hon. gentleman's colleague when it was asked for by me, and I will give it tomorrow. However, I shall not attempt to prophesy when the returns will be made.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It will be full and comprehensive.

Mr. Pickersgill: It will be complete.

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

SPECIAL ASSISTANT TO POSTMASTER GENERAL

Question No. 631—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the Postmaster General taken an executive assistant or a special assistant on staff and, if so, what is this person's name, age, place of birth, institutions of education and educational qualifications, governmental or business experience (position held, length of experience, name of firm) and initial and present salary with the government?

2. What length of time has this assistant undertaken to serve the Postmaster General and/or what engagement in length of time was given to the assistant by the minister?

3. In brief, what particular qualities of this assistant led the Postmaster General to engage him?

Mr. Denis: 1. Yes—executive assistant. Gaston Clermont, 49, born at L'Abord-à-Plouffe, P.Q., now Chomedey. He attended elementary school at L'Abord-à-Plouffe and high school at the Académie Dujarié, Cartierville, Montreal. His post high school training was in finance and commerce.

Business experience—ten years with the Provincial Bank of Canada; five years with the Singer Manufacturing Company, Thurso, P.Q., in the personnel and accounting departments; fifteen years with the Thurso Lumber and Planing Mills as manager and subsequently secretary treasurer.

Elected to the House of Commons as member for the constituency of Labelle at the by-election, October 31, 1960, and re-elected at the general election, June 18, 1962.

Initial salary—$9,000.

Present salary—$9,000.

2. Full time and at the pleasure of the Postmaster General.

3. Full confidence in this person in every regard.

WORKING CONDITIONS ON D.E.W. LINE

Question No. 795—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Has the Federal Electric Corporation recently presented to employees working on the D.E.W. line a contract which includes a pay cut and an increase in the hours worked per week, plus a one seventh increase in work load due to a one seventh cut in technician training?

2. Are American technicians on the D.E.W. line paid a higher weekly rate than Canadian technicians doing exactly the same job, and, if so, what is the difference in the rate?

3. Are workers given a 24 hour period between shifts in lieu of a full day off per week?

4. Have any workers been dismissed because they refused to accept the new contract and, if so (a) were they shipped out by D.O.T. planes (b) how much notice was given to such workers?

5. Under the contract offered to the workers, must they work 12 hours a day, seven days a week, for an indefinite period of time at no extra pay; and have any workers who protested these terms been dismissed?

6. Has the Department of Labour approved the new rates of pay and, if so, when did they give such approval?

Questions

7. Is there an agreement between the Federal Electric Corporation and the Canadian government that 80 per cent of the personnel on the D.E.W. line should be Canadian and, if so, has this agreement been lived up to?

8. On April 1, May 1, and June 1 of this year, what percentage of the workers were Canadian?

9. At the present time, is the Federal Electric Corporation bringing personnel from Great Britain and Ireland to work on the D.E.W. line and, if so, are the rates of pay to them lower than those presently being paid?

Answer: 1. Federal Electric Corporation served notices of termination, effective June 30, 1963, of all individual contracts for services held with employees on the D.E.W. line and offered new contracts of employment at downgraded rates of pay, with no change in the hours of work. No information is available concerning work load.

2. Certain United States employees such as crypto radicians are paid higher rates than Canadian radicians. Security arrangements require the use of U.S. citizens on cryptograph instruments. No information is available as to the difference in rate of pay at the present time.

3. No information available.

4. No information available as to dismissals. Workers are transported by contract planes, not D.O.T. planes.

5. Contract offer was rescinded by Federal Electric.

6. Yes, the presently existing rates were approved on June 24, 1963.

7. The exchange of notes between Canada and the U.S. requires that preference be given to qualified Canadian labour, and that the entry of United States personnel shall be in accordance with Canadian customs and immigration procedures.

8. Ninety seven per cent of total employees on the Canadian sector of the D.E.W. line were Canadian citizens as at April 20, 1963. No such information available with respect to the dates of April 1, May 1 and June 1.

9. Federal Electric Corporation has denied that it is bringing personnel from Great Britain and Ireland to work on the Canadian sector of the D.E.W. line.

C.N.R. RENTAL OF ROLLING STOCK

Question No. 827—Mr. MacEwan:

1. How many units of railway rolling stock, including gondolas, hoppers, box cars, and so forth, are being operated by the Canadian National Railway in Canada on a rental basis from United States companies?

2. What is the breakdown in numbers of the various types of unit?

3. How many units are being used in the Atlantic provinces?

4. What is the breakdown in numbers of the various types of unit?

Questions

5. What types of materials or products are being transported by the units in the Atlantic provinces?

Mr. McIlraith: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1 and 2. Canadian National has under lease certain units of equipment primarily for test purposes such as newly designed mechanical refrigerators, hydro frame cushion box cars and tri-levels.

3 and 4. These cars are not specifically assigned to the Atlantic region but in the normal course of carriage of traffic they could be used in that area.

5. Automobiles and products requiring refrigeration in transit.

PROTESTS AGAINST SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

Question No. 832—Mr. Nesbitt:

How many letters or telegrams have been received by the Prime Minister in criticism of the imposition of the 11 per cent sales tax on (a) building materials (b) production machinery?

Answer: (a) 603; (b) 60; 108 communications were also received mentioning both building materials and production machinery.

AMALGAMATION OF ARMED FORCES UNITS

Question No. 884—Mr. Douglas:

1. What corps or units of one of the armed services have been unified or amalgamated with corps or units of other of the armed services since January 1, 1946?

2. Have either or both the medical corps and the chaplain corps of the three services been unified or amalgamated and, if so, (a) when (b) what was the establishment by ranks before and after amalgamation (c) what was the cost of providing (i) medical services (ii) chaplaincy services, in the last full fiscal year before unification, and in the first full fiscal year after unification?

Answer: 1 and 2. The medical branches of the armed forces were unified as the Canadian forces medical service in January 1959, and the chaplain services were integrated at headquarters in September 1958 and at command level in December 1959. Establishment by ranks before and after amalgamation is as follows:

Ranks (Equivalent)	Medical Establishments Prior To Unification 15 Jan 59					Canadian Forces Medical Service Establishment
	Navy	Army	Air	Special List	Total	1959-60
Major General	—	—	—	1	1	1
Brigadier	1	1	1	—	3	3
Colonel	3	8	5	3	19	19
Lt Colonel	9	34	26	1	70	68
Major	40	98	71	—	209	210
Captain	72	180	149	—	401	399
Lieutenant	83	228	236	—	547	546
W01	10	17	4	—	31	30
W02	20	40	11	—	71	70
S/Sgt	65	63	34	—	162	162
Sgt	84	245	131	—	460	452
Cpl	66	498	229	—	793	787
Pte	132	681	375	—	1,188	1,179
Total	585	2,093	1,272	5	3,955	3,926

Chaplains
Before	Rank	After
198	Class 2	201
45	Class 3	44
24	Class 4	20
6	Class 5	6
0	Class 6	2
273		273

The cost of providing chaplaincy services including pay and allowances, travelling and removal expenses, medical expenses and the government's contribution to the pension fund in 1957-58 was $1,999,805 and in 1959-60 $1,967,997. The cost of providing medical services including pay and allowances, travelling and removal expenses, medical expenses, civilian consultants, medical supplies, operation and maintenance costs can only be provided on an estimated basis as it is difficult to break down the actual cost data of personnel salaries for other than medical personnel, building maintenance, and other operation and maintenance costs, which can be related to the provision of medical services.

[Mr. MacEwan.]

However, it has been estimated that in 1957-58, these were $35,233,200 and in 1959-60 $34,973,900.

MINISTERS OF AGRICULTURE SINCE CONFEDERATION

Question No. 891—Mr. Gauthier:

1. How many Anglo-Canadian ministers of agriculture were there since confederation?
2. How many French-Canadian ministers of agriculture were there since confederation?

Mr. Hays: The following have held the portfolio of minister of agriculture since confederation:

Name	Constituency represented
Chapais, Hon. J. C.	Champlain (Quebec)
Dunkin, Hon. C.	Brome (Quebec)
Pope, Hon. J. H.	Compton (Quebec)
Letellier de St. Just, Hon. L.	(Senator),
Pelletier, Hon. Sir C. A. P.	Kamouraska (Quebec)
Carling, Hon. Sir J.	London (Ontario)
Angers, Hon. Sir A. R.	La Valliere (Quebec)
Montague, Hon. W. H.	Haldimand (Ontario)
Fisher, Hon. S. A.	Brome (Quebec)
Burrell, Hon. M.	Yale-Cariboo (British Columbia)
Crerar, Hon. T. A.	Marquette (Manitoba)
Tolmie, Hon. S. F.	Victoria City (British Columbia)
Motherwell, Hon. W. R.	Melville (Saskatchewan)
Weir, Hon. R.	Melfort (Saskatchewan)
Gardiner, Rt. Hon. J. G.	Melville (Saskatchewan)
Harkness, Hon. D. S.	Calgary North (Alberta)
Hamilton, Hon. A.	Qu'Appelle (Saskatchewan)
Hays, Hon. H. W.	Calgary South (Alberta).

RENTAL OF LAND, FORT ST. JOHN INDIAN AGENCY

Question No. 915—Mr. Howard:

1. Since January 1, 1962, has any land on or near Indian reserve No. 204 which is at or near a place called Moïc Flats in the Fort St. John Indian agency, been rented and, if so, to whom, at what rent, and for what period of time?
2. Was this rental discussed with the Indians involved and, if so, by whom, when, what decision was made by the Indians, and when was it made?
3. Was any public advertising engaged in regarding the proposed rental and, if so, what was the nature and text of the advertising, the names and addresses of the publications or other media which carried it, and the dates on which such an advertisement appeared?
4. Were any answers received as a result of the said advertising and, if so, what are the names and addresses of each person who so answered, the date of each answer, and the details of each reply?

Questions

5. Were any queries or proposals to rent received, other than those mentioned in part 4 hereof, in any way regarding the proposed rental and, if so, what are the names and addresses of the persons who so queried or proposed, the date of each answer, and the details of each such query or proposal.

Mr. Munro: 1. Yes. The whole of Beaton river Indian reserve No. 204 was rented to Joseph Hetman, P.O. Box 17, North Pine, B.C., for grazing purposes for a term of 5 years from April 1, 1962, at an annual rental of $95.

2. The renting of the land was approved by the council of the Beaver band of Indians by resolution dated February 16, 1962, and the lease to Mr. Hetman was approved by council resolution dated August 27, 1962.

3. Yes. The following invitation to tender was distributed to post offices in the area: "NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC

Tenders will be received by the undersigned at his office, federal building, Fort St. John, until 12 o'clock noon on February 28th, 1962, for the lease for grazing purposes of Beaton river Indian reserve No. 204, situated in township 115, range 18 west of the 6th meridian, and containing 883 acres.

The lease will be for a period of five years, renewable at the option of the Indian owners for further periods.

The lessee will undertake to fence with suitable material the perimeter of the said reserve.

The tenderer will state the price in one lump sum for the annual rent he offers to pay for this reserve, the said rent to be payable in advance each year.

E. J. Galibois,
Superintendent,
Fort St. John Indian Agency"
6th February 1962

4. Yes. Joseph Hetman, P.O. Box 17, North Pine, B.C., by letter dated February 6, 1962, offering an annual rental of $95.

5. There is no record of any queries or proposals received other than that mentioned in part 4 above.

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING PENSION SCHEMES

Question No. 928—Mr. Korchinski:

1. Have any discussions been held with the provinces in connection with the proposed contributory pension plan?
2. Have any discussions been held with companies or firms that already have pension schemes?
3. Have any discussions been held with any insurance companies in connection with the proposed contributory pension schemes?

Miss LaMarsh: 1. The nature and scope of the Canada pension plan were made known to the House of Commons during the discussion of the resolution on July 18, and this information formed the basis of discussions with the provinces at the federal-provincial conference on July 26 and 27.

2. No detailed discussions have been held, but study has been given to the effect and the relationship of the Canada pension plan to different types of private pension plans. This relates not only to private pension schemes in general but to pension schemes operated by crown corporations in particular.

3. Yes, representatives of life insurance companies have discussed their views with the government.

FOREIGN UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

Question No. 942—Mr. Brewin:

1. How many foreign students admitted to Canadian universities as non-immigrants have applied for admission to Canada?
2. How many have been granted admission to Canada, and what is the national origin of those who have been granted admission?
3. What is the national origin of the students who have applied and have been refused permanent admission to Canada?

Mr. Munro: 1, 2 and 3.

As the statistics maintained by the immigration branch do not distinguish between students who have been granted landed immigrant status and other persons who have been admitted to Canada as immigrants, it is not possible to answer the question.

FERRY "BLUENOSE"—SERVICING AT BAR HARBOUR

Question No. 943—Mr. Fisher:

1. What is the schedule of the C.N. ferry Bluenose into Bar Harbor?
2. Does the ferry fuel and take on other supplies at Bar Harbor and, if so, what advantages has Bar Harbor over Yarmouth for this servicing?
3. Has the C.N. received representations on this matter of supplying the Bluenose at Bar Harbor and, if so, from whom, and when?

Mr. McIlraith: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Summer, daily (June 15-September 16, 1963, inclusive).

Leave Bar Harbor 8 a.m. eastern time, arrive Yarmouth 3 p.m. Atlantic time.

Leave Yarmouth 4.30 p.m. Atlantic time, arrive Bar Harbor 9.30 p.m. eastern time.

Winter, tri-weekly (September 17, 1963 to mid June, 1964) Tuesday, Thursday, Saturday.

Leave Bar Harbor 8 a.m. eastern time, arrive Yarmouth 3.30 p.m. Atlantic time, Monday, Wednesday, Friday.

Leave Yarmouth 9 a.m. Atlantic time, arrive Bar Harbor 2.30 p.m. eastern time.

(Times shown are local, daylight or standard, whichever is in effect).

To permit ticketing, customs and immigration inspection, acceptance of passengers and automobiles, time of embarkation begins 2 hours before sailing time. Advance reservations are necessary.

2. All supplies are taken at Yarmouth with the exception of fuel and lubricating oil.

3. No.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

CAMP IPPERWASH, ONT.

Question No. 954—Mr. McCutcheon:

1. What are the current plans of the government for utilization of facilities at Camp Ipperwash, Ontario?
2. If it is to be reactivated, to what degree in relationship to its former status?

Answer: 1. Current plans for Camp Ipperwash are based on a continuing use of its facilities by the Canadian army (regular), Canadian army (militia) and the Royal Canadian Army cadets. The facilities are also used, from time to time, by elements of the Royal Canadian Air Force, Royal Canadian Mounted Police, Ontario provincial rifle association and the Ontario provincial police.

2. The future use of Camp Ipperwash is under study.

C.N.R. TRACK MAINTENANCE, MARITIME AREA

Question No. 959—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Does the management of the Canadian National Railways propose to inaugurate a new system of track maintenance in the maritime area on August 1, 1963?
2. What will be the reduction in the track maintenance employee force in the whole area?
3. What will be the reduction in the track maintenance employee force for (a) Hopewell subdivision and (b) Sydney subdivision?
4. What provisions are being made for continued employment of the maintenance men who will be displaced?
5. As a result of the proposed changes, will it be necessary for personnel affected to change their place of residence?

Mr. McIlraith: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. No.

2. to 5. Not applicable.

COMPETITION 63-PTAH-58, TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT

Question No. 963—Mr. Fisher:

1. How many applications were received by the civil service commission and/or the Department of Transport for competition No. 63-PTAH-58 for the position of principal clerk (secretary to assistant deputy minister, air)?
2. When did it become necessary for the incumbent of this position to possess the ability to speak, read and write both English and French fluently to fulfil the required duties?
3. Why was a decision made to make this position bilingual, and who made this decision?
4. Is this so-called bilingual requirement to take dictation in French necessary for official or semi-official correspondence, or both, and if so, what percentage of time is required for taking dictation in French of official or semi-official correspondence, and its translation?

5. Is this so-called bilingual requirement to take dictation in French necessary for personal correspondence and, if so, what percentage of time is required for taking dictation in French of personal correspondence and its translation?

6. What percentage of time, if any, will the incumbent spend in (a) speaking French (b) reading French (c) writing French in this position, and with whom will French be spoken?

7. Do the duties of the position of clerk IV in the office of the assistant deputy minister, air, presently include taking dictation from this official and, if so, is it the intention that the position now be down-graded to a clerk II, or a clerk III, to compensate for the reduction of duties?

8. Which is considered to be the more important in this position (a) knowledge of work, efficiency, initiative and experience or (b) knowledge of French, and will this factor in itself be the overriding one in the filling of this position?

9. Are the services of the French section of the translation bureau no longer satisfactory for the translation of (a) official or semi-official correspondence or (b) personal correspondence, and if so, will there be a corresponding reduction in the staff of the French translation services of the translation bureau?

Mr. McIlraith: Parts 1 to 9: The qualifications for this position, for which nine applications were received, have been established on a bilingual basis because of the general desirability in a large administrative department such as transport for bilingual clerical staff to assist senior administrative officers in view of extensive contacts with persons using both languages. The requirement is related to official needs and does not involve any downgrading of other positions or major changes in regard to use of the services of the translation bureau.

The qualifications for the position were approved by the civil service commission in accordance with its statutory requirements.

TRIP TO HONG KONG BY FORMER AGRICULTURE MINISTER

Question No. 969—Mr. Knowles:

1. Did the then minister of agriculture make a trip to Hong Kong in April or May, 1961, and, if so, what was the purpose of the trip?

2. On what date did the then minister leave Canada for Hong Kong, and on what date did he return?

3. Was the then minister accompanied by any member of his staff?

4. Whas this trip made at public expense and, if so, what was the total cost thereof (a) for the then minister and (b) for any member of his staff?

Mr. Hays: 1. Yes. The purpose of the trip was stated by the then prime minister, in answer to a question in the house and as recorded on page 4017 of Hansard of April 26, 1961, to be "to secure sales for Canadian grain."

2. The available departmental records do not show the dates of the then minister's departure and return. As shown in reply to 3 below his special assistant left Canada on April 26, 1961, and returned on May 1, 1961. The then prime minister, in his statement to the house on April 26, 1961, stated that "The Minister of Agriculture is now en route to Hong Kong."

3. The then minister was accompanied by his special assistant, whose expense account showed that he left Canada on April 26, 1961, and returned on May 1, 1961.

4. Yes; (a) for the then minister the cost of the air transportation was $1,731.51. Details of other expenses are not available; (b) for the special assistant, $1,731.51 for air transportation and $220.37 for other expenses.

DISABILITY OR DEATH FROM RADIOACTIVE EXPOSURE

Question No. 972—Mr. Peters:

1. How many known accidents in Canada have resulted in disability or death as a result of exposure to radioactive materials?

2. How many of these accidents occurred in federal departments of the government?

3. Of those cases coming under (a) federal jurisdiction and (b) provincial jurisdiction, how many have been reported to the Department of National Health and Welfare by the various compensation boards throughout Canada?

Miss LaMarsh: 1, 2 and 3. From the records of federal departments and agencies (Department of National Health and Welfare, Department of National Defence, atomic energy control board, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited and national research council), no known accidents in Canada have resulted in death or in disability as a result of exposure to radioactive material. Disability is interpreted as physical disability requiring any loss of employment time.

C.N.R. AUTOMOBILE HANDLING FACILITIES, SYDNEY, N.S.

Question No. 987—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Has consideration been given by the Canadian National Railways for the setting up of a compound in the Sydney-North Sydney area for the handling of automobiles arriving on railway "tri-level" equipment for Cape Breton and Newfoundland and, if so, what decision has been reached in the matter?

Mr. McIlraith: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

The matter of setting up such a compound is under consideration.

CIVILIAN TRAVEL ALLOWANCES, R.C.A.F.

Question No. 991—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

1. Does the Department of National Defence grant an allowance to civilian employees for their travel cost to and from their place of employment?

2. If so, has such an allowance been recently discontinued to some, or all, of the civilian employees at R.C.A.F. station, Summerside, and how many employees are affected?

3. Has there been any change in policy with regard to these allowances since May 1, 1963?

Answer: 1. Yes, at certain locations a commuting allowance is paid.

2. Yes, 225.

3. Yes, such allowances have been discontinued at establishments located less than 5 miles from the nearest community.

LIMITATION OF HIRING OF DEPARTMENTAL EMPLOYEES

Question No. 994—Mr. Pritie:

Is the government's staff control policy concerning the hiring of additional employees by departments imposed in 1962, still in effect and, if so, how long will this staff control policy remain in effect?

Answer: A minor change was made in the rules last March enabling the departments to recruit one employee for each five new vacancies in lieu of the former one employee for each ten new vacancies, until 85 per cent of the establishment is filled. Special relief has been and will be granted from time to time in areas where this is required in the interests of efficiency. Apart from this the present restrictions on recruiting will be retained throughout the remainder of the current fiscal year, after which time the policy will be further reviewed.

SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS—ADDITIONAL EMPLOYEES REQUIRED

Question No. 995—Mr. Pritie:

How many employees, in addition to those now in the department, will be required by the Department of National Revenue to issue new sales tax licences to manufacturers whose products are now subject to the 4 per cent tax on building materials and production machinery, and to supervise collections from these manufacturers?

Mr. Garland: The requirements for additional personnel will continue to be assessed in the light of the increased work load. The department has about 155 vacancies in its present establishment. These will be used to strengthen the excise tax staff to the extent of the need and the availability of qualified candidates.

EMPLOYMENT OF GORDON HEAD, WESTMINSTER HOSPITAL, LONDON

Question No. 996—Mr. Nesbitt:

1. Does Mr. Gordon Head, presently employed on the staff of Westminster hospital in London, demonstrate certain laboratory techniques to student technicians and interns in Westminster hospital?

2. Has Mr. Head assisted in the development of any product which is being recommended for use by a chemical company in Canada, and the United States?

3. Was Mr. Gordon Head reclassified from hospital laboratory helper grade 2 to assistant technician 2 and, if so (a) when did this reclassification take place and (b) did he receive an increase in pay?

Answer: 1. Yes.

2. Mr. Head has recently informed departmental officials that, some years ago, he made a suggestion to a representative of a chemical firm with respect to techniques to be used in the application of one of its products.

3. Mr. Gordon Head was reclassified from a hospital laboratory helper 2 to assistant technician 2.

(a) Reclassification took place effective June 1, 1962.

(b) Reclassification did not bring about an increase in pay as the salary ranges for the two classifications are the same.

(Translation):

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—RETAINING WALLS BETWEEN LEVIS AND RIVIERE DU LOUP

Question No. 997—Mr. Berger:

1. How many sustaining walls were built on the south shore of the St. Lawrence river between Levis and Riviere du Loup from 1957 to 1963?

2. At what locations were such walls erected?

3. What were the amounts paid in each individual case?

4. To whom were the contracts awarded?

Mr. Badanai: 1. Fifteen sustaining walls were built.

2, 3 and 4. See following table.

Location	Amounts expended	Contracts awarded
St. Michel de Bellechasse
Lots 49 and 50	$11,643.28	(state agent)
Part of lot 181	7,605.66	(state agent)
Lots 220 and 221	6,696.15	Arthur Simoneau (Charny)
Lots 113 to 134, 203 and 208	11,384.18	Noel Grenier (St. Raphael)
Lots 33 to 43	10,971.70	Arthur Simoneau (Charny)
Part of lot 181	5,058.63	Noel Grenier (St. Raphael)
St. Vallier
Lots 41 to 49	16,049.40	(state agent)
Lots 49 to 53	5,100.00	Lionel Gaumont (St. Vallier)
Lots 118, 122, 125, 92 and 93	8,547.00	J. R. Denoncourt (Nicolet)
Lot 148	7,496.50	Gaumont & Freres (St. Vallier)

Berthier
Lots 195 and 197, and part of lot 198	13,012.00	Les Entreprises du Cap-Diamant (Ste. Foy)
Lots 194 and 190	10,523.75	Les Entreprises du Cap-Diamant (Ste. Foy)
Lots 179, 182 and 183	7,517.50	Ovila Boucher (Berthier)
Part of lot 198 and part of lot 190	6,096.50	Ovila Boucher (Berthier)
L'Islet
Lot 228	4,692.35	(state agent)

PERMIT FOR TELEVISION CABLE, CHIBOUGAMAU, QUE. OPERATE A TELEVISION CABLE

Question No. 1,034—Mr. Laprise:

Is Gagnon Television Limited, St. Felicien, Quebec licensed by the Department of Transport to operate a television cable to Chibougamau and Chapais and, if so, when was such licence granted, and for how long is it valid?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, (a) commercial receiving station licences, Chibougamau—June 6, 1960, Chapais—April 13, 1962, (b) licences issued annually ending March 31.

(Text):

FATAL ACCIDENT, BORDEN-CAPE TORMENTINE FERRY

Question No. 1,045—Mr. MacLean (Queens):

1. Has an investigation been held into the recent accident on the Borden-Cape Tormentine ferry service which resulted in the death by drowning of a three and one half year old child?

2. Is consideration being given to safety measures which would lessen the likelihood of the recurrence of such an incident?

Mr. McIlraith: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. Yes, a preliminary investigation was held immediately following the accident, and complete investigation is now under way.

2. All aspects of the matter are being carefully examined.

EXTERNAL AID TO INDIA AND PAKISTAN

Question No. 1,050—Mr. Matheson:

1. What has the federal government done each year and at what cost, commencing with the year 1958, to provide external aid to (a) India and (b) Pakistan?

2. What plans has the federal government now under consideration for external aid to each of these countries, and at what cost and for what projected period?

3. What requests for external aid have been received from these countries, commencing with the year 1958, which the government has been unable to meet in whole or in part?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): 1. During the period 1958 until the end of the last fiscal year the federal government has extended development assistance to India and Pakistan in the form of capital projects, equipment, commodities and technical assistance. The appropriations for each country by fiscal years during the period concerned were:

	India	Pakistan
1958-59	$21.45 million	$13.00 million
1959-60	25.00 "	15.00 "
1960-61	25.00 "	15.00 "
1961-62	25.00 "	15.00 "
1962-63	19.50 "	12.10 "

2. The main estimates for 1963-64 which have been tabled in parliament contain an item of $41.5 million for Colombo plan purposes. Of this amount it is expected that $19.5 million and $12.25 million will be allocated to India and Pakistan respectively. These total amounts will be committed during the current fiscal year to projects which have been submitted by the governments of the two countries.

3. In each of the fiscal years since 1958 Canada has advised the governments of India and Pakistan of their allocation of Colombo plan funds and those governments have designed their Canadian program accordingly.

DECREASE IN INVENTORY, ARMED FORCES

Question No. 1,052—Mr. Matheson:

In the light of the answer given to question No. 906, by what estimated amount has the equipment inventory of the Canadian (a) navy (b) army and (c) air force decreased in value since 1956?

Answer: The inventories of the services are maintained on a physical basis only and figures for the value of our inventories are not available.

ARMED FORCES EXPENDITURES

Question No. 1,053—Mr. Matheson:

In each of the last ten years of record, what have the (a) navy (b) army and (c) air force spent for (i) equipment and (ii) all other purposes?

Answer:

($000)		1962-63	1961-62	1960-61	1959-60	1958-59
(a) Navy	(i) Equipment	62,389	62,046	46,820	58,737	82,040
	(ii) Other	211,125	213,574	202,095	200,133	193,325
(b) Army	(i) Equipment	28,539	28,859	29,493	27,330	42,336
	(ii) Other	416,489	415,056	375,233	376,699	393,155
(c) Air Force	(i) Equipment	152,812	225,659	204,770	201,837	300,696
	(ii) Other	566,298	567,052	556,418	546,689	539,470

	1957-58	1956-57	1955-56	1954-55	1953-54
	112,635	150,822	169,693	143,058	150,081
	184,608	178,718	173,908	162,715	141,299
	30,580	55,133	69,066	94,711	105,233
	298,831	408,248	396,018	362,446	334,315
	266,224	244,286	302,754	379,013	472,457
	593,957	657,272	521,866	454,869	454,245

PER CAPITA DEBT AND NATIONAL PRODUCT

Question No. 1,061—Mr. Matheson:

1. What is the per capita direct and guaranteed (a) municipal (b) provincial (c) federal and (d) total public debt and debt service in each year commencing 1955, up to and including the most recent information?

2. What are the annual totals of (a), (b), (c) and (d)?

3. What is the per capita consumer debt in each year, 1955 to date?

4. What is the annual per capita gross national product in each of these years?

Answer: 1 and 2. See attached statement.

3. The dominion bureau of statistics publishes a monthly report "Credit Statistics" catalogue No. 61-004. The data in this report represent only the estimated amount outstanding on the books of selected holders of credit and are not intended to cover total credit. Information is not available on certain avenues of service credit such as the amount owing to doctors, dentists, and certain service establishments as hotels, the outstanding balances owing to utility companies, transportation companies, loans between individuals, etc. There is, therefore, no absolute total of consumer credit available.

The totals for credit shown below is the total of balances outstanding on the books of the following types of companies: Sales finance companies; small loan companies; chartered banks—personal loans; life insurance companies policy loans; Quebec savings bank loans; retail dealers; oil company credit cards; credit unions.

A breakdown of credit outstanding is shown for each type of holder in the monthly dominion bureau of statistics report, catalogue No. 61-004, "Credit Statistics".

Year	Population[1] (thousands)	Credit standing (millions)	Per Capita Credit standing (dollars)
1955	15,698	2,956	188
1956	16,081	3,303	205
1957	16,610	3,365	203
1958	17,080	3,676	215
1959	17,483	4,117	235
1960	17,870	4,448	249
1961	18,238	4,817	264
1962	18,570	5,242[2]	282

[1] Estimated as of June 1 for intercensal years.

[2] Balances outstanding for credit unions not available for 1962—same figure of $525,000,000 for 1961 used for 1962.

4. Annual per capita gross national product: 1955, $1,728; 1956, $1,902; 1957, $1,921; 1958, $1,926; 1959, $1,997; 1960, $2,029; 1961, $2,052; 1962, $2,176.

SELECTED PUBLIC DEBT STATISTICS FOR FISCAL YEARS ENDED NEAREST DECEMBER 31

	1955		1956		1957		1958		1959		1960
	Total	Per capita	Total	Per capita	Total	Per capita	Total	Per capita	Total	Per capita	Total	Per capita
	$'000	$	$'000	$	$'000	$	$'000	$	$'000	$	$'000	$
Direct and guaranteed debt:[1]
Federal	20,060,052	1,247	19,818,806	1,193	20,455,724	1,198	23,204,316	1,327	25,060,182	1,402	26,385,600	1,447
Provincial	4,173,059	259	4,666,896	281	5,209,490	305	5,859,136	335	6,408,457	359	7,105,221	390
Municipal	2,662,096	166	3,055,701	184	3,387,147	198	3,821,046	218	4,334,289	242	4,843,347	265
Total[2]	26,895,207	1,672	27,541,403	1,658	29,052,361	1,701	32,884,498	1,880	35,802,928	2,003	38,334,168	2,102
Total[3]	26,583,705	1,653	25,183,314	1,636	28,674,055	1,679	32,475,171	1,857	35,361,661	1,979	37,843,633	2,075
Debt charges excluding debt retirement:[4]
Federal	438,185	27.92	471,274	29.30	500,083	30.11	545,721	31.95	657,066	37.58	654,411	36.62
Provincial	54,817	3.49	55,308	3.44	54,844	3.30	55,351	3.24	57,076	3.26	66,878	3.74
Municipal	50,281	3.20	66,849	4.16	85,052	5.12	101,226	5.92	117,753	6.74	144,468	8.08
Total	543,283	34.61	593,431	36.90	639,979	38.53	702,298	41.11	831,895	47.58	865,757	48.44

[1]Less sinking funds.
[2]Inter-government debt not eliminated.
[3]Inter-government debt eliminated.
[4]On direct debt only; after deducting interest revenue and other recoverable debt charges; debt charges on guaranteed debt not available.

Questions

STEEL IMPORTS AND EXPORTS

Question No. 1,069—Mr. Hamilton:

1. By calendar years 1953 to 1962, what has been the total production, imports and exports, of steel for Canada?
2. What is the estimated amount in wages for each of the above mentioned years?
3. What is the amount, and value of exports of iron in the same ten years?

Answer: 1. Production, imports and exports of steel, 1953-1962:

Year	Production†	Imports*	Exports*
	(thousands of net tons)
1953	4,116	1,716	302
1954	3,195	1,394	73
1955	4,535	1,450	505
1956	5,301	2,819	281
1957	5,068	2,921	388
1958	4,359	1,794	378
1959	5,901	1,482	571
1960	5,809	1,310	990
1961	6,466	1,057	837
1962	7,174	1,010	986

†Total ingots plus castings.

*Compiled on an equivalent steel ingot and castings basis. Imports and exports of steel rolling mill products are converted to the equivalent ingot and castings basis by using a conversion factor of 0.78.

2. Salaries and wages: primary iron and steel industry, 1953-1962:

Year	Salaries	Wages	Total
	$	$	$
1953	21,000,000	114,000,000	135,000,000
1954	22,000,000	91,000,000	113,000,000
1955	24,000,000	118,000,000	142,000,000
1956	28,000,000	142,000,000	170,000,000
1957	32,991,000	144,000,000	176,991,000
1958	32,739,000	120,000,000	153,739,000
1959	37,459,000	152,000,000	189,459,000
1960	40,081,000	153,812,000	193,893,000
1961	40,000,000	158,000,000	198,000,000
1962	43,000,000	171,000,000	214,000,000

Note: 1. 1953-1956 and 1961-1962 adjusted for historical continuity.

2. The primary iron and steel industry includes establishments engaged chiefly in the manufacture of pig iron, ferro-alloys, steel ingots and castings and rolled steel products. The larger mills operate on an integrated basis; that is, operate divisions which process iron ore and scrap through various stages to a finished rolled steel product. These mills file a single consolidated report and, therefore, it is not possible to develop salary and wage data relating specifically to the production of steel.

3. Exports of iron in the calendar years 1953 to 1962 were as follows:

Year	Tons	Value
1953	345,415	$16,984,257
1954	202,603	10,021,672
1955	254,472	13,272,635
1956	257,627	14,117,044
1957	577,600	33,078,351
1958	336,591	18,260,280
1959	468,335	25,221,166
1960	483,205	24,183,308
1961	602,175	29,482,344
1962	463,921	25,589,662

Footnote: Includes pig iron in all years, sponge iron and other primary iron from 1960.

[Mr. Matheson.]

MONETARY FUND LOAN TO CANADA

Question No. 1,072—Mr. Thompson:

1. Has the loan received by Canada from the international monetary fund, following the financial crisis of June 1962, been repaid?
2. Was any interest charged on this loan and, if so, what rate of interest, and how much has been paid to date?
3. What conditions were attached by the I.M.F. to making this loan?

Answer: 1. No.

2. Charges for foreign currency drawings from the I.M.F. are in two parts: (1) a fixed service charge one half of 1 per cent on the total amount of foreign currency purchased from the fund, payable at the time of the drawing. This service charge, paid at the time of Canada's drawing, amounted to U.S. $1.5 million; (2) a charge payable quarterly after the first quarter following a drawing, on the fund's holdings at the time of a member's currency in excess of the member's quota. The rate depends on how long the drawing remains unpaid. Charges at the rate of 2 per cent per annum paid by Canada up to and including the quarter ended April 30, 1963, have amounted to U.S. $1,639,000.

3. The government's emergency program, as announced on June 24, 1962, was communicated to the fund authorities. The fund accepted that the government was making "reasonable efforts to solve its problems".

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE FUND

Question No. 1,076—Mr. Howe (Hamilton South):

1. What is the present financial state of the unemployment insurance fund?
2. What are its future prospects?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. The balance in the unemployment insurance fund as of 30 June, 1963, was minus $24,777,135.85.

2. The answer I gave in reply to a similar question appearing in Hansard of 3 July, 1963, was that the fund at 31 May, 1963 stood at minus $37,181,721.58.

I have been informed that during June 1963, $12,000,000 of the loan was reimbursed and as of 26 July inclusive, another $18,000,000 has been reimbursed.

It is expected that the whole loan will have been completely repaid by 9 August, 1963.

NEGROES IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Question No. 1,077—Mr. Mather:

1. How many Canadian negroes are presently employed within the federal civil service in each province in Canada?
2. How many Canadian negroes whose applications have reached the stage of interviewing for employment have been hired?
3. How many have not been hired, and for what reasons?
4. How many are employed in the following categories (a) professional (b) clerical (c) skilled labour (d) semi-skilled labour and (e) manual labour?
5. What are the ages and salaries of the employees in each of the categories of part 4 above?

Answer: I have been given the following answer by the civil service commission:

1, 2, 3, 4 and 5: Without a lengthy and expensive search, none of the five questions referred to above can be answered with any accuracy because the civil service commission, under the provisions of the Civil Service Act, cannot and does not take into account whether a candidate is white, yellow, brown or black but simply whether he or she is competent and meets the other requirements set forth in the act.

*CHARITABLE DONATION RECEIPTS, QUEBEC

Question No. 1,080—Mr. Marcoux:

1. Has a special order been given to the officers of the Quebec regional office of the Department of National Revenue to question the validity of the vouchers for charitable donations annexed to the income tax returns and if not, under what authority is their validity being questioned?
2. Does the Minister of National Revenue intend to put a stop to this practice?

Mr. Garland: The answer to the first part of the question is no. However, I should explain that officers of all district offices in Canada of the Department of National Revenue in the course of their duties are required to assure themselves of the validity of charitable donation receipts attached to income tax returns.

The answer to the second part of the question is no.

M.M.R.A. ASSISTANCE ON CAUSEWAY, MONCTON, N.B.

Question No. 1,091—Mr. Coates:

Has a request been received from the government of the province of New Brunswick for assistance from the staff of the M.M.R.A. in determining the best possible site for the construction of a causeway or a bridge to cross the Petitcodiac river at or near Moncton and, if so, who will pay for the services rendered by the M.M.R.A.?

Mr. Hays: The government of New Brunswick requested the government of Canada on January 20, 1960, for assistance through the staff of the maritime marshland rehabilitation administration in making a feasibility survey of a proposal to build a causeway across the Petitcodiac river near the city of Moncton.

The request was granted and a report of the survey was submitted to the province on April 7, 1961, describing three possible locations for a causeway. No charges were made for the services of the M.M.R.A. engineers. Discussions between the engineers of both governments have taken place from time to time since the survey was made.

REPORT ON SOIL TEST, PORT ELGIN, ONT.

Question No. 1,092—Mr. Loney:

What was the nature of the report made to the Department of Public Works by Mr. D. R. Prior concerning the soil test of the harbour and immediate area at Port Elgin, Ontario?

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Prior is an employee of the Department of Public Works. He is carrying out test borings in the harbour and keeping a record of them. The resulting core samples will have to be analysed at laboratories in Ottawa before a meaningful report can be prepared and this has not been done as yet.

GOLD MINING ASSISTANCE, SPRINGFIELD CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,093—Mr. Slogan:

1. What amount has been paid to mines in the constituency of Springfield under the Gold Mining Assistance Act in each year since the inception of the act?
2. Was the federal government approached in any way to assist the San Antonio Gold Mines, Bissett, Manitoba, in order to prevent their closing and, if so, what was the response?

Mr. Benidickson: 1. Four gold mines in the constituency of Springfield, Manitoba, have received assistance under the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act since 1948. Two of the mines, San Antonio Gold Mines Ltd. and its subsidiary, Forty-Four Mines Ltd., are still operating although these two are now considered to be one mine.

The total amount of assistance paid to all gold producers in the Springfield electoral district in each year since 1948 is as follows:

Questions

Year	Assistance
1948	$ 159,681.11
1949	274,471.89
1950	78,042.69
1951	67,704.33
1952	Nil
1953	Nil
1954	123,632.04
1955	110,675.55
1956	196,198.32
1957	187,462.86
1958	229,988.59
1959	217,105.93
1960	208,027.45
1961	250,231.75
1962	238,360.79*
	$2,342,583.30

*Not final audited figure.

2. There has been no request made by officials of San Antonio Gold Mines Ltd. to my department for extra assistance of any kind.

However, discussions have been held with San Antonio officials in connection with various aspects of their gold mining operations at Bissett, Manitoba, with respect to the Emergency Gold Mining Assistance Act and regulations. Assurance was given that every effort permissible under this legislation, would be made in order to help keep the gold mine operating and thus maintain the chief support of the community at Bissett.

TRADE AND COMMERCE EMPLOYEES PAID BY ADVERTISING AGENCIES

Question No. 1,106—Mr. Orlikow:

Are there persons on staff in the Department of Trade and Commerce who do not receive their salary from the government of Canada but rather from advertising agencies with offices in Toronto and, if so, (a) how many persons are in this position (b) what are the reasons for this situation (c) have commitments been made to these persons that when permanent positions open up they will be able to apply for these positions (d) will older members of the department be allowed to compete for these positions (e) how are the advertising agencies which have supplied these employees being recompensed for the salaries paid to these employees?

Answer: 1. Ronalds-Reynolds and Company of Toronto and Montreal, one of the advertising agencies which services the Department of Trade and Commerce is currently engaged in the preparation of export trade promotional material on behalf of the department. Because most of this material is for use in direct mail campaigns abroad in advance of trade fairs in which Canada is participating the materials must be produced on very short deadlines. This work must be carried out in close liaison with and under direction of officers of the department. Employees of the advertising agency are at present in Ottawa for these reasons.

(a) Members of the staff of Ronalds-Reynolds and Company at present servicing the department's account in Ottawa number nine. This number is flexible and depends entirely upon the number of departmental projects being serviced at any given point in time.

(b) It is customary for advertising agencies to service their accounts in this manner.

(c) No.

(d) All vacant positions are filled in the manner prescribed by the Civil Service Act.

(e) The advertising agency bills the department on the basis of service rendered in respect of each project on which it is engaged.

COAL SUPPLY, CAMP SUSSEX, N.B.

Question No. 1,112—Mr. Fairweather:

1. What company was awarded the contract for supplying 700 tons of coal to Camp Sussex, New Brunswick, per call for tenders G.Q. 20-307600-4 closing date April 22, 1963?

2. What are the names and amounts of other tenders received in response to this call for tenders?

Mr. Drury: 1. Weaver Coal Company, 1155 Dorchester st., w., room 511, Montreal, P.Q. (Awarded on recommendation of the interdepartmental fuels committee, based upon lowest price per B.T.U.

2. Firm	Total Price
Newcastle Coal Company, Minto, N.B.	$ 8,925
Dunsinane Coal Ltd., P.O. Box 70, Sussex, N.B.	9,800

BUTTER OIL

Question No. 1,113—Mr. Doucett:

1. How much butter oil was sold or disposed of from January 1, 1962 to December 31, 1962?

2. How much butter oil was sold or disposed of from January 1, 1963 to July 1, 1963?

3. In what manner was the butter oil disposed of, and to whom?

4. What amounts were sold, and what prices were received?

Mr. Hays: 1. 352,321 pounds of butter oil were sold from January 1, 1962 to December 31, 1962.

2. 635,841 pounds were sold from January 1, 1963 to July 1, 1963.

3. The butter oil was packed in poly lined wooden boxes containing 54 pounds net weight and was sold on open offer by the agricultural stabilization board in carload lots, in a frozen condition. It was sold to:

Central Creameries, Charlottetown, P.E.I.; Granby Co-operative, Granby, P.Q.; Dominion Dry Milk Limited, Montreal, P.Q.; Kraft Foods Limited, Montreal, P.Q.; Palm Dairies Limited, Edmonton, Alberta; Canada Packers Limited, Toronto, Ontario; Fraser Valley Milk Producers Association, Vancouver, B.C.; Shefford Dairy Limited, Lawrenceville, P.Q.

4. From January 1, 1962 to April 30, 1962, 69,314 pounds were sold on the basis of 78.5 cents per pound in store Ontario and Quebec.

From May 1, 1962 to July 1, 1963, 918,848 pounds were sold on the basis of 65 cents per pound, delivered Ontario, Quebec, maritimes, and British Columbia points; 64 cents basis Manitoba points; 63½ cents basis Saskatchewan points.

(Translation):

MACDONALD-CARTIER BRIDGE, OTTAWA—TRUCK RENTALS

Question No. 1,114—Mr. Martineau:

1. Are trucks being engaged by the national capital commision or by the federal contractor, for work on the Macdonald-Cartier bridge and, if so, to date how many such trucks have been engaged on this project?

2. What is the rate of pay or rental at which such trucks are engaged?

Mr. Badanai: 1 and 2. I understand that the federal contractor Dufresne Engineering Limited, of Montreal, engages trucks, but under the contract entered into with the Department of Public Works, the contractor is not required to produce such information. Consequently that information is not available to the department.

(Text):

RAMA, SASK. POSTMASTER

Question No. 1,117—Mr. Korchinski:

1. Are applications still being accepted for the position of postmaster at Rama, Saskatchewan?

2. Until what date will applications be accepted?

3. How was the position advertised?

4. Was the Canadian Legion notified that there was a vacancy at this point and if so, what date was suggested as final for the receipt of applications?

Mr. Denis: 1. Yes.

2. No date limit.

3. Not advertised.

4. Yes—21 April, 1963.

*TAX ON CANADIAN INVESTMENTS IN FOREIGN SECURITIES

Question No. 1,124—Mr. Mather:

Will the government consider a tax on Canadian investments in foreign securities similar to the proposed 15 per cent U.S. tax on American investments in foreign securities?

Mr. Gordon: The imposition of any kind of tax is a matter of government policy. If the government were to consider such a tax it would be made known to the house at an appropriate time.

CHARLOTTETOWN, P.E.I., RETAINING WALL

Question No. 1,125—Mr. Macquarrie:

Has the government received a request from the corporation of the city of Charlottetown for assistance in repairing the retaining wall on that portion of Victoria park facing Charlottetown harbour and, if so, what degree of assistance does the government plan to offer?

Mr. Badanai: Yes, the Department of Public Works received requests in April 1962 and January 1963. No action was taken because the matter is not regarded as a federal responsibility. The city was advised however, that the project might be considered under the winter works incentive program, which is administered by the Department of Labour.

(Translation):

DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS WITH CUBA

Question No. 1,127—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What is the nature of Canada's present diplomatic relations with Cuba, and how many officials and diplomatic personnel does Canada maintain in Cuba?

2. Has Cuba expropriated or nationalized Canadian investments or property since the overthrow of the Batista regime and if so, (a) what were the properties and the amounts involved (b) what compensation was paid for these properties (c) did the Canadian government make representations to Cuba in this respect (d) what was the result of these representations?

3. Did the Canadian government make representations in connection with the expropriation by Cuba of the American embassy in that country, and what were these representations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): 1. Canada maintains diplomatic relations with Cuba. We have four diplomatic representatives in Cuba: an ambassador, a first secretary and consul, a second secretary and a third secretary and vice-consul.

2. The Cuban government has expropriated or nationalized Canadian investments and properties. (a) There is no complete list available of all Canadian investments and properties which have been expropriated in Cuba, and their value. The Canadian government has recorded all Canadian claims drawn to its attention, but feels that it would not be proper to publish those claims without the permission of the parties concerned. (b) The amount of the claims paid to the claimants, as the case may be, is not known, since any compensation would have been paid directly to those concerned. (c) The Canadian government made representations concerning some of those claims. (d) The negotiations with the Cuban government in that regard are not concluded.

3. No. American interests in Cuba lie with Switzerland.

Questions

(Text):

CIVIL DEFENCE SIRENS, FLIN FLON, MAN.

Question No. 1,128—Mr. Simpson:

1. How many bids were received for the installation of sirens in the town of Flin Flon, Manitoba, in relation to civil defence?
2. What companies or individuals submitted bids?
3. What were the amounts of these bids?
4. Who was awarded this contract?

Mr. Drury: 1. Two.

2. Electric Shop (Flin Flon) Ltd., Flin Flon, Manitoba; Flin Flon Century Electric Ltd., Flin Flon, Manitoba.

3. Electric Shop (Flin Flon) Ltd., $5,411.; Flin Flon Century Electric Ltd., $4,381.

4. Flin Flon Century Electric Ltd.

SALE OF BUTTER TO U.K

Question No. 1,132—Mr. Mather:

1. What is the present volume of surplus butter and oil in government storage?
2. Has the government any information concerning a temporary butter shortage in the United Kingdom?
3. Is the government making efforts to dispose of surplus butter to the United Kingdom?

Mr. Hays: 1. Government stocks of butter and butter oil as at July 1, 1963, were:

Butter, 104.5 million pounds.

Butter oil, 81.3 million pounds.

2 and 3. The entire question of the butter supply situation in the United Kingdom and the possibility of selling butter or butter oil on that market is under investigation.

SUMMER COURSES, GROSSE ISLE, QUE.

Question No. 1,137—Mr. Berger:

Does the Department of National Health and Welfare sponsor summer courses at Grosse Isle, Montmagny county, Quebec, and, if so (a) by whom are these courses organized, and of what do they consist (b) who is permitted to follow these courses, and how many persons follow them (c) what personnel is required for the purpose of conducting the courses, and what is the annual cost of the said operation?

Miss LaMarsh: No summer courses are sponsored by the Department of National Health and Welfare at Grosse Isle.

*CANADIAN ATTENDANCE AT INTERNATIONAL MEETINGS IN LATIN AMERICA

Question No. 1,138—Mr. Whelan:

Since April 8, 1963, what major international meetings, if any, has Canada attended in Latin America?

Mr. Stewart: Since April 8, 1963, Canada has attended the following major international meetings in Latin America: the inter-American conference of ministers of labour on the alliance for progress at Bogota, Colombia, May 5 to 11, as observers; the tenth session of the economic commission for Latin America at Mar del Plata, Argentina, May 6 to 17; the special meeting of assembly and the seventh meeting of the directing council of the pan-American institute of geography and history at Mexico City, July 22 to August 2.

In addition, Canada attended a meeting largely concerned with Latin America in Washington, D.C., the ninth pan-American highway congress, May 6 to 18.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

INDIAN AFFAIRS PAYMENTS TO RELIGIOUS ORGANIZATIONS

Question No. 454—Mr. Fisher:

1. What grants or sums were paid by the Indian affairs branch in 1960, 1961, and 1962 to churches or religious organizations for school and domicile of Indian charges of the branch?
2. To what churches and orders, by province, by reserve or by location, did these grants or sums go?

Return tabled.

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN MILITARY OPERATIONS

Question No. 1,111—Mr. Matheson:

1. In what military operations have Canadian forces participated since the signing of the Korean cease fire agreement on July 27, 1953?
2. Why did Canada participate in each of these operations, and what was the nature, and the extent of her contribution?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

ACCEPTANCE OF CHANGE IN NORTH PACIFIC FISHERIES TREATY

Motion No. 62—Mr. Barnett:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency for a copy of the cabinet minute or other official document which authorized the Secretary of State for External Affairs to notify the executive director, the international north Pacific fisheries commission, by telegram under date of May 10, 1963, that the commission's recommendations for the removal of the halibut stocks in the eastern Bering sea and the herring stocks west of the Queen Charlotte islands from the annex to the convention had been accepted by the government of Canada.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at the suggestion of the minister I am prepared to ask that this motion stand.

Motion stands.

CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING U.S. EXCISE TAX

Motion No. 68—Mr. Martineau:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house copies of all correspondence, telegrams, letters and other documents exchanged between the governments of Canada and the United States, or between officials of the said governments, relating to the new excise tax on the purchase by United States residents of Canadian securities and those of 21 other countries proposed by President Kennedy on July 18, 1963.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, it is not the practice to produce documents exchanged with a foreign government except with the agreement of that government. However, without departing from this rule, I am able to inform my hon. friend and the house that in fact, apart from the joint statement which was tabled and published in Hansard on July 22, no correspondence, telegrams, letters or other documents were exchanged between the governments of Canada and the United States, or between officials of the said governments, relating to the United States excise tax on the purchase by United States residents of Canadian securities and those of 21 other countries, proposed by President Kennedy on July 18, 1963.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion withdrawn?

Mr. Martineau: In view of the minister's remarks, and seeing there was no written consultation, I agree to withdraw my motion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

RESIGNATION OF ASSISTANT DEPUTY MINISTER OF AGRICULTURE

Motion No. 74—Mr. Hamilton:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the letter of resignation of Dr. D. K. Kristjanson, associate deputy minister of agriculture to the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, there has been no formal letter of resignation received from Dr. Kristjanson. The only letter received from Dr. Kristjanson relative to this subject is a confidential letter of July 22, 1963 addressed to the deputy minister of agriculture. In view of the letter having been marked "confidential" I am sure the hon. member for Qu'Appelle will agree that it would not be appropriate to table it, and I therefore suggest he will wish to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member agree to withdraw his motion?

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, since the letter was marked "confidential" I have no choice but to withdraw my motion.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

COMMUNIQUÉ OF CONFERENCE OF CARIBBEAN COUNTRIES

Motion No. 75—Mr. Matheson:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of the communiqué issued by the conference of Caribbean countries, on the general question of economic and technical aid, which opened at Port of Spain on Monday, July 22, 1963.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have been advised that Canada was not represented at this conference. Accordingly I would respectfully ask that this motion be withdrawn.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

28902-5—181

Inquiries of the Ministry

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INDIA—REPORTED CONCENTRATION OF COMMUNIST CHINESE FORCES ON BOUNDARIES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, is the Secretary of State for External Affairs in a position to give the house a report regarding the concentration of communist Chinese forces on the boundaries of India?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there is nothing I can add to what has already been given in the newspapers thus far, unless there have been further developments within recent hours. I can say to my hon. friend that this matter is being pursued, naturally, with interest and with the kind of concern that the circumstances warrant.

LAOS—REPORTED CHARGE RESPECTING CANADIAN EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER AND CONTROL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the minister comment on the charge by a spokesman of the Laotian patriotic front to the effect that the Canadian Secretary of State for External Affairs is trying to cover up violations of the Geneva agreement on Laos, and the demand that the Canadian representative on the international control commission respect the sovereignty of Laos and correctly implement the Geneva agreement and all agreements reached by the three parties on Laos.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in reply I would say that so far from trying to cover up violations of the Geneva agreement on Laos, it has been the consistent policy of Canadian governments since the Geneva conferences on Laos in 1961 and 1962 to help the international control commission to perform its function of looking into complaints and reports of violations of the agreement. If there has been any violation of the agreement or opposition to the functioning of the commission it has not, of course, come from anyone speaking on behalf of Canada.

As to respect for the sovereignty of Laos, this is one of those double edged phrases by which communist parties often try to prevent international bodies from carrying out their agreed functions. The Canadian component of the commission has always acted in accordance with the Geneva agreement to which Laos is a party with the concurrence of all factions including the Pathet Lao.

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Translation):

TEST BAN AGREEMENT TO DELAY ACQUISITION OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister? Is it true that the government might try to obtain signing the three-power pact for the abolition of nuclear tests, in order to delay the signing of an agreement with Washington on the acquisition of nuclear weapons, as stated yesterday by the Minister of Justice on the C.B.C. program entitled "Aujourd'hui"?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the Minister of Justice made any such statement. In any event the position of the government on this matter has been made clear in the house.

Mr. Pigeon: We will prove that.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SASKATCHEWAN—REPORTED USE OF UNEMPLOYED TO BREAK STRIKE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour whether he has received a telegram from Mr. Phillip P. Cave of the retail clerks international association protesting that the unemployment insurance commission is sending strikebreakers through the picket lines which his union has set up in a legal strike against Loblaws throughout Saskatchewan, and further protesting that the unemployment insurance commission are suggesting to the strikebreakers that failure to cross the picket lines might result in loss of benefits. If so, would the minister assure the house that such activities by the unemployment insurance commission will cease at once?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for notice of this question. In reply I would tell him that I have received such a telegram and I would like to explain the situation to the hon. member and to the house.

The unemployment insurance commission offices at Regina and Saskatoon received orders for workers from Loblaws. Persons registered for work at these offices were offered referral to this employment and were advised that the establishments concerned are involved in an industrial dispute. This is in accordance with practice. Certain of these workers accepted referral, but in some cases unemployment insurance benefit claimants who refused referral, as was their right, were asked for information which may have given the impression that their entitlement to unemployment insurance benefit had been jeopardized. The fact is that employment in a strikebound plant is not suitable employment and may be refused without putting benefit in jeopardy.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORRIS COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the possibility of adjournment for the summer within the next few days, would the Prime Minister say whether the government is going to bring at least part of the Norris commission report before parliament, or is there a possibility of implementing the whole report?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam asked me a question about this yesterday. I indicated to him at that time that I hoped to be in a position to make a statement this afternoon but I regret, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot do so this afternoon because we are still considering whether the recommendations of the Norris commission report, or some of them, can be implemented in this part of the session. There is considerable difficulty over establishing, in respect of some of these recommendations, the constitutional authority of the federal government with regard to the matters which are dealt with, but I hope to be in a position, or I hope the Minister of Labour will be in a position, to make a statement on the matter tomorrow. I am sorry I cannot so do today.

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): A supplementary question I should like to direct to the Minister of Labour. I wonder whether the minister is aware that in the last few days railway lines were blown up and workers and their wives were threatened in Marquette, Michigan, where a Canadian ship is tied up at the present time. I wonder whether the Minister of Labour could tell us whether, if there is no implementation of the Norris report, there could be some precise action taken by the Canadian government to prevent these incidents happening.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the incident in Marquette involving the Canadian ship Red Wing, and of the threats apparently made to wives of workmen who would be involved with this particular ship. I would tell my hon. friend that the precise action to be taken falls under United States law. In various ports in the United States injunctive relief has been sought against this type of activity, in some cases with success and in other cases with very little success.

With regard to the situation in Chicago, I should tell the hon. member that the national labour relations board has now decided to press contempt charges against the S.I.U. and the I.L.A. as an alternative to action against individual union members who have refused to unload the Howard L. Shaw. This most recent incident in Marquette has been drawn to the attention of the Department of External Affairs for possible representations to the United States authorities.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Minister of Labour say whether there has been any communication received from Hal Banks, other than the tirade from the S.I.U. in recent days, in connection with the Norris report, or anything arising out of the actions on the great lakes?

Mr. MacEachen: The only communication I received was a telegram from Mr. Banks, which I think was received by other members of the government, complaining about the conduct of the Norris inquiry and making allegations that the inquiry was unfair. That is the only communication.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Could the Minister of Labour inform the house whether he has been successful in arranging a meeting with the U.S. secretary of labour, Mr. Wirtz, concerning this very serious problem?

Mr. MacEachen: It has been difficult, in view of the preoccupations of Mr. Wirtz in the United States, to arrange a mutually convenient time. I had hoped to meet him in Ottawa, but Mr. Wirtz is unable to leave his own preoccupations at this time. At the same time I also felt that the timing of the meeting might be so adjusted as to take into account any firm decisions made by the Canadian government about the Norris commission recommendations.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Did the Minister of Labour reply to the telegram from Hal Banks, and can we know the nature of the reply if there was one?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I have not replied as yet; I was working on a reply this morning.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question which I direct to the minister for external affairs. This is the first question I have directed to him, so I hope he is able to reply in, at most, two short sentences. Would the minister of external affairs, with his great capacity for bringing about agreements and action, contemplate going to Washington and taking up with the government of the United States, the whole question of Canadian ships being harassed in United States ports, and ask them to take some definite action?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the long and complicated question of my hon. friend I would simply say that my colleague the Minister of Labour and I are giving these matters our joint attention.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Labour a question along the same lines. I notice that he had some discussions today with the two independent legal counsel he has hired to deal with the Norris report, and I should like to ask him whether he asked these gentlemen also to advise him on the possibility of taking criminal action against Canada Steamship Lines or any of the other companies which the Norris report suggested may have been in collusion with Mr. Banks.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the decision to appoint special counsel was taken pursuant to a recommendation of Mr. Justice Norris with respect to the activities of the S.I.U. and its officers. In my informal discussions today with these gentlemen I did not go beyond that particular part of the recommendations made by Justice Norris.

Mr. Balcer: May I ask a further supplementary question. I wonder whether the minister could tell us if he is making any progress toward the implementation of the recommendation of the Norris report to the effect that the labour unions should be placed under government trusteeship.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the principal recommendation of the Norris report is the establishment of a trusteeship over the unions in the maritime transportation field. I may tell my hon. friend, in view of his question posed several days ago, that I have now received from all the unions affected, except the S.I.U., their support for the implementation of this particular recommendation of the Norris report.

B.C. FISHERMEN'S STRIKE—INQUIRY AS TO ARBITRATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I wanted to direct to the Minister of Fisheries but in his absence perhaps the parliamentary secretary can take it as notice. The question is with reference to the announcement made yesterday by the Minister of Fisheries respecting his recommendation of the establishment of a joint provincial-federal arbitrator in the British Columbia fishing dispute. Can the minister say whether the arbitration will proceed under provincial or federal arbitration legislation, also what will be the powers and terms of reference of the arbitrator?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will bring the question to the attention of the minister.

OLD AGE SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO EFFECTIVE DATE OF INCREASED PENSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister arising out of a statement or a reply which he gave to the house yesterday with regard to the pension plan. I did not notice any reference to any specific date in the Prime Minister's reply, yet this morning's press states that the government hopes to achieve this plan by January 1. I should like to ask him whether any additional information has been given outside the house with regard to this pension plan and, if so, whether the house could have the benefit of this information now.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I gave no such information and mentioned no such date either in the house or outside it.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In view of the date which has been suggested by the Canadian Press, can the Prime Minister confirm that it is the intention of the government that the $10 increase shall come into effect by that date, or is the government still considering making an announcement later this week as to what the effective date may be?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. I cannot confirm or deny it because I have made no such statement.

[Later:]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I have a supplementary question to put to the Prime Minister in relation to the question asked a little while ago on the subject of pensions. Did the government consider making the increase retroactive to April 8?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Mather.]

PENSIONS

INQUIRY AS TO ESTIMATED COST OF PLAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare a question. I wonder whether the hon. lady is in a position to give us a report on whether the qualified actuaries of the Department of National Health and Welfare who have studied the proposed federal contributory pension plan have confirmed the opinion of outside actuaries, as reported in the press, that the real cost of this plan is going to be between 9 per cent and 11 per cent?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, rather than the treasury departments' actuaries having studied the plan, as my friend suggests, they in fact helped to prepare the plan. The suggestion which has been made that the real cost will be 15 per cent is and always has been completely erroneous. As has been explained to all those who will listen, the figures which were given at the time of the submission are correct so far as actuaries are able to be precise bearing in mind that we are projecting into the future.

The maximum amount to the year 2000 which has been contemplated at any time is 5 per cent and not 15 per cent. It will be noted from releases made to the press by those who have suggested that 15 per cent will be the figure eventually, that they count together the 3 per cent personal income tax, 3 per cent corporation tax and 3 per cent sales tax which support the old age security fund, and add them as though they were a percentage of payroll and part of the contributory pension scheme itself when in fact they are on a completely different tax base. This is patently not correct, and anyone who knows his job as an actuary should know this.

Mr. Rynard: I have a supplementary question. What was the actual cost that the actuaries of the Department of National Health and Welfare brought down?

Miss LaMarsh: As was set out in the white paper, which I must assume my friend has read, and if he has, he has forgotten, the figure was 2 per cent.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—VISIT TO B.C. BY EXTERNAL AFFAIRS MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of press items to the effect that the minister will participate in the annual Kelowna regatta next Saturday—and I presume he will be the guest of the premier of the province of British Columbia—and that he then intends to tour the Columbia river basin in Canada and the United States on Monday; and in view of the minister's known affection for aquatic sports, would the hon. gentleman accept an invitation from the Arrow lakes water resources committee to a swimming gala on Sunday, August 4, which will provide an opportunity for a cool and objective discussion of the Columbia river treaty?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I should like to thank the hon. gentleman for having given me notice of his intention to ask this important question. I will have to give consideration to the invitation which the hon. member now sends across the floor, and I am sure that if it can be accepted I will get along with his constituents swimmingly.

Mr. Herridge: Would the minister let me know by not later than tomorrow evening so that I could have all the arrangements made?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I shall be glad to give consideration to this amended request of the hon. gentleman.

TRADE

O.E.C.D.—INVITATION TO JAPAN TO ACCEDE TO CONVENTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Leader of the Opposition asked yesterday whether it is the intention of the government to bring the question of Japan's membership in the O.E.C.D. before parliament for ratification, and I promised to reply today.

Under the O.E.C.D. convention, which this house has already approved, the O.E.C.D. council may decide to invite any government which is prepared to assume the obligations of membership to accede to the convention. The council of O.E.C.D. has now unanimously decided to invite the Japanese government to accede to it. Accession shall take effect upon the Japanese government's deposit of an instrument of accession with the depositary government.

I should like to take this opportunity to welcome Japan's forthcoming membership in the O.E.C.D. as a further evidence of increasing co-operation between Japan and the countries of Europe and North America.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): So there is nothing necessary to be done by this parliament in order to confirm Japan's adherence. May I, having asked that question and received the negative reply I did, join with the Secretary of State for External Affairs in welcoming Japan to membership of this organization. When I was in Japan a year and a half ago this was one matter which particularly exercised people there, and I am glad Japan is to become a member of this great organization.

WEST INDIES—STEPS TO PROMOTE TRADE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. As we are nearing the end of this part of the session, would the right hon. gentleman tell the house whether any special studies are contemplated or are being carried out in an effort to improve trade between Canada and the British West Indies, in keeping with his statement on this matter prior to the April 8 election? I ask this question because of the importance of improving trade between Nova Scotia, and the Atlantic provinces generally, and the British West Indies.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I appreciate the importance of this question, especially to the inhabitants of the Atlantic provinces. Attention is being given to it, and studies are under way as to what we could do to improve trade with the West Indies and what additional assistance we might be able to give which would help increase trade between the two areas.

CANADA-U.S.—STATEMENT BY AGRICULTURE MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. I wonder if he is in a position to clarify the situation with regard to a question I asked him on Monday afternoon in relation to a speech made by his colleague the Minister of Agriculture at Waterton Lake on the subject of American-Canadian trade relations.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I am very sorry. I have not had a chance to talk to my colleague the Minister of Agriculture, but I hope to do so before the recess.

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH RED CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister now in a position to report on the negotiations between the Canadian wheat board and the government of mainland China? If not, when does he expect to be able to make a report?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): These negotiations are now in their final stages. I had hoped I would have been in a position by today to make an announcement, but our Chinese customers are very astute and hard bargainers and the negotiations are not completed.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): In view of the fact that negotiations with mainland China are almost completed, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if the government should not be making arrangements to send the Minister of Agriculture to Hong Kong?

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REPLY TO INQUIRIES RESPECTING EXTENSION OF SERVICES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Yesterday, the hon. member for Rosthern asked me whether consideration was being given to establishing a French language television station in the province of Saskatchewan. I am afraid I cannot add anything to the answer which was given to his alert colleague, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, who anticipated this question on June 28 and represented the hon. gentleman's constituents at that time.

I was also asked a question about facilities in southwestern Saskatchewan by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek. I understand that as far as the C.B.C. is concerned nothing is contemplated in the immediate future. However, I think the hon. member is really interested in a difficulty between certain of the stations before the board of broadcast governors, and I would have to inquire further into that.

As far as the question asked by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary is concerned, I regret to say that at the present time, because of budgetary limitations and the high cost of providing service, it does not appear there is any immediate hope of action though the situation is being studied.

INQUIRIES OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I should like to address a very important question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister be willing to have the words "Air Canada" painted on crown owned aircraft if a few members of parliament bought the paint for the department? The minister can answer yes or no.

On a question of privilege, this question needs to be answered by a simple yes or no, not a statement.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I do not think I should be put in the position of commenting on the artistic ability of members of parliament.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the answer given to the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings yesterday on the question of the arrangements being made for the minister to attend a conference to be held in Washington on Friday, may I ask the minister how many students he proposes to invite along with him at this time to help him out?

(Translation):

PENITENTIARIES

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL—STEPS TO ENSURE SAFETY OF GUARDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice further to the one which I asked him yesterday concerning a delegation of the wives of the guards at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary. Does the minister have any further information to give us on that subject?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the member for Laval (Mr. Rochon) accompanied the delegation which I received in my office yesterday. I conferred with the delegates for half an hour and replied that their request would be considered in due time.

(Text):

ECONOMIC COUNCIL

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF CHAIRMAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council. Would the hon. gentleman be able to confirm that press reports relating to the expected appointment of Dr. John Deutsch as chairman of the economic council of Canada are factual?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen that report.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF WAGE SCALE FOR "B" GROUP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. On the basis of pay research bureau figures, is the government considering an immediate review of the wage scale for B group, grades 1 and 2 clerks, typists and clerical assistants in the civil service?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman was kind enough to give me notice of his question. In reply I may say that clerks 1 and 2 and other classes at comparable levels were not revised on October 1, 1961 because in the opinion of the government of the day the rates of pay compared favourably with those on the outside. These classes are to be reviewed again on October 1 next as part of the normal review of the B group.

AGRICULTURE

FEED GRAIN ASSISTANCE FOR EASTERN FARMERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Can we expect an announcement of government policy related to permanent feed grain assistance for eastern farmers before the recess?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we are working on this particular matter at the moment. I am hoping we may have something. Certainly we will have something before the grain starts to move.

IMPLEMENTATION OF FARM CREDIT ACT IN EASTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Lapointe asked me the following question:

> Can the minister inquire and report to this house why there are so many delays and refusals in the implementation of the Farm Credit Act in eastern Canada, and especially in the districts of Lake St. John, Saguenay and in my constituency of Lapointe?

I am informed by the Farm Credit Corporation that the percentage of loan refusals in eastern Canada is not significantly different from that in the rest of Canada, and that in Quebec in particular the percentage of refusals has been less than the national average.

There has been some delay, however, in the processing of applications in Quebec due to the unprecedented increase in the number of applications received. In 1961 by the end of June the corporation had received only 40 applications for loans. In 1962 by June 30, 291 applications had been received. By the same date this year 929 farmers had applied for loans, or about 23 times as many applications as were received two years earlier.

Since the spring of 1962 the corporation has increased its field staff in Quebec from 4 to 26 men. It takes time to recruit and train the men to do this kind of work, but the situation is well in hand and the work will be up to date by the end of the current appraisal season. Because of the large volume of applications received in the constituencies to which the hon. member for Lapointe referred, the corporation has assigned 4 men to bring the work up to date in this area.

Applications received expressed as a percentage of farmers interviewed are 50 per cent for all Canada and 59 per cent in Quebec. The percentage of applications rejected or withdrawn after appraisal of farm is 8.5 per cent for all Canada and 6 per cent for Quebec.

GRAIN

BRIEF RESPECTING ELEVATOR HANDLING AND STORAGE CHARGES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Moose Jaw-Lake Centre asked if I had any information concerning the brief presented in Winnipeg to the board of grain commissioners regarding grain elevator handling and storage charges for the crop year which begins on August 1.

On June 10, 1963, the hon. gentleman asked a somewhat similar question relating to a meeting to be held in Vancouver by the board of grain commissioners. On June 12, in reply, I informed the house that the board, under authority of section 15 of the Canada Grain Act, holds meetings annually at an easterly point, Winnipeg, and at Vancouver, where interested parties are invited to meet the board and present submissions respecting the maximum storage and handling rates for grain authorized by the board for each crop year.

With specific reference to the question, I can inform the house that the board of grain commissioners held a public meeting in Winnipeg yesterday commencing at 10 a.m. for the purpose I have mentioned, and heard seven briefs presented by interested parties. The board of grain commissioners met at 10 a.m. this morning in Winnipeg to study and discuss these briefs as well as those submitted to the meetings held in Montreal on May 3 and in Vancouver on July 3.

Inquiries of the Ministry

I am pleased to inform the house that this afternoon the board of grain commissioners announced a reduction in the elevator charge at country elevators on wheat, barley, rye and corn from 3 cents per bushel to 2¾ cents per bushel.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO ACTION RESPECTING FUND

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that the minister foresees a greater number of unemployed during the winter months, would the minister tell the house what measures he has taken to assure that the unemployment insurance fund will be sufficient to meet the requirements?

Mr. Pearson: The one that went bankrupt.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think I should clarify the preamble to the hon. gentleman's question by stating that in reply to a question last week I conveyed to the house information I had received from my officials with respect to employment prospects; and I think upon reading that statement, which was carefully qualified, it will be seen that my projections applied particularly to this fall.

With respect to the second part of the question, in connection with the unemployment insurance fund, action has already been taken by the government to replenish the fund, and within the next few months the fund will replenish itself because contributions to the fund will exceed benefit payments. The resolution of the long term problem of the fund will depend upon the action taken by this parliament in connection with the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act itself. As I have stated, the act is presently under consideration and it is hoped that the government will be in a position to recommend action on this matter.

Mr. Ricard: May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the first answer the minister gave, will he agree with me that he really foresees a greater number of unemployed than we have now?

Mr. MacEachen: The information I conveyed to the house last Friday, I believe, was information that had been conveyed to me shortly after I became Minister of Labour and had been collected and available prior to the swearing in of the present government. The indication was that unemployment would be greater this September than last September.

[Mr. Hays.]

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Will the minister inform the house as to the methods by which the government intends to increase the unemployment insurance fund? Can he explain to the house what methods he has in mind?

Mr. MacEachen: The traditional method in the past is well known to hon. members. Action has been taken by this house itself several times to replenish the fund. Any further action, other than this, will depend upon the decision of the government as to what amendments or changes ought to be made in the operation of the fund and in the operation of the act.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I should like to address another question to the Minister of Labour. Is it the intention of the minister to consult experts on this question?

HEALTH AND WELFARE

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the urgency of this matter in many homes across this country, I should like to ask if it is the intention of the government to extend family allowance benefits before the school term opens in September to children up to 18 years of age who will be returning to school at that time.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this extension is part of our legislative program. If we had been able to accomplish more this session, it might have been done by now.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I should like to offer a suggestion to the Prime Minister. If he is prepared to bring forth the family allowance extension and also the resolution introducing the Canada pension act, we will give him quick and courteous co-operation.

Mr. Pearson: If there had not been so much delay and obstruction on the other side—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: —I repeat that this might well have been done by now.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Only the day before yesterday the Secretary of State was commending the opposition for its co-operation. I suggest that the two hon. gentlemen get together.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I only wish that the co-operation we have had in the last few days had existed for the first 40 days of this session.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You were in the wilderness then. You did not know where you were going.

[Later:]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, is it the intention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare to withdraw the payment of family allowances for little boys and little girls who smoke?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): May I answer by saying that family allowance payments are made to the mother.

Mr. Balcer: I did not want to attack the hon. lady personally because, being over 17, she is not included with the little girls who get family allowances.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I direct a question to either the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State in his capacity as house leader. In view of the suggestions that have been made about family allowances and old age pensions, would the government accept an offer from the house to sit next week or come back earlier in September so that we could deal with these two important pieces of legislation?

Mr. Pearson: We hope to deal with these two important matters at the earliest possible date after our return.

Mr. Starr: Now we know the reason it was not brought forward.

Mr. Knowles: In view of this announcement, will consideration be given to our being brought back earlier than September 30 so that we can go ahead with these matters?

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR SUPPORT PRICE FOR PINK SALMON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I have a question for the Secretary of State, which, in his capacity as Acting Minister of Fisheries he may wish to take as notice. In view of the fact that one of the principal factors in the fisheries situation in British Columbia involves the price being paid for pink salmon, and in view of the fact that this condition arises out of the very abnormal catch of pink salmon last year, will the minister indicate whether the government will consider directing the fisheries prices support board to take action in this connection which might facilitate the settlement of this dispute, and which might make the task of an arbitrator considerably easier if he comes into the picture?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Since I am not Acting Minister of Fisheries, I probably should not take this speech made by the hon. gentleman as notice. I have no doubt that if the hypothesis suggested by the hon. gentleman turns out ultimately to be a fact, the Minister of Fisheries will give consideration to the hypothetical proposition put forward.

Mr. Barnett: I suggest to the minister that he visit British Columbia, and then he might know as much about our problems as he undoubtedly knows about those of his area.

Mr. Pickersgill: My hon. friend the Solicitor General is the Acting Minister of Fisheries, and I am sure he will be glad to take notice of the hon. gentleman's question.

TRANSPORT

GRAIN—REQUEST FOR USE OF PORTS OF HALIFAX AND SAINT JOHN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the announcement today of a large new grain elevator in Quebec and the reference to possible wheat sales, will the minister investigate the possibility of directing shipments through the ports of Halifax and Saint John, thus making use of the excellent facilities for grain in the forthcoming season? In fact, these ports have not been used to any great advantage within the last three years.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, I would be happy to look into it.

(Translation):

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

INQUIRY AS TO PURCHASE OF CARAVELLE PLANES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport. Has he received or asked for a report from Trans-Canada Air Lines engineers concerning the purchase of Caravelle aircraft? Could he tell the house whether he is aware of the study being carried out in the last four or five months with a view to choosing between four types of aircraft? Has the minister received this report and, if so, is he in a position to inform the house on this matter?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that this is a question for the order paper.

Mr. Valade: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Speaker: There is no point of privilege. I have ruled on the question after listening to it very carefully.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Is he aware that Trans-Canada Air Lines has made a study concerning the purchase of Caravelle aircraft?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is the same question in an indirect way.

Mr. Valade: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker; I would like to ask Your Honour to inform me in what way my question is out of order. I heard an hon. member of the N.D.P. a little while ago ask a question concerning statistical information, which Your Honour allowed. My question is asking whether the minister has received a report from Air Canada concerning the Caravelle transaction.

Mr. Speaker: Two wrongs do not make a right. I refer the hon. gentleman to Bourinot and other authorities, under citation 113. If not there, he will find other authorities on the point.

(Translation):

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

SUGGESTED CONFERENCE TO REDRAFT CONSTITUTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell the house when he intends to convene a federal-provincial conference or a meeting of the states general of the country, in order to consider the means of redrafting the constitution, as he stated himself at a press conference held after the last federal-provincial conference?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I made no such announcement of course, and there will be a federal-provincial meeting in the autumn.

PARLIAMENT HILL

SHORTAGE OF PARKING SPACE DURING CHANGING OF THE GUARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to interrupt again, but on Friday last I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he would ask his friends in the diplomatic corps to give up their parking space for the benefit of visitors and other persons during the changing of the guard. In reply he said the question had certain implications and he would leave it over until Monday. Has he anything further to report on this question?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Not at the moment, Mr. Speaker.

SHIPPING

ASSISTANCE FOR SHIP CAUGHT IN NORTHERN ICE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Rheaume) asked me if the Department of Transport would provide the services of icebreakers to the Danish freighter the Helga Dan, trapped in the Resolute bay area. I have further information that I would like to add to the information I gave in answer to his question.

The agents of this ship were advised orally that they were planning to send the ship into Lancaster sound earlier than was the practice and that ice conditions might not permit passage. They were informed in writing that no icebreaker would be in that area before August 12.

I understand the Helga Dan encountered severe ice conditions in Lancaster sound and has since withdrawn to open water in Baffin bay to await improved conditions. The Canadian coastguard have no icebreakers within 1,000 miles of this position and they are fully occupied on their respective duties. This includes a considerable amount of escorting of commercial grain ships to and from Churchill, as ice conditions in the northern Hudson bay and Hudson strait still require this service this year.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EXTENSION OF SITTING HOURS ON AUGUST 1

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, before the next order of business is called, I believe there is general agreement in the house that tomorrow we might begin our sitting at two o'clock, take an hour off from six to seven o'clock and continue from seven to eleven o'clock. If I am correct in interpreting the agreement I wonder if that could be so ordered.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): As of an hour and a half ago there was an inclination on our side to agree to such an extension of hours, but in view of the remarks of the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State accusing, quite incorrectly, the opposition of obstruction—

An hon. Member: Another double cross.

Mr. Churchill: —and this additional interruption, I now serve notice on the house leader that there is no agreement to any such extension of hours for tomorrow.

Mr. Pickersgill: I had assumed, sir, I was dealing with gentlemen.

Mr. Churchill: Well, Mr. Speaker, everybody in the house recognizes the type of remark now made by this person who purports to be a gentleman. If there is to be confidential exchange of information by house leaders then it should remain that way, instead of this public accusation and the insinuation that there has been some difference of opinion, together with the interruption from the Minister of Veterans Affairs—double cross—a typical statement by that person.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Churchill: I have the floor on a question of privilege. If the Prime Minister wishes the house to conduct itself in a co-operative manner, as we have shown, then I think he had better express to the house some regret for the statement he made this afternoon, and let him indicate to the house when he would like this portion of the session to be concluded and when we are coming back in September.

The opposition has been trying successfully to indicate its responsibility in the house, co-operating with the government. We have passed several measures and we have co-operated with the house leader on shortening certain debates and things of that nature. Now to be accused in this manner and have this insinuation made by the house leader, is carrying the thing a bit too far, and the time has come to make this protest, and I do so on this occasion.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, seeing my name has been brought into this discussion perhaps I may be permitted to say a word. The government has been criticized, and indeed attacked, during the question period because we had not taken certain action in respect of children's allowances and in respect of the immediate introduction and passage of pension legislation. In reply to those charges I said—and if I said it in tones that irritated hon. gentlemen opposite I am sorry—that it was due to the fact we had been delayed that we had not been able to do all the things we wanted to do in this portion of the session. That is what I said—delay and obstruction—and if that irritated the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre I am sorry.

I agree with the hon. gentleman who just sat down that if there were undertakings made, those undertakings should be observed, and I hope they will be carried out on all sides of the house.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has accused me of using the word "double cross" to him. I made no such statement, and I would ask him to pay closer attention.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, if the minister did not make the remark, I apologize to him. But somebody on that side did, and I suggest that he stand up and be recognized.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman asked when we might be able to complete our work, have a recess and come back. I hope that notwithstanding what has happened in the last few minutes, we will be able to complete this part of the session, unless there is legislation to implement the Norris report, before the end of this week. That depends, of course, on hon. members opposite. I hope we will be able to come back on September 30, if that is agreeable to hon. members opposite. If that is to be done perhaps, notwithstanding what has happened in the last few minutes, we could extend the hours tomorrow and perhaps even extend them a little on Friday.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, in the discussions held last night we from this group indicated we would be prepared to go ahead with the extension of hours in order to facilitate the completion of business. I just want to say at this time that we are still prepared to stick with our word.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bell: That is a change from last year.

Mr. Ricard: We know why.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Speaker, some hon. members are having quite a time containing themselves. It might be a good thing if we had a five minute recess to cool off, so we could come back here and face this situation realistically. We feel the business of the house should be expedited, and therefore we are quite prepared and would be very happy to carry through with the extension of hours to make that possible.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, for the record may I say that following the discussions that were held last evening we took up the matter in our caucus this morning and indicated to the Secretary of State that we were agreeable to extending the hours tomorrow and Friday, so we would sit from 2 o'clock in the afternoon until 11 o'clock in the evening. I rise now only to say that even after what has just happened, if further negotiations on this point are indicated we are prepared to participate in such further negotiations.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I think this situation should be cleared up, and cleared up very definitely. Yesterday the house leader suggested that we sit today until 7 o'clock. That is inconvenient to our party and I so indicated to him, I then made the suggestion—it is reported in Hansard on page 2834—of extending the hours on Thursday and perhaps on Friday. Then having made that suggestion and having said I would talk to my colleagues about it, we come back in the house today and get accusations about obstruction. This is no way to operate a parliament.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: If the suggestion comes from the opposition and we are willing to co-operate, and then we are kicked all over the lot and accused of obstruction, what are we to think when trying to make agreements among parties? The type of thing that has occurred this morning indicates that it is becoming a bit impossible to co-operate with a government that is so unappreciative of what has been done.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: We now have the usual howling down from the Grit side. This has been going on for years. On occasion the Secretary of State, the house leader, has expressed appreciation for our speeding up various portions of debate, and quite properly so. Then he changes his mind today and shouts other words about not co-operating, and things of that nature. This is the situation: The offer was made by myself, just as it was made two weeks ago with regard to the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce, and those estimates were carried through successfully.

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest to all hon. members that the Speaker is very pleased with the progress we have made in the last few days. I suggest that we turn the page, close the chapter and get on with the orders of the day.

EXCISE TAX ACT

The house resumed from Tuesday, July 30, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-90, to amend the Excise Tax Act—Mr. Gordon—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

[Mr. Knowles.]

On clause 9—Refund of tax.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose last evening it was agreed, I believe, that its consideration of the bill had concluded, with the exception of clause 9. It was understood that before we resumed today, consideration would be given to the proposals of several hon. members and especially the suggestion of the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue for amending clause 9 where it refers to tenders.

Since last evening I have studied this matter in consultation with my colleagues and the officials of the department concerned, and especially with my colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration who has an amendment to propose which I believe will meet with the approval of the committee. In drafting this amendment we have had very much in mind the various points raised by hon. members concerning the special features of the law in the province of Quebec. Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I could now ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration if he would move the amendment which has been drafted.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, before that happens may I address a point to the government in regard to this question; it will possibly affect their thinking in regard to this particular point. The discussion last night was germane to those contracts which did not have a pecuniary penalty and where a building was actually being built for an owner. I would submit to the Minister of Finance—I think he has received representations in this regard—that in the commercial field and in the industrial field particularly buildings are often erected for purposes of very long term lease, where contracts have actually been signed to lease the building at a stated rent based upon the amortization of the cost of the building.

Clause 9 as proposed does not take into account any contract of this type. Certainly with regard to the province of Ontario I would suggest that a very important segment of the commercial and industrial construction field or realty field will be adversely affected. I think these people would be caught in the provision by that passage wherein it is said that property in the goods must pass. I say this because we know that under a lease property in the goods does not pass; the contractor retains ownership in the goods while the building is leased. I would put it to the minister that if it is still part of the philosophy of the budget to stimulate industry and maintain economic progress, this is one sector to which much closer attention should be paid and in regard to which appropriate modifications should be considered favourably by the government. I should like to ask the minister to comment upon that point.

Mr. Gordon: I can assure the hon. member that this matter has been under careful consideration. It is a difficult one to apply because it all depends on these leasing arrangements how much of a building has been rerented or leased. We came to the conclusion in our consideration that with the staging of the application of the tax and with the extension of the period of exemption to the end of 1964, that was as far as we could go without opening the thing wider.

Mr. Lambert: In other words, there will be no tax exemption whatsoever with respect to buildings erected for leasing purposes?

Mr. Gordon: That is correct.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I should like to move an amendment to clause 9 of the bill which amends passages on page 11. This amendment, I am pleased to say does, in my opinion at least, reflect the suggestion made yesterday by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue and other hon. members, and agreed to by myself and other hon. members on this side. The amendment will have the effect, if accepted, of including the substance of the provision already included in paragraph (b) of subsection 1 of clause 9. It will also provide for an exemption in cases where, under the law present or future of any province, an indication in an offer or tender of a delay or time within which it may be accepted has the effect, or would have the effect, of binding the offerer or the tenderer to maintain his offer or tender during the whole period so specified. I have circulated copies to the representatives of the various parties. I move an amendment as follows:

That Bill C-90, to amend the Excise Tax Act, be amended by striking out lines 9 to 17 and lines 41 to 49 on page 11 thereof and substituting therefor in each case the following:

(ii) after June 13, 1963, if the contract was entered into

(A) in accordance with the terms of a tender in writing submitted by that person on or before that day, under which that person in the event of the acceptance of such tender undertook to enter into such a contract and in default of so doing to incur a penalty, whether by forfeiture of a security deposit or otherwise, or upon the acceptance of which that person became otherwise obligated under any law applicable thereto to enter into such a contract, or

(B) by the acceptance of an offer in writing submitted by that person on or before that day, under which that person undertook expressly or by necessary implication to hold such offer open for acceptance for a specified period and thereby became obligated under any law applicable thereto to hold such offer open for acceptance accordingly,

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I naturally appreciate the minister's presenting an amendment which substantially responds to the amendment I proposed last night, except that the amendment in its original form would have eliminated certain ambiguities. I am a little concerned as to the way in which the officials of the department will interpret the clauses. I should like to ask the minister with regard to subparagraph (B), which contains the words "undertook expressly"—which are plain enough—and "or by necessary implication", who will decide whether or not there was such a necessary implication to hold the offer open till the specified period? Will it be the officials of the department, and will the tenderer, the contractor, be under an obligation to submit his tender and supporting evidence to the officials in order that he may qualify for the exemption?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, if I might answer that I think two things must be remarked upon. First of all, in any legal text dealing with taxation, such as customs or excise, an officer of the department, under the direction of the minister, always has to an extent to interpret or to apply the text; as a matter of fact, by applying it he is also interpreting it. When he is in doubt about it, or the validity of his interpretation is placed in doubt by the taxpayer, there will then of necessity be a reference to the Department of Justice. The normal consequence is that if there is then no understanding it becomes a matter which only the courts can settle.

The question here is whether the text is satisfactory to the hon. member, who as we know is a good lawyer. Is the text sufficient in his opinion exactly to convey the legal consequences or the protection which he has in mind? I think it is. Whether it be this text or another text, very often taxpayers will not agree with departmental officers, and if a ruling from the Department of Justice is not acceptable, then the matter has to resolve itself into a legal case. We hope to eliminate that as far as possible, but some are unavoidable. I am sure the hon. member will agree with me that there is no room here to define "undertook expressly or by necessary implication", which in French would be, of course, "expressement ou tacitement". I submit that we should not go further than that.

Mr. Lambert: May I thank the Minister of Finance for the answer he gave me, although from my point of view it was unsatisfactory. What I was trying to do was to bring this provision in conformity with a similar provision which applies in the province of Ontario. I should like to put this on the record to indicate that this wording, which is used by the province of Ontario, would cover the situation admirably:

> Where a construction contractor has entered into a fixed price or lump sum construction contract before the 30th day of March, 1961—

—and here we would substitute "June 13, 1963"—

> —or where such a construction contract was tendered by such person before—and I would interpose "June 13, 1963"—

> —and was accepted without adjustment thereafter, the treasurer may authorize a rebate of the tax paid by the construction contractor on the tangible personal property that enters directly into and becomes part of the construction or alteration of any building or other structure on land covered by such a contract.

This, in my submission, would cover the case I had in mind.

Mr. Gordon: I am sure the construction industry would be delighted with the representations which the hon. gentleman has just made, but I am afraid they are unacceptable to the government.

Mr. Otto: I think hon. members should be reminded of the implications of this amendment. We are being asked to expand the powers of the administrators by giving them the further duty of interpreting whether there is a penalty or whether there is an obligation. This is, of course, normally the duty of the judiciary. In the last analysis only the courts can decide whether or not a penalty can be enforced. If the only task left to the administration under the terms of the amendment was to interpret certain words, that could be one thing, but to give these servants of the public the responsibility of judging whether a penalty is enforceable is another. I thought I would bring this point to the attention of members of the committee before we vote on the amendment.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Lambert: On division.

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the clause as amended carry?

Mr. Lambert: On division.

Clause 9 agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the bill carry?

Mr. Lambert: On division.

The Chairman: Shall I report the bill?

[Mr. Lambert.]

Mr. Gordon: Before you leave the chair, Mr. Chairman, may I thank you and all the members of the committee for their co-operation and assistance?

Bill reported.

Mr. Speaker: When shall this bill be read the third time? Now?

Some hon. Members: Next sitting of the house.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT AND DEFINITION OF DUTIES

The house resumed from Tuesday, July 30, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of an economic council of Canada—Mr. Lamontagne—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Clauses 2 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 9—Duties of council.

(Translation):

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, yesterday, when we were discussing the first section of the bill now before us, I asked the minister if he would be kind enough to indicate the plan he proposed to carry out to promote the expansion of our Canadian economy.

I notice that paragraph (a) of section 9, among others, refers to some plan. I quote paragraph (a):

> (a) regularly to assess, on a systematic and comprehensive basis, the medium term and long term prospects of the economy, and to compare such prospects with the potentialities of growth of the economy;

Well, Mr. Chairman, the minister has not yet given us the various elements of that plan. Now, not only does this bill indicate that there is such a plan, but it clearly states that it will be sanctioned by legislation.

Therefore, I respectfully submit that it is the minister's duty to tell us what that plan is, so that we may know where we are going.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that it is up to me to say what that plan will be. As a matter of fact, it will be one of the duties of the council, as stated in paragraph (a):

> to assess the medium and long term prospects,

—and then to appraise the potentialities of growth in our Canadian economy.

In short, it is simply a question of attempting in Canada an experiment made in several European countries, without perhaps going as far as in France, but rather following the example set by countries like the Netherlands and others where experts, in co-operation with industry, with the private sector, assess the potentialities of expansion, considering their resources and also the exigencies of a full employment policy.

After studying these possibilities, the council must then evaluate what could be the rate of growth of the economy as a whole in order to reach that objective. Then, discussions must be held with the governments and the private sector of the economy to find out what their plans are, if, at the start, the rate of growth were to be 4, 5 or 6 per cent, according to the initial suggestion.

There is no question here of elaborating a plan without consulting any one and then imposing it by control or coercion; on the contrary, it is only a matter of indicating the objectives to the economy and to ensure that the private sector and the other governments know them in a general way and are doing their best to adapt to them freely.

(Text):

Mr. Thompson: I believe clause 9 brings us to one of the crucial parts of this bill. I think the government should be commended for being careful to bring in all aspects that will provide an opportunity for co-operation and consultation between the various aspects of the economy. I note the following, for example, in clause 9 (f):

> to study and discuss with representatives of the industries concerned and with representatives of labour, farmers and other primary producers, and other occupational groups and organizations, what specific plans for production and investment in major industries in Canada will best contribute to a high and consistent rate of economic growth.

The same theme is continued in subclauses (g), (h) and (i). I believe this is good. I was much impressed with the report on economic planning published by the private planning association of Canada, which I think most of us have had in our hands in recent days. To support the thought I am going to present with regard to this clause, I read the following from page 85 of the report:

> The government in our society is expected, quite rightly, to take the lead in both formulating and ranking national objectives. This may be hampered, however, if there is a widespread misunderstanding about the meaning of the objectives, and about the appropriate set of economic policy measures. The importance of price stability, the meaning of a full employment objective, the advantages of a counter-cyclical fiscal policy are the sorts of topics over which there is much public confusion. As in some European countries, it would be highly desirable to establish more effective communication and understanding between government, economic experts and economic interest groups about appropriate objectives and policies.

Economic Council of Canada

I note with interest, and I mentioned it today during the question period, that press reports indicate that Dr. John Deutsch of Queen's University is being proposed as the head of the economic council. If this is the type of man the government is thinking of for the council, it is good. I think the council can serve a really useful purpose in our economy because certainly there are many aspects of our economy that the economic council is going to be able to assist.

But in reading the subclauses in clause 9 which I have mentioned I think there is something missing. I should like to suggest to the President of the Privy Council that it might be well, just to make sure that these things come to pass as I believe we mutually agree they should, if an additional subclause were added. I would suggest something like this as subclause (k): "To conduct, as directed to do so by the minister, reviews of medium and long range programs of the government of Canada that are designed to aid or assist industry, labour and agriculture".

If this is not added to the responsibilities of the economic council, there is a possibility we will not give the council the full opportunity of function that I think it must have to bring about the co-operation and the spirit of seeking to solve problems together that we must have, not only from labour, not only from management but also from government. Therefore I make this suggestion to the minister trusting that he will consider it because this is the real heart and crux of what we are trying to get at here so far as the duties of the council are concerned.

(Translation):

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, according to the remarks of the President of the Privy Council, in reply to a question of the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue, we—and I would like the minister to correct me if this was not the meaning of his remarks—the government has no plan for economic expansion and the whole thing will be left to the economic council, the establishment of which is provided for under this bill.

Am I right in that conclusion? As I understood the minister's remarks, the government has no economic expansion plan at present and it must rely on the research, recommendations and suggestions of the council. Is that what he meant?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, I never said that this government had no economic expansion plan.

Mr. Paul: But did not the minister reply to the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue that it was not the government's responsibility to prepare plans but that it would rather be a duty of the council created under this bill?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, I believe I said that I had no responsibility for preparing a draft plan.

In my opinion, and experience has shown this to be true in several countries, those indicative plans must be developed in several stages. And, normally during the first stage experts are called upon to prepare draft plans in order to establish the broad objectives, and then those who have to make decisions within the economic structures, either in the private or government sector, can take their own responsibilities.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, may I put a supplementary question? Does the minister intend, on behalf of the government, to submit to the committee some plans of action considered by the government, such as the profits, the advantages, and the development which could be brought about by the implementation of those plans?

Mr. Lamontagne: We shall certainly have the opportunity to submit such proposals, Mr. Chairman.

(Text):

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I just want to ask a couple of questions. In going through the duties listed here I notice that there seems to be, by their very absence, a studious effort to avoid using the word "resources" or "resource use" or "resource uses". I imagine I know who drafted the bill and I imagine that he has a certain interest in natural resources. I wondered why there was this apparently deliberate ignoring in this clause on duties of the fact that almost all of our major industries in this country, such as mining, pulp and paper and so on, are based upon resource use.

There may be a simple explanation for this. It may be because we have a new interprovincial-federal resource secretariat which may be going to get involved in cost benefit analyses in this field, and so to specify amongst the duties of the economic council anything regarding resources would perhaps be impinging on their field. Perhaps it was felt that reference to resource use might impinge upon the traditional rights of the provinces. I should like some explanation from the minister about that matter because it does seem to me it is going to be bootless to have an economic council that is genuinely coming to grips with economic plans for this country if it ignores the fact that almost all our industry is related pretty directly to natural resources. That is the first group of questions I wanted to ask the minister.

The second relates to what has been mentioned about the persons who are going to be carrying on these duties.

It is quite apparent, Mr. Chairman, when one runs through the duties of this board that the group of 20 people who will be on the council will not have time to even have more than a smattering of interest or a modicum of understanding of many of these problems if there are genuine studies being conducted. About all the three permanent members of the council and whatever secretariat it has can do is just inform them of what is taking place. I just wanted to ask the minister whether consideration had been given to making more specific the greater responsibility of the three permanent members in regard to the duties and somewhat less onerous set of responsibilities for what you might call the members at large.

I would certainly feel, for example, that if we had someone like Dr. Deutsch as head of the economic council—I myself do not believe he would be the best appointment because, as I believe the minister knows, he is a relatively conservative economist—and suppose someone from a company in Winnipeg was one of the 25 members, then I think the public needs to understand very clearly that the businessman from Winnipeg who might be picked would have much less in the way of responsibility, much less in the way of understanding of what the economic council is involved in than the three permanent members. In other words, I am arguing that we need to have an understanding that there is a real distinction in responsibility and in what we can expect from the three permanent members and the others. I wanted to know from the minister if he could give any indication as to whether or not he feels this way.

Mr. Lamontagne: The hon. member has raised two different questions. The first one was related to the problem of resources. I think that the resource industries would certainly be covered by the wording which is used there. We have certainly not excluded this group of industries in any deliberate way. When we refer to the medium term and long term prospects of the economy and compare such prospects with the potentialities for growth of the economy, then I feel those expressions are certainly all-embracing.

If we consider the other paragraphs, I think we will find the same general expression being used, so we cannot say that there is any exclusion from the scope of studies and recommendations which is envisaged.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask the minister a specific question on that point? A great deal of the United States description of this area has hinged upon the Paley report and studies prepared by Stamford university in respect of natural resources, but there is a new study put out which is very complex and available right now. I have not seen copies of it, but it refers to resource prospects of the United States and how they dovetail in with economic planning. It seems, in a way, almost unexplainable how anyone could sit down and set out the duties of a council which the government considers very important, and completely miss this resource factor. I wondered whether it was on account of any sensitivities.

I am taking a long time to get to my question. Do I take it from what the minister has said there was no deliberate intention of ignoring resources?

Mr. Lamontagne: There certainly was no deliberate intention of ignoring them. As the hon. member can see, there is no exclusion of them. When the term "economy" is being used, surely one cannot be more comprehensive. I would certainly expect there would be no exclusion. If we are to envisage the prospects of the Canadian economy, I cannot see how we could arrive at the right appraisal of our prospects if we exclude the resource industries from this analysis.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask the minister on this point if he will look at paragraph (j) which refers to seeking full and regular consultation with appropriate agencies of the governments of the several provinces? Is that broad enough to include this new resource secretariat?

Mr. Lamontagne: I think this would be quite possible. I would hope that the discussions which are taking place in this special committee would be communicated on a regular basis to the economic council. What we envisage more specifically in paragraph (j) is constant liaison with the similar agencies existing at the provincial level. As the hon. member knows, most of the provinces now have similar economic councils which are responsible for more or less the same duties. We would certainly hope that there would be constant co-operation and collaboration, an exchange of information, in a way that we consider would be helpful.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, the President of the Privy Council will agree with me, as he pointed out a while ago, that the co-operation of all organizations in the nation is required so that the work of the economic council can be successful. It needs the co-operation of municipalities and provinces; on that matter, I should like to ask the minister whether he took the opportunity of the federal-provincial conference held in Ottawa to give a copy of this bill to the premiers and ask their opinion about it, that is whether they are ready to co-operate with that economic council so that it can be successful.

The minister knows himself that the provinces are touchy on that point. In fact, especially these last few weeks, voices have been heard in Quebec and in some other provinces to the effect that their autonomy was in jeopardy, that this was a new encroachment of the federal government on a provincial jurisdiction. Well, I think this bill is really an encroachment on provincial jurisdiction in certain fields, and that is why I am asking whether the premiers did promise to the minister that they would fully co-operate, because it would be useless for the minister to set up that economic council if the provinces are not ready to co-operate. I should also like to know whether the minister intends to consult with the provinces, if he has not yet done so, and even to ask the provinces whether they would like to delegate representatives to that council in order to provide for a full, complete and effective co-operation from everyone.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member knows, the establishment of the economic council was not on the agenda of the last federal-provincial conference, so that this federal agency was not discussed.

However, over the week end, I had the opportunity of discussing the matter informally with certain representatives of a few provinces, and especially of the province of Quebec, and I am convinced that we can depend on the full co-operation of those provinces, and especially of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, following the statement he has just made, I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question.

I know that the discussions were of a semi-official nature, since the purpose of the federal-provincial conference was not to examine the setting up of the said economic council. However, could the minister inform the house about the kind of co-operation he hopes to receive from the provincial authorities, including those of the province of Quebec, since he has told us that the premier of Quebec had given him to understand that he would co-operate with the federal government. We would appreciate it if the minister were to give us more details about that.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, as I explained a while ago, that co-operation will be given both within the terms of reference of the economic council and within the terms of reference of the provincial agencies of a similar nature.

Furthermore, the hon. member is certainly aware of the fact that there now exists in the province of Quebec, as in several others, an economic guidance council the responsibilities of which are about the same as those of this federal economic council.

On the other hand, we know that the provinces do not have the necessary information to undertake successfully long term planning of this kind.

It could even be said—and this, to my mind, is obvious—that we do not have, at the national level, all the information required to make accurate forecasts and that we really have to look upon the situation from an international point of view. That is why I feel that we have a tremendous opportunity here of trying not only to ensure the co-operation of similar provincial bodies but of establishing relations with foreign organizations, both in Europe and in the United States, so as to increase reciprocally our knowledge of the present and of the future.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, one last question before passing on to something else.

Is it not the opinion of the minister that it would be advantageous if each premier were to appoint a liaison officer who would be a member of the staff of the economic council? This would allow for better co-ordination, not to mention the fact that an over-all plan could thus be set up which would protect provincial autonomy and the rights of all the parties concerned.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that this suggestion can be entertained either by the provinces or by the federal government.

In my opinion, we should keep, as far as possible, the various jurisdictions separate in our country, if we want to establish subsequently a co-operative federalism. Now, it should be noted that in the bill now under consideration, one of the main duties of the economic council will consist in making recommendations to the federal government in order to implement the policies which will come under the latter's jurisdiction. It would not be advisable that representatives from provincial governments make recommendations to the federal government with regard to federal policies.

I do not believe either that the provinces would agree to the suggestion to appoint officials within a federal body whose duties would be to submit recommendations with respect to the implementation of federal policies.

Besides, I do not think that this would be necessary. I feel that through the information we will exchange from now on, this type of co-operation will be enough to enable not only provincial organizations, but also the economic council of Canada, to carry out their respective duties.

(Text):

Mr. Thompson: I would like to come back for a moment to the point raised by the hon. member for Port Arthur, because the subject of our resources is very basic to the over-all planning of the economy of the country. In the light of the fact that the minister has said there is no exclusion of resources, I wonder whether he would not care to indicate that resources could be included in paragraph (h) which reads:

> To explore and evaluate particular projects of major significance for the expansion of industrial and other economic activities.

We must have the assurance that our natural resources, so far as our general economy is concerned, are included here.

Mr. Lamontagne: I do not think this would really improve the bill because if we started to specify a special group of industries then, in order to ensure there would be no exclusion, we would probably have to provide a long list of industries, including manufacturing and service industries.

Mr. Thompson: I did not mean to include them. I just wanted a statement from the minister that resources were included in the over-all definition.

Mr. Lamontagne: I thought I had made myself quite clear, in my answer to a previous question, that they were included. I would like to come back to the suggestion made by the hon. member a moment ago. So far as I am concerned I would be quite satisfied to accept his suggestion, and I understand my colleague, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, is prepared to move an amendment which will satisfy him.

(Translation):

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, before the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration moves his amendment, it might be desirable to complete the discussion on general matters. Therefore, I have a few questions I wish to ask the minister and which are related to this clause.

The minister said a moment ago that the council would only make recommendations which come under federal jurisdiction. I suppose that they will be recommendations on economic matters.

In view of his previous statement, does he think that, under our type of federalism, it is possible, through such an organization or any similar one, to develop in Canada a planning system?

Then he referred to the plan which exists in some European countries. The other day he seemed to think that the setting up of this council was the beginning for Canada of a planning system such as we find in France. Today, he says that it will not be quite the same as in France but that the plan may be similar to what is done in France and in some other countries.

Well, I ask him if the council will assume the same responsibilities as the planning board in France and, if so, in what way can it do so because, before it can operate like the French planning board, should there not be a plan? In spite of the many questions I have asked him, I have not had a reply from him about the way he sees that plan.

He said a moment ago that it is important that objectives be indicated. But he did not say who would establish those objectives and how they would be attained. I would appreciate it if the minister gave us some details on those points.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, this could start a long discussion. The hon. member—

Mr. Martineau: Well, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Lamontagne: No, no—

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, the minister refers to a long discussion. We are discussing here the most important part of the whole bill now under study. If the minister refuses a discussion on the only important section of the bill, when shall we have an opportunity to know his opinion on the matter?

Mr. Lamontagne: I think that the hon. member, notwithstanding what happened a while ago, must be patient. I am of the opinion that he will be satisfied with a shorter discussion, because we could discuss this legislation all night.

To revert to the question raised, I believe that in a certain way the economic council will play the part of the Commissariat au Plan in France.

If my hon. friend has studied well the duties of the Commissariat au Plan, no doubt he will realize that it is, as a matter of fact, that agency which worked out the first outline of the French plan. I do not mean that we shall go as far as that right at the beginning. Besides, the hon. member knows also that the whole planning experience in France started right after the war, when the country was disorganized economically and did not have the research and statistical services that we have at our disposal in Canada. Consequently, in my opinion, we do not need the complex administrative machinery which was developed in France by way of commissions for renovation, equipment, etc. to undertake our own planning.

My hon. friend claims also that it is not easy in a federal system to enter the planning field. I agree with him entirely. I am of the opinion that it would be absolutely impossible, as I said in my first speech during the debate on second reading of the bill, to undertake imperative planning, that is planning which involves control and coercion. I do not think however that the kind of indicative planning we have in mind is inconsistent with our federal system.

Besides, even on the plane of concrete achievements, once the general objectives have been determined, and the time has come to set specific policies and to see to it that the various governments take more or less a consistent line, then—and the Prime Minister has already implied as much—we shall think of organizing new structures within our federal frame. These structures might include a federal-provincial secretariat, as well as a yearly federal-provincial conference, which will be instrumental in solving not only taxation problems, but also unemployment, development, growth and economic forecasting problems.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Will those aims the minister was talking about, be set by the government, and recommended to the council by the government, or, conversely, will it be the council's role to set those objectives and to recommend them to the government?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, I do not imagine the council would be asked to set the objectives, although it will be part of its duties under the bill to make recommendations to the government, in order that objectives can be indicated.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, since I am one of those who spent almost 25 years in industry, I cannot help being interested in the bill.

I would be one of the first to hope that this legislation will be as successful as the minister expects. However, this leads me to ask him a few questions and I would like to deal immediately with section 9(d) which reads as follows:

to study means of increasing Canadian participation in the ownership—

Could the minister tell us whether the bill was amended since the Minister of Finance decided to withdraw his 30 per cent tax on the purchase of Canadian securities by foreigners or whether this paragraph is the same as in the original bill and whether the minister expects that the decision taken by his colleague will somewhat alter his expectations in this respect.

I should also like to ask the minister how long after being passed, this legislation will come into effect?

Also, how many jobs does he think this legislation will create in Canada, how many new industries can we expect to have as a result of this measure now before us?

Those are the questions I am asking now; there are others I might ask once those have been answered.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, had the hon. member read the bill that has been tabled before the budget, I think he would have noticed that there has been no change since that time.

As to the second question of the hon. member, asking me how long it will take to establish the council, I should like to know it myself. The hon. member will certainly have noted that a specific clause of the legislation compels the government to consult with the organizations concerned. That, I think, is a very beneficial procedure which will ensure greater co-operation between those organizations, but it will certainly be some time before it is put into force. I trust that I shall be able to recommend to my colleagues appointments to this council at the earliest possible date, and I can assure the house that we shall be diligent in this respect.

As to the hon. member's last question, I do not think I can answer it at this time. In my opinion, such organization has been needed for a long time in our economy. This body will contribute to a greater knowledge of our economic problems in the public and private sectors. I am convinced that, later on, we shall be able to find together—whether at the provincial, federal or private levels—more efficient ways of settling those problems.

Mr. Richard: Mr. Chairman, I should like to go back to the first question I asked, because the hon. minister only partly answered it.

If it is true that the wording of the bill is the same as before the withdrawal, by the Minister of Finance, of the tax on the sale of Canadian securities to foreigners, it is also true that the minister cannot expect the same results as had been anticipated at that time. Therefore, I should like him to answer the first part of my question, that is to say whether the decision of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) will affect adversely the provision in subparagraph (d).

Mr. Lamontagne: When the Minister of Finance decided to withdraw his proposal with regard to the imposition of the 30 per cent tax, he stated, if I am not mistaken, that the present government of Canada wished to continue pursuing the objective as intended by that particular legislation.

In view of the continued existence of that problem, the purpose of the government remains the same and, to my mind, that particular section might be useful, because I am convinced that there are several ways to attain the proposed objective and solve a problem which everybody knows to exist.

Mr. Martineau: I want to ask a supplementary question, Mr. Chairman. Does the minister agree that in view of what he has just said about the imposition of the new tax by President Kennedy concerning interest equalization, that is one way for the government to attain its objective?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, I do not think it is my responsibility to answer that question. Besides, I do not see what that question has to do with the bill now before us.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, there is a quite close connection because the minister stated that one of the objectives of the government was to regain control over the Canadian economy and that the Minister of Finance had proposed a tax which would help to attain that objective. So, I ask him, whether the action taken by President Kennedy which will certainly result in curtailing the investments in this country, may be considered as a proper way to attain the objective set up by the government and by the minister who is its spokesman at this time?

Mr. Lamontagne: I do not quite understand the hon. member's question. Does he suggest that the Canadian government should adopt the action recommended to the U.S. congress by President Kennedy?

Mr. Martineau: No, I am suggesting exactly the contrary. It is not our business to adopt such a measure, but I should like to know whether the minister considers that the tax imposed by President Kennedy will give Canadians more control over their economy by curtailing the investments in our country by American citizens?

Mr. Lamontagne: I think the tax imposed by President Kennedy could have, as the Minister of Finance stated in this house, quite bad effects in Canada, particularly on a short term basis.

It is also for that reason that there were negotiations between the two countries in order to get a partial exemption for our country. It is also for that purpose that the Minister of Finance will go to Washington over the week end to negotiate a particular arrangement as far as we are concerned.

Again, Mr. Chairman, if we follow up such a discussion, we will be deviating from the subject matter now before us.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, further to the remarks of the hon. minister, we saw in today's papers a report about an American commission set up to examine the effects of international payment balance in the field of American investment in this country. This commission stated that every Canadian dollar invested in Canada returned to the United States within ten years and tripled within 20 years. That was the conclusion reached by a commission made up of orthodox professors of American universities. Like the hon. minister those economists declared that American investments in Canada were profitable to the Americans and consequently advised President Kennedy to withdraw this tax.

Now, to revert to the bill before us, I see that under clause 9, the object of the legislation is to establish an economic council. Now, the economic objective—which I cannot find in this clause—let us not forget it, Mr. Chairman, is to give each and every citizen of this country a vital minimum to enable him to lead a decent life in accordance with the wealth of the country.

An hon. Member: Print money.

Mr. Gregoire: I heard somebody who said to print money. I must say that I invited him to come to my office to admire a picture on the wall. This is a picture of a foot. Maybe I could invite him again to come and admire that picture in my office.

I see nothing which will allow this economic council of Canada—

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I have always been polite and I have never cast aspersions on the person of the hon. member when I asked him a question. Therefore I should ask the minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, if I have insulted the house in calling this member a minister who, anyway, will not sit here after the next election. Moreover, he does not reside in his riding and I am sure that the people of his riding are smart enough to realize it so as not to elect him again at the next election.

I shall ask the hon. member to show some intelligence and to answer questions in a polite way because we are always polite with him. Furthermore the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) has no right to give a lecture; he should be the one to receive one.

Mr. Gregoire: I was not talking to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm but to another member on the other side of the house. Besides, what I said could not apply at all to the member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm because, if I remember correctly the remark I made the other day, I spoke then about two feet whereas today I mentioned only one foot.

Economic Council of Canada

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The services of a referee are indicated. I wonder whether the hon. member for Lapointe would get back to clause 9.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: I wish to point out that I have always been polite with hon. members and if the hon. member does not withdraw his expression he will deeply regret it.

Mr. Gregoire: There is no question of privilege. And if you will let us, we will continue discussing serious matters.

Mr. Chairman, as I was saying, the functions of an economic guidance system must follow in a parallel direction the functions of an economic system which are to fill the basic needs of each and every citizen according to the wealth of the country. All those clauses are related to the functions of the two economic guidance systems but I have yet to find one that will really enable the country not only to encourage production but also to give every citizen means to buy that production. I see, for instance:

To study means of increasing Canadian participation in the ownership, control and management of industries in Canada.

But nothing is suggested to enable people to take control of business in our country.

Clause 9 provides that the council will have to submit suggestions to increase productivity, or production. But today, Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that we are not facing production problems. This problem has been settled since the beginning of automation. The evidence is that automation produces so fast that men are unemployed. The minister is well aware that it is true that if a man is displaced as a result of automation, he cannot be employed elsewhere. In fact, his services are no longer required because automation produces too much already.

The duties of a council for economic guidance consist solely in assessing means of producing more, while today production is piling up in warehouses and in factories. I wonder why the minister, who is supposedly an economist, instead of considering the duties of an economic council in the light of production, does not consider the monetary system of the country, since that is part of the economic system? Why is this not mentioned in this clause concerning the duties of the council? Why is no mention made of a monetary reform which will enable our population to consume production? Why this attempt to increase production? The President of the Privy Council is well aware that during the war it has been possible to develop our production enough to be able to subsist besides helping European countries to subsist and provide arms to many countries.

But our economists are not smart enough to find the ways and means to maintain the same production level for our own citizens, even though we were able to cater to the needs of foreign countries during the war. My contention is that as long as the economic council is not prepared to accept the only possible solution to our economic ills, it will improve nothing. If the Liberal party continues to get entangled in study groups and planning councils, I say that within two years time, it still will not have corrected the unemployment situation. Mr. Chairman, the proposed measure will not overcome unemployment, because it does not tackle the problem from the right angle.

We are not faced with lack of wealth or insufficient production for this country is rich. What we have to solve is a problem of distribution. That is the problem. Does not clause 9 provide for a reform of our monetary system in such a way that when the economic council after suggesting methods of increasing both quantitative and qualitative production, it may suggest methods of distributing such production?

I would like to see not only provision for an increased production, but also for an increased distribution of production.

This is as simple as that, Mr. Chairman. I do not see why the President of the Privy Council did not include that in the duties of his economic council.

The other day, I asked him if he would not consider monetary reform to enable production to reach the consumers. But he replied that the committee would examine my suggestion when it would reach the duties of the economic council. But we found nothing to corroborate the remarks of the President of the Privy Council. I would therefore ask him if in addition to giving incentives to production and automation, he would encourage the Bank of Canada to put at the service of the people the necessary credit to insure the purchase of the production.

That was the question I wanted to ask him after such a long preamble. Why could we not suggest that the Bank of Canada create the necessary credit to ensure the purchase of all that production which would be increased through the efforts of the economic council.

(Text):

Mr. Carter: I wish to ask one or two questions based on subclauses (i) and (j) of clause 9. These two subclauses set forth the duties of the council to encourage the maximum degree of consultation and co-operation between labour and management and between the appropriate agencies of the various levels of government.

We have already been told that this parliament does not have the authority to draw up a super plan and put it into effect. It is obvious that this would be the case, because our natural resources are under provincial control. It is also true that a large section of public capital is similarly controlled by the provincial governments. For this reason I consider that these two subclauses are in reality the essence of the bill now before us. If this economic council is to succeed it must develop the proper kind of co-operation between the various bodies concerned. I think it would have to go even further than that and inspire those various agencies with a sense of purpose which will get them thinking nationally and help them to rise above individual differences and conflicts of interest—in other words, to put the over-all good of the nation first. Unless this is done, the members of this board could easily become little more than lobbyists for their own particular interests. This duty of developing good will and co-operation and inspiring with a sense of purpose is the meat of this bill.

A great deal has already been done in this field in the last three years by the productivity council; and what concerns me is this, that nowhere in this clause do I see any provision for continuing the work which has been done by that council. The council was successful in setting up tripartite councils in almost every province with active participation by provincial governments. They have carried on a number of seminars in which they have brought together the top people in labour and management and have got them to think nationally instead of in terms of individual interest. In addition, they have changed, to some extent, the old concept of class conflict into one of co-operation for the national good. All this has been achieved, but we are told in another clause of this measure that when this bill becomes law the productivity council will disappear—it is to be absorbed by this economic council. However, I do not see what provision is being made to continue the work of which I have been speaking.

Mr. Lamontagne: Clause 11.

Mr. Carter: Yes; but that is what disturbs me. I did not want to raise this until we came to clause 11 but since the minister has mentioned it I would point out that in that clause it is provided that these programs shall be carried out by the council only until such programs can be continued by other government departments or agencies. That means to me that somewhere along the line they are going to be turned over to civil servants. I do not think that a program of that kind can be handled in that manner. I think it is absolutely imperative that we preserve the solid achievements of the productivity council and that is why I should like to ask the minister what provision is being made to see that this is done.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise for a few minutes just to support the remarks made by the hon. member for Port Arthur and the hon. member for Red Deer with respect to the omission of any particular reference in clause 9 to natural resources. Personally I feel that the development of our natural resources throughout the country generally, whether through public ownership, private ownership, a combination of both or in some cases through co-operative ownership, offers one of the greatest opportunities to younger people who are not interested in going into industry and other vocations.

You will pardon me for referring to my own district but I am well acquainted with it and I should just like to mention a few things before the minister introduces his amendment. We have in our district in one block 10,000 acres of land that require only draining. There is another block with 500 million feet of timber that can be utilized in the future as a result of co-operation between government and industry and so on. We all know of the tremendous water development that is possible there but I will not speak of that now because we are dealing with it in other ways in the house.

There are half a dozen beautiful hot springs in my riding, one of which was developed to a greater extent recently. These are resources which have been overlooked. There are a half dozen beautiful hot springs in my constituency, three of which are not developed and one only partially developed. One man has developed one of these hot springs this year and there are over 500 tourists per day bathing there, some from Alberta because they like to come to British Columbia to get a washing out, and others from the United States, and other parts.

There is a wonderful opportunity for the development of parks, which are directly related to happiness. The development of these hot springs can be made very fruitful as far as the persons using them are concerned, and can be operated at a profit either by government or under private ownership. Then there is a great wealth of coal in various parts of Canada which can be utilized for power in the future.

I just mention some of the tremendous resources which lie undeveloped even in my own constituency, and this type of opportunity is multiplied a thousand times throughout Canada. I appeal to the government to give serious consideration to the question of getting the facts with respect to natural resources. I presume that the first thing is for the government to get the facts, to get the information on resources and the opportunities for manufacturing in industry and so on both large and small. I presume there will be some consultation between the council, provincial government representatives and private industry. I also presume that as a result of that there will be recommendations made to this government arising from the activity of this council and also recommendations made to provincial governments and legislatures.

I make all allowances for the difficulties involved. This is an experiment. I know that the minister will have to explore techniques and things of that sort and that the legislation will be changed as a result of experience. I make all allowances for that. But if the legislation is going to be successful I do urge that the greatest possible information be given to the people of Canada generally and the people of any particular district with respect to the development of natural resources or the development of industry. The success of the legislation will depend on a great deal of co-operation not only between management, labour and farmers but between many other groups and communities and between many people in various communities and the council. I know from personal experience that all these people need is some leadership and to be given a purpose in life. One of the biggest difficulties we face today is that we have multitudes with no purpose in life because of our system, no pride in our country and who do not know where the hell they are going. I hope that this type of legislation will do something to focus attention on things worth while to the advantage of all of us.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I am sure we will all agree that the speech of the hon. member for Kootenay West on hot springs was most refreshing, but I think it is just as refreshing to note how right the President of the Privy Council was when he insisted that in clause 9 the references to the economy, and especially in subclause (a) to the assessment on a systematic and comprehensive basis of the medium term and long term prospects of the economy and of the potentialities of growth of the economy, necessarily include and refer to resources. Of course the hon. member for Kootenay West and other hon. members are right in insisting that resources should be covered by the legislation, but I agree with the President of the Privy Council that if within the general phrases there was specific reference to natural resources, that might be interpreted or deemed by some to exclude other factors which are equally essential. I think we can rely on the President of the Privy Council when he asserts and confirms that resources are fully covered and taken into account.

When the hon. member for Red Deer spoke, he referred to the advisability of completing or making more precise the powers of the council by allowing the council to direct reviews of medium and long term programs. In this respect I move:

That clause 9 of Bill C-72 be amended by striking out the word "and" at the end of paragraph (i), by adding the word "and" at the end of paragraph (j), by adding thereto the following paragraph:

(k) to conduct, if directed to do so by the minister reviews of medium term or long term programs of the government of Canada that are designed to aid or assist industry, labour or agriculture.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Amendment agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the clause as amended carry?

Mr. Starr: Mr. Chairman, I have a few remarks to make on this clause with relation to the national productivity council which will be wiped out of existence when the bill is passed. I was very intrigued by the remarks of the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs in which he commended the worthwhile efforts of the members of the national productivity council in their efforts to improve labour-management relations in this country. At this time, Mr. Chairman, I should like to pay tribute—

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would allow me to interrupt? I think the hon. gentleman's speech is related to clause 11. Could we pass clause 9 and get to clause 11 so that it would be relevant?

Mr. Starr: I have no objection, but this matter was raised by the hon. member and I thought I should say a few words. I intended to speak about it on clause 22.

Mr. Lamontagne: Clause 9 does not deal at all with the national productivity council.

The functions of that council have been included in clause 11. Perhaps the hon. member's remarks would be appropriate at that time.

Mr. Starr: Well, the minister should have been as zealous in his efforts to bring about order in debate when the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs was speaking.

Mr. Lamontagne: I said so then.

Mr. Starr: As I said earlier, I had no intention of making my few remarks on the national productivity council until clause 22 was called, since that clause wipes out the productivity council. However, the matter has been raised and I thought I would inject my few words at this point and save time when clause 22 was before us.

I want to pay tribute to Mr. De Young, who was the chairman of the productivity council, as well as the members who have worked so hard in breaking new ground in this country to bring about greater production in Canada so that our goods would be competitive in world markets. I should like to pay tribute particularly to their efforts in bringing about a greater degree of co-operation between labour and management. They must, of course, be given credit for bringing about this co-operation. This has been accomplished by various means such as seminars that have been held in the industrial centres which have afforded labour and management an opportunity to discuss their mutual problems. The representatives of labour and management have also been given the opportunity of living together during their journeys through European countries to study the type of labour-management co-operation that exists in those countries. I feel this exchange of ideas between the representatives of labour and management has taught both of these important groups in our country how to live with one another.

This is the crux of a great many of the problems that face this country. So long as labour and management can understand one another, so long as they can exchange their ideas, then many of the problems faced by the government and the economy of this country will be alleviated. I say that great strides have been made in this area through the efforts of the national productivity council. I suggest to the minister that when he is considering appointments to this national economic council, consideration should be given to the selection of some of these people who have served so well on the national productivity council, because of their background of experience in this field. I believe their services would prove invaluable. They certainly could contribute a great deal to this economic council as well as to the economy of this country.

Mr. Douglas: Several members have expressed the fear that under this legislation the minister might go too fast in moving toward the establishment of a planned economy. I suggest that anyone who will read this bill carefully, particularly clause 9, will have his fears allayed. I do not believe there is any danger under this legislation of either going very fast or getting very close to a planned economy, not even indicative planning. If one reads through the clauses one sees in each case such phrases as, to recommend; to consider; to study means; to study economic growth; to explore and evaluate; to encourage maximum consultation; to seek regular consultation, and so on.

The powers given to this board are extremely limited. When the minister talks about economic planning in France and makes a comparison with this legislation, I think one has to stretch his imagination rather far to think there will be anything resembling the planning operation in France. However, it is a beginning, and as a beginning it ought to be encouraged. The value of this beginning will largely depend on the economic council itself and the personnel of that council.

I wanted to hear the minister answer the question which was asked by my colleague, the hon. member for Port Arthur. He wanted the minister to outline the distinction in functions between the chairman and the two full time directors on the one hand, and the number of members of the council who, of course, will be merely attending the meetings of council on a per diem basis. This group, perhaps up to 25 in number, will have what functions? How will the chairman and the two directors function? What will be their duties and what will be the duties of the other members? Are they to be largely advisory? Will they meet three or four times a year? It is suggested here that there will be representatives from appropriate organizations. Will they be nominated by those organizations? Will the minister ask each organization for a slate of candidates? Will the manufacturers' association, the Canadian Labour Congress, the farmers' union or co-operative, be asked to submit a slate of names from which the minister may choose? Will the government simply select a farmer and say he represents agriculture, although agriculture may have had no voice in suggesting his name? Will some ex-unionist or defeated candidate who once had trade union connections, be chosen as a representative of labour or will labour be able to nominate a man who will be able to speak for labour and take the views of the council back to labour?

I am convinced that the success or failure of this economic council will depend upon the participation of the groups that are represented on the council. Unless you get the co-operation of industry, labour, agriculture and all the various segments of the economy, then the council is going to be little more than a statistics gathering organization putting together plans that will gather dust on somebody's desk. If the members of this council are representatives of organizations and are able to go back and secure the co-operation of these organizations, this could be a very effective council. I should like, therefore, to ask the minister, first, what is the distinction between the full time members and the part time members? Will the members who are selected from organizations be selected on the basis of the organizations having an opportunity to name a slate? Will all these persons concerned be expected to report back and secure the co-operation of the organizations they are alleged to represent?

Mr. Baldwin: I am not raising any point of order, Mr. Chairman, but I think this probably comes well within this clause of the bill. I want to refer to the matter raised by the hon. member for Port Arthur as to the question of the inclusion of natural resources. Anyone looking at clause 9 can see that there has been a lot of care and attention given to it. It has been honed and sharpened, and its words carefully chosen; but as the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will realize, there is a very important motto which we have to the effect that the inclusion of one is the exclusion of the other, and specifically mentioned from clause (a) to clause (k) are a number of specific definite duties without having reference to the question of natural resources. This rules out the fact that natural resources can be considered.

I doubt very much whether this statute will ever be the subject of judicial determination, but it is our duty to consider that the words of the statute give effect to the announced intention. If it is the announced intention of the government, in this question of planning, to deal with natural resources, then it simply has not done it. It is not good enough to say these sections are wide enough, taken one with the other, reading one in juxtaposition with another, to include something which is not specifically mentioned. I suggest that after the words in paragraph (g) which state:

> —to study how national economic policies can best foster the balanced economic development of all areas of Canada

—there should be added "and the development of the natural resources of Canada".

I come from an area where, because of the policies of national development of the last government, with the construction of the Pine Point railway and other matters, the area is now beginning to flex its industrial muscles, based on its natural resources, and I am concerned to see that in any planning which takes place there is careful and meticulous attention paid to this part of our national life.

I took some exception to what the hon. member for Kootenay West said about people from Alberta, and I should remind him that there are some great tourists who go from Alberta to B.C., not least of which is the premier of B.C. But apart from that I think his speech was on very sound ground.

I do not want to suggest that what is done in another country is the same thing as should be done in Canada, but I would refer to the language used in England when the United Kingdom introduced a similar operation, not by the introduction of a statute but by simple executive act. The definition of the tasks of the national economic development council of that country was given by the then chancellor Selwyn Lloyd within the four corners of three simple paragraphs:

> To examine the economic performance of the nation with particular concern for plans for the future in both the private and the public sectors of industry;
>
> to consider together what are the obstacles to quicker growth, what can be done to improve efficiency and whether the best use is being made of our resources, and > to seek agreement upon ways of improving the economic performance, competitive power and efficiency, in other words to increase the rate of sound growth.
>

That is excellently worded and I think could well have formed the basis of the objectives in clause 9.

I do not go so far as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam in talking about indicative and other types of plan. We have heard of carrying coals to Newcastle, but here is a case of coals from Newcastle.

There is a news item in The Christian Science Monitor of Monday, May 27, 1963 under the heading, "Soviet Banker Sounds Alarm". I did not know they had Soviet bankers, but apparently they can be as alarmed as our bankers, because in his opinion the type of planning they have in the Soviet union has gone too far and too fast. This is what the article says in part:

> Delegation of powers, uneconomic prices, and rapid industrial growth without checks and balances have plunged tens of thousands of Soviet enterprises into relative or absolute bankruptcy.
>
> In the Economic Gazette of May 11, Aleksandr K. Korovushkin, Soviet state bank president, has sounded alarm. In the first four months of this year, 11 large enterprises have informed the bank that they had to stop payments.

The whole Soviet financial planning system seems to be out of gear. While production continues at full blast—much of it unplanned and unneeded—more and more industries are going into the red.

I am satisfied that something along the lines of what was done in the United Kingdom is fine. I believe that while there has been too much prolixity in clause 9 it is probably along those lines, but I would like to see some specific mention of the words "natural resources".

Mr. Macdonald: The hon. member has just referred to the legal maxim expressio unius exclusio alterius est, but surely by putting in reference to natural resources you operate that maxim because you leave out all reference to secondary manufacturing and service industries, which are not primarily concerned with natural resources. In order to achieve what the hon. member suggests, it would have to become more prolix.

Mr. Pickersgill: Might I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, but before doing so I wonder would there be agreement—since it seems to me all these questions could be asked on later clauses—to pass clause 9?

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 9 as amended carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 9 agreed to.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again, I imagine at the next sitting of the house.

Progress reported.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might be permitted to make a very brief statement to the house about a matter in connection with private members' business. Hon. members are aware that on the notice paper there is a notice of a bill in the name of the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk), and it is my understanding that this bill would have fairly widespread support in the house. It is not sponsored by any party, it is sponsored by the hon. gentleman as one of the members.

With a view of ending an awkward and difficult procedural problem the government is willing to give an undertaking that before the session ends—not before adjournment—and at the first convenient time, government time will be made available for the debating and the determination by the house of that bill.

I understand that if that undertaking is given, and I hereby give it, there would be no objection on the part of hon. members to giving consent to my hon. friend from St. Paul's, the chairman of the miscellaneous private bills committee, to move at this time the second reading of the bills standing in his name, so that they could go to the committee on miscellaneous private bills for processing at the earliest possible moment.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILLS

SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Mr. Ian Grant Wahn (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent I move, seconded by Mr. Macaluso:

That Bills SD-51 to SD-251 both inclusive, which received first reading on Monday, July 29, be now read a second time and be referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills, for consideration forthwith and that standing orders 93, 94(3)(a), 100, 102, 106 and 116 be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to, bills read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Secretary of State a question. Does this cover all these bills? Are there any left now?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): This covers every bill that has been received in this house from the other place; that is, everything that we are able to deal with. I regret very much to say I am informed that it does not include all the bills that were presented in previous parliaments; but I am given to understand that they start with the ones we received first and are carried on seriatim. This is as many as we have any capacity to deal with at this time.

Perhaps Your Honour would permit me to add an expression of appreciation to the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk), who made a very great effort in the last parliament, for his willingness to continue his efforts at this time.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman a question, just for my own clarification. Do I understand from what he has said that this will cover approximately 1,000 bills?

Mr. Pickersgill: No, Mr. Speaker. If I read the numbers aright, there are 200 bills. But that is probably wrong; there are probably fewer than that in view of the fact that there have been some other Senate bills that were not divorce bills. This procedure covers about 200 bills, but there are still a great many others. However, these are all the bills that have come to our house.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I have just come into the chamber and am unaware of what has happened.

Royal Assent

Mr. Pickersgill: In view of the very great interest taken by the hon. member in this matter perhaps the house would permit me to say that what I had hoped to be able to do, and what the hon. gentleman was aware of as being my intention to do on motions, I was unable to do for reasons that I would just as soon not attempt to explain at this moment. However, the difficulties which had arisen at that time were ironed out during the afternoon, and what I did was give an assurance to the house that the government would be prepared to give whatever government time might be necessary during the present session of parliament for debate and determination by this house of the bill of which notice was given today by the hon. member for Marquette. That undertaking I repeat on behalf of the government.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act.

An act to amend the Customs Tariff.

An act to authorize the construction and maintenance of a bridge and tunnel across the St. Lawrence river at the Boucherville islands, in the province of Quebec.

An act respecting Ukrainian National Federation of Canada.

An act respecting the board of trade of Metropolitan Toronto.

An act to incorporate Kinross Mortgage Corporation.

An act to amend the Judges Act and the Criminal Code.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the house leader if the order of business stands for tomorrow?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would think that we would complete the economic council bill, and if there was no objection we should like to take third reading of it before proceeding to the next measure, so that it could go on to the other place. We would then go on with the municipal development and loan bill. Then there is the surcharge order, and after that interim supply. If my memory serves me rightly they are all the measures.

Mr. Churchill: And third reading of the excise tax measure.

Mr. Pickersgill: That will be brought up at some stage.

It being twelve minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, August 1, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT—FIRST REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Mr. Speaker: May I be permitted to inform the house that the joint committee on the library met yesterday and I now have the honour to table its first report in both English and French.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS—EIGHTH REPORT

Eighth report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. Wahn.

(Translation):

PRIVILEGE

MR. PIGEON—REFERENCE TO REMARK IN DEBATE BY SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I am referring to a question which was asked by the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) and to the reply given by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill), which went as follows:

> I am afraid I cannot add anything to the answer which was given to his alert colleague, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, who anticipated this question on June 28 and represented the hon. gentleman's constituents at that time.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that even though I live in the riding of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, which is not the minister's case, it is my privilege to ask questions which do not necessarily concern the constituency I represent in Ottawa. As a member of the parliament of Canada, it is my right to ask questions concerning other parts of the country.

Furthermore, I have no orders to take from the hon. Fuehrer from Bonavista-Twillingate.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

WITHDRAWAL OF QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which might not be one, but I should like to raise the matter just the same with the consent of the house.

During the question period yesterday afternoon, the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) called us together to inform us of the difficulties caused by a number of questions on bilingualism put on the order paper by the hon. members for Beauce, Quebec East, Compton-Frontenac, Dorchester and Roberval (Messrs. Perron, Beaule, Latulippe, Boutin and Gauthier).

There are several of those difficulties that we cannot admit, namely:

(a) the definition of a bilingual person,

(b) the criteria to be used to assess the bilingualism of such a person,

(c) the length of such an inquiry,

(d) ascertaining whether a business is French Canadian or not.

In addition, we feel that knowledge of the facts, of statistics and of the degree of participation of French Canadians in the affairs of the country is absolutely essential to the Laurendeau-Dunton royal commission if it is to conduct a worthwhile inquiry.

On the other hand, we understand and appreciate that the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) would like to dispose of all the questions on the order paper before the summer recess.

(Text):

Therefore, in view of the fact that the government has shown determination to settle the problems of bilingualism and biculturalism in our country, we will agree to the request of the Secretary of State to withdraw these questions from the order paper, under the condition that the government will ask the civil service commission to make an inquiry on this subject and transmit the results of this inquiry to the Dunton-Laurendeau commission and to ourselves.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): If I might be permitted to say a word, I should like to express appreciation to the hon. member and to other hon. members in whose names the questions are standing, and to give to them the assurance that I have communicated with the commission about this matter. The civil service commission is most anxious to provide all possible information of the character that was asked for in these questions to the royal commission. The government will do everything possible to facilitate the procedure along the lines the hon. gentleman has suggested. Speaking for the government, I am most appreciative of the attitude he has taken.

Mr. Speaker: Will the Secretary of State indicate now if possible, or later perhaps, the numbers of the questions to which reference has been made?

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might save the time of the house by indicating that tomorrow?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

LABOUR RELATIONS

GREAT LAKES—ANNOUNCEMENT OF DECISION TO ESTABLISH TRUSTEESHIP

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I indicated yesterday that I should like to make a further statement about the report of Mr. Justice Norris on the disruption of shipping. Hon. members will have had the opportunity of reading the report and becoming familiar with its contents since its release just over two weeks ago on July 18. Hon. members will, I think, all agree with me that the commissioner delivered a comprehensive report following one of the most intensive inquiries ever made in Canada in a labour relations situation. The report gives an account of violence, corruption, lawlessness, mismanagement, misapplication of union funds and arbitrary control over the livelihood of seamen on the waters of the great lakes and the St. Lawrence seaway.

Both the inquiry itself and the report have clearly stirred public opinion, and from questions asked by hon. members it would appear that they have also been deeply shocked by the sordid and cynical situation which appears to exist in areas of the shipping industry on the joint waters uniting Canada and the United States. A strong desire has been expressed that resolute action be taken to control the situation, to cure it and to prevent it from corrupting other parts of the legitimate union movement.

An interdepartmental committee composed of deputy ministers and other senior officials of the departments most directly concerned was named, as announced earlier, on July 17. This committee has reviewed, under some pressure, the recommendations contained in the report and has made its observations on each of them. Based on these observations, on the endorsation of the major recommendation on the part of four of the five maritime unions directly involved, one of which endorsed the major recommendation only yesterday, and on the widespread public support for effective action to be taken to deal with the situation revealed by the inquiry, the government has reached a decision that a trusteeship is advisable.

Consultations have been carried on with the Canadian Labour Congress about the course of action which might be followed. Both the government and the Canadian Labour Congress hold firmly to the view that a government sponsored trusteeship should not be introduced as a normal means of dealing with problems arising within or between unions, and that it is justified in this instance only due to the extraordinary circumstances prevailing with respect to Canadian shipping on the great lakes and the St. Lawrence seaway.

In view of the fact that all of its affiliates concerned have accepted the recommendation for a trusteeship, and on the understanding that a trusteeship would be of a temporary duration and that the legislation providing for it would contain other safeguards, including progressive removal of the trusteeship, the Canadian Labour Congress has now assured the government of its co-operation.

A start has been made on the preparation of the necessary legislation. As will be appreciated, this requires much care due to the constitutional aspect involved and to the necessity for the legislation to be effective.

We had hoped it would have been possible to bring forward legislation before the recess. The only type of legislation that could have been prepared for immediate parliamentary action, due to the limited time available since the report was issued, would have been general enabling legislation empowering the government to take the necessary action under regulations approved by governor in council.

After careful reflection it has been decided not to propose this course. Instead a decision has been taken to press ahead with the preparation of detailed legislation that is within the power of parliament to enact, and which will be introduced for the immediate attention of the house on our return at the end of September.

The interval will enable us to proceed with our plans, including completion of the necessary work on the legislation. It is our intention to have further discussions with the United States authorities with a view to ensuring the maximum effectiveness of a trusteesship in removing the continuing harassment of Canadian ships on the great lakes. I would like to refer, in this connection, to that portion of the official release issued in May following the meeting of President Kennedy and the Prime Minister of Canada at Hyannis Port on May 11:

"On the great waters that separate and unite the two countries—the St. Lawrence river and the great lakes—it is essential that those who own and sail the ships should be free to go about their lawful business without impediment or harassment."

As hon. members know, this harassment has continued. There have been several further acts of violence, illegal picketing, and one Canadian vessel has been refused the right of all shipping and loading facilities at the port of Chicago for over 100 days, despite the fact that court injunctions against such secondary picketing have been obtained.

It is to be sincerely hoped that the decision to establish a trusteeship will lead to a full resolution of the serious problems that have arisen in both Canada and the United States over the past three shipping seasons.

Trusteeship, which is a device used by the unions themselves to control and rehabilitate delinquent local unions, is a distasteful remedy to deal with a repugnant situation. Fortunately nearly everyone has realized that action along these lines is a necessity and has endorsed the commissioner's recommendation in this respect. While the government has every expectation of co-operation on the part of all responsible Canadian and United States union members and leaders and of all companies directly concerned, I do want to make it clear that should matters deteriorate on the great lakes or elsewhere, and it becomes necessary, parliament will be called back into session earlier than has been announced to deal with this matter.

In any event, sustained efforts will be maintained during our recess to see that co-operation with the United States authorities is developed to the fullest possible extent so that it will serve to supplement action taken by parliament. The interval may in fact prove useful not only to develop these supplementary lines of action but also to permit substitute action being taken should this prove to be equally effective in accomplishing the objectives of the legislation now being prepared.

I should add, Mr. Speaker, before concluding that the two special counsel, Mr. Robinette of Toronto and Mr. Martineau of Montreal, have already commenced their examination of the report of the inquiry commission and the accompanying exhibits and documents, and will be in a position to advise the government in due course with respect to prosecutions.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the house welcome the announcement that has been made by the Minister of Labour that the government has decided to put into effect by legislation the most important of the recommendations made by Mr. Justice Norris; that is, the recommendation to set up a trusteeship. I wish to say a few more words about that later.

First may I say that as minister of labour at the time this commission was set up I found it necessary, because of conditions existing on the great lakes, to take this action. We were very fortunate indeed to obtain the services of Mr. Justice Norris of British Columbia as the commissioner. Mr. Justice Norris did a wonderful piece of work in getting all the evidence after well over 100 meetings during the course of his investigation and in writing, as the Minister of Labour has stated, a very comprehensive report dealing, I might say, with a very serious situation which faced operations on the great lakes.

The interdepartmental committee which has been working since July 17 has certainly done a very effective job in its recommendations to the government, and it is well that the government has heeded the advice of Mr. Justice Norris and the interdepartmental committee in deciding to set up a trusteeship. I think this is advisable. I want to congratulate the Canadian Labour Congress and the other unions affiliated with them for their attitude in agreeing to operate under government trusteeship. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, as the Minister of Labour has said, it is distasteful to organized labour and very repugnant to them to be placed under trusteeship. Nevertheless I think the situation warrants this being done, but it should be on a very temporary basis. In other words the members of the trusteeship should work toward achieving a peaceful solution to the problem on the great lakes in as short a space of time as possible. Certainly it should not be a precedent for any case in the future unless the situation warrants it, as it did on the great lakes. I think it is very important that its duration be not too long, yet it should be sufficient to carry out the recommendations which have been made by Mr. Justice Norris.

I think another important aspect is the harassment of Canadian ships in United States ports. Since the government is willing to take decisive action through legislation, the United States government should be asked to take some more definite action in co-operation with the Canadian government in order to see that Canadian ships are able to put into United States ports and be loaded and unloaded without undue delay, which has not been the case with Canadian ships up to now, and as has not been the case with the Canadian ship now tied up in the port of Chicago.

The Minister of Labour mentioned that if the situation demands, or if there is any disruption on the great lakes between now and the time the legislation is introduced, parliament may be recalled. I hope the government, and particularly the Minister of Labour and his department, will keep a very sharp lookout for such an eventuality and that they will do everything in their power to bring about a settlement; and I hope there will be no disruption of shipping on the great lakes between now and the time the legislation is enacted.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this party I want to say, as the Minister of Labour pointed out, that we also recognize that public opinion has clearly been stirred. We are happy to see the government is going to take what the minister termed resolute action, and we hope this action will be of a nature which will prevent a situation of this kind ever again developing within a labour union in Canada. We commend the four of five unions which have agreed to go into trusteeship in recognition of this problem. We hope the Minister of Justice will not overlook the responsibility that we feel his department has in perusing and following up the subject matter of the report regarding possible prosecutions which should be made; and furthermore we hope the Department of Justice will not overlook the alleged collusion between some shipping companies and the labour unions.

We too agree that this kind of action should not be considered as a precedent for curing labour problems, although we think it is necessary in this most extreme case. I listened carefully, but I do not think the Minister of Labour mentioned any effective date for the establishment of this trusteeship. However, if I understood his remarks correctly he would ask the government to call parliament back should the situation deteriorate to the point where action by parliament is necessary. All I want to say in this respect is that we in this group would be willing to co-operate with the government in this regard.

We also recognize the international problems which are involved, and we appreciate the difficulties here because of the tie between the union in Canada and the union in the United States. We hope that the government, as the hon. member for Ontario suggested, will take further steps to persuade the United States government to take action which will prevent this harassment of Canadian ships in United States ports.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Labour is to be commended for the statement he has just made regarding the action which the government proposes to take arising out of the report of the Norris commission. I think he is particularly to be commended for having consulted the Canadian Labour Congress, representing, as it does, the great bulk of the labour movement in this country; because the Canadian Labour Congress has been fully justified by the Norris report both in asking for the investigation in the first place and in the material which it submitted to the Norris commission in its brief presented last March. The fact that the minister has consulted with them and secured their co-operation will make it much easier to deal with this difficult situation.

This abnormal and disgraceful situation arose out of three factors. It arose out of a racketeering union, the seafarers international union, with the collusion of certain steamship companies, in particular the Canada Steamship Lines, which co-operated with Mr. Banks in breaking the laws of Canada. The third factor was the laxity of government administration. It was known the law was being broken, but no action was taken in this regard.

The proposal of Mr. Justice Norris for a trusteeship is something we normally would not support. Democratically elected, clean unions ought not to be put under government trusteeship. But the seafarers international union is not a democratic, clean union. The evidence which was presented by the Canadian Labour Congress and which is fully corroborated in the report of Mr. Justice Norris proves that the S.I.U. is a cancerous growth on labour unions and on the body politic. Therefore I think the government has no choice but to place this union under a trusteeship.

Fortunately the other unions, which were given a clean bill of health by Mr. Justice Norris, have indicated their willingness voluntarily to come under this trusteeship as the quickest means of dealing with an unfortunate situation, and I think they are to be congratulated on this attitude. However, I would say the government is to be commended on declining to proceed with general legislation. I do not think we could support general legislation giving the government power to bring any union under trusteeship. I think the government is wise to wait until it can bring down specific legislation dealing with a union which has proved to be racketeers and dealing with unions which are willing to come within the scope of this trusteeship.

I hope the government will also give consideration to the position of the companies which have compounded this felony, particularly the Canada Steamship Lines, for the part they have played in this unfortunate and disgraceful situation. I would also hope the government could make some progress toward getting the co-operation of the government of the United States in dealing with the position of Canadian ships which are in United States ports. There is a ship called the Red Wing at the ore dock in Marquette, Michigan. I am told the railway to the dock has been dynamited in recent days. Another ship was fired upon when it approached port facilities. This is a situation which cannot be allowed to continue, and I hope the government will be able to bring pressure to bear on the government of the United States to see that Canadian ships and seamen are protected.

One other point should be kept in mind. What is to happen in the meantime to the union funds of the seafarers' international union? I am told Mr. Banks has already placed a levy of $50 each on all his members in order that he may be in a position to fight any action which might be taken arising out of the Norris report. These funds may be badly misused and mishandled prior to any legislative action being taken. I therefore say to the minister and to the government that if they get this legislation ready soon and it looks as though union funds are being misused, and the situation is becoming more serious, they should have no hesitation about calling parliament back into session for two or three days in order to protect the members of the unions and to protect the public interest of the people of Canada.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

TABLING OF LIST OF OUTSTANDING ORDERS FOR RETURNS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I should like to table a list of outstanding orders for returns as requested yesterday by the Leader of the Opposition. It seems to me it might be a convenience to hon. members in checking up on the government if the house would agree to having this list made an appendix to today's Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: for list above referred to, see appendix.]

DIVORCE BILLS—CONSIDERATION LATER THIS DAY

Mr. Ian Grant Wahn (St. Paul's) moved:

That Bills Nos. SD-51 to SD-251 both inclusive considered by the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills and reported without amendment this day as its eighth report be placed on today's order paper after order No. 51 for consideration later this day by the house in committee of the whole.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILL—CONSIDERATION LATER THIS DAY

Mr. J. H. Addison (York North) moved:

That Bill No. S-35, an act respecting the Crown Life Insurance Company, received from the Senate earlier this day, be placed on the order paper for second reading during the hour for private members' business later this day.

Motion agreed to.

DIVORCE

AUTHORIZATION FOR SENATE TO DISSOLVE OR ANNUL MARRIAGES

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (for Mr. Mandziuk) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-93, authorizing the Senate of Canada to dissolve or annul marriages.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Herridge: Is this the bill written by the Secretary of State?

Mr. Speaker: When shall said bill be read the second time?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I believe there is general agreement in the house that hon. members would be agreeable to having this bill taken for second reading as the first order of business after five o'clock, and if I correctly interpret the sentiments of the house I wonder if that could be so ordered.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the suggestion of the Secretary of State?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CURRENCY, MINT AND EXCHANGE FUND ACT

AUTHORIZATION TO PURCHASE SECURITIES OF INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act to authorize the Minister of Finance to purchase out of the exchange fund account maintained under the act, securities of the international monetary fund.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WARHEADS—SIGNING OF AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the approach of the end of this portion of the session, could the Prime Minister enlighten the house and the country as to the present position regarding agreement on nuclear weapons with the United States, and the reason for the delay?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, negotiations are still going on. There is no unusual delay. A draft is now before the cabinet, and in view of the importance of the negotiations and the importance of any agreement which may come from them I think the government should be given adequate time to consider it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister be in a position to say approximately when the cabinet will determine this question, inasmuch as it was stated some weeks ago during the campaign that six weeks would be the time within which agreement would be reached?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I would hope negotiations would be completed within a few weeks. After all, as the right hon. gentleman realizes, negotiations on this matter are difficult and complicated. Indeed, they were begun by the previous government three years ago. But I do hope they will be completed, and satisfactorily completed, within a week or two.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I take it the Prime Minister would not now share the view expressed by his colleague the Minister of National Defence on the day he was sworn in, that this would be a matter of about a month?

[Later:]

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister supplementary to the one he was asked earlier. Should an agreement be reached with the United States regarding the acquisition of nuclear arms, will that agreement be presented to parliament prior to signing?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. It would not necessarily be presented to parliament because it would be an act of the executive, but it would be discussed in parliament.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice. Is the report correct that the minister made a speech on a French network the other night saying that the signing of the three power test ban treaty would make a difference to the acquisition of nuclear arms by Canada?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the statement nor the preamble to the question asked by an hon. member yesterday in connection with this matter. In view of the question asked yesterday I asked for the tape recording. I found there was not one available immediately, but to be exact this is what I said over the network in a press conference that lasted about an hour, in which I and two other ministers took part:

(Translation):

"...that I ascertained that the former administration had committed itself to equip our weapons with nuclear warheads; second, that we were negotiating an agreement with the United States on nuclear arms and that we had every intention of carrying it through; and finally that the Prime Minister, during the election campaign, had said that we would implement our commitments, but that should conditions change, it could become advisable to amend such commitments." And that I never said anything contrary to the statements of the Prime Minister.

(Text):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): I have a supplementary question.

(Translation):

Is the Minister of Justice saying that, in the case of a controversial program like that one, the station has not kept the recording either on video-tape or on magnetic tape?

Mr. Chevrier: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am not responsible for what the station does. All I can say is, that for that conference they used an entirely new technique and system; it is quite possible that under those circumstances, the recording of this conference has not been kept.

(Text):

Mr. Gregoire: I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State. Is there not a rule or regulation of the B.B.G. that all stations should keep recordings of broadcasts of this kind for one year?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would very much hesitate to reproduce the law from memory, much less give a legal opinion. I will inquire of the B.B.G. and give an answer.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): In view of the fact that the signing of a nuclear arms agreement within the United States is of such far reaching importance, and in view of the changed situation since the matter was discussed in the speech from the throne debate, does the Prime Minister not think it would be incumbent on the government to submit this matter to parliament?

Mr. Pearson: The house had a chance to debate this matter, and I think did debate it for four or five days, and a decision was taken by the house at that time.

Mr. Douglas: The position has changed considerably since then.

(Translation):

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice.

Could the minister tell the house at what date was an agreement on nuclear weapons signed by the former government?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot should direct that question to his former prime minister. As for me, what I said, and I repeat, is that I personally ascertained whether an agreement has been signed, by which Canada had undertaken to fulfil certain specific engagements, namely to fit its weapons with nuclear warheads.

(Text):

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is not true.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Can he tell the house whether he has made inquiries regarding the recording of his television broadcast made a few days ago and if so, from what television station did he inquire?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I have inquired from the person who had invited me to take part in the program.

(Text):

BOBCAT PERSONNEL CARRIERS—COMPLETION OF DEVELOPMENT RUN

On the orders of the day:

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister inform the house whether the development run of 20 Bobcat armoured personnel carriers for the army has been completed? If not, when is it anticipated that the development run will be completed?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): It has not yet been completed, Mr. Speaker. At the moment we are looking into the reason it has not, in order to determine what action should be taken in future.

(Translation):

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—ADMINISTRATION OF ESKIMO AFFAIRS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration a question? Has the minister read the statement by Mr. Eric Gourdeau of the Quebec government, who charged the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources with insincerity and accused them of having delayed the meeting between the two parties in regard to the transfer of Eskimo affairs to the Quebec administration?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I must say that I was informed this morning of the statement made by that provincial official, Mr. Gourdeau, and that I was amazed that in the absence of the minister, Mr. Levesque, that civil servant should take the liberty to criticize, on behalf of the provincial government, the attitude of two federal ministers.

In regard to the statement that the federal government unduly and unfairly delayed the negotiations concerning the transfer of the Eskimo affairs administration, I think it would be interesting for all the members of this house to know that it concerns both the present and the previous governments and that they both are in the same situation.

In 1935, it was the province of Quebec itself which asked the Supreme Court of Canada to state that the responsibilities for Eskimo affairs should rest, not with the province of Quebec, but exclusively with the federal government. The decision was made in 1939, so that was 24 years ago. Now, suddenly, it was decided this year that the province should take over Eskimo affairs.

We could have quite a discussion on the matter and I respect everyone's opinion, but I must say that before the federal government, or rather before the minister of northern affairs and myself should recommend to the government to abdicate its responsibilities in matters concerning the Eskimos 24 years after the decision made by the supreme court and during which period we assumed responsibility in the matter, we must be entirely satisfied that it would be in the interest of the Eskimos and that all facilities would be made available to them. Then, and only then will the recommendation be made.

It should be noted that at a time when parliament was extremely busy, a meeting was held on June 26; discussions were held under friendly conditions, and we offered to meet the minister of natural resources during our holidays; therefore, it is unfair for a provincial official to accuse us, on behalf of his government, of delaying the negotiations. After all, a month's delay compared to 24 years is very little.

So, it is no exaggeration to state here that the minister of northern affairs and myself are still at the disposal of the provincial minister, but not necessarily at the disposal of Mr. Gourdeau, in order to set the date for a meeting as soon as possible.

I may add that I did not know Mr. Rene Levesque had delegated his powers to Mr. Gourdeau and that he had not informed me that a summit conference was to be held between two federal ministers and a provincial official.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): In view of the elaborate explanation given by the minister, could he simply tell us whether this matter of transfer of jurisdiction in the administration of affairs relating to New Quebec Eskimos has been submitted to the cabinet?

Mr. Favreau: I answered earlier that the cabinet had appointed the minister of northern affairs and myself to discuss with provincial ministers their claims in that connection. We held discussions and shall continue to do so with a completely open mind. If both of us reach the conclusion that it would serve the best interests of the Eskimos, a recommendation will be made to the cabinet, but it will not be before we have ascertained that point and before the provinces have submitted all the arguments enabling us to decide this transfer, but there will be no surrender of our responsibilities in the matter.

Mr. Pigeon: In view of the statement of the minister, is the federal government—

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lapointe has the floor.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, mine is a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the nature of the problem and the very able reply by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, is there any possibility that this matter could come within the terms of reference of the royal commission on biculturalism, since it is a problem of biculturalism as much as it is one of jurisdiction?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be glad to look into that, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: I rise on a question of privilege. Mr. Speaker, you decided against allowing a supplementary question, while you authorized the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) to put a question on the same subject.

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Favreau) whether he approves or disapproves of the stand taken by the minister of natural resources in his statements concerning northern Quebec.

Mr. Favreau: As I said earlier, the Supreme Court of Canada has entrusted the responsibility for the welfare and education of Eskimos to the federal government, which will assume such responsibility until we are given clear indication that this transfer is in the best interests of the Eskimos and we are in a position to reach a sound decision in that respect.

(Text):

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. As a result of his reading of the judgment is it his opinion that this is a matter which can be decided by executive action on the part of the government, or must the matter be submitted to parliament?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I cannot answer that question. I have my own opinion, but I am afraid the question is seeking a legal opinion from a minister who is not the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Baldwin: Then I ask the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any other supplementary questions?

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the minister if anyone has thought of asking the Eskimos under whose jurisdiction they would like to come, rather than moving them about like pawns on a chessboard? Probably they would have something to say about what jurisdiction they would like to come within.

Mr. Speaker: Has the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm a question to ask?

Mr. Pigeon: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

In the absence of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, I should like to direct a question to his parliamentary secretary. Could he tell us if the minister intends to do something about the shameful conditions in which the Eskimos of New Quebec have to live, according to Mr. David Eccles of Toronto?

Mr. John N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, for the information of the hon. member, I wish to say that I have read the article in Le Droit and that Mr. Eccles has met with officials of the department on two occasions. Furthermore, I saw the movie yesterday and I discussed the matter with Mr. Eccles. I think I can say on behalf of the minister that an investigation has been ordered in that connection. Mr. Eccles has also been asked to submit an abridged version of his allegations.

NATIONAL BATTLEFIELDS COMMISSION—APPOINTMENT TO STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, could his parliamentary secretary tell us whether the staff of the national battlefields commission will soon be complete?

Mr. John N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the member for Quebec South, I am pleased to announce, on behalf of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, that the governor in council appointed yesterday Mr. Jean Leahy, Q.C., from the city of Quebec, to replace the late Mr. James Murdoch on the national battlefields commission. Mr. Leahy is 38 years old, perfectly bilingual and apart from being an active member of the bar, he teaches civil law at the University of Montreal.

(Text):

I am sure that Mr. Leahy will make a valuable contribution to the commission.

SASKATCHEWAN—EXTENSION OF ROADS TO RESOURCES PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources but in his absence I would direct it to his parliamentary secretary, who has been able to handle some of the questions here today. If he cannot answer it perhaps he will take it as notice. Has the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources had discussions with the minister of natural resources in the province of Saskatchewan in relation to the extension of the roads to resources program? If so, what was the nature and what were the results of the discussions?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. John N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources has indeed had conversations with the provincial minister, Mr. Kramer. The subject of the discussions had to do with the possibility of a future joint program. I do not think I can add anything more at the moment.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister advise the house as to the government's response to the request made in a brief by the civil service federation of Canada for an upward revision of superannuation allowances paid retired civil servants who retired prior to 1958?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): The hon. member was kind enough to give me notice of his question. I should like to inform him that I have written to the president of the civil service federation of Canada advising him that the government has this matter under careful study.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question. Will consideration be given to introducing legislation to amend the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act before the end of this session?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I have just said the matter is under study. I presume that when the study is completed that question can be considered.

AIRPORTS

EDMONTON—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT RESPECTING DEPARTMENTAL FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): May I address a question to the Minister of Transport. In doing so I would say that normally I would not ask this question at this time, but in the light of the approaching adjournment I seek the information because it is urgent. As the result of a meeting of the minister, the mayor of the city of Edmonton and other representatives, as well as other representations which have been made to him with regard to the future of Edmonton's municipal airport, has the minister arrived at a decision in respect of the department's facilities at that airport and its continued use as an industrial airport?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the decision regarding the continued use of the airport rests entirely within the control of the city of Edmonton. I have, however, since the interview referred to by the hon. member, communicated to the mayor my view that since the new Edmonton international airport is fully capable of taking care of the aviation requirements of the area so far as we can see, we believe that the city should be prepared to assume financial responsibility for such federal aviation services as the city may require to be continued at the municipal airport. I have also informed the mayor that because of the capacity of the international airport, the size of which was increased during the construction period, I see no need to hold the city to its earlier commitment that it maintain a secondary airport.

TRANSPORT

RAILWAY PASSES FOR MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENTARY PRESS GALLERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Will the minister consider the advisability of restoring to members of the parliamentary press galley in Ottawa their railway passes which were taken from them by the previous government?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of what the previous government did in this connection. In any event, I will take the question under advisement. I am rather of the impression that the Minister of Transport has no such authority as that implied in the question.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—LEGALITY OF AGREEMENT ON DOWNSTREAM BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, I think my last question before he goes on tour. Will the minister inform the house if in his opinion, and in the light of all the circumstances, the British Columbia hydro authority can now sign a contract with any United States power authority with regard to the price to be paid for the Columbia river treaty downstream benefits?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I do not know what the United States power authority is, to which my hon. friend is referring. There are a number of agencies and utilities, both private and public, in the Pacific northwest, but none by that name so far as I can find out. The actual parties to any agreement for the sale of Columbia river downstream benefits will have to be decided upon when and if a satisfactory agreement with the United States has been worked out.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): May I ask a supplementary question. Has the minister accepted the invitation from the hon. member for Kootenay West?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member for Kootenay West has not given me the particulars, which would have to be carefully considered.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO PENSION ENTITLEMENT OF SERGEANT MAJOR LEJA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Edmund Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. Having regard to the recent F.L.Q. bombing incident in the Montreal area which resulted in the near fatal wounding and permanent disability of Sergeant Major Leja of the third field regiment, Royal Canadian Engineers, can the Minister of Veterans Affairs say whether he has given any consideration to granting a pension to this brave Canadian officer and, if so, will he inform the house of any decision taken?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I am grateful to the hon. gentleman for giving me the opportunity to convey to the house information in which it was keenly interested some weeks ago when the hon. member for Kootenay West asked a question about Sergeant Major Leja. I should like to point out to the hon. gentleman who asked the question that of course decisions on pensions are not taken by the minister. He has no such authority.

However, I am informed by the pension commission that Sergeant Major Leja is now in receipt of 100 per cent pension. Upon his release from the hospital his case will be considered for supplementary allowances for disability. The chairman of the Canadian pension commission expects to have a report on this matter for consideration shortly. In addition I should like to inform the house that I had the opportunity of seeing the sergeant major in hospital last week. Although I was not able to speak with him, I can report to the house that his progress is as satisfactory as can be expected under the circumstances.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): May I ask a supplementary question. Can the minister inform the house under what section of the act this commendable action of the pension commission was taken?

Mr. Teillet: I would have to check back to answer that. The information I have from the commission is as I have stated.

[Later:]

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Speaker, I now have the information requested by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. That was done under section 13, subsection 2, which I understand is the section that deals with peacetime service pensions.

FINANCE

REPORTED ACQUISITION BY U.S. FIRM OF INTEREST IN CANADIAN BANK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I have a question for the Minister of Finance, based on a report that appeared in this morning's Montreal Gazette to the effect that a New York bank is preparing to acquire a 50 per cent interest in a Canadian bank. My question is this. Can the minister tell the house whether the governor in council has approved this purchase as required by section 102 of the Bank Act?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the government is giving most careful consideration to this matter with a view to determining what may be best in the national interest. It has not approved the transaction and I am not at all sure this matter is subject to approval by the governor in council.

(Translation):

HEALTH AND WELFARE

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Could she tell the house why she cannot increase family allowances, in the same way it has been possible to raise the salaries of a great number of people who were paid enough already?

(Text):

FISHERIES

NORTH PACIFIC CONVENTION—DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING TREATY RENEWAL

On the orders of the day:

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries. Can the minister report anything in respect to the North Pacific fisheries treaty discussions involving Canada, the United States and Japan, and can he say when and where these discussions will resume? Also, if he is replying might he say a word on a related subject, namely the negotiations in the British Columbia fishing strike?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as I reported to the house on June 24 a series of meetings among Canada, Japan, and the United States to study the renegotiation of the North Pacific treaty were adjourned on June 21. It is now proposed to resume negotiations in Tokyo, and the date suggested is September 16.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR SUPPORT PRICE FOR PINK SALMON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Comox-Alberni asked the following question:

Will the minister indicate whether the government will consider directing the fisheries prices support board to take action——in connection with the sale of 500,000 cases of pink salmon carried over from last year. I wish to inform the house that this matter has been taken into consideration by the fisheries prices support board, but no decision has been arrived at as yet.

LABOUR RELATIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA FISHERMEN'S STRIKE—INQUIRY AS TO ARBITRATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, I wish to reply to two questions which were asked yesterday in my absence and of which notice was taken by the Secretary of State. The hon. member for New Westminster, referring to the provincial-federal arbitrator in the British Columbia fishing dispute, asked whether the arbitration——will proceed under provincial or federal arbitration legislation, also what will be the powers and terms of reference of the arbitrator?

I wish to inform the house that the arbitration will proceed under provincial legislation. So far as the terms of reference are concerned, as it is voluntary arbitration the terms must be arrived at by the two parties, the union and the association. I am also informed that two meetings were held yesterday, and I understand they are again meeting today to try to come to agreement regarding the terms of reference.

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Translation):

POSTAL SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO TWO DAILY MAIL DELIVERIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to the distinguished Postmaster General?

Does he intend to make a personal investigation, when the house is adjourned, on the possibility of a twice-a-day mail delivery starting next fall?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that such an investigation will be necessary, because we have not received any complaint about the present mail service.

(Text):

NATIONAL REVENUE

COLLECTION OF INCOME TAX FROM B.C. ELECTRIC COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. Now that the expropriation of the B.C. Electric by the government of British Columbia has been invalidated by the courts, will his department collect income tax from August 1, 1961, the date when the company was expropriated? Moreover, will the department, if necessary, use the delinquency sections of the Income Tax Act to seize the assets of that company against delinquency in taxes?

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): I wonder if I might take that question as notice.

INDUSTRY

URANIUM—INQUIRY AS TO STOCKPILING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Can he advise the house whether the details of the plan for the stockpiling of uranium have been worked out?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary estimate covering this matter will be before the house before the recess, and this question can be discussed then.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

POSSIBLE ADJUSTMENT OF RESULTS OF INVESTMENT SURVEY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister made, or does he expect to have made, any adjustment in the investment survey which he tabled in the house earlier this week, in view of announced intentions by companies to curtail or change their spending plans as a result of the June 13 budget and subsequent events?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman is well aware this report, that was released yesterday, has been published at this time every year for many, many years, and the minister has nothing to do with the report except to publish it.

In response to the second part of the question, before the report was published I asked my officials when the information was gathered, and they told me that most of it was gathered just before the budget was presented and, of course, all the forms were in before the subsequent amendments to the budget resolutions were announced. I then asked my officials what they thought the effect upon these expectations would be of the budget and the subsequent amendments. In their opinion, for that one cause—of course there may be any number of other causes that affect these figures—on account of the budget itself they felt the effect would be to stimulate investment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether, in view of the minister's answer he can make any comment particularly in regard to the statement contained in this morning's Gazette that capital spending may be curtailed by as much as $250 million because of the budget and the interest equalization proposal of President Kennedy.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I was referring only to the budget itself, and I was quite specific about that. I think the effect of the budget proposals that are before the house or have been before the house will be to speed up investment. There are other factors at work, but I am not commenting on those.

(Translation):

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MANSEAU, QUE.—IMPROVEMENT OF LEVEL CROSSING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbiniere): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Minister of Transport a question arising from a resolution passed by the municipal corporation of the village of Manseau, whose mayor is Mr. Maurice Savoie, and which has been sent to me with a request that I secure the necessary information. Is the Minister of Transport aware of the request sent by the Quebec department of highways to the board of transport commissioners, asking the widening of the level crossing in the village of Manseau and the moving of the signals there?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, as the minister is absent momentarily, I take as notice the hon. member's question.

(Text):

OLD AGE SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO EFFECTIVE DATE OF INCREASED PENSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In case the house recesses tomorrow night, would the Prime Minister be in a position tomorrow to give a further answer to my question of two days ago? I asked him whether the government would consider making an announcement before the recess as to the effective date of the proposed $10 increase in the old age security pension. The Prime Minister will recall that he said on Wednesday the government would consider the matter.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I hope the effective date will be as early as possible, but of course it will depend on the date on which the legislation passes this house. I hope that will be as soon as possible.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO PAYMENT OF $2 PER BUSHEL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the hope expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that this part of the session will adjourn tomorrow, I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government has made a determination on the question of providing $2 a bushel as a minimum price for the farmers' wheat. That was a promise made by his party. At the same time he might tell the house, if the answer is in the negative, whether this is a present day application of the 5 cent speech, and that because the west did not return Liberal members the promise is not going to be carried out.

Economic Council of Canada

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the first and last part of the right hon. gentleman's speech make it unnecessary to answer the middle part.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT AND DEFINITION OF DUTIES

The house resumed, from Wednesday, July 31, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of an economic council of Canada—Mr. Lamontagne —Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 10—Initiation of studies, etc.

Mr. Lambert: In connection with this clause, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister whether within the powers or the duties of the council to initiate such studies, inquiries and other undertakings as may be necessary in order to arrive at the conclusions envisaged by the duties of the council it is in the contemplation of the government that there will be a proliferation of information bulletins or forms that will have to be filled in by business from one end of the country to the other. Also, what degree of co-operation do they anticipate from business concerns in this regard? In the event that the information should not be obtainable, what steps would be taken in order to obtain it? I know there are provisions for compulsion on behalf of the dominion bureau of statistics under the Statistics Act, and in many cases these returns cost business firms quite some expense. Are we going to have another series of forms to fill out, or will the council rely as much as possible or in the main on information already in the hands of the dominion bureau of statistics?

Mr. Lamontagne: That would certainly be my understanding.

Mr. Lambert: Is it the intention to initiate new inquiries on the business basis, and also to reinforce these inquiries with some legal teeth?

Mr. Lamontagne: There is no provision in this bill, Mr. Chairman, to force companies or individuals to answer a questionnaire sent out by the proposed economic council.

Mr. Lambert: I wonder whether in relation to clause 14 there might be power already there under the regulations. The clause says:

> The council may, subject to the approval of the governor in council, make bylaws for the regulation of its proceedings and generally for the conduct of its activities—

Therein there might be interpreted the opportunity for instituting such proceedings.

Mr. Lamontagne: I do not think this power to make regulations would include the power to force individual firms to answer questionnaires sent out by the council. It seems to me that we would need a definite provision in this bill, which is not there.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, there are two matters in this clause to which I should like to call attention. The first sentence says that the council "shall initiate such studies", and so on. It seems to me this is rather restrictive, and that consideration should be given to broadening this term. To leave the entire responsibility with the council might in some way limit the purpose and objective of the measure, and I wonder whether the minister would therefore give consideration to broadening this wording so as to allow for suggestions from other sources.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, I am quite willing to do this, and my colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration will propose an amendment to clause 10 which I think will meet the hon. member's request.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, this is one of the matters which have been discussed with and considered by the President of the Privy Council. I move:

That clause 10 of Bill C-72 be amended by striking out lines 4 to 7 on page four and substituting therefor the following:

"10. The council shall on its own initiative, or if directed by the minister, conduct such studies, inquiries and other undertakings as may be necessary with respect to any matter coming within paragraphs (a) to (k) of section 9 or with respect to any other matter or".

This would give the minister a clear right to direct studies and inquiries as well as any other undertakings to be carried out by the council itself.

The Chairman: Shall the amendment carry?

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the President of the Privy Council could deal with one matter. There was an editorial in yesterday's Globe and Mail on a matter of growing concern in this country with regard to the movement of a company from one area to another, with resultant loss of jobs and so forth. Is this situation within the contemplation of either clause 9 or clause 10? Although we would not want to think the council would direct a company not to do this, it should at least, before such a move did take place or after it was announced, obtain some help or suggestions to eliminate the possibility of people being thrown out of work in a ruthless manner.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, I think such problems could be investigated by the council. If we go back to clause 9, which was approved yesterday, paragraphs (f) and (h) would, I think, cover the point made by the hon. member.

Amendment agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall the clause as amended carry?

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I mentioned that there were two or three matters to which I should like to refer today. With the passage of the amendment last evening I think there will have to be a renumbering or relettering of this particular clause.

Mr. Lamontagne: This has been provided for in the amendment proposed by my colleague. Instead of paragraph (j) in clause 10 we refer to (k). I think this meets the point raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Patterson: Fine. Just one other matter. The clause states that the council shall report to the minister as circumstances require. I think this is an important consideration, because we raised the question whether it was proper that only the minister should receive the recommendations or advice of this council. I believe it would be of value if these reports were available to others as well, such as management and labour. If reports are made only to the government it would take away the incentive toward co-operation of labour and management.

I should like to call attention to an article with regard to this matter which appeared in the Globe and Mail of Tuesday, June 11, 1963 entitled "Limit independence of economic council". I should like to read just a brief section:

Unlike the board, the council has no authority to publish certain special studies without the consent of the minister.

The one new feature in the bill relating to this question is laid down in these words: "The council shall, annually prepare and cause to be published a review of medium and long term economic prospects and problems."

—the council could well consider its freedom is sharply circumscribed by the lengthy list of subjects on which it is directed to report only to the government.

I should just like to refer back to clause 9, in which it is stated it is essential to encourage the maximum consultation and co-operation with labour and management. It seems to me that to accomplish this it would be essential for those bodies to have access to the recommendations of the council. There appeared in the Globe and Mail of Friday, July 26, an article by Ronald Anderson in which it is stated:

We think it is essential that the body should not be inhibited from studies of controversial economic policy problems, that this work be published, and that the government not assume responsibility for the findings.

The function of the advisory council would be to establish better communication between government, economic experts and economic interest groups, and to achieve a public consensus on national economic objectives.

Mr. Lamontagne: I would draw the attention of the hon. member to another clause in the bill, namely clause 21, which deals with reports and publications. When we come to that clause I shall wish, incidentally, to propose a change. So I suggest we might postpone discussion of the matter raised by the hon. member until we reach clause 21.

Mr. Patterson: There is another matter. I think the hon. member for Edmonton West referred to it, namely whether the council is to be given the power, for the purpose of making its inquiries, of a commission under section 1 of the Inquiries Act. It seems a situation could conceivably arise in which powers of this kind would be necessary if full information were to be obtained. I wonder if the minister would give consideration to this point also; otherwise the effectiveness of the council might be limited.

Mr. Lamontagne: This a legal point, and I would ask my colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to comment on it.

Mr. Favreau: This point has been discussed with the advisers of the Department of Justice. As far as we are concerned, they have satisfied us that it is not necessary to do as the hon. member has suggested, because—and this is just a matter of drafting—this is clearly covered by sections 2 and 3 of the Inquiries Act. We may all rely on the fact that whenever the governor in council, who is the authority to deal with matters under the Inquiries Act, would so state, then the direction would be tantamount to and exactly in the nature of a direction under the Inquiries Act, so any such provision as the hon. member suggests would be surplusage. However, I agree with the hon. gentleman that this was a good question to bring up because it was one of the matters which had to be considered.

Mr. Patterson: The purpose will be served?

Mr. Favreau: Yes.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 11—Powers of governor in council.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I consider subparagraph (iv) of section 11, paragraph (1) most dangerous in respect of provincial rights. Knowing that the minister is an autonomist, and we will indeed see, when I submit my amendment, whether the minister is really in good faith and if he will amend the statements he made in the past and the action he took against provincial sovereignty, by welcoming my amendment to protect provincial rights and prevent the federal government from taking advantage of this council to intrude once again in provincial affairs by virtue of subparagraph (iv) which I quote:

The use of training programs at all levels of industry, and the use of retraining programs to meet changing manpower requirements.

If, as the minister said yesterday, he consulted with the provincial premiers, not formally but in semi-official meetings, and more particularly with the premier of the province of Quebec, I am convinced that the minister can tell us that if the premiers of Quebec and of the other provinces have read that section, they certainly did protest, and more particularly the premier of Quebec, because that section means interference in provincial jurisdiction. Now, we, on this side of the house, want the minister to tell us: "We do not want any interference in fields under provincial jurisdiction". We want the minister to prove it, and that is why I submit that subparagraph (iv) be amended by adding the following text after the word "requirements":

But that any program within this section shall be limited to matters of federal jurisdiction—

I should like the minister to add that to subparagraph (iv). If he is sincere and really wants to protect the rights and sovereignty of the provinces, I think he will accept that amendment willingly and be grateful to the opposition for proposing it.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, I find it rather strange to hear the hon. member attack somewhat violently that particular clause since it was taken almost word for word from section 10 of the National Productivity Council Act which was put forward in this house by the hon. member's own party when it was in power.

Such a change of heart is coming a bit late.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, may I point out to the minister that we had prepared an amendment to correct that situation.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member will kindly allow me to put the amendment.

(Text):

I assume that this is proposed as an amendment to clause 11.

Economic Council of Canada

(Translation):

Mr. Lamontagne: I therefore think that the hon. member's attitude is rather inconsistent, when he wants us to do something which he himself did not approve when the National Productivity Council Act was passed by the house.

But, in order to comment on the proposed amendment more directly, I am of the opinion, although I am not a lawyer, that the amendment is entirely useless because it would be a legal, or rather legislative "tautology", and the federal parliament has certainly no right to legislate on anything which does not come under its jurisdiction under the constitution.

I do not think that to limit the federal government or that organization to programs under federal jurisdiction, would mean anything under the circumstances; such a limitation would neither add nor change anything at all because, to my mind, if the schemes with which the council would deal were in the provincial field this would be entirely unconstitutional.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I would like to add a few remarks to those of my hon. friend and colleague, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon).

I see, as he does, in that section the risk of conflicting authorities, because, considering former comments by the minister, and the President of the Privy Council, I cannot but conclude that there should be co-operation between the other provinces and the federal authorities. Now, this would mean that there also should be some unity of thought, co-operation between provincial and federal authorities in respect of joint programs.

Moreover, in view of the provincial minister's remarks, namely the minister of natural resources, Mr. Levesque, to the effect that Quebec should eventually withdraw from joint plans, I wonder what would be the comments of the President of the Privy Council in that respect as well as with regard to the remarks of the minister of resources of the province of Quebec.

Would it have the effect of weakening co-operation, or would the minister, to be consistent with his former remarks, have to recommend that any joint planning be stopped by provincial authorities? And that he himself, as federal minister, would make the necessary provisions to discourage, rather than stimulate, joint planning between provincial and federal authorities?

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I have a question for the minister. We are concerned because the minister, as we know, has always had centralizing tendencies, and besides, since this government came to office—

Mr. Lamontagne: It is your own legislation.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, we are the party which favours confederation. We have always been in favour of respecting provincial rights. But since the Liberal government came to power we have seen something new. For instance, never in the history of the province of Quebec, had a premier and his cabinet sent such severe and serious ultimatums such as those which were sent to the present government.

In this house we want to act as spokesmen of the ministers and friends of the hon. minister, in order to protect the provincial rights and the rights of the province of Quebec in order that we may indirectly grant the request of the authorities of Quebec. That is all.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister whether he has a reply to my questions or whether I may conclude that he cannot find one? It is very easy to say: "It is your own legislation", but on April 8, the people rendered a verdict, and if the minister is of the opinion that he is bound by the measures taken previously, he ought to say so in this house, so that we may know where we stand in the future.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, I have nothing to add to what I said previously in connection with the amendment.

The productivity council as it was said yesterday, and as I said myself, has obviously done some useful work. There has already been in that field full co-operation with the provinces. I do not know of any province who would have had something to say against the activities of the national productivity council to date.

I do not see why the economic council, which would have exactly the same responsibilities as the national productivity council, could cause any opposition if the previous council did not.

(Text):

The Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question? Perhaps I should read the amendment again.

3. Any programs within this section shall be limited to matters of federal jurisdiction.

Amendment (Mr. Pigeon) negatived: Yeas, 20; nays, 46.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 11 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Clause 12.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I should like to make a few observations on subclause 2 of clause 11; at least, I should like to ask some questions. The subclause reads:

> Any specific programs initiated by the council in relation to any of the objectives set forth in paragraph (a)—

The Chairman: Order. Is the hon. member on clause 11? My understanding is that clause 11 has been carried. Does the committee give unanimous consent to returning to clause 11?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Patterson: I think I was standing when it was declared carried. Subclause 2 of clause 11 refers to any specific programs initiated by the council in relation to any of the objectives set forth in paragraph (a) of subsection 1. I should like to ask two or three questions. Will the activities of the entity or agency within the council be confined solely to functions and activities in relation to clause 11 or will it also operate under subclauses (i) and (j) of clause 9? It would seem that if the council is to do the job it should do it should have the opportunity to operate in both these spheres rather than just in the one. The national productivity council was able to accomplish what it did because it had freedom to act, freedom to apply its programs. It seems as though, in this particular respect, this paragraph removes the consultative effect and makes the work of the economic council a responsibility of the government alone.

I should like to ask some further questions. What is being done to preserve the work of the productivity council, for instance? Why would the programs of the economic council be taken over by a government department? I should like to call attention to a statement I made back on June 7, 1963, as recorded in Hansard at page 798:

> We would suggest that it is of the utmost importance that the work of the economic council be done on a continuing basis with management and with labour and with the other programs rather than just evolving into a civil service operation.

It would seem, Mr. Chairman, that this is what could happen if the government were to take over the operation of these programs to the exclusion of any advice or direction from the economic council. Then, too, it would remove that element of personal contact that had been carried on by the economic council. If these programs were to be taken over solely by a government agency, this would destroy all the personal contacts that had been established between the council on the one hand and management and labour on the other.

I should like to ask, therefore, why would the programs of the economic council be taken over by a government department? Why are the departments of government interested only in the work under clause 11 and apparently not in the work under clause 9?

Mr. Starr: I have the same observations to make in respect to these matters as the hon. member for Fraser Valley. I wonder if the minister would consider standing clause 11 so that we could deal with it at the end of the bill. We have some remarks to make in respect of clause 22 which relates to the work that is referred to in clause 11.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that clause 11 stand?

Mr. Patterson: I wonder if I could ask one or two other questions that could possibly be tied in with this matter and dealt with later. There is a word in this clause that seems rather strong. It is the word "shall". The phrase is "... shall, if carried out by the council, be so carried out only until such programs can effectively be continued by other government departments or agencies."

I suggest that perhaps it would be advisable for this to be taken under consideration, and be carried on between the government and the economic council. Then if it is mutually agreed it would be desirable to do so, this action could be taken. I feel this word "shall" is a very strong word to be used in this connection.

There is one other thing about which we are rather concerned, and that is any attempt at restricting the programs or operations of the council. We certainly do not want that to happen. We do not want to hamstring the potential effectiveness of the council in any way; therefore, we would like the minister to take this into consideration and reply perhaps when this matter is before us again.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed now that clause 11 stand?

Mr. Ricard: Before it stands, Mr. Speaker—

(Translation):

I should like to ask the minister a few more questions concerning paragraph (iii) which reads:

> —the maintenance of good human relations in industry,

Now, what particular action does the minister intend to take to promote good human relations? When he was preparing this section, did the minister have in mind the Norris report when he drafted the section where it is said "further promotion of good human relations in industry"?

As far as paragraph (iv) of the same section is concerned, does the minister intend to use that provision to grant more scholarships in the province of Quebec, particularly in forest engineering, for instance, since there is at present a shortage of qualified forest engineers?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, first of all, in reply to the first question put by the hon. member, I should like to point out to him that the national productivity council arranged with very much success, I understand, some seminars and meetings between industry and representatives of labour unions, with a view to discuss problems common to industry, management and labour. In fact, I think it is precisely that subparagraph (iii) which allowed the productivity council to arrange such meetings which I think could be very fruitful.

As for the second question put by the hon. member, I think it is not the economic council's business to hand out scholarships.

Mr. Ricard: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Chairman. In view of the fact that the minister used the past tense when he said "allowed the council", should we take it that no action is anticipated or planned for the future and that it applies only to the past?

Mr. Lamontagne: I think the hon. member did not quite understand what I said or if he did, maybe I did not express myself properly. I was talking about the activities of the productivity council, which the new council will also undoubtedly carry on, once it is established.

(Text):

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that clause 11 shall stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause stands.

Clauses 12 to 14 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 15—Appointment of staff.

Mr. Patterson: I wonder if we could have some indication from the minister as to what will happen to the officers of the productivity council and also the staff. Is it the intention to absorb the personnel into the new economic council; are they going to be retired, fired or what is going to happen?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, this problem has not been discussed, but I hope that the present staff can be retained and continue its work with the new economic council.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 16—Technical and special advisers.

(Translation):

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, with respect to clause 16, I should like to ask the minister what standards are to be established to determine the qualifications required of those who will be called upon to assist the minister in his work. What methods will be used to determine the qualifications of candidates applying for a position under that provision of the bill?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, I do not quite understand the point the hon. member wishes to raise. Perhaps he could explain it to me in greater detail, because I do not think there is any provision to leave such matters to the minister.

The sole purpose of that clause is to enable the council to obtain the services, on a temporary basis, of the experts it may need.

Mr. Ricard: That is precisely what I was asking the minister. How will the qualifications of the experts required be determined? Will this be through civil service competitions or will the selection be specially made by the minister or his representatives? Such is the question I wish to be answered.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, section 16 explicitly provides that the council may retain the services of experts. In addition, I will point out to the hon. member that section 16 of this bill is in every respect identical to section 17 of the legislation introduced by the previous government during the last session.

In my opinion, it would be advisable that the council might retain the services of experts on a temporary basis and I am convinced that the council itself will establish its own criteria to decide who should be hired and to whom positions should be offered.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, as the council may make same recommendations, with the approval of the treasury board, this means that the minister will be the one to take the final decision concerning the hiring of experts?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, the treasury board will have its say, since this will involve the expenditure of public funds which will be submitted to its approval.

(Text):

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 17 and 18 agreed to.

On clause 19—Appropriations.

Mr. Patterson: I understand that under the legislation governing the national productivity council there was a principle of shared financial responsibility. The amount spent by that council last year was $400,894, and of this about $85,000 was contributed by industry and labour. It now appears that the government is assuming full responsibility for the financing, and I ask would it not be beneficial were provision made for participation by industry, labour and business in order to give them a sense of responsibility?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am informed that such a provision was not necessary and that the council is authorized to receive donations and gifts to enable it to do exactly what the national productivity council was doing in co-operation with labour unions and industries.

Mr. Patterson: There will be voluntary contribution but not on a shared basis?

Mr. Lamontagne: Yes, so that this arrangement will be a little more flexible than the one referred to by the hon. member.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 20 agreed to.

On clause 21—Annual report to be made.

Mr. Patterson: This clause states that the chairman of the council will be the only one who will have the responsibility of publishing studies and reports for the use of the council. If the council is to have the responsibility of doing the work, carrying on studies and correlating information, it should also have the privilege of presenting reports to people other than the minister. Labour, industry and the public in general would be very interested in the activities of the council, which should be in a position to provide the fullest access to the information and reports it collects and prepares.

Mr. Lamontagne: My colleague, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, is ready to propose an amendment to subclause 3 which would authorize the council to publish, without the approval of the minister, such studies and analyses prepared for the use of the council. This would go a long way to meet the point raised by the hon. member.

Mr. Patterson: Will that include the recommendations, as well as information and reports?

Mr. Lamontagne: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Favreau: I move:

That clause 21 of Bill C-72 be amended by striking out subclause (3) thereof and substituting therefor the following:

(3) The council may cause to be published such studies and reports prepared for the use of the council as it sees fit.

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. Patterson: We appreciate the minister going that far, but we wish he had proposed a clause stating that the recommendations as well would be given to the public.

Clause as amended agreed to.

On clause 22—Repeal.

Mr. Starr: This clause has the effect of repealing the National Productivity Council Act, and the reason we asked that clause 11 stand was because it was related and conveys to the economic council the duties of the national productivity council. Subclause 2 of clause 11 provides that projects initiated under subclause 1 will revert to government departments as soon as this can be done. This means the elimination and burial of the national productivity council and its work, first by disbanding it and second by transferring its duties to this new council, with provision for progressive reversion of those duties to various departments of government. But the theme and principle of the productivity council was that it should deal with those problems—and there are a great many of them—which require the co-operation of management and labour; that it should deal with them on the basis of mutual co-operation.

I was very interested indeed in and impressed by the words uttered yesterday in this repect by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Veterans Affairs who, if I understood him correctly, looked upon the work of the national productivity council with great favour. He felt, as I am sure do many hon. members, especially the hon. member for Fraser Valley, that the national productivity council certainly made great strides in the field of management and labour co-operation and broke new ground in this area, establishing a principle that has taken hold.

Once these projects revert to a government department, that principle of dual labour-management approach is completely abrogated in favour of a purely departmental approach. This, to my mind, involves such matters as productivity, labour-management relations, automation, training and retraining of workers; in short, a whole area of the industrial complex which can best be served, I submit, by a joint labour-management approach, with government being the recipient of their joint recommendations. Just a few moments ago an amendment was moved—perhaps I should not refer to that amendment because it was passed—and certain things will only be made public as certain people see fit to make them public. Recommendations are not to be made available to everyone concerned, neither labour nor management. The effect of this clause and the clause that has been stood, No. 11, is to remove these matters from the purview of labour and management in this country and transfer them to the government. I think this is a step backward. The principle we put into effect has taken great strides in the past few years since the inception of the national productivity council and has brought about greater labour-management co-operation in a field in which both these factors are very vitally interested.

Clause 22 removes from existence the only government body which labour and management can meet to deal with problems that are peculiar to labour and management but which nevertheless make their effects felt throughout our whole economy. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that no substitute body should be set up because the duties would be taken over in such a way as to provide for their eventual parcelling out among government departments. I look at this as a process of assassination by attrition. The Liberal party when in opposition did not believe in the productivity council from its inception, and throughout its existence there was nothing but bitter and harsh criticism of the council from members of that party. But I submit it was only a political attack. Although the president of the Canadian Labour Congress, after accepting a position on this council, objected to the make-up of the council because he felt there was not sufficient representation on it from industrial unions, he at no time criticized the principle of labour-management co-operation embodied in the work of the council. Since the inception of the council and the work they have carried out in the labour-management field I am glad to note that he has become one of the greatest supporters of the labour-management principle and is continually advocating more and more of this sort of thing in order to help resolve the difficulties which present themselves in our economy. This bill, and particularly this clause, destroys that whole principle.

I submit, Mr. Chairman, that clause 22 should be deleted from the bill before us, which would have the effect of continuing the productivity council and would eliminate the necessity for the inclusion of clause 11, which should also be deleted. I therefore move:

That clause 11 and clause 22 of Bill No. C-72 be deleted.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The—

[Mr. Starr.]

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I presume that before you put the motion you intend to consider whether it is in fact in order or out of order for two reasons; one, because, of course, the revival of the productivity council as a separate organization would necessarily involve an additional expenditure of public moneys, which only a minister of the crown may propose, and second it would change the whole scheme of the bill and upset the principle of the bill. It seems to me that on both those grounds the motion is out of order.

Mr. Starr: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, may I submit that it will not be a revival of the national productivity council, because if these clauses are not included in the new bill, it would still be in existence. As far as financial obligations with respect to the national productivity council are concerned, a great deal of the expenditure that would be entailed in putting into effect Bill No. C-72 would not be necessary because that expenditure would be absorbed in the national productivity council.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, as the Secretary of State has suggested, not only does this motion involve the expenditure of money, not only does it upset the purpose of the bill, but it is more than an amendment of substance; it places in question the whole purpose of the bill. The purpose of the bill is to repeal the National Productivity Council Act and to create an economic council to which will be transferred the powers of the national productivity council, plus a series of other integrated and very important powers. So the amendment by itself, if accepted, would completely contradict the purpose of the bill and would totally neutralize the effect of the proposed legislation. For that reason it is suggested that the amendment is completely out of order.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, may I make one or two observations with regard to what has been said; I think the hon. member for Ontario has also dealt with this. Until the National Productivity Council Act is repealed it is a good act in good standing. Consequently there can be no question of there being any expenditure of money which is not already authorized. Second, if you examine the preamble of Bill No. C-72, you find it is an act to provide for the establishment of an economic council of Canada. It is not an act to provide for the repeal of the National Productivity Council Act.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. Apart altogether from the statements which have been made by the Secretary of State and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, I would have to rule this amendment out of order on two grounds: first, because if there are those who disagree with this clause, they then have an opportunity of voting against it; second, because the amendment refers to a clause that is not now being considered by this committee.

Mr. Starr: I have no alternative but to appeal your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Before I proceed with the appeal I should like to give the authority for the ruling I have just made. It is citation 398, page 283 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which says:

> An amendment which would produce the same result as if the original motion were simply negatived is out of order.

Therefore, I should like to ask the hon. member for Ontario, in view of that citation, whether he still wishes to appeal the ruling of the Chair.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, might I be permitted to say a word with regard to this amendment which has been moved by the hon. member for Ontario. All of us are most anxious to give an opportunity this afternoon at five o'clock to private members, and an appeal taken at this time would have the effect of rather limiting the hour. That, of course, is not a consideration which affects you but it is one which affects the committee in general. In any event, the opposition would have the same opportunity on third reading, provided third reading is not called until tomorrow, to make the necessary amendment to cover this matter, namely that third reading be not then taken but that the whole matter be referred back to the committee with the direction to take the course suggested by the hon. member for Ontario.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure that if the hon. member for Ontario would accept the excellent suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition, I can give an assurance that the government would not move third reading today, or attempt to move it, and would follow the course suggested by the right hon. gentleman.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 22 carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Clause agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: The committee will now return to the consideration of clause 11.

On clause 11—Additional duties.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I did ask some questions on this clause. I do not want to hold up the bill, but I wonder whether the minister would indicate why he wants to take the responsibility completely out of the hands of the economic council and hand it over to a government department, breaking, as I have said, the personal relationship which the council has had with business, industry and labour.

Mr. Lamontagne: I think the hon. member reaches the wrong conclusion or gives the wrong interpretation to subclause 2. This subclause has been put there for one purpose only, and that is to try to minimize duplication. Also, we do not want the economic council to be involved in continuing specific programs which can be carried on by government departments. I think this is exactly the kind of provision we need if we want to avoid duplication in the government service. The subclause is not intended to limit the power of the council to initiate programs or studies, and I think it would be wrong to expect the council to carry on specific programs on a permanent basis. When a program has been initiated and tested and it is realized that it should be continued, then we feel that this specific program should be transferred to the government department which is responsible in that general field. Let us take for instance, the training programs that the productivity council initiated within the last year or so very successfully. I do not think that the economic council or the national productivity council should carry on those programs on a continuing or permanent basis. If such training programs prove to be useful, then they should be transferred from the economic council or the national productivity council to the Department of Labour, which is equipped to do exactly that kind of job.

Mr. Patterson: I wonder whether the economic council would have the privilege to review the progress of these projects and then take further advice from the council?

Mr. Lamontagne: As a result of the amendment moved yesterday afternoon the council would certainly have the power of review.

Clause 11 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. Pickersgill: Next sitting of the house.

Before you see five o'clock, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if it could be understood that the house would resume at seven o'clock. It is August 1, which I think all of us had forgotten. If there could be general agreement, the house could resume at seven o'clock and at that time the Minister of Finance would move second reading of the municipal development and loan bill.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to private members' business, pursuant to special order made this day.

DIVORCE

AUTHORIZATION FOR SENATE TO DISSOLVE OR ANNUL MARRIAGES

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce), for Mr. Mandziuk, moved the second reading of Bill No. C-93, authorizing the Senate of Canada to dissolve or annul marriages.

He said: It is my honour to present Bill No. C-93 standing in the name my hon. friend from Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk) by and with his consent. I would say in explanation that the purpose of the bill is to provide that the Senate may on petition by resolution declare that a marriage is dissolved or annulled as the case may be. The operation of the resolution may be suspended if, before the expiration of 30 days from the adoption of the resolution, a petition to parliament by either party together with a draft bill is filed with the clerk of the parliaments.

It is not, of course, within my competence to deal with this matter as my hon. friend from Marquette would have done, but I understand there is fairly general agreement with regard to this measure and it would be a historic step if this house could, today, in the course of this private members' hour, see fit to give the second and third readings to the bill which is before us.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): This is a matter which has been the subject of grave concern to me for a considerable period of time. I wish, therefore, to congratulate those who have been involved in the preparation of this bill for the co-operation they have shown.

We in this party have been concerned in a number of ways about procedure in this parliament with regard to divorce. We have always felt there were many respects in which we were not competent to investigate all these individual bills and petitions—we did not have the machinery to enable us to do so satisfactorily. We think that in the present bill there is machinery for doing this and it may well be that some of the problems we have faced in the past can be eliminated.

The establishment of a semi-judicial agency to handle divorces has, I think, been accomplished in this bill. It is true this is not the solution for which some of us had hoped. It had always been my hope that these matters would be sent to the exchequer court for disposal, and that would be the end of the whole thing. But there are reasons why this cannot be done at the present time. I think those reasons are fairly well known to hon. members.

We have never sought to shrink from our duties under the British North America Act which makes the granting of divorce in certain circumstances a federal responsibility. I see in this bill some provision against certain of the abuses which have taken place in the past. Whoever is charged with hearing these cases will, in my opinion, be able to govern and regulate those coming before him as representatives of the petitioners and corespondents in the various cases; he will be able to make regulations and rules which would meet the requirements as he sees them, and his position will be sufficiently authoritative to allow him some discretion. In these circumstances, some of the abuses which have taken place, particularly in relation to evidence given by detectives, may be corrected and considered in the light of representations which are to be made.

I have always contended that if the House of Commons were to try to deal with these matters effectively and conscientiously members would have to concern themselves with matters of minute detail as reflected in the discussions which they have experienced in the last year or so. This, as you know, Mr. Speaker, has curtailed the number of divorce cases which could be passed, and indicated some of the problems which have developed from legislative action in this field.

I wish to congratulate some of those who have been connected with finding a solution to these difficulties because they have presented a grave problem to many of us. While the solution now offered is not the best for which we might have hoped it is certainly a compromise which may prove successful and I am sure that further steps can be taken which would satisfy certain hon. members including many who are connected with social services across the country, organizations which have demanded that there be a general change in Canadian divorce legislation in other regards. We understand—and this is only an understanding—that there is a possibility that the rules will be such that some consideration may be given to jurisdiction affecting the custody of the children concerned. This, of course, would not be an infringement of provincial rights and we do not want to move in this direction; but there are appeals for custody which are inherent in annulment or divorce cases, and this aspect has not been handled satisfactorily in the past. We hope some solution to this particular problem can be found within the terms of the bill before us. I believe this will meet many of the objections we have had to the previous practice and if it can be passed by the house this afternoon in fulfilment of the responsibility of members of parliament I personally will be quite happy to be relieved of any responsibility I have had for the delay in regard to cases that have been before the house in previous years, and those which are now before the house.

It will be recalled that in the past we have tried to take similar action but the result has not been satisfactory. I am hopeful, and I think hon. members are generally, that a solution has now been reached as a result of which this situation will not develop again. I think it is generally accepted that one or two cases have come before us in the last three years which are bad cases. They are bad from my point of view and I would suggest that perhaps those of this type could be held out so that the committee could take a final look at them and reconsider them.

If the house sees fit to pass this bill today many people in the province of Quebec will be relieved in a very personal way. I have been accused, as has my colleague, the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard), of being unfair to the people concerned but we took our decision after very serious thought in the matter, and after we had made concessions in the past and were given many assurances that proved futile. We made our decision fully aware of the fact that some people were going to have to suffer because of our action, and we hope that this bill will to some extent justify the action we took.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this group I wish to say we have discussed the bill and its provisions and we agree that it can go through all stages this afternoon. I want to say that over the years members of this party, together with all other members of the house, have considered that the manner in which divorce cases were presented to us was one of the most distasteful parts of our responsibilities. I recognize at the same time, however, that members of parliament must occasionally face up to distasteful responsibilities.

I think there has been fairly unanimous agreement that one of the most objectionable features of the way in which divorce bills have been handled is that many times in the house and in the private bills committee members have been asked to give blanket, unanimous approval to certain things and they really did not know what they were voting for. As has been pointed out, there were times when we might have had some reservations about giving approval to certain petitions, but at the same time there did not seem to be any other course open to us than to pass them en bloc, and perhaps try to absolve ourselves of some of the responsibility because they went through in that fashion.

I wish to offer our congratulations to the members of the house who have come up with what might be called a compromise solution. We are not suggesting that this is the final or best solution that can be found but certainly we are willing to give it a try. As I said, we in this party will allow the bill to pass all stages today.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I will not delay the house many minutes but I was so involved in this problem for a number of years that I should like to say a word or two about it. I should like to pay a compliment to the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk) for his activity in this connection last year and again on this occasion, and to two former members of the house who are no longer with us, Mr. Robert McCleave of Halifax and Mr. Doug Morton of Toronto, who worked many long hours attempting to arrive at a solution to this very vexing problem.

The problem has been recognized by all members of the house for many years, and a very great effort was made, involving the expenditure of many hours of time in attempting to reach a solution to the problem, one which has escaped solution for a very long period of Canada's history. There were several occasions on which two or three of us representing the various parties in the house conferred with Mr. Speaker Michener about the problem. Some members of the house conferred with members of the other place. A great deal of work was done in that way in order to achieve success.

Two years ago a bill almost identical to this one was passed by this chamber with the co-operation of all hon. members but it failed to receive approval in the other place. Now we have finally arrived at the stage where agreement has been reached. Certain additions have been made in this bill which have provided for valid objections raised on other occasions. I hope there will be general agreement to the passing of the bill and thus removing a very contentious problem from this chamber.

At the same time we will have to push into the background and forget some of the controversy we have had in this chamber with regard to methods that were used to promote the idea of a change in procedure with respect to divorce. The great thing today is that we now have an achievement which I think will be creditable to parliament.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, if this bill is passed by the house and is also passed by the Senate it will constitute a red letter day in the life of the Canadian parliament. Over the past quarter of a century many of us had hoped that the day would come when a more satisfactory way would be found to handle divorces coming from the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland. Many of us have felt for a long time that parliament neither has the facilities nor the skill to deal with the question of divorce. We do not have the facilities to make proper investigations. We do not have the facilities to decide whether or not proper custody of the children is being awarded and proper provision being made for the parties affected.

I rose simply for the purpose, first of all, of extending congratulations and paying my tribute to the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) and the hon. member for Skeena (Mr. Howard) who have fought this question for a long period of years. They have often suffered misunderstanding as a result, but I am sure they will be satisfied today. I am also sure that members of parliament in all parts of the house will be happy that an improved method has been found to handle divorces.

This is by no means the end of the road. There are other things that should be done. We in this party have always felt that the exchequer court was the proper court to handle divorces, but that may be a future development from the step we are now taking. I also want to pay tribute to the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Mandziuk) who has worked very assiduously on this subject, and to congratulate him and the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) who has brought the bill before the house today on behalf of the member for Marquette. I think members of the house in all parties who have worked together to find a solution will feel a great sense of gratification that we have now reached an important milestone in the history of the Canadian parliament. I think also it will be a great relief to many of the people who have been affected by this legislation.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I just want to say one or two words on this measure. I realize that a great deal of work and co-operation has gone into the preparation of the measure and the method by which it has been brought here this afternoon. It is a source of great personal regret to me, however, that in reading this bill I see that on August 1, 1963, we are creating a process for administering the laws of England in respect of marriage and divorce as of July 15, 1870. We have had previous discussions in the house concerning the necessity for broadening the general grounds for divorce. It is a source of personal loss to me that we are here merely perpetuating the archaic and backward divorce laws that exist in this country. I hope that some day we will be able to deal with this subject.

I realize there are a lot of problems involved, religious difficulties and personal belief. However, this does not alter the fact that thousands and thousands of Canadian citizens are living under extremely harsh and difficult circumstances because of the archaic nature of the divorce laws of this country. I hope that some day we will be able to drag the divorce laws, kicking and screaming, into the twentieth century. This is, of course, a step in the right direction. No one would wish in any way to oppose it or detract from the importance of the measure we are passing. I could not permit it to pass without registering my personal objection.

(Translation):

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say only a few words on this bill because I do not intend to oppose it.

A satisfactory compromise has been found since the house had no desire to deal with the matter. However, what surprises me is that the whole matter will finally fall into the hands of the Senate, of people who will be called upon to rule on marriage and whose decision will be final.

I appreciate that the house has found a compromise solution, and all I want to say now is that I wish the house would spend as much time, energy and money to find a way to patch up unsuccessful marriages instead of giving further encouragement to divorce.

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I feel that there should be a word said from this side of the house. I want to say first that I feel the spirit in which this legislation has been put forward today, and the way in which every member of the house has to some degree made a compromise, is an indication that under our democratic system we can do the things that need to be done.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; it will be understood that if the hon. member speaks now he will be closing the debate.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I appreciate the co-operation that has been displayed. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, and all the members present that I do not wish or intend to take credit for the presentation of this measure today or for the terms in which the measure is placed before us. This goes to several members of the house, some of whom are here and some unavoidably absent. I include, particularly, the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) who has seen fit to agree to the terms of the measure. As one of the members of his party said, perhaps it is not ideal, but it is a common denominator that we come out with in this chamber for the benefit of the whole. I would take this opportunity of thanking every individual who has made this possible this afternoon.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, considered in committee and reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time?

Mr. Pickersgill: Now, by leave.

Mr. Winkler (for Mr. Mandziuk) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Ian Grant Wahn (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, may I move that Bills SD-1 to SD-50 be referred to the committee en bloc?

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): We have agreed, Mr. Speaker, that no further consideration will be given to these bills. The committee has decided that the people are prepared to go ahead with their cases according to certain affidavits. Some of these cases are rather lengthy. Unfortunately, however, they have become badly mixed.

I should like to ask the chairman of the private bills committee if he will hold out two bills which I consider are in a separate category. I refer to the bill concerning Mrs. Barmash, which is being contested for the third time, I believe. The second bill relates to a person named Hankowski. This case was referred to a few days ago. There is a problem of domicile involved as between three countries and this case wants special consideration. In addition, there is the fact that counsel in this particular case do not appear to have been advised in the regular manner. It is not really known whether or not there is a protest on behalf of the respondent.

With the exception of these two cases, Mr. Speaker, that I should like dealt with separately, the Hankowski case which is Bill No. SD-5 on the order paper—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It would be helpful if the hon. member could give us the numbers of the bills to which he is referring. Bill SD-5 is on the order paper today. We added another 200 and I am not sure what the number of the Barmash case is because it is changed from what it was previously.

Perhaps I might suggest to the hon. member that we will try to sort this out in committee.

Private Bills

Mr. Wahn moved:

That Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to go into committee of the whole on private bills SD-1 to SD-251, both inclusive, with the two exceptions referred to by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) pursuant to section 1 of standing order 54.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee on Bills SD-1 to SD-251, (with the two exceptions indicated)—Mr. Wahn—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clauses 1.

Mr. Aiken: Are we going to go through the bills one by one?

The Chairman: My understanding is that we are calling clause 1 of all the bills and then their preambles.

Mr. Aiken: Of all the bills except the two—

The Chairman: Except the two that have to be sorted out, which we have to determine or identify.

Mr. Scott: How are we going to handle the problem raised by the hon. member for Timiskaming with regard to the two bills, if we are going to carry them all simultaneously?

The Chairman: They have been specifically excluded by the Chair, without naming them, because we will have to go through quite a number before we are able to identify the two bills specifically referred to by the hon. member for Timiskaming.

Mr. Knowles: The hon. member for Timiskaming has cut your problem in half. One of the bills is readily identifiable. It is order No. 6 but the other you will have to find somewhere.

Mr. Aiken: I think the hon. member for Timiskaming will find that the numbers of of the bills are in Votes and Proceedings for yesterday, July 31, at page 315 and onward. I think, to put this in proper shape, we ought to identify the bill numbers and withdraw those two bills from consideration.

Mr. Peters: The Hankowski case is SD-5 now, and in the previous year it was SD-1. No. 3 or 4 was 90, and there is no continuity between this year and previous years.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask the hon. member what the name of the party is?

Mr. Peters: B-a-r-m-a-s-h.

Mr. Pickersgill: Surely it is sufficiently identified so that it can be sorted out at the table.

The Chairman: In any event my understanding is that the two bills, identified to the extent that they were named by the hon. member, were excluded from consideration of the committee. We have further identified one of them, Bill SD-5, and we have the name of the other one which has just been recorded on Hansard by the hon. member.

Mr. Fairweather: I am not going to take more than about two minutes. I just want to say that because of the very wonderful compromise that has been made, we are about to consider these bills, and I want to say that I share two points of view. The first one is about custody of children. This has troubled me ever since I came to this place, and I have been rather astounded to note that we could dissolve a marriage and pay no attention whatsoever to the custody of the children. That is something I wish to put on the record.

Second, I want to agree, with a fervent amen—perhaps this is out of order, but it will not take me long enough to worry about it being out of order—with the statement made about the narrowness of grounds for the dissolution of marriage. They are surely archaic in Canada in 1963.

The Chairman: Shall clauses 1 of the said bills carry?

Clauses 1 agreed to.

Preambles agreed to.

The Chairman: Shall I report the said bills?

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a question? Perhaps this is out of order, but what about the ones now in Votes and Proceedings for July 31? Are they going to come before the house before the adjournment?

Mr. Pickersgill: There was a motion made earlier today and they are now before the house. I would like to have that confirmed by the chairman of the committee.

Mr. Wahn: Bills SD-1 to SD-251, with the exception of the two bills mentioned by the hon. member for Timiskaming, are before the house.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, so far as I can gather the second bill mentioned by the hon. member for Timiskaming is not included in this group.

Mr. Ryan: It is important that the motion affect only one rather than two bills. I cannot find the Barmash bill.

Mr. Pickersgill: If it is not included then it cannot be excluded.

The Chairman: Shall I report the said bills?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Bills reported and read the third time and passed.

[The Chairman.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, before another order is called I wonder if the house would permit me, in order to have it recorded on today's Hansard, to give the information which the Speaker asked about the questions that were to be dropped pursuant to the intervention of the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire). They are Nos. 506 to 556; 651 to 662; 708 to 737, and 892 to 898 all inclusive. I will send this to the table so that it will be properly recorded. I am most grateful to the house for permitting me to do this.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ian Grant Wahn (St. Paul's): Will Bill SD-5 now be dealt with—the one that has been excluded?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Is it agreed by the house that there is only one bill, SD-5, which will be excluded from the several bills that have been approved by the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Aiken: Are we going to deal with Bill SD-5, or is it to stand?

An hon. Member: Let it stand.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is agreed that bill SD-5 stands.

Bill stands.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. S-29 respecting The Sovereign Life Assurance Company of Canada—Mrs. Konantz.

SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Mr. Ian Grant Wahn (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent I move, seconded by Mr. Addison:

That the following bills be now read a second time and be referred for consideration forthwith, notwithstanding provisions of standing order 106, by (a) the standing committee on banking and commerce: Bill No. S-26, respecting Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company; Bill No. S-30, respecting the Monarch Life Assurance Company; Bill No. S-35, respecting the Crown Life Insurance Company.

(b) Standing committee on miscellaneous private bills: Bill No. S-31, respecting the Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I would like to know first of all whether the proposal of this motion means we will not be free at this time to say anything in respect of any of these bills that are being moved for second reading and referral.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The understanding is that hon. members will have an opportunity to consider and discuss these bills.

Mr. Barnett: I rise, Mr. Speaker, simply for the purpose of saying a word or two about Bill No. S-26, respecting the Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company. I am speaking in support of the bill but I would like to say a word or two about my own reaction to the method of dealing with this matter. I think it is rather unfortunate that a bill of this particular kind has to come before this house, because in my view it represents the necessity of the co-operative movement of Canada taking a rather roundabout and back way in order to achieve their purpose of maintaining the democratic nature of this particular operation.

My own view is that it would have been much more preferable had it been possible for the Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company to have proceeded with what I understand was the original idea a number of years ago, that is, operating their concern in the normal co-operative manner through some provision for a delegate convention. I think it is rather important that we realize in this house that the purpose of this bill, as I understand it, is to ensure that the co-operative and democratic method of control shall be maintained in respect of this organization. While I regret that circumstances make it appear that this is the only manner in which that object can be achieved, nevertheless I feel we should support the desire of the co-operative movement to ensure that in the future their operations shall continue to be run in a truly democratic manner.

Mr. D. G. Hahn (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I may just say a few brief words and make a few comments on the remarks of the hon. member who has just spoken. One of the reasons for the change in this company from a mutual company to a joint stock company is that of financing. This company was originally incorporated as a co-op company. The original capital was loan capital and was intended to be loan capital. Originally, in 1951, it was $200,000. The people and the co-ops which advanced these funds had no control in the operation of the company. In the intervening years it has been necessary to put more money into the company because its business has grown to a total now of nearly $1,300,000. More capital is going to be required. One of the reasons for changing the structure of the company is to take note of the fact that this capital is no longer loan capital; it is permanent capital. Therefore the co-operatives which have advanced the capital are now going to have an opportunity to participate in the management of the company through the stock operation.

Motion agreed to and bills read the second time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The said bills now stand referred to standing committees as specified in the motion.

ALLSTATE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed from Thursday, July 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Ryan for the second reading of Bill No. S-28, to incorporate Allstate Life Insurance Company of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Gregoire: What is the question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Moved by Mr. Ryan, seconded by Mrs. Konantz:

That Bill No. S-28, to incorporate Allstate Life Insurance Company of Canada be now read a second time.

Some hon. Members: No.

(Translation):

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I am astonished to see this bill before the house for the third time.

On July 18 last, this bill was presented and one of my colleagues, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire), indicated to the house, in strong terms, the reasons why we objected to the passing of this private bill.

We are asked, as it were, to welcome a new insurance company. The Allstate Life Insurance Company of Canada is not going to invest capital in Canada; on the contrary, it will take further profits out of the country.

Mr. Speaker, if in my turn I object tonight to the passing of this bill, following the example of my colleagues from Lapointe and from Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard) who objected to it also last Thursday, it is because I am of the opinion that in Canada there are several insurance companies which give us adequate coverage.

I cannot see why a company owned almost entirely by foreigners, by Americans, should be accepted, when there are in Canada insurance companies that give us very good coverage in a very satisfactory way.

There are in Canada a great number of insurance companies and competition is so fierce that there is no need to take a step to take out a policy; insurance salesmen are always after us, offering us the coverage that our own Canadian companies can give us.

Mr. Speaker, that is why I am against the passage of this private bill; we have here in Canada insurance companies that are doing very well. From a Canadian standpoint, in every field, we are doing rather well. We have succeeded in industry.

This bill will not create more employment, as another member stated in this house. There is no question of coming here to give employment, but rather to get benefits.

Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, our people have done well in the insurance business as in any other field. I am of the opinion that we need not look elsewhere to find what we want.

Let us take hockey for instance. We are doing rather well in Canada in that sport. It is the same in industry and also in the field of insurance.

Our Canadian insurance companies have given proof of their success a long time ago. I am sure that they can continue to give us the protection we need in the field of life insurance as well as in that of fire, theft or automobile insurance. In his budget speech, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) told us that nearly 70 per cent of Canadian trade and Canadian industry were in foreign hands. Today, we are asked to pass another piece of legislation which would increase foreign ownership of our insurance business.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to tell the house that I object to the passing of this measure as it stands, for I feel—and I wish to make this feeling widely known—that there are enough people in Canada capable of giving us all the protection we need.

We are not anti-American. That is not at all the case. But, once again, we can find in Canada all the coverage we need in the insurance field.

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I wonder why we are still discussing this bill today, for after having heard the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) and the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard), who have their own way of making themselves understood, one would think that the sponsor of the bill would have understood immediately and would have withdrawn the bill.

But it seems that the learned member for Lapointe has been preaching to deaf ears and that the young members will now have to do the same and to preach still louder to the wind.

It was proposed that that bill be referred to the banking and commerce committee for detailed consideration. At that time, the mover of the bill stated that it would be easy for the committee to question the directors of the company and obtain the necessary information. What amazes me is that more than a week later the same mover comes back with the same bill and believes that we can do without the few explanations we wanted to have. In any case, we are wondering what kind of explanations we would have been given since it was clearly stated in the house that this company is largely American.

I find it strange that some members talked in the house about anti-Americanism, but I wish to emphasize that that is not the question. In fact, we are not concerned about American capital but about Canadian capital flowing out of the country to the United States. That is why I have to object to the bill.

It was said earlier that the budget introduced by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) contained an item the effect of which was to prevent new Canadian capital from falling into the hands of American companies. Now, the bill before us provides for the take-over of a Canadian company by Americans who will come into this country to compete with our Canadian companies.

Therefore, it is the responsibility of the members of this house to look after Canadian capital. Why does the mover introduce such a bill when we have in Canada a sufficient number of insurance companies giving us all the services we need? We really do not see how Canadians would benefit from the establishment of a new insurance company.

That is why I humbly agree with the ideas so brilliantly expressed by my colleagues who are opposed to the passing of this bill. However, I would like to make a suggestion to the mover of the bill who wants us to refer it to the committee on banking and commerce. I would suggest that he, who should know the director of the company very well, encourage the latter to draft a bill during the adjournment, which would be acceptable to the members of the house. The company might, for instance, decide to have a greater number of Canadian directors, so that it would be 50 per cent Canadian.

(Text):

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I should just like to deny that I know any one of these directors of these companies. I have had no personal acquaintance with any of them.

(Translation):

Mr. Girouard: In that case, Mr. Speaker, I apologize if my words implied that he would know some of the company's directors. I would nevertheless ask him whether he could not find an opportunity of meeting some of those directors and tell them the reason for our opposing the bill, which is that we would not like entirely American capital to compete with our Canadian companies in a field in which there is already too much competition. If the hon. member would make some representations to those American people, I think that the bill might be accepted later. Otherwise, I do not see how we could accept it, for we did not get the explanation we wanted.

Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

(Text):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business having expired, the house will now revert to government business.

It being six o'clock I do now leave the Chair, and may I remind hon. members that the house will sit again this evening at seven o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 7 p.m.

MUNICIPAL DEVELOPMENT AND LOAN BOARD

PROVISION FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO MUNICIPALITIES

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-76, to promote increased employment in Canada by financial assistance by way of loans to municipalities to enable municipalities to augment or to accelerate municipal capital works programs.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the Minister of Finance not going to make a statement?

Mr. Gordon: In speaking to the resolution in the house on June 11 and in reply to the debate on the resolution on June 17, I set forth the purposes of the municipal development and loan act and explained the manner in which it would contribute to employment.

While the financial assistance given in this legislation will help municipalities to build capital works, it must be remembered that the primary purpose is to give employment. This we hope to accomplish by increasing the level of municipal capital expenditure over the next two or three years, that is, up to March 31, 1966 which is the terminal date specified in the bill.

The speeding up of municipal capital expenditure is to be accomplished by making loans available to municipalities on favourable terms. A municipal loan fund of $400 million will be established for this purpose. The money will be available to the municipalities for financing additional capital projects and the interest rate will be the government's own long term rate plus not more than one quarter of 1 per cent administrative overhead charges. To provide an added incentive for a rapid increase in municipal capital spending, the government will forgive one quarter of the loan made with respect to the increased capital spending before March 31, 1966. This, of course, is the equivalent of a major reduction in the rate of interest on the full amount of the loan.

I should like to repeat that. There are two ways of providing money for this particular purpose on a basis that will be attractive to the municipalities. One would be at a reduced interest rate. The other is the one proposed in this bill which provides for a substantial forgiveness feature of part of the capital. They both have the same effect.

This then is the broad outline of the program: A fund of $400 million available to finance additional municipal capital expenditures up to March 31, 1966, an interest rate on loans equal to the federal long term rate plus a moderate overhead charge, and a 25 per cent forgiveness of the amount of the loan made with respect to work completed up to March 31, 1966.

The whole plan is designed to make a substantial contribution to employment in the coming winter and over the next two or three years. The main purpose of the plan, to increase employment by the above means, has been endorsed by the provinces, and I might say it has been endorsed by all of the provinces. This is demonstrated by the joint communiqué issued at the conclusion of the meeting on July 26 and 27 with the provinces, which began as follows:

> The meeting of federal and provincial governments has concluded with full agreement on the proposal of the federal government to promote employment by financial assistance, with provincial approval and co-operation, to municipal capital works.

Municipal Development and Loan Board

As a result of the meeting with the provinces last week end I will propose certain changes in the legislation which have to do with the method of administration and with the breadth of the program. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has already referred to the excellent results of the conference. Speaking in the house on July 29 he referred to the very satisfactory agreement reached between the federal government and the provinces. He pointed out that the conference with the provinces had accomplished all that it could of itself accomplish. It produced a very satisfactory understanding with the provincial governments about the recommendations the federal government would make to parliament concerning the municipal development and loan bill.

The modifications in which the provinces were particularly interested were of two kinds, and the proposals that we will make to parliament in this connection are summarized in the communiqué to which I have already referred. The first point has to do with the scope of the program and I should like to quote the communiqué on this point as follows:

> The federal government indicated to the provinces that it will propose, in the legislation to be discussed in parliament next week, features which will enable the measure to be applied in forms adapted to different conditions in the various provinces. The federal government will propose that the range of municipal works covered in the program will be broadened so as to include in any province all those municipal works which the province and the federal government believe to be productive of increased employment.

It was clear from our discussions with the provincial representatives that they felt that broadening the range of programs to which the municipal development and loan bill would apply would make possible a greater contribution to employment and would make for a fairer division of the assistance as between municipalities. Since the government is concerned with achieving the full effect from an employment standpoint and since we are also concerned that the program should be a fair and equitable one from the standpoint of the provinces and the municipalities, we will be proposing an amendment to broaden the list of municipal projects which will be eligible for assistance, provided, of course, that they are additional municipal capital works which will provide additional employment over what we would have had without this plan.

The second modification with respect to administration was also outlined in the communiqué and I should like to quote the pertinent paragraph:

> In response to suggestions from a majority of the provinces—

And, I might say, concurred in by all the provinces.

> —the federal government will also propose that, if a province so wishes, it will be able to make with the proposed municipal development and loan board an agreement whereby the province is responsible for granting and administering the loans to municipalities, subject to such safeguards as are necessary to enable the board to report to parliament that expenditures have been properly made according to the purposes of the legislation.

This will give the provinces the broadest possible participation in the administration of the program consistent with the responsibility which the federal board must have to parliament.

The changes with respect to the scope of the program, that is, with respect to the types of municipal projects which will be eligible under the program, and the change with respect to the administrative arrangements by which the provinces can enter into an agreement to administer the loan assistance themselves, have the enthusiastic support of the provinces. In addition, we shall be proposing a change that will ensure that a disproportionate share of the $400 million loan fund will not go to some provinces because they are in a position to proceed rapidly with certain projects. We will meet this point by proposing an allocation of the fund in proportion to the population of each of the provinces. I might say that this was also enthusiastically endorsed by the provinces last week end.

Mr. Starr: Proposed by them.

Mr. Gordon: No. The hon. member interjects to suggest that this particular point was proposed by the provinces. It was not. It was proposed by the Prime Minister. I think it will not be useful to dwell any further on the detail of these changes. The hon. member seems to be looking a little sceptical and perhaps I should say another word. It was proposed by the Prime Minister in his opening statement at the conference.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Following criticism by various provincial ministers.

Mr. Gordon: I did not quite catch the remark of the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is it not a fact that various provinces took objection even before the conference and the change was made following their objections?

Mr. Gordon: I do not know anything about that, Mr. Speaker, but I do know that this particular change was initiated by the federal government. I think it will not be useful at the moment to dwell any further on the detail of these changes which will, of course, be presented in the form of amendments to be moved at the committee stage. They do not affect the general purpose and policy expressed in the bill which we are now considering on second reading. Since these changes will have the full support of the provinces they will be a further assurance of success of the proposed legislation in making a substantial contribution to employment.

With this provincial co-operation confirmed and assured I hope that parliament will deal with the legislation expeditiously. We will then be able to have the plan in operation prior to the onset of the coming winter. In this way the stimulus of the plan will be brought to bear at an early date and winter unemployment reduced. In addition, and most important, municipalities will be in a better position to plan the acceleration of their works programs for next year. This municipal development and loan fund is a short term measure to contribute to employment in the near future. We want, and when I say this I am sure I speak for all members of the house, the maximum numbers of jobs at an early date. We want a general stimulus of expansion, income and production which these new jobs will create. The early passage of this legislation seems to me one of the best ways of achieving these results.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the remarks of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), in which he has set forth in some detail the changes in the original plan as embodied in the resolution with which this house dealt in June, indicate the degree to which the plan of that date has been changed and altered to an almost unrecognizable degree following the meeting of the dominion-provincial representatives. Indeed, the changes are of such a wide, comprehensive nature that I suggest the minister secure the opinion of the law officers of the crown to determine whether or not the second reading of this bill, changed as I said earlier almost beyond recognition, will require that the matter be brought before His Excellency so that the minister will say, as he must say in respect of all new expenditures:

His Excellency the Governor General, having been informed of the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house.

Mr. Gordon: If the Leader of the Opposition is asking me a question—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; the Leader of the Opposition has the floor.

Mr. Gordon: It seemed to me he was putting this in the form of a question, and I will be glad to answer it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister should know we are not in committee.

Mr. Gordon: I thought you were asking me a question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Having exhausted his right to speak, the minister can answer later. I ask him this question now because the opinion has been given by those who are not unconversant with parliament, that it is very doubtful if the bill in its present form, without the introduction of another resolution and the former one withdrawn, will actually conform to the practices and procedures of parliament. We have had experience in that regard in the past. I raise that point by way of general introduction, and then I pass on. The minister will have an opportunity when he sums up to inform the house whether the opinion of the law officers in this regard has been secured.

The minister spoke of the enthusiastic reception that was given by the province. It was not an enthusiastic reception of what the government presented to the provinces, for by the time the provinces got through with the plan that had been presented to parliament the changes and alterations resulted in this plan, which in its original form did not have regard for the rights and responsibilities of the provinces, being different from the legislative plan which had been placed before parliament. We suggested to begin with that there should be consultation with the provinces before action was taken. The government rushed in and bull-headedly presented a resolution and a bill. Having done so, having engendered opposition in all parts of Canada from the provinces, it then convened a meeting of the provinces to consult with them. If ever there was a case of putting the cart before the horse, this was one. We asked for that and we received no favourable reception to our suggestion of the need for full consultation.

Second, having taken the stand we asked what means the government would take to raise the amount in question. As yet, we have not heard about that. We will no doubt find out as the amendments are unveiled, what safeguards have been provided for the spending of this amount. These are things that we should have known. The minister says that what took place was an enthusiastic reception by the provinces. Why would there not be? The provinces simply took the skeleton idea of the government, divested it of most of its flesh and blood, put their own flesh and blood on it and the government of Canada said, that is all right with us. Certainly if ever there was consultation in which the provinces dictated what should take place and the federal government accepted that dictation, this was the occasion.

All the provincial premiers gave approval. Why would they not? They got everything they wanted. They got $400 million. They got the forgiveness provision. They will have the right to spend practically as they wish in the municipalities, subject to whatever control may yet be revealed. It is a wonderful thing so far as the provinces are concerned. It is everything for which they could ask. How different were the provisions of the communique from the provisions of the resolution which was presented to parliament? Naturally, the provinces agreed with avidity. They accepted with enthusiasm. They will be in a position where they can, in the widely extended scope of the legislation, cover a wide variety of municipal expenditures which otherwise would not have taken place.

The scheme now presented bears little or no relationship to the original. In that connection I refer to the Prime Minister's glowing words to the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities on May 29. The resolution and the bill bear but a casual relationship to the promise that was made to the federation of mayors. This plan bears little or no relationship to anything proposed by the Liberals in the election. It now resembles the winter works program of the former government. They went all the way around and came back to the position we had taken in regard to this question on the winter works program.

The federal government produced its plan and then the provinces rebelled against it. I use that word in the sense that they remonstrated with fervour, and the government, following a pattern familiar in this session of parliament, retreated. It was not because this plan had not been thought of previously. Members of the government had been talking about it for the last several years and had it in mind ever since "Troubled Canada" was produced. I shall later refer to the plan put forward by the Minister of Finance in that famous work, because it bears very little resemblance to the present one.

The reaction of Premier Lesage to the original plan was so violent that the Prime Minister had to send a squad of ministers to appease him. What about the general plan? Is it going to provide employment? There was very little reference to the numbers, but what about employment this coming winter?

The minister said the plan of the government is to stimulate employment, but then the government plastered the tax on building materials and production machinery, which can only have the effect of stifling the expanding economy which we left when we gave up office. In addition the government has cut the winter works program.

It was interesting today to listen to one of the ministers say he did not want to predict what would happen in the days ahead, but there was an opinion given that the sales tax on building materials would not have a serious detrimental effect on expansion. The government wants to provide employment, but it has cut back the winter municipal works program by shortening the period by six weeks. That will mean an additional 20,000 persons placed on the unemployment roles at a critical period of the year, and it will require some other plan to take up the slack.

Last year, for an estimated expenditure of $400 million from federal, provincial and municipal sources, approximately 200,000 jobs were provided, and about 145,000 of these were during the 28 weeks of the program. As I say that program is to be six weeks, or 20 per cent, shorter this year.

Will it provide jobs this coming winter? I hope it does. The minister said that is the purpose and if it were passed quickly by parliament then the plans can be made and implemented. However, in his budget speech on June 13, the minister, referring to the impact of the loan, said in effect that the plan should begin to make an impression within six months to a year from the time parliament approved the legislation contemplated.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what was the plan in "Troubled Canada," because after all the period of gestation began at the time that book was produced. At page 108 of that famous work the following statement appears:

> If $500 million could be spent in connection with municipal programs of this kind within a single year it should result in providing perhaps 100,000 new jobs.

What a difference there is between the plan of today and the plan in the book. The present plan provides for $400 million, $100 million less, not to be spent in one year but over three years, and I would like to have some projection as to the jobs that will be produced.

According to the minister's own statement the program will not apply with any degree of effectiveness in a comprehensive measure on next winter's employment. Remember, Mr. Speaker, unemployment in these days was a problem members of the government said they could meet. We tried to meet it by expanding the economy, by expanding exports and trade, but it did not come about. Now I find according to the Liberal press of the last few weeks, that the unemployment of today is something that is built into the economy as a result of changing economic and technological conditions. The alibis are already started, and in all parts of Canada alibis are being advanced in the Liberal press saying that this is a new kind of unemployment. However it is no different in 1963 than it was in 1961 or 1962, but at that time members of the present government said they could meet the problem very quickly.

We tried to meet it through the winter works program which, as I have already said, is being diminished in importance by the fact that the period is being reduced. We also tried to meet it by the vocational training capital construction program, which will terminate in October. Over a two year period this program put into effect a total expenditure of around $500 million, of which 75 per cent was committed to capital construction. That plan provided an estimated minimum of 25,000 to 30,000 jobs in winter works, both on and off site, and in the provision of supplies, materials and auxiliary construction. What is to take its place?

The plans so far advanced by the government is merely for an extension or continuation of the programs which we provided, but since the building program under the vocational training scheme is to end this year, a full year will be required for the preparation of plans and programs for any new capital construction, which means a loss of tens of thousands of jobs. How will that loss of jobs be made up? Well, there is this plan, that had to be so altered that it bears little resemblance to the one that went into the grist mill of the dominion-provincial conference.

What are the plans of the government to meet unemployment? We have not heard them yet. There is the $500 bonus for the construction of houses during wintertime, but that incentive is almost completely obliterated by the combined effect of the imposition of the sales tax and winter building costs. Then there is the incentive to employ older workers. Well, we have heard very little about that plan. The plan for 45-year olds was supposed to be a tremendous thing. We have not heard very much about that, because they are beginning to realize there is nothing effective about it in any major sense.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: These are the people, though, who had the answers. They do not like to hear this. I do not blame them. They told us for four or five years, "Give us the tools and we will do the job". They got the tools, and they have produced little or nothing in the present session of parliament; there is nothing before parliament requiring attention.

What is going to be the result of the 4 per cent tax, the revised version of the 11 per cent? Well, the estimate I have seen—and it is only an estimate; it is a "guesstimate" I suppose—is that this will result in a holdback on projects of as much as $50 million. That means a loss of jobs. Sir, with the 20 per cent cut-back in municipal winter works, with the cut-off of the vocational training capital construction program in October, with the effect on municipal borrowing of the measures announced in the United States by the President—which we were given to understand had been almost entirely removed as a result of a two-day visit to Washington—the situation regarding employment becomes a very serious one. We are thus faced with the prospect of new and onerous unemployment conditions which have been brought about in large measure, not by conditions over which we have had no control but by the very actions taken by this government which in a period of two and a half months has shown an ineptness that has no equal in Canadian history. We now have no program, no policy and no action to deal with unemployment for this coming winter.

Sir, this legislation—and I will deal with it at some length when we get into committee, as others probably will—is a plan that was altered almost in its entirety as a result of meeting with the provinces. It is one that contemplates the expenditure of $400 million over a period of three years. I am informed that it will mean at the most 12,000 jobs this coming winter. I hope it means many more. I am informed it will mean no more than 25,000 jobs in the two succeeding winters. What is going to be done on the part of the government to solve the unemployment which the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) himself admitted the other day, on the basis of the estimates that were before him, will be serious? Whatever estimates were given to him when he took office will have to be increased because of the actions taken by this government in its budget, which can only have the effect of making for fewer and fewer jobs in this country at a time when the government states its objective is to increase the number of jobs. The provinces have accepted this measure. They have been consulted, as we insisted they should be. I want to see this legislation passed. I want to see action taken as quickly as possible. At the same time, we are going to examine it carefully. If it had not been the opposition taken by this party when the resolution was introduced, this government would have gone ahead pell-mell without any consultation with the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We insisted on it. They finally gave in when they received denunciations from the provinces, the most outspoken that have been made certainly within the last 25 years. Then they called the provinces together and said, "This is our plan, but what do you want? We want you to take this plan. Give us your ideas". The provinces did: the government of Canada said, "Me too".

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great attention to the remarks made by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) when he presented the amended version of the Municipal Development and Loan Act.

One thing seems to be the leitmotiv of his remarks. It is that this revised version, at least this amendment that the Minister of Finance wants to make, has the support of all the provinces, in short that it is with the approval and the unanimous consent of all the provinces that this revised version is submitted to us today.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say one thing. In the province of Quebec in particular there are circumstances when mistrust is deeper than in others. That is when there is a Liberal government in Ottawa and in Quebec. That is when we have to be wary. History has shown that it is precisely when there are Liberal governments in both Ottawa and Quebec that our province gets hoodwinked and is stripped of its rights.

That is more or less what happened during the last war when Ottawa asked Quebec to conclude a tax-sharing arrangement, to agree on the rental of its sources of income for the duration of the war only. We do not know what happened behind the scene, but we do know that Ottawa still has those sources of income.

Mr. Speaker, we are ready to examine the bill impartially but—

Mr. Maurice Sauve (Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Would the hon. member permit a question? He states that only the government of Quebec and the central government made certain agreements during the last war. Surely, he must remember the agreements signed by both governments which were in power in Quebec and in Alberta, a province which is so dear to him.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I would like you to have the earphones of the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauve) checked because I never said that only the province of Quebec had concluded agreements, but I did say that the Quebec and Ottawa governments did so. I never used the word only, because I am well aware that all provinces signed agreements, and it is still worse since the federal government has been not only depriving the province of Quebec of its sources of income but all ten provinces. Such was the opinion that one might have had of the federal government at that time.

Mr. Speaker, before being unexpectedly interrupted by the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine, I was saying that we are ready to undertake an objective and constructive study of this bill. However, you will admit that this will not be easy, since we do not have in hand the amendments which the Minister of Finance wishes to introduce.

We only have the bill that was introduced on June 17, but much has happened since then. In order to provide assistance to municipalities, the Minister of Finance told us himself that he would make some changes, but we do not know what they are.

At all events, we shall consider the measure and try to help the government, because we feel it is essential to assist municipalities in undertaking and completing works which are necessary today. In the times we live in, when tremendous and essential development is required, we must see to it that our municipalities can keep pace with progress and for that, they must undertake major works. But since they have no source of revenue, because other levels of government have them all, municipalities are unable to undertake alone the works essential in our times. That is why our municipalities need some assistance.

The initial bill seemed to indicate that the federal government was going to intrude in a field of exclusive provincial jurisdiction and provide direct assistance to municipalities under the form of loans. The government appears to have changed its mind since the loans will be made to the provinces which, in turn, will lend money to the municipalities. However, it is worth mentioning that when the central government lends money to the provinces on the conditions that the funds will be used for such and such a purpose, it cannot be said that the provinces are entirely free.

If the province of Quebec, or any other province, borrows at the pro rata of its population, any portion of the $400 million offered to the municipalities, it is not free to do whatever it wants with the money.

Thus, if a province feels that it has projects more important than some others to carry out, it is not free to choose. The province is always more or less subservient to the federal government, which dictates the way in which the money is to be spent.

Please note, Mr. Speaker, that if the provinces borrow that money they will have to pay it back and therefore the money is loaned to them actually on their credit. They use their credit to borrow, but they cannot do what they want with the money borrowed. They must fulfil some strict conditions, at least as I see it from the bill now before us. As a matter of fact, they must respect some particular provisions imposed upon them by the federal government. In my opinion, this constitutes interference by the central government. We all agree that we must assist municipalities, but not at the expense of the liberties the provinces fought for and at the expense of municipal freedom.

Mr. Speaker, for many years, indeed for many decades, Social Crediters have been advocating a system of interest free loans to municipalities. As a matter of fact, such a proposal has been part of our political platform for several years. But the bill now before us is different in that clause 14 provides that the money will come from advances out of the consolidated revenue fund.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister of Finance to explain to us what is the consolidated revenue fund. That is not really a fund, because there is no money at all in it. It is a fund without funds. There is no money in it.

In fact, the Minister of Finance will have to borrow money to make a deposit in the said fund. Or still better, as just suggested to me by the member for Charlevoix (Mr. Belanger), the Minister of Finance will create a pot in order to lend to the provinces, which in turn will lend to municipalities. As a result, the money will be in circulation but will be used only by the last borrower.

The Minister of Finance will issue bonds to create that $400 million fund and then, he will deposit the money in the consolidated revenue fund of Canada. But why always borrow from the chartered banks and from private enterprise to develop the social capital in our country, our municipalities, our provinces?

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance stated that he had several amendments to move. Well, we shall also have one to bring forward, in which we shall request that the money be not taken from the consolidated revenue fund which does not exist anyway.

In fact, I challenge the Minister of Finance and all the members of the cabinet together to indicate to me a single copper which exists at the present time in the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

And after that we are told that the money required will be taken from advances out of the consolidated revenue fund, when there is not a single cent in it. In other words, money will be taken from where there is none at all. But of course we are still using the old orthodox economic system, as we know it today and which consists in borrowing, as it has always been done in the past, from the chartered banks, which create credit in order to lend money to the federal government.

Well, our amendment suggests that instead of obtaining that money from a fund without funds, we should take it from the Bank of Canada. There are funds there, Mr. Speaker. And there are credits there which belong to the Canadian people, to serve for the development of the country.

In the Bank of Canada, there are credit possibilities which belong to the Canadian people and which will allow them to develop the country without continuously getting into debt, through progress made in every field.

Mr. Speaker, I remember that last year—and it can be found in Hansard—the Liberals unanimously voted for the establishment of a debt free money system. Yes, those gentlemen all voted in favour of that debt free system. Were you in good faith at that time, or just dissembling?

If, when you were sitting on the opposition benches, you meant to prove to the people that you had some good ideas, you did so by voting for a system of debt free money. But, if on the other hand, you were not sincere and just pretending, you would not be over anxious today to put that system into practice. Any way, we shall give hon.

members sitting on the government benches the opportunity to prove that they were sincere—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I am sorry to have to interrupt the hon. member, but I have to remind him that he should address the Chair, when making his speech.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I think that hon. members who are now sitting on the government benches have today the opportunity to prove that they were sincere when they voted in favour of a debt free money system.

Mr. Speaker, I am surprised to see the evolution happening on the government side. Sometimes, I get the impression that the ideas sown by others flow over their heads like water from a duck's back. But when discussing with them, one is often asked: Your system is quite sensible; I think that there is some good in it. Only, my wife has some victory bonds or savings. Does it mean that she will get no more interest?

Mr. Speaker, we note a certain interest for our system. People begin to notice that it is not as ridiculous as they thought. Well, I shall give them exactly the same answer that I gave on several occasions to those who asked that question. We are not advocating a system where the Bank of Canada would finance every development throughout the country. No. No, but we want the Bank of Canada to act as a medium that will create the credit required for the development of our country, which means that it is public works, and not industries and manufacturers, companies and business concerns, in brief it is not the private sector that accounts for the development of the economy of a country, but the public sector. Municipal works belong to that sector, since they are useful to the community, and also provincial and federal works, for the same reason.

Well, as I said, those works are useful to the community; they make a country richer and bring prosperity.

Why could we not use also a public agency to create the public capital that would be used to pay the cost of that progress which helps the community? By doing so, we would not be compelled, as we are today, to borrow and pay interest and to repay to private enterprise, money which we are using to develop public capital in this country and stimulate progress in the public sector.

[Mr. Gregoire.]

Mr. Speaker, this is an important amendment and we are going to move it. Whenever we, of the Social Credit party, were speaking of municipal loans, we always added the words "through the Bank of Canada" and "at the expense of the administration". The Bank of Canada is an organization subject to government, to the crown, or rather to parliament. It is an organization that has been created by parliament, of which we are members.

The Bank of Canada exists today because members elected by the people in a democratic way stood up one day in this house and voted for the establishment of the organization which we call "The Bank of Canada".

The Bank of Canada comes under parliament since it was established by parliament. It belongs to the Canadian people and we are responsible for it because it was set up and it operates by virtue of a federal statute.

Therefore, if we carry the responsibility for the bank, let us make sure that it fulfils the purpose for which it was established, that is to help in the development and progress of our country in the field of public facilities.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that if we were to take the money from the Bank of Canada instead of borrowing it from private enterprise and chartered banks and put it in the consolidated revenue fund, there would not be one penny more in circulation in Canada and there would be no danger of inflation.

That would not cause inflation. The Minister of Finance knows full well what inflation is, since he gave us a sample when he established the tax on building materials which has caused the price of buildings to go up and depreciated our dollar. That is inflation!

The Minister of Finance knows what inflation is, Mr. Speaker, because he takes steps which will cause inflation.

I would not look kindly upon any member opposite who would claim that inflation is caused by Social Crediters because they themselves are the ones responsible for it.

Inflation is something which is blown up. It is inflated money, like a blown-up balloon. The government's 11 per cent tax is such a balloon. In other words, before long our dollar will be worth nothing.

That is why we call on the government to secure its money from the very source of money, the Bank of Canada. That will not create inflation because there is inflation only when there is too much money in circulation for the quantity of products available.

Now, the Bank of Canada would issue $400 million of credit, but only at the same rate as municipal development.

The Minister of Finance is an accountant, Mr. Speaker, and when he first came to the house, he was known to be the best accountant in Canada. He must know then that in accounting there is a column for assets and another one for liabilities. The entries in those two columns must balance, and then everything is fine.

I am not quite as good an accountant as the Minister of Finance, but I was able to learn that much in the few classes in accounting that I attended. If the Bank of Canada were asked to put credit in circulation at the same rate, not more rapidly or more slowly, but at exactly the same rate as the development of our municipalities, results would be much more satisfactory. For example, when a muncipality builds a $5 million sewer, $5 million are added to Canada's assets. Then, unavoidably the Minister of Finance will add $5 million in the other column. This means that if the Bank of Canada does such a thing, there is no inflation, since the credit is proportional to the product.

If on the other hand, $7 or $8 million were put in circulation, while development projects in our country would only amount to $5 million, we would unavoidably put too much money in circulation and thus create inflation. Then would appear a few individuals to do as the public relations officers of the Liberal party did at the last election and say that money would become valueless.

Well no, that is not true if, as we increase the wealth of this country by building roads, hospitals, bridges, sewers, water systems, we create the required credit at the same rate, neither more nor less, but only what is needed to pay for the country's development. Then, you do not create inflation.

Mr. Speaker, the money used to pay for all that is but a sign which represents all those developments, which are the things signified.

Money is a sign, an index like the quicksilver found in a thermometer. The mercury rises or falls as the temperature goes up or down. A week ago, in Ottawa, it was very hot; so, up went the mercury. Now that it is not quite so hot, the mercury is going down. As the temperature goes, so goes the mercury.

Money should act the same way in relation to production. The Bank of Canada should see to it that the amount of money in circulation is constantly kept in balance with production and the development of our municipalities, thus keeping pace with the progress we want for our country. Money must follow the progress of the country and the accrual of the wealth in the country, neither more nor less, but at the same level.

Money must play its role, that is the role of a symbol, and represent adequately the thing signified, the products to be called sewers, waterworks, or anything of the kind.

Mr. Speaker, if we were acting that way and accepting, one of these days, to see that money follows production instead of trying, like we do today, to make production follow money—which is illogical, I may tell you, at this time, Mr. Speaker, that with the will, courage, determination, capacity and ability of our workers, of our builders, of our contractors, with all the goodwill of our aldermen and school boards, we could develop this country and see to its progress. Money always being there to follow, it would be neither an obstacle nor an impediment to this country's development. It would be a help.

But we always hit an obstacle, a real one. There is no money and no credit, whereas we would be able to develop the country.

The best example of such an attitude, Mr. Speaker, was when the Minister of Finance, in concluding his speech, spoke of a maximum number of jobs at an early date.

Four hundred million dollars for three years. If the province of Quebec takes its share, it would be about $120 million for three years, or $40 million in one year. How can the Minister of Finance expect to reach maximum employment with $120 million for three years, or $40 million for one year in the province of Quebec, at a time when we had only a few unemployed and practically full employment at 100 per cent, more than $22 billion were spent in five years—i.e. $4,500 million, and not $400 million, in three years. Full employment was successfully reached by spending a hundred times that much during the war, and today we hope to create maximum employment at an early date by spending only one thirtieth part of the amount made available to the municipalities.

Well, Mr. Speaker, let me repeat, for the benefit of the Minister of Finance, what I said yesterday to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne): they come to us with all sorts of legislation which they have worked out in their heads in their committee sittings, but let them go ahead for two years with all their economic or orthodox theories, and in two or three years from now they will be very much surprised, throw up their arms and say: "It did not work, we studied it for a long time, but it did not work."

This is likely to happen, Mr. Speaker, if we do not accept to change the system and to pass legislation beneficial to municipalities. We should spend not only $400 million in three years, but a good deal more in order to give work to more than a few hundred people.

Four hundred million dollars for three years, that means, on a pro rata basis, $40 million a year for the province of Quebec. If one considers that, in a public undertaking, hardly 20 per cent of the money goes for wages, that represents only $8 million.

Mr. Speaker, this is not much. How many jobs will be created? If it is estimated that employees earn $4,000 or $5,000 a year, this is scarcely good for 1,800 employees or 1,800 fewer unemployed. Now, there are far more than that in my constituency of Lapointe. That means that 70 other ridings will be left with the same problems they have now.

An hon. Member: I want some too.

Another hon. Member: Me too.

Mr. Gregoire: I hear some members say that they want some for their ridings too. There is barely enough for mine, Mr. Speaker.

If the Minister of Finance intends to get his credits from the Bank of Canada, he can ask the house to vote the amount he needs and we will do it, because then the money will be coming from the Bank of Canada, which is a government institution. Let us not pile debts on the future generations and put on their shoulders a burden similar to that under which we stagger today when we must pay $910 million a year in interest on the public debt. Why? Because we have always taken our money in a fund without funds, that is the country's consolidated revenue fund. There was no money there. Expenditures have always been charged to the consolidated revenue fund in Canada and, this year, the interest on the public debt totalled $910 million.

We will study the legislation objectively. We have an amendment ready but, before presenting it, we hope that the Minister of Finance will agree to do so himself. I seem to understand that it would be logical, even more so because I was proud of him last year when he rose to vote for that motion about debt free money.

Mr. Speaker, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) also rose to support that motion and, at that time, all the other Liberal members cheered; they cheered and so did we. But I have faith in their sincerity, in their political and intellectual honesty. In any case, that will give us an opportunity to judge them. We are suggesting to them to set up, at least in a limited way, a system of debt free money under that new legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I have other arguments that might encourage the present cabinet to do that.

I am not too sure whether there is in this government members of the 1940 cabinet, or if there are still members who were here in 1940. Those may remember that the government of that time did exactly what I am suggesting tonight when it requested the Bank of Canada to create the first $200 million to finance the beginning of the 1939 war.

Gentlemen of the Liberal party, if there are among you any members of parliament who were in the house in September or October 1939, they remember well that they voted for exactly what we are suggesting tonight. But at that time the amount was $200 million. As times have changed and money has lost some of its value, it would be normal that we vote $400 million today.

Furthermore, if we have been able to do that for the war, why should we not be able to do it to help solve the problems of our country. The Minister of Finance could then say he is really financing and that he actually is assisting municipalities without having to think all the time that he will have to come before us again next year thinking: We will have more interest to pay this year because we had to put money in a depleted fund.

Mr. Speaker, this is my conclusion and I submit to the goverment that even if they must spend night after night to consider this amendment,—because it is their responsibility to find new ways of financing public works—I feel that the suggestion we are making tonight will be advantageous to them.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, it is always difficult to speak after the great orator from Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire).

(Text):

I shall not deliver a lecture in economics, Mr. Speaker, but will try to keep to the bill under discussion. We have our ideas about banking and finance too, but in the interests of getting the legislation through I think we should confine ourselves to what is contained in the present municipal aid bill. When we in the New Democratic party spoke on this legislation at the resolution stage we thought generally that there were sufficient safeguards for the provinces. Every proposed loan had to be approved by the department of municipal affairs in each province. We felt this was sufficient. However, there were complaints from the provinces and when the government was faced with a unanimous vote of the legislature of the province of Quebec they had to take some note of this fact. We were pleased to see that the conference was a success. I do not find very much in the Toronto Telegram which to my mind is worth quoting but I think an editorial in the issue of July 30 has some merit. It reads in part as follows:

> Possibly most important of all, the compromise on the municipal fund created a new and healthy atmosphere for federal-provincial co-operation, which may be next felt in discussions on the proposed federal portable pension plan later this year. The 11 governments have got over one hurdle; why not another?

We are very pleased to see that the government has broadened the scope of the bill and that hospital and school construction may now be included under the loan provisions of the legislation. We and other opposition members said during the debate on the resolution that this should be so. If the government would listen to the opposition more frequently they would get some good ideas, but they have been persuaded by the provincial premiers on this point. However, broadening the scope but without increasing the amount of money will mean simply this, that the available money under the bill will be used up a great deal more quickly than it would otherwise be. The provision in the bill is to the effect that the amount is to last until March 31, 1966. I suggest this fund will be used up, particularly since the scope has now been broadened, much before that time.

One of the important things is that the minister has said funds would be allocated to the provinces on a per capita basis. I know that some particular method has to be worked out, but I am not entirely sure that this is the best method. The three provinces which have the greatest population, I think, are three of the richest provinces in the country and the ones which can best afford to help their municipalities. The Toronto Globe and Mail of July 29 pointed this out. I should like to quote in part from the editorial on this subject.

> One alteration in the legislation must be greeted with reservations, that which will allocate funds to the provinces in proportion to provincial population. The purpose of the bill is to provide jobs for the unemployed, and the distribution of funds should surely, therefore, be related to the incidence of unemployment within a province. The money was raised in the provinces. If it is now to be turned back to them on a basis of population, there will be little recognition of the differing employment needs of different parts of the national community. It will be merely another handout.

I had rather hoped, Mr. Speaker, that the minister would have announced some changes in clause 7 of the bill because, as I see it at the moment, it is quite unworkable. I do not know who drafted it but there have been a great many complaints about it. They are trying to establish the fact that a municipality can only borrow money for works which would not have otherwise been undertaken. Now, many municipalities, particularly the larger ones, plan well in advance. They lay out capital works programs. They know what they want to do and they cannot include very much else. The council of the city of Vancouver has complained about this. They have said it may encourage deception. I feel this clause should be looked at very carefully because it is unworkable.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there is another aspect of this matter to which I should like to refer. So far in the discussion about municipal aid, the federal government has been considered as the villain of the peace. I think the provinces bear some responsibility. Many of the provincial governments have not been notably generous in providing aid to their own municipalities. This is particularly true in relation to the larger urban centres in which many of the people of Canada live. They are very quick to criticize the federal government, but they are not so quick to aid the municipalities which need it most, the municipalities in which we find this tremendous concentration of people. These are the ones that have large costs which go with a rapidly expanding population.

The Ottawa Citizen of July 30 pointed this out, particularly with reference to the province of Ontario. I would say that it certainly applies in my own province, too, because the government of British Columbia is not too generous to the municipalities, particularly the larger ones. The Citizen had this to say:

> Alternatively, the Ontario government could relieve the municipalities of obligations such as social welfare expenses and part of their education commitments, leaving real property to pay for the installations that benefit property, such as roads, sewers, and police and fire protection.

Understandably, Mr. Robarts did not state this alternative, which would require a new financial relationship between the provinces and the municipalities. But the welfare and education obligations assumed by the municipalities are imposed by provincial law. The province on the one hand gives the municipalities no choice except to assume these duties, and on the other hand does not allow the municipalities sufficient revenue sources to discharge their obligations, without placing an extremely heavy burden on real estate and discouraging home ownership.

A new provincial-municipal relationship is long overdue. In its essentials, the current set-up was founded many decades ago, when urban centres were relatively small, and when social welfare and education costs did not consume much of the average municipality's budget. Today, they account for more than 50 per cent of the operating costs of the larger cities, including Ottawa. Mr. Robarts could contribute much to Ontario's welfare by removing this distortion.

I merely mention this because we hear much about a new federal-provincial relationship in connection with financing. I think the provinces could look within their own boundaries and look for a new relationship with the municipalities generally.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) has again emphasized the purpose of the legislation, that is to provide the maximum number of jobs and at an early date. I shall just take a moment to repeat a criticism which we made at the resolution stage. There is $400 million to be spread over three years, or $133 million a year for all the municipalities in Canada. This is not a large amount. It will help, but it will not make a strong impact on the employment situation. I feel the government will find that it will provide a limited number of jobs and they will have to take another look at this next year.

Now, in order to assist the quick passage of this bill, because the municipalities are anxious to make plans for the coming winter and because the administrative machinery must be set up within the provinces to handle this, I can assure you that the members of the New Democratic party will not speak too frequently nor too long on this measure. We have made our views on it known. We are anxious to see this measure in operation as quickly as possible. I am glad that the principle of providing aid to the municipalities, to the provinces, has been established. We hope that in the years to come this will grow to a much greater extent than it is now.

(Translation):

Mr. Herman Laverdiere (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I take it as my duty to rise in this house to support the bill that is now before us.

[Mr. Prittie.]

This measure, more than the others that have been previously discussed, concerns directly my constituency.

Mr. Speaker, the county of Bellechasse is mostly rural and the dairy industry is the main means of livelihood there. For the last few years particularly, the farmer's income, especially in the district I am more familiar with, namely the one that lies on the south shore of the St. Lawrence, from Lotbiniere to the Gaspe peninsula, has been very low. Especially in these last few years, some farmers must really have had great courage to stay on their farms.

Municipal and school taxes have become too heavy a burden in most municipalities; so, certain improvements and works which are needed, and even urgently needed in several parishes, must be delayed in order not to raise municipal taxes which are already too high.

Our municipalities will welcome this legislation which will enable them to undertake improvement of their waterworks, a problem in several places, repair or construction of sidewalks, development of adequate parking lots for public places, improvement of sewer systems and other public utility projects. I hope that the province of Quebec will also apply this plan to the building of civic centres where young people especially will be able to receive a good training while spending their leisure time in sound recreational activities.

I insist specially on that last point, because rural municipalities cannot, by themselves, support the cost of such buildings; on the other hand, it has become a necessity to enable every parish to organize recreational activities so that our splendid rural youth, which are very talented, do not wallow in amusements more or less perniciously organized by profiteers. The whole rural population wants well organized civic centres and rural municipalities do not have now the financial means to develop them.

The towns concerned will take advantage of this legislation, but Mr. Speaker, we must first of all think about our small rural property owners, especially in the area I just mentioned, who deserve a certain comfort without having to bleed themselves white in order to improve public services. The rural people's request should have priority, because of their present financial situation which is quite unsatisfactory as compared with that of large centres.

As far as these loans are concerned, let us think less about the municipalities which have a substantial budget, and more about those which are heavily involved in debt and where the public services are a sorry sight, particularly when compared to those of large centres. The rural population also deserves our full attention, and I strongly suggest that loan-granting authorities give it top priority.

A comparative study of public services in towns and villages, in relation to municipal taxation, would soon show that the small rural property owners must be helped first.

The benefits to be derived from this legislation will be twofold, as many unemployed people will find jobs thanks to the municipal work programs. Rural unemployment is more prevalent than one would think, for many jobless people are not listed with the unemployment insurance commission, or with the various federal or provincial employment offices.

That is why I am very happy about the agreement arrived at between the federal government and the provincial governments, and more particularly Mr. Lesage's delegation, because the province of Quebec will be entitled to a full share of this remarkable assistance program, which was long overdue. We must help our rural communities for they deserve it as much as our cities. They are showing signs of impatience, and I can not say I blame them for it.

(Text):

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my remarks will be brief. There are three points I would like to make on this proposed legislation. The first concerns the approach of the government to the whole problem of federal municipal assistance, the second deals with the philosophy of federal assistance to municipalities, and the third is with regard to the scope of the proposed measure.

In dealing with the first, the question of the government's approach, as soon as I received a copy of Bill C-76 I immediately sent copies to all the municipalities in my constituency and to certain key officials in the department of municipal affairs of British Columbia. Then I paid a visit to my area early in July and contacted these same people. I was amazed to find that not only were the senior officials of the department not consulted but by that time, which was about July 5, they had not received copies of the bill, and I found, certainly with regard to preparation of the bill, that these people had not been consulted.

I am sure if they had been consulted—and this would apply to every province of Canada —what would have come out of the mill would have been completely different from this bill I have in my hand and, as I surmise the new bill will be, when it is amended in committee. For example, I understand from the general comments made by the minister that the provinces will be given an almost completely free hand in how the money is to be used. However, does the minister realize that if it is permitted for municipalities to use it for school construction, this would not apply in British Columbia because in that province municipalities do not spend money on the provision of schools? In some provinces municipalities are able to borrow money from the federal government to finance school construction, whereas in British Columbia they would not be able to do this.

I would submit that even with the forced, rushed conference they had last Friday and Saturday, the results that came out of that did not represent what might have been achieved if there had been formal consultation with the provinces, and through the provinces with the municipalities. If that had taken place the program would have been completely different.

My second point concerns the philosophy of federal assistance to municipalities. When he introduced the resolution, and subsequently, the minister said that the prime and only purpose of this legislation is to promote employment. That is a commendable objective but it does not go far enough. I think we all realize our municipalities need help, and it is true they are the creatures, the offspring, and the responsibility of the provinces, but yet there are certain phases of municipal problems that become national problems.

When this party formed the government our approach was in certain selective fields of municipal problems which became national problems, and for which the federal government gave assistance. I have in mind our assistance to municipalities for the control of water, and sewerage pollution. It was strictly a municipal problem in most cases, but it was a problem that had national implications. Therefore the former government said, "We will assist municipalities in this special respect so as to solve the problem, which is one of a national nature."

There is no such approach in this legislation. It is supposed to be strictly for the purpose of creating employment. This is regrettable, and if there had been advance consultation with the provinces perhaps what would have resulted would have been legislation not only to assist employment but also to assist municipalities in those problems which have become of national significance.

My third point deals with the scope of the proposed measure. I remember so well that, during the election, one of the government's main planks was vast assistance to municipalities. At that time it was not supposed to be merely for the purpose of creating employment. It was to assist municipalities. I know that in my own area the municipalities thought this was going to be a tremendous source of revenue to them, with loans at low interest for almost any project they wanted to undertake.

Let us compare this proposal with some of the measures which the previous government took, in order to get an idea of the scope of the proposal in relation to the whole question of municipal problems. The maximum amount proposed by this legislation is $400 million to be spent over three years. Some time has elapsed since the resolution was introduced, so really only 30 months remain. So at that rate $400 million over 30 months would allow for loans to municipalities of about $160 million a year. Since the loans are to be only two thirds of the cost of the projects, the total value of the projects financed by this measure would be $240 million per annum. That is to say, $240 million per annum would be the total cost of the projects covered by this proposal.

The winter works incentive program of last year covered work of a total value of—

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would allow me to ask him a question. It seemed to me that his arithmetic was somewhat in reverse. The $400 million represents two thirds of the projects, so that the total volume of the projects is $600 million, and not less than $400 million.

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Speaker, either the Minister of Finance does not know his arithmetic or he was not listening to me. I will repeat what I said. I said the total amount was $400 million. I gave the government the benefit of the doubt by leaving only 30 months rather than the three years envisaged when they introduced the resolution. That is $160 million a year in loans. Since the loans are two thirds of the cost of the projects, the cost of the projects is $240 million per annum. That is exactly what I said the first time.

I make my point, Mr. Speaker, comparing this proposal with just the winter works incentive program of the previous government. Under this proposal the average cost of the work per annum would be $240 million. The cost of the work under the winter works incentive program last year was $246 million; in other words, the value of the work covered by the winter works incentive program was more than this whole, vast assistance program to municipalities. Furthermore, the winter works incentive program generally by its provisions covered work which was of a high labour content. According to the last annual report of the Department of Labour, the average labour content of the work covered by the winter works incentive program was 31 per cent. I would say the average labour content of the work to be undertaken under this proposal would be in the order of 20 per cent. In other words, the total effect of this program on the question of employment, apart from anything else, would be much less than that actually proven by the winter works municipal program.

Then, of course, municipalities are interested in the forgiveness of the loan. Just compare this proposal with the forgiveness under the winter works incentive program. The forgiveness under this program would be in the order of $40 million a year, which is 25 per cent of $160 million; whereas the direct federal contribution last year under the winter works incentive program was $40.822 million. Therefore for that reason also the winter works incentive program alone had a larger beneficial effect than this vast proposal to assist municipalities.

Over and above the assistance we gave to municipalities by way of winter works incentive that I have mentioned were the loans for municipal sewage under section 36 of the National Housing Act. Under that provision last year the federal government made loans to municipalities of $45 million and the value of the projects covered by those loans was $67 million. Keep in mind that under the measure of the previous government we did not assist the whole sewerage program of the municipalities; it was only related to the treatment plant and certain trunks, so that the additional work which the municipalities provided over and above what we gave was considerably in excess of that figure.

Again, Mr. Speaker, looking at the question of the scope of this program and coming back to my first point, that the municipalities are the responsibility of the provincial governments, we must never forget that during the term of office of the previous government payments to the provinces vastly increased, from something of the order of $700 million in 1957 to almost $1.5 billion in 1962. That means a payment to the provinces of some $800 million more in one year, 1962, than they got in 1957. It is true that there was no compulsion on the provinces to assist the municipalities; but surely this additional payment to them by the federal government should have placed the provinces in the position of assisting the municipalities. I am sure no one here will deny that the municipalities do need assistance. They are the creatures and responsibilities of our three levels of government. They have limited resources. Their major resource is the property tax, which most people are finding too burdensome. They do need assistance, but let not this government or anybody else think this proposal is going to be an answer to the problems of the municipalities.

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, first of all on the constitutional aspect of the proposed amendments I would say it was particularly gratifying to see in the official communiqué the statement of the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) that the solution which was arrived at in the present case and which fitted the needs of the present case, the need of pumping this money into the national economy as quickly as possible in order to create work this winter, would not necessarily be the type of solution for future provincial-federal relationships in financial matters of this kind. I think there are many of us who believe that, if we are going to solve our basic national problems, even a country of 19 million or 18 million people is too small an economic entity to do the job properly and to plan the job properly. I think the economic history of the world today, the growth of the common market by very reason of the fact that the populations there were not sufficient for good planning are, surely, indicative of the fact that we need a strong central government in order to solve these problems of economic development and unemployment in the long run.

I do not think it will effect a permanent or a good solution if in these matters the federal government is purely a bank that collects the money for the purpose of distribution to the provinces. I do not think we can plan in the long run for a good solution to our economic problems on that basis. It was therefore most gratifying to see these words of the right hon. Prime Minister in the communiqué.

With respect to the bill itself, Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak on the employment aspect. I think we cannot take this bill as standing alone; I think we must consider it in its relationship with the entire government plan as enunciated in the speech from the throne. We have seen by that plan that the government proposes to build three vehicles for the long term solution of the unemployment problem and for the expansion of the economy, which will contribute to the solution of that problem. In the first instance we have for the long haul the powerful Mack truck of the plan, the economic council. This will be good for the long haul as we plan our growth and development in future years, so that in the long term the solution will be available. In the second place we have the reliable family vehicle, the Department of Industry, which will contribute to the solution of these problems in the immediately ensuing years. Then the present bill is the fast-starting sports car with which immediate employment is to be carried. I think from the standpoint of the constituency which I represent I should consider whether this fast-starting vehicle will be effective in my area. I would point out that in areas such as I represent a great number of the municipalities are small and extremely poor. I have been somewhat troubled in this house by the impression which seems to have been created that because the southwest and central parts of Ontario are apparently very prosperous and thriving, that all of Ontario is wealthy and does not require help. Nothing could be further from the truth. I was most pleased to see the enactment of the Atlantic development board legislation whereby the Atlantic provinces will be helped in their economic plight to the tune of some $100 million; but I trust that there is no thought that areas of Ontario are not in just as bad a plight economically, and from the standpoint of unemployment, as even the most abject areas of the Atlantic provinces. In this regard I would be very pleased to invite any hon. member of this house, or in particular any hon. member from the front benches, to my riding, and with our new emolument he can make the trip at my expense; it will be on me. I think that such a trip might be useful and illuminating to any hon. member who has the idea that all of Ontario is a land of milk and honey and is thriving the way western Ontario is, because such is not the case. In my area the municipalities are to a large degree too poor to afford to take advantage of this particular bill.

This afternoon, Mr. Speaker, I did some research with the aid of what is known as the blue book of the department of municipal affairs for the province of Ontario. The house might be shocked to learn that many of the municipalities in my riding have very low assessments. For example, the township of Brougham has a total assessment of some $160,000. The township of Bagot and Blythfield has an assessment of some $400,000. Even our larger towns, such as Eganville and Barrys Bay have respectively total assessments of some $700,000 and $400,000. I was further shocked to discover that one municipality had an existing debt of nearly 50 per cent of its total assessment, while a municipality having three times the assessment of this particular municipality but located in western Ontario had a debt of less than one-half of the particular municipality to which I refer. This is the kind of problem we are facing I think it is obvious that a municipality with a total assessment of some $400,000 or $160,000 cannot possibly take advantage of this bill for the purpose of creating employment.

In my riding there are only two municipalities of any size, the town of Renfrew and the town of Arnprior, and it might be thought that they could take advantage of this bill in such a way as to create large projects providing employment, the benefits of which would flow outwards to outlying areas. In this regard I would point out that the municipal board of the province of Ontario has a rule that a municipality cannot borrow more than up to 20 per cent of its assessment. This is a sound rule in order to make the municipalities financially responsible and able to pay their debts. Such being the case, these two larger municipalities, in order to provide the services already required, have borrowed almost to the full limit the amount they are permitted to borrow by provincial municipal law. I can only suggest that there may be room here for some of this good will and liaison between the provinces, and particularly the province of Ontario, and the federal government in the administration of this measure so that this rule can possibly be abrogated or expanded to some extent so as to permit greater flexibility in this regard.

These municipalities are already burdened to the point where the municipal tax load is almost intolerable and a further charge on the municipal ratepayer may be more than he can bear, even though the act could be stretched so as to permit borrowings beyond the 20 per cent limit. So I suggest that the bill as it stands is not going to be that short term, fast pick-up vehicles that it was said to be to create immediate employment in municipalities such as those in my riding.

I would suggest to the minister, with respect, that he might consider an amendment which would possibly help an area such as mine. I suggest that if the main purpose of the bill, as I understand it to be, is to create immediate employment and allay the suffering caused by unemployment in the coming winter, the "forgiveness clause" should be broadened; that there should be an escalator aspect to the "forgiveness clause" so that in areas where the bill as it stands now is practically of no use, even though the unemployment problem in those areas may be grave, a greater percentage than presently contemplated is allowed by way of forgiveness. In this way, in conjunction with provincial grants the bill will be of some value.

If this cannot be done, then in all fairness the government must consider alternative measures for areas which are patently too poor to take advantage of this bill as it stands. There are certainly provisions in the bill which make it very clear that it will be of great value in combating unemployment, for example in areas like Montreal. I note that the subway provision is probably applicable only to the city of Montreal; no other municipality in Canada could take advantage of it. I think the cities of Ottawa and Toronto will probably find some solace in this measure with regard to their unemployment; but to the municipalities which are too poor to take advantage of it, and where works of a public nature are probably needed even more than in the large urban centres which will be able to use the act, I suggest that some alternative relief must surely be provided if we are going to give a surge to the economy and create employment during the winter before us. Otherwise these big and wealthy municipalities which already have more services than the impoverished ones will get even more services, and the rich will get richer while the poor will just get poorer.

I commend the government for bringing in a measure of this nature. I think that along with the other vehicles it is a step in the right direction. It is a plan for the ultimate solution of the grave canker on our national economy—the continuing unemployment problem. I do not think that any plan or group of bills is the ultimate and permanent solution to our unemployment and other national problems. I think that if we were to say to the people of Canada: "In this country there are 500,000 people who are lame, halt and blind, and we are asking you, the people of Canada, to do something about it by paying a little more and tightening your belts in order to help these people", the people of Canada would be only too quick and ready to respond. I suggest that our half million chronic unemployed are the socially lame and halt people of our present body politic, and I suggest that the people of Canada, given the problem, given the leadership and told fairly and frankly the price of solving that problem, would be only too happy to do so.

I do not think this can be achieved by any ready solutions. I do not think there are any sure shibboleths or pat panaceas which will solve all these problems. I think politicians have been largely to blame for the myth which has been promoted, that political parties by the use of some magic wand can cure these ills. I think the cure is likely to be a hard one but I believe the people of Canada would be prepared for a hard cure if they were given the leadership and given the honest picture.

I think we must redefine our national objectives. If we want full employment, if we want more universities, if we want a greater percentage of our total production to go into the public area instead of into the private area of our economy, we must be prepared to pay the price. It may be that the workingman will have to forgo shorter hours; it may be that the taxpayer will have to pay still more income tax; it may be that dividends will have to be clipped a little. But we shall be deluding the people if we try to convince them that by some magic formula all the ills affecting our economy will disappear.

I think it is time we ceased permitting Madison avenue to define our national objectives. It may be we shall not be able to have as many power motors, as many outboard motors, as many two-car families. It may be that these symptoms of the "cola" age are not what this country needs. It may be that in redefining our national purpose we shall find that there is a price to be paid. Maybe we shall see that one of our essential needs is to rehabilitate those unfortunate half million people who are unemployed. I believe that if the people were given the facts and told the price they would be ready and willing to pay it. I commend the government for providing a vehicle and I hope they will continue to lay the facts before the people in order that a solution may be found. As long as this is done I think we shall be on the broad, good road to the new Canada of tomorrow that we all desire.

(Translation):

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, under no circumstances would I have missed the speech made tonight by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon). As for me, I was greatly impressed. As a matter of fact, I find him very likeable because he shows a great deal of courage in his retreats, and I feel that the statement he made tonight is another retreat. We shall see in what respect in a few minutes.

Moreover, I sympathize with him because I fear that before long he will be retired as Minister of Finance.

When we examined the speech from the throne, we were concerned from the very beginning about the threat that might contain the legislation the government intended to introduce in the house, because we thought that provincial jurisdiction could be involved. That is why, at the beginning of the session, the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr.

Grafftey) asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) whether he or the government had had any consultation with the provinces about the proposed municipal aid program. At that time, the Minister of Justice answered:

> Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any communication of the kind mentioned by the hon. member.

On June 13, when this measure was brought before the house, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) warned the government about the danger involved in that resolution if it were not first submitted to the approval of the provinces.

We put questions to the Minister of Finance. We tried to learn whether the provinces had been consulted in that respect. We did not get any answer and I said:

> There must be no infringement or control over municipal autonomy. We must rather find a way to help the municipalities in the greatest respect of the constitution in order to improve economic prosperity and finally find a solution to the unemployment problem. But the most important point, Mr. Chairman, is to respect the Canadian constitution.
>
> I submit that we should, before the final approval of the proposed legislation, obtain from the minister all the information required. We should like to know whether the provinces have been consulted. This is the cornerstone on which this measure should be built; otherwise, we would not have the right to carry on further consideration of this proposed resolution, as it would infringe upon provincial autonomy.

When the provincial premiers were informed of that resolution, official protests were raised. And at this stage, let me recall the forcible protests made by the premier of the province of Quebec, Hon. Jean Lesage, and by the minister of municipal affairs, Mr. Pierre Laporte.

And the position became so untenable that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) saw fit to convene a federal-provincial conference which was held during the last week end. But the situation was so complex that the Minister of Justice went down to Quebec at the expense of the public treasury to have a discussion with Premier Lesage. The discussion was of a private character. What subjects were discussed? We do not know.

And when Mr. Lesage had condemned this resolution put forward by the federal government, the Canadian people wondered whether the Quebec provincial authorities were sincere in pointing out to the federal government the dangers of this legislation which constituted an encroachment on a provincial jurisdiction.

And when the provincial premiers met, we know that the problem was not settled the very first day of the conference.

Two main questions were supposed to be on the agenda, namely the establishment of a contributory pension plan and the bill to give financial assistance to municipalities.

Well, the discussion on the first subject had to be postponed and then we had a press release in which the Minister of Finance stated: "There has been perfect agreement on the proposal of the federal government."

But why bring such changes forward tonight—amendments we know nothing about? We do not know what will be the amendments which the Minister of Finance will submit. And yet, everything was supposed to be complete and perfect. Everything had been foreseen. The federal jurisdiction had been considered since the Minister of Finance told us on June 17 last:

> As I have already pointed out, we have worked out the contemplated programs taking into full account the constitutional rights of the provinces.

Then, who was wrong: the Minister of Finance or the provinces? If the provinces were not right, why then that federal-provincial meeting? So the provinces were right, since the government is now retreating. To what extent—we have yet to find out.

At this stage, Mr. Speaker, may I draw your attention to the legal validity of such amendments as will be submitted tonight, for we do not know yet whether we shall adopt that provision of the resolution which provides for the creation of the municipal development and loan board. What would be its use, Mr. Speaker? One wonders. On the other hand, if the board were abolished, the whole spirit of the resolution discussed in the house on June 11 would be changed. What right have we to give a bill second reading, if we modify the very essence of the resolution which has been studied previously? That is an interesting point, Mr. Speaker.

There is another question we might well ask ourselves. Would the granting of the concessions mentioned by the Minister of Finance not enable the federal government to encroach upon provincial jurisdiction, as this is yet another joint program?

The faulty part of this measure which we may have a chance to have a look at before the evening is over, is that we still want to bind the provinces, namely to subject them to conditions that would be required by the federal government. Then, the provinces will not be able to act freely nor to carry out freely projects of such a nature that they would meet the serious unemployment problem.

I was listening a while ago to the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Greene), who was suggesting alternative assistance to municipalities that could not take advantage of this bill. I wonder if the best alternative would not be to change the government?

When we were in power and unemployment reached an acute state, we took measures that have been effective and were partly successful in solving that serious problem.

Those hon. members opposite, who were supposed to offer a cure-all measure to settle the unemployment situation, where are they today, Mr. Speaker?

The Minister of Finance is enthusiastic and confident about his project. According to him, it will provide work for many unemployed and it will reduce unemployment substantially. However, his colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) fears that unemployment will be worse next winter.

Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit that those $400 millions will not be sufficient to say nothing of the fact that this money will be spent in such a way that the federal government will be encroaching upon provincial jurisdiction.

Eminent members of the government are perhaps not at liberty to express their opinion on that point, except in caucus. However, if they are honest with themselves, they will get up—because some of them are brilliant jurists from the province of Quebec—they will take a minute to tell us how the government's attitude fits in with the statement made by the Quebec premier when he presented his budget on April 5, 1963. At that time, he said that the provinces should not participate in joint programs because, each time, they have to abandon part of their autonomy to the federal government.

When he came to Ottawa, did Mr. Lesage surrender to the central government which refused full liberty of action to the provinces? There are, no doubt, conditions that we know nothing about. Under the circumstances, I wonder if the best way to help the provinces, without violating the constitution, would not be, as I said earlier, to give them an additional 1, 2 or 3 per cent of direct taxes. Then, they would have the control of their sources of income.

Then, it is to relieve their conscience that the federal government considered that they must retreat and give back what they take away unjustly. Are we to conclude that this is absolute respect of the Canadian constitution?

I must point out that when we were in power, we took great strides forward in that direction. First of all, the previous government raised from 10 to 13 per cent the direct taxes returned to the provinces; afterwards, it went up to 14, 15 and 16 per cent, to reach finally 20 per cent.

But the present government will bring forward legislation and amendments which I think are not constitutional and which will prevent us from voting for this legislation, although it is, in itself, an excellent measure, because it will make, no matter how small, a contribution to the solution of the unemployment problem in the province of Quebec and in the rest of the country. But if the solution offered is not of a nature to respect the Canadian constitution, I shall vote against the legislation if there is a vote on it. However, I think, Mr. Speaker, that the government will bring forward really effective amendments to stimulate the Canadian economy, which has become nervous and unsteady. More and more, our industrialists and businessmen are frightened, because they never know which new retreat they can expect from the Minister of Finance or one of the members of the present cabinet.

We are not at present in a position to pass judgment on the constitutionality of the amendments, but we must hope that those amendments will be constitutional and, above all, that once and for all, the government will bring forward its cure-all measures, its great remedies, its great solutions to the unemployment problem.

I wonder whether the legislation passed to shorten the period of winter works will contribute to reduce unemployment. We have an unpractical government which, within 60 days, tried to make the people believe that it is a government of action. However, we realize more and more that we are dealing with a blundering government, because every week we have witnessed retreats and changes of opinions.

Various legislative measures and resolutions are being introduced. During the recess, the cabinet will have more time and will be in a better position, after due consideration, to forget about the 60 days of promises. Then, in the fall, the government will introduce measures likely to promote the Canadian economy and to provide answers to the impending serious unemployment situation.

We are most anxious to hear the Minister of Finance tonight set forth his amendments which will no doubt be consistent with the Canadian constitution and promote our economy.

(Text):

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I think that the main burden of our deliberations at this stage should be to deal with the proposed amendments that are to be introduced later and which result particularly from the consultations with the provinces a few days ago. We in this party have stated on a number of occasions that the provisions of this bill are at least a step forward in providing funds to expand the social services in Canada that are expected from the municipal governments. We think this is an excellent idea. We wish the government well and in particular the Minister of Finance as he pursues this end.

We also have some reservations in that the amount of $400 million for all ten provinces spread over a period of three years is not a great deal, but we recognize and appreciate that this is a step in the right direction. With regard to the point raised by a number of hon. members, that the government surrendered to the provinces, we agree that the federal government made some concessions to the provinces at the last conference. But after all, Mr. Speaker, what is the purpose of a conference if it is not to have consultations and to take cognizance of what the other parties to the conference have said to you? We in this party do not subscribe to the idea that change is bad. We believe that if there were weaknesses in the original resolution that was brought before this house, and the representatives of the provinces pointed them out, the government is to be commended for changing the resolution to meet those objections.

Our main concern, Mr. Speaker, is that there is one amendment that ought to be included in the bill that was not included in it. I refer to the fact that the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) pointed out that funds for this municipal development fund should be obtained from the Bank of Canada. The leader of the official opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and other members have criticized the government because there were some changes introduced as a result of the conference with the provinces. One member even suggested that if this is the way they intend to handle the affairs of the country, perhaps the best solution would be to change the government. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, change to what? Certainly, I do not believe the people of Canada or the officials of the provinces would want to change back to what they had from 1957 to 1963.

I recall very clearly that there was a federal-provincial conference called in the autumn of 1957 with regard to the tax rental agreements. The premiers and their representatives met here on parliament hill. When they went home they expected to be called back. There were certain discussions in which viewpoints were put forward by both sides. A few days after the premiers and representatives of the provincial governments got home they received a telegram informing them that this was it: take it or leave it. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is not a conference; that is not consultation. I recall that when the vocational training scheme was set up, the provinces were notified what the federal government was prepared to do. There was an open-end agreement and the federal government would pay 75 per cent. There was no conference and no consultation to work out the details of how this measure was going to be applied. I recall very clearly when the Agriculture Rehabilitation and Development Act went through this house there was no prior consultation with the provinces, yet the provinces were expected to administer the act.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is not consultation in our view of what consultation ought to be. Certainly, therefore, there can be very little basis for criticism on the part of the members of the previous government when it comes to consulting the provinces. In an earlier stage of the discussion of this measure we in this party pointed out that if there were too many regulations set up by the federal government and too much direct administration of this act, there would certainly be resentment and resistance from the provinces. I think I pointed out on that occasion that the province of Alberta had set up what they called a municipal finance corporation. This has been set up for a number of years and its purpose is to supply all the capital needs of the municipalities in the province of Alberta. I suggested then that if the federal government were prepared to use this municipal development and loan fund to supply funds to this municipal finance corporation, it would be doing the service that it was intended to do and at the same time would not infringe on provincial rights in so far as the province's relationships with the municipalities were concerned. I hope that this is now the intention of the federal government and the measure will be administered in that way.

We were told earlier that there would be an official, perhaps from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, who would be dealing directly with the municipalities. I am sure that most of the provinces would have objection to that. We are happy to see that there is now going to be a greater share of the responsibility for the administration of this act on the shoulders of the provincial governments.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I think this measure, particularly if the minister would accept the amendment we propose, would be the kind of bold, imaginative action that would assure him of a place in the history of Canada. If he would take this action tonight or before the bill passes, he could take his place alongside the late Mr. C. D. Howe who, I think, is acclaimed in Canada for mobilizing Canada's war effort. I believe the present Minister of Finance would be acclaimed in the years to come as the man who mobilized Canada for peace and for social advancement. He and the government have in their hands tonight an instrument which, if it is properly written and properly applied, could reverse this trend towards mounting debt and interest charges that is becoming alarming to all the people of Canada. He should let the Bank of Canada provide the funds that are necessary for the social services expansion of the muncipalities. I hope he will accept our suggestion. I am sure that 15 years from now when he looks back, he and the government of the day will be glad that they took our advice at this time.

Mr. Churchill: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question?

Mr. Olson: Yes.

Mr. Churchill: Supposing the Minister of Finance does not accept your amendment or your advice, will your fulsome praise for him tonight be changed to condemnation?

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, we would have to cross that bridge when we came to it.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I rise to make a few brief observations which are more appropriate at this stage of the bill than later on. I know that the house is anxious to get on with this legislation, particularly as we are living in the shade of an early recess. I must say that I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks made by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Chatterton). I thought he made a very good analysis of the application of this bill to the situation that exists in British Columbia. I presume he speaks with considerable experience, having been the reeve of a municipality there. I trust that the government listened to some of the suggestions he made and to some of his criticism.

I listened also with interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Renfrew South (Mr. Greene). In fact, at one stage of his speech I thought he would be making application to become a member of this party. He did make, I thought, some very sound observations with regard to this measure and to its limitations. He made some very sound suggestions, and I trust the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) was listening to the remarks of the hon. member.

Members of this group have urged the necessity for a department of dominion-provincial relations so that there can be frequent consultation between the federal and provincial governments on matters that are of joint concern. As the result of the experience which the government has had with this bill and the necessity to call a conference, I was glad to notice that the Prime Minister has become converted to our policy when he mentioned, in a recent press release, that he believed in the necessity for establishing a secretariat of federal-provincial relations.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, that is only one matter where our influence has been felt, and the opposition has had a great deal of influence this session. It has been able to get the government to correct, so some extent, numerous mistakes it has made; but as has been said by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) it is very hard to keep up with the government because it keeps repeating them. However, we rejoice at this repentance, on the part of the government, and are particularly glad that it sees the merit of our policy with respect to dominion-provincial relations.

I know all members of the house have received correspondence and resolutions from municipalities and trade unions representing municipal employees who have been very concerned about the unfortunate delay in the presentation of this legislation to the house. I think it has been very fortunate that the government was able to get agreement at the federal-provincial conference and was able to bring this legislation before the house again prior to the adjournment, because in the correspondence I received, and I know other hon. members received similar correspondence, it was indicated that the government's stock was dropping lower and lower because of the delay connected with this legislation.

I shall not repeat what has been said by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) who presented our point of view, except to say—I speak now as a democratic socialist—that I realize this is only a poultice on the ulcer of unemployment, and we want to make the poultice as large as possible. Our metaphors become quite mixed at times, but I would add that this is a step in the right direction. However the total amount is completely insufficient to meet the needs of the immediate months ahead. We shall have to think in broader terms than the terms of this bill. We welcome it, as it will have a limited effect on the unemployment situation, but I would point out that there has been no fundamental change in the unemployment situation, since the election of the government, as compared with that situation last winter.

I make one more plea to the minister. I notice he is listening to me and I feel somewhat complimented in that respect. My plea is that the bill refers entirely to municipalities, while under the old winter works program the former government did make loans to bodies that were not municipalities, such as irrigation districts, water boards and other organizations of that type. If this legislation is to be of benefit to these smaller districts and organizations, I would urge the government to give consideration to the continuation of the policy commenced under the former government in the winter works program, namely the granting of loans to such organizations that are proven financially sound, that are socially desirable and are under good administration.

I hear one of the hon. members on the government side applaud. You know, Mr. Speaker, we often have things in common, and when we bring out something based on our experience we often find it meets the approval of members on the back benches opposite. This heartens us, and they have only to pluck up a bit of courage to support us.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Churchill: I appreciate that the minister has a very important engagement right now, but on a previous stage he mentioned that he had a number of amendments to propose, and it may be that we would not reach all of them tonight. Could we have a preliminary indication of how many amendments there are, and the nature of them? I do not know whether this is convenient or not, but it would be helpful to the committee rather than having them brought to our attention as we deal with each clause.

Municipal Development and Loan Board

Mr. Gordon: In my opening remarks on second reading I gave a general description of the nature of the amendments, but perhaps I might mention them clause by clause. There is an amendment to clause 2.

Mr. Smith: Which part?

Mr. Douglas: Is that paragraph 2?

Mr. Gordon: No. The amendment to clause 2 is on line 19, and then there are very minor changes on line 1 of page 2 and also on line 7 of the same page.

Mr. Gregoire: Will we have the French version?

Mr. Gordon: I shall have to get that, but I will give it in English first and try to get the French version in a moment. The next, amendment is to clause 7 and is a very extensive change.

Mr. Douglas: Before the minister leaves clause 2 could he point out what the amendment will be so that we can mark it in our copies?

Mr. Gordon: By striking out line 19 on page 1 and substituting the following: "municipal body however designated or such unincorporated local authority as the governor in council may hold to be a municipality for the purposes of this act."

Mr. Lambert: Might I suggest a precedent to the minister. I think hon. members will recall a certain instance in the fall of 1957 when, at this same stage, rather extensive amendments, as they said, were introduced into the Agricultural Stabilization Act. A mimeographed copy of the amendments were circulated so that we had them all before us. I am afraid that notwithstanding the great courtesy of the minister at this time we would be writing here for the next 20 minutes, and we are not quite that fast; we have not shorthand.

Mr. Gordon: There are seven or eight copies here. We do not have mimeographed copies available. I have made inquiries before and understand that the mimeographing facilities of the federal government are not quite as up to date as perhaps they might be, and it takes some time to get these things.

Mr. Lambert: On that occasion it took a matter of an hour and a half.

Mr. Peters: Send your secretary up to my office. I have a machine.

Mr. Churchill: We once had headquarters mimeograph the economic report.

Mr. Gordon: I think, Mr. Chairman, I might just indicate the clauses rather than give the details. There is an important change to subclause 2 of clause 7, and also subclause 3 of that clause. There is an addition to clause 8. There are some minor changes to clause 11. There is an addition to clause 13. There is a minor amendment to clause 14.

Mr. Gregoire: Which one, ours?

Mr. Gordon: There is a minor change to clause 15, and a minor change to clause 21. The major changes are in clauses 7, 8 and 13.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, I think the amendments which the minister is proposing will do a good deal to improve the legislation which he is piloting through the committee. We can discuss the items one by one when we come to them. However, I do think the minister and the government are to be complimented that they were willing to make the changes which were requested by the provincial premiers, particularly the two major ones, one of which was placing the screening process of these loans in the hands of the provincial authorities.

The provincial governments are in a much better position to know the needs and potentialities of the municipalities. They are in a much better position to screen these applications than is the federal government. They have all the machinery in their departments of municipal affairs and they are close to the needs and problems of the municipalities. I think it was a very wise move to turn over to the provincial governments the handling of the allocation of this money to the municipalities. Had the government not done this there would have been the danger that the large urban centres would have grabbed the major part of this fund and when the smaller communities turned up to apply for loans the fund would already have been emptied. I think the idea of broadening the type of municipal projects to include schools, hospitals and such other projects as may be included at the discretion of the provincial governments helps considerably, because there is such a diversity in the needs of the municipalities across Canada that you cannot lay down hard and fast rules. I think the minister was very wise to make this change.

While I think we all recognize that much of the difficulty could have been obviated had the provinces been consulted in the first place, there is not much use crying over spilt milk. But I think it ought to be a lesson to all of us that consultation with the provinces should become a matter of course rather than an afterthought following the introduction of legislation. I know, of course, that the government was under pressure. This is one of the major pieces of legislation designed by them to promote employment, and they were anxious to get on with it; but this is a case of more haste, less speed. I think the fact that they consulted with the provinces has resulted in very marked improvements in this piece of legislation.

The minister talked the other day about going to Washington and said he may be away for part of tomorrow. It seems to me that before he goes he might give some thought to the question of whether one or two other amendments might be considered. I am not going to take the time of the committee discussing what I think is a broad weakness of the legislation. I think that as legislation to promote employment this will not be tremendously effective, and it can only be a very small patch on a very sick economy. If we are really going to tackle the problem of unemployment and promote economic growth, we will have to adopt a much better co-ordinated and more far reaching program than this. However, Mr. Chairman, I am not going to discuss that now.

I think there are three basic weaknesses in the legislation even after it has been subject to these very commendable changes. The first, as has been mentioned by many hon. members, is that the amount of money available for the next three years is too small. I do not expect the minister to make a change in the amount now, but I hope that before the debate is finished he will give some assurance to the house that if in the first year or two there is a tremendous run on this fund the government will give consideration to increasing the amount. In other words, I hope the $400 million will not be split into three parts and as soon as one third is used up in the first year the government will say there is no more money till next year. I would hope they would be prepared to process applications, if they come in, and if the $400 million is used up quickly, that they will be prepared to come back to parliament and ask for more money. I hope this will be done, because I do not think there is any doubt about the fact that this sum of money is totally inadequate to meet the aim which the bill proclaims and is designed to meet, namely the promotion of employment.

The second weakness, as I see it, in the legislation is that the amount of money which the municipalities must put up is much too large to achieve the kind of results the minister has in mind. As I understand it, under this measure when enacted a municipality will be entitled to borrow up to two thirds of the total cost of a project. That leaves the municipality with the task of raising, first of all, in cash or some other means one third of the cost, and paying 75 per cent of the balance assuming they can get a 25 per cent forgiveness by qualifying under that provision. This really means that out of the entire cost of a project the municipality must put up 84 per cent and the government of Canada puts up 16 per cent. This is a very large percentage of the cost for the municipalities to bear. The minister shakes his head. Am I wrong about that?

Mr. Gordon: Under this program, Mr. Chairman, the federal government will put up two thirds of the total; it is not a question of the municipality having to borrow 75 per cent.

Mr. Douglas: No.

Mr. Gordon: Then I misunderstood the hon. member.

Mr. Douglas: Let me restate it. As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, the municipality can borrow two thirds of the total cost of any project. That leaves the municipality first with the task of raising one third. Then it must repay 75 per cent of the other two thirds. So that of the total cost of the project the government of Canada will be putting up 16 per cent and the municipality, through the cash it raises and through the loan which it must repay, puts up the balance of 84 per cent. This is a very heavy burden to place on a municipality when we, the parliament of Canada, are asking them to contribute to the solution of unemployment.

I think many of the municipalities which are in serious financial straits will think twice about undertaking a project, 84 per cent of the total cost of which will ultimately come back to them, plus, of course, interest. I think that something larger than two thirds of the cost of a project should be lent to the municipalities, and I would hope that the government would give some thought to that in clause 9. It seems to me that two thirds is much too low and that the government would be justified in lending 75 or 80 per cent of the cost of a project.

I think the other weakness in the bill has to do with the provisions which are to be found in clause 7, which limits this program to those projects which were not contemplated by the municipalities. In other words, the test whether or not a municipality will qualify is not whether it has unemployment. It is not whether it is in need. The test is whether or not the project is a new program and will create employment. In other words, the municipality must show that the project in question was not in contemplation before. It is quite conceivable that a municipality which had had a serious unemployment problem has budgeted to spend every dollar it can raise and every dollar it can borrow in order to implement the maximum amount of public works. That municipality cannot add to its program, and is unable to find the other one third. If it tries to drop some of the projects it has already contemplated in order to get new ones so that it can qualify, under clause 7 it will find that those projects will not be approved. They must be new projects, not projects brought in to replace those already on the municipality's agenda.

I think this is going to be a very serious restriction. I think there are a lot of municipalities which will want to borrow money from the fund but will find they are not eligible, simply because the projects for which they are asking for money are those which they already had in mind. I see no value in ruling out those projects because they had been on their program. After all, what does the government want? It wants to get these municipalities to put as many people to work as possible and employ as much social capital as possible in order to create employment. Does it matter to the government whether this is a new project or a project which the municipality had in mind previously? Therefore I urge the minister to take another look at clause 7, so that if he is not here tomorrow whichever minister is piloting the bill through will be able to indicate whether or not some flexibility can be introduced in this clause.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, if I might reply briefly to the remarks of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, I should like to thank him first of all for his opening remarks about the desirability of flexibility in all conferences. I quite agree that there is not much point in having a conference if one side is unwilling to accept good ideas put forward by other parties to the conference, and as far as this government is concerned I hope we will never be guilty of being unwilling in such circumstances. As a matter of fact, I think that the conference last week end was a success, as was evidenced by all the provincial premiers having gone there with open minds.

On the three points raised by the hon. member, as to the limit, first of all, of $400 million I can assure him that if this program is a success and results in decreasing unemployment appreciably this government will certainly keep an open mind with regard to coming back to parliament for further appropriations. There is no suggestion that this particular sum should be divided in any way over the period. I think it is fair to say that our concern originally was to get the money, or a substantial portion of it, spent before next winter or during next winter. Now that the enthusiastic co-operation and approval of the provinces has been assured, I feel a lot happier and more confident that at least an appreciable part of this sum will be spent fairly soon.

I think we all recognize that municipalities have programs and limit themselves to those programs. It is difficult for them to change them during the course of the year. Nevertheless we are hopeful, and our hope is increased now as a result of the conference last week end, that advantage will be taken of these funds which will be available and that they will result in additional capital projects this winter as well as additional jobs.

Mr. Douglas: Just on that point, the fund will not be broken up into fiscal years?

Mr. Gordon: No. The second point raised by the hon. member had to do with whether or not it was reasonable to lend municipalities only two thirds of the amount involved and to forgive only 25 per cent of the amount lent. This matter was pretty carefully gone into in the first place before the bill was presented. The view of the government then was, and I think I can say still is, that it was reasonable to expect the municipalities to put up some of the money. In fact they would be putting up a substantial percentage of their own money. We should not be asked to lend the full sum required. I should explain that any money they obtain from winter works or provincial grants comes off first; this comes off the top and they then get two thirds of the balance. It was felt that 25 per cent forgiveness would represent a substantial inducement to take advantage of these funds. As the bill passes through committee stage there is no doubt that those who are piloting it will indicate what 25 per cent forgiveness represents. The figure I have in mind, at an interest rate of 5 per cent over a 25-year period, would be the equivalent of an interest rate of about 2 per cent; so it does represent a pretty attractive inducement to anyone in a position to borrow money. I might add that during the conference last week this point was not raised. I thought it might be, but none of the provinces raised the question whether the two thirds should be increased or whether the 25 per cent forgiveness was sufficient. The hon. member for Notre Dame de Grace has pointed out that he has raised it with me before. I would say that he has raised it with me at least 50 times but has not yet convinced me that it would be a good thing to do.

Mr. Douglas: Perhaps I might just say this. As far as technical schools are concerned, the federal government goes up to 75 per cent, as it does on winter works incentive programs. Would there not seem to be a good case for lending 75 per cent of the cost of a project here? Two thirds is lower than anything I have known by way of a loan from the senior government.

Mr. Gordon: I would not like anybody to think that this is the only item being put forward to deal with unemployment. It is one of a series of items which have been proposed and in this case, as it deals with particular projects which municipalities are anxious to get ahead with, it was felt this was reasonable. I want to link it with the hon. member's third point. He questioned whether loans should be limited to additional projects entered into by the municipalities. I gathered from what he said that he thought perhaps there might be a case for lending these amounts to municipalities in respect of existing projects. It would seem to me that this would defeat the purpose of this bill which is to encourage additional works or to encourage additional employment. It is not the purpose of this bill primarily, or even indirectly, to ease the financial plight of the municipalities.

We cannot have it both ways. The provinces feel strongly that the municipalities are not subject to federal jurisdiction, as all hon. members of this committee fully appreciate to be the case. Depending on which province one comes from, the municipalities are designated as daughters or, in other cases, as creatures.

An hon. Member: "Creatures" in British Columbia.

Mr. Gordon: It was pleasanter to hear them referred to as daughters of the province, even though they might not all be receiving the attention which daughters usually receive from their fathers. Nevertheless, the provinces made it clear that the federal government has no jurisdiction over the municipalities and the question of their finances, good, bad or indifferent, is the direct responsibility of the province concerned and of no one else. So at this point the emphasis is naturally on additional employment. To be consistent it must, therefore, be on additional capital works, not on the financing of projects which would be undertaken anyway. I might say that the premier of a province with which the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is very familiar raised this point indirectly and it was made clear in the course of discussion that if municipalities have a long term capital program ahead of them and they speed it up—if they do something in the first or second year, for example, which they would normally have done in the fourth or fifth year—the additional amount of work in the first or second years would qualify under this program. This is a short term program and what we are concerned about is more jobs this winter and next year.

Mr. Douglas: I thank the minister for his statement. All members of the house are interested in the creation of jobs. The only concern I have is that the restriction which limits this assistance to two thirds of the cost of the project, together with the restriction applying it to new projects only, may prevent work which would otherwise be carried out from being implemented.

Mr. Gordon: I suggest that the hon. member has a good point when he talks about the proportion of two thirds, but I think he is inconsistent as to the second point, because if the projects are already financed, and are to be undertaken anyway, there is not much point in the federal government moving in and financing them as far as additional employment is concerned.

Mr. Douglas: Except that maybe the municipalities will not be able to go ahead with programs they have planned if the money market situation is at all difficult. But I agree that if they had planned their programs and arranged their financing there would be no special benefit about resorting to this fund except, of course, the lower rate of interest. Nevertheless, before a municipality could take on an additional project it would have to find one third of the money. If they could not do so, they could not go ahead with the project and the minister's object would not be attained.

Mr. Gordon: I am delighted the hon. member has referred to the state of the money market because, as members of the committee know, this is something which it is my responsibility to be talking about tomorrow. I am grateful to members of the committee for excusing me this evening from taking part in further discussion of this bill in committee and for agreeing that the Acting Minister of Finance can take over in my place. I have told him I am sure that members of the committee will give him the co-operation and help they usually give me when I try to pilot bills through committee, so his task will not be too difficult. On this note, if hon. members will excuse me, I will say good night, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if I might make a suggestion to the committee which has been made to me by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, that is, that we should not proceed this evening beyond the conclusion of clause 1.

Mr. Churchill: Not necessarily the conclusion of clause 1.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, if there are some general observations to be made on clause 1 we should hear them, and then report progress on this bill so that mimeographed copies of the amendments could be made available to all hon. members first thing in the morning. This, we believe, will greatly facilitate the consideration of the amendments tomorrow.

The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre then suggested that he, for his part, was agreeable to our taking Bill No. C-88, to dealing with the second reading of that bill and getting into committee on it, and then calling it a day until tomorrow. If this program, which the hon. member has suggested and which I am very glad to accept from him, could be carried out by the committee and the house it would probably make it possible for us to complete our work tomorrow.

Mr. Olson: We certainly agree with the suggestion made by the Secretary of State. I should like to ask him whether, in the mimeographed sheets to be distributed tomorrow, he would include the amendment suggested by the hon. member for Lapointe?

Mr. Churchill: We may have a series of amendments too.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentleman would do his own mimeographing we would be glad to have them circulated.

Mr. Gregoire: I will undertake to do that.

Mr. Knowles: I think there should be some understanding about the time element. The Secretary of State has said that after conclusion of discussion on clause 1 of this bill we should take up Bill C-88. I would not want to do that if it was 2.00 a.m. Perhaps we should have some time limit.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would not think of being so inhumane as to suggest that the committee sit into another day.

Mr. Churchill: On Bill No. C-88 all I would expect tonight would be a statement by whatever minister is introducing it. We will reserve any reply or statement on our part until the first clause in committee of the whole house.

Mr. Pickersgill: It will be the Minister of Justice who will be moving that bill.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Progress reported.

FINANCE

LEGISLATION RESPECTING SURCHARGE ON IMPORTS ORDER

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-88, respecting an order of His Excellency the Governor General in Council entitled the surcharge on imports order, and to restore certain rates of customs duties and tariff benefits expressed to be withdrawn thereby.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

He said: Mr. Speaker, on June 24, 1962 the governor in council passed the surcharge on imports order under the authority of the Customs Tariff and the Financial Administration Act and made an amendment to the import control list under the Export and Import Permits Act. The first order resulted in increased tariffs on certain goods and the second reduced the value of goods that might be brought back by travelling Canadians free of duty.

Section 4 of the Customs Tariff, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, chapter 60, empowers the governor in council by order to withdraw rates of customs duties more favourable than the general tariff and to withdraw the benefit of any tariff more favourable than the general tariff. These powers are unrestricted. There is nothing in the act describing any special circumstances or conditions under which they might be exercised.

Section 22 of the Financial Administration Act, Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952, chapter 116, empowers the governor in council, on the recommendation of the treasury board, to remit any tax, fee or penalty whenever he considers it in the public interest. The section defines a tax as including any tax, impost, duty or toll and provides, inter alia, that a remission may be total or partial and may be granted in any particular case or class of cases and before the liability therefor arises.

There has been some doubt about the validity of the order passed under this item and, as the house knows, there are cases now before the courts. I should have added that there is doubt as to the validity of the order because in the opinion of justice it should have been approved by parliament. The object of this bill is to validate in parliament what was done at the time.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we can make most of the comments we wish to make on this bill when we get into committee, but before it is given second reading there are one or two things that I think should be said. The concluding words of the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) are most interesting. If I heard him correctly he said that it is the opinion of justice—I presume he means the Department of Justice—that the order in council of June 24 of last year should have had the approval of parliament. Yet during the last session of parliament, the only session of the twenty fifth parliament, we were told several times that it was the opinion of justice, the same Department of Justice, that no such parliamentary approval was necessary.

I hesitate for a moment in case I have misquoted the present Minister of Justice, but if I have quoted him correctly this is a pretty serious situation. We are in effect being told that the Department of Justice gives one piece of advice one year and another piece of advice the next year. I happen to agree with the advice that is now being given, and if parliament accepts the necessity of passing this bill to validate this legislation it will mean that parliament is concurring in the view that the order in council of June 24, 1962, certainly lacked validity.

I feel in this session, as I felt in the last session, that it was a very serious departure from parliamentary practice and parliamentary tradition when the surcharge order in council of June 24, 1962 was passed, and the seriousness of what was done was compounded when the government of that day refused to bring the matter before parliament and refused even to refer the matter to the Supreme Court of Canada as we requested at that time. It makes the whole business very messy, and this sort of nibbling away at the practices of parliament is not good for democracy.

The Minister of Justice has referred to the contention that was implied in the passing of the surcharge order in council, namely, that the government of that day had the right under one statute to raise customs duties and then the right under another statute to reduce those same duties to the particular levels that that government wanted. We contended in the last session of parliament that in effect what the government of that day had done was to impose taxation without parliamentary approval, and if there is one thing that is most basic to the relationship between parliament and the executive and is a basic relationship of long standing it is that taxation cannot be imposed without parliamentary approval.

The Minister of Justice referred to the section of the Financial Administration Act under which the order in council of June 24, 1962, purported to reduce those taxes which in the first place had been raised. We went over all this many times last year. It is clearly a section that provides for remission in kinds of circumstances that are not covered by the order in council in question. We pointed out last year that there is one subsection in section 22 of the Financial Administration Act that requires publication in the public accounts of all remissions over $1,000 granted under that section. When we asked the minister of national revenue in the last session if a report could be brought down showing these remissions, we were told that it would cost so many thousands of dollars to have this done because records were not being kept in that way. I am satisfied that any competent lawyer studying this matter and finding that subsection in section 22 of the Financial Administration Act, would realize right away that the order in council falls to the ground.

We are being called upon to deal with this matter in another way which I think I have to characterize with the same word I used a moment ago, namely that it is messy. There is a clear rule in our books that we are not supposed to deal with matters that are sub judice. This matter is before the courts. It has been taken to the Exchequer Court of Canada.

I remember very well that at one time the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) asked the government of that day, which was headed by Mr. St. Laurent, to refer to the Supreme Court of Canada a matter that was being discussed here in parliament. Mr. Ilsley was minister of justice and he got into the argument. He established the point very clearly that we could not be dealing with the matter in two courts of the land, namely parliament and a federal court, at the same time. We are doing that. This question of the validity of the surcharge order in council of June 24, 1962, is before the exchequer court. Whether that court is sitting today or tonight does not matter. The fact is it is before the court and we are dealing with it here. We are, I say, violating one of the basic rules of parliament.

Yet, we seem to have no alternative because of the mess into which we have been put. We often hear it said that the courts are the guardians of our liberties, the guardians of law, the guardians of justice and so on. Here is something that has been referred to the courts; at least it has been taken to the court by parties that have been affected by it. If this legislation were not before us, we might get a decision from the exchequer court as to whether or not the surcharge order in council was legal, whether or not it was valid. I assume if we pass this measure the exchequer court might as well drop the case, and probably will, because there will be no point to proceeding with it. In this case the very serious issue of whether or not this surcharge order in council under which millions of dollars were collected, was valid will never be determined by the court. We will prevent that determination by taking the action we are taking now.

I recognize, as the Minister of Finance said when he gave notice some weeks ago that this measure was going to be brought before us, that we will be in a very awkward position if we do not pass this legislation. If the courts were to rule that the order in council was invalid, then the government would have to repay this money to the companies that had filed their cases. However, the ultimate consumers who really paid the extra duty would never have a chance to get their money back. So, Mr. Speaker, as I say, the matter is a mess all around. It is the kind of thing that parliamentary and legislative bodies get into when they avoid following the rules, traditions and practices of parliament of very long standing. I am sure that despite the things that were said, despite the feelings we had about this matter in the last parliament, if the government of that day had brought the matter to parliament and let us decide upon it, we would have shown mercy and forgiveness towards the government for what it had done on June 24.

I know that when I heard the former prime minister announce on the night of June 24, 1962, that this was being done, I took it for granted the order was going to come before parliament. I thought we would have a chance to vote on it. I thought, although it was the sort of thing I was opposed to, we might have to vote for it. We were refused time and time again. I, for one, from my seat over there where my friend from Brantford is now sitting, asked the former prime minister to refer the matter to the courts to clear up this uncertainty. He said, there is no uncertainty; it will not be referred to the courts. The fact that there is uncertainty is now established by the fact the matter has been taken to the courts, and by the fact we are having to deal with it in this legislation that is now before us.

I say, Mr. Speaker, we cannot be too careful in the parliament of Canada about these basic rules. Frankly, what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) said tonight in the course of his brief remarks puts this thing into an awkward position. We were told in the last session by the former minister of justice that the deputy attorney general and the Department of Justice had said that the surcharge order in council was in order. We were led to believe there was an opinion, but we could not get it. We are told in this session that there is no written opinion. We are told tonight by the present Minister of Justice that the Department of Justice now says there should have been parliamentary approval of that legislation. One of my colleagues behind me is asking whether the present Minister of Justice has a written opinion. I can get many written opinions to the effect that this surcharge order in council was invalid.

I think we are caught. There is nothing we can do about it. I believe we should at least realize the seriousness of the point.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Parliament as a whole, not just the government, should go through what my friend from Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) referred to a moment ago as a period of repentance. We should be in sack cloth and ashes over what was done to the traditions of parliament.

When we get into committee of the whole on the bill I wish to indicate that I shall seek to move an amendment to clause 3 of the bill because this bill does more than the title implies. The title implies that the bill simply validates the order in council of last June 24 and restores certain rates and duties. Then, there is a clause in the bill which amends the Customs Tariff Act. I draw attention to the fact that there is no reference to that in the title of the bill. That is not quite regular. If we are talking about keeping to the rules, let us keep to the rules even if we are trying to patch up a rule that was broken. I suggest that there should be an amendment to the title to include in it the fact that this bill is also proposing an amendment to the Customs Tariff. What bothers me, and I will deal with it more specifically when we get to clause 3 in committee of the whole, is that clause 3, as it is worded, suggests that an order of the kind that we had on June 24 ought to be brought before parliament before six months. However, there is an implication in that clause that that kind of order in council, the same kind we had last year, would be valid for at least six months.

I do not believe this was a proper course of action last June 24. I do not believe it would be a proper course of action again to pass an order in council based partly on the Customs Tariff Act, by which duties are raised, and based partly on section 22 of the Financial Administration Act by which duties are lowered. However, the wording of clause 3 of this bill is such as to indicate that for six months such an order in council is valid. This whole thing we have been through points up the tremendous need for any government that is in power, whatever party it is, to remember that it is responsible to parliament, and that it does not have the right to do by order in council anything that is not clearly provided for in some statute of this parliament. It was not provided in the statutes of parliament on June 24 last year for the government of that day to do what it did. The fact that the matter has now been taken to the courts makes that clear, and also the fact that this government realizes it has to validate the legislation in case the court declares the order in council invalid.

I hope, as a result of this experience, we will plug that loophole. In fact, when we get to the committee of the whole the amendment I will propose will plug that loophole and then I hope we will realize this kind of thing must not be repeated if we are to maintain parliamentary democracy in its proper level.

People generally were amazed at a thing like this when it happened last year, and it was a pretty trying experience in the house that we could not get the opinion of justice, the reasons or justification for the order in council, and could not get the matter referred to the supreme court. We were just told that it was proper, that there was no uncertainty, and all that sort of thing. This, incidentally, is something that seems to get into governments, that a government in power can do whatever it feels it has to do or wants to do. That is not true in our parliamentary democracy. The government and the executive can do only those things parliament gives them authority to do. That is a lesson about which we in the parliament of Canada must ever remind ourselves, and it is a lesseon that we simply must keep.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I proposed that we would advance this bill through the second reading stage, and I said that so far as we were concerned the major reply would be made on committee stage. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre exercised himself as to whether we would set a time limit tonight or whether we would go on until two o'clock, and I was afraid he was going to do that very thing. However, even with the opportunity to speak on committee stage, nevertheless he has taken 25 minutes tonight on second reading, at this late hour, and waxed righteously indignant over the bill.

We grant that this is a controversial item. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said that we can do nothing about it, but I suggest to him that something can be done about it. This bill can be voted down tomorrow, or later, and if the N.D.P. and the Social Credit party vote along with us the bill will be defeated. Therefore there is something that can be done about it, instead of waxing so righteously indignant about it on this stage. The hon. member rethreshed a lot of old straw he talked about in the last session. He did this at very great length, and it is quite obvious that in the house tonight there is a sharp difference of opinion.

Although the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) may condemn the former government and say it did something which was quite wrong, we reject that statement completely. We acted within the law.

Mr. Nowlan: And on the opinion of Justice.

An hon. Member: Produce it.

Mr. Nowlan: And we have got it.

Mr. Churchill: This is the nature of the debate which was gone through last session and obviously will be repeated this session, and I entertain some doubts as to whether the bill is going to pass the house tomorrow unless my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre will accept my suggestion of voting it down and disposing, not only of the bill but by chance dispose of the government at the same time—and what are the odds?

I am not going to impose on the house at this late hour, as my hon. friend did. I am going to leave it to the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) to make the effective reply tomorrow that he will make to the statements made tonight.

Mr. Knowles: Will my hon. friend permit a question?

Mr. Churchill: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: Does he want the house not to validate the order in council?

Mr. Nowlan: It was validated years ago.

Mr. Churchill: We don't require any validation by the present government.

Mr. Pickersgill: It is by parliament.

Mr. Churchill: Or by parliament to acts we did because they were sound and right. We stand by that and we will prove it to you tomorrow.

Mr. Knowles: Parliament is superior to any government.

Mr. Churchill: Even to members such as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to detain the house, but I would like to pose a question tonight which can be answered tomorrow. I would like the minister to define, if possible, if there is in fact a difference between taxes and penalties. That is all I have to say.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, if there are no other speakers—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is understood that if the Minister of Justice speaks now he closes the debate.

Mr. Chevrier: I am going to try, in the few minutes at my disposal, not to introduce a contentious note in the debate. There were many of the things said by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) with which I agree. However, I shall not take the time of the house on those. On the other hand there are two matters which he has brought to the attention of the house which cannot go unrecognized or unchallenged. The first is that this matter is sub judice and therefore should not be discussed in the house.

I have a great deal of respect for the knowledge of the rules which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre generally exhibits in the house, but I would bring to his attention that that rule does not apply to a bill. That has been the experience down through the years in our parliamentary institutions, and I would like to refer him to May's sixteenth edition, page 400, where it is said, under the title, "Matters Pending Judicial Decisions":

> A matter, whilst under adjudication by a court of law, should not be brought before the house by a motion or otherwise. This rule does not apply to bills.

Then a little further on in the same edition at page 457 under the title, "Matters Pending Judicial Decision" there is this:

> Matters awaiting the adjudication of a court of law should not be brought forward in debate (except by means of a bill...). This rule was observed by Sir Robert Peel and Lord John Russell, both by the wording of the speech from the throne and by their procedure in the house, regarding Mr. O'Connell's case, and has been maintained by rulings from the chair.

I must also say, Mr. Speaker, that I have been in the house for a long time, I think longer than my hon. friend, and I have found it possible, when matters are before the court, to deal by means of a bill with another subject matter without referring to the matter which is before the court. That has taken place in the house on more than one occasion, and I have reference now in my own mind to a similar case when I held the office of minister of transport some years ago. So that to say when a matter is before the court it cannot be dealt with—yes, that is a fact, if you must of necessity deal with a case which is before the court; but I think we can deal with the matters in this bill without any reference to the cases that are before the court.

Next my hon. friend said some very uncomplimentary things about the Department of Justice, particularly when he stated in effect that when one government is in office it gets one piece of advice or an opinion, and when another government is in office it receives another piece of advice or another opinion. I do not know what transpired when the previous government was in office. All I know is this, that I made it quite clear in the house on more than one occasion that there was no opinion, no written opinion which had been brought to my attention the moment I arrived in this department. I have seen none. I have searched for it; I have not found it, and I have been informed by those who advise me that there is no such written opinion.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, would the minister permit a question?

Mr. Nowlan: Have you been advised that by your deputy minister of justice; may I ask that question?

Mr. Chevrier: Let us deal with the first question first.

Mr. Gregoire: The minister just said there was no written opinion; but is the minister or are the officers of the department of the opinion that an oral opinion was given to the former government on that question?

Mr. Nowlan: There were both.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question I must say that all I could do in respect of the questions which were asked of me when I took over this office was inquire whether there was a written opinion. I have inquired as to that, and I have found none.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether he has a written opinion now?

Mr. Chevrier: Yes, I have a written opinion now, Mr. Speaker. I have also discussed this matter not only with the deputy minister but with others, and am informed by the deputy minister that the only way to remove any doubt about the validity of the orders that were passed on June 24 and to make it valid is by an act of parliament. That is the reason this matter is before the house.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker would the minister answer my question. Has he been told by the deputy minister that he did not have an opinion verbally and in writing with respect to the validity of these orders in council?

Mr. Chevrier: My hon. friend should just hold himself in peace—

Mr. Nowlan: I am asking a question.

Mr. Chevrier: —and not get excited in asking a question. I have already answered the second part of my hon. friend's question in stating that there was no written opinion. I now say to him that I have been advised by my officers that neither was there an oral opinion.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Minister of Justice this question. Would it not be advisable, in view of the general desire of members of parliament to have a recess, to postpone further consideration of this bill until we come back on September 30?

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Chevrier: There is one question here, Mr. Speaker. The government has decided that under the circumstances that is the way in which, in its judgment and in the public interest, it should proceed and in so far as I am concerned, I do not think that at this late date, having regard to the position in which we find ourselves with reference to this matter, it should be delayed but the house should proceed with it.

Mr. Gregoire: I rise, Mr. Speaker, because last year I was a member of this house and—

Mr. Chevrier: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Minister of Justice on a point of order.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the hon. member asking questions, but if he is going to make a speech, I was told by the Speaker that the debate was being closed by myself, and I take it the hon. member will have every opportunity when we reach clause 1 to make any contribution he would like to make. He can do that when we reach that stage.

Mr. Gregoire: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Last year I was a member of this house and we were told there was a legal opinion on that question. We took it for granted; we accepted that. Now tonight we have just heard from the Minister of Justice that there was no written or oral opinion given by the officers of the Department of Justice in respect of these surcharges imposed last year on June 24. Either there is a written opinion, or there is not.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Will the hon. member kindly resume his seat.

Mr. Gregoire: I would state my question of privilege, then.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: This is what I would like the hon. member to do.

Mr. Gregoire: My question of privilege is this—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would ask the hon. member to resume his seat or come as quickly as he can to his question of privilege.

Mr. Gregoire: My question of privilege is this. As a member of this house I would ask, have we been misled, yes or no? That is a question of privilege. Have we been misled, yes or no? One government says—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member is now making a speech. It seems to me he will have an occasion to raise this whole question when this particular piece of legislation is before the committee. He is asking a question of the minister, who has already made a statement concluding the debate, and I suggest very humbly that we should proceed and let the matter stand where it is now.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, the minister said he would entertain a question. Can I ask him this question. Were statements of defence filed by the department to the claims which were made against the government?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that we can deal with this bill without referring to the matter that is before the courts.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: I take it the object of my hon. friend's question is simply to—

An hon. Member: To get the truth.

Mr. Chevrier: No. I have no objection to answering questions which are valid, but it seems to me this question is aimed at a clear discussion of a particular matter which is before the courts, and I have no intention of dealing with that type of question. In order to answer the hon. member's question I would have to inquire what the legal officers have done in so far as a defence is concerned.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of trying to introduce any discussion of the matters which are now before the courts. I simply wanted to find out whether a defence had been filed, which would indicate that the department had denied liability.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, this question and others that have been asked are, as the house knows, questions which are normally asked when we are in committee, and not when the Speaker is in the chair. If the questions are persisted in, I have no objection; I think I should answer them to the best of my ability; but I feel those are questions we might deal with tomorrow.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, there is one question I would like to ask the minister. Is the government bringing forth this legislation because it feels there is a doubt in regard to these surcharges, or because it is convinced that the surcharges are illegal?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear this is another of those trap questions which—

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The minister had absolutely no right to say that that was another of those trap questions.

Mr. Monteith: You are right.

Mr. Martineau: I asked the question because I think it is perfectly and completely relevant to the bill before this house, and the minister has adopted an absolutely arrogant manner, which I resent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I should think the arrogance is rather from the other side of the house—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: —because there is no doubt about it; my hon. friend has no privilege on a question such as that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow me to intervene. I am just wondering whether we are straying substantially from what we agreed we would do earlier this evening. If the house would allow me to say a few words, I understand it was the intention not to embark upon a substantial, lengthy or protracted debate on this question. We have perhaps strayed from this original intention and I would very much like to put the question to the house.

Mr. Martineau: Before you do that, Mr. Speaker, with all respect, I asked what I thought was a perfectly legitimate question of the minister. The minister got a bit incensed and replied by saying it was another of those trap questions. Naturally I resented that and I exercised my right to raise it as a question of privilege. As far as I am concerned, the matter is closed. I would nevertheless like the minister, if he is in a position to do so, to give an answer to this question because I think it has importance.

Mr. Chevrier: I am sorry if my hon. friend was incensed because I used the word "trap". I thought that was the object of his question, but in the light of what he has said perhaps I might answer tomorrow.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Churchill: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be considered in committee of the whole? Next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, before we conclude our proceedings for today the suggestion has been made to me, which I have canvassed with hon. gentlemen opposite, that it might greatly facilitate the consideration of the municipal development and loan board bill in committee if, without its constituting a precedent or in any way being regarded as a regular proceeding, the house might order that the bill be reprinted for the consideration of the committee with the amendments which were circulated to some hon. members this evening in mimeographed form, so that a bill in printed form thus amended would be available tomorrow. I recognize at once that this is a very unusual proceeding, though I believe there was an occasion in 1957—I was reminded of this by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill)—when to meet a similar convenience this was done. If it would be the general view of the house that this would facilitate debate, could it be so ordered?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, in 1957 there were fewer amendments and the bill was perhaps not as wide-reaching as this. The only reason we are prepared to agree to this proposal is because of the approaching end of this part of the session; otherwise we might be discussing whether or not the bill should be withdrawn and re-introduced in all its stages once again. Under the circumstances and without creating a precedent I think it would be helpful to the house during the next day or two to have the bill reprinted as suggested.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Speaker, we agree to this. Reference has been made to a precedent in 1957 and we think it would be a convenience to hon. members to have the bill in revised form.

Mr. Knowles: We agree.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Speaker, in this regard might I suggest to the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) that the reprinted bill be so identified as a reprint?

Mr. Pickersgill: I omitted to make that suggestion, which I should have made, and I am grateful to all hon. members agreeing to this procedure which I believe will facilitate the proceedings. I recognize fully how unusual this proceeding is and how undesirable it would be in ordinary circumstances.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Seventh report of standing committee on banking and commerce—Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace).

Ninth report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. Wahn.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the house leader what hopes he has to express to us now with regard to the completion of the business tomorrow, and the order in which it will be approached.

Mr. Pickersgill: First of all, I should like to say that this has been a red letter day in the history of parliament, and I want to say that rarely have I seen greater co-operation on all sides of the house. I think I express the feeling of every hon. member of the house when I say that one problem which has troubled us all for a long time does appear at last to be on the way at any rate to something better than has been the case before. I am very gratified by that and I hope it is a good augury for tomorrow.

I believe it would be possible to complete the business tomorrow if it could be understood that there would be the greatest possible flexibility with the sittings. If there would be agreement that we could resume our sittings at two o'clock, and if in the evening, after taking the hour between six and seven, we could agree to go on, within reason, it might be possible to finish. If it becomes impossible perhaps we would have to go over until Saturday; but if we could sit, within reason, as long as necessary we might complete the business. There is no business beyond what I indicated last night which has not been finished.

The first item we would take, I think, would be the third reading of the economic council bill so that it could go to the other place, because they have to complete this business too if we are to get away from here. The second item would be the third reading of the excise tax bill. The third item would be the municipal loans and development bill. The fourth item would be the bill we have now just been considering. Then there would be interim supply. If it is felt by any hon. members opposite that some different order so far as the last three items are concerned would facilitate progress, although I think we should take the third readings first in order to get some business to the other place, I would be quite happy to consider any suggestions with regard to changing the order. I am told that there are some divorce bills which have completed their progress through the other place, and if in the few minutes that we have to wait at the end of the day for the hon. gentlemen and ladies in the other place to complete their work we could agree to deal with them, if the bills come over here, I should like to ask that this be done.

Mr. Churchill: With regard to the divorce bills I would say yes; we have agreed to deal with them if they reach this house. With regard to the order of business I would say yes, provided we do not get squeezed on interim supply and attempt to do it, say, at five minutes to two on Saturday morning. With regard to the hours, I prefer that we leave those flexible and we can decide how things are going tomorrow. The temper of the house was good today; if the weather remains cool tomorrow let us hope for the best.

Mr. Knowles: We are in general agreement with what has been said by the leader of the house and by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre but I wonder if, for the convenience of hon. members, it might not be a good idea for us to know at least part of the hours of sitting tomorrow. I would suggest from eleven till one and from two to six. Then we might start the evening sitting, if one should be necessary, at seven o'clock. Let the rest of it be flexible.

Mr. Churchill: The reason I prefer flexibility is this: I thought we could be out of here at 10.30 tonight but the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg had to make a 25-minute speech.

It being two minutes after eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

LIST OF OUTSTANDING RETURNS AS OF AUGUST 1, 1963

Ref. No.	Mover	Subject	Date of order
2	Mr. Fisher—Q. No. 12	National Capital Commission acquisition of land	June 3
15	Mr. Richard—Q. No. 337	Acquisition of property, Sussex Street, Ottawa	June 10
23	Mr. Orlikow—M.P.P. No. 6	Relocation of Indians because of Power Development	June 12
33	Mr. Valade—M.P.P. No. 22	World Fair, Correspondence with Montreal Mayor	June 19
34	Mr. Valade—M.P.P. No. 23	Montreal, Route of Trans-Canada Highway	June 19
35	Mr. Knowles—M.P.P. No. 28	Expenses of Candidates, 1963, Election	June 19
36	Mr. Horner—M.P.P. No. 29	Correspondence respecting rail line abandonment	June 19
42	Mr. Martineau—Q. No. 615	Assistants and Secretaries of Ministers	June 26
45	Mr. Grafftey—M.P.P. No. 19	Municipal Development and Loan Board	June 26
46	Mr. Martineau—M.P.P. No. 24	Relating to Jointly Financed Programmes	June 26
48	Mr. Grafftey—M.P.P. No. 32	Dominion Provincial Conference	June 26
49	Mr. Grafftey—M.P.P. No. 33	Dominion-Provincial Fiscal Relations	June 26
53	Mr. Martineau—M.P.P. No. 37	Unemployment Insurance-Extension to Highways Employees, Que	June 26
54	Mr. Coates—M.P.P. No. 39	Trans-Canada Highway Construction, Atlantic Provinces.	June 26
57	Mr. Pigeon—M.P.P. No. 12	Correspondence respecting World Fair	July 3
58	Mr. Stefanson—M.P.P. No. 38	Sales tax on building materials and machinery	July 3
59	Mr. Orlikow—M.P.P. No. 42	Sales tax on building materials and machinery	July 3
60	Mr. Knowles—M.P.P. No. 43	Proposed extension of sales tax	July 3
61	Mr. Knowles—M.P.P. No. 44	Explanations of budget provisions	July 3
62	Mr. Knowles—M.P.P. No. 45	Income Tax-Procedures respecting expense account deductions	July 3
63	Mr. Martineau—Q. No. 362	Public Works Expenditures, Pontiac-Temiscamingue Constituency	July 8
69	Mr. Paul—Q. No. 850	Public Works expenditures, Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere	July 10
73	Mr. Gregoire—M.P.P. No. 46	Sales tax on building material	July 10
74	Mr. Gregoire—M.P.P. No. 47	Withdrawal of 30 per cent tax on share sales	July 10
75	Mr. Pigeon—M.P.P. No. 49	Acquisition by Quebec of Soulanges Canal	July 10
78	Mr. Martineau—Q. No. 491	Joint Federal-Provincial Programs	July 15
79	Mr. Valade—Q. No. 495	Cancellation of Tender Calls	July 15
80	Mr. Orlikow—Q. No. 585	Contracts with Fuller Construction Co. Ottawa	July 15
81	Mr. Orlikow—Q. No. 586	Contracts with H. J. MacFarland Co. Ottawa	July 15
82	Mr. Fisher—Q. No. 591	Report of Committee on Manitoba's Economic Future	July 15
84	Mr. McIntosh—Q. No 829	Persons posted or made available to Ministers, etc	July 15
86	Mr. McBain—M.P.P. No. 54	Cigarette smoking	July 17
87	Mr. Aiken—M.P.P. No. 58	Telephone calls to Wood, Gundy & Co	July 17
88	Mr. More—Q. No. 437	Conditional and unconditional Grants to Saskatchewan	July 24
89	Mr. Martineau—Q. No. 816	Protest against sales tax on building materials	July 24
98	Mr. Lambert—M.P.P. No. 55	Edmonton Municipal Airport	July 24
99	Mr. Martineau—M.P.P. No. 57	Censure motion by Quebec Legislative Assembly	July 24
100	Mr. Basford—M.P.P. No. 61	Canadian Centennial-Correspondence with B.C.	July 24
101	Mr. Basford—M.P.P. No. 63	Lease of Portion of R.C.A.F. Station Vancouver	July 24
102	Mr. Perron—M.P.P. No. 67	Unemployment Insurance Benefits to Canadians in U.S.	July 24
103	Mr. Starr—M.P.P. No. 69	Winter Works incentive program	July 24
106	Mr. Matheson—Q. No. 1111	Canadian participation in military operations	July 31

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, August 2, 1963

The house met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CHEVRIER—STATEMENT RESPECTING OPINION GIVEN ON SURCHARGE ORDER

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Last night, in answer to a question by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, I said there was neither a written nor an oral opinion given on the surcharge order. In so far as the written opinion is concerned, there can be no doubt; I searched and found none.

Regarding the oral opinion, in reviewing the matter when I returned to my office last evening I recollected having been advised that the matter had been discussed orally at the time. I am sorry if I unwittingly misled the house. At all events, I suggest that for the purpose of the present bill the question of whether or not there was an oral opinion, not to mention a written opinion, given to the former government is irrelevant. In my capacity as Minister of Justice and legal adviser to the crown under the Department of Justice Act, it is my opinion that the surcharge order was not validly made, and I have so advised the government. In any case, should there be only a doubt regarding this important matter it is in the public interest that such doubt be removed, and that is what the bill intends to do.

DRUGS AND PESTICIDES

CONCURRENCE IN FIRST REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. H. C. Harley (Halton) presented the first report of the special committee on food and drugs, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

TRANSPORT

WELLAND CANAL—ANNOUNCEMENT OF DECISION TO TWIN LOCKS

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have a statement to make which I think should be of interest to the house. The government has decided to proceed with the full twinning of the locks of the Welland canal, construction to commence this winter.

This project is considered essential to eliminate congestion which, traffic estimates indicate, would become acute by 1966 if the present single lock system were continued, and to provide for traffic growth. During the 1961 navigation season of 260 days, an average of four vessels were waiting on each of 162 days. This situation worsened in 1962, when on each of 194 days an average of seven vessels were waiting for transit. The same trend has continued to date in the 1963 season.

The locks to be twinned are Nos. 1, 2, 3, 7 and 8. With this expansion it is estimated that the physical capacity of the canal will be increased by 60 per cent.

It is estimated that the twinning project will cost $180 million. A bill will be introduced in this house to amend section 13 of the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority Act, increasing the authority's borrowing power to provide the means for securing the funds.

The substantial expenditures involved in the twinning project make it necessary to give serious consideration to the matter of removing the suspension of tolls which became effective July 18, 1962.

The time schedule for completing the twinning construction and associated works involves a period of slightly less than five years. This time schedule is designed to ensure maximum safety during construction, avoidance of excessive costs and minimum interruption of navigation and vehicular traffic. It is estimated that the construction program over four full years, including five winters, will require a labour force ranging from 4,000 to 6,000 men, with reasonably uniform year round employment. In preparation for this development the seaway authority proceeded in 1960 with the engineering plans necessary, and in 1962 expropriated 320 acres of land required for twinning. The construction program for twinning will be commenced this year on work essential to the whole project, which at the same time will increase the usefulness of existing facilities.

The major construction work of the new locks, 1, 2, 3 and 7, is planned to commence in the fall of 1964, with scheduled completion in 1968. At that time construction of the twin lock No. 8 at Port Colborne, not regarded as a part of the major program, will be undertaken.

With the twinning of the Welland canal, consideration will have to be given to the over-all capacity of the seaway system. In this connection the government intends to further implement the seaway project by the construction of a lock at Cornwall, Ontario, as soon as studies indicate that it is warranted.

With a further lock in the area of Point Rockway in the United States as a counterpart of Iroquois lock, the international rapids section of the St. Lawrence river would then be twinned. When such construction is completed there will then be, in the international rapids section of the St. Lawrence river, one canal entirely in Canada and another in the United States.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the announcement by the Minister of Transport is entirely in keeping with the views and course of action taken by the previous government. Therefore we give it complete support. As a matter of fact the announcement respecting the removal of the tolls was made following consideration by the government in, I think it was, May of 1962—

Mr. Chevrier: To suspend the tolls, not to remove them.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and the general plan for the twinning was being fully investigated and had the entire support of the former government. It is a step that is very necessary. Because of the fact that this government chose to adopt the views that were held by the former government, and indeed all Canadians, in this regard, this is one time when there is unanimity.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, the project presented by the Minister of Transport today does reveal the weakness of some of the planning and projections we have had in Canada. It is quite apparent, and I think it should be noted, that when the tolls were removed from the Welland canal it was at a most fortuitous time, in an election campaign. However, the issue to which the minister has not referred but which is very much related to this question is that the St. Lawrence seaway authority and the funds coming to it have come nowhere near living up to the projections. Neither has the traffic growth; yet the minister today presents us with an argument, which I accept, that twinning is necessary.

It certainly seems to me that in the old projection and preparation of the very large St. Lawrence seaway authority and the tremendous spending that went on there was some kind of a gap or failure in responsibility on the part of the people who initiated and developed the project. We believe it would be a poor idea to reintroduce tolls on the section that is going to be twinned. We believe it is time for Canada and the United States to look at their losses on the St. Lawrence seaway and their future expenditures and determine whether it might not be possible to dispense completely with the idea that in regard to these canals and this twinning any attempt should be made to put it on a paying basis. Instead it should be recognized that these are just basic services that are being supplied by the government.

We are delighted to hear of the possibility of improvements at Cornwall. I only suggest to the minister that there are some indications that we could stand more marked improvements, if we are looking at the seaway system as a whole, on the Canadian canal at Sault Ste. Marie. I think the most attractive part of this project in some ways will be the work generation that will be involved in it. In this sense, if that has been part of the government's thinking, it seems to me this is the kind of social capital project in a way, if you wish, the government should be undertaking in order to provide work.

IMMIGRATION

ANNOUNCEMENT OF INTEGRATED CUSTOMS-IMMIGRATION PRIMARY INSPECTION

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in my name and in the name of the Minister of National Revenue I wish to inform the house that a plan to integrate the customs-immigration primary inspection at Canadian border ports of entry has been approved by cabinet following an extensive study undertaken in 1962 by a committee of senior government officials.

Primary inspection is the initial oral examination by an officer of a person seeking to come into Canada, to determine his admissibility and classification for immigration purposes, and whether he has merchandise which must be formally entered at customs. In most ports of entry at the present time this examination is made independently, in two stages, by an immigration officer and by a customs officer.

Following a series of meetings the members of the committee came to the conclusion that in order to attain greater efficiency and economy it was necessary to consider a fully integrated system of primary inspection under the customs and excise division of the Department of National Revenue. Such a system has been recommended by the Glassco commission. In order to achieve the proposed objective a working group consisting of representatives of both departments, the civil service commission and the treasury board will put the integrated system into effect following an operational study at each port of entry involved. These studies are expected to be completed before the end of the fiscal year 1963-64.

The integrated system of primary inspection may involve the transfer of approximately 200 positions from immigration to customs. It is expected that about 100 positions will in time—and I repeat "in time"—become surplus to requirements. I wish to make it clear that no immigration or customs officer now employed is to be deprived of his job. Immigration officers who are transferred to customs will benefit from two channels of promotion, by being made eligible to apply for promotion in the customs and immigration services.

Greater efficiency resulting from an integrated customs-immigration primary inspection will be reflected in two ways; (1) quicker examination of returning Canadians and visitors entering Canada from the United States; (ii) reduction in cost.

As the examinations will be achieved with less staff, the ultimate saving is estimated at $500,000 annually.

The main ocean ports and international airports of entry will not be affected.

Staff associations have been informed of the details of the implementation of the proposed integration plan.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORRIS REPORT—REQUEST FOR LEGISLATION BEFORE SUMMER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister give consideration to bringing before the house before the adjournment the legislation to which reference was made yesterday, implementing several of the recommendations of the Norris commission? I ask this because the information I have, if I might be allowed to make this statement at this time, is that it is not a very difficult matter to draft this legislation.

From what was said a few moments ago by the Minister of Justice it is apparent that we are not going to adjourn today. That being so, would the Prime Minister not think that we should go ahead now rather than leaving the matter up in the air? There is unanimity of support for action to be taken; all parties in the house are agreed. Otherwise there may very well be an invitation to further lawlessness and disorder and a tie-up of shipping which could certainly be obviated and avoided by action now.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): As was pointed out yesterday, action could be taken by enabling legislation, and it could be taken quickly; but that would involve giving the government power by order in council, and I am sure the right hon. gentleman would not approve of this. To have the legislation prepared in detail would require a great many days of hard work by the draftsmen, and it was not possible to begin preparation of the legislation until it was clear this was the best way to proceed.

I would point out, as was pointed out yesterday by the Minister of Labour, that it was only two days ago that the labour unions affected all agreed, except the S.I.U., to a trusteeship. It would be impossible in the circumstances to have this difficult and complicated legislation prepared within a matter of weeks. It may require a strict examination of the constitutionality of the legislation, and it might mean getting in touch with the provincial governments concerned in case they have some views to express on that point. Therefore it would not be practical to take the course of action recommended by the right hon. gentleman unless the house intends to continue in session for two or three weeks longer.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I ask the Prime Minister if he would not consider the request made by the Leader of the Opposition in view of the interview which Mr. Staples, president of the national maritime union, gave this morning in which he said that if action is not taken now a blockade will be carried out by that union; that he is not prepared to wait three months for action, but wants action now.

Mr. Pearson: I listened to the report in question, and I hope it is far too pessimistic in respect of the violence which it was indicated might take place. I hope very much that the indication that this legislation is being prepared and will be made effective will hold the situation during the summer. Moreover, the Minister of Labour has said that if the situation deteriorates and violence does take place the house will be called together at once. The hon. gentleman knows, because he has had some experience with legislation of this type, that it cannot be drafted within a few days.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May we have some assurance from the Prime Minister that when legislation is drafted it will provide for a government trusteeship rather than the substitute action to which the Minister of Labour made some reference yesterday?

Mr. Pearson: I think I will ask the Minister of Labour to deal with that point.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): The intention of the government to establish this trusteeship was indicated yesterday, and the legislation envisaged will develop provisions for a government trusteeship.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Has the Minister of Labour or any of his officials had any discussions with any lawyers representing Mr. Banks in the last two days?

Mr. MacEachen: I certainly have had no discussions with any person representing Mr. Banks in the last few days, nor do I believe have any officials of the department.

Mr. Starr: Can the Minister of Labour enlarge upon the constitutional difficulties other than those mentioned by the Prime Minister in his statement yesterday?

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): The Prime Minister had said he hopes the statement made by Mr. Staples was too pessimistic, but this morning's Globe and Mail reports another dynamiting in Toledo in connection with the expected arrival there of the Upper Lakes ship James North. If there is going to be more violence of this sort I wonder whether we can expect quick action in the form of legislation.

Mr. Pearson: Action will be taken as quickly as possible. I would hope, as I have said, that the certainty that action will be taken will ease the situation at once on the great lakes.

Mr. Starr: I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice. In view of the recommendation by Mr. Justice Norris regarding law enforcement, to be found on page 312 of his report, would the Minister of Justice contact the attorneys general of all the provinces concerned with respect to this and extend some co-operation to ensure the preservation of law and order, since there has been some difficulty in the past in this direction?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, through the officers of my department I have already been in touch with the attorneys general of both provinces.

Mr. Starr: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Labour would answer my question and outline the constitutional problems that are involved in this legislation.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I think I ought to reply to the hon. member for Ontario and tell him that the advice I have received from the Minister of Justice and his officials is that there are important constitutional questions involved with respect to certain of the activities of the trusteeship as they affect certain phases of the activities of the unions that would be involved. In certain cases a careful study would have to be made to determine the relationship of certain union activities to the responsibility of the federal government for navigation and shipping.

I might add in elaboration of this point that part of the reason for the time needed to prepare this legislation is that a very careful study will have to be made of all the collective agreements and constitutions of these unions and their details in order to ensure that the trustees will have effective authority at the appropriate time. This careful study has already begun, and it will take some days before any drafting can begin.

POSSIBLE CONFLICT OF INTEREST IN APPOINTMENT OF COUNSEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Has the government investigated the possibility of a conflict of interest ensuing from the fact that Mr. Robinette, counsel appointed to advise the government on charges arising out of the Norris report, has himself acted for or is the partner of Mr. J. W. Brooke, counsel for Reoch Shipping, who are involved with Mr. Banks in infractions of the law criticized by Mr. Justice Norris which might very well be the subject matter of criminal charges?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for sending notice of this question to the Minister of Labour, which he has handed to me. I have looked into the matter, without of course communicating with Mr. Robinette, and I find first that Mr. Robinette is counsel for a firm in the city of Toronto. Therefore it would not appear, I am advised, that Mr. Brooke is a partner of his.

I should like also to remind the house that what Mr. Robinette and Mr. Martineau are being asked for are legal opinions, not judicial findings. If as a result of the opinions by Mr. Robinette and Mr. Martineau prosecution follows, it will be the court that will decide on this issue of guilt or innocence and not Mr. Robinette and Mr. Martineau. However, in view of the question which the hon. gentleman has put, and which is of some importance, I intend to communicate with Mr. Robinette just as quickly as I can.

Mr. Orlikow: May I ask a supplementary question. Is the minister aware that Mr. Robinette and Mr. Brooke are listed in the most recent Toronto telephone directory as having the same address and the same telephone number?

Mr. Chevrier: I am not aware of that, but it is quite possible. However, it does not derogate from the fact that one is counsel for a firm whereas the other is a partner therein.

B.C. FISHERMEN'S STRIKE—INQUIRY AS TO ARBITRATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could direct a question to the Minister of Fisheries and ask him for what I hope will be a final progress report on the negotiations with the British Columbia fishing industry.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, as I reported to the house yesterday, negotiations resumed on Wednesday between the two parties involved, the union and the fisheries association of British Columbia. I am pleased to inform the house this morning that the situation has improved greatly in the last 24 hours. In fact, with the indulgence of the house may I be permitted to place on record part of a telegram I received at five o'clock from the union, which reads as follows:

Reurtel our central strike and policy committee decided upon receipt your telegram bearing in mind urgency expressed regarding resumption operation and failure reach agreement upon scope and terms arbitration that we shall immediately recommend to our membership acceptance of appointment by federal and provincial governments of single arbitrator whose decision shall be final and binding and that the arbitrator shall decide scope and terms of reference after consultation with both parties to the existing dispute.

A few hours later I received another telegram from the fisheries association which reads in part as follows:

—the member companies of this association are prepared to accept the decision of a single arbitrator to be appointed by the Hon. H. J. Robichaud and the Hon. L. R. Peterson as final and binding upon the matter or matters which will be agreed to be referred to him.

The only problem which remains, Mr. Speaker, consists of the details of the terms of reference. I understand that the machinery is being put into motion immediately by the union to proceed with the membership vote to approve its decision to accept arbitration. If the union vote is favourable fishing will resume at 6 p.m. on Sunday.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO TRANSLATION OF WORK BY BEAUCHESNE

On the orders of the day:

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister tell the house if, when he took over the government, something had been done regarding a French translation of the procedural manual by Beauchesne? Had some action been taken at that time?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I got a communication from the publisher in Toronto, whose name escapes me at the moment, of the English edition of Beauchesne referring to certain correspondence between himself and the previous prime minister in respect of a French translation. We have been looking up the records and have been unable to discover any correspondence of that kind or any reference to this matter in the files. Therefore I am writing the publisher to see if I can get a copy of the correspondence that he has, in order to ascertain what has been done and what should be done.

Mr. Gregoire: I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister tell us what steps are being taken at this very moment to translate Beauchesne's manual? Is some definite action being taken?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I hope to follow up this matter as quickly as possible, and for that purpose I am getting in touch with the publisher to find out what communications, if any, had been exchanged between him and the previous government, which have been referred to in Hansard but with respect to which there is no record as far as I know.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, may I point out that there was communication. I have often found that some people file in such a way that they cannot find things. I can only say that there was communication. There was verbal communication involving very considerable discussion of the subject with a representative of the publishers; and speaking now from memory, though I am reasonably certain that this is so, there was also written communication because otherwise there would not have been a meeting between me and a representative of the publishers.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if there are written communications they are not in the files.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that statement is quite unjustified on the part of the Prime Minister. I am rising on a question of privilege. I say that the communications are there. We have had several examples in the last two days of statements made that have no foundation, and this is one of them.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman is getting very irritable. I have had an opportunity to look at the files. This has been done, and I have said there are no written communications in the files. Is the right hon. gentleman in a position to deny that?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. member for Lapointe must realize that his basic question has been answered to the best of the ability of those concerned.

Mr. Gregoire: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think I have had an answer to my last question. My question was, are any steps being taken so that a translation will be made? Is something actually being done by this government?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, steps are being taken. The first step we are taking is to try to find out what the previous government did, because in the last session of parliament they intimated that something was being done.

Mr. Gregoire: Yes, but that is not a step taken with regard to the actual translation of the manual.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise on a question of privilege. I am now informed that a letter written to the Carswell Company referring to Beauchesne was dated October 25, 1962; that enclosed in that letter was a copy of Hansard of October 19, 1962, as referred to at page 705. What I shall do is write to Carswell and secure that letter from them. If the Prime Minister says it is not in the files then I do not know where it has been misplaced, but I will secure the original from the company.

Mr. Pearson: This is the letter which the publisher referred to in his letter to me, which I have now received.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: I did not know this question was coming up this morning, but the letter of July 30 has just now been sent down to my desk, and the letter referred to by the publisher from the then prime minister was of November last, as the right hon. gentleman states.

When I got this letter from the publisher I made inquiries and I was informed there was no correspondence on file in the prime minister's office or the privy council office dealing with this matter, even though we knew the letter was received in November. It is possible that the right hon. gentleman may have taken this letter away with him when he removed his files from the prime minister's office when he left office.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would be delighted if the right hon. gentleman would table that letter, because apparently he was aware of the fact that I had written it.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, but I am also aware of the fact that the letter is not in the files, and the right hon. gentleman, when he left office, removed a lot of the files from the Prime Minister's office.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I followed the course of removing those that were personal, and that is a course which has always been followed; but the right hon. gentleman now has a smokescreen. He had the letter he knew I had written, and did not want the house to know.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I would ask the right hon. gentleman if he would examine the files he removed in order to get this letter and return it to me so I can put it on the record.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The right hon. gentleman misled the house.

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister regarding the removal of files by the former prime minister when he left office. Does the Prime Minister think that the former prime minister took with him his commitment in regard to Canada acquiring nuclear arms?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, I have no thought of that kind. It is of course quite customary for outgoing prime ministers and cabinet ministers to take personal files away with them. I have asked the former prime minister whether he will examine the files that he removed from the Prime Minister's office—and a great many were removed—to see whether this particular letter was not inadvertently removed also, the letter which was referred to in the letter I received from the publisher only yesterday.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But the answer was given in the house today, and it was untrue.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is Friday, a fish day, and the sooner we complete the question period the sooner we can go fishing.

INQUIRY AS TO PAY INCREASES FOR CERTAIN STAFF MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Acting Minister of Finance whether further consideration is going to be given to an increase in salary for the barbers, locksmiths, carpenters, upholsterers and furniture finishers, who I understand are the only employees of the house who have not received an increase? There are approximately 10 men involved in these trades.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman is under the misapprehension that I am Acting Minister of Finance. I am not. I do not think the acting minister knows the answer to the question any more than I do, but one of us will make inquiries and give an answer later today.

Mr. Nowlan: This comes under the commissioners of internal economy.

Mr. Pickersgill: I might just say that I have been advised by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, who was paying closer attention than I was, that this would be a matter for the commissioners of internal economy. I am one of them and His Honour is the chairman, and I am sure His Honour will ask to have the matter considered.

Mr. Speaker: May I reply by saying that the matter is under consideration at the present time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CONSIDERATION OF BRIEF OF RAILWAY RUNNING TRADES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Labour a question, notice of which I gave him a few days ago. My question relates to a brief presented to him two weeks ago by the national legislative committee of the railway running trades. I should like to ask the minister what reply or what consideration he has given to the recommendations in this brief, particularly those asking for alterations in the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act so as to give railway workers better protection in branch line abandonment and run-through areas.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is correct in that the Minister of Transport and I had a meeting with these gentlemen some time ago at which a brief was presented making a number of recommendations, including certain amendments to the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act and a request to have an industrial inquiry commission set up to investigate certain phases of this particular problem.

At that time the Minister of Transport and I had a very useful discussion with the representatives involved. Up to the present it has not been possible for me to reach a decision and make a possible proposal to the government on the matter, but it will receive attention as quickly as possible.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question. Is the idea of an inquiry still in the minister's mind?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, it is still there.

(Translation):

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

MONTREAL—PROPOSED CHANGE IN PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Following the answer he gave previously to a question, can the minister tell the house when a final decision will be reached in respect to the trans-Canada highway project in the Montreal area, following discussions at a meeting with the provincial minister of highways.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we must be supplied with some technical information by the Quebec government before a decision can be reached concerning a change in the layout of the trans-Canada highway in Montreal.

(Text):

GRAIN

BRITISH COLUMBIA—AUTHORIZATION OF DELIVERIES OUTSIDE QUOTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of a recent decision of the Canadian wheat board, as reported in this morning's Globe and Mail, to authorize permit holders at five delivery points in British Columbia to make deliveries of wheat, oats and barley outside the existing quota, would the minister explain to the house the reasons for this action in view of the serious implications involved?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I regret that I am not able to explain the reasons for the wheat board action at this moment. I am in touch with the wheat board, and perhaps later this day I might have an opportunity to provide the information.

Mr. McIntosh: A supplementary question. In view of the minister's remarks, and also in the absence of a federal feed grain policy, is it not an improper use of a producers' marketing board for this action to be taken?

Mr. Sharp: I just want to say that the wheat policy of the Canadian government has been announced in so far as initial prices are concerned and in so far as the new program of surplus disposal is concerned. Otherwise the Canadian wheat board, which is directed by parliament to sell Canadian wheat to best advantage, continues in existence and is operating just as vigorously as it ever has operated.

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, surely parliament did not direct the Canadian wheat board to go outside its regulations.

TRANSPORT

NORTH SYDNEY-NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO SECOND FERRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, on July 18 I addressed a question to the Secretary of State relating to the proposed second ferry between North Sydney and Newfoundland. The reply I received was that there would be action in the near future. In view of the fact we are approaching adjournment I wonder if the minister would indicate whether "in the very near future" means today or soon?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I am afraid that I answered the hon. gentleman's question because I happened on that day to be Acting Minister of Transport. It would hardly be proper for me to usurp the functions of my colleague today, much as I should like to answer the question. The hon. members for St. John's West and St. John's East have, I know, had this matter very much in mind. I hope the Minister of Transport can give a good answer.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I think I could assure the hon. gentleman that an answer will be given soon.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): May I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if the minister would take into consideration the excellent work that could be done in the summer months in preparing docks.

Mr. McIlraith: I can assure the hon. gentleman that the minister is well aware of all the implications in this matter.

[Mr. Sharp.]

GRAIN—REQUEST FOR USE OF PORTS OF HALIFAX AND SAINT JOHN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of his announcement a few moments ago regarding expenditures for the seaway system, which can only be further to the detriment of maritime ports, has the minister any good news in reply to my question of a few days ago regarding the possibility of directing shipments through Saint John, which would ease the glut of 2 million bushels of grain now stored there?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not accept the proposition that the twinning of the locks on the Welland canal will be to the detriment of Saint John, but as to the desirability of having more shipping through the port of Saint John I am in complete accord with the hon. member, and will look at anything that can be done to increase shipping through that port and the port of Halifax, the two ports where there is a problem as he has indicated.

Mr. Bell: With respect to the twinning of the locks, now that this matter has been completed would the minister direct his energies to moving ahead with the Chignecto canal, which would be a similar project?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

WEST GERMANY—LEGISLATION RESPECTING PAYMENT OF WAR CLAIMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): In the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs I wish to ask the Prime Minister a question. My question is based on information from Europe and the fact that time is running out if certain Canadian citizens are going to receive justice.

In view of the fact that the draft of the final law on the question of compensation to victims of nazi tyranny now being considered by the West German government completely ignores many of the just demands made by the victims of naziism now resident in Canada, would the minister inform the house what action the government is taking to assist Canadian citizens in obtaining adequate compensation from the West German government for their sufferings in the defence of freedom?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): We are not yet aware of the details of the legislation to which my hon. friend has referred. We have been informed that it has not yet passed the West German parliament. We have asked for the text of the legislation, which we expect to acquire very shortly, and when it becomes available we will examine it to see to what extent Canadian interests are affected and what can be done, if they are affected, to protect them.

(Translation):

STORMS

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

I learned with pleasure that the Quebec government had decided to grant financial help in the amount of $640,000 to the victims of Abitibi West. Can the Prime Minister tell us whether the Quebec government has requested the federal government's assistance and, in that case, to what extent does the government intend to help the victims of Abitibi West?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, no such request for additional assistance has been received from the provincial government.

(Translation):

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

LEOPOLD DION—APPOINTMENT OF LAWYER AND PSYCHIATRIST TO STUDY RECORDS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to reply to another question which was asked me concerning a man called Dion.

On July 25, I stated that I was looking for a psychiatrist and a lawyer. I have now found both of them. The psychiatrist is Dr. Fernand Côté, associate professor of psychiatry at the University of Montreal and chief of the department of psychiatry at Maisonneuve hospital. The lawyer is Mr. Norman Borins, of Toronto.

(Text):

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SURCHARGE ORDER—REQUEST FOR DELAY IN LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to either the Prime Minister or the Minister of Justice. In view of the fact that the house, by its votes on the second reading of Bill No. C-88, has indicated what it would do if necessary, will the government now consider delaying any further action on that bill until the Exchequer Court of Canada reached a decision on the matters referred to it?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to the hon. member that there is a substantial sum of money involved in this matter, I believe some hundreds of millions of dollars, and that by bringing forward this legislation the government has indicated it is important, because of the doubt, to validate this order by act of parliament. I think under the circumstances I would hesitate to recommend that the matter be delayed.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has it not been clearly indicated by the house that if the decision were that the order is invalid, legislation would be passed and would be made retroactive? Would it not be a good idea to have the court's decision rather than argument back and forth by assertion?

Mr. Chevrier: Well, I doubt whether that would be so. In any event, I should like to have a further look at it, perhaps during the luncheon recess. The matter will not be reached before luncheon, I expect, and I will be pleased to look at it in the meantime.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

MANSEAU, QUE.—IMPROVEMENT OF LEVEL CROSSING

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Lotbiniere asked me a question concerning the Quebec department of highways application to the board of transport commissioners dealing with the widening of the level crossing in the village of Manseau.

I want to inform the hon. member than an application was made to the board in April, that the applicant was granted authority to widen, at its own expense, the highway where it crossed over the railway; that the order fixed the cost of maintenance of the widened crossing at 66⅔ per cent by the C.N.R. and 33⅓ per cent by the applicant; that in the same order authority was granted to the railway to relocate and revise the existing automatic protection signals; that the cost of relocating and revising the said protection was to be borne and paid by the applicant, and that the cost, maintenance and operation of the protection as relocated and revised was to be borne 50 per cent by the applicant and 50 per cent by the C.N.R.

INQUIRY AS TO REAPPOINTMENT OF PRESIDENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question based upon what I hope is a wildly speculative story in Le Devoir of yesterday. Has the Prime Minister received representations from the Minister of Justice regarding the removal of Donald Gordon from Canadian National Railways because of his attitude toward French Canadians working on the railway? If he has, I wonder if he could tell us whether any consideration is being given to renewing Mr. Gordon's relationship with Canadian National Railways in September, when I understand it terminates?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman's question is not only out of order but is wildly speculative.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I think the question is not out of order. I would like to put it to the Prime Minister for this reason. There has been considerable discussion in public about this matter, and I think it is fair to ask that the rumours be denied.

Mr. Pearson: Surely, Mr. Speaker, it is out of order to ask a question about conversations between two members of the cabinet.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

In view of the fact that the contract of the Canadian National's president has to be renewed during the recess, could the Prime Minister tell us now whether steps or discussions have been undertaken for the renewal of Mr. Gordon's contract or for the appointment of another person as president of the Canadian National Railways?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, a decision will be taken on this matter and an announcement made in the house in due course. At that time the information will be given.

WORLD FAIR

REQUEST FOR ESTIMATE OF COST OF SITE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of an editorial in this week's Financial Post stating that preparation of the world's fair site in Montreal would cost between $500 million and $700 million, would the minister inform the house whether this is a correct estimate? If so, would he give consideration to some other site less expensive to the Canadian taxpayers?

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, a number of hon. members, including myself, have questions on the order paper relating to this very matter, and I feel that one of my questions on the order paper is on all fours with the inference which the hon. member has raised. I would like to point out that if the government, through its minister, can answer an oral question, when it has for several weeks passed over a specific question on the order paper, then it seems to present an unfairness to the order paper questions.

Mr. Speaker: I think the hon. member's remarks are well taken, but it is impossible to rule on a question until I hear it. Consequently I only have partial control until I hear the question.

MINES AND TECHNICAL SURVEYS

INQUIRY AS TO ASSISTANCE TO GOLD PRODUCERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys. Can he say whether the government is considering any measures to extend or increase the assistance to Canadian gold producers?

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, the former minister is well aware that there are another five months to go during which this type of assistance will be paid, and I can assure him that during our recess the matter will be considered.

AIR TRANSPORT

ASSISTANCE TO PASSENGERS STRANDED IN ENGLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fred F. Stenson (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would his department consider arranging to bring back to Canada those 86 people who are stranded in England through the failure of a commercial air line to live up to its commitments? There are also 37 Britons stranded here in Canada.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am familiar with this situation and I do not think it is proper to say that the air line was not living up to its commitment. The air line took the precaution to have its senior representative fly to Toronto, when these people were going overseas, to hand them individually their one way tickets for the express purpose of having the opportunity to advise and warn each of them that they did not have return tickets, and that the air line would not return them to Canada unless it were paid the fare. That having been done, I do not know there is much that can properly be done by the department at the taxpayer's expense.

I must say I have a great deal of sympathy for the plight of these people, and I think it most unfortunate that after what I hope was a very happy and pleasant holiday on the other side they now find themselves without return tickets. But I think it would be a pretty dangerous precedent for the government to take taxpayers' money and expend it to provide return tickets when the individuals, if I am correctly informed as I believe I am, were warned before they went that they did not have return tickets and that the air line would not fly them back unless return tickets were paid for.

Hon. A. J. MacLean (Queens): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether consideration has been given to having the Department of External Affairs advance money, as is sometimes done, to those would-be passengers who are Canadian citizens, to allow them to return to their homes and jobs.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, so far I understand there has been no request from any of them for an advance of money.

(Translation):

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

QUEBEC—INQUIRY AS TO TRANSFER OF JURISDICTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister.

Is he considering the possibility of direct negotiations with Mr. Lesage concerning the transfer of jurisdiction over New Quebec to the government of the province of Quebec?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that matter is already under study, as the house knows, by at least two members of the cabinet.

PUBLIC WORKS

CLINTON, ONT.—INQUIRY AS TO NEW POST OFFICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. E. Cardiff (Huron): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. I sent him notice of the question yesterday. Could the minister tell me whether any progress has been made with respect to a start on the new post office building at Clinton, Ontario?

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the minister I am very happy to inform the hon. member that the architect has submitted his preliminary sketches in which some revisions have been made, and he is now preparing the working drawings and specifications. It is planned that tenders will be called in October, for a completion date in September, 1964.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO SETTING UP COURT OF CLAIMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. I would like to ask the minister whether we may expect that there will be prepared for submission to parliament when we return from the recess, draft legislation in respect of the establishment of a court of Indian claims, which is a matter of great concern to many residents of this country.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I must say this is a question which has already been thoroughly reviewed, and it is my intention to submit to cabinet a recommendation for the establishment of such a court upon the return of the house.

(Translation):

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO UNDERCOVER ACTIVITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

In view of the statements made by the man named Watson about the murder of Rocky Pearson, which appeared in La Presse yesterday, as well as the part played by an agent of the R.C.M.P., does the minister intend to have an investigation made within this police force, in order to throw some light on its activities?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have read the statements in La Presse as well as in other newspapers. I have no intention of having an investigation made, at least not before knowing the issue of the trial. Of course, when such a matter is before the courts, one must wait until judgment has been passed. I surely cannot make a statement with respect to that question without being aware of the final decision.

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Text):

NATIONAL REVENUE

COLLECTION OF INCOME TAX FROM B.C. ELECTRIC COMPANY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra asked me two questions regarding possible courses of action by the Department of National Revenue with respect to B.C. Electric Company. I am afraid I can only say that our department understands an appeal will be made from this judgment to the British Columbia court of appeal, and the tax situation will have to await the outcome of that appeal.

INCOME TAX

INQUIRY AS TO PROVISIONS OF AMENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to either the house leader or the Acting Minister of Finance. My question relates to the status of that part of the budget represented in amendments to the Income Tax Act. As the government knows, on July 23 the Minister of Finance said the bill to amend the Income Tax Act would be introduced momentarily. We have not seen it yet. I am not asking for a debate today, obviously; but should we not have the bill and have first reading so we will know before the recess what are the statutory changes that are being made?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think I would prefer to make inquiries of the department and give an answer later this day, which I undertake to do.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REFERENCE OF TREATY TO HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question of the Prime Minister concerning the Columbia river treaty. Should agreements on the Columbia be reached with the province of British Columbia during the recess, will the committee on external affairs be called to consider the agreement, so that no delay may occur in starting the project?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I can give my hon. friend the assurance that the committee on external affairs will be called as soon as the treaty can be submitted to it. That will require, of course, signature by the United States as well as agreement with the government of British Columbia.

Mr. Pugh: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Should this agreement arise during the recess, will the committee be called back?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, a committee cannot sit unless the house is in session—

Some hon. Members: Oh?

Mr. Pearson: —and the house will resume in September.

Mr. Knowles: Order.

Mr. Pearson: Well, unless the house is sitting.

Mr. Pugh: Then might the house be recalled to consider this treaty?

Mr. Pearson: That is a different question, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member suggests that if the changes in this treaty are agreed on with the United States and all the preliminaries have been cleared away, the House of Commons should be asked to resume its sittings in order to consider the treaty. That is another matter, and I will give consideration to it in the light of developments.

(Translation):

TRADE

RED CHINA—SUGGESTED CHANGE IN POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, considering the statement made last night by the President of the United States to the effect that China is becoming the greatest threat to world peace, can the Prime Minister inform the house whether the government intends to reconsider its trade policy with that possible world enemy?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The trade policy, in so far as mainland, communist China is concerned, is governed by an arrangement made with our allies. This arrangement, which has been accepted by this government, prevents trading with communist China in all matters of any strategic importance. At the moment there is no intention of changing that policy.

(Translation):

BUTTER—POSSIBLE SALES TO UNITED KINGDOM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Could he tell the house whether his department has completed its research on the possible selling of butter to Great Britain and, if in the affirmative, could the minister table a report on that research, and state whether Canada will be able to sell butter on the British market in 1963, in view of the circumstances which prevail over there?

(Text):

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the subject mentioned by the hon. member is under study. Due to the price of butter at the moment we question whether this will be possible; nevertheless we are studying it, and if it is possible we will see to it that our markets are enlarged.

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH RED CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Will the minister be in a position to inform the house before the recess how trade negotiations are proceeding in connection with the sale of wheat to China?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to inform hon. members that I have just received news that the negotiations have been concluded successfully. The wheat board will be making a statement this afternoon, and I hope I shall have the opportunity later of giving the substance of the wheat board's statement to hon. members.

(Translation):

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

ROYAL COMMISSION—SUGGESTED INCREASE IN MEMBERSHIP

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the numerous requests which he has received from certain groups about the royal commission on biculturalism, does the Prime Minister intend to increase the commission's membership, in order to comply with those groups' requests?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the only consideration in that regard is being given to a suggestion that there might be an additional member from British Columbia, but no decision has been taken yet. That would be the only increase which would be made, if one were made.

TRADE AND COMMERCE

ADDITIONAL SERVICES TO BE PROVIDED BY ADVERTISING AGENCY

On the orders of the day:

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question, one which I would have placed on the order paper but I was informed that it would be better put on orders of the day. The question is in relation to the advertising contract which the McLaren's advertising agency holds with the Department of Trade and Commerce. I want to ask the minister whether there is any agreement, verbal or written, that McLaren's advertising agency will provide other services than those which are going to the government, say to the Liberal party, as a result of this contract.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I regret to say that I think this question is out of order on several grounds. First, it should relate to public affairs and the hon. member is asking a question relating, if you wish, to private party matters. Second, he is making an allegation, or a statement, or an assertion. Therefore I would suggest that if he wishes to ask this question he submit it to me in writing so that it can be carefully considered to see whether or not it is in order.

Mr. Fisher: The question as I understood it, Mr. Speaker, was referred to you, but I should just like to say this. You said that this question concerned a private affair. If there is any understanding regarding a public contract which carries over into the private field, if political party management is a private field, then I would say that this is very much a question for the public and for this house. However, I will accept your suggestion.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, could I be permitted to answer this question. If the question is in order—and I am not suggesting it is—the answer is no.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR INCREASED ADVANCE PAYMENTS ON FARM STORED GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Due to the serious grain congestion problem which is developing in western Canada, would the minister consider the advisability of amending the cash advances legislation to provide for an increase in the maximum amount available to individual farmers as advances on their grain in store on farms?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the possible amendment of this act is under consideration.

Division

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT AND DEFINITION OF DUTIES

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of an economic council of Canada.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I made a reservation with respect to this when I spoke on clause 22. It had to do with the elimination of the national productivity council. I do not intend to go over what I said at that time, it is on record in Hansard. But in view of my feeling on this matter and, I know, the feeling of many members of this house, I wish to move, seconded by my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill):

That the said bill be not now read a third time but that it be referred to the committee of the whole house with the instruction that they have power to amend it by eliminating therefrom clauses 22 and 11, the objective being to continue the national productivity council.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Starr), which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Aiken
Alkenbrack
Bell
Chatterton
Churchill
Clancy
Crouse
Danforth
Diefenbaker
Doucett
Fairweather
Fane
Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke)
Flemming (Victoria-Carleton)
Gundlock
Hamilton
Harkness
Horner (The Battlefords)
Jorgenson
Korchinski
Lamb
MacEwan
MacLean (Queens)
MacRae
McBain
McCutcheon
McIntosh
Martineau
Monteith
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Nasserden
Nugent
Pascoe
Pigeon
Pugh
Rapp
Rheaume
Ricard
Skoreyko
Southam
Starr
Stefanson
Stenson
Thomas
Watson (Assiniboia)
Webb
Willoughby
Winkler—48.

NAYS

Messrs:

Armstrong
Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace)
Barnett
Basford
Batten
Beaule
Bechard
Beer
Belanger
Benidickson
Berger
Blouin
Boulanger
Boutin
Cadieux (Terrebonne)
Cameron (High Park)
Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Cantin
Cardin
Caron
Carter
Cashin
Chevrier
Choquette
Côté (Longueuil)
Cowan
Cyr
Deachman
Denis
Deschatelets
Douglas
Drouin
Drury
Dube
Emard
Ethier
Eudes
Favreau
Fisher
Foy
Frenette
Garland
Gauthier
Gelber
Girouard
Godin
Granger
Gray
Greene
Gregoire
Groos
Guay
Habel
Haidasz
Hahn
Harley
Hellyer
Herridge
Honey
Jewett, Miss
Klein
Knowles
Konantz, Mrs.
Lamontagne
Laniel
Latulippe
Laverdiere
Leboe
Leduc
Lessard (Lake St. John)
Lessard (St. Henry)
Loiselle
MacEachen
MacNaught
McIlraith
McMillan
McWilliam
Martin (Timmins)
Mather
Matheson
Matte
Moreau
Mullally
Munro
Nicholson
O'Keefe
Olson
Orlikow
Ouellet
Pearson
Pennell
Pepin
Perron
Peters
Pickersgill
Pilon
Plourde
Prittie
Regan
Richard
Rinfret
Robichaud
Rochon
Rock
Rondeau
Rouleau
Ryan
Sharp
Tardif
Temple
Tucker
Wahn
Walker
Watson (Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Webster
Whelan—116.

Mr. Brown: I was paired with the hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Badanai: I was paired with the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Roxborough: I was paired with the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. More). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Teillet: I was paired with the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa (Mr. Enns). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Mackasey: I was paired with the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Francis: I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Coates: I was paired with the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Miss LaMarsh). Had I voted, I would have voted in favour of the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the main motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): May I raise a point of order, Mr. Speaker. My point of order is that the bill that has just been passed involves one of the prerogatives of the crown and therefore requires the consent of the crown before it can be given third reading in the house. I refer you, sir, to citation 283 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, page 231, fourth edition, where it is stated that the royal consent cannot be communicated in committee, is generally given at the third reading—

Mr. Speaker: I am very sorry but I will have to interrupt the hon. member. This point of order should have been raised before third reading was given. The house has voted on the matter and I must rule that the point has been settled.

Mr. Nasserden: With all due respect, sir, I believe I can give you authorities—

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but the authorities do not overrule the decision of the house.

Mr. Nasserden: I wonder if you would hold your decision, Mr. Speaker—

EXCISE TAX ACT

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (for the Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-90, to amend the Excise Tax Act.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Nasserden: I should like to quote the authorities I have to offer you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I do not know how I can express myself more clearly. I suggest that there has been a decision of the house which overrides all the authorities you care to quote.

Mr. Nasserden: I rose immediately after third reading, and I should like to quote the authorities I have in the rule books which I have before me.

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to repeat arguments that were advanced by members of the opposition regarding certain portions of this bill. I shall restrict myself, therefore, to moving, seconded by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan):

> That this bill be not now read a third time but be referred back to the committee of ways and means for the purpose of amending it to maintain the exemptions under the provisions of the excise tax from manufacturers sales tax on building materials and machinery, and machinery and apparatus to be used in manufacture or production.

It will be noted from what I have read what this amendment purports to do, and that is to ask for a direction that this bill be referred back to the committee of ways and means so that the sales tax provision in so far as it applies to building materials and machinery, and machinery and apparatus to be used in manufacture or production, shall not be altered.

Mr. Stuart A. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, before the question is put I wish to emphasize why in my view it is most essential that the amendment be passed by the house. In the course of the debate on this bill I drew to the attention of the Minister of Finance the fear I had, that by imposing an 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and production machinery we might remove from all economic possibility of development the programs that are contemplated for the great river systems in British Columbia, and any other such river systems for the production of hydroelectric power.

I endeavour to emphasize the competing sources of power that are becoming rapidly available, and I endeavoured to emphasize what the addition of an 11 per cent tax would mean to an immense program such as the Columbia river project, which will cost $400 million and more for the first stage alone. This is a sum identical to that which the government is seeking to secure for its municipal development fund, which is supposed to have the objective of eliminating unemployment in Canada.

I am not an authority on these questions, but I shall endeavour to quote an authority. I have asked a few questions on the order paper, which have remained unanswered, and in the course of debate I asked the Minister of Finance whether the government had considered the implications of this action on the Columbia river development. The minister answered a question put by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary, who asked if there had been representations from the province of British Columbia on this point, and he said that there had, that they had been considered, and rejected.

The whole point I am trying to find out is whether the government seriously considered the implications of its action, particularly on an immense development project of this kind. As I say, I am not an expert, and I have to ask questions to express doubt, but I am prepared to quote from the writings of one acknowledged authority, which appeared in February and March of this year in the Vancouver Sun. These were a series of articles by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis), who in the biographical note at the head of the first article is identified as having been the head of the Liberal party's committee on power and energy development during the last parliament, and who is now parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister and special adviser to him on power questions in British Columbia.

The articles covered the whole area of power development, including hydroelectric, thermal and nuclear. They also covered the question of choice of fuel, and quoting from this third article, published on March 2, he had this to say:

> Falling water is no longer the only source of low cost electricity.
>
> The mineral fuels, coal, oil and gas are becoming more transportable and the efficiency of big steam plants is going up and up. Besides, these stations, like the nuclear plants which are coming along, can be built anywhere.

Then later on he pointed out:

> The hard fact that many Canadians must realize is that, while we have lots of energy, the cost of power in other parts of the world is coming down. Fuel, and especially the nuclear fuels, are plentiful.
>
> Our advantage until recently was significant. Now it is melting away. Other costs, like wage rates, taxes and transportation charges now dominate the picture.

When the hon. member wrote that article and mentioned taxes, there was no 11 per cent tax on building materials and production machinery; and if he said then that taxes were endangering these projects, how much more are these projects now being endangered by the imposition of this tax on machinery and materials?

In the fifth article written by the parliamentary secretary to the Prime Minister which appeared on March 5, under the heading "Holding Costs" we find this:

> Costs—especially construction costs—must be kept down.

How can you keep then down when you add 11 per cent to them? Later on, in reference to interest rates, he had this to say with regard to utilities in the United States:

> There many of the utilities have been able to get around the high cost of money by leaning heavily on the federal treasury. Washington makes money available for public projects at 2½ per cent interest. Local utilities can also sell bonds which are income tax free.
>
> Rarely do these agencies pay more than 3½ per cent for their money.

[Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke).]

> But in British Columbia we are paying more than 5 per cent for our investment capital. It is all very well to say that we will go it alone on the Columbia or the Peace. But 1 per cent can mean tens of millions of dollars a year.

My point is that 11 per cent on capital costs will mean tens of millions of dollars on all such projects, and when you take that capital increase and amortize it at 4 per cent, or at 5 per cent in B.C., over 20 years, what do you incur? Let us suppose for estimating purposes that the project costs $400 million, of which half is taken up with building materials and production machinery. I should think it would be more likely to be 60 per cent, but let us say 50 per cent, which gives $200 million. Eleven per cent on that means an additional $22 million, which amortized at 4 per cent runs to around an additional $880,000 a year. At 5 per cent it runs to $1,100,000 additional a year, and over a 20 year period it mounts up to $20 million or $30 million additional. That is what this 11 per cent sales tax means to a development of the size of the Columbia river, and that is the reason I believe the amendment must be passed and this tax must not come into effect.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, may I call it one o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It being one o'clock this house stands adjourned until 2.30 p.m.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, this morning we have seen an amendment brought forward before third reading of the bill now before us concerning changes made in the Excise Tax Act. The amendment is to the effect that the bill be returned to the committee for the purpose of amending the Excise Tax Act so as to maintain the exemptions from sales tax on building materials and machinery, and machinery and apparatus to be used in manufacturing and production.

Mr. Speaker, it is a question of eliminating the sales tax of 11 per cent, no more, no less. Personally, I am in favour of the amendment and I shall support it, as will several other members of our group.

We left it to our members to vote according to their discretion. There was no decision in caucus with regard to this measure. Each of our members is free to vote as he wishes, but I think that the majority will be in favour of the amendment because, if I am not mistaken, it is simply a question of eliminating the 11 per cent tax.

We shall be told that the Minister of Finance has retreated and reorganized his tax so as to impose 4 per cent immediately, then increase the tax by another 4 per cent in another year, and by 3 per cent in the next. But, there is actually a wish to impose an 11 per cent tax on building materials, and machinery used in manufacturing, so that the cost of living and prices of all available goods will increase, which will add to the inflation we have in the country.

To increase this tax in stages, as the Minister of Finance is doing now, or all at once, does not make a great difference.

Whether you cut your dog's tail in several short parts or all at once, the result is the same. When the tail is cut in many places, the dog only hurts that much more.

This is, in a way, what is happening in the case of this tax. The Minister of Finance with his escalator tax, which in a year and a half will be at 11 per cent, will not change anything in the situation, because the people will have to pay the tax all the same.

Mr. Speaker, let us not forget that for about 50 years, in our country, taxes have been gradually increased one after the other, bit by bit, as it is done again today, with the result that out of every dollar earned by a Canadian citizen about 47 cents are paid in taxes. If this tax had been imposed all at once, the Canadian people would certainly have revolted, but since the Minister of Finance is imposing it by stages, bit by bit, the people do not realize it so much but the increase still remains. Therefore, we must put a stop to those tax increases and, in my opinion, the time has come to do it.

I see the hon. member for Mercier (Mr. Boulanger) who seems to be quite happy with this tax. If he feels it is right for him to rejoice now, I believe that his constituents do not smile as broadly as he does at the present time.

Mr. Speaker, we appreciate that the expenditures at the various levels of government are increasing. The federal government expenditures are increasing. For instance, today we have before us a bill concerning municipal assistance. This will require an expenditure of $400 million. So, we appreciate the government expenditures are going up.

However, when expenditures go up, the government must look for additional revenue. Unfortunately, we find that to increase its revenue, the government has no alternative but to take the required funds out of the pockets of Canadians by means of taxes.

As long as the government keeps to beaten tracks in matters of economic administration, it will be unable to get the money it needs otherwise than by taxation.

We are against this tax but we recognize that the government needs additional revenue. Instead of seeing the government increase taxes or try to get along without the additional revenue it needs, we would like to suggest other means to solve the problem.

I heard the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) suggest several times that deficit budgeting is a means of obtaining new sources of revenue. Deficits lead invariably to indebtedness, to payment of interests, and at this point, we do not go along.

We suggest therefore that deficits should be financed by the Bank of Canada, an agency of the Canadian government that does not have to charge any interest, because the Bank of Canada being a Canadian organization, it turns out that we owe money to ourselves. In short, I am in favour of this type of deficit budgeting financed by the Bank of Canada, because we would owe this money to ourselves. In that case, it is more or less the left hand that owes to the right hand and we would not object to the Bank of Canada financing the deficits.

We are against the increase of this tax and we would suggest, at the same time, other sources of revenue. Since we have explained often enough in the house how to find other sources of revenue, we feel that it is useless to dwell any longer on the subject.

That is why the majority of the members of our group will vote in favour of this amendment.

(Text):

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the effect of this amendment is to send the bill back to the committee in order to retain the exemption on building materials and production machinery. In other words, the committee of ways and means would be instructed to remove the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and production machinery. It is true that the 11 per cent tax is going to be imposed in stages. But as the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) has pointed out, a dog is not any more comfortable for having its tail cut off by inches rather than all at once, and the ultimate result of the legislation will be that by January 1, 1965 there will be an 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and production machinery.

When the bill was at the resolution stage the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) on behalf of our party moved an amendment, or attempted to move an amendment, to strike out this clause. He did so because we are opposed to the imposition of an 11 per cent sales tax on building materials and on production machinery. We are opposed to it because, in the first place, the government has said that the most pressing problem facing Canada today is that of economic growth and full employment. If the government had canvassed the whole economy seeking to find some way to defeat its own objective it could not have found a better way than the way it is proposing. Because there is no industry which stimulates more employment than the construction industry. All the way from the logging camps, the saw mills, the factories where bricks, tiles and cement are manufactured, all the transportation facilities, all the construction industries, all the electrical and plumbing fixtures industries, all those who make electrical appliances—all of these are affected by a large and accelerated building program. By imposing this tax the government is bound to bring about a reduction in the amount of building which would normally take place.

A lot of figures have been tossed around as to what this tax will cost the average builder. The Toronto metropolitan homebuilders association sent the government a brief in which they said that the 11 per cent sales tax would increase the cost to the buyer of an average small home by approximately $700; that on a 25-year mortgage of 6¼ per cent it would add $4.59 to the monthly payments, or $1,377 during the life of the mortgage. That is going to make a lot of prospective home builders stop and think before proceeding with the construction of a home, and it will take from their income, even if they do build a home, money which would otherwise have gone toward the purchase of consumer goods.

It is not only the home owners who will be affected. There are industries which are planning plant extensions running into millions of dollars, and it is only natural that these companies will now pause to consider what their cost will be in the light of the imposition of an 11 per cent sales tax not only on the building which they propose to erect but also on the machinery and equipment which will go into their factory. Therefore I think the government is making a terrible mistake in selecting this method as the means of raising revenue. I think they are going to defeat the whole purpose of their major program, namely that of getting the economy rolling again and providing for full employment for all able-bodied people in Canada.

The arguments which have been put up by members on the government side have been something like this. First of all they have said: Well, we have an 11 per cent sales tax on everything else; why should construction and building materials be exempted? The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that the very same argument, and the very same reason why the exemption was imposed in the first place. The exemption on building materials and production machinery was introduced after the war in order to stimulate home building and construction and to provide employment; and if it was needed in the post-war period, then surely to heavens it is needed now. So that all of the arguments for granting this exemption are equally present and valid at this time.

The other argument put up by government speakers is that this is the fairest way for the government to raise money. Several hon. members opposite have said: Well, if the government has to have revenue surely this is the fairest way to collect it. Let me make clear in the first place, Mr. Speaker, that we have never worshipped the golden calf of a balanced budget, not because we think an economy can go on indefinitely with a budgetary imbalance, but because we argue that if the government is prepared to increase its expenditures and promote full employment, then when we get full employment that in itself will bring back to the government a greatly increased revenue, so that we will have no difficulty in balancing the budget.

We believe that the primary function of the government is to bring about a balanced economy, and that once we have a balanced economy in which production and consumption are in balance the budget will take care of itself. But if the government must find money and secure revenue, as my hon. colleague from Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) pointed out in the course of the debate there are many sources of revenue which the government is completely disregarding. It could impose a capital gains tax. At one time this was looked upon as a very dangerous proposal, something of a socialist threat. But now that the government of the United States has, and has had for some years, a 25 per cent capital gains tax, surely Canada, one of the few countries left which does not tax capital gains, ought to look at this field of revenue as a means of raising money. As my colleague pointed out, there are large reserves of undivided profits and depreciation allowances which have been built up by many of the big corporations in this country over the years. If the government wants sources of revenue there is an area to which the government might very well look. But the government does not do that. Instead it decides that if it needs more money it will go to the people who can least afford to provide it—the home builders, the people who must buy some lumber to repair their piggery, their barn, their home or their garage. Abraham Lincoln once said that God must have loved the common people because he made so many of them. The same seems to be true of ministers of finance. They tax the common people because there are so many of them, and because it is so much easier to tax them than to tax the large corporations which have great accumulations of undistributed profits and depreciation accounts.

It is rather significant, Mr. Speaker, that when the minister brought in his budget on June 13 one of the most spectacular proposals was the imposition of a transfer tax of 30 per cent on persons disposing of Canadian securities.

There came trouping to Ottawa representatives of the Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver stock exchanges. The spokesmen for the biggest business lobby in Canada, the representatives of the great financial corporations of this country, came here. What happened? Immediately the minister found there were "administrative difficulties" and the legislation was dropped. I do not think the difficulties rose nearly so much from the question of administration as from the fact that the government had stepped on the toes of the most powerful financial lobby in Canada. I think that is why the proposal was dropped.

But when we come to the government and say that this proposal is going to work a hardship on everybody who wants to build a modest home or repair a house, when we ask that the government set aside a tax which is likely to hurt the employment situation, hon. gentleman stand adamant and the largest concession they are prepared to make is to spread the 11 per cent sales tax over a period of some 18 months.

Members of this party will support this amendment because we believe the government should reconsider its proposal to impose an 11 per cent sales tax. We believe the exemption, which has worked very well in recent years, ought to be maintained in the statute.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I intend to take only two or three minutes.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Herridge: I am glad I have so much support for what I have to say. I rise to support this final protest with respect to this tax. I endorse everything my leader has just mentioned as to the effect of this tax on our economic development and, consequently, on employment in this country.

I am reliably informed that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) spent some time yesterday and today with about 12 technical personnel from the United States and British Columbia discussing the question of the development of the Columbia. One might call it a timid renegotiation during a period of restagnation. I rise to show, moving from the abstract to the concrete, the effect which this increase in the number of imponderables is likely to have on development in Canada, particularly on those engaged in the construction industry. Let us take the case of the high Arrow dam. Those connected with this project have to deal with the imponderable of cost which has already gone up by $5 million since Mr. Willston admitted it would cost $124 million. They have had to deal with the imponderable of the safety of the dam and the location of the dam. Now they must face the imposition of this tax. Just imagine these gentlemen discussing the cost of building this dam in the shadow of this tax and the other imponderables I have mentioned, together with the court decision rendered by Mr. Justice Sherwood Lett. I raise this matter in order to give a concrete example of how this tax will affect all those concerned with construction projects. On one hand we have the Secretary of State for External Affairs seeking to promote a project and on the other we have the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) putting difficulties in his way. I wanted to make this final comment on these questions before we recess.

(Translation):

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, like the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), I do not intend to unduly extend this debate.

With regard to the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), I want to inform the house, on behalf of the four Social Credit members for the Saguenay-Lake St. John area, that we are opposed to this tax. In fact, I received this morning a letter from the executive council of the St. Jean Baptiste societies for the Saguenay district, enjoining us to protest emphatically against the levying of this 11 per cent sales tax on building materials.

Mr. Speaker, there are many reasons why we, especially from the province of Quebec, must oppose the imposition of this tax. Hon. members are aware of the protests made by the Quebec minister of national resources and the mayor of Montreal to the effect that such a tax hampered the future development of the province of Quebec where, these last few years, there has been a remarkable expansion in the building industry.

I feel the present Liberal government has sought to a certain extent to curb the economic liberation that has been undertaken for some time by the province of Quebec. In my opinion, the house must be told about that situation, and I think the only step the government can take now is to exempt from that tax all projects carried out by any provincial agency.

As taxpayers, we can understand, to a point, taxation on an individual basis, but a sales tax of 11 per cent on building materials seems to be the most infamous of all.

Besides, through the taxation of development projects, municipal corporations and provincial organizations in Quebec, we will, in fact, be fined twice. What have Quebec citizens done to deserve such a treatment?

If the present government intended to punish the population of the province of Quebec, it could not have found a better way of doing it than levying this 11 per cent tax on building materials which are going to be used, in Quebec, in the field of public investments as well as in that of private investments.

At this time, the federal government collects in the province of Quebec an amount which is large enough to compensate the equalization payments paid to Quebec. Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that it is our duty to stand against this legislation and I hope the government will finally realize that obviously this 11 per cent tax must be withdrawn.

The government proposes a gradual implementation of this 11 per cent tax, that is 4 per cent at once, 4 per cent next spring and 3 per cent in the fall of 1964. Well, I express the wish that the first 4 per cent will not be imposed, but if it is it would be desirable that the percentage to be implemented next April, that is when the next budget is introduced, if the Minister of Finance does introduce one, should be completely abolished, as well as the last portion which is to be imposed in the fall of 1964.

With this, I conclude my remarks, because I do not want to go on forever on that matter and waste the precious time of the house.

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to prolong this debate indefinitely, but I feel I should not miss this opportunity to point out that we are witnessing today a change of policy on the part of the New Democratic party and the members of the Social Credit party.

When the 11 per cent sales tax was proposed by the Minister of Finance, a group among those hon. gentlemen abstained from voting, while the others voted along with the government. Today, in view of that legislation being most unpopular, well, they want to make good before the people by saying that they will vote for the amendment. They just lost face—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, on a point of order—

Mr. Pigeon: There is no question of privilege.

Mr. Gregoire: —I think that the first qualification of a member of parliament is to be intellectually honest and to report the facts as they happen. To my mind, when the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard) talks as he did, he does not show any intellectual honesty, because we never voted against the tax, but rather against the schemes of politicians who only think of making political capital.

I therefore submit that the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot should rectify his words to be honest with himself and with the house, otherwise he should refer to Hansard.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, we just listened to a speech indicating that the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) was looking at himself in a mirror—

(Text):

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege, the hon. member said we were voting against the amendment. We are voting for the amendment and I said so just a few minutes ago. It is also out of order for a member to comment on previous votes, but if the hon. member is going to be allowed to do so may I point out to him that in the resolution stage we attempted to move for the removal of the 11 per cent sales tax. We have indicated our opposition to it. The reason we abstained on the budget was that we did not want to vote no confidence in the government and get the Tories back in office, which would be even worse.

(Translation):

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, the fact that my remarks caused such a reaction in the other end of the house eloquently shows how sore a point I touched since both these representatives of small opposition parties have now been brought before the public opinion which will judge them as being in favour of the 11 per cent tax. I am not at all surprised at their reaction.

I wanted to show the people the way those gentlemen intend to defend the interests of their constituents.

Their attitude shows how afraid they are to go to the country, and that is why they abstained from voting on the one hand and, on the other hand, they voted for the legislation the first time. Today they are caught off their guard and—

An hon. Member: On a point of order—

Another hon. Member: There is no point of order.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wish to make a point myself. We are discussing the excise tax.

(Translation):

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Speaker, I conclude my remarks by pointing out again to the public opinion in Canada the stand of those people and by emphasizing that we on this side of the house have been consistent in our conduct from the beginning to this day and that we shall remain consistent in the future, because we want to protect our constituents and we do not want them to have to pay an 11 per cent tax.

Those were the remarks I wanted to make, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, when the budget was introduced, there was much discussion concerning taxes. It will be recalled that the 30 per cent tax on the sale of Canadian securities to foreigners was even withdrawn afterwards. There were also some interesting measures, and some others which were less interesting, for instance the 11 per cent tax.

At that time, Social Crediters voted for the budget as a whole because it contained some good measures. However, as I said, some were less desirable, and among them there was the tax on building materials.

We recall very clearly that at that time, we proposed to discuss it and with that reservation, we stated in this house that we were voting for the budget as a whole in order to give the Minister of Finance the chance to introduce some amendments, which he did, for instance, when he came back in the house with a 4 per cent tax instead of the 11 per cent one and postponed also the imposition of that tax.

At that time, our group voted so as to enable the Minister of Finance to bring the amendment forward.

Today, reference is made to an amendment to this tax which now stands at 4 per cent.

It is interesting to note, Mr. Speaker, that the people who are proposing to abolish this 4 per cent tax are exactly the same people who, under the present economic system, could not act differently from the present government, because they always jeered at debt free money policy and they would not follow the policy that our group had set out for them in order to carry out the public investment programs, without taking any money out of the taxpayers' pockets. The leader of that group who says today: "Abolish that tax" is the same man who asked us repeatedly: "Where will you take that money?"

Mr. Speaker, if they will not raise funds according to the system advocated by the hon. members for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) and Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), those funds will have to come out of the taxpayers' pockets, which is unfortunate, Mr. Speaker. Of course, the Social Credit party reserves the right to vote against any measure as unpopular as this tax, because Social Credit always was and still is against taxes.

But I understand very well that several members of this house stand against playing that political game which is brought up again just on the eve of the adjournment of parliament.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I only wish to make one comment, Mr. Speaker, to say that the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Girouard) has just made the funeral oration of his party.

I hope that the Canadian people will remember the course of action followed by the members of the New Democratic party as well as by the members of the Social Credit party. They wanted to cling to the government and they were afraid of an election. They failed to do their duty. They preferred to act in their own interest rather than in the public interest.

Mr. Lucien Plourde (Quebec West): Mr. Speaker, when we see the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) and St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard), blame us for voting against this tax today, we wonder what they are doing. Are they afraid to go to the country? As for ourselves we are not afraid.

Mr. Pigeon: We want an election right away.

Mr. Plourde: Why then, Mr. Speaker, do they throw insults at us of the Social Credit party?

Mr. Speaker, on my own behalf and on behalf of my constituents, I object to this tax, because my constituency is perhaps the one where we find the largest slum districts and where it would be high time to restore old houses, with the centennial four years away. We now are faced with a tax which will slow down construction of new houses and slum clearance.

As for the unemployed, at the very beginning of this session, the Liberals stated that their main problem was to remedy unemployment. Well, I believe that this tax will increase the unemployment rate.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we are going to vote for the amendment moved by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), because we are against this 11 per cent tax.

However, in all that, once again, we see only a petty political game in these dying hours of the session, whatever the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm may have to say to the contrary.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, we want to go to the country. Let this government resign.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, before you put the question to the house I should like to say a few words in reply to some of the observations made this afternoon by hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not intend to prolong the discussion. What we have heard for the most part has been a repetition of the arguments made during the second reading and committee stages and also at the resolution stage. My colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), has dealt with these arguments at great length. This is not the first time we have heard them and they have not been changed in substance from the time they were first made.

I would remind the house about the problem faced by the nation when this government took office. Sometimes it seems to me, listening to hon. gentlemen opposite and in particular listening to those who support the Progressive Conservative party, they would have one believe that when this government took office the finances of this company—this country—were in good shape.

Mr. Knowles: That is a Freudian slip.

Mr. Sharp: I need hardly assure you, Mr. Speaker, that this was not so. The financial affairs of Canada when we took office were well known throughout the world to be in a mess. The problems with which we had to deal when we took over were not very pleasant. We had to find a means of meeting the financial conditions in this country and trying to restore order in our finances. It was necessary for this government to take some unpopular measures. I make no apologies whatever for taking unpopular measures.

As I listened to hon. members speaking I noticed that many of them were saying they would vote against this measure, not because it is not necessary but because it is unpopular. I say to hon. gentlemen opposite that no taxes are popular. If they want to vote against this tax for that reason, they ought to vote against all taxes. This tax is not the sort of tax that anyone would want to impose. This is a tax that had to be imposed because of the necessity for finding a large amount of revenue. As the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) has said on many occasions in this house, no one from the other side has suggested where the government was going to get more revenue.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I question that because we have indicated where they could get additional revenue.

Mr. Sharp: Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I shall be pardoned on this occasion for not getting into a discussion of Social Credit theory. A discussion of this subject could take the house a long way into the small hours of the morning, and I am sure that my hon. friend and I would have a very interesting discussion but it would not move the business of this house forward.

I have heard many of these hon. gentlemen opposite talk about the dire effects of this tax. Now, Mr. Speaker, being a member of this government, I have looked into this subject in a theoretical as well as in a practical way. In a sense, it does not matter in what form one raises the necessary revenues. They all have an undesirable effect and they are all, I assure you, unpopular. I do not believe hon. gentlemen opposite have made a case that this tax is any worse than other taxes that might have been imposed. The other day an hon. member opposite asked me a question about capital investment intentions. He noticed that there had been published by the Department of Trade and Commerce a report of capital investment intentions in 1963. I should like to draw to the attention of hon. gentlemen the fact that the report said capital investment intentions had been revised upward at mid-year by approximately 3 per cent. The hon. gentleman asked me whether those figures were going to be revised. I pointed out to him that I have nothing to do with this report except to publish it, but it was my opinion that the effect of the budget proposal now under discussion probably would be to raise those figures.

At that time, I heard some interjections from the other side to the effect that this was incredible. I should like to point out to hon. members an item that appears in this morning's Gazette, and which I think is probably closer to the truth about what is happening in Canada today than many of the things said by hon. members opposite. The article states that for the month of July building permits in the city of Montreal were approximately 35 per cent higher than in July of last year. I am not suggesting that 35 per cent is going to be the average, but what I do suggest is that hon. gentlemen opposite are being guilty at the present time of spreading unnecessary—

Some hon. Members: Gloom.

Mr. Sharp: Well, I will put it more shortly; they are being guilty of what we were often accused of, spreading doom and gloom.

I do not intend to keep the house any longer, Mr. Speaker. The issues before us are very clear. I believe that under the very difficult circumstances faced by this government when it took office on April 22, the budget brought down is a budget in the interests of the people of Canada and the particular measure now before us is one that ought to commend itself to hon. gentleman.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask the minister a question? In view of what he has just said concerning the investment survey and the government's intention, and in view of what he has quoted from the Montreal Gazette, I should like to read two articles from the same newspaper and ask him—

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Martineau: It is up to the minister to answer if he wants to do so, and he seems to want to accept the question.

First of all, the Montreal Gazette refers to the fact that business spokesmen had said that the tax, that is the building materials tax, will inhibit expansion. Mr. John Meyer in the Gazette of August 1, 1963 had this to say:

> Estimates of the total value of deferrals or cancellations of new construction and machinery purchases ran in excess of $250 million when the tax was first introduced—

He is referring to the building materials tax of the June 13 budget. He said there may have been some reversals since that date because of the reduction in the tax, but they are small. He does state that investment planning and investment spending have been seriously hampered because of this tax. Will the minister comment on those observations?

Mr. Sharp: I only have this comment to make. The bill that is before the house today brings the excise tax into effect in stages, and whatever may have been the effects of an abrupt application of the 11 per cent tax, as was originally proposed, this bill does not have those effects. In my view, the effects of this particular measure on investment will be to stimulate it in 1963.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): May I ask the minister if the government, before introducing this tax did, in fact, assess the possible results of it on the construction cost of the Columbia river project, and the possible effect on the unit cost of energy produced by that project?

Mr. Sharp: Since I was not, of course, in on the budget discussions, I cannot give any inside information. However, I am satisfied that before the budget was brought down careful consideration was given to the effect of this tax as compared with other taxes that, in my opinion, would have had to be employed and that, on balance, the effect of this tax is not more detrimental than any other tax that would have had to be imposed.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the house is on third reading of a bill and not in committee. It seems to me that if we are to make progress we should abide by the rules.

Mr. Monteith: I intend to abide by all the rules of the house, as I always have. I do not think we should allow one or two of the very specious arguments of the Minister of Trade and Commerce to go unchallenged. First he suggests that he has only heard a repetition of arguments that were made on all clauses and stages of the bill; but those arguments are still good and sound, and they have not been answered. He further suggests that the Minister of Finance dealt with them, but in reply I would say anything but adequately. He left the statements completely unanswered.

I would also point out to the minister that the finances of the country were in excellent shape when we left office. In fact I do not think there can be any shadow of doubt that they were in a lot better shape than they are now. It is obvious the country has lost confidence in the government ever since the budget came down. It was an atrocious budget and had the unique achievement of increasing both taxation and the deficit.

I suggest that the government should start thinking of cutting both extravagance and taxes. It has saddled the country with some grandiose schemes which are very costly and only add to the burden of taxation without contributing to the economic activity or employment.

There can be no greater argument or illustration of how unpopular this particular tax is than the action of the government when it brought in an 11 per cent tax and immediately reduced it to 4 per cent. These magic men across the way have definitely been found wanting, and I am glad to see we are receiving the support of the other parties. I realize, as has been pointed out today, that they did not support the opposition at the time of the budget division, but now I am glad to note that they are seeing the error of their ways, and I suggest that if they had supported us at that time—

Mr. Gregoire: We do not support you. We are against the tax, and that is not the same thing.

Mr. Monteith: You certainly were for the tax at the time of the budget. In conclusion I point out that this amendment accomplishes what should be done for the people of Canada. If this tax is passed it will heap cost on cost on projects such as the Columbia river development, as was pointed out shortly before the luncheon recess. This tax will cause unemployment. I am as convinced of that as I could be, and I am sure this has already been demonstrated to the country at large.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I suppose they are famous words for one to use, that he did not intend to take part in a debate. Such is the case, but because of the things that have been said I have one word for the Conservatives and a word or two for the government.

My word for the Conservatives is that we are going to vote for their amendment despite the things they have said to try and dissuade us from doing so. We have been opposed to this sales tax right from the start. We have at no time voted for it. We sought to move an amendment when we were in committee on the resolution stage, in order to get rid of it, and we now welcome the opportunity to vote against it at this final stage.

My word or two for the government arise from the remarks of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, and if perchance he is to be the next Minister of Finance then all I can say is that the more things change the more they are the same. Speaking today as Acting Minister of Finance he said that we on this side of the house were voting against this tax merely because it was unpopular. There is no doubt about its unpopularity; but the leader of the New Democratic party made it very clear, in his effective speech not long ago, that we are voting against the tax because we believe it will increase unemployment.

We believe that this tax on the construction industry, and on the other things to which it is to apply, will work against the very object which the government said it was important to do something about namely increasing employment. Therefore we want the Minister of Trade and Commerce to know it is because of the fallacious arguments behind this tax, and the fallacious arguments he put forward in attempting to defend it, that we are now voting for the amendment and against the extension of the sales tax.

Mr. Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

The house divided on the amendment (Mr. Diefenbaker) which was negatived on the following division:

YEAS

Messrs:

Aiken
Alkenbrack
Barnett
Belanger
Bell
Boutin
Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands)
Cardiff
Chatterton
Churchill
Crouse
Danforth
Diefenbaker
Dionne
Doucett
Douglas
Fane
Fisher
Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke)
Forbes
Frenette
Gauthier
Gregoire
Gundlock
Hamilton
Harkness
Herridge
Horner (The Battlefords)
Jorgenson
Knowles
Korchinski
Lamb
Latulippe
Lessard (Lake St. John)
MacEwan
MacLean (Queens)

MacRae
McBain
McCutcheon
McIntosh
Martin (Timmins)
Martineau
Mather
Monteith
Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria)
Nasserden
Nugent
Orlikow
Pascoe
Perron
Peters
Pigeon
Plourde
Prittie
Pugh
Rapp
Rheaume
Ricard
Rondeau
Scott
Smith
Southam
Starr
Stefanson
Stenson
Thomas
Valade
Watson (Assiniboia)
Webb
Webster
Willoughby
Winkler—72.

NAYS

Messrs:

Armstrong
Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace)
Basford
Batten
Bechard
Beer
Benidickson
Berger
Blouin
Boulanger
Cadieux (Terrebonne)
Cameron (High Park)
Cantin
Cardin
Caron
Carter
Chevrier
Choquette
Côté (Longueuil)
Cowan
Cyr
Deachman
Denis
Deschatelets
Drouin
Drury
Dube
Ethier
Eudes
Favreau
Foy
Garland
Gelber
Godin
Granger
Gray
Greene
Groos
Guay
Habel
Haidasz
Hahn
Harley
Hellyer
Honey
Jewett, Miss
Kelly
Klein
Konantz, Mrs.
Lachance
Lamontagne
Laniel
Laverdiere
Leduc
Lessard (St. Henry)
Loiselle
MacEachen
MacNaught
McIlraith
McMillan
McWilliam
Matheson
Matte
Moreau
Mullally
Munro
Nicholson
Nixon
O'Keefe
Olson
Pearson
Pepin
Pickersgill
Pilon
Regan
Richard
Rinfret
Robichaud
Rochon
Rock
Rouleau
Ryan
Sauve
Sharp
Tardif
Temple
Tucker
Wahn
Walker
Watson (Chateauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie)
Whelan—91.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the amendment lost.

(Translation):

Mr. Paul: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for St. Maurice-Lafleche (Mr. Chretien). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Riviere du Loup-Temiscouata (Mr. Gendron). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment, that is against the 11 per cent tax.

(Text):

Mr. Coates: I was paired. Had I voted, I would have voted to support the amendment.

Mr. Bigg: I was paired with the hon. member for Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Asselin). Had I voted I would have voted to support the amendment.

(Translation):

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Forest). Had I voted I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Girouard: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Vaudreuil-Soulanges (Mr. Emard). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I was paired with the hon. member for Matapedia-Matane (Mr. Tremblay). Had I voted, I would have voted for the amendment.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, if 43 Conservative members had not been missing, we would have succeeded in abolishing that sales tax.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the house to the fact that both leaders of the Social Credit party are absent this afternoon.

(Text):

Mr. Badanai: I was paired with the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton (Mr. Flemming). Had I not been, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Roxburgh: I was paired with the hon. member for Regina City (Mr. More). Had I voted, I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Pennell: I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Cashin: I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Mackasey: I was paired with the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams). Had I voted I would have voted against the amendment.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the main motion?

Mr. Churchill: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

PRIVATE BILLS

SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Mr. Patrick Tobin Asselin (Richmond-Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent I move, seconded by Mr. Moreau:

Business of the House

That Bills S-33 and S-34 which received first reading this day be now read a second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce for consideration forthwith, and that standing orders 94(3)(a), 102, 106 and 116 be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to, bills read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

Mr. Ian Grant Wahn (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, by unanimous consent I move, seconded by Mr. Klein:

That Bills SD-252 to SD-356, both inclusive, which received first reading this day be now read a second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills for consideration forthwith, and that standing orders 93, 94(3)(a), 100, 102, 106 and 116 be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to, bills read the second time and referred to the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): This morning, during the question period, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked whether it was essential at this particular stage of the session to go on to complete the bill relating to the surcharge order. All hon. members are, I know, anxious that the remaining business of the house be cleared up as soon as possible and it is certainly not the desire of the government to defer the conclusion of this portion of the session unless it is urgently necessary to do so.

With this in mind, and having regard to the fact that on the second reading of this bill the house has already indicated its approval in principle of the objectives the government seeks to achieve by this measure, the government is prepared not to insist that the bill itself be proceeded with today. In making this statement, I should like to emphasize that the government has no intention whatever of abandoning its plan to seek approval of the bill by parliament. Accordingly, the government will be going ahead with the bill in the house at the earliest possible opportunity after parliament resumes in the fall.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Before the next order is called, may I point out that it is already four o'clock and I wonder if there could be general agreement in the house that we would have the hour from five to six which is set down for public and private bills available so as to continue with government business, and that we would resume at seven o'clock to continue with government business on the items apart from the one to which my hon. friend has referred—the items which were mentioned last night. At the conclusion of those items, if we are able to conclude them this evening, we would then take sufficient time for private bills to dispose of the divorce bills and any of the other private bills which hon. members are willing to dispose of. If that were agreed on I think it would facilitate the conclusion of our business.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

MUNICIPAL DEVELOPMENT AND LOAN BOARD

PROVISION FOR FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO MUNICIPALITIES

The house resumed, from Thursday, August 1, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-76, to promote increased employment in Canada by financial assistance by way of loans to municipalities to enable municipalities to augment or to accelerate municipal capital works programs—Mr. Sharp (for Mr. Gordon)—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 2—Definitions.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 2 carry?

Mr. Smith: No, Mr. Chairman. My remarks on this clause are directed to subclause (a). In discussing this bill I must say that if it were not so late in this part of the session it would be hard not to say I told you so because if the Prime Minister and the government of the day had given a little more consideration to the advice directed to them from this side of the house at the resolutions stage the necessity for the wide amendments now being made would not have arisen. I am referring to clause 2(a) and I suggest to the government that they have chosen a very cumbersome and expensive way to administer the legislation.

When the minister was making his second or third explanation last night he said that he wanted the legislation to operate with the maximum speed and with the smallest administrative cost possible. I suggest to the government that they will accomplish neither objective by setting up a board. Such action is completely unnecessary, is not only cumbersome but also expensive and will also result in delay. I suggest that the government would have been better advised to follow their own precedent or, better still, the precedent of our government in the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act of 1960-61 or the method the Liberals used when they were last in power with regard to the Municipal Grants Act. Instead of setting up a board, the powers in the legislation should be delegated to a specified minister and the provisions put into operation by him. That this system works well has been clearly demonstrated both with regard to our winter works program, the vocational training school building program and the Municipal Grants Act which has been on the statute books for some years.

Another reason that impels me to suggest this change is that the whole theory of the revisions has been that we should not interfere with provincial autonomy. Indeed, the bill itself gives the greatest power to the provinces. Under clause 8 of the bill everything is done by the province. Loans are vetted and approved by the provinces. An application for a loan cannot be submitted directly by a municipality to the federal government. It must first go to the province and be submitted to the federal government by the provincial government. For that reason the necessity for a board is substantially removed and the process would be speedier and more efficient if applications were then made directly to a minister.

The bill also provides, of course, that the services of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation are going to be used in certain aspects of administration. That in itself is another indication that a board is unnecessary. I would fear that the function of the board would be largely to interfere with provincial autonomy and provincial rights and that as soon as the board is set up we will start to have conflict between the board and the provinces. The legislation would be much better administered by a designated minister under whatever portfolio he otherwise holds and with the assistance of civil servants. For that reason, Mr. Chairman, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr):

That paragraph (a) of clause 2 be struck out and that paragraphs (c), (d) and (e) be relettered accordingly.

That is the first amendment, and I have four other consequential amendments with respect to other clauses in the bill.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to argue this case at length. I should like to point out to the hon. member that the board will have only a very small staff. It is not intended to create a new bureaucracy. Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will provide most of the services required by the board.

As to the second point that the hon. member raised about relations with the provinces, may I say that this question was not brought up at the conference. This is not a matter that the provinces found offensive to them in any way, and I am satisfied that the scheme outlined in the bill of having a board is not going to increase expenditures, interfere with simple operation or in any way affect the autonomy of the provinces.

Mr. Smith: I have one further question. Is the minister suggesting that the board will be composed of people now within the government service or will it be composed of cabinet ministers, or will new people be brought in?

Mr. Sharp: My understanding is that there will be one outsider, and the two other members of the board will be from the senior civil service.

Mr. Smith: Since the bill contemplates the termination of the legislation in 1966, which is only three years away, what security of tenure can be offered to an outsider on that basis?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I could say only the security of tenure offered by the legislation. However, it is my understanding that the Minister of Finance has not anticipated that he will have difficulty in filling this position, and I agree. I think there are people of competence who would be prepared to serve on a board of this kind for the period of the legislation.

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Chairman, I wish to support the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Simcoe North. What the minister has said has not convinced me that the provision of a board is at all necessary. Why consider it in the first place? I am not going to repeat the figures I gave last night, but the scope of operations of the winter works incentive program has been greater than what is proposed here and yet that whole program has been administered by the Department of Labour without creating a further bureaucratic organization.

Under section 36 of the National Housing Act an almost similar program involving loans to municipalities with a forgiveness feature has been administered by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Why could this program not be administered by the same corporation? The bill provides for an agreement between the board and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for use of the latter's staff. There then arises a dual responsibility. Will these employees who are going to be used by the federal government to administer the legislation be responsible to the board or the corporation?

If the Liberals were going to set up, as they promised during the election campaign, a vast program of assistance to municipalities, perhaps a board could then be justified, but this measure is little more than another form of sewer assistance, for example, or something like the winter works incentive program. It seems completely unnecessary to have a board and I think it will lead to administrative difficulties.

I remind the minister of the difficulties that were created as a result of the joint operation of the Farm Credit Corporation and the Veterans Land Act administration. They finally had to separate because the employees found that they had two bosses and they did not know to whom they were responsible. My specific question is this: Are these employees of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation going to be responsible to the board under the agreement or will they be responsible to the corporation?

Mr. Sharp: I do not want to prolong the discussion in the committee, but when this bill was drawn it was the judgment of the government that it would facilitate the operation of this measure if, instead of having a minister directly responsible, there should be a board which would act under the direction of the minister, but in between him and the municipalities and the provinces. It is always a question of judgment as to the best form of administrative machinery. I have listened to what the hon. gentleman has said. I am still satisfied that the board, in the form in which it is set up in this bill, will facilitate rather than hamper the operation of this measure. The board will not be a large institution and will not create many new offices.

There must always be a question of judgment in these things and this bill was drawn up, of course, on the advice of people within the public service who have had some experience with these matters. Their judgment accorded with the goverment's.

Mr. Prittie: I wonder if the minister could give us some estimate of the probable number of new employees who will be required to run this board?

Mr. Sharp: I doubt if the number will exceed a dozen, and perhaps it might be fewer.

Mr. Smith: Has the minister any reason to believe that the administration of sewage loans by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation has been unsatisfactory? Is it proposed that substantial application under this measure will be dealt with by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation employees?

Mr. Sharp: The short answer to the hon. gentleman's question is that the board is expected to exercise some judgment, just as the minister would. The central purpose of this measure is to increase employment and it is necessary, therefore, in judging applications to decide whether a particular project, in respect of which a loan is being applied for, will have the effect of increasing employment. In that respect this program differs from the sort of program dealt with by the hon. gentleman's question. This is one of the reasons it was felt originally that it would be desirable to have some sort of board that would, in the first instance at least, exercise some judgment.

Mr. Chatterton: This objection does not apply to the winter works incentive program where the same type of discretion was exercised. In that case, too, the corporation has to certify that the project would increase employment, and yet this program was operated without creating any new organization.

Mr. Starr: I feel that the government should reconsider the establishment of a board and the added expenditure thus incurred, especially at a time when we should be cutting down expenditures. After all, this fund will only amount to $400 million to cover a period of three years. This means about $133 million a year. I might point out that the municipal winter works program created work to the extent of $245 million per year just for a few months during the winter. This is a much smaller fund with which to provide employment than even the municipal winter works program.

In so far as the sewage program was concerned, it had the same features in it, the loan and the forgiveness clause. This, too, was a very successful program which was designed to generate employment and it also was handled by the present staff or people designated from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation.

There is not going to be any great difficulty in making up one's mind as to the projects that will be submitted. Certain types of projects are outlined in the bill as being admissible. The people who will be responsible for the administration of this measure will make up their minds, in communication with others, as to any project that might be submitted, and agreement can be arrived at without any delay. Under the circumstances, I think it is unnecessary to establish a board to administer some $130 million a year. I do not know what they are going to do in between, because certainly there is not going to be an avalanche of projects coming in on a continuing basis. It may be that during certain periods of the time these people will be busy, but the remainder of the time they will be sitting around drawing additional moneys for doing nothing.

Mr. Smith: Does the minister not think that if the board exercises much discretion or judgment, as he has suggested, it is quickly going to impinge on provincial rights? It would seem to me, having read clause 8 of the bill and the other clauses, that there is little discretion left for the board. This money will be merely a bank. Does he not feel that there is an area of potential conflict with provincial jurisdiction through the appointment of a board?

Mr. Chatterton: Before the question is answered, I should like to ask the Minister of National Revenue, who is now responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, whether in his opinion the corporation and its staff would have been competent to carry out this proposal if they had been made the responsible organization? Before the answer is given, may I say that I feel we should always remember there is a tendency within the civil service to enlarge itself. I feel it is up to the government to take positive action to stop that trend. Keeping that in mind, should the government not have considered whether your corporation could have handled this?

Mr. Garland: I wonder if the hon. gentleman fully appreciates what is being done here. The board is going to be a very small one and I believe the chairman will be the only member who will receive any remuneration. In addition there will be senior civil servants on the board.

In so far as the corporation is concerned, I do not believe I could agree with him that the corporation should be set up as the judge of these projects. I feel that the short term nature of the fund and the need for speeding up these projects that would not otherwise have been undertaken, makes it imperative that the program be handled according to the proposal in the bill. We will establish a board chairman whose chief responsibility will be to pass these projects that are submitted to him with the greatest possible speed.

Mr. Chatterton: Did I understand the minister to say the board would be composed of senior members of the service?

Mr. Garland: Yes, other than the chairman.

Mr. Chatterton: It does not say so here.

(Translation):

Mr. Frenette: Mr. Chairman, can the minister tell the house whether he has estimated how much time will be required before this new council is really efficient and before results of its work make themselves felt in this country? How long will it take before we get material results, once the bill is passed, of course?

(Text):

Mr. Sharp: We are confident that this can be put into effect to have the desired effect upon employment this winter. We feel that the additional amount of machinery that has to be established would be the minimum. In my judgment and the judgment of the government, this method of dealing with applications and administration will have the effect of reducing rather than increasing the cost of administration, because in one way or another there must be people to handle the work, and the board method seems to us to be the most expeditious and economical.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, the point I would like to make to the Acting Minister of Finance on the question of whether the board can be eliminated or not, comes from the fact that he stated the government originally thought, when it was going to set up this municipal development fund, that there should be a board to administer this very large program of helping municipalities and providing opportunities for employment.

This readily envisages a situation in which the government would think of this as one of its major economic moves to lower unemployment but when it had to go to the provinces and retreat from the position it had visualized itself in, and when all the machinery will now be at the provincial level, then it is obvious to all of us who have had experience in these matters that there is nothing for the board to do. Therefore it is a farce to say we need a board when the machinery is all in the hands of the provinces.

One of the reasons behind the winter works program in 1957 was because it was recognized, at the federal government level, that if the federal government were to give a stimulus to employment it would be very expensive to do it at that level, and what we ought to do was to use the machinery of the municipalities and provinces to help employment in the winter months. This same principle has now been forced on the federal government by the provinces.

What we are saying on this side is that since this whole grandiose vision of a tremendously large program of municipal aid from the federal government has now dissipated, and the program is being turned over to the provinces to administer, then all that is needed at the federal level is an auditor or two and a few engineers. To tell us we need a man at the senior civil service level brought in from the outside, and two senior civil servants, makes it look as if this board were going to do a great deal, but actually from the experience we have had, and which this government will get in time, the Department of Public Works and Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation can do this type of work.

Therefore I suggest very strongly that the minister can get the same efficiency and put this legislation into operation immediately by following the suggestion made by the hon. member for Simcoe North, in getting rid of the board and turning the job over to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. The board may have been necessary if the federal government was running everything, but now that it has been turned over to the provinces the board is absolutely unnecessary.

Mr. Francis: I would like to speak against the proposal put forward by the hon. member for Simcoe North. I personally could not accept the suggestion that this program could be administered as an extra sideline by the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, or whoever might be handling it in the Department of Labour, as a small addition to the winter works program. The purpose of C.M.H.C. is quite clearly to be the instrument of a national housing policy, and it has a great deal of work to do.

I do not believe this program of aid to municipalities for sewerage treatment belongs with C.M.H.C. Such a program could be even more effective, given the proper staff and proper direction. With regard to the winter works program I think most of us appreciate the virtues and limitations of the approach made to it, and certainly anyone who has had experience at the municipal level knows that unemployment does not stop on any given predetermined date from coast to coast all across Canada.

The technical problems of the projects have to be assessed, and I cannot agree with the hon. member for Ontario in saying that there is no problem in selecting the projects. In fact I would like to say a word or two on clause 7 with regard to the criteria in selection of the projects. I am sure that, even with the agreement with the provinces, there will be room for a great deal of discussion in working out the most satisfactory type of program which will develop under this legislation. I know there is a statutory limit in dollars in the legislation before us, but I for one hope at some future date this program will grow as experience develops under the board, which I think is the appropriate means of administering such legislation.

Mr. Chatterton: Obviously the hon. member has not had much experience with the practical operations of C.M.H.C. If he had he would know that the performance of the corporation's staff in the operation of the municipalities' sewerage program could not be improved. Is he suggesting that there should be a separate department to handle the sewerage program? This is almost a duplication of the type of work they are equipped and trained to do. If the hon. gentleman had his way we would be creating a new department for every operation.

Mr. Alkenbrack: Even with the bill as amended I cannot understand why the government still insists on using such a superfluity of wording in section 2(d) which states:

> "municipality" means
>
> (i) an incorporated city, metropolitan authority, town, village, township, district or rural municipality or other incorporated municipal body however designated,

One of the most important dispensations of civic authority and one of the oldest, even older than parliament itself, is the county, and I ask why the word "county" is not mentioned in this bill?

Counties form one of the most eligible and soundest classes of borrowers in the country, and I would imagine their omission is an oversight. Probably the minister will explain that the wording in lines 18 and 19, "or other incorporated municipal body however designated" covers counties, but why not specify them? I know of several cases where counties will be prospective users of this legislation.

(Translation):

Mr. Paul: I should like to say that I agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Alkenbrack).

If we consider the provisions of the municipal code of the province of Quebec, we find in it that the county councils are recognized as municipal bodies made up of different municipal corporations located in specific territories. It often happens that these county councils have to settle problems which arise between municipalities and I feel that the hon. member who spoke before me has rightly called the attention of the house to this particular problem.

I wonder why the Acting Minister of Finance (Mr. Sharp) could not insert in the definition which is found in paragraph 2 of the act, the words: "county council". In my opinion, it would help make this act more effective and it would not affect the objectives that the government has in mind in moving this bill.

(Text):

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. May I remind hon. members that the question before the committee is not the whole of clause 2, but an amendment to clause 2.

Mr. Nugent: On this clause, Mr. Chairman, I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. I do not pretend to be an expert on municipal works, but I did think that, having in mind the quantum or scope of the changes made in this bill and the very cogent remarks of the ex-minister in dealing with the necessity for a board, many of us in this chamber and people across the country would benefit a great deal from having some remarks from the minister in connection with this clause and the advantage or necessity now of having such a board.

I have not heard this afternoon the reasons advanced, in view of the change—I can understand it, perhaps, as originally envisaged—for its being thought necessary to have a board, or why it is thought a board will be helpful in this connection. I am very interested in this question and would very much appreciate it if the minister would explain to the committee why, in view of the changes in the bill, which to my mind take away so much of the necessity for having the board, we still have to set up this body. I hope the minister can help me in this regard.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I deal specifically with the question raised by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and asked again by the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat. I quite agree that if all provinces decide to use the procedures in paragraph 2 of clause 7 of this bill the board will be purely formal. But I do not want to force the provinces to take this course unless they wish to do so. I would like to repeat again that the function of the board is to exercise some judgment. An argument has been put forward here that the functions of this board are exactly the same as the functions that have been performed in connection with winter works programs. I assure the hon. gentleman that this is not so, and a reading of the bill will make this very clear. There is a test here that is not applied in other cases; namely a test of the additionality of employment.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the minister would say one more word in this connection. He has said he does not want to force the provinces to take advantage of this provision if they do not wish to do so. I had the impression that this change was put into the clause at the insistence of the provinces. I wonder if the minister would tell us what is the likelihood that they will not want to use this provision. Has there been an indication from the provinces that they will not be doing this, or are we just speculating here?

Mr. Sharp: It is my understanding, Mr. Chairman, that some of the provinces may prefer the original procedure.

The Deputy Chairman: Is the committee ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Deputy Chairman: Mr. Smith moves:

That paragraph (a) of clause 2 be struck out and that paragraphs (c), (d) and (e) be relettered accordingly.

Amendment (Mr. Smith) negatived: Yeas, 21; nays, 63.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall clause 2 carry?

Clause agreed to.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Remuneration of chairman.

Mr. Chatterton: Mr. Chairman, clause 4 (1) says:

The chairman of the board shall be paid such salary as is fixed by the governor in council.

The minister said earlier that the chairman was to be a member of the service.

Mr. Lamontagne: No.

Mr. Sharp: I said, the other two.

Mr. Chatterton: I beg your pardon.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 5 agreed to.

On clause 6—Agreement with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for services, etc.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Chairman, I hope the Acting Minister of Finance will be able to give us the assurance that most of the people who will administer this act will be employees of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and that this provision in clause 6 will substantially provide the staff for the board.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I can give that assurance. The intention of this provision is to authorize the board to enter into a servicing agreement with Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. It is not intended to go outside, if the services can be provided by that corporation.

Mr. Smith: Does it contemplate that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation will be paid for those services, or will they have to hire additional staff? If so, does the measure provide for their raising the necessary funds to do this?

Mr. Chatterton: I have another question, Mr. Chairman. Is the minister going to answer my hon. friend's question first?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I have been speaking to my colleague the Minister of National Revenue who is responsible for the operation of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. He says they would expect to be paid. He would hope he could do it, and make a little money, with the existing staff; but if he did not have enough people, he would have to hire more.

Mr. Chatterton: I have a question, Mr. Chairman. I presume this board will be reporting to the Minister of Finance; is that correct?

Mr. Sharp: I think this bill says the minister shall be designated by the governor in council.

Mr. Chatterton: That has not been decided?

Mr. Sharp: That has not been decided.

Mr. Chatterton: If the minister who is to administer this board or have jurisdiction over it is not the Minister of National Revenue, what would be the position if, for instance, the manager of the branch office of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in Victoria, British Columbia, had to report on an application from the municipality of Saanich? Would the branch manager send that report to the Minister of National Revenue, or to the minister having jurisdiction in this regard, if they are not the same person?

Mr. Sharp: The application would be made to the local people who would be the employers of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation at their branch offices throughout the country, and the application would be forwarded to the board and dealt with in that way.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 7—Function of board.

Mr. Smith: I should like to say a word on clause 7. The minister said when we were discussing the last clause that he wanted the board to have some discretion. It seems to me that clause 7 is written in a very narrow way. One might even say that clause 7 (1) (a) is written rather clumsily. I should like to suggest that all the words after the word "period" in the fifth line be deleted, because they could be interpreted either as narrowing the scope of the board, which would in the end limit the employment opportunities offered under this measure, or they could be interpreted as being redundant and repetitious, which would only confuse future interpretations of the clause.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, I read the clause in exactly the opposite way. I suggest that the purpose of clause 7 (1)(a), which I think is the paragraph he refers to—

Mr. Smith: Yes.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Sharp: —is to try to establish quite clearly that the projects being financed under the act result in employment over and above what would have taken place had it not been for the act.

Mr. Chatterton: Except there are the two "periods" in the one clause.

Mr. Sharp: The clause says that the board has to be satisfied—

> (a) that the municipal project or part thereof would not, without such assistance, have been included among the capital works projects to be undertaken by the municipality within such period, and that its inclusion therein will not result in any other capital works project of the municipality being replaced or postponed within such period;

In other words, it is to make doubly sure that we are really getting full employment out of the funds placed at the disposal of the municipalities.

Mr. Rock: Mr. Chairman, in clause 7 (3) on page 5, line 26, there appear the words "capital works, as more particularly defined by the regulations". Then you have (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e), which are the type of projects. If these projects are to stimulate and promote employment, I personally feel that the scope of the board is not wide enough. Many municipalities have projects which were commenced years ago, yet they have unemployment in their areas. I feel that the scope should be wider. The last part of the subclause says:

> —such other municipal capital works as are determined by the government of the province.

I should like to know whether this would cover projects which today are lacking in many municipalities, such as parks, beaches, marinas, swimming pools, civic centres or arenas, playgrounds—possibly libraries would be covered under public buildings—bridges, and so on. I should like the assurance that these sorts of projects will be covered under the last part of the clause.

Mr. Sharp: This paragraph is very broad and enables the board to commence a very wide variety of projects under the words referred to by my hon. friend—"such other municipal capital works as are determined by the government of the province". It is quite clear, and I am sure it is the intention of all hon. members, that this bill should be for the purpose of creating additional employment. While I think all hon. gentlemen would like to see more parks, beaches, and facilities of that kind, it would be more difficult for such projects to qualify because the proportion of the expenditure which would create employment would be rather small. If, of course, projects of this kind do result in a great deal of additional employment and they are required to be financed, they could be considered.

Mr. Gregoire: Just a few words on the matter which is very well illustrated in this clause. When I look at the French version of the bill I see subclause 1 (b) and a sentence covering 30 lines without any punctuation at all. It is very difficult to read the French version and to understand what is meant. I am sometimes in close contact with members of the civil service, employees of the unemployment insurance commission and other boards in my constituency, and I can well understand why they have so many difficulties in settling problems raised by people. It is because the law is written in such a way that they themselves have difficulty in understanding it. I should like to suggest that the minister or the Minister of Justice should instruct those who draft the bill to write them much more clearly and not insert sentences of 30 lines without any punctuation mark. I think this is too long for anyone to understand it. That is my point, if the Acting Minister of Finance would transmit it to the people who write the bills.

Mr. Sharp: I will be happy to do so. I can assure the hon. gentleman that I find the English difficult to read and it is very much more difficult for me to read the French language, which does not happen to be my forte at all.

Mr. Francis: Mr. Chairman, I think that this clause is the very heart of the bill before us and I should like to make two general comments, one concerning the municipalities which I suspect will eventually be able to profit from the bill, and the second concerning the problems raised by the reference to municipal transit systems as being the type of project which might be approved. The hon. member for Renfrew South yesterday raised before the house the problems of many of the smaller municipalities, and in many cases, as in part of my own riding, they coincide with depressed areas. The smaller municipalities are limited in their investment, and my hon. colleague cited the case of a township in his riding with a total assessment of $160,000. I have a number in my riding with less than $1 million total assessment. They are limited by the municipal board of the province which puts forward the 20 per cent rule as the absolute limit on borrowings. In many cases these municipalities are already in excess of the limit of the provincial municipal board. The type of municipality which my colleague was concerned with is not likely to receive very much latitude from the provincial municipal board.

The presumption in many cases was that the larger municipalities would be the first to benefit. The city of Ottawa, for example, has a ratio of debt to assessment, with full adjustment for public buildings owned by the government of Canada in arriving at the assessment figure, of 27 per cent. That is already substantially in excess of the amount permitted to be borrowed as a maximum under the rule of thumb by the municipal board. There is a serious question whether this kind of municipality which has already borrowed so heavily could do much to take advantage of the legislation such as is proposed.

I think there is a special difficulty faced by municipalities outside large metropolitan areas. I am thinking of townships such as Nepean, North Gower and March and Goulburn. These townships are rapidly finding that the spill-over of metropolitan growth is creating a rate of expansion in their areas in excess of their financial capacity to bear. The problem is not just one of capital cost, though that in itself is serious enough. Townships such as these do not have diversified assessments and they are severely limited in their applications before the municipal board. The municipal board has introduced a system of quotas with respect to applications from such townships in an attempt to limit expansion, and this reflects the difficulty which they are experiencing.

A board which was aware of this problem could do a great deal by calling the attention of provincial authorities to special areas where problems are arising. One might say that this is not the business of the federal government, but I think a quiet, helpful suggestion could often be made. There is a serious question in my mind whether provincial authorities are giving sufficient attention to the larger metropolitan areas. This reflects a situation which, partly, arises in this house where the large growing areas are not adequately represented but where the smaller and medium sized areas which for a long time have had stability of population are overrepresented. The municipal boards in many provinces are not paying attention to the problems of the smaller municipalities which border on the large metropolitan areas. I am concerned that the clause does not take this problem into account and I hope it would be possible in discussion with the provincial authorities to take note of it. I hope we shall not find ourselves in a situation where the only municipalities which could benefit would be those who least need assistance. The very small ones with heavy unemployment will experience difficulty. The very large ones which have been trying to do a good job in response to the pressure upon them will find themselves seriously limited. So a great deal of discretion and wisdom will be needed in the administration of this scheme.

I am concerned about the reference to the municipal transit systems. Clause 7 (3) (e) reads:

> —municipally owned public transport or transit facilities, exclusive of rolling stock and similar operating equipment.

I was pleased to see this reference to transport systems. It represents recognition of a situation which is likely to cause a great deal of trouble at municipal level. One of the things automobiles did was to condition the public to spending tax dollars for expressways and leading them into a penny wise, pound foolish attitude. Money spent on public transit systems does not have a great deal of political appeal, though money spent on highways seems to have tremendous political appeal. Yet money spent on municipal transit systems may go a long way toward the maintenance of secure financing and the preservation of the heart of the city itself. I took up this morning's Globe and Mail and saw the following in an editorial:

> Metro Chairman William Allen has scheduled an early meeting of heads of departments to consider what projects should be put forward as desirable for financing by the new fund . . . An example is the Bloor-Danforth-University subway—

I do not know whether the subway which is being scheduled meets the requirement as to eligibility. As I read the bill I do not think it does. But I would think that a rapid transport system is clearly the kind of project which should fall squarely within the scope of this legislation. I hope the phrase "exclusive of rolling stock and similar operating equipment" does not mean that a municipally-owned transport system which attempts to acquire a new fleet of buses, for example, is totally inhibited by the operation of this clause. I can understand that a municipality might have to find its own rolling stock if it were engaged, for instance, in the construction of a project such as the Bloor-Danforth-University subway, but I think we have to provide sufficient flexibility to enable other municipalities to do those things which are logical and right in the particular circumstances in which they find themselves. I hope this clause is not intended to meet exclusively the case of one municipality where at the present time, it would, perhaps, be logical to go underground. A transit project, whether it is underground or over the surface, should make sense and should reflect whatever way happens to be most efficient and most economic without either frustrating or bankrupting the resources of the municipality.

[Mr. Francis.]

Mr. Chatterton: I should like to suggest to the government that they completely remove subclauses (1)(a) and (b) from clause 7 so that any municipal project recommended by a provincial government might be eligible for assistance under this act. I make this recommendation on two grounds. In the first place, the municipalities expect it, because of the promises made by the Liberal party during the last election campaign that a program of over-all assistance to municipalities would be introduced by this government. I realize that the Minister of Finance said last night, as reported on page 2931 of Hansard, that it was not the purpose of this bill primarily, or even indirectly, to ease the financial plight of the municipalities. On the other hand, I should like to quote from a full page advertisement which appeared in the Victoria daily Colonist on March 31, 1963. The heading is: "Make Loans and Grants for Municipal Services", and it states:

> We need better streets and roads to reduce traffic congestion, better public transit, less pollution, more schools and parks. A municipal development and loan fund will be established to provide capital for sound municipal improvements which provincial governments approve but for which financing is at present inadequate.

It is only at this point we come to the sentence:

> The fund will play a big part in creating new jobs.

In other words, the promise made by the Liberals was that the creation of jobs would be incidental to the main program, which would be to assist municipalities.

The minister also said last night that if the $400 million were used before the expiry date of this measure in 1966, parliament would be asked to vote more money. I suggest the municipalities expect this government to do more than simply provide help in the creation of employment. They expect some assistance in their financial difficulties, and by deleting these two requirements he could go a long way in providing such assistance.

The second ground on which I suggest that these requirements be deleted is because of the practical difficulties which are likely to arise in the course of administration. The bill refers to anything that municipalities would not have been able to proceed with, without such assistance. The question arises, how can a provincial government certify that a municipality would not have proceeded without this assistance or would have proceeded without it? It becomes almost impossible. Even in the winter works incentive program it was very difficult to submit such a certificate, but under that program the projects were small.

I will give an example concerning a large municipality in my constituency. They have a five year capital works program. They are planning a new municipal hall. For several years now they have set aside a certain sum of money out of current revenue to provide a reserve fund to build a municipal hall some time in the future. If this clause is interpreted literally they would not be eligible because they were going to build it in any event.

Last night the Minister of Finance said that if they accelerated it they might be eligible. Would they be if they accelerated it by one day? Would they still be eligible? It will be extremely difficult to administer this provision. Furthermore, those municipalities that have capital project plans for the future are penalized because municipal officers are often asked to submit certificates by the provincial governments and they really have to perjure themselves if the project is to become eligible. From a practical administrative point of view I think this provision should be eliminated and that the scope of the whole program should be widened as promised by the Liberals in the last election.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, in connection with clause 7 (1) (a) I should like to say something much in line with the remarks of the previous speaker. Beginning in line 28 the clause reads:

> —and that its inclusion therein will not result in any other capital works project of the municipality being replaced or postponed within such period.

This is going to be a little difficult to determine. Perhaps I am merely labouring the administrative difficulties, but where there is a financial incentive to a municipality to undertake a certain project, no matter what their inclination might have been originally, and where the total amount of the capital available or the total amount of the indebtedness they are willing to incur is limited, I am wondering if there is any possibility that this clause will ever see any use whatsoever. If there is a change of mind by the municipality I cannot imagine they are ever going to say that they had not intended to carry out a particular project because it might cost them money. Perhaps this has to do with the perjury angle mentioned by the previous speaker.

I cannot see the practical application. I do not think this clause will ever be used to select what shall or shall not come within the legislation. I can only see its provisions being avoided. In fact, I think that the practical application of the legislation is going to be limited in any event by the amount of money that is available. What is going to happen is that only this type of project will be proceeded with in these municipalities, and no others will be proceeded with. They will simply say that this was all they intended. It would seem to me to be more sensible to allow both the municipality and the province additional leeway which might result in more honesty, as my friend has just suggested. Give them a choice of any project for which they are willing to incur indebtedness.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Chairman, this afternoon the first part of my remarks will be in the form of a question to get an assurance from the acting minister that certain things will happen. Second, I wish to make a comment which I think should be made on this particular clause of the bill. Am I right in assuming from reading clauses 7 (1) (a) and 7 (1) (b) that if an urban municipality has a capital works program extending over the next 10 years and they go to the province and demonstrate that they are going to speed up the program beyond their ordinary rate of progress, then the amount of the speeding up to provide extra employment will be covered by this legislation?

I have in mind here a program, let us say, for the streets of Ottawa. I think every Canadian would be very glad in the national interest and from the point of view of national pride if a good foundation could be laid under these streets so that there would not be potholes big enough for badgers to find refuge in in the spring.

My second point is a fundamental one. It has often been said that in this house many members speak and vote only on behalf of the particular group they happen to represent. This comment is made quite often about those who represent farmers. It is said that we ask the people of Canada to support the government of the day in carrying out a program that will help an individual group like the farmers to achieve some stability, and a higher level of income. I should like to make it very clear how I stand with regard to this bill. I support assistance by the government to the large city municipalities and the smaller ones too, because I believe by making transportation systems more efficient in our cities, by stepping up the development of social capital in our cities and towns, we are helping all Canadians and not just the people of the cities. I wish to make it abundantly clear that I support the social purposes of the legislation, and I hope that the time will come when I will hear those from urban ridings support constructive measures in aid of agriculture if they are in the interest of all of Canada.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, may I answer the question put to me by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. The short answer is that if a municipality accelerates its program and can demonstrate this to the board, it is eligible for assistance under this legislation.

Mr. Hamilton: For the amount that it accelerates?

Mr. Sharp: That is right, for those projects that it brings forward into this period which would not otherwise be undertaken at this time or for that amount of expenditure which they bring forward. May I raise a question of procedure, Mr. Chairman, in order to avoid any misunderstanding. I should like to be sure that all hon. members understood what happened when they approved clause 2 of the bill. As all hon. members know, Bill No. C-76 that we are discussing today is headed, "Reprinted as Proposed to be Amended in Committee of the Whole". I understood that when we approved clause 2 of the bill we approved it as it appears in the reprint, that is, with the amendments proposed by the Minister of Finance last night, and that when we approve clause 7, for example, we will approve it as amended in the reprint.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. There has been some confusion in the mind of the chairman for some time as to what procedure we are adopting here. If it is understood by the committee that in carrying clause 2 we carried the clause in the amended bill, fine, but it must be absolutely understood that we have carried clause 2 as amended. I should like some instruction from the minister on this particular point.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, it is a technicality, but to keep the record straight we are agreeable to whatever motion the chairman may wish to put. The understanding is, of course, that the bill was reprinted with these amendments to make it convenient for the house to study them rather than moving them separately and having to deal with them individually as they were read out. However the chairman likes to get over the technicality will be agreeable to us under the circumstances.

The Deputy Chairman: If it can be understood that we have passed clause 2 as amended in the reprint, and if when we carry clause 7 it can be understood that we are carrying it as amended in the reprinted bill that will meet the difficulty. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Deputy Chairman: We are now on clause 7 as amended.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

Mr. Chatterton: I should like the minister to clarify the last answer he gave. I understood him to say that if the project were accelerated by a municipality, that project would be eligible. Would the whole project be eligible? Let us put it this way. Suppose one municipality plans to build a municipal hall in January, 1964, and in order to become eligible under this plan they decide to build it in December, 1963. Suppose the project had an estimated cost of $100,000?

Mr. Sharp: If hon. members will keep in mind that the purpose of this bill is to provide additional employment within the period of this measure, then I think the answer is fairly obvious. I point out to my hon. friends the words appearing in paragraph 1 of clause 7, which refer to the financing of a municipal project or part thereof. The purpose of that is to enable the board to finance that part of the project that is brought forward from the later period into the period covered by this bill. The financing may be in respect of the whole project; it may be in respect of that part of the project that is completed within the time limit or, if it is brought forward in such a way that a portion of the expenditure would not otherwise be made in the period, and is made as a result of this financing, then it is covered.

Mr. Chatterton: I am sorry, but I am still not clear. Let us take this example of the municipality that wants to build a municipal hall. Let us say the estimated cost is $100,000. Let us say they accelerate that for six months. Would the municipality be eligible to get a two thirds loan and a 75 per cent write-off for the whole $100,000, provided the project is completed within this period?

Mr. Sharp: The test is whether the expenditures are increased within the period. If they are the same as they would otherwise be within the period of the bill, then they have not added to employment within the period covered by the bill itself.

Mr. Chatterton: In other words, the answer to my question is no.

Mr. Sharp: If the project were going to be undertaken in any event, then the answer is no. If, however, the project was to be undertaken five years hence and it is brought forward into this year or next year, then it could be financed.

Mr. Chatterton: Then, the statement made by the Minister of Finance last night was indeed misleading because he did say that if any project were accelerated it would become eligible.

Mr. Lamontagne: The part that is being accelerated.

Mr. Sharp: I think it is quite clear from the text of my colleague's remarks, and he repeated this on many occasions, the purpose of the bill is to increase employment within this period. It is only those expenditures which are additional to those which would otherwise have been made within the period that are eligible. When my colleague referred to acceleration, he meant acceleration by bringing forward projects within the period covered by the bill.

Mr. Chatterton: The explanation just made by the Acting Minister of Finance makes it, in my opinion, even more necessary that clause 7(1)(a) be deleted. The answer given makes it clear that those municipalities that have capital budgets will be penalized. If the municipality planned projects before this bill was introduced, these projects would not be eligible because they had planned them in advance. Other municipalities that do not have a capital program would not be penalized in this way.

Furthermore, because the municipalities' buildings are now subject to sales tax which was not anticipated, there is more reason than ever that this clause should be amended.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 8 agreed to.

On clause 9—Limit on single loans.

Mr. Smith: The financing of most capital projects, speaking of the municipalities in Ontario at least, is done by issuing debentures for 100 per cent of the cost of the project. This clause contemplates that the loan fund or loan board will purchase two thirds of the debentures issued relating to the cost of an approved project. What does that mean? Does it mean that a municipality will have to issue two sets of debentures in relation to one project? If they sell debentures in the open market, they may require for one third of the debt an interest rate higher than they would for those being sold to the government?

Mr. Sharp: Yes, my hon. friend is right. If a municipality is not able to finance the one third out of current revenues—

Mr. Smith: Very seldom are they able to finance even one third.

Mr. Sharp: —then it would be necessary for this municipality to issue a different form of security.

The Chairman: Shall clause 9 carry?

Mr. Barnett: I rose on clause 8.

The Chairman: I would need the consent of the committee to return to clause 8.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Municipal Development and Loan Board

On clause 8—Provincial approval.

Mr. Barnett: I wonder whether consideration might be given to some different form of regulation than that which I understand applies under the sewage loans legislation. As I read this provision, it is rather similar to the provision in respect of securing provincial approval for borrowing authority as applied under the sewage loan legislation. I do know that rather practical difficulties have existed during the period while I was a member of one of the smaller municipal councils in British Columbia in respect of the ability of the municipality to present the necessary bylaw to its ratepayers.

Under the sewage loan legislation, and I think it would be similar under this measure, it was impossible for a council desiring to present a bylaw for approval of the ratepayers to get any assurance prior to the submission of the bylaw that the project would qualify under the legislation. While it was possible, I know, to get some sort of unofficial indication that approval might be granted if the bylaw passed, nevertheless I think the minister will realize that the principal question in determining whether or not a municipal project which would create employment will go forward is the ability of the council to indicate to the ratepayers that the project can be financed on favourable terms.

I wonder if the minister could give to the committee some indication of how this clause will operate in that connection? It seems to me that the operation of this clause, particularly in conjunction with the provisions of clause 7, will make it difficult to have some projects go forward. I do not believe there are too many municipalities in this country, unless they have satisfied some sort of capital development fund and built it up over a period of years, who could go into the kind of project that would be allowed under this measure, except by some form of borrowing of the total amount. In effect this means that the municipalities have the complication of selling at least part of their debentures on the regular money market. I feel that if there were some way in which it would be possible for the municipalities to get official assurance that in fact a particular project would be approved, it would make it simpler for many municipalities to qualify under this provision. In my own thinking it would have been a lot simpler if it had not been necessary for the municipalities to be involved in two methods of raising the money.

Mr. Sharp: I have been looking at these clauses while the hon. gentleman has been speaking, and I do not think there is anything in clause 8 that would in fact interfere with the working out of processes that would avoid the sort of difficulties he has put forward. Therefore may I suggest to him that his remarks in this connection are now on the record and perhaps will have some influence on the administration, but I do not see anything in the bill itself which would add to these difficulties.

Mr. Barnett: I thank the minister. Actually members of councils have, in the past, been in the position of in effect sticking their necks out and having to assure, without official knowledge, the eligibility of a project, and it would create uncomfortable situations if for some reason later on that turned out not to be the case.

Mr. Smith: On clause 9 might I ask one further question?

The Chairman: I understand we reverted to clause 8 at the request of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, and I am wondering if we could not pass clause 8 as amended?

Mr. Alkenbrack: I have one question with regard to this clause. I probably should have asked it on clause 7, but I was unavoidably called out of the chamber for a few minutes and you quickly passed to clause 8 during that time. I know it is part of the policy of this bill that federal approval is contingent upon provincial approval, but I would like the minister's assurance that hospitals and schools will be included in this.

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I can give that assurance.

Clause 8 agreed to.

On clause 9—Limit on single loans.

Mr. Smith: The rate of interest that a municipality pays on its debentures has, as one of its governing factors, the amount of outstanding debentures that are already existing charged to it. We can envisage cases in this connection where they will be issuing debentures for this board, at the same time as debentures to be sold on the open market. Is there any system of priorities as between open market debentures, being the first debentures issued, so that the board's debentures would be second mortgages in that sense?

Mr. Sharp: I have to confess to my hon. friend that I do not know the answer to that. This is a very technical question and it would be very difficult to predict just what processes will be followed in all cases. Perhaps there will be different practices amongst municipalities and provinces.

Mr. Smith: I suggest that a loan cannot be approved under this bill until the board is assured that the municipality has the first third of the money. When they are considering the administration of the bill, that might give the opportunity to have the commercially sold debentures held to be the prior debentures to the board debentures.

Mr. Sharp: It is very difficult to answer this question because financing may occur at many stages, at the end of the work or the beginning, and the relative priorities will probably have to be settled at the time.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 10 agreed to.

On clause 11—Reduction of indebtedness for completion.

Mr. Smith: Could the minister tell us how the forgiveness is to operate? Is it to be forgiveness at the beginning or a forgiveness entirely at the end, or is it so much a percentage forgiveness for each debenture payment as you go along?

Mr. Sharp: The short answer to that is that the forgiveness is at the end, before the debentures are issued.

Mr. Smith: The last debentures; so that in the meantime the municipalities have to levy a higher amount. It would seem that if the forgiveness could be a percentage across all debentures it would have a stabilizing effect on the municipal tax levy.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 12—Prescribing interest.

(Translation):

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, with respect to clause 12, my attention was drawn yesterday to the fact that, in line 48 of the French version, there was a mistake inasmuch as the translation of:

"one quarter of one per cent"

reads:

«un quart pour cent.»

That could be taken for 25 per cent, one never knows. Therefore, I suppose the house would agree to the wording being changed without a formal amendment, to read:

«un quart de un pour cent.»

The Chairman: I understand that this is probably due to a misprint and I assume that the bill, in its next printing, will be corrected accordingly.

(Text):

Clause agreed to.

On clause 13—Limitation as to time and total amount.

Mr. Smith: When the minister was speaking last night he suggested that if the loan fund worked well he would be coming back to parliament for more money. Suppose we have the situation where one province is in a position to take advantage of this fund more quickly than others, what will happen? For instance, there is some indication with regard to the technical school building program that the province of Ontario, in a per capita sense, has got rather ahead of the other provinces. That might happen again. One province might have a shelf of needed public works to go ahead with, and might run out of its per capita share. What would the government do in that situation.

Mr. Sharp: I am always pleased to see my hon. friends opposite waver from side to side on this question.

Mr. Smith: I have never wavered. Half a loaf is better than none.

Mr. Sharp: At one time they are afraid there is not enough money, and another time they are afraid that there are not going to be any applications. However, I do not want to open a debate on that. I think the answer to the question asked by my hon. friend is, that under the circumstances he has envisaged the government would not hesitate to come back to parliament to be sure the purposes of the act are fulfilled.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 14—Advances to be out of C.R.F.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a couple of questions on this clause. First I would like to know how much money there is in the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, because my hon. friend gave notice that he would probably ask questions of this kind my officials have filled me full of information. There were $570 million in the consolidated revenue fund as of yesterday.

Mr. Gregoire: While we are on this problem, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a couple of other questions. Can we know where this money is coming from?

Mr. Sharp: It is coming from taxpayers and from those who lend money to the government.

Mr. Gregoire: With regard to this clause, Mr. Chairman, we would like to move an amendment.

(Translation):

I move, seconded by Mr. Gauthier, that clause 14, lines 41 to 44 inclusive on page 5, Municipal Development and Loan Board be amended as follows:

After the word "advances" strike out the words "out of the consolidated revenue fund" and substitute the words "from the Bank of Canada".

(Text):

Amendment (Mr. Gregoire) negatived: Yeas, 6; Nays, 58.

The Chairman: I declare the amendment lost. Shall the clause carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, before pursuing the study of this bill, I would like to draw your attention to the fact that our hon. friends opposite take on today a position that is entirely contrary to the one they adopted last year, when they voted in favour of an amendment which was more or less on the same lines—

The Chairman: Order. I am sure that the hon. member is well aware that he cannot refer to the way some members have voted in the house or in committee.

(Text):

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I would like the minister to tell us whether it is impossible to use the credit of the Bank of Canada for the purpose of this fund. Is it impossible to use the credit of the Bank of Canada under these conditions?

The Chairman: Order. I do not want to interfere uselessly, but it seems to me the very point now raised by the hon. member for Cariboo has been disposed of when the amendment was voted down.

Mr. Leboe: I did not hear what you said, Mr. Chairman; I did not have my earpiece on.

The Chairman: Perhaps I can speak just a little louder. I was saying that the point now raised by the hon. member is precisely the same as that which was disposed of when the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Lapointe was defeated.

Mr. Leboe: With all due respect, Mr. Chairman, I do not think the questions are related in that way at all. I am now asking whether this is possible. The vote showed they did not agree with it, but I am now asking whether it is possible.

Mr. Sharp: I should point out to my hon. friend from British Columbia that regardless of where we borrow the money, it goes into the consolidated revenue fund. So this may make some difference to the finances of the country. But the particular point the hon. member has raised is not very relevant to this bill, because if the government of Canada were to borrow from the Bank of Canada, it would go into the consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Leboe: I think it is relevant for the reason that we are planning a deficit budget here in parliament and the increase in the money supply is going to be the same in either case. All I want the minister to do—and he can say yes or no—is say whether it is possible. All he has to do is answer my question yes or no. Surely it must be one or the other.

The Chairman: Order. I must say that I agree with the proposition put forward by the minister, that this point is really not relevant to the clause now before the committee. It appears to the Chair that the hon. member is perhaps proposing to amend the Bank Act, and that is not before us at the moment.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with a bill which will authorize the spending of $400 million; that is the matter we are now studying. If the money is coming from the consolidated revenue fund, from where will it be taken to go into that fund? The amendment has been defeated, but the point is that this money will come from that fund. Where will the money be coming from to go into the fund? I think the question of the hon. member for Cariboo was completely in order for the reason that it is in order to ask the Acting Minister of Finance whether it is possible to have the Bank of Canada finance the consolidated revenue fund in regard to this $400 million. Is it possible, or not?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, it is possible. In my opinion, inadvisable.

Mr. Gregoire: Then, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister this question. If it is inadvisable, why did the Liberal government in 1939 borrow money directly from the Bank of Canada? I think that was done in October, 1939.

Mr. Sharp: This, as you have said, Mr. Chairman, is a very complicated question dealing with the money supply. I would be quite happy to debate this question with my hon. friend, but I really think that at twenty minutes to six on what I hope will be the last day of this part of the session it would be inadvisable for me to enter into such a debate, just as it would be inadvisable for the government of Canada to borrow large sums of money from the Bank of Canada.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 15—Agent of Her Majesty.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister whether clause 15 involves any of the rights of the crown, its patronage, its property or its prerogatives.

[Mr. Sharp.]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I think the short answer to this question is that the effect of clause 15 is to make the board a corporation of the crown; to make it henceforth a representative of the crown and to give it the status of a body acting not on its own behalf but really on behalf of the crown. So that anything that is made by the board is deemed to have been made by the crown.

Mr. Nasserden: Am I correct in saying that this means that this involves the rights of the crown, its patronage, its property and its prerogatives?

Mr. Favreau: Surely it does not abrogate or diminish in any way the rights or prerogatives of the crown, because the board will be created when the law is enacted by an act of parliament and will be regulated by regulations enacted by the crown in right of Canada. So that the board will have no jurisdiction to do anything which will in fact affect the rights of the crown, because if it did it will be acting beyond its jurisdiction.

Mr. Nasserden: I am not clear on that point. Does this involve any of the rights of the crown, is what I am getting at.

Mr. Favreau: I am sorry if my answer is not clear. It is because the hon. gentleman's question is not clear to me. If he would care to give an illustration of what he fears, or of what right of the crown might be involved or affected, I might be in a position to answer him.

Mr. Nasserden: The clause reads:

> The board is for all purposes of this act an agent of Her Majesty, and its powers under this act shall be exercised only as an agent of Her Majesty.
>
> (2) For the purposes of this act, the board may, on behalf of Her Majesty, enter into agreements in the name of the board.

I am asking whether this involves the rights of the crown, and whether the minister could answer that question.

Mr. Favreau: All acts of any agent or officer of the crown do involve the rights of the crown, but the question is whether that board, agent or officer acts in accordance with the authority given by the crown and the instructions of the crown. As the bill is drafted, surely even when the board purports to act in its own name the effect of the bill is that any legal undertaking given by the board will be deemed to have been given by the crown itself.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 16 to 22 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a third time?

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. My point of order is that this bill involves one of the prerogatives of the crown and therefore requires the consent of the crown before it can be given a third reading in the House of Commons. May I refer you to citation 283 of Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, page 231 of the fourth edition:

> The royal consent cannot be communicated in committee, is generally given at the third reading, and its omission, when it is required, renders the proceedings on the passage of a bill null and void—
>
> The procedure with respect of signifying the "consent" is different from that in giving the recommendation of the crown. The recommendation precedes every grant of money the consent may be given at any stage before final passage, and is always necessary in matters involving the rights of the crown, its patronage, its property or its prerogatives.

I should also like to quote from Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, fourth edition, page 413, where we find the following:

> A misapprehension has sometimes arisen as to the time when the "consent" of the crown should be given to a bill. The procedure with respect to signifying the consent is different from that in giving the recommendation of the crown. The recommendation precedes every grant of money; the consent may be given at any stage before final passage, and is always necessary in matters involving the rights of the crown, its patronage, its property, or its prerogatives.

Then on page 414 we find the following:

> If the royal assent is not given at the last stage, the speaker will refuse to put the question. If a bill, requiring the royal assent, should be permitted to pass all its stages through some inadvertence, attention will be called immediately to the "fact in the house, and the proceedings declared null and void".

I should like to draw your attention to what is said in this regard in May's sixteenth edition, page 825, as follows:

> The fact that a bill affecting the interests of the crown has been mentioned in the speech from the throne does not exempt it from the need for the royal consent.
>
> Where a bill affecting the interests of the crown has been suffered, through inadvertence to be read the third time and passed without the royal consent being signified, the proceedings have been declared null and void.

The English translation of Faucher De Saint Maurice's parliamentary procedure, dealing with the matter on page 657, reads as follows:

> I am of the opinion that the consent may be given at any time before the final question, "That the bill do pass", and that in the absence of such consent, this final question is the only one which the speaker is prohibited by the law of parliament, and by constitutional usages, from putting to the house.

All of these authorities are agreed on the necessity of the crown's consent. They are also emphatic that without that consent a bill is declared null and void. This is a very commendable piece of legislation and my purpose in bringing this matter—

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I ask the hon. gentleman a question. Has he by any chance a copy of the statement he is making? It is a little difficult to follow for anyone who would like to comment upon it.

Mr. Nasserden: I will let the hon. gentleman have it when I have completed my remarks, if he would like it.

Mr. Knowles: So would I.

Mr. Nasserden: I have only one copy here; I wish I had more.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is a very commendable piece of legislation which is before us. My purpose in bringing this matter up at this time is not to try to destroy the bill. I am not trying to delay the proceedings.

Some hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. Nasserden: Well, hon. gentlemen opposite can raise cain all they want here today, but I spent the better part of a couple of weeks going through the rule books on this question and I should like an answer today for my own satisfaction, and I believe for the satisfaction of others as well.

In the British House of Commons the procedure followed has been in conformity with the views expressed by the authorities I have mentioned. There are a great many citations to which reference might be made and which might be brought to the attention of the house in support of these views. The practice in Great Britain, as evidenced by the journals of their house of commons, might be interesting to the members of this house. I refer to volume 107, page 157, where we find this:

> The house was moved, that the entry in the votes of yesterday of the proceedings of the house on the third reading of the Rhyl Improvement Bill might be read, and the same being read;
>
> And notice being taken that Her Majesty's interest is concerned therein, and that Her consent had not been signified thereto;
>
> Ordered that the proceedings on the third reading of the said bill be null and void.

The situation was the same with regard to another bill which had been dealt with by the British House of Commons.

This matter became the subject of an interesting debate in the Canadian House of Commons on May 29, 1951, at which time the distinguished leader of my party, the then member for Lake Centre, questioned the procedure which was being followed. The minister of justice of that day was piloting a bill through the house regarding the Petition of Right Act and by his statement as reported in Hansard, 1951, at page 3505, he confirmed the practice which appears to have been overlooked in this instance before us today. His words, as reported on page 3505, are as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, the governor general, having been informed of the purport of Bill 192, an act to amend the Petition of Right Act, gives his consent as far as his Majesty's interests are concerned that the house may do therein as they think fit.

Third reading was then moved, and the bill passed.

Mr. Garson reinforced that practice on January 23, 1953, when he is reported in Hansard—

Mr. Favreau: I do not like to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but would he care to answer a question for the enlightenment of hon. members?

On what ground does the hon. gentleman claim that the rights and privileges of Her Majesty are being affected by the present bill? I think an answer to this will help us pursue a debate, if there is to be a debate on this.

Mr. Nasserden: I was just coming to that, Mr. Speaker. The quotation to which I wish to refer is to be found on page 1272 of the debates for 1953. Mr. Garson, moving a bill had this to say:

> Mr. Speaker, before you put this motion may I say that His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the consideration of the house; and having also been acquainted with the purport of the measure to be introduced has given consent, so far as Her Majesty's prerogatives are affected, to the consideration of the bill.

In 1959, as reported at page 5660 of Hansard, volme V, covering the debates of July 14, the Hon. Ellen Fairclough, dealing with legislation to confirm an agreement between Canada and New Brunswick respecting reserves, said:

> Mr. Speaker, His Excellency the Governor General having been made acquainted with the purpose of this bill, has given consent so far as Her Majesty's property rights are concerned, that the house may do therein as it shall think fit.

There is a further example on similar lines which could be quoted.

The purpose I have in mind in bringing this up is to remind the house that government in Canada is carried out by the crown, by the Senate and by the House of Commons. By the omission of this little phrase I think we have left something out, not only in this bill but in the bill I tried to deal with this morning as well as in one of the bills which has already passed this house. I had not completed my study of this matter at that time. It is in the hope that the question is one of interest to other members of the House of Commons that I have brought it forward.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do not want to suggest that a debate be instituted at this time. The Chair is not sure it has the experience to decide on such an interesting, and perhaps novel point as the one raised by the hon. member for Rosthern. I may say, however, by way of preamble, that it is difficult for the Chair to rule that a bill which the government and members of parliament generally feel does not require royal consent does, indeed, come within that category. It is difficult for the Chair to substitute its own opinion and say that it does. This having been said, I should like to turn to the citation which has been quoted by the hon. member, that is, citation 283. It is obvious that his whole argument, as has been suggested by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, Mr. Favreau, is based on the premise that certain rights and privileges of the crown are affected. It says:

> The consent of the King or Queen, as the case may be (to be distinguished from the royal assent of bills) is given by a privy councillor to bills (and occasionally amendments) affecting local and personal interests which concern the royal prerogative, the hereditary revenue or personal property or interests of the Crown or Duchy of Cornwall.

It has not been shown clearly to the Chair that any of these things is affected by this particular bill and I therefore feel that the point of order raised by the hon. member cannot be sustained.

Mr. Churchill: I suggest that the point of order raised by the hon. member carries a great deal of weight, as well as being a most interesting one. As the hon. member gave the references, I referred to Beauchesne, Bourinot and May and continued to read in the paragraphs to which he made reference. It appears to me there is more to this than might appear to anyone who was just listening for the first time to the contention being put forward. I think we may assume that the hon. member has a valid point here and I would suggest that in the circumstances a ruling from the Chair be deferred until later this evening or until after Mr. Speaker can have a look at it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member will recognize that a ruling, right or wrong, has already been made. I purposely hesitated before making it, realizing that hon. members might wish to speak on the point of order, although I was not altogether satisfied that such a discussion was desirable at that point. I trust that the hon. member will agree that the Chair, having made a ruling, it is a little late to revive the point of order raised by the hon. member for Rosthern. I would suggest we proceed to the third reading of the bill.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not in any way criticizing the ruling you have made. Far from it. None the less, I feel that on the basis of the authorities to which reference has been made this is a matter where a decision by yourself could not be regarded as a precedent. I had no idea this matter was to be raised by my hon. friend until this afternoon. I mentioned this last evening in my opening remarks. I did so because of the vast changes in this act—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If I may conclude, during the discussion last night I asked whether or not—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to appeal against your ruling. I want to point out this—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: With the greatest deference to the Leader of the Opposition, may I say that the Chair is in a position where it is difficult to admit that there could be a debate on the ruling which has been made. I appreciate that it will not help very much if there is an appeal from the ruling, as far as time is concerned. On the other hand, the right hon. gentleman will be the first one to realize that we have to go on the basis that the ruling, as I said, right or wrong, has been rendered, and I would not think much could be achieved by reopening this ruling. I am sure that the important and interesting point which has been raised, and which was also raised on another bill this morning, can be raised on bills that will come before the house on future occasions, and perhaps in the meantime the legal officers of the crown will have an opportunity to study the interesting point raised by the hon. member for Rosthern. But in view of the normal procedure of the house I would feel that a ruling having been rendered, I should ask the co-operation of the hon. gentleman to consider the matter closed. I would therefore ask if it is the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion, the motion being for third reading.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I just rise because I was called during the discussion of the bill in the committee stage.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion? Carried. When shall the said bill—

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I just want to speak for a moment or two on the principle of the bill. I simply want to say that I am pleased that the government listened to the representations of members and amended the bill so as to include incorporated local authorities in the principle of the bill with respect to municipalities. This will be received with great pleasure by a lot of small communities which can benefit from this legislation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sharp (for Mr. Gordon) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, may I have consent to revert to motions to make a statement that I promised earlier in the day?

Mr. Churchill: How long is the statement going to be? The supper hour is reduced now to 55 minutes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, we have been submitting continually today to making compromises. I tried to raise a matter a moment ago and I have no further argument about that. However, the rules are the rules and it is now after six o'clock. There is no reason why we should agree to compromise when the same attitude is not being shown to us.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, this is a very important statement but if the house does not wish to receive it at this time it may later.

Mr. Diefenbaker: At seven o'clock.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 7 p.m.

TRADE

WHEAT—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SALES TO RED CHINA

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to advise the house that the Canadian wheat board has made an announcement today regarding a new long term wheat agreement with the China National Cereals, Oils and Foodstuffs Import and Export Corporation. This agreement is similar in form, although not in every respect of course, to the agreement signed on April 22, 1961, between the wheat board and the Chinese corporation. Under the agreement, the Chinese corporation has declared its intention to purchase from Canada three to five million long tons, that is approximately 112 to 186.7 million bushels of wheat over a three year period, August 1, 1963 to July, 1966. The Canadian wheat board has undertaken to make such supplies available to the Chinese trading corporation concerned with specific quantities, prices and shipping periods to be negotiated periodically.

The terms of payment for sales under the long term agreement are 25 per cent cash when each vessel is loaded and the balance of 75 per cent in 18 months with interest. The deferred payment provision is made possible by a guarantee to the Canadian wheat board by the government of Canada, similar to the guarantee that was given on the occasion of the previous agreement. The first sales contract under the long term agreement has been negotiated and provides for the export to China of 500,000 long tons of wheat from Pacific coast ports during the period August 1, 1963 to January 31, 1964. I am sure all hon. members will agree that this is a worth while and important step in what I hope will be a substantial and continuing market for Canadian wheat in mainland China.

We have now in prospect sales of at least three million long tons of wheat to the China National Cereals, Oils and Foodstuffs Import and Export Corporation over the next three years subject only to price negotiations respecting individual contract under the long term agreement. In order to promote mutually advantageous trade the Chineses State Trading Corporation will, of course, seek to maintain and develop their market in Canada for various items. It is in our mutual interest to provide them with an opportunity to do so, subject to appropriate safeguards to avoid market disruption and damage to Canadian producers. In this connection, the Chinese State Trading Corporation have undertaken to limit their exports of sensitive items, including textiles, to Canada.

The signing of the first contract under the agreement in an amount of 500,000 tons for delivery in the last half of the year is a clear indication of the intention of the China national cereals corporation to make this a workable agreement to the mutual benefit of both parties. The successful conclusion of the agreement and the initial contract is a step towards meeting the desire of our major farm organizations to concentrate efforts on moving as much grain as possible into export markets as a means of dealing with the problem of supply and demand. Let me assure those organizations and members of the house that the efforts of the Canadian wheat board and the government to expand wheat sales generally will not cease with the conclusion of this agreement with the China national cereals corporation.

Before sitting down, Mr. Speaker, may I also offer my hearty congratulations to the chief commissioner of the Canadian wheat board who on this occasion, as on previous occasions, has done such a good piece of negotiating.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I had expected to hear this announcement at six o'clock but due to circumstances it was not made then, and I had an opportunity to have a preview of it before the minister spoke. I am, therefore, reasonably better prepared than I would have been had the announcement been made at six o'clock.

My first observation is this: Surely, no announcement could be made in this house that more clearly vindicates the position of the previous government and of myself personally with regard to sales to communist China. I think now the minister must be aware, even if some of his colleagues are not, of the reasons I went to Kowloon at the end of April, 1961. He is now reaping the rewards of the foundation that was laid during my visit to that city in April, 1961. If hon. gentlemen opposite had wanted to be fair and reasonable, they would have noticed when I came back from Kowloon that I said very clearly I went over there for three reasons: First, to establish how they were going to pay for the wheat; second, to lay the foundations for an extension of the long-term agreement beyond 1963—it is all on the public record—and third, to see what I could do to find ways and means to establish trading relations that would be harmonious and helpful to us both.

This agreement is very sweet reading to me tonight. I am going to promise the minister that under no circumstances from me—and I hope not from any other member of the Conservative party—will he ever have to face up to what I had to face up to in the period that I was minister of agriculture in charge of the Canadian wheat board.

I give it to you in the words of your own Prime Minister, who in this house said this deal was a windfall in 1961 and would never happen again. He said it was a case of cash to our friends, and credit to those we did not recognize diplomatically. Another man who is now out of the house, the former member for Assiniboia, who became the policy maker for the Liberal party on agriculture stood up and said the whole deal was a hoax, a fraud and a myth. He is the only one who has become a myth. Even one of the present Liberal members of the house, who is not in his place now, stood up and inferred that this deal with China was treason to our country. This is the kind of thing I had to take.

Then we had a free lance newspaperman by the name of Jack MacBeth who wrote a series of scurrilous articles that would do credit to a John Bircher. He collected all the scuttlebutt he could find in the fan-tan clubs of Hong Kong and published it as truth. Where is he today? He is an executive assistant to a minister of the crown. I have sat idly—

Mr. Pickersgill: Idly is right.

Mr. Hamilton: —for two and a half years and taken this. I would also like to point out that on two occasions when I was minister, motions were moved by hon. members who are now ministers, asking that the agreement be produced. I am glad the minister has not produced that agreement, because if he did so he would be acting contrary to the principles of the wheat board and the interests of the farmers. I am glad members of the government are learning responsibility, now that they are sitting on that side of the house.

Just in case the minister feels I am letting him off too lightly, I would point out that for the past few weeks he has been going out west and telling the farmers that the Canadian wheat board is their organization for the selling of wheat. He nods his head in the affirmative. This is all very fine, but he should remember that most of the wheat is sold by private enterprise firms acting as agents for the wheat board, and that if he himself does not play an active part we will be in as serious trouble as we were in when he was deputy minister, when we took office in 1957.

I now want to say a word or two about the quantities. In the announcement it is stated that the minimum is 3 million long tons and the maximum 5 million long tons, or 187 million bushels. What does this mean in relation to the previous agreement? If you want to measure the relative sales, the Chinese in their commitments to Canada to take a certain amount of Canadian grain over the three year period 1961, 1962 and 1963—which is not over yet—indicated they were willing to buy up to 276 million bushels of grain during that period.

Now the present indication is that, taking a three-year period by going back to August 1, and extending it on for three years, they have come out with a maximum of 187 million bushels, worked out in round figures the farmers will understand. The farmers expected to sell roughly 90 million bushels of grain a year to China under our government. Under this agreement they will sell 60 million bushels.

I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce should be congratulated on selling so much grain to them in view of the type of things said about the Chinese during the last two and a half years. On behalf of westerners I can say that we are grateful that the Chinese bought any at all, under present circumstances.

I could deal at some length with this business of overlapping the contracts, but instead I shall just take a few of the salient points in the agreement. The credit arrangement has been changed to 25 per cent down and 18 months to pay. The first arrangement on credit was 25 per cent down and the balance in nine months, and we amended that in the last agreement to 25 per cent down and the balance in 12 months.

At this stage I would like to make a suggestion in which I know I will be joined by others. Indeed the Secretary of State is very much aware of this suggestion and it is that since the Chinese have demonstrated that not only do they pay their debts on time but ahead of time then now is the time to consider bringing this type of credit arrangement with the Chinese, whereby the federal government guarantees unconditionally any losses, under the terms of the Export Credits Insurance Act.

We enlarged the scope of that act last session from $200 million to $400 million, and I would suggest that the minister may be faced with the necessity of coming back and telling us that the $100 million provided in the revolving fund may not be large enough if the Chinese buy up to the maximum. I think I can assure him that we will support any move on the part of the government to support this credit sale under the Export Credits Insurance Act to the Chinese.

In conclusion I wish to say that the situation in Canada in regard to sales of grain is a challenge to the minister. We produced a better than average crop last year, and I hope we will produce an even better crop this year. However, the crop is not yet in the bins, and the minister must be made aware, daily and hourly as I am, of the reports of stem rust sweeping through southern Saskatchewan. It will not do any harm to the wheat, except to delay the maturing of the grain, and the delay in the period of ripening of the grain may put us into the frost period.

This has an important bearing on Chinese sales for future contracts. If the frost comes —and I hope it does not—we may find ourselves with a tremendous number of millions of bushels of low grade wheat, and I suggest that if there are going to be large amounts of low grade wheat, then the wheat board officials should be asked immediately to go to the Chinese and say, "We are prepared to renegotiate and give you many more bushels of low grade wheat instead of high grade, which is all we had to sell previously."

The second suggestion I would make to the minister in all sincerity is—forget the political sniping I had to undergo, and go to Kowloon. Talk to these men as individuals. Not only do we want them to buy from us we want to get to know them. I suggest he would benefit a great deal himself from such a meeting, and I am sure Canadians in all walks of life would recognize that we are not too proud or hostile to our trading partners to talk to them.

Further I suggest that he follow his deputy minister abroad to eastern Europe. There should be a visit paid, by the minister responsible for selling grain, to Russia, Poland, Czechoslovakia, Hungary, Bulgaria, Rumania, Yugoslavia, and yes, East Germany too. All of these nations have need for grain of some sort, whether feed grain or bread grain. This is what the minister should do. He should not panic and tell the farmers to reduce their acreage, because there are opportunities to sell, and if the grain is sold to the Chinese, to western European nations and eastern European nations, then we are doing good not only to the farmers in western Canada but we are keeping up the prices of hogs, cattle and poultry all across the country. Every farmer in Canada will benefit and every Canadian. This has been a long statement, but I have been waiting two and a half years to make it.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the grain producers in western Canada will, in view of the larger than normal crop that is growing, be pleased to hear the announcement that has been made this evening. There were a number of members in this house from all parties, except the government of the day, who felt that the first deal with mainland China was perhaps a windfall sale because of a severe drought in that country. The extension of this agreement for a further three year period indicates that perhaps it was not altogether a windfall sale, and we should give some credit to the previous government for initiating action in finding this large market for Canadian wheat.

I think the terms of the agreement are essentially the same as those announced several months ago, and therefore require very little comment from me. There is perhaps one major difference, which is that there is now a firm contract for 500,000 long tons of wheat for delivery between August 1 this year and January 31, 1964. The Canadian wheat board and the minister at that time may have known of firm contracts, but I do not believe they were made known to the farmers in western Canada.

There is one problem we can envisage with this kind of deal; that is, we get a large portion of the export of Canadian wheat tied up with one country which we all recognize is getting into difficulty with its neighbours. I remember that last fall when the dispute arose on the Chinese-Indian border there was very serious concern about what was going to happen to the Canadian wheat exports to mainland China. Even today we hear rumblings of difficulties along the border, and if this should flare up into something serious—and we all hope this will not happen—it is certainly going to put this whole agreement in jeopardy again.

I would therefore express some concern about the loss of volume to some of our traditional markets that has taken place over the last ten years. I would urge the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) to make a maximum effort toward building up these traditional markets to the volumes we exported some eight or ten years ago. I have a great many statistics that were given me in a sessional paper in reply to a question I asked. I am not going to read them all, but I will give some examples. For example, in 1952-53 we sold Great Britain 102 million bushels of wheat. By 1961-62 this had dropped to 73 million bushels. I agree there were some erratic movements of the volume for each year; but if you look at the whole period you will see there has been a steady decline in that market. The same is true of Belgium, Luxembourg, the Netherlands and some of the south American countries, particularly Brazil, which was buying substantial quantities of wheat from us ten years ago and now they are not buying any. So I think it would be of great importance for the stability of the wheat market if the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the wheat board were to increase their efforts toward improving sales to these areas, where I think the sale continuity would be a little more reliable.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I say that we in this party welcome this announcement. We hope these sales will continue and that no difficulties will arise in the interval which will interfere with this deal. While no price is stated, I presume it will be going out at what is the international market price whenever the deliveries are made.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is not often that the member for the constituency in which the head office of the Canadian wheat board is located has an opportunity to say anything regarding the activities of that board. But that particular member is very happy tonight to congratulate the Canadian wheat board on the contracts and the agreements that have been announced by the board and here in the house by the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp). We feel this is not the time to have too much discussion or argument about who went to China when. The important thing is that this contract has been concluded; that the Canadian wheat board has been assisted by this government, as it was assisted by the previous government, in terms of making it possible for the board to guarantee the loans. We welcome the various items of detail that were given to us in the statement made this evening.

We agree with the remarks made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) and the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) to the effect that we must look for other markets as well as the tremendous market in mainland China. I think it is perhaps not out of place for us to note that the problem of food, the problem of hunger, the problem of poverty, all those things that are economic, are world wide problems and it is good to note that there are times when in pursuit of settling those problems we get around the difficulties of diplomatic relationships.

It does seem to me that if we find it possible to deal with the people of mainland China in terms of trading our wheat for the commodities they have to sell to us, the day must come when we will recognize the de facto government that is there and try and get China into the councils of the nations of the world so we can do something to remove the causes of friction and tension between east and west. By the same token, if we can sell our farm products, as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle has suggested, to the countries that he listed, I think we not only help to find markets for the products of our farms but can play our part in helping to make one world out of a planet that all too often is torn with strife and dissension.

We congratulate the wheat board on what it has done. We are glad that this government, like the previous government, has been able to give the backing the wheat board needed; and we congratulate the farmers of western Canada on the benefit there is for them in the announcement that has been made tonight.

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, could I ask the minister just one question for clarification in regard to the statement he made. Mention was made of the fact that 41 million bushels were left of the previous contract. Are they included in this contract from 112 million to 186 million bushels?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. gentleman from Qu'Appelle will remember, the Chinese corporation was only obliged to buy a minimum quantity of wheat, and the maximum quantity was an obligation upon the Canadian wheat board to deliver if called upon. The Chinese decided not to call upon any further wheat under the old contract and they replaced it by the present contract.

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): Mr. Speaker, although I do not want to speak at length on this sale of wheat—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I think it is a well recognized rule that when a statement is made on motions, as was this one, there is a comment from one member of each party and there is no debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is my understanding. Indeed, I had some qualms about allowing the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp) to submit a question to the minister. I think we should not pursue the matter any further.

Mr. Ricard: Another kind of closure.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, my question was just to clarify one point in the minister's statement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I appreciate that.

DIVORCE

AUTHORIZATION FOR SENATE TO DISSOLVE OR ANNUL MARRIAGES

Mr. Speaker: I have received a message from the Senate informing this house that the Senate has passed Bill No. C-93, an act authorizing the Senate of Canada to dissolve or annul marriages, with amendments. The amendments are as follows:

Amendments made by the Senate to the Bill C-93, sent up from the House of Commons, intituled: "An act authorizing the Senate of Canada to dissolve or annul marriages".

1. Page 1, line 9. Strike out line 9 and substitute the following:

"subject to the provisions of subsections (2) and (3),"

2. Page 1, lines 28 to 32 inclusive. Strike out subclause (3) and substitute the following:

"(3) If the bill referred to in subsection (2) is disposed of otherwise than by becoming law or by reason of prorogation or dissolution of parliament, the resolution dissolving or annulling the marriage shall have full force and effect on the date on which the bill has been so disposed of."

3. Page 2, lines 1 to 10 inclusive. Strike out subclause (4) and substitute therefor the following:

"(4) Where a petition or a bill seeking the annulment or modification of a resolution of the Senate dissolving or annulling a marriage has been disposed of by reason of prorogation or dissolution of parliament, and a new petition and a draft bill to the same effect are not filed with the clerk of the parliaments within thirty days of the commencement of the next ensuing session of parliament, such resolution shall come into force on the expiration of such thirty days. If such petition and draft bill are so filed within such thirty days, the operation of such resolution shall be suspended in accordance with the provisions of subsection (2)."

4. Page 2, lines 11 to 21 inclusive. Strike out clause 3 and substitute the following:

"3. The Senate shall, before adopting a resolution for the dissolution or annulment of a marriage, refer the petition therefor to an officer of the Senate to be designated by the Speaker of the Senate, to hear evidence and make his report thereon to the Senate standing committee on divorce but such officer shall not recommend that a marriage be dissolved or annulled except on a ground on which a marriage could be dissolved or annulled, as the case may be, under the laws of England as they existed on the 15th day of July, 1870, or under the Marriage and Divorce Act, chap. 176 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1952."

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, so that this matter could be considered if the house so wished later today, and if there was general agreement that this could be done, I would move, seconded by Mr. Walker:

That the amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. C-193, an act authorizing the Senate of Canada to dissolve or annul marriages, be placed on the order paper for consideration later this day.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult to follow these amendments which have been made by the Senate, and it occurs to me that it would be a good idea if arrangements could be made to distribute to members of the house the bill as it was with the amendments typed thereon, so that we can at least make an attempt to understand the changes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, before you put the motion may I say that I think the request of the right hon. gentleman is most reasonable. It would be impossible to follow the amendments from hearing them read. I was given a copy of them which appears to have been mimeographed. It looks to me as though there are some copies at the table, and I hope that before we reach the point when we would consider this matter, if we do, that the right hon. gentleman's suggestion can be complied with.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the motion is simply that the matter be placed on the order paper for consideration later this day, if there is general agreement. I think we all know what "general agreement" means in this case.

Mr. Pickersgill: That is perfectly correct.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

[Mr. Speaker.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT

CONCURRENCE IN REPORT OF JOINT COMMITTEE

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, if I might crave the indulgence of the house, there was tabled in the house yesterday a report of the joint committee on the library of parliament having to do with the positions of certain members of the staff. All the other members of the staff, or practically all of them, I think have been dealt with, and I wonder whether I could make a motion to ask the house to concur in this report?

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. Deschatelets, that the report of the joint committee on the parliamentary library, submitted to the house on Thursday, August 1, 1963, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

(Text):

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Pickersgill (for the Minister of Finance) moved:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $724,687,939.03, being the aggregate of—

(a) two-twelfths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1964, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $641,050,276.00;

(b) an additional five-twelfths of the amount of external affairs item 107, $208,333.34;

(c) an additional two-twelfths of the amounts of atomic energy item 5, public works item 20 and loans, investments and advances item L65 of the said estimates, $1,468,333.34;

(d) an additional one-twelfth of the amounts of external affairs item 78, legislation items 40 and 45, mines and technical surveys items 30, 35, 40, 50, 70, 80, 100, 105, 130 and 140, northern affairs and national resources items 25, 30, 45, 50, 100 and 105, public works item 180, transport item 50 of the said estimates, $6,058,666.67;

(e) two-twelfths of the total of the amounts of the items set forth in the supplementary estimates (A), for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1964, (except external affairs vote 96a and loans vote L63a), laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $50,605,805.50;

(f) an additional five-twelfths of the amount of finance item 5a, $415,833.34;

(g) an additional two-twelfths of the amount of finance item 70a and loans, investments and advances item L65a, $11,380,690.84;

(h) six-twelfths of the amount of the item set forth in the supplementary estimates (B), for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $3,500,000;

(i) six-twelfths of the amount of the item set forth in the supplementary estimates (C), for the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1964, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $10,000,000; be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending March 31st, 1964.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Churchill: Has the minister a statement to make in explanation?

Mr. Pickersgill: I might say that after consultation with hon. gentlemen opposite the government came to the conclusion that we should not ask for more than 60 days supply, which would take us up to September 30. That is what in principle the resolution covers; that is to say, two twelfths of the annual supply. As hon. members know, particularly those of long experience and hon. gentlemen who formerly sat on the treasury benches, there are certain items about which at this time of year more than the ordinary two twelfths is expended. That explains the difference in the other items apart from the normal one. I shall be glad, with the assistance of one or two of my colleagues, to explain any item I am capable of explaining beyond that; but I think in principle that is the explanation. I might say there is no case where the full amount of an item is being requested.

Mr. Churchill: That statement expressed in other terms is what a Minister of Finance normally says on estimates of this nature to protect our rights in the future.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is a form of words usually set down in the bill. I have not had this experience before, but I was instructed by those more experienced than I to say it when the bill comes on. But the hon. gentleman is perfectly right. There is no thought whatever that in granting the supply the committee would be asked in any way to forgo the fullest right to examine every dollar of the proposed expenditure for the whole of the fiscal year.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I understand that during a debate on interim supply, one may deal with a few points of general interest. This evening, I will, during a few minutes, touch upon two special points which I should like to draw to the attention of the government. However, before doing so, I would like to mention that we, on this side of the house, have noted for some time that we did not altogether preach in the wilderness and that the ideas we have been advocating are finding acceptance. For example, last year the government endorsed the idea of setting up a system of debt free money and this afternoon, to a question asked by the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Leboe), the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) replied that it was possible to borrow money from the Bank of Canada. And during further explanations, the minister of commerce mentioned that small amounts would be easier to borrow. Already we find that the government is seeing the light and has decided to enlarge its field of vision and to show interest in new theories. The very fact mentioned this afternoon by the Minister of Trade and Commerce that it would be possible to borrow from the Bank of Canada, indicates a great progress in that direction. He mentioned this afternoon, that the $400 million which are being provided were perhaps too large an amount. But he implied that with smaller amounts this government might consider allowing this procedure.

Mr. Chairman, I submit that this is a good beginning, one likely to encourage us in future to advocate new theories which, we hope, will greatly benefit the citizens of this country.

Mr. Chairman, there are two points on which I want to call this government's attention. The first is that hon. members from the district of Saguenay-Lake St. John, which comprises four ridings, that is, Chicoutimi, Lapointe, Lake St. John and Roberval, have received a number of resolutions from municipal boards, social clubs, chambers of commerce and the St. Jean Baptiste society, to the effect that we, the four members who represent that district in this house, should vigorously oppose the stockpiling of nuclear arms at the Bagotville air base. There is a military base at that point and there has been talk of stockpiling nuclear weapons in that area to equip Voodoo type planes.

I would point out to this government that there are Starfighters stationed in France. Lately, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) stated that those Starfighters would remain in France, even if they were not equipped with nuclear arms, because the French government does not want such nuclear arms, over which it would have no control, stockpiled on its territory. If it was felt that Starfighters would be useful if armed with conventional weapons instead of nuclear weapons, and are being left in France so armed with conventional weapons when they were supposed to be designed only for nuclear warheads, the Voodoos are in exactly the same position. Those aircraft are in a country whose peace-loving people are not afraid to protect their country when the time comes to do so. In fact, the Saguenay people proved it, and for that matter, so did people from all parts of Canada who do not see the necessity of stockpiling nuclear weapons.

That is why we, the four members for that district, because of representations received from municipal councils and social organizations of that area, are against any storage of nuclear weapons at the Bagotville military airport.

I hope that this request will be duly considered and that before any action is taken, our claims will be looked into and we shall be allowed to discuss the problem with authorities concerned.

Mr. Chairman, the second point I should like to raise has to do with a case which gives an idea of the atmosphere which exists within certain crown corporations. Since the Minister of Transport (Mr. McIlraith) and his parliamentary secretary (Mr. Cantin) are both in the house at this moment, I hope they will take under advisement the case I am going to refer to and that they will take the necessary steps with the C.N.R. to improve the atmosphere which prevails within that crown corporation.

In 1941, a certain Mr. Thomas Tremblay, of Jonquière, was employed as supervisory foreman in that community, a position he held for 13 years, that is until 1954. Now, when it was learned that he would be retiring in eight months, he was relieved of his job as supervisory foreman and assigned to duties as a plain workman. Accordingly, he did not get as large a pension as he would have received as supervisory foreman, the position he held during 13 years.

I wrote several letters about this matter. I must admit that I got polite replies, in French at that, from the president of the C.N.R. In fact, when I saw that he was answering me in French, I wanted to be just as polite and I wrote to him in English. We exchanged letters that way for a while and I feel that this is one way in which we can foster true bilingualism in Canada.

In any case, even though the answers were polite, they were always indefinite, for they resorted to arguments which were mostly unconvincing and even rather unpleasant.

As a matter of fact, it is an unusual situation for an employee who has worked 35 years for the C.N.R., during which he was foreman-supervisor for 13 years, to find himself in a lower position thus receiving a lower pension and, worst of all, eight months only before his retirement.

Mr. Thomas Tremblay, of Jonquière, has attempted in vain to have his case revised before 1955. I must say that ten letters at least have been exchanged with C.N.R. authorities but that nothing has been done to settle the matter.

Mr. Chairman, while we are studying interim supply, I take this opportunity to submit this case to the house, and I hope that the Minister of Transport will take it into consideration, for I feel that there is a deliberate policy of discrimination directed against some C.N.R. employees in our district.

Mr. Chairman, that is all I wanted to say. Before resuming my seat, may I wish a happy holiday to all the hon. members. We deserve it, as we had to work like slaves during the last few months and go through two sessions and two election campaigns.

(Text).

Mr. Willoughby: I rise at this point not to discuss the details of this resolution concerning interim supply but to draw the attention of hon. members of this committee to a specific instance of what I consider to be a great moral obligation on the part of our country to a totally disabled member of my constituency. I wish to bring to the attention of the committee a most unfortunate situation which throughout British Columbia has come to be known as the Doctor Nigel Clark case. I am only going to take a few minutes but I should like to outline very briefly to the committee some of the details of this case.

On January 20 of this year this 32 year old medical man of Lillooet, British Columbia, was called by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. He was advised that a young lad lay injured on the side of a mountain. He responded immediately and was conveyed to the scene of the accident by the R.C.M.P. Unfortunately, after attending the injured lad the doctor himself slipped on the ice, fell 150 feet into a canyon and fractured his neck. He is now totally paralysed from the neck down.

As a married man with five children he is financially destitute. There have been voluntary donations by the medical men of British Columbia but he has now come to the end of those donations and it is expected that he will be dependant upon social welfare within the next few months. He has been under continuous medical care, of course, since the accident, but at the present time it is obvious that his disability is permanent. There is little hope that he will ever be able to support his family. At the present time he is being considered for several awards for bravery and devotion to duty, but how empty these awards must be to a man of this type who was looking forward to a life of devotion to his medical practice. How inadequate a return this is to one who should be looking forward to the provision of a home and the education of his children.

Medical men with a proper humane attitude will never refuse a call to duty but the experience of this young man as already outlined gives rise to a very serious question. Should members of the medical profession, in taking such dangerous calls at the request of the police, demand the same protection as members of the police forces or members of the armed services who suffer accidents in the course of their duties are granted?

I submit this extraordinary case to the house for what may seem extraordinary humane considerations. I submit it, knowing full well that there is no legal obligation involved in the laws of our country as they now stand. But I submit it should receive every consideration on the basis of a moral claim which I hope will result in the maximum assistance to the one disabled and to his dependants. With all due respect, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that there is a time in our deliberations when we should consider extraordinary situations on the grounds of moral obligations and not necessarily on the basis of legal commitments. If ever a case demanded such consideration, that of Dr. Nigel Clark, who was injured on a call to duty by the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, is outstanding. He should receive not only our sympathy but rather ample provision for financial assistance on a basis at least as ample as that provided for a member of the R.C.M.P.

I submit this case for urgent consideration at this time of interim supply and I ask the government to treat it as a moral obligation. I know that everyone in the house will agree that the case of Dr. Nigel Clark merits the most favourable and realistic assistance. I do ask that some immediate action for his relief be undertaken.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether I could make available to the committee some information—

Mr. Fairweather: If we could hear you it would be better.

Mr. MacEachen: I wonder whether I could take this opportunity to make available to the committee some information in connection with the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, possibly the minister could wait until the conclusion of this matter because when a matter is being discussed it should be concluded. I should like to say a word with regard to the representation made by the hon. member for Kamloops.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, this is not the kind of motion where we have to stay with a subject, but if the Leader of the Opposition would like to follow the hon. member for Kamloops I would be happy to yield to him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the presentation that has been made by the hon. member for Kamloops is one that touches the heartstrings of all of us. The statement he made, objective, unadorned and without emotion, made an appeal to all members of the house. Indeed, in the years I have been here I have not heard a similar reaction on the part of hon. members as was evident a moment ago. I hope that the Minister of Justice will give earnest consideration to these representations. The hon. member has pointed out that there is no legal obligation, but there is something greater than that. When a member of the medical profession answers the call of duty and endangers not only his own life but also the happiness of his family a case is made out for an ex gratia payment. I am not going to say any more at this time, but this is an appealing case.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Chairman, I am grateful to the hon. member for Kamloops for having raised this matter, with which I am sorry to say I am not familiar. It may well be that the hon. member has written to me about it though I must confess I have no recollection of it. I am sure the hon. member and the Leader of the Opposition as well will realize that there are a great many cases concerning not only officials of the Department of Justice but the Royal Canadian Mounted Police that come to my attention from time to time. I listened with interest to the remarks made by the hon. member and I can assure him that as soon as I get back to my office on Monday one of the first things I will do is to bring this question to the attention of the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Mr. Willoughby: May I express my thanks to the Minister of Justice. I brought this matter before the committee on the understanding that he was already familiar with it. I have correspondence in my file here in connection with the case which indicates the matter was referred to his department. I do not say it was referred to the minister specifically but it was dealt with by the R.C.M.P. They expressed their sympathy but said there was no legal obligation in the matter. Naturally, therefore, I brought it to the attention of the house tonight.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I am sure all members of the house will feel that the hon. member for Kamloops has brought to our attention a case that deserves not only our sympathy but positive action along the lines that the member suggested, and I am sure we are all grateful to the Minister of Justice for his assurance that he will give this matter his attention.

I should like to say on behalf of our party that we are prepared to grant to the government the two months interim supply that is being asked for tonight. This is a routine request which has been made with the usual assurance that we will have the fullest opportunity later in the session to discuss the items, portions of which we are voting at this time.

As hon. members are aware, an interim supply debate is one that is rather wide open. We are free to discuss any of the matters towards which we vote money. But it is not my intention to make a wide-ranging speech at this hour of Friday night or at this stage of the session. I should like, rather, to say a few words about the part of the session we have had thus far, and to indicate what I feel is the most disappointing feature of it. I imagine that in the next week or two the newspapers and periodicals of the country will run editorials and feature articles about this session. It will be interesting to see what adjectives they use, and what titles they give to it. There are a number of things that have happened that will, of course, receive their attention as they try to assess the value of what we have done.

I believe the most disappointing aspect of the session that we have had up to this point, these first 56 days, is the failure to get something definite done with regard to the increase in the amount of the old age pension. If there is one thing that was discussed on just about every platform during the election that was held last spring, it was the question of raising the amount of the old age pension, and of providing other ways of increasing old age security generally. All parties were committed to do something in this field. Certainly, the party that won the election was one that had made very strong commitments. I was so aware of that commitment that, in my own case, on election night in my committee rooms I expressed to my followers who were there the belief that whatever other mistakes might be made by the government that was elected that night, we would be able to get out of it in this parliament an early increase in the old age pension.

When we came down and heard the speech from the throne, we were informed of the proposal to introduce the Canada pension plan. After a while we got the resolution on the order paper. We had the newspaper reports of speeches made outside of the house by the Minister of National Health and Welfare. We were assured that in due course we would get not only a new piece of pension legislation known as the Canada pension plan, but an increase of $10 in the pension paid to those who draw pensions under the Old Age Security Act. Despite the fact that there have been these evidences that it is going to happen, it is most disappointing to us in this house, and even more disappointing to those who are affected throughout the country, that the effective date of that increase has been put off until, so far as we can find out, some time in 1964.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare when she was speaking on this subject, said the effective date of the increase would be early in 1964. I was pleased the Prime Minister said to me the other day that the effective date might be earlier than I feared. This is an interesting use of the word "fear". I can only hope that since the Minister of National Health and Welfare said some time early in 1964 and the Prime Minister used the word "earlier", that does at least give some credence to the newspaper reports that we can count on the date of January 1.

However, Mr. Chairman, the old people of Canada do not feel that is good enough. It does seem to me we should have some clear statement from the government before we wind up tonight as to when that $10 increase is to be made effective. A couple of times during this session the Prime Minister said that we could get along with these things if other business were out of the way. I think he realized that was realy a bluff, and a couple of times he realized his bluff was called. Actually, the government has not been prepared to move with this piece of legislation in this part of the session. But it does seem to me now, before we wind up tonight, we should be told what that effective date is going to be.

We have been promised that the resolution on the Canada pension plan, which was started, will be called as early as possible after we come back in September. I see no reason why it should take any length of time at all to get that resolution and that bill through this house. If we get it through in the early part of October, as I am sure we can, I see no reason why we could not have the assurance that the effective date of this $10 increase would be within a few days or a few weeks at the most after the legislation has been approved. If we could have that kind of assurance, I can assure the government it will have the co-operation of the house in getting the legislation through in the shortest possible time.

The government may contend that there has to be some relationship between the starting date of the $10 increase and the starting date of collections under the contributory feature of the new plan. The government has already indicated the $10 increase to this old age security pension is going to be paid prior to the date when the contributions start. In other words, some means of financing that advance payment is in the mind of the government. If that is the case, we see no reason why that period cannot be extended so that this $10 increase can be made effective much earlier than is in prospect at the present time.

People are interested in the idea that some time before long we will have in this country a pension system that will make it possible for people generally to have $150 or $175 a month as a pension out of the Canada pension plan and old age security. This is going to be possible only for people who retire in 1975. This is not much help to people who are old age pensioners at the present time and are being asked to wait another three or six months before they get this $10 increase. I think that even tonight the Prime Minister should make a definite statement to this house and tell us the earliest possible date at which that increase could be made effective. I am sure all members of all parties in the house would back up my statement that if we could have the assurance that an increase will be made effective at an early date, the government will have the co-operation of the house in getting that legislation through very quickly after we come back. As a matter of fact, if it would assist in getting this pension started at an early date, I can tell the Prime Minister that we in this party would be glad to come back earlier than September 30, the date that has been suggested.

There are other things about this portion of the session to which I might refer. However, I would rather pinpoint my remarks on this one subject. To me, this is the most disappointing feature of these 56 days of this session, that we have not received a definite decision from the government as to when that $10 increase is going to start. We have done some other things that were good. We have done some things about which there will be a lot of discussion. I still think we owe it to the old people of this country to tell them when that increase is going to be effective, and to let them know it will be soon.

(Translation):

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, the interim supply which we are now considering gives me the opportunity to make a few remarks that I wanted to make a little while ago when the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) made his statement concerning the wheat sales to communist China.

We have listened with great interest to the minister's statement and we welcome this piece of news. This sale will not only be advantageous to the farmers of western Canada but will profit as well the eastern farmers. The well-being of both, either of the east or of the west, is closely related. When western farmers are happy, eastern farmers are happy also.

However, in the course of his statement, the minister mentioned, if I remember well, readjustments which are necessary concerning the import of textiles.

Coming as I do from one of the most important centres of the textile industry in the province of Quebec, I cannot help but take this opportunity to say a few words. In fact, it seems to me that my electors would be vexed with me if I did not ask the minister in their name to do everything he can to protect our textile industry.

As the hon. gentleman and his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabasca (Mr. Pepin) probably know, the textile industry is the backbone of many of our towns and municipalities. As a matter of fact, for a great many towns and villages in my area, the textile industry is the main activity.

Unless the minister, in the dealings with communist China, pays special attention to this very important industry of ours, the result could be more unemployment for employees who spent the major part of their life in that industry.

So, on behalf of employees of the textile industry in St. Hyacinthe and other cities or communities where this industry is the main livelihood of people, I ask the minister to pay special attention to that question, in order to preserve the livelihood of our people. And I am confident, knowing the sincerity of the minister, that he will want to act on my recommendations.

(Text):

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, I would like the indulgence of the committee in order to make a brief statement of information to the house with respect to the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act.

Hon. members may recall that early in the session I announced certain proposals with respect to vocational training, especially with respect to federal assistance for capital construction. I had hoped it would have been possible to have brought forward the amending legislation at this date. That has not been possible, but certain provinces would find it to their advantage to know what is in the government's mind with respect to this so that they could plan their own programs in connection with capital construction of training facilities. Therefore I thought the committee would permit me to give a very brief indication of what the government has in mind so that I will be able to advise the provinces accordingly.

As hon. members know, the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act provides in section 4 for a contribution by the federal government of 50 per cent of capital expenditures incurred by the provinces on training facilities, until the expiry of agreements on March 31, 1967, plus an additional 25 per cent if these capital expenditures were incurred before April 1, 1963.

As hon. gentlemen also know, this program has made a marked contribution to the creation of student places, and under the program 138,000 additional student places have been provided. The government now intends to extend the period during which the additional 25 per cent will be available, and it is to the conditions under which this 25 per cent will be available that I address myself.

The government is proposing that the 25 per cent additional contribution be continued on the following basis: The highest per capita federal contribution approved up to March 31, 1963, is $480, which sets the top standard for the federal contribution on a 75 per cent basis. This happens to be the case for the province of Newfoundland. It is proposed that other provinces be allowed to meet this per capita standard of $480 so that the additional federal contribution of 25 per cent will be continued in each province until the per capita of federal payments in provinces have reached this standard of $480, or until the expiry of the present agreement on March 31, 1967, whichever is sooner.

Once the $480 per capita standard has been reached in a province it will, of course, be eligible for a continuing 50 per cent contribution to capital until the end of the agreement.

I thank hon. members for allowing me to make this statement, which will give me a chance to advise the provinces and tell them in detail the amounts each province may receive under this additional 25 per cent.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, we are pleased with this announcement. The criticism that built up over the application of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act was really centred upon the proposition that some of the provinces got an inordinate advantage out of it because their particular programs happened to be geared to a quick expansion.

As the minister and the committee know, the province that felt it got the roughest deal was Quebec, and it was generally felt that Ontario got the maximum advantage out of the offer. Now if the per capita standard of $480 is applied it means there will be an opportunity for the province of Quebec to take advantage of these funds, and I think this is an excellent adaptation to the situation.

The only problem is that if it becomes a continuing pattern—if the original program had been set on a per capita basis—in some ways it would be unfair, just as I think university grants are unfair in that they tend to go to those who already have. When you determine things on a per capita basis it means there is not any flexibility for expansion or initiative. So, in sum, this seems to be a good corrective and a very welcome announcement.

I would like to ask the minister whether he has had any indication from the province of Quebec that this particular plan of a per capita ceiling is suitable to it, and whether Ontario made any other suggestions. I must apologize to hon. members of the committee who do not come from Ontario and Quebec for asking these questions, but I do know there has been a great deal of discussion on both sides of the question, and I would like to know what the minister has done in terms of consultation or liaison with the two larger provinces.

Hon. members might be interested in knowing that in the two ridings of Port Arthur and Fort William a total of six schools have been built, with a contribution in the neighbourhood of $4½ million or $5 million from the federal treasury. Therefore we are very appreciative of the program, and would like to know what the provincial authorities feel about the proposition put forward by the minister.

One thing we did not hear from the minister was any indication regarding possible amendments to the act, regarding the contribution the federal government will make in terms of the upkeep of the program, and the support it may give for any special programs for older people or unemployed workers, carried on in the facilities created by this act. I would like to ask the minister whether the government has anything in mind in that regard, or whether it intends to carry along with the policies that are in existence at the present time.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a question for clarification. It is on the same line. According to what the minister just said, this amendment will bring a new scope to the bill, and I wonder whether it takes into consideration the fact that the province of Quebec might not recuperate the difference in the amount which Ontario has received under this scheme and which Quebec has declared she has not been able to receive. I think the minister understands my question. I think this was the complaint that may have caused the minister to discuss this new arrangement. I would like him to tell me what the discussions were and give his comments on this question.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, in reply to the question of my hon. friend I would say that one of the purposes of this proposal that will be brought before the house later in the form of a resolution and then a bill is to make it possible, for example, for some provinces, including Quebec, to participate more fully in this program. The response among the provinces has been uneven and the purpose of this new formula is to make possible a more equitable participation. I talked about the per capita contribution. I should make it clear to members of the committee that I am talking about the federal contribution per capita in the age group 15 to 19; the average federal contribution per capita for Canada in this group up to date has been $225, while in Quebec it has been $51 and in Ontario $458.

By taking the highest province, which is Newfoundland, and bringing all other provinces up to that level it will allow every province to more or less share equitably in the program. Mind you, once this level of $480 is reached, the provinces will continue to receive the 50 per cent contribution. This only applies to the additional 25 per cent. I understand that the province of Quebec will accept this particular proposal. I cannot inform my hon. friend from Port Arthur definitely as to the attitude of the province of Ontario, but I will say that even under this proposal the province of Ontario stands to gain a further sum under the 75 per cent arrangement.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Chairman, could the minister tell us how many people there are of that age group in Ontario? I wonder whether the minister has those figures. It seems to me that on a rough calculation it would mean $22 additional per student, if I have subtracted $458 from 480 correctly. How many students or persons are there in Ontario in the age group 15 to 19 that the minister mentioned? Does he have that figure, or could he get it for us?

Mr. MacEachen: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I do not have that figure. However, I can assure my hon. friend that when this proposal comes before the house for definite action I will be able to give him all this information.

Mr. Smith: Am I right in assuming that it is an additional $22 per student in Ontario within that age group, however many there are?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I think this is correct.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask another question on this matter. What adjustment will be made as this program goes along for the fact that the per capita figure will be changing as we get the flood into the 15-19 age group? Is there any allowance made for that, or is the per capita formula based upon the number of students right at the present day.

Mr. MacEachen: My hon. friend has raised an interesting point. The per capita proposal is based on the 1961 census. It was not expected that we would make any adjustment to take into account this particular aspect, but I think it is something that is worth considering.

Mr. Fisher: What proposals have been put before the minister in terms of the continuing contribution of the federal government toward the upkeep of the vocational assistance program? Is there anything there at all?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Chairman, this particular amendment is confined to capital construction assistance. In the resolution that is on the order paper my hon. friend will notice there is an additional federal contribution of training allowances for unemployed persons from 75 per cent to 90 per cent. Also the federal contribution will increase from 50 per cent to 75 per cent with regard to training costs in industry for employed persons. So there will be, in addition to this capital cost provision, additional federal assistance for training programs for the unemployed and the employed in industry.

Mr. Smith: Mr. Chairman, could the minister say whether any consideration has been given to this question. For example, if a province is able to keep more of its young people of that particular age group in school, will any consideration be given to that province? It might be that we could build schools and people would not attend them. Will there be any adjustment made there?

Mr. MacEachen: These programs normally will be presented as I understand the matter, by provincial governments. They will naturally —or one would expect this to be so—bring forward training facility construction programs in accordance with the need that is felt for training places in each province.

Mr. Smith: The capital contribution is mechanical in the sense that it relates only to census figures?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, could the minister say what the new ceiling will be for the total federal contribution on the 75 per cent basis, supposing every province should come up to the Newfoundland standard?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Chairman, if the hon. gentleman will accept an estimate—

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Yes.

Mr. MacEachen: —subject to confirmation later, I think the additional federal contribution arising from the 25 per cent solely will be, up to the $480 per capita, in the amount of $122 million.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I would like the minister to be a little more specific on this question. The present scheme is for four years, if I understand it correctly, from April 1 this year to April 1, 1967, or to the maximum of $480, whichever comes first. My point was this: how will Quebec, which has complained that they did not receive their fair share of the money allowed for such a program, recuperate the difference of money she has claimed she did not receive from the federal government?

Mr. MacEachen: The province of Quebec will bring forward its program. The federal government will participate in such a construction program until 1967 up to the $480 contribution per capita, and the province of Quebec will have this additional period of several years to share in the program. I am confident that this period of time will permit the province to participate in this program to the fullest possible extent.

Mr. Nasserden: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the minister has a breakdown of what can be picked up by each of the provinces under the extension that is now being offered to them.

[Mr. Smith.]

Mr. MacEachen: I have an estimate. I did not expect I would get into so many details tonight but I would be glad to give an estimate of the maximum additional contribution based on the $480 per capita level and arising from the additional incentive contribution of 25 per cent. It is as follows. Newfoundland is the best off province in this case and will not be eligible for the 23 per cent in the future. I am glad to see Newfoundland in that category. Prince Edward Island, $733,000; Nova Scotia, $7,890,000; New Brunswick, $6,972,000; Quebec, $66,935,000; Ontario, $3,262,000; Manitoba, $9,694,000; Saskatchewan, $8,926,000; Alberta, $3,855,000; British Columbia, $13,511,000.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might say a word. The hon. gentleman has a resolution on the order paper. This particular matter is not covered by interim supply at all; the Minister of Labour just took advantage of this to give the house some information so that he could give it to the provinces without being in contempt of the house. If we could pass interim supply I would be delighted to call the resolution, since there is so much interest in the matter, and see if we could pass that tonight too.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I am spurred by this announcement and the fact that the Prime Minister is in the house to ask him a couple of questions about some of the cornerstones of Liberal party policy as it affects education. I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he could let us know now what are the government's intentions in three specific educational areas.

The first one is the demands and requests of the Canada Council for assistance, particularly in postgraduate work so that we can have an adequate supply of university people. I understand from reading their report that there is a real urgency about this. The second matter is in the field of the $100,000 scholarships. What is coming along there? The third area is an area represented by the presentation made to the Prime Minister about a month and a half ago by university officials, I think through the national conference or association of universities, asking for an immediate projection of the kind of assistance that the federal government will be prepared to give. I remember the argument tended to be toward the kind of plan that the British universities have through the university grants committee, where they have some kind of five year basis to work on and so enable planning to be done to meet some of the growth problems they have. Since we have had one announcement relating to education I think we would appreciate knowing what the Prime Minister has in mind in these three areas, in each of which, according to the proponents of the particular area, there is real urgency.

Mr. Pearson: I have been in touch with representatives of the universities in respect of two of the three matters mentioned by the hon. member. The cabinet has given preliminary consideration to the requests which have been made for additional financial assistance in the field mentioned, and the government has appointed the former deputy minister of finance as special adviser on federal aid to education. He has been going into these programs and reporting to us as to what can be done. We are being pressed, as my hon. friend may know, by the universities association, through Mr. Andrews, to give them some indication of our policy as quickly as possible so that they can plan ahead. All I can say at the moment is that these matters have been considered but no decision has yet been reached as to what we can do. This is one of the matters which, when the session ends, we will have to take into more active consideration than we have been able to do in the past two or three weeks, because we are very much aware of the importance of the problem.

So far as the scholarship program is concerned, that is still part of our policy. It is a commitment which we accept. I recall in the last discussion I had with the representatives of the universities that one or two of them mentioned that they would be a little worried about an influx of federal scholarships at the moment into the universities, when they have difficulty in the matter of accommodation, both in respect of facilities and teaching, with regard to the students they have now. They seem to put first priority for assistance on construction, and assistance in fields other than federal scholarships. But this is part of our program which we intend to carry out.

I am afraid I cannot say anything more than that at present, but I hope that in the autumn when we reassemble we will have some definite information to convey to the house.

Mr. Fisher: The Prime Minister did not tell us anything about the Canada Council and its needs, particularly in the area where the $50 million is proving very inadequate.

Mr. Pearson: I am sorry that I did not mention that specifically, but it is one of the matters on which I cannot give definite information to the committee at the present time. I have talked to the Canada Council about it. I have a memorandum from them and the matter is being considered by ourselves and Mr. Taylor at the present time; but we have not come to any decision on that matter yet.

Mr. Nasserden: There is one matter I should like to mention tonight concerning the grain situation in western Canada. You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that during the election campaign reference was made to an alternative to acreage payments, the payment of $3 per bushel on the first 300 bushels of wheat. As the Prime Minister knows, we on this side of the house stood by the policy we had put into effect during the years we were in office. In view of the congestion problems which are developing in western Canada, the shortage of cash which is likely to plague the farming communities in western Canada, and also in view of the fact that this government has shown that it can change its mind, and has done so on numerous occasions during the present session of parliament, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether, if there are difficulties over the payment of the $3 per bushel for the first 300 bushels of wheat, he will give consideration to action taken by the former government by way of acreage payments and try to fulfil that commitment made by the former government. I know that the Prime Minister must know that the problem of cash in western Canada will be a great one this coming winter. I also know that he is a man who cares, and I hope he will give consideration to this particular problem.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, during the recess we will be glad to give consideration to all aspects of agricultural problems, including the one mentioned by the hon. member, and which is sometimes misreported as $3 wheat.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house again in committee of ways and means, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Pickersgill (for the Minister of Finance) moved:

Resolved, that toward making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1964, the sum of $724,687,939.03 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada as set forth in the resolution concurred in this day in the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Atlantic Development Board Act

Mr. Sharp (for the Minister of Finance) thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-94, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall this bill be read the second time? Now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Pickersgill (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the bill be read the second time.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before clause 1 carries, I feel I should, on behalf of the government, give the customary assurance in the customary words. The proportions requested in this bill are intended to provide for all necessary requirements of the public service up to September 30, 1963. In no instance is the total amount of an item being released by this bill. The form of this bill is the usual one for interim supply bills. The passing of this bill will not prejudice the rights and privileges of members to criticize any item in the estimates when it comes up in committee of supply, and the usual undertaking is hereby given that such rights and privileges will be respected and will not be curtailed or restricted in any way as a result of the passing of this measure.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

Schedules agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD ACT

ANNOUNCEMENT OF NEW APPOINTMENTS TO BOARD

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Before we go on to the private members' business which was agreed on earlier I wonder if I might be allowed to revert to motions in order to make a brief statement to the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I wish to announce the names of the six new members of the Atlantic development board, whose appointments were approved today by His Excellency the Governor General.

Hon. members will recall that parliament approved these new appointments recently when it passed amendments to the Atlantic Development Board Act, one of these amendments being designed to increase the number of members on the board from five to eleven.

The new chairman of the board is Ian Malcolm MacKeigan, Q.C. of Halifax, Nova Scotia. Mr. MacKeigan has had a distinguished career at the bar of Nova Scotia since he was admitted in 1939 and during the war and afterwards he held high offices in the service of this government here in Ottawa. He is presently a vice president of the Canadian Bar Association for Nova Scotia and is also extremely active in community organizations. Mr. MacKeigan's term on the board will expire on January 23, 1966.

The two other members whose terms will also expire on that day are Robert C. Eddy of Bathurst, New Brunswick, and Albert Martin of Corner Brook, Newfoundland.

Mr. Eddy served overseas during the second world war with the Canadian army, was wounded in action and was awarded the military cross. After the war he served on the staff at Queen's University in Kingston, Ontario, and since 1946 he has been employed by the George Eddy Company Limited in Bathurst, New Brunswick. He is a director of his company and several other firms in Bathurst. He is the chairman of the board of school trustees in Bathurst and a member of the board of governors of the Atlantic provinces economic council.

Mr. Albert Martin is president and general manager of the Bowater's Newfoundland Pulp and Paper Mills, Limited, and is also president of the Mersey Paper Company, Limited, in Liverpool, Nova Scotia. In the first world war he served overseas with the royal Newfoundland regiment, having joined the regiment when he was 15 years of age. Since 1923 he has been employed steadily by the Bowater's organization and by its predecessor companies and he served in various positions with the company before his appointment as president in 1962.

Three other members of the board have been appointed for terms of two years which will expire on January 23, 1965. They are Carl F. Burke of Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, Captain Maxwell Burry of Glovertown, Newfoundland and Stephen A. Dolhanty of Florence in Cape Breton, Nova Scotia.

Mr. Burke is a former president of the maritime provinces board of trade and has since 1941 been managing director of the Maritime Central Airways, one of the most successful air lines of its sort in the world.

Captain Maxwell Burry of Glovertown, Newfoundland, is one of the most successful fishermen in Newfoundland. He first went to Labrador when he was 11 years old aboard his father's fishing schooner. Seven years later, when he was 18 years old, he was master of his own ship. In recent years Captain Burry's interest has again been centered on the Labrador fisheries and he is given a large share of the credit for reviving this important fishery within the past two or three years.

Mr. Dolhanty is presently vice president of district 26 of the United Mine Workers of America, an office he has held since 1950. He has worked in the coal mines in North Sydney since 1923 and has held various offices in his union over the years since then. He has been active also in the co-operative movement.

Brigadier Michael Wardell of Fredericton, New Brunswick, who has served as chairman of the board since its inception on January 24 of this year, will continue to be a member of the board until his term expires on January 24, 1965. He will be eligible for reappointment for a three year term.

The other members of the present board, Mr. Frank Sobey of Stellarton, Nova Scotia, Mr. Melvin McQuaid of Souris, Prince Edward Island, Mr. Fred Ayre of St. John's, Newfoundland and Mr. Donat LaLande of Moncton, New Brunswick, will serve on the board until January 24, 1964, and they too are eligible for reappointment.

Succeeding appointments to the board will be for terms of three years, the initial appointments having been made, as the act provides, for varying periods of time so that the membership of the board will not change completely in any one year.

I am very happy, Mr. Speaker, to be able to announce these appointments. The new members, I am sure, will bring to the board great ability and a wide diversity of experience in many facets of the economic and social life of the four Atlantic provinces. I am very grateful to the new members and to the old for their agreement to serve on this board and I am grateful too that the board will not lose the valuable services of the original members.

I may say, sir, that I have arranged to have a meeting of the board in Halifax on Tuesday at which I hope to be present myself. I would envisage a short open session before the board goes on with its business session, and I am quite confident that any members from the Atlantic provinces who would wish to be there for the first part of the session and could find it convenient to be in Halifax would be most welcome.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I might ask the minister a question, and in asking it I do not want to be misunderstood because I think the appointments are good ones. Is the minister aware that there does not seem to be a representative from the greater Saint John area in spite of the fact that southern New Brunswick is recognized by everybody to be the industrial centre of the Atlantic provinces?

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. member is quite right and it is quite a serious omission. Perhaps it will be considered by some hon. gentlemen in that corner of the house to justify their view that there should have been 15 members on the board instead of 11. But a real effort was made to take account of geographical as well as other considerations. I am sorry to say that not every occupational group is represented.

Mr. Crouse: Agriculture?

Mr. Pickersgill: There are several members of the board with experience in agriculture, including Mr. Burke. I admit he has spent quite a lot of his time in the air in recent years, but he told me the other day he spent the first 21 years of his life on a farm outside Charlottetown and he has never been very far from the farm since. I would imagine that Mr. McQuaid also has some knowledge of agriculture. Of course, Prince Edward Island is, I suppose, the paramount agricultural part of the Atlantic provinces, though I see the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) shaking his head.

Mr. Nowlan: Go easy. I do not want to have to make a speech.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, Prince Edward Island is a little larger than the valley.

COMMITTEES OF THE HOUSE

Tenth report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. Wahn.

Eighth report of standing committee on banking and commerce—Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace).

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Edmund Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace): Mr. Speaker, if we are still on motions, by unanimous consent I move seconded by Mr. Moreau:

That Bills S-33 and S-34, reported this day by the standing committee on banking and commerce, be placed on the order paper for consideration in committee of the whole later this day.

Motion agreed to.

Private Bills

Mr. Ian Grant Wahn (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker pursuant to standing order 75, by unanimous consent I move, seconded by Mr. Moreau:

That Bills SD-252 to SD-356, both inclusive, reported this day by the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills, be placed on the order paper for consideration by the committee of the whole later this day immediately after order No. 1 on private bills.

Motion agreed to.

GOOD NEWS BROADCASTING ASSOCIATION OF CANADA

On the order:

Private bills—Consideration of Bill S-15, an act to incorporate the Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada.—Mr. Enns.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I believe the understanding that was reached at four o'clock was that the first bills that would be taken would be the divorce bills to be followed by any other private bills to which the house was willing to agree.

Order stands.

DIVORCE BILLS

The house in committee on Bills Nos. SD-252 to SD-356 inclusive, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clauses 1—Marriage dissolved.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, as these bills were not before us the other day and because of the fact they have been before parliament on previous occasions, can the chairman of the standing committee assure us that the committee has checked to see whether there are affidavits of the current session indicating that these parties still want to proceed with the divorce actions? Also, could he inform the house whether or not notices have been sent informing these people that if they wish to contest these cases they may do so?

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Chairman, we received the usual report from the other place that the usual affidavits have been received, that these bills we are now dealing with are completely regular, that the petitioners wish to proceed and that there has been no change since they were originally considered in the other place. The committee considered these bills this afternoon and considered the bills to be completely in order.

Mr. Peters: We are not objecting to them, but I believe there will be other bills. It is very important that when we are finally disposing of these bills we do not make any mistake by divorcing someone who does not wish to be divorced or someone who is dead or something of that nature. The committee might feel that this could not possibly happen, but it can. Without this assurance from the committee we are taking a great deal for granted. I only hope that parliament will have the power to remedy any mistake that is made in this regard. It really would not matter to someone who was deceased, but if someone intended to contest a divorce and notice had not been given, I think we might run into some difficulty.

Clauses agreed to.

Preambles agreed to.

Titles agreed to.

Bills reported, and read the third time and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. S-26, respecting Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company—Mr. Granger.

Bill No. S-35, respecting the Crown Life Insurance Company—Mr. Addison.

Bill No. S-30, respecting the Monarch Life Assurance Company—Mrs. Konantz.

Bill No. S-31, respecting The Canadian Manufacturers' Association—Mr. Wahn.

Bill No. S-33, respecting The Canada Accident and Fire Assurance Company—Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace).

Bill No. S-34, respecting The National Life Assurance Company of Canada—Mr. Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace).

DIVORCE

AUTHORIZATION FOR SENATE TO DISSOLVE OR ANNUL MARRIAGES—CONCURRENCE IN SENATE AMENDMENTS

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am informed that Bill No. C-93 has been returned from the other place with certain amendments proposed from that place, which Your Honour communicated to us earlier this evening. It was no part of the agreement reached at four o'clock this afternoon that we should consider this matter, and therefore I feel I should ask whether the house is prepared at this time to consider the amendments proposed by the Senate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, on the basis of the consultation that has taken place I would suggest that we proceed with the bill as it has been sent back amended to the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce) moved the second reading of and concurrence in amendments made by the Senate to Bill No. C-93, authorizing the Senate of Canada to dissolve or annul marriages.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I suggest we hesitate a moment. I think there are consultations that might lead to an acceptable consequential amendment.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, the five amendments made in the other place this afternoon are ones with which we are pleased to agree, with one change. The change would be in the fourth recommendation, on page 2, line 11, and I move, seconded by Mr. Knowles:

Page 2 lines 11 to 21 inclusive. Strike out clause 3 and substitute the following:

3. The Senate shall adopt a resolution for the dissolution or annulment of a marriage only upon referring the petition therefor to an officer of the Senate, designated by the Speaker of the Senate, who shall hear evidence, and report thereon, but such officer shall not recommend that a marriage be dissolved or annulled except on a ground on which a marriage could be dissolved or annulled, as the case may be, under the laws of England as they existed on the 15th day of July, 1870, or under the Marriage and Divorce Act, chapter 176 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1952.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am given to understand that the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) would probably be acceptable in another place. It seems to me, and such advice as I have been able to receive suggests that it is an improvement on the amendment suggested by the Senate. Speaking for myself I would hope that the house might see fit to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for amending the Senate amendment and sending it back to Their Honours in the hope that this matter might be finally determined before the royal assent tonight.

Mr. Winkler: I think that the manner in which it has been presented is absolutely correct, and I agree that we proceed in this manner, especially now that we have the assurance by the Secretary of State, who has more influence in another quarter than I do.

Amendment agreed to.

Motion as amended agreed to, amendments read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not know, sir, whether I would be regarded as a Simon Legree; however, I see the Minister of Labour is not here. I was going to suggest that we take his resolution.

Mr. Churchill: Suspend the sitting.

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

SUMMER ADJOURNMENT—MOTION TO RESUME ON SEPTEMBER 30.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, before we suspend the sitting I would like to make a motion governing the time of adjournment so that it would not have to be done when we come back from the other place. If that is agreeable to the house I move, seconded by Mr. Denis:

That when this house adjourns later today, it stand adjourned until Monday, September 30, 1963 at 2.30 o'clock p.m., provided always that if it appears to the satisfaction of Mr. Speaker after consultation with Her Majesty's government that the public interest requires that the house should meet at an earlier time during the adjournment, Mr. Speaker may give notice that he is so satisfied and thereupon the house shall meet at the time stated in such notice and shall transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time.

This, I may say, is the form of words that has been used on certain other occasions when the house was somewhat apprehensive that there might be a need to meet before the set date of adjournment. I think it is within the knowledge of all hon. members that the statement made yesterday by the Minister of Labour indicated this was a contingency of which the house should take account in taking its adjournment.

Mr. Knowles: Perhaps it should be clear, Mr. Speaker, that we could be called back earlier for any contingency that might satisfy Mr. Speaker, and not just for the one the minister mentioned.

Mr. Pickersgill: Far be it from me, sir, to presume to say what would satisfy Your Honour.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest, if there is no more business, that we suspend the sitting upon the call of the Chair and the ringing of the bells. But before we do that, in the best tradition of the house may I congratulate all hon. members upon the good work they have been doing for many weeks, the rather difficult problems faced, the hot weather endured, the dehydration suffered; and with the idea of trying to repair some of the damage may I have the pleasure of inviting all members of the House of Commons and of the press to join with me in room 16 just as soon as possible.

At 9.26 p.m. the sitting was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The house resumed at 10.15 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Royal Assent

Ottawa, August 2, 1963

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Wilfred Judson, Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today at ten o'clock p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier,
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act respecting The Sovereign Life Assurance Company of Canada.

An act to amend the Senate and House of Commons Act and the Members of Parliament Retiring Allowances Act.

An act to provide for the establishment of an Economic Council of Canada.

An act to amend the Excise Tax Act.

An act to promote increased employment in Canada by financial assistance by way of loans to municipalities to enable municipalities to augment or accelerate municipal capital works programs.

An act authorizing the Senate of Canada to Dissolve or Annul Marriages.

An act respecting Co-operative Fire and Casualty Company.

An act respecting The Monarch Life Assurance Company.

An act respecting The Crown Life Insurance Company.

An act respecting The Canadian Manufacturers' Association.

An act respecting The National Life Assurance Company of Canada.

An act respecting The Canada Accident and Fire Assurance Company.

An act for the relief of Margaret Catherine Smith.

An act for the relief of Gladys Noreen Monette.

An act for the relief of Joseph Leo Gerard Bougie.

An act for the relief of Nicholas Cimbru Chambers.

An act for the relief of Suzanne Chasse.

An act for the relief of Esther Wertheimer.

An act for the relief of Lygery Varverikos.

An act for the relief of Frank Hamilton Mingie, junior.

An act for the relief of Rosemary Beatrice Clare.

An act for the relief of Marie-Paule Jacqueline Lorette Champagne.

An act for the relief of Klara Brody.

An act for the relief of Bernice Bordensky.

An act for the relief of Jacqueline Belanger.

An act for the relief of Christina Aube.

An act for the relief of Brigitte Dophide.

[Mr. Speaker.]

An act for the relief of Anita Margaret d'Esterre.

An act for the relief of Gladys Jean Desjardins.

An act for the relief of Sylvia Dankner.

An act for the relief of Florence Patricia Da Silva.

An act for the relief of Judith MacBeth Cuggy.

An act for the relief of Giuseppe de Cristoforo.

An act for the relief of Beverley Hayden Crerar.

An act for the relief of Paulyn Leblanc.

An act for the relief of Gabriela Kiwitt.

An act for the relief of Dorothea Margaret Kay.

An act for the relief of Wilma Karls.

An act for the relief of Felix Hollinger.

An act for the relief of Abie Herscovitch, otherwise known as Allan Herscovitch.

An act for the relief of Doris Sibyl Jane Hassell.

An act for the relief of Ezreh Harry Herscovitch.

An act for the relief of Robert Fleischer.

An act for the relief of William Rankin Edmondson.

An act for the relief of Leonard Emond.

An act for the relief of Dorothy Irene Marjorie Adams.

An act for the relief of Zbigniew Stanislaw Janicki.

An act for the relief of Harry Hyman.

An act for the relief of Nadia-Anne Hruszij.

An act for the relief of Christine Johnson.

An act for the relief of Arlene June Kaczur.

An act for the relief of Mary Teresa Hough.

An act for the relief of Bernard Hebert.

An act for the relief of Catherine Harper.

An act for the relief of Wilhelmina Grundy.

An act for the relief of Edith Diane Greenberg.

An act for the relief of Catherine Mildred Gray.

An act for the relief of Nancy Ruth Grabina.

An act for the relief of Lucille Goresky.

An act for the relief of Constance Valerie Laurie.

An act for the relief of Ellen Chase McKellar.

An act for the relief of Angus McIntosh.

An act for the relief of Claude Gerard Montpetit.

An act for the relief of Maureen Carol McAlinden.

An act for the relief of Vera Irene MacKenzie.

An act for the relief of Marguerite Ann MacDonald.

An act for the relief of Sybil Lillian Lupovich.

An act for the relief of Minnie Lichtenstein.

An act for the relief of Jean Bernard L'Heureux.

An act for the relief of Margaret Ada Lewis.

An act for the relief of Violet Pearl St. James Lamoine.

An act for the relief of Mildred Kligman.

An act for the relief of Zelda Barbara Kimberg.

An act for the relief of Margaret Ann Kenwood.

An act for the relief of Madeleine Kallweit.

An act for the relief of Philippe LeBeau.

An act for the relief of Joyce Irene Larocque.

An act for the relief of Elizabeth Anne Kotania.

An act for the relief of Marie Celine Pierrette Lapointe.

An act for the relief of Shirley Sarah James.

An act for the relief of Lena Quelle.

An act for the relief of Charles Harold Page.

An act for the relief of Rosa Jacobson.

An act for the relief of Patricia Ann Marguerite Allaway.

An act for the relief of Marylin Jean Alie.

An act for the relief of Juliana Magdelene Ashley.

An act for the relief of Alphonse Audet.

An act for the relief of Denise Bachelder.

An act for the relief of Alma Ivy Bankley.

An act for the relief of Edouard Joseph Armand Baril.

An act for the relief of Therese Beaulieu.

An act for the relief of Jeannie Belchik.

An act for the relief of John Faucher.

An act for the relief of Ruth Ilona Elkin.

An act for the relief of Hazel Durocher.

An act for the relief of Jean Helen Donnan.

An act for the relief of Margaret Joan Digby.

Royal Assent

An act for the relief of Joseph Paul Alderic Belisle.
An act for the relief of Guy Bertrand.
An act for the relief of Pamela Blair.
An act for the relief of Kenneth Allen Blight.
An act for the relief of Marie Yvonne Lucie Godard.
An act for the relief of Marie Augustine Jeannette Gibbs.
An act for the relief of Nicole Marie Geoffroy.
An act for the relief of Susan Gabor.
An act for the relief of Alexandra Deliyannakis.
An act for the relief of Joseph Fortin Decelles.
An act for the relief of Josephine Mary Croll.
An act for the relief of Anita Cleri.
An act for the relief of Alice Elizabeth Clarke.
An act for the relief of Judith Elizabeth Caron.
An act for the relief of Collin Mills Campbell.
An act for the relief of Lorraine Burt.
An act for the relief of Linda Alice Burrows.
An act for the relief of Gerhard Hermann Buchholz.
An act for the relief of Wilma Gloria Bryson.
An act for the relief of Joseph Luc Roger Pelletier.
An act for the relief of Clara Edith Papp.
An act for the relief of Frances Cynthia Nevitt.
An act for the relief of Betty Naimovitch, otherwise known as Betty Naimo.
An act for the relief of Elsa Munch.
An act for the relief of Mildred Dawson Meakins.
An act for the relief of Margaret Rose McDuff.
An act for the relief of Vickie Marks.
An act for the relief of John Elijah Marshalluk.
An act for the relief of Jean Letovsky.
An act for the relief of Lee Leopold.
An act for the relief of Guy Lefebvre.
An act for the relief of Kate Gillman.
An act for the relief of Margarete Gerda Ruhnau.
An act for the relief of Catherine Gerasimos Andrulakis.
An act for the relief of John Joseph Huitson.
An act for the relief of Suzi Elizabeth Perry.
An act for the relief of Vivian Geoffrey Power.
An act for the relief of Gordon Richard Alexander Ramsden.
An act for the relief of Gertrude Lindener.
An act for the relief of Marie Aline Martine France.
An act for the relief of Shirley Margaret Woolley.
An act for the relief of James Richard Williamson.
An act for the relief of Isadore Titleman.
An act for the relief of Lloyd James Simpson.
An act for the relief of Lilly (Lillian) Shapiro.
An act for the relief of Blima (Wendy) Shapiro.
An act for the relief of Marie Theresa Sckyra.
An act for the relief of Anne Marion Prentice.
An act for the relief of Patricia Marjorie Maisonet.
An act for the relief of Jennie Zajko.
An act for the relief of Pawel Olejnik.
An act for the relief of Millicent Vera Seagrove.
An act for the relief of Patricia Sabetta.
An act for the relief of Isadore Rosenblatt.
An act for the relief of Calvin Harold Robinson.
An act for the relief of Real Richard.
An act for the relief of Louisa Emily Elizabeth Porter.
An act for the relief of Eva Florence Plaskett.
An act for the relief of Madge Estelle Pinkerton.
An act for the relief of Allan Barry Phillips.
An act for the relief of Paul Parizeau.
An act for the relief of Jean Elizabeth O'Reilly.
An act for the relief of Josephine Rose Nawrocki.
An act for the relief of Valerie Jean Morton.
An act for the relief of Franklin Dale Hufford.
An act for the relief of Carroll Lynne Milette.
An act for the relief of Evelyne Millette.
An act for the relief of Leo Rene Maranda.
An act for the relief of Edward Sidney Mansfield.
An act for the relief of Elizabeth Angela Stirling.
An act for the relief of Patricia Ann Small.
An act for the relief of Jeanette Rosenberg.
An act for the relief of Phyllis Siev.
An act for the relief of Maurice Sealy.
An act for the relief of Helena Jadwiga Igiel Wodnicki.
An act for the relief of Amira Wilson.
An act for the relief of Hyman Omri Tannenbaum.
An act for the relief of Doris Irene Trerice.
An act for the relief of Glen Stewart Tornay.
An act for the relief of Audrey Barbara Sutton.
An act for the relief of Adele Kathleen Strachan.
An act for the relief of Bertha Staruch.
An act for the relief of Mihaly Szakacs.
An act for the relief of Doreen Dreyer Eastwood.
An act for the relief of Jacques Ekaireb.
An act for the relief of Rosaire Gauthier.
An act for the relief of Gertraud Holzer.
An act for the relief of Marie Joan Patricia Jeffries.
An act for the relief of Anita Guido Knezevic.
An act for the relief of Celia Lesnik.
An act for the relief of Joan Mary Pearson.
An act for the relief of Georgine Plzak.
An act for the relief of Marcelle Rosenberg.
An act for the relief of Helen Beverley Sabo.
An act for the relief of Ruby Rita Smith.
An act for the relief of Marketa Tata.
An act for the relief of Ellen Smolar.
An act for the relief of Carmen Abrams.
An act for the relief of Margaret Ellynore Abbott.
An act for the relief of John Andre Anderson.
An act for the relief of Anne Marie Asselin.
An act for the relief of Percy Beauvais.
An act for the relief of Shirley Brimacombe.
An act for the relief of James Coade.
An act for the relief of Ann Marie Cooke.
An act for the relief of Kathleen Sangster.
An act for the relief of Margot Scott Connor.
An act for the relief of Stasys Vysniauskas.
An act for the relief of Francoise Campion.
An act for the relief of Claire Bradford.
An act for the relief of Sylvia Evelyn Lyon.
An act for the relief of Gerald William Henderson.
An act for the relief of May Margaret Morelli.
An act for the relief of Franz Zeitlhofer.
An act for the relief of Lily (Laura) Anita Karbelnik.
An act for the relief of John Matthew Hardman Pickford.
An act for the relief of Jean Alice Rinder.
An act for the relief of Donald Beakes.
An act for the relief of Guy Bertrand.
An act for the relief of Lloyd Carlton Willard.
An act for the relief of Francis John Nobbs.
An act for the relief of Marie Jacqueline Dusablon.
An act for the relief of Helen Oulton.
An act for the relief of Gwendolyn Grace Lanctot.
An act for the relief of Margaret Kathleen Lister.
An act for the relief of Judith Joy Spector.
An act for the relief of Myrtle Alice Southwood.
An act for the relief of Teresa Lesiuk.
An act for the relief of Ion Ignatescu.
An act for the relief of Mary Gallagher.
An act for the relief of Mary Catherine Weatherby.
An act for the relief of Linnea Erna Barbara Walker.
An act for the relief of Rhoda Lipschutz.
An act for the relief of Leslie Thomas Norval Modler.
An act for the relief of Lajos Nagy, otherwise known as Louis Nagy.
An act for the relief of Paul Orlivsky.

Royal Assent

An act for the relief of Marie Jeannne Beaulieu.
An act for the relief of Rachela Zimber.
An act for the relief of Jacqueline Henriette Pujol.
An act for the relief of Rebecca Rosenstrauss.
An act for the relief of Irene Tyminski.
An act for the relief of Frances Lyman.
An act for the relief of Andre Durocher.
An act for the relief of Anna Elizabeth Strickland.
An act for the relief of Michele Breuer.
An act for the relief of Magella Bergeron.
An act for the relief of Lucien DeCoeur.
An act for the relief of Marie Henriette Antoinette Marguerite Bloodworth Pringle.
An act for the relief of John Joseph Laflamme.
An act for the relief of Eliane Trottier.
An act for the relief of Sylvia Bertha Spires.
An act for the relief of Albert Henry Grabeldinger Willis.
An act for the relief of Ivy Elizabeth Sherry.
An act for the relief of Susanne Reiner.
An act for the relief of Elaine Redmond.
An act for the relief of Paul Emile Niquette.
An act for the relief of Robert Fernand Marcoux.
An act for the relief of Harold Moreau.
An act for the relief of Philip Dalgleish.
An act for the relief of Daniel Gaston Jules Caron.
An act for the relief of Alexander Burke.
An act for the relief of Aurella Breard.
An act for the relief of Laurier Allain.
An act for the relief of Agnes Agai.
An act for the relief of David Filmore Sadler.
An act for the relief of George Mantadakis.
An act for the relief of Patricia Beverley Dineo.
An act for the relief of Marie Emilia Rolande Gittens.
An act for the relief of Barbara Gladys Gregory.
An act for the relief of Julianna Gulyas.
An act for the relief of Edith Herman.
An act for the relief of Olga Rapoport.
An act for the relief of Nellie Rothman.
An act for the relief of Virginia Ruth Parmiter.
An act for the relief of Paul Aime Bedard.
An act for the relief of James Robert Breslin.
An act for the relief of Soshy Judith Marcovitz.
An act for the relief of Robert Charles Chapman.
An act for the relief of Werner Burke Michelsen.
An act for the relief of Dorothy Estelle Lord.
An act for the relief of Jean Alexandria Etheridge.
An act for the relief of Elizabeth Cowan Frawley.
An act for the relief of Anita Klaiman.
An act for the relief of Haia (Clara) Fuchsman.
An act for the relief of Georgiana Brasseur.
An act for the relief of Dorothy Doreen Howell.
An act for the relief of Molly Sacks.
An act for the relief of Frances Sheila Madden.
An act for the relief of Marie Raymonde Violetta Dalpe.
An act for the relief of Ginette Ingrid Leopold.
An act for the relief of Kathleen Ryan.
An act for the relief of Anna Annette Brahmi.
An act for the relief of Rochelle Caplan.
An act for the relief of Edna Belchem.
An act for the relief of Therese Genest.
An act for the relief of Robert Harrison.
An act for the relief of William Joseph Rowe.
An act for the relief of Cecile Caille.
An act for the relief of Robert Inglis, junior.
An act for the relief of Beverly Anne Runions.
An act for the relief of Anton Welte.
An act for the relief of Leo Paul Turcotte.
An act for the relief of Marie-Louise Guay.
An act for the relief of Marsha Liberman.
An act for the relief of Sylvia Socaranski.
An act for the relief of Sheila Liebling.
An act for the relief of Joan Marjorie Gregor-Pearse.

[Mr. Speaker.]

An act for the relief of Giselle Mignault.
An act for the relief of Hugh O'Connor.
An act for the relief of Ruth Moss.
An act for the relief of Dora Elfriede Elizabeth Christian Kovacs, otherwise known as Dora Elfriede Elizabeth Christian Kovac.
An act for the relief of Maurice LeBel.
An act for the relief of Sonja Bagry.
An act for the relief of Therese Beaudoin.
An act for the relief of Ella Jane Lyon.
An act for the relief of Maria Lenkei, otherwise known as Maria Leichtag.
An act for the relief of Doris Elinor Roberts.
An act for the relief of June Blickstead.
An act for the relief of Angelika Tasler.
An act for the relief of Hale Calvin Reid.
An act for the relief of Jeannine Elizabeth Sharpe.
An act for the relief of Olga Antonina Burkousky.
An act for the relief of Evelyn Frances Rae.
An act for the relief of Kenneth James Graham Tait.
An act for the relief of Margaret Elaine Gallagher.
An act for the relief of Joyce Ethel Empey.
An act for the relief of Roger Bernard Angel.
An act for the relief of Marie Claire Rolande Dubois.
An act for the relief of Jean Guy Prud'homme.
An act for the relief of Gilles Graveline.
An act for the relief of Ingeborg Schmidt.
An act for the relief of Margaret Clewes.
An act for the relief of Patricia Hilton.
An act for the relief of Vida Irene Louise McCallum.
An act for the relief of Karl Heinz Schulte.
An act for the relief of Beverley Trachtenberg, otherwise known as Beverley Tratt.
An act for the relief of Monique Mercure.
An act for the relief of Eli Kraus.
An act for the relief of Edouard Pellerin.
An act for the relief of John Andrew Milne.
An act for the relief of Alethea Sarah Ivy Fowler.
An act for the relief of Marcheta Lino Edwards.
An act for the relief of Gwynneth Margaret Forget.
An act for the relief of Joan Reid Koken.
An act for the relief of Eloise Sonne.
An act for the relief of Jean Ilene Buckley.
An act for the relief of Anna May Sergent.
An act for the relief of Karl Heinz Wunderlich.
An act for the relief of Margaret Anne Harvey.
An act for the relief of Josephine Isabella Geiger.
An act for the relief of Barbara Ann Wallace.
An act for the relief of Thelma Freeman.
An act for the relief of Karl Heinz Kerlikowsky.
An act for the relief of Aranka Ilona Berendy.
An act for the relief of Muriel Howarth Hulbig.
An act for the relief of Amy Sandra Glendinning.
An act for the relief of Dorothy Alice Usher.
An act for the relief of Suzanne Moreau.
An act for the relief of Phyllis Carol Johnston.
An act for the relief of Lillian Florence Catherine Hurst.
An act for the relief of Armand Gauthier.
An act for the relief of Maria Papadakis.
An act for the relief of Anna Luella Matthews.
An act for the relief of Dawn Dorothea Marsden.
An act for the relief of Donna Maureen Vincent.
An act for the relief of Therese Geraldeau.
An act for the relief of Gizella Ethel Bogoly.
An act for the relief of Simonne Michele Mona Bouchard.
An act for the relief of Therese Rivet.
An act for the relief of Irene Elizabeth Malloch.
An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1964.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think that before I make a motion for adjournment I should like, if I may be permitted to do so, to say a word to all hon. members and especially to Your Honour about what I think has been the remarkable way in which we have terminated this part of the session in these last few days. It does seem to me that, although there have been one or two hot days when the heat was reflected in this chamber, the spirit of co-operation which, I hope, will grow in the latter part of the session, was most evident. As I look over the items which are on the order paper and those which my colleagues insist must be put on it before we adjourn for Christmas, I assure you, sir, that I hope we can take it that every question will be in order, that they will all be short, and that the answers will be shorter still; in fact that we shall get down to business and surprise all of us by getting out in November instead of in December.

I think the events of the last day or so mark a stage in the development of our national institutions. I say this because we have all been conscious of the fact, in the last few years, that there was a duty before this house which was not being performed and which, perhaps, could not be performed. Except for a short backlog which will be dealt with before the present session is over, that is no longer a duty of this house, and I think our consciences will be little easier for that.

I think we all appreciate, sir, the spirit in which you have presided over our deliberations in these first 56 days. It is our hope that before the 100th day of the session is reached we may all go home with the feeling that we have done well for our country.

Mr. Churchill: I should like to associate myself with the non-controversial remarks of the leader of the house in complimenting you on your conduct of the business of this house in circumstances which were, at times, very trying. We fully appreciate the problems which have faced you and the success with which you have kept this institution on the level we expect of it. With all members of the house I also join with the house leader in using that adjective "remarkable" which can be interpreted in many ways. It has been a remarkable session, and our hope is that when the session opens again in the fall we will be able to expect the same interest, activity and vigour that we have shown during the 56 days that have elapsed. I should point out to the Secretary of State that if we commence on the 30th of September and conclude on the 20th of December, which is possible, that would be a 60 day period. With these few remarks, Mr. Speaker, we are anxiously waiting to see you in another place.

Royal Assent

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I just rise to say that we too are pleased that we have been able to make the progress we have, especially in the last few hours, and we would hope that when we commence again we would have the momentum that we had when we adjourned for the recess. If so, I think that the wishes of hon. gentlemen across the way will be carried out. I should like to say on behalf of our group, Mr. Speaker, that we are very pleased with the way in which you have conducted the business of the house and through you we would like to present our best wishes to your deputy and to the deputy chairman of committees.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are happy to join in the unanimity that we are enjoying in these closing moments of this part of the session. We are happy to join in the felicitations to Your Honour and through Your Honour to all members of the house. We too are pleased with the progress that has been made in recent days and we look forward to our return at the end of September or earlier, as the case may be. If the government will just bring in the kind of legislation that all members of the house want to support, the co-operation will be wonderful and we could well have one of the best sessions we have ever had in the history of the country.

(Translation):

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, may I add a few words in French to wish you, and all hon. members and staff, "bonnes vacances".

I am convinced that for two or three days, at least, members will not be asking me for post offices or mail contracts. On the other hand, I am sure they will go through their ridings to find out if new post offices could not be erected somewhere or new mail contracts awarded.

When all those requests have been received, there will surely be enough post offices in Canada.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: May I just include in these kind remarks the Clerk and the Clerk Assistants. We in turn thank you. We try to do our best. Sometimes in the last few days there has been fairly vigorous activity, and I should like to extend a Scotch invitation to cross the hall to room 16 just as soon as we have completed the proceedings.

On motion of Mr. Pickersgill the house adjourned at 10.56 p.m. until Monday, September 30.

END OF VOLUME III