POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SIGNING OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague the Secretary of State for allowing me to speak first. In order to meet an agreement with the premier of British Columbia I have to observe a time schedule.

The governments of Canada and British Columbia have signed an agreement setting forth in detail the basis on which the development of the Columbia river in Canada will be carried out, when and if satisfactory arrangements are concluded with the United States.

The agreement, dated July 8, 1963, was signed on behalf of Canada by the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It was signed on behalf of British Columbia by the premier, Hon. W. A. C. Bennett and Hon. R. G. Williston, minister of lands, forests and water resources.

The treaty between Canada and the United States relating to the development of the water resources of the Columbia river basin was signed on January 17, 1961. While it was approved by the United States senate preparatory to ratification by the United States, final action looking toward ratification by Canada was held up following signature because of lack of agreement in Canada concerning certain aspects of the development. In addition to the questions outstanding between the governments of Canada and British Columbia, the Prime Minister indicated to the President of the United States, in their meeting at Hyannis Port, that certain clarifications and adjustments would be necessary in the treaty arrangements between Canada and the United States before ratification could take place.

Resolution of all points of disagreement between the federal and provincial governments was the first stage, and I am happy to say this has now been accomplished.

The agreement, which is being released simultaneously with this announcement, provides in detail for the rights and obligations of the federal government and the provincial government respectively in the execution of the Columbia river development when the necessary modifications to the treaty have been made and its ratification takes place. The agreement provides that the protocol regarding the treaty arrangements, when worked out with the United States, shall form a part of the agreement between Canada and British Columbia.

The agreement contemplates a sale of the Canadian share of downstream power benefits to the United States, subject to the negotiation of a satisfactory price and other suitable terms which will ensure savings in the cost of electric power in British Columbia. The exact period of the sale will be one of the matters for negotiation with the United States. The sale arrangement, and therefore the entire agreement, are entirely contingent upon the negotiation of acceptable terms with the United States. The arrangements for sale, when worked out, will form an integral part of the agreement.

The agreement provides that in accordance with its constitutional position as owner of the resources in question, British Columbia, will have title to the benefits arising out of the development. In turn British Columbia undertakes to carry out all aspects of the construction and operation of the treaty projects and assumes full responsibility for their financing through the use of funds derived in the United States from the sale of the downstream power benefits and from the flood control benefits, together with funds from other sources as required. British Columbia also undertakes to assume financial responsibility for any liability that might arise under the treaty in relation to the United States unless the cause of the liability were directly attributable to Canada.

The agreement provides for the use of Canadian labour and materials to the full extent to which they are procurable consistent with proper economy and expeditious action.

Now that agreement has been reached between the federal and provincial governments, negotiations for modification of the treaty will be undertaken as quickly as possible with the United States. If agreement can be reached on points other than the sale arrangement, discussion will then take place on the terms on which the Canadian downstream power benefits might be sold in the United States. If these matters can be settled satisfactorily all provisions relating to them, the treaty itself and agreement with British Columbia will then be submitted to parliament for its consideration.

Meanwhile, Mr. Speaker, I am tabling the agreement, in French and English, for the information of the house.

Mr. J. A. Byrne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether it would meet the wishes of the house, for the convenience of the house and the public, if this agreement were printed in Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: for text of document referred to above, see appendix "A".]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is naturally very difficult to follow a detailed statement such as the house has just listened to, but certain general remarks can be made. It will have been noticed that the minister emphasized the fact that the sale of downstream benefits is to be subject to securing appropriate terms. Near the end of his remarks the minister again referred to the fact that everything in connection with this agreement is dependant upon the attainment of terms that are mutually satisfactory.

It is clear therefore from what the minister has said that the agreement entered into, while I have not had an opportunity of perusing it, covers mainly the details of operation and the contractual position as between Canada and British Columbia regarding the discharge of Canada's obligations under the treaty. It should be emphasized that the whole problem is still in an uncertain state. While an agreement has been entered into between British Columbia and the government of the Dominion of Canada there are, in fact, matters of detail which will have to be implemented after being determined.

Mention was made of the fact that the treaty was signed on January 17, 1961. I would bring to the attention of the house the fact that when that treaty was signed there was agreement as between the government of British Columbia and the government of Canada. We signed the treaty on the basis of the arrangements that had been agreed to between the governments of Canada and the province of British Columbia and it was only after the treaty was signed that Premier Bennett of British Columbia determined on a course different from that to which he had earlier agreed through his representative, Hon. Ray Williston.

It is quite apparent from what has been said that the treaty cannot be implemented unless there is a further protocol entered into with the United States. As the minister spoke

I was impressed by the fact that although he said an agreement had been arrived at, what he said stayed far away from saying that a final agreement had been reached, for there are many terms or changes which will have to be agreed to.

Final agreement with United States will have to cover the terms and conditions of the sale of Canada's share of Columbia power which the treaty secures and which, were it not for this new policy, would be available for use in British Columbia. Indeed, one of the major objectives of the treaty was that downstream benefits would be so much cheaper than power produced elsewhere that a major portion thereof would be returned to British Columbia in the interests of the development of industry within that province.

I think the house and the country should be advised now as to what the position of the government would be with regard to the price to be obtained. There is delightful uncertainty in this regard in the statement made by the minister. There should be also information as to the period during which Canada will forgo its entitlement, and the provisions which have been made for recapture. The house should also be advised at once of the precise nature of any changes in the provisions of the treaty to which the government is prepared to agree in its negotiations with the United States. If the changes are of such insignificance that they would not be submitted to the United States Senate we can only conclude that they are lacking in substance.

We are entitled to an immediate estimate of the time which will elapse before ratification can be effected and construction can begin. Until this information is made available to us no one, I am sure, could possibly express any final opinion on the deal which has been made. What can be said is that great care will have to be exercised to ensure that the real interest, the economic interest, in Canada's future destiny, as well as that of British Columbia in obtaining an abundant flow of low cost power, is not being bartered away for immediate political advantage.

This is one of those things to which reference was made by the Prime Minister during the election campaign. He was going to renegotiate the treaty with the United States. What we have now is far removed from a renegotiation of the treaty. What the government is now contemplating are some additional clauses which may be embodied in a protocol, rather than a renegotiation of the treaty itself. The course now being followed—and I think this can be said without fear of controversy—at Mr. Bennett's insistence means a lengthy delay before the treaty can be implemented and construction can begin. If Premier Bennett had carried out the arrangements he made through Mr. Williston before the treaty was signed, this project would have been under way long since. He scuppered it and made it impossible to proceed without delay with the project as we had hoped. If the original policy had been followed as between Canada, the United States and British Columbia the deals now being made would not have been necessary. Actual construction, with all its consequent advantages in terms of 31 million man hours of employment and the benefits of an immediate supply of low cost power, would now be accruing to the people of British Columbia.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, we are very glad indeed that the time has come when we are able to receive the report which we have just received from the Secretary of State for External Affairs on this very important question. The two men who were mentioned in the report, Mr. Williston and the premier of British Columbia, I think it can be said without a doubt are outstanding men in Canada today and are recognized as such. I hear murmurings from hon. members in the official opposition, and well might they murmur in view of the results they produced over the last few years in connection with this treaty.

The people of British Columbia are going to welcome this announcement. I should like to say in connection with the announcement and some of the remarks made by the leader of the official opposition, that the people are looking for action in this matter, and when it comes to playing politics I think it can be readily said and understood by most people in British Columbia, and in fact in other parts of Canada, that they know very well where the politics were being played in this connection.

Mr. Peters: We sure do.

Mr. Leboe: The hon. gentleman who left the House of Commons, who was removed from a negotiation post, has not gone unnoticed by the people of Canada, certainly not by the people of British Columbia. We are pleased to note from the statement that was made today and from statements made previously that the changes to the treaty itself are going to be of a minor nature. We are all aware of the statement made by the minister in connection with the sale of downstream benefits, and I think this is the important point which has to be considered. As a matter of fact it is the important point. If we are going to have a proper price range for the downstream benefits, surely this has to be negotiated to the best advantage of Canadians and the people of British Columbia. Therefore I have every confidence, as I think hon. members generally have, in Mr. Williston's ability and also that of the premier of British Columbia in this connection.

As far as the final chapter of this Columbia river treaty is concerned, and its writing, we expect that there will be action taken very shortly in connection with the negotiations with the United States.

I should just like to say in closing that while we talk of great delays in the development of the Columbia river, those who are equipped with the facts know that the Columbia river development has been going on and is still going on, and there has been very little time actually lost through this because of the fact that the British Columbia government has had faith that the proposition would finally reach the stage where the nine or ten million dollars which has been invested will be returned to them in due course.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak as a Canadian with a completely non-partisan approach to this very important question. This most important statement just made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs is without a doubt the result of the influence of a genial political engineer who is anxious whenever possible to sooth President Kennedy's feelings, and that master of financial, economic and resource manipulation, the premier of British Columbia, whose policy throughout the years has clearly been demonstrated to be one of discounting the future of British Columbia for the political needs of the present.

One must tread rather lightly, Mr. Speaker, when dealing with a read statement. From long experience I find that when listening to the Secretary of State for External Affairs one should not be too definitive until one has had an opportunity to read what he has said, because he makes the impossible appear to be possible by the manner of his delivery, his voice and so on. However, from listening to the Secretary of State for External Affairs I judge that there is little change in the terms of the present treaty. It is purely a question of minor changes, which is what we and many other people had feared. However, I thank the minister for tabling the agreement between the federal government and the government of British Columbia. People will have an opportunity to see what it is.

I presume from what I heard the minister say that this government now considers it has passed the ball back to the premier of British Columbia. It is up to him to get the five mills he said he would get from the United States, and it is up to him to raise the money. I noticed also that the minister made reference to the fact that the treaty would be referred to the external affairs committee, but it appears that the substance of the treaty is going to be referred to the external affairs committee after the fact, when there is an agreement with the government of British Columbia and after agreement has been reached with the government of the United States.

Many Canadians are concerned about the outcome of the discussions between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia. They are concerned about the developments with respect to the coming renegotiation of the treaty with the government of the United States. Before final dealings with the government of British Columbia and the government of the United States we trust that the federal government will peruse first the speeches made in the house last session by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis) and the hon. member for Kootenay East (Mr. Byrne). Second, we trust it will remember that the Liberal party organization in Kootenay West invited General McNaughton to be their candidate in the last election because, as members told me, they supported his point of view, and the candidate who did run in the last election opposed the treaty and expressed strong criticism of some of its terms. Third, I trust that the government will also remember the newspaper articles written by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano during the last election campaign.

I must remind the minister that the trade union movement in British Columbia has expressed its solid opposition to the terms of the present treaty and its solid support for the proposals made by General McNaughton. I must remind the minister that the advisory board of the farmers' institutes of British Columbia have taken a similar stand, as well as many other organizations and groups. I am not going to take the time of the house to refer to all of them. I just want to reemphasize the rank and file opinion in British Columbia. In addition, the leader of the Liberal party in British Columbia has expressed support for General McNaughton's views and has criticized the present treaty and urged renegotiation and changes in accord with the response expressed by the audience he was addressing.

In addition, the western Canada reclamation association at its annual meeting in Kelowna on June 21—it is an organization composed of organizations in British Columbia, Alberta, and Saskatchewan—urged the federal government not to sign the Columbia river treaty with the United States, and many delegates expressed in the strongest terms their support for General McNaughton's statements on this question. Also, only a few days ago the government of Saskatchewan expressed its concern with the terms of the present treaty. I have been told that on the radio this morning the premier of British Columbia used some language when criticizing the government of Saskatchewan that would be used by southerners under other circumstances.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this party and the hundreds of thousands of Canadians who are concerned with developments in respect of this treaty, as well as a substantial number of organizations in British Columbia and other parts of Canada, I urge—

Mr. Thompson: Speak for yourself.

Mr. Herridge: I would not be here if I were speaking just for myself. Let me say, in reply to the leader of the Social Credit party, that the only candidate who supported this treaty without criticism was at the bottom of the polls in Kootenay West, and that was the Social Credit candidate.

I urge, Mr. Speaker, that the present Columbia treaty be referred to the external affairs committee so that engineers, representatives of labour, farm and other organizations, chambers of commerce and resource committees can present their views and give evidence before any final agreement is reached with the government of British Columbia or renegotiation is undertaken with the government of the United States. I must urge the Prime Minister at this time to remember his promise in writing to numerous organizations and individuals in British Columbia that no Liberal government would come to a final decision with regard to this treaty before the interested parties were consulted.

If this treaty is submitted to the external affairs committee after agreement has been reached with the United States, I say frankly the Prime Minister has not kept the promise he made in writing to these people. We urge submission of this treaty to the external affairs committee before any agreement is reached with the government of the United States so that the Canadian people can be given an opportunity to become acquainted with the facts. The more they know of the facts the more they will realize what a serious situation this presents to all Canadians, and to the people of British Columbia in particular.

There is a precedent for this course, and I will give the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) credit for establishing it. He has agreed that the north Pacific fisheries treaty will be referred to the committee on marine and fisheries prior to the government coming to a final conclusion on any agreement with the other countries. I urge the Secretary of State for External Affairs to accept that precedent established by the Minister of Fisheries and send this treaty to the external affairs committee before any final agreement is reached with the United States. Then the people will know the truth and have the facts. In this way we will arrive at a treaty that will provide jobs for Canadians of this and future generations, that will provide power to be fed into a future national grid, and that will provide the water that will be required to irrigate Canadian soil in the days ahead.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I take no exception to the observations made by—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —two of those who have spoken. However, in view of the comments made—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Is the minister raising a point of order?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Churchill: State your point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): In view of the comments made by the Prime Minister and by the hon. member who has just spoken—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister tells me he made no comments.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but I must remind the minister that under the rules he is not allowed to make any further statement.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am coming to the point of order, Mr. Speaker. I was going to point out that in view of the nature of the statements made by the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member who has just taken his seat, I feel that it is fair and in accordance with our traditions and practices that I should be given an opportunity to make a reply.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: An opportunity may be given by unanimous consent, but not otherwise. Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I suggest to you with great confidence that the practice in this house is that on motions, when a minister makes a statement, if that statement is replied to in a controversial manner as was done today by the Leader of the Opposition, then the minister is given an opportunity for a limited reply. This has been the practice, and it is with regard to that I am now rising—

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Speaker: I am very interested in the reference to the practice, but I should like to see the authorities. However, if the minister has some comment of great importance to make to the house perhaps the house would allow him a minute's indulgence.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I do not want to put myself in the wrong position, but this is a vital matter affecting this nation. The Leader of the Opposition has made certain statements—

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. The minister has not got unanimous consent, and I suggest you tell him to sit down.

Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): May I speak to the point of order. It is of course a well recognized practice that when statements are made on motions by a member of the government, short, non-controversial replies are in order from the opposition parties. Today, Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition made a long and controversial reply in which he introduced points that should be answered at this time because they were inaccurately stated. The same situation applies to the hon. member for Kootenay West, who made a long, controversial observation. Under these circumstances surely the spokesman for the government is entitled to reply to the controversial statements made.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): If I may say a word, Mr. Speaker, on the question of order which has been raised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, it would seem to me that if the minister were to suggest that he is prepared to refer the agreement which was tabled earlier to the external affairs committee, it is quite possible unanimous consent would be forthcoming. The minister would then have ample opportunity to appear before that committee and make the statement he appears to wish to make.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is one of the questions with which I was going to deal, because it was asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Leader of the Opposition has no right—

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Speaking to the point of order, Mr. Speaker, there is no right of reply on the part of the minister, irrespective of what comments happen to be made by the leaders of the various parties. This has not been the practice in the past. If this practice is permitted, then we should be permitted a full debate. Perhaps the government will provide an opportunity to have a full debate on this subject.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened, naturally, with a great deal of interest and curiosity to the remarks of the different members, including the minister and the right hon. Leader of the Opposition. Perhaps a little too much leeway was given with regard to the comments on the statement made by the minister. The result now is that we are entering upon a debate which should not be done at this time when we are considering motions. May I suggest that perhaps the minister could set the example and that we could proceed to other matters, and that the discussion of these details on motions is not a time for extended or controversial statements.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to interfere or to object in any way to the view you now take, Mr. Speaker, but as this is an important matter I thought it was important for the house to be informed of the government's views with regard to suggestions made. But, since this is the view you take, I simply suggest with great respect that when you are looking at matters of procedure you might look at Hansard during the past four or five years and Your Honour will see many instances in which the present Leader of the Opposition made all sorts of responses to opposition reactions to statements made by his incompetent government.

Mr. Churchill: You are an expert on incompetence right now.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EXTENDED SITTING HOURS—CONSIDERATION OF SUPPLY ON FRIDAY

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might report to the house on a conference I had with hon. gentlemen opposite about certain suggestions for facilitating the business of the house with a view to getting an adjournment for part of the summer. I think there is agreement—and I will be quite happy to be interrupted and corrected at any stage if I misstate it—among all parties that we are prepared for the rest of this week, and for next week, to forgo the private members' hour and make it available for government business on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Fridays. We are also ready to sit at seven o'clock instead of eight o'clock in the evening on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, and since there is agreement about this with respect to today and the rest of this week and next week—and I do not go beyond that—I wonder if this might be recorded as an order of the house. When it has been recorded I would just like to say a word about Fridays, but not with a view to having anything recorded.

Mr. Speaker: Does this suggestion meet with the pleasure of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): There was one additional matter, Mr. Speaker, unless I missed it at the last minute, and that is that in the hour on Thursday which remains for private members' business, precedence be given to private bills. Was not that agreed?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is quite agreeable to the government if it is agreeable to the house. I think it would happen anyway because there have been no notices of motions transferred, but if that could be understood to be included in the provision originally made I should be happy.

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a question for clarification. When is this agreement to begin, and will the lost private members' hours be picked up in the fall?

Mr. Pickersgill: The private members' hours are just being suspended; therefore they will not interfere with the operation of the rule respecting Mondays, Tuesdays and Wednesdays. I am afraid the Fridays, under the rule, will be irretrievably lost because that goes on for the whole session, and we cannot re-invent the Fridays, if I may put it that way.

Mr. Bell: When would it begin?

Mr. Pickersgill: This is only to the end of next week, starting today. Now if I may say a word about Fridays for the information of hon. members, it was understood that on Friday next the government would, as was done last Friday, call one of the departments for the consideration of estimates; and while no commitment was made about the matter there was an understanding that an earnest effort would be made on all sides of the house to proceed as we did last Friday and get through one department. No one is committed to that; I want to emphasize that, but there was an undertaking that there would be an earnest effort made, and of course there will be until six o'clock under the order made today.

It was also agreed that there might be some discussion before six o'clock about the position, with a view to some small extension of the time, if that would be generally agreeable and if it would have the effect that hon. members would hope it might have. But I want to emphasize that this is just a co-operative suggestion, and there is no firm agreement with respect to Fridays.

Mr. Churchill: Just with regard to the completing of the estimates of one department in one day, we had that last week. It was at my suggestion. My colleagues co-operated with me in that regard and several of them refrained from speaking, as I did myself. Unfortunately the government claimed it as something they had thought up, and that they were piloting estimates through in double quick time. It was simply a matter on which we offered our fullest co-operation.

We may attempt this again provided there is a good spirit within the house, provided a number of things happen, but we cannot guarantee that in one day another department will be passed. It is most unusual and has not been done in the past. I thought we might try it as an experiment, and to set a good example for our friends opposite for their next term when they are in opposition.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I just say a brief word. First of all may I say that we in this group did agree with everything the Secretary of State says all parties agreed to, and my reason for rising is that actually we agreed to a little more than he indicated. I am wondering what has happened to the possibility of these arrangements lasting for a little longer period. There may be a reason that the Secretary of State does not wish to say at this moment, but I also wonder what has happened to the agreement that something would be said as to a target date for the summer recess.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I could go so far as to say that I believe it is the firm wish on both sides of the house that if reasonable progress can be made in the business in the month of July, most of us would profit from being somewhere else in the month of August. I do not think it would be proper, without consultation with my colleagues, to go beyond that, in view of the fact that while the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is quite right in saying his party was willing to go somewhat further than the agreement I stated, there were some reservations about some points elsewhere. I have stated what was the agreement of all four parties and I felt I should not do anything but that, and I do not want to reflect on any party or group in the house.

While I am on my feet I might say that I think the record last week will show I gave the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre full credit for the suggestion that one department should be put through, and I will give him double credit again if he gets another one through next Friday.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would like to inform hon. members that the governor general in council has appointed Mr. B. G. Sivertz as commissioner of the Northwest Territories, replacing Mr. R. G. Robertson whose appointment as Clerk of the Privy Council and secretary of the cabinet was recently announced by the Prime Minister.

Mr. Sivertz's appointment will take effect at noon on Friday next, July 12. It will terminate March 31, 1964, if the legislation now before parliament to create the territories of Mackenzie and Nunassiaq receives the assent of the house. The new commissioner for Mackenzie Territory would thereafter reside in Fort Smith, prospective capital of the territory.

Mr. Robertson has been commissioner of the Northwest Territories for the past 10 years. The advances made in territorial legislation and government during that period reflect his leadership. I am sure that residents of the territories would wish me to express their appreciation for his outstanding service.

Mr. Sivertz has a great many years of experience in northern administration, and is currently the director of the northern administration branch of my department. I am sure that he will ably carry on the tradition of service to the people of the north established by previous commissioners.

FINANCE

TABLING OF CORRESPONDENCE RESPECTING STOCK EXCHANGE TRADING PATTERNS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on June 19 I undertook to have inquiries made on the pattern of trading on the Montreal and Toronto stock exchanges during the preceding period. These inquiries have been made by the exchanges in question, and I now propose to table, for the information of hon. members, the exchange of correspondence on this subject between the Clerk of the Privy Council on the one hand and the presidents of the Toronto and Montreal stock exchanges on the other.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

ROYAL COMMISSION ON BICULTURALISM—TABLING OF PROVINCIAL REPLIES

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on May 20 I tabled in the house a copy of the letter I wrote to the premiers of all the provinces on May 15 concerning a royal commission of inquiry on biculturalism and bilingualism. I would now like to table copies, in French and in English, of the answers I have received to my letter.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would think that copies of those letters should be made part of Hansard, because they are of general interest.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that these letters be made part of Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For correspondence referred to above, see appendix "B".]

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

REFERENCE OF ELECTIONS ACT TO STANDING COMMITTEE

On the order: Government notices of motion:

That the standing committee on privileges and elections be empowered to study the Canada Elections Act, and the several amendments thereto suggested by the chief electoral officer; and to report to the house such proposals relating to the said act as the committee may deem to be advisable.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21, this notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

RAILWAYS, AIR LINES AND SHIPPING

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMITTEE ON RAILWAYS, AIR LINES AND SHIPPING OWNED AND CONTROLLED BY THE GOVERNMENT

On the order: Government notices of motion:

That a sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping owned and controlled by the government be appointed to consider the accounts, estimates and bills relating to the Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines and such other matters as may be placed before it, saving always the powers of the committee of supply in relation to the voting of public moneys, and that the said committee be empowered to send for persons, papers and records, and to report from time to time, and that notwithstanding standing order 67 in relation to the limitation of the number of members, the said committee shall consist of 26 members.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21, this notice of motion is transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

EDUCATIONAL GRANTS TO PROVINCES

Question No. 588—Mr. Mather:

Has the government given consideration to the advisability of equalizing educational opportunity throughout Canada by granting financial aid to provinces for that purpose?

Mr. Dupuis: The purpose of the equalization payments under the tax sharing arrangements of 1956 was to make it financially possible for all the provinces, whatever their tax base, to perform their constitutional functions themselves and to provide a reasonable Canadian level of provincial services without an abnormal burden of taxation and that remains the policy of the present government.

(d) Each contract was awarded on the basis of the lowest tender received.

SALES TAX EXEMPTION FOR WINTER CONSTRUCTION

Question No. 803—Mr. Valade:

Is the government giving consideration to the exemption from the 11 per cent tax on building materials to be used in the construction, repair or renovation of buildings during the winter in order to alleviate unemployment during that period?

Mr. Benson: This question has now been answered by the statement of the Minister of Finance on Monday evening.

[Mr. Carter.]

*NUMBER OF UNEMPLOYED, MONTREAL

Question No. 805—Mr. Valade:

1. How many unemployed are there at present on the island of Montreal?
2. What Canadian cities have a higher average of unemployed than Montreal in proportion to their population?
3. What was the number of unemployed in Montreal in June 1962?
4. Has the federal government any projects in view other than the construction of the C.B.C. building in the east end, and the world exhibition, in order to alleviate unemployment in Montreal?

Mr. Byrne: 1. Official estimates of unemployment are not available for the island of Montreal.

2 and 3. This information is not available.

4. Projects of various kinds and sizes will be carried out in the Montreal area either by federal departments and agencies or with assistance from them. These will be undertaken for a number of reasons including the alleviation of unemployment.

INTEGRATION OF ARMED FORCES SERVICES

Question No. 818—Mr. Matheson:

Has any study been conducted by the Department of National Defence respecting the advisability of effecting integration of the following navy, army and air force services: (a) pay and accounts (b) supply (c) medical (d) chaplaincy (e) construction engineering and, if so, what were the conclusions of such study?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, as follows:

(a) A study is being conducted into the advisability of integrating pay and pay accounts.

(b) Single service supply responsibilities have been allocated in many fields, e.g., food, medical supplies, small arms, certain types of ammunition and warfare equipment. Single supply responsibilities include responsibility for design, cataloguing, publications, provision of funds, determination of requirements and in some cases the receipt, issue and disposal of stores. Centralized, co-ordinated procurement is in effect, as well as a large measure of inspection. A study to determine whether commodity groups have sufficient common usage to warrant integration is being conducted.

(c) The armed forces medical services were combined in 1959 into one unified medical service under an officer designated as the surgeon general.

(d) Integration of the chaplains services at national defence headquarters and at commands was introduced in 1958. The object was to facilitate policy direction and to provide effective and efficient co-ordination in the organization and administration of the chaplains services.

(e) A study dealing with the integration of construction engineering facilities and staff is being conducted.

OLD AGE PENSION INCREASE

Question No. 826—Mr. Mather:

Is it the government's intention to increase old age pension payments by $10 a month and, if so, will the $10 increase be made to persons on war veterans allowance?

Mr. Haidasz: (a) Any change in the amount payable under the Old Age Security Act will be announced by the government in the usual manner.

(b) Increases in payments under the Old Age Security Act are always granted to all pensioners.

CANADIAN AID TO CARIBBEAN COUNTRIES

Question No. 830—Mr. Matheson:

1. What, if anything, has the federal government done during the years 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961 and 1962 to provide external aid for the following commonwealth countries (a) the British West Indies (the Bahamas, Trinidad and Tobago, the Leeward islands including Anquilla and Barbuda and the Windward islands and Barbados) (b) Jamaica (c) British Guiana (d) British Honduras?

2. Has the federal government selected any area for a major effort in overseas aid during what the United Nations have characterized as "the development decade", and, if so, what area?

Questions

3. Has Canada heretofore provided any assistance to Caribbean countries in the following directions (a) mapping and soil surveys (b) mineral exploration (c) developing new crops (d) developing new uses for available raw materials (e) finding new fish and marine resources (f) solving power needs and communication problems (g) the provision of experts, and, if so, when and to whom?

4. What, if anything, has the federal government done to conceptualize, plan or co-ordinate aid to Caribbean countries from (a) universities (b) corporations (c) co-operatives (d) trade unions (e) voluntary societies?

Mr. Stewart: 1. In each of the years mentioned Canadian external aid in the form of capital projects and technical and educational assistance has been extended to the West Indies Federation, which included Jamaica, at an average annual level of $2 million. British Guiana and British Honduras during these same years have been eligible for assistance under our commonwealth technical assistance program and to each of these countries $50,000 has been allocated annually in recent years. In addition, students from the islands comprising the West Indies Federation as well as from British Guiana and British Honduras have been awarded scholarships in Canadian universities under the commonwealth scholarship and fellowship program.

Capital assistance to the area has included the following major items:

Projects	Recipient	Completion
Two cargo passenger vessels for inter-island traffic	—	Delivered 1961
Forest inventory survey	Dominica	Completed 1962

1961	British Honduras	1 forest adviser
1962	British Honduras	3 instrument men

2. No area has been specially selected for a major Canadian aid effort although in dollar terms the largest recipients of Canadian assistance have been India and Pakistan.

3. Answered by reply to question 1.

4. While the Canadian government cannot direct the form or content of assistance extended by private organizations such as universities, corporations, co-operatives, trade unions and voluntary societies, nevertheless many such organizations have consulted and received advice from the appropriate federal authorities concerning assistance to the Caribbean area.

[Mr. Stewart.]

GOLF CLUBHOUSE, CAPE BRETON HIGHLANDS PARK

Question No. 831—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. On what date were tenders called for the construction of a new golf clubhouse at the Cape Breton Highlands national park?

2. What was the closing date of this tender call?
3. What were the names and addresses of the firms submitting tenders, and the amounts tendered?
4. Has a contract been awarded and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Turner: 1. Newspaper advertisements appeared on April 5 and April 6, 1963.

2. May 7, 1963, at 3 p.m.

3. M. R. Chappell Limited, Sydney, Nova Scotia, $119,275.00; Stephens Construction Limited, Sydney, Nova Scotia, $133,998.00; Maritime Builders Limited, Sydney, Nova Scotia, $139,360.00.

4. No. While the present clubhouse is not fully adequate, a review of construction priorities has indicated that the limited funds available must be directed to other and more pressing needs in national parks.

CHECK OF CHARITABLE DONATIONS, ROUYN-NORANDA

Question No. 838—Mr. Caouette:

1. Has the Department of National Revenue instructed its income tax officials in Rouyn-Noranda to visit the presbyteries in order to check charitable donations receipts?
2. Do these officials have the authority to cancel claims submitted by taxpayers?

(Translation):

Mr. Garland: 1. Income tax officials are authorized to call on people who give out receipts for charitable donations in order to make sure that those receipts are genuine and that the organization issuing them has really received the amounts claimed as deductions for charitable purposes. Under that general authorization, the officials in Rouyn have visited some rectories.

2. Those officials have the power to reject or reduce claims submitted for charitable donations when they have reason to believe that the donations were smaller than the amounts claimed. Taxpayers have the statutory right to appeal when they feel that they have grounds to do so.

ROUYN, QUE.—UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE CLAIMS AND JOB PLACEMENTS

Question No. 839—Mr. Martineau:

1. How many claims for unemployment insurance benefits have been filed with the unemployment insurance commission office at Rouyn since April 21, 1963?
2. How many claims have been approved?
3. How many persons have registered with the placement office at Rouyn since April 21, 1963?
4. How many persons so registered have found employment through the U.I.C. since April 21, 1963?

Mr. Byrne: 1. 3,190. (Note) Figures for claims filed and approved are available on a monthly basis only. This answer is therefore based on the April and May reports, the June report has not yet been received.

Questions

2. 2,634. See note in No. 1.

3. Data are available on a monthly basis only. Total registrations for employment received at the national employment office in Rouyn were 2,133 in April and 1,402 in May, 1963.

4. Data are not available on how many of those in (3) above were placed; however, total placements effected by the Rouyn office were as follows: April—397; May—685.

QUEBEC—FEDERAL INSPECTION OF MEAT

Question No. 842—Mr. Laprise:

1. Has the department of health of the province of Quebec invited the federal government to assume responsibility for the inspection of meat intended for human consumption in that province?
2. What is the policy of the government in this respect?

Mr. Haidasz: 1. The Department of National Health and Welfare has not been asked by the province of Quebec to assume any provincial responsibility for the inspection of meat.

2. The food and drug directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare inspects abbatoirs, except those under the jurisdiction of the federal Department of Agriculture, to determine the sanitary conditions under which meat is produced. The directorate does not conduct ante- or post-mortem inspections of meat; such inspections are conducted variously by the municipalities, provinces and the federal Department of Agriculture.

CANADIAN CLAIM TO ARCTIC ISLANDS

Question No. 843—Mr. Groos:

1. What is the basis of Canada's claim to sovereignty over the islands in the Arctic archipelago?
2. Do both the United States and the U.S.S.R. recognize this claim?

Mr. Stewart: 1. Canadian sovereignty over these areas of the Arctic has been established mainly by continuous effective occupation since 1870, when Canada succeeded to the rights of Great Britain and began to provide for the administration of the Canadian Arctic. This sovereignty has remained undisturbed and—but for a dispute with Norway over the Sverdrup islands in 1930, which was subsequently settled in favour of Canada—has remained unchallenged.

Attention is directed to the statement made by the then minister of northern affairs and national resources to the House of Commons special committee on estimates on March 23, 1955. This will be found on page 447 of the proceedings of the special committee.

2. On March 10, 1959, the then secretary of state for external affairs said at page 1822 of Hansard in answer to a similar question in the House of Commons posed by the hon. member for Assiniboia, Mr. Argue:

A search of departmental records has failed to disclose any dispute since 1900 between Canada and either the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics or the United States concerning the ownership of any portion of the Canadian Arctic.

The situation has not changed since March 1959.

SALE OF TRAVELLERS' CHEQUES

Question No. 844—Mr. Thompson:

1. How many firms (other than banks) are engaged in the business of issuing and selling travellers' cheques in Canada?
2. What supervision is exercised by the federal government over the issue of travellers' cheques by institutions other than banks?

Mr. Benson: 1. The federal government does not receive any report with respect to persons (other than banks) engaged in the issue and sale of travellers' cheques in Canada.

2. None.

MAIL SERVICE, TORONTO-HUNTSVILLE

Question No. 845—Mr. Smith:

1. Has a contract been awarded for a temporary mail service between Toronto and Huntsville, estimated to start approximately June 24, and, if so, to whom was the contract awarded, and at what price?
2. Was it awarded to the lowest bidder?

Mr. Denis: 1. No contract has been awarded but a temporary arrangement has been entered into with James Bruce Nesbitt (Barrie Delivery Service) of Barrie, Ontario, commencing June 24, 1963, at the rate of $19,977 per annum.

2. Yes.

BUTTER AND BUTTER OIL IN STORAGE

Question No. 851—Mr. Doucett:

1. What was the amount of butter the government had in storage as of January 1, 1962?
2. What was the amount of butter oil the government had in storage as of January 1, 1962?
3. What was the amount of butter the government had in storage on the first day of each month in 1963?
4. What was the amount of butter oil the government had in storage on the first day of each month in 1963?

Mr. Hays: 1. The agricultural stabilization board had 114,585,624 pounds of butter in storage as of January 1, 1962.

2. The agricultural stabilization board had 54,820,476 pounds of butter oil in storage as of January 1, 1962.

3. The agricultural stabilization board had in storage the following quantities of butter on the first of each month in 1963: January 1, 120,215,805 pounds; February 1, 110,647,143 pounds; March 1, 99,800,287 pounds; April 1, 90,852,683 pounds; May 1, 88,363,736 pounds; June 1, 91,329,979 pounds; July 1, 104,484,355 pounds.

4. The agricultural stabilization board had in storage the following quantities of butter oil on the first day of each month in 1963: January 1, 82,008,072 pounds; February 1, 81,937,008 pounds; March 1, 81,882,036 pounds; April 1, 81,702,162 pounds; May 1, 81,702,162 pounds; June 1, 81,645,840 pounds; July 1, 81,598,158 pounds.

FARM MACHINERY IMPORTS AND EXPORTS

Question No. 853—Mr. Smith:

1. What was the dollar value of farm machinery exported from Canada to other countries, excluding the United States, in each of the years 1944 to 1962 inclusive?
2. What was the dollar value of farm machinery imported into Canada from countries, other than the United States, in each of the years 1944 to 1962 inclusive?

Mr. Pepin: 1 and 2. The dollar value of farm machinery (including tractors) exported from Canada to other countries, excluding the United States, and imported into Canada from countries, other than the United States, in each of the years 1944 to 1962 inclusive:

Year	Exports	Imports
1944	$ 7,560,147	$ 79,612
1945	11,202,242	304,159
1946	14,201,212	566,344

1960	5,791,880	18,443,433
1961	7,627,733	21,733,450
1962	7,804,337	25,588,501

NUCLEAR ARMS AS DEFENCE MEASURE

Question No. 855—Mr. Mather:

1. Is the government aware of the statement by President Kennedy of the United States to the effect that one nuclear bomb can release more explosive power than ten times the amount delivered by all allied air forces in world war II?
2. Does the government consider that the acquisition of nuclear arms by Canada is a useful defence measure?

Mr. Hellyer: 1. The government is aware of a speech made by the President of the United States from which this statement has been taken out of context.

2. The government considers that the storage of nuclear warheads to be earmarked for certain defensive weapon systems already acquired for the Canadian forces is a useful defence measure.

*REPORTED OVERPRODUCTION OF NUCLEAR WEAPONS

Question No. 856—Mr. Mather:

Is the government giving consideration to reports that U.S. defence officials believe there is a gross overproduction of nuclear weapons?

Mr. Stewart: As Canada is not a country which produces nuclear weapons and since such nuclear capable weapons as we have are intended to fulfil defence requirements which are not dependant on future production, any intention on the part of the U.S. government to cut back production on atomic weapons would not have a bearing on the availability of warheads for the weapon systems now held by the Canadian armed forces.

NUMBER OF SUICIDES

Question No. 857—Mr. Mather:

1. How many persons committed suicide in Canada in 1959, 1960, 1961 and 1962?
2. How many other causes of death outrank suicide, and what are they?
3. What is the estimated number of attempted suicides in relation to successful suicides?

Mr. Pepin: 1. The following are the numbers of suicides in Canada in: 1959, 1,287; 1960, 1,350; 1961, 1,366; 1962, 1,331.

2. According to a commonly accepted grouping of causes of death, there were 11 causes in 1962 that outranked suicide. They are: 1st, heart disease; 2nd, cancer; 3rd, vascular lesions affecting central nervous system; 4th, accidents; 5th, pneumonia; 6th, diseases of arteries; 7th, congenital malformations; 8th, diabetes mellitus; 9th, post natal asphyxia and atelectaisis; 10th, nephritis; 11th, birth injuries; 12th, suicide.

3. For 1960, the latest year for which figures are available, there were 207 convictions for attempted suicide. In that year there were 1,350 deaths due to suicide. The ratio of the first figure to the second is: 0.1533; or 15.3 per cent.

ROYAL MINT AND CANADIAN BANK NOTE CO.

Question No. 861—Mr. Rondeau:

1. Is the Royal Mint in Ottawa an agency of the government of Canada?
2. What is its function?
3. What procedure does the Bank of Canada follow in dealing with the Canadian Bank Note Company Ltd.?
4. Does the Canadian Bank Note Company Ltd. produce paper money for the Bank of Canada?
5. Does the Canadian Bank Note Company Ltd. produce paper money for its own account and then lend it to the Bank of Canada?

Mr. Benson: 1. The Ottawa mint, established as a branch of the Royal Mint, London, under the (Imperial) Coinage Act, 1870, and opened January 2, 1908, was by 21-22 Geo. V., ch. 48, constituted a branch of the Department of Finance and by the proclamation of November 14, 1931, it has, since December 1, 1931, operated as the Royal Canadian Mint.

2. The principal functions of the mint are: the execution of domestic and foreign coin; the refining of gold and silver; the acquisition of gold, silver and other metals, payments for which are made on the basis of mint assays; the control, preparation and movement of gold and coin shipments; the safeguarding of mint holdings of monetary metals, including coin and precious metals in various processing stages until finished and issued; the fabrication and engraving of dies for coinage, medals, signatures and official seals; the issue of coin sets to numismatists and the administration of various regulations issued under the terms and provisions of the Currency, Mint and Exchange Fund Act, R.S. 1952, ch. 315.

3. Not a matter of public record.

4. Yes.

5. No.

HARBOUR DEVELOPMENT, LITTLE RIVER, N.S.

Question No. 862—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Has the Department of Public Works any plans for the further development of the harbour at Little River, Victoria county, Nova Scotia, and, if so, when will this work commence, and to what extent?

Mr. Badanai: This will depend on the results of a study being carried out at the present time. The extent and scheduling of any work must await the completion of this study.

TARIFF BOARD DECISION ON EDIBLE OILS

Question No. 864—Mr. Danforth:

1. Has the tariff board given to the Department of Agriculture their ruling on the submission made by the Ontario soya-bean growers association and other interested parties with regard to an increase in Canadian tariffs on imports into Canada of edible oils and, if so, what decision was arrived at by the tariff board?
2. If the report has not been received, when may it be expected?

Mr. Hays: 1. No.

2. The Department of Agriculture does not expect to receive this report until such time as it is tabled by the Minister of Finance.

SHELBURNE, N.S., PUBLIC BUILDING

Question No. 866—Mr. Crouse:

1. When were tenders called for the dominion public building at Shelburne, Nova Scotia?
2. Has the contract been let?
3. Is the building to be constructed on the site on King street, Shelburne?

Mr. Badanai: 1. April 17, 1963.

2. No.

3. Yes, at the northeast corner of King and Mowatt streets.

BREAKWATER REPAIRS, FELTZ SOUTH, N.S.

Question No. 867—Mr. Crouse:

1. When were tenders called for breakwater repairs at Feltz South, Lunenburg county, Nova Scotia?
2. Has the contract been let?
3. What is the name of the successful contractor, and the amount of his bid?

Mr. Badanai: 1. April 17, 1963.

2 and 3. Yes, to Naugle's Sand and Gravel Company Limited of West Lawrencetown, N.S., at $45,466.28. However, it has now been decided to postpone construction as it has been determined that the repairs necessary are more extensive than called for in the specifications. The contractor has been advised and has agreed to the termination of the contract.

*SUCCESSION DUTIES COLLECTED, QUEBEC

Question No. 870—Mr. Pigeon:

What is the total amount of succession duties collected by the federal government in the province of Quebec during the years 1960-61 and 1961-62?

Mr. Garland: This information is available in government publication, "1962 Taxation Statistics" on page 19.

[Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria).]

*PERSONAL INCOME TAX COLLECTED, QUEBEC

Question No. 871—Mr. Pigeon:

What is the total amount of personal income tax collected by the federal government in the province of Quebec during the years 1960-61 and 1961-62?

Mr. Garland: This information is available in government publication "1962 Taxation Statistics" on page 18.

*CORPORATION INCOME TAX COLLECTED, QUEBEC

Question No. 872—Mr. Pigeon:

What is the total amount of corporation income tax collected by the federal government in the province of Quebec during the years 1960-61 and 1961-62?

Mr. Garland: This information is available in government publication "1962 Taxation Statistics" on page 18.

EXPIRATION OF TERMS, WHEAT BOARD COMMISSIONERS

Question No. 875—Mr. McIntosh:

1. When do the present terms of the (a) chief commissioner (b) assistant chief commissioner and (c) commissioners of the Canadian wheat board, expire?
2. What is the normal age of retirement of personnel appointed to the Canadian wheat board?

Mr. Beer: 1. Section 3, subsection 3 of the Canadian Wheat Board Act provides the following: "Each commissioner holds office during good behaviour but may be removed for cause at any time by the governor in council, but no commissioner shall hold office beyond the age of seventy years".

2. Under the provisions of the employee retirement plan of the Canadian wheat board of which the commissioners are members, the normal retirement age for male personnel is 65 years but as provided in the Statute, commissioners may continue in office until age 70.

SOVIET BOMBER STRENGTH

Question No. 880—Mr. Douglas:

1. As of January 1 each year from 1957 to 1963, how many Soviet bombers by types, have been estimated capable of making at least a one-way attack on the main industrial areas of southern Canada and the northern United States?
2. Can each of these Soviet bombers carry H-bombs and, if so, (a) how many H-bombs can each type of Soviet bomber carry (b) what is the estimated total megatonnage of the H-bomb or H-bombs that can be carried by each Soviet bomber of each type?
3. What percentage of these Soviet bombers is it estimated that the active air defences of NORAD would destroy (a) before they reach their target or bomb release position (b) before they reach the 54th parallel (c) before they reach the 60th parallel (d) before they reach mainland Canada?

Mr. Hellyer: 1, 2 and 3. Since the information requested is classified it should be appreciated that it would not be in the public interest for the government to answer these questions.

SOVIET INTERCONTINENTAL BALLISTIC MISSILES

Question No. 881—Mr. Douglas:

As of January 1, each year from 1957 to 1963, how many Soviet intercontinental ballistic missiles have been estimated capable of striking the main industrial areas of southern Canada and the northern United States?

Mr. Hellyer: Since the information requested is classified it should be appreciated that it would not be in the public interest for the government to answer this question.

ABSENTEE VOTING

Question No. 886—Mr. Mather:

Is the government giving consideration to amending the Canada Elections Act in order to provide for absentee voting?

Mr. Dupuis: Parliament, not the government, amends the Canada Elections Act. There is a motion on the order paper to authorize the committee on privileges and elections to consider appropriate amendments to the Canada Elections Act.

[Editor's note: The following question was answered by the minister on Monday, July 8.]

EXECUTIVE ASSISTANT TO PRESIDENT OF PRIVY COUNCIL

Question No. 627—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada taken an executive assistant or a special assistant on staff and, if so, what is this person's name, age, place of birth, institutions of education and educational qualifications, governmental or business experience (position held, length of experience, name of firm) and initial and present salary with the government?
2. What length of time has this assistant undertaken to serve the President of the Privy Council and/or what engagement in length of time was given to the assistant by the minister?
3. In brief, what particular qualities of this assistant led the President of the Privy Council to engage him?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. Yes, the President of the Queen's Privy Council has taken an executive assistant. The position was given to Gerard Brady, 50, born in Quebec city. He received his secondary education in St. Hyacinthe, under direction of Professor Bergeres. He also studied social, economic and political sciences at the University of Montreal and attended the course in journalism at the "École universelle de Paris".

Mr. Brady, who was the founder of the newspaper L'Homme Libre had a career of 20 years in journalism. He was president of the "Association des hebdomadaires de langue française du Canada" and he continues to sit on the board of directors of that association, which has more than a hundred newspaper members across Canada, as an honorary life director.

He was chairman of the "Canadian Unity Week", a joint project of the "Association des hebdos" and the Canadian Weekly Newspapers Association, which from 1947 to 1952 exchanged editorials promoting good relations between ethnic groups in Canada.

Mr. Brady also headed a firm of consultants in public relations, advertising writing, translation and public information known as the "Service d'information Drummond". He was also a C.B.C. commentator for about ten years. In the past few years he held the position of secretary general of the Liberal federation of Quebec. His initial and present salary is $12,000.

2. During pleasure.

3. Mr. Brady was hired because of his experience in newspaper and public relations work. We also took into account his knowledge of the problems of binationalism and biculturalism across Canada, his personality and his capacity for discussing matters and problems put to him.

2. For each of these fiscal years, on what public works projects were expenditures made?
3. During 1963-64, what is the estimated total expenditure for public works in the above constituency, indicating in each case the nature and the amount of the expenditure?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

WHEAT AGREEMENT WITH RED CHINA

Motion No. 26—Mr. Fisher:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of the long term agreement signed by the Canadian wheat board and the China Resources Company covering the period June 1, 1961 to December 19, 1963.

Mr. Sharp: May I speak to both this and the following motion, which are closely related. These motions relate to an agreement dated April 22, 1961, entered into between the Canadian wheat board and the China National Cereals, Oils and Foodstuffs Import and Export Corporation, and to contracts pursuant thereto between the Canadian wheat board and the China Resources Company. After discussions with the Canadian wheat board and its advisory committee I am satisfied it would not be in the interest of the board as the selling agency for western wheat to produce either the long term agreement or the contracts entered into pursuant to that agreement. Such agreements and contracts between the board and its customers have never been produced.

There is no objection, however, to making public certain information contained in these documents. Indeed, much of it is already public knowledge and has appeared in the reports of the board and in the public press.

[Mr. Macdonald.]

The only information that hon. members have inquired about in the past that does not seem to have become available is the date on which the long term agreement was signed in Peking, April 22, 1961. I was not here at the time, but this reluctance seems to have had something to do with the whereabouts of the former minister of agriculture on that particular day.

I have seen the hon. member and I understand he is prepared to accept production of the following information extracted from the long term agreement and the contracts: 1. The date of the long term agreement; 2. the names of those who signed on behalf of the Canadian wheat board; 3. the minimum and maximum quantities of wheat and barley covered by the long term agreement; 4. the quantities of wheat and barley actually sold under the agreement, and 5. the terms of payment.

Mr. Fisher: I am pleased to have the information stated by the minister. I wish to point out to the house that these two motions were drafted by the hon. member for Ottawa West some time ago and were voted down in the house. I did not want to push them as far as that, or to take up so much of the time of the house with them, but I thought it was worth while making it possible for hon. members to see that there does seem to be a difference in attitude depending upon where you sit.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion agreed to, subject to the reservations made by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

WHEAT CONTRACTS WITH RED CHINA

Motion No. 27—Mr. Fisher:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all contracts entered into between the Canadian wheat board and the China Resources Company for the sale of grain under the long term agreement between the Canadian wheat board and the China Resources Company.

Mr. Speaker: With regard to this motion, does the same agreement apply as in the case of the preceding motion?

Motion agreed to.

CANCELLATION OF CONTRACT WITH FAIRFIELD COMPANY, OWEN SOUND, ONT.

Motion No. 40—Mr. Brewin:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all agreements, correspondence or other documents exchanged between the Department of Defence Production or any other representative of the federal government and H. J. Fairfield Company Limited at Owen Sound for the cancellation of any contract or agreement for the supply of army stocks.

Mr. Drury: The government has no objection to the motion, and I am prepared to table the documents as soon as it is agreed to.

Motion agreed to.

CORRESPONDENCE WITH WATER RESOURCES BRANCH

Motion No. 41—Mr. Herridge:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the deputy minister of northern affairs and national resources and any of the staff of the water resources branch in Ottawa and the representatives of any non-government organization or other persons between January 1, 1961, until July 1, 1963.

He said: I should like to explain that there has been a very satisfactory renegotiation of the terms of this motion as a result of which we have come to a wholly satisfactory agreement as to the correspondence to be produced, without any surrender of sovereign rights, personal honour or dignity. So I am willing that the motion should be dropped.

Motion dropped.

SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIAL

Motion No. 46—Mr. Gregoire:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the government, the Minister of Finance, employees of the Department of Finance or of any of its other branches, departments or employees, and any association, individual, organization, public body or group in connection with any protests on the withdrawal of the eleven per cent tax on building material.

Mr. Pickersgill: The government has no objection to this motion, but it is almost exactly similar to one which was passed last week and to several others which were dealt with last week. It asks for virtually the same correspondence that was asked for by the hon. member for Selkirk. Perhaps it could be understood there would be only one production in response to all these motions so that we would not have to get documents copied over and over again. If there is anything in the hon. gentleman's motion which was not called for in the motion of the hon. member for Selkirk, that would be produced separately.

Mr. Speaker: Is the motion agreed to, subject to the reservation expressed by the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Do I understand that the same reservation would apply to the other motion?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the motion is acceptable as it is.

Mr. Speaker: My question is, does it apply to the subsequent motion standing in the name of the same hon. member?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the subsequent motion stands on its own feet.

Motion agreed to.

WITHDRAWAL OF 30 PER CENT TAX ON SHARE SALES

Motion No. 47—Mr. Gregoire:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents exchanged between the government, the Minister of Finance, employees of the Department of Finance or of any of its other branches, departments or employees, and any association, individual, organization, public body or group in connection with any protests on the withdrawal of the 30 per cent tax on the sale of Canadian shares to non-residents.

Motion agreed to.

ACQUISITION BY QUEBEC OF SOULANGES CANAL

Motion No. 49—Mr. Pigeon:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all correspondence, letters and telegrams exchanged between the Department of Transport and the government of Quebec on the acquisition of Soulanges canal.

Mr. McIlraith: There is no objection to this motion subject to the usual reservation as to the consent of the province.

Mr. Speaker: Subject to the reservation stated by the minister is the motion agreed to?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

CONSTRUCTION OF "MANÈGE MILITAIRE", THETFORD MINES, QUE.

Motion No. 50—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all telegrams, letters and other correspondence exchanged between different members of the Canadian army staffs and the Minister of National Defence, the Minister of Defence Production, and their assistant, concerning the construction of the future "manège militaire" of Thetford Mines, P.Q.

Mr. Pickersgill: I understood the hon. member was prepared to let this motion stand today.

Mr. Langlois: Until I have had a meeting with the minister in question. I understand there are certain reservations likely to be made.

Motion stands.

GLASSCO COMMISSION STUDIES RESPECTING C.B.C.

Motion No. 52—Mr. Douglas:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all studies done by the Glassco commission in respect of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation.

Mr. Fisher: May I move this on behalf of my hon. friend?

(Translation):

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the hon. member who has introduced this motion, I suggest that it stand.

(Text):

Motion stands.

CONTRACTS WITH OUTSIDE CONSULTANTS, FINANCE DEPARTMENT

Motion No. 53—Mr. Knowles:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of the contracts entered into with Mr. D. C. H. Stanley, Mr. M. P. O'Connell and Mr. G. R. Conway, under treasury board minute T.B. 610618, dated May 2, 1963, and a copy of the contract entered into with Mr. R. J. Anderson, under treasury board minute T.B. 610952, dated May 17, 1963.

Motion agreed to.

UNITED NATIONS

CONGO—ANNOUNCEMENT OF WITHDRAWAL OF TROOPS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and ask him whether the announcement made by U Thant that the United Nations force is to be withdrawn from the Congo by the end of this year means that the situation in that country is so stable that the danger has passed, or does it signify that the U.S.S.R. and other members of the United Nations who have refused to pay their proportionate share of the cost of these peace keeping operations have in fact won their point and established a financial veto?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Medicine Hat had given me notice of his intention to ask a somewhat similar question, and in acknowledging this question from the Leader of the Opposition I wish to let the hon. gentleman know that I have received notice of his intention to ask a question.

As the house is aware, the end of the Katanga secession removed the need for large numbers of United Nations troops in the Congo. In these circumstances it is my understanding that the secretary general, deeply concerned about the heavy drain on United Nations financial resources, hopes to withdraw United Nations forces from the Congo as soon as possible. The Canadian government both shares his concern and supports his objective in this regard.

With regard to the last portion of the Leader of the Opposition's question, as my hon. friend knows, at the special assembly of the United Nations, arrangements were made for the financial obligations arising out of the peace keeping operations of the United Nations in the Congo and UNEF until the end of 1963. What would have been the situation in respect of the Congo after 1963 but for the financial position in which the United Nations has found itself remain a conjecture. Undoubtedly the situation would have been easier if all member states of the organization had paid up both their normal assessments and what we believe to be their obligations with regard to peace keeping operations. It remains simply to say this, that the operations in the Congo of the peace keeping force of the United Nations, notwithstanding very great difficulties, represents the great utility, the great purpose and the indispensability of the United Nations in situations like this.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Aside from the financial commitments respecting peace keeping operations, my understanding is that the secretary general, U Thant, made a plea yesterday in Geneva for further belt tightening in other operations of the United Nations. A few days ago the minister made a statement to the house which indicated that all the financial commitments of the United Nations for the balance of this year had been arranged for. I wonder whether he could tell us why the secretary general is now making a plea for more belt tightening in other operations of the organization?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman also gave me notice of his intention to ask this question, and I wish now to reply to it. When I reported to the house on June 25 about developments at the fourth special session of the United Nations general assembly I was referring exclusively to the problems of financing the peace keeping operations in the Middle East and the Congo. The arrangements made at the special session had to do mainly with the problem of finding funds for those operations for the six month period ending December 31, 1963. No progress was made on the problem resulting from the refusal of the Soviet union and certain other states to pay their share of the peace keeping assessments.

The continuation of this undesirable situation, and the heavy burden of these peace keeping expenditures, and the substantial increase in the size of the regular United Nations budget for other administrative costs has prompted the secretary general to make urgent pleas for strict economies in all fields of United Nations activity. In Geneva yesterday he was voicing his worries in relation to programs of economic and social development.

I might say to my hon. friend and to the house that the government of Canada shares fully his concern, and deeply regrets that it is not possible to deal with a peace keeping deficit of some $120 million when the nations of the world find it so easy to find money to provide armaments for defensive and other purposes.

YEMEN—REPORTED USE OF POISON GAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the presence of Canadian personnel with the United Nations force in Yemen and the reported use of poison gas and other chemicals in that area by another country, which is reportedly being investigated by the secretary general, can the Secretary of State for External Affairs bring us up to date on whether or not chemical warfare is being carried on in this area and, if so, are any measures being taken to protect Canadian personnel in the area?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of the reports to which my hon. friend directs our attention with regard to the use of poison gas against the local inhabitants in Yemen. These are of course grave charges, and the United Nations has announced that the acting commander of its observer mission has been asked to provide a report on the matter. The Canadian government is, of course, in close day to day contact with those authorities to whom our concern should be directed, through our permanent mission at the United Nations in New York with regard to the functioning of the U.N. observer mission, and particularly the responsibilities and the security of the Canadian personnel involved.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—AGREEMENT BY FORMER GOVERNMENT RESPECTING DOWNSTREAM BENEFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Did the former Conservative government agree to the sale of downstream benefits under the Columbia river treaty, thus accepting the propositions of Premier Bennett?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am glad my hon. friend asked this question. I might add that article 8 of the original treaty negotiated by the right hon. gentleman opposite and his colleague allowed for the possible sale in the United States of undefined portions of Canada's downstream power benefits on conditions and within limits which were initially to be agreed on as soon as possible after the ratification date.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jean-Pierre Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Was there any agreement between the British Columbia government and the government of Canada before the Columbia treaty was signed?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, there was no such agreement between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia, and if there had been there would not have been this delay.

[Later:]

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In his statement in connection with the agreement between British Columbia and the dominion government over the sale of downstream benefits there were two points which were not made clear. Can the minister inform the house how much of Canada's share of the downstream benefits it was agreed would be sold in the United States and for what period was it agreed that these downstream benefits should be sold?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, these are matters that will be involved in the negotiations which I hope will begin very shortly with the United States. My hon. friend, with his great experience as a minister of the crown will appreciate how undesirable it would be at this stage to disclose any of the matters that will be covered by the negotiations between the two governments.

Mr. Harkness: Mr. Speaker, I think the minister has misapprehended my question. I asked him, what was the agreement between Canada and British Columbia on Canada's share of the downstream benefits which may be sold to the United States? Is it 50 per cent of Canada's share or is it 100 per cent? In addition, I should like to know what agreement there was between the province and the dominion as to the period of time for which these benefits should be sold. The minister is no doubt aware that, to date these were the main sticking points so far as British Columbia was concerned.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The agreement, of course, does not deal with the subject matter in the manner and in the context referred to by my hon. friend. The duration of the sale of downstream benefits is obviously a matter for negotiation, and I cannot at this time disclose that information to the house.

Mr. Harkness: I ask the minister if this is not the very matter that was to be negotiated with British Columbia? If not, what was to be negotiated?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If my hon. friend will be good enough to look at the agreement, he will see it does not cover that question.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): May I ask a question of the Secretary of State for External Affairs? In the talks on the Columbia river treaty between the province of British Columbia and this government, was there any discussion of the increase in the cost of the project as a result of the 4-8-11 per cent sales tax on construction and production materials?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member may be disappointed in my answer, but the answer is no.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I have a question to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of his earlier statement today on the Columbia river treaty. My question is this. Is the government prepared to take action to have the present draft treaty on the Columbia river, together with the agreement between Canada and British Columbia which was tabled today, referred to the external affairs committee of this house prior to the resumption of any negotiations with the government of the United States?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, this was one of the questions with which I should have liked to deal earlier, but I am glad to deal with it now. The British Columbia-Canada agreement will not be complete until we are able to attach to it a protocol of adjustment in the treaty on the proposed sale, if satisfactory terms can be secured, of the downstream benefits. This agreement will not be complete until these schedules have been agreed upon. Similarly, the treaty will have to be supplemented or amplified by the proposed protocol.

I have already made clear in this house that after the government has had an opportunity of viewing the results of the negotiations between its representatives and the government of the United States, and has arrived at a decision as to the treaty, before ratification takes place the treaty and agreement will be submitted to this house for consideration by it.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF BENEFITS TO AGRICULTURAL WORKERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour concerning unemployment insurance coverage for employees in agriculture. Since the minister informed the house yesterday that there is an interdepartmental committee of senior officials engaged in continued study of the Gill commission report, would the minister direct their attention to the problem as to whether ways and means could be found to overcome the administrative and procedural difficulties to which reference was made in the Gill report, in order that farm labour could also benefit from unemployment insurance coverage?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would be glad to respond to the hon. member's representations and ask the committee to pay special attention to this problem, if it has not already done so.

EXTENSION OF BENEFITS TO WORKERS IN U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour arising out of the answer he gave the hon. member for Compton-Frontenac on July 8 concerning Canadians working across the border. He said that this matter had been under negotiation for the past 20 years. I would not want to rush things, but would it be possible for the government to have a definite answer or a definite agreement concluded before the next 15 years have gone by?

FINANCE

CONSULTATION ON BUDGET WITH VARIOUS ECONOMIC ELEMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether, in view of his statement to the press yesterday that he is giving consideration to bringing business and industry into closer relationship with the government in the planning of future budgets, it is also his intention to give consideration to bringing in closer contact with the government organizations such as labour, agriculture, and others who might be affected by such a budget?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker; I think the hon. gentleman's suggestion is a very good one. If consultation within the limits of secrecy could be extended to business in the way suggested, it should also be extended to other economic elements such as labour, agriculture, and others.

WORLD FAIR

SUGGESTED BROADENING OF REPRESENTATION ON BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister, in view of the resignation of the Ontario representative of the Montreal fair board, and indications from previous information that only a few of the provinces or regions of Canada are represented on this board, whether he is considering taking any steps to broaden the scope of the board and handle what appears to be a unilingual problem on the board.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This matter is presently under consideration.

AGRICULTURE

MILK—FEDERAL REPRESENTATION AT INQUIRY IN ONTARIO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. According to press reports I understand the minister has been closely associated with "hope" for some time, and I hope he can answer my question. Has the minister made arrangements to have a federal government representative in attendance at the hearings now being held of an inquiry into the production and marketing of milk in Ontario?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have met the Ontario league on several occasions and this matter is under consideration. We will be able to announce the result later.

SHEEP—REPORTED INTENTION TO CONCLUDE WORK AT SASKATCHEWAN EXPERIMENTAL FARM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. Has the minister received a communication from the south Saskatchewan sheep growers association protesting the contemplated closing down of the sheep department at the dominion experimental farm at Swift Current? Rather than ask a supplementary question later, may I ask the minister whether he does not agree that such action, if taken, will be a severe blow to the sheep raising industry of western Canada?

Mr. Speaker: Will the hon. member put that question on the order paper, please?

Mr. McIntosh: Mr. Speaker, this is a very serious and urgent question. It is also of national importance, as it concerns the whole sheep industry of Canada. In addition, I understand that the contemplated action is going to be taken in the near future. Therefore I submit with deference that it is an urgent question.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the question of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek may I say it was felt by the department that the experiment carried on with this particular flock of sheep at the experimental farm at Swift Current had been completed, and it was contemplated that the flock of sheep would be moved to the farm at Manyberries. This matter has not been finally decided yet and I will consider what the hon. member has said in this regard. The experimental farm at Swift Current is mainly for grasses. The production of sheep in the whole southern part of Saskatchewan has fallen off a great deal, as it has of course in all the prairie provinces, and it is felt that any experimenting with sheep in the future can be carried out better at Manyberries where most of the sheep production takes place.

Mr. McIntosh: A supplementary question. From the minister's own words would he not agree that the sheep industry in Canada—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt, but this is argumentative.

PULPWOOD—INQUIRY AS TO SUPPORT PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Does the minister intend to proclaim a support price for pulpwood, at the request of the U.C.C. and the farmers concerned?

(Text):

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will have to start over. I could not hear him.

Inquiries of the Ministry

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I shall repeat my question. Does the Minister of Agriculture intend to recommend the establishment of a support price for pulpwood, as requested by the farmers concerned?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest that this question be put on the order paper.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker, he was asked to repeat the question.

Mr. Pigeon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think my question was proper and I would be very pleased if the minister would answer it.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member's question was quite in order, but it should be put on the order paper.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE IN ANSWERING QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, actually the hon. member for Ontario asked the Prime Minister the question I wanted to ask and I welcome the Prime Minister's answer. But since you have called on me perhaps I might put a question to the Secretary of State. In order to save a little time on Mondays and Wednesdays, I wonder whether it is not possible to avoid Your Honour having to call the number of every question on the order paper. Did we not for a time have a device whereby the Secretary of State would rise and say that questions numbers so and so were answered and questions numbers so and so were to be made orders for returns? Would the Secretary of State consider the matter?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I welcome any suggestion that would lead to a saving of time, but this was a change made by the committee on procedure when the hon. member was not a member of the house. I regret the change, but it was made. However, if we could have unanimous consent to set up the committee on procedure perhaps we could get a few of these changes, including the admirable change suggested on a number of occasions by the Leader of the Opposition when he was prime minister, that questions on the orders of the day should be limited to half an hour, to which the official opposition of that time agreed.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, since the hon. gentleman, with his customary disregard of the rules, has brought me into the picture, let me say that hon. gentlemen opposite were the ones who brought about the expansion of the asking of questions in the house. They were the wrongdoers, and now they object to that which they themselves created.

Mr. Chevrier: What about your disregard of the rules?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, since the Leader of the Opposition has made this statement, it should be made perfectly clear that the limitation of questions to 30 minutes was agreed to by us when we were in opposition, and was not agreed to by the then prime minister.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure we do not want to extend the question period beyond four o'clock. The hon. member for—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I cannot allow that statement to go unchallenged. It is without any basis in fact.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, seeing that the Leader of the Opposition has made that statement, perhaps the leaders of the other two parties who were concerned with the negotiations at that time might have something to say on the matter.

Mr. Knowles: I apologize for making a suggestion to save time. Obviously such a suggestion only results in our losing time.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to accept the suggestion of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC ANNOUNCEMENT ON ACQUISITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): I have a question for the Prime Minister arising out of his press conference of yesterday. Will the actual signing of a general bilateral agreement with the United States for the acquisition of nuclear warheads for the Canadian forces be the subject of a public announcement? Will the public be advised of the fact when nuclear warheads have been acquired in Canada?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, there will be a public announcement when the agreement is signed and all relevant information within the limits of security will be made known to the public.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

STEPS TO PREVENT THREATENED SLOWDOWN ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Remi Paul (Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General a question.

Can he tell the house what steps his department intends to take to prevent the impending slowdown strike of 90 per cent of the letter carriers who are refused the salary boost they have requested?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I believe this question is within the province of my colleague the Minister of Finance, who will announce in due time the salary increases for the civil service employees, including the letter carriers.

Mr. Paul: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. What stand does the Postmaster General intend to take personally to prevent this strike?

Mr. Denis: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that any slowdown will occur, because this government will take the necessary steps before it starts.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I.—INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF RUNWAYS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): I have a brief question I should like to address to the Minister of National Defence, but in his absence perhaps the associate minister would take it as notice. In the light of statements made by the A.O.C. of the maritime command of the R.C.A.F. recently at a press conference, that there was an urgent need to rebuild two runways at the R.C.A.F. station at Summerside for operational reasons, is it the intention of the government to continue that program which was well under way under the previous government?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): I will take that question as notice.

TRANSPORT

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—USE OF FRENCH IN PILOTAGE MANOEUVRES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, a few days ago I put a question to the Minister of Justice when he was Acting Prime Minister, concerning a request by the St. Lawrence seaway authority asking that the French language be banned in pilotage manoeuvring. I would be most happy if the minister could supply me with an answer.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to answering that question although it was declared out of order yesterday. It is normally the Minister of Transport who deals with such questions, but since it was directed to me during the absence of the Prime Minister, I reply to the hon. member that:

1. The St. Lawrence seaway authority never asked or sent a request asking that the French language be banned in pilotage manoeuvring.

2. A verbal inquiry from lawyers acting for organizations or private customers reveals that Mr. R. J. Burnside did not make the statement attributed to him. Confirmation will be made by the minutes of his evidence as soon as they reach the St. Lawrence seaway authority.

SHIPPING

ST. LAWRENCE RIVER—STATEMENT AS TO WINTER NAVIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I think, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Transport is anxious to reply to a question of mine about winter navigation.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): On June 26, as appears on page 1608 of Hansard, the hon. member for Saint John-Albert asked a question concerning winter navigation on the St. Lawrence river. I might answer that the growth of winter navigation on the St. Lawrence river to which the hon. member refers is very small in amount and is not directly assisted by departmental icebreakers which may be working in the river for other purposes. These purposes are of long standing, and involve protection of shore property from flooding.

Such commercial traffic as there is has been pioneered by commercial interests and, while any such changes in trading patterns may call for adjustments in the total economy, it is not the intention of this government to initiate action for the improvement of conditions in one area which would have significant adverse effects on other parts of the country. The St. Lawrence seaway authority is not giving consideration to the matter of all-winter use of the seaway.

As to the other part of the question concerning United States congressional action on this matter, I have had no official notice in that connection and have no knowledge of it, other than the reference contained in the newspaper article.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): May I ask a supplementary question. I should like to ask the minister whether, in effect, that statement informs us that the commercial business that has developed into Quebec and Montreal would have been possible without the icebreaker?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Speaker, I was careful not to express it in that way.

Mr. Bell: In respect of the United States investigation concerning winter navigation, will the minister keep the house informed of the position and attitude of the government on this and in fact, if necessary, due to the joint nature of the seaway, insist on our rights to make representations on this important matter?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): In answer to that request, I think I should point out that the United States action now being taken is to create legislative authority for a study to be made. It is not the setting up of the study itself.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell the house whether it is true, as reported in Le Devoir of this morning, that the royal inquiry on biculturalism will be set up next Monday?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we hope to be able to make an announcement on either Friday or Monday. That will depend on the replies we receive by that time from certain individuals who have been asked to serve on the commission.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Does he intend to appoint Messrs. Gerard Pelletier and Andre Laurendeau on that commission?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is a question which is not in order.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question? While we are waiting for all that, would the Prime Minister be ever so kind as to provide us with the French version of Beauchesne, in view of the fact that the English edition of those citations often contain some very special legal terms which French speaking members find particularly hard to understand?

Mr. Pearson: I am always happy to try to accommodate the hon. gentleman.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROPOSED EXTENSION OF RUN-THROUGH PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Port Arthur asked me a question concerning possible action to postpone C.N.R. run-throughs in western Canada, as appears at page 1976 of Hansard. A similar question was directed to me by the hon. member for Acadia on June 26, and I replied at that time, as shown at page 1606 of Hansard. A related question having to do with this subject matter was asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam on July 5, and was replied to by my colleague the Minister of Labour on July 8, as appears at page 1929 of Hansard.

There is not much I can add to these answers. Meetings were held in Winnipeg on February 5 and Edmonton on February 14, between C.N.R. management and senior running trades union representatives. There was a further meeting in Winnipeg on May 28 at which detailed plans were outlined for the run-through program. There have been requests to me for postponement of the run-through program in western Canada. However, this is a matter relating to the internal operation of the railway, and therefore the only thing I can do is draw the requests to the attention of the railway management. This I have done.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question which I would like to direct to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware that, in view of the decision not to intervene announced by the Minister of Transport, there is every likelihood that Canadian National Railways in western Canada will be tied up in mid-August with a wildcat strike?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the premise put forward by the hon. gentleman is not necessarily correct. I am aware of the situation about which my hon. colleague has made a reply, and I am very anxious that the Department of Labour take a responsible course in this situation which involves the relationship between workers and management that is covered by an existing agreement. It is within that context that the Department of Labour would discharge its responsibilities.

Mr. Fisher: As a supplementary question, would the minister consider investigating the true allegiance or true support that the senior members of the railway brotherhood, the running trades, now have in western Canada, because I think this is the crux of the situation?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that to undertake an investigation to determine the allegiance of union members to their leaders would be an extraordinary activity on the part of the Department of Labour.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING MEMBERSHIP, FUNDS, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

The house resumed from Tuesday, July 9, consideration in committee of Bill No. C-80, to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act—Mr. Pickersgill—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—"Fund".

The Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, I would like to take a few moments of the time of the committee to say something about this legislation which potentially can be of such great importance to the maritime provinces and the Atlantic provinces, including of course Newfoundland. Ever since confederation we in the maritime provinces have had the experience of not sharing fully in the prosperity and general development of the economy of our country as a whole.

The fruits of confederation had been disappointing to us for many years, and many representatives from the maritimes, members of all parties in this house, repeatedly brought this situation to the attention of various governments. In fact it was not until six years ago that the special case of the Atlantic provinces was recognized, and special grants were made to the governments of those provinces which made it possible for them to raise the level of services such governments are called upon to provide, and which have many social connotations, as well as providing the environment, the necessary public works, roads, schools, educational institutions and so forth which are the prerequisite for economic development.

The previous government also passed legislation within the last 12 months to set up this development board for the maritime provinces, and I am a bit concerned that so early in the life of this legislation it is being amended. It would have been the course of wisdom to let the board operate under the original legislation to see how effective it would be and then, at a later date, make amendments if any were required in the light of the experience gained. I am sure this board is still only in the embryo stage, but already the legislation concerning it is being amended, even though when experience is gained I feel there will be further amendments necessary.

There are many projects and a great field of activity in which this board can operate, and one of its problems will be to refrain from duplicating work already being done by other organizations or certain departments of government. It will have a very important role to carry out in the field of co-ordinating the efforts which are being made by all organizations, including governments, for the economic development of the maritime provinces, and in this I include projects which are put forward and prepared by private enterprise. This is perhaps the most important field of all.

Having made those few general remarks, Mr. Chairman, I want to comment on the proposed amendments. I regret very much that the board is being enlarged at this time. The Secretary of State, who is piloting this legislation through the house, uses the very fine-sounding phrase that the board is being strengthened. It does not necessarily follow that the board is being strengthened by being enlarged. What is being done is that we are enlarging the board to provide a membership of 11 rather than five in order that the appointees of the present government will have a majority on the board. I do not think this is necessarily a wise proposal. It has unfortunate political overtones which I for one regret.

The Secretary of State seems to have great faith in the Canadian people accepting his statements at face value, with blind faith. I think their experiences in the past do not justify the Canadian people, or the people in the maritime provinces anyway, in accepting statements from the Secretary of State with this type of unquestioning, blind faith. I would like to see the present members remain on the board until the term of office under which they were appointed has been completed. I would also like to see—if it is necessary, for the reasons given, to enlarge the board—the membership enlarged to nine only. I think a board with this membership would be quite large enough. Boards which have a large membership tend to be unwieldy. It will be difficult to obtain a quorum on occasion, and there are many other difficulties which can be envisaged. Nevertheless we are confronted with this amendment, and until this legislation is passed I suppose the present board is almost in a state of suspended animation and the progress which should be made by the board at the present time is probably not being made until their fate is made known to them.

I have some questions in mind which this legislation brings one to consider. One concerns the setting up of a fund of $100 million for special purposes in the Atlantic provinces. It seems to me that including this provision in the legislation smacks of a concern on the part of the government to fulfil to the letter statements and commitments which were ill-considered and made at random during an election campaign. I think this is the reason for this proposal, rather than the government thinking it is in the best interests of the area concerned.

The party which is now in power made the commitment to set up a special fund; but it does not follow that this is good practice or that it is beneficial to the Atlantic provinces. There is some slight assurance in the statement of the Secretary of State that this amount will be the floor. I think it is difficult for us at this time to look into the future far enough to see the amount of money which may be necessary; this will depend upon the activity of the board and the recommendations they make to the government. But I do think this is a bad principle. If we pass this legislation we are, in effect, voting en bloc $100 million to be administered by a board which is not directly responsible to parliament. This is a new precedent which I think is very unfortunate. After all, one of the basic principles of parliamentary government is that parliament shall have complete control over the voting of public money to be used for public projects. In this connection it has been said, of course, that when the board makes recommendations they will be considered by treasury board; but treasury board is only a committee of the government, and the government is not parliament. It is one of the sacred rights of parliament to carefully scrutinize the voting of supply to the government. I regret this departure from our rights. In effect we are at the present time, if we pass this legislation, voting en bloc $100 million as a minimum for purposes with regard to which we have only a vague conception at the present time. We do not know upon what projects or undertakings the money is to be spent.

I should like to ask the Secretary of State a question regarding this matter. Will the provisions of the Financial Administration Act apply to moneys spent by the board out of this $100 million fund? In other words, if the board is engaged in some activity which requires the letting of contracts and this sort of thing—perhaps construction—will the manner in which this money is spent be in complete accord with the provisions of the Financial Administration Act, in the same way as would be the case with regard to money spent by a department of government? I would like to be assured in regard to this matter.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to delay the committee any longer at the present time. However, I see that the Secretary of State has resumed his seat. I knew it was necessary for him to leave the chamber for a few moments, and therefore I delayed asking this question. I would ask the Secretary of State to clarify a statement he made last evening when closing the debate on second reading. I want to be fair to the hon. gentleman; he may have said something that did not truly reflect what was in his mind. As reported at page 2014 of Hansard, he said this:

> I suggest that, for the rest of the consideration of this bill, we forget whether the previous government, which made a good start in this matter, should get the credit, or whether it should be the present government, which is trying to carry out to the letter what we promised the electors to do, for which we elected 20 members out of 33 members in the Atlantic provinces in the last election.

Then he went on:

> Surely if there is to be good faith in public life at all, when you give undertakings to people and they vote for you, you should carry out those undertakings.

Surely, Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of State does not imply there that the corollary is also true, that if people do not vote for a party and it is elected to power, they have no obligation to carry out the commitments made. I would like to be assured that the Secretary of State recognizes that if a party is elected, it forms a government for all the people and is responsible to the people who voted against it as well as to those who voted for it. Under the present circumstances, of course, those who did not vote for the present government form a majority of the Canadian people. I am glad to see that the Secretary of State, who is an adopted son of the Atlantic provinces—

Mr. Bell: Orphan.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): —appears to recognize the special needs of the maritime provinces, and I would hate to think that the maritime provinces will receive their just rewards only if they knuckle under and guess right as to what government will be next elected to power.

Mr. Pickersgill: I should like to clear up that point right away. I think the hon. gentleman has convicted me of using the language very loosely. I am glad he brought the matter up, because when I was looking at the Hansard record of what I said last night, before I went home, it crossed my mind that this was, to put it mildly, ambiguous. Certainly it was sloppy. What I meant to say was that when a political party gives certain undertakings and, as a result, gets into office, it should carry out those undertakings. That is all I meant, and I think the language, in the loose way we speak colloquially, is capable of bearing that interpretation. However, I admit it is also capable of the interpretation which the hon. member put upon it.

I could not agree with him more completely in saying that once an election is over, and once a government has been established, that government should remember at all times that it is the government of all of the people of Canada, regardless of how they might have chosen to vote in a free country. That is the only way in which we can maintain the kind of institutions to which I believe all of us in this house are devoted.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Last evening, when this committee rose, I had sent over to the Secretary of State a suggested amendment and I was proceeding to speak, briefly I hope, in connection with certain other amendments which I felt would be good for the bill which is before us, and which would eliminate the general idea which might be prevalent that something is being introduced into the bill which instead of strengthening it is likely to weaken it.

We have a board of five people under arrangements set up by an act of parliament. Now it is proposed there shall be six additions to the board—something which was promised, it is reported, by the Prime Minister—and these people are to be representative of various phases of economic activity. I submit that the government would be accused of attempting to weaken the bill if they placed the members now serving on the board in any inferior position to those it is proposed to appoint. It seems to me the six men should be appointed for the period of time the bill specifies, but that there should be no reduction of the period of time which the original members were appointed to serve. It is only in this way that the government will avoid being accused of trying to dilute the force of the bill rather than strengthen it.

Accordingly, I will send over to the Secretary of State another piece of paper which I should like him to look at. He has complete authority, as he had last night, to impose another name on it if he wishes to do so after consideration. I have already said that I feel clause 20, which is the clause providing that the act shall expire in six years time, or on January 24, 1969, should be deleted. So I will send another proposal over to him.

Last night I made certain statements about the responsibility of government and particularly about the responsibility of parliament about voting money. I am pleased that my colleague who has just spoken has the same feeling as myself in connection with the voting of public money. I do not say this in any partisan spirit, but let me call the attention of the committee to this: not only should we refrain from giving this board or any board the right to dispose of an amount such as $100 million without parliamentary sanction, but in this particular case, as we are operating in a deficit position what we are really doing is proposing to borrow that money and place it at the disposal of a non-elected body. In my opinion that should not be done, and I am going to suggest an amendment in this connection also. I shall send this one over to the Secretary of State, too.

Last evening, the Secretary of State read at some length from the report of the commission on Canada's economic prospects as a basis for his argument that the board should go out of existence in six years time. That commission was, of course, headed by the gentleman who is now Minister of Finance, and I marvel at the hon. gentleman's temerity in presenting this report as an excuse for anything done in this house, because in my opinion the elections of 1957, 1958 and 1962 surely demonstrate that the proposals contained in that report were not acceptable to the people of the maritimes. The Secretary of State suggests that this was the opinion of the chairman of that commission—

Mr. Pickersgill: Of the whole commission.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): All right—of the whole commission. In spite of that, why should this parliament follow that opinion to the extent of proposing that the board shall function for less than six years before going out of existence? I marvel at the lack of judgment shown by the Secretary of State in proposing such a thing. The commission made certain recommendations. A number of them were not carried out and I do not think they will be carried out by the present government. They suggested that maritimers be helped to move out.

Mr. Robichaud: No.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Oh, yes. They suggested they should move. That is the word which is used.

Mr. Robichaud: Be frank, read the whole sentence.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I am making my own speech and I do not want any help from the hon. member for Gloucester.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You won't get any.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): The point is this: The previous government did not want to help the maritimers move out. They wanted to help them stay in.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. gentleman why every year the previous government was in power the minister of labour came and asked the house to vote large sums of money to be used precisely for the purpose of moving people out of the maritime provinces to upper Canada—much larger sums, it seems to me, than were ever voted for this purpose before?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I have not been a member of this house for very long, certainly not as long as the Secretary of State or the hon. member for Gloucester. I do not think these sums amounted to very much; I think they were just ordinary. But the previous government voted money to build up the Atlantic provinces, and I have no reason to think that the present government are not going to continue to vote the same amounts. I certainly hope they will, and so far I have no reason to think that they will not. But I do not think the so-called Gordon report on Canada's economic prospects should be the determining factor in amending this piece of legislation passed by parliament in December, which would now go out of existence. That is my point, and I submit that it is a valid point and should be considered by the government.

A few minutes ago I said that the government should consider my proposal, and the Secretary of State has proposed an amendment. I think these new appointments should be made. A few minutes ago the Secretary of State rose in his place and spoke about commitments made during an election. I have no doubt that he spoke with sincerity, but I think he should also recognize that governments have a degree of responsibility in carrying out commitments as well. These gentlemen who were appointed should be continued in office for the length of time for which they were appointed, otherwise they will be in an inferior position and I do not think their position would be tenable. They would be in an inferior position to the new appointees, and I think their position would be such that they could not out of respect to themselves continue in office unless they were continued for at least the same length of time as the new appointees. I suggest that they be continued for the full time for which they were appointed.

Last night I was very much interested—

Mr. Lloyd: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question? What seems to be the great anxiety about the persons being added as against those already there? Surely everybody knows the names of the present members and what they are capable of performing. The hon. member does not know who will be appointed and—

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): If the hon. gentleman wants to speak when I am through, that is his privilege; but what is his question?

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Lloyd: What is your anxiety? What are you trying to protect by this change? You are making a lot of allusions to what is going to happen, but what are you trying to protect?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I am trying to see that the decent thing is done, and that seems to be something which is unknown to some hon. members on the opposite side, although I did not think that applied to the senior member for Halifax. Last night we listened to a speech from the Secretary of State in which I was greatly interested because he mentioned his conception of what the board should do and what it should particularly stand for. He mentioned among other things that it should create a climate, and with that I agree.

Two other things he mentioned, and which I remember at the moment, were power and transportation. When I talk about power I immediately think of the very large potential existing in the province of Newfoundland, in Labrador at Hamilton falls, and of the great plans underway to make that power available to the national grid. When we speak of a national grid, Mr. Chairman, perhaps I might say that in my opinion nothing brought more promise to the Atlantic provinces than did the suggestion of a national grid for electricity from one end of the country to the other. When one considers that something like 4 million horsepower is available in Labrador, which I believe is classified under that most desirable heading of firm power, for use by a national grid to supply cheap electrical energy to eastern Canada, for which we have suffered, it seems to me that the Secretary of State is undoubtedly right. We also have the benefit of the experience we have had of the grid which now exists as between the provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

One hon. member yesterday stood in his place and said that he understood that the savings so far from the grid system which had been established between those two provinces had been in the order of $60 million. I think that was the amount he mentioned; certainly it was an amount of great magnitude. If this figure is anything like correct, then it has been a tremendous success. If the power which is presently about to be developed in the northern part of the province of Newfoundland and Labrador, which I understand is something in the order of 4 million horsepower—

Mr. Pickersgill: About six.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Then that makes it all the more desirable—can be put into a national grid, it seems to me that the possibilities of power development become tremendous, and as a consequence industry will follow that cheap power. That is what we will get in the Atlantic provinces. Undoubtedly the Secretary of State is quite justified in his concept in that regard, and I certainly hope that what he has said will come to pass. A surplus of cheap power will always attract interest and investigation. I understand it is already arranged that a surplus of this power is to be sold to the United States. That is undoubtedly justified because we certainly could not handle an amount of that nature without some guarantee as to what was going to be done with it. I am intrigued very much by the fact that it may be in the not too distant future that work will be done on this very large development.

I should like to refer again to the words of the Secretary of State last evening, because I find myself in an area of disagreement. He said, as reported on page 2013 of Hansard:

> I think the Atlantic development board is going to be concerned primarily with improving transportation, improving power and other facilities which would make an area more attractive to industry.

That is right and I agree with him; but some further remarks of his certainly do not represent my views at the moment. He went on:

> Of the two—

that is, the development of smaller business and spending the fund—

> —it is the more important. I do believe the fund is also needed because there are projects, as every hon. member can see for himself, that are not undertaken directly for a specific industry. I am not going to attempt to describe what they are because I know what would happen if I did; I would be accused of leaving this one or that one out of favouring one, and just get myself into a lot of unnecessary trouble and unnecessary debate.

That brings up the whole question of the consideration of this matter by this board from a regional rather than from a financial point of view. I am sure that his misgivings are justified in that respect because I think that if the board is to be successful it has to approach its duties from a regional point of view with the idea of benefiting the whole region. So I believe that the people who have something to do with it must of necessity forget provincial boundaries. In the final analysis I think it will be better for each province if they adapt themselves to that concept.

At the moment I think I have exhausted everything I wished to express at this time. No doubt the Secretary of State and other members will be speaking further on the bill, but I hope that the amendments that have been suggested with a view, I assure the hon. gentleman, to carrying out his avowed intention of strengthening the board will be accepted with the idea in mind that they will strengthen and add something to it.

I said last December that in my opinion this was the most important single step that had been taken in my lifetime for the benefit of the Atlantic provinces. I am still of the same opinion. I am not completely discouraged because of the changes which are being made provided they seem to be made with the idea of really strengthening the board. I do not object to some election commitments being fulfilled as long as in the final analysis they do not impair the efficiency of the board itself. These are my comments at the moment. I hope that the Secretary of State will consider the amendments with a certain amount of care.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I did not speak on the resolution stage or on second reading, and since my name has sometimes been closely associated with matters affecting the maritime provinces I might be a little bit afraid that if I did not appear on the record at all it would be assumed I had given tacit approval and consent to the bill. I do not want that misconception to be raised, so for a moment or two I want to speak very briefly on clause 1.

All I need to say is that I agree entirely with what my colleague, the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton, has said with respect to the bill. I think it is unnecessary. If not bad, in my opinion it certainly has very little good in it, and I believe we would have been just as well off if the bill had never been introduced at all. There are political overtones in the bill which certainly suggest to anyone who reads that the motive behind the introduction of the bill, as the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton said, was perhaps more to deal with the personnel of the board than to accomplish anything for the material benefit of the Atlantic provinces.

I do not like the capital sum named in the bill. One hundred million dollars is not an inconsequential amount but, as the hon. member said, if it is spread over a period of years it amounts to very little. I think I can say very definitely that so far as the political and commercial leaders in all the Atlantic provinces are concerned they would have preferred to see no specific sum whatsoever mentioned. In my view there is a real danger that, having put an amount in the bill, whether it be X dollars of $100 million as set out, it might be looked upon as the old debtor did when he signed another promissory note and, having signed it , said, "Thank God that bill is paid". Having put an amount of $100 million in the bill, I think there is a real danger that when requests are made for consideration of various matters of the greatest importance to the maritime provinces it may be said: You have got the board, you have got $100 million, what more do you want? In my opinion there is a real danger of that attitude developing as a result of the inclusion of a specific amount in the bill or what will, I presume, become an act.

Up to now I believe that generally throughout Canada there has been a very co-operative feeling toward the problems of the Atlantic provinces. I think all of us from that area recognize the fact that Canadians generally have been prepared to deal very fairly—I will not say generously—with the problems that have arisen there and they are still prepared to do so. Speaking for myself and for most of the people in the Atlantic provinces, I believe, may I say we would have preferred to have matters stand as they were and to be able to make our requests, our demands, shall I say, for specific action on specific problems and have them dealt with rather than to have the situation which is going to develop after this bill becomes an act of parliament.

One could go on and belabour the matter. I have almost a pet peeve at times these days and perhaps I could utter this thought. We have had suggestions made about depressed areas in the maritime provinces. Certainly they have not entirely kept pace with developments in Ontario or other parts of Canada, but I think all of us who come from the maritimes are rather proud of the fact that there has been substantial development in that area during the past few years. It has not been dramatic but it has been steady and it has continued.

The mere fact that in my own province of Nova Scotia 11 relatively large corporations have announced their intention to build capital plants there since January of this year, a period of roughly six months and 11 days, which plants in some cases involve the expenditure of millions and millions of dollars, has created a different atmosphere there. There is a different attitude. There is a development there which I think is commendable and which I think the people of Canada sometimes do no realize is taking place.

We have many other problems to solve. I am not saying for a moment that we have arrived at solutions for all of them. There will be requests for consideration with regard to individual facets but, generally speaking, whether in the coalfields, the steel industry or wherever it may be in the Atlantic provinces, there is an atmosphere of development and growth. This has come about because of the co-operation of all parties and all people. I hope it will continue and I hope that the passage of this bill, and making it an act of parliament, which pretends to offer $100 million as a solution to our problems, is not going to affect our development and growth.

I want to register my opinion at this time, and I am sure that it is the opinion of every responsible person from the Atlantic area. Undoubtedly, it is government policy to go ahead with this bill. I believe the Secretary of State said the other night that this was one of the pledges made prior to the election. The government is determined to carry out this policy and we are certainly not going to block or attempt to block the bill in any way, shape or form. But I do say we look upon it with some doubts, and we are sure that the people of Canada will not assume that the passage of this bill with the provision of a certain specific amount is a solution to the problems that still have to be dealt with in the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Bell: Mr. Chairman, I begin by using that often uttered phrase: I had not intended to speak on this measure. However, I have a good reason for doing so, if one is necessary. I just lost my private member's motion, but I will not inflict upon the house anything that I was going to say on that motion. I do not object to the fact that it has been suspended until later in this session because I am all in favour of any move that will get us out of here this summer.

However, a great many of the members from the Atlantic provinces have spoken at the various stages of this bill, and I feel my silence might be taken as an indication of a lack of interest. I should like therefore, to mention one or two thoughts I have jotted down quickly. I made a small contribution to the debate on this measure when it was first introduced by the previous government. I put forward one or two thoughts about projects that might be undertaken, and I am pleased to note that one project has been undertaken. I refer to the investigation of winter navigation on the St. Lawrence. Last night the Secretary of State gave us assurance that there would be no diminution of this investigation. We were pleased to hear that, because it does hold some hope for the ports of Saint John and Halifax.

I disagree slightly with the hon. members for Victoria-Carleton and Digby-Annapolis-Kings, because I am not so excited about these changes in the bill. I really felt that we did not need to give that much attention to the bill when it was originally introduced by the Diefenbaker government, because the thought was there to help the maritimes. We all agree that it is a wonderful thing, and I believe that is the thought that needs emphasizing, that this is a measure introduced by the Conservative government. I think we have lost sight of that fact, Mr. Chairman. The Liberals, perhaps rightly, are entitled to claim credit for the introduction of family allowances and other measures about which we hear so much. But I think that every schoolboy in the Atlantic provinces will remember that this measure was introduced by the Diefenbaker government. As long as this fact is established firmly in everybody's mind, I do not quarrel with the various amendments that have been made in the original bill.

I have one suggestion that I want to make during the debate on this first clause. I should like to refer to the matter of appointments. I know that some consideration has already been given to this matter, and I know that many members have thoughts on it. I would hope that some person directly connected with the Irving interests in Saint John be included on the board. It may be possible to name Mr. K. C. Irving himself, who is an industrialist who has done ever so much for New Brunswick and the maritimes. I feel that this board should have representation directly from this person or his interests. He has lifted up the economy of southern New Brunswick by his shipbuilding, transportation, oil refinery and other interests, and has always been forward looking in so far as maritime projects are concerned. I merely mention, Mr. Chairman, for consideration by the Secretary of State, who may have responsibility in this matter, that direct representation on this board by the Irving interests be considered. In this way, full advantage may be taken of the known talent available there and the forward thinking that is available.

I do not have anything else that I want to put forward on this clause, except to repeat that I think I will be satisfied if full credit is given to the Conservative government in connection with this matter. They were the ones who started the thinking along these lines originally. I recall that in 1957, when it was decided by the new Conservative government to give financial assistance to Beechwood, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs said that it was going to cause trouble because it was the first time any region had been considered separately. Perhaps this was true, I do not know, but it was that government which brought forward the Beechwood financing plan in conjunction with the then premier of New Brunswick, the present member for Victoria-Carleton. It was accepted by the new government in an honest endeavour to assist an area which needed this type of regional assistance. This is where the matter stands now, and I only hope that the new board will continue the wonderful beginning that was made by the Diefenbaker government with its plan to set up a regional Atlantic development board.

Mr. Winch: May a member of this house from British Columbia, a long distance from the maritimes, be privileged to take about a minute and a half to speak on this measure? All I desire to say is that this bill was introduced in the last parliament by those who now sit in the official opposition. I can see only two differences between that measure and the new bill which is before us. The first one relates to the increase in the size of the board from five to 11 members. I cannot see any reason for the members of the official opposition objecting to that, unless they take the position that they made their appointments on a partisan basis and therefore they do not want to see any change made. If they were not made on a partisan basis, and if they will give to others credit for the honesty they claim for themselves, why hold up this bill any longer?

Then, too, the bill we had before us last year, while good in principle, made no funds available with which the board could function. There is now $100 million available. Why, therefore, if you are willing to give others credit for the honesty and integrity that you claim for yourselves, should this bill be held up by useless talk of a partisan nature? Why do we not get ahead, pass the bill and let the board start functioning?

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to state briefly that I agree with the remarks the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) has just made.

We have been discussing this bill since yesterday afternoon and we hear representations which are truly irrelevant. One would think that the Conservative members from the maritimes are trying to block the improvements which could be achieved through this bill.

Consequently, Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we adopt the bill to allow the people of the maritimes to benefit from the advantages that could ensue from this measure.

(Text):

Mr. Churchill: I would like to say a word or two on this bill, but not along the line suggested by the hon. member for Vancouver East who says that the bill is being held up.

Mr. Dupuis: That is true.

Mr. Churchill: I hear shouts from the government side that that is true, from the people who are the great masters of obstruction. I think they should sit silent while these things are being considered. The bill is not being held up; it is being very carefully considered. Hon. members from the Atlantic provinces have pointed out that there was no need for rushing ahead with amendments to an act which was brought into operation just a few months ago. Without letting the board function and get on with its job, the government which made so many promises, most of which have been unfulfilled up to the present, wants to rush ahead and amend the act before it has been given a proper trial.

Once again, this is undue haste. This is a matter of taking a good look at what the government is attempting to do, and it is not a question of holding up the bill. One of the reasons I rose to speak is that I do not think a bill of this nature should be left solely to the people from the Atlantic provinces, although they are the best qualified to deal with its subject matter. However, there are others of us who are also interested in the development of the Atlantic provinces, as we are in the development of all other areas of Canada. Coming from Manitoba I did not think it was right for the Secretary of State to be the only person from that province to speak on the bill.

There is a community of interest between those of us who live in western Canada and those who live in the Atlantic provinces. We represent great primary producing areas, and over my years in the house I have noticed that community of interest between westerners and those in the Atlantic provinces. We understand each others' problems and difficulties. We in western Canada have had the problem of developing a very large area of the country. Our ancestors certainly passed through a pioneering stage. Ours is a primary producing area and we are familiar with the problem which face the Atlantic provinces, which also form a primary producing area.

In the west we have been pressing forward with industrial development, and the people in the Atlantic provinces are interested in the same type of development. In the west we have been faced with the problem of adverse freight rates which have hindered our industrial growth and so we can appreciate, without much explanation or argument, the problems facing the Atlantic provinces with regard to long freight hauls to central Canada.

It is on the basis of that community of interest that I rise to speak on this bill and to express my regrets that the government is making modifications before the act, passed last winter, has had a chance to be put into operation. That is an unskilful way of carrying on the business of the country. Offhand it is not a question of whether the proposed amendments are necessary or are an improvement. The government has not had experience of the operation of the act to determine whether amendments are required now or later. It is another example of the government rushing in where angels fear to tread. It has made so many mistakes I suppose we should go ahead and pass everything it brings in front of us, so that it may make more mistakes and get the country in a really confused state of affairs. However, I suggest that it slow down a little bit and think things through before rushing in with further amendments to other things that have been done.

As the Conservative party we take great pride in the interest which we showed in the Atlantic provinces during our term of office, and we take pride in the bill we introduced last winter, setting up this board. Our predecessors had plenty of opportunity to indicate the same interest in the Atlantic provinces but they failed to do so.

During the years when I was previously sitting in opposition I recall the occasions when my colleagues from the Atlantic provinces rose to put forward the case for those provinces, and time and again I said to them, "Keep it up; you have got to impress the requirements of your area on public opinion". They used to say to me, "We get tired of listening to western members talking about wheat". But, Mr. Chairman, unless western members talk about wheat, freight rates and industrial development they will not get the necessary attention from the central government here in Ottawa. Therefore I told them in those days, "You must do the same; don't be bashful about it". I may say now that they have not been bashful. They have presented their case and presented it well, but the Liberal administration prior to 1957 did not give the attention to the Atlantic provinces that should have been given, and when we took office we took immediate action to see that economic development was given a boost in the Atlantic provinces.

The legislation we introduced last fall and winter for this Atlantic development board was just part of the general interest that the Conservative party has shown in the development of that section of Canada whose people have made such a contribution to the life of the nation. Those of us from western Canada have to acknowledge with gratitude and respect the contribution of those who have come from the Atlantic provinces and settled in the western provinces. Now and again they boast a little bit about the positions which they have occupied in western Canada, positions of importance based on the strength of their education and the force of their intellect, and we gratefully acknowledge—

The Chairman: Order. I hesitate to interrupt the hon. member but I am wondering if he in his remarks is now staying within the four corners of the bill before the house. As I mentioned last night there is certainly some latitude that has to be recognized by the Chair in dealing with a bill on clause 1, but on the other hand the discussion should be limited to the essence of the bill and whatever is contained in it. I would ask the cooperation of the hon. member, and other speakers who may address the committee after him, to try to limit their remarks to the bill itself.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, I realize that on the first clause of a bill considerable latitude is permitted and I am grateful you gave me the opportunity to pay my respects to the Atlantic provinces. Having offered my criticism of the government's lack of wisdom in making these modifications to the act, I now want to say that increasing membership of the board from five to 11 is too obviously a partisan trick. It is an assurance that there will be six appointees of the present government to offset the five appointees of last winter. That was too obvious, and it will not be overlooked by the people who live in the Atlantic provinces.

Our second main objection, of course, is the setting of a fixed sum to be made available to the board for distribution among the Atlantic provinces. We think this is an unwise move. Here again, if the government had waited until the board had been given an opportunity to examine all the factors involved and had put forward recommendations as to where the emphasis needs to be laid on the development of the Atlantic provinces, there might have been some wisdom in coming forward and fixing a sum to be made available. But suddenly we get an amendment to this act and $100 million—which sounds a great deal of money until you consider the projects that could be carried out by it when divided among four provinces, and then it does not sound very much at all—is fixed as the amount the board will have to spend on this development. It looks too much like an attempt to pay off some ridiculous promise that was made during an election campaign, and it appears to an outside observer that a ceiling is being set on the amount of money that will be available, which was never the intention of the previous Conservative administration. Our problem was to make it possible to assist the Atlantic provinces and wait for recommendations from the board as to how much financial assistance should be given; consequently we did not set any limit of $100 million on the amount which might eventually be voted by parliament.

Third, Mr. Chairman, setting up the money aside like this is giving the board more authority than it should have. The authority should rest with parliament. In the control of expenditures in this country parliament should have the supervision it has exercised in the past and now exercises over most of the expenditures made by parliament.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to say just these few words with regard to the bill to indicate the interest of our party in the Atlantic provinces; to indicate the interest of people who live elsewhere than in the Atlantic provinces in the problems of that area. My hope is that the present government will stop tinkering with acts that are already on the statute books, and projects that our government introduced for the benefit of various areas of Canada, and will take this as a warning to be very careful with regard to the other matters we introduced in the past—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: —which have proven to be highly effective. I warn them against interfering with western Canada in the way they are now interfering with the Atlantic provinces. The bill will probably go through the house this afternoon, up to the third reading stage. However, I think as members of an opposition we are bound to draw attention to some of the mistakes which hon. gentlemen opposite are making.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say one or two words on this bill involving amendments to the Atlantic development board. I believe that the Atlantic Development Board Act, without the amendments which are going to be introduced by this bill, was sterile, if I may use that word. I remember raising the objection in the last session of parliament, that no useful function could be performed by the Atlantic development board unless it had some funds with which to do something. For example, there was the Atlantic provinces council, which is commonly referred to as APEC, which could give the government all the advice it needed respecting development in the Atlantic provinces. Also, those branches of the various provincial departments which are concerned with industry could have made, and probably have already made, thorough and exhaustive investigations in this respect and could offer advice to the federal government as to what they should do.

Then there was, of course, the productivity council which was set up to give advice on regional matters to the federal government, and advice on matters involving the whole country. We now have a new department of industry which has regional responsibilities. To now say that the act was good enough before, when there was no money provided to the board with which it could carry out these projects, is in my view rather ridiculous. During the last session of parliament the Conservative government proposed the setting up of another advisory council, and I suggested there were already a multiplicity of such bodies. At least we will now have $100 million appropriated, with which some action can be taken. As far as we in western Canada are concerned—in Alberta in particular—we think this amendment is appropriate; we think something like this should be done. However, we think there should be some teeth in the act, or at least some power given to this board so that if they find, as a result of their studies, that something beneficial can be done, they will have the wherewithal to do it.

The only other point I should like to make, Mr. Chairman, is that the Conservative members seem to be taking great exception to changing the number of board members from five to 11. They say that six persons belonging to the Liberal party will be appointed to the board, and this will satisfy some political pay-off which they are obliged to make. I suggest that even suggesting this is what is going to happen is tantamount to the Conservative party admitting that they put five Conservatives on the board for the same unworthy reason they allege against the present government. I think that now they have admitted doing this, we have had enough of belittling each other's motives.

Clause 1 agreed to.

On clause 2—

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the Secretary of State has anything to say with regard to the amendment contained in clause 2?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word with regard to the amendment suggested in clause 2. I recognize that this will undoubtedly be the most controversial part of the bill. I must say that I think the hon. member from Medicine Hat said better than I could what must run through the mind of every objective person, that those who are suggesting—and no one on this side of the house has suggested it—that primarily partisan appointments would be made, must be speaking from a rather guilty conscience.

The present Prime Minister indicated clearly the kind of people he thought should be on this board. He thought the fishing industry should be represented by someone directly connected with it, which is not the case at present. He thought there should be a representative of organized labour, which there is not at present. He thought that someone with a real, definite connection with agriculture should be on this board, which there is not at present. I think everybody realizes that of all the resources, even including the fishery, the greatest resource of the four Atlantic provinces is the forest resource. There certainly should be at least one representative of the forest industry on this board if it is at all adequately to represent the various sources from which we can expect economic development generally to flow. I admit we thought the number suggested by one of the members of the New Democratic party was a little large. I think my hon. friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs was inclined to support the view of the N.D.P. when we were in opposition, and I was inclined to take a more conservative line. But when, in considering this bill, we came to look at the various aspects of the economy of this area, we concluded that they could not all be adequately represented unless there were 11 members.

I repeat: admirable as the present members are, they do not represent a large enough variety of occupations in that area. As to the question whether the terms are to be continued as they were before, I pointed out at the resolution stage that we are not doing what the Conservative government did when they abolished the federal district commission and set up the national capital commission: they just fired everybody. Some hon. members over there talked about decency in these matters. All those people were wiped out at once. It would have been easy for us to have brought in a bill which would have done exactly the same. But we did not think this was a proper thing to do. We thought we should recognize the beginning which had been made by hon. gentlemen opposite, and I have never said a word from the day this act came into force in criticism of it at all. I wished the board well the day the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton, sitting over here, introduced the measure. I wished them well and hoped they would get on with the job.

We felt that if we had done away with the existing board and started over again it would have been regarded as a partisan act. It would not have been worthy of the purpose we had in mind. That is why we decided the present members of the board should continue to hold their positions. But as hon. members have pointed out, this board is to have $100 million of the taxpayers' money to spend, for which the government generally, and myself in particular, have to take responsibility before this parliament. We are entitled to be satisfied that the people to whom we entrust this money are in general harmony with the ideas of the government, which will be held accountable for what is done. So long as we have the confidence of this parliament we think we are entitled to have such a board—and when we cease to have the confidence of this parliament we shall no longer try to run this government; we shall act in opposition as we did before.

I say again that the present members of the board are to be continued in office by law. They are all eligible for appointment to a second term, and if that harmony which I hope will exist does exist, there is no reason to think it will not be the desire of everyone that they should continue to serve. I have talked to two members of the board and they have not taken the slightest exception to this. It does seem to me—and I am not seeking to impute any motives—that some of the arguments which have been used in this committee are designed to make it impossible for these gentlemen to continue. We are not trying to do this. We are trying to make it possible for them to work harmoniously as members of the board.

But this is the scheme we have seen fit to recommend to parliament. It is the position taken by the government and I do not feel I can recommend that the committee accept an amendment to this clause. I do not take the same view with regard to all the amendments suggested by the hon. gentlemen, but as far as the amendment to clause 2 is concerned, it is not acceptable to the government.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): In order that there may be no lack of understanding of what is embodied in the suggestion, I should like to move:

That subsection 2, subclause (a) be amended to read:

"In the case of the persons who at the coming into force of this act were members of the Atlantic development board their appointment shall be for the period for which they were originally appointed under the Atlantic Development Board Act."

This has nothing whatever to do with additional members of the board, a point which has been laboured by the Secretary of State. Nor has it anything to do with any members who may be appointed later as a consequence of this measure. It simply provides that these members shall continue in office for the length of time for which they were appointed.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the hon. gentleman puts the amendment, let me say the government has no desire to avoid a vote on this but I do not think it would be his desire to follow strictly the language in which the amendment is written, because what is being done is to substitute something for what is contained in both 4 (2) (a) and 4 (2) (b). What he means to do, I think, is to amend paragraph (2) at the top of page 2, knock out (a) and (b) and put one single provision in their place. In case the amendment carries it would be better, surely, that it should make sense. I wonder if the hon. gentleman would like to have it revised accordingly. As soon as that is done we shall be happy to vote on it.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): The bill is somewhat confusing because on both pages there are paragraphs (2) and (3). However, as long as we understand the intent of the amendment I do not think we need differ about the precise wording.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. gentleman wants to strike out (a) and (b) on page 2 of the bill and substitute the words he suggests.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I am prepared to accept that interpretation.

Amendment (Mr. Flemming, Victoria-Carleton) negatived: Yeas, 18; nays, 62.

The Deputy Chairman: I declare the amendment lost.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Clause 3 agreed to.

On clause 4—Board agent of Her Majesty.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, when I rose previously I asked the Secretary of State about the manner in which contracts would be carried out. I inquired whether they would be drawn in accordance with the Financial Administration Act in the same way as if they were made by a department of government. I would want to be satisfied that we are not granting the board any unusual and perhaps irregular methods of obtaining contracts.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think perhaps the hon. gentleman's question would come more properly on clause 16, because all clause 4 does is to make the board an agent of Her Majesty. My hon. friend the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, who really knows something about the law, has just confirmed to me what I was about to say, and that is that all contracts must be made subject to the approval of the governor in council. That is directly set out in clause 16. I assure the hon. member that the governor in council would not give the board power to make contracts, and could not in fact give the board power to make contracts, on any other basis than that provided by law.

Clause 4 agreed to.

Clause 5 agreed to.

On clause 6—Payments out of consolidated revenue fund.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to clause 6, the object of which is to insert certain words before the words "one hundred million dollars", namely the words "not less than". Section 16 (4) of the act would then read:

The total of all amounts that may be paid by the Minister of Finance to the board under subsection (1) and credited to the Atlantic development fund is not less than one hundred million dollars.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before the clause is put, sir, perhaps I might ask my hon. friend the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to say a word about it, because perhaps when he has said a word the hon. member may wonder whether it would be advisable to put his amendment.

Mr. Favreau: May I make the friendly and humble suggestion to the hon. member that in my respectful view the addition of the words "not less than" may not add to the clause, as such. While it might be clear in his mind, it might cause confusion in the minds of others. This is a clause the beginning of which would, if it were enacted as proposed by the Secretary of State, be permissive in nature and would contain at the end of it, not a provision, but words which would be no more permissive but would be mandatory in nature. It might lead to the impression that the governor in council might authorize by way of a blank cheque, without reference to parliament, more than $100 million.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): It seems to me that if a specific amount is named without qualifying words one way or the other, it will be assumed by future parliaments, officials and others that $100 million is the amount, that it is final and absolute; that the Atlantic provinces have been paid off with $100 million and that ends it. Up to now the Secretary of State has not said—I gave him full marks for this last evening—that this was a minimum amount. He said that he could not bind future parliaments, and I appreciate that point of view.

I would yield however to the greater knowledge of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in this matter; if it is going to lead to possible misunderstanding in a legal sense obviously it should not be proceeded with. That is my feeling, but at the same time I should like those within sound of my voice and who read the record to understand that hon. members from the Atlantic provinces here feel that this is a minimum amount. If circumstances should justify a certain recommendation by the Secretary of State to his government, or by a future minister, if there should be one, to any succeeding government, it is to be understood that it was on that basis that this bill was accepted.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think I can satisfy the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton and please myself a little in doing so. Putting in the words "not less than one hundred million dollars" would, in a strict literal sense, not mean a thing because there is obviously not less than $100 million, because there is $100 million. I know that sounds a little like "Alice in Wonderland" but it is logically correct none the less, as is much of "Alice in Wonderland". I can assure the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton and the other hon. members from the Atlantic provinces, and I can promise the other members from the rest of Canada, that if we can usefully spend this $100 million quickly I will fight hard to get more.

Mr. Churchill: That does not mean a thing; you might not make your point.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, but it does refute the point made by the other hon. gentleman, and all other hon. gentlemen who objected to a fund at all. At least I have $100 million, once this bill passes, that no austerity program next year, or the year after, or the year after that, can take away. This $100 million will have been voted by parliament and will be available. We cannot have a change of heart next year, which might be possible if, for example, some other circumstance arose. Parliament will have decided that this $100 million is for this purpose, and if it is used well and expeditiously, as I hope it will be, I do not think this parliament or any other parliament would dare refuse more as long as it was being used well to accomplish the purpose we have in mind. We have $100 million, if the house sees fit to accept it now and, as I said, in my view it is a floor.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): In view of the remarks of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration with respect to this amendment and its possible misunderstandings I propose to withdraw it.

The Deputy Chairman: Has the hon. member leave to withdraw his amendment?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is not needed; it was never moved.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman I just want to say a word to clarify the position of this party on the question of the fund. It has been argued by some hon. members that the act as it now stands, before amendment, is a sterile thing because it provides no money to be spent. This same argument could be used with regard to every department of government and almost every board that now exists.

There is no sterility about that whatsoever. All it means is that such a board has to come to parliament each year in the usual constitutional manner and have parliament agree to the expenditure of the money proposed in the estimates for that year. What we are doing in this particular case in effect is passing estimates for the next six years.

I have no objection, nor has any member of this party, to the amount that is proposed. We think it may not be enough. It is not that we have any objection to the present government initiating the expenditure of $100 million for this purpose over the next six years, but rather the manner in which the money is going to be provided. The Secretary of State has said that we are going to enact this provision in legislation and then nobody can renege on it later. That brings up a point. I am not sure that this is good parliamentary practice because, if what he says is true, in effect we are binding future sessions of parliament in the next six years. If that is not so, then it means that what he has said has no validity because any future session of parliament could reduce the amount just as easily as changing the amount of an estimate. There is nothing sacrosanct about the fact that this figure is in the bill.

I may be somewhat out of order, but perhaps the chairman will be lenient I just wanted to clear up one misconception on the part of an hon. member on my left. We have no guilty conscience about the appointments we have made to the board; we think they are fine appointments. But the Secretary of State has argued—and I have forgotten his phrase—that he thought the government had a right to have a board which was a congenial one.

Mr. Pickersgill: In harmony.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): That is the word. The implication there is that the government is going to do the same sort of thing with every other board, because there are boards in existence to which they have not appointed the members. In my view this is not a very valid argument. I am not going to say any more, but I was interested in the Secretary of State exposing to the committee what his chief reference book is with regard to his logic. I could never understand it before. Now I find it is Alice in Wonderland.

Mr. Monteith: In all his actions.

Mr. Churchill: There is just one thing I should like to say. The statement of the Secretary of State that if more money is required he will fight for it is completely meaningless. There is such a thing as collective responsibility on the part of government, and all that he has said is that within the cabinet he will put forward a case for more money for the Atlantic provinces. Earlier today my friend to my left talked about the blind faith that people may have in the statements of the Secretary of State. I hope they will not exhibit blind faith in that statement, because it is completely meaningless except as an expression of opinion as to what he might do at some future date.

Clause agreed to.

Clause 7 agreed to.

On clause 8—Duration.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word on clause 8. There has been a good deal of exception taken to clause 8. A good deal of exception was taken again today to clause 8 in that it was suggested that we should not have a terminal date on the board. I am not entirely convinced by the arguments that have been made but I think there is a lot in them. I also think there is some likelihood that there might be some misunderstanding among many ordinary people that we were not serious about this matter. I had thought it would be a useful incentive to the board but it certainly is not essential to the legislation. Therefore I am going to ask my colleague, the Solicitor General, to move an amendment along the lines suggested to us by the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton to take clause 8 out of the bill and to renumber clause 9 as clause 8.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That clause 8 of Bill C-80 be deleted and that clause 9 be renumbered clause 8.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause as amended agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the bill carry?

Mr. Pickersgill: Just before you leave the chair, Mr. Chairman, I should like to thank the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton for his courtesy in making his amendments available ahead of time so that there would be an opportunity to consider them. It was a great convenience and I think it helped us to get the bill through more quickly.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, may I simply comment that I appreciate the courtesy of the Secretary of State in the statement he has just made. I should also like to say how much I appreciate the action of the committee in allowing the legislation to continue beyond January 24, 1969.

Mr. Bell: I hope there is the same harmony on the board as there has been in the house this afternoon.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): When shall the bill be read the third time? Now, by leave?

Some hon. Members: Next sitting.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether we could not have it read to remove from me any temptation to make another speech on Thursday.

Mr. Winkler: If that were the only reason we would agree.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): When shall the bill be read the third time?

Some hon. Members: Next sitting of the house.

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Pickersgill: Now.

Mr. Bell: A non-maritimer objects to it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Next sitting of the house.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the house leader would like to give us the order of business for tomorrow and Friday.

Mr. Pickersgill: Tomorrow we will take third reading of the Atlantic development board bill and I will give an undertaking not to speak, if I get an undertaking from all other hon. members that they will reciprocate.

Mr. Monteith: No undertakings.

Mr. Pickersgill: Then, we will take second reading of the economic council bill. I hope that by six o'clock we will have completed second reading of the bill, so we can spend the evening on the resolution preceding the Department of Agriculture bill. I do not imagine we would need a third item for tomorrow, but if we do I will consult with hon. gentlemen about what it should be. On Friday we intend, as I have already indicated privately, to call the estimates of the Department of Transport. We are counting on the same leadership from the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, and the same co-operation in getting another department through on Friday.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX "A"

AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND BRITISH COLUMBIA RESPECTING COLUMBIA RIVER

THIS AGREEMENT made this 8th day of July, 1963.

BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENT OF CANADA, herein referred to as "Canada",

AND THE GOVERNMENT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA, herein referred to as "British Columbia",

WHEREAS a treaty between Canada and the United States of America relating to co-operative development of the water resources of the Columbia river basin has been signed on the 17th day of January 1961; and

WHEREAS it is desirable that an agreement be made between Canada and British Columbia concerning implementation of the treaty and disposal of benefits arising thereunder:

Now Therefore this Agreement Witnesseth:

1. In this agreement "Treaty" means "the treaty between Canada and the United States of America relating to co-operative development of the water resources of the Columbia river basin" signed at Washington, District of Columbia, United States of America on the 17th day of January, 1961, together with any protocol or exchange of notes relating thereto.

2. All proprietary rights, title and interests arising under the treaty and particularly those with respect to

(a) downstream power benefits accruing to Canada,

(b) proceeds from the sale of downstream power benefits in the United States of America.

(c) moneys payable and electric power accruing to Canada in return for flood control,

(d) the stand-by transmission services rendered by transmission grids in the United States of America,

(e) benefits arising in Canada from any dam constructed pursuant to the treaty,

(f) rights of water diversion granted to Canada by Article XIII of the treaty, and

(g) moneys paid to Canada by the United States of America in settlement of any claim made by Canada under the treaty which relates in any way to the obligations of British Columbia under this agreement belong to British Columbia absolutely for its own use.

3. British Columbia shall at its own expense;

(a) construct or arrange for the construction of all the dams and operate or arrange for the operation of all of the storages as required by Articles II and IV of the treaty;

(b) not operate and prevent the operation of any storage in British Columbia in the manner prohibited by Article IV(5) of the treaty;

(c) prepare and make available for flooding the land in Canada required for the purposes of any dam constructed by the United States of America under Article XII of the treaty;

(d) not make and prevent the making of any diversion of water prohibited by Article XIII of the treaty;

(e) carry out or arrange for the carrying out of any variation in operation of any Kootenay river diversion agreed upon pursuant to Article XIII(6) of the treaty;

(f) abide by and carry out or arrange for the carrying out of any decisions made pursuant to Article XVI of the treaty which relate in any way to the obligations of British Columbia under this agreement;

(g) pay to Canada, upon demand therefor, all costs incurred by Canada in connection with proceedings under Article XVI of the treaty which relate in any way to the obligations of British Columbia under this agreement;

(h) carry out or arrange for the carrying out of anything required to be done by Canada under Article XVIII(3) of the treaty;

(i) carry out and give full force and effect to all conditions, provisions, orders and decisions imposed or made by the permanent engineering board established by the treaty; and

(j) generally do all those things which constitutionally it is capable of doing to ensure that Canada is not in default under the treaty and not do and so far as it is constitutionally capable prevent any person from doing anything which Canada has under the treaty undertaken to refrain from doing.

4. (1) It is acknowledged and agreed that Canada has the right and obligation to do all things which the treaty requires Canada to do that British Columbia has not undertaken to do by this agreement.

(2) Notwithstanding subsection (1) of this section Canada shall obtain the concurrence of British Columbia before:

(a) confirming by exchange of notes any operating plan pursuant to Article IV of the treaty;

(b) making any election pursuant to Article VI(5) of the treaty relating to payment for flood control;

(c) agreeing to any variation of entitlement to downstream power benefits pursuant to Article IX of the treaty;

(d) confirming any electrical co-ordination arrangement made pursuant to the treaty;

(e) agreeing to any diversion of water by the United States of America pursuant to Article XIII of the treaty;

(f) agreeing, as provided for in Article XIII(6) of the treaty, to any variation in the use of water diverted by British Columbia pursuant to that article;

(g) charging the entities designated pursuant to Article XIV of the treaty with any new power or duty; and

(h) terminating the treaty.

5. Canada shall, if requested by British Columbia, endeavour to obtain the agreement of the United States of America with respect to:

(a) any variation of the operation of any dam constructed under Article XII of the treaty;

(b) any modification of the area of land in Canada required for the purposes of any dam constructed under Article XII of the treaty;

(c) any diversion of water not provided for by the treaty;

(d) any new power or duty which British Columbia wishes to impose upon the entities designated under Article XIV of the treaty;

(e) any direction which British Columbia with the concurrence of Canada wishes given to the permanent engineering board established by the treaty; and

(f) any proposal relating to the treaty which Canada and British Columbia agree is in the public interest.

6. (1) Canada shall designate the British Columbia hydro and power authority as the Canadian entity for the purposes of Article XIV of the treaty and British Columbia shall ensure that the British Columbia hydro and power authority fulfills the obligations imposed on the Canadian entity by the treaty.

(2) British Columbia may nominate one of the two persons to be appointed to the permanent engineering board established by the treaty and Canada shall upon such nomination appoint the nominee to that board.

7. (1) Canada shall do whatever is reasonably possible to ensure compliance with the treaty by the United States of America and shall not waive any default or breach by the United States of America without having consulted British Columbia.

(2) Canada shall, at the request of British Columbia, present any claim deemed reasonable by Canada arising under the treaty which British Columbia wishes made against the United States of America.

(3) Canada shall establish any arbitration tribunal necessary to settle differences under the treaty and shall, after consultation with British Columbia, defend or prosecute, as the case may be, all differences submitted to such tribunal or to the international joint commission under the treaty.

8. (1) British Columbia shall indemnify and save harmless Canada from and in respect to any liability of Canada to the United States of America arising under the treaty.

(2) British Columbia shall not be required to indemnify Canada pursuant to subsection (1) of this section in respect of any liability to the United States of America directly attributable to any action or failure to take action by Canada.

(3) Canada shall not discharge any liability in respect of which it is indemnified pursuant to subsection (1) of this section without having consulted with British Columbia.

9. British Columbia shall maintain or arrange for the maintenance of complete accounts and records relating to;

(a) the discharge of the obligations of British Columbia under this agreement;

(b) the receipt and ultimate disposal of all moneys derived from the sale in the United States of America of any downstream power benefits arising under the treaty;

(c) the receipt and ultimate disposal of all moneys and other compensation derived from the provision of flood control under the treaty; and shall comply with or arrange for compliance with any reasonable request for disclosure of any such account or record made by Canada of the permanent engineering board established by the treaty.

10. (1) Canada shall transfer to British Columbia the administration and control of any unimproved lands in Canada belonging to Canada which are required for the construction and operation of the dams and storages which British Columbia is obligated by this agreement to construct or operate.

(2) For the purposes of subsection 1 of this section the expression "lands" does not include lands forming part of an Indian reserve.

11. (1) As soon as may be convenient after execution of this agreement, Canada shall undertake negotiations with the United States of America with a view to entering into a protocol to the treaty embodying certain matters agreed to by Canada and

British Columbia and Canada shall thereafter with due diligence proceed toward ratification of the treaty.

(2) Any protocol entered into pursuant to subsection 1 of this section shall be attached to this agreement as schedule A and shall form part of this agreement.

12. (1) Canada agrees that the downstream power benefits arising in the United States of America under the treaty may be sold in the United States of America subject to terms that are acceptable to both Canada and British Columbia and that will ensure that the proceeds of the sale will contribute to savings in the cost of electric power in the province of British Columbia.

(2) Any agreement concluded under subsection 1 of this section with respect to the sale of downstream power benefits shall be attached to this agreement as schedule B and shall form part of the agreement.

(3) British Columbia will finance the treaty projects by use of the funds derived from the sale of the downstream power benefits arising in the United States of America, from the flood control benefits and from other sources as required, so that Canada shall have no obligation for the financing of these treaty projects.

13. (1) The construction of the dams and operation of the storages required by the treaty shall be carried out in accordance with all laws in force from time to time whether those of Canada or British Columbia.

(2) British Columbia shall take whatever steps are necessary to amend or appeal any law, permit or regulation and shall not enact any new law or regulation or issue any permit which may operate to frustrate, hamper or interfere with the carrying out of any undertaking in the territory of Canada provided for by the treaty.

(3) Canada shall do everything possible to expedite the issue of all licences and permits required under the laws of parliament by either British Columbia or the British Columbia hydro and power authority in order for them to carry out and perform their obligations under this agreement, including schedules A and B.

14. Canadian labour and material shall be used in all construction or operation of the dams and storages constructed or operated pursuant to this agreement to the full extent to which they are procurable, consistent with proper economy and the expeditious carrying out of the construction and operation and no person shall be discriminated against in the course of the construction and operation by reason of his race, colour, religion or political affiliation.

15. (1) Canada and British Columbia will consult as required on technical and other matters of mutual interest with a view to facilitating the implementation of the treaty, avoiding disputes and carrying out this agreement.

(2) In particular a liaison committee shall be established consisting of senior representatives of Canada and British Columbia.

(3) If differences or questions arise or allegations are made as to loss arising out of any action or failure to take action by either Canada or British Columbia which cannot be resolved through consultation they shall be submitted to the Exchequer Court of Canada for decision and that court has jurisdiction to determine the rights and liabilities of either party under this agreement.

(4) British Columbia shall, in respect of itself, procure the enactment of whatever legislation is necessary to implement subsection 3 of this section.

16. (1) British Columbia agrees that generators will be installed in the dam at Mica creek as soon as economically feasible.

(2) Subject to the requirements of British Columbia, British Columbia will make available to other provinces of Canada, through a national grid or otherwise, on a first call basis, electric power from the Columbia river and other power developments in the province of British Columbia at prices not higher than those obtainable by British Columbia from time to time from the United States of America for any comparable British Columbia entity electric power exported thereto.

17. This agreement binds Canada and British Columbia from the date of the agreement and thereafter so long as any obligation or right of either the United States of America or Canada exists under the treaty or any part thereof.

In witness whereof the undersigned, duly authorized by their respective governments have signed and delivered this agreement,

For the government of Canada on the 8th day of July, 1963

PROVINCIAL REPLIES RESPECTING ROYAL COMMISSION ON BICULTURALISM

PROVINCE OF MANITOBA
Office of the Premier
Winnipeg

May 16th, 1963.

Dear Prime Minister Pearson:

In the premier's absence I wish to acknowledge your letter of May 15 respecting a proposed inquiry by a royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism.

Your letter will be drawn to the attention of the premier immediately upon his return to the office at the end of next week. In the meantime, I have taken the liberty of forwarding a copy of your letter to the acting premier, the Honourable Gurney Evans, minister of industry and commerce.

Yours respectfully,
Joan Cameron
Secretary to the premier

The Rt. Hon. Lester B. Pearson,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa 4, Ontario.

THE GOVERNMENT OF THE PROVINCE OF NEWFOUNDLAND
The Premier

20 May, 1963.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson, P.C., M.P.,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa.

My dear Prime Minister:

I thank you for your letter of May 15, enclosing draft terms of reference of the proposed royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism and asking whether the government of Newfoundland would approve appointment of a royal commission.

In the 14 years that Newfoundland has been united with Canada our people have come to appreciate the basic importance to the unity of our country, of good relations between the two founding races of Canada. We share a long land border with the province of Quebec and in Labrador are coming into immediate contact with the problems associated with the bilingual and bicultural character of Canada.

The government of Newfoundland is ready and eager to make a constructive contribution to the solution of these problems; we cordially approve the proposal of a royal commission; we are quite happy with the draft of the terms of reference; and we are ready to cooperate fully in the work of the commission.

Sincerely yours,
J. R. Smallwood

PREMIER'S OFFICE
Regina, Saskatchewan

May 21st, 1963.

The Rt. Hon. L. B. Pearson, P.C.,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa, Ontario.

My dear Prime Minister:

This will acknowledge your letter dated May 15, 1963, regarding a possible royal commission inquiry on bilingualism and biculturalism.

As soon as my colleagues and I have had an opportunity to study and discuss the proposed terms of reference I shall write to you again with our detailed comments.

Yours sincerely,
W. S. Lloyd.

PRIME MINISTER AND PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL
Toronto, Ontario

May 24, 1963.

My dear Prime Minister:

I acknowledge the receipt of your letter of May 15 in which you invite our views on the establishment of a royal commission to inquire into and report upon the existing state of "bilingualism and biculturalism" in Canada and to recommend what steps should be taken to develop the Canadian confederation on the basis of an equal partnership between the two founding races, taking into account the contribution made by other ethnic groups to the cultural enrichment of Canada.

As a province whose own history and development, from the days of Champlain, Frontenac and LaSalle, has been profoundly influenced and enriched by the sons and daughters of French Canada, along with leaders and peoples of other lineage of bygone days, Ontario has the largest French speaking community outside Quebec. It is natural and logical, therefore, that we should react positively to this all Canadian outlook, and we do so with a good heart.

Please accept, therefore, my assurance on behalf of the government and people of Ontario that this course has our very warm approval, and as the terms of reference, as laid down, have been announced in the press, you will be proceeding on such basis. If the Canadian confederation is to survive and flourish, our partnership must be a true one —in fact, in spirit, and in purpose—and may I say to you that when the proposed commission is finally established, we shall leave nothing undone to facilitate its work in our province.

I am fully persuaded that if we approach these unsolved problems with patience, understanding and good will, if we learn the necessary lessons from our failures and draw upon the wisdom gained from almost a century of experience, we can in the next four years do much to strengthen and ensure the concept of the Canadian confederation so that Canada's centennial will be an occasion of rejoicing and of fulfilment.

With kind personal regards and best wishes,

Sincerely yours,

John P. Robarts

Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson,
Prime Minister of Canada,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ontario.

THE PREMIER
Nova Scotia
Halifax

May 24, 1963.

Dear Mr. Prime Minister:

I wish to acknowledge your letter of May 15 with enclosure regarding the proposed royal commission concerning bilingualism and biculturalism.

I have now had an opportunity to confer with my colleagues concerning your inquiry.

It is, of course, not possible for the government of Nova Scotia to determine whether or not a royal commission is the best approach to this problem across the nation. That, of course, would be a decision for your government to take. I can assure you, however, that if your government decides to appoint such a commission the province of Nova Scotia will offer such a commission every co-operation.

Yours sincerely,

R. L. Stanfield

The Honourable Lester B. Pearson
Prime Minister of Canada
Ottawa, Canada

The Government of the Province of New Brunswick

THE PREMIER
Fredericton,

May 24th, 1963.

Dear Mr. Prime Minister:—

I have carefully reviewed the terms of reference of the proposed royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism in Canada and find them very comprehensive and quite adequate. Consequently, the government of New Brunswick endorses the proposal and offers our utmost co-operation.

Yours sincerely,

Louis J. Robichaud

The Right Honourable L. B. Pearson,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa, Ontario.

OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER
Province of Quebec

Quebec, May 27, 1963.

Honourable Lester B. Pearson,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Parliament Buildings,
Ottawa.

Mr. Prime Minister,

I have your letter of May 15 concerning the holding of an inquiry on biculturalism and bilingualism.

I have submitted your letter to my colleague, together with the terms of reference of the royal commission that would conduct the enquiry.

I am pleased to inform you that the government of Quebec favours the holding of such an inquiry, in consultation with the provincial governments, as you suggest.

In that respect, we trust that this commission will be made up in accordance with the principle set out in the preamble to the terms of reference, i.e. "an equal partnership between the two founding races of the Canadian confederation, taking into account the other ethnic groups".

Yours sincerely,

Jean Lesage

OFFICE OF THE PREMIER

May 28th, 1963.

Right Honorable L. B. Pearson,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa, Ontario.

My dear Prime Minister:

My colleagues and I have given careful consideration to your letter of May 15 and to the terms of reference for the proposed royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism.

In response to your request, we wish to advise that, while we are not opposed to such a study being undertaken, unless the terms of reference are clarified to make more explicit the objectives which it is hoped to achieve we have serious doubts as to its advisability and practical value.

To amplify, in the matter of biculturalism, if the objective is to encourage citizens of all racial and ethnic origins to make their maximum contribution to the development of one over-all Canadian culture embracing the best of all, we feel this would meet with widespread endorsation and support.

If, on the other hand, the objective is to give some form of official recognition to a dual English and French culture, we suggest that this is unrealistic and impracticable and we doubt that it would meet with any widespread public acceptance.

In the matter of bilingualism, if the objective is to encourage Canadian citizens to become fluent in two or more languages, certainly on the part of most Canadians this would be welcomed.

If the purpose is to extend recognition of French as an official language in areas and spheres beyond those in which it was guaranteed official status at the time of confederation, we feel that it would not meet with general public acceptance and the consequences, in our opinion, would impair rather than strengthen Canadian unity.

We offer these observations for your consideration in arriving at a final decision in the matter proposed in your communication.

Very sincerely yours,

E. C. Manning
Premier.

PREMIER'S OFFICE
Prince Edward Island

May 28, 1963.

Right Honourable L. B. Pearson
Prime Minister of Canada
Ottawa, Canada

My dear Prime Minister:

I have your letter of May 15, regarding an inquiry with the provinces of Canada on bilingualism and biculturalism.

I have not had an opportunity of discussing this matter with other members of my cabinet, so I am not in a position to fully advise of their views regarding the most suitable approach to this important question.

Recognizing, however, that the decision of your government favors the formation of a commission to conduct the studies indicated, I can assure you that this province will accept your proposal, on the understanding as expressed in your letter that any commitments or recommendations from this commission will not be binding on the government of our province.

Yours sincerely,

W. R. Shaw,
Premier.

OFFICE OF THE PREMIER

May 31, 1963.

My dear Prime Minister:

My colleagues and I have studied with care the proposal outlined in your letter of May 15 to inquire into biculturalism and bilingualism in Canada by means of a royal commission.

May I say at once that this question requires full and serious attention by our people and that you may therefore be assured of the full co-operation of the government of Manitoba in the proposed investigation. Indeed I believe that this province may have a unique contribution to make in the search for a wholehearted consensus on national unity and cultural development because of our experience in integrating the contributions of many cultures into Manitoba's basic French-English cultural background.

In expressing agreement with the aim of the proposed royal commission I feel bound, however, to raise the question of whether the problem Canada faces today can be dealt with within these limits. The basic issue appears to me to go beyond the purely cultural relationships of Canadians, and may indeed embrace the intergovernmental framework of the nation, including its fiscal aspect. It would seem that this view has already been placed before your government by some at least of my fellow premiers, including the prime minister of Quebec.

I would hope, therefore, that the appointment of the royal commission would not delay a more fundamental examination of the question. This examination, I suggest, may best be considered by direct federal-provincial discussions, possibly along the lines of the meeting envisaged by your predecessor in his letter of February 4 last to provincial premiers. Manitoba would indeed be happy to join in the search for co-operative federalism, a phrase which well reflects our own policy of full co-operation in the working of our confederation.

In regard to the third point in the suggested terms of reference, I would mention that Manitoba has already taken steps to improve and extend the teaching of French in our public schools. While the educational aspect of bilingualism is of first importance, I doubt that this can usefully be separated from its constitutional implications. It is for this reason that I suggest that, as a matter of procedure, while the royal commission may seek information from the provinces and make recommendations thereon, the consideration of this subject should be a matter for intergovernmental discussion rather than of discussion between the royal commission and provincial governments.

I am taking the liberty of making this letter public as of Monday, the 3rd of June.

Yous sincerely,
Duff Roblin.

The Rt. Hon. L. B. Pearson P.C., M.P.,
Prime Minister of Canada,
East Block,
Ottawa 4, Ontario.

OFFICE OF THE PREMIER
Victoria, British Columbia

May 31st, 1963.

The Right Honourable L. B. Pearson,
Prime Minister of Canada,
Ottawa, Canada.

Dear Sir:

In the absence of the premier, I wish to acknowledge receipt of your letter of May 15, and enclosure, re commission of inquiry on bilingualism and biculturalism.

Yours faithfully,
(Mrs.) K. R. Mylrea,
Secretary to the premier.

PREMIER'S OFFICE
Regina,

June 7th, 1963.

The Rt. Hon. Lester B. Pearson,
Office of the Prime Minister,
Ottawa, Ontario.
My dear Prime Minister:

With further reference to your letter dated May 15, 1963 regarding a possible royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism, I now wish to advise that the province of Saskatchewan will be pleased to take advantage of any opportunities to discuss with the commission problems related to biculturalism.

In the meantime my colleagues and I are discussing ways in which we can best make a contribution to the commission's inquiry and how best to undertake appropriate provincial studies.

Yours sincerely,
W. S. Lloyd

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, July 11, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

SECOND AND THIRD REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE—CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT

Mr. Edmund Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace) presented the second and third reports of the standing committee on banking and commerce, and moved that the third report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

FINANCE

TABLING OF OPINION ON VALIDITY OF CERTAIN APPOINTMENTS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): On July 5 the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked the Acting Prime Minister for a legal opinion on the validity or otherwise of the appointment of certain persons to carry out special services in the Department of Finance.

I would like to table copies of a letter addressed on July 8, 1963, to the Clerk of the Privy Council by the deputy attorney general on this subject.

TRADE

CUBA—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is it the policy of this government to promote increased trade with Cuba, similar to the approach made by the former Conservative administration?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): In view of the fact that I have not had notice of this question I think I should perhaps answer it tomorrow.

Mr. Noble: A supplementary question—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think we should leave it there. The minister said he would take this as notice and answer the question tomorrow.

[Later:]

Mr. Noble: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Now that fish rationing has ended in Cuba, will the government make an effort to sell more fish products to that country?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, as I said in reply to an earlier question, I think I should deal with these questions of trade relations with Cuba all at once, and I will bear this question in mind when I am making my answer tomorrow.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

MUNICIPAL LOAN FUND—RESOLUTION OF QUEBEC LEGISLATURE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Could the Prime Minister tell us whether he has received the resolution unanimously carried by the Quebec legislature condemning the bill of federal assistance to municipalities, as well as an explanatory letter from Premier Lesage?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): To the best of my knowledge no such resolution has been received, but I will inquire when I go back to my office.

(Translation):

Mr. Balcer: I wish to put a supplementary question Mr. Speaker. Is the Prime Minister aware that Premier Lesage tabled this morning in the legislature a letter written to the Prime Minister of Canada in this connection?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. I will look into the matter immediately.

[Later:]
(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question arising out of what was said a while ago. Has the Prime Minister taken into consideration the protests and remarks of the premier of Quebec in respect to that bill?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have taken those into consideration.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question that is an offshoot of that put by the hon. member for Three Rivers. Can he be more definitive or definite with the house in terms of time with regard to bringing forward the municipal development and loan fund legislation, in view of the fact that many Ontario municipalities have staged winter projects in anticipation of it?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, we hope to proceed as quickly as possible with this piece of legislation which is on the order paper. How soon that will be, will depend on the progress made with the legislation now before the house.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could we have an assurance from the Prime Minister that any developments that may have taken place in Quebec will have no bearing at all upon the intention to proceed in this house?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the provinces have an interest in this matter. They may be discussing it themselves at their conference in Halifax in August, but we have put the legislation on the order paper with the intention of proceeding with it.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can we be informed whether it will be proceeded with before the meeting of the provinces in August?

Mr. Pearson: That will depend on the progress made with other legislation before the house, including the budget resolutions.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the Prime Minister inform the house whether any letters of acceptance or protest regarding this bill have been received from provinces other than the province of Quebec?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, to the best of my knowledge the only communication received from the provinces has been from the province of Quebec, but I should like to check on that before I give a definitive answer in regard to this particular piece of legislation. I will be glad to go into the matter tomorrow.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the Prime Minister's assertion that proceeding with this legislation depends upon the progress with regard to other legislation, may I ask if it would be appropriate for this matter to be discussed by the representatives of all four parties when we are discussing the legislation to be proceeded with by the house?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, it would be perfectly proper to discuss that in connection with the informal discussions that take place about house business.

[Later:]

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the suggestion made by the Prime Minister that proceeding with the municipal loan fund legislation depends on the arranging of the business of the house, will the Secretary of State call another meeting of the representatives of the four parties so that we might discuss this matter which, as he knows, we have not yet done?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. gentleman intends to refer to the subjects that have been discussed in our private meetings; therefore I will not contradict him. But I would hope it might be possible at 5.30 this afternoon—and it will save me a little trouble if they take this as notice—for the hon. gentlemen who usually consult with me to consult with me about the business of the house for the next few days, but I believe the consultation would be on a somewhat wider basis.

Mr. Knowles: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I wish to make it quite clear that I agree with the Secretary of State that what goes on in these meetings should not be disclosed. But I think he would agree with me that the impression should not have been left by the Prime Minister that it was because of our inability to arrange for this legislation that it has not been proceeded with.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, since the hon. gentleman has seen fit to rise on a question of privilege I would say that I think the impression he thinks the Prime Minister created is entirely in his own mind.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: The impression I got from what the Prime Minister said was that we had laid down a certain program of government business, as I think is incontestably the right of the government, and certain things that we thought ought to be given priority, and that when those things were disposed of there would be an opportunity to go on with the other items on the order paper.

That, I think, is a correct, factual and objective interpretation of what the Prime Minister said; and it is always wiser to take the words rather than someone else's impression on what the words mean.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, does the Secretary of State not think it would be more advantageous to decide what these items are and state them to the house rather than negotiate on them, so that all hon. members would be familiar with the terms of the legislation to be presented and so a date for the recess could be arranged without this negotiation, where new things can be added and new negotiations can be undertaken?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the remarkable co-operation given at all times by the hon. gentleman leads me to believe that anything he would concur in would speed up the business of the house.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is becoming a debate.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Privy Council? Can the minister tell the house why Mr. Claude Morin, deputy minister of federal-provincial affairs in Quebec, came to Ottawa recently?

WORLD FAIR

CONGRATULATIONS TO MINISTER—INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Since the rules of the house often afford us the opportunity to criticize the government, but seldom to congratulate it, I shall take the liberty to do so in compliance with parliamentary practice.

Would the Prime Minister allow me to congratulate the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Deschatelets) on the able manner in which he conducted the preliminary work for the world exhibition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Later:]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works, who is responsible for the world fair. Does the federal government intend to provide financial assistance to the city of Montreal and the province of Quebec concerning the construction of access roads, such as bridges and roadways, for the world fair?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, an agreement has been signed by the city of Montreal, the province of Quebec and the federal government, and the obligations of all three parties are clearly set out therein. There is no question of changing that agreement.

Mr. Pigeon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the minister received a letter from the provincial minister of highways requesting a financial contribution from the federal government?

Mr. Deschatelets: No, Mr. Speaker.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—TERMINOLOGICAL EXACTITUDE OF AGREEMENT BETWEEN CANADA AND B.C.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): My question is one for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is based on discussions I have had with intelligent members of the House of Commons and some of the brightest minds of the press gallery. Can the minister assure the house that the clauses of the agreement between the government of Canada and the government of British Columbia with respect to the Columbia river treaty are so clearly and properly drawn that there would be no possibility of misunderstanding their meaning in the days ahead?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I can think of no better compliment to the hon. gentleman than to recognize his own appreciation of the value of precision in language and the value of lucidity in expression, I am sure the hon. gentleman recognizes these qualities in the document I had the honour of tabling yesterday.

[Later:]

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs which has to do with the lucidity which he attributes to the document which he tabled yesterday. I am wondering whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs considers an example of that lucidity to be the latter part of subsection (j) of section 3 of the agreement, which is to be found in appendix "A" at page 2059 of yesterday's Hansard. This subsection uses these words:

—and not do so far as it is constitutionally capable prevent any person from doing anything which Canada has under the treaty undertaken to refrain from doing.

I wonder whether the minister would be good enough to clarify, for the members of the house, the meaning of that particular section of the agreement.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I do not think on the orders of the day it is open to us to discuss the meaning of what is clearly a lucid expression and is a very good example of precision in language.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

ALLEGED DENIAL BY MINISTER OF INFORMATION PUBLISHED ELSEWHERE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Does the minister consider that military information published by NORAD is classified and therefore not to be published in Canada?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): If the information is published it is unclassified.

Mr. Churchill: Then I have to rise on a question of privilege and draw the attention of the house to the fact that in an answer given yesterday the minister stated that classified information was required in an answer to two questions and therefore it could not be made public. I refer to page 2034 of Hansard, the second column, to a question asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. The first part of the question reads as follows:

As of January 1 each year from 1957 to 1963, how many Soviet bombers, by types, have been estimated capable of making at least a one way attack on the main industrial areas of southern Canada and the northern United States?

The answer given by the minister is:

Since the information requested is classified it should be appreciated that it would not be in the public interest for the government to answer these questions.

I have in front of me a copy of a publication by headquarters, North American air defence command, office of information, called "The NORAD Story" published in the spring of 1961, in which occur these sentences:

The Soviets now have 1,200 first line jets in their bomber force. Mr. Khrushchev says that they do not intend to build any more. Even if they don't, the Soviets, by cannibalizing parts, could still have an attack force of more than 500 of these atomic carriers as late as 1970 . . . Those 500 bombers could dump an estimated 1,000 megatons of destructive energy on this continent.

In the Ottawa Journal of April 1, 1963 Mr. Dave McIntosh states:

North American air defence command estimates that Russia has 1,000 bombers that could reach North American targets.

Then he names the types. The minister tells us that this information is classified, yet we get the information from other sources. He says that if NORAD publishes it, it is not classified. Consequently the house is being misled with regard to essential information.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, on this question the figures which the hon. gentleman has just read are, of course, approximations, or if I may use the expression used the other day in the committee, ball park figures. They are not precise figures; therefore they are not, as he has said, classified. The question put on the order paper by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam asked for specific information in respect to quantities and types of aircraft, and if I had produced figures which were rounded and not accurate, and any person could have substantiated the fact that they were not accurate, then I would have been accused of misleading the house.

It is not the practice to produce exact information in respect to the Soviet threat. It is not produced on an unclassified basis by NORAD, nor is it produced in Canada on an unclassified basis, and I am sure my hon. friend is very much aware of this. There was no misleading whatsoever. We cannot produce exact figures; therefore it was impossible to answer the question in the form in which it was asked.

Mr. Churchill: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the minister authorizes publication of the figure that there are approximately 400 ocean going Russian submarines, why could he not then authorize publication of figures with regard to the number of bombers which might be capable of attacking this continent?

Mr. Hellyer: As I indicated before, they would be approximations, as was the case with the rounded number in respect to the number of Soviet submarines.

[Later:]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, the question I intended to ask was to be directed to the Minister of Defence and arose out of the point of privilege raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. Can the minister of defence tell us, if the approximate information as to Soviet bombers asked in the question of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is not classified, why that information should not have been given in answer to the question on the order paper?

Mr. Hellyer: The question did not ask for approximate information, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Brewin: As a supplementary question, it asked for estimated figures. Can the minister tell us the difference between approximate and estimated figures.

Mr. Hellyer: Yes; the estimates asked for are quite accurate.

Mr. Peters: The only thing that is accurate in that department.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

MALAYSIA—INQUIRY AS TO FORMAL RECOGNITION BY CANADA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is not about the Columbia river, but I think it is on a matter which is at least as important. It concerns the establishment of the Malaysian federation, which I know is welcomed by Canadians and commonwealth citizens generally. Could the minister advise whether and how the government has taken official notice of this happy and propitious event, and what are the plans for establishing diplomatic representations with this important new country?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the last part of the question this, of course, is a matter which will have to be considered, as it is now being considered, in the light of the date when the federation is expected to come into being, which is August 31.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REPORTED ACTION BY U.S. TO FREEZE CUBAN ASSETS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question respecting the new United States regulations affecting Cuban trade and assets. Whether or not there is a question of privilege involved will depend, I think, on what his reply is today. At that time he said the government was investigating the matter, and in this morning's press there is an article purporting to state the official policy of the government.

Can he now answer the question I asked him last Tuesday respecting the new United States regulations applying to Cuban trade and assets? When he answered me last Tuesday, as I pointed out, he indicated that the government was examining these new regulations to ascertain whether any Canadian interests might be affected.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I thank my hon. friend for giving me notice of this question. I have not seen the story to which my hon. friend directs my attention. I can only say the matter is not yet decided, because all of the facts are not before us. When these are before us we will decide what course should be taken, if any, and the house will be duly advised.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): A supplementary question. Has there been any change from the policy of the previous government toward Cuba? My question arises from a Canadian Press article appearing in several newspapers this morning.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do not really see any urgency in that question, unless the minister wants to answer it.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Aiken: I should like to have an answer.

Mr. Speaker: There are serious doubts about the question in the first place, but I do not think we should enter into a debate on the point at this stage. The minister has taken notice of it and I am sure he will reply in due course.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could deal with it quickly. I would say in reply that if and when there should be any significant modifications in Canada's diplomatic or other relations with Cuba the house will be informed, in the same way as in the case of Canada's relations with other countries.

NEGOTIATIONS FOR CORRIDORS THROUGH ALASKA PANHANDLE

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the genial, generous but garrulous Secretary of State for External Affairs now that he has the Columbia river treaty negotiations apparently smoothly under way. Will he inform the house whether negotiations have yet been commenced with the government of the United States for corridors through the Alaskan Panhandle, thereby providing access to tidewater for northern British Columbia and the Yukon?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

(Translation):

STORMS

REPORTED DAMAGE BY TORNADO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell whether the Quebec government has asked the federal government to provide assistance for farmers of western Abitibi whose farm buildings were destroyed by a tornado June 30 last?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): To the best of my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, no such request has been received.

FINANCE

SALES TAX—INQUIRY AS TO LETTER FROM LUMBERMEN'S ASSOCIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Alkenbrack (Prince Edward-Lennox): I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Has the minister received a letter from the executive officers of the Canadian Lumbermen's Association, informing him of the chaos and crippling confusion—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Alkenbrack: —created throughout both the production and sales field—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Alkenbrack: —of the Canadian lumbering industry, by the imposition of the sales tax—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will the hon. member please sit down? The hon. member must know that when the Speaker stands hon. members are supposed to take their seats. This question is out of order.

[Later:]

Mr. Alkenbrack: May I reword my question so that it will be in order?

Mr. Speaker: I hope so.

Mr. Alkenbrack: I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether he has received the aforementioned letter from the Canadian Lumbermen's Association, pointing out the situation they are in?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I have received the letter, Mr. Speaker, and I think their situation will be relieved very considerably by the action taken on Monday.

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): As a supplementary question, did not this letter come to the minister's attention since the action he says took place on Monday?

PUBLIC WORKS

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR DREDGING OF LA HAVE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. In view of the silting that has filled in the channels of the La Have river, especially near Bridgewater, Nova Scotia, causing pulp and pit prop carriers with 21 foot draft to cancel their loading charters at this port, will the minister give consideration to carrying out immediate dredging in this area, which is urgently required in order to maintain shipping schedules during this summer?

(Translation):

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I shall contact the engineers of the department. I appreciate that the question is urgent and I shall consider it as such. I shall inform the hon. member as soon as I receive a report.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PRINTING BUREAU—INQUIRY AS TO HOURS OF WORK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Could the hon. gentleman tell the house whether it is true that civil servants at the national printing bureau must work nine hours a day, without any interruption, to print the official report of debates of the House of Commons?

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I believe it is against the rules to ask the minister whether or not certain statements are true or to convey information to the house. If the information the hon. gentleman seeks to convey is correct, I think it is unfortunate. I shall have to make some inquiries to find out.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

REPORTED INTENTION TO CANCEL FRIGATE PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Can the Minister of National Defence say whether he has now completed his review of the general purpose frigate program?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister, in the protracted consideration he is now giving that matter, consider the statement made by the chief of the naval staff that such ships are necessary for the Canadian navy?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSING

SUDBURY—LOCAL IMPROVEMENT TAXES ON LAND ASSEMBLY PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. R. Mitchell (Sudbury): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue, who is responsible for Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. Has the minister's attention been drawn to recent articles in the Sudbury Star regarding the Northern Heights land assembly project, in which it is claimed residents cannot afford the payment of local improvement taxes, and that in any case they were under the impression when they bought the land that the price included local improvement charges?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the hon. member for giving me notice of his question, which I can assure you is a matter of concern and urgency to some citizens. I am aware of the articles referred to, and also of the fact that certain purchasers of these lots are unhappy about the tax on local improvements.

The normal procedure in the sale of land assembly lots is for the purchase price to include the full cost of the land and approximately 50 per cent of the cost of services. The remaining 50 per cent is collected by the municipality on behalf of the federal-provincial partnership over a 15 year period by means of a special tax levy.

The claim by some residents that they were under the impression, when they bought the lots, that the price included full local improvement charges is difficult to understand. All purchasers bought the lots with the full knowledge that they were paying only 50 per cent of the cost of services. This information was included in the sales literature issued by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, in several newspaper advertisements associated with the project and in the offer to purchase forms signed by all purchasers, and was further explained by the local corporation representatives at the time of sale.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like clarification for my own benefit as to the difference between the question asked by the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Mitchell) and answered by the minister, and that asked by the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox (Mr. Alkenbrack) which was ruled out of order?

Mr. Speaker: I would be very glad to inform the hon. member for Ontario. First of all, according to rule 39, in putting any such question or in replying to the same—> —no argument or opinion is to be offered, nor any facts stated, except so far as may be necessary to explain the same;

It was my judgment, rightly or wrongly, that the hon. member for Prince Edward-Lennox was offering not only opinion but a very decided opinion in asking the question. Furthermore, I called on him three times to desist and he did not. If there is to be any co-ordination in the chamber it follows that the Speaker, at question time, must have the right to exercise his best judgment as to when a question is proper and when it is not.

So far as the hon. member for Sudbury is concerned, there was a little noise and I only heard half his question, so I am in no position to render judgment on that one. But may I point out that if the Speaker requests co-operation and asks an hon. member kindly to sit down during the rendering of judgment on a question, then I think the hon. member concerned should conform to that request. Otherwise the attempt to ask questions which may or may not be in order only leads to confusion. For that reason I took the stand I did.

Mr. Alkenbrack: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I humbly regret having not sat down when you requested me to do so, but I was looking in the direction of the minister of whom I asked the question.

REGULATIONS RESPECTING BONUS ON WINTER CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Would the minister tell us when the regulations covering the $500 subsidy on winter housing construction will be printed and made available to the public.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the regulations are being developed at the present time. They will be released just as soon as that process is completed.

Inquiries of the Ministry

GRAIN

DURUM WHEAT—REQUEST FOR INCREASED QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Due to the fact that the quota on Durum wheat is based on specified acres and the quota on hard wheat is based on cultivated acres, a 15 bushel Durum quota is only equal to 7½ bushels on hard wheat. Will the minister look into the matter of another Durum quota at once, to equalize this situation, as there are only 14 days left in the current crop year?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I thank the hon. gentleman, Mr. Speaker, and I shall bring this to the attention of the Canadian wheat board. I would direct his attention, however, to the statement I made in the house when I outlined the wheat board policy with respect to quotas for the balance of the wheat year. At that time I gave the views of the wheat board on what would be an appropriate Durum wheat quota, and while I am prepared to bring this again to the attention of the board I have no intimation that they intend to change their policy.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE STRIKE OF ARTISTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State? What action does the minister intend to take following the C.B.C. decision to reject the report submitted by Mr. Justice Jules Poisson and the decision of the Federation of Authors and Artists of Canada to accept those considerations?

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is any action required by a minister or the government. I understand the two parties to the dispute are discussing this matter at the present time, and I am led to believe that a satisfactory arrangement is likely to be reached.

(Translation):

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Is the minister aware of the reports made yesterday in the newspapers that C.B.C.'s artists might go on strike immediately?

(Text):

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I believe, sir, it is not unusual for there to be some mention of the possibility of a strike at a time when there is a dispute going on between employers and employees, and the mere fact there is mention of the possibility of a strike would not, it seems to me, warrant the government, the minister or any third party intervening as long as the two parties are bargaining.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

DIEFFENBACHIA—REPORTED POISONOUS QUALITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the minister of health. Does the department of health intend to take the necessary steps to warn Canadians against the use of dieffenbachia which, in the opinion of the American Medical Association Journal, is a house plant which is "highly dangerous, highly poisonous and can cause corrosive burns"?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, perhaps this question should be addressed to the Minister of Agriculture. Dieffenbachia has been called highly dangerous and there are many, I am sure, who will agree. So far as its propensity to cause corrosive burns is concerned, I venture to suggest that perhaps that propensity is now considerably diminished.

AGRICULTURE

TURKEYS—REMOVAL OF QUOTA ON IMPORTS FROM U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. I wonder whether the minister could advise the house of any decisions he has arrived at, following his dinner with United States agricultural officials, regarding any changes in the Canadian quotas on United States turkeys entering Canada.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the hon. member's question I would say that I have met the turkey producers. I think they are very satisfied with the present arrangement, and there will be no change in so far as the present arrangement is concerned.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

REPLIES TO LETTERS FROM PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a question that came to my mind after reading the letters that he tabled yesterday from the provincial premiers. In the six weeks during which the Prime Minister has had most of these letters has he replied to any of the points raised or any of the interpretations made in the letters, particularly the letter of Premier Manning?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I asked for the views of the premiers with regard to the setting up of this commission, and it did not seem necessary for me to reply to the letters I have received. Having now received letters from all the provincial governments except one, we will now proceed to set up the royal commission; because nothing in these letters, to my knowledge, would interfere with that course.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the Prime Minister yet received any letters from the governments of the Yukon and Northwest Territories?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker. It would not be customary, I understand, to receive a letter from the government of the Northwest Territories on a matter of this kind.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, to the Prime Minister in relation to his answer. Have the replies, particularly the one from Mr. Manning, been taken into account in the terms of reference that are being prepared for this commission?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister assure the house that Premier Manning will not be appointed chairman of the royal commission on bilingualism?

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO CONDITION OF ALASKA HIGHWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources could give us any report on the condition of the Alaska highway. I understand they are having a bit of trouble up there with washouts and closures of the highway.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. John N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will have to take that question as notice and report to the hon. member.

AIRPORTS

CHIBOUGAMAU, QUE.—INQUIRY AS TO APPLICATION FOR PERMIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can he tell the house whether the authorities of the city of Chibougamau have submitted a request for a permit allowing the operation of an airport near that town?

(Text):

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, representations have been received from the city of Chibougamau concerning the airport. It is not clear from the representations just precisely what it is they propose. As a consequence we have arranged to send an inspector from the Department of Transport to the city of Chibougamau to take this matter up with the city officials. I believe the inspector is in Chibougamau today.

ROYAL CANADIAN AIR FORCE

SUMMERSIDE, P.E.I.—INQUIRY AS TO EXTENSION OF RUNWAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the senior member for Queens asked me a question concerning the reconstruction of two runways at Summerside. With regard to the hon. member's reference to the program under the previous government may I say that there was no approved plan for the construction or reconstruction of a second runway at Summerside.

The main runway at Summerside was extended to 8,000 feet in 1956-57 coincidental with the advent of Argus operational aircraft into maritime air command. This has been the only runway construction authorized at the R.C.A.F. station, Summerside, in recent years. The R.C.A.F. has programmed maintenance funds to keep this main runway in good repair. Extensive repairs to taxiways and parking areas have been authorized during 1963-64.

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): A supplementary question. Do I gather from the minister that there is no provision in the estimates which have been tabled for such construction this year?

Mr. Cardin: According to my information, that is correct.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING MEMBERSHIP, FUNDS, ADMINISTRATION, ETC.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State) moved the third reading of Bill No. C-80, to amend the Atlantic Development Board Act.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): In speaking on the third reading of this bill I have a few further comments I wish to make to the house, and more particularly to the Secretary of State.

One reason for my intervention at this time is that the hon. gentleman has indicated that he is tempted to speak again on this bill. Perhaps if the Secretary of State would agree not to speak further on it I should not myself feel tempted to take part in the debate. However, far be it from any member representing the Atlantic provinces to discourage the hon. gentleman from speaking again on a measure which is of such great importance to our area. Indeed, I believe it is of paramount importance that the Secretary of State should speak again in this debate because there are some matters, especially those related to the personnel of the board, which are deserving of further clarification not only for the benefit of hon. members but also for the benefit of those people who have accepted these positions. These are gentlemen who through no fault of their own find that their appointments are cut short because there has been a general election and a political party has come to office which apparently has not looked too kindly on appointments made by the former government.

This appears to be the sum and substance of the reasons this government had in mind for deleting a number of years from the length of appointment of these board members. It seems to me that this action in cutting short the term of appointments constitutes an affront to these individuals, and that the Secretary of State owes them some better explanation than he has so far given. I should like to know from the hon. gentleman whether he has received any correspondence from the individuals in question. If so, I should like to know what representations they have made.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. member would permit me to interrupt. I am anxious to hear what he has to say, but there seems to be a terrific amount of noise in the chamber. I wonder if we could have a little better order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

[Mr. MacLean.]

Mr. Coates: I thank the Secretary of State for his kind remarks. I am pleased that he is anxious to hear my humble contribution to this debate. I am speaking as clearly as I can, and I hope this is coming through loud and clear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Speak into the microphone.

Mr. Coates: The hon. gentleman is such a fine individual I cannot keep my eyes off him. However, I will try to submit myself to the task of looking at this microphone and talking to it as best I can. It may be an improvement.

As I was saying, I am concerned about the terms afforded to those gentlemen who have been appointed to this board by the former administration. I still cannot understand why the Secretary of State and his colleagues should wish to curtail the length of appointment of these individuals. Hon. members opposite have never at any time denied in this house that they were the best men available in the Atlantic provinces.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Coates: Hon. gentlemen opposite laugh. Well, they did not laugh when these appointments were made, and when the Secretary of State spoke in this house at that time he certainly had nothing adverse to say about them. Has there been a change in attitude in the interval? Were hon. members talking out of both sides of their mouths then? If hon. members opposite do not feel these are able men, let them stand up and say they are no good. Let them tell us what they do not like about Brigadier Wardell or Frank Sobey.

Mr. Pickersgill: Could I ask the hon. member a question? Is it the purpose of his speech to try to make it impossible for the present members of the board to continue? He is doing his best to create a situation of disharmony, and I hope he fails.

Mr. Coates: Let me say that with the length of time they have it would not make much difference if they were there or not. If the hon. member is going to tell this house that the problems of the Atlantic provinces can be solved in a year, which is all the time they will have as members of the board, then he is as crazy as a hoot owl. The difficulties of the Atlantic provinces are not beyond solution, but it will take a longer time than that to deal with them. We started on the road to salvation. I am concerned about what will happen under this administration. I am concerned about the way in which they are tackling what is the most significant piece of legislation to make it possible for us to lift ourselves up and bring ourselves to a level with the rest of the Canadian nation.

As I have said, I do not think the Secretary of State has been fair to these gentlemen. I think he should say to them, we thought we would appoint you for a year to try to get over the accusation that we are being political partisans and that you are political partisans, and he knows he cannot prove that latter statement. So he is trying to push them out gently. The Secretary of State says I am causing disharmony. What greater disharmony could there be than is being caused by this legislation and especially by clause 4. How much more difficult will it be for any government in the future to get men who have great contributions to make to our area to serve on government boards if they are to have fears that they will be involved in political hassles when governments change?

An hon. Member: You are involving them.

Mr. Coates: I am involving them, someone says. Let me tell him that his government involved them. I had nothing to do with it. I would have said nothing about these appointments. I would have said nothing about the new appointments if you people had not brought in this amendment. That is the reason I am talking now, because I hope that even at this late date the Secretary of State and the men around him will see the folly of their ways and correct them by allowing the men who he is convinced should serve to serve the full length of time which was promised to them. That is really an insignificant request of the government, and I am asking it on behalf of gentlemen who have given so much to our area already and are able and capable of giving so much more in the years ahead. These men will hesitate in future to get involved in government appointments to any board if this is the type of shoddy treatment given them because a government not of the same political stripe as this one happened to appoint them to their positions.

We have, Mr. Speaker, an awful lot of barkers on the other side of the house. They were over there until 1957 and they barked a lot. Then they came over here and barked some more, and now they are back there barking again like the trained seals they were before 1957 and are still, and they will probably never change. They will let a bunch of front benchers run the party, bring in outside consultants for anything and everything, and write budgets which have to be redressed, undressed and everything else. But they do not say very much or contribute much to the debates of this house.

There is another matter on which I want to hear from the Secretary of State. He is a pretty clever individual with words, and I only wish I were as clever. However, I did not spend as much time at university as he did, perhaps, and my vocabulary did not grow as large as his. I hope he will understand my plain language, though, when I ask him for a plain statement of fact in ordinary words about the Chignecto complex and what is to be done about it. I note that the President of the United States has indicated that the Passamaquoddy project and the tidal power associated with it is to be reopened for negotiations and further talks. We in Canada have more potential tidal power available at a cheaper rate, and I should like to know what we are going to do about it.

I have asked the Secretary of State about this two or three times. He always answers my questions, but in such a way that you never know whether it is going to remain latent, as it is at the present time, or whether he is going to put the Atlantic development board into high gear and get them moving on the Chignecto complex. I feel that we should not be wasting a minute in investigating the potential of the bay of Fundy tides.

Mr. Peters: Six years wasted.

Mr. Coates: Six years wasted, my hon. friend says. That is just how little he knows about it. I think we should get an unequivocal statement from the Secretary of State as to whether the potential of the bay of Fundy tides is going to be investigated. I do not want any ifs, buts, or "I will tell so and so, or ask so and so, and see what he says". He is a member of the government and the spokesman for the Atlantic development board. I want to know from him, and I am sure the people of the Atlantic provinces would like to know, just exactly what they are going to do. Are they going to carry out an examination of the tides of the bay of Fundy, or are they not? It is not a difficult question and can be answered yes or no. He is certainly in a position to tell the Atlantic development board to carry out such an investigation. He can also tell them not to, and in a few weeks' time when he has made these new appointments he can probably tell them to stall as well, whenever he wants to. But I feel that the Atlantic provinces should know, and know in no uncertain terms, whether such an investigation is going to be carried out.

I hope, Mr. Speaker, that when we hear from the Secretary of State about the appointment of these men he will tell us that they will be continued in office for the terms for which they were appointed originally. If he does not do so why does he bother wasting their time for a year, or less than a year? Why not just tell them to do what they can in various other ways in which they can make a contribution? Actually the short space of time they will be sitting on the board under this legislation will not really allow them the chance to make the type of contribution they could make were they there for the period of time for which they were first appointed.

I also think it is unfair for the Secretary of State to say "Oh, these men can be reappointed". If they were going to be reappointed and the government were really thinking of reappointing them, why would they consider cutting down their term of office? That would not even have crossed their minds. Perhaps there are certain individuals on that board who the government consider are more tinted with blue than others, and so they can flush them out. But let us face it. When the year runs out I think all Canadians will learn the lie in the statement that these men can be reappointed, because there is not a chance in the world of any one of them being reappointed by this government. Otherwise they would never have made the effort to put in this amendment and try to fool the House of Commons into thinking they were doing anything but disposing of people who they considered politically unsatisfactory to this government.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very brief in my remarks, as usual. I should like to say I repudiate and resent very much the suggestion of the Secretary of State that my hon. friend, colleague and neighbour, the hon. member for Cumberland, would either by his actions or by his remarks do anything which would bring disharmony to any move to advance the welfare of the maritime provinces. His record has been well established and I do not have to cite the facts relating thereto.

This has been a very interesting debate, Mr. Speaker. However, if I have any regret it is for the fact that yesterday the chairman cut off the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre when he was cataloguing the virtues of the many native maritimers who had won great acclaim for Canada. However, had he gone on to complete the full list perhaps we would never have completed what we did yesterday.

I have one small matter, small only in terms of the length of my remarks and not otherwise, and I mention it because it is of great importance. I have been seeking in this session by questions directed to the Minister of Public Works and the Prime Minister, and at other times, to get a clear statement from the present government in respect to that great national project, the Prince Edward Island causeway. I have asked the Secretary of State to give us the clear assurance that this major project is one which will not be considered by the board because the decision relating to its construction taken by the former government will be upheld and carried out by the present government.

I have not yet obtained that information, and I might say that despite having sought information on the Prince Edward Island causeway several times from various members of the government I have elicited absolutely no information. The only information one can obtain is through press releases emanating from the Solicitor General (Mr. MacNaught) who, as far as I know, does not have administrative responsibility for this important function.

I think information sought in the House of Commons should be given in the House of Commons, and I recall that the former prime minister made a concise, precise and definite statement in respect of this project when he said that the causeway would be built. This is the kind of thing we hope to have from the present government. I am delighted to read the press releases from the Solicitor General. He is my neighbour. In fact had I been born a mile further west I would have had the pleasure of voting against him in Prince county. I read with interest everything he gives to the newspapers and I regard him highly, but I should still like to hear from the minister in charge or the Prime Minister exactly what is going to be done in respect of the causeway; and I trust that the Secretary of State, who used to be so deeply interested in this project, will tell us whether the causeway is going ahead.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he suggesting that the Solicitor General does not know what he is talking about when he issues these press releases and statements?

Mr. Macquarrie: I would not dare to make that suggestion, although I have the greatest regard for the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria, who usually knows what he is talking about. I would not go that far because the Solicitor General and I are neighbours and friends. We are interested in the causeway, and we in Prince Edward Island do not regard this as a partisan measure at all. I have always paid tribute to my predecessor from Queens, Mr. Matheson, who spoke strongly about this project in the House of Commons. We do not regard it as a partisan measure, but we would like this government of decisive action—perhaps we should not expect that now that the 60 days are over—to tell us what they are going to do so that we will know where we are going.

I could not help but agree also with the hon. member for Cumberland with respect to the appointments. Yesterday the Secretary of State eschewed any suggestion of partisanship and I very much hope that the present members will be reappointed. I do not say I expect it, but I do hope so; because they are men who have made a great contribution to the Atlantic provinces' economy and who could, had they been left unfettered, have done great things under the very fine legislation passed under the aegis of the former government.

I hope too that in disavowing this partisanship the government will take the suggestions, or indeed perhaps the nominations, of various groups in the maritime provinces like the maritime federation of agriculture and others as to the additional six members of the board, because we have been assured that the government is not looking for six Liberals but simply for six, able, representative people, and non-partisan bodies such as these could be very helpful to the government.

I was a bit unhappy yesterday when one of the members of the New Democratic party suggested we were holding up this vital legislation. This, of course, is not the case. One can compare the debate this session with the debate last session when the board was established. However, no member representing the maritime provinces, knowing what was done by the government led by my leader, who in six years did such great things for the maritime provinces, who redressed so many long standing grievances, who moved quickly on our behalf to improve our economic, social and cultural life, should be accused of being overly perceptive or suspicious having seen a board appointed by such a government smothered by a board appointed by a government of which the apparently still remaining kingpin, the Minister of Finance, was once prepared to subsidize us by shipping us to more prosperous parts of the country rather than making efforts toward improving the maritimes. The government led by my leader never at any time undertook to move maritimers.

Mr. Pickersgill: No; they moved them.

Mr. Macquarrie: It did undertake to move the maritimes forward rather than shipping us out with subsidies or anything else. When we consider that the former government's initiative in this regard is being smothered by the tinkering of the present government I think we have good reason to look once, to look twice, perhaps to look thrice at what is going on, the implications thereof and the motives behind it. If the present government even comes close to attaining the actions on behalf of the maritimes of the previous government it will certainly make history for itself.

I do hope that our worst fears will not be realized; that the Minister of Finance, who is prepared to revise so many other things, will revise his thinking in respect of the maritimes. I trust that revision will be reflected in governmental action, and that we will not have to move to upper Canada but can stay in that delightful Atlantic region. I hope we will get the same measure of assistance given to us by the former government. I hope that despite obvious partisan suggestions the board will be allowed to function and to go forward. There is no member on this side of the house who will seek to make political hay if it does so. We are interested in the advancement of the region. We are a little concerned because we had something which we had sought for 90 years, and it was going forward under the former government in the last six years.

With respect to the causeway, I should like to say that the leader of our party was not afraid to speak of the causeway in all parts of the country because he regarded it as one of those great national programs of development, and we will not forget him when the day comes to express our opinion.

An hon. Member: When?

Mr. Macquarrie: We do not know when, but possibly it may not be too long. The maritimes will not forget what was done, and with the memory of the contrast between what was done in six years and what was not done in 22 years the people of our region will look very carefully at the functions of the Atlantic development board, and all the finesse and skill of the Secretary of State may be required in its performance.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State does not need to have extraterrestrial communication, of course, to know the reason I am impelled to rise. It has to do with a remark he made in interrupting the hon. member for Cumberland, a statement that I would not have expected to come from a parliamentarian of the minister's experience. Indeed, in the years I have been here I have never before heard a minister of the crown challenge the right of a member to advance his arguments in this house—

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not challenge them at all.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —by the threat that if he did it would be hard on those members of the board appointed by the previous government.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a question of privilege. I know the right hon. gentleman has never wanted to misrepresent the words of any hon. member. If the right hon. gentleman wishes to take exception to anything I say I do not question his right to do so, but I suggest that he take exception to what I really did say. I asked the hon. member for Cumberland if he was trying to make it impossible for those gentlemen to remain on the board because of the attitude he was taking, and I said I thought he was making it difficult. That is all I said. So far as I am concerned, what the hon. member for Cumberland said would make no difference whatever to my attitude to the members of the board, whom I have always respected.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That interruption was not based on a point of privilege. From time to time when the hon. gentleman disagrees with any matter being dealt with in the house he will raise what he calls a point of privilege, but which in fact is a spurious reason for making an extra speech.

I repeat that the explanation in no way improves the situation. Imagine; after all the political manipulation that is apparent here on the part of the Secretary of State in introducing this legislation to increase the size of this board so that he can remove members that have been on it, he suddenly develops this solicitation for the members of that board and the fact that the hon. member for Cumberland by his conduct is endangering the opportunity of those members to serve. This is something that I would not have expected from one who, through the years, has not been averse to political manipulation. He was simply warning the hon. gentleman that these estimable gentlemen on this board might find themselves in the position of not being able to continue on the board because of the statement the hon. member was making. What nonsense. The explanation is worse than the threat.

I watch him directing them over on that side of the house. They speak and when he raises his eyes they become silent. I have seen him in operation. As long as he continues his direction—

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman should get a mirror.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I can see the hon. gentleman without a mirror. This is the kind of thing that used to characterize the former government. This is the kind of thing that was so much in evidence in Winnipeg, at the Fort Garry hotel. I am not going into that occasion unless provoked into doing so.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I repeat that that statement was a threat or, in the alternative, was an alibi in advance. These people would be removed, and the explanation would then be given that the hon. member for Cumberland, or those who have similar views as to the ability of these people to carry on, were the cause. The alibi would be that if they hadn't spoken he would have been beneficent. But these members dared to speak on behalf of the quality of those appointees, and having so dared their position became impossible. I can only say that whichever explanation is given by the Secretary of State it is not representative of what, from time to time, one expects in the House of Commons.

There is one other matter to which I should like to refer. I am not going to mention the course taken by the former government. The maritimers were the forgotten people. When the government of which I had the honour to be the head came into office, we recognized conditions in the maritimes. We made available immediately $25 million a year for distribution in the maritimes, and later raised it to $35 million. We made available extra subsidies. I could go on, but I am not going to repeat this story, because we in this party believed that there should be a reasonably equal opportunity in every part of Canada, and that the maritime provinces had not received that consideration to which they were entitled. This was the philosophy.

When the appointments are made I will look at them with great interest to ascertain whether the unsubtle threat is carried into effect. The hon. gentleman, of course, will direct whom he wants. I am sure we will then know whether merit and ability are to be considered, and whether the amendment of this legislation is to be a monumental example of political consideration taking preeminence over the needs of the maritime provinces.

There is one other matter I should like to mention. The hon. member for Queens mentioned the causeway. We made it very clear that this was something we looked into for a very long time. There were arguments on both sides. Many felt it would be beneficial but some said that it was not structurally feasible, that it could not be built. We had a careful examination made by engineers, and they determined that it could be built. On the other hand there were some who said it was not economically feasible. The careful examination made, and which continued for a considerable period of time, brought forth the conclusion that it was economically feasible and that in the light of a period of years, it would actually be self liquidating. It is something to which I feel the people of Prince Edward Island are entitled. The people of Canada as a whole accept the principle that there shall be equality of opportunity everywhere within our country. This project is one that will pay national dividends in the strengthening of the bonds of our country.

I would not have risen except to repeat my feelings, which have been made clear throughout the years, that these people by the sea, whether in Newfoundland or in the other three Atlantic provinces, should receive an extra uplift financially and economically. This was our cardinal principle, and it would have meant that the people there would be able to look forward, generation to generation, instead of having to follow the course so often followed since confederation of migrating to other parts of this country and to the United States.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this is the first occasion upon which I have had the opportunity of addressing the house while you have occupied the chair. I wish to extend to you my congratulations upon your election to your present post, and to express our interest and satisfaction with the way in which you are presiding over our deliberations.

The bill before us is one which affects the Atlantic provinces, and comes forward in this parliament, as it did in the last parliament, for discussion. My remarks in connection with this bill will be very brief indeed. I should like to emphasize a number of important views on this legislation which in my judgment make it very important for the economic development of the Atlantic provinces.

First of all, there is provision in the legislation that the Atlantic development board will be empowered and obliged to develop an over-all co-ordinated plan for the Atlantic provinces. To me this seems to be of the very essence of the problem facing us, particularly in the field of employment. The Atlantic provinces economic council has from time to time made assessments of the number of jobs that will be needed in the Atlantic provinces over the next 10 years not only to absorb new entrants into the labour force but also to reduce the level of unemployment in the Atlantic provinces to a comparable national level. That number of new jobs required is large. It can only be reached by the development of a co-ordinated plan over a period of years, directed to the various industries and directed to proposals that will provide these jobs in these various industries. That is the first fundamental of this legislation, the development of this over-all co-ordinated plan.

The time is certainly past for ad hoc expedients to meet the problems of the Atlantic provinces. This particular approach was emphasized in the report of the royal commission on economic prospects headed by the Minister of Finance; and I must say that the junior member for Queens was less than fair in his interpretation of the proposals made by the Minister of Finance in that report. The minister made a number of important proposals directed to the development of the economy of that area, a number of proposals that were not acted upon by the previous government, and he went on to say that if, after these proposals had been put into effect, unemployment at a high level still prevailed and people still received very marginal incomes, then consideration ought to be given to allowing these people to secure employment and opportunities in other parts of Canada.

Surely that is an entirely different concept than to say the Minister of Finance advocated a large exodus of people from the Atlantic provinces. The minister made concrete and constructive proposals in that royal commission report, and he took a long step in his budget to implement those proposals when he provided for the most ambitious tax incentives ever provided by a Canadian government to encourage the location of industry in such an area.

Mr. Macquarrie: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

Mr. Macquarrie: I wonder if the minister is referring at this time to the preliminary report of the commission, pages 99 and 100, in what he has interpreted as the minister's views?

Mr. MacEachen: I am referring to the report which my hon. friend has in mind, and I believe the interpretation which I have given to the approach of the Minister of Finance is the interpretation that any fair minded person would give to that particular royal commission, which has been unfairly and unjustly exploited for political advantage in the perpetuation of a gross misrepresentation of what the Minister of Finance said in that report.

Mr. MacEwan: They do not believe that in Cape Breton.

Mr. MacEachen: It is a fact that the Minister of Finance made a number of proposals, one of which was the establishment of a capital projects commission for the carrying out of projects in the public sector of the economy, in the field of transportation and in the field of power. That proposal was before the previous government for five years and no action was taken upon it.

The hon. member for Queens has had much to say about the great things the former government did for the Atlantic provinces. I would like to remind him of some of the history that he obviously has failed to consider in his speech. The former government, following the election of 1957, took one important step in the field of Atlantic adjustment grants. That was the single step taken in that parliament by that government that was new and original. It did bring into effect the Atlantic Provinces Power Development Act, which had been proposed by the previous government in its budget and accepted by both Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. These were the only two things done in that parliament. In the twenty fourth parliament, consisting of four sessions, the former government did not introduce a single measure or single enactment in this house affecting the Atlantic provinces, and I challenge any hon. member of the present House of Commons to indicate to me any new single measure introduced during the twenty fourth parliament by the former government affecting the Atlantic provinces.

Mr. Crouse: Might I ask the minister a question? Would he not say that the establishment of a Canadian coastguard was an entirely new concept brought into being?

Mr. Pickersgill: It was not even a piece of legislation.

Mr. MacEachen: All the new coastguard consisted of at that time was an announcement, and that was the extent of the change it brought about, in addition to a paint job and a few uniforms for the members of the Canadian coastal services.

Mr. Crouse: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. There is no question of privilege there.

Mr. MacEachen: I think this fact ought to be borne in mind when the hon. member for Queens extols what he considers to be the achievements of the former government. The twenty fourth parliament elapsed without one single measure being brought forward affecting the Atlantic provinces. It is a fact that again in the twenty fifth parliament, a minority parliament as was the case in 1957, and faced again with the immediate imminence of an election, the government moved to set up an Atlantic development board, and we supported that measure. At that time on third reading we proposed an amendment asking that the government of the day establish an Atlantic development fund in connection with the board itself. That amendment was voted down by hon. members of the house, and the board was brought into existence without having at its disposal a sum of money that would enable it to carry out any projects.

In the particular legislation now before us there is provision for an Atlantic development fund in the amount of $100 million that will be available to this board for carrying out projects in the Atlantic provinces. I think that certainly is a major new step.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes.

Mr. MacInnis: Would he not at this time indicate to the house, for the benefit of the maritime and Atlantic province members especially, just what projects he as Minister of Labour has in mind for the Atlantic area; and as Minister of Labour surely by now his plans are advanced enough to mention a few?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am talking about a very important new proposal which provides $100 million for the development of projects in the Atlantic provinces, and that certainly is a proposal that ought to secure the enthusiastic support of the hon. member for Cape Breton South.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the minister permit a question?

Mr. MacEachen: I do not intend to speak—

Mr. MacInnis: Would the minister permit—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The minister has the floor.

Mr. MacInnis: Would he permit a question?

Mr. MacEachen: Go ahead.

Mr. MacInnis: You say it should engender enthusiastic support. If you would answer my previous question as to what you, as Minister of Labour—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I remind the hon. gentleman that he should address himself to the Chair at all times.

Mr. Pickersgill: And ask a question.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the Minister of Labour indicate, to the Atlantic province members especially, as he is the minister who should have available in his department something in the way of planned projects for the Atlantic region, what is being planned in this regard? We would appreciate it very much if the minister would advise us what some of these specific projects are.

Mr. MacEwan: He has not asked the Minister of Finance yet.

An hon. Member: He has not asked Jack, either.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the Atlantic development fund in the amount of $100 million is at the disposal of the Atlantic development board, the function of which is to provide and develop projects and programs for the Atlantic provinces.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacEachen: The hon. member ought to be aware also that last week the House of Commons took another step forward in the establishment of the new department of industry, and part of that proposal is the setting up of an area development agency that will be specifically charged with the job of providing a special thrust in areas of chronic unemployment. No area will be more directly affected by the work of this area development agency than the area represented by the hon. member for Cape Breton South.

Mr. MacInnis: And the Minister of Labour.

Mr. MacEachen: The Minister of Finance has provided in the budget a number of new fiscal incentives that will encourage new manufacturing and processing plants in the Atlantic area; and no area will benefit more, or stands to benefit more from this proposal than the area represented by the hon. member for Cape Breton South. I could go on and enumerate other proposals which have been made and will continue to be made by the present government to bring down the high level of unemployment in the Atlantic provinces.

I am surprised, Mr. Speaker, that any hon. member from the Atlantic provinces would rise in this house and take satisfaction from the record of the past five years. In this period we have seen levels of unemployment in the Atlantic provinces reaching 16 per cent and, in certain provinces, 20 per cent of the work force. That has been the case in the Atlantic provinces; the highest unemployment of any part of Canada; higher unemployment in the period of the past six years than in any previous period in the recent history of Canada. How can any hon. member of this House of Commons take gratification in the progress being made when that large number of people in this part of Canada are unemployed and have been unemployed, in many cases, for some time?

Mr. Grafftey: Stop being a demagogue and get to work.

Mr. MacEachen: No doubt certain measures were undertaken by the former government. I do not for a moment detract from the interest taken by certain hon. gentlemen in the welfare of the people of the Atlantic provinces. However, I think it would be a perversion of history to allow hon. gentlemen to create the impression that economic prosperity and growth prevailed in the Atlantic provinces during the last five years, because the contrary was the case; they had the highest unemployment of any part of Canada.

No industry has been more affected by this unemployment than the coal industry, which lost one and a half million tons of its production in the five years during which the former government presided over the economic affairs of Canada. I think the authority given to the board to undertake the development of an over-all, co-ordinated plan, and the provision for $100 million at the disposal of the board, are important steps taken at the present time. They add to the bill adopted in the last session.

Much has been said about appointments. One would think that no partisan considerations were in the mind of the former government when they made the appointments to the Atlantic development board. One would think that political considerations had no influence whatsoever on the then minister of national revenue in making the appointments to that board. I think an examination of the background of the gentlemen on the board at the present time, no matter how estimable, no matter how able they are, indicates that certainly political considerations were not left out. There is no provision in this bill that will deny the services of these men to the Atlantic development board. They are eligible for reappointment, and it may be that when the time for reappointment comes hon. gentlemen will be surprised that their friends will continue to serve on that board. Surely it is not unfair—

Mr. Woolliams: You may regret those words.

Mr. MacEachen: —that a new government such as this government should have an opportunity to assess the work of the members of this board, to assess their attitude and their willingness to work with a new minister. Surely it is fair that a new government should have that opportunity, and that is all that is provided in the changes made in this legislation. These members are not being asked to leave the board; they will be eligible for reappointment at the expiration of their term of office. Certainly that does not seem to me to be an unfair provision asked for by a new government, because this amending legislation adds to the importance of the Atlantic development board.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to hold up this bill. I listened with interest to the speech of the Minister of Labour, and there are a few matters which he mentioned upon which I should like to comment briefly.

The minister spoke at great length about the famous Gordon commission report on the maritime provinces, and he spoke about what the hon. member for Queens had said in this regard. Well, as I stated in the budget debate, we all know what the Minister of Finance said in the famous Gordon report. It was even so famous in the maritime provinces that he had to come to my constituency, I think in 1961, and make another Gordon report at the Sutherlands River rural high school. At that time he said "I did not really mean to say they had to move out. I meant" this, that, and the other thing. But, as I said in the budget debate, we are leery of the Minister of Finance. He is the man controlling the purse strings, and I hope the Minister of Labour has a lot of influence with the Minister of Finance in order to help our area. I am sure we were glad to have the former minister of finance from Nova Scotia, who helped us a great deal. I hope the Minister of Labour is really in thick, as we say in the maritime provinces, with the present Minister of Finance.

The minister said that the only new thing brought forward in the twenty fourth parliament was the Atlantic adjustment grants. That was new. The minister is a little older than I, although not too much older, and he may not have been in the government through the years here in Ottawa. I remember that great leader of the province of Nova Scotia, Hon. Angus L. Macdonald, who was respected by everybody and who was a great friend of all Nova Scotians. He also did a great job here in wartime as minister of naval affairs. For many years he came to Ottawa seeking adjustment grants in order to bring the Atlantic provinces up to the level of the other provinces of Canada, and he was turned down. I do not know whether the minister was here during the last few years when his friend, who was premier for a short time, Mr. Henry Hicks, who is now president of a university, also came to Ottawa and returned with empty hands. The Atlantic adjustment grants were new, as the minister said. If they were the only new thing accomplished in that parliament it was certainly worth while electing a Conservative government under the Leader of the Opposition during that period.

The minister also spoke of the matter of the coastguard. He said, if I am quoting him correctly, that all we did was put a few coats of paint on existing ships. We brought forward a new coastguard plan. I would tell the minister—he has probably heard it before—that tenders were called for coastguard ships which were 95 feet in length, and the result of the tenders was that two yards, one in the St. Lawrence area and one in the great lakes area, were the lowest tenderers for the three ships. The then minister of transport, the hon. member for Three Rivers, was dealing with this matter. I approached him at that time and said "If you want to get the work load shared around this country, why not give the lowest maritime yard a ship, one to the St. Lawrence and one to the great lakes?" That is what was done. One was launched in the St. Lawrence area and one in my area, at Pictou shipyards. I was not invited to the launching a short time ago, I do not know why. Nevertheless, the building of that ship created a lot of employment. That was one way in which we helped the Atlantic provinces.

Of course we do not pretend that during the six years we were in office we did everything which was required, but we got things moving along very well. I know that in 1950 or 1951 mines in my area began to close down, and at that time many of our younger people had nothing to turn to. It was then that a start should have been made in the provision of vocational training. That was done by the former government, and vocational schools have been built as a result of legislation which they brought in. One will be opened in my own area soon, and I am sure the Minister of Labour will be the first to admit that this is a step in the right direction to help our young people get the necessary technical training so they may make progress in their trades and stay in their own areas.

That is all I wish to say. My theme has been that although we may not have done everything in the last six years, we did start things rolling. Many of the ideas brought forward by the Minister of Labour and his colleagues are, in my view, only extensions of projects we commenced. We are very leery of the Minister of Finance, as all Canadians are. I hope to goodness the Minister of Labour is in thick with him as far as our native province is concerned, because we certainly need it.

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Before the question is put I want to say I am happy the Minister of Labour should have indicated that although the board would be responsible for the projects it recommends, he would take it upon himself to see that no area would benefit more than the area which I have the honour to represent. I am looking forward with great interest to seeing just what this benefit will be and how the hon. gentleman can indicate to the house that my area will benefit most from the projects undertaken by the board.

Now I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Is he prepared to say that representation on the board, the additional representation, will be drawn from those with knowledge of labour, fishing, mining, agriculture and the lumber industry?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I bring it to the attention of hon. members that the minister has already spoken and cannot speak twice in the debate?

Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT AND DEFINITION OF DUTIES

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of an economic council of Canada.

He said:

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, the measure now before us is, in my opinion, of vital importance. Its purpose is to establish economic planning in our country. That is why, before going over its main features, I should like first to try and explain that planning by giving a brief analysis of the economic problems we are faced with at the present time and to indicate exactly what kind of planning the government intends to adopt.

(Text):

The so-called inventory or short term cycle appears to be inherent in our present economic system. The mechanism of supply and demand is not self adjusting, at least over a short period of time. It would be surprising if it were, because it originates from the individual and free choice of millions of consumers and suppliers. The process of adjustment takes time, and it operates mainly through supply rather than demand factors. Demand remains fairly stable during the whole cycle, but as the upward phase develops supply increases more rapidly than demand. This inevitably leads to an involuntary accumulation of inventories which cannot go on indefinitely. When suppliers feel that inventories are too high they reduce new orders, thus bringing the transition between prosperity and recession; because, as a result, production and employment must decline. During the recession production increases more slowly or decreases more rapidly than demand, and suppliers draw on their inventories. This downward movement must come to an end before inventories are depleted and eventually new orders start to rise again. Thus conditions are set for a new phase of prosperity.

Inventory cycles have been fairly regular in Canada as elsewhere in peacetime. Each cycle, with its upward and downward movements, lasts for about three years. For instance, recessions have developed in 1954, 1957 and 1960; 1955, 1958 and 1961 have been years of recovery; 1956, 1959 and 1962 have been years of cyclical peaks. But even in the latter half of 1962 the Canadian economy was undergoing a considerable degree of hesitation and uncertainty. Total final demand levelled off in the third quarter of 1962, the first such pause since the low point of the last business cycle contraction.

We cannot hope to get rid of this important sources of economic instability without adequate planning arrangements, closer co-operation between the public and private sectors of the economy, and more flexible and selective policies.

But short term problems do not constitute the only difficulties we have to overcome. Indeed, several signs indicate that the Canadian economy since the late 1950's has been suffering from basic weaknesses and lack of growth, at a time when our labour force was and still is increasing rapidly. The gross national product per capita in constant dollars increased by 22 per cent between 1949 and 1956, but declined by about 4 per cent between 1956 and 1962. This is the most revealing sign of stagnation in Canada.

What seems to be the origin of that new trend? A rapid survey of the major components of our gross national product shows that consumer expenditures, exports and government expenditures have continued to grow and have contributed at the same time to growth. Investment is the only major component which has declined during that period. Between 1947 and 1957 total investment in constant dollars more than doubled, and increased each year except in 1954. Between 1957 and 1961 it had declined each year and the decrease reached about 13 per cent in 1961. During the same period investment in business capital as opposed to housing and social capital showed a reduction of approximately 25 per cent; yet expenditures on investment goods are precisely those which are the very immediate and basic cause of growth.

(Translation):

What would be the essential reason, the main cause of this stagnation, of this inadequate growth?

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, would the minister allow a question? Does the minister quote these figures to lay the blame at the door of Canadian investors, industrialists and businessmen, by making them responsible for this decline of investments in the production field?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I have no desire to blame anybody. I merely note facts, as they are shown or measured by the dominion bureau of statistics. What then, as I was saying a moment ago, is the main cause of this stagnation, of this inadequate growth, of this chronic anemia in our economy? I think that it is due to the fact that, in the present context of the world markets and of the traditional policies of the state, our private sector has almost exhausted the investment potentialities which technology created in Canada at the beginning of this century.

Of course, to substantiate this explanation I would have to make a long statement, and I wish to spare the hon. members—

Mr. Gregoire: You do not have what it takes.

Mr. Lamontagne: No, but it is only that—

(Text):

Mr. Fisher: Might I ask the minister a question. I wish he would give us a longer statement because he seems to have suggested that social capital, housing, and things like that are not the answer. He seems to be suggesting that the answer is in the private business sector, and I think that if he has gone that far perhaps he could give us an explanation.

Mr. Lamontagne: I do not think I have drawn any such conclusion. I merely said—and I have given some evidence of this—that our economy was developing at a much slower rate and that the more or less fundamental reason for this, the major cause of this decline, was the reduction in the field of investment in general, but more particularly in the field of private investment.

Mr. Gregoire: I challenge the minister to prove that.

Mr. Lamontagne: You can always go back to the official figures.

Mr. Gregoire: I should like to show some official figures. If you refer to the increase of tax in Canada and such matters, you will find figures which prove that industry in Canada is diminishing.

(Translation):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the hon. member asking a question or making a statement?

Might I remind him that the minister has the floor and that he should not be interrupted except to ask a question if the minister is willing to give an answer.

Mr. Lamontagne: As I was saying, Mr. Speaker, instead of engaging in a long explanation of that chronic anemia, I would simply like to give at this time an illustration of what seems to have happened in Canada in the last few years.

The paper and the automobile industries both owe their existence to technology which appeared in Canada, like in the rest of the world, at the turn of the century. At first, when they appeared on the scene, they represented a considerable potential of direct and indirect investment and employment.

We just have to think of the new plants, of the various power projects which have been carried out, of the lumber operations, of the development of the oil and steel industries, of the building of service stations and roads. Like many others which have contributed so much to our accelerated development, those industries will probably continue to expand in the future. But I think they will do so at a considerably slower pace, because, as I said a moment ago, they have practically finished developing their initial investment potential in the present context of world markets and traditional government policies.

If this diagnosis is correct, as I think it is, it should be a cause for worry, because it reveals a deep-seated ailment within our economy. That ailment cannot be healed by denouncing those who diagnose it as prophets of gloom and doom.

The problems created by recessions and stagnation in our country are made even more difficult today because of the upheavals in the world around us. Those upheavals, we find them first in the field of technology, where the first signs of a new technological revolution enable us to see already the rapid progress of automation which requires an ever more specialized labour force and which destroys, in its path, many of our traditional sources of employment.

Those upheavals, we find them also in the radical changes in the world trade patterns which take place under our eyes with the formation of huge trading blocs. Those upheavals will have deep repercussions on the Canadian economy and will require the radical transformation of several industries and regions.

It would be unrealistic to think that the private sector left to itself could overcome those difficulties. Radical changes presently taking place in the world and the adjustments they will make necessary in our country, the recessions and the anemia affecting the Canadian economy demand not only a new association between the public and the private sectors, but also a bolder and more dynamic government leadership.

To overcome our present difficulties, we need new policies, applied in a new spirit and within new administrative structures. In other words, we need a plan so that the various aspects of the economic policy will be well co-ordinated and so that the private sector can work in the same direction as the government towards the common objective of harmonious growth.

That new role of the government is indicated to us by Pope John XXIII in Mater et Magistra, where he said:

> It is requested of public authorities responsible for the common good, that they intervene in a wide variety of economic affairs, and that, in a more extensive and organized way . . . It is necessary that they take active interest, the better to increase output of goods and to further social progress for the benefit of all citizens. This intervention of public authorities encourages, stimulates, regulates, supplements and complements.

It is easily seen that according to the Pope's thinking, the action of public authorities cannot be effective without planning. There is nothing too revolutionary in this, because to ignore planning is to leave human order to the determinism of chance. Any effective collective action needs a plan. Otherwise, you have anarchy, confusion and often failure, because to leave things to chance works only in particularly favourable circumstances. But the term planning itself is ambiguous and can mean two things quite different: indicative planning or imperative planning.

(Text):

In his book entitled "Beyond the Welfare State" Professor Myrdal underlines the fact that planning can take various forms. I want to quote him.

> Economic planning is facing widely different problems for establishing goals, choosing means, fixing targets and implementing policies. Decisions on the public policies implied in planning are arrived at in very different ways and the sanctions applied in order to carry them into effect are also different.

Basically, planning can take two different forms. It can be a conscious and organized attempt by governments and other collective bodies to co-ordinate public and private policies more rationally in order to reach desirable economic objectives or goals more effectively. This is what is more and more called indicative planning, which provides wider knowledge of prospects and targets as well as credit and fiscal incentives, but which excludes compulsion and direct controls as normal instruments of state intervention. Planning can also be a systematic attempt by the state to impose economic goals on society and to use direct controls in order to achieve them. This is imperative planning which operates through compulsion.

Imperative planning provides a pattern which can be easily adapted to the conditions of underdeveloped countries. Here again I wish to quote Professor Myrdal.

> By the very logic of the underdeveloped countries' situation, planning becomes programmatic in its approach. It does not, as in the western countries, force itself upon a national community through a gradual process which finally results in a fait accompli . . . In the underdeveloped countries the idea precedes its realization. As economic development cannot be expected to come by itself, planning becomes a precondition for development, not, as in the western countries, a later consequence of development and all the other changes which accompanied it . . . (In the underdeveloped countries), in principle and in theory, planning anticipates public policies. It does not grow out of the necessity to co-ordinate such policies as have already been initiated.

It would be very surprising if indicative planning could succeed in the underdeveloped countries because they do not have the infrastructure of voluntary organizations which that kind of planning requires. It would perhaps be even more surprising if imperative planning could work in the democratic and industrialized countries of the western world.

In Canada, for instance, we have developed a mixed economy with a public and a private sector. Consumers, private producers and labour unions cherish their freedom. Public authorities can influence their behaviour but they could not control their decisions, certainly not in peacetime. Direct and permanent controls on investment, production, prices and wages, which are required by imperative planning in a mixed economy, would not only be politically unacceptable but would also give very poor economic results. Private investment, for instance, is a highly volatile phenomenon and does not respond positively to compulsion.

Imperative planning would prove to be unworkable at the national level in Canada for another obvious reason. The federal government does not have the constitutional powers required to impose direct control and it is very unlikely that it would succeed in getting such powers which fall under provincial jurisdiction at the present time.

Thus, in a country like Canada, imperative planning would be politically unacceptable, economically undesirable and constitutionally unworkable.

Mr. Grafftey: Tell that to your finance minister.

Mr. Lamontagne: Those few Canadians who are still advocating this type of planning are deceiving nobody but themselves.

(Translation):

The planning which the government advocates and intends to initiate is essentially indicative and incentive planning. It will be a planning without any coercion and control. In our opinion, this is the only kind of planning desirable and feasible in our country.

I have no intention, at this stage, to explain in detail the bill under study. Its purpose is to establish an economic council which will consist of a chairman, two directors and 25 other members. This council will have three main duties. First of all, it will have to initiate research on all aspects of our economic life, try to foresee the normal behaviour of the economy and define the rate of growth, on the whole and by sectors, which is needed for the full use of our resources. In other words, the economic council will have to prepare a plan.

The council will also submit recommendations to the government on policies to be followed and on the means of promoting the highest possible level of employment and production in our country. It will therefore have the responsibility of recommending methods and processes capable of insuring the implementing of the plan.

The council will finally take over the functions heretofore given to the national productivity council. That integration, in the opinion of all the interested parties, has become most desirable and does not imply in any way that this government is lacking confidence in the members of the national productivity council. On the contrary, I wish on behalf of the government, to express to Mr. DeYoung and all the members of the council our most sincere appreciation for the services they have rendered. I am sure that the experience they acquired and the work they have done will be most profitable to the new economic council.

So, the purpose of this bill is to institute economic planning in Canada through a close consultation with the provinces and the private sector of our economy. For that purpose, it provides for the establishment of an economic council with very wide responsibilities in the field of research and very vast powers of recommendation. It creates planning structures both wide and flexible. Thus, we shall be in a much better position than before not only for acquiring a true knowledge of our economic problems but also, I hope, to find practical solutions.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, would the minister allow me a question?

Mr. Lamontagne: Certainly.

Mr. Gregoire: When the President of the Privy Council speaks of the economic council, he seems to refer always to the field of production. Could the minister tell the house whether the economic council will concern itself with indicative planning in the field of exchange, which ranks second in any well organized economic system?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the bill in its present form will enable the council to carry on research in all fields and on all economic problems.

(Text):

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I had not anticipated, Mr. Speaker, that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) would have been introducing this bill, in view of the fact it was in the name of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). However, I want to congratulate him upon his presentation—not that I agree with much of what he said but with his knowledge of economics and his devotion to that field, when he speaks on any matter, he is naturally listened to with interest. I should like to say, too, that this morning I decided that it might not be inappropriate at this time if I were to look over some of the views that he had expressed in times past, as well as those of other hon. gentlemen on the other side of the house.

The minister has something in common with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon). He has written a book. It is a book upon which I do not intend to go into detail on this occasion.

Mr. Lamontagne: Have you read it?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have read it, and carefully studied it. I am glad he wrote a book because, Mr. Speaker, it is just as true today as when it was said originally, that the last thing a person going into politics should do is to write a book. I am sure the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) is one of those who will agree with that aphorism. I also recall that the minister was one of those who gave to that meeting in Queen's University in 1960 something of the philosophy upon which the Liberal party has since operated, a philosophy that is in strong contradistinction to the basic tenets of that party. I intend to refer to that study conference later, and compare the theories of that day in 1960 with the practical events of 1963.

In so far as the general objectives of the bill are concerned, when speaking on the resolution I stated that we agreed therewith, while at the same time not being dedicated to the principles of planning as enunciated a few minutes ago by the hon. gentleman in the detail and to the degree to which he gives his allegiance. An examination of the bill indicates that it is a catch-all. It has in it, almost verbatim, a portion of the productivity council bill. Then, it borrowed as well in extenso from Bill No. C-87 which was introduced by the former government on November 28, 1962, an act to provide for the establishment of a national economic development board. In addition to that, there are some further elements to which we do not give the same support as does the hon. gentleman. We will examine the purpose of the bill because, even a casual reading of this bill indicates that it is another in the series of shotgun legislation with which this government has become identified.

Even in the short time the government has existed there has been a policy of marrying in haste and repenting at leisure. This has been characteristic of these 60 days, and the additional days since. The outstanding example, of course, was the blunder budget. I am not going into detail in that connection because of course that would be improper, Mr. Speaker, but it is all part of the picture; it is all part of the general plan. All of these things when taken together represent something of the philosophy that the hon. gentleman gave to the Liberal party in 1960.

Mr. Speaker: Order; I wonder if I might interrupt the hon. gentleman? It being five o'clock, the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper in accordance with the special order of July 10.

Mr. Pickersgill: Before we proceed to this order, I wonder if I might be permitted to remind all hon. members that under the order made yesterday we meet again at seven o'clock? I feel that otherwise some hon. members might forget and we might have difficulty in proceeding.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They seem to have forgotten we are meeting this afternoon.

Mr. Pickersgill: I agree.

Mr. Ian Grant Wahn (St. Paul's): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the house to give unanimous consent to considering third readings for the private bills that were reported earlier this afternoon from the banking and commerce committee, upon the understanding that if debate develops on any one of these bills, it would stand until the next private members' hour. I do this because of the fact that the number of private members' hours has been reduced to one a week, and it is desirable that we get these bills through.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVATE BILLS

KINROSS MORTGAGE CORPORATION

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-27, to incorporate Kinross Mortgage Corporation.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill has been passed by the other place, at which time it was debated and examined by the standing committee on banking and commerce. The references to the debates in the other place, if I may insert them for the benefit of hon. members are, in the present session, on June 26 at page 163; June 27, pages 169 to 170; July 3 page 185, and July 9 page 205.

The persons named for the purposes of incorporating this company and as provisional directors are all Canadian citizens. The capital to be subscribed for the company is Canadian capital. It is the intention to seek a charter by act of parliament which would be consistent with the Loan Companies Act, chapter 170 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. The proposed outline of the charter is very simple, following the format recommended by the Loan Companies Act in the appendix.

The company intends to carry on business making loans on first mortgages and other securities, in the province of Ontario initially. If it extends its business into the province of Quebec I have been assured it is the intention to provide for bilingual representation on the board of directors.

The sum of $500,000 in terms of the charter will be subscribed before the first general meeting takes place, and the sum of $1 million subscribed of which $500,000 shall have been paid before the company can undertake to carry on business. The superintendent of insurance has been informed and has had the opportunity of informing himself concerning the operations of the company. He will be available at the committee hearings, which I understand will be the procedure following second reading.

This is a new venture and it is not intended to take over any existing company. At the present time there is no intention to make any public stock offering, and there is no intention to accept public deposits, although I understand the Loan Companies Act would give such authority. At committee stage there would be an opportunity for hon. members to ask questions, and in the committee on banking and commerce the superintendent of insurance will be called as a witness to give further information.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

CHARTERED TRUST COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. S-17, respecting Chartered Trust Company—Mr. Wahn—Mr. Mackasey in the chair.

On clause 1—Repeal.

Mr. Peters: Would the sponsor of the bill give us an indication regarding the composition of the board of directors in relation to their citizenship?

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Chairman, I understood that these bills were brought on, on condition that there would be no debate. I think the undertaking was that if debate did develop we would stand them until the next sitting of the house, but I can assure the hon. member that this is a Canadian company and if not all, certainly the majority of the officers and directors, are Canadian.

Clause agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

THE GREAT-WEST LIFE ASSURANCE COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill No. S-10, respecting The Great-West Life Assurance Company—Mrs. Konantz—Mr. Mackasey in the chair.

Clauses 1 and 2 agreed to.

On the preamble.

Mr. Peters: Before the preamble carries I would like to ask the same question. Is the sponsor in a position to indicate in this case the composition of the board of directors and whether or not they are Canadians?

Mrs. Konantz: There is a board of 18, of whom, 17 are Canadians and one American.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

CONFEDERATION LIFE ASSOCIATION

The house in committee on Bill No. S-9, respecting Confederation Life Association—Mr. Wahn—Mr. Mackasey in the chair.

[Mr. Francis.]

Clauses 1 and 2 agreed to.

On clause 3—Existing rights saved.

Mr. Peters: In connection with clause 3, Mr. Chairman, could I ask whether the sponsor of the bill is in a position to tell the committee the composition of the board of directors.

Mr. Wahn: Certainly, Mr. Chairman; the majority of officers and directors of the company would be Canadian.

Mr. Peters: I was not asking about the majority; I was wondering whether they would all be Canadians.

Mr. Wahn: Mr. Chairman, I gave this specific information to the house when the bill was at second reading stage. At the moment I do not have the list in front of me, but certainly they are practically all Canadians.

Clause agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

CANADA PERMANENT TORONTO GENERAL TRUST COMPANY

The house in committee on Bill S-14, respecting Canada Permanent Toronto General Trust Company—Mr. Wahn—Mr. Mackasey in the chair.

The Acting Chairman (Mr. Mackasey): I would inform the committee that clause 1 of this bill was amended in the banking and commerce committee. Shall the clause as amended carry?

Clauses 1 to 4 inclusive agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

RAILWAY ACT

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ABANDONED RAILWAY LANDS

On the order:

Second reading of Bill No. C-17, to amend the Railway Act (the public's royalties in abandoned railways)—Mr. Ormiston.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have certain remarks on the admissibility of this bill which I would like to give the house now. The purpose of this bill is to delete from the general powers of railway companies the power to "alienate, sell or dispose of, any lands or property of the company that for any reason have become not necessary for the purpose of the railway". In other words, according to the explanatory note:

The purpose . . . is to emphasize . . . that abandoned railway lands and the property thereon are royalties accruing to the public and not to the railway company's shareholders.

According to section 16 of the Canadian National Railways Act, chapter 29 of the statutes of 1955, the provisions of the Railway Act apply to the national company. There is no doubt that if this amendment were adopted it would prejudicially affect the assets and revenues of Canadian National Railways. Furthermore it would increase the annual deficit of the Canadian National Railways for which parliament has to provide.

For the above reasons it is a money bill and cannot be introduced by a private member, according to the provisions of the British North America Act and of the standing orders of the house. On May 9, 1933 it was decided by Mr. Speaker Black that an amendment involving an expenditure to be incurred by the Canadian National Railways is out of order because the railway is owned by the government. See Beauchesne's third edition, page 497. Mr. Speaker ruled the proposed amendment out of order on the grounds that it involved an expenditure of public moneys and could only be moved by a minister on the recommendation of the crown. From this ruling there was an appeal, and the question being put: Shall the ruling of the Chair be sustained; it was decided in the affirmative.

Accordingly, I believe this bill to be in the nature of a money bill and I declare it to be out of order.

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, with the utmost respect for both Your Honour and your office, I regret that I must make the following observations. The only purpose of this bill is to remove from the Railway Act a section that is ultra vires as infringing provincial property and civil rights. I refer to the opinion of the deputy minister of justice which is set out in the explanatory notes to the bill.

To argue that this is a money bill begs the question, for to hold that this bill involves the expenditure of money or puts a charge upon the people is to give a prior constitutional decision and legal opinion that the present section 164 (1) (c) is valid, because if section 164 (1) (c) is invalid and therefore of no legal force and effect, this bill, by repealing that ineffective and void section, cannot cause any effect except—as put in the explanatory notes—to remove a provision that misleads as to the respective rights of federal government, provincial governments, railways and private citizens. Authorities which hold that the Chair will not decide a constitutional question nor give a legal opinion are set out in Bourinot, fourth edition at page 180 and repeated in Beauchesne, fourth edition, page 61, citation 71 (5).

Mr. Speaker: I wish to thank the hon. member for his most interesting, even learned and constructive remarks, but his comments were made on a point of order after a decision had been given and in consequence I am afraid we have to take the next order of business.

PUBLIC SERVICE

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH OFFICE OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMISSIONER

On the order:

Second reading of Bill C-19, an act to establish the office of parliamentary commissioner.—Mr. Thompson.

Mr. Speaker: Once again I hope hon. members will permit me to make a few remarks as to the admissibility of this bill.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): May I rise on a point of order? If Your Honour proposes to read out a decision ruling this bill out of order would you not hear observations on the subject before you make your ruling so that you will not be placed in a position of having to disregard any submissions which may be made to you later.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member for his suggestion. Of course, the Chair is only trying to fullfil its duty in endeavouring to make sure that these bills are in order. The Chair would certainly welcome any comments at this time.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): With regard to the point Your Honour has raised and your reference to this bill being out of order—

Mr. Speaker: May I interrupt the hon. member? I have not given any opinion yet. I did not say it was in order or out of order.

Mr. Thompson: I was a little apprehensive that the same thing might happen in this case as happened in the case of the previous bill. This has been carefully studied with the thought that it could be brought within the regulations of standing orders of this house. Basically, it is similar to Bill C-98, which was on the order paper last year, but which never came up for debate. In drawing up the bill I have been careful to avoid providing for the expenditure of public money. According to clause 3, the person to fill the office of parliamentary commissioner would be chosen from among the senior officials of the Department of Justice and for the purpose of pay and allowances he would be treated in the same manner as if he continued to be an officer of the Department of Justice.

This was not done in a corner. We consulted a number of people who are authorities on this subject, including the parliamentary law officers and your two immediate predecessors as Speakers of the house, in an effort to ensure that we were not running contrary to any rules. My respectful submission at this time, therefore, is that the bill comes within the rules and I believe we should consider it in that light.

The office of parliamentary commissioner is an important one and I think the people of Canada are looking forward to its establishment. The setting up of a position similar to that occupied by an ombudsman, as he is known in the Scandinavian countries, will be welcomed by a large section of the public. Prominent individuals have been increasingly concerned about bureaucracy and the tendency of centralized authority to move in on the rights of individuals. I would appeal to you, Mr. Speaker, to say that this bill is entirely within the rules of the house and should be regarded as in order.

In case this should not be your decision, I would at this time move the second reading of this measure.

Mr. Speaker: May I point out to the hon. gentleman that he has discussed the content of this bill, though it has not yet been moved. I understood he intended to raise a point of order. I think there should be an opportunity for hon. members to express themselves but if the hon. member for Greenwood is rising on a point of order, would he please stick to the point of order?

Mr. Brewin: I shall be addressing myself entirely to the point of order. I have heard it suggested that this bill will be ruled out of order because it is said to involve the expenditure of public funds. It is my respectful submission that it may, in fact, be defective because it does not propose to spend public funds. It proposes to place the task of filling this post of parliamentary commissioner on the shoulders of an existing official of the Department of Justice. It does not involve the expenditure of a single additional cent of money.

I notice that according to citation 366 of Beauchesne the introduction of a bill establishing additional staff in a branch of the civil service was prevented by the Speaker. I would respectfully point out that the emphasis in that citation falls upon the word "additional". Here, all that is done is to ask the existing staff to accept an additional duty. This does not involve any additional money. There may be a little postage to pay but the measure itself provides that those who have grievances should pay a fee of $5.00 which would, surely, cover such incidental expenses. The duties of the commissioner would be, among other things, to make inquiries from other government officials and to look into certain matters. This is already part of the functions of the Department of Justice, in my submission. In my view, although one might wish to criticize particular parts of the act itself, this legislation is in order as well as being of great interest to many sections of the house and of the country generally.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): I should like to speak on this point of order and particularly with reference to the remark made by the hon. member for Greenwood. He has referred to citation 366 of Beauchesne's fourth edition. I should like to go further and refer the house to the ruling of Mr. Speaker Casgrain referred to in that paragraph. The bill in question was one similar to the bill the admissibility of which we are now discussing. The mover of this bill proposes that a certain official or officials of one department should be transferred to another post. The ruling of the Speaker on this earlier occasion might be summarized under two headings: first, whether or not existing staff continuing to be used in the service, but being shifted to an additional function would, as a practical necessity, require the expenditure of additional public funds, it being understood that where extra funds are needed parliament should specifically provide for them. The second ground on which the Speaker of that day ruled against the bill could most expeditiously be put forward by reading from the ruling itself. I am reading from the House of Commons Journals for Friday, February 21, 1936 at page 62:

> Another element which places this measure in the category of money bills is that its adoption would mean the transfer of the authority under which appropriated money is to be spent. The translators' salaries have been voted as part of the estimates of the Secretary of State's department. This was done by resolution in committee of supply and it was subsequently embodied in the appropriation bill. When money is voted, the main conditions imposed on its expenditure are embodied in resolutions. All the circumstances concerning its destination form part of the appropriation with which they are considered and if any alteration is to be made it must be by the same process as the original resolution.
> A money bill is defined in the British house as a public bill which contains only provisions dealing with inter alia the "custody" of public money. The custody is undoubtedly the placing of an appropriation under a certain minister.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I maintain that what the hon. member for Red Deer is proposing is that the expenditure which has been authorized under the Department of Justice should be transferred out of that department and be dealt with in accordance with the appropriation resolutions concerning the House of Commons, and that would be contrary to the ruling of Mr. Speaker Casgrain.

For that reason, I submit that Your Honour should rule against the propriety of this bill.

Mr. J. J. Greene (Renfrew South): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order I should like to reply briefly to the argument, as I see it, of the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). Apparently he would indicate to the house that if personnel or an entire department is transferred to another department it does not constitute the hiring of additional help. It may however leave a gap in the old department and they will have to hire more help. If this can be done, then I suggest that an entire department could be washed up and transferred to some other department.

I have been faced here with a problem. I have sat in this house and listened very carefully to development boards being set up hither, thither and yon to help develop areas of the country, and I have striven hard to fashion some way in which an economic development board could be set up for the riding of South Renfrew with several hundred million dollars granted to it. This might be a constitutional way of doing it. If Your Honour rules that this is in order, we might direct some other department to be in charge of an economic board for South Renfrew.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I respectfully submit to you that as recent as Tuesday last we have precedents for ruling this bill in order. For example, on that day we had second reading of Bill No. C-16 which proposed the setting up of a veterinary college in western Canada by the federal government. If this bill is passed it will involve an expenditure of several million dollars to be borne by the federal government. So it would certainly appear that, indirectly, that bill would have been out of order on the basis that it may involve government expenditure.

I also submit for Your Honour's consideration the fact that almost all the private bills listed on the order paper would indirectly involve some additional expenditure. Because if you are going to use the argument that it imposes additional responsibility on a department, and thus additional activity and perhaps expenditure, as a basis for ruling that a private member cannot sponsor a public bill, I submit we will have to strip the order paper of almost every bill on it. I think this has not been the practice in the past. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I appeal to you to consider the fact that we discussed only the day before yesterday a bill which, if it had passed, would have involved the expenditure of several million dollars. While there is a possibility that some indirect expense will be involved, I submit that this bill is in order.

Mr. Speaker: Are there any other hon. members who would like to express an opinion? If not, the matter is not too easy to decide, and hon. members will realize that I am trying to carry out my constitutional function and duty. Therefore I have an opinion on this particular bill which I should like to give at this moment.

On the order for the second reading of a somewhat similar bill, namely a bill to establish the office of parliamentary proctor, etc.; on April 6, 1962, Mr. Speaker Michener said, among other things, as reported on page 2597 of Hansard:

> Before calling on the hon. member or recognizing the hon. member, may I say that I feel it to be my duty to draw the attention of the house to the fact that this bill has some of the characteristics of a money bill, or one that requires a resolution. I therefore feel that if the debate proceeds I should at least indicate the possible difficulties with a bill of this kind so that it will not be taken as a firm precedent for similar legislation.

It is true that the present bill is somewhat different, more particularly in that it does not provide directly for the payment of a salary for the parliamentary commissioner or his staff. On the contrary it states in clause 3 that:

> The parliamentary commissioner shall be chosen among the senior law officers of the Department of Justice—

—etc. As to the staff, clause 6 is to the effect that:

> The parliamentary commissioner may from time to time obtain the services of such officers and employees of the Senate, the House of Commons and the Department of Justice——etc.

From this it may be deducted, first, that there will be transfers from one department to the other; second, that it is quite probable that the officers so appointed will have to be replaced by others; and third, that a new office or branch will be created.

I am of the opinion that this bill is a money bill and for that reason it cannot be introduced by a private member. It is inconceivable that the numerous duties of parliamentary commissioner as suggested in the bill could be assumed without an expenditure of money. The officers transferred from other departments will have to be paid, probably at an increased rate of pay. They will have to be replaced in the departments from which they have been transferred by new employees, thus creating a number of new employees.

On May 17, 1918 Mr. Speaker Rhodes decided that a motion to amend a bill to provide for the appointment of additional government officials was out of order as it involved an increased grant of public money. This is found in Beauchesne's third edition, page 439.

On the same date the Speaker also ruled that an amendment proposing to increase the membership of a government paid board involved an expenditure and cannot be moved by a private member. The reference here is Beauchesne's third edition, page 475.

On March 2, 1927, Mr. Speaker Lemieux ruled that a bill to create a new department of the government was out of order because it was not introduced by a minister of the crown with a recommendation of the governor general. The reference is Beauchesne's third edition, page 475.

On February 21, 1936, Mr. Speaker Casgrain decided that a bill providing for the transfer of a government service from one department to another involves the custody of public moneys and cannot be introduced by a private member. The reference here is Beauchesne's third edition, page 478. In the course of rendering the above decision the Speaker stated, inter alia:

> Another element which places this measure in the category of money bills is that its adoption would mean the transfer of the authority under which appropriated money is to be spent.

And further:

> When money is voted, the main conditions imposed on its expenditure are embodied in resolutions. All the circumstances concerning its destination form a part of the appropriation with which they are considered and if any alteration is to be made it must be by the same process as the original resolution.

And still further:

> —the circumstances under which an expenditure is to be made are indivisible from that expenditure. The choice of the minister responsible for paying out the money is a material condition of an appropriation, and in order to change it the house would have to amend the principal clauses of a money bill.

To conclude with the words of Speaker Casgrain in this last decision, with which I agree, he said:

> I am therefore of the opinion that the proposed measure has all the earmarks of a money bill and cannot be introduced by a private member. I declare it out of order.

That is the end of the quotation from Speaker Casgrain with which, I regret to say, I must agree.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, in view of the jeopardy in which all public bills moved by private members are placed I do, with great regret, appeal the ruling you have just made.

Mr. Speaker: The house has heard the decision of the Chair from which the hon. member for Red Deer has appealed to the house. All those in favour of sustaining the decision of the Chair will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: Those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: This is an appeal to this house from the ruling of the Chair which is as follows:

> On the order for second reading of Bill No. C-19, an act to establish the office of parliamentary commissioner, the Chair ruled to the effect that as the bill contained money provisions it could not be introduced or proceeded with by a private member, whereupon the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) appealed to the house from the decision of the Chair.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the Chair was sustained on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the decision confirmed.

It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until seven o'clock this evening.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 7 p.m.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT AND DEFINITION OF DUTIES

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lamontagne for the second reading of Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of an economic council of Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, it is rather a novelty to be starting at 7 o'clock. Personally I believe that if this could be secured by general consent, it might be a very good idea. As a matter of fact, in the United Kingdom parliament, as you know, they sit between six and eight o'clock. They have an unwritten law to the effect that during this period of time votes are not called nor shall divisions take place. I have often felt that if we were to increase the time of sitting earlier in the session than is the customary wont, a great deal of time would be saved and parliament made more effective.

Mr. Pickersgill: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Now that I have the support of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) perhaps something will be done in this regard. But speaking seriously, Mr. Speaker, I think we have to do what we can, by agreement among the various parties of the house, to bring about the highest possible standard of procedure to the end that this institution shall be able fully and properly to discharge its function.

At five o'clock I was dealing in general with the philosophy of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne). I mentioned earlier that I had made a study of his work and also of his speeches. I may be giving him credit to which he is not entitled but, sir, I believe that the philosophy of the new Liberalism had its beginnings, its generation and its birth in the heart of the hon. gentleman. I listened to his words today. He dealt with the need for bolder and more dynamic action, for selective policies and the need for not being antagonistic to planning. The question of guiding, directing or compelling the economic system to produce results regarded as desirable has agitated political discussion for many, many years. Having regard to the personnel of the present government I think it can be fairly said that this government is a planners' government; it is committed to directing the economic life of the country. Indeed, the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) in her very able speech at the opening of this session indicated that the Liberal party, or at least most members within that party, are prepared to accept this growth toward a collectivist society. The hon. member, further, accepted the argument that such a society does require direction and guidance from the main institutions.

No one can argue that the sense of directive planning is not of the essence of any government. But as I read the philosophy enunciated and expounded by the President of the Privy Council I believe he has a belief in planning, a belief in its intrinsic worth, that transcends that of any other hon. member in this house.

Mr. Pickersgill: What about the hon. gentlemen down there?

Economic Council of Canada

Mr. Diefenbaker: As far as our hon. friends of the New Democratic party are concerned, they are out in left field in that regard. Hon. gentlemen opposite have swallowed the doctrines of those in the New Democratic party while pretending to not having done so. One has just to look—

Mr. Knowles: Now we know how Jonah felt.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes; he came out all right. It only took him three days, but at the rate this government is going that is about the same length of time it has taken the Canadian people to realize where planning will take them, unless the planning is properly planned. As I peruse the views expressed by the hon. gentleman I think this is a general philosophy of his; he belongs to the group that believes all problems can be resolved simply by referring them to a group of planners. His philosophy leaves little leeway for private initiative and enterprise.

This afternoon the hon. gentleman talked of collective action. That is a phrase beloved by the planners. I mentioned earlier the reference to a collectivist society. In the philosophy of the Liberal party planners this bill, in part adopted, the good parts of it, from our philosophy and our legislation, has added to it some portions, to which direct reference will be made when we are in committee, which represent a philosophy that we cannot accept.

The hon. gentleman seems to believe that all that is necessary is bold action; that our problems will be solved as long as a government is doing something. We have had quite a bit of experience in the last few weeks—

Mr. Winch: Not the last six years.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —that they think as long as a government is doing something, right or wrong, it represents forward action. The hon. gentleman seems to accept the proposition that through planners, and only through planners, can we foresee and solve problems. Well, all I can tell him is this, that his fellow member of the cabinet, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) only the other day was able to say, when he participated in that great retreat, that in effect the complexity of modern business, and therefore the complexity of modern taxation has made it increasingly difficult for governments to see all the administrative problems and the consequences of tax changes. It is not only the legislation that you have to look at; it is the philosophy of those who will implement that legislation.

The hon. gentleman said that this legislation, or no part of it, will be compulsive or coercive; it is to be entirely persuasive; and no doubt it was very comforting for business across Canada, small and large, to learn today from his lips that he did not intend to invoke compulsion. This is a picture of the planner. He called for audacious direction of the economy by government. Didn't we have a wonderful example of that in the budget? That was audacious, but it turned out to be one of the most colossal flops in all history.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The planners knew when the troika met with the Minister of Finance that they had a plan. They kept it to themselves. It was not revealed till finally it came before parliament, and business across Canada and the economy as a whole is still reeling from the audacious direction imparted by his colleague the Minister of Finance. That was only in the tax field. The hon. gentleman is going into the entire field; he is going beyond taxation.

Sir, I am going to refer for a moment to the general philosophy which seems to be inherent in the thinking of this government. I cannot understand the application of that philosophy. The Minister of Finance said he wanted price stability, more investment and expanded production. There was planning: They planned and did not realize the consequences of what they were planning. They planned that as an objective; and that is the objective of this legislation. At the same time they turned around and slapped a prohibitive tax on the pursuit of these objectives. Sir, the budget is part of this great plan, the five-sided plan. One would have thought that the Liberal party's flirtation with the grandiose scheme for a planned economy would go with the bright young men to the places in which they were before they came here.

The hon. gentleman comes along with his plan. I mentioned this afternoon that I had done some reading so that I would understand his philosophy, because I am frank to say immediately that the hon. gentleman is sincere in what he contends. This represents to him the epitome, the necessity of any government today. Indeed, reading over the speech delivered at the study conference on national problems on September 7, 1960, one can only come to the conclusion that the cookbook from which the Pearson government is borrowing many of its economic ideas and recipes for directing and controlling the Canadian economy is the lengthy paper that he placed before that group. His main thesis is, "The government needs more machinery for economic research". His argument, in effect, is that there is nothing wrong with Canada that cannot be cured by a bigger bureaucracy. That is the philosophy; that philosophy he enunciated in detail.

Sir, as one reads what he said and what he wrote there is revealed between the lines a desire for centralization, a distrust of private enterprise. Indeed, what is hoped for is public planning and control. He points out the danger of private initiative.

Mr. Lamontagne: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I certainly never said that I was advocating public controls.

An hon. Member: That is no point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not mind the hon. gentleman interrupting me at any time, because I am just coming to a conclusion based upon what he says. I may be giving it an interpretation that possibly does not appeal to him, but it is one that seems clear from what he said. He talks of full employment. What is full employment?

An hon. Member: We did not know while you were in power.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The hon. gentleman has not read what his mentor and philosopher, the President of the Privy Council, has said in this regard. What is full employment? He would allow 3 per cent of the labour force to be out of work. That would mean that approximately 200,000 people would be the normal number out of work. What is real growth? Well, he would allow not less than 5 per cent per annum. Without the planning we had 8 per cent last year.

Mr. Lamontagne: What about the four previous years?

Mr. Diefenbaker: We were just recovering from the mess into which the hon. gentlemen put our economy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I welcome any such interruptions.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the right hon. gentleman permit a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the hon. gentleman—

Mr. Pickersgill: I notice that the right hon. gentleman—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the hon. gentleman sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: —is very brave until his challenges are accepted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition has the floor and should not be interrupted unless he is willing to answer a question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, any time the garrulous Secretary of State frightens me there will be another sun in the sky.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, will the right hon. gentleman answer my question?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: Would the right hon. gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: My understanding is that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) has the floor. The Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) may ask a question if he wants to, but the Leader of the Opposition, who has the floor, may refuse to answer it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We are getting so in this house, Mr. Speaker, that no matter what comes up the Secretary of State takes the floor. He loves the sound of his own voice. I will be glad to answer any questions at the conclusion of my remarks, but these aimless interruptions, designed to interfere with the argument—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, when you throw a stone you always know which one it hits from where the howls come from.

Mr. Pickersgill: You can tell from the crying.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No self-identification.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Pickersgill: The right hon. gentleman said something about self-identification. I have never cried. I have never complained about being howled down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. May I suggest that there was no question of privilege at this point. I would ask the Leader of the Opposition to resume the substance of his speech.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Never in my life, Mr. Speaker, have I known so many interruptions when a person is engaged in reviewing a book. And the Secretary of State is an author too. Now may I continue. I mentioned the real growth of the economy. Then according to this speech in 1960 another question was: What are stable prices? The hon. gentlemen would allow a fluctuation of around 1 per cent. Then he deals with the philosophy of Maynard Keynes and comes to the conclusion that Keynes really could not prescribe for the present generation. He comes to the conclusion that we need policies which can start and stop quickly, or even be reversed. Well, that is interesting; I page the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) in that connection.

I mentioned earlier the book "Evolution and Problems, 1954". Does that not set forth in some detail a tightly centralized Canada?

Mr. Lamontagne: What is the title of the book?

Mr. Diefenbaker: He says it needs an economic research council to tell us what is wanted in our economic system. He asks for the setting up inside the government of an advisory board on economic development and stability to advise the government and private business. He believes that such a board if set up could put an inefficient and irresponsible government, as he says, on the spot. I make no observation on that; I do not know whether they have set up that committee yet.

With regard to private enterprise, he concludes from what is happening that it needs direction. This is my conclusion from reading what he says. He says that production is being misdirected by private enterprise, which may rely on advertising to create its market, which may concentrate the public attention on low priority wants when it should be interested in other things, and which may neglect other important objectives. This is the philosophy, sir. "He who runs may read". This is the philosophy behind the planning upon which this government has embarked. He says that Canada should develop its secondary industry, and certainly it should. Then he goes on to say that this should not be done by encouraging small manufacturing behind a wall of protection; that such industry should engage in competition on a wider scale. Then he says this of a government interested in small business:

> This may involve a smaller number of larger units in each industry.

What happens to small business? What happens to the little business places in all of our towns and cities?

Then he goes on to deal with the north, because he covers everything. He deals with the opening up of the north. He does not rely much on developing the north. While the Canadian north will undoubtedly play an important role in the Canadian economy, he says, the huge private and public investment required to open up this vast economic frontier will make a much greater contribution to general welfare if it is used for the time being in the more settled parts of the country. This, sir, is the philosophy. He goes on to say that in order to keep prices properly in line under the selective fiscal policies which are advocated, business and agriculture should meet at an annual conference at which objectives would be explained and the sense of social responsibility developed to discourage conflicts, such as labour pressure for higher wages, when such increases are not in the public interest.

This, Mr. Speaker, is an amazing document: it is frank, comprehensive and far-seeing, from the point of view of the hon. gentleman who wrote it. He says that we should learn to use new tools of economic policy. From a reading, even a perusal, of the two documents to which I refer, hon. members of this house will get an understanding of the philosophy which activates this government.

This measure cannot be considered in isolation; it is one of a great panorama planned for three long years in every detail. This measure must be viewed in the light of the other measures which have been introduced. The declaration of purpose is to stimulate the economy in order to provide jobs, and there are elements in it which are deserving of the widest possible support, for anything that can be done in that direction deserves the consideration and approval of parliament. But I find it difficult to understand the objective in question alongside the tax on building materials and new machinery. One naturally wonders how much of the economy will be left to stimulate, by the time some of these other measures start to function. The council will be set up and asked to do its work on the basis of a budget that is all but vanished, with some parts of the rest of it unworkable or meaningless. This measure cannot be separated from the other measures, for they create the atmosphere in which the national economic council is being set up. By way of example, what manner of thinking brought about the suggestion of a $500 bonus on winter-built homes? When it was announced, every person owning a home in Canada had in effect $500 less value for his own home and had to provide the taxes so that someone else could get $500. What an army of inspectors it is going to take to go out in December to inspect the sites and to go out in March to see whether or not the conditions have been fulfilled. It will provide a nightmare of bureaucratic confusion. What about the plan to pay one half the salary up to $150 per month of workers over 45 years of age who are hired? It puts a limitation on wages for everyone. The planners planned, but they did not think ahead. All of this, as I say, is part of the same picture.

The municipal loan fund was launched with tremendous fanfare. We do not know where it is. Questions were asked today. It is going to come up. It went off in the blue. We have not heard much of it since. It was sighted over Quebec yesterday. That is all we know about it. In fact, it was sighted in the Quebec legislature just this morning when the premier of Quebec termed this legislation a breach of promise by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). Is that legislation still in orbit, because it is part and parcel of this economic planning?

With respect to the legislation before us to set up a board with similar powers to those provided in Bill No. C-87 introduced last November, we give it our support. In part it is a duplication of that bill. I make it clear that in so far as it consists of a duplication of that bill and of the National Productivity Council Act we naturally give it support. But it has other things in it, and I am only going to point out one on this occasion. It has in it a provision that indicates how the budget is interlocked with the establishment of an economic council for Canada. The clause is an omnibus one, and it has to do with the fostering of plans for economic development by way of studying means of increasing Canadian participation in the ownership, control and management of industries in Canada.

The government have determined on the course. They made a frightful mess of their planning in this connection. The 30 per cent tax went with the birds and the truth squad. The other day there was a further change, and yet in the face of the planning that has been done provision is made in this bill that the board is to study means of increasing Canadian participation. I suggest that when they set up a board for this purpose, among other things, they have determined on the course they are going to take before it is set up. The board is also to study the potentialities of growth and the like, and to explore and evaluate particular projects of major significance. Those are desirable objectives and with those objectives we are in agreement.

However, sir, in this legislation there are quite a number of clauses that invade provincial jurisdiction and constitute an interference with the constitutional rights of the provinces. All during the election campaign and prior thereto it was said that before the municipal loans plan was brought in the provinces would be consulted. That was the undertaking. When the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr) was Minister of Labour he brought in the winter works program. He received widespread support for it because he consulted with the other levels of government before bringing it in.

Within the ambit of the bill now before us there are various elements of intrusion into the provincial arena, and I think there should have been consultation. I know it has been suggested that after some of this legislation has been passed by parliament the provinces are going to be consulted. That is not consultation. Consultation consists in taking the counsel of these various levels of government before legislation is passed.

Indeed, I think we should endeavour to bring about in our federal-provincial relations new vistas of consultation. During the period that the government of which I had the honour to be the head was in office we brought about a system. I do not say it was perfect but it was a workable solution to many of the problems of a federal state. I think we will have to establish something in the nature of a general course of conduct so that we will not forever be fighting the battles of federal-provincial jurisdiction and the like. We did that in connection with the resource ministers council. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) convened a conference on the subject of resources for tomorrow. Out of that conference came the resource ministers council. During the discussions and consultations a minister from each of the provinces took part in a study of what each province was doing, and a program was worked out which could be recommended to all the governments. It provided for a secretariat which is responsible to no one government, but to a committee set up by the resource ministers themselves.

The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) has a resolution on the order paper, and while I am not saying I agree with it in its entirety it does have elements in it that are necessary to be imparted into any arrangements to assure continuing consultation with the provinces.

As a result of the resource ministers council being formed they have worked out problems in co-operation. They have been able to bring about agreement. The president of the council at the present time is the Hon. Rene Levesque. The presidency changes regularly. As we are trying to make the constitution more workable and more effective, all of which is dependant on consultation, I think we have to work out under our system a general plan of operation. The technique that we evolved was not, as I said, perfect. It was the result of trial, error and experiment, but I think we evolved a system whereby federal concepts make possible co-operative planning of admirable programs in all fields, as has been done in the resource field. We did that too in the Department of Agriculture, under the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act.

I mention this as an aside, and as a digression, that we must do all we can to set up some form of flexible machinery which will permit the functioning of full co-operation and consultation between the federal and provincial governments. I am concerned over what is happening in connection with the municipal loan fund. The spirit of co-operation that was built up between the two levels of government by the means I have already mentioned has been seriously diminished in consequence of the action of the present government in proceeding with legislation, however admirable, without the fullest consultation and consideration.

Having said that, sir, I want to point out that except for one or two particulars to which I have alluded, the principle in general that is followed here is in no way new. We had it in our legislation, in the bill to which I have already referred, to establish a national economic development board. The Liberal party, in the House of Commons, said it agreed with the plan, and then proceeded for seven days to talk about it. We spent two days on the resolution stage and five days on second reading and in committee of the whole. Finally, with dissolution, it ended. They said they believed in the principles. They accepted our idea for directional planning without coercion or compulsion, and unaccompanied by the philosophy of coercion that seems to be characteristic of this government. At the same time, they opposed the measure day after day.

It is very interesting to look back and to find that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) said they agreed with what was being done. The present Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) agreed in general with it, and then proceeded to advance many arguments to show that it would not be operative. At page 819 of Hansard, for October 22, 1962 he uttered these immortal words:

> We need a government which is not afraid of taking positive action; a government which knows what it would do.

They took action, all right, under their budgetary plans; then in panic they threw them overboard, not all at once but one by one. They referred to a government which knew what it would do. But what is more important is a government which knows what it wants to do and, having decided it, stays with it. We do not know what the next step is. We have not got the legislation. I believe there are many people across Canada who, in view of the representations being made now, expect a few more of the principles which were the cornerstones of the new economy building in this country will be thrown overboard between now and the enactment of legislation.

The creation of a national economic development council, as I said a moment ago, is not new. We provided for that, and we provided for a national productivity council. However, when the present Minister of Finance was speaking, he contended that what we were doing in that legislation was setting up a board which would emasculate the national productivity council. This was the criticism he made last fall. Now, they are throwing the national productivity council overboard by placing at least some of its principles with this board.

In the United Kingdom, sir, an economic council was set up. I am not going into the particulars of it. However, I would point out that several reports have been made by the British national economic development council and they are well worth reading. One is a study of the growth rate in the United Kingdom economy to 1966, and it was published in April of this year. This is the type of planning to which no one can object. It is unaccompanied by the philosophy that planning is an end in itself, that the planners have some superior source of information or inspiration above ordinary human beings and they will tell you where you should go; that they know what is good for you. We have had enough of that kind of planning in the budget. The planning provided for under the national economic development council in the United Kingdom was on the basis that the economic growth rate, which was 2.2 per cent per year, should be increased to a growth rate of 4 per cent where possible by 1966.

They said the United Kingdom has ample scientific trained personnel; that industry will have to be more efficient. As the hon. gentleman said this afternoon there must be a heavier and more rapid investment in industrial capacity. The report from the United Kingdom deals with the deficit in the balance of payments, and indicates that exports will have to be increased sharply; consumer expenditures will have to be increased substantially; that government, management and trade unions will have to co-operate closely to achieve an annual increase in growth rate. Then, there is a further report that came out on June 6, "Conditions Favourable to Faster Growth".

In so far as the present bill is a counterpart of that which we introduced, and which was talked out, it receives our full and complete support. I mentioned a moment ago that I could not understand the incorporation in this bill of the provision that a study is to be made for increasing Canadian participation. Why did they not wait until they had recommendations? Why set up a national economic council, with a major portion of its power being this, and then act in advance? I think it can be said now that this is the kind of advice that may have saved the government from the perpetration of the terrible errors that characterized its earlier resolution in this regard.

In so far as the bill is concerned, when compared with the bill we introduced, we find that the bill we introduced provided for study and report. It would have co-operated with regional agencies in the field of economic study and planning. The present bill deletes the words "study and report", and substitutes "advise and recommend." The present board would have powers to promote and organize in order to secure economic growth, and will carry on its programs until they can be transferred to other departments or agencies. In so far as those powers are concerned, they come perilously close to the centralized planning backed by the power to compel and direct.

In reading this bill in its entirety, taking the whole picture envisaged in its concept, one can only conclude this: Whatever the minister said and however definitely and frankly he suggests that there will be no coercion, this board is designed plainly as an agency to promote a planners' paradise for the Canadian economy. It is skillfully worded. The hon. gentleman smiles. That was his philosophy in 1960; that was his philosophy when he wrote the book. However, Mr. Speaker, experience is a great teacher and it may well be that in the light of even the experience of the last three months the hon. gentleman has learned that theory is often difficult to translate into effective action.

I have mentioned the attitude of the opposition last fall. They said they accepted the bill and then proceeded to dissect it. They argued; they postponed, and discussion went on from day to day. We do not intend to do that. In so far as the bill is concerned in having the objectives of the bill that we placed before parliament, it will receive our full support, but when we come to deal with some of the paragraphs and clauses we shall point out their effect and endeavour to bring about a change.

As to the portion that is actually a prototype of the powers of the National Productivity Council Act, it will receive our support, although I feel free to say that bringing together production, automation and productivity all under one board is going to be very difficult. Our attitude will be to do everything we can to make the bill effective in its operation while assuring the supremacy of parliament in the decisions that are made by the board, while maintaining the constitutional rights of the provinces strictly and absolutely, and while at the same time being entirely opposed to anything in the nature of a planned economy, however estimable the planners may be.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is my intention to come directly to the bill before us which is concerned with setting up an economic council of Canada. In principle such an economic council is sound and it can serve a useful purpose. If it is set up properly it can be an effective instrument in reducing the severe tension existing among labour, management and government. However its success will depend largely on its terms of reference, and for this reason our debate at this time is most important.

There should be a national economic council to assist in maintaining the efficiency of the economy. I believe this is its basic purpose, and as such it must be an advisory group and not a policy making body.

Boards and councils are no panacea. As I read through this proposed legislation I can see that there is a possibility of real conflict with the work of the Atlantic development board. There are also some important points of similarity to last year's legislation which died on the order paper, and which we should examine closely.

Reading from an editorial in the Globe and Mail of June 11, 1963, written by Bruce Macdonald I find this:

> Like the economic development board, the economic council is directed to make to the minister an annual report, which is to be tabled in parliament. Unlike the board, the council has no authority to publish certain special studies without the consent of the minister.

This is an important point which the article makes, and it goes on to say:

> The only new feature in the bill relating to this question is laid down in these words: "The council shall, annually, prepare and cause to be published a review of medium and long term prospects and problems."
> While this may well be subject to interpretation, the council could well consider its freedom is sharply circumscribed by the lengthy list of subjects on which it is directed to report only to the government.

I believe a tone is indicated in this legislation which is dangerous, if the national economic council is to perform the functions which are urgently required at this time.

In many respects this bill overlaps and is similar to the legislation which set up the national productivity council and it, by the way, is being repealed by this bill, with the exception that there is a tendency to keep the control of the economic council in the hands of the government. This is not the type of thing which is needed if we are to assure ourselves that there will be that spirit of co-operation among labour, management and government which is necessary if the council is to accomplish its purpose.

There has been an aspect of the work of the national productivity council over the last couple of years which I believe is noteworthy, and which should be carried through in this legislation if the new economic council is to be of any real use.

Economic Council of Canada

The national productivity council has taken the lead in setting up, or assisting in the setting up of provincial and local councils. This is an aspect of its work which is very important. If the new council is to replace the national productivity council then we must make note of this feature.

Reading from the report of an address made by H. George DeYoung, chairman of the national productivity council at the fourth national labour-management seminar at the University of Montreal on May 15, I find this:

From our very beginning it was also readily apparent to the council that the establishment of provincial and local councils was a necessity if our goal of aiding the economy by improving its competitive ability were to be effective. Because Canada is Canada, no Ottawa based group will ever solve problems in the various provinces unilaterally.

The problems are different, the people are more geographically oriented than nationally and our type of work must eventually be done on the job, in factory and office, and on the farm. While we have been working to remove the fundamental roadblocks on a national scale—those imposed by law—of statistic and measurement data lack, and the greatest one of the climate for labour-management-government co-operation, we have been building toward the time when the local council would be the headliner. Steps were undertaken quickly to review with the provincial governments and representatives of labour and management the need for such provincial organizations. We found, interestingly that Quebec was already moving and indeed ahead of the rest of Canada in this aspect of forming a broadly based economic council. Action is also now under way to set up local councils in many industrial cities.

The formation of these productivity or economic councils in the provinces across Canada is proceeding well. Already, full formed councils are operational in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario and Saskatchewan—

And, since these words were spoken, in Alberta.

—while organizational efforts are at reasonably advanced stages in most of the other provinces. The success in the maritimes was advanced by the work of the Atlantic provinces economic council and is now highlighted by the signing of a management-labour manifesto of co-operation.

This quotation from the chairman of the national productivity council brings home to us the lesson that if the national economic council is to achieve its objectives it must not be too tightly controlled by the national government. It must extend its responsibility outward to both labour and management and to the provinces and the local areas as well. Otherwise we will have a repetition of the very thing which is happening now with regard to the municipal development and loan board. Here the central government has laid out the specifications and qualifications concerning the assistance which this particular legislation is meant to provide, but has run afoul of local autonomy and the local good will which is necessary if this project is to succeed. The lesson brought home to us here is simply that the whole question of planning and of industrial development must be co-ordinated in order to prevent the economy from rushing off madly in all directions.

The planning that industry and business needs is orderly and practical encouragement to expand. In principle a businessman can plan better for himself than can a bureaucrat in Ottawa acting on his behalf. Federal responsibilities include the co-ordinating aspect based on principles which have just been enunciated and which will encourage provincial responsibility and respect of provincial autonomy and rights while at the same time bringing about the federal-provincial co-operation we must have if such a council as this is to succeed. No one would want to take power or authority away from the government. What we want to do here is to add the wisdom of the economic community to that of the government in the decision-making process.

This brings us to consultant government, and this is one of the reasons why the recent budget has resulted in failure—simply because there was not that consultation with, or consideration of, those to whom the legislation would apply. We have seen the results and this should bring home the important principle I am talking about.

The other day I came across a booklet which is a digest of the report of the labour-management-government mission to Europe sponsored by the national productivity council. On page 9, I read this:

At the national level the consultative function in economic development is carried out through joint councils or bodies whose members, particularly from labour and management, represent the major interest involved in the economic life of the country. They make recommendations concerning common objectives of economic and social policy and the means for achieving the agreed objectives. They have not only a voice in the formulation of government economic and social policy but they must share some responsibility for its successful implementation.

I see in this piece of legislation a number of danger points. I shall not go over them in detail at this time because we are talking about the general principle of the bill, but they must be gone over carefully point by point when we come to the committee stage of our discussions. In this regard I should like to refer to a speech by Mr. J. Claude Hebert made in Halifax a short time ago entitled, "How Labour, Management and Government in Europe have United for Economic Growth". In the course of the speech to the Nova Scotia branch of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, Mr. Hebert said this:

I am also convinced, as I have said, of the need for consultative bodies at national, provincial and local levels. The national productivity council was a good start. It should be expanded or a larger body formed which unites with the council to conduct national economic studies with full consultation between labour, management and government. This is what is proving so highly effective in Europe. Such studies must also be repeated at provincial level and we now see a number of provinces developing economic councils.

Representatives of employer organizations and representatives of official trade unions must sit together along with government, finance and other groups to study the problems hindering economic growth. I say this because I am convinced that the running of our economy is too important to be left to governments alone or to political parties. Management and labour must be brought in on national and provincial policy making. It is too easy for a government, or a department of government, to become a world unto itself. They are not to blame,—it is just human nature. It happens in companies where a special department can become isolated from the real needs of a company. Many of you may have experienced this. We must bring all those involved in the economy into consultation before basic decisions are made which affect our business life.

Because this is the principle which has been followed in countries such as Sweden, West Germany, The Netherlands, Belgium and Great Britain, we see that councils similar to that proposed in this piece of legislation have achieved effective and desirable results—something we have not yet achieved in this country. This is probably one of the basic reasons why we are faced with our present difficulties.

The leader of the official opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) has been speaking about the tremendous expansion of growth that took place last year. We must consider in this the increase in prices, and other factors which do not represent true economic growth, and average the position out over the last four or five years. If hon. members do that they will find an entirely different picture—not even enough progress to keep up with the expanding population and rising prices. For this reason the terms of reference of this new body are extremely important.

I wish to make a few closing remarks which summarize the basic principles involved in such legislation as this, if it is to reach the objective which hon. members hope it will attain. First I believe this council must be truly consultative in its functions. This means that labour, management, and all other aspects of our economy must be consulted at the decision making stage by the government in order that the government can decide on the right policy to take. Second then, as far as possible, the council must be able to act apart from politics. Since it is designed to work with both management and labour, as well as with government; since it is intended to co-operate with provincial governments and local councils, it is important that it should have complete freedom to make its findings known. In this legislation there are several points which appear to me to be restrictive in this regard because the responsibility of this council is not to the government alone but to the economy in general. Third, we must recognize that during the last two years there has been a tremendous amount of sound, solid work done by the national productivity council. This must be taken into account and used and incorporated into the work of the council we are now discussing. The national productivity council has played an important part in changing the class war in industry to a situation of co-operation between industry and labour. This is something which we as politicians, finding ourselves enclosed by these walls for far too much of the time, do not properly understand. I think that in the last few years there has been a much higher degree of co-operation, good will, and productive planning between labour and industry than we have ever had before. We should give the national productivity council a good deal of the credit for this, as it has brought the different aspects of our economy together.

Then, last, a further point I wish to make concerns research. We in Canada have perhaps not been sufficiently concerned about the importance of research as it applies to industry and, indeed, to all aspects of our economy. It is necessary that work on such programs be continued and expanded.

Another aspect of this bill which has disturbed me is to be found in the latter part of the legislation and it concerns finance. I find that the minister places the responsibility for financing the national economic council more or less in the hands of the government alone. I wonder how many of us here, including members of the government, know how much money has been spent in the last year by the national productivity council. I find that for the last fiscal year it amounted to $400,894. Where did this come from? One hundred and fifty thousand dollars came from the statutory allotment provided for the council. One hundred thousand dollars or so was carried over from the previous year when the council was just getting going and did not spend the whole of its allotment. About $86,000 came to the council as donations from industry and labour. This is the kind of co-operation we need. Nevertheless the present legislation is preventing the development of a situation of this type. Finally, $83,000 of the council's income came from matching grants. There are, it is true, a few other miscellaneous sources of income which go to make up the total; but what is important here is the spirit of co-operation which these accounts reflect. Yet this bill actually eliminates the possibility of the kind of contribution which, in my view, is so necessary if this spirit of co-operation is to develop as it should.

It is therefore of great importance that the work of this economic council should be carried out on a continuing basis in collaboration with management and labour and other programs rather than that it should just evolve into a civil service operation. Good as such an operation might be, it would inevitably achieve only part of the end desired and certainly remove it far from its real objective.

This new council could be a sounding board for assessing how effectively other government programs operate or, indeed, a standard of comparison by which the programs of other governments such as provincial or local governments, in meeting the real needs which industry and labour encounter in their daily work can be assessed. Therefore, we give our wholehearted support to this legislation. There are weaknesses contained in it, but these can be discussed when we come to speak about the specific clauses involved. In principle this council has something which the economy of Canada needs—this is particularly true of the work that has been done by the national productivity council—provided it can be expanded and extended, as it needs to be at this time, and provided the basic principles to which I have referred are made the motivating force behind the council and its functions.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, following the previous speaker, who seemed to be above politics, I am going to try to get down to politics. This bill is—I know the minister who brought it in will forgive me for using a bit of a theological metaphor—hardly the bell, book and candle of the New Democratic party. But I notice he did give the blessing to this through a quotation from one of the letters of Pope John, in a religious sense. The New Democratic party economic theology has long dealt with, and our predecessors have certainly dealt with the idea of an economic council. The fact that this particular council is hardly, in its framework as specific in its responsibilities is no reason for our being destructive regarding it. We support the bill and we shall vote for it; but we are not hotly enthusiastic about it: you might say we are lukewarm.

I would like to say that with regard to the speech of the Leader of the Opposition I was almost bitterly disappointed in that, given the points that he made about the difficulties today, in any planning terms, in the need for provincial consultation; given the fact that he can point with a certain amount of derision to Premier Lesage and the municipal development loan fund; given the fact he can point to that great economist, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) and what has happened to him, with all those experts he brought in, the fact remains that the attempt the Leader of the Opposition seems to be involved in, is to somehow limn or detail the Liberal party, the present government, as being dedicated to some kind of bureaucratic planning that is going to menace the freedoms of this nation. This is a little bit too much to swallow. I am not saying this in defence of the government, but somehow we get almost the spectre that we have a Barry Goldwater or a Pat Walsh added to development in thinking on the part of the official opposition with regard to this kind of legislation, and this is really pushing it a bit far.

I would like to point out to the Leader of the Opposition that he introduced some legislation that some of us, if we wanted to raise this particular kind of ghosts, could get quite excited and worried about. I think the Conservative government, if it has any legislative legacy that a historian a decade or two from now will be looking back and trying to gild a bit, it will probably be ARDA. Can you think of any more general measure that has ever been brought here to give more power and planning and spending authority, which is almost removed from parliament? It is a good piece of legislation, and I think it is developing very nicely. So that the leader of a party so proud of that piece of legislation and the good effects it promises to have, and has already had, raising this terrible spectre of this bureaucratic menace across the way, is hard to take.

The Leader of the Opposition comes from the prairies where more than a generation ago the farmers became fed up with the whole play of the free market and free prices in terms of the grain trade. So they organized through political pressure a move which led to the taking away of wheat from any free market. There is nothing more planned and controlled, as is evidenced by the questions which roll from this side of the house from our prairie friends, than the whole grain market in the west; and for their leader, given that kind of background, to start worrying about economic planning at this date is incomprehensible to me.

I can give an example from the former prime minister's own program where some kind of economic analysis should appeal to him. The Conservative party is very proud of the Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act which was passed a couple of years ago. This act has pumped millions of dollars into new construction, and one of the great arguments put forward by my Conservative friends is that it gave a boost to the economy last year and things improved. When the minister of labour brought that legislation in he gave us an estimate of how much would be spent by the government on this project in ten years, and his economic analysis was so good that the federal government wound up, before the Conservatives went out of power, committing themselves in two and a half years to as much as they projected spending in ten years.

Some people may say that this shows what a wonderful measure it was, but surely it also shows how terribly badly off we are in terms of economic analysis. I was told the other day that the head of the economic research bureau of the Department of Labour happens to be a chartered accountant, and remembering what recently happened to another chartered accountant here, maybe that is the explanation for that poor analysis.

I should like to suggest that there is another way in which we can look at this economic council without raising all these terrible fears that this is a bureaucratic menace. The Glassco report—I know hon. members on the Conservative side have a certain amount of interest and even pride in this—in volume 3, in the section dealing with economic services, points out that the current level of expenditures can be described as modest, probably unduly so. That is referring to the economic analyses and the statistical services available to the federal government at the present time. The report goes on, in commenting on D.B.S.:

> The highly concentrated organization of statistical operations of the public service reflects a deliberate policy decision, taken 45 years ago, to create a centralized statistical agency, the dominion bureau of statistics. In contrast—

—and this is the point I want to make—> —no specific policy has been enunciated with respect to economic analysis which developed, into an organized activity employing substantial staffs only during world war II.

Then the report goes on to indicate that at the present time economic analysis is concentrated largely in three places—the Department of Trade and Commerce, the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Labour. Surprisingly enough, the conclusion drawn by the Glassco commission is that the Department of Finance itself, which might be considered the key department, is remarkably short of people who can do economic analysis.

Under economic intelligence the Glassco report says:

> Some economists, perhaps best exemplified by those in the Bank of Canada and the departments of finance and trade and commerce, are engaged in general economic intelligence; they are constantly observing economic trends and developments, both national and international, which may have widespread significance for the whole Canadian economy.

Then it goes on to point out that in all these stages of working environments for economic analysts and statisticians there has been no great emphasis on economists and economic analysts in the federal civil service. There is no real need to fear the creation of a few more economists. The working environment, according to the Glassco report, contains this kind of situation:

> —in some departments senior administrators have only a cloudy conception of economic analysis, which usually results in an attitude of naive skepticism toward economics in general. The mere engagement of a number of economists is not particularly productive, if senior officials do not understand how these professionals can contribute to the work of the department.

This is a point I want to draw to the attention of the government in view of some of the later suggestions which I wish to make. The commissioner said:

> Your commissioners are satisfied that, having regard to the widely dispersed and varied needs for economic analysis in the public service, it would be impracticable to establish a central economic bureau which would second economists to departments and agencies in need of their services.
> However, the personnel division of the treasury board should maintain an active and continuous interest in the development of career opportunities for economists, as for other professional public servants.

And the report goes on to say how that can be done.

Then in order to make its point with regard to economic analysis, the Glassco commission went to the trouble of analysing the French, the British and the American experience. Since there seemed to be some more parallels between the U.S. president's council of economic advisers and this council which we have here, it might be worth while, I think, to make a few references to the president's council of economic advisers. The council publishes every year a report which goes to the president, and is associated with his report to congress on the economic state of the union. The intriguing thing about the economic council of advisers is its very wide acceptance on the American scene. I suppose it is really only a few people, like those in the John Birch society or Barry Goldwater, who worry about the council of economic advisers.

One of the former members of this council, Neil Jacoby, who was an academic economist working out of a California university, has made a number of points in connection with this council of economic advisers to which I should like to draw the attention of the minister. The minister has the problem of having 25 occasional members of the board, if you want to put it that way, and three full time members. I think our experience with the board of broadcast governors and the C.B.C. indicates that having a trio of full time people and a congregation of so called interested parties across the country really has not worked very well, at least if we believe all the stories we have heard recently about the dichotomy of interests between the permanent members, who are the experts, and these occasional people who come in. In the United States the council of economic advisers is not saddled with a bunch of people who pretend to be representative. What you have is a chairman and two advisers. These three people have been in every case academicians, or academic economists. Or if you want to put it a little more broadly, they are people who are trained in economics and know something about it. I cannot think of anything more fatuous in some ways than to appoint three full-time people to this Canadian job who are not economists. You have men like George DeYoung, for example, who is not trained in economics and who obviously—here I differ very markedly with the leader of the Social Credit party—has been going around the country speaking to Rotary and chamber of commerce banquets and whipping up exhortations about the beauties of labour-management co-operation. He and the national productivity council never did get down to any real outline of our problems in the productivity area and they did not come up with a single economic study that will bear any kind of test of time except, I suppose, for the report on the trip to Europe which was the casually interesting sort of fact finding tour that had been made long ago by some of our academic and professional economists. The news that they brought back was only surprising, I suppose, to those people who limit their reading to a single newspaper.

The point I want to make in connection with the economic council that the President of the United States has is that these men do not go around the country exhorting businessmen or labour or anyone else. They play a full time role in economic analysis and they head a fairly large staff of experts who are partly drawn in on a temporary basis, as may be possible under this legislation, to do task force jobs in special fields. In other words, there is an interplay moving in and out. Here is the place where the business economist or the trade unionist economist functions rather, than in the top trio who in a sense are the top experts in their craft.

[Mr. Fisher.]

But one of the points that Mr. Jacoby makes is that it is a mistake if the members of the council represent different schools of economic thought. I can just imagine a council with John Deutsch as chairman and Lorne McDougall and Dr. Shrumm from British Columbia as members. You can just see the possibilities of conflict there, and a complete breakdown in this trio really getting things going. I want to suggest to the minister that the three permanent members should have a strong grounding in academic economics, that they should have the reputation of being professional economists and that some effort should be made to see that all three of them have generally the same economic approach. I hope it is not a pre-Keynesian approach such as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) introduced in his budget.

One of the other things I should like to note about the council in the United States is that as a result of the fact that the three of them are generally kept away from what seems to be a favorite activity in Canada, sending people up and down the country to exhort and to stump, they have time to concentrate upon really serious study, and the popularization of what they do comes later when their reports are published and particularly when the president, or in our case the ministry of the government, sets out to popularize and interpret their findings and indicators in a way that can be presented generally and publicly.

There is one feature about the United States set-up that is handy and I think it would be an improvement here. I refer to how long these people should be members of the council. I think they should only be in office at the pleasure of the government, because it seems to me that if, as is quite possible in the Canadian scene, we have a change of government these are three positions in particular that require people in them that will be sympathetic to the objectives of the government. I have grave doubts at the present time whether it is right that the board of broadcast governors should consist of the three personalities who are now there, in view of the fact that I know that on the part of some members of the government at least there is a certain distaste because of their background. I think that particularly in the case of economic analysis you need to have some kind of approach that is not antithetical. Just imagine the Leader of the Opposition being back in power, saddled with a couple of left wing economists and not being able to do anything about it. You can just see the difficulties that would arise. This is a point from the United States experience.

Mr. Pickersgill: He had the member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton).

Mr. Fisher: Another point I should like to make with regard to the American experience is that the economists who are picked should have some experience and background in government organization. None of us can judge whether the so-called whiz kid, Stanley, from Toronto and these other fellows, are good economists, but it is quite apparent they do not know very much about government organization or the operations of the Department of National Revenue. In this sense it seems to me that what the government needs to be looking for in the permanent members are economists who have proved by their publications, their addresses, the courses that they teach and their associations that they have some conception of the federal framework of government, at the very least.

One thing that is quite apparent about the economic council of advisers in the United States is that as the years have gone by they have increasingly won the respect of congress itself. I think it is worth while noting this, because congress tends to be very suspicious of any group of advisers which is working primarily for the president. Of course, one of the reasons why congress has been won over to a degree is that the reports are made public and because the council acts as an integrating or co-ordinating authority for all kinds of economic research that is being carried on, including some that is being provided for congressional committees themselves.

One of the cliches that seem to come up in this house is that whenever our friends immediately next to this group mention the idea of money somebody always says, yes, go ahead and print it, and we get the idea of the printing press. Also, whenever we mention planning in our party somebody throws up his hands and says immediately, dictatorship, and we are heading in a terrible direction.

I should like to say something about the differences and distinctions that the minister drew between indicative and imperative planning. He did not give a complete or thorough review. In this sense it may be that the Leader of the Opposition has a point. The more economic tools we develop, which I suppose will be the chief function of the economic council, the more it becomes apparent that by using these economic tools, by shifting investment and providing incentives here and penalties there, you do move toward control of the economy, and whether it is going to be indicative planning or imperative planning is really a matter of mere semantics rather than any substantial difference.

I give this example, if hon. members will look at it. The Minister of Finance seems to feel that the most influential item of what still remains in his budget is the incentive to industries to establish in underdeveloped or slow developing economic areas of our country, because of the tax free period. This in essence is a nice, sweet form of incentive; but once you have the kind of economic analysis that leads you to know the whole pattern of possible incentives or penalties with regard to investment, direction of income and employment and the kind of training that people should have it almost becomes a question of playing on this economic machinery like an organ.

I do not think that anyone would say that A. A. Berle, the American economist, is dangerous or suspect or Marxist, in fact he is famous as an anti-Castro man. In his book "The American Economic Republic", he makes the point that we have in the United States a managed kind of economy, and that the argument between the so-called laissez faire types and the interventionist types is an unreal one. As we move more and more towards an understanding of the economic system, and such things as input and output tables, and begin to move down to detail about our whole national economy, the more it will become just a question of plugging in or plugging out or pressing here or pressing there. It will require a fairly complex system of penalties and incentives. We have many now, in a disorganized way.

Now, to say that we are moving towards this when we already have it in some fields is a platitude. When there is a big distinction made between so-called indicative planning and imperative planning, it is, it seems to me, nothing more than a piece of sophistry that may be instrumental in keeping the former prime minister off the Liberal government's back. I do not believe it should really deceive anybody.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the New Democratic party, if it could have the economic council of its dreams, would of course take something like this bill and then try to give the council power to frame, more specifically, the kind of measures that would be needed in order to respond to the economic indicators and the long range policies that the economic council recommend. One of the points to which we always need to return when we talk about economists, is to remember that they are not the gods of this world, and that economics is just a means by which each one of us, we hope, and our country, and the world will be made richer. In doing this, the society of today finds its motives and its ambitions, I think, less and less in the marketplace and in the field of economics, and more and more outside of it.

The minister, in his analysis, made the point with which I agree, that because of the catch-up in post-war demand and the effect of the tremendous productive capacity that followed investments leading up into the mid-fifties, we have satisfied to quite an extent the main consumer needs in this country. I assume, although he did not say it, that going on from this we need to develop new or additional consumer needs. I suppose the grounds for this are going to develop in what we refer to as the technical and social fields, that is new needs in new equipment, in a better education and a deeper, richer life, if you want to put it that way, through cultural activities, through such things as centennials and an emphasis upon history.

This is really not the field of the economist. It seems to me this is the difficult role of the economic council. If it produces overmuch respect through its operation it may even dominate the climate of thinking in this country about what our goals should be. While it is all very well for us to emphasize the economic goals that our society should have, I think all of us today realize that there are many larger ones. This, in a sense, brings in a point made by the former prime minister regarding provincial jurisdictions and provincial problems. I mention this because so many of the provincial responsibilities are not primarily economic. They are educational and they are cultural. In that sense, they are ones which the federal government can never provide.

It seems to me that here is where any interplay needs to take place. It seems to me that the economic management of this country's economy can only be done at the federal level, with any kind of justice. I say this in denial of what some of our friends, including friends of our own party in Quebec seem to feel, that you can establish within the sovereignty of a single state some kind of viable economic system that could go on regardless of the over-all matrix of the economy in the rest of the country. But in the direction of the provincial needs, the economic council, and the members who come to it, it seems to me will be generally charged with the responsibility of translating both what the provinces need and what we need, socially and culturally, for the consideration of the full time people, so that they can better comprehend both what we express in parliament itself and what the needs of our economic system should be.

One of the points made by the leader of the Social Credit party I cannot help mentioning. He seemed to feel that the productivity council was well on its way to introducing a new period of harmony in management-labour relations. He seems to feel that this is going to be one of the great objectives of the economic council. I want to express right at this time a great scepticism that this is the role or can be the role of the economic council. It seems to me that we have not yet reached the stage, either in the sophistication or organization of Canadian labour union in any national way, when a national economic council could serve as any great instrument for better management-labour relations. It seems to me that is frustrated right off the bat by the division of labour responsibility, federally and provincially.

It is frustrated because of the differing character of so much of the Canadian labour movement, and the fact that the Canadian Labour Congress does not speak for the whole labour movement. I do not believe the congress would want to claim to speak for the whole labour movement. It is quite apparent from the way in which the Canadian Labour Congress has been moving in connection with the difficulties it has with some of its own membership, that we are not at the stage when we can say that, on the national level, we have a coherent labour group with coherent aims and with a single leadership that is prepared to speak for the whole labour movement within the framework of something like the economic council. They could advise, yes. I want to emphasize also that I feel the business community in Canada is really not much better off than the labour community in terms of really being able to express national intentions and wishes of the groups represented on this national economic council. I am not trying to be negative in giving these, in a sense, warnings.

It seems to me this may be important, however, because there may be a tremendous expectation that these 25 people who will be on this economic council, who will be selected to represent farm groups, labour groups and so on, are somehow or other going to give you a real economic forum on the national level that can do things. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not think they can do them any better than we can do them here in parliament. As advisers, as interlocutors or in a sense liaison people with ideas on the situations out in the country, they can do a fine job. In time, if the economic council develops into the kind of organization and representation that some of these agencies parallel to it have in the United Kingdom, in France or in the United States, then I think it may be time to talk of a new period or a new opportunity in the field of management-labour relations on the national level.

The final remark I would like to make about the economic council is related to what I might say is the left wing or the radical bias that I hope still exists in our party. For years we have claimed, and we believe it, that economic planning is the tool by which Canada can achieve almost anything that it wants in the economic field. Now, when one goes that far you are of course usually asked to spell out in more detail just how this would work out, how it could be done, what would be some of the steps you would take, and what kind of agencies you would create.

Usually there is the spectre, raised by people who do not sympathize with our point of view, that our kind of operation would lead to a great deal of nationalization, and that in a sense we would take over very many industries. I would like to comment here that in his speech on the budget address, and on a number of other occasions, the leader of our party has shown in main outline the kind of steps we would take in the short term to get our economy going again, and in essence the very same principles and ideas would be the ones we would put forward and have advocated by any economic council we would create.

We think the economic council is likely to be a very sterile operation in terms of good or effective advice, if the three people selected for it are the kind of economists who believe in a laissez faire economy, who are afraid to detail a program that an effective government would be prepared to carry out, and which an ineffective government would hesitate in front of, because of the likelihood of causing a storm in one part of the community or another.

The New Democratic party sees this legislation as another very small step along a road that we think is inevitable for this country. We just wish it was a larger stride but we are not complaining about the fact that it is being taken; and later on, if we have the time, other speakers will deal with some of the more specific details.

I was intrigued that the Leader of the Social Credit party and the leader of the official opposition made the point that, as this discussion goes further and as we get into the clauses of the bill, they will, if I may use the metaphor, work like terriers shaking out each clause. We will be very interested in seeing what kind of amendments they present. We believe the bill as it stands is a fairly good one. It does not go as far as we would like, but we are satisfied with it as it is; and aside from possibly one or two small amendments or suggestions we feel the bill should be put into effect as quickly as possible; and we would hope it has very smooth sailing in the next hour or so.

Economic Council of Canada

Mr. J. C. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I have found the debate on this particular piece of legislation very interesting, and I would like to comment first on the speech of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher). I listened with considerable interest to his developing thoughts as he talked about the bill and I could not help but note the contrast, at least what I took as a very marked contrast, between his comments and those of the leader of his party and of the former member for York South when a bill of a more or less similar nature was debated last session.

As he talked about the inevitable trend towards planning, and as he indicated that the difference between indicative planning and imperative planning was almost a question of semnatics, I felt how much less dogmatic, almost doctrinaire, this type of talk seemed to that we used to hear from his leader and from the former member for York South. There seemed to be an encouraging absence of the old, traditional, socialist jargon and instead there seemed to be a markedly helpful attitude, and considerable promise.

I took from his remarks that, after he went through his analysis of this bill, he really liked it. I assumed he was speaking for his party, and he did not have much to add so far as the legislation itself is concerned. Indeed I almost got the feeling that if his party formed a government it would bring down similar legislation to this.

The only area that he seemed particularly concerned with, and I am not sure this pertains technically to the legislation itself, was the character of the appointees. If these men were not of a calibre that he would like then, according to him, the legislation would not achieve its ends. If, on the other hand, they were, then this legislation is fine.

As I say, this seems to me to be a marked contrast to the type of dissertation we heard with respect to this type of legislation last session. I thought for a while, when these preconditioned reflexes of the various parties were expressed in the house, as they are whenever legislation such as this comes up, that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition would come out with the usual more or less daily red herring about dominion-provincial relations and bureaucracy, and I thought he would probably come up with the old phrase that our front bench is loaded with civil servants and that we are going to impose terrible restrictions on the country. In fact he managed to cover most of his usual stamping ground pretty well. However, it is a well-worn path by now, while the hon. member for Port Arthur seemed to travel a little different and a little more refreshing route tonight.

I thought, after the rather massive attack on this type of legislation launched by the Leader of the Opposition, perhaps a little stronger rebuttal would come forth from hon. members to my right, but it did not seem to disturb them too much in listening to the Leader of the Opposition's lead-off speech. In fact there seemed to be a marked defence—and this is one disturbing area—for the Leader of the Opposition's position.

The hon. member for Port Arthur reminded him of his government's ARDA proposal, of their Technical and Vocational Training Assistance Act, of the Glassco commission recommendations in which they took considerable pride, and pretty well tried to point out that the Conservative party under previous leadership, as I took it from the conclusion of his remarks, were really quite a progressive lot. This may be somewhat surprising, but I have always suspected that there was, more or less, a mutual trust and understanding between our hon. friends of the New Democratic party and the Conservative party, and this becomes more evident the longer I sit in the house.

I think this mutual trust comes from the fact, not that they agree but that they both have marked out and well staked ground. Each knows the limits of the other. Both are quite prepared to let each party solely occupy that ground, and there is really no invasion expected by either one; so that this leads to mutual trust and understanding. I think perhaps this mutual trust and understanding can lead to the rather laudatory remarks that we heard this evening from the deputy leader. It makes me recall the headlines regarding the speeches made during the election campaign. It seemed that the only political party which aroused the anger and frustration of our friends of the New Democratic party was the Liberal party. Really the Conservative party was more or less a secondary thought. Of course, the Conservatives were completely preoccupied with the Liberal party, almost to the exclusion of the New Democratic party, and it made me think—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fane: That will be the day.

Mr. Munro: It made me think of the ever increasing tendency of these parties which have preconditioned reflexes to new ideas, because they usually follow a stereotyped pattern; they both have their own well staked out ground, and they have a horrible suspicion of a party which accommodates itself to changing conditions and times. They have this suspicion of our party, that I think can really trace its rather phenomenal success electorally in this country over the decades to being a party that is capable to a very ready degree of accommodating itself to ideas as they develop.

Mr. Prittie: Which party is that?

Mr. Munro: I am speaking of the Liberal party. As these ideas develop and as a political party tries to analyse whether they are effective or not and tries to take some responsibility for implementing them, a certain portion of an idea may fall into one of these well staked out areas which have been trampled for several decades by the two parties over there. Of course, this immediately sets in a reaction of anger and frustration, that we should develop such an idea. I cannot help but notice this ever increasing trend.

I think the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher)—although I was most interested in his speech, as I say—was disappointing in this respect. I thought he would have retaliated in stronger fashion, and frankly he surprised me. I recall reading one of his articles in the Telegram, the article being headed "Why I gunned for Walter Gordon".

Mr. Fisher: I am always glad to meet my readers.

Mr. Munro: I could not help thinking, at the time I read it—this was when he raised the question that started this "whiz kid" debate—that really he did not get much publicity out of it; other stalwarts of his party more or less took over. This certainly points out the advantages of being a journalist and part time member. If you feel that certain of your—

Mr. Fisher: Keep buying that paper.

Mr. Munro: —most wise and sharp political manoeuvres are going unnoticed, you can always write your own column about them. I think perhaps a good title for an article now, after listening to the hon. member's speech, would be, "Why I shot blanks at John Diefenbaker". At any rate, I think that legislation such as this is most progressive. It is certainly in line with the policies we on this side of the house have advocated since 1958.

It was interesting to hear the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) talk about the Liberal party in this regard. Again, there was an essential contradiction in his speech. In one breath he talked about how we had stolen the idea from him because he had brought in a bill similar to this during the last session, and in the next breath he started to warn us against the dire danger we face from bureaucratic trends which will automatically set in as a result of the passage of a bill such as this. It was difficult to ascertain whether he was for or against this type of legislation.

Mr. Macdonald: He has not made up his mind yet.

Mr. Munro: The speech of the Leader of the Opposition was more or less a partisan, political speech; political junk, you could almost call it. He threw in everything but a learned treatise on the traditional approach of the Conservative party on matters encompassed in legislation such as this. Therefore I take it, when he has to resort to a speech of the type he has just delivered in this house, that perhaps the Conservative party no longer embraces the traditional approach to boards such as this, which in a way are inevitably going to intervene in the free play of our economic forces. So we can take it the Conservative party has changed their position. Their position is not defined to the degree where the Leader of the Opposition wants to take any definite stand. He has to resort, again, to this path that was so well trod before the last election.

I cannot help but refer to a few of his observations. He talked about the Liberal party regarding legislation of this kind as a vehicle to solve all problems. That was misinterpretation in which it is usual for the Leader of the Opposition to indulge, because this certainly was at no time mentioned by the minister when he spoke in introducing this legislation. We at no time have held this out as any panacea for the cure of all our economic problems. So this, again, was a figment of the imagination of the Leader of the Opposition.

I have referred to the fact that the Leader of the Opposition said we stole this legislation. This is usually the lament we hear from our friends in the far corner.

An hon. Member: That is true.

Mr. Munro: But apparently this is another more or less common stamping ground that they do not mind each other travelling, and they recognize each other's proprietary rights to walk the path without interference. This would indicate, perhaps, how ready we are to accommodate ourselves to ideas without too much concern as to who has the particular ownership of such ideas. The Leader of the Opposition talked about the audacious action that was mentioned by the minister who introduced this legislation, and he referred to the budget. I could not help feeling that the Leader of the Opposition was using this occasion to really launch another attack on the budget.

Mr. Orlikow: You would rather forget about it.

Mr. Munro: He no doubt thinks this is politically fertile ground to cultivate, and no doubt on every opportunity until the recess comes along this matter will be raised. In every debate there will technically be some relevance to the matter before us but as far as the substance is concerned they will inevitably come back to the budget. I think it can be said now—and I as a member am more than pleased to say—that as far as the budget is concerned, I think it envisaged much audacious action, audacious action that was noticeably lacking all during the last administration.

Mr. Orlikow: Not now.

Mr. Munro: I do think it still contains many proposals of an advantageous nature and it certainly does contain the characteristic of audacity. I do not think that we in the Liberal party have anything to be ashamed of with respect to this budget. If we allow ourselves to be convinced by the remarks of hon. members opposite we would have to retreat to a position such as this country has come to expect—a minister of finance who would follow a cautious road—the last thing that we in this country need. Certainly those who support the New Democratic party have never advocated a conventional course. There were proposals in this budget of a more or less revolutionary nature—and one does not have to be very revolutionary in this country; we are so cautious in matters of this kind that the slightest change involves, almost, a complete upheaval.

As far as many members of this party are concerned, I think the Minister of Finance rates a great deal of credit for the proposals in this budget.

Some hon. Members: Which ones.

Mr. Munro: I think we are all prepared to go to the people with respect to the proposals contained in this budget any time.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would remind the hon. member that if he intends to discuss the budget his remarks should be related as closely as possible to the bill under consideration.

Mr. Munro: I cannot help thinking that the Leader of the Opposition did not stick too closely to the terms of this particular bill. I suppose we can now conclude quickly because, as one member of this house, I hate to regurgitate material which was well chewed in the last parliament with respect to legislation such as this. I expect we shall hear it all in the next day or two. The Conservatives, on the one hand, will accuse us of trying to discourage initiative, of introducing creeping socialism. There will be dire warnings that we intend to push people around; that we are going to set up some bureaucratic form of control which will take away the fundamental rights of the people. On the other hand, we will surely hear from our friends who sit in the far right corner, as we have heard before, that we have hooked their idea—an idea which only they are capable of implementing with sincerity—and they usually seem to infer that they have a sole and special interest in that virtue. And I suppose, when all the speeches are over, we shall pass this legislation, having loaded the pages of Hansard with the same jargon as we talked last session.

I think, though, there are a couple of issues with regard to this legislation which are disturbing. Even if it is passed—and I expect it will be—I cannot help wondering whether any of the recommendations which would be made by this board will be implemented. Even if the recommendations and advice given by the council are such that they could be of considerable assistance to this country I cannot help wondering whether the action which this council will probably suggest would ever be implemented. I think there are related factors in this country over which this particular parliament has no power—factors which cast considerable doubt on the outcome of this measure. Chief among them is the degree of sectional interest which has assumed an alarming influence in our economy. Our political parties are now orientated almost entirely on the basis of sectional interest. Their platforms are orientated almost entirely on the basis of sectional considerations.

Mr. Herridge: Did the hon. member say, "sectional"?

Mr. Munro: I would say that as long as the areas from which we come, and the particular prejudices of those areas, form so prominent a part of the thinking of our political parties it is doubtful whether legislation, however meritorious, which may be recommended by this particular board could ever be passed. Certainly it would never be passed, judging by the behaviour which can be observed in this parliament. We talk about what we hope this bill will mean. We hope it will result in some type of direction to this country which will be superior to what I think we are all prepared to acknowledge has been the haphazard development of our natural resources and investment possibilities, while these were left exclusively in the hands of private interest. I am sure we all hope this board will encourage a more orderly and progressive trend in the development of our natural resources and of investment both private and public. That is what we hope. Whether our parliament and our country, being what it is intrinsically, has developed to a degree which could even match a development such as that would be surprising to me, and I hate to be a cynic. I think that the machinery for the implementation of recommendations which may be made by this board leaves much to be questioned. No doubt some of them will be considered by the cabinet, but many of them will be considered in this house and judging by the tendency of our political parties to talk in terms of partisan advantage every day—and the rules, such as they are, permit it—they will not get very far. This more or less archaic institution we have here which almost stifles and grinds to a halt every type of progressive action, seems to me to be an outworn obstacle in the way of a cure to unemployment and the orderly development of our natural resources generally.

An hon. Member: Let us pass this now and talk afterwards.

Mr. Munro: Perhaps we can pass it quickly and get on to other items on the order paper which will to a far greater degree assist in implementing the objects of legislation such as this.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask the hon. member a question? Would he tell us what he thinks of the principle of the bill he has been discussing?

Mr. Munro: The hon. member knows I have already said I think it will promote and encourage private industry and private capital into a more orderly and progressive development of our natural resources and investment generally. I also think it will lead, in the public sector, to a more equitable development of our natural resources and of our secondary industry. I think I covered all this in my remarks. I think it will all be repeated on numerous occasions in the next few days, until even the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre understands the purpose of this legislation.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, a serious error has occurred here. It is the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) who fails to understand.

Mr. Munro: I am sorry. I think I should ask the forgiveness of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill).

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, it seems more than passing strange to me that on the first day of the second reading of this bill hon. members opposite have the presumption and impertinence to say that we should get on immediately with the business of the house. I am sure that the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) who is the house leader, has not even consulted his party. He knows full well our intentions about getting on with the business of this house. The hon. member who has just spoken suggested that there was great similarity between this bill and the one discussed in the last parliament. Mr. Speaker, they discussed our bill for seven days and never even began to pass it, and the hon. member has the gall to come into this house and speak in that way. I would say that this is absolutely ludicrous.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: I feel that this matter should be aired very briefly.

I was very interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) who said that we seemed to be preoccupied with certain aspects of the legislation before us when we initiated the ARDA legislation some months ago. Let me point out to hon. members one of the essential differences readily apparent to us. Within the centre of ARDA we saw at all times the principle of local participation, local ideas and local initiative. What we are pointing out to hon. members at the present time is that if the thinkers who seem to be guiding the government have their way, the council under discussion will have their planning ideas superimposed by them from the top. This is the fear we have and it is what we are bringing to the attention of hon. members and the Canadian people.

This was one point the hon. member for Port Arthur obviously failed to realize. He pointed out that we initiated winter works legislation, while we have been talking about the municipal loan fund legislation. The leader of my party in this house pointed out one essential difference, which was quite simple. When the minister of labour consulted the provinces it was just a simple case of consultation. Hon. members opposite did not even bother to preoccupy themselves with the courtesy of consulting with the provinces. Mr. Speaker, although like many hon. members present I have a great respect for those who come from the halls of learning, after listening to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) and the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) I am more convinced than ever that this chamber is essentially a debating chamber and not a lecture hall.

The Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) made an interjection in connection with the party to my left about left-wing economists. We have in our party the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) who was the minister of agriculture of the former administration. We were proud to have him, Mr. Speaker, because the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, who was a great minister of agriculture, showed that Conservatism does have a dynamic attitude toward the future. As this debate gets under way we become convinced of one thing. We look at the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier) with his Dixiecrat attitude towards Canada and the economy in general. We also cannot help realizing that going through the veins of the Secretary of State is still that doctrinal mysticism of Liberalism.

An hon. Member: Get up on your feet.

Mr. Grafftey: Then you listen to the theory expounded in this house this afternoon by the President of the Privy Council, ideas which are at the forefront—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Grafftey: The President of the Privy Council enunciated ideas which control the Liberal party today. We realize that the Grit bed is a large, pragmatic bed and there is room for everybody in it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is a murmur of interruption and conversation coming from both sides of the house which makes it very difficult for the Chair to follow the very interesting remarks of the hon. gentleman who has the floor. I would ask the assistance and co-operation of all hon. members in allowing the Chair to follow his remarks.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, since the first time I spoke in this house somehow or other I have had to get used to lots of noise and interruption from the other side. I will not suggest that my skin is thick, but day by day I am getting used to it.

As we peruse this legislation before us for second reading we become aware of the fact that memories are very short. When we brought similar legislation before this house in the last parliament we were criticized for creating what hon. gentlemen opposite at that time called an agency of the government. They said that this just was not the thing to do. Let me point out that in debating this bill on second reading we are discussing the principle of a planning agency. We were criticized for creating an agency when in fact what we were setting up in the last parliament was an independent commission of government. Now hon. members opposite go ahead and create an agency themselves.

I should like to point out that the change in those who hold the reins of office has resulted in a change of attitude in this instance, and we on this side of the house would like to know why there has been a change of attitude. The leader of my party said that we had legislation passed in this house with regard to a productivity council. After seven days of debate Bill No. C-87, to create a national economic development board, was nowhere near being passed. Hon. members opposite are going to be put to great pains to show in the clauses of this bill wherein lies the difference between their bill and our bill. On the other hand, we are certainly going to point out what we think will be a great difference in attitude with respect to this bill. They are going to be put to very great pains to tell the people of Canada why this bill has been introduced, when the last government introduced a similar bill which hon. members opposite decided after seven days of debate not to pass. So much for the agency aspect involved in the principle of this bill.

Now let us talk for a brief moment about planning. We in this House of Commons have learned in the last few weeks that very often the planners, after many days of decision, have to occupy themselves with many days of revision. Hon. members opposite in years gone by have told us not to worry about the plans they had for the Canadian people. The Canadian people saw many of their plans in the years before we formed the government. They saw the plans of a government which often thought it was working on the same plane with the deity, and was just going to tell all of us what was good for us whether or not we wanted it. The Canadian people do not want this kind of planning, which is essentially alien to the Canadian spirit.

An hon. Member: They did not seem to want yours either.

Mr. Grafftey: I am sure that many members of the house have read a book from the United Kingdom entitled "Ordeal By Planning". We heard a lot for many years about the misfortunes of planning on the part of the labour government there. Members to my left in the house no longer even mention the word nationalization. I am sure that the leader of the New Democratic party, after his experience with nationalization in Saskatchewan, is not going to take even minutes to talk about planning in this sense. We have seen the experience with planning in the United Kingdom and in the province of Saskatchewan, and Canadians and people throughout the western world are becoming fundamentally realistic in their attitude toward it.

Perhaps it is not a parliamentary word but we have heard a lot of gobbledygook perpetrated in the name of mystical planning. Robert Burns himself said:

> The best laid schemes o' mice and men
> Gang aft agley.

Sir, we have heard a lot of real mysticism, real fervour, in the discussion of planning.

We have heard about indicative planning, imperative planning, planning for planning's sake. What the Canadian people are worried about is planning for planning's sake. If the President of the Privy Council would get up in the house and tell his own party and the people of Canada exactly what planning he really has in mind, and he knows what he has in mind, he would soon hear what the Canadian people think about this type of planning.

I do not want to become too rustic in my phrases or explanations but I think that each member of the house, when he or she was young was told to "plan your work and work your plan." Every businessman, every farmer, everybody who keeps books knows all about that. Every farmer who runs a successful farming operation, every businessman who is running a successful business operation, every politician who has run a successful election campaign knows that you have to plan. All I say to hon. members such as the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) and the President of the Privy Council is: Please, in the name of goodness do not lecture us; do not talk down to us in such professional tones and envelop the word planning with such great mysticism.

I simply ask the President of the Privy Council to tell us in clearcut terms as this debate proceeds what he means by planning. If he makes a clearcut statement to the house and to the Canadian people we will see that with members of the treasury benches such as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), who perpetrated on the Canadian people the worst budget in the history of the nation, he is talking about planning for planning's sake. He is talking about a philosophy which is completely alien to the spirit of the Canadian people. I know that the hon. member for Port Arthur is either going to write a news column or say on the floor of the house at a future time—

Mr. Fisher: Just keep reading it.

Mr. Grafftey: —that I sound like Barry Goldwater—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: —when I say that one of the dynamic principles at the centre of the party I support in this house—

An hon. Member: Herbert Hoover.

Mr. Grafftey: —is a sincere preoccupation with the rights of the individual. We do not talk one thing and do another. In the case of every piece of legislation brought to the floor of the House of Commons by our administration, the rights and the dignity of the individual were foremost in the minds of our government. I suggest that unless members opposite do a much better job than they have up to now either in their party literature or on the floor of the house in explaining in clearcut, direct terms to the Canadian people what they mean by planning, the Canadian people will suspect that they are going to return to the pre-1956-57 days when the Liberal party thought the state existed not for the individual, but that the individual existed for the state.

An hon. Member: You were a Liberal in those years.

Mr. Grafftey: I was a Liberal in those years and I am sure hon. members opposite would not like to know tonight why I changed.

An hon. Member: Go ahead.

Mr. Grafftey: I changed parties and I am not going into the reasons tonight because hon. members opposite do not like to hear why. You may think that hon. members are noisy, Mr. Speaker, but if I told them why it would fairly lift the roof. They do not like to be told about their divide and rule policies.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Grafftey: Certainly.

Mr. Fisher: He brought up the question of why he left the Liberal party. I want to give him the opportunity to deny a rumour and I will put it in question form. Would the hon. member say whether he left the Liberal party because he failed to get an appointment?

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I have always considered the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) a personal friend of mine outside the house, and I do not think that question was worthy of him. I would deny it completely. I deny that suggestion and I really think—

An hon. Member: Yes or no.

Mr. Grafftey: No, unequivocally.

Mr. Clancy: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member for Port Arthur should withdraw that question right now. He should know by now that it is not according to the rules to impugn the honesty of another member.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I think we are drifting away from the purpose of the legislation and I would suggest to hon. members on this side of the house that they allow the hon. member to proceed without too much interruption.

Mr. Clancy: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, no member of this house has the right—

Mr. Habel: To ask a question?

Mr. Clancy: —to impugn the honesty of another member.

Mr. Fisher: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I imputed no dishonesty.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, on the point that has been raised, I think that surely there ought to be some order in the house this evening. Those of us who have been associated for five years with the hon. member who is speaking know that he sincerely left the Liberal party because of his beliefs, and for no other reason.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. We are now discussing the establishment of an economic council for Canada. The hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, having listened to the President of the Privy Council and the hon. lady from Northumberland explain her collectivist theory, I think that even if this legislation seems similar to the legislation we brought before this House of Commons, the people should be made aware of the differences in attitude in our party and the party opposite to bills of this nature.

An hon. Member: We are well aware of it.

Mr. Grafftey: You know, sir, when I hear interruptions as I do from hon. members opposite I am reminded of the fact that, as everyone in this house regardless of party knows, this is a pretty rough game we are in in Canada, no matter what happens. Members like the member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) do not make public life any easier for any member. I suggest that he clean out his mouth.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: I am not annoyed, Mr. Speaker, but cheap interruptions—I think the hon. Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) recognizes this—are not worthy of hon. members opposite or of this house in general. If you have an interruption of substance and intelligence to make, then make it and I will sit down. I will try to answer your questions. Your interruptions are not even appreciated by the members of your own party, the intelligent ones.

I suggest again, sir, that we scrutinize this legislation and that we scrutinize the attitude of hon. members opposite towards it to make sure that this nation, once again, will not be burdened with this notion of planning for the sake of planning. We hope, as most hon. members hope and most Canadians hope that this measure will not mean direction and regimentation which is so alien to the Canadian spirit, the kind of direction and regimentation that was superimposed on this nation before 1957. We hope it will not mean interference with individual initiative.

The hon. member for Port Arthur might say again that I sound like Barry Goldwater. I am not afraid to get up on my feet in this House of Commons and state that the party I support believes that individual initiative, individual dignity still means something in 1963. There are many Canadians from coast to coast who believe that they can make their own way in life, naturally depending to a great extent on government, but not sharing in the collectivist views of the hon. lady from Northumberland or the views expounded by the President of the Privy Council in his book and on the floor of this House of Commons.

I agree fundamentally with most hon. members that no longer can we validly become involved in the old classical debate of free enterprise versus complete state control. We all recognize that this is no longer a valid debate in 1963. I am sorry if I seem to be underlining this fact again and again in my speech, but I believe it does bear repetition. While we should not get involved in this classical debate of free enterprise versus state control I think it is a very valid consideration for hon. members in this chamber, especially when government, whether we like it or not, is getting bigger and bigger, to do some honest, sincere thinking about individual dignity and the rights and freedom of the individual. This is especially true when we are talking about a bill of the basic importance of the one which is before us tonight.

Again, I appeal to the treasury benches opposite, to hon. members opposite, that if this bill is going to have any long or short term effects they must make it readily intelligible to the individual, if it is going to have any meaning at all in pushing our economy forward. In so far as this notion of planning is concerned, let me simply say this, and I think it is perhaps a truism, that we in Canada should be extremely proud of one of the greatest civil services in the western world. It has been my opinion, and I say this in a non-partisan way because I understand that when hon. members opposite did this they did it in a sincere way, that when the Liberal party forms a government they often tend to give the civil service jobs to do that they should not have to do, and which they often do not want to do. I said in another debate that Haldane said justice must not only be just, but it must be seen to be just. This is, in essence what he said. I refer to this because an administration which is made up of nine ex-senior bureaucrats must spell out in detail what it means by planning if it is not going to be held suspect by the Canadian people from coast to coast.

Now, sir, the last principle that is involved in this bill and which I should like to discuss on second reading relates to the notion of consultation, which is a central principle in the bill. I am glad that hon. members opposite realize the necessity for consultation. I thought they were going to get off to a good start when I listened to the throne speech. They talked about co-operative federalism. All of us on this side of the house know that co-operative federalism denotes a high degree of consultation with the provinces.

Well, what has happened so far, Mr. Speaker?

One of the basic reasons that the whole economic policy of this government is floundering on the rocks is the lack of consultation. The Minister of Finance did not consult his officials; he consulted three experts outside his department. We have seen what happened to the budget as a result of lack of consultation. The Minister of Finance, and the members on the treasury benches, forgot to consult the provinces regarding the central aspect of their short term economic program. The Minister of Finance went on television, then he came to the floor of this house, and he said the municipal loan fund legislation was the key short term measure of their economic program to stimulate the economy. It would make jobs available immediately, he said. Before we announced the municipal winter works program, we consulted the provinces. What has happened? The whole short term program of the government is floundering because of lack of consultation. The budget floundered because of lack of consultation. I put questions to the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) whether he consulted with the Minister of Finance regarding exemptions on building materials when he said there would be a $500 bonus given to people building houses in the winter months. We find that even members of the cabinet are not consulting each other, but I am glad that finally in this bill they realize the importance of the principle of consultation. Consultation often involves nothing more than courtesy.

I am not going to inform the house tonight whether I am taking the centralizing point of view or whether I am arguing for provincial rights. That is absolutely immaterial. But I can say that in 1963, things being what they are in this federal union of ours called Canada, no matter how much centralization the Minister of Finance advocates, I hope before he convinces the cabinet that certain legislation is good for the short term, someone, possibly a minister from Quebec or possibly a minister from British Columbia, or any other province will tell him that consulting with the provinces, even by telephone occasionally, is a very handy thing to do.

The throne speech spoke of co-operative federalism and consultation. By their fruits ye shall know them; and I hope that the notion of consultation in this bill will really mean something. Just the other day the Prime Minister told the Canadian people his government wanted to get on immediately with the municipal loan fund legislation; but the President of the Privy Council, outside of this house, announced that we were in no hurry, that Mr. Lesage is correct and that we are going to wait. It seems to me that the centralizers do not consult those who believe in co-operative federalism in this new cabinet.

One of the real problems, and I regard it in a very optimistic nature, facing Canada today involves federal-provincial relations. Every Canadian of good will, no matter what party he belongs to, hopes that before 1967 many of the basic problems involving federal-provincial relations will be solved so that our centenary will be a true celebration for all Canadians from coast to coast.

Mr. Pickersgill: Someone should ask what bill the hon. member is speaking on.

Mr. Grafftey: I do not think any Canadian will take heart in seeing federal-provincial relations bog down.

The Secretary of State asked me what bill I am speaking on. I would like to suggest to him that without proper consultation with the provinces there can be no success for much legislation, and I would ask hon. members opposite, on this 11th day of July, 1963, whether they have consulted with the provinces relating to this very bill before us; because surely by now they have learned their lesson, that their whole short-term economic program is on the rocks because they did not consult? I am only saying I hope they are going to take seriously the principle of consultation written in this bill.

Mr. Nowlan: It is our bill.

Mr. Grafftey: The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings tells the truth when he says it is our bill. It is, as I explained a number of minutes ago.

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Grafftey: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: Did the hon. gentleman's friends consult the provinces before they introduced what he now says is their bill?

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, I am going to give a frank, forthright answer. I would be glad to speak to the members of my party involved and then inform my hon. friend of that. I would just like to draw attention to one of the suggestions put forward by the leader of the party I support. He mentioned the fact that, while he was not in agreement in detail with the bill, it has become obvious that some sort of organ is necessary in order to expedite proper federal-provincial relations. He pointed to the happy experience that we have had in relation to national resources. Members of all parties should take a very constructive attitude towards this question if we want to live in the type of Canada that I want to live in, and that I am sure all other hon. members want to live in in the years to come.

In closing I would like to say that hon. members opposite, be they on the treasury benches, or ordinary members supporting the government, have a direct obligation to explain to the Canadian people what they mean by planning. The Canadian people want to know whether it means planning for planning's sake, or direction and regimentation, which is so alien to the Canadian spirit. They have this obligation and they will not fulfil it by long professional discourses in this house.

I have a great respect for the halls of learning, but this is a debating chamber, and within the confines of it we want to know their attitude towards planning; and so do the people of Canada. We want to know if they have respect for individual initiative and the freedom that all people have in countries that want to live in freedom. It is an important thing to talk about and an important matter to which real consideration should be given.

Miss Pauline Jewett (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, in the minute left to me I want to say I have not had such an entertaining evening since I entered the house, particularly of course the last half hour, and indeed I want to thank the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) for giving me this entertainment.

I am glad in a way that it is almost ten o'clock because I want to give the hon. member who has just spoken a copy of Bill C-72. I would be extremely grateful if he would read it, because I would like very much on behalf of this party to discuss the bill on Monday—which I suppose will be the next day we will be talking about it—and I think it would be very helpful if he and some other members had copies of it.

I do not mean to sound professorial when I say that. I got all those cracks; I know they were intended for the minister, too. I do not want to have the hon. member think I am becoming professorial, but it helps debate enormously in this chamber if we read bills, if we think about them, and if we know what is in them.

Mr. Martineau: Would the hon. lady permit a question before 10 o'clock?

Miss Jewett: I am afraid it is 10 o'clock.

Mr. Martineau: Would she also send a copy of the bill to her colleague from Hamilton East?

FINANCE

APPROVAL OF CERTAIN AUTHORIZED EXPENDITURES FOR FISCAL YEAR 1962-1963

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could have the unanimous consent of the house to revert to government notices of motions for the purpose of advancing, on behalf of the Minister of Finance, the motion that appears in his name relating to the appropriation bill for the previous fiscal year. This is only a formal step that would put it under government orders tomorrow. There was an understanding that, if that were done, we would call it before going into committee of supply tomorrow, so that there might be an opportunity of having the bill introduced and given first reading, so that it would be available to hon. members over the week end for the purposes of debate on second reading on Monday. If there would be agreement to do this I would ask Your Honour to put the motion.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are quite agreeable to this proposal. Do I understand that the bill, if passed quickly tomorrow—which we would do, without debating the resolution—would be in our hands tomorrow?

Mr. Pickersgill: It is my understanding, sir, that the bill is—

Mr. Churchill: Printed?

Mr. Pickersgill: —printed. It might take a little time for distribution because it is rather voluminous. There will also be a report on supply which will be tabled at the beginning of the sitting tomorrow, which I believe contains the same details as the bill. But we are anxious to have all the documentation in the hands of hon. members for the debate on Monday.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I could say a word or two in connection with the suggestion of the house leader. I certainly concur with what he suggested. I assume that the bill will be available to us tomorrow, and not in the mail box on Saturday, after we have passed the resolution. Hon. members realize full well that this resolution embodies a discussion of financial expenditures made over the past year and it would be open to the committee dealing with the resolution to deal with it in an hour, or a day, or a month and ask a great many questions in connection with it.

The only qualification I would make to the agreement which has been made is that after second reading it does not necessarily follow—it may, but it does not necessarily follow—that we will go into committee and deal with the committee stage forthwith, because we may need to ask more questions and we may require some time in order to ascertain the detail which we would have ascertained at the resolution stage and which we will now deal with in committee of the whole following second reading.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) has just informed me that he will have ready for tabling in the morning—I have a proof copy now—the report on supply, which contains everything of substance that will appear in the bill. It is not in the form of a bill. I cannot say just how fast, following first reading, the bills will be produced, but they will be produced just as fast as it is possible for the printing bureau to print them. I will take every possible step to see they are distributed as quickly as possible. I think that really all the essential detail will be found in the report on supply, which I understand will be available for distribution immediately it is tabled at 11 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. Nowlan: I quite appreciate the statement of the house leader. I think that report will probably contain most of the details, if not all of them. As long as we have an understanding that we do not have to go through committee of the whole immediately following second reading.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think it would also be clearly understood that if the house is good enough to facilitate this proceeding tomorrow, when we do reach the committee stage, on the first clause of the bill there would be on the part of the government no disposition to restrict in any way any discussion which would otherwise have taken place at the resolution stage. The government has not the slightest desire to restrict debate; we are merely seeking to abbreviate the formal steps—

Mr. Nowlan: So are we.

Mr. Pickersgill: —for a purpose that I think all hon. gentlemen share. If that is so, Mr. Speaker, perhaps the motion could be put.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to approve certain expenditures authorized in respect of the fiscal year ended on March 31, 1963, including those provided for by the special warrants issued by the governor in council of February 8, 1963 (P.C. 1963-227) and March 4, 1963 (P.C. 1963-361) but not including the expenditures authorized by Appropriation Acts for that fiscal year; and to authorize the application of certain amounts in the accounts of the said fiscal year.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the house leader would give us a forecast of the business that will be before us tomorrow and such days as he can indicate for next week.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will be very happy to do that, sir. Tomorrow, once we have disposed of the committee stage, concerning which I understand there is a general disposition to regard as a formality preceding the appropriation bill, and had the first reading of the bill, we will take the estimates of the Department of Transport and, I pray, dispose of them during the day. On Monday it is proposed to take, as the first item of business, the appropriation bill which will be given first reading tomorrow and to proceed with it until it has been disposed of, and then to resume the debate on the economic council.

We would, of course, be very happy if both these measures could be disposed of on Monday. But in any event I think it would be the intention of the government to begin on Tuesday the budget resolutions, starting with the resolution respecting the customs tariff. What will be done on subsequent days of the week, I am not able to forecast sufficiently accurately at the moment to make it worth while communicating to the house.

It being nine minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, July 12, 1963

The house met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. RAPP—ADVICE TO MEMBERS BY LAW BRANCH OFFICIALS

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): I am rising on a question of privilege affecting all hon. members of this house. Yesterday Your Honour ruled out of order two private members' bills, giving as a reason that they were money bills. One hon. member appealed your ruling and a division followed in which your ruling was upheld.

Your Honour will recall that on a previous occasion you ruled one of my own bills out of order for a similar reason, as being a money bill. At that time I accepted your decision—reluctantly, nevertheless gracefully. That is one reason I voted yesterday to uphold your ruling. The other is that I felt politically bound—and this would not concern Your Honour—not to support the appeal.

My point of privilege is that it came to the attention of hon. members that the assistance which private members receive from some officials of the law branch who help draft these bills seems to be at variance with the opinion of other law branch officials who communicate with Your Honour on these matters. This is a point which affects all hon. members and unless these difficulties are resolved to the satisfaction of all, private members' bills will eventually disappear from the order paper, which in the opinion of many hon. members would be a tragedy, to say the least.

MR. KNOWLES—OPINION OF DEPUTY ATTORNEY GENERAL ON VALIDITY OF CERTAIN APPOINTMENTS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday the Prime Minister tabled a document which is identified as sessional paper No. 39B. It contains an opinion given by the deputy attorney general on the validity of certain arrangements made for appointing special advisers to the Minister of Finance.

My point of privilege can be very succinctly stated. In addition to the affront which I believe was already given to parliament by the manner in which these men were appointed, the matter is now compounded by our being asked to accept as approval of these appointments a document which in itself admits there were no provisions for the arrangements which were made, but that it can be "construed" that there was proper authority.

This opinion of Mr. Driedger, which was presented to the house by the Prime Minister, who therefore has to take responsibility for it, says quite clearly that there are two subsections of the government contracts regulations under which these appointments might have been made, but that they cannot be made under either of those subsections. One of these subsections sets out the classes of contracts which can be made—transportation, snow removal, garbage removal, and that kind of thing—and Mr. Driedger says that the contracts in question do not come within any of those categories. The other subsection has to do with contracts which do not exceed a certain amount of money. Mr. Driedger says there is no guarantee that they will not exceed that amount, and therefore they do not come under that subsection.

Having removed these arrangements from any provision set out in the government contracts regulations, he says:

> Although the government contracts regulations do not express in positive terms that a contract for services under which more than $1,000 is payable may be entered into with the approval of treasury board, they have been construed as authorizing a contracting authority to enter into such a contract with the approval of the treasury board—

My point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is that what we now have is precisely what we had last June. We have the government construing that the Financial Administration Act or regulations made under it gives them authority to do something which the act itself says cannot be done. The Financial Administration Act says that no appointments by the treasury board can be made under it. The government contracts regulations themselves say that no appointments can be made under them. But the government, by construing that it has such authority, is doing something which I submit is contrary to the provisions of the act and the regulations made thereunder. Last year hon. members who are now in office strongly objected to the action of the then government in construing that it had the right under the Financial Administration Act to bring in the surcharge order. Now the same hon. members are doing the same thing, construing that they have a right which the deputy attorney general says is not specifically set out.

I think this matter calls for very serious consideration by parliament, because the relations between the executive and parliament depend upon the government paying attention to the letter of statutes, and not governing by construing.

TABLING OF REPORT ON SUPPLY FOR FISCAL YEAR 1962-63

Mr. E. J. Benson (Kingston): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) I beg leave to table in English and in French copies of a report on supply for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963. This report, Mr. Speaker, relates to the resolution which stands on the order paper as government order No. 19. Its purpose is to furnish the house with detailed information necessary for informed discussion and consideration of that resolution and/or the bill which will follow. I am informed that copies of this report will be in hon. members' letter boxes within ten minutes of tabling.

ANNUAL VACATIONS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE THREE WEEKS HOLIDAYS AFTER FIVE YEARS SERVICE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-85, to amend the Annual Vacations Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to make still further improvement in the Annual Vacations Act. The bill provides that employees who have had five years of employment shall thereafter be entitled each year to three weeks vacation with pay.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

AUTHORIZATION FOR RECONSTRUCTION OF RAILWAY LINE IN OTTAWA

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether, with the unanimous consent of the house, I could revert to motions to make an announcement.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the house that the government has authorized the national capital commission to proceed with arrangements for reconstructing that part of the Prescott subdivision of the C.P.R. from where it crosses the Rideau river to approximately Somerset street in the city of Ottawa. It is estimated that the reconstruction of the railway line will cost between $3½ and $4 million.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that hon. members of the house will be pleased to know that the new railway grade will be depressed and carried under the Rideau canal in a tunnel and underneath Carling avenue and Gladstone avenue, returning to the present grade at about Somerset street. It is hoped that arrangements can be made for construction to start this autumn and thus provide winter employment, as it will continue throughout the winter months.

EXEMPTION OF MUNICIPALITIES FROM SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister arising out of remarks made on television by Mr. Ackerley, president of the Canadian federation of mayors and municipalities, in which he said that the request of that organization to have the sales tax removed on the purchase of building materials by municipalities got a warm reception from the government. Is it the intention of the government to exempt municipalities from the sales tax on building materials?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not hear the remarks to which my hon. friend refers. I will try to get a copy of them and study them; then I will be in a position to answer the question.

EXEMPTION OF PUBLIC LIBRARIES FROM SALES TAX

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jack A. Irvine (London): I should have liked to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Since he is absent perhaps I might direct it to the Secretary of State. Is it the intention of the minister to include public libraries in the list of exemptions from the 11 per cent tax, in line with other educational institutions.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Since that question is obviously out of order it would be improper for me to answer it.

POSSIBLE IMPOSITION OF FEDERAL GASOLINE TAX

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the minister of northern affairs, speaking in Radium Junction, British Columbia yesterday was enunciating government policy. The article in the Globe and Mail says that the possibility of a new federal tax on gasoline was raised here yesterday by the minister. Is that government policy? Is it the intention of the government to bring about an additional gasoline tax in order to expand highway policy?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman has based his question on a press report. I would prefer, before replying, to discuss with the minister what he said and hear from the minister about it. Even according to the press report, Mr. Speaker, the minister merely said that if further assistance is to be given by the federal government to highways, to transportation, or matters of that kind, further taxation and further revenues will be required.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When he said that, was that a statement of government policy?

Mr. Pearson: Whenever government policy on this matter is decided it will be announced in the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is what we want to know. Why outside?

Mr. Martineau: Why was government policy not announced at this time?

Mr. Pearson: Because it is not a statement of government policy, and my right hon. friend knows from experience, when he was on this side of the house, that many speeches were made by members of the government of that day indicating what the government might do in certain circumstances.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, is this another portion of the budget by degrees and by sections?

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, while the Prime Minister is looking into this matter of the possibility of a federal gasoline tax, perhaps he would look into the thought, as announced by the minister of northern affairs that he would prefer to develop north and south roads rather than a second trans-Canada highway?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for New Westminster.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Mather: Mr. Speaker, the question I was about to ask has been very ably put forward by the leader of the official opposition.

INQUIRY AS TO REFUNDS OF SALES TAX ALREADY PAID

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Theogene Ricard (St. Hyacinthe-Bagot): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue and ask him what procedure should be taken by a citizen to recover excess tax paid to a retailer on the purchase of construction material between June 14 and July 8?

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): If I understood the question correctly, it would be strictly a matter for arrangement between the retailer and his customer.

Mr. Ricard: Does this mean the government has no procedure for helping the fellow who has been overtaxed?

Mr. Garland: Lest there be any wrong impression left here, may I point out that I answered this question three times on Tuesday.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to hon. members that this type of question is better answered during the discussion on the budget resolutions.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

MUNICIPAL LOAN LEGISLATION WITHOUT CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to ask the Prime Minister.

Will the Prime Minister answer the charge made against him by Mr. Jean Lesage to the effect that he has broken one of his promises in introducing in the House of Commons, without consulting the provinces, the plan for a municipal loans fund?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the letter to which my hon. friend refers was received in my office about an hour and a half ago, though I am familar with its contents, of course, because they have already appeared in the press. I would be very glad indeed to table the letter, except that there has not been time to translate it into English, the other official language of the country. When that is done I will be very glad to table the letter. I think the text of the letter will not justify the actual words used by the hon. member in reference to that part of it which he has mentioned. Naturally this letter from the prime minister of Quebec will have to be replied to.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question. Since the Prime Minister seems to have replied in the affirmative, am I to understand that the purpose is to refer to the conference to be held in Halifax this fall the study of capital assistance in the form of loans to municipalities?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I hope to be able to make a statement on this matter on Monday, but meanwhile I can say that the legislation in question in the form in which it is drafted is within federal jurisdiction though it will recognize, of course, the rights of the provinces in this matter. It is obvious that the success of such legislation will depend on the co-operation that is received from provincial governments. In the light of circumstances that have now developed it is obviously desirable, I think, to have a conference to see whether this co-operation will be forthcoming.

We propose to try to arrange such a conference without delay, Mr. Speaker, so that the bill, which is concerned primarily with employment, can be proceeded with at the earliest possible date.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): May I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if the Prime Minister is considering a face to face conference of his own, separate from the other provincial premiers, with Mr. Lesage in order to facilitate progress on this legislation.

Mr. Pearson: The consultation to which I have referred will, of course, include all provincial premiers; at least I hope it will.

Yesterday, in answer to a question, I said that to my knowledge no observations had been received from any other leader of a provincial government except the premier of Quebec. I found on returning to my office that there had been a letter received from the premier of Manitoba indicating that in his view it would be desirable to have consultation on this matter. Before the resolution was introduced, after the house met but before any legislation had been introduced, there was a communication from the premier of Saskatchewan indicating that he had heard such legislation might be introduced and expressing his interest and support in the principles embodied in it, as he had heard them described.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does he intend to suspend also the study of the bill providing for the establishment of an economic council of Canada, in order to submit it first to the provinces and take advantage of the conference he has announced?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Certainly not, Mr. Speaker, any more than the previous government had any such intention when it proposed to introduce such a bill.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

BAGOTVILLE, QUE.—STORAGE OF NUCLEAR ARMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister tell us if, at the present time, nuclear warheads are stored at the military airport in Bagotville or if commitments have been made to do so soon?

(Text):

STATEMENT BY CHIEF OF NAVAL STAFF RESPECTING FRIGATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Yesterday the minister said he was giving consideration to the statement made by the chief of the naval staff, Admiral Rayner, to the effect that general purpose frigates were necessary to the Canadian navy. Could the minister say today whether he is in agreement with that statement?

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Martineau: No answer.

Mr. Pugh: No answer from the minister; no knowledge.

Mr. Pearson: It is against the rules.

[Later:]

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister this question. Does he consider that subjects which are being discussed by the defence committee should not be the subject matter of questions here in the House of Commons?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is not what I consider; it is whether or not it is within the rules. It is my understanding that the rules do not permit of this.

ALLEGED DENIAL BY MINISTER OF INFORMATION PUBLISHED ELSEWHERE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence relating to an answer he gave to the house yesterday in which he equated the word "approximate" with round figures and the word "estimate" with accurate figures.

I should like to ask him whether he accepts as an authority the Oxford dictionary which says that "estimate", the noun, means an approximate judgment of numbers or amount. If he does—and I think the house as a whole accepts that definition as authoritative—I then say once again, speaking on a question of privilege, that the minister misled the house in the written answers he gave to the written questions put forward by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON PROPOSED CHANGES IN TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister which is prompted by a flood of telegrams, telephone calls and interviews. My question is based on clause 11 of the agreement between Canada and British Columbia respecting the Columbia river.

In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has informed President Kennedy of certain changes desired by Canada in the Columbia river treaty, and that the government of British Columbia has already been informed of the federal government's wishes in this respect, will the Prime Minister take the Canadian people into his confidence in respect of these proposed changes by informing this house of them?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Negotiations are about to begin between the two governments on this matter, Mr. Speaker. The United States government, the President and other members of that government, have been informed of certain matters as an indication of the kind of change required. This was done to find out whether it would be worth while proceeding with the negotiations. Under the circumstances, to make public in advance the manner in which the treaty must be changed would certainly not be conducive to the success of the negotiations.

Mr. Herridge: May I ask a supplementary question. Will the Prime Minister assure the house that the text of the agreement as printed in Hansard two days ago is correct?

Mr. Pearson: To the best of my knowledge it is correct or it would not have been tabled in this house.

[Later:]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I have a question supplemental to the one I asked the Prime Minister concerning the Columbia river treaty. I have been mulling over his answer, and I hope he does not mind my directing this question to him. As I understood it, the Prime Minister mentioned that he had indicated to President Kennedy the kind of changes Canada might require in the treaty, but of course he could not give details of these because of continuing negotiations. I understand that. But can he give the Canadian people some indication as to the kind of changes that are required, without going into detail?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, after mulling over the hon. gentleman's question I can say that the kind of changes we have in mind are such as to make the treaty a better one for Canada.

[Later:]

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): While we are mulling over the Columbia river treaty I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs whether he is still of the opinion that the words to which I drew his attention yesterday are as lucid as he suggested they were when he gave his answer.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I thank the hon. member for mentioning this. I do not think I shall withdraw anything I said about the lucidity of the agreement, but the hon. member directed my attention yesterday to a discrepancy between the Hansard report of the text and the document which was tabled.

In order to correct what has been drawn to my attention as being a mistake in Hansard I would ask that this correction be made in the Hansard of July 10, at page 2059, in subparagraph (j) of section 3 of the agreement between Canada and British Columbia. The word "and" should have appeared in the fourth line of subparagraph (j) between the words "not do" and the words "so far"; that word "and" appeared in the signed original and in the copy of it which I tabled in the house for printing in Hansard. I thank the hon. member for bringing this mistake in Hansard to my attention.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PAKISTAN—REPORTED ATTACKS ON CANADIAN STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, last Friday in reply to a question put by the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere (Mr. Paul) concerning Canadian students who are now in Pakistan, I promised to inform the house of any possible development.

I have now received a report from our high commissioner in Pakistan, as well as a dispatch from Dr. Leddy, national president of the World University Service of Canada. These two gentlemen tell me that they have obtained the most formal assurance from academic authorities in Pakistan that Canadian students were beyond reproach in their behaviour in the course of their meetings with Pakistani students.

The statements in question were made by a small uninfluential group within the Pakistani student community which is in no way representative of the opinion of that country's academic circles.

TRANSPORT

SOULANGES CANAL—INQUIRY AS TO SALE TO QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister inform the house how the negotiations stand concerning the purchase of the Soulanges canal by the Quebec government?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is a question that should be placed on the order paper, but I have estimates coming up later today, and if the hon. member wants to put his question then it may be possible to answer it.

Mr. Pigeon: On the estimates?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

TRENT CANAL—REGULATIONS RESPECTING LOCKS AND BRIDGES

Mr. Fred F. Stenson (Peterborough): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has any change been made in the regulations regarding the opening of locks and bridges on the Trent canal in the last two weeks?

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): I would prefer to answer that question on my estimates. It is the kind of question which would be more appropriately dealt with at that time.

AGRICULTURE

SHEEP—REPORTED OUTBREAK OF SCRAPIE DISEASE IN ALBERTA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence I will direct it to the parliamentary secretary. In view of the outbreak of the scrapie disease in sheep flocks in the province of Alberta, is it the intention of the Department of Agriculture to order the destruction of those flocks and compensate their owners in order to protect other sheep producers in the province?

Mr. B. S. Beer (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to take notice of the hon. member's question and bring it to the attention of the minister.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I regret giving her such short notice of it, but my question is based on a report in the July 12 issue of the Winnipeg Free Press of an interview which the hon. lady gave Mr. Victor Mackie, that eminent member of the press gallery with encyclopedic knowledge and literary integrity, in which the hon. lady told him she had accepted a cigarette from a French diplomat, had taken one puff and suffered a consequent dizziness. In view of the general concern, conversation and consternation relating to this report, has the minister any information she can give the house, which is not a breach of security?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that my hon. friend suggests the condition to which he refers is not a permanent one so far as I am concerned, and I beg leave to undertake to him and the house that it will be the last time I will voluntarily subject myself to such a condition.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—DELAY IN UNIVERSITY TRAINING PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister of northern affairs, or in his absence the parliamentary secretary, or in his absence the acting minister. It is based on a report that the university training program in the Northwest Territories might be delayed. My question is, could not this program be carried out under the provisions of the five year financial agreement that was concluded with the Northwest Territories government last year? In view of the importance of education to the northern young people, this matter is one of some urgency.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, I will see that this question is drawn to the attention of the minister, who is expected back at the next sitting.

WATER RESOURCES

SUGGESTED DIVERSION OF COLUMBIA WATERS TO PRAIRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. O. Cooper (Rosetown-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs regarding the Columbia river project. Have any provisions been made for diverting any water of the Columbia river to the eastern slopes of the Rockies, for the benefit of the prairie provinces?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, provision is made for that in paragraph 1 of article 13 of the treaty.

TRADE

CUBA—STATEMENT AS TO GOVERNMENT POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Grey North asked me two questions about trade with Cuba. In the first he asked:

> Is it the policy of this government to promote increased trade with Cuba, similar to the approach made by the former Conservative administration?

I was not convinced in my own mind, Mr. Speaker, that the policy of the former government was as clear cut as that. However, let me outline the policy of the present government. This government prohibits the re-export to Cuba of goods of United States origin. Otherwise the government places no obstacles in the way of trade with Cuba in non-military and non-strategic goods.

The trade between Canada and Cuba has been running at about the same level as in the previous year. In the calendar year 1962 Canadian exports to Cuba were valued at $10.9 million, and imports from Cuba were valued at $2.8 million. Our most recent export figures indicate that during the first five months of 1963 Canadian exports were valued at $4.6 million. I think the house will be interested to know the composition of that export trade. It consists in the main of inedible tallow, infant and junior foods, agricultural chemicals, cured pork, veterinary medicines and dairy cattle.

The second question from the hon. member was:

> Now that fish rationing has ended in Cuba, will the government make an effort to sell more fish products to that country?

As hon. members know, in the past Cuba has been an import market for Canadian fish, taking up to 12 million lbs. annually. Unfortunately no sales have been made since 1962. This government is looking for opportunities to resume the sale of fish in the Cuban market.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the minister upon carrying on the policy of the former government. I want to ask him whether there is any thought—and I am sure there is not—of departing from the policy of refusing anything of a military nature or a defence requirement to that country.

Mr. Sharp: I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the Leader of the Opposition remembers certain statements made by my predecessors in office which caused some uncertainty about Canadian trade policy with respect to Cuba. But I shall not comment further on that. At the moment there is no intention of changing the policy with respect to trade with Cuba, but if any changes are made they will be announced when the decisions are made.

[Later:]

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce arising out of his answer of a few moments ago with regard to trade with Cuba. Can he tell us whether the government's hope of expanding this trade to its former level is to be implemented by the dispatch of a trade commission to Cuba.

Mr. Sharp: No, Mr. Speaker, there is no intention at present of appointing a trade commissioner to Cuba; but of course policy is always under review, and if such an appointment were made it would be announced in this house.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE IN DEALING WITH CUSTOMS TARIFF RESOLUTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State having to do with the business of the house. At adjournment time last night the Secretary of State indicated that on Tuesday our business would be the budget resolutions, and specifically he said we would be dealing with the resolutions coming under the heading of the customs tariff.

Since the resolutions under this heading include one regarding the surcharge order, will he tell us how it is going to be possible for the house to proceed with this item, in view of the rule of this house that we cannot deal with matters that are sub judice.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to give consideration to this matter, and I will ask my colleague the Minister of Justice to give consideration between now and Tuesday to the point raised by the hon. member, though at first blush I do not think there is in fact a problem at all.

Mr. Knowles: May I suggest to the Secretary of State that when he refers the matter to the Minister of Justice he draw his attention to citation 149 (c) of Beauchesne's fourth edition.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the hon. gentleman for his advice.

DIVORCE

PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED TO DEAL WITH PETITIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. H. A. Thomas (Middlesex West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Can he say what plans the government has to break the blockade in the processing of the hundreds of divorce applications now accumulated on the parliamentary agenda?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government, in consultation with other parties, is doing its best to arrange a satisfactory agreement which will permit of that blockade being broken.

[Mr. Sharp.]

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY AS TO LIST OF LAW FIRMS TO BE ENGAGED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to direct to the Minister of Justice, but in his absence I will direct it to the minister's parliamentary secretary and ask the hon. member whether his office has made any request for a restricted list of law firms to deal with his department's business.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to bring this question to the attention of the minister when he returns.

[Later:]

Mr. MacInnis: I should like to address a question to the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Justice in the absence of the minister. Has the hon. member's office made a request for a restricted list of law firms to deal with urgent business?

Mr. Macdonald: I will bring the question to the minister's attention.

FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

INQUIRY AS TO EXPENDITURES IN COMING YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I wish to ask the Minister of National Health and Welfare a question occasioned by reports I have heard that the government is planning to spend a greater portion of the $5 million statutory grant for fitness and amateur sport than was the case last year. I should like to ask the minister whether she has had any meeting with Mr. Farmer, head of the amateur fitness and sport group, and whether she has given any indication to that gentleman and his associates of the degree of approval which would be given to any planning program they might develop in the coming year.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): May I say to the hon. member that I have seen the chairman of the fitness advisory board, Mr. Farmer, though I have not discussed in detail any projects for the spending year which have not already been approved. All projects which have been submitted have been approved and in most cases cheques have been sent out. Applications are being received in connection with the next fiscal year. Normally these are referred to the council for discussion and recommendation to the minister. Afterward the project is taken to the cabinet for final decision. At the moment, though, there are none awaiting decision. It is too early in point of time for the next fiscal year's program.

Mr. More: Does the minister agree with the comment of the hon. member for Norfolk that this is a phony program?

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE STRIKE OF ARTISTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Maurice Sauve (Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Secretary of State could tell us if the negotiations that took place yesterday between the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the Canadian Federation of Authors and Artists were successful?

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I am happy to be able to say I was informed just before coming into the house that early this morning a settlement was reached satisfactory to both sides.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

ALDERSHOT, ONT.—POSSIBLE EXTENSION OF BUILDING PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. B. Morison (Wentworth): I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Can the minister assure the house and the 5,000 worried residents of Aldershot that Canadian National Railways will confine their building program in the Aldershot area to the proposed set-off yard.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): This is another question which could probably be answered more appropriately later on the estimates. In any event, I know this has been in the papers a great deal, and there is some justification for the view expressed by the hon. member that there are 5,000 worried residents. I may say, however, there are no plans for additional work other than the announced off-set tracks.

FINANCE

APPROVAL OF CERTAIN AUTHORIZED EXPENDITURES FOR FISCAL YEAR 1962-63

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (for the Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to approve certain expenditures authorized in respect of the fiscal year ended on March 31, 1963, including those provided for by the special warrants issued by the governor in council of February 8, 1963 (P.C. 1963-227) and March 4, 1963 (P.C. 1963-361) but not including the expenditures authorized by appropriation acts for that fiscal year; and to authorize the application of certain amounts in the accounts of the said fiscal year.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Pickersgill thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-86, for approving certain expenditures authorized for the public service, and the application of certain amounts in the accounts, for the financial year ended the 31st March, 1963.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall said bill be read a second time?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I wonder whether I might be permitted, in view of the point raised by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings last night, to explain that the bill has been printed in English and I think will be ready for distribution very shortly. I regret very much that because of its voluminous character the French edition will not be ready until Monday. I apologize for the delay but it is a very great burden of translation, and I assure hon. members that the bureau of translation has been doing its utmost to do it as expeditiously as possible.

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances we will accept the statement made by the Secretary of State but I should like to point out to him—

(Text):

I should like to point out to the Secretary of State that the same thing happens every day with Hansard. Moreover I receive many letters from various departments in Ottawa saying that the translation does not receive the care it should receive. I should like to point that out to the Secretary of State so that in the near future he will see that there are enough translators in that department.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can assure the hon. gentleman that if he will send me a list of competent translators I will transmit it at once to the civil service commission and ask them to expedite the appointments if the qualifications are met. I regret to say that we have not as many translators as we should like in the government service. This is a field in which we would be only too happy to make a lot more bilingual appointments—and I know I am expressing the view of the civil service commission in saying this—if we could find suitable candidates willing to come to Ottawa to accept these positions.

Mr. Gregoire: I am ready to add to my commission on bilingualism another commission replacing the civil service commission.

Mr. Pigeon: Might I point out to the Secretary of State that if they were paid well I am sure he would have no problems in finding bilingual men.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will convey that to the treasury board.

Mr. Gregoire: When are they going to translate Beauchesne?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a second time? Next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

DEPARTMENT OF TRANSPORT

1. Departmental administration—$3,388,600.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Chairman, while it is not my intention to make a lengthy statement on the first item, I think I should take a few minutes of the committee's time to deal with some matters. I believe those hon. members attending their first session would particularly appreciate a brief explanation of the extent of government activity in transportation, a field which I think all hon. members would agree is of decided importance to the economy of our country. It is quite possible that in doing so I may fail to mention certain items which hon. members will consider of major import. In many instances this may be because I have dealt already with the particular matter when answering a question during the session or in discussions with hon. members from the areas concerned.

The main estimates tabled by the Minister of Finance on May 29 contain a total of $231,038,000 to be voted for the needs of the Department of Transport. In addition there are certain statutory items and various sums to be voted for the several related agencies. These latter figures are readily available in a general summary set out in the blue book.

I think I should go through the main estimates first and content myself with remarks about them. The activities in our marine services are such that the standard of service rendered for shipping generally is being improved substantially and continuously year after year. Our shipping construction program is similar in size to that of last year. Strong support was received for the decision to provide eight high speed cutters to improve the marine search and rescue operations. By the end of July 1963 four will be in service, and all will be in operation by this fall. The department in this year's estimates is provided with $1,282,800 toward this construction.

Another large item relates to the new weatherships which will replace the existing obsolete ships in the manning of Pacific weather station "PAPA". Tenders have been called for the first vessel and construction will commence very soon. It is anticipated that three progress payments totalling $2,700,000 will be made by March 31, 1964. The department will be ready to contract for the second vessel by the fall of 1963 and the amount of $450,000 has been allowed in the estimates for the payment due on the signing of the contract.

Last year special mention was made of an unusual type of ship, namely an icebreaking cable repair vessel. The current estimates contain $4,021,000 for this ship, which is under construction at Canadian Vickers Limited, Montreal. A depot ship for the accommodation of stevedores for the off-loading of military and civil cargo at far northern sites was accepted last month. The Canadian coastguard ship Vercheres, built in 1901, has been replaced with a new vessel, the Canadian coastguard ship Montmagny completed last month. Contracts have been placed with Allied Builders Limited, Vancouver, for the construction of a tender for Prince Rupert and a work boat for the Mackenzie river.

Still on the subject of vessel construction, I might mention that $300,000 will be expended on the preparation of plans and specifications for northern supply ships, a small icebreaker for the lakehead, a vessel to replace the Saurel and Chesterfield, and an icebreaker for the Charlottetown agency. The design of the triple screw icebreaker, construction of which was approved in 1959, is practically complete and a contract will be let during the fiscal year, $750,000 having been provided to cover the payment due on signing the contract.

On the operational side the appropriation for the operation and maintenance of the coastguard fleet is up by over $1 million to a total of $21,680,000, and here again northern work is a big factor. A substantial amount of this is reimbursed to the government for northern supply work done for others. The program initiated some years back to modernize the marine agency depots is coming along quite well, and we contemplate a further outlay of some $2.4 million this year.

Expenditures for administration, capital construction and equipment for the marine works program, which covers marine aids to navigation such as light stations, fog signals, buoys, lightships and the supporting marine agencies, will involve an outlay of some $11,940,000. The total number of marine aids maintained by the department under this program is about 15,000.

For administration and further development of secondary canals the estimates provide $4,351,000. Included in this is some $400,000 for a start on the new lock on the Trent canal at Swift Rapids and the initial planning for the new lock required at Big Chute. Two hundred thousand dollars each is provided in connection with the new lock under construction at Fenelon Falls and for the restoration of a dam at Campbellford, and $175,000 is included for the rehabilitation of the Peterborough lift lock.

During the past year the departmental officials have devoted considerable thought and effort toward reducing the hazard involved in the operation of small pleasure craft, which I am sorry to say seems to be increasing because of the increase each year in the numbers of these small craft on our inland waters. Last year the department introduced a scheme requiring pleasure craft in certain categories to fit plates bearing recommended load and horsepower limitations. While the limitations set out on the plates are recommendations only, and that is necessary because of the various conditions under which boats operate, it is felt that such guidance does restrain many inexperienced operators from excessive loading and powering, and this is particularly true when they are buying boats and engines separately. It is in this field where, regrettably, there have been many tragic drownings on our waterways.

Mr. Winkler: Could I ask the minister a question? Does he have any figures as to the numbers of licences now issued for this type of boat?

Mr. McIlraith: When we come to the detailed items I will give what information I can. There is other supplementary information on the subject which can appropriately be given at that time. The issuing of these plates is a large effort in view of the tremendous number of small boats involved, and I must say that the boating public generally and the industry concerned are giving every reasonable co-operation to the department.

Small boat safety and small boat regulations are, as I have indicated, an increasing problem, particularly with regard to demands for licensing of boat operators and more extensive licensing of boats. I have had in mind and have given some thought, attention and study to possible courses of action to deal with this situation which will require both further legislation on the part of the federal government and an approach involving the co-operation of the provinces in administration. I can perhaps deal with that aspect of the matter more appropriately when the expected legislation is before the house.

With regard to coasting vessels, in order that coasting vessels in Newfoundland may be drydocked for steamship inspection purposes the department is providing a slipway at Clarenville. It is hoped that this haul-out facility will go into operation in the spring of 1964. Its construction is the first phase of a project to provide a marine haul-out, transfer system and fitting out wharf at Clarenville, the total cost of which is estimated to be $549,000.

I should also like to speak briefly on the air services appropriations which cover the broad fields of civil aviation, telecommunications and meteorology, both in regard to capital programs and operating and maintenance programs. In total these votes represent approximately $135 million in the 1963-64 fiscal year.

The largest single appropriation once again is that contained in vote 155 entitled "Construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment" with respect to national airports. While the vote is slightly over $38 million, this figure represents a decrease from the level of recent years. The terminal building program for international airports undertaken to meet the heavy traffic demands generated by growing acceptance of air travel is nearing completion and this, together with the fact that the large runway pavement construction program associated with the introduction of turboprop and jet aircraft at major airports has passed its peak, has tended to effect the reduction of this vote.

While new international terminals such as the imposing buildings under construction at Toronto, Winnipeg and Edmonton will be coming into operation this year, several trunk and feeder terminals at locations such as Fredericton, London, Sault Ste. Marie, the lakehead and Whitehorse are still in various stages of planning and construction and have been provided for in the vote.

Since the acquisition of the city of Vancouver's interest in the Vancouver international airport, planning for the international terminal has been advancing and action has already been taken on preparation of plans as well as on preliminary site development. Because of both the requirement for preloading the area due to the nature of the area and subsequent time for settlement and the complexities of planning an up to date international terminal, it will probably be next year before tenders are called on the terminal building itself.

The current year's estimates represent the beginning of a trend in air services toward gradually decreasing capital expenditures on airport facilities. Offsetting this, of course, is the gradual increase in operation costs which it is expected will continue as public demands for expanding services continue to be satisfied in the aviation field. However, this needs to be measured against the airport revenue situation. Over the past three years airport revenues have increased from $9.1 million in the fiscal year 1959-60 to $15.6 million for the fiscal year 1962-63. While this increase has not been at a uniform rate, we expect this general trend to continue in future years.

Now, while I have indicated that capital expenditures for airport facilities will decline over the next several years, such a trend does not hold in the field of radio aids to air and marine navigation. Here, due to the continuing increase in the number, size and speed of aircraft, provision is being made for improvement in the efficiency and safety standards of the services. Procedures and equipment for handling traffic are continuing to become more complex, and while the level of the 1963-64 expenditures might indicate a stable condition, it is anticipated that significant increases may have to occur in the years immediately ahead if our facilities are to be adequate for the growing traffic.

There is also provision in vote 180 for the department to enter the field of international space communication. This activity will be in the area of operational experimentation and testing, by provision of a ground station to participate in international communication by satellites. The objectives are to assist our common communications carrier industry engaged in international communication and the development of the use of this new media, and at the same time to assist in focusing the attention of our communications manufacturing industry on this new field.

In the field of meteorology, construction or acquisition of buildings, works, land and equipment, vote 200, the main projects are the continuation of the program to instal transmissometers and ceilometers at our international airports to provide information on landing conditions during marginal weather. Also contained in this vote are funds for the procurement and installation of weather radar at Halifax, Toronto, Winnipeg and Edmonton. In the field of upper air soundings, funds have been included to initiate a program to equip the upper air stations with new equipment capable of measuring meteorological conditions up to 100,000 feet.

In addition to the estimates of my department I am submitting those of related agencies or bodies including, the national harbours board, a statutory crown corporation which administers the principle deep sea Canadian harbours. The main and supplementary estimates of the board for 1963-64 amount to some $18 million, and the money will go toward the construction or reconstruction of transit sheds, wharves, grain elevator systems and other works at certain ports.

As the national harbours handle the bulk of Canada's overseas trade, which I think again all hon. members will agree is of vital concern to the national economy, the development and maintenance of these ports has kept and must keep pace with traffic and shipping demands. As Canadian ports compete for foreign cargoes with ports in the United States, it is especially important that facilities and services provided at Canadian ports be kept adequate, efficient and economical to use. In its efforts to remain competitive the national harbours board works closely with other Canadian transportation interests such as the railways, trucking companies and shipping lines. Close liaison is also maintained with exporters, importers and domestic shippers, and the board consults and co-operates with the Department of Trade and Commerce in the promotion of direct trade between Canada and foreign countries.

The St. Lawrence seaway authority advises me that the task of preparing the 1964 report to government on the sufficiency of tolls to meet its statutory obligations is proceeding as planned in full co-operation with the United States seaway development corporation. In so far as operations for the 1963 navigation season are concerned, the authority reports that for the months of April, May and June tonnage has increased by 1,250,000 tons over the same period of 1962. In the same three month period revenues have increased over those of 1962 by some $625,000 I may say at the moment there is considerable study, at a very active stage I might add, being given to the question of twinning the locks of the Welland canal.

The Canadian maritime commission is responsible for the capital subsidies for the construction of commercial and fishing vessels. During 1962-63 funds totalling $22.5 million were paid out in respect of construction of 110 ships. Of these 94 were completions and 16 were in various stages of completion. The aggregate value of ship construction involved in the subsidies was approximately $79,835,000. For the fiscal year 1963-64 capital subsidies for this purpose in both the main and supplementary estimates will total $30 million.

I have not had the responsibility of office long enough to complete a full review of major aspects of transportation policy, but I have been sufficiently long in office to ascertain the major matters which in my opinion need prompt attention, and to initiate studies of these. Paramount, of course, and I think all hon. members will agree, is the matter of legislation affecting the railways of Canada in order to eliminate the present massive temporary subsidies and to provide a new framework for future rationalization to meet the increasing competition of other modes of transport. I have been engaged in discussions with a great many interested groups, including representatives from some of the provinces very directly concerned, on the whole subject of proposed legislation arising out of the MacPherson royal commission report on transportation. Much work on this subject had been done by my immediate predecessor in office, the hon. member for Three Rivers, and I have been carrying that on from the point where I believe he left off.

I am quite sure he will understand when I say that, while I have been carrying on from the point where he left off, my continuation of this study and some of the things I found in the course of this study so far will undoubtedly lead to some adjustment in the proposals that were to be brought before parliament. I would not want him to believe that the continuation of the studies, which has been taking a great deal of my time, would merely result in the presentation of the legislation that he had been preparing. There are some major points on which further study has revealed the need for a somewhat different approach, and I hope he will appreciate that.

I expect to have this proposed legislation ready for submission to the house later in the session. I hope the program of the house will be such that at that time it can be dealt with, because I believe it to be of major importance to the economy of this country. I believe that to be a view which is shared by a great many hon. members on both sides of the house.

I have also come to the conclusion that a careful review of major aviation policy as it affects our scheduled air services, and carriers providing these services, is necessary. I believe that some clarification of the relationships and future role is essential to meet the rapidly changing technical and economic circumstances of aviation, and the highly competitive world of international aviation. What this may involve I am not prepared to say in any firm way until the review has been fully completed, but some fairly substantial changes may be needed to protect our national and international position and prevent us from weakening and dissipating our efforts.

As for the field of shipping and shipbuilding, I believe the program initiated by my predecessor has produced useful results, particularly for the shipbuilding industry and other related sectors. I will keep this program under continuing review. Apart from this I have little to add at present, other than to note that various representations, suggesting the need for something more in the way of a shipping policy, all seem to involve additional government subsidies. I can say quite frankly this is not an easy or attractive prospect, and I am reminded that the MacPherson royal commission on transportation stressed in general the need to allow each mode of transport to compete with other modes without subsidizing one at the expense of another.

I have also commenced, with my departmental officials, a review of the general machinery of transportation under the Minister of Transport. I subscribe to the view expressed, I believe, by the MacPherson royal commission and touched on by the Glassco royal commission that this country can best be served by an over-all, integrated approach to transportation. At this stage I am inclined to feel that improved arrangements for coordination of policy, as among the various agencies outside the department which report to me, may be desirable, but I have not yet decided how best this can be achieved. This is another subject that is getting quite active attention at the moment, and I hope to make some changes in this regard in the relatively near future. When I say that I mean within a very few months. It is one of the matters I consider of utmost importance.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this brief and general review will simplify and expedite consideration of the estimates which I respectfully submit to the committee for its consideration and approval.

Before concluding my remarks I must repeat something I said on one occasion on orders of the day. While I do not find orders of the day disagreeable, there are times when I find one has to over-abbreviate replies, and one is not able to explain the subject in quite the way one would wish. However, when I was asked my very first question as minister I took the opportunity to express to the former minister of transport my thanks for the courtesy he showed me on the day I was sworn in as minister. It is perhaps a very small thing, but under our processes of government it is one which I regard as very important, and I want to have it on record when transport matters are being considered here. I therefore repeat my acknowledgment of that courtesy.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, my first words are of congratulation to the minister on presenting the estimates of the Department of Transport for the first time, and on his appointment as head of that extremely interesting department. I thank him personally for the kind words he expressed about me, and I can assure him that I am quite convinced, when the government changes again, I shall receive the same treatment from him. Anyway I thank him very much for the sincerity of his expressions.

Transportation is definitely a major industry in a country of the size and importance of Canada, even more so than in any other country in the world. Transportation as an industry in itself is of tremendous importance for the services it is called upon to render to the population of Canada, and it is even more important for the tremendous role it plays in the development of trade and industry in a country which lives on external trade. In fact transportation is one of the key factors in the position of Canada as a major exporter.

The government headed by the present right hon. Leader of the Opposition was very conscious of this importance of transportation, and I am sure any independent observer would agree that during the last five years great things were accomplished by the Department of Transport and by the previous government in matters of transportation. When saying that I want to pay tribute to the staff of the department for their wonderful devotion during my term as head of the department. The Department of Transport is a huge department and a modern one. Many things happen in transport, and there is a lot of work for any minister; but during the period I was in charge I always had the good fortune of being able to rely on devoted public servants.

I do not want to make a complete review of everything accomplished by the previous government in transportation matters during the last five years, but I do wish to deal with some of the major problems our administration was faced with and the solutions that we brought forward for the benefit of the Canadian people. During those years Canada took great strides forward in shipping, aviation and railways. Today our position is sound because the previous government dealt with many major problems. However, in transportation things change so rapidly that new problems are created every day. We might not have settled all the problems, but we certainly attacked them with vigour and determination.

I should like to deal with these three fields separately, and first I shall discuss shipping. At the end of the second world war we had 10,000 Canadians employed on deep sea ships and about 18,000 others on coastal vessels and lakers. During the term of office of the government of our predecessors, Canada's deep sea fleet was allowed to disappear completely, and the same fate was facing our lake and coastal fleets on the St. Lawrence with the opening of the St. Lawrence seaway. Our lakes fleet was protected by the barrier of small canals between the great lakes and the St. Lawrence river, but unfortunately it was composed of old ships which were at a disadvantage, compared with foreign ships, immediately the seaway was opened. In addition, replacements were very difficult to secure owing to the fact that the wages we pay in Canadian shipyards do not compare with wages paid in Europe or Japan. As far as our fishing fleet was concerned, it was also in a most inferior position vis-à-vis European fishermen, starting with Russia. We have probably the best fishermen in the world, but they were handicapped by the fact that they were manning ships which were too old or too small and which could not go far enough out to sea in order to catch the fish. Our fishermen were in the sad position of having to observe huge fleets of modern vessels coming from across the Atlantic to fish right off our shores.

The previous government decided to attack this problem, and in attacking it we took into account the position of our shipyards. We all know the tremendous effort the shipyards of Canada were called upon to make during the war. They expanded at that time, but unfortunately around 1957 the shipyards were facing tremendous problems. All that was left to them were direct government contracts. That was the situation in 1957 when our government took office. We decided to take action. We set up a subsidy policy that has given Canada good, fast, modern ships. This policy also brought about full activity in our large shipyards. At the present time our fleet of lakers is a first class one and I think we can face the competition of foreign vessels in this area.

As far as fishing trawlers are concerned, the new subsidy has meant a great deal to maritimers and the fishermen of our east coast. At the present time all our small shipyards are busy building fishing trawlers. The federal government pays a subsidy of 50 per cent in connection with this shipbuilding. We have given the tools to our Canadian fishermen to go out and compete with the fishing fleets of the world. Indications are that our fishermen are really increasing their fleet and the program is working extremely well, thanks also to the co-operation of provincial governments in many cases.

Another problem facing our shipping was that of the coastal shipping treaty we had with other members of the commonwealth. Of course the government hesitated before making a decision in this regard. We carried on an investigation of the situation and discovered that this commonwealth treaty did not mean anything today compared with what it meant in 1930 or 1932. One could see some strange situations. You had a group of United States financiers forming a small company in Nassau, with only a telephone and a girl to operate the telephone. A ship was registered in Nassau, the ship was built in Japan, owned in United States, manned by Italian officers and a Chinese crew, and plying Canadian inland waters because it was a commonwealth ship.

This situation was becoming absolutely impossible, and for that reason we decided to take action. We first extended the inland waters of Canada to include such harbours as Seven Islands and Havre St. Pierre, where our great steel mining industry carries on its activities. We notified Great Britain of our intention to withdraw from the treaty and asked her to contact the other commonwealth signatories to the treaty and obtain their agreement to this action. This enabled us to withdraw from the treaty and restrict our inland waters from Havre St. Pierre to the end of the lakes to Canadian flag ships. I think this measure will help our coastal fleet and will assist shipping carried out on the St. Lawrence river and the great lakes. Our action in this regard has produced a great deal of activity in the Canadian shipping world.

Of course it does not settle the matter of the deep sea fleet, but I can assure the house that before the election we were working on some very interesting plans to try to deal with this problem. Canada has a very good seagoing tradition. During the war we had a very large deep sea fleet. I think it is very important for a country which is an exporter, such as Canada, to have a certain number of deep sea ships. Let us not forget that the transportation of our goods to the countries to which we export is a very important factor, and we have a foreign exchange deficit of between $100 million and $150 million in transportation itself. Let us not forget also that the millions of bushels of wheat exported from western Canada to China were all carried in foreign ships. Therefore I hope my hon. friend the Minister of Transport will study this matter and find a solution. We have assured the necessary protection to our coastal, lakes and fishing fleets. I think the next step is to deal with the problem of the deep sea fleet.

Mr. Chairman, I would now like to turn to another field of interest in transportation. I refer to the field of aviation. Aviation in a country such as Canada is a natural. During the five years we were in power we pushed with determination our airport building projects, not only to keep up with the present needs but also to plan for 10 or 12 years in advance. As a result we have in the main cities of Canada large, functional and modern terminals which compare advantageously with those of any country in the world. One has only to see Montreal airport on a Friday night, for instance, to realize that this magnificent air terminal was needed. Another interesting point is that the Montreal airport, even though it is a huge and very modern building which cost a great deal of money, is a paying proposition for Canada. I am sure that as aviation develops all these investments would prove to have been good investments. We have pushed very hard for Toronto to make progress in regard to Malton international airport. I had hoped that this matter might be terminated by last June, but my information is that it will be some time in the fall. It is going to be an important addition to the Toronto area and will provide much needed accommodation for the public.

After the war our regional carriers were in a very sound position due partly to the very advantageous D.E.W. line contracts. These contracts represented many millions of dollars. They were awarded every year, and practically all our regional carriers made progress as a result of these contracts. However, the contracts came to an end and the position of the regional carriers became extremely difficult. We asked the air transport board to make a complete review of all the permits, routes and schedules of the regional carriers. This important inquiry was held across Canada with sittings in all the major cities which had a special interest in aviation. After this review the pattern was revised and special areas were allocated to each of our regional carriers. This new scheme has been in operation for a few months now, and the picture is very encouraging. The new scheme gives efficient service to the population and I think that must always be the key purpose of these enterprises.

We had a difficulty in connection with the milk run. As Your Honour knows, Trans-Canada Air Lines wanted to withdraw from the operation of this run. It was, of course, a deficit operation, but it was one of extreme importance to the population of western Canada. We were faced with the problem. T.C.A. wanted to get out of this route because they had to use DC-3's and they had only two of them; it was an expensive proposition for them to maintain anything but turboprops or pure jets in their fleet. We arranged for the transfer of this route to Transair, and I am informed that the service now is very good and that the population is satisfied with the service it gets in this area.

As hon. members know, we have two major air lines in Canada, one government owned and the other a private corporation. Our government tried, I think with success, to achieve a proper balance between the two. It was not always easy. Both air lines have very aggressive management which is essential in a field such as international aviation. During those five years we witnessed the advent of the large pure jet carriers of the DC-8 type. These huge carriers with their extraordinary capacity, tremendous speed and range, and especially their amazing technical perfection, really revolutionized aviation. But due to the high cost of these planes both air lines faced a period of heavy deficits. Fortunately these deficits are of a temporary nature and already they have nearly disappeared. They will be wiped out completely next year.

I should like to refer to one problem, in particular, which we had to face, the question of the development of the T.C.A. overhaul base in Winnipeg. As hon. members may recall, Trans-Canada Air Lines had decided that after the last Viscount had been overhauled in Winnipeg facilities there would have to close and the overhaul of both turboprop and pure jet planes would be carried out in Montreal. This decision had, of course, to be taken by T.C.A. at the time the $30 million base in Montreal was approved by the previous government. According to the president of T.C.A., this is when the decision was taken. However, thanks to the intervention of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre and other hon. members from Manitoba the government to which I had the honour to belong made a very full inquiry at cabinet level at meetings with representatives of the provincial government, various interested municipalities, chambers of commerce and so on. We got from T.C.A. an undertaking to submit the whole matter anew to a firm of industrial consultants specializing in aviation so that a fresh study of the whole situation could be made. That was the position when we left office. I understand the new government is awaiting this report from the firm of consultants.

[Mr. Balcer.]

There is a further point I wish to raise. As you know, Mr. Chairman, Trans-Canada Air Lines has unfortunately never bought a plane built in Canada since the North Star. Now T.C.A. has to buy about 50 short to medium range pure jets. The previous government got from T.C.A. a commitment to obtain the approval of the government before it placed at least the final order for these planes. The purpose was to ensure that a complete investigation of all the possibilities of building the major percentage of the components of such planes in Canadian aircraft factories should be undertaken.

The results were most encouraging. All three possible suppliers of these aircraft have been negotiating with our aircraft industry and proposals, I am told, vary between 60 per cent and 100 per cent Canadian content. I think this is a most interesting and encouraging development, and one from which the Canadian people and in particular the Canadian aircraft industry will derive considerable benefit.

Mr. McIlraith: Would the hon. member permit a question? Can he provide some documentation or directives to this company setting out that policy? I have been unable to find any on that subject, though I have looked carefully.

Mr. Balcer: I know there was a cabinet conclusion to that effect. I recall that I myself transmitted the decision of the cabinet to the president of Trans-Canada Air Lines. It is, I am sure, recorded in the cabinet minutes. In addition it was, I am sure, agreed in writing by the president of Trans-Canada Air Lines that he intended to do this. I think it is an important and encouraging development when we consider that this involves contracts in the range of $250 million.

I should like to deal briefly now with the subject of railways. As the minister has said, one of the most important steps we took as an administration was the establishment of the MacPherson commission. When we took office Canadian National Railways were faced with huge deficits. Such deficits are most depressing for both management and employees. During our term of office we witnessed some very thorny labour relations problems in both Canadian railways. The men understandably wanted to get pay adjustments which they considered essential in view of the cost of living and the wages paid to employees in similar industries. Management was faced with the alternatives of a still larger deficit or higher freight rates. The government felt there were clear limits to freight rate increases on account of their effect on Canadian producers and manufacturers. Our competitive position in the world markets could be jeopardized by any major freight rates increase. These freight rates are of the utmost importance, especially in the western provinces and in the maritimes.

Conscious of this deep-rooted problem, the government instituted the MacPherson commission with very precise terms of reference. This commission did a tremendous amount of work and produced a most thorough report containing a new philosophy and a wide, sweeping approach to the railway problem in Canada. As soon as it was in possession of this report the previous government set to work on the necessary legislation. Needless to say I agree with the minister that the preparation of this legislation was a tremendous job, and just prior to the last election our legislation was practically ready. I should have liked to see our government bring this legislation before the house because of the very hard work that has been done by some of my colleagues. I am sure the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings would agree with that. Much work was done by our cabinet committee on this matter and, of course by responsible officials. It was a very complicated piece of legislation embracing a vast field, with a tremendous impact on railway transportation in Canada.

I am very pleased to hear from the minister that this legislation is coming soon, and will probably be considered this year. I think it is a much needed step and is especially important when you think of the tremendous impact that the well-being of our railways has on the rest of Canada.

I think that is all I want to say at this moment, Mr. Chairman, but I should like the committee to realize what was accomplished by the previous government in the matter of transportation. I think we can say that we were faced with real problems and that we worked toward the solution of those problems. When we left office transportation in Canada had taken some major steps forward which I think was good for Canada as a whole.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I see it is close to one o'clock, but there are one or two remarks I would like to make and some answers I should like to have from the minister regarding our consideration of the estimates today. I should like to know if at the same time we are studying amounts provided for the reduction in freight charges by the C.N.R. or the other railway company. Last year we used to pass those items in the standing committee before bringing them to this committee. If we had passed these estimates before—I see the minister is ready to answer.

Mr. McIlraith: I think I could usefully answer that question now, Mr. Chairman. C.N.R. matters as such are not embodied in these estimates; they come under another item on the order paper, I think No. 7. That measure concerns the C.N.R. financing act and the financing of Trans-Canada Air Lines. The C.N.R. is not included in these estimates with which we are dealing today, but railways are the subject of one of the supplementary items. There is a major item involving the railways generally. Item 18 on the order paper is the motion to set up the committee to examine into the accounts, estimates and bills relating to the Canadian National Railways and Trans-Canada Air Lines and with certain other powers. The practice has been for that committee to examine in a detailed way the annual report of Trans-Canada Air Lines and the annual report of the C.N.R. and all matters relating to the operations of those companies. Therefore I think it would be out of order to discuss the C.N.R. or T.C.A. today on these estimates.

If I may say so, the portion of the former minister's remarks concerning the purchase of T.C.A. aircraft concerns a matter which does not come under these estimates at all and should be discussed under the other two items on the order paper. It is a difficult line to draw. By the way, I hope that committee can be set up soon. I am ready and anxious to get it set up at the earliest moment, and I had put forward a proposal that the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines be reduced in number and that it do the work normally given to the special committee. I had undertaken to refer the two annual reports immediately that was done.

Mr. Woolliams: Can I ask a supplementary question. In view of the minister's explanation—

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I have the floor.

The Chairman: May I bring to the attention of hon. members that the hon. member for Lapointe has the floor and should be allowed to complete his remarks.

Mr. Fisher: I assumed that the minister was speaking to a point of order, not answering a question.

The Chairman: No point of order was raised. I believe the hon. member who had the floor asked for some information.

Mr. Fisher: Then let me raise a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Our party certainly does not accept what seems to be a tendency on the part of the minister to suggest that the C.N.R. and all its ramifications, and that T.C.A. and all its ramifications, should not be discussed, and that they are not properly under these estimates. If that is a ruling, Mr. Chairman, we do not accept it. As a matter of fact we have five or six speakers who will be spending most of their time on Canadian National Railways matters.

Mr. Woolliams: I should also like to speak to the point of order. We should be able to discuss in a general way—and I think the minister may have gone this far—railway abandonment as it effects the C.N.R. and C.P.R. We should be able to discuss in a general way T.C.A. I do not think those items should be excluded, because railways in western Canada and other parts of Canada and the activities of T.C.A. are the most important features of the department. I think this question should be clarified before discussion proceeds.

Mr. Gregoire: I think it should also be clarified that if we are voting estimates for the C.N.R. and T.C.A. we should withdraw those estimates and first set up the special committee dealing with railways, canals and air lines and then come back to the estimates of the C.N.R. I should like some clarification of this point also. When I asked whether we were discussing the estimates of the railways I included vote 213a in the supplementary estimates, which concerns a payment of $20 million to provide payments to companies subject to order No. 96300 dated November 17, 1958, and also the $50 million payment resulting from the recommendations of the MacPherson commission.

Mr. McIlraith: I think this point of order should be resolved. Item 213a is a general item for railways and embraces the item in the former Freight Rates Reduction Act and the subsidies paid through the board of transport commissioners. It just happens that the C.N.R. is one of the railways concerned, so that in that indirect way there is something that goes to the C.N.R., but only in that indirect way. The financing and deficits of the C.N.R., as well as of T.C.A., are embraced in the C.N.R. financing act. The practice has been for that legislation to be referred to the special committee set up for the purpose of examining the accounts, operations and so on of the C.N.R. and T.C.A. That has always been the practice. In these estimates there is no direct vote either for T.C.A. or the C.N.R.

To come to the point raised by the hon. member for Bow River, it is quite true that you cannot discuss transport policy without referring to the nationally owned railway system or nationally owned air line, but it is only in that context. Operational matters and other matters relating to their detailed financing and so on would properly be discussed on either of the other two items, the motion to set up the committee or the financing act itself. That is my point. I hope I have made it clear, and I would hope we could proceed in that way.

Mr. Gregoire: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, it is not too clear. With regard to the items I have mentioned, the $20 million and $50 million payments by the board of transport commissioners, I think it has been the custom of the house to study them in the standing committee and not the other committee before studying them in the house.

Mr. McIlraith: That was never the practice.

Mr. Gregoire: That is what was done last year. We had the opportunity to study those two items in the standing committee, not a special or sessional committee but the standing committee. I cannot see why we should not do the same thing this year and study them in the standing committee. Therefore these two items should be withdrawn from committee of supply until the standing committee has had an opportunity to study them. I think the minister should give us this opportunity.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, since we have received the assurance of the Minister of Transport that he will stand item No. 213a in the supplementary estimates, I think this will permit us to study this item in the standing committee before we resume a detailed study of the estimates in the committee of the whole. I believe this procedure will permit us to go a little faster in our study of all the estimates of this department.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, there are several points to consider in the field of transportation. It might be noted, first of all, that the Department of Transport itself is probably one of the largest in the present government.

It must also be admitted that transportation is probably one of the most important means of communication between the Canadian people from all parts of the country. Thanks to our modern means of transportation, it is much easier than formerly for people from one part of the country to get better acquainted with Canadians from another area.

In a country as large as Canada, transportation must be developed in order to foster a better understanding between the various areas and racial groups, especially the two main groups that make up our country.

Mr. Chairman, when we consider the estimates of the Department of Transport, we note that a great number of fields of endeavour are affected by transport, and therefore, by the Department of Transport: aviation, navigation, canal and railway services, grade crossings, etc.

The first point that comes to my mind is the following: All those areas must undergo some changes and must be brought up to date to meet modern needs, that is, they must develop and expand.

That is why, at the outset, I shall direct a number of questions to the minister. He might deal with them when he closes the discussion and provide answers if he deems it advisable.

Will the new 11 per cent tax levied on materials affect the Department of Transport in its development, its progress and its capital expenditure program with regard to railways, ships, wharves and canals?

If so, I submit that the minister should bring pressure to bear on his colleague so that the implementation of his department's main projects will not be affected by this tax on building materials. Otherwise, the progress of one of the most important departments would be slowed down.

Progress must not be hampered in the transportation industry because it is one of the industries that provide the most jobs in Canada and, therefore, is one of the prime factors of national growth.

Take, for instance, private industry. Considerable progress has been made there with regard to automobile plants, in assembly lines, various service stations, even gas stations, and motels. Add to that what has been accomplished by the provincial governments, such as bridges, roads, etc., and you will realize that the federal government must also do its share in this great industry, particularly with regard to railways, air lines, canals and navigation. The federal government must be in a position to develop those various services I have just mentioned and their progress must not be hampered by needless taxation.

In fact, in view of the degree to which private enterprise has developed and modernized, we realize that the transport problem is most alarming because the C.N.R., which is a crown corporation, is competing in such an irregular fashion with private enterprise that its competition practically becomes illegal.

Canadian private enterprise has succeeded in building up a trucking industry which provides a number of our fellow citizens with both employment and income. What happens? The government, through one of its crown corporations, the C.N.R., starts competing with the trucking industry which was set up by private enterprise.

It is noteworthy that the trucking industry shows a profit and pays taxes to the federal treasury, while the C.N.R., a crown corporation, not only does not pay taxes, but also show deficits which we, the Canadian citizens, must make up through our taxes. That is an abnormal situation.

Why should the government compete with private enterprise which has surpluses and pays taxes to the government, when the C.N.R. have deficits without paying any taxes? Such a situation is abnormal, and when one considers the figures one realizes that we give them rather substantial amounts. For instance, we see that the C.N.R. deficit for 1961 was $67,308,000, and $48,919,000 for 1962. And that does not take into account the many subsidies they received from the government. Apart from the $61 million deficit of the C.N.R. for last year, they received $80 million in subsidies of all kinds. We find that this C.N.R. item alone costs $150 million in taxes collected from the Canadian people, to make up for their deficit or fill the gap between their revenues and operation costs.

Mr. Chairman, if the government would instead see that the C.N.R. leave a business that does not concern them, leaving private enterprise to develop by itself the trucking industry which shows surpluses, the Minister of Finance would not have to tell the house this year: like our predecessors, we shall continue to grant subsidies to make up for some deficits. In our opinion, that should not be done, but we shall keep doing it anyway, because we have to do it.

The government should leave private enterprise in peace since it is efficient in that field whereas the government has met with failure. Mr. Chairman, we shall stress that particular point.

I shall not insist anymore today, since the minister agreed in a private conversation I had with him to stand item. No. 213a.

However, there is a matter on which we would endeavour to obtain as much information as possible during the discussion on the estimates for next year. We shall try to find through those items before us today what has been the part played by the French Canadians in the administration of public affairs and more particularly within the Department of Transport.

I have here some figures concerning the C.N.R. which I should like to quote and which give a quite accurate idea of what is happening in the Canadian National. In reviewing the various items we shall raise questions about the role played by French Canadians in the administration and in the awarding of D.O.T. contracts.

Why all those questions? Because we would like this government to recognize that the French Canadians should have a bigger place in the administration of the business of this country, so that they may realize that they are equal partners in their own country.

"Summary of road property capital budget projects—total of 1962 proposals and cost to complete projects approved in prior years". This shows new lines in the St. Lawrence region, $5,000 out of a total of $34,107,000 for the whole of Canada, an expenditure of only $1 out of every $1,000 spent by the department in the province of Quebec. Road improvements in the St. Lawrence region were $4,141,400 out of a total of $38,392,200 for the whole of Canada, or $1 out of every $10. Large terminals in the province of Quebec were $1,038,000 out of a total of $32,293,000 for the whole of Canada, or $1 out of every $32. Yard tracks and sidings in the province of Quebec were $111,000 out of $1,215,600 for the whole of Canada, or $1 out of every $10.

We will admit we have more than our fair share of buildings. In the province of Quebec these totalled $4,185,000 out of $5,666,100. That is the first item where we have not only our fair share but more than the usual percentage that we should have. The same holds true for highway crossing protection which was $224,300 out of a total of $314,400. There was nothing for signals in the province of Quebec, out of a total of $7,012,200 for the whole of Canada. Anyone who comes into the province of Quebec will see how many accidents are caused because there are no signals across roads. How many signals would we require in the city of Quebec alone? How many underpasses and overpasses for railways?

Roadway and shop machinery totalled $278,200 for the St. Lawrence region but out of $2,253,100 for the whole of Canada, which comes to one twentieth of the sum. On that point I would like to bring to the attention of the minister that there is a machine shop in my constituency to repair the materials for the C.N.R., and every year part of it is being closed down.

The Chairman: Order. May I bring it to the attention of the hon. member that he cannot at this point go into the detailed operations of the Canadian National Railways. There is nothing wrong with referring to the general policy that affects the railways, but certainly he should not go into the details of the operations of the company.

Mr. Gregoire: Right, Mr. Chairman, but I think the figures I am quoting only go to prove the general policy. For road property there was $11,250,600 in the province of Quebec out of a total for the whole of Canada of $173,848,500. I think those figures speak for themselves, and of the proposed expenditures for 1962 there was $9,243,600 for Quebec out of a countrywide total of $106,376,900.

(Translation):

Mr. Chairman, I am of the opinion that these figures speak for themselves and can lead us to draw a conclusion.

The fact is that if French Canadians were allowed to take a more active interest in what is going on everywhere in the country, that is at the federal level, they would then be less inclined to withdraw into their shells as so many now do in the province of Quebec. I think that they should be allowed greater access to federal employment.

Last year, Mr. Gordon, president of the Canadian National Railways—and this is only one example to illustrate the general idea that I want to set forth in the house—stated that French Canadians made up 11 per cent of all Canadian National employees, even though French Canadians amount to more than 30 per cent of the total Canadian population.

Incidentally, I have to congratulate Mr. Gordon for having appointed a French speaking vice-president. That appointment pleased all French Canadians, and more particularly those in the province of Quebec, and we hope that the Minister of Transport will suggest to him that we want a few more, until we have our fair share.

However, I find that he added a few members to the board of directors. In contrast with previous years, Mr. Gordon did not even mention the board of directors, because that would be somewhat embarrassing for him. He also added section directors and assistant directors in Montreal and in the St. Lawrence district. I have to commend him for his know-how and ability in making us accept such conditions.

Those, Mr. Chairman, were a few preliminary remarks I wanted to make to illustrate my point. As a matter of fact, we think that, if the federal government granted our request in the field of transportation as we are discussing the subject today we would be most happy, and not because we want to boss everything, for that is not the case, but inasmuch as we represent nearly 30 per cent of the whole population, we believe we are entitled to our fair share and that this position should be considered.

Moreover, when we are studying the estimates, one by one, we shall try to find out the percentage of French Canadians working in each branch, as well as the salary scales, because that is precisely the responsibility of the investigation commission on bilingualism, if we want to establish the degree to which French Canadians are interested in taking part in this country's business, as they should, not only in the field of employment, but also with regard to building contracts, maintenance, repairs and purchasing.

That is the direction we shall give our questions during the discussion on the estimates.

In short, we are of the opinion that the Department of Transport is one of the most important departments which, through its various bodies, permits the establishment of relations between different areas and between the two great races and cultures making up this country.

It also enables the citizens of our country to become better acquainted. But we would like, when travelling in our country and using federal means of transportation to feel at home. And to illustrate my point, let me give you an example. When we are on a train between Montreal and Ottawa and there are two or three trainmen, it would be normal to have at least one of them who can speak French.

Also, when a plane leaves Montreal for Vancouver, with five air hostesses, it seems only just that one of them at least should speak French. Actually, things should be worked out in such a way that people from the province of Quebec and, for that matter, all Canadians would feel at home not only in their own province—be it Quebec, Ontario or Manitoba—but everywhere, from coast to coast.

The transportation facilities of the department can contribute materially to that end, that is to make French Canadians feel at home in the whole length and breadth of Canada.

English-speaking Canadians may rest assured that we shall do everything possible to greet them with all due warmth. They may find fault with certain situations, but we shall certainly do our best to correct those situations, for we want them to feel at home when they come and visit us. We shall address them in their mother tongue, and try and understand them, for we are convinced that a better understanding brings about a deeper appreciation.

(Text):

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is any department that more closely affects the people of Canada than the Department of Transport. I would like to join in the congratulations that have gone to the minister in taking over the portfolio. I would also like to say to the previous minister, the hon. member for Three Rivers, and his predecessor Hon. George Hees, that I feel they gave members of parliament excellent cooperation and, in a sense, opened up the department to inquiries and interests of members of parliament as well as they could.

The administration of the Department of Transport has never been, I think, severely criticized in this house since I have been here. This is, I would think, an accolade for the gentlemen who are the senior civil servants in the department. Yet I must confess that I felt somewhat disappointed when I heard that the hon. member for Ottawa West had been made Minister of Transport. I have always found him to be one of the most careful, meticulous members in this house and I have a tremendous respect for his integrity and sense of responsibility; but I did feel that the Department of Transport, because of the great needs to develop and fashion a new national transportation policy and a new national policy as outlined by the MacPherson report, might have drawn the appointment by the Prime Minister of some member who had a great interest in transportation, or else was someone who was extremely interested in policy matters.

I hope the minister will forgive me if I say that I feel the very excellent qualities he has are complemented very much by his deputy minister, Mr. Baldwin. I think this may augur very well for the future administrative balance of the department. But I have always felt that the department, in its senior officials, has been somewhat tardy or hesitant; certainly I do not think they have been vigorously forthcoming in setting out new transportation policies, particularly as they cover the broad spectrum of transportation, rather than in specifics, I would be quite willing to concede that in the field of civil aviation the leadership from the senior civil service has been good. However, I do not think the Department of Transport in the last five or six years, in the whole question of railway operations and railway policy, the relationship of the truckers to such agencies as the board of transport commissioners, the relationship of air lines to the air transport board, the relationship of many harbours communities to the national harbours board, has been either especially energetic or leading to any goals that we can easily recognize and easily support.

The primary matter that has always intrigued the Canadian House of Commons, I suppose, since the creation of the railway boom away back at the time of confederation and before, has been the development of railway transport and its effects upon communities. Canadian National Railways year in, year out has borne the largest number of questions and greater interest than any other governmental agency of any kind. You can prove this in a random way just by skirting through the indexes of Hansard. At the present time Canadian National Railways and the railways as a whole are dead centre in the interests of very many hon. members of this house.

Just the other day the minister made an answer to representations that were put to him by a delegation from western Canada with regard to the announced plans of Canadian National Railways to go ahead with run-throughs in the middle of August. The minister's reply was to the effect that it was a matter for negotiation or relationship of a contractual kind between management and labour. I want to say to the minister that his answer is a typical one, typical over the past number of years, and it reflects an inability to recognize, on the part of the government, any kind of responsibility in this very touchy area. The minister will remember that the group which came to him and the delegations from Rainy River, Melville and these other places did not ask him to interfere in labour-management relations. They asked him if he would use the position he holds to request the Canadian National Railways to postpone the introduction of these run-throughs until there was an opportunity to make a really good presentation of the whole matter. I should like to point out that the problem involved in these run-throughs has been developing all the way along in the relationship between the railways and their employees, as technological change has been advancing. We have never been able to get the government to accept responsibility for some of the dislocation caused or to place the responsibility upon the railways.

At the present time, through the action of this house, the subject matter of a bill I brought forward this session has been referred to the committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines. The question I wish to put to the minister is this: Will he endeavour through the position he holds to see that these run-throughs are not proceeded with until that committee has had a chance to hear representations concerning changes in the Railway Act which bear directly on this problem? I say they bear directly upon it because these changes would spell out the responsibility of the railway both to the employees and to the communities which this kind of dislocation affects.

There are other hon. members who will, no doubt, wish to speak on this subject. I know that the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar will want to talk about it. I merely want to say that the relationship at the present time between the employees of the railways, particularly in western Canada, and their senior union leadership is very poor. This applies to both major railway companies but particularly to the C.N.R. I am not putting this forward as a fact that can be proven: It is my opinion. I feel this relationship has been worsened by various incidents which have taken place recently and I will mention one of these incidents as an example: The brotherhood of locomotive engineers had a strike vote of over 90 per cent, yet the leadership turned around and settled with the railways without obtaining a single gain beyond those they already had. It is because of suspicions like this existing between the majority of the membership and the unions that one finds such a group as the joint running trades committee, an unofficial group within the locals from Port Arthur to Vancouver, responding spontaneously to the challenge posed by these run-throughs.

I would like to tell the minister this: When I asked the Minister of Labour to get an assessment made of the situation, I wanted him to make that assessment in order to make sure that the government realizes the threat which is implicit by mid August if the run-throughs proceed. If the railroaders have the same attitude then as they have today, I think there is going to be trouble. I think the minister should be prepared to accept some responsibility for this situation, even though he has denied in a statement he made in the house that this is a matter with which he can interfere. At least, that is my interpretation of what he said.

There is another subject on which I wish to comment in connection with the C.N.R. I want to touch on this matter of railway line abandonment. One of the striking things about the political pressures which have been developing in western Canada as a result of the line abandonment policies foreshadowed in the MacPherson report, is the fact that both the C.N.R. and the C.P.R. have been, generally, lumped together. We do not find the distinction which is often made in this house between the government-owned railway and the privately-owned railway. I should like to tell the minister that this lumping together of the railways in so far as their actions affect public policy is something I should like to see extended into a number of other fields. It seems to me that, given the scope of the subsidies and support which the C.P.R. has been receiving in recent years from the national war chest, it is time we had the opportunity to meet the president of the Canadian Pacific Railway under some kind of formal arrangement in a committee of this house. I make this point because one cannot divide policy in Canada between a government-owned railway on one hand and a privately-owned railway on the other. If the C.P.R. were completely free of regulations or if it were not availing itself of the subsidies permitted to it—and I am not blaming the company for availing itself of these subsidies —I can see why we might leave this company to one side. But in present circumstances I think it is about time an opportunity of hearing the views of the president of the C.P.R. expressed before a parliamentary committee.

One of the questions I should like to ask the minister is this: Will he tell us where are the proposals put forward by Mr. Gordon? Mr. Gordon told us two years ago that he was presenting proposals to the minister of finance and the minister of transport with respect to the long term debt structure of the C.N.R. Since he became president in 1950 Mr. Gordon has changed his mind a number of times as to the factors which are preventing the C.N.R. from presenting a budget ending up in the black instead of in the red. His latest representations seem to me to be to the effect that without a recasting of the debt structure of the C.N.R. the operation is never likely to end on the profit side of the ledger. I had a transportation economist look at the debt structure of the C.N.R. for me and he made the point that one of the reasons these debts are so immense is the large sums which have to be devoted to the repayment of interest charges.

In the last annual report of the C.N.R. for 1962, one finds that the total long term debt outstanding is $1,842,345,846. This is an enormous sum. My friend analysed the two ways in which the C.N.R. has been financing its operations in recent years, particularly with respect to its capital needs, taking care of some of its other long term debt as it has matured. There have been two ways of doing this. One was by the issue of debentures, and in recent years these issues have borne a high rate of interest—over 5 per cent at times. At other times the company has secured loans from government at very low rates of interest. My friend made an analysis as a result of which he told me that if the loans made over the past seven years had been made at a standard or low interest rate of $2\frac{3}{4}$ per cent of the total interest charge per year would have been some $350 million less than it is. That is a huge sum to be saved by the C.N.R. had this debt been built up on the basis of an interest rate of $2\frac{3}{4}$ per cent. My hon. friend in the Social Credit party could probably make a more effective analysis of that kind of interest rate, but it seems to me ridiculous that the long term debt of the Canadian National Railways, which is a government corporation, should be bearing interest charges as high as $5\frac{1}{2}$ per cent, as is the situation at the present time.

I have been very critical, as have other hon. members of our party, of the way Mr. Gordon has operated the Canadian National Railways. He has certainly spent money with abandon I think there have been tremendous results in improving the operations of the C.N.R., but the point is that the debt structure which it bears at the moment is immense. Proposals have been presented to the government over the last two years to alter and to change it, and I think it is time members of this house were privy to those proposals and knew what they were. I think the minister should let us know. I think it would be fair if the minister tabled for us in this house the proposals of the Canadian National Railways with regard to this debt structure. This analysis of the kind of depreciation the C.N.R. is involved in has shown that a debt structure has been developed from which C.N.R. can never get clear in terms of any kind of black gain on their profit sheet.

Another point I should like to make at this time is the question of the Matane-Ste. Anne des Monts railway. I have put some questions to the minister about this and I think he will agree that his replies have been less than informative. I can tell hon. members that this was a line which the C.N.R. did not want to build as part of its own structure, so it was launched, as an idea anyway, through a statute passed in this house which set up a government-owned railway which the C.N.R. would build and operate, but whose operating statements, revenues and so on, would be kept to one side as a special sort of government-owned operation. When that bill was before the house I raised some questions as to the economic viability of this road, but the bill went through despite this. I understand from the information which the minister has been kind enough to give me that the estimated costs are higher than those projected, and I should like to know how much higher they are. I feel we are entitled to know this, and I am sure that the people in Gaspe are entitled to know what are the government's intentions with regard to that road. I think the minister should also tell us whether the executive of the C.N.R. feel any more warmly toward this railway project than they did a year or two years ago. It seems to me that the government should be able to give a fairly quick and succinct answer in this regard.

There is one last point in relation to the C.N.R. that I wish to touch on. Mr. Gordon was quoted last January 25 in Labour, the weekly newspaper which is devoted to railway matters on behalf of the unions. The heading is: "Need a fighting morale, says Gordon of C.N.R.", and it goes on:

> A strong plea for maintenance of and improvement of employee morale was made by president Donald Gordon of the Canadian National Railways at a meeting of the general chairmen's association of the railway unions held here. He said that "without good morale we couldn't run the railroad" and he asked the general chairmen, who represent union employees all across Canada, to help build this morale amongst their members.

I want to ask the minister whether he would do something that no previous transport minister has done. It is an extra imposition and burden, but I have raised this question of morale, as have other members, with Mr. Gordon before. Mr. Gordon has, to say the least, ridiculed our suggestions. He has said that things were never better, and suggested that if morale on the Canadian National Railway is bad it is probably the politicans who are responsible for it by leading these people along the wrong or improper path. I want to ask the minister whether as Minister of Transport he will consider taking on the responsibility of getting round and talking to employees of the C.N.R. Everybody says that this question of their morale is important. Mr. Gordon says that he needs a fighting morale. The fighting morale I have seen is the desire on the part of a lot of C.N.R. employees to fight with Mr. Gordon.

I suggest that the minister could not make a better contribution to the Canadian National Railways than to take an interest in its employees. There has been, quite frankly, a tendency for previous ministers of transport to regard it as a hot potato and not to touch it; but I should like to see this minister go out and meet the men—not to call in the union heads, but go out and visit some of the terminal points and get to know the employees, and then arrive at his own conclusion as to why Mr. Gordon wants a fighting morale and claims that they have an excellent morale, when the rest of us who have a great many dealings with the people who work on the C.N.R. find evidence completely to contradict this. I think the minister, given the kind of level head and coolness which he has —I think we all recognize that he is not someone whose emotions will run wild with him— could do this job very well, and then we might reach the stage where a minister of transport could speak to this house about the Canadian National Railways and all the problems which we as members keep encountering with regard to it.

One of my colleagues, Mr. Chairman, is going to talk about the air situation so far as Trans-Canada Air Lines and Canadian Pacific Airlines is concerned, but I should just like to put on the record two resolutions. If we had had the opportunity last year in our sessional committee on railways, air lines and shipping to write a report on the operations of T.C.A. and the C.N.R., I had prepared two resolutions to bring before hon. members which I think speak for themselves. The first one was:

> By action of the air transport board following a hearing in 1958, air line competition was introduced in Canada on the transcontinental route. The committee learned during its examination of T.C.A.'s 1961 annual report that that same air transport board has not exercised its authority to ensure that that competition be on a fair and equitable basis.

The reason why we were entitled, as I see it, to come to that conclusion was because on that particular route there are different fares in force as a result of the action of Canadian Pacific Airlines, and also there has been in a sense an extension of the rights which Canadian Pacific Airlines are exercising in light of what was originally expected in 1958.

The second resolution or point which I wanted to put into the report last year was this:

The air transport board, by its failure to disapprove either the T.C.A. domestic passenger tariff filed with it for effectiveness April 1, 1962, or the C.P.A. domestic passenger tariff in force prior to that date, has permitted to exist fare differentials with respect to both first class and economy fares on identical routes flown in the same type of aircraft by both the competing air lines. The committee understands that no similar fare discrepancies with respect to authorized fares exist in the industry, and it therefore strongly recommends that the air transport board be required to take corrective action at once.

The point about the milk runs that bothers some of us, and I have had representations from several air lines in western Canada, is that we do not know what the package is. We do not know what the deal is between the government, T.C.A. and Transair which has the contract at the present time. What did T.C.A. give in terms of dollar value in turning over the DC-3's and Viscounts to Transair? What undertaking did the minister give or the previous minister or the air transport board to Transair?

It is quite obvious to anyone who knows anything about air operations that Transair is losing money hand over fist at the present time. Yet the announcement was to the effect that it was taking this franchise without any subsidy. The only reason that those of us from the outside can figure that it would take over an obviously losing proposition would be that the equipment and services it got out of the deal from Trans-Canada Air Lines were enough to balance off for a period of time, and what some of us are apprehensive about is that once the value that Transair has received in this equipment has been balanced somewhat by the monthly losses that are building up we will get the cry again for a subsidy.

I want to make it clear that the New Democratic party is not arguing against a subsidy on the prairie route, but the point is that several other carriers with experience in that area insist that the route is impractical without some kind of subsidy, and apparently the settlement has been on the basis of no subsidy. I think we are entitled to know a bit more about this particular deal and I particularly should like to know if any great pressure was put on Trans-Canada Air Lines to get them to shift that equipment to Transair, for what I imagine was a very nominal fee.

One of the things that the minister of transport in the previous government took credit for, and I think to a degree deservedly so, was the great improvement in the shipbuilding industry as a result of the Conservative shipbuilding program. The former minister will remember that there are a few of us who have shipyards in our constituencies which have not benefited from the shipbuilding program, and the subsidies. One of the complaints that we at the head of the lakes have, and it is a consistent complaint, is that our shipyard is owned by a very large corporation which also has yards at Collingwood, Kingston and Lauzon, Quebec. Naturally under the present set-up this firm has taken advantage of the subsidies and has directed the majority of its new construction into its yard at Lauzon and, secondarily, to its yard at Collingwood. That is accepted, I suppose, as the right of a private corporation; but the point I have made, and I know the hon. member for Fort William has made it also, is that any time the government is putting up that much of the cost for new shipping by way of subsidy, surely it must have the policy objective in mind of keeping our shipyards in this country to some kind of level both with regard to skills and plant. How effective is a shipbuilding policy if it leads to great concentrations and benefits in certain yards while other yards slip downhill both in terms of the quality of the workmen available and the kind of equipment they have?

I wish to say to the present minister that we think the shipbuilding subsidies have been an excellent thing, but we feel there should have been some provision in the act to permit some extra kind of incentive, not a penalty, to see that all yards in Canada have some opportunity for some of this construction. If the government should feel that even this kind of incentive to a private corporation such as Dominion Shipbuilding is something that philosophically they cannot accept, then I suggest that those yards that are not being given ships to construct by their corporate headquarters should be given first consideration when it comes to the construction of government ships. This is something again that we have been pushing for at the lakehead, but which has never been recognized.

Our shipyard at the lakehead in the main has diversified into a lot of lines and has done very well. It serves a very necessary repair yard. It is not the kind of shipyard that Canada can dispense with, because of its location and because of the great increase in shipping, particularly deep sea shipping through the St. Lawrence seaway and up to the head of the lakes. But what that shipyard needs to give it the kind of staff and the skills, and the opportunities to keep going, is an occasional new ship, government or private, and with the present structure of Dominion Shipbuilding this does not seem possible.

Another point about which I should like to ask the minister is whether he has given any consideration to having a survey made of some of the harbours in Canada at present under harbour commissions constituted by this house, such as the lakehead harbour commission, and having them brought into a closer relationship with the national harbours board.

The Deputy Chairman: I apologize for interrupting the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Fisher: I should like to ask if I may finish this particular point, with the consent of the committee.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Fisher: I should not like to suggest that at the lakehead, for example, we want the harbour commission to be taken over by the national harbours board at the present time, but I do feel that the national harbours board has experience and knowledge that would be of immense assistance to the lakehead harbour commission if it could be made available on some kind of co-operative or liaison basis. I should like to ask the minister to consider that point. Finally, I would ask the minister when he is making his explanations to please tell us what role he played, and I should like a complete answer, in turning down or seeing that the government turned down the application for a radio station in Hull.

Mr. McIlraith: Where?

Mr. Fisher: Hull.

Mr. McIlraith: There is none there.

Mr. Fisher: Well, people from Hull, but in Ottawa.

Mr. Carter: Mr. Chairman, as the hon. member for Port Arthur has just pointed out, the Department of Transport touches the lives of practically all Canadians and I should like to take advantage of this opportunity to bring before the minister a few of the most urgent needs of the people of my constituency. Before doing so I should like to associate myself with those who have expressed their compliments and good wishes to you personally, sir, and also to the Speaker and Deputy Speaker on assuming the high offices to which you have been called. I should also like to congratulate the minister on his appointment and to compliment him on the manner in which he has presented his first estimates to the house.

Before going further I should like to express my appreciation of the work that is being done by the very dedicated staff both here in Ottawa, and in my own province, and to voice my personal thanks for the great co-operation and sympathetic consideration which I have always received from them whenever I have brought problems to their attention. I hope the minister will be able to come to my province before long. When he does he will discover that the office of his department in my province is seriously understaffed. The austerity program prevented new appointments being made, and I believe that the office has about half of the staff it requires to do its work efficiently. I know that the minister has not had time to inquire into all the facets of his department, but I would ask him to check on the salaries paid to top officials in his department, particularly in my own province, to ascertain how they compare with the salaries paid to the heads of other departments who have to carry comparable responsibility.

Now, practically all of my constituents live by the sea, and most of them live on the sea. It will be appreciated that aids to navigation have an important bearing on their lives in so far as they contribute to their personal safety and to their efforts to earn a livelihood. I want to express my thanks, on behalf of my constituents, for the many improvements that have been made in this regard during the past year. I hope that this improvement will be continued in the years ahead. I was glad to hear the minister say this morning that provision had been made for a marine haul-up at Clarenville. This is very fine, but Clarenville does not happen to be in my own riding. I want to impress upon the minister that the need in the riding of Burin-Burgeo is even more urgent than the need in Clarenville. The whole south coast, from Port aux Basques right around to St. John's, has no facilities at all for hauling out small boats for steamship inspection, maintenance and other purposes. There used to be one at Burin, but that has gone into disrepair and is no longer useable. Even the one at St. Pierre and Miquelon is now not as useful as it was. It is a very serious handicap to the people in the constituency when these facilities do not exist. We had hoped that they would have been provided long before this. We are waiting patiently in the hope that the provision of them will not be delayed very much longer.

I want to express my appreciation of the fact these estimates do contain some provision for expanding the ferry services between my province and the mainland. I want to urge the minister to speed up the construction of these ferries because I can assure him, from my own personal knowledge, that the travelling public is exposed to very serious inconvenience for the lack of these services. I do not want to expand on that, but I can say that I have seen people sitting around without even a place to lie down because all the motel and hotel services at Port aux Basques or in the vicinity were completely filled. I should like the Minister of Transport to communicate with the management of Canadian National Railways, who should also have some responsibility to the travelling public to see that this situation is alleviated whenever possible by making sleeping cars available at the terminal when no other facilities are available.

I know the minister has not had time to examine all the different bits and pieces of administrative machinery in his department, but I want to bring to his attention one suggestion which I hope he will consider. My suggestion has to do with harbour administration. We do not have very many harbour boards, but I believe in decentralization of authority whenever possible. We do have in my province a number of pilotage commissions and a number of small harbour boards. They are set up under the act and their duties are separated. I believe it would tend to greater efficiency and better service if the scope of their authority could be extended. I see no reason why any efficient pilotage commission could not also have some responsibility for harbour administration. I see no reason why an effective harbour board could not also assume some of the duties of a pilotage commission. In small communities such as we have in my riding, the very same people act on these boards practically all the time. For all practical purposes, therefore, they are the same people wearing different hats.

I do know that a good deal of inconvenience could be eliminated if when we set up public harbours we did set up some local authority to which the harbourmaster could report, instead of having to report to the district office at St. John's. The district office, in turn, must get in touch with Ottawa before a decision can be reached. During the summertime, when we have short hours, with four o'clock closing on Friday and extra long week ends sometimes stretching over until Tuesday, long and unnecessary delays are experienced. If the minister would consider this suggestion, I think it would be beneficial to all concerned.

The last point I want to make is in connection with the subsidies for coastal shipping, to which the hon. member for Three Rivers referred this morning. I think that was a good move, but as the former minister himself pointed out it was designed mainly to help the shipyards. We do not have many shipyards in my province. We have one, possibly two. Most of our ships are built by the people who are going to sail them. These people go into the woods in the wintertime, cut timber for the frame and then proceed to build a ship. When these people try to take advantage of the subsidy, despite all the efforts of the maritime commission to help them with their problem, it is a very long and difficult operation before they can be assured they will receive the benefit of the subsidy. I think it should be possible to amend these regulations so as to take care of the cases which I have just described. I agree with the former minister of transport that we should be thinking in terms of expanding our merchant navy.

Our coastal fleet in Newfoundland has practically disappeared and there is not much incentive to replace it. Even with the subsidies granted, it is cheaper for the ship operators to have new ships built in Holland or Japan.

We are a nation of seafaring people, and we need small coastal ships to distribute our goods from the larger centres to the smaller communities. This type of service can best be supplied by small, locally built ships, which very often are built by the persons who are going to own and use them. I hope the minister will try and make it easier for such people to take advantage of the assistance that is available from his department.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words about railway abandonment. I believe there should be a good long look taken before railway companies can go out and indiscriminately roll up tracks and abandon branch lines. When the former administration was in power there was a verbal agreement that all abandonment of branch lines would be frozen until there was a meeting called with the railways, the government, the large grain handling agencies in western Canada, and that in conjunction with the MacPherson report an over-all policy would be worked out.

We in western Canada are very much concerned about this, as there is only one way of getting our grain out to the northern port of Churchill, the west coast, or to the head of the lakes, and that is by the railways. We have many grain handling devices on our farms, such as augers and blowers, but I repeat there is only one way of getting grain to the delivery points, and this is over the railways.

Railway abandonment will have a serious effect on Rosetown-Biggar constituency, which is one of the larger grain growing districts in Saskatchewan. I do not like to take individual cases, but there is one line for which there has been an application to abandon, and where this would affect many more people than the farmers. It is a short line running from Stewart Valley, a little village, out to the main C.P.R. line. At present the farmers in the district haul their grain to the town of Stewart Valley, but if the railroad is abandoned and they haul their grain north they will have to cross the Saskatchewan river. To go east they would have to cross Stewart Valley, and if they have to haul it to the main line this would involve a distance of 40 or 50 miles in many cases.

The farmers and businessmen are not looking for passenger service or express service. Their whole plea is service for the handling of their grain. Stewart Valley is a thriving little town in the centre of a good wheat growing area. Businessmen in the district have their life savings tied up in small businesses, grocery stores, implement businesses and the like. If this line were abandoned there would be nothing else for them to do but move out, and leave their lifetime savings behind them and start all over again at some other point. This would cause considerable hardship to everyone in the district—and this is just one instance which will be repeated over and over again throughout the whole prairie region.

There is another matter which should be looked into in order to get a clear picture of the whole railway system in western Canada. I would like to bring to the attention of the committee the new policy which the C.N.R. intends to inaugurate in the very near future. It is known as the run-through, and is the doubling up on divisions.

The hon. member for Port Arthur has explained this very well, but I would like to call attention to just a few of the hardships it would cause at home divisional points, where the railwaymen make their homes. This is a case where train crews would run over two divisions, and it would cause a lot of unemployment.

One of the main towns in my constituency is the town of Biggar, which is known as a home division. If this run-through system is inaugurated it will take 150 men out of that little town of 3,000 people, 79 of whom are home owners. In many cases the railway employees who have built homes would have to pick up and leave, and go to wherever they were transferred, and when you take 79 home owners out of a little town of 3,000 people there is not much left for the town.

Biggar is not the best wheat growing area in my constituency, but it has a very good cattle industry. This alone would not support a town of its size, and if the railway employees had to move, as many of them who have built homes and are paying for them would have to do, there would be no chance of selling these homes, since there is no industry to bring people into the district.

I have talked with many railwaymen and all they are asking is a chance to work their regular hours. They tell me that after eight hours in the cabs of fast moving freights, the strain is too great, and more accidents are caused after working that length of time in the cab. I know railway companies have as their motto, "safety first", and this is one of the things that should be taken into consideration. This is a matter at which we should take a good long look before the railways are allowed to go out and indiscriminately roll up the lines. I have a lot more to say on this point but there are other speakers who wish to participate in the debate. Therefore I ask the minister to give consideration to these things before the railway lines are abandoned.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I am wondering whether I should answer some of the questions now, before too many accumulate. I shall try to confine my remarks to answering specific questions asked by hon. members. No doubt I will overlook a few, but this will be solely due to my system of doing my own reporting to myself, which I can assure hon. members is grossly inadequate.

Mr. Pigeon: I would like to put one question to the minister. On the orders of the day I asked a question concerning the Soulanges canal.

Mr. McIlraith: Perhaps I should answer that first, although I had hoped the hon. member would leave it until we came to the appropriate item when I would have the precise information in front of me. The situation is quite clear and it originated under the former minister.

As I understand the matter, there was an intimation from representatives of the government of the province of Quebec that they would take over the canal. Then the negotiations as to the detail of doing that were continued during the last year or two years—some considerable time anyway—and the result now is that we have an intimation that they are not interested in taking over the canal. Therefore it is a matter of determining the method of disposing of the canal.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to cut in on the minister but I would like to take this opportunity to point out that as far as the federal government was concerned, we had reached a conclusion on this matter of the Soulanges canal—

Mr. McIlraith: That is right.

Mr. Balcer: —and the Department of Transport had notified the Quebec government that we had agreed to give over the canal to the province. We then wrote to the province and asked them to pass an order in council to this effect, but we never received the order in council. It has only been during the last few days that I have read in the newspapers that the federal government had refused. That is absolutely wrong, because we did not refuse.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I want to make it perfectly clear that the federal government did not refuse and has not yet refused. It was quite the other way around; the federal government always took the position of being ready and prepared to carry out the transfer to the provincial authority, and the provincial authority has now indicated that it is not prepared to accept this transfer. That is the situation.

Mr. Pigeon: What will you do with this canal?

Mr. McIlraith: I will have an announcement to make very shortly, I presume; but I expect we will be disposing of it by one means or another. There is no objection to providing the correspondence on this matter, if any hon. member wants it. I do not have it here with me at the moment. I had expected, when this question was asked on the orders of the day, that it would not be raised again until we came to the appropriate item in the estimates, when I could give the information in a more precise way, with dates and that sort of thing.

I think some of the other questions that have been raised should be dealt with. A good deal was said by the hon. member for Lapointe about the C.N.R. deficits, and that sort of thing. The very point he makes there is the kind of thing that should be raised when the annual report and financial statement of the C.N.R. are before the committee. This question should either be raised there or when the house is considering the proposed legislation having to do with C.N.R. financing. It is not the kind of question that can be fully and thoroughly answered here. Indeed, this kind of question is not, in the detailed way in which the hon. member asked his question, relevant to these estimates.

However, I wish to say to the hon. member that we would be very glad to deal with all the points raised by him in this connection, and my saying what I have said is not in any way intended to deal with the whole subject which he has raised, because it deserves far more adequate and thorough treatment.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask the minister a question. Last year, when Mr. Gordon was before the particular committee to which the minister has referred, the present Minister of Justice and I asked him a number of questions with regard to this deficit, the debt structure, and so on, and he made the point at the time, "I cannot deal with any one part of the question that has been raised without dealing with it all"; that is, the whole question of formulas and all the rest of it. I would make the point to the minister that we were not able, in the committee, at the resolution stage or during consideration of the financing bill last year, to get into this question of the C.N.R. debt structure.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I was going to come to another part of the same question raised by the hon. member for Port Arthur. However, I should point out to him that the C.N.R. financing bill did not come before parliament last year, as I remember it. The bill presented this year will cover the two years; this matter did not come before parliament last year. As to the remarks of the hon. member for Port Arthur, I quite appreciate what he has said about a policy regarding civil aviation. I cannot help recalling some of our concern when we were considering this legislation before the hon. member was elected to parliament, in earlier years, when I had a rather close association with the civil aviation branch. But I think he failed to take note of what I said in my opening remarks about the need for a statement on over-all air policy. The hon. member is quite correct in asserting that there is a need for clarification of over-all air policy in relation to present day conditions. One can argue about whether some of those things came about because they should have been done differently by the former government, or are due to the modern development of different types of aircraft, or development in different countries. You can argue that question as much as you like, but the fact remains that this matter is now receiving close attention. I would anticipate that it would be another two or three months before it would be possible to make the kind of complete statement that is required in order to deal with it in an adequate and proper way.

The hon. member talked a good deal about the run-throughs on the Canadian National Railways, and the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar made some reference to this question. I feel quite sure that other hon. members will wish to speak on this matter. That, again, is the type of question I would have hoped would come before the committee, but because of its importance I think I should say something about it now. I think the hon. member for Port Arthur did not make it clear that the group which came with him in the delegation on May 30 was made up of representatives of municipal councils of the towns concerned, boards of trade and employees of the railway, who of course were also union members. I made it very clear, when he and other hon. members came with the delegation, that as to those parts of their representations which had to do with union agreements between the railroad company and the unions, it was my position that I would not discuss with individual union members those internal matters which come within union agreements, that those agreements provided the method by which the unions should raise with the management matters which concerned them; that is, through their general chairmen, and so on. It is all precisely set out in the agreements.

I think I made that reservation, if the hon. member will recall, two or three times in the course of that interview, because I think it is most important that in any arrangement with employers regarding union matters there should be no interference by the minister in the internal affairs of the union. The answer I gave the hon. member, when he asked some questions on this subject matter in the house, reflected the same view. In other words, as I see it, it is quite impossible for unions to conduct their business properly as between union and management if a minister of the crown is dealing with individual members of the union, rather than having such communications pass between management and the unions through the defined channels set out in the union agreements. I have noted the hon. member's remarks to date on this subject and, I am sure he will wish to change at least part of them when he reads what he said. I refer to that part of his remarks where the hon. member indicated it is the function of the Minister of Transport to have consultations and dealings with individual union members with a view to taking some kind of action with their own elected or chosen officers of the union.

I wish to make it plain that I would regard that as a most improper intrusion on my part into the internal affairs of the union. I believe that it would, in effect, be destroying a very simple right of the union members.

Mr. Fisher: Would the minister allow me to ask a question in that regard? Would he not agree that as Minister of Transport he has the authority to ask the Canadian National Railways to postpone this very comprehensive step until such time as it can become a matter of discussion between the union and the railways?

Mr. McIlraith: I hope the hon. member will not misunderstand me when I tell him that if he would just permit me to make my own statement I will try to make it in sequence and deal with all the major points he has raised. He is referring now, of course, to the notification that went out indicating that the target date for the change, as far as these run-throughs are concerned, is August 18. The hon. member requested me to interfere—to change that date arbitrarily. I considered that, and I think it would be an improper way of dealing with such a situation. I feel that matters of the internal management of the railways must be left to the management. Nevertheless, I took great care to communicate the brief immediately to the management of the railways, together with my comments on the presentation of it, the additional views which were expressed by way of explanation, and certain other correspondence. I wish to point out one or two other facts. If the hon. member would read carefully the correspondence which was sent out he would find that this date, August 18, is a target date. He would also see, if he referred to an answer I gave him the other day—it is reported in Hansard on July 10, at page 2044—that meetings have been going on between management and the unions. These meetings are continuing now, and I do not understand the desire to have me interfere in this matter in the way indicated by the hon. member.

The hon. member made certain firm assertions about the run-throughs. I would point out to him that there are a lot of men and a lot of views involved in this. All the circumstances are by no means as he has indicated. Many of them are, but many of them are not. Here, again, we are getting into detail as to how the run-throughs work; but a great many of the men seem to consider this as being an improvement which enables them to put in the required time in a shorter period. It has certain other advantages which, again, could be set out on the appropriate occasion, that occasion being when we are dealing with the C.N.R. In any event, I wish to make it clear that I am keeping closely in touch with developments in western Canada as they are affected by this proposed run-through program and I have been careful to send out letters to those hon. members who are directly concerned with the problem. These letters are intended to provide helpful information, and I hope they do so. I have also sent them out to various other persons who appeared with the delegation.

As to the minister calling in union members, I think that where there is a union agreement between management and labour it would be most improper for the minister to deal with certain union members in the way indicated. I wish to make it clear that I would not have any part in dealings of that kind, because in my view if one started that kind of practice and carried it through to a logical conclusion he would be destroying the whole union system.

I am glad the hon. member raised the question of air fares.

Mr. Fisher: Before the minister gets to that subject, may I say this: His last comment suggests that I put to him the proposal that he should call in union people. I did not do that at all. I suggested he should go and find out something about the morale on the railways by visiting C.N.R. employees at all levels, not just union people, because I think this matter is intrinsic to an understanding of the C.N.R. position. I suggest he should start with the hon. member who represents the city of Moncton, who is a railway employee with the C.N.R. and who is associated with him in the Liberal party.

Mr. McIlraith: In my opinion, the hon. member in question and the Minister of Transport communicate rather well. I do not find they have much difficulty in communicating satisfactorily, at least as far as the minister is concerned. In any event, I thank the hon. member for Port Arthur for his suggestion.

I am glad he raised the question about air fares. This has been causing me a great deal of concern, and it is a matter which will have to be dealt with. I must say I have found a good many problems of this kind which I feel need to be dealt with. It is a matter of taking action in an orderly way as fast as I can. Incidentally, while the hon. member for Burin-Burgeo was very keen that I should do a great many things, I could not help reflecting that it is less than two months since I have had the responsibility of office—not much time in which to build all these structures or even to design and plan them. That cannot be done in a few days. I hope the hon. member will not mind that remark. I can assure him that one of the matters he mentioned concerning the office in Newfoundland has already come to my attention. I have already dealt with that, in a satisfactory way, I hope.

The hon. member for Port Arthur raised a question in connection with the Gaspe railway legislation. He asked whether the C.N.R. feels more warmly about that railway now than it did two years ago. It is not a matter of how the C.N.R. feels on this subject. It is a matter of government policy, because we are dealing with legislation respecting the line. It is clear that the estimated cost, as indicated so far, is very much greater than that indicated in the legislation. The significance of that is that the whole project has to be re-examined and a decision taken. I hope to have an announcement made shortly on policy in connection with this railway. I can assure the hon. member it is getting close attention.

There are other factors which will have to be taken into consideration also, such as the damage caused by splitting these very narrow farms in the valley and damage resulting to a good part of that region from putting a railway through the middle of it, and other questions of that sort. In any event the matter is very close to decision now, and an announcement of policy will be made, I anticipate, in about three weeks or a month.

There was reference by the hon. member for Rosetown-Biggar to railway line abandonment. That is, of course, a matter for the proposed legislation which, as I indicated in my opening remarks this morning, will be coming in later this session. I fear that my good friend from Rosetown-Biggar has not been reading his mail very carefully. I think he will find that it indicates that none of these abandonments of freight lines in western Canada will take place until this legislation has been dealt with. In fact, that appeared from an answer to a question asked me in the house some weeks ago. The question of the prairie milk run is another matter which I think should come from T.C.A. before making any commitment.

Mr. Fisher: Would the minister give an undertaking that when he appears before the committee, in association with the president of Trans-Canada Air Lines, he will allow the president to give the details of the arrangements? I ask this question because he may recall that on occasion both the presidents of T.C.A. and C.N.R. have turned to the minister of transport and asked whether they could give this information.

Mr. McIlraith: I would want to look at the question, but I do not see any reason why there could not be some further disclosure of the information, whatever it was. Perhaps I could give it here, but whichever the hon. member would prefer. If he wants me to give it here I will, if I have a few minutes to get the information.

Questions were asked about the harbour commission. Legislation has already been prepared on this matter. I am not sure whether it is on the order paper in the other place or not, but legislation, dealing with the subject of harbours in an effort to bring a more cohesive system forward than presently exists, is ready. A question was asked about a radio station in Ottawa and a recommendation made by the board of broadcast governors to grant a licence. If I correctly identify the station, and there has only been one where no approval of a licence was given, the situation was very simple. Last February, I think it was, although I am speaking from memory, the board of broadcast governors recommended approval of an application for a French language station in Ottawa which was to be privately owned. They also recommended approval of a French language C.B.C. station. There is in existence in this area a French language C.B.C. station, the station in Hull. Those recommendations were not dealt with by the former government and remained to be dealt with.

When the matter came to me—I might say here that I have some familiarity with the subject matter, a good deal of which was acquired before I became minister—it seemed to me that what was being done was to destroy the whole system of French language broadcasting in Ottawa by putting two additional stations into operation at the same time, or by increasing the present coverage by three times what it was. That seemed to me a thoroughly wrong policy, and in the great many conversations which I had in Ottawa with persons of the French language I found complete unanimity on that point. Therefore what I did was to approve one of the recommendations and decline the other. I thought that that was the fair and proper thing to do in these circumstances. It may interest hon. members to know that I received only one letter of protest on the matter, and the writer had not realized that two applications had been made, and I think he was quite surprised to learn that one application had been approved.

While I do not propose to substitute myself for the board of broadcast governors on these matters, I must point out at the same time that the legislation is very clear and explicit. Certain duties are set out in that act obligating the board to conduct hearings and to make recommendations. There is also a direct responsibility explicit in the Radio Act on the Minister of Transport to issue licences. I cannot believe that direct statutory obligation is intended to be nothing but the mere writing of a name in the appropriate place.

Mr. Fisher: Might I ask the minister a question. He must surely agree that his reasons, which sound very common sense and reasonable, for not approving this application are also reasons which the board of broadcast governors are supposed to consider. It is not a question of its statutory right, which we all concede, but the fact that this does cast a reflection upon the capacity of the board of broadcast governors to make a sensible and common sense decision.

Mr. McIlraith: No, I would not agree with that proposition. This is a problem which I think I can properly say I inherited from the former government, and I dealt with it in what I thought was a fair and proper way. I think the best evidence of that is what happened subsequently. I might add there were editorials in some papers miles away from Ottawa on this subject, but I had no correspondence except the one letter to which I referred.

Mr. Balcer: Just to keep the record clear, Mr. Chairman, I would like to remind the committee that although this matter was before the former government, it was during the election and we did not have time to deal with it. It was not a matter which was lying around for six or seven months; it rose right at the start of the election when everybody was away from Ottawa.

Mr. McIlraith: I think the date was February 11, or some time in February, when this recommendation was made; but in any event it was during the election period and the former government did not deal with it. I am not criticizing them for not dealing with it; quite frankly, I wish they had.

In any event, I did not particularly mean to criticize. But I would also point out to the former minister that the present minister has been criticized for not dealing with some matters which have come much more recently, very much more recently, and have covered a much shorter period of time. I am going to find his answer most helpful and useful, and I thank him for it.

Mr. Lambert: Does the minister feel that this might be a precedent for him to substitute his discretion for that of the board on future occasions? There is an old adage: What is the sense of hiring a watchdog to do your own barking?

Mr. McIlraith: The answer is quite simple. I sharply criticized the legislation when the government of which he was a member put it before the House of Commons, but it was passed. That government had some 208 supporters and we had some 49 or 50. I do not recall the numbers precisely. In my opinion, as appears from the records of the house, that legislation was not clear and was not good legislation. It may well be that the legislation requires improvement and clarification, but that is another matter with which I am not concerned today. The point is that that is the way they left the legislation. It was his government that put the legislation in this form. All I could do was carry out the statutory obligation imposed on me as best I could and exactly as I saw the obligation under the statute, and that I did.

Mr. Lambert: This is your interpretation.

Mr. McIlraith: It is more than my interpretation: It is the fact.

(Translation):

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, I would not fail today to take this opportunity to refer to the transportation policy in Canada and the way it affects the economic development of our country.

As a citizen of the province of Quebec first and also speaking on behalf of my group, I shall deal only with the things affecting the province of Quebec and particularly the Saguenay area which I represent.

Mr. Chairman, transportation, in Canada and in the province of Quebec has, in the past, played an important role and I am convinced that its role will be as important in the future.

I should like to refer more specifically to the railways which were built at the end of last century or at the beginning of the present one in the Saguenay area. According to the information we have now, there has been no improvement in the Montreal-Saguenay railway line.

The Saguenay area has some heavy industries like paper and aluminum and a great deal of their production and raw material are transported by railways.

I know that the C.N.R. gets a lot of revenues from the Montreal-Saguenay line. This being so, it behooves us to bring to the attention of the minister the fact that his department should see to it that the Saguenay service is immediately improved so that those industries may have better transportation facilities. In the past, people used to take the train to Montreal and back, but they abandon more and more this means of transportation because it takes too long to travel the 300 miles between our area and the Canadian metropolis.

This line, which was laid out at the beginning of this century, follows all the contour lines in the mountains, and skirts around the lakes. But since at that time the machinery necessary to undertake such major works was not available, we can readily understand why this is such a winding line. However, I think that in 1963, it is possible to remedy such problems and to bring about some improvements at a really reasonable cost, which would result not only in a reduction in freight rates, but in cutting at the same time the number of hours required to travel between my area and the metropolis.

Naturally, the government would have to provide certain sums of money, but I believe it would be a good investment because of the additional profits the C.N.R. would derive from it.

Mr. Chairman, in the policies of railways, there are certain aspects which could be questioned. I wish to point out, for instance, that recently, that is yesterday, the Canadian Pacific asked for aluminum cars. You will readily understand that I am interested in that because the Saguenay area is an aluminum-producing region. Well, if the C.N.R. is thinking of changing its rolling stock soon, or of improving its rolling stock —something that is required, for a good percentage of it is already quite obsolete—it should consider the advisability of using aluminum in the manufacture of its cars. In doing so, it would not only be using a light material, but a Canadian product as well. And the crown corporation would have everything to gain because, by reducing the weight of the cars, aluminum makes possible an increase in the payload. In short, companies that have put that material to the test in the manufacture of their rolling stock have found that it represents some real savings.

I know that the Alcan company itself has, for its own use, built just such a car. The practical technical proof having been established, the government should examine the advisability of using that material, which is a real Canadian product—except, of course, for the raw material—in the manufacture of the equipment required by the Department of Transport and especially the Canadian National Railways.

I should like to state briefly at this time that the residents of the Saguenay district have asked the government repeatedly and for a long time to consider the advisability of completing the railroad around lake St. John. At present, the line goes from Dolbeau to Chambord where it is connected to the railroad which serves the Chicoutimi area, via Hebertville, so that on a distance of some 60 miles there is no railway service.

In the past, several industries have thought of establishing themselves on the north shore of lake St. John but they dropped the idea because of the lack of essential transportation facilities and went elsewhere.

There are vast mineral deposits in the north part of the riding of Lake St. John. Northern Quebec could well open up on that part of the Saguenay district and on lake St. John in particular. I know that in the future the mining production of the Mistassini will have to pass by the Saguenay area. That will compel the government to build that railroad and to extend it towards the north.

Mr. Chairman, there was a debate recently on a bill to set up an economic council. That body will certainly have to work in close association with the Department of Transport if it wishes to contribute to the orientation and the economic growth of underdeveloped areas where progress is slow.

As I said, we have two industries in the Saguenay district, paper and aluminum. They date back to the turn of the century and we now have a labour surplus because their production is for export. We cannot encourage secondary industries to settle in the Saguenay area because of the high transportation costs of their production to the exterior markets and the populous centres is prohibitive.

Mr. Chairman, the transportation system will be a direct and very important factor on the future industrial growth in Canada, in the province of Quebec, and particularly in the Saguenay area where I live. That is why I strongly urge the minister to consider the economic situation of the Saguenay area in the light of that disadvantage. Almost 300,000 people live in that area which is serviced by a very outmoded railway, badly in need of renovation. We need also better shipping services. We need an improved air service, so that the companies that would be attracted by cheap power will settle in the Saguenay district.

I believe that the preferential rates granted by the Department of Transport help balance production costs in the various parts of the country. If we objected to the subsidies paid by the government to the C.N.R. we did not object to the subsidies themselves but to the fact that they allowed the C.N.R. to compete against a transportation system which is also entitled to exist and expand. I refer to the trucking industry.

We suggested, and at that time our Liberal friends supported us, that those subsidies should be paid to shippers whoever they are, in order to cut transportation costs. If someone prefers to use trucks, it is obvious that it will cost him more than if he used the C.N.R., but he will benefit from this adjustment in subsidies granted to transportation. In my opinion, the Minister of Transport would render a great service to the people of the Saguenay area if he would take these factors into consideration.

Our area needs new industries. Those industries will settle in the Saguenay area when we have eliminated that obstacle, which seems to be the only one, that is the cost of transportation for their finished products to the export and domestic markets. In fact, the Saguenay area is fairly well situated, if not in a better situation than any other part of this country, because it can use the magnificent Saguenay river up to Bagotville.

We need port facility improvements, but I especially want to tell the minister that Bagotville is, in my opinion, the best place to erect the planned warehouses for the storage of feed grain. Last year that question was raised several times here in the house; I myself raised it this year and I take advantage of this opportunity to deal with the matter again, because farmers in the Saguenay area rely very much on those future developments. I contacted every agricultural organization in the Saguenay area and if they were not previously convinced of the necessity of this improvement, they are now unanimous in admitting it.

I know that the ministers of agriculture and transport have received representations to that effect from those organizations. I am convinced that the government would make people happy if it were building this warehouse in Bagotville or in Chicoutimi—at any rate the choice of the site is merely a technical matter—as soon as possible, in order to enable our farmers to get feed grain at a reasonable price and especially to make it available all year round.

In the past, transport and grain tycoons have unfortunately created shortages so that a great number of our people could not get the grain they needed.

While on this subject I should like to tell the house that the Department of Transport intimated that consideration is being given to improving the air transport system and the air fleet.

When, three weeks ago, I took part in the debate on the budget, I submitted to the Minister of Transport the necessity of exerting some pressure—and I do mean pressure—on the president of T.C.A., so that he would choose the Caravelle, which was being suggested to him. Actually, that aircraft is known to offer all the advantages and guarantees of the so-called medium-range aircraft.

At present, the officers of the Department of Transport are deciding what aircraft to pick from among the three that have been suggested. We all know, however, that two of these planes are in fact one and the same, both being Caravelles, the second just slightly modified.

Mr. Chairman, I feel that the minister should see to it that this selection is made as soon as possible and that those 50 planes, the cost of which wil be above $200 million, are built in Montreal, which would certainly help improve the current unemployment situation in Montreal, and at the same time contribute to reducing our yearly trade deficit. This, in my opinion, would be a practical contribution from the Minister of Transport to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) who tries and wants to try balancing his budget and, above all, balance our trade deficit.

On the other hand, I agree that should these planes be built in Montreal, the cost might be a few million dollars higher, but I am sure that any such extra expenditures would be more than compensated, because the unemployment insurance fund would not have to support those unemployed who are at present getting benefits, and because we would not have to give any more assistance to our unemployed. In a word, this country would benefit from the building of those Caravelle aircraft in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, there is another matter on which I would like to comment, and it concerns the air transport division. I want to talk about Trans-Canada Air Lines. Representations were made to the minister to the effect that the name of that corporation should be changed and the hon. member for St. Maurice-Lafleche (Mr. Chretien) has a bill to that effect on the order paper. As a matter of fact, this measure is identical with the one moved last year by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh), providing that the company should simply be known as "Air Canada", since, Air Canada is at the present time known throughout the world as the name of this crown corporation. I cannot see any merit in the objection raised by the Minister of Transport who said that the cost of such a change would be prohibitive, when I consider that the Canadian National Railways, some time ago, had all their cars repainted with the new "N" initial on the side. I am wondering what would be the cost of changing the name on those planes—

(Text):

Mr. McIlraith: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Yes.

Mr. McIlraith: Is he suggesting that taking an aircraft out of operation when there are only very few in operation for the company, is comparable to taking a few railway cars out of use from among many thousands, for a few hours, for a much different kind of painting job?

(Translation):

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out to the minister that I worked myself in industry and I know how long it would take to paint over those planes which actually are grounded for several hours each month for inspection. Those planes must go through adjustment and maintenance routines when they are in service. Besides they remain in hangars for days on end for repairs and checking and I am convinced that the painting over of the fuselage and the lettering of the words Air Canada would raise no major problem. In fact, I suggest to the hon. minister to inquire directly from the maintenance service division, not from the brass hats, but from the little people, those responsible for the maintenance of the planes and indeed, he will be in a position to reply that the painting of the words Air Canada on the planes does not constitute the tremendous job that he seems to indicate to the house.

I think we want to have a bilingual country; I think bilingualism is valuable and that we, as Canadians, must be prepared to foot the bill. In fact, if it was thought necessary to place the letters C.N. on the C.N.R. railway cars, we feel that the painting of the words Air Canada on aircraft would mean a very small expenditure. Indeed, I will put a question on the order paper in order to find out what was the cost of painting all the C.N.R. railway cars, and I am convinced that when I get that information, the minister will see for himself that the cost was significantly higher than what it would cost to paint the words Air Canada on the aircraft. Besides, I do not think that expenditure in the field of transportation worked a hardship on Canada.

Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) made reference to the labour question and I also should like to discuss it.

I know that all hon. members often receive representations from C.N.R. employees, through their labour union, with regard to their salaries. I know that this is a delicate matter and more particularly the relationship between unions, employees and employer, the latter, in this case, being the C.N.R. itself. But all the complaints we receive arise from the fact that C.N.R. employees are now submitted to a kind of dictatorship by their union. As I am a workman myself, I am not afraid to raise this point because I worked in the unions, and I have always thought that they should have Canadian leadership, and that we should not get our instructions from people abroad.

It seems that, at this time, C.N.R. workers are members of a union affiliated with an American organization, or which is nothing but an American union. I think that C.N.R. employees are now facing a problem because they are not enjoying freedom of action within their union, and they are making a concerted effort to obtain their own Canadian union which will be entirely dissociated from the international American union. Now, to my mind, we should all, as Canadians and members of parliament support their efforts to that end.

I am, indeed, giving my support to the part played by the unions, but I want Canadian workers to unite in Canadian unions, and be represented by Canadians who will, first and foremost, defend Canadian interests.

At this time, it seems that instructions are given by leaders living in a foreign country. Now, as those directives come from foreigners, they are not necessarily in accord with the needs or interests of the country where the unions are.

Mr. Chairman, I want to call the minister's attention to this matter and ask him to give us his full co-operation, to the extent of his ability, with regard to the efforts made by Canadian workers to free themselves completely from American control in the field of industrial relations.

Mr. Chairman, there are several other matters I would have liked to broach, but the time at my disposal prevents me from doing so. However, I want to point out to the minister that there are some employees in the Department of Transport who are not protected by workmen's compensation. Some hon. members will certainly find this strange, but myself made inquiry, and so did others, I trust.

As a matter of fact, it is about a Department of Transport employee who had an accident and remained without help for three days. He was in a remote spot deprived of any means of communication, and it is only after three days that he managed to reach a hospital. He had to pay all the costs. This employee lost the use of an eye, which, in my opinion, is a most serious injury. Now, because of this accident, this man is unable to hold a job today. He himself had to pay all medical and hospital costs. Unable to find work since the accident, he has to live on public welfare. Everybody knows that no company wants to hire a one-eyed worker.

I wish to point out this case to the house, because the Department of Transport claims it has no responsibility at all in the matter. This man had been hired by an employee of the Department of Transport who is a lighthouse keeper. According to the regulations of the Department of Transport, one of their employees is authorized to hire an assistant. However, that assistant is not paid by the lighthouse keeper, but directly by the department which sends him a cheque issued by the department. He is subject to income tax and his unemployment insurance dues are deducted at the source. In fact, he is a federal government employee who works with government appliances in a government building and on government property.

In fact, I know that as a Canadian and an ordinary citizen, if I hire someone to work on my property, I am responsible for him. For my own protection, I carry insurance against possible damage or injury to my employees. I know that the government must also have some, but I do not think it is justified in hiding itself behind a mere formality, thus refusing to assume its true responsibility in this matter.

The government must try to fill in this gap for, though it may be a small detail, it could now do much harm to Canadians employed by the government.

I therefore ask the minister—I do not blame him, for the fault lies in the regulations—but I ask the minister to make sure that these regulations are changed so that all lighthouse keepers may be protected by the Workmen's Compensation Act.

I hope that I have made that clear to the parliamentary secretary to the hon. minister and that he will take note of this remark.

In the Saguenay area, there is a magnificent lake, called lake St. John; no doubt everybody has heard about it. It is a wonderful resort area and no other can compare with it. It is also a place where there is plenty of fish and we have there a unique kind of fish called wananish.

You may ask what this has got to do with the Department of Transport? Well, Mr. Chairman, I am coming back immediately to the subject. Villages scattered all around the lake, overlooking it, with splendid beaches, and wharves erected by the Department of Public Works but under the responsibility of the Department of Transport. However, rocks and reefs are scattered around the lake and they are dangerous. Mr. Chairman, thousands of boats daily ply the waters of lake St. John. I would very much like to see the Department of Transport place signal buoys at the dangerous spots and if possible get rid of the larger reefs.

Mr. Chairman, in closing, I wish to thank the house for giving me the opportunity to express my views on some problems of the Department of Transport.

(Text):

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, like many other hon. members who have spoken I should like to congratulate the minister upon assuming his new responsibilities as Minister of Transport. I have known him personally since I came to the house and other members of my family have met him. We have always found him to be a very congenial gentleman and certainly very easy to get along with.

I wish to deal with one phase of the activities of this department which affects western Canada, which is dealt with in the report of the MacPherson royal commission on transportation. Before doing so I would like to reply to the minister's remarks regarding the discretion of the B.B.G. and ministerial discretion. I think he would agree with me, as he is also a lawyer, that, like the board of transport commissioners, they have certain judicial discretion which they exercise as an administrative body. That discretion is set out by statute. The B.B.G. also has discretionary powers set out by statute. Just as the cabinet can decide to veto or accept a recommendation or decision of the board of transport commissioners, so can the minister decide to accept or reject a judgment of that board. I fail to see very much difference in that particular kind of discretion.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Woolliams: Certainly.

Mr. McIlraith: Would the hon. member not agree that the two pieces of legislation are not parallel at all. I refer to the hon. member's reference to the board of transport commissioners and the cabinet. The Radio Act and the other legislation dealing with the board of broadcast governors are quite different. One piece of legislation sets out a duty for the board of broadcast governors and a duty for the minister; and the board of broadcast governors fulfilled its duty and the minister fulfilled his duty.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, but I was merely putting that forward as an analogy. I think the minister will go this far, that there is still a legal discretion which he can exercise, irrespective of whether that power is spelled out by that particular legislation. I have not been briefed on this matter recently but I say the minister has a discretion and he can exercise that discretion. That is a discretion within the realm of the responsibility of the minister himself. Then there is the discretion of the board, whose powers are set out in the act. However, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to get into a legal argument on the powers of the B.B.G. or the powers of the board of transport commissioners. I was merely pointing this out as an analogy and saying that he still has a discretion which he can exercise, and a discretion which he does exercise under the law, that is his responsibility.

I am rather sorry that the Minister of Agriculture is absent on Fridays, because on one occasion in the house he said—and this matter will be relevant to the question before the committee—he was praying that the rain was stopping in western Canada. I would point out that in western Canada at the moment there is growing one of the largest crops seen on the prairies and it appears from reports of the wheat pool and the grain elevator companies that there is going to be a bumper crop. No other industry in Canada, in my opinion, is affected more by transportation than is the agricultural industry, particularly in western Canada. I recall the terms of reference being laid down when the royal commission on transportation was set up, and the former prime minister, now the Leader of the Opposition, stating that the Crowsnest pass agreement was the economic Magna Carta of western Canada. I think that is true. This was an agreement entered into with the railways at that time, and that type of agreement which controls the freight rates on grain is the economic Magna Carta of western Canada. The margin which exists between profit and the costs of production of grain might easily be wiped out if the freight rates on western Canada grain were increased.

I also recall certain statements of hon. gentlemen then in opposition, particularly those of the present Minister of Justice, who said he thought the Crowsnest pass freight rates were like chains or shackles around the railway companies. It was set out very clearly by the then government, the Conservative government, and by the then prime minister that there would be no change in the Crowsnest pass freight rates.

I wish to come to grips with another question for a few moments, because the hon. member from Rosetown-Biggar discussed the question of rail line abandonment. I want not only to discuss the question of rail line abandonment as far as freight is concerned, but also as far as passengers are concerned. I should also like to point out why certain lines should not be abandoned. The Minister of Transport did answer some questions in this regard today. However, I think when we are dealing with the question of the abandonment of railway lines, whether passenger or freight, we must first of all have a national policy on the subject. I think we should look carefully at what was recommended by the MacPherson royal commission in this regard. In dealing with the abandonment of passenger railway lines I should like to take issue at this time with the abandonment of a particular line between the city of Calgary and the city of Saskatoon, known by people in that area as the Goose lake line. Those passenger trains were taken off, and at the present time, except for T.C.A., they find there is no other means of transportation between those two cities by anything like a direct route. There is a bus, but it stops at a little place called Oyen inside the border of Alberta. It spends seven hours there; passengers are forced to spend seven hours in the town before continuing their journey to Calgary. I recall the hon. member for Lethbridge asking the Prime Minister a question about this, and the right hon. gentleman said he would look into it personally. But the line has been abandoned and nothing has been done about it to date.

I think we should look at what the MacPherson commission had to say in this regard. It was certainly not in favour of abandoning lines holus-bolus. I realize the minister has suggested that this is not the occasion to get into a detailed discussion about the abandonment of railways, but this is a subject of such importance to agriculture that I hope I may be allowed to make a few observations on it and to remind hon. members of what was said by the royal commission on transportation set up by the previous government under Mr. MacPherson. People familiar with transportation in all its phases gave evidence before this commission, and it is on the basis of this evidence that the recommendations were made. On the subject of the passenger service I should like to refer to volume 1 of that report, dated March, 1961, page 60, where it states:

> To facilitate the reduction of the passenger deficits, we recommend that the pertinent statutes be amended to enable the railways, upon application to the board of transport commissioners, to remove any uneconomic passenger service except when the board is satisfied that no reasonable alternative public highway exists.

I think that had been overlooked when they decided to remove the passenger train service between Saskatoon, a city of 100,000 people and Calgary, a city of 300,000, without any alternative method of transportation being available as far as the railway is concerned.

If we read volumes 2 and 3 of the report we find there is evidence to suggest that the provision of a passenger service in Canada is uneconomic, no matter to how great an extent the facilities are used. As an example, I understand that at one time there were two luxury passenger trains known as the Canadian and the Dominion. I am told by the employees of the Dominion train that even when it was packed to capacity they were losing money on the route from Calgary to the east. So it is obviously not good enough to be able to say only that the service itself is uneconomic. These trains should only be removed—I make the suggestion to the minister—when, in addition to being uneconomic, the cabinet is satisfied that no reasonably satisfactory alternative public highway exists. There is a public highway between the two cities I have named but it is not paved all the way and, surely, if a passenger train is to be removed, these things should be taken into consideration. As I have said, at the present time, passengers on the 400 mile route by bus have to spend seven hours waiting in a small town, in some cases without proper accommodation.

Certain recommendations were made by the commission with regard to freight. I think it must be acknowledged by any government that a revolution is taking place in western Canada. I think that in the next ten years we are going to see a new picture. It has to come, it is true, in these days of automation which are having such an undeniable impact on the farmers of western Canada. It is now possible to take away 500 or 800 bushels of grain in a truck. It is, therefore, easier to take that grain a greater distance than was formerly the case, and it is possible to conceive, especially as these railways are being subsidized by the taxpayers' money, that some of these lines may have to be abandoned. But they must be abandoned in some kind of order. In the near future much larger elevators will probably be built to replace small country elevators every eight, ten or twelve miles. In the meantime, a definite plan must be set up so that the abandonment of lines where necessary will not cause hardship to our farmers.

I can recall a debate in which the present Minister of Trade and Commerce was discussing the building of a large elevator in the town of Tisdale, the gateway to the Carrot river valley, and many thousands of acres of magnificent farmland. The minister told the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale that he did not think this was a proper place for an elevator. But maybe the hon. member in question has put his finger on the revolution which is taking place in the west, because I can see the day when these larger elevators will be built in western Canada in much larger numbers as grain is taken to market over longer distances.

Be this as it may, lines cannot be taken up without a definite plan in mind. This is why the former government appointed a royal commission to make certain that a national plan will be set up so as to avoid hardship. I suggest to the minister that he and his department should study most carefully the recommendation made by Mr. MacPherson and his commission in this regard. I can say this of Mr. M. A. MacPherson, a lawyer from Regina: he is a man who has had much experience not only of agriculture but of railroading in western Canada, and of the economy of western Canada in general. At page 65 of the report, the following paragraph appears:

> In the light of these considerations, of the analysis presented in chapter 2, and of the recommendations for meeting passenger service deficits and the problem of light density lines, we recommend that in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway a sum of $9 million annually shall be paid on behalf of the export grain traffic as a contribution to constant costs. This should place export grain traffic in a position comparable to other segments of traffic in the light of the permissive level of earnings.

That was the answer to the complaint made by the railways. In spite of this treatment by the royal commission the railways were saying at that time they were losing money on the freighting of grain from western Canada and the lakehead to Vancouver and Port Churchill. Then they say:

> Making adjustments necessary due to the different financial structure of the Canadian National Railways, the payment recommended to that company as a contribution on behalf of the export grain traffic to overheads is $7.3 million.

The shipping of grain is one commodity which the railways ship differently from any other. In western Canada you see these grain trains going through which, particularly under diesel power, are almost a mile in length, consisting of cars carrying grain across to the ports, where it is loaded on to boats and thus reaches the export market. The commission said that if losses are occasioned in the shipping of grain—the C.N.R. shows a deficit in practically all its operations although the C.P.R. does show a profit —the government should set up a subsidy so that the returns on that commodity will be comparable with others.

Then on page 66 of the report they say:

> When the process of rationalizing plant by the elimination of rail lines occasioning a system net loss has substantially progressed, or when it appears that there has been any other substantial change in the overhead costs of the railways, the constant costs of the railways should be re-evaluated. After these re-evaluations the remuneration paid on behalf of the movement of grain and grain products to export positions at statutory and related rates should be adapted to the changed situation.

The commission say that there should not be any change in the Crowsnest pass freight rates. When the Minister of Justice, who is not here today, was in opposition he said that these freight rates were shackles around the railways. But the commission say that if there is any loss, subsidies must be applied to make these commodities comparable with others. The former prime minister, the present Leader of the Opposition, said that the Crowsnest pass rates were the economic Magna Carta of western Canada and should not be interfered with, because the margin between a loss and a profit is so narrow on wheat farms, with the high cost of machinery, that these people could not stay in business. That is the point I wish to make particularly, when dealing with estimates, and in reference to the recommendations made by the royal commission on transportation. I sincerely hope that this commission will not suffer the fate of other royal commissions appointed under another government, and lie on the shelf in the library, because some fine recommendations are made here by a body of men who heard the evidence of people who understood business and industry. The royal commission on transportation was long overdue. Their report is now in the hands of departmental officials and it should be checked thoroughly before the government commence abandoning rail lines holus-bolus.

The Minister of Trade and Commerce mentioned another problem in western Canada concerning the loss of markets. One of our problems is getting wheat to the ports. One of the problems the former government were faced with in western Canada when they took office in 1957 was that box cars were unavailable. There were many sidings, villages and towns which for months on end had no trains taking out wheat. Most of the quotas in 1956 and 1957 were either two or five bushels per acre, and many farmers could not get grain to the elevator because there were no box cars. The time to think about these things is not in September or October when the problem arises; I suggest with respect to the minister that the time to be thinking about this problem is now. If you recall, Mr. Chairman, there was a report made by Mr. Bracken, and as a result the allocation of box cars certainly improved. Anyone in western Canada will admit that the transportation of grain and other commodities out of western Canada improved under the Conservative government 100 per cent compared with the situation under the previous government with C. D. Howe.

When dealing with the question of line abandonment I might say that I do not think the board of transport commissioners have the capacity to deal with all the applications. I say this with no disrespect to the personnel of the board. I have appeared before them and they are fine gentlemen. But if they are to consider each application individually they will not be able to do so in an orderly fashion. The board must either be enlarged or some other body set up in order to consider a properly planned abandonment, so as to protect the agricultural industry which for the last five or six years has been in a pretty healthy state. There has to be a gradual working out of rail abandonment which will logically fit into the resolution which has taken place. New economic circumstances must be considered if railways are abandoned holus-bolus. Not only must you consider the industry, but the people and farmers who live in the towns, villages and cities, and also the personnel of the railways themselves. That is one recommendation which I would make.

In spite of the fact that the minister says he has legislation hot in the oven, I would like to hear what is the policy of the present Liberal government with regard to rail abandonment in western Canada. I hope he does not reply in the way he replied to the hon. member for Port Arthur and say that he will discuss it on another day or two weeks from now. This government assured the Canadian people that they were people of decision. Well, we have had the first 60 days, and we know that it will take another 60 days to undo what they did in that first 60 days. We want to know what the government is going to about rail abandonment, how it will occur, what board will have the power to make decisions, and whether the government recognize that a revolution is taking place as far as agriculture and the marketing of grain is concerned. What is the government going to do this fall when western Canada produces 600 million bushels of grain? A recent article was put out by the C.N.R. to the effect that there is a shortage of box cars. Is the government meeting with officials and discussing the problem with the companies? Now is the time to build new box cars to haul the grain from the particular marketing areas in western Canada to the ports. We have heard a lot about unemployment, and this would certainly help this problem as well. I should like to hear from the minister what is his reaction to the recommendations made by the MacPherson commission on transportation.

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Chairman, my remarks will be confined to the air services branch and air policy. First of all, I should like to make reference to the point raised by the hon. member for Lake St. John. He referred to the private bill introduced by the hon. member of St. Maurice-Lafleche to change the name of Trans-Canada Air Lines to Air Canada. I should like to say that I personally favour that change. It is a very simple name. I would not want to get into a discussion about how long it would take to repaint an aeroplane or a fleet, but if the decision were taken I think this could be worked out some time in advance.

A number of bodies in the country during the past year or two have made the suggestion that there should be a department of civil aviation set up quite apart from the Department of Transport. I think this is a very good suggestion and has merit, for several reasons. At the present time the Department of Transport, it seems to me, is an administrative colossus. This department has many branches for which it is responsible, such as the air transport board, the board of transport commissioners, the maritime commissioners and the Canadian National Railways. Then there are the various branches within the department such as air services, marine services and so on. It is a tremendously large department and it seems to me that air services, important as they are in Canada, merit a ministry and minister of their own and should not simply have an assistant deputy minister and be part of a larger department.

I think the suggestion of a department of civil aviation is merited on other grounds. Not only is the Department of Transport far too big, but the setting up of a separate department would be recognition of the very important part that civil aviation has played in this country in the past and certainly will play in the future. I think the industry deserves that recognition.

I note, too, Mr. Chairman, in checking the proposed expenditures of the department that they amount to approximately $252 million for the next year for all branches of the department and $146 million of this total is for the air services branch. That branch alone under an assistant deputy minister spends more money than most other government departments, more money than citizenship and immigration, defence production, external affairs, fisheries, forestry, justice, mines and some others and is exceeded only by national defence, finance, labour, health, public works and veterans affairs. So I would hope that the government would give consideration to this particular point, that at some time in the near future we should have a separate department of civil aviation in Canada.

I have been studying at some length a publication issued recently by the department entitled "Canada In The Jet Age", a report on the Department of Transport air service needs for the period 1962 to 1972. The forecast of development of civil aviation for the next 10 years predicts the services necessary to handle the increased traffic. Certainly there will be considerable growth in civil aviation and the report gives some forecast of the amount of traffic, the number of landings, the amount of air cargo that will be carried and the expenditures which the department will have to make to meet the greatly increased use of aircraft in this country. There will be very great expenditure.

In examining some of the tables in the report I find that the first table gives a forecast of the approximate expenditures by the air services branch for the next 10 years. I note that the figure for the period 1962 to 1972 is approximately $1½ billion. I notice in table V that revenues are estimated at $303 million. One does not expect that revenues will equal expenditures because there are certain necessary public works that have to be undertaken from which there is no particular return. However, it seems to me that very little thought has been given to achieving any sort of balance in air service expenditures.

To give some examples, vast amounts are spent on the St. Lawrence seaway, but some thought is given to the tolls charged in order to achieve some sort of balance between expenditures and revenues. Similarly, in connection with the railways we also concern ourselves with rail revenues or subsidies. We do not achieve a balance, but at least we give some attention to it and worry about it. But it seems to me that this has not been taken into account, as far as I can determine, in estimating the expenditures for air services during the next decade. I would hope that this particular aspect would be the subject of further investigation.

I should also like to make one other point in this regard. When we think of the very large amounts that have to be spent, perhaps some of these expenditures should be looked at very closely to make sure that we do not end up with a number of white elephants on our hands because of technological change. At the moment I think of the Edmonton airport where a very large amount of money was spent. It is situated a great distance from the city and as a result airports close to the city are now being used for short runs to Calgary and other places. This is the sort of thing I mean when I say that some of these very large amounts should be examined most carefully.

With regard to revenues, Mr. Chairman, I do not know whether the department is receiving sufficient revenue from the commercial air lines for the services provided by it. It may be that it is sufficient, but I wonder whether this matter has been given close attention and I would refer again to the fact that proposed expenditures during the next decade are $1½ billion and estimated revenues are $303 million.

It also seems to me that the former government did themselves out of some revenue five years ago when they made the unfortunate decision to allow Canadian Pacific Airlines to engage in the transcontinental service. When this was being discussed it was predicted that there would be losses to Trans-Canada and hence to the government and the people and this proved to be true. I know that some of the losses incurred by Trans-Canada Air Lines during the past few years have resulted from the fact that they have had to equip themselves with jet aircraft. These are very expensive, and practically all air lines have had this experience. Nevertheless the losses they have incurred have been much greater than they would otherwise have been because of the fact that competition with Canadian Pacific Airlines was allowed. Trans-Canada had undertaken the basic cost of setting up the transcontinental service and what they lost to Canadian Pacific was simply profit taken right off the top. I do not think that this decision will ever be justified. We seem to be saddled with the situation now, but we must remember that this is money lost to the Canadian people in that they have had to make up the deficits of Trans-Canada in the last two or three years.

Two previous speakers, the hon. member for Three Rivers and the hon. member for Lake St. John, have made a plea that Trans-Canada Air Lines should purchase their new jet aircraft from Canadair, and should purchase the Caravelle aircraft. It may well be that Trans-Canada will ultimately select this particular aircraft, but I believe that the corporation should be left free to make its own decision. Their hands are tied to a certain extent. From what we have heard today I believe they are committed to choosing an aircraft with a large amount of Canadian content, but there are two or three companies in competition to supply the aircraft. I should like to see this decision based upon economics and not upon what I would call political economy.

It has been proven in the past that this has been a good policy. Not too many years ago attempts were made to pressure Trans-Canada into buying the CL-44 aircraft and I think events have proven that their decision to obtain the DC-8 was the correct one, because for their particular use the DC-8 has been more versatile. I say again that I deplore the efforts made by politicians in this house to force the corporation to take a particular plane. I hope Trans-Canada is left free to make this decision themselves. They may come to the decision some members want but it should be an independent decision.

There is another matter related to air services to which I should like to make some reference at this time. I refer to a particular group of employees of the Department of Transport, employees who play a most important role in the operation of aircraft in Canada. These are the people who man the air control towers. I imagine that from time to time most members of this house who travel in aircraft are aware of the responsibilities of the pilot and crew. I am not at all sure that they are aware of the tremendous responsibilities which rest on the people who direct air traffic. This responsibility is growing year by year. As aircraft become bigger and faster, the importance of keeping them in the right place at the right altitude, and correctly spaced apart, becomes increasingly difficult.

I believe that this group of employees have made representations to the government concerning their pay and working conditions. If I may put it briefly, their pay is about 33 per cent lower than that of persons in the United States doing the same kind of work. I have watched them at work, and it is very nerve-wracking work. You sit for hours in front of a screen, guiding aircraft. In fact, close to the airport the air traffic controller is the actual navigator of the aircraft. I hope the department will give careful consideration to the representations of the air traffic controllers because they have a most responsible job and I believe they should be well rewarded for it.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to conclude on the point on which I started, namely, the necessity for a department of civil aviation in this country. I should like to read some appropriate sections from a recent editorial in the Montreal Gazette of June 8. I quote:

> The air transport association of Canada has submitted a set of recommendations to the Prime Minister which it believes would bring greater cohesion and harmony to the entire air transport field . . .
> To establish a department of civil aviation would be to alter the trend set by the formation of the Department of Transport in 1936, for the transport department combined marine, railway and civil aviation services.
> Yet there is much to be said for this recommendation. The responsibilities of the Minister of Transport are extremely heavy. The growth of the past 20 years has been sufficiently great to make it doubtful if any one person can really master all the duties for which the minister is directly or indirectly responsible.
> For in addition to administering the department, the minister must report to parliament for Canadian National Railways, Trans-Canada Air Lines, the national harbours board and other bodies. The field of civil aviation has undergone such an expansion that a separate department might well be justified, and the proposal deserves careful consideration.

Mr. Weichel: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a few remarks to the Minister of Transport in connection with the Waterloo-Wellington airport economic survey which has been mentioned to his deputy minister by the hon. members for Wellington South and Waterloo South. This airport has become so popular that extra accommodation is necessary in order to provide adequate service.

About three years ago, approval was extended by this department to the former government for lights which have been installed. This addition to the airport has encouraged the Waterloo-Wellington airport commission each year to go on to greater things. With this in mind, the airport commission has had a survey made which I understand has been sent to the deputy minister for his study. I sincerely hope that this department will give the economic survey serious consideration and will be instrumental in having steps taken to have some of the initial stages of the recommendations commenced as soon as possible.

As the minister is no doubt aware, the need for greater facilities at this fine airport is becoming urgent. A very comprehensive report has been prepared by Mr. W. O. Chisholm, a consulting engineer, as a guide for future development of the airport. The report was compiled with the co-operation of the officers of the Department of Transport in Toronto, and Mr. D. P. Glenn, director of civil aviation at Toronto has intimated that the project will be progressed through Mr. J. R. Baldwin, deputy minister of transport, with the recommendation that an economic survey be made in order to secure authority to implement the first two stages of the plan as soon as possible.

For the information of the minister, I should like to advise him that the Waterloo-Wellington airport is located on a 658 acre site in Waterloo township near Breslau, Ontario. Serving primarily the counties of Waterloo and Wellington, the airport was constructed in 1948 with the aid of the federal Department of Transport and is operated by the Waterloo-Wellington airport commission. Represented on the commission in 1963 are the municipalities of Kitchener, Guelph, Galt, Waterloo, Preston, and Waterloo township. The members of this commission are outstanding citizens of our area and have given much of their time and money to bring about the excellent progress that has been made.

The airport consists of two surface runways and a grassed strip, in a triangular layout. The prevailing winds favour the two surfaced runways for the major part of the time. Published information regarding the airport is as follows: airport elevation, 1,030 feet; runway 13-31, 4,100 feet; runway 7-25, 3,700 feet; grass strip, 2,800 feet; runway 13-31 is lighted for night flying. Aircraft fuel and maintenance services are available as well as hangar storage facilities.

The airport is the headquarters for the Waterloo-Wellington flying club, and Swift Airways Limited has established a commercial aircraft centre at the site. In all, the airport is being operated very progressively and is situated in the centre of a prosperous business and industrial complex. The design and development of the original airport was well planned and the site is well suited. With few exceptions the surrounding land use is presently agricultural, so that any necessary additional restrictions in the area may be imposed at this time with a minimum of difficulty. There is a keen interest in flying in this area, as well as an increasing business use and realization of the importance of the airport facilities. Yes, this airport is very important, as we have well over 600 industries in Waterloo North, Waterloo South and Wellington South counties, along with many others within a radius of 25 miles.

Considering the relatively short time the airport has been in existence, the activity which has developed is remarkable. This activity has reached the point where taxiway facilities and a plan for future development are required. It is my sincere hope that in the near future members of the Waterloo-Wellington airport commission may have the opportunity of meeting with the minister and his deputy so that this economic survey may be fully discussed. Then, perhaps, in the near future this airport may become one of Canada's most important in the handling of commercial and passenger plane service.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Chairman, there are two or three matters I should like to discuss briefly while we are on the first item of the estimates of the Department of Transport. There are some other matters I might prefer to bring up when we get to the details of the estimates. Like other members, I am pleased that the new Minister of Transport is having an early opportunity of bringing in the estimates of his department for the consideration of the committee. I think all hon. members have appreciated the constructive, co-operative attitude which the minister displayed in answering various questions put to him so far.

I wish to deal briefly with the alteration announced for harbour commissions. Earlier the minister referred to the fact that certain legislation was being introduced in the other place. I have no idea what approach that legislation is going to take, but I think it indicated there would be some move to co-ordinate more closely the operations of the national harbours board and the various independent harbour commissions across the country. I hope this may have some relation to the information brought to my attention, that the two appointees of the government to the Port Alberni board of harbour commissioners have received notice that their term of office will not be renewed.

Up to a point I would not deny that there may have been certain political overtones in the appointment of the commissioners whose terms are expiring, but other commissioners connected with that board hope that appointees will not be decided from a political point of view. Going back to the genesis of the Port Alberni board of harbour commissioners, there were certain political aspects to that situation which involved certain internal relations within the minister's party. Although I have never been associated with his party, I may have become better acquainted with those details than the minister himself. However that is ancient history, and the only reason I bring it to his attention is that I hope when he may be considering the renewal of terms of office of government members he will not be governed entirely by political considerations.

Another relatively minor matter I wish to raise has to do with the radio regulations and the situation that governs the installation of radio broadcasting and receiving equipment, particularly in the marine field on the Pacific coast. I have made some inquiries as to the availability of a consolidation of the regulations issued, and according to the best of my information the current regulations are not available in consolidated form. I suggest they should be made available in that form to all hon. members, to those who sell the equipment and to those who instal it. I also hope such a consolidation could be easily kept up to date, without those concerned having to consult the various issues of the Canada Gazette, part II, where various amending regulations appear from time to time.

While the old saying that ignorance of the law is no excuse, may be a fine principle in theory, I believe hon. members would agree that as regulations become more and more complex, particularly in the technical fields, provision should be made by this house whereby the public can have easy access to a knowledge of the law, particularly where it exists in regulatory form under the authority granted by parliament to the governor in council.

Another matter I wish to raise involves a question of principle. A situation has developed which requires a re-assessment of the terms of reference which have been given to the air transport board in the performance of the duties assigned to it under the Aeronautics Act. I am referring to a situation in which one of the air lines on the west coast, Pacific Western Airlines, was involved in a strike with certain of its employees. The air transport board, in accordance with the principles under which it operates, had given authority to Pacific Western Airlines to operate what constituted a monopoly in transportation service on their class 1 route between Vancouver and Port Hardy. However, when the strike developed, in accordance with the established principles of labour legislation the unions concerned established picket lines.

Many of the normal patrons of Pacific Western Airlines are members of unions and they object quite strongly to the idea of crossing a legally established picket line. This situation put the air transport board in a rather invidious position, because its members apparently understood their terms of reference to apply only within the narrow confines of the text of the Aeronautics Act. In effect, by their action they placed people in the position where they had the alternative of crossing a picket line or not being able to travel freely between their normal place of work and the place where many of them live. The loggers of the Pacific coast are organized into a union, the international woodworkers of America, and the union took steps to enable its members to avoid the dilemma in which they had been placed. They had no transportation at all, or they had to travel by a very roundabout, circuitous, time consuming and expensive route.

In order to solve this dilemma the union tried to arrange to charter an aircraft from one of the other air lines, which would in effect have enabled the members of that organization to get back and forth without the necessity of using the facilities of Pacific Western Airlines while this strike was in progress. They made the charter arrangement, and one flight actually took place on April 2 this year. However, the air transport board took the initiative and ordered B.C. Air Lines, which was the firm from which the charter had been obtained, to cease and desist operating under any such charter, on the ground that it roughly paralleled the flight route of the established P.W.A. class 1 service and was in effect an attempt to circumvent the decision of the air transport board to grant that licence.

I would not suggest that in the ordinary terms of reference this particular arrangement was not, in effect, one which would have circumvented the protection which had been granted to Pacific Western Airlines in operating their class 1 service. But I would suggest that the minister and this house should make it clear that in circumstances such as these the air transport board should operate under somewhat broader terms of reference than they in fact operated under in this case. I think few hon. members of this house—at least, I hope few hon. members of this house—would question that there is the well established right for citizens in a free country to choose not to cross a picket line which has been established as a result of a labour dispute. I think that should be recognized as being a very basic, individual freedom in this country. To my mind it is a matter of great regret that a body set up and operating under the authority of parliament should have followed a course of action which in effect denied that right to certain Canadian citizens.

For this reason, Mr. Chairman, I certainly hope the minister will take a lead in seeing that the terms of reference of the air transport board are such that a similar situation will not again develop. As a matter of fact, as I understand the present provisions of the Aeronautics Act it is quite within the powers of the air transport board and the minister, or of the governor in council, to deal with a situation such as this as and when it arises. Section 13 of the Aeronautics Act says:

> Subject to the approval of the governor in council, the board may make regulations:

Then it gives quite a list of them. Paragraph (f) says:

> Excluding from the operation of the whole or any part of this part or any regulation, order or direction made or issued pursuant thereto, any carrier or commercial air service or class or group of air carriers or commercial air services;

I would suggest that within the authority of the air transport board and the governor in council there is, under the present provisions of the Aeronautics Act, authority for the air transport board, with the approval of the governor in council, to exercise the proper discretionary powers that are set out in section 13, which would have covered a situation of the kind I have been attempting to describe to the committee. The proper course of action in this instance would have been for the air transport board to raise this matter with the governor in council, with a recommendation that for the duration of this particular dispute the normal provisions of the protected class 1 licence under which Pacific Western Airlines was operating should not apply in a way which would, in effect, give Pacific Western Airlines a monopoly position when the union concerned, at its own expense and for the benefit entirely of its own membership, was prepared to make an arrangement which would enable those members so desiring to avoid crossing this picket line.

As other hon. members have said, the ramifications of the Department of Transport are very wide and varied. There are a great many matters which I would like to bring forward at this time. However, I have selected what I considered to be the most important matter of broad principle involving the general administration of the department and the agencies under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Transport. This matter has come to my attention since last I had an opportunity of rising on the estimates of this particular department; for that reason I have decided to confine my remarks, at least on the first item of the estimates of the department, to this particular subject and to the other two matters which I mentioned earlier.

Item stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, the business submitted to the house for Monday will be as indicated by the Secretary of State yesterday; that is, the appropriations bill and the economic council legislation.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, that is a much clearer exposition of the business for next week than we have yet heard this session.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, July 15, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CHEVRIER—PROVISIONS OF FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT RESPECTING VALIDITY OF CERTAIN APPOINTMENTS

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On Friday the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) rose on a question of privilege, as reported at page 2121 of Hansard, which I think I can summarize. I quote:

> My point of privilege is that what we now have is precisely what we had last June. We have the government construing that the Financial Administration Act or regulations made under it gives them authority to do something which the act itself says cannot be done. The Financial Administration Act says that no appointments by the treasury board can be made under it.

The hon. member's statement in this respect is not correct. If hon. members would look at section 5(2) of the Financial Administration Act they would find it provides that the governor in council may authorize the treasury board to exercise all or any of the powers, other than powers of appointment, of the governor in council under the Civil Service Act, the Civil Service Superannuation Act, the Defence Services Pension Act, and parts II to VI of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act.

The action taken was not under any of the foregoing acts, nor was it an "appointment". Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act authorizes the governor in council to make regulations with respect to the conditions under which contracts may be entered into, and it was pursuant to these regulations that the contracts were made. Section 5(2) of the Financial Administration Act has no application whatever to the present situation.

MR. KNOWLES—MOTION FOR REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF SESSIONAL PAPER 39B

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege may I suggest that what I indicated on Friday was that the opinion in the name of Mr. Driedger tabled by the Prime Minister indicated that though it was purported that these arrangements were made under the government contracts regulations in accordance with section 39 of the Financial Administration Act, they do not come within the terms of the government contracts regulations themselves, as Mr. Driedger himself pointed out.

It seems to me that since we have had a question of privilege and a counter question of privilege raised in connection with the subject, the matter should be gone into. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam:

> That sessional paper No. 39B be referred to the committee on privileges and elections for study and report.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate the remarks of both hon. gentlemen, but I am sure the house will realize that I should like to study the matter a little more thoroughly to make sure there is a prima facie case. Perhaps the house would agree to let me reserve further remarks until tomorrow, and the mover of the motion could let the motion stand until then.

Mr. Knowles: I will be happy to let the motion stand as notice until Your Honour has considered the matter.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

Third report of standing committee on miscellaneous private bills—Mr. Wahn.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORRIS COMMISSION—TABLING OF REPORT

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, hon. members will be interested to learn that I am today tabling the report of the industrial inquiry commission appointed to investigate and report on the disruption of shipping in the great lakes and the St. Lawrence river system. The schedule of this report will be tabled later when it is printed.

Hon. Mr. Justice Thomas G. Norris was appointed an industrial inquiry commission just over a year ago to carry out this investigation. As hon. members know, he has conducted an exhaustive inquiry into a very difficult situation, and merits the thanks of all Canadians for the painstaking public service he has given at much personal inconvenience to himself.

Officials of my department and of others will be examining the report and its recommendations to see what further action may be necessary. It has been arranged that hon.

members will be receiving copies of the report from the queen's printer as soon as possible. Copies are also being released to the parties concerned, and to the press.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour based on his announcement of the tabling of the Norris commission report. If I understood him correctly he said that the interested parties and the press would receive copies of the report now but that members of parliament would receive them as soon as possible. Could an effort be made so that members of parliament might receive copies simultaneously with the press?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think the words "as soon as possible" were unfortunate. My understanding was that copies would be available to all hon. members as soon as the announcement was made in the house. I hope they are in the letter boxes now.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

TABLING OF LETTER SUGGESTING MEETING ON JULY 26-27

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to table copies in English and in French of letters which were mailed last Friday to the premiers of the provinces, in which I have suggested it would be valuable to hold an early and preliminary federal-provincial meeting, and I have proposed July 26 and 27 as possible dates for such a meeting.

I should like to inform the house, because it has a bearing on this invitation, as to the government's intentions regarding the conference and the business of the house which is related to it. If a conference can be held on the dates suggested the government will not propose to proceed this week or next week with the second reading of the bill designed to promote employment by financial assistance, in the form of loans with provincial approval, to enable municipalities to augment or accelerate their capital works programs.

The government plans to proceed with the bill during the week following the conference, that is the week of July 29, which could be the last week before the house adjourns. This is legislation which it is urgent to have in force soon so the municipalities can plan their work for this winter with knowledge of the financial assistance for which their representatives have repeatedly asked and which the government believes to be desirable for the encouragement of employment. By proceeding with the bill in two weeks time we will be acting with the necessary urgency, and we will at the same time make it possible to incorporate in the bill any changes which, in the light of the federal-provincial discussions, the house may think desirable.

At this preliminary conference, Mr. Speaker, the federal government proposes that there should also be discussion of another matter of common interest to Canada and to the provinces, namely pensions. In order to facilitate these discussions it is the government's intention to move on Thursday of this week the resolution concerning legislation for the Canada pension plan. At that time the Minister of National Health and Welfare will give to the house a fuller statement about the government's proposal. There will thus be available the information required for discussion of pension policy by the house, by the public generally and by the provincial governments at the proposed meeting.

It will be the government's intention also to consider with the provinces at this preliminary meeting arrangements for a federal-provincial conference later in the year. This meeting will provide for full discussion of fiscal arrangements and other matters which are of common interest to the provinces and to Canada.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the announcement by the Prime Minister that consultations will now take place with the provinces in respect particularly of the anticipated legislation concerning municipal loans, is one that should have been made before the legislation was introduced at all. Consultation with the provinces does not take place when a government decides on a course and places legislation on the order paper; and then when objection is raised by a premier or premiers, however powerful they may be, the government finds that it must retreat from a position previously taken. However, I suppose consultation, whether early or late, ought to be welcomed as evidence on the part of the government that it realizes now it was in the wrong when it proceeded as it did.

Second, with regard to the pension legislation, I suggest that if there is any need of co-operation on the part of the provinces then the government might consider doing something that has been generally requested by old age pensioners across Canada. If there is any question as to the degree to which this legislation can be implemented without provincial assistance and co-operation; if there is any difficulty in that connection, it has been widely suggested that the government might bifurcate this bill and introduce immediately the provision for the $10 per month increase in the old age pension. Then, in view of the ever increasing cost of living, the old age pensioners would not have to wait until autumn or until next winter.

However, in summary I say that repentance is good for the soul, and the government having decided on consultation, something that was suggested by hon. members in the official opposition, that is naturally appreciated even though it is late.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, regarding the announcement which the Prime Minister has just made to the house, I believe he and all of us realize that if there could have been the proper consultation with the provinces before these resolutions were introduced he probably would have avoided the problems which are being faced right now. There is certainly a great deal of urgency in regard to the municipal development and loan fund legislation, and I am sure if the provinces are permitted to carry out the regulations under the resolution which the government has placed before us there will be co-operation from all the provinces.

There is also a certain amount of urgency in regard to the national pension scheme. It relates to the portability of pensions and to the financial arrangements. Again we must realize, particularly at this point in the history of Canada's development that none of these things can be carried on without complete consultation with the provinces, which we in this party trust will come about as a result of the conference which the Prime Minister has called.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that members of this group will welcome the Prime Minister's announcement that a meeting with the premiers is to be held to discuss the municipal development and loan fund legislation. This legislation was introduced with great fanfare. The municipalities were told how much this would help them in solving the unemployment problem and planning their work for next winter. It is, therefore, most important that it be passed as early as possible.

It is a great pity that there was not consultation with the provinces prior to the introduction of this legislation, but I do want to compliment the Prime Minister on stating that after the conference with the premiers has been held he does intend to proceed, and he is not going to allow any obstruction to be placed in the way of proceeding with legislation which is highly desirable and greatly needed in this country.

I am sure the Prime Minister does not want the 60 days of decision to be followed with 60 days of derision, and this is what will happen unless this important piece of legislation is proceeded with at an early date.

With reference to the pension legislation, we in this group have been urging for some time that if there is going to be any delay in proceeding with the legislation—and we hope there will be the minimum of delay—certainly the government can have no fears at all about proceeding with the $10 a month increase in the old age security pension. That at least would be an interim step, and there is no reason for it to wait until constitutional problems have been worked out with the provinces. So far as this group are concerned we would be prepared to proceed on that basis, by separating the increase in the old age security pension from the Canada pension plan.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. The purpose of my question is to seek clarification of the welcome announcement he made that the resolution in respect of the Canada pension plan would be called on Thursday of this week. When he made the announcement he said the Minister of National Health and Welfare would set out all the details of the plan, and that leads to this question. Is it the intention to have just the speech of the minister, or will the debate on the resolution continue with a view to having that debate concluded and the bill introduced and given first reading?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): It is the intention of the government to arrange proceedings so that the minister will have an opportunity to tell the house our views on this matter, and I would hope that the same day the party leaders would have an opportunity to express their views on the statement made by the government. The future procedure with regard to this matter will have to depend on the progress made in connection with other matters.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

MUNICIPAL LOAN LEGISLATION—TABLING OF QUEBEC RESOLUTION AND LETTER

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table copies in English and French of a letter addressed to me on July 11 by the premier of Quebec concerning Bill No. C-76.

D.E.W. Line Stations

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Would the Prime Minister agree to have it printed as an appendix to Hansard?

Mr. Pearson: I see no reason why it should not be, if the house is agreeable, and I think perhaps the other letter I have just tabled should be printed in Hansard as well.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of documents above referred to see appendix "B".]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

D.E.W. LINE—ANNOUNCEMENT OF DISCONTINUANCE OF SOME STATIONS

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in 1955 Canada and the United States signed an agreement for the establishment of the distant early warning line on Canadian territory as part of a comprehensive North American control and warning system. This agreement was announced in the House of Commons on May 20, 1955.

Recently the United States government suggested to the Canadian government that a reappraisal of the effectiveness of the D.E.W. line indicates that certain adjustments may be made in the equipment configuration and still provide acceptable early warning. The new configuration would permit the discontinuance of 28 of the smaller D.E.W. line stations.

The Canadian government has agreed to the United States government's plan and the necessary arrangements are being made by the authorities of both governments. The affected facilities will be disposed of in accordance with existing agreements between the two governments.

Twenty intermediate D.E.W. line stations located in Canada, and eight in Alaska, will be closed. Approximately 123 Canadian and 60 United States citizens will be affected by this action. They are employees of the Federal Electric Co., Paramus, New Jersey, which has a United States air force contract for the operation and maintenance of the D.E.W. line.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence arising out of his statement on the D.E.W. line changes. Could the minister inform the house if those changes took into consideration the diminishing bomber threat?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, but I know that because of the portfolio he previously held my hon. friend will be interested to hear that every effort is being made to use the facilities as constructively as possible.

[Later:]

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence consequent upon the statement he made earlier about the D.E.W. line stations. Can the Minister inform the house how many D.E.W. line stations will remain in operation in Canada after the suspension which he has mentioned?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot give that figure.

Mr. Harkness: May I ask the minister why he cannot give the figure? The total number of stations in existence has been given on many occasions, and if the minister knows what the figure was he should be able to tell us how many are left.

Mr. Hellyer: The immediate reason I cannot give it is that I cannot recall it.

AGRICULTURE

SUNFLOWER SEED—ANNOUNCEMENT OF PRICE SUPPORT FOR 1963

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the house that the agricultural stabilization board has been authorized to continue to provide support to producers of sunflower seed for crushing. Support for the 1963 crop will be provided by a deficiency payment program, the support being set at 4.22 cents per pound for Canada No. 1 grade, 10 per cent moisture, sunflower seed of the 1963 crop, basis delivery at the crusher. This support is 100 per cent of the base price, which is the average price received by farmers over the previous ten years, and is the same level as was in effect for the 1962 crop.

FINANCE

DISTRIBUTION OF COPIES OF BUDGET SPEECH—TABLING OF FURTHER INFORMATION

Mr. E. J. Benson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Finance, with the permission of the house I should like to table information promised the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) in answer to question No. 614. I refer hon. members to page 1484 of Hansard of June 24, 1963.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

RAIL FACILITIES, PIER C, PICTOU, N.S.

Question No. 384—Mr. MacEwan:

Has the Minister of Transport received a submission from the board of trade of Pictou urging sufficient rail installations on new pier C at Pictou, Nova Scotia and, if so, what action does the government intend to take in this regard?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes. The question is being examined by the departments of public works and transport and will be decided as soon as possible.

BELLA BELLA AND KLEMTU INDIAN COMMUNITIES, B.C.—HOUSING EXPENDITURES

Question No. 650—Mr. Howard:

For each fiscal year since April 1, 1960, how much money was spent for housing purposes in the Indian communities of (a) Bella Bella and (b) Klemtu (Kitasoo), and how many new houses were built in each such community?

Mr. Munro:

	(a) Bella Bella	(b) Klemtu (Kitasoo)
1960-61	$ 14,786.29	nil
1961-62	10,714.00	$ 2,700.00
1962-63	12,072.09	2,746.00
New houses

AIR TRANSPORT BOARD SUBSIDY POLICY

Question No. 779—Mr. Fisher:

1. Is the air transport board satisfied that Transair Limited is not suffering a monthly operating loss on its recently acquired prairie runs and, if not, has the air transport board given consideration to recommending a subsidy to Transair currently or as soon as the cumulated losses reach the value of the equipment and parts given Transair by T.C.A.?

2. What is the policy of the air transport board in assigning or awarding air line passenger franchises where the revenue anticipated cannot meet the operating costs?

3. Does the air transport board know whether the carriers which previously serviced these routes, or parts of them, suffered operating losses or gave evidence that they did and, if so, what was the scale of these losses for each carrier by year over the past five years?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. The matter of subsidy to Transair Limited has not been considered. The route is being operated in a different manner from the former operation, and any future requirements would have to be assessed on the basis of operating experience.

2. Applicants for licences must meet the criterion of public convenience and necessity or public interest, depending on the class of licence applied for. The economic feasibility of the operation is a relevant factor in the board's consideration of such applications. The board considers that a completely new service should have a reasonable prospect of at least meeting out of pocket costs in the initial stages, and that there should be reasonable prospect in the long run that the service will be fully self sufficient.

3. Yes, the board is aware that carriers which previously served the prairie runs suffered operating losses although detailed financial evidence was not submitted by T.C.A. in its application to abandon the south prairie route. Pacific Western Airlines Limited operated the north prairies route at a loss, and was in receipt of a government subvention of up to $25,000 per month. The board does not know the amount of losses specifically attributable to the route as it is now operated.

SALE OF PLANES AND PARTS BY T.C.A. TO TRANSAIR

Question No. 780—Mr. Fisher:

1. Is it the practice when a crown corporation sells equipment or parts to a private organization for the revenue received to be in the public domain?

2. If not, what reasons were developed to support this secrecy?

3. If so, why does T.C.A. not reveal what revenue it received from the sale or exchange of planes and parts with Transair Limited?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. and 2. In the operations of Trans-Canada Air Lines equipment is bought and sold in accordance with normal commercial practice. Purchase or selling prices are not a matter of public record.

3. Funds derived from the sale of aircraft and parts are not revenue and are recorded in the company's financial returns as recovery of capital.

PARLIAMENTARY GUIDE

Question No. 797—Mr. MacRae:

1. Does the government of Canada purchase copies of the Parliamentary Guide each year and, if so (a) how many copies (b) at what price per copy?

2. Have any representations been made concerning the accuracy of this publication?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. (a) By direction of treasury board, orders for the Canadian Parliamentary Guide are submitted to the national librarian for approval. The national librarian approved the purchase of 854 copies of the 1962 edition and 934 copies of the 1963 edition.

(b) List price of the 1962 edition was $6 per copy; price of the 1963 edition was $7 per copy.

2. No information.

COMMUNITY PASTURES, MANITOBA

Question No. 819—Mr. Stefanson:

1. How many community pastures have been established under the P.F.R.A. program in the province of Manitoba since June 21, 1957, and (a) where are they located (b) what is the area in acres and (c) the cost of each?

Questions

2. What community pastures are at present under development in Manitoba, and for each what is the (a) area in acres (b) number of cattle that can be pastured (c) cost of each and (d) when will each be in operation?

3. When and where were meetings held with local residents to discuss these proposed community pastures, and who were the government officials in attendance?

Mr. Beer:

Cote-San Clara
(Saskatchewan-Manitoba as one unit)
Dauphin-Ethelbert
Gardenton

McCreary

Turtle Mountain

Wallace

(a) Location	(b) Area	(c) Cost
Togo, Saskatchewan (b and c—Manitoba portion only)	8,320 acres	$ 60,248.12
Ukraina, Manitoba	23,400 acres	$126,851.00
Gardenton, Manitoba	12,560 acres	$ 74,944.83
McCreary, Manitoba	71,820 acres	$258,934.98
Boissevain, Manitoba	23,870 acres	$146,399.91
Virden, Manitoba	10,240 acres	$ 65,207.98

2.	(a) Area	(b) No. of Cattle	(c) Cost	(d) Year Expected to be in Operation
Pasquia, The Pas, Manitoba	16,600 acres	4,000 to 5,000	$180,000	1965
Narcisse, Narcisse, Manitoba	31,360 acres	2,200 to 3,000	$161,400	1964
Lenswood, Lenswood, Manitoba	30,800 acres	2,000 to 3,000	$136,700	1964
Pansy, Pansy, Manitoba	9,440 acres	1,000 to 1,500	$ 99,000	1964
Mossey-River-Ethelbert, Ethelbert, Manitoba	69,920 acres	3,000 to 4,000	$191,500	1964

3. No meetings have been held as yet with local residents nor are any contemplated until construction has been completed, at which time meetings will be convened for the purpose of organizing community pasture grazing associations. Meetings to date have been confined to those held with municipal and provincial officials.

PAROLES DENIED BECAUSE OF SUPERVISION LACK

Question No. 835—Mr. Matheson:

1. Are paroles from penitentiaries, provisional gaols, reformatories, training centres and industrial farms now being (a) denied or (b) deferred or (c) cancelled or (d) revised because of inadequate supervision facilities?

2. If the answer to any of the above is in the affirmative, what proposals, if any, does the government have to remedy this situation?

Mr. Macdonald: 1. (a), (b), (c) and (d). Parole supervision is, at the present time, a shared responsibility of field officers of the national parole service, of staff members of provincial probation services and of case workers of private after care agencies. There exists a scarcity of trained and experienced personnel. Paroles, therefore, have at times been deferred or delayed or sometimes denied either for lack of supervision facilities at the proposed point of release or because the existing facilities are not adequate to provide appropriate counselling or surveillance.

2. The problem is receiving attention.

[Mr. Stefanson.]

*CANADIAN FORCES FOR UNITED NATIONS

Question No. 852—Mr. Knowles:

1. Has Canada made a specific offer to the United Nations to turn over thereto part of Canada's armed forces and, if so (a) on what date or dates was any such offer made (b) what were its terms (c) what has been the response of the United Nations to any such offer (d) are there any communications between Canada and the United Nations on this subject and (e) can they be produced?

2. Does Canada maintain a stand-by battalion or other unit or units available to the United Nations at any time and, if so, what battalion or other unit or units have been so designated?

3. Has the United Nations been advised of the availability of such a battalion or other unit or units and, if so (a) are there any communications relating thereto and (b) can they be produced?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): 1. (a), (b), (c), (d) and (e). No general offer has been made to turn over to the United Nations elements of the Canadian armed forces. At the time of the Korean conflict and the Suez crisis offers of a military contingent were made. For the most part, personnel units and equipment from the Canadian armed service have been provided in response to specific requests from the United Nations, the most recent being in connection with the peace keeping operation in Yemen. No communication in regard to the general availability of Canadian armed forces has been made to the United Nations, but the Canadian position is known to the United Nations.

2. Yes. At present the stand-by unit is the first battalion, Royal 22nd Regiment.

3. (a) and (b). The United Nations has not been formally advised about the availability of the Canadian stand-by battalion but this arrangement has been a matter of announced Canadian policy which has been expressed in the house and on public platforms from time to time, and is known to the United Nations.

CAPE BRETON HIGHLANDS PARK—EMPLOYMENT OF ALBERT BOUDREAU

Question No. 874—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Did Mr. Albert Boudreau of Point Cross, Inverness county, apply for employment this season at the Cape Breton Highlands national park and, if so (a) what are his qualifications (including experience) for such work and (b) for what reasons was Mr. Boudreau not reemployed?

Mr. Turner: (a) General labour, including duties as clean up man in camp grounds (five years experience).

(b) Seasonal positions had been filled before Mr. Boudreau indicated his interest in further employment.

*RESEARCH PERSONNEL FOR MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Question No. 876—Mr. Knowles:

Questions

1. Is consideration being given by the government to the provision of research personnel for the private members of the House of Commons?
2. If so, when will such provision become effective, and to what extent?
3. If not, will the matter now be given consideration?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, there is no specific consideration being given by the government at the moment to any definite plans for additional research assistance to members, but the matter is viewed sympathetically by the government and perhaps could be a matter to be raised on the estimates for the house.

*CONTRACTS WITH OUTSIDE CONSULTANTS, FINANCE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 877—Mr. Knowles:

1. Have the contracts entered into with Mr. D. C. H. Stanley, Mr. M. P. O'Connell and Mr. G. R. Conway, under treasury board minute T.B. 610618, dated May 2, 1963, and with Mr. R. J. Anderson, under treasury board minute T.B. 610952, dated May 17, 1963, been terminated?
2. On what date did each of the above commence his service with the Department of Finance?
3. On what date did each of the above terminate his service therewith?
4. What was the total amount of money paid to each of the above as travelling expense, per diem living allowance, and per diem fee?

Mr. Benson: 1, 2 and 3. Yes.

	Commenced	Terminated
Mr. D. C. H. Stanley	April 22, 1963	June 20, 1963
Mr. M. P. O'Connell	April 22, 1963	June 20, 1963
Mr. G. R. Conway	April 21, 1963	July 1, 1963
Mr. R. J. Anderson	May 7, 1963	May 16, 1963.

4. Although the respective claims have not all been settled, it is expected the totals will be approximately as follows:

Mr. D. C. H. Stanley, travelling expenses, $52.65; per diem living allowance, $1,500.00.

Mr. M. P. O'Connell, travelling expenses, $25.15; per diem living allowance, $1,500.00.

Mr. G. R. Conway, travelling expenses, $507.16; per diem living allowance, $1,487.50; per diem fee, $3,250.00.

Mr. R. J. Anderson, travelling expenses, $50.00; per diem living allowance, $225.00.

ARTIFICIAL COLOURING IN FOODS

Question No. 878—Mr. Knowles:

1. Has the Department of National Health and Welfare made a recent review of the regulations concerning artificial colouring permitted in foods or food products and, if so, what particular foods or food products have been studied?
2. Has it been determined that the proportion of artificial colouring allowed in any such foods or food products should be reduced, and for what reasons?
3. Is action being taken, either by the proposing of legislation or by amending the appropriate regulations, along these lines and, if so, what action?

Mr. Haidasz: Yes, the food and drug directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare has during the past year been reviewing the food colour regulations. This review has encompassed all food colours and all uses that are permitted under the current regulations.

2. The directorate is considering a reduction in the current maximum permissible level for added synthetic colours in food, which now is equivalent to 286 parts per million, in order to minimize any possible hazards to health from these compounds.

3. Proposed amendments to the food colour regulations were circulated in 1962 to the industries concerned and have, in conjunction with proposed regulations for food additives since been under further study in the department. Amendments to the food colour regulations are expected to be promulgated within the next few months.

COST OF CANADIAN NORAD COMMITMENTS

Question No. 882—Mr. Douglas:

What was the cost or what is the estimated cost, to Canada for carrying out our commitments under (a) NORAD (b) NATO, in the fiscal years (i) 1960-61 (ii) 1961-62 (iii) 1962-63 (iv) 1963-64?

Mr. Hellyer: (a) Canada has no direct financial commitment to NORAD. The direct costs of the air defence forces in Canada are estimated as follows:

Fiscal Year: (i) 1960-61, $156,212,000; (ii) 1961-62, $182,127,000; (iii) 1962-63, $171,846,000; (iv) 1963-64, $138,734,000.

(b) Estimated direct costs of Canadian forces committed to NATO:

Fiscal Year: (i) 1960-61 $408,916,000; (ii) 1961-62, $455,545,000; (iii) 1962-63, $465,129,000; (iv) 1963-64, $415,598,000.

Note: Air defence cost as shown above are the estimated direct expenditures on the R.C.A.F. forces assigned to the air defence of the Canada-U.S. region. These figures do not include indirect costs such as training, logistics suport, command and administration.

NATO costs as shown above consist of the direct costs of the army brigade and the air division in Europe, the R.C.N. and R.C.A.F. forces earmarked for SACLANT and direct expenditures on mutual aid including contributions to infrastructure and NATO budgets. These figures do not include indirect costs of the type referred to in the previous paragraph.

COST OF CANADIAN UN COMMITMENTS AND EXTERNAL AID

Question No. 883—Mr. Douglas:

What was the cost or what is the estimated cost, to Canada for carrying out our commitments under (a) the UN (b) the Colombo plan (c) other forms of aid to underdeveloped countries in the fiscal years (i) 1960-61 (ii) 1961-62 (iii) 1962-63 (iv) 1963-64?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): (a) The following table shows the cost or estimated cost to Canada of Canadian membership or participation in the activities and programs of the United Nations family of organizations during the Canadian fiscal years 1960-61 to 1963-64.

Footnote 1—The government has announced that it is prepared to make a voluntary contribution to the world food program of up to $5,000,000 (U.S.) in cash and kind. during the three year period January 1, 1963 to December 31, 1965.

Footnote 2—Canada has also made a voluntary contribution of approximately $600,000 toward the cost of ONUC through write-offs of expenses incurred by Canada in connection with the provision of transportation facilities for ONUC.

Footnote 3—The above does not include payments or estimates in respect of payments to ICAO for partial reimbursement of compensation paid to its Canadian employees for Quebec income tax and to provide ICAO with office accommodation in Montreal at less than commercial rates.

Footnote 4—At the 4th special session of the United Nations general assembly the Canadian delegation was authorized to state that, subject to parliamentary approval the government intends to make voluntary contribution toward the costs of UNEF for the last six months of 1963. The amount and nature of this contribution are to be determined in conjunction with other member states who are prepared to help in sharing equitably the shortfall resulting from the granting of reductions to the less developed countries in their 1963 UNEF assessments.

(b) Colombo plan commitments.

The following amounts were appropriated in the fiscal years indicated: 1960-61—$50,000,000; 1961-62—$50,000,000 and 1962-63—$41,500,000. The estimates for the fiscal year 1963-64 contain an amount of $41,500,000 for Colombo plan assistance.

(c) Other forms of aid to underdeveloped countries.

The following amounts were appropriated for Canada's other bilateral grant aid programs in the fiscal years indicated: 1960-61—$5,510,000; 1961-62—$6,810,000, and 1962-63—$7,370,000. The estimates for 1963-64 contain amounts totalling $6,920,000 for Canada's bilateral grant aid programs excluding the Colombo plan.[1]

Footnote 1—The development assistance committee of the OECD includes long term export credits, such as those provided under section 21 (a) of the Export Credits Insurance Act, in its calculation of the flow of resources to developing countries. Credits extended by Canada to the less developed countries are not included in the above figures.

DAYLIGHT SAVING TIME

Question No. 885—Mr. Mather:

Is the government giving consideration to the possibility of establishing, in consultation with the provinces, daylight saving time on a national basis?

Mr. Benidickson: There is no move on the part of the federal government to establish daylight saving time on a national basis.

FEDERAL CONTRIBUTIONS TO CROP INSURANCE

Question No. 900—Mr. Gauthier:

What amount has the Department of Agriculture contributed for crop insurance in all the Canadian provinces since its inception up to March 31, 1963, and, of this amount, what part has been allotted to the province of Quebec?

Mr. Beer: Federal contributions made to the provinces to March 31, 1963 under the Crop Insurance Act amount to $700,978.

No contribution has been made to Quebec since this province does not operate a crop insurance program under agreement with Canada.

EXPERIMENTAL FARMS

Question No. 903—Mr. Gauthier:

How many experimental farms does the Department of Agriculture operate in Canada and, of these, how many in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Beer: Apart from the research branch headquarters establishment in Ottawa, and two national research institutes located elsewhere in Ontario, the Department of Agriculture operates 39 research stations and experimental farms, six of which are located in the province of Quebec.

Questions

AGRICULTURAL LABORATORIES

Question No. 904—Mr. Gauthier:

How many agricultural laboratories does the Department of Agriculture own in Canada, and, of these, how many in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Beer: There are 21 agricultural laboratories operated by the Department of Agriculture in Canada and of these two are located in the province of Quebec.

INTERNATIONAL DRIVING PERMITS

Question No. 905—Mr. Mather:

1. What provinces have accepted the United Nations 1949 convention on road traffic regulations respecting international driving permits?

2. Has the federal government made representations to provincial authorities with regard to the acceptance of this convention and, if not, will the government consider making such representations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): 1. Appropriate ministers of the following provinces have indicated that they see no serious objection to Canadian accession to the 1949 United Nations road traffic convention: Alberta, British Columbia, Manitoba, New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Ontario, Prince Edward Island, Quebec and Saskatchewan.

2. Yes.

DEFENCE EXPENDITURES

Question No. 906—Mr. Matheson:

1. What percentage of (a) navy (b) army and (c) air force expenditures have been devoted to equipment in each of the years since and including 1955?

2. What is the total expenditure for defence in each of these years, and what proportion of the annual gross national product does it represent?

Mr. Hellyer: Percentage of total expenditures by navy, army and air force devoted to equipment.

1. Fiscal year	Navy	Army	Air force
1955-56	41.6	20.4	46.0
1956-57	44.4	11.9	27.1
1957-58	37.9	7.1	30.9
1958-59	29.8	9.7	35.8
1959-60	22.7	6.8	27.0
1960-61	18.8	7.3	26.9
1961-62	22.5	6.5	28.5
1962-63	22.8	6.4	21.3

2. Calendar year	Defence expenditures (NATO Definition) ($000)	Percentage of G.N.P.
1955	1,819,000	7.6
1956	1,888,000	7.1
1957	1,828,700	6.5
1958	1,740,000	6.0
1959	1,641,800	5.4
1960	1,653,600	5.3
1961	1,716,000	5.3
1962	1,810,000	5.2

Note: NATO definition includes defence expenditures by D.N.D. and defence expenditures by other federal government departments.

BREAKWATER REPAIRS, FELTZ SOUTH, N.S.

Question No. 909—Mr. Crouse:

Is it the intention of the government to call in 1963 tenders covering the extensive repairs to the breakwater at Feltz South, Lunenburg county, Nova Scotia?

Mr. Badanai: This matter is being studied but it is too soon to say when tenders will again be called.

LION'S HEAD, ONT. POST OFFICE

Question No. 913—Mr. Loney:

Has the Department of Public Works been requested by the Postmaster General to acquire lands for a post office building in the village of Lion's Head, Ontario, and, if so (a) what progress has been made (b) when will tenders be called?

Mr. Badanai: No. (a) Not applicable, (b) not applicable.

FEDERAL ASSISTANCE TO HONG KONG

Question No. 914—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Since 1957, how much assistance has been given by the government of Canada to Hong Kong in the form of (a) powdered milk (b) canned meat and (c) butter oil?

2. Is it the intention of the government to continue this program and, if so, what contributions will be made during the current year?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): 1. None of the commodities mentioned has been given to Hong Kong under Canada's regular bilateral aid programs. In 1962, however, the following foodstuffs were made available to Hong Kong by the government of Canada, at a cost of approximately $485,000, through Canadian relief agencies with established channels of distribution in Hong Kong: (a) powdered milk, 840,700 pounds; (b) canned meat, 1,995,570 pounds; (c) butter oil, nil.

2. The above commodities were provided for emergency relief purposes. The Canadian government has no continuing program for the provision of foodstuffs to Hong Kong.

DAMAGE TO WOLFE MEMORIAL, PLAINS OF ABRAHAM

Question No. 919—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. What damage was done to the Wolfe memorial on the plains of Abraham during the recent disturbances?

2. Has the damage been repaired and, if so, what was the cost of the repairs to the treasury?

Mr. Turner: The national battlefields commission advises as follows:

1. Toppling of the column; chipping of column and stone base.

2. Not yet.

TORTURE OF GERMAN SPIES BY CANADIAN TROOPS

Question No. 920—Mr. Mather:

1. Has the government information as to the accuracy of reports that three former nazi espionage agents assert they were tortured by Canadian troops in the Netherlands in 1944?

2. Is the government considering investigating such reports?

Mr. Hellyer: 1. Available records contain no reference to the alleged incident.

2. No.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

JOINT FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL PROGRAMS

Question No. 491—Mr. Martineau:

1. What are the joint programs at present being carried out by the federal government with one or more of the provinces?

2. For each of such program, what is (a) the name or number of the statute, order in council, regulation or other authority under which such program is being carried out (b) the date of the adoption of such statute, order in council, regulation or other authority (c) the sums of money expended for each such program by the federal government since the commencement of the program, giving the amount for each fiscal year?

3. What further joint programs does the government intend to carry out with one or more of the provinces during the current fiscal year?

CANCELLATION OF TENDER CALLS

Question No. 495—Mr. Valade:

1. Has the government cancelled any calls for tenders since April 8, 1963, and, if so, which tenders, in which departments, and on what grounds?

2. If not, is it the intention of the government to change the tender calling procedure in certain departments, particularly in the Department of Defence Production?

CONTRACTS WITH FULLER CONSTRUCTION CO., OTTAWA

Question No. 585—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many contracts has the Fuller Construction Company of Ottawa received from government departments and agencies in the past six years; what were these contracts, and what was the value of each contract?

2. Have complaints been made that this company has not been observing the federal government's wage and hour regulations and, if so, how many?

3. How many of any such complaints have been investigated, and what were the results of these investigations?

CONTRACTS WITH H. J. MACFARLAND CO., OTTAWA

Question No. 586—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How many contracts has the H. J. MacFarland Construction Co. of Ottawa received from government departments and agencies in the past six years; what contracts were these, and what was the value of each contract?

2. Have complaints been made that this company has not been observing the federal government's wage and hour regulations, and, if so, how many?

3. How many of any such complaints have been investigated, and what were the results of these investigations?

REPORT OF COMMITTEE ON MANITOBA'S ECONOMIC FUTURE

Question No. 591—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has any minister of the crown been presented with the report of the committee on Manitoba's economic future and, if so, which ministers, and what form of communication accompanied the report?

2. Has an analysis been made of the recommendations in the report that bear upon matters falling within the federal jurisdiction (e.g. Indian problems, Churchill harbour) and, if so, has this analysis been forwarded to any cabinet or departmental committee for action or recommendations?

3. Has any response been sent to the provincial government regarding this report, or to the committee itself?

4. Have any ministers of the crown and/or any deputy ministers, met with the chairman and the executive board of the committee to discuss the report and any assistance the federal government may give to achieve the recommendations of the committee?

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT SALARIES

Question No. 800—Mr. Valade:

Have the salaries of the employees of the Post Office Department been increased since 1949 and, if so (a) in what years was each such increase granted (b) what was the amount of the increase in each case, by classification of worker?

PERSONS POSTED OR MADE AVAILABLE TO MINISTERS, ETC.

Question No. 829—Mr. McIntosh:

1. Have any members of the civil service, public service, or any federal government employee of any government department or crown corporation been seconded, attached, transferred, posted or loaned to the Prime Minister's office, privy council or to any minister's office or to any minister's personal staff since April 22, 1963, and, if so, what are their names, location, responsibilities, salary, date duties commenced, name of immediate supervisor, and the name of department to which their position is established?

2. Have any persons other than federal government employees been made available in any capacity to the Prime Minister's office or to any minister's office or as part of the minister's personal staff since April 22, 1963 that have been in receipt of government monies by means of salary or expense account funds and, if so, what are their names, date duties commenced, location, responsibilities, name of previous employer and amount of federal moneys in any form received to date?

3. Have any persons other than federal government employees been made available in any capacity to the Prime Minister's office, privy council or to any minister's office, or to any minister's personal staff since April 22, 1963, who may or who may not, have been in receipt of government monies and who have had access to or have used government equipment, materials, stores, supplies, including privileged, classified and internal governmental information, correspondence and files and, if so, what are their names, nature of duties, date duties commenced, name of previous employer, and location?

Inquiries of the Ministry

PUBLIC SERVICE

INQUIRY AS TO SALARY INCREASES FOR CERTAIN CLASSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, last week, I think on Monday, the Minister of Finance said that he and the cabinet were considering or would be working on the matter of pay increases for certain categories of the public service that have not as yet been granted increases. I wonder whether the minister could inform the house and those public servants who are anxiously waiting whether any decision has been reached respecting pay increases.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, a decision has been reached respecting the increases for the civil servants in group D. The government believes that the staff associations are entitled to be the first to be informed of the details of the increases agreed to. This procedure will, of course, be essential as soon as the systematic procedure for collective bargaining has been introduced, and I hope the house will consider that this is a move in the right direction. The committee of the cabinet that has been dealing with this matter is planning to meet with the staff associations this evening or late afternoon and inform them of the details of the increases, on the understanding that the public announcement will be held until tomorrow morning.

(Translation):

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I wish to add a few words to the statement just made by the Minister of Finance.

When postal employees in group D are given pay increases under the continuing salary review, the only ones who do not receive an increase are those in the following categories, who are paid out of revenue and whose salary rates are established by the Postmaster General as authorized by the Post Office Act.

1. Postmasters—Semi-staff post offices, groups 31 to 34;
2. Assistants 1 and 2—Semi-staff post offices;
3. Postmasters—Revenue post offices, groups 1 to 30;
4. Postmasters—Sub post offices.

(Text):

These employees will have their salaries adjusted at the same time as those who are paid out of appropriations. The increase will be proportionate to that granted the classes paid from appropriations. The effective date will be the same as for group D.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. In view of the reference in the welcome statement he has just made to the subject of collective bargaining, can the minister say whether legislation carrying out this commitment of the government will be introduced at this session?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, there is a very considerable amount of work to be done which has to be discussed with the staff associations before the details of a collective bargaining system can be introduced. This is already under discussion, and one of the things I hope to do tonight when talking with the staff associations is to have further discussions about the way in which this can best be furthered and expedited. I think it very unlikely that this work can be done in time to have the legislation ready for this session.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. I certainly understand the suggestion that the staff associations should be informed first, but I wonder if there are any of the public service groups within the categories he mentioned who will not be included in these pay increases. If he thinks this would not prejudice or hamper his discussions with the staff associations—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gordon: Everybody included in group D will be dealt with in the announcement which will be made to the staff associations this evening. There are one or two other groups, including the staff of the house, which will be dealt with by Your Honour's committee, I am sure at a very early date, now that the main recommendations have been made. The increases for the people I have just referred to are kept in line with the general increases and can now be dealt with.

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

BRITISH COLUMBIA—INQUIRY AS TO SECOND HIGHWAY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Did the right hon. gentleman, on Friday last, meet with a delegation of the trans-Canada highway system Yellowhead route association. If so, can he tell the house whether it is the government's intention to implement in 1963 the pledge which he made earlier this year to make a definite start on a second trans-Canada highway?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I met with a delegation on the day referred to by the hon. member, and the Minister of Public Works will be making a statement on this matter either tomorrow or the next day.

GRAIN

SASKATCHEWAN—REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF BOARD ORDER NO. 1,000

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In his absence I hope the parliamentary secretary will consider it. I believe that recently the minister had a letter from the Kindersley and Verendrye wheat pool committees which said in part:

> In view of the fact that order No. 1,000 has been rescinded at 12 bushel quota points, farmers will not, under certain circumstances, be able to haul their grain to elevators of their choice.

My question is, would the minister have order No. 1,000 reinstated as soon as possible at any point where it is not now operative?

Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Trade and Commerce): There is nothing I should like to do better than answer the hon. member's question, but it is not an appropriate one for me to handle and, therefore, I shall have to bring it to the attention of the minister.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CANADIAN MEMBERSHIP IN ORGANIZATION OF AMERICAN STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I regret I have not had an opportunity of giving him prior notice. In view of the statement by the chairman of the organization of American states on Saturday in Ottawa, as reported in the press, that Canada can now confidently be expected to join the O.A.S. in the near future, can the minister inform the house just how near in the future Canada will be joining this organization?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I am sure the house will share with me satisfaction at the visit of the president of the organization of American states who happens to be the newly accredited ambassador of Costa Rica to Canada resident, for the time being, outside the country. During the course of the ambassador's visit a number of matters were discussed, but in accordance with the usual practice it would not be appropriate for me to reveal publicly the nature of discussions between a visiting ambassador and a minister of this government.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Would it be fair to say that the government has enough unsettled problems on its hands at present without launching out in further directions?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It would be appropriate for me to observe that this government, while it has much to do, largely by way of a legacy, nevertheless does not propose to shirk any of its responsibilities.

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Can the minister give the house an assurance that before making a decision as to membership in the O.A.S. the government will refer this matter to the external affairs committee?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I cannot give that assurance in the terms in which the question is put. I can only say that when this government feels the moment is opportune, in the light of all considerations, it will decide what policy it should pursue. Having done that it will take the house into its confidence.

HUNGARY—INQUIRY AS TO DIPLOMATIC RECOGNITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the government considering granting Hungary diplomatic recognition?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I did not get the hon. member's question.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Is the government giving consideration to granting Hungary diplomatic recognition?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): There is no Canadian mission in Budapest at the present time.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WARHEADS—SIGNING OF AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs or to his colleague the Minister of National Defence. Can the house be advised whether Canada and the United States have reached agreement in principle on a pact with respect to nuclear arms, as reported in today's press?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): The Prime Minister has already indicated in his statement on July 10 the progress which is being made in this regard. I can say that an agreement with the United States making available nuclear warheads for the Canadian forces has not yet been signed. The fact that signature has not yet taken place must not be misconstrued, however. When the signatures have been affixed an announcement will be made, in accordance with the Prime Minister's statement of July 10 and consistent with security regulations.

Mr. Lambert: Is the minister indicating at the present time that such an agreement will be signed without prior reference being made to this house?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. member will have to read the answer I gave a few moments ago.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON ACCIDENTS AT CAMP GAGETOWN AND IN YUKON

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. I should like to ask whether he has any information for the house concerning the fatal accident which occurred during army exercises at Camp Gagetown just the other day. May I ask the Minister of Justice also whether he has any information concerning the fatal accident to members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the north country. Both the army and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police are serving their country well, and perhaps the house would like some information with regard to these serious accidents.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): In regard to the most unfortunate tragedy at Camp Gagetown, I do not think there is anything I could usefully add to the information which has already been made public. I am sure all hon. members of the house regret that in the course of their training those who serve their country so well and who help us to maintain our freedom do take risks which sometimes lead to tragedy and its resulting bereavement of close relatives and friends.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): In answer to the question which has been raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, I have to report unfortunately and with great regret that a Beaver aircraft stationed at Whitehorse, Yukon, crashed at Carmacks at eight o'clock on July 13, 1963, instantly killing four members of the force and a prisoner. Some details of the accident are given here in the report which I have in my possession, together with the names of those who lost their lives.

Like my colleague the Minister of National Defence I should like to tell the house how sorry I am that an accident under these circumstances should have taken place, and to extend to the parents of these members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police the sincere condolences of the minister.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I ask the Minister of Justice—

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if with the consent—

Mr. Douglas: —if the family of the prisoner who was killed will receive some compensation or have some provision made for them by the government?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, I think that would depend a great deal on the circumstances surrounding the accident. I saw that my colleague was about to rise, and perhaps it was to say that an investigation is being conducted. Before I could answer that question I would have to have the report from the air transport board as to the conditions under which the accident took place.

TRADE

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO CREDIT TERMS FOR RED CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister, in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. My question stems from a report in this morning's Gazette that wheat shipments to red China have been discontinued and that port authorities at Vancouver say shipments are at a standstill. It appears that from this article the Chinese are asking for easier credit terms on further wheat shipments. In view of the economic consequences which could follow, particularly in the province of Alberta, if there were no further wheat shipments, is the government prepared to allow easier credit terms to this country so it can continue to buy Canadian wheat?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Negotiations in connection with this matter are proceeding. The hon. member must know that to make public the terms of negotiations on our side, now, would not be the way in which to bring them to a successful conclusion.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I do not want the Prime Minister to disclose the terms of the negotiations. All I asked him to say was whether the government is prepared to make easier credit terms available.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The right hon. gentleman could answer yes or no.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): There appears to be a profusion of speculation concerning these negotiations which are going on with mainland China, and I was wondering whether the Prime Minister could inform the house whether the government has arranged for some planned and controlled leakage in order to keep fostering these speculations. If not, where do these speculations arise?

Mr. Pearson: I am afraid I cannot satisfy the hon. member's legitimate curiosity as to where all this speculation arises.

AIRPORTS

BOUNDARY BAY, B.C.—REPORTED DISPOSAL OF HANGAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. I have not given him notice, but the hon. gentleman is aware of this situation. Will the minister report to this house on allegations made by the aircraft owners and pilots association of British Columbia to the effect that a hangar valued at $200,000 at Boundary Bay airport has been sold to an employee of the Department of National Defence for $500?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I have no direct knowledge of this matter. I have asked the officials of my department to look into it. If in fact the hangar was disposed of it would have been done by the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation, which comes within the responsibility of my colleague the Minister of Defence Production.

[Later:]

Mr. Prittie: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Minister of Defence Production would undertake to investigate the matter I raised earlier with the Minister of National Defence concerning the Boundary Bay airport?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Defence Production): I would be glad to take up that question.

BROADCASTING

REPORTED REQUEST OF C.B.C. FOR INVESTIGATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I should like to put a direct question to the Secretary of State. Will the minister comply with the request of the C.B.C., who wish an investigation into the operation of broadcasting in Canada?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I know of no such request having been made to the government.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Last week I asked whether the government would give early consideration to recommending to the house the setting up of a special select committee on broadcasting. I wonder if the Prime Minister has had any time to come to a decision on this matter, and whether he is prepared to make such a recommendation.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): My hon. friend the Minister of Justice, who dealt with this matter last week, has been discussing it with me and I hope to be able to make an announcement very shortly.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO LOANS ON FARM STORED GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. J. W. Fane (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the news report carried in the Ottawa Journal of Saturday July 13 to the effect that the farmers of western Canada no longer have the privilege of arranging loans on their farm stored grain through the Canadian wheat board, may I ask the minister whether this statement is true and, if it is correct, when this privilege was removed?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I will take notice of the hon. member's question.

SHEEP—REPORTED OUTBREAK OF SCRAPIE DISEASE IN ALBERTA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Bow River asked if it was the intention of the Department of Agriculture to order the destruction of flocks of sheep infected by scrapie disease, and if it was intended to compensate the owners of the flocks.

The sheep disease, scrapie, has been confirmed on two premises in southern Alberta. All sheep on both premises have been ordered slaughtered under the authority of the Animal Contagious Diseases Act. Scrapie is a disease believed to be of virus origin affecting the central nervous system, and to prevent its spread in Canada all flocks in which the disease is found are slaughtered. The owners will be paid compensation at market value as determined by a valuation committee.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture if the persons in Alberta who will receive payment for the loss of sheep are the same persons or the same family of persons who received $100,000 from the previous Liberal government?

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is all right to disclose the names of the people who own these flocks that have scrapie. The flocks are those of Mr. P. G. Rock and Harold Trentham, and I believe Mr. Rock was the recipient of compensation because of scrapie a few years ago. I might say that scrapie is a serious disease, and that at that time there were some 30 flocks affected and some 12,000 sheep destroyed under the slaughter policy.

TURKEYS—REMOVAL OF QUOTA ON IMPORTS FROM THE U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in order that there may be no misunderstanding I wish to clarify the reply I gave to the hon. member for Wellington South on July 11 in answer to a question by him concerning the quotas on United States turkeys entering Canada. In my answer I made reference to a meeting with turkey producers, and I should emphasize that these were Canadian turkey producers and that I have not met with United States agricultural officials to discuss this question.

In 1962 and for several years prior to that turkeys were supported under the Agricultural Stabilization Act by a deficiency payment program. As yet this year no such program has been authorized, and I was referring to this when I indicated that the representatives of the turkey producers were satisfied with the present arrangement. I should, however, have indicated that the question of import quotas on turkeys is a matter of government policy, and that the government has not yet given consideration to this matter.

INQUIRY AS TO ESTABLISHMENT OF COLLECTIVE FARMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of reports is the minister able to say whether consideration is being given to the establishment of collective farms?

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF CONDOLENCES ON DEATH OF H. H. HANNAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): May I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture. Will he convey the regrets of the members of this house to the family of the late Mr. H. H. Hannam and to the members of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, an organization which he served so long and so well?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): The answer to the first part of the question is yes; this has already been done. In so far as the second part is concerned, we will look after it right away.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

CRITERIA USED TO DETERMINE UNDERDEVELOPED AREAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, since my question deals with the industry, finance and labour departments, I shall direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of the proposals intended to assist the underdeveloped areas of the country, could the Prime Minister tell the house what are the criteria on which the government will base itself to decide whether one area rather than another is underdeveloped?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I could not, of course, do that on the orders of the day even if it were in order, but there will be legislation dealing with the matter when the question of criteria can be discussed, as indeed it was discussed on the legislation concerning this matter introduced by the previous government.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REPORT ON LETTER ALLEGEDLY SIGNED BY AMBASSADOR BUTTERWORTH

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. In the light of the report I read in the Hamilton Spectator of Saturday, July 13, 1963, that the government has received a report from the R.C.M.P. regarding the Butterworth letter, is it the intention of the government to make the report public in order to clear the ambassador's name and that of his government from allegations made by members of the official opposition?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I do not know that it is the practice to make these reports public, but I can say rather summarily what the report did contain.

The investigation revealed first of all that there is no evidence that either of the two machines in use by the ambassador's office at the embassy of the United States of America in Ottawa was used to execute any portion of the questioned typewriting. Next, there is evidence to indicate that the paper comprising the covering letter and its envelope are products of an English firm. Finally, there is no evidence to indicate that the original of the photo copy was a composite or montage, but photographic techniques used in its preparation could obscure such evidence.

[Later:]

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Justice in view of his reply to the question raised by the hon. member for Hamilton West. Is it the government's intention, in view of remarks made earlier in the house regarding the Butterworth letter, to ask for a public apology from the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill)?

APPEAL BOARD TO DEAL WITH SECURITY RISKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if he can report any progress on the matter of setting up a board or a means of appeal for persons classified as security risks.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): I am afraid I cannot add anything to what I have already stated to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, which in essence is this. In order to set up a board of review all the departments of government have to be consulted, and the matter must be discussed equally with the crown corporations and the various boards and agencies of the government. I am afraid that is going to take some time.

Mr. Olson: May I ask a supplementary question. Some action has been taken by this government in connection with cases raised on the floor of the House of Commons. Will the minister tell us that this is the proper procedure to be followed until such a board is set up, that is if the board is not going to be set up for some time?

Mr. Chevrier: I believe I indicated on a former occasion that if the hon. member did have a case, if he would be good enough to discuss it with me I would be glad to get the information for him. There are a number of such cases that are now under discussion, for some of which I have obtained information but for others, not yet. If my hon. friend has one or more cases I will be glad to take them into consideration if he will send me a note about them, or if he prefers to discuss them with me personally.

WORLD FAIR

REPORTED RESIGNATION OF CORPORATION MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Public Works who is responsible for the world fair. Could the minister inform the house whether it is correct, as reported in the press, that Mr. Paul Bienvenu, president of the corporation, and Mr. Harry Price, of Toronto, member of that company, have resigned.

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): I have not been officially informed that Mr. Price has submitted his resignation. I read in the papers that Mr. Paul Bienvenu had resigned. I must point out to my hon. friend, however, that Mr. Bienvenu himself has denied that press report.

PUBLIC WORKS

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR DREDGING OF LA HAVE RIVER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer the question asked by the hon. member for Queens-Lunenburg a few days ago concerning dredging at Bridgewater. The requirement for dredging at Bridgewater was not submitted to the department in sufficient time for inclusion in the 1963-64 estimates; consequently no financial provision was made. The work would involve a major expenditure and no partial measure would be of any value.

The situation is that while some of the larger vessels may not be able to use this harbour, normal traffic is not hampered. The department will make provision in the 1964-65 estimates for increasing the size of the turning area to accommodate larger vessels now wanting to make use of this harbour. If the dredging were to be undertaken this year it could not be completed in time to benefit shipping this season.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

INQUIRY AS TO LIST OF LAW FIRMS TO BE ENGAGED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): May I ask the Minister of Justice whether he or his parliamentary secretary made a request for a restricted list of law firms to handle departmental business?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): I did notice that my hon. friend asked that question on the orders of the day on Friday, and I must tell him that as Minister of Justice, under the statute, it is my responsibility to appoint competent legal agents to handle civil and criminal cases on behalf of the federal government that are not handled directly by lawyers employed by the government. Since these people are agents of the Minister of Justice, their selection has always rested in his discretion and I have never seen this principle challenged. The paramount rule in the department is that they be competent.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

INCREASED SALARIES FOR RURAL MAIL CARRIERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. O. W. Weichel (Waterloo North): I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General. A few moments ago he announced the groups of postal workers who would receive increases in salaries. He did not mention the rural route couriers, and while I understand they are not civil servants within the group mentioned, would he advise whether further consideration has been given to salary increases for these couriers?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): I believe that the regulations are fairly clear so far as rural mail delivery is concerned. These contracts are given after tenders have been called, and the length of the contract is four years. The rural carrier can request an increase after two years, and if it is appropriate we will give it to him.

INQUIRY AS TO MAIL SERVICE TO BRITISH GUIANA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Postmaster General. In view of the fact that some Canadian citizens have had mail which they sent to British Guiana returned, marked "Service suspended", has the postal service from Canada to British Guiana been suspended and, if so, why?

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I read something in a newspaper report to the effect that the service has been restored, and that is all I can say so far as this matter is concerned.

Mr. Douglas: As a supplementary question, will the minister make some inquiries and ascertain whether postal service to British Guiana has been suspended and, if so, why?

[Mr. MacInnis.]

Mr. Denis: I will inquire with great pleasure, Mr. Speaker.

ROYAL CANADIAN NAVY

REPORTED REFUSAL TO PERMIT RE-ENLISTMENT OF PETTY OFFICER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Almost two weeks ago he said, in reply to a question I asked him, that in a few days he expected to be able to make a statement on the Petersen case, the man dismissed from the navy whose father in law was a communist. Is that statement ready and, if not, when can we expect to get it?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I hope it will be ready soon, Mr. Speaker.

PENITENTIARIES

SELECTION OF SITE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Leo Cadieux (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Justice if the site of the new penitentiary to which frequent reference has been made in this house has been selected and, if so, if it is located in the constituency of Terrebonne?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the hon. member that a piece of land belonging to the Department of National Defence and located at St. Anne des Plaines has been declared surplus by the crown assets disposal corporation and transferred to the office of the commissioner of penitentiaries of the Department of Justice. That property is fifteen miles away from the St. Vincent de Paul institution and considered to be an excellent site on which to build a maximum security institution in the province of Quebec.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REPORTED POSTPONEMENT OF RUN-THROUGH PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he can confirm that the Canadian National Railways have decided to postpone implementation of run-throughs in western Canada?

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The announcement was made late on Friday afternoon.

FINANCE

APPROVAL OF CERTAIN AUTHORIZED EXPENDITURES FOR FISCAL YEAR 1962-63

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-86, for approving certain expenditures authorized for the public service, and the application of certain amounts in the accounts, for the financial year ended the 31st March, 1963.

Mr. E. J. Benson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to close the accounts for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963. This action is necessary in order that the audit of the accounts may be completed and reported upon by the Auditor General. His report will then, of course, be submitted to the public accounts committee where witnesses may be called and hon. members of the committee may fully examine the accounts, along with the report thereon submitted by the Auditor General. The Auditor General will, in his report, comment upon any actions which he may believe open to question.

Bill C-86 will be the final appropriation act for the fiscal year 1962-63. Parliament was dissolved on February 6, 1963, without having completed its consideration of the estimates and without having made adequate provision for the expenditures for the complete year 1962-63.

I will not comment upon the fact that vast sums of money were spent during the 1962-63 fiscal year without departmental estimates having been approved by this house. I believe that this matter was amply debated both in the house during the last parliament and during the ensuing election campaign.

I respectfully suggest to hon. members that this bill be dealt with as expeditiously as possible in order that the Auditor General may complete his job for last year and that we may get on with this year's business, to assure that a similar situation does not occur in the current fiscal year.

The situation experienced in February, 1963 was to all intents and purposes an exact parallel to the situation following from the dissolution of parliament in February, 1958. With minor exceptions the procedure which this government intends to follow in cleaning up the outstanding business of 1962-63 will parallel the course of action pursued by the former government in August and September, 1958, in cleaning up the outstanding business of 1957-58. It should be noted, too, that a major portion of the action currently being proposed is not open to question on this occasion, as it might have been in 1958 and prior years, inasmuch as an amendment to the Financial Administration Act, passed by parliament late in 1958, requires that amounts appropriated by way of special governor general's warrants while parliament is not in session must be submitted for consideration by parliament during the ensuing session.

As in 1958, the government has provided a report on supply for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1963, in which is set forth in great detail the total estimates and supply picture for 1962-63. On Friday last, on behalf of the Minister of Finance, I tabled this report on supply which set forth for each vote the total of all of the estimates, both tabled and not tabled, which were approved by the government in respect of 1962-63. There was also a comparable presentation of the amounts of supply already granted or to be granted in respect of the past fiscal year, including the amounts authorized by appropriation acts, the amounts authorized in pursuance of governor general's warrants, and the amounts for which authority is being requested in this bill. In this latter category there are 36 items which are considered to be proper charges to the 1962-63 budgetary accounts. None of these items, when authorized by this bill, will provide for further cash outlays chargeable to the old year accounts.

The summary on page 3 of the report discloses that the total amount of all items to be voted—that is government expenditures other than those which are payable under continuing statutory authority—amounted to $4,293,642,685. All but $328 million of that total amount was included in estimates tabled during the last session of parliament. There is here a difference between the 1958 and 1963 experiences. The final supplementaries for 1957-58 were tabled before parliament dissolved on February 1, 1958, whereas the final supplementaries for 1962-63 were not tabled prior to dissolution on February 6, 1963.

The summary discloses further that parliament passed five appropriation acts in 1962, thereby appropriating $3,390.7 million, leaving $902.8 million of the estimates unauthorized at the point of dissolution. Subsequently the Governor General, under the emergency authority contained in section 28 of the Financial Administration Act, caused special warrants to be issued authorizing further expenditures of $641.3 million.

Here is the second point of difference between the practice followed in 1958 and that of 1963. Five years ago the government proposed, and the Governor General approved, a single warrant to provide for expenditures during the last two months of 1957-58. This year a two phased exercise, resulting in the issue of warrants on February 8 and March 4, allowed for a more careful review of actual cash requirements, and it is hoped that the final audit for 1962-63 will indicate a more careful use of special warrant authority in 1963 than was the case five years ago.

The final entry on the summary relates to the proposal that parliament now authorize the charging to the budgetary accounts of 1962-63 of certain expenditures deemed to be appropriate subjects for such treatment. This treatment, in most cases, accords with that afforded in 1958. In other cases items are suggested for inclusion in order to overcome obvious inconsistencies in the 1958 exercise; and finally, some items are proposed on their individual merits. A basic rule in the choice of the 36 items for which parliamentary authority is now requested was that the relevant cash outlays had already been made and that no new cash outlays, chargeable to the 1962-63 accounts, will result from their being authorized during this session. I will be pleased to answer questions on these items during the committee stage of this bill.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, the summary indicates that some $49.7 millon of the total estimates to be voted was not ultimately required. Most of this amount represents those portions of appropriations which would lapse in the normal course of events. A footnote to the summary provides a balancing entry for those who may be interested in reconciling last year's records respecting appropriation acts with the figures shown in this report.

I would now refer the house to page 4 and onward of the report. Here we find, for each vote in each department, both the total estimates amount and the comparable supply amount. The supply amount is also broken down into its important components, namely the portion provided by parliament during 1962, the portion made available by special governor general's warrants, and the amount which parliament will now be asked to authorize.

Returning now to the bill which is before the house, this bill proposes approval of the expenditures authorized by the aforementioned governor general's warrants and the 36 special items which have not yet been authorized but which are considered to be proper charges to the budgetary accounts of the fiscal year 1962-63. Because no final supply bill for 1962-63 has yet been passed, this bill has been prepared in a form which will serve as a final 1962-63 supply bill in Canadian financial records. Finally, as the passage of this measure will not in any way restrict the authority of the public accounts committee to pursue its normal activities in respect of the public accounts for 1962-63, I urge that it be given favourable consideration by this house.

Before resuming my seat, Mr. Speaker, it has occurred to me that I should forestall any arguments which may be made that expenditures for the fiscal year 1962-63 have in any way been increased beyond what is normal and proper. Hon. members will note that on page 71 of the report on accounts the total amount of the 36 items for which authority is sought is shown as $211,856,066. Considering this amount, if one then looks at pages 67 to 70 of the report they will see items amounting to $37,545,558 which do not affect the budgetary deficit. This reduces the amount which is being added, which would affect the deficit to $174,310,508. Of this there are items which are identical or directly similar to items included in 1958—that is, items which were put into the final supply bill in 1958 by the former government—in the amount of $73,529,057. This includes items such as the agricultural commodities stabilization account loss of $71,856,049, and so on, totalling $73,529,057. This reduces the amount which could be considered as affecting the budgetary deficit to $100,781,451. From this there should be deducted two items which were covered by governor general's warrants in 1958 and which are now being included as a final supply item in 1963. These are first of all the Canadian National Railways deficit, which is $48,919,500, and the final payment with respect to the Colombo plan in the amount of $3,458,333. Thus if we deduct this amount of $52,377,833 we get down to an amount of $48,403,618 as affecting the budgetary deficit due to this bill and to the actions of the government.

From this there is a certain group of other items which I believe are quite proper charges and which I would deduct at this point. First of all there is the T.C.A. deficit, which is included in this supply bill, of $3,540,700, which occurred in the calendar year 1962 and is thus, I believe, a proper charge to the 1962-63 fiscal year. There are also several items to effect write-offs which were recognized as valid prior to March 31, 1963. These include the write-off of the N.R.U. reactor of $25,239,005, the write-off of loans to Northern Canada Power Commission, which was doing some work at Inuvik in the Northwest Territories, for which the government had agreed to reimburse it. This amounts to $7,004,000. Then there is the write-off of land in the canal navigation system at Cornwall, Ontario, which was recommended in two succeeding years by the Auditor General, amounting to $1,710,600; and the write-off of loans to the New Westminster harbour commission of $284,700, making in total a further reduction of $37,779,005.

This gets the amount that would affect the deficit and is debatable down to $10,624,613, and this is made up of the following items.

Payments in connection with the winter works program of 1962-63, the final cost being $5 million, and payments to various funds to which there was a contribution by the government to bring these funds up to the agreed amount, as follows: the national gallery fund, the national centennial fund, the national library purchase account, the national capital fund and the railway crossing grading account. These amount to $1,043,291. Then there is the payment with regard to the south Saskatchewan dam, affecting 1962-63, of $240,259. There are certain reimbursements to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation which the government agreed to make with respect to the past fiscal year. The amount in respect of research and community planning of C.M.H.C. was $754,794; reimbursement of C.M.H.C. for losses in federal-provincial housing projects in the past fiscal year amounted to $1,204,949; reimbursement of C.M.H.C. for forgiveness of municipal loans under section 36G of the National Housing Act for 1962-63 amounted to $1,873,630. Finally the figure in regard to dredging Montreal harbour, which work was completed in the fiscal year 1962-63, amounted to $507,700. This gives a total of $10,624,613.

I think all hon. members will agree that these are proper charges to the accounts for the fiscal year 1962-63, and I would therefore urge all hon. members to assist in allowing the passage of this bill in order to clean up last year's accounts.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I think first I should congratulate the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance on the way he is piloting this bill through the house. It is always a pleasure to see young members coming along and those who are not always in the front row given responsibilities in piloting bills through certain stages. I want to congratulate the parliamentary secretary in this regard.

Having said that, I was reminded in listening to him of something Shakespeare once wrote; "Methinks the lady doth protest too much". If the bill is as simple as he says it is and as clearcut as all that with no ulterior motive whatsoever, then I do not know why he spent ten minutes of his time in dealing with anticipated criticism which might be made in committee. I will not say he had a guilty conscience, sir, but there might have been an uneasy feeling in his mind when he began to deal with the figures which are presently before us.

There is, of course, nothing one can do about these figures at the moment because we have no way in which we can balance them against definitive amounts. One has to accept, and one does accept, of course, the statement of the parliamentary secretary in respect to the way in which these moneys have been advanced and expended. I quite agree with him that there were no additional items here which could go into the cash balance of the public account other than those loans and advances to which he referred which are below the line. But there are quite a few figures, Mr. Speaker, included in those to which he referred which do affect the increased deficit or the budgetary deficit of the country.

If I were a suspicious person, which of course I am not; and if I were a partisan, which of course I am not, I might feel that possibly the parliamentary secretary found some way of adding figures to these expenditures so as to show how much bigger the deficit under the preceding government, the government of my right hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), was compared with that of the present government. I am sure that when these figures were brought down the thought was that it would be very helpful if it could be shown that the deficit incurred by the preceding government was substantially greater than the deficit which would be incurred by this government under the budget brought down by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) on June 13.

Now, of course, as things have turned out the government know that is entirely hopeless, and what they are hoping to do is to have the deficit of the present government under the Minister of Finance, if possible, not too much greater than the deficit incurred by the preceding government. The situations have been reversed. But I think that even with these additions, which perhaps can be questioned and to which I will make some brief reference in passing in committee, the purpose has failed. It would be indulging in the rankest of prophecy to say that the deficit next year might be much more substantial than the deficit this year if we completely accept without question all the figures contained in the white paper and the figures contained in this report on supply. We do not accept them per se, Mr. Speaker. We do not think some of them should be properly charged to the preceding government at all. However, I will have something to say about them in a moment—and one does not have to apologize for this—and in committee we may question certain items which are before us.

One reason you have no starting point and no way in which to balance them is that in the estimates we have before us, in the first column of the total estimates in the report, you will find the words "excluding statutory items". Mr. Speaker, I am not quarrelling with those words entered there. They were entered there, as the parliamentary secretary said, in the report which my predecessor the former minister of finance brought down in 1958. But when you bring those words in, what is meant by statutory items? Where is the starting point? For instance, everyone knows that the salary, shall we say, of Mr. Speaker is fixed by statute. We know what the salary is; it is easy to determine. But when you come to another statutory item, such as the amounts paid to the provinces, then how do you determine those amounts without going into all the details with officials? Because the amount paid to each province varies from year to year, depending on the shift in population of the province concerned. How do you determine another statutory item such as the amount paid by way of family allowances? That amount varies too with the population. How do you determine, as another example, the amounts paid to the universities? That is a statutory amount, and it too depends upon the population of each province.

So there is no way whatsoever of determining these amounts by taking these figures per se, analysing them, and coming to any final result in so far as they affect the total over-all deficit. All we have here is the amount of our appropriation acts passed by the preceding parliament and the amount covered by governor general's warrants, and we are asked today to pass 36 items amounting in all to $211 million. We are also asked to approve the fact that the preceding government spent this money before March 31 or, if they did not spend it, that they were responsible for its expenditure.

Mr. Speaker, one could spend days and days and days analysing these figures. The minister could have his officials in front of him and one could go through one department after another, and in the end you would reach a result depending on your own wishes and on the imagination you were using in analysing the figures. So we of the opposition do not propose to spend very much time this afternoon in dealing with the bill on second reading. Some of the items to which the parliamentary secretary referred should undoubtedly be charged to the expenditures of last year. The C.N.R. deficit—although on this I will have some comment to make when we reach committee stage—and the T.C.A. deficit are both matters properly chargeable to the former government under the fiscal year ending March 31.

But there are others. I question entirely the figure relating to the N.R.U. reactor. The reactor has not been thrown down the drain. It is still working and still doing the same work today as it did a year ago. There is no reason in the world why that reactor should be charged up to our expenditure for last year except for the fact that the government wants to increase the deficit by some $20 million plus. With regard to the Cornwall canal, the parliamentary secretary said this had been recommended by some committee some years ago. Is that any reason why it should be charged up to the former government at this particular time? Mr. Speaker, you know very well why it is being charged up. As I say, one could go on and on with various items, and I do not propose to do so. But I think, or I hope, we will spend a brief time, subject to other hon. members in the committee, dealing with some of the items, and then we will let the matter pass.

I should like to point out in passing, Mr. Speaker, that if you accept the deficit as now proposed by the parliamentary secretary of $709 million—we do not, of course, but for the sake of argument if we accept it—we find it is $82 million less than the actual deficit in the preceding year. So that even accepting the figure of $709 million the deficit is $82 million less than it was the previous year. One would have liked to see it even less. We can argue that it should be less, but even accepting the figure as it is one can say that the government of which I had the pleasure and honour of being a member did keep its promise and worked, although perhaps very slowly, toward a balanced budget.

When you think, Mr. Speaker, of some of the expenditures made by the former government as compared with the previous one, the actual increase in expenditures on the figures before us today is $64 million over the preceding year 1962. One could analyse these figures and see how they were arrived at. I can point out right away, though, that during the past year the government of which I was a member paid out for technical training and vocational schools $171 million more than was paid out in the preceding year. I have forgotten the exact figure, but there were millions and millions of dollars more paid out in health and welfare fields than were disbursed in the preceding year. We could argue about the deficit, that we should not have increased the deficit and so on. The fact remains that last year the interest and carrying charges on our debt was $79 million more than in the preceding year. When one realizes that our total increase in expenditure was only $62 million and that those two items to which I have referred amounted in themselves to $240 million, we can certainly suggest without boasting that there was very good administration shown in carrying on the services which we did carry on while incurring such a relatively small increase.

I hope the parliamentary secretary can tell us, when we get into committee, what was the increase in the statutory payments during the past year as compared with the year before. I think hon. members will find that it was fairly substantial. We know from our records that people are living longer, that more and more money is being paid out to those in receipt of old age pensions, fortunately for those of us who are getting older. I suspect that the statutory payments made last year were a good many millions of dollars more than were paid out the year before. I am suggesting, without taking the time of the house by going into the figures in great detail, that even having regard to the amounts which are now before us, we are relatively happy with the record so established. It is certainly not one which suggests poor administration or anything of that kind as far as the government of which I was a member is concerned.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): One feels a certain amount of futility in dealing with appropriations of money which has already been spent and in respect of which no useful action can be taken at this time to indicate to the government whether it is being spent properly or in line with the wishes of members of parliament.

I am always amused by the Leader of the Opposition and by other members of the Conservative party when they try to make so much of their respect for the rights of parliament. During the last few years I do not think any party has run roughshod over the rights of parliament to the extent they have. I say this because I believe the examination of the estimates is one of the most important functions of hon. members. If the right of hon. members to peruse or examine expenditure, or proposed expenditure, were taken away, in other words if the right to control the purse strings were taken away from members of this house, we would have reached a stage where a most important part of the rights of those elected to parliament would have been removed.

Let us look back at last year. I apologize if I am wrong, but for the most part the money which is being voted in this appropriation bill is money which was spent by the previous government. I think if we look back over the past year we will find that the business of the house was organized in such a way that priority was certainly not given to the examination of the government's estimated expenditure by members of the house. There appeared to be considerations in the mind of the government of that day which were above and beyond the importance of the rights and privileges of members of parliament to discharge this important function.

An hon. Member: Who stopped them coming in?

Mr. Olson: Someone asks "Who stopped them coming in". Well, if my memory serves me correctly the government of that day had the responsibility for organizing the business of the house, and if they chose not to bring forward the estimates that omission must remain the full responsibility of the administration of that time. I would also point out that as far as this group are concerned we leaned over backward to give the government more time to bring in its measures dealing with the business of the country. But there is a limit to anyone's patience.

An hon. Member: You can say that again.

Mr. Olson: I should like to give the house an example of the former government's indifference to the rights of parliament. On page 61 of the report on supply we find an item of $16 million in respect of which authority is now being sought. The item concerns payments under the Freight Rates Reduction Act. Not one cent of that sum was appropriated by way of interim supply or authorized by an appropriation act. I know there were a number of members who were anxious to discuss this question whenever it might have arisen, either during the discussion on interim supply or on some other occasion. The opinion is definitely prevalent in this country that this direct grant discriminates against forms of transport other than the railways. We in this group particularly wanted the opportunity to discuss this matter and the effects of such an appropriation, before the money was spent. Now it is spent.

As I say, I do not wish to take up much of the time of the house at this point, but I believe we must take a long, hard look at what is happening to these important rights and privileges of hon. members in all parts of the house. In my humble opinion we should have the right to control the purse strings and governments must not put other considerations, whatever they may be, above this important duty which falls on hon. members.

There is another matter to which I should like to direct the attention of the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance. I wish to raise it again when we get into committee. On page 8 we see an amount of $71,856,049 for which there does not appear to be any authorization by interim supply or by special warrant of the Governor General. This amount is all being asked for under the bill before us now, and we should like to have a detailed explanation as to the purpose for which this $71 million is required.

As I have said, when one looks at these expenditures one feels a certain amount of futility. The money has already been spent. It is gone. What is the use, therefore, of raising any objections now? This is the situation we face. I know that the trucking industry, for example, had a lot of representations to make to the government respecting the $16 million that was paid to the railways. They seem to think they can prove that this money and other money that the government grants to the railways is used to lower freight rates in certain areas so as to squeeze out the trucking industry. I am certain that the government and members of parliament generally do not wish to appropriate public funds for the purpose of squeezing certain segments of industry out of business, in this instance by giving the railways subsidies which enable them to lower their rates below what is reasonably competitive.

With these few remarks, Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw to your attention again that the responsibility of government includes the responsibility to organize the business of the house so that the rights and privileges of members respecting the spending of money will not be taken away.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to validate expenditures that were made in the fiscal year 1962-63. It is fairly evident that the house has no option but to pass the bill, but I suggest that while we are doing so the flag ought to be put at half mast. We are in effect drawing attention to the fact, and it is a fact that the bill does not set aside, that the 1962-63 fiscal year was one in which all the taxpayers' money that was spent was spent without consideration of the items in the estimates.

A very large portion of the money got voted through the medium of interim supply bills. Every time an interim supply bill was presented to the house we were assured that no one of these bills was appropriating all of any estimate for the year, and that there would be an opportunity to members before the entire amount was voted to discuss the individual items. Hon. members who were here will recall that in December of last year I pointed out that the undertaking given at that time by the then minister of finance was in my view an undertaking that was given in good faith but one that would not be kept. And it was not.

The other way in which money was authorized for expenditure was by the issue of governor general's warrants. Yet even though it can be said that the money spent under the interim supply bills and by governor general's warrants was spent legally, it is still true that in that year, 1962-63, the House of Commons of Canada, the peoples' representatives, the members who are supposed to have control of the purse strings, had no opportunity to vote for any one of the individual items of the estimates. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that my proposal that the flag be put at half mast is a very mild one. This is something that is not good in the history of Canadian parliamentary democracy. To have this kind of experience is sad.

The bill before us will do three things at least, though it might do more as well. It does a certain amount of bookkeeping and this leads, of course, to argument between the present government and the former minister of finance as to which column figures are being put in. It does not make much difference to the taxpayer in the end. As I say, the bill does some bookkeeping. The second thing it does is to give formal or parliamentary approval to the money that was spent under the terms of governor general's warrants. The third thing it does is to authorize the expenditure of the 36 items referred to by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance. But in any case, Mr. Speaker, no matter under what heading you subsume the various items, in all cases we are talking about money that is already spent, and there is nothing we can do about it but note the fact that the year 1962-63 was a sorry one for the parliament of Canada in terms of the responsibility that is supposed to devolve upon the people's representatives.

I know that when this question comes up arguments arise as to whose responsibility it was, whose fault it was. There is no point now in going over all that, except to say that parliament could have been called earlier in 1962. We could have got at the estimates if there had been recognition at that time of their importance, the importance of the principle that parliament controls the purse strings. But I think what the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance said at one point is perhaps something that we should note. He said "Let us not spend too much time quarrelling about the past; let us make sure that it does not happen in this session of parliament". I suggest that is an admonition that is well put. Let it not happen in this session of parliament. It ought not ever to happen again.

I have done a lot of thinking about this problem, Mr. Speaker, and I confess I do not see how we can prevent it from happening by changing the rules or changing the statutes. I think the only way this sort of thing can be prevented is by increasing in the minds of all members of parliament, and particularly on the part of those who are on the government side of the house at any given time, respect for the rights and traditions of parliament. There is need for more respect for the importance of the control of the purse strings. If a government had that respect I suggest it would find a way to organize the business of the house in such a manner that the estimates would be dealt with.

There is a tendency in this House of Commons to feel that the estimates are something that can be dealt with when everything else is done; that they can be put off until Friday; that we can hold Saturday sittings and deal with estimates, or that they can be left until the fall or some later time in the session. The feeling is that we have to get along with legislation because legislation is important. I am right there with everyone else asking the government to proceed with particular pieces of legislation in which I am interested, but estimates also constitute legislation. They constitute one of the most important pieces of legislation that we deal with, and I hope that the experience we are going through today, realizing that we are put on the spot in that we have to pass a bill about which we can do nothing, will cause us to think a bit about the importance of the role of dealing with the expenditure of money.

As I say, it is a highly perfunctory performance we are going through this afternoon. Members on the government side are now on the treasury benches and they are faced with the constitutional and legal necessity of getting this legislation through. It relates to money they did not spend but because they have to get it through they are prepared, of course, to support the bill. Members of the official opposition are faced with a bill that validates spending done by them last year, so they have got to support it. The other two parties in this corner of the house were witnesses to the whole business. Most of us were here last year and we tried to get the estimates brought on. We wanted a chance to discuss them. We have no option but to support the bill as well, but I emphasize the perfunctory nature of the whole thing not just to throw stones in the direction of those I think were responsible but to urge the necessity of greater respect for the estimates of parliament, greater respect for the principle that parliament does control the purse strings.

In this connection I hope that when the day comes that we get the special committee on procedure established, that committee will give some thought to this problem. I hope that thought will be given to it in some other quarters. I have been interested in browsing through the records of some of the early years of the House of Commons of Canada, and I have discovered that in the first session of the first parliament, which began after the 1st of July, 1867, the members of that day had a supply bill.

They thought it was a huge sum of money. It was $5 million. Mind you, this amount was not for a full 12 months; it was for nine months from July 1, 1867 to March 31, 1868. This would work out to something in the order of about $6.5 million for a full year.

Perhaps 1867 is not a good year to take as a basis for comparison. Let us move on two or three years to about 1870 or 1871. If you look at the records for those years, you will find that the total expenditures of the Dominion of Canada were running around the order of $13 million or $14 million a year. I am sure our forebears who sat in the House of Commons of that day, the building that was previously here, were impressed by this staggering figure of $13 million per year. This year, Mr. Speaker, our budget is something over $6 billion. We have multiplied our expenditures from 1870 to the present time by 480 times. We have increased our expenditures, in other words, by 48,000 per cent.

However, Mr. Speaker, we are still handling these much larger sums of money in almost the same way as those sums of money were handled in 1867 and 1870. It is still done by the individual items having to be processed through the committee of supply. They managed to do this in eight or ten days back in those days, because the amounts were much smaller. The basic way in which the matter is handled, however, has not changed in all these years.

Now, I have already said something about the importance of parliamentary control of the purse strings, and I think this must not be overlooked in any way, shape or form. I do believe, however, that we have to find some way to cope with the greatly increased amount of money we have to vote, to cope with the greater complexity of government business. One proposal that was suggested a few years ago was that of setting up a standing committee on estimates. It does not seem to me that this method has been used as much as it might have been. I should like to urge that our special committee on procedure, or other bodies that are interested, take another look at that process to see if we cannot make more use of the committee on estimates. This committee was set up on the basis of having the estimates referred to it, with the idea that those estimates would be returned to the committee of supply, and with the further idea that, having been examined thoroughly in the standing committee, time might be saved in the house.

The idea is not just to save time so that we can go off on a holiday. The fact is that there are only 365 days a year and if we were to sit every day in the year we would not be able to do all the business that comes before us in the same way as it was done by our forebears, even although they had to deal with only 1/480th of the amount of money with which we have to deal.

Perhaps we will have to come to some understanding on a basis whereby we thoroughly examine some departments one year and leave the remainder of the departments to be examined thoroughly the next year. I throw this out as a suggestion. I do not believe we should go on year after year, decade after decade, without finding any new ways of dealing with the problem. The experience through which we are now going should bring us face to face with the fact that this is a very real problem. I know that we have this particular problem because the dissolution that took place and the fact that elections came along pretty thick and fast. However, even when we have a parliament that lasts three, four or five years, this same problem remains, of how to get a proper treatment of the estimates. All that the present experience does is to highlight the problem for us.

I urge that, based on our having to vote today a whole year's estimates without having considered them at all, the time has come when we ought to be trying to find some way to improve our handling of these estimates. I emphasize again that even more important than any changes in the way we handle them, even more important than any rules or committees or what have you, is the need for all of us in this place, having the highest respect for the importance of our job as members of parliament, to see to it that we control the purse strings, that it is not left to the executive to spend money and come along afterwards to get approval. This basic tenet of parliamentary practice should be followed.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to hold up the passage of this bill unduly, but in view of the snipings in which various hon. members have indulged, and which have been directed at the former government because of alleged delay in the passage of legislation and estimates during the 25th parliament, I have a few words to say in reply. I should like, therefore, to take a few moments to go through what I believe are some of the most important facts arising out of that parliament as they refer to the present situation.

It is very disturbing, for a member who sat through the 25th parliament as a member of the government party, to hear these people who filibustered, delayed and wrangled over the business of the house last year, preventing the passage of a great deal of legislation, saying now that the former government failed to conduct the business of the house in a proper manner. I think that in saying this they are, to say the least, being unfair; and to say the worst, they are wrong. I should like to make some comparisons because I think comparisons are what we must make at this point.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) said we must examine the procedures of the house in handling some of these matters. It was stated also that we ought not to allow this situation to happen again, as it did in the 25th parliament—that is the passage of estimates by governor general's warrants without complete investigation by the house. I cannot help agreeing with the hon. member entirely on that point. What is required in order to conduct such a full, fair investigation is a responsible opposition. I am going to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that in this 26th parliament we have a responsible opposition, and I refer particularly of course to the official opposition. I want to say that this opposition has acted in the best interest of the country and has proven to be a responsible opposition, trying to do its job for the sake of the country, and actually conducting the business of the house without all the delaying tactics that were used in the last parliament.

Now, in spite of the remarkable number of mistakes the government has made during this session, the progress on essential and non-controversial measures brought before this parliament has been good. This is the 42nd day of this session and we have completed the speech from the throne, and the budget debate, we have passed the exports insurance bill, the bill to establish the Atlantic development board and the department of industry. In so far as estimates are concerned, we have completed the estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce and we have made a good start on the estimates of the Department of Transport.

I should like to refer for a moment to private bills because, here again, I believe this parliament has made good progress. Most of us remember that in the last parliament private bills were delayed, and on many occasions for political reasons. In so far as standing committees are concerned, I would refer particularly to banking and commerce and miscellaneous private bills, in which many of the private bills were opposed merely for the purpose of delay. A good many of these committees were used for the sole purpose of trying to bring some other issues before them, and of trying to delay the passage of government business. Already this session the committee on banking and commerce and the committee on miscelleneous private bills have passed a good many of the private bills left over from the last parliament.

The hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Olson) mentioned that the former government did not succeed in passing the estimates, and he laid some blame on that government. In reply I would say that if his party had not divided when the crucial vote came, we might have been able to finish the business of the house.

Mr. Olson: You needed new estimates by that time.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, everyone knows that the temper of the 25th parliament was not one in which any work could be properly done.

Mr. Olson: Because of lack of leadership.

Mr. Aiken: The hon. member was not here from 1958 to 1962 when some of the best legislation ever brought forward in Canada was presented and passed. I do not want to go into it all, but he knows very well the legislation to which I refer—the vocational schools program, the sewage and waterworks program and so forth.

A minority government requires the support of every hon. member in the house, and it must be remembered that the former government had only 116 members out of a total of 265. Now hon. members who sat in opposition at that time come along and say, "Oh, you did not do anything."

Mr. Olson: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Aiken: Yes, I will, when I finish my sentence. The reason business could not be advanced was because there was nothing except filibuster, wrangling and delay—

Mr. Robichaud: Filibuster by yourselves.

Mr. Aiken:—with the result that the business of the government was held up. I will accept the question now.

Mr. Olson: I would like to ask the hon. member, could he tell us why, in the last session of the 24th parliament, which actually should have passed these estimates, the government was unable to do so at that time, when it had such an overwhelming number of members on its side of the house?

Mr. Aiken: The hon. member is asking about the 24th parliament. My reply is that the business of 24th parliament was well conducted.

Mr. Olson: The last session?

Mr. Aiken: Yes, in the last session.

Mr. Olson: That is when these estimates should have been passed.

Mr. Aiken: The government satisfactorily conducted the business that was before the house.

Mr. Robichaud: You are easily satisfied.

Mr. Aiken: It is very easy for the hon. gentleman to say we did not do this, but there is a very well-known saying in this house, and it is a true one, that the government proposes and the opposition disposes. Those measures which the present government has proposed and which are worthy of approval have been passed by us to date, and I think that is a case of responsible disposal.

I am sure the Secretary of State would like to use part of what I have said by way of proving that he has done a good job in conducting the business of the house. He shakes his head, so perhaps he would not; but I am sure someone else in his party will. I merely say that the conduct of the business of this parliament depends on the co-operation of everyone in the house, and I can speak for my party in saying that those measures which are good for the country will be dealt with expeditiously, and have already been dealt with in that manner.

I do not want to rehash old scores of the last parliament, but it was mentioned that these estimates could have been brought forward last year. I would point out that in 1962, which includes the period referred to by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, all parties then in opposition spent 27 days on supplementary estimates which should have been passed in much shorter time than that. In the fall session of 1962 the opposition spent eight days on interim supply—

Mr. Pickersgill: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Aiken: When I finish my sentence.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would like to ask a question about that point.

Mr. Aiken: All right. The opposition spent eight days on interim supply, on an item that should have gone through in half an hour.

Mr. Pickersgill: Will the hon. gentleman not admit that on two occasions the government was given interim supply within a few hours, and in one case within a few minutes, and it was only when it became evident, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) pointed out, we were never going to be allowed to discuss the main estimates, that we took that time on interim supply?

Mr. Aiken: I do not agree with that at all.

Mr. Pickersgill: The record is there to show it.

Mr. Aiken: That supplementary estimates were passed within a few hours?

Mr. Pickersgill: I am talking about interim supply.

Mr. Aiken: I will add to what I said by saying it was a plain case of filibustering and delaying everything the government brought forward.

Mr. Byrne: Nonsense.

Mr. Aiken: It is not nonsense. Everyone who sat in parliament at that time knows there was nothing but delay, filibuster and wrangling to try to make the government look ineffective, a government that was in a minority position and which could not do anything without the complete co-operation of all hon. members.

Mr. Olson: Tell us about the earlier parliament.

Mr. Aiken: I have just finished speaking about the earlier parliament and about what happened to supplementary estimates.

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Aiken: Yes.

Mr. Knowles: I wonder if in his interesting speech the hon. member would tell us a little more about that earlier parliament, in the light of the fact that the estimates we are now being asked to approve are estimates that were presented to the 24th parliament? As he knows, one of the clauses in this bill asks us to provide that these estimates be taken as having been passed on April 1, 1962. Would it not have been possible in that parliament, the one before the last one, when the party with which he is associated had a huge majority, to stay a little longer and get those estimates through, if it had had respect for this principle?

Mr. Aiken: The hon. member knows very well that the estimates in 1962 were brought forward very shortly before the house dissolved for the election.

Mr. Pickersgill: You did not have to dissolve it.

Mr. Olson: Why dissolve it then?

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Aiken: The house dissolved in April for a June election, and how one could consider passing estimates in that time I do not know.

Mr. Olson: Nonsense.

Mr. Nowlan: Are we in committee, or where are we?

Mr. Aiken: We had a full four years—

Mr. Olson: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka has the floor and he should be allowed to continue without interruption.

Mr. Aiken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The 24th parliament had a full period of four years, which is the usual, customary and accepted period of time for the life of a parliament. If that parliament had gone on for five years one could very well have said the government was unduly delaying its appeal to the country. There is no argument in saying that the government should have stayed on for another six months or a year; that has nothing to do with it. The government stayed on for a full four years, and I see no reason now for coming back and saying it should have gone on a little longer. I do not know what would have happened during the remainder of that time. In fact I have been trying not to rake up past history, but now we are going back over the history of two previous parliaments.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to wind up my remarks by saying that the official opposition at this time feels it is providing responsible opposition to the government with respect to the position in which this country and parliament finds itself, with a minority government. However, let no one think we are going to let any legislation or estimates pass through the house without proper and due consideration. I promise, particularly in connection with the budgetary resolutions, that they will receive the scrutiny and determined opposition that they deserve. They must not pass as they now stand.

Mr. Knowles: Which ones?

Mr. Aiken: Even as revised, in reply to the question of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). We will have to determine which budget resolutions we have before us when we get to them. I have one final point to make with respect to the presentation of this appropriation bill. Much has been said about the budget and much will be said, but I think the people of Canada can be thankful for one thing, that the unsatisfactory budget that was presented on June 13 this year has prevented another general election in 1963. I am convinced that the government planned, regardless of the consequences, to find an excuse to call another general election in 1963.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Aiken: They believed—and wrongly, I am sure—that they could create in a few weeks a sufficiently rosy impression, without being called upon to perform—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am wondering whether the hon. member who now has the floor would not agree with me that he is at this point straying from the principle of the bill now before the house.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, my reason for dealing with this matter is that we are discussing the business of the house and I was about to say—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It is my understanding, not that we are discussing the business of the house but that we are discussing Bill No. C-86, which is an item of business before the house.

Mr. Aiken: I accept your decision on this matter, Mr. Speaker. I did intend to proceed to detail certain evidence which convinced me about this particular matter but I will let it pass in deference to Your Honour's ruling.

That pretty well disposes of that point, Mr. Speaker. I had a really good argument on this and I had the evidence, I think, to prove that this was the government's intention; but it is the ruling of the Chair that I am straying too far, and I will therefore desist. I conclude by saying that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) has done one good thing with his budget in that he has left the government in such bad shape that they will not dare go to the country for a long time.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I had not intended to say anything in this debate. I know everyone says that. But I want to utter just two sentences in response to the speech we have just heard. The first is that in the 60 days before Christmas in the 1962 session of the 25th parliament 17 government bills were passed by the House of Commons of that time. If on the sixtieth day of this session—and we are at the forty second—there have also been 17 government measures passed, then I will congratulate hon. gentlemen opposite and say they have done just as well as we did in co-operating. But they have a lot to go to get to 17. That is my first sentence.

Mr. Nowlan: That is two.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. gentleman a question on this point?

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes.

Mr. Aiken: May I ask him how many matters the government now has on the order paper they are prepared to go ahead with, in view of the withdrawal of several items?

Mr. Pickersgill: That would be out of order, Mr. Speaker. I will answer that question on another occasion. My second sentence is this, that this bill need not have been necessary at all if the previous government—I am saying nothing about the time before the 1962 election; of course, there was nothing to stop them bringing on their estimates and getting them all passed before they ever had the election in 1962, but I am not saying anything about that—after the election of 1962 if the previous government had followed the example of the present government and called parliament together promptly 38 days after the election; if they had followed this course, we would have had 63 additional days in which to deal with these matters. One hundred and one days elapsed between the election last year and the day parliament was allowed to meet. If that period had been used for consideration of the estimates, this bill need not have been brought before the house at all today.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary could answer the question that I raised earlier this afternoon. I am not sure that he would have the figures here. I wonder what is the total amount of the statutory items for the fiscal year preceding this one, and the total amount of the statutory items which are excluded by the wording of the resolution. I have no particular reason for thinking he would have these figures, but he will understand that there is a difference between the two. They are not before us at all, and I am wondering just what effect they would have on the budgetary position.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I have here some estimates prior to the accounts being closed off completely.

Mr. Nowlan: Unless you have the totals, there is not much point.

Mr. Benson: The final supply bill here authorizes payments representing a total of $4,244 million, including $176 million on account of loans, investment advances and budgetary items. Therefore the payment is $4,068 million. To this has to be added the estimated expenditures incurred under continuing statutory authority. This covers such things as family allowances, pensions, debt charges, and so on. These were, as detailed in the revised estimates, $2,398 million, and the actual exceeded this by $150 million, making a total of $2,548 million for the non-budgetary items.

Mr. Nowlan: Does the parliamentary secretary know what they were for the preceding year?

Mr. Benson: I have not that figure, Mr. Chairman.

Clause agreed to.

On clause 2—$853,162,680 granted for 1962-63.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I wonder what the procedure is going to be. Are we going through these item by item, with regard to the schedule covering them, or what is the proposal of the parliamentary secretary in regard to dealing with them?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I looked back at the precedent for this bill in 1958. The items were carried down through the clauses, and the schedule was then dealt with. It was dealt with by departments. The main headings of the departments would simply be called, rather than cover every item in the schedule, which itself amounts to some 38 pages. If this is agreeable to the house it would facilitate the passage of the bill.

The Chairman: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 2 agreed to.

Clauses 3 to 6 inclusive agreed to.

On the schedule.

The Chairman: We will discuss the items for the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. Knowles: Might I ask a general question first of all relating to the schedule. The schedule differs from the report on supply in that the report on supply gives additional information. I am wondering what the parliamentary secretary has in mind by way of a modus operandi so that we can ask some questions about these 36 items which are being authorized by this bill.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, what I would propose, if it is agreed, is that as we go through the sections of the bill dealing with the various departments, hon. members wishing to ask questions should refer to the report on supply, as I think this would be a little easier. It is generally constituted in the same manner and in the same order as the bill itself. For example, in agriculture, under "administration branch", it is the same as the report on supply.

Mr. Knowles: Might I be permitted to ask a general overriding question with regard to these 36 items. This is money which has already been spent. How did it happen that it was not authorized either by an interim supply bill or by governor general's warrant?

Mr. Benson: As I mentioned in my statement earlier, Mr. Chairman, the final estimates for last year were not presented at the end of the year. The government then obtained two governor general's warrants covering specific items. These 36 items were not specifically covered by those warrants and were picked up at the end of the year on March 31, 1963, and are now proposed in the final supply bill. They would presumably have been included in a final supply bill for last year had there been one.

Mr. Knowles: Were they already in the estimates book for last year? They are not in the nature of supplementary estimates?

Mr. Benson: No.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, that is not quite correct. My hon. friend for Winnipeg North Centre referred to these moneys having been spent. Actually the majority of these items are bookkeeping items with regard to which no money is spent at all. They might or might not have appeared in the final supplementary estimates if they had been recommended by the minister of finance and approved by treasury board, and had then come before the committee of supply. But none of that action was taken prior to dissolution, and therefore none of these items actually appeared in the final supplementary estimates.

Mr. Benson: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I take it you have called the Department of Agriculture on the schedule?

The Chairman: Yes.

Mr. Olson: I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance whether he could give us a little more information with regard to vote No. 163, a matter of $71 million required to recoup the agricultural commodities stabilization account to cover the net operating loss of the agricultural stabilization board as at March 31, 1963. First of all, is this just a bookkeeping item to take care of losses which had accumulated, and did this accumulation occur during the fiscal year from April 1, 1962 to March 31, 1963? Then, of course, the other point which I brought up earlier was that no part of this was authorized by interim supply motions or by special governor general's warrants.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, this item is placed each year in the final supplementary estimates to credit to the account an amount equal to the net operating loss incurred during the fiscal year in carrying out the price stabilization program. Its inclusion will ensure the charging of a loss to the appropriate fiscal year in the accounts. The year of the price stabilization board is to March 31 of each year, so that it would cover the loss of the stabilization board from April 1, 1962 to March 31, 1963.

Mr. Olson: The public accounts, I presume, will show a detailed explanation of which commodities incurred these losses?

Mr. Benson: Yes, I would think that would be in the public accounts. If it is not published in the public accounts I will make the information available to the hon. member. I have it all here and could table it if he so requires.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Mr. Chairman, I want to raise a point in connection with some of the items I have looked at. For example, vote 143 in the Department of External Affairs indicates that a certain amount was taken to reimburse the agricultural stabilization board for the shipment of skim milk powder and canned pork to refugees in Hong Kong. Then in the next item there is an amount voted to reimburse the agricultural stabilization board for skim milk powder donated to international relief agencies. In the net amount paid to the agricultural stabilization board, were these amounts paid through the Department of External Affairs deducted? Is this the final net amount after these amounts were taken off?

Mr. Benson: Yes, that is so with regard to the purchase and transportation of this milk to Hong Kong. It is customary to include in the final supplementary estimates items such as this which represent the cost of supplies donated to international services, for which the agricultural stabilization board is paid, in effect, by the Department of External Affairs.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): And this is the amount after that amount has been deducted?

Mr. Benson: Yes, it is net.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as the public accounts will not be out yet for some time and the parliamentary secretary said that he had this information available now, I wonder if he would undertake to send me, either today or very soon, the information he has?

Mr. Benson: Yes, I will undertake to do that.

Mr. Nowlan: Would the parliamentary secretary give me a breakdown—if he cannot do so now perhaps he could do so later—of item 100, which is the one dealing with premiums for hogs and lambs? I have a distinct recollection that some changes were made in the original estimates concerning this matter, and I am wondering whether the original estimates included this or whether it was the actual cash, if any, which was paid out. These premiums were disallowed for some time and then they were reinstated. I should like to see a breakdown of item 100.

Mr. Benson: Yes, I will undertake to get that.

The Chairman: Shall the agricultural items carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: We now go to page 6 of the schedule, the atomic energy items.

Mr. Nowlan: I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary would explain the item of $25,239,005. I am sure it comes as a great surprise to him that I should ask this question, but the item deals with a write-off on the NRU reactor. It is not a cash item but a bookkeeping entry, I would assume, which the government found convenient to add to the expenditures of this fiscal year.

Mr. Benson: I could explain this briefly or go into some detail, depending on what the hon. gentleman wishes.

Mr. Nowlan: You might be brief, but you will not convince me anyway.

Mr. Benson: Basically, what happened in this situation was that a reactor was built by the government of Canada, under the atomic energy commission, to produce plutonium to be sold to the United States under a long term contract. The price under this contract was to be renegotiated as of June 30, 1962. During the initial period of the contract the price was sufficient to provide funds toward the amortization of the cost of the reactor. In June 1962 when the contract price was to be renegotiated the United States was in the position where they had ample domestic supplies of plutonium. So the price which was obtainable was much lower and would not permit covering both the operating expenses of this reactor and its further amortization. At this point the atomic energy commission was left in a position where it had this reactor on its books at some $25 million and there was no possibility of writing it off, due to the lower price which had been obtained under the new contracts. In these circumstances it was decided that this item should be written off as a charge against general revenue.

Mr. Nowlan: You are still using this reactor?

Mr. Benson: It is still being used, but there is no possibility of its amortization in the usual way.

The Chairman: Department of External Affairs is next.

Mr. Herridge: I apologize for detaining the house for a few minutes on this item, but I rise to discuss a matter which I consider to be of primary importance with respect to our national integrity and the future unity of this nation. Before proceeding with my remarks I wish to quote from a book which has been distributed to hon. members. It is entitled, "Organization of the Government of Canada" and it is published by the queen's printer under date of January, 1962. I quote from page 158 with respect to the functions of the Department of External Affairs:

> The main functions of the department are the conduct of official relations between Canada and other countries and of Canadian participation in international organizations, and the protection of Canadian interests abroad.

Then, on page 159, I read:

> There is also an economic division which deals with all financial, commercial and general economic questions possessing international implications, in co-operation with the departments of finance, trade and commerce and other bodies concerned.

And on the same page:

> The legal division advises on questions of international law, including the interpretation of treaties. It is responsible for liaison with the Department of Justice. Besides its general section, it comprises a treaty section, which assists in the preparation of international agreements, and a claims section, which deals with claims of Canadians against foreign countries.

I have discussed this question with some very well informed people and I have had telephone conversations—I get a lot of telephone calls on various questions—and I have had correspondence. I raise this question because I have been requested to do so by some very important people in Canada and by those who are concerned about the actions of this government. I am reliably informed that a former prime minister, the Right Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, was most particular with respect to the observance of protocol in the conduct of official relations between Canada and other countries. I am informed he had such strict regard for the recognition of Canada as a sovereign state and for the sole right of the government of Canada to conduct official relations and negotiations with other countries on any question that, while he consulted with and sought the advice of provincial governments on matters affecting their provinces, he always insisted that officials or representatives of the government of Canada should be the only persons present during negotiations with another country. I am also reliably informed that former prime minister Louis St. Laurent held the same view and insisted on the same practice. I am further advised that in reaching agreement on the St. Lawrence seaway the same practice was followed. Though the provinces were consulted and their wishes considered, the negotiations were carried on by the representatives of the government of Canada.

Indeed, so firmly fixed is the sovereign right of Canada to negotiate treaties and agreements that on several occasions the government of Canada has disallowed provincial legislation on the ground that it affected Canada's relations with other countries, a field which is the prerogative of the federal government, as estabilshed by law as well as by practice. For instance, there was some legislation passed at one time by the government of British Columbia with respect to orientals which was disallowed by the federal government on this basis. Later, there was some legislation passed by the government of Manitoba which was disallowed because it was considered an interference with the sovereign right of the government of Canada to deal with any matter affecting its relations with other nations.

I do not know whether hon. members have suspected it or not, but I am coming to a point. I wish to deal with what has happened with regard to the Columbia river treaty. Let me tell the committee what is happening to break down the precedent and practice of former years. Premier Bennett informs the public through the press that Robert Anderson, former secretary in the Eisenhower administration—a man who claimed to have President Kennedy's ear—is his adviser on the Columbia treaty question. In effect, Premier Bennett is telling us that Mr. Anderson is a go-between operating between the government of British Columbia and the government of the United States or its agencies concerned. In the second place, Premier Bennett goes to Washington, it is widely advertised in the press, to negotiate directly with officials of the United States with respect to the Columbia river treaty, or with agencies of the government of the United States on details relating to the Columbia river negotiations, and in particular the price to be paid for power. These matters are the responsibility of the federal government. They are the responsibility of the federal government according to tradition, precedent and practice. It is this government which should conduct the negotiations, giving effect to the wishes of the province so long as they do not transgress the national interest. When it comes to negotiations between Canada and another country, the federal government must take the responsibility.

What is hapening now has all been done with the obvious, though tacit, agreement of the government of Canada. Without a doubt, in view of the statements made by Premier Bennett to the press, the silence of this government means consent. It is a well known and well established practice that the government of Canada cannot delegate its powers with respect to external affairs or its dealings with foreign nations.

What is the latest act in this drama? We find that recently Mr. Avery Peterson, the United States consul-general in Vancouver, visited the Columbia riding during the provincial by-election. I am informed that while he was there he attended political meetings and took copious notes of what speakers for the New Democratic party and others had to say. He visited around, held conversations with people and all the rest of it. In our opinion, and in the opinion of a good many people, this was in extremely bad taste, especially in view of the particular issue which was concerning the electorate of that riding at that time. His presence was resented by some people including some of the electors. Others considered it a subtle form of influence brought into the campaign at the instigation of Premier Bennett. We object to the use of officials of the American state department to influence the electors of British Columbia in a provincial by-election.

Newspapers use the phrase "Bennett-United States negotiations" and correspondence refers to the same thing. This clearly indicates that a good many people are of the opinion that the government of Canada has surrendered its sovereign rights in this respect and has said to Premier Bennett of British Columbia: You go ahead and do the negotiating. We object to this practice.

I will just make reference to the law in the United States. The government of the United States is very jealous of its federal powers and under its constitution no state is permitted to deal with any foreign power. I have looked into the matter and I have the book here, but I am not going to take the time of the house to refer to it. When an ordinary stump rancher starts to wander through legal tomes, Mr. Chairman, he has got a task on his hands, however I spent yesterday afternoon reading up on this subject. I find that the United States will not tolerate any executive or official of a state government dealing in any manner with any other country. Under the oath of office taken by the executives of state governments they take an oath to the constitution and to abide by this principle, and if they violate that oath of office by overstepping the responsibilities of the state government and transgressing the rights and responsibilities of the federal government they can be impeached.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, first of all the government has departed from the established and recognized procedure and practice in its negotiations with the government of the United States and the government of British Columbia with respect to the Columbia river treaty, and I am not alone in that view. Second, it has by its tacit agreement with Premier Bennett's direct negotiations with officials of the government of the United States or its agencies surrendered its sovereign rights and has violated a principle that has been given effect throughout the years by tradition, by practice and by procedure. Third, by so doing it has established a precedent that will promote the balkanization of Canada and sow the seeds of national disunity in the days ahead. Just imagine if each provincial government, accepting the procedure that has been recognized and accepted so far as Premier Bennett is concerned, started to trot off to Washington or some other country to deal directly with officials or agencies of that country, rather than such negotiations being carried on in the regular or recognized way.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I want to protest this government's surrender of its sovereign powers and its delegation of these powers to the government of British Columbia, particularly to Premier Bennett. I want to protest on behalf of this party this weak-kneed avoidance of responsibility in this most important matter. Finally, I say to the government: Stand up for Canada, represent Canada, and let us keep Canada a nation by so doing.

Mr. Crouse: On page 15 of the supply report under bilateral economic aid programs there is an item of $3,458,333 for the Colombo plan. Could the hon. gentleman piloting this measure through the house give us a little more information on what this expenditure entailed?

Mr. Benson: This is included to maintain the proper distribution between the fiscal years 1962-63 and 1963-64 of credits to the fund and to bring before parliament a supply bill for 1962-63 to authorize payments that would have been authorized in that year if it had been a normal one from the point of view of supply. Normally this would have been in the final supply bill which was not presented during the past fiscal year.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Carried. Finance?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Carried. Page 12, fisheries.

Mr. Nowlan: What is that item of $134,334?

Mr. Benson: This has to do with operations under the fisheries indemnity plan during the year 1962-63. I have a brief table here which I could read. The total deficit in the accounts as of April 1, 1963 was $23,976. Vessel indemnities paid were $302,978 whereas premiums received were $222,265, leaving a net cost of $80,713. Lobster trap indemnities paid were $174,754 and premiums were $22,109 leaving a net loss of $152,645. These add to total deficit of $257,334 of which governor general's warrants authorized reimbursement to the amount of $123,000 leaving this balance of $134,334 to be reimbursed.

Mr. Nowlan: It is just a transfer of accounts and some bookkeeping entries?

Mr. Benson: Yes.

The Chairman: Shall fisheries carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Carried. Forestry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Carried. Governor General and lieutenant governors?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Carried. Insurance?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Carried. Justice?

Mr. Nowlan: There is an item there of $51,140 but I am not sure whether it comes under justice or penitentiaries. Is that for breakage at St. Vincent de Paul?

Mr. Benson: There are two items, one of $51,140 and another approximately $5,000. They arise out of the uprising at St. Vincent de Paul and their purpose is to reimburse the inventory account for losses.

Mr. Nowlan: We are being charged with the estimated losses in the inventory accounts following the riots at the penitentiary?

Mr. Benson: Yes.

The Chairman: Carried. Labour?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Carried. Mines and technical surveys?

[Mr. Benson.]

Mr. Nowlan: Does the Northern Canada Power Commission come under this?

Mr. Benson: Under northern affairs.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Carried. Page 19, national defence. Carried?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Carried. Page 20, national film board. Carried?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Carried. National gallery of Canada.

Mr. Monteith: I wonder whether the parliamentary secretary could give us an idea how this extra amount came to be required for the purchase account?

Mr. Benson: I mentioned this in my speech and I think it is recorded in Hansard. There are several amounts which are included here to bring up the contributions to these particular funds to the amounts that were decided upon in the supplementary estimates for the year, including the estimate that was not tabled, so that the contributions would be the total amount that it was intended to contribute for that particular purpose in the year. It is not a specific expenditure in the year but it was decided that a certain amount would be contributed to the national gallery, and this is to bring it up to the full amount.

Mr. Nowlan: It is a bookkeeping entry?

Mr. Benson: It involves cash.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Carried. Page 20, national health and welfare.

Mr. Pascoe: On page 20 it refers to health services, including assistance to the provinces, and on page 21 there is reference to hospital construction grants. Could that be broken down into the individual grants for the various provinces?

Mr. Benson: Pages 20 and 21 of the bill?

Mr. Pascoe: Yes.

Mr. Benson: I am sorry, but I do not have it available. I will undertake to get it for the hon. member if he requires it.

The Chairman: Page 21, national research council, shall it carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Page 22, national revenue?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Northern Affairs and National Resources?

Mr. Nowlan: There is one item here about which I should like an explanation from the parliamentary secretary. I refer to the item relating to the Northern Canada Power Commission, $7,004,000; is that a write-off or a transfer of some kind?

Mr. Benson: The Northern Canada Power Commission agreed to construct certain installations, other than of a power nature, at Inuvik, in the Northwest Territories, on the undertaking that the federal government would reimburse them for the amount. There were non-interest bearing loans made during the period of construction. During the last fiscal year, construction was completed and this is the amount brought forward to reimburse them. Construction extended over a long period and advances were made, for instance, as far back as 1957-58 when there was $1 million advanced and in 1958-59, $5 million. These were advanced as non-interest bearing loans.

Mr. Nowlan: This is a crown corporation and there was a transfer from one book to the other?

Mr. Benson: Yes.

Mr. Lambert: During those years, was there no regular period of amortization advanced, or was this just at call?

Mr. Benson: No, the crown made non-interest bearing advances so that the work could be carried out.

Mr. Lambert: Yes, but the reduction is by the crown of Canada?

Mr. Benson: All that is involved is that the crown paid out money over several years. Now, the crown is writing it off because it is not going to receive it back. This work was being done for northern affairs.

Mr. Lambert: I realize that, but I wondered if there was a regular program of amortization under which a crown company was carrying it or whether your bonds or indebtedness were designed to be chargeable to current account, in which case one could readily accelerate any future indebtedness so that it all fell in, in one year. This is my reason for asking if there was a program of amortization.

Mr. Benson: The terms required under section 3 (a) of order in council P.C. 1957-36/626 required that upon completion of construction of these facilities, the Northern Canada Power Commission would be reimbursed in respect thereof. Construction has been completed since March 31, 1962 and Northern Canada Power Commission invoiced the department for the total amount of $7,003,914.

Mr. Lambert: That is the obligation I was looking for.

The Chairman: Page 26, post office?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Privy council?

Mr. Crouse: On page 27 there is an item covering payments to the national centennial fund to enable grants to be made to the provinces for local projects of a lasting nature. Could the parliamentary secretary tell the committee which provinces required this money so urgently?

Mr. Benson: I will need a moment to look it up. Basically, these are contributions being made on an annual basis to this fund. This was one of the items to bring up the total contribution in the fund to the amount agreed for the current fiscal year. The actual amounts given out to the provinces, if any, I would have to ascertain. As I said, this is an amount contributed to the fund at the end of the fiscal year to bring it up to the amount agreed upon.

The Chairman: Shall the privy council item carry?

Mr. Douglas: There is an item here for the prime minister's residence, $23,930. This is a rather delicate matter which I am sure the government itself cannot raise. However, I think it ought to be raised, and some members ought to pay some attention to it. Originally, when the prime minister's residence was set up, at the insistence of the prime minister at that time, there was a provision that the prime minister would pay $5,000 a year for the privilege of living in the prime minister's residence. Naturally, the wishes of the prime minister at that time were respected. The fact is that this must impose a very serious burden on whoever is prime minister of Canada. I am told that the prime minister not only pays to live in the house but he must also hire his own chauffeur to drive his own car. I know he gets an allowance towards his car, but it would not begin to meet that kind of expense.

I am making the suggestion to the government that when they are drafting the estimates for next year, it seems to me that this ought to be re-examined. I think the time is overdue when we should take this item out of the legislative requirements and allow the prime minister to live in that house, as he ought to be allowed to do, without having to make any payments. Certainly, if he has, in addition, to hire a chauffeur and buy his own car, that is a burden. The prime minister cannot drive an ordinary car like the rest of us drive. He needs one that is commensurate with the dignity of the office which he holds. Now, I do not believe hon. members want to impose that kind of burden upon any prime minister of this country. I should like to say, and I am sure most members of the house would agree, that if the government when they are bringing down their estimates for the next fiscal year, eliminated this $5,000 requirement and made some provision for supplying a chauffeur, that would meet with general approval.

Mr. Benson: I wish to thank the hon. member, and I will undertake to bring these remarks to the attention of the Minister of Finance who, I am sure, will bring them to the attention of the government.

Mr. Nowlan: There are other charges that should be borne in mind, and I am sure the government will bear them in mind. There is the fixed amount of rental paid, the supplying of a car and chauffeur, and then there are payments made to the national capital commission for the maintenance of the grounds and gardens. These payments run into a substantial amount during a year, and I think all this should be considered at the appropriate time, and some changes made.

The Chairman: Shall privy council carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Public archives and national library?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Public printing and stationery?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Public works?

Mr. Rapp: I should like to direct attention to item 45, construction of buildings in Saskatchewan. Were there any R.C.M.P. barracks constructed in the following towns of Wadena, Melfort and Humboldt?

Mr. Benson: These are last year's estimates. I could not say whether they are included in here or not. I would have to look.

Miss LaMarsh: It is your constituency; don't you know?

Mr. Rapp: I know.

The Chairman: Shall the public works item carry?

Mr. Nowlan: No.

Mr. Winch: Since these are last year's estimates I should like to take one minute and ask the sponsor of the bill if he will have a little talk with the Minister of Public Works. A contract which was let under last year's estimates related to the construction of a concrete wall at the maximum security section of St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary. I, along with two other hon. members, spent last Friday there. The wall is completed. There are over 70 men in the segregation section of this maximum security institution. They have not been out of their cells for weeks on end. The reason they have not been out for weeks on end—they are the roughest, toughest, criminals in Canada—is that public works has not seen to it that the contractor supplied a pair of hinges to be put on a gate in that wall. The Department of Justice cannot do a thing about it. So, you have a position where the groundwork is laid for suicide and murder because of the lack of hinges on a contract that was let by the Department of Public Works.

I am very grateful for having the opportunity of raising this matter right now, because the three of us spent all day on Friday going through that place. They are asking for trouble when they have some of the worst criminals in Canada incarcerated inside cells, without a break for weeks on end. They cannot get even a half hour's exercise in the prison yard because the Department of Public Works contractor has not come up with a pair of hinges. I ask that something be done about it quickly.

Mr. Benson: I will be most pleased to bring this matter to the attention of the Minister of Public Works.

The Chairman: Shall the public works items carry?

Mr. Nowlan: There are one or two questions I would like to ask with respect to Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, which comes under public works. Item 206 deals with reimbursement on dominion-provincial projects to the extent of $754,794, and item 208 deals with losses sustained on the operation of federal-provincial projects of $1,204,939. On looking up the revised estimates for these items I notice that the treasury board decided neither one of these items would be necessary for this year, and I now wonder why they are included again in the estimates.

Mr. Benson: The notation I have on this is that each year there is included in various supplementary estimates an amount representing the value of expenditures on community planning and grants to universities and other research agencies to restore the capacity given under the National Housing Act, and to bring the programs before parliament for review. I have the final supplementary estimates with regard to 1962-63, including this amount of $754,794, and I have the analysis of the expenditures. This breakdown I could let the hon. member see and it would explain the total of $754,794.

Similarly with item 208, in accordance with the usual practice this item is included to obtain the sanction of parliament for the reimbursement to the corporation of losses sustained by it in 1962 in the operation of federal-provincial projects across the country. I have a list of the projects here on which losses were incurred, and they total $1,204,939, which is requested in this particular item.

Mr. Nowlan: All I am saying is that the final supplementary estimates have not omitted these. They were deleted in the revised estimates submitted to the house some months ago, and they were struck out by treasury board as being unnecessary for this year. Presumably they may have been incorporated in some preceding year, and in the setting up of these final estimates somebody has copied the items which appeared before without checking to see whether they were deleted.

The Chairman: Shall the public works item carry?

Mr. Lambert: Subject to the caveat by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, perhaps the parliamentary secretary could file the particulars with respect to these amounts because they are brand new items.

Mr. Benson: I will undertake to file particulars with respect to these items.

Mr. Barnett: Could we get some information on the point raised by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings. I was going to ask the parliamentary secretary whether these were items that would normally appear in the supplementary estimates for the year that was passed?

Mr. Nowlan: They are not in this year; I can assure you of that.

Mr. Barnett: We all understand that the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings has some special knowledge of the situation, and he has suggested that those items were not in the final supplementary estimates and in his view, and in the view of the government of which he was a member, they would not have been in these accounts had we not had a change of government. This is something that we would be interested in seeing clarified.

Mr. Benson: These are funds that were laid out by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and it is a matter of when you reimburse them for it. Is that not correct?

Mr. Nowlan: They are bookkeeping entries, I suppose.

Mr. Benson: With regard to item 206, under section 35 of the National Housing Act the minister may reimburse the corporation out of the consolidated revenue fund, and in general the provisions include technical research, such as into the construction and designing of houses. Expenditures for the period April 1 to December 31, 1962 by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in this respect were the total I have indicated of $754,794, and the corporation has to be reimbursed for this, and it is therefore necessary to bring it into the final supply bill.

Similarly with item 208, it is to reimburse the corporation for losses sustained by it during the calendar year as a result of the operation of federal-provincial projects undertaken under section 36 of the National Housing Act. During the calendar year 1962 Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation made reimbursements for losses sustained as the result of operating federal-provincial projects in the various provinces to the amount of $1,204,939, and it is now being reimbursed this amount. It has been paid it and it is therefore put in the final supply bill.

Mr. Barnett: It would seem logical to me that if at some point a loss is sustained parliament should be asked to approve the reimbursement. I was a bit puzzled by the remarks made by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings.

Mr. Benson: There will be a similar item in the final supplementaries for the current fiscal year, 1963-64.

Mr. Pascoe: Under item 209 I wonder if the parliamentary secretary could oblige me in the same way he did before, and give a list of the municipalities which have benefited by this forgiveness.

Mr. Benson: I would be most pleased to table this information, which I have.

The Chairman: Shall the items carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Page 30—Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Shall the items carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Secretary of State; shall the items carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Trade and commerce. Carried?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Transport; shall the items carry?

Mr. Lambert: With regard to item 26 is there provision for the write-off of the value of land purchased for development of the Cornwall canal navigation system?

Mr. Benson: I would be pleased to comment on this. This was some land that was purchased with a view to doing further work on the Canadian St. Lawrence seaway through that portion of the country. The land is carried both on the books of the government of Canada and the books of the St. Lawrence seaway commission. As it is not usual for the government of Canada to carry land as an asset on its books, the Auditor General, over a two year period, has recommended that this asset be written off to general revenue by the government of Canada. It of course remains on the books of the St. Lawrence seaway commission. This is a bookkeeping entry, really, to write off the particular land value as it is shown in the records of the government.

Mr. Nowlan: Could the parliamentary secretary tell us when the land was purchased?

Mr. Benson: I could, if I looked it up. It was several years ago.

Mr. Nowlan: It was purchased a few years ago?

Mr. Benson: That is right.

Mr. Nowlan: And it was decided this year to write it off?

Mr. Benson: Yes.

Mr. Nowlan: I have one other question on this matter, Mr. Chairman. My hon. friend was asking the question a while ago as to how these items came in. I would ask the parliamentary secretary to look at vote 35 of the Department of Transport. That is now shown in the report on supply as $3,757,000, and we are making up the difference. The revised estimates which were tabled in the house—and with which I had something to do, as well as other hon. members here—show that amount as being reduced to $3,250,000, and it appears right here. I suggest there has not been a cent of this money spent; it is a bookkeeping entry. Regardless of the fact that the government, treasury board and everyone else spent weeks in revising and bringing down a new set of estimates, we have the old, original amount. They have not even bothered to look at the revised estimates, wherein this amount was reduced to $3,250,000 from $3,757,000. Therefore we get this additional amount charged up against the government for this year.

[The Chairman.]

I say this is not only a bookkeeping entry but it is one which is a reflection on parliament, because of the estimates which were brought down and which have been lying on the table for months. Those estimates have now been changed by someone and we are charged with an item that has no justification whatsoever.

We are told, in regard to some of them, that they could be in the final estimates that we never brought down. This particular estimate was brought down; the book of revised estimates was brought down. The same thing applies to the other items to which I referred a few moments ago. The item in the revised estimates said this amount was not needed, but we have it before us again today. Again, Mr. Chairman, this is an example of putting in figures which will add up for this government and for which the preceding government will be held accountable in the final accounting.

Mr. Benson: I disagree with this, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Nowlan: Let me ask the parliamentary secretary this question. Has the parliamentary secretary the revised estimates in front of him; and if he has, what is the amount for this item?

Mr. Benson: Does the hon. member mean the final supplementary estimates which were never tabled?

Mr. Nowlan: No, I am asking about the revised estimates, which were tabled.

Mr. Benson: I have them in my office, Mr. Chairman, but not here. With regard to this particular item and the $507,700 which is added here, which I presume is the amount about which the hon. member is talking, this amount required to cover the balance owing to the national harbours board for dredging done by that organization in Montreal harbour for D.O.T. Originally the cost was to be spread over a two year period, but because of the availability of dredging equipment, MacNamara Marine Limited, the contractor, completed the project last fall. There were approximately 925,076 cubic yards removed at $1.10 per yard, for a total cost of $1,017,584. The ship channel had already paid the national harbours board $509,933, and the amount shown is for the balance of $507,651 which was owing and has been paid.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I would direct the attention of the parliamentary secretary to the item under vote No. 214 on page 61 of of the report on supply, and on page 35 of the bill. Before I put this question to him I would like to express my sympathy to the parliamentary secretary for having to answer for the sins of omission and commission of the previous government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Olson: I would like to know when the $16 million under this item was paid, because as is indicated in the report on supply no part of it was voted on the interim supply bills that were brought in from time to time during the last parliament.

When we turn to the new estimates which have been tabled for this year, we find that while the $50 million grant to the railways under vote No. 213 is acknowledged and recorded as a decrease in the current fiscal year, the $16 million paid under the Freight Rates Reduction Act is not even acknowledged as a decrease from the previous fiscal year in comparison with this year. I was wondering how it got in there. I presume it was authorized by governor general's warrant, but I am wondering why it was not acknowledged as a decrease. The other thing I would like to know is, what is the government's intention for this fiscal year with respect to the $50 million paid last year under vote 213 and the $16 million that was paid under vote 214.

Mr. Benson: Mr. Chairman, I wish I were the former minister of transport so I could tell the hon. member why this was paid and exactly when it was paid. All I can tell him is that it was paid under governor general's warrant. Presumably it was paid after the dissolution of parliament last February 6, so it would be paid in one of the two governor general's warrants which I believe were dated February 8 and March 4. It would have been paid at that time. In this year's estimates these two items, the $50 million and the $16 million, are grouped together, I believe, although I prefer not to discuss this coming year's estimates at this particular point.

Mr. McIlraith: That is right; they are grouped together.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, I realize the parliamentary secretary's reluctance to discuss this year's estimates. But if he looks at page 409 of this year's estimates he will find there is an item for $50 million listed as a decrease. It is not actually $66 million; it is an even $50 million, which I presume is the $50 million paid last year under vote 213. There is not in the current year's estimates even an acknowledgement that it was paid last year.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the hon. gentleman would look at the supplementary estimates, where he will find the item, I think. They were tabled in June.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, I have one more question on transport. I suppose the write-off of loans to the harbours commission is in the same category as the other write-offs?

Mr. Benson: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I mentioned this in my speech earlier, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings will recall. I said there was an amount of $284,700 which was lent to the harbour commission of New Westminster, British Columbia, to be used, as I recall it, to link some islands together for an industrial development; a bridge was to be built and a causeway. Ultimately this development did not occur, the government decided this money is not recoverable and therefore it has been written off.

The Chairman: Shall the transport items carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the veterans affairs items carry?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall the loans, investments and advances items, page 38, carry?

Mr. Nowlan: They do not affect the budget.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT AND DEFINITION OF DUTIES

The house resumed from Thursday, July 11, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lamontagne for the second reading of Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of an economic council of Canada.

Miss Pauline Jewett (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I should like to talk about what this economic council is to do and what its chief purposes are. I shall do this in a fairly general way because I realize that there will be a closer discussion in the committee stage on the clauses of the bill. I shall focus my attention primarily on the first two of the three purposes which were outlined on Thursday last by the President of the Privy Council. The first purpose is that of economic research, forecasting and planning. The second is making policy recommendations on the basis of this research, forecasting and planning. The third purpose is to take over the functions of the national productivity council, which I believe is pretty well understood. In any event this will no doubt be discussed by others, so as I say, I shall restrict myself to the first two of the council's functions. In the course of doing this I should like to compare the role of the council, to some extent at any rate, with the proposed national economic development board introduced by the Conservative government in the last session.

The first duty of the council is to initiate and conduct basic research on all aspects of our economic life, and in particular to assess fairly regularly the medium term and long term prospects of the economy, and to compare such prospects with the potentialities of growth of the economy. It is also to study how economic growth, technological change and automation and international economic change may affect employment and incomes in Canada as a whole, in particular areas of Canada and in particular sectors of the economy, as well as the study of several other matters which are explicitly set out in the bill. These areas of study and research are set out more specifically in this bill, incidentally, than they were in the national economic development board bill introduced last session, and they are much more comprehensive. It seems to me, therefore, that the advice and recommendations which arise out of this basic research will be much more valuable. This is, then, the first distinction to which I would draw hon. members' attention between this bill and the one introduced in the last session.

I should think there is nothing very controversial about this provision for the collecting, co-ordinating and analysing of basic economic data. The only wonder is that it was not done years ago on a systematic and comprehensive basis. Actually, work of this kind was done during the latter war and early post-war years, particularly, it will be recalled, under the auspices of the department of reconstruction. Much of this work culminated in the federal government's well known green book proposals. But as the boom of the mid and late forties came upon us, it seems to me that there was less inclination to probe into the problems and prospects of our economy, and I suppose this was natural enough. After all, why probe when it looks as though everything is going pretty well?

However, by the mid fifties concern was again shown about the prospects of the economy and some of its basic problems, and this led to the appointment of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects and the very valuable studies which it conducted. In the years that followed, despite the host of acute economic problems that arose, many of which had been foreseen in the Gordon report, the government of the day, it seems to me, showed little inclination for the kind of continuing economic research and analysis on a systematic and comprehensive basis which seemed, to this party at any rate, to be urgently required. A certain amount of basic, fundamental research has for some years now, it is true, been conducted in a few of our departments of government. For example, in the economics branch of the Department of Trade and Commerce short-term economic forecasting is carried on. But as the Glassco commission points out, the basic research which has been done in recent years has hardly been sufficient to build up adequate or profound knowledge of our economy.

There are various ways of getting more basic research done. For example, you could have a series of royal commissions. This is what Sweden used to do for its basic economic analysis and forecasting. I believe there was a commission for every period for which there was to be a plan. This has since been abandoned; but that is one way in which it could be done. Or you could try to have more basic research and analysis done in the various departments of government most concerned; or you could have a single research unit located in one department, possibly the Department of Finance.

I think, however, that the proposal for an economic council is best partly because it has other functions to perform apart from basic economic research. Even in the field of basic economic research I think it is the best kind of organizational set-up we could have. There is a tendency to let the economists who are employed in the various departments of government do the basic research last. It is regarded as something of a luxury, though it should not be. This is not at all likely to be the case in relation to special economic agencies. Furthermore, I think we are likely to get a sympathetic approach from the senior people on the council, as it is constituted with the idea that research should be conducted on a systematic and continuing basis. Their attitude might be more sympathetic than in particular departments of government which are preoccupied from day to day with their own problems and with the carrying out of policy.

Much will undoubtedly depend, as the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) said, on the calibre of the chairman and of the full time members of the council. I think it is extremely important that these should be highly qualified persons with a great deal of knowledge in this field.

There is another reason why the council is a good idea, and this leads me to the second part of its first duty, namely, on the basis of its economic analysis and forecasts, the drawing up of an economic plan or plans. The economic council will be able to draw substantially both in its forecasting and in its planning on the resources of various parts of the economy. It will undoubtedly second economists from various departments of government. It will, I should think, second for short periods of time economists and others from private industry, from universities, from labour and elsewhere. I hope it will. It will also engage through its membership and through the standing committees which it is authorized to set up, in close collaboration with the public as well as the private sectors of the economy. I think it is implied in this bill that there will be very close consultation indeed between the council and its staff on one hand and the private sector of the economy on the other, as there will be between the council on the one hand and the agencies of the federal and provincial governments on the other. Indeed, the reliability of the forecasting and the usefulness of the planning will depend very much on the confidence established between government, labour, industry, provincial economic councils and so on. Therefore, there must be co-operation at this level.

In approaching the second phase of its first function, the council will, then, through its own membership, through the expert staff it employs, through the economists and others it seconds, as well as through the consultation it carries on with the other sectors of the economy both in the private and the public sectors, be able to gather up and attempt to co-ordinate the sum total of the plans and decisions of private and public bodies.

Here, it seems to me, is another major difference between this bill and the bill which was presented last year. There was nothing in that bill to suggest any kind of collaboration with either the private sector of the economy, or the public sector, including the provincial governments. The latter is all the more surprising because of the interest the party which was then in power professed to take in federal-provincial relations. But it seems to me they were taking a view of these relations which is, basically the watertight compartment view enunciated many years ago by the judicial committee, a view which has now resulted in the theory of federalism that I call the collision theory, namely that the federal government and the provincial governments shall each go their own chosen ways until one comes in contact with the other, until there is collision. In some areas it may be possible to carry on in this way, but in many areas of policy, particularly in those of public investment, I think we must revise our thinking about this entirely. We can no longer take a narrow, juristic point of view about this. It seems to me that where one has the federal government, provincial governments and municipalities together controlling about 30 per cent of all investment, and where, of that amount, the provinces and the municipalities actually have more economic weight than the federal government, there must be at a very early stage, as provided by this bill, some degree of discussion, some comparison of plans and intentions, some attempt at co-ordination. This is, in some respects, almost a revolutionary concept. Nevertheless, it is one which is being adopted now by some extremely able people, particularly in the provinces. I am thinking of Quebec and Saskatchewan where I have heard this view frequently expressed, but it is current in others, too.

Therefore, an important element of this bill is the provision it makes in the last paragraph of clause 9 for consultation of this kind, to some extent in forecasting but particularly in drawing up plans indicating desired levels of investment and other matters. Similarly it is important to have collaboration of this kind with the private sector of the economy and, again, the bill makes provision for this to be done. Taking the field of investment again, the remaining 70 per cent of investment in this country, as is well known, is largely in the hands of three or four dozen large corporations. These, in recent years, have, in a way, been far more progressive than the government in realizing that there must be much more involvement with the public sector than was the case in the past, more need for planning. Therefore there is this important provision that the council study and discuss with the various elements in the private sector what specific plans for production and investment in major industries in Canada will best contribute to a high and consistent rate of economic growth. The economic council will not be a body of pure researchers totally removed from everyday life, and it seems to me it is important to point this out. The other members of the council, the people who are drawn from various representative organizations, will, of course, keep in touch with broad movements, attitudes and ideas in Canadian society. As I say, the staff of the council itself will be composed not only of a body of permanent people but will be drawn from various parts of both the public and private sectors; and I should think that the council will engage in fairly continuous consultation with the major elements that have the main weight in our economic life.

As a result of this research and consultation the council, as I have suggested, draws up an economic plan or plans. The fact that it should draw up a plan at all, the fact that it should say, after its investigation to see what the growth potentialities of the economy are, here is a target rate of growth or a feasible rate of growth and we will now work out in detail by economic sectors and regions the amounts of investment that the achievement of this rate of growth requires, is a major departure. The fact that it does this also makes the present bill different from that of last session. On the basis of its economic analysis and forecasts, its consultation, its attempt to try to get together all the help it can, the council will inevitably spell out the implications, in investment and in other fields, for individual industries, especially the major industries, and I should think also the implications for the various public sectors of the economy.

I have been using the illustration of investment but one can use others equally well. The bill envisages, as I say, close collaboration between the public and private sectors of the economy both in economic forecasting and in drawing up the kind of economic plan that will or might make the target rate of growth attainable. The council in itself, according to the bill, does not have the power actually to implement its plan or plans. It cannot say to industry: All right, we have examined the investment picture with you and you are to conform with our investment program, with what we think is the ideal amount of investment for you to be engaging in over such and such a period of time. It does not have any coercive power. Indeed, I know very few planning agencies in the democratic world which have coercive power. It is really almost a red herring to suggest that they do.

What power does the council have? First of all, it has the power of publicizing its views, of publicizing its plan. Here we come to another difference between this bill and the one last year, in that the council will not only initiate studies, which is extremely important in itself, but will publish an annual review of economic prospects and problems which will undoubtedly improve public understanding and certainly will raise the level of public discussion. I think there might be even further areas of publication possible for this council.

I agree with the leader of the Social Credit party who argued on Thursday the importance of publishing as much as possible. I have already pointed out one great improvement over last year's bill in this connection and there may be others. Certainly from the standpoint of educational value, for persuading businessmen to take a longer term view of growth, for educating government at all levels, and the public, in the policies required to facilitate growth and educating them generally as to other objectives, there is perhaps nothing so important as publication.

The council will also have the power of recommendation, and we come to its second major duty or function. It will have the power to recommend policies to the federal government that will contribute to bringing our economic prospects more closely in line with our potentialities of growth, to recommend policies that will in effect implement the plan that has been drawn up. There is no reason that some of these recommendations, where they fall in areas outside the jurisdiction of the federal government, cannot be made available to private industry, the provincial sector, municipalities and so on. In some cases I should think this would be possible, and certainly it is desirable.

In other words, this is the very opposite of planning for planning's sake, which was one of the arguments the official opposition put forward the other day. You would have planning for planning's sake if you did not do anything, if you simply had a bunch of people sitting around drawing up lovely plans, and that was that. What you have here is the hope that the plan may be implemented. There is no coercive power. There is a persuasive power. If the membership of the council is drawn from highly qualified people there is no doubt it will have quite a strong persuasive power. And it does have the power —I agree this was also in the Conservative bill of last year but it was so hidden I had a difficult time finding it—to make recommendations for the kind of government policies that will best implement the plan. These may be recommendations that involve a kind of intervention that we do not now have. They may be recommendations that involve only the implementation of the kinds of policies we have had in the past, fiscal, tariff, tax, monetary and other policies.

The bill in itself naturally does not say what kind of policies might be recommended. For all one knows, the policies recommended might actually involve less intervention in toto by government rather than more. I was reading a book the other day which many hon. members have read recently, "Beyond the Welfare State" by Gunnar Myrdal. By the way, I hope it is still not too un-Canadian to read books, as it apparently is to write them. If I may digress for a moment, may I say I was shocked by the remark of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) last Thursday that "the last thing a person going into politics should do is write a book". I must confess that as I listened to that remark it seemed to me it would exclude from politics, Winston Churchill, Harold Wilson, President Kennedy, Prime Minister Nehru, President Radhakrishnan, President de Gaulle. Indeed, as I ran down the list I realized it would exclude everybody but the right hon. gentleman. Actually I mean this quite seriously. I am shocked at a statement like that. It may be, of course, that he was scourging the party to which I belong because some of its members have written books. Perhaps he did not intend the statement the way it came across, but what came across so strongly to me, and I am sure to other members of the house, was that he meant what be said—that the last thing one should do if one is going into politics is to write a book.

Mr. Pickersgill: Or even read one.

Miss Jewett: Just do not let the halls of parliament become halls of learning; perish the thought. I do hope that there were no young people in the galleries to hear this kind of advice. In any event, as I say, I hope it is not contrary to the Canadian way of life either to write books or to read books.

After this small digression I should like to return to the book "Beyond the Welfare State", by Gunnar Myrdal who says that planning is probably the only alternative to the chaos created by unco-ordinated and disorganized state intervention, the very kind of unco-ordinated, disorganized, ad hoc intervention we have known in this country for too long, and especially during the last few years. Rather than being the bureaucratic confusion which the Leader of the Opposition described, it could well result in the very opposite, the more rational use of the power of the state which I am sure is something we all really want in the long run.

Finally, whether the government will adopt policies that are recommended, whether it will try to implement, so far as it has jurisdiction to do so, the plans that are drawn up, will depend of course entirely upon the government. Whether it will use the old tools or whether it will fashion new tools, will also depend a great deal on the government of the day, upon the conditions of the day, upon the attitudes and state of mind of the Canadian public. I would think it quite possible, after this council has been in existence for a while, that the Canadian public will become much more aware and knowledgeable of the Canadian economy, its problems and prospects. We might then become much more willing to use what I call a rational use of the state in areas where we can aid and increase employment, make for a better rate of economic growth and provide a better life for Canadians.

What is clear is that whatever action the government takes, it will undoubtedly be positive action. It may hurt some sectors of the economy. Whatever action the government takes will be on the basis, first, of more fundamental research than heretofore and, secondly, on a more integrated approach. It will function on the basis of a much greater degree of consultation with the public sector, federal, provincial and municipal, and with the private sector. Third, whatever action the government takes will be on the basis of a plan or a model. The philosophy underlining this government's approach is, I think, undoubtedly that of Robert Marjolin who said in the European economic commission's report put out in Brussels in 1962:

> Doubtless it is possible to make good policy without planning if the needs are so evident that there could be no doubt as to what action to take. Where they are not so evident a great deal of information and thought may be needed. In the present circumstances of very considerable uncertainty, of rapidly changing conditions, planning can help to make a rational economic policy possible.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, in so far as the last speaker is concerned, I wish to state how pleasant it was to listen to her. If the new board that is being envisaged by this measure has few persuasive powers, I am sure the hon. lady has many persuasive powers. I should like her to use them to try to persuade her government to do the things that will accomplish some of the objectives she has mentioned, instead of simply talking about them and further confusing an already confused situation as a result of events which have taken place since April 21 last.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, this evening I should like to focus my remarks on the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) to whom I listened with great interest and respect the other evening. He talked with that certain confidence—that I could describe as doctrinal—for which he is known in his pronuntiamento ex cathedra to which he has become accustomed for some time now. He also indulged in most interesting economic prophecies, theoretically of course, and I congratulate him for that.

He took the liberty of scrutinizing the mysteries of economic cycles and I would readily recognize that no one is as qualified as he is to do so. And in the course of his scrutiny he happened to make some discoveries. He stated that among other things our Canadian economy was suffering from a stagnant condition, I even believe that he used the phrase "chronic anemia".

Furthermore, I found that, in 1954, when he was writing his book on Canadian federalism, which has been abundantly commented on in this house during this debate and preceding ones, he made precisely the same remarks we have just heard, as shown on page 136 of his book, which contains some statements about the economic stagnation found in several parts of the world, particularly in Canada. In fact, he stated—and he was perfectly right to do so:

> The nightmare of economic depressions, during which production falls sharply, has surely not vanished yet. Finally, practically nothing has been done to put a stop to seasonal declines in production. Far from having been overcome, those difficulties are still the greatest economic problems we will have to tackle.

A little further he said:

> That is why the government policy must aim first at assuring a balanced expansion or, more exactly, a national revenue and an employment level that will be stable and high.

He was right in saying that and I congratulate him for doing so at that time, by taking an entirely non-partisan stand. However, in his remarks last Thursday, the President of the Privy Council seemed to believe that that economic anemia had developed during these last few years, although in 1954, when his party was at the peak of its political history, we were faced with the same problem.

Dealing with the causes of that chronic stagnation the minister said, as stated on page 2086 of Hansard for July 11, 1963:

> —our private sector has almost exhausted the investment potentialities which technology created in Canada at the beginning of this century.

Obviously, the minister who is an expert in economic matters, had no intention of allowing us into the inner circle of those policies. He told the members that he was sparing them the details and in doing so he took, in a way, a take-it-or-leave-it attitude.

Indeed, I did not expect that he would waste that valuable science in dispensing it to laymen or to run-of-the-mill members of parliament.

In concluding, the minister said that the private sector left to itself cannot overcome those difficulties. Speaking of economic stagnation he said that we need a bolder and more dynamic government leadership, in other words a plan so that the various aspects of the economic policy will be well co-ordinated and so that the private sector can work hand in hand with the government.

He is against imperative planning for Canada because in his opinion, it would be politically unacceptable, economically undesirable and constitutionally unworkable. I entirely agree with the minister in that respect. But when he speaks about things that are politically unacceptable, economically undesirable, and constitutionally unworkable, has he stopped to think that it is precisely those things that the government to which he belongs has been offering us for the past few weeks?

As far as politically unacceptable things are concerned, could you find anything more so—and I merely point this out as an example—than some of the taxes applied by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) in his recent budget? As a matter of fact, those taxes were economically disastrous and politically unacceptable to such an extent that the minister had to beat a retreat. I am convinced, besides, that if it had been possible to save face at the same time, his retreat would have been complete.

Let us now deal with those things that are constitutionally unworkable.

In the first place, let us consider the statements made by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech on the priority requirements of central authorities in fiscal matters. Let us consider the municipal development and loan bill. Let us consider the establishment of the department of industry. Let us consider some of the statements made by his colleagues in this house indicating that the government is prompted by a spirit of centralization such as has never been witnessed before in the history of Canadian confederation.

He mentioned later that the planning advocated by the government and which it intends to establish in Canada is essentially a form of planning which shows the way and provides incentives—in other words that it is an indicative planning similar to the French pattern.

Near the end of his speech, he said that the bill provides for the establishment of an economic council with very extensive powers which would give planning a scope that would be comprehensive as well as flexible. Then he added that the legislation was of primary importance.

In short, he is only restating the theories put forward in his book "Canadian federalism" which, in order to be implemented, would require a new centralizing offensive.

Besides, the minister had expressed his inner convictions on that connection in his book, which is entirely imbued, if I am not mistaken, with centralizing motives and where that idea is found, among other things, on page 282. I shall quote a few sentences:

> Finally, a program of economic stability requiring a central direction and a well-integrated economic policy. All those factors indicate that the federal government will have to play a major role—

Those are the important words—

> —a major role in the collective fight against instability. The insistence put on the finer aspects of country life—

—says the minister—

> —has not solved the problems created by migration towards the cities.

That is a good example but it could be slightly changed to read as follows: The insistence put on the advantages of provincial autonomy will not solve the economic problems of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, the minister seems to think that I have great imagination but I must say that my statement is truly in the spirit of his remarks.

The minister wishes this country to adopt methods of planning which surely would not be workable within our federative framework.

On the other hand, we must ask ourselves if the object of the bill we are studying, and which aims at the creation of a Canadian economic council, is truly the establishment of economic planning in this country. The minister himself has said that such was the object of the bill.

Again, are we sure that the planning spoken about by the government is, in fact, what is called directive and indicative planning, similar to the indicative planning we find in France?

Mr. Speaker, there is not the slightest adumbration of planning in this bill. Let us take a good look at it.

One only has to read certain provisions of this bill to find many harmless words like study, examine, analyse, compare and recommend.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, it would seem that we are among a group of normal school students. This is mere window dressing. Even though we consider all the scope, all the powers of the bill, this does not even constitute a starting point to the establishment of a planned system in Canada.

The minister may say: Well, those are partly the terms used to introduce the bill in the house last year. It is true, it has been largely copied, but at least, when the government of the time proposed the bill last year, they did not endeavour to tell us that, by that measure, they were creating some sort of planning in Canada. They merely said that the purpose of the project was to give our economy a sense of direction and to the government the benefit of experts in such matters who were available in Canada.

Consider section 9, Mr. Speaker, which is as follows:

> It shall be the duty of the council to advise and recommend to the minister—

To advise and recommend, those are the general duties of the council. To advise and recommend. Then the bill leaves the general for the particular and says that the council will have the responsibility "regularly to assess"—what does that mean? And we also read that the council's duties will be:

> To recommend government policies—
> To consider means—
> To study means of increasing Canadian participation in ownership, to study implications, to study and discuss with representatives of the industries concerned and with representatives of labour, farmers,—

Clichés, nothing but clichés.

> To study how national economic policies can best foster the balanced economic development of all areas of Canada.
> To explore and evaluate particular projects of major significance for the expansion of industrial activities—
> To encourage maximum consultation and cooperation between labour and management—
> To seek full and regular consultation with appropriate agencies of the governments of the several provinces.

To encourage, promote, organize and so forth.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I challenge the minister to prove how, with all those recommendations, with all those studies, all those analyses and all those comparisons, we will get this capital project he talks about, as well as a planned economy in Canada.

Economic Council of Canada

Mr. Speaker, if we look at French planning, we realize that it is a very different story. First, in French planning, practice came before theory. Here it is the theoretical planning of the minister which comes first. We find loud theories which help cover the lack of substance. If Montaigne were here, he would certainly wonder where is in all that the substantial marrow. Where is the substance towards which all energies will concentrate to establish planning, a guiding policy?

Mr. Lamontagne: You say that your bill was copied.

Mr. Martineau: There is nothing in all that, as I said earlier. A while ago, I was telling the minister that we had not tried to put in that project something which was not to be found in it. But here, Mr. Speaker, it is just the opposite. Here we really have the mountain that brings forth a mouse and nothing else.

In France, planning constitutes a collective work aimed at a co-ordinated economy and, to use the words of the French lecturer Pierre Masse, it is not a concert of chamber music but a symphony requiring several thousand performers.

The French planning commission is made up of some 150 experts, but with its 25 renovation boards and 20 economic and social operational groups, there are about 3,500 people.

But in this case, Mr. Speaker, I put it to you that this project will give us no plan nor even a commission. And the minister rises at his place in the house and tells us most emphatically that we have before us a major contribution, the beginning of planning.

No, these are empty words, pompous remarks, because if we go beyond the surface, looking for the contents of this bill, we find absolutely nothing. We are misleading the Canadian people if we imply that we have in it indicative planning along the line of the French pattern.

Mr. Speaker, if we consider the French plan, we see that it bears on energy producing industries, such as coal, electrical power, steel, and transportation. The emphasis is put on a reduction of prices and an organization of markets, scientific and technical development together with a specialization of enterprise.

Now, Mr. Speaker, those things can be accomplished in a country like France which has a unified government, but I submit that they cannot be accomplished under our federal system, particularly without prior consultation with the provinces. The minister was very careful not to mention that he had had any consultation with the provincial governments in that regard before submitting this legislation with such a fanfare.

Moreover, Mr. Speaker, the French plan is a logical one with a Cartesian outlook. It tends to economic integration in transferring to the national level the techniques of business agreements of private law.

Here again we are in a field strictly reserved to the provinces, the field of civil law, private law. That is why planning such as the minister wants to force upon us, is not at all feasible under the present system.

Mr. Speaker, this same French plan has a great number of modernization boards, vertical and horizontal boards, and so on. The formulation of the plan implies a strong centralization and very extensive powers for the federal government.

I know that such a centralization of powers is quite acceptable in the opinion of the minister, but it is not acceptable to a great number of members of the house and especially to the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, in the preparation of the French plan, a great many commissions set up first preliminary drafts respecting production, employment, investments and decide upon a desirable rate of growth. Then, those drafts are submitted to the government which selects a desirable rate of growth.

The government itself consults the investment section as well as the economic and social council.

Now, those organizations do not exist under our system and their establishment is not foreseen in this project or in any other legislative program now before us.

The government having made its choice, the modernization boards prepare a first preliminary synthesis and then a meeting is held between experts and members of the planning board who, after discussion and settlement of contentious points, agree to prepare a final synthesis with regard to the implementation of the plan. That plan is submitted to the government, discussed in the chamber of deputies and then approved by the president of the council. Afterward, that plan becomes the official plan for the next four or five years in France.

It should be noted in all this that the French government holds greater implementation powers than the Canadian government; besides the minister said that it was much better that way, under our system.

Besides, in France, the government sets up its budget policy according to the development program thus drafted. Here we did not do that in this case. The last budget did not have any planning implications, Mr. Speaker; it was rather the opposite.

The government sets up its credit and fiscal policies according to the objectives of the plan. Besides, in France, the government has a direct control over almost half the investments. Here in Canada, I think it is 15 per cent. So we realize that the two systems have nothing in common.

Also, in France, the government may resort to incentives, such as fiscal incentives, the granting of credit priorities and the advantages given companies which meet the objectives of the plan.

If all that is not direct coercion, it is at least an indirect form of coercion. I have noticed no indication yet that the government would be prepared to impose that form of coercion and give the country these means of implementing a real program of indicative planning.

There is absolutely no adumbration of planning in this bill or in the others submitted to the house. On the contrary, I believe that the legislation that has been introduced constitutes a confused heap of divergent interests who were anxious to be heard.

In a pretence of action, the government decided to take some measures without asking itself whether those measures were meeting actual needs of the country.

I am convinced that the measures proposed by the government are not likely to put an end to this stagnation, this chronic anemia, which the minister mentioned last Thursday. Quite clearly, Mr. Speaker, this bill does not make for economic planning in this country. If the minister is sincere—and I believe he does genuinely wish to improve economic, cultural and social conditions in Canada—I suggest that he advise his colleagues, and more particularly the Prime Minister, to call immediately, to start with, a dominion-provincial conference, and not only a conference such as the Prime Minister announced today, regarding municipalities and the contributory pension scheme, but a dominion-provincial conference to deal specifically and exclusively with economic problems.

Then, too, let the government set up permanent federal-provincial co-operative agencies, possibly a secretariat to deal with economic matters.

I think it is of first importance that the plans prepared by the government be thus established in the light of historical circumstances and constitutional needs. Let us define correctly the economic duties at both levels of government so that there will be no duplication of efforts and especially no conflicts of interests and jurisdiction.

Since this government has been in power conflicts have grown in numbers; new conflicts of authority have risen incessantly to such an extent that—and I do not think I am wrong in saying this—never have dominion-provincial relations been in such a pitiful state as they are since this government came to power. And, for pity's sake, let us forget about the concept of the leading position of the federal state.

In his book, in which he refers to the so-called advantageous position of the federal government, the minister states repeatedly that the provinces do not have the proper financial means and taxation power to implement those plans. Only if the balance is restored between the central government and the province in the field of taxation, in accordance with the provisions of the constitution, will provincial governments be able to play their true role.

Thus we would create the proper climate to stimulate the economy of the country instead of making relations worse.

In addition, the proposed consultations should be more than the reflex of politicians who find themselves in the wrong. When we were considering the bill for the establishment of a department of industry, the Minister of Defence Production (Mr. Drury) stated that neither he nor the government had to consult the provinces in that connection. According to him, the members of the government are fully aware of the dividing line between federal and provincial jurisdiction and there is no call for a federal-provincial conference in that respect.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I submit that it is precisely this arrogant attitude, this way of deciding by oneself what others must do that has given rise to ill feeling. I challenge the minister and his colleagues to deny that the climate has taken a sharp turn for the worse in the past few weeks. It is obvious and the facts are there to prove it.

Mr. Speaker, if we were to proceed in the manner I have just outlined I believe we could set up an intelligent and co-ordinated economic policy which would involve the kind of planning we need today—as no one will deny—and which would truly meet the needs of all our people.

Mr. Jean Chretien (St. Maurice-Lafleche): Mr. Speaker, we have listened with great interest to the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) who obviously tried to find some meat in the statements of the Liberal party. However, if the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue finds that federal-provincial relations are now somewhat down to earth, there is an explanation to this: the government which I support is an active government. We take measures and we draft a policy which is of course facing some opposition. But unlike the previous government, we, on this side of the house, are doing things.

The problems between the federal government and the provinces will be solved by negotiations. The present Prime Minister took steps to solve those problems. We, as members of the federal government, have no right to stay inactive on that account. We have to take action and we do take action, something that our friends, the Conservatives, failed to do in previous years.

The hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue is concerned about the meaning of the bill before us, but if he would analyse its provisions, he would realize that we also want planning, a kind of planning that entails action. The economic council will be an economic planning council that will succeed. We will have the necessary staff provided by this piece of legislation that will give the federal government the possibility of providing for the future; something which has never been envisaged by our friends opposite and the lack of which has put the country in its present position.

Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is concerned about the fact that the government has perhaps called in experts to discuss the matter with the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne). Let him be assured that I am not an expert, only a backbencher, but that I have faith in the planning policy of the party which I support.

[Mr. Martineau.]

I think that Bill C-72 which provides for the establishment of an economic council of Canada is very important and I hope that all hon. members of the house will give it the importance it deserves. Administration in Canada is so much more difficult because the country is a kind of a geographic nonsense in a political unit. The fact that citizens of Victoria in British Columbia, of Halifax in Nova Scotia and of St. John's in Newfoundland are all grouped under the same legislative authority, while there is a whole continent between them and that on this vast territory the density of population is relatively small, that is the reason why our country attained the various stages of economic growth later than our most immediate friends, Great Britain, France and the United States.

According to Professor W. W. Rostow of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in his book entitled The Stages of Economic Growth, Canada attained in 1950 the same degree of economic maturity, as regards technology, close to 50 years after the abovementioned countries. Why? Because Canada just about came out of the preparation period to enter the technological development period which could bring our country to an economic maturity. In fact, to date, we have used our energies for the development of our natural resources in this raw state and the setting up of basic public services such as railways and great road projects. In other words, it is only in the last few years that our country has been in a position to carry out the development of an economy more diversified and more able to meet the needs of a labour force more and more specialized and numerous.

In that context, I think the development of our economy is in a very critical situation today and I sincerely think that we must go ahead with economic planning in our country.

The present situation calls for an immediate positive action to make known to the nation the precise objectives which our economy must reach.

We must without delay direct the development of our economy according to our possibilities, our natural resources, our increasing manpower and our international markets. Finally, every person will have to do his utmost to achieve the aims determined by the economic council and devote all his energies to that end.

However, the country will not achieve those aims without an appropriate intervention from the state. The federal government will have to legislate in the fields coming under its jurisdiction and devolved to it by the constitution, such as credit, taxation, tariffs, in a co-ordinate and positive way, so that the aims sought might be achieved in the shortest possible time and that the public and private enterprises are not left alone to seek those aims. All those potential supplies of natural wealth available to Canada must be developed in a rational way, so that the Canadian people may derive the greatest possible profit to which they are entitled. But in order to achieve this, our government must adopt positive and effective policies, even though private enterprise must be ready to make certain sacrifices.

Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to refer to the province of Quebec as an example. During the past few years, it has launched economic development projects and has completely nationalized its water resources to achieve one of its economic purposes. It is now getting ready, through a joint public and private body, the "Société générale de Financement", to develop a large steel complex. I think that it is an example that we should take into consideration and try to follow, if necessary.

I am definitely in favour of indicative but not of imperative planning. But the necessary means should be made available to us in order that the purposes which will be put forward by the future economic council be achieved without delay even if they are detrimental to a few.

In fact, nobody likes going to the dentist to have a tooth taken out but it is a temporary pain for a future good.

I want to point out two particular points of Bill C-72. The first one concerns the appointment of three permanent directors for a seven year term. In my opinion, the appointments of those three directors will have to be considered very seriously and carefully. I think the council formed of those three permanent directors will be in a position, under the provisions of this bill, to carry out very serious and thorough studies on the Canadian economy. And this work will have to be done speedily and result without delay in precise aims for the country.

Consequently, I feel we must give a much greater importance to this triumvirate than to the 25 non-permanent members of the council. This 25 member council may inform the permanent council of the people's views, and the latter will immediately have to set about supplying us with the necessary plan to lead our economy where we want it to go.

At this stage, I would like to say that I found very interesting the suggestions of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), who, incidentally, approves the principle of this legislation and would like those three permanent directors to be appointed for the government's lifetime, that is not for a set period of seven, eight, nine or ten years, but for the duration of the government. He states that this course is followed in the United States, with interesting results. I partly share that opinion, but I am surprised that it should be suggested by the hon. member who put a series of questions on the order paper for the purpose of establishing the efficiency of the ministers' executive assistants who are always appointed for the duration of a government because, to my mind, the attitude of the hon. member is inconsistent, when he wants officials to be appointed—

(Text):

Mr. Fisher: I should like to ask the hon. member what is the contradiction. I fail to see it.

(Translation):

Mr. Chretien: Mr. Speaker, I simply point out those two facts which are, to my mind, contradictory. I think that executive assistants, who have their ministers' trust, should be appointed at the same time as the ministers, whereas the hon. member for Port Arthur wants the directors of the economic council, which will certainly be one of the most important government agencies, to be appointed for the government's duration.

(Text):

Mr. Fisher: I wonder if I might ask the hon. member another question. Is he not aware that a number of times, both in this parliament and in the previous parliament, I have advocated that ministers should hire able people. The reasons these questions were on the order paper was to discover whether these were able or not.

(Translation):

Mr. Chretien: I notice in this new legislation an improvement over the one submitted by the former administration, in that it directs the council to:

> —prepare and cause to be published a review of medium and long term economic prospects and problems.

as mentioned in subsection 2 of clause 21.

I believe this is a most important step toward the information of public opinion and the attainment of the objectives of our planning. Such planning must be for the entire nation, not only to enable the government to obtain some information.

Obviously, the planning scheme we are adopting will not compel anybody to do anything, but I believe that public opinion, if it is well informed by the economic council, will be able to force both governments and private enterprise into taking the necessary steps to attain such objectives.

To conclude, I believe it is most urgent that we adopt this bill in order that the council may be appointed in the nearest possible future. I am happy to see that the provisions of this bill give ample freedom to the council. This council will have to conduct its research in such a way that the nation will have before it precise and practical objectives. And the publicity it can give its studies and reports under subsection 2 of clause 21 will have to be informative for the population as a whole, in order that the private and public sectors of our economy may work in co-operation to attain those objectives.

In a word, this economic council should not be content to be a propaganda machine for the government, as was so often the case for similar bodies in the past, but it should be a living impartial and courageous body which, through its qualification and work, will inspire confidence to the nation and thus will be able to play the part we have a right to expect from it, namely draw up a master plan for our economy to ensure the well-being of the Canadian people.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member entertain a question?

Mr. Chretien: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pigeon: In order to increase the effectiveness of this legislation, since it requires co-operation from the provinces and the municipalities, would it not be logical before we consider this bill to submit it to the federal-provincial conference that the Prime Minister said was to be called for the end of the month, in order to ensure this new agency a 100 per cent effectiveness?

Mr. Chretien: Mr. Speaker, I should like to say that the federal government must be able to propose legislation and that it is normal for us to discuss it here first. If difficulties arise, of the kind that my hon. friend sees everywhere, then the matter could be discussed with the provinces concerned.

(Text):

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, in listening to the debate the other day and today the thought occurred to me that much of the discussion that has taken place is very similar to that which took place just last January when we had a similar bill before the house. When I say "similar bill" I do not mean that the bill was on all fours with the legislation now before the house but rather that the legislation of the former government, which was designed to establish an economic development board, had the same purpose in mind as the legislation before us this evening.

Because of the similarity of the discussion in many respects to that which took place last January, I have seized the opportunity to look at the record of that debate to see the attitude that members of the government assumed then with regard to the bill put forward by the members of this group. I was interested to find that the discussion was concerned largely with what has become known as the Liberal propaganda line, to the effect that the Canadian economy was in a desperate state, that it was in a position of stagnation and that the whole difficulty had occurred because of the administration of the former Conservative government.

This has become known as the Liberal propaganda line. Summed up, it refers to Conservative government incompetence, Conservative government indecision and Conservative government delay. I think it is quite reasonable to describe these phrases that were used ad infinitum and ad nauseam during the past six years as a straight propaganda line. In political circles, particularly during election campaigns, it is not unusual for politicians to resort to propaganda phrases. The politicians only get into difficulty in this respect when they begin to believe their own propaganda. I should like to suggest that this is the unhappy state in which the new administration finds itself at the present time.

For example the previous speaker, the hon. member for St. Maurice-Lafleche (Mr. Chretien), referred to the period of Conservative administration as one of inactivity and stagnation.

At the outset of my remarks tonight I am going to resort to an unbiased and objective appraisal of the state of the economy as it prevailed during the last year of the former administration. I think it will be agreed that a comment from this source rises above the political propaganda considerations that consume so much of the time of the house in our various discussions.

Mr. Moreau: Will the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Dinsdale: Yes.

Mr. Moreau: Will the hon. member tell us whether he believes his own propaganda?

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, I assure you this is not my propaganda. I am going to quote from a commercial letter published regularly by the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. The article is entitled, "The Canadian Economy In 1963". I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that I have no direct connection whatsoever with the editor of this commercial letter and that he forms his conclusions entirely independent of any prompting from myself. Under "The Record in 1962" I read the following:

> The Canadian economy experienced a good year in 1962—

If I may interpolate; this was a year of stagnation and inactivity according to spokesmen for the Liberal party. As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, we had an election in that year and the Liberal propagandists went about the country saying that we were facing bankruptcy and that the economy was in a confused and hopeless state. I wanted to make that interjection at this point to put the matter in perspective with the summation in this commercial letter.

> The Canadian economy experienced a good year in 1962, measured in terms of output. Gross national product increased 8 per cent in value and 6 per cent in physical volume, and real output per person rose significantly for the first time since 1956.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Dinsdale: I do not know why that phrase should cause so much jubilation on the part of hon. members opposite because I was a member of the house in 1956 and I recall that the economy of that period—

Mr. Lamontagne: It was 8.5 per cent.

Mr. Dinsdale: —had reached a stage of stagnation to such an extent that the government of the day appointed a royal commission, which became known as the Gordon commission, in order to chart a new course and provide a new compass for a government which had lost its spirit of creativity and its inspiration. I further remember that back in 1953 and 1954 we passed through a rather difficult period, in economic terms. There was a slight recovery in 1955 and 1956 but it was obvious that the economy had reached that state because we had failed to adjust to the dynamic changes that followed world war II. I resume quoting:

Economic Council of Canada

> Most of the increase in volume of production occurred in the first half of the year and price increases were stronger in the latter part of the year due in part to the depreciation of the Canadian dollar. The rise in activity was well diffused in terms of geographic location—

This is the significant part of the comment.

> —and variety of employment, and a very good wheat crop provided additional strength in the fall of the year. The major stimulus in 1962 came from two sources, a very substantial rise in merchandise exports for the second year in a row and a large increase in purchases of goods and services by the provincial and municipal governments.

Now, there is an objective appraisal of the state of the economy as it was left by the outgoing Conservative administration. I think it will be readily seen, Mr. Speaker, that it hardly conforms to the description that is forthcoming from spokesmen for the government during the course of the current debate or during the course of the debate that took place last January on the bill to establish the economic development board, which was sponsored by the former administration.

I think it would be instructive if we were to recall some of the observations that were made at that time. I refer to my very honourable friend, the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson), who made an ardent contribution to the debate in which he quoted extensively from the newspapers of the day which seemed to agree with some of the statements that were made by hon. members opposite at that time. The Toronto Telegram for example, on January 7, 1963, contained an article with the heading "Economic Dipping". I quote in part from it:

> Our barometer records a drop taking place as we enter 1963. The recent gyrations of many indicators—

I do not know to what gyrations they were referring in this article, or what indicators, whether it was political gyrations or what they were. I continue quoting:

> —made many think that the slowdown predicted earlier for the end of 1962 had been called off. It has not. The good that was in 1962 came to a close with the year. We have now started on a downward swing.

I am sure the hon. member for Leeds would not agree today with that quotation which he used last January during the debate at that time. Then, he quoted also from Mr. Dalton Robertson, writing in the Financial Post of January 12, 1963, who said:

> By an easy majority, the sensitive indicators of how the Canadian economy is doing suggests that the 1961-62 expansion is over and the recession is now on.

There is an even more revealing contribution by the present Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) as recorded at page 2145 of Hansard for November 29, 1962. I quote:

Economic Council of Canada

As I have said, the government has shown itself unable to make decisions or to manage anything.

I could pause here and cite the phrase, "physician, heal thyself".

In these circumstances I doubt if the government will be able to make any more use of an economic development board than it seems to be able to make use of other parts of the existing government service and machinery.

Well, since that time the hon. member has assumed ministerial responsibility. It is interesting to compare the deeds of the past few weeks with the words that were so boldly uttered in the house a few short months ago, and particularly the reference to the inability of the former government to use the existing machinery of the government service.

Then, we go to another comment from the same gentleman to the effect that the advisory committee that was recommended in the bill would result in the circumvention of the civil service. These are all very interesting comments in the light of what has happened in recent weeks. They indicate, Mr. Speaker, that it is much easier to make speeches in this house than it is to translate those speeches into positive action on behalf of the people of Canada.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), speaking in the same debate on January 22, referred to the former bill which had the same purpose as this bill before us, as being a mere gesture, a façade. There was one positive contribution and that was by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano (Mr. Davis). I feel he put his finger on the essence of the problem that confronts this parliament and the country as a whole, as we move towards the implementation of legislation to set up the economic council. There has been a change in terminology. Ours was described as the economic board, and theirs is described as the economic council.

The hon. member for Coast-Capilano said that such legislation would have to provide for the co-ordination of governmental departments in order to avoid duplication. I agree heartily with the hon. member in that regard. Second, he suggested that the board, as it was, or the council as it will be, will have to provide for co-operation between management and labour. I should like to suggest, as I proceed to discuss the bill we have before us, that in some respects the type of organization contemplated by the government will frustrate those two important functions that were laid down by the hon. member for Coast-Capilano. I believe that the productivity council, which is going to be replaced by the implementation of the legislation, was a much more useful body in carrying out the functions of co-operation between the various sectors of the economy than is the council that we are discussing tonight. I think that, in some respects, it is unfortunate that the plan of the previous government was not implemented, because it was a logical plan.

It was a plan that had begun, in the first instance, with a program of action, a program of action that had to be implemented hurriedly in 1957, a program of national development. Then, after the program was under way, it became necessary to deal with the anomalies in government organization which existed because of the failure of the government and this parliament to come to grips with the tremendous changes in the Canadian post-war enconomy, and indeed in the world economy. Gradually we revamped the machinery of government. We brought in new machinery to take care of the new functions that were required to bring the Canadian economy into line with the demands of the mid-twentieth century. The productivity council was a most important contribution in this respect. The basic function of the productivity council was to provide a sounding board wherein the representatives of the various sections of the Canadian economy could come together in order to acquire an appreciation of their respective points of view, instead of endeavouring to carry on in a state of armed truce.

Certainly there was planning needed in Canada, and this has been demonstrated in recent weeks by the unhappy mistakes made by the government because it neglected to take into consideration the existing machinery that is available in an advisory capacity, particularly in the Department of Finance. Instead a group of experts were brought in, ignoring the existing co-operative and co-ordinating machinery that is already available within the government service.

Mr. Lamontagne: What about the bill?

Mr. Dinsdale: The hon. minister asks what about the bill. I understand we are on second reading of the bill, and during the 12 years I have been in this house it has always been my understanding we could discuss—

Mr. Lamontagne: Not the budget.

Mr. Dinsdale: —the principles of the bill in broad terms, which gives an hon. member a considerable degree of latitude. I know the minister is new to the House of Commons, but I am sure he would agree that if we are going to deal with the very complex economic problems that exist in Canada today, we have to have the privileges provided by the rules of the house at this important stage of the consideration of the bill. We will get down to discussing the details of the bill when we come to the committee stage.

The hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald) applauds. He is another new member of the house and does not seem to appreciate that there are several stages to the bill. When we move to the committee stage, we are provided with an opportunity to discuss the terms of the bill in detail.

Mr. Macdonald: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I have been a member of the house at least long enough to know that the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) should talk in the relative area of the bill, and as yet he has not spoken anything about Bill C-72 which is before the house. We await with interest his remarks on the bill, after his irrelevant digressions.

Mr. Dinsdale: This is an expression of opinion on the part of the hon. member for Rosedale. As usual he thinks he is entirely right and I am entirely wrong. But this is the process of debate in this house. He is not too inexperienced, because last January we listened 10 days to a discussion of a bill which perhaps was not quite as relevant as the discussion that has taken place in the space of the last two days in discussing the bill before us.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder if the hon. gentleman would permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Dinsdale: Certainly.

Mr. Pickersgill: Does the hon. gentleman think it is essential to his honour to take as long as he accuses us of having taken before Christmas?

Mr. Dinsdale: I must say that I might have—

Mr. Lamontagne: You might.

Mr. Dinsdale: —I might have come under the influence of the bad example set by the leader of the house—

Mr. Pickersgill: I did not speak on your bill at all.

Mr. Dinsdale: —when he was in opposition. I had been in opposition for six years—

Mr. Pickersgill: So have I.

Mr. Dinsdale: —prior to the change of government in 1957, and I belonged to an opposition that could rightly consider itself Her Majesty's loyal opposition—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Dinsdale: —because we always considered any legislative measures that were presented to the house from the standpoint of the best interests of Canada, rather than mere partisan advantage. Now, during the past six years—

Mr. Lamontagne: Come back to the bill.

Mr. Dinsdale: —I saw an opposition that was not always responsible—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I wonder whether the hon. member who has the floor will allow me to point out to him that he seems to be straying away from the original line of thought with which he commenced his speech. I would invite him to resume that original line of thought.

Mr. Dinsdale: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Cardiff: I suggest, Mr. Speaker, it was the leader of the house who directed him into that line.

Mr. Nowlan: It was the hon. member for Rosedale (Mr. Macdonald).

Mr. Dinsdale: The intrusions from the other side have not been too helpful in this respect, and I am afraid the house leader has led many a young member down the political garden path. I will return to the point I was making. The productivity council carried out the function of encouraging co-operation between the various sectors of the Canadian economy, covering labour, management, the farming community and the universities as well. All these areas have an important part to play in the Canadian way of life, and I hope that the same spirit of co-operation that was generated and was producing so much positive good will be carried on by the new council when it is established and is in operation.

I have been somewhat disturbed because of the tendency to neglect the importance of the agricultural community in these matters. There has not been too much discussion of agricultural matters in the house during the current session, and I would remind the government that agriculture is still one of our basic industries. In all the deliberations of the council it should be given a position of paramount importance.

As an indication that we have gone a long way in dealing with the problems the council is designed to deal, I merely mention a few of the existing agencies of government already established, the resource ministers' council, the national energy board and ARDA. These are important bodies that came into existence during that so-called period of inaction of the former administration.

Dealing with ARDA, I would like to refer to a statement made in this debate the other night by the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), when he suggested that ARDA was an excellent example of the kind of centralized planning that is needed and is espoused by his party, the N.D.P. I suggest that ARDA is the very antithesis of centralized planning in that it places the initiative entirely at the local level. No program will be implemented unless it is first sponsored and brought forward by the local community group, where the real problems are known and understood, and then referred to the province, which in turn refers it to the federal authority. Here is an excellent example of the sort of co-operation and co-ordination that I feel sure this council is designed to bring about in Canada.

Then too we dealt with the regional problems, meeting the needs of the Atlantic provinces, and putting into effect the acreage payment program for the western farmers. Of course I do not need to refer—

Mr. Lamontagne: To the bill.

Mr. Dinsdale: —to the massive program that was sponsored in northern Canada by the former administration. This is only a part of the program that was carried out and that was necessary because of the long years of neglect and delay in coming to grips with the problems of government in the modern world. A transportation study was set up; tax policies are currently under review, and the famous Glassco commission, which has now finished its work, completely examined outdated and antiquated government organization and machinery that had been inherited by the former administration.

Banking procedures have been investigated, and a study made of our outmoded social welfare program which was in bad need of rationalization because it had originally been established on the basis of political expediency, rather than on the basis of meeting the real problems of social welfare in the modern state. All these things are under way. It seems to me the council that is proposed in this legislation is merely going to bring together many useful bodies of information which are already available to the government, and certainly it gives the lie to the propaganda that nothing has been done in recent years.

There is another point I would like to make, drawing my inspiration from the hon. member for Coast-Capilano. He referred to co-ordination within government. It seems to me this is going to be one of the major functions of the new department of industry. It is in the twilight area between the new department of industry and this new council that some confusion of function might exist. The new council could mean an overlapping of function and duplication of services unless we are extremely careful in sorting out the areas of responsibility as between the council and the department of industry; or, to use the words of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, it could become a mere façade to give the impression that something concrete and constructive is being done when, as I have tried to indicate in my outline, there is every evidence that giant strides have already been taken in this area. The co-ordination function within government is just as important as the co-operative function among other government levels and the private sector of the economy.

This brings me to the last point I would like to make, which has been made by other speakers; it was referred to by the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) in her contribution to the debate this evening. I refer to the necessity for consultation with the provincial governments. Just as much progress has been made at the provincial government level as has been made by the federal government to meet the new demands of government in our complex twentieth century society. Indeed, many of the problems with which the council is designed to deal actually come under the jurisdiction of the provincial governments. This is an area where extreme care will have to be used if we are to realize the positive effects which can be achieved by a council of this kind. I am sure I do not have to admonish the government in this respect, because they have already felt the strength of the negative response that can occur in this delicate federal-provincial balance of power when the central government neglects to consult with the provincial governments concerning matters that are of extreme importance and concern to these governments.

During the resolution stage of the debate I referred to this point in passing, pointing out that the province of Manitoba, as an example of one province, is away ahead of Ottawa in dealing with the economic challenges of the new kind of economy in which we live. Most hon. members will have received recently this voluminous report from the government of Manitoba entitled "Manitoba 1962-1975", which indicates that here is a province that is away out ahead of the federal government. Manitoba has a Conservative government which drew its inspiration from the leadership provided by the former federal Conservative government. I trust that the minister responsible will be guided by the very excellent analysis of contemporary economic problems provided in this report. It covers every segment of the economy and I feel is an excellent reminder at this critical juncture in Canadian affairs that the provinces have their own important sphere of influence, and any undue interference on the part of the national government is not going to be too helpful in continuing the high level of economic activity that was achieved by the former administration.

This is a federal state, and one must always remember that relationships among senior governments are delicate because of the very nature of confederation. Much of the Canadian economy belongs to the provinces. The resources belong to the provinces. The provinces, therefore, are not going to countenance any undue intrusion by Ottawa, particularly without prior consultation and certainly without concern for their sensitivities and prerogatives in this regard.

I should also like to suggest that the private sector, or the voluntary sector of the Canadian economy is most important in this respect. This report was prepared entirely by a committee of volunteers, none of whom received any stipend from the provincial government. I am afraid that sometimes governments of all stripes tend to feel they are responsible for everything that takes place in the economy. Of course, that is the authoritarian point of view, and in a democratic society one must always realize that in the final analysis it is the creativity of the people of the country, their spirit of co-operation, their initiative which will determine whether the economy continues to prosper.

In a council of this kind let us make the utmost use of the advice, services and initiative in the private sector of the economy. The private initiative is of basic importance. In the final analysis, Mr. Speaker, I trust that hon. members of the house, and particularly the members of the government, will agree that the best contribution a government can make in the field of economic development and economic health is to provide the atmosphere and climate in which the ordinary citizen, whether he be a businessman, a member of the labouring community, a farmer, or whatever his calling, can exert his maximum influence. It is the climate, the atmosphere, that matters.

I trust the climate that has been established—as has been pointed out so eloquently in this unbiased, objective report from the economists of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce—will continue to thrive; that the example set by the previous administration will be duly noted by the new administration so they will forget their propaganda and deal with positive policies.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, the last speaker spoke so well and graciously that he has tempted me to deal for a moment with the economic facts facing Canada at the moment. I do not want to refer to his speech in detail, but the biblical strictures used by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) were put to good effect. May I remind him that "The truth shall make you free", and that before we can go places in Canada one of the first requirements is that we must see starkly what is the situation at any given moment of time. I do not want to do this in any partisan way because I honestly do not believe that we can attribute the economic success or failure of a country like Canada entirely to the actions of a particular federal government.

Mr. Dinsdale: I agree.

Mr. Matheson: I believe the federal government has a very important role to play, but oftentimes there are circumstances and forces which are beyond the power of a particular government. Therefore I would ask hon. members to consider some of the problems facing Canadians at the moment. I remind them of the statistics available with respect to investment as a percentage of gross national expenditure. I have been reading some of the extracts from some of the publications concerning growth which have been appearing in the Economic Journal of the United Kingdom. It appears that in a good deal of the texts on this subject a very important index of success economically is the extent to which an economy invests as it goes along. I think capitalist countries must be rather concerned about this at the moment in making certain investment comparisons with, for instance, the Soviet union.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is the situation in Canada? With respect to the investment in housing and social capital, in 1956 Canada invested 9.9 of the gross national expenditure. In 1962, the year which reference was made as the great year—

Mr. Dinsdale: The good year.

Mr. Matheson: The good year—9.4 per cent of the gross national expenditure was invested. In other words, the emphasis on housing and social capital in that good year shows a substantial decline. When we look at business investment, private and public, we find in the year 1957 an investment of 17.7 per cent of the gross national expenditure, which dropped down in 1962 to 12.2 per cent.

The hon. member who has just taken his seat spoke about the great importance of the private sector. I believe all of us on this side of the house are prepared to support him in that. The economic climate is terribly important. But the fact is that the climate was such that there was a sharp decline in the business investment area from 17.7 per cent of the gross national expenditure down to 12.2 per cent. The total result with regard to investment is that from a figure of 27.3 per cent in 1957 we have dropped in 1962, the good year, to 21.6 per cent.

Now, can any person who cares about capital development and growth be happy with that situation? For my part I cannot take any satisfaction from it at all, when I make comparisons with what has happened in other countries. Unfortunately I do not have time available to go into this matter to any greater degree at this time. Nor can any person surely take satisfaction from the fact that over $2.9 billion has been built up as a deficit in the six good years. This is virtually $3 billion, or $500 million a year by which we had been slipping back, or eating into the capital of the future.

When we look at the private and public capital expenditure chart as another index of growth during these years we find that the capital investment in constant dollars, 1957 being computed as 100, has dropped in 1962 to 93.1 per cent. In other words, our expenditure both private and public is 7 per cent below what it was in 1957. Just imagine a drop of 7 per cent in the volume of physical investment in Canada in those good years. Can anyone take satisfaction from that? I am not blaming the previous government. Perhaps it is not their fault and they hit a bad time in the business cycle. But I do not think they are playing fair with the Canadian people when they keep stressing that these years have been particularly satisfying years from the standpoint of economic development.

What about employment and earnings? From these figures I find that even in the good year of 1962 there is a sharp decline in the middle of the year in the civilian labour force, in non-agricultural employment, and in total employment from mid-year on. We also find that between the years 1946 and 1956 inclusive there was an average unemployment ratio in Canada of 3.2 per cent. From the year 1957 to the good year of 1962 the figure was 6.3 per cent. Personally, I am not satisfied with the 3.2 per cent figure. We recognize that there has to be something over zero per cent to make sense in this country, with the physical climate as it is, but this is not a satisfactory picture at all. In the United States, where they have the money, the time and the statisticians who can devote themselves to these matters with greater leisure than some of our hard pressed people in Canada, comparisons are made with various industrial countries in the world. In last year's white paper prepared for the United States presidential committee the unemployment rates prevailing in various countries in the year 1960, which was the last available year, were set out. And what do we find? Unemployment in Canada was 7 per cent. In the United States it was 5.6 per cent, Italy 3.4 per cent, Great Britain 2.4 per cent, France 1.9 per cent, Sweden 1.5 per cent, Japan 1.1 per cent, and the Federal Republic of Germany 1.0 per cent. I do not think we can possibly be satisfied with the figure of 6.3 per cent, nor indeed with any figure of over 3 per cent. I very much hope we can contrive to plan things in this country in such a fashion that that percentage is substantially lower than 3 per cent in the future.

There is another very serious matter which Canadians have not taken into consideration even in the budget debates which have occurred in this house, and that is the problem of the balance of international payments. Can anybody honestly take satisfaction with respect to our balance of international payments in the year 1962? We all recall that in the first quarter of 1962 there was a substantial net capital inflow. Then you will remember that this dried up and for the first time there was substantial drawing upon our reserves. Then in the second quarter of 1962 there was a sharp net outflow of capital. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, what happened. There was pressure on the Canadian dollar on the exchange market, which had been heavy in January and February, relaxed somewhat in March, and renewed in April. Then after the announcement of a general election the government of the day established the exchange rate at 92.5 per cent. There has been a certain amount of hocus-pocus on this matter which I am sure hon. members will recognize. A lot of Canadians were taught to believe that we deliberately pursued this devaluation course. I submit that we did not deliberately pursue this course. I recall asking the then minister of finance on March 21, 1962, if he did not think it timely to peg the dollar, which was then at 95 cents. I was not clever about this, but I had a friend who was. He telephoned me long distance and said: "This is critical. The Canadian dollar is in serious trouble and I suggest you ask the minister if he is thinking of pegging it." I am sure some hon. members will remember the minister's reply. He referred to the striking success of the government's policy in relation to the external value of the Canadian dollar. He had no thought of pegging it on March 21. Well, the government of that day eventually pegged it. Hon. members will recall that immediately after the election of June 18, the administration was compelled to announce a series of drastic emergency measures. That does not sound to me like an indication of a particularly good year. I hope we do not have to run into a problem of this kind again, though I think it is possible to contend that trouble of this kind can blow up like a summer storm on a shallow lake. It might conceivably happen even in the case of a buoyant economy. But in the context of events I do not think that Canadians can take a lot of satisfaction from what transpired.

I think many of us are studying in a worried way the results of pegging the dollar at 92 cents. We find there have been substantial borrowings from the United States, approximately $839 million in 1962 compared with $133 million the year before. What really is frightening is that this devaluation has prompted Americans to come into Canada, not to speculate on something which might produce a profit in the future, but to take over sound, established Canadian industries. I know about that in my own small community; I know this is happening. I also know that the 92½ cent dollar has placed in jeopardy a number of United States subsidiary companies in Canada which have to bring in a certain percentage of their product. Immediately upon devaluation their costs went up. I could name names, though I shall not do so, of firms which have done a lot to build up in Canada efficient manufacturing enterprises employing several hundreds of people. These firms are worried because they have to import a percentage of their product and finish it in Canada. Of necessity their costs have gone up and their ability to sell has been adversely affected.

I am not blaming the previous government for the action it took. Perhaps any group of Canadians, faced with the events of the early part of 1962, would have followed a similar course. However, I think it is important that we should face these sombre facts. We do not want this situation to happen again.

Let us look at another index; this is a matter of interest to our Social Credit friends —I refer to the cost of carrying this increased debt. We find that the interest rate on this debt has gone up from about 3 per cent in 1957 to 4¼ per cent in 1963 and this in "the good years". How much higher can we permit it to go? We have seen an increase of 1¼ per cent in servicing charges in respect of Canada's unmatured debt. I believe that when we look at the general problem of economic development in Canada we find, essentially, a great consensus among all parties in this house. I do not think this is surprising.

We have had our little storm over the budget and I am not surprised we had that storm. It seems to me, though, that some of the members opposite were reading the Daily Mirror and the News of the World thinking we had a Profumo case in Canada. There are people who say politicians can run into trouble in two ways—girls and experts. We happened to have our trouble with experts. Nevertheless, there are many circumstances in which the advice of experts is indicated and we surely must be prepared to take a little advice from experts. The hon. member who has just sat down referred to the Gordon commission and I am glad he did so. We feel that this report is already stale and dated; but it is not a bad report. There were hearings, which took place in 14 cities throughout Canada. Maybe the report could have been better written, or reached happier conclusions in certain respects, but the document as a whole is a substantial and solid analysis of Canada's economic position, the prospect before us, our relationship with the United States particularly with respect to trade, capital investment and the whole agriculture situation.

I presumed to suggest the other day that the ARDA program had had its origins in the chapter on agriculture in the Gordon commission report, chapter 8. A great deal of emphasis was placed in that report on secondary manufacturing industry and productivity. The commission also gave consideration to the changing structure of the Canadian economy. I remember speaking one day in the presence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp). I mentioned the studies which were being made in the United States, in Britain and in Europe with regard to growth. The minister said something which, I think, is significant. He said that growth is not the right word any more; the word was "change". I think the Gordon commission, in its report, indicated that change is of the essence, and I think that is why this Bill No. C-72, is so important and timely. The commission went on to consider the problems of the Atlantic provinces and of the north, the promotion of steady growth and development, the provision of that climate in economic affairs to which the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) has referred, the need for trained manpower and for research, the role of government in our national affairs. I am not being rude when I say to the former minister who has just resumed his seat that in fact at least 12 of the important economic planks of his party's program in 1957 were taken from the report of this royal commission on Canada's economic prospects. Many comments have been made with respect to this. The financial editor of the Toronto Star said on June 7, 1962:

> The truth is, of course, that Mr. Diefenbaker and his cabinet, lacking a "braintrust" of their own, have had to go to a somewhat dated study fathered by a Liberal braintruster for many of their ideas.

Economic Council of Canada

To date, they have purloined more than a dozen of the 57 legislative proposals spelled out in Mr. Walter Gordon's 1956 royal commission on Canada's economic prospects.

This is not surprising when we consider the composition of the House of Commons. How can any party, or any member in opposition have access to research on economic matters? I had a little experience of opposition, being in the 24th and 25th parliaments. We in the Liberal party in those years of opposition understand why the conclusions of a royal commission on Canada's economic prospects are so useful as a source of information. I think hon. members opposite did well to take ideas from the report of that commission and then rephrase them in the colourful way which is so characteristic of the right hon. gentleman who later became prime minister of Canada.

Today the report of the Gordon commission is somewhat out of date. When we look at the economic white paper of 1962 we find the conclusions are no longer entirely applicable. A series of events since then has changed matters. We read an editorial for example, in Maclean's magazine of September 3, 1962, headed "40 Months To Make Or Break Canada", and I should like to quote part of this editorial. Perhaps this is an extremist point of view but it is something we have got to think about. The editorial reads in part as follows:

Instead of holding rigidly to the belief that an east-west trading pattern is basic to our survival, we shall have to accept the as yet untested thesis that Canada can prosper as a junior partner with the U.S. in a continental economic region, with predominantly north-south trading lines. Unless we find the courage for this kind of gamble, Canada faces the alternative of becoming a sort of Manchuria with hockey players, supplying raw materials for others to process while our standard of living slides ever lower.

I hope that editorial is not true. I have always hoped that article II of NATO could be made to come to life and that there might be a new climate where Canada's independence and strength would emerge not only because of closer integration with the United States but with other countries such as those of northwestern Europe, particularly with the United Kingdom, perhaps in a substantial way with Japan and certainly with Latin America. It seems to me we are coming to the point in this country where there is a consensus among agriculturalists, among labour people and among businessmen that we are going to have to go through periods of substantial change because growth is no longer automatic. It seems to me that for this reason we can look with some hope to Bill No. C-72.

It is true that in some respects it is not dissimilar to the bill introduced by the former government. We like to believe that there are improvements. We hope there are. We think that the duties of the council as set out in clause 9 are much more specific. We think that the power of the council to initiate studies gives the council freedom—freedom from the minister, freedom from the government of the day. We believe that it gives the economic council a chance to grow and to be creative on its own, and to give positive leadership. We think that the burden with respect to publication and the duty to produce an annual review is the kind of thing that Canada needs to bring the old Gordon commission up to date, to project, to look ahead, to give what the French in some of their literature have referred to as "prévoyance".

We know that there has been a certain exercise in semantics in the house. Some people talk about indicative planning. Some people are concerned that perhaps there will be creeping socialism. We have even had some suggestion that there is a form of syndicalism involved here. We can see all manner of difficulties that could develop as a result of this council. One thing, for example, that could happen is that we could make such poor appointments that virtually what we would be doing would be putting the most important lobbying groups in the country in a position where they could tamper with the federal government to the point of having a special influence and voice, and thus perhaps simply preserve vested interests. I hope that will not happen.

I hope that in making the appointments there will be a genuine attempt to ensure that they shall be representative, and I hope also representative of some of the best academic opinion. It is about time that we recognized those people who are trained in economics and who know something about general interests as distinct from private and special interests. We must have representatives of people in business who are prepared to take risks and think in the largest and broadest way. If we look at the situation in Britain, the Neddy committee presided over by Reginald Maudling, we can see that it is possible to have big men on this kind of council, men whose special interests to some extent cancel one another out and who are prepared to reach some sort of economic consensus.

We have not been able to articulate and enunciate adequately the consensus that I think most of us in this country share. Personally I was very disappointed in the budget debate. It was more preoccupied with personalities than with policy. But we seem all agreed so far as the grievous imbalance in our trade situation is concerned. We are concerned about the lack of productivity of Canadian labour. We are concerned about the emigration of particular skills. We are concerned, I think, that so much of our agricultural market is now directed to a certain group of communist countries and that we have lost that diversification of market which in the past we enjoyed.

I do not think we can actually blame the Conservative administration for these changes. Let us collectively face these problems fairly and factually. Personally I feel that the fact that there is a minority government at the moment offers perhaps the most hopeful possibility of Canada reaching some kind of new consensus on economic matters.

The United States has had some experience with its employment act of 1946. I know there are people in the New Democratic party who feel that this was a very faltering, stumbling and hesitant step. Perhaps the achievements of that group in the United States would not satisfy the distinguished member from Northumberland. But the Americans have had a great tradition of reliance on the private sector and it was in the private sector particularly that they found they needed a council of economic advisers. Why? To prevent depressions, to maintain a high level of employment—although heaven knows it has not been high enough—to bolster production and purchasing power. The objective of their council of economic advisers was to place the economic development of their country under continuous scrutiny, to make policy recommendations to the president and to give the United States the ability to look ahead, or what I have referred to as "prévoyance".

We want research and analysis, the determination of objectives, the discovery of alternative solutions, the formulation of policies, the execution of a plan. This council cannot do anything, of course, except indicate; but it is very important to indicate, and when the appointments are made by the government I hope that a great deal of emphasis will be placed on the chairman and the two other permanent members of the council.

I agree entirely with the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) who made an excellent speech on this subject. It seems to me that we will be going places with this council if the permanent secretariat is strong and is made up of people of great ability and distinction, and with a certain amount of personal influence and power. If in making up the total board of 25 there are selected top ranking men from industry, labour, agriculture and so on, I believe that these men can sit down and face facts, perhaps more easily than we can ourselves. I think that already they are aware of many of the facts. I have had businessmen tell me that even if an industry has to face difficult times ahead it is better that it should know the facts. For example, if a sector of the textile industry has to face the prospect of going out of business because it is going to be replaced by something else that is more productive, it is far better that the industry should know what the future holds in order to move sensibly and wisely.

After all, today there is not the sharp cleavage between capital and labour that prevailed in the time of the early private entrepreneurial organizations. To my knowledge I do not know one person who really is a capitalist in the full sense of the word. The people who run the 10 to 12 industries in my home city are really labour people. They are a part of management. They are highly skilled and highly trained. Very few of them own very much in the way of stock, perhaps just a little by way of token ownership; but essentially they are not owners. They are management and they are trying to do a scientific and wise job. Therefore I emphasize the fact that if we are going to make the economic council of Canada vigorous and strong the most important thing is the appointments.

I have been somewhat concerned about the wording appearing in clause 4, subclause 2, which provides that each of the other members of the council shall be appointed after consultation with appropriate representative organizations, to hold office for a term of three years. I hope that when the government finally proceeds to make these appointments, if the bill is passed, they will look for top quality in each appointment; and that is not obtained simply by appointing the person who happens to be the president or secretary treasurer of a certain organization. When we look at the British appointments to Neddy I think we are satisfied there has been a certain amount of wisdom shown in the choice of those people who represent, for example, the rubber industry or the cotton industry. The man who represents, for instance, the academic community is a person highly advanced in the economics of labour a man head and shoulders over other people in his field. The representative of the national coal board happens to be the chairman. We have, of course, people in high positions representing unions, representing boards of trade and so on. In my opinion, the quality of these important appointments is of primary significance.

The danger is, of course, that with a large 25-man board, it may become a meeting society to talk, dine occasionally and move off in directions that really accomplish very little. I hope, like the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) that the permanent secretary, the chairman and his two permanent members, will be men of individual ability and talent, that they will work as a team and that we will have before us annually for consideration the kind of report which is in substance a little Gordon commission report. It is this kind of thing that I should like to see. Of course they may go off in various productive sidetracks. They can develop interests in special areas, and these will be necessary; but largely this is going to be a board that is thinking not in terms of tactics, the mechanics of production, but essentially in terms of economic strategy and projecting a plan for growth covering the next decade, two decades or perhaps even longer.

We know that there is going to be foreign investment in this country. We do not want to see ourselves cut off from capital. It seems to me that the great adventure of this particular decade for Canada will be the progressive steps taken by government to make us part of the new international community. We must preserve the general interest and become more objective. We must become more involved in every respect in foreign aid, in our involvement with other nations on this continent, in Europe and elsewhere. It seems to me that there will be a sharp shift from the kind of economic nationalism that has prevailed in this country pretty well since confederation, that is the significant change that is going to take place. I believe that this is in the long-run interest, not only of the maritimes, not only of the agricultural west, but even of the highly developed and industrialized areas of Quebec and Ontario. I believe that the areas in which we are going to make startling progress are those areas in which we can at last compete on a larger scale.

I hope sincerely, Mr. Speaker, that we can approach this new concept of planning, not in the sense of thinking that any small group of people are so much wiser than other people, but that Canadians must work progressively towards this new economic consensus, this new harmony, this larger co-operation between the productive elements. I look particularly for co-operation between the private and public sectors, as was stressed by the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett). This is important. She stressed a fact of life in Canada, that approximately one third of our investment, about one third of our employment, is dependant upon the public sector. We are going to blind ourselves entirely to these important considerations if appointments to this council are directed only to the private sector.

[Mr. Matheson.]

On the other hand, I think the members of our group do believe that we must and can plan for increased competition, and that capitalism has virtue only if it is competitive. This is the thing for which we are striving. It is said that the first aim of a government is to create an atmosphere for economic growth. The first objective of any sensible economic system must be to increase the wealth of the community. One listens with some little concern to statements about the likelihood of our hurried implementation of certain social security programs when we really do not know how large an economic pie we are going to have to distribute. Personally, I am just a little old fashioned about this, and I look with anxiety on the fact that we are urged to spend before we know where this money is coming from. This is perhaps the result of a Presbyterian background; I don't know. It seems to me that if the economic council can help to bake the larger pie then, in our wisdom, we can attend to this necessary process of redistribution which finally brings justice to every element in the community.

(Translation):

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, planning is one of the purposes of this legislation. Now, the purpose of economic activity has always been to increase production with the least possible efforts.

We are endeavouring to establish a temporal social order in which the human being could live normally to attain its complete fulfilment. Controlled planning which seeks to determine the right to production based solely on labour devoted to that end, becomes increasingly dangerous with the advance of applied science.

Such a result could be expected, as this is contrary to the natural order and takes a means for an end. Economics are intended to provide goods, and not to control or govern people. Labour is considered as a means to some extent, as far as it is necessary to reach an end.

To associate money, which is the right to production, solely with labour, is therefore to subordinate the end to the means. In short, it is more than a surrender, it is a shameful humiliation, inasmuch as modern progress increases the level of production.

To associate money solely with employment leads necessarily to state control with all its resulting perils and subservience.

Workers get paid to produce consumer goods; but since machines and men have become inseparable, the price of those consumer goods far exceeds the money distributed to workers in return for their participation. Since the market is already flooded, very few are interested in setting up new factories in such conditions.

That is where the government is forced to intervene, but since it clings to old principles and it does not want to create debt free money, it has to take the money out of the pockets of the taxpayers, either through taxation or loans. Then, to save the principle of money based solely on labour, it has to employ people under the conditions of patronage which corrupts politics.

Here again, in a world of conflict, the production of cannons, machine-guns, planes, nuclear arms and means of destruction of all kinds becomes a magnificent introduction. Not only does the production of goods which are not for sale ensure the distribution of money, but it does not create the same problems as the production of ordinary capital goods, since there are no commodities to be sold.

On the contrary, if cannons, bombers and torpedoes are put to work, they destroy great quantities of all kinds of goods, and this greatly helps to reduce supply to the level of purchasing power and, at the same time, it paves the way for reconstruction which will keep a lot of people busy.

Since the aim of economics is employment, war is a godsend for civilized countries where automation throws so many people out of work.

That is why we claim that to base money solely on work is to call for excessive intervention by the state with all the disorders that such an intervention entails. It is also for that reason that war is the ideal means of restoring the balance between the products on the shelves and the money in the consumer's pockets. In fact, the more machinery you have—under present regulations—the closer you are to war, which increases the amount of money in circulation while it cuts down on surplus goods and labour.

A more humane way to get out of this situation would be through a social dividend, by creating money to increase purchasing power directly and to bring it to the same level as the supply of consumer goods. Thus, instead of fostering war, machinery would justify the payment of a dividend to every member of society.

That is also why we say that if socialist countries had applied Social Credit, they would have brought about in the world, through the example of the larger countries, an economy of peaceful prosperity, and mankind would have considered them as geniuses and honoured them as great benefactors. But the Social Credit dividend is not on better terms with the Marxist or the Bolshevist philosophy than it is with that of the banker.

Dictators, in Berlin or Moscow, like the modern banker, control the community's credit, and use it in a dictatorial way, now to make cannons, now to get the community into debt; both despise the individual, both are out to dominate the world. Worship of race, worship of money, a terrified world under the jaws of the death bellowers, a world kneeling under the burden of ruinous and unpayable debentures; bend or break, pay or die.

Prosperity does not depend on a constant favourable or unfavourable trade balance, a monetary instrument does not need gold to play its part. It is the unemployment of money that causes the unemployment of men, and the injection of new money would give new life to our whole activity. With money geared to the needs of the country, it would be possible to protect Canada from recessions.

If the money supply regulated by the government eliminates stagnation, the ownership of money in the hands of the government would direct activities and constitute a real dictatorship of government on the economic life; it would be a replacement of banking dictatorship by government dictatorship.

If, on the contrary, by way of deduction, money originally placed in the hands of consumers controlled the economic life according to the desires of the consumers, it would be a social economic democracy in which freedom would flourish and against which any endeavour of planning or dictatorship would not have any chance.

The policy of your proposed planning—only salaries to workers and interest to sponsors—will never solve this problem, since progress reduces the number of wage-earners, and it is because we hold on to the policy of salaries and interest that thousands and millions of human beings starve to death, cursing progress instead of being thankful for it. That is why Social Credit advocates the distribution of dividends to everyone to enable him to buy his share of progress.

I say his share of progress. Progress is the result of science which, in conjunction with the individual work of the inventor and the sponsor who are rewarded in the normal way, justifies the latter. But accumulated science which is a common wealth, plays an important part in invention and progress. So what is left after the capitalist and the inventor, as also the workers, have been rewarded; so it is the share of the accumulated science that belongs to everyone.

That is why all the good things which remain unsold, all the good things salaries and interests do not buy belong to everybody and everybody must be entitled to his share, instead of letting those things deteriorate and stop progress.

And who is to see that everybody gets his share of the progress made? The government, since it is the government that acts for everybody and is responsible for the common good.

There are two ways of enabling people to buy their share of progress. First, by reducing the price of goods so that one may buy more with each dollar; second, by increasing the number of dollars in people's hands.

Progress in the volume of production requires progress in the money supply. Where it is enormous in the first instance, it must also be made enormous in the field of distribution. Those who stick to the old method of financial distribution are enemies of progress as far as distribution goes; they are paralysing the advance of progress in the field of production and are paving the way for the progress of revolution. Just like progress distinguishes man from beast, Social Credit distinguishes the intelligent from the stupid.

The government of a country surely has the right to manage, to legislate, to implement for the good of all, the prosperity of all. The government holds that right or, to put it another way, that judicial power. It also has the physical power, the implementation power, it is capable to find the men, machines and tools needed to serve the community. But it happens that the government does not feel it has the financial power. It is always on the financial side that its action is limited.

That means that even with unchallenged judicial power and almost unlimited physical power, the government is immobilized by the lack of financial power. The same conclusions hold true with regard to centralized, planified government through Bill C-72 dealing with economic planning and submitted in this house by the minister, who is an economist to boot. Judicial and physical powers are not enough without financial power.

The minister is very careful to keep far away from the financial power.

[Mr. Latulippe.]

That is why, while claiming rights for every individual, while requesting the greatest judicial power for the lower bodies, we maintain that unless financial power is also given to individuals, corporations and governments, the economy will remain at a standstill, plans will remain unimplemented, some reports will gather dust because they will not be read—the minister is aware of that—citizens will remain destitute and unemployment will increase.

Budgets will keep on showing deficits, citizens will be taxed more and more, goods will remain on the shelves in spite of urgent needs. Men will remain unemployed next to rusting machines.

We are not against the price of butter rising to enable farmers to show a profit, but the reasons given by the professor of economics are nothing short of capitulation before a set of figures. Adjust the individual, adjust the consumer, adjust demand to supply, always the wrong way: man is sacrificed. When shall we see the bright ones asking for an adjustment of the purchasing power?

To production capacity, money in hand, the consumer orders what he wishes, and as he pays, production adjusts itself to demand as it should, and man remains the master.

The proposed plans and the planned economy will tell us what to produce, what to buy, how much, at what specific time and what are the individual basic needs for this and that. Planned economy will make all individuals and all appetites equal because the great men, who are not equal, will have decided so. Planned economy may be an amusing game for those who play it, for those who plan it. But it is much less attractive for those who are subjected to planning upon whom planning is imposed.

The trouble with monopoly is that power is held by those who control it. Through planning, you are going to replace private monopoly by state monopoly.

That would only mean changing a group of controllers for another one even more important.

The government employees in charge of nationalized industries could dictate the kind of products, the quality of production, the choice of employees, the salaries paid and the selling price of the products.

There is no place for competitive industry which endeavours to please the public better. Only one authority, that of the government, would control production. And if planning and socialization put such a vast and concentrated power in the hands of a political party, what could be done to get rid of it? They would have the power. It would mean the simultaneous control of industry, finance and policy. And, to administer that tremendous government control, you would have to set up a large government bureaucracy. People may imagine what such bureaucracy would be, considering the one established since the war by the Ottawa government to control industry and business.

The plans conceived by the hon. minister are merely plans to activate production, create methods and increase the yield, so that there is no problem in this respect. The issue is with regard to distribution, and why not take nature as a model.

The sun and the atmosphere function automatically and are only subject to variations due to natural and normal causes. They are giving us the results for which they were created.

The same should be the case with the monetary economic system. It ought to give people the means of buying the fruits they are able to produce. It ought to be such that the consumption of goods equals production, and those results should not entail the danger of so-called sound financing with its pyramids of debts, its usury, taxes and artificial scarcities.

There is only one rule for money: there must be enough to set in action all the legitimate trade. It is bad when there is not enough or too much. If our country can issue one dollar bonds, it can issue one dollar bills as well. The same factors that give value to the bond would do the same for the bill. But there is a difference in that the bond enables the money dealer to be reimbursed twice.

That is how financiers bring about their control without being interfered with while groups tear one another to pieces without solving anything.

It is impossible to solve the dilemma without wiping out the debt-money system. Only Social Credit has the solution.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think, sir, we would like to get on with the business of the house, and so far as we are concerned we would be very glad to hear the hon. gentleman for so long as he likes to speak.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I will take advantage of this unusual generosity on the part of the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill) but if, as he has indicated, it is necessary to fill in one or two minutes until it is ten o'clock, then I will proceed to do so.

I was quite interested when I read rather carefully the speech of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) in introducing this measure, in which he said: "Its purpose is to establish economic planning in this country". I have read the bill through with very great care and I can see no possible grounds whatever for this particular deduction. I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I was very disappointed this evening. I had hoped to have the opportunity of striking a blow for biculturalism by remarking on the fortunate conjuncture of name and function with regard to the introduction of this bill and then, alas, the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) dealt with it ahead of me. But when I look at the bill itself I can see no reason for the minister's optimistic statement that its purpose is to establish economic planning in this country.

Nowhere in the bill does it suggest that there is to be anyone who is to have the authority to plan. What we are going to have is a number of people who will be asked to compile various statistical data and make economic forecasts; but nowhere is there any suggestion that there is to be any coherent plan produced. In fact I would say this is merely an attempt to correct by unplanned operations the results of planlessness while maintaining the conditions under which planlessness will continue inevitably. It is rather like refusing to take the wheel, but asking passengers to lean first to port and then to starboard in the hope that they may perhaps in some way affect the course of the vessel. Of course, Mr. Speaker, this is very handy when those who are in charge of the navigation appear to be so uncertain as to the destination that should lie at the end of their course.

Now, Mr. Speaker, may I call to your attention the fact that it is ten o'clock.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, may we have from the house leader an indication of the business for the other days of this week.

Mr. Pickersgill: It was understood on Thursday that we would begin the budget resolutions tomorrow, starting with the resolutions respecting the Customs Tariff. I assume they may take a good part of the day, but if we should conclude the Customs Tariff resolutions we would then go on with one or other of the remaining resolutions. I would like to maintain a little freedom as to which one that will be and I will let hon. gentlemen know the first thing in the morning, because I have not had a chance to consult the Minister of Finance about the order in which he wishes to have them go on.

It was understood that the budget resolutions would also be the business for Wednesday. On Thursday, as the Prime Minister indicated earlier today, the Minister of National Health and Welfare would like to begin the debate on the resolution regarding the Canada pension plan. I would like to talk to hon. gentlemen about Friday before making an announcement.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX "A"

LETTER TO PROVINCIAL PREMIERS SUGGESTING CONFERENCE

OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER

Ottawa, July 12th, 1963.

(Copy of letter sent to the premiers of all the provinces)

Dear Premier .....

The replies that I have so far received to my letter of June 20th indicate that the premiers of the provinces generally look with favour on the suggestion of a federal-provincial conference to discuss matters of mutual interest in the sphere of pensions and related insurance benefits.

It is now expected that the resolution regarding the Canada Pension Plan, which I sent to you with my earlier letter, will be moved in the House of Commons next week. At that time the Minister of National Health and Welfare intends to make a statement fully outlining the government's proposal. Copies of this statement will be sent to you as soon as it is made.

The provinces will therefore shortly have before them the information needed in order that there may be useful federal-provincial discussions about pensions. This is already the case in another matter of interest to the provinces, namely the federal government's proposal to promote increased employment by financial assistance, in the form of loans with provincial approval, to enable municipalities to augment or accelerate their capital works programmes. This proposal has been set out in detail in the bill which is before the House of Commons.

I think it would be of value to the public, as well as to the governments and others directly concerned, if federal-provincial discussions on these two matters were held as soon as possible.

Accordingly, I am now writing to enquire whether you would be able to attend a two-day conference in Ottawa on July 26th and 27th.

In addition to discussing pensions and this assistance to municipalities, such a meeting would provide opportunity for consideration of the procedure and timing of a full federal-provincial conference later in the year.

I would propose that the conference on July 26th and 27th should be held in camera, though of course each of us would be free before or after to make such public statements as he may wish regarding his government's views on the subjects under discussion.

Yours sincerely,

(signed) L. B. Pearson

LETTER AND RESOLUTION FROM PREMIER LESAGE

OFFICE OF THE PREMIER
Province of Quebec

Quebec City, July 11, 1963.

The Right Honourable Lester B. Pearson, P.C.,
Prime Minister of Canada,
House of Commons,
Ottawa, Ontario.

Mr. Prime Minister:

Following my letter to you of June 7, 1963, asking you not to proceed with the establishment of a municipal loans fund until the provincial premiers have had an opportunity to confer among themselves in the matter early in August. I feel I should formally draw your attention to a resolution that was unanimously agreed to in the legislative assembly on June 26.

Herewith is a copy of that document.

I must add that I am sure of expressing the unanimous feeling of the members of the Quebec legislative assembly when I say that they consider as a breach of your promise fully to respect provincial rights, in your management of the affairs of this country, the fact of proceeding unilaterally to establish a municipal loans fund which, according to your platform, was to be instituted solely in co-operation with the provinces.

Under the circumstances, your attitude forces me, most regretfully, to table this letter forthwith in the legislative assembly.

Please accept, Mr. Prime Minister, the assurance of my regards.

Jean Lesage.

[Translation:]

EXTRACT from the minutes of a meeting of the Quebec legislative assembly, held June 26, 1963:

"Moved by Mr. Dozois, seconded by Mr. Ducharme:

That this house feels that Bill No. C-76, respecting the "municipal development and and loan act", which was introduced in the House of Commons by the Minister of Finance of Canada, is a serious infringement upon the exclusive jurisdiction and the autonomy of the province of Quebec in matters pertaining to municipal affairs, and requests that the provincial government consider the possibility of establishing a provincial system of municipal credit which would facilitate municipal loans."

Motion unanimously agreed to."

Antoine Lemieux,
Clerk of the Legislative Assembly.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, July 16, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. SPEAKER—STATEMENT RESPECTING MOTION BY MEMBER FOR WINNIPEG NORTH CENTRE

Mr. Speaker: May I refer to the question of privilege raised in the house yesterday by the Minister of Justice. In the July 15 issue of Hansard at page 2167 the Minister of Justice is reported as having raised a question of privilege in the following words:

> Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. On Friday the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) rose on a question of privilege, as reported at page 2121 of Hansard, which I think I can summarize. I quote:
>
> "My point of privilege is that what we now have is precisely what we had last June. We have the government construing that the Financial Administration Act or regulations made under it gives them authority to do something which the act itself says cannot be done. The Financial Administration Act says that no appointments by the treasury board can be made under it."

The Minister of Justice then went on to say:

> The hon. member's statement in this respect is not correct. If hon. members would look at section 5 (2) of the Financial Administration Act they would find it provides that the governor in council may authorize the treasury board to exercise all or any of the powers, other than powers of appointment, of the governor in council under the Civil Service Act, the Civil Service Superannuation Act, the Defence Services Pension Act, and parts II to VI of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Act.
> The action taken was not under any of the foregoing acts, nor was it an "appointment". Section 39 of the Financial Administration Act authorizes the governor in council to make regulations with respect to the conditions under which contracts may be entered into, and it was pursuant to these regulations that the contracts were made. Section 5 (2) of the Financial Administration Act has no application whatever to the present situation.

Thereupon Hansard reports that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre stated the following:

> Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege may I suggest that what I indicated on Friday was that the opinion in the name of Mr. Driedger tabled by the Prime Minister indicated that though it was purported that these arrangements were made under the government contracts regulations in accordance with section 39 of the Financial Administration Act, they do not come within the terms of the government contracts regulations themselves, as Mr. Driedger himself pointed out.
>
> It seems to me that since we have had a question of privilege and a counter question of privilege raised in connection with the subject, the matter should be gone into. I therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam:
> "That sessional paper No. 39B be referred to the committee on privileges and elections for study and report."

At this juncture I suggested that the motion might be allowed to stand until today in order to ensure that there was a prima facie case of privilege involved in the assertions of the two hon. gentlemen.

I do not propose at this time to review the authorities or comment on the nature of parliamentary privilege, but I would refer to the attention of hon. members May's sixteenth edition, pages 42 and 43; Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, fourth edition, page 37 and also Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms, fourth edition, beginning at page 93.

The question of the privileges of this house is a wide and complex subject, and to try to cover that subject in a few words could be a most hazardous exercise. However, recognizing the risk that may be incurred in doing so I would say that, stated briefly, a question of privilege is a question relating to the rights, security, dignity and freedom of the house as a whole or of its members individually, and to the conduct and honour of such members.

If my summary of the authorities be substantially sound, I find no support in any of them for the contention of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that a prima facie question of privilege of this house is involved in his assertions or in his motion. It seems to me that what we have is, in essence, a dispute between two hon. members with regard to the legality of certain action. In other words I suggest that the matter could be raised as a grievance on a motion to go into committee of supply or at some other appropriate occasion. In this regard may I refer hon. members to paragraph 5 of citation 104 of Beauchesne's fourth edition.

Since there is, in my opinion, no question of privilege involved I cannot give the hon. member's proposed motion precedence over the business set down for today.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I just say that I accept your ruling and will deal with the matter on another occasion.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

FOURTH REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND COMMERCE—MR. ASSELIN (NOTRE DAME DE GRACE)

Mr. Edmund Asselin (Notre Dame de Grace) presented the fourth report of the standing committee on banking and commerce, in English and in French.

(Text):

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORRIS COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO GOVERNMENT ACTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. Now that the government has the report and recommendations made by Mr. Justice Norris, will he advise the house what the government intends to do about them?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the government received the report just yesterday morning. It is a very lengthy report with a number of far reaching proposals. It took Mr. Justice Norris a year to make this report and these recommendations. We do not expect to take that long to reach a decision, but we intend to study these conclusions and recommendations immediately.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): May I ask a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Minister of Justice if he does not feel that some of the findings of the recommendations in this report come within the ambit of the Department of Justice, and what he intends to do about instituting remedial action in relation to them.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): It may well be, Mr. Speaker, that some of the recommendations contained therein come within the purview of the Department of Justice. However, as the Minister of Labour has said, the report was tabled only yesterday and I will have to give it careful consideration in order to determine what action should be taken.

[Later:]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour, in the light of the Norris report, whether he has called the attention of his colleague the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration to section 19 of the Immigration Act, which permits the deportation of any person other than a Canadian citizen who engages in the subversion by force or other means of democratic institutions or processes as they are understood in Canada.

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. MacEachen: The matter raised by the hon. member is referred to in one of the concluding paragraphs of the Norris report. Yesterday I had the opportunity to discuss this matter briefly with the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, who was fully aware of the implications of the recommendation.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Is it not a fact that Banks was admitted to Canada by a special order in council of the previous government?

Mr. Pickersgill: That is not a fact.

An hon. Member: It is so.

[Later:]

Mr. Woolliams: On a question of privilege, the Secretary of State denied an assertion which I made a few minutes ago, but I have now found the reference in support of what I had to say. I wish to read from page 312 of the report of the industrial inquiry commission on the disruption of shipping:

> The order in council of July 6th, 1954, which authorizes Banks' admission to Canada, was based on the fact that there was satisfactory evidence of his rehabilitation. He was granted status as a landed immigrant.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): It is correct that after Mr. Banks came to live in Canada he was given the status of a landed immigrant, but he was first admitted to Canada, it seems to me, immediately after the war and not at that time.

[Later:]

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour. In answer to the hon. member for Greenwood the minister indicated that the Norris commission report had been discussed with the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Does this mean that the government is considering the issuing of a deportation order with respect to Mr. Banks?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, the discussion I had with the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration was brief and informal, and from that it is not to be concluded that the government is actively considering at the present time any recommendations made in the report.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR WEAPONS—SUGGESTED SUSPENSION OF DISCUSSIONS WITH U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the hopeful beginnings of the test ban talks in Moscow and the fundamental reorientation of Soviet policy that appears possible in the light of the unprecedented attacks on the Chinese position, published on July 14 by Pravda, would the Prime Minister give serious consideration to holding in abeyance for the present any further discussions with the United States concerning the bilateral agreement for the acquisition of nuclear weapons by Canada?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government would be happy to take any action which would facilitate agreement at the talks in Moscow, particularly agreement in the field of test banning, but I do not think the course suggested by my hon. friend would have that result.

MID-CANADA LINE—CONTINUATION OF OPERATION OF STATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of the statement made in the house yesterday by the minister that the United States government would be discontinuing the operation of some 20 D.E.W. line sites in Canada, could the minister advise the house whether the government has in mind any similar plan in relation to the mid-Canada line? If so, could he assure the house that ample notification will be given to any persons whose livelihood may be disrupted?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): There are no present plans for changing the requirements with respect to the mid-Canada line.

INQUIRY AS TO PERSONNEL OF DEFENCE SPENDING COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Will the minister give the house the names of the other members of the committee that will study defence spending under Dr. R. J. Sutherland?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not think any purpose would be served by making that information public.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

ATTENDANCE OF MEMBERS OF OPPOSITION PARTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister give consideration to the possibility of inviting members of the opposition parties to attend the federal-provincial conference on July 26 and 27, in order to have them better prepared to study the bills when they are brought before the house?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This is a very interesting suggestion, Mr. Speaker, but I think before it could be acted on it would require consultation with all provincial governments.

Mr. Gregoire: As a supplementary question, would the Prime Minister agree to consult the provincial premiers in order to have members of the opposition parties present as observers at this conference?

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Could the Prime Minister tell the house whether the Quebec premier's ultimatum concerning a new sharing of the sources of income will be discussed during the federal-provincial conference which will be held on July 25 and 26?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: It is not on the agenda.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Can the Prime Minister indicate how many of the provincial premiers have signified their intention of being present at the conference? I know the notice just went out, but has he received any acceptances or any refusals?

Mr. Pearson: I have not checked my mail since ten o'clock this morning. At that time there had been no replies, but some may have been received during the morning.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. Does the Prime Minister intend to include on the agenda of the conference a discussion on the advisability of amending the Criminal Code to allow lotteries?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: The letter I addressed to the premiers of the provinces indicated the three matters that would be discussed, and that is not one of the matters for this meeting.

CONSIDERATION OF ESTABLISHMENT OF PERMANENT SECRETARIAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister consider at the proposed forthcoming meeting of premiers initiating discussions relating to the establishment of a secretariat or some other permanent organization for dealing with federal-provincial relations?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The meeting next week is a preliminary one. The suggestion of my hon. friend, which is an important and interesting one, would I think be more suitable for the next meeting, which will be a longer meeting, in the autumn.

PENITENTIARIES

ST. VINCENT DE PAUL—INSTALLATION OF GATE IN EXERCISE YARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works on a matter about which I spoke yesterday, and of which I gave him notice this morning. Can the minister assure the house that the company to which his department gave a contract will fulfil immediately their obligation in the installation of a gate to the exercise area of the segregation section of the maximum security division at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, in order that the warden can release rough and tough men for short periods in the exercise yard?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the hon. member for having sent me notice of his question, and I would like to tell him that temporary gates are now being installed and will be completed by July 18. The permanent installation is expected to be completed by July 31. The delay in the permanent installation was caused by the failure on the part of the contractor to obtain the special prison locking devices required.

As the hon. member knows, we have decided on an emergency program regarding the needs at St. Vincent de Paul penitentiary, and after hearing from the hon. member I am going to contact the architect in chief of the department so that he may present me with a report on the actual state of the works we have undertaken there.

POWER

PASSAMAQUODDY—PARTICIPATION BY CANADA IN PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. With reference to the statement made this morning by interior secretary Stewart Udall of the United States concerning the Maine-New Brunswick Passamaquoddy power project, as reported in the press this morning, has the Prime Minister taken note of the report, and is he in a position to inform the house with respect to the participation of the Canadian government in this project?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will certainly be glad to take note of this report which has just been released today, as my hon. friend has indicated. I understand that the President of the United States is expected to make a statement shortly commenting on the report. In the letter submitting the report to the President the secretary of the interior suggests that suitable arrangements would have to be made with the Canadian government for the United States to construct the Passamaquoddy tidal project and to work out an equitable sharing of the downstream benefits from power development of the Saint John river in Canada.

Then Mr. Udall recommends that the President request the secretary of state to immediately initiate negotiations with the government of Canada looking toward a satisfactory arrangement for the sharing of the power and flood control benefits of the Saint John river in Canada and the development of the Passamaquoddy tidal power project by the United States. Mr. Speaker, when a request is received from the United States government to initiate such negotiations, it will certainly be given immediate consideration here.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST THAT 1965 BE DECLARED INTERNATIONAL CO-OPERATION YEAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that the Soviet union has responded favourably to the suggestion of Canada's Voice of Women that 1965 be declared international co-operation year, will the Prime Minister give consideration to Canada also recommending to the secretary general of the United Nations, U Thant, that 1965 be declared international co-operation year?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if my memory serves me correctly, last year the then secretary of state for external affairs expressed on behalf of the government, support for an international co-operation year. I remember at the time indicating my own support for this proposal, and we would be glad to confirm that support at the forthcoming general assembly.

INDIA—INQUIRY AS TO MILITARY AID

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscaminque): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Will the minister tell the house whether Canada's contribution under the commonwealth-United States military aid program to India is now taking the form of men as well as military supplies?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As the house is aware, Canada agreed to take part in a joint commonwealth-United States air defence mission which went to India last January. This was in accordance with a decision made by the previous government. The report of the mission has been carefully considered, and the need to protect Indian cities against possible air attacks from the north has been recognized. However, we have reached the conclusion that we do not have the equipment or the personnel which would allow us to provide effective assistance to India in that particular field. It has been decided, therefore, that Canada should not be a party to current arrangements which might be concluded between India and other governments which may be in a better position to assist.

Miss Pauline Jewett (Northumberland): Can the minister say whether Canada has given any military assistance to India?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Canada has given assistance to India altogether apart from the proposed exercise which formed the basis of the question asked by the hon. member for Pontiac-Temiscamingue. Canada has supplied eight Dakota aircraft, five Otter aircraft, 36 Harvard aircraft, personal military clothing, nickel for defence production, and training.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I compliment the minister on his wonderful memory, and ask him when the decision was made to do these things and when these supplies were given.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Since the Prime Minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If hon. members will permit me, I was just about to say that since the Prime Minister, on my right, has suggested to me that part of the reply should be "Some time ago", I can only say to the Leader of the Opposition, whose status I always recognize, that the decision with regard to what was done in January was, of course, taken by the government of the right hon. gentleman when he was prime minister. The assistance given to India in the supply of aircraft was not all given during the period the right hon. gentleman was head of the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was all agreed to and ready to be done.

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): As a supplementary question I should like to ask the minister if this assistance is given on the basis of lend-lease or credit or as an outright gift.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Some has been made available as an outright gift. Some military equipment has been supplied on loan, at reduced interest to the receiving country.

FAILURE TO INVITE FRANCE TO TEST BAN DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could he tell the house if he has been informed of the reasons why the United States, the United Kingdom and the U.S.S.R. have not invited France, which is a nuclear power, to take part in the talks now being held in Moscow to ban certain nuclear tests? If so, can he tell us what those reasons were?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that is a question which does not concern Canada.

(Text):

REPORTED U.S. REQUEST THAT CANADA-CUBA FLIGHTS BE DISCONTINUED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the expressed hope of the United States state department that Canada will discontinue flights between Toronto and Havana, can the Prime Minister assure the house that the Canadian government will not comply with this request?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no such request has been received by the Canadian government on this matter.

HONG KONG—CONTINUATION OF EMERGENCY RELIEF MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday in a written reply the minister indicated that the emergency food relief program for Hong Kong initiated by the former administration would not be continued under the new administration. Would the minister not agree that the continuing emergency in Hong Kong requires continued extraordinary relief measures in which Canada might well assist?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, no one will deny the postulates implied in the question of my hon. friend, but I can now add no more to what has already been given by way of a written reply.

PARLIAMENT HILL

CHANGING OF THE GUARD—FAILURE TO INFORM PUBLIC OF CANCELLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of National Defence. Perhaps Your Honour would permit me to first say one or two sentences in explanation. This morning I paused for a few minutes from routine duties to observe the changing of the guard. Some 5,000 visitors had gathered to see this most interesting attraction on capital hill during the summer months.

Some hon. Members: Come on.

Mr. Thompson: The guard reached the cenotaph, circled and returned to barracks. It is true that there was a threat of rain, but none was falling and none came. I was very disturbed by the fact that an announcement was not even made to this tremendous gathering of visitors, and I would ask the Minister of National Defence whether he could explain why such a thing was permitted to happen.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members know, in the event of bad weather the changing of the guard has on previous occasions been cancelled prior to the commencement of the parade. However, should the weather take a turn for the worse after the parade to parliament hill has started, the officer commanding the guard has authority to return immediately to barracks. This morning in the opinion of the officer commanding the conditions justified this procedure being carried out, and in consequence the guard did not proceed to parliament hill to carry out the ceremony.

I might add, Mr. Speaker, that the uniforms and equipment carried, including the colours, are quite valuable and if an exercise of judgment is necessary it is preferable to err on the side of caution.

Mr. Thompson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the minister not think it might have been courteous to make an announcement to the tremendous gathering of people waiting to see this ceremony?

[Mr. Dinsdale.]

Mr. Hellyer: I am sure it would have been, Mr. Speaker, and this suggestion will be brought to the attention of the commanding officer so that it will be possible in the future to make some sort of announcement.

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL CARILLON PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to address a question to the most obliging Minister of Public Works. My question is prompted by conversations with tourists and the curiosity of one gentleman of the press. In view of the fact that 5,000 people attend the daily changing of the guard ceremony and that an estimated 10,000 tourists are in Ottawa every day, can the minister explain why there are only two late programs on the carillon, and would he consider making provision for at least one day time program and another at a suitable hour every evening of the week during the summer months?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): I thank the hon. member for bringing up this question. I personally had the same idea while listening to the carillon on Sunday night. I shall bring the matter to the attention of the proper authority without delay.

TELEVISION

SWIFT CURRENT—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF APPLICATION FOR SATELLITE STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I should like to address to the Secretary of State in his capacity as minister in charge of the C.B.C. I hope hon. members will bear with me while I set the stage for the question.

A recent report of the C.B.C. approved a second television station in Saskatoon. Once it is in operation it is the intention of CFQC-TV in Saskatoon to leave the C.B.C. network and join a private television network. This will also remove the Stranraer satellite of CFQC from the network and will leave approximately 70 per cent of Kindersley constituency without C.B.C. coverage.

I would ask the minister whether he could now have the board of broadcast governors review an application of the Swift Current television station to establish a satellite in the Kindersley area or north of the Kindersley area in Kerrobert. I should hope that in the light of changed circumstances this would now receive favourable consideration.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to draw the hon. gentleman's speech to the attention of the chairman of the B.B.G.

GRAIN

SASKATCHEWAN—REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN DELIVERY QUOTAS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. C. Cadieu (Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce, having received some inquiries from a number of points in Meadow Lake constituency. Farmers are quite concerned who are only as yet on an 8 bushel quota. Could the minister give these farmers any assurance that they will receive the necessary box cars and orders so they may be placed on a 12 bushel quota before the end of the crop year?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I can say to the hon. gentleman that the wheat board has given me assurance that it will do everything possible to see that all points are on the 12 bushel quota before the end of the crop year.

SASKATCHEWAN—REQUEST FOR REINSTATEMENT OF BOARD ORDER NO. 1,000

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to reply to the question asked in my absence yesterday by the hon. member for Kindersley concerning reinstatement of Canadian wheat board shipping order No. 1,000. I am advised by the board that order No. 1,000 will be reinstated after the start of the new crop year. I might explain that the reason the wheat board has seen fit to suspend their shipping order policy is that they are simply trying to equalize delivery opportunities at shipping points, which I know is supported by all members of the house. The suspension of order No. 1,000 means that those stations already on a 12 bushel quota will have to mark time until the others catch up.

AGRICULTURE

INQUIRY AS TO LOANS ON FARM STORED GRAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question of urgency to the Minister of Trade and Commerce under whose jurisdiction the Canadian wheat board comes. As the minister is aware, the three western prairie provinces are expecting to harvest a very large grain crop this year. Since the prospects for export of this grain are very dim at the present time, as a result of which the biggest part of this year's grain will have to be stored on the farms, would the minister confirm or deny the report that interest free cash advances to farmers on farm stored grain will be drastically curtailed during the 1963-64 crop year on account of this unprecedented large volume? In that event, can the minister—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. May I suggest that this question be put on the order paper.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer the relevant part of that question. There seems to have been a suggestion that the Prairie Grain Advance Payment Act would not be in operation in the coming crop year. This was the essence of a question put yesterday in my absence. I should like to say, so there is no uncertainty, that this act of course, remains in effect. Hon. members may recall, since this was legislation introduced by the party which is now in opposition, that under the act no loans are made after June 1 in any crop year; but on August 1 loans will be resumed, as they have been in any other year. The terms of the act speak for themselves, and there will be no curtailment in any way of its ordinary operation.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. The minister has said that these cash advances will be made. Are they interest free?

Mr. Sharp: Well, I think the hon. gentleman was a member of the party which introduced this legislation and he ought to know. I can assure him that that is so.

ALBERTA—APPLICATIONS FOR WORK UNDER P.F.A.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Did he issue an order than anyone wishing P.F.A. work in Alberta must apply to the office in Regina, Saskatchewan?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the department has issued such an order I will have to look into it and let the hon. member know tomorrow.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of Agriculture whether all inspectors employed under the Prairie Farm Assistance Act last year have been fired by the new government?

Mr. Hays: Mr. Speaker, we select these people on the basis of merit only and I can assure the hon. member that there will be no changes if they are competent. I do not think this has always been done.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Smallwood: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. This order has been issued. Will the minister kindly inform the house who issued it if he did not?

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of assurances given earlier this session that consideration would be given to the position of retired civil servants whose pensions are inadequate, could the minister say whether we might anticipate at this session an amendment of the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act under which this sort of thing could be done?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is an item in the estimates which will provide for this from July 1, 1963 on.

TABLING OF SALARY INCREASES FOR CERTAIN CLASSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he is now able to make public the schedules of increases that he announced would be tabled today?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, they are available. If anybody would like to have them I would be glad to supply them. If hon. members would like to have them tabled I would be glad to table them.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): May I ask a supplementary question. Is the minister in a position to say how many days it will be before a similar announcement is made in respect of the employees of the House of Commons?

Mr. Gordon: I think that will depend very largely on when Your Honour's committee is able to meet.

Mr. Olson: I should like to request that the schedules be tabled.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

TRADE

RED CHINA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): May I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in regard to his statement in Regina on wheat markets. In view of the importance of this subject in Regina and the west generally, has the hon. gentleman anything further to tell the house with regard to the China wheat negotiations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I have received a report from Mr. McNamara, who is heading this delegation, as he headed the previous one. He reported progress.

REPORTED CHANGES IN PERSONNEL OF WHEAT BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): A supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce with regard to his visit to the west. Would the minister comment on reports that there may be changes in, or additions to, the top personnel of the Canadian wheat board?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I was asked a question about certain rumours I encountered in western Canada relative to appointments to the Canadian wheat board. I will give the same answer now that I gave on that occasion. I was asked whether it was true that Mr. C. W. Gibbings will be asked to join the Canadian wheat board. The answer I gave was that the Canadian government would be delighted to have a man with the vast experience and knowledge of Mr. Gibbings as a member of the board.

BRAZIL—EFFORTS TO INCREASE WHEAT SALES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, notice of which was sent to him earlier today. It arises out of the announcement by the Australian wheat board yesterday to the effect that Australia is making a new, concerted effort to sell wheat to Brazil. Would the minister inform the house as to what special action Canada plans to meet this kind of competition and subsequently increase Canadian wheat sales to this country?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the wheat board has been attempting for many years at a time when I was permanent head of the department, during the period the previous government was in office and today, to sell wheat to Brazil. Its efforts have never slackened, and anything the Canadian government can do to assist them is being done. I do not really think there is anything more I can say by way of reply.

RED CHINA—NEGOTIATION OF ORIGINAL WHEAT AGREEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Is the minister in a position to confirm, or otherwise, the story in the Winnipeg Free Press by Victor Mackie that the wheat deal with China in 1961 was signed by the wheat board representatives in Hong Kong three days before the then minister of agriculture left Canada to go to Hong Kong? What does this mean with regard to the whole situation as to who negotiates these contracts?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I was not here and could not say when the former minister of agriculture left Canada to conduct these negotiations. I am told it was after April 22, 1961. If so, he arrived after the agreement had been signed. The answer to the second part of the question is very clear. Under the Canadian Wheat Board Act such negotiations are conducted, of course, by the Canadian wheat board. They were conducted in 1961 under the direction of Mr. McNamara, and they are now being conducted by him.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Who provided the credit terms?

Mr. Hellyer: The Canadian people.

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RATES FOLLOWING OTTAWA MEETING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport.

Has the minister any recent information to give the house concerning international air rates, following the meeting of the international air transport association which took place yesterday?

(Text):

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have no information on that subject to give the house, but perhaps I should explain that the meeting taking place in Ottawa at the present time is a meeting of the aeronautical authorities of the countries whose carriers operate air services on the Atlantic and Pacific. This conference is not dealing with air tariffs. International air fares are established by the international air transport association, which is an organization of air lines, and these fares are subject to approval by the appropriate government authorities. The present conference is dealing with the relationship between the international air transport association and the government authorities and the procedures to be adopted in dealing with fares when they are established by the international air transport association.

FINANCE

APPLICATION OF SALES TAX TO MUNICIPAL WORKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Prime Minister.

Does the government intend to accede to the request of the Federation of Mayors and Municipalities of Canada as to the removal of tax on building materials for municipal works?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I desire to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that Premier Bennett has apparently agreed verbally, is the Prime Minister now in a position to appoint the commission to study biculturalism?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to make the announcement yesterday or today but we are still awaiting replies from, I think, two gentlemen who have been invited to serve on the board.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker.

When the members of this commission are appointed, does the Prime Minister intend to ask them to present their report a few months before the confederation centennial?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the suggested terms of reference have already been made public.

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the Prime Minister care to tell us how many members there are going to be on the royal commission on biculturalism?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Pearson: That will be clear when I make the announcement of the personnel of the commission, and I do hope to be able to do that tomorrow or the next day.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO CONDITION OF ALASKA HIGHWAY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister anything to report on the condition of the Alaska highway?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the only information available at national defence headquarters was included in a message dated July 11, 1963 from headquarters, western command, which states:

> Alaska highway is closed until further notice to all traffic from Fort Nelson, mile 300, to mile 496 due to flooding and washouts. Closure is expected to last several days.

Western command has been requested to report on the status of this situation.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

STATEMENT AS TO MAIL SERVICE TO BRITISH GUIANA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Azellus Denis (Postmaster General): May I answer a question yesterday asked by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam concerning mail service to British Guiana. This service was discontinued from June 14 until July 12 because of a general strike in that country. Arrangements were made, however, that anything sent by air mail would be accepted. This service has now been resumed on a regular basis.

PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS

SUGGESTED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF BUTTERWORTH LETTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): I should like to ask a question of the Prime Minister. In view of the statement made yesterday by the Minister of Justice concerning the forged letter, purporting to come from Mr. Butterworth, does the Prime Minister intend to put the whole matter before the standing committee on privileges?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I do not think any useful purpose would be served in submitting this forged letter to the committee in question.

[Mr. Mandziuk.]

PUBLIC WORKS

REQUEST FOR POLICY OF BUYING CANADIAN PRODUCTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In the interests of balancing trade and improving the employment picture will the minister take steps to assure that the P. and B.M. branch of public works will buy Canadian products rather than products manufactured in whole or in part outside of Canada?

[Later:]

Mr. MacInnis: I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In the interest of improving the employment picture, will the minister take steps to assure that the P. and B.M. branch of the Department of Public Works will buy their purchases from materials manufactured in Canada rather than materials manufactured, in part or in whole, outside this country?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Surely the purchasing policy of the Department of Public Works is a matter for that department. I am sure the minister is conscious of the employment effects of any of his activities in that department.

BROADCASTING

MONTREAL—REPORTED INVITATION TO FRANCE TO ESTABLISH STATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It stems from the public invitation issued last week by Mayor Jean Drapeau to the Republic of France to establish a television and radio station in Montreal. I should like to ask the minister whether Mayor Drapeau has asked the minister to act as his city's agent in connection with this very interesting proposition?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): No, sir.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

That schedule A to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking out tariff items 24, 25, 179, 187c, 409f, 438h (1), 521 (1), 521 (3) (a), 521 (3) (b), 522 (6), 532g, 533, 536, 537, 537a, 537b, 537c, 537d, 537e, 538a, 538d, 538i (1), 538i (2), 540 (a), 540 (b), 540 (c), 540 (d), 541, 541a, 541b, 541c, 541d, 542, 542a, 543, 546, 546a, 547a, 548, 548a, 548c, 549c, 549d, 549e, 549f, 569, 569a (1), 569a (2), 569a (3), 569a (4), 569a (5), 569a (6), 569b, 569c (1), 569c (2), 569d (1),

569d (2), 572a, 610, 798, 812, 812a and 812b, and the enumerations of goods and the rates of duty set opposite each of these items, and by inserting therein the following items, enumerations of goods and rates of duty:

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Nowlan: No, I do not suppose it will carry at this time. I assume the minister would like to make a statement in respect of this matter before we engage in questioning and further discussion.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, hon. members will recall that there are six separate resolutions on the Customs Act. The first two resolutions relating to that act embody changes in tariff rates and the wording recommended by the tariff board in its last three reports under reference No. 125. In this reference the tariff board was asked to review all the items in the Canadian tariff covering textiles and to recommend a new tariff structure. The final reports, which are now being acted upon, are those covering miscellaneous textiles of jute, hemp, flax and rough fibres, and coated or impregnated fibres, hats, caps and related products. In addition to the changes in tariff and drawback items recommended by the board in the three reports to which I have referred, the resolution contains technical revisions relating to textiles woven of cotton yarns.

Negotiations and consultations relating to the tariff changes proposed in these resolutions were necessary because many of the items in question were bound under the general agreement on tariffs and trade. These negotiations have been completed with all the other countries concerned, specifically with the United States, the United Kingdom, the European economic community, Austria, Yugoslavia, Haiti, India and Japan. The other countries concerned recognized that while certain tariff increases would result from the adoption of the new textile schedule recommended by the board, they would be offset by approximately equally important decreases. As a consequence it was only in respect of rather specific problems relating to Canadian trade with particular countries that Canada was obliged to go outside the textile schedule to find additional compensation.

Hon. members will note that the resolutions contain proposals for reductions of duties on chicory, photographic dry plates, motor scooters, aluminum sluice type irrigation devices, hay stack forms and orchard heaters. These reductions comprise an integral part of the negotiated package. I should add that in this negotiated package a few departures were made from the recommendations made by the board.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, could we have some guidance here relating to procedure? Will we proceed item by item, or will we make general remarks on each resolution before we come to the specific items?

Mr. Gordon: I would think item by item might be the best way, if that is agreeable to hon. members.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Customs tariff—24. Chicory, raw or green; British preferential tariff, free; most favoured nation tariff, free; general tariff, 3 cents.

Mr. Grafftey: While I could not relate this general question to any of the specific items in the first resolution, I was wondering if the minister could inform us whether there are any net changes in the tariff results. As he just stated, there will be raises in the textile ranges and some lowering. Is there any net change involved, and what would the net amount be?

Mr. Gordon: By and large it is a balanced package that was renegotiated. I think perhaps the textile industry as a whole may have gained slightly, but not materially.

Mr. Grafftey: In the negotiated package were the compensatory items negotiated with the negotiated package? This was after the third report had come in. Am I right?

Mr. Gordon: Yes.

The Chairman: Is consideration of item 24 completed?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—25. Chicory, kiln dried, roasted or ground ... per pound: British preferential tariff, 2 cents; most favoured nation tariff, 2 cents; general tariff, 5 cents.

Mr. Nesbitt: As to these items on chicory, can the minister tell us where we import most of the chicory from?

Mr. Gordon: Quite a number of countries, including the countries that comprise the European common market. France is an important exporter.

Mr. Grafftey: The minister stated that most of the items outside textiles were on the recommendation of the tariff board. Was this particular item on the recommendation of the tariff board?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Chairman, this was part of the package that was negotiated. The tariff board did not do the negotiating, of course.

Mr. Grafftey: As I understand it, some of the items are non-textile items and the minister said in his statement that some of the non-textile items were recommended by tariff board and others were not.

Mr. Gordon: None of them were recommended by the tariff board.

Mr. Nesbitt: Perhaps the minister could tell us whether any chicory is produced in Canada?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Thomas: As I understand it, when these negotiations take place and a concession is granted in our tariff rates, we receive some other concession return. Can the minister tell us what concession was received in return for this, or is that possible?

Mr. Gordon: There are a lot of textile items, and taking in these non-textile items as well, on balance those officials who were conducting the negotiations were satisfied that what we gave was offset by what we received.

Mr. Thomas: Is there any way of segregating these various items? Is it possible to know what concession was granted in return for this concession on chicory?

Mr. Gordon: There is no way to deal with it on an item by item basis. If you look at all these changes in toto you will see most of them have to do with textile items, and those that do not are relatively few in number and were mentioned in my opening statement. There is chicory, photographic dry plates, motor scooters, aluminum sluice gate irrigation devices and so on, but not very many of them.

The Chairman: Is consideration of item 25 completed?

Mr. Barnett: Actually the point I want to raise, relates to an item which comes after item 25 and is part of the next number on the list, but I thought this might be the appropriate point at which to raise the question. The minister may recall that when we had the budget resolutions under consideration last session some questions were raised concerning the duty on imported fish food for trout farms. In fact I shall refer to the question I asked last session. It had been pointed out that trout coming into the country under item 133A come in without duty whereas this feed, which it was claimed could not be produced in Canada, had a 20 per cent duty applied to it. I understand there was also a question related to the excise tax. I notice in item 7 in the excise tax resolution a reference to feed for trout, in which I gather the tax is to be lifted. What consideration did the minister give to the question of the customs tariff on trout feed?

Mr. Gordon: I think it is in resolution No. 4, the first item, that my hon. friend will find the matter he has referred to has been taken care of.

Mr. Barnett: I had looked through the various items and I had an impression earlier that it was here, and I decided I was wrong in my earlier impression.

Mr. Gordon: Anybody can be confused by these particular schedules and is entitled to be. They are voluminous, numerous and complex, but this particular one has been looked after.

Mr. Barnett: I see it now.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—179. Labels for cigar boxes, fruits, vegetables, meats, fish, confectionery or other goods or wares; shipping, price or other tags, tickets or labels, and railroad or other tickets, whether lithographed or printed, or partly printed, n.o.p.; the foregoing not including labels of textile fibres or filaments: British preferential tariff, 17½ per cent; most favoured nation tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 35 per cent.

Tickets issued by railway systems in the British commonwealth (not including railway systems operating in Canada), shall be exempt from customs duty, when produced in countries entitled to the benefits of the British preferential tariff.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I should like to point out to the minister the clause concerning labels for cigar boxes. Will the minister give the house the assurance that this provision will not affect the consumption of tobacco which, unfortunately, is decreasing in Canada, especially that of cigar tobacco produced in the Joliette area.

There is overproduction at the present time and farmers belonging to tobacco co-operatives are compelled to fix voluntary quotas. I sincerely hope that this provision will do no harm to the consumption of cigar tobacco. Incidentally, when the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) declared that she was quitting smoking, she contributed directly to the decrease in the sales of Canadian cigarette tobacco.

On this point, would the minister assure the house that this provision will do no harm at all to tobacco consumption?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I am happy to reassure my hon. friend on this subject. This will not affect cigar labels or the smoking of cigars at all. The only change to item 179 is the addition of the words in italics.

Mr. Grafftey: Then I would ask the minister whether I am correct in assuming that this is possibly a clarification item consequential of the report; that it was not because of the package deal itself, as a compensation item?

Mr. Gordon: That is correct, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Grafftey: Then, Mr. Chairman, could some aspect of the clarification be explained in some detail.

Mr. Gordon: If the committee will bear with me, Mr. Chairman, I will read this explanation. This item provides for labels other than labels of textile material at British preference 17½ per cent and most favoured nation 22½ per cent. The only change is in the addition of the words in italics. Their effect is to specifically exclude labels of textile fibres or filaments. In an earlier report relating to narrow fabrics the tariff board clearly expressed its intention that labels of textile fibres should continue to be classified according to material under the appropriate textile tariff item. This amendment of item 179 is proposed so as to ensure that there is no conflict between it and the textile schedule, and that the intent of the tariff board is not frustrated.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a question concerning the following item:

Railroad or other tickets, whether lithographed or printed, or partly printed—

Can the hon. minister tell the house what Canadian railways import their tickets? Is the C.N.R. one of those companies importing tickets printed outside this country?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: I should explain, Mr. Chairman, that there is no change at all in this section. The section provides certain protection for those people who print their tickets in Canada for the existing railroads, and the intention is that this protection should be retained.

Mr. Gregoire: I can see there is no change, as the minister pointed out a little earlier. But I would like to know this. We have here an item concerning the importation of printed railway tickets, and I would like to know whether there are some companies in fact which are importing their printed tickets, and whether the C.N.R. is one such company.

Mr. Gordon: I am very sorry, Mr. Chairman, but I do not know the answer to that question. I have consulted my officials, and they do not know it either. I will be glad, if the hon. member would like me to do so, to contact the two principal railroads and find out whether they do import any tickets.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I think the minister should not only find that out but should also see that these companies, especially the C.N.R., if they import their railroad tickets should instead have them printed in Canada. I think we have good enough printing facilities in Canada to have the printing of these tickets carried out here. I suppose there might be some companies which import them, because the item is there in our law; it is not there for nothing. I would like the minister to make inquiries in this respect.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I share the hon. member's point of view in this matter. I would point out to him that the rate of duty is relatively high; it is intended, of course, to protect the people who print tickets here. But I will find out and let him know.

Mr. Valade: On the same line of questioning, Mr. Chairman, I wonder why the minister included this provision in these resolutions, if he does not know whether the printing of tickets is helping Canadian firms. I wonder why this provision is included if he does not know whether it is going to serve any purpose.

Mr. Gordon: As I explained a moment ago, Mr. Chairman, the only change in this item is the addition of the words in italics. This particular item has been in the tariff for I do not know how long, and it provides protection for those printers who are in the business of producing tickets amongst other things.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—187c. Photographic dry plates: British preferential tariff, 7½ per cent; most favoured nation tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff 30 per cent.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, could the minister inform the committee why photographic dry plates as such are separated from other photographic materials? Does this relate to some aspect of the made in Canada provisions?

Mr. Gordon: I understand that these are rather specialized dry plates and they are not made in Canada.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, is this the type of plate that is used by manufacturing firms for making specialized types of catalogues which are not available in Canada? Is the purpose to encourage the manufacture of these plates in Canada; is that part of the principle involved?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, the short answer to that question is no. This represents a reduction in duty. It was part of the negotiated package. The Canadian producers were consulted about this and raised no objection.

Mr. Scott: I wonder, Mr. Chairman, whether the minister could give us any idea as to the volume of imports that takes place in regard to this commodity.

Mr. Gordon: Last year the amount was $150,000.

Mr. Scott: Does the minister not consider it might be appropriate to attempt the production of such a volume here in Canada?

Mr. Gordon: I suppose it depends upon the individual producer and whether the market in Canada is sufficient to justify going into production of these specialized plates.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, am I correct in my assumption that the purpose of this provision and where the application is being considered is in the area where these plates are produced and then returned in the course of an involved production system, rather than for resale?

Mr. Gordon: The answer is no, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, has the industry involved indicated at all whether they are prepared in the near future to produce these items in Canada?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, the industry in question raised no objection to the tariff reduction, but they also gave no indication as to whether they proposed to go in for the production of this particular kind of plate themselves.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, perhaps the minister would draw this to the attention of the new department of industry.

Mr. Gordon: I will be very glad to do that, Mr. Chairman.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—312d. Woven fabrics, wholly or in part of asbestos, for use in the manufacture of clutch facings and brake linings; British preferential tariff, 12½ per cent; most favoured nation tariff, 12½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. Gregoire: I should like to ask the Minister of Finance if he is aware of the amount of asbestos imported each year into Canada. We all know that we are the biggest producer of asbestos in the world, producing I think 85 per cent of the total. If there is an item here dealing with asbestos it means we are importing it, and I should like to know how much we import.

Mr. Gordon: There are no statistics which would give this information, but I would be very pleased to see whether we could find an approximation which would satisfy the hon. gentleman's very understandable curiosity in this matter, particularly as we are such a large producer of asbestos.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, I was wondering if the minister could give me some clarification on this point. Perhaps I should know it, but if I am clear on the item perhaps it will be helpful when future items are discussed. I notice that there has been no change in the British preferential, the most favoured nation or the general tariff rates as between what they are now and the rates in effect prior to the rates proposed in the budget. I also notice that there is nothing in italics indicating that there has been a change in reclassification.

Mr. Gordon: This is strictly a renumbering operation. This item replaces without change in wording or rates of duty former ex-item 542. The tariff board did not make any recommendation regarding ex-item 542 as it was not included in reference 125. The item has been renumbered with a view to moving it to the appropriate section of the tariff relating to fibres and fabrics of asbestos.

Mr. Pugh: There has been no change?

Mr. Gordon: There has been no change.

Mr. Grafftey: I understood that resolution No. 3 was devoted entirely to the renumbering of items in consequence of various changes. Why would this renumbering operation take place at this stage?

Mr. Gordon: I think that is a very natural question. It is included here because it was a bound item under GATT and was renegotiated as part of the package.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, as I understand it this item deals with woven fabrics wholly or in part of asbestos for use in clutch facings and brake linings. Canada imports a great deal of clutch facings and brake linings. Are there any factories or manufacturing plants in Canada which go into the process of weaving asbestos fibre for brake linings and clutch facings?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, there are, but this does not change their position, of course.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): No, I realize that.

Mr. Valade: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask whether representations were made to the minister prior to the budget to protect in a more practical way the automobile parts industry in Canada.

Mr. Gordon: Many representations were received from the automobile parts manufacturers, but not relating to this particular item.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—409f. Aluminum sluice-type devices for controlling water in irrigation ditches; animal clippers; automatic stock watering devices; barn hay forks, carriage, pulleys and track; barn litter carriers and track; combination excavating and transporting scraper units; egg cooling cabinets; elevators (other than storage elevators); grain crushers; grain or hay dryers; grain or hay grinders; grain loaders; gravity discharge farm wagon boxes; hay stack forms; heaters for orchards;

hitches and couplings; hydraulic hoists for unloading vehicles; land levellers; machines and tools for use on tractors, including blades, loaders, rippers, rakes and related operating and controlling gear; milk coolers; sodium metabisulphite; sprinkler irrigation systems; steel stanchions for confining livestock either in pens or individually, and complete equipment for milking parlours; all the foregoing for use on the farm for farm purposes only; brooders; ensilage cutters; fodder or feed cutters; hay loaders; hay tedders; post hole diggers; potato diggers; potato planters; snaths; stumping machines; all other agricultural implements or agricultural machinery, n.o.p.; parts of all the foregoing; British preferential tariff, free; most favoured nation tariff, free; general tariff, free.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I should like to direct a question to the minister with regard to this item. Does it include the irrigation systems, which are very important especially for tobacco growers. If not, I should like to know the reason why.

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: Yes, it could, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, there were one or two things I should like clarified, and then I wish to make some remarks on this item. First of all it is my understanding that in these schedules the words in italics are the new additions. In item 409f there is an item dealing with steel stanchions for confining livestock either in pens or individually. Is this not a new item? If it is not, could the minister tell me when it was added to this list of quasi-agricultural machinery?

Mr. Gordon: It is not a new item, and was added three or four years ago, but I cannot give the exact date.

Mr. Nesbitt: I realize that this particular item is often used in conjunction with another item in the Customs Tariff Act. I have forgotten the number but I am sure the minister's officials will know. I understand that over the years the department have developed a ruling of their own with respect to how the word "machinery" should be interpreted. As I recall from conversations with the officials in the past, the word "machinery" is interpreted as having moveable parts. A great many pieces of equipment used for agricultural purposes do not come under this technical interpretation of the word "machinery", and this causes a great deal of inconvenience and over the years has caused a lot of expense and trouble to people in the farm equipment and machinery business, whether retail or wholesale, and I expect at the manufacturing level in some cases.

I was wondering, Mr. Chairman, whether the minister and his officials might give consideration to having that other section redrafted in such a way that this problem would not arise in the future. The problem specifically is that you get some new invention used on the farm which, in the layman's term, is clearly farm machinery yet does not come under the technical term decided upon by the department in interpreting the word "machinery". The result is that the only way the matter can be cleared for non-payment of duty is to get it specifically listed.

There is a long list in front of us now, and there are no doubt more additions and I suppose more will be added over the years. But this could be avoided and much inconvenience avoided as well in the future if the other section which worked in conjunction with this one could be reworded in such a way that the words "agricultural machinery, equipment and the like used on the farm for farming purposes", was used instead of the very narrow term "machinery" which is used at the moment, which necessitates these long lists of specific items being included every time there is a budget. I wonder whether the minister has any observations on that.

Mr. Gordon: Would my hon. friend think it reasonable for me to suggest to the officials concerned that we do take this matter under consideration, and if his suggestion can be implemented that we do it at a later time? The officials are fairly busy at the moment and they tell me there are some considerations which should be carefully looked at before we make the change suggested.

Mr. Pugh: If I could just follow that point up, over the years certain items which have been brought across the border, and on which we paid duty, have gradually been added to the list. I see heaters are listed. I believe last year stack heaters were excluded. What the farmer is faced with is the fact that when these pieces of equipment come in he suddenly finds he has to pay duty. This he cannot understand. Therefore if I might lend weight to what the hon. member for Oxford has said, I think there should be an early review of the question with the idea of bringing in some form of farm equipment section which will cover all farm equipment, provided that the equipment is used only as farm equipment.

Mr. Danforth: May I add my observations to those of the hon. member who has just spoken. We have from time to time experienced difficulty with regard to this interpretation of what is and what is not equipment used exclusively for agricultural purposes. May I request of the minister that when this whole matter is in contemplation officials from the Department of Agriculture be asked to consult with the minister and his associates so we might have a clear interpretation of what is meant by equipment used for agricultural purposes. Various hon. members do refer items to the department from time to time for a ruling, and we sometimes find that in the case of implements which are used almost exclusively on farms, farmers have to pay duty because they are not classified as such.

Mr. Gordon: I think that is a good suggestion and I shall be glad to follow it up.

Mr. Nesbitt: On that same point, as an example of what my hon. friend undoubtedly has in mind, I recall that there is some equipment imported into this country, known as a cow trainer. I think the ruling of the department was that because this equipment did not have any wheels under it, it was not machinery. In fact the apparatus was suspended from the roof of the barn or wherever it was used, and duty had to be paid on it.

Mr. Hales: I wonder if we might have further clarification of item 409f which says—"tariffs on all the foregoing, free". Then underneath it says 15 per cent, 22½ per cent and 30 per cent. What does that mean?

Mr. Gordon: The rates to which the hon. member referred were the rates applied to the items listed in italics prior to the introduction of the budget. They are all free now.

Mr. Hales: Do I take it that there is a duty of 22½ per cent on milk coolers imported into Canada from the United States?

Mr. Gordon: No. On the previous page the hon. member will see that some items are in italics; for example, hay stack forms. They would previously have been subject to duty at the rate of 22½ per cent, but all these items now are free.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): If I may say a word on the same lines as the observations presented to the committee by the hon. member for Oxford with regard to the definition of machinery, I think I can give the minister a perfect example of an item which is certainly used on farms, though it is true it does not contain any movable parts. I am thinking of fence staves. A few years ago there was a demand for these staves particularly from the short grass country of southern Alberta where fence posts are hard to come by. A firm in Montana, I believe, put out a mobile stave, the idea being that farmers could put their fence posts further apart if they used these metal rods in between. A number of ranchers thought they would like to give them a trial, but when they tried to import them they were told they would be subject to a 22 per cent tariff. It seems to me that this is a perfect example of a product intended for agricultural use which is not a machine.

[Mr. Danforth.]

Mr. Gordon: I am informed the department has never had any representations on this subject, but I think the hon. member has made an excellent one and we will give it careful consideration before the next budget.

Mr. Korchinski: I take it these are the three items which had tariffs applied to them previously and all the others were not subject to tariffs. I do not wish anyone to have the impression that all these items have been added to the schedule. Only the ones in italics are those with respect to which tariffs have been reduced.

Mr. Gordon: That is correct.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Still on the subject about which I was speaking a few minutes ago, may I draw the attention of the minister to the fact there has lately been an increasing demand for portable livestock scales. Farmers and ranchers who are conducting rate of gain tests need these portable scales, and I see they are not included under this item 409. Farmers are faced with the payment of duty if they wish to buy them.

Mr. Gordon: The hon. member has made another representation which I am glad to receive, but in this instance it is not an original representation. The department has had representations on this point before. These scales are manufactured in Canada; that is why they have not been put on the free list.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): On the same general subject, may I refer to the plastic tags used for the numbering of cattle. Many breeders have, over the years, bought large numbers of plastic tags which they fasten to the ears of their animals. These tags, too, are subject to duty. Has consideration been given to exempting them?

Mr. Gordon: I understand that the previous government did give consideration to that suggestion and it was turned down. If the hon. member would like to connect all these things together and make a new representation at any time we shall be glad to take it under consideration.

Mr. Olson: I should like to refer to one or two items which I think should be included in this category but which are not. I am rather reluctant to take the time of the committee with regard to the first of these because it is a somewhat small item. I should like the minister to know that I have written to him and to his predecessor with respect to it. Each time I write to the department I promptly receive a polite letter saying my representations will be taken into consideration. Nevertheless they are not successful in the sense that the items are included in these lists.

I wish to refer now to the rockets which are used experimentally to carry silver iodide crystals up into the clouds to induce rain. We acknowledge that these devices are still in the experimental stage, but many farmers in the dry part of Canada are convinced that they do produce results in increasing precipitation when atmospheric conditions are suitable. Some consideration should be given regarding them as devices for agricultural use. They have been imported under tariff item 655, which requires payment of duty at the rate of 22½ per cent plus a sales tax of nearly as much in addition.

I assure the minister that these rockets certainly come within the ambit of the definition as movable machines. As I said, they are now classified as torpedoes, firecrackers or fireworks, though they have absolutely no recreational or display value. The loss in revenue to the government if this duty on rockets were abolished would be very small, and the farmers who use them would be assisted in carrying out experiments which might bring beneficial results to those who farm these dry areas of Canada. Thus it is reasonable to ask that consideration should be given to including these rockets in the item before us so they could enter the country free of duty. I say this because these rockets are certainly for agricultural use and are used for experimenting.

Mr. Gordon: I think that is a good suggestion. My officials suggest that the matter has been under consideration and that some problems have been encountered. The proposal has not been rejected, and I can assure my hon. friend I will look into it before the next revision comes around.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Could the minister give us some idea as to the amount of aluminum sluice-type devices which are being used in irrigation works throughout the country?

Mr. Gordon: I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, but the imports under this item are not recorded separately.

Mr. Stenson: Mr. Chairman, I am still not straight on this 15 per cent, 22½ per cent and 30 per cent. Is this the tariff that was on some of these things and which has been removed?

Mr. Gordon: It was the tariff that was on the items that are shown in italics, and it has been removed.

Mr. Stenson: Does that mean milk coolers?

Mr. Gordon: No, they were always free, or at least they were free prior to this.

Mr. Pugh: I should like to ask the minister if there is any protection at all for Canadian manufacturers. For instance, in the case of heaters for orchards, stack heaters are produced in the United States and not in Canada. There is no comparable item made in Canada, and I can understand the tariff being removed. However, sprinkler irrigation systems are produced in Canada and also in the United States. Is there no protection at all for the Canadian manufacturer?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, these items can come in duty free, so there is no protection for the domestic manufacturer.

Mr. Pugh: Have any representations been received with regard to sprinkler equipment?

Mr. Gordon: There have not been any recent representations, that is within the last three or four months, but I understand there were some before that.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I have a question I should like to have cleared up with regard to gravity discharge farm wagon boxes. Would this include steel boxes?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, they are included.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It includes steel boxes to be used on farms? Further down there is reference to hydraulic hoists for unloading vehicles. I would assume, then, that one could import a steel box with a hydraulic hoist on it for farm use only duty free.

Mr. Gordon: I was just about to say yes, but I think to be safe the prospective importer should get a ruling from the Department of National Revenue before he actually imports it.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Can the Minister of National Revenue add anything or would he prefer to check with the officials?

Mr. Garland: I think it will be understood that I would prefer to check with the officials.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I have a further question with regard to farm wagon boxes. This item covers gravity discharge farm wagon boxes. I am thinking of potato boxes which are specially built steel boxes with a special means of unloading them. Would they come in duty free? They are used on potato farms.

Mr. Gordon: I think the safe thing again would be to get a ruling from the department. I cannot answer that.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I notice that further down there is reference to potato diggers and potato planters, and that they come in duty free. Would the department care to consider the problem with regard to packing machines for potatoes? Would they also come in duty free?

Mr. Gordon: I am not in a position to give an answer.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the minister look into the matter?

Mr. Gordon: I will be glad to look into it. I think I should perhaps add that, as hon. members know, these are highly technical questions and it would probably be unwise for a minister to attempt to answer them specifically or definitely. I think the best course would be to get a ruling from the Department of National Revenue. If the ruling does not suit the hon. member I am sure he will make representations to the Department of Finance before the next budget comes round.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, my question has to do with the very point the minister has just raised, the interpretation of the department with regard to grain or hay dryers. If a grain dryer of a mechanical nature is brought in with the tank or storage chamber included the storage chamber comes in duty free. On the other hand, if a storage chamber is brought in for the purpose of curing grain by air it is subject to tariff. Could this matter be clarified? Certainly grain is dried by air as well as by machine, and I fail to see why the storage chamber must be subject to duty if not combined with a mechanical dryer.

Mr. Gordon: I would be glad to give consideration to this matter, but I think the answer I gave to the previous speaker probably applies in this case as well.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to be redundant, but for the sake of clarification am I correct in understanding that resolution No. 1 involves textile items entirely with the exception of the clarifying item, No. 179? Am I right in saying that all other items in resolution No. 1 come under the package deal as compensating items?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, the hon. member is correct.

Mr. Grafftey: I was examining the Customs Tariff resolutions that we did not pass in the last parliament, and I notice that the majority of those items are contained in resolution No. 4 which we will be discussing in a few minutes. Item 409f, which was in the resolutions last year, is now included in resolution No. 1 simply because of three minor changes contained therein.

Mr. Gordon: It is just a way of collecting them under these different headings.

Mr. Monteith: I notice that the second last item is "all other agricultural implements or agricultural machinery, n.o.p.". I wonder whether the minister can indicate how wide the scope is that the officials have in judging just what comes under this item.

Mr. Gordon: Very wide indeed.

Mr. Monteith: But still not wide enough to cover the items that various members have mentioned today?

Mr. Gordon: No.

Mr. Grafftey: I should like to bring something to the attention of the committee under this item, and rightfully so, because a few minutes ago the minister suggested that before going ahead prospective buyers should get a ruling from the Department of National Revenue. Very briefly I should like to bring to the attention of the committee the problem of many small eastern farmers who buy tractors. I am sure many of the officials in the department will admit that the interpretation of the words "for agricultural use" has become—

Mr. Gordon: May I remind the hon. member that all tractors are duty free.

Mr. Grafftey: Yes, if they are for agricultural purposes. That is the problem.

Mr. Gordon: For any use.

Mr. Grafftey: I would assume then that the problem arises in connection with the excise tax. I know I am perhaps a little off the subject—

Mr. Gordon: I am informed that the problem does relate to the excise tax.

Mr. Grafftey: The problem arises solely with relation to the excise tax.

Mr. Pascoe: This question may have been asked earlier in the discussion, and if so I apologize. There is a long list of articles for agricultural purposes that enter duty free. Do our manufacturers have the same freedom in the United States? Do implements manufactured in Canada enter the United States duty free?

Mr. Gordon: In general, yes, Mr. Chairman, but there may be individual items to which that generality does not apply.

Mr. Enns: Mr. Chairman, in so far as the tax on machinery is concerned, are manufacturers who are reusing these products or building these products in Canada exempt from the machinery tax? I am thinking of an industry in Peterborough which manufactures milk coolers. Will they be exempt from this machinery tax?

Mr. Gordon: I am not sure that this is the place to deal with that, but if it is for farming I think it will be exempt.

Item agreed to.

Items 438h, 521, 532g, 541a, 541b agreed to.

Customs tariff—542a. Woven fabrics, wholly or in part of vegetable fibres, and all such fabrics with cut pile, n.o.p., not containing silk, wool or hair, man-made fibres or filaments nor glass fibres or filaments: British preferential tariff, 17½ per cent; most favoured nation tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, in a committee session of this sort I dislike having to ask the same question twice. I hope this question has not been answered before, but we are covering a lot of details in rather speedy fashion. I hope if this question has been answered the minister will forgive me for asking it again. We are now on a tariff item. I can assume that all the tariff items were recommended by the tariff board?

Mr. Gordon: All these particular ones, but as I explained in my opening statement this does not apply to every single item in all these five resolutions.

Mr. Grafftey: No; this particular resolution?

Mr. Gordon: Except where there is an item negotiated as part of the package under GATT.

Mr. Nesbitt: There is one point here I should like to have clarified. I note that under item 542a there appears to be, at first sight, an increase in the most favoured nation tariff from 20 per cent to 22½ per cent. Then I note that in the rate in effect prior to the proposed rate there is 20 per cent most favoured nation and 25 per cent most favoured nation. I was wondering if the minister could clarify exactly what are the implications of this.

Mr. Gordon: This is a consolidation which includes a number of items that are now all included at a single rate of 22½ per cent. Prior to the consolidation I think some were at 20 per cent, some were at 25 per cent and other amounts.

Mr. Nesbitt: Is there a net gain or is the position the same?

Mr. Gordon: It would be about the same, but it was part of this negotiated package.

Item agreed to.

Items 542b, 542c, 543a, 543b, 543c, 543d and 559g agreed to.

Customs tariff—567. Sails for boats and ships: textile fabrics, in the web or with fused edges, for use in the manufacture of such sails; British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; most favoured nation tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. Crouse: In Nova Scotia, and I suppose in the other Atlantic provinces, there are a large number of small yacht builders and sail manufacturers who must compete with United States manufacturers of sails. This item, I believe, should apply to sails for boats and ships, because the continued imposition of this tariff on sail cloth creates considerable hardship on these small industries. It puts these small sail manufacturers in a non-competitive position with their United States counterparts. While I realize there has been no change, I believe if the cloth itself were removed from this tariff it would assist in creating more employment because more of the sails used by yachts and other ships would be manufactured right in the Atlantic provinces. I should like to bring this point to the attention of the minister.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, the point is a good one. As the hon. member knows, certain tariff items are reduced by order in council for a limited period of time. This provides an opportunity for the industry to review the situation. In this particular case, this tariff item was reduced from July 1, 1963 for one year to a free rate under the British preferential tariff, 7½ per cent under the most favoured nation tariff and 15 per cent under the general tariff. This will provide the industry with an opportunity to see how the situation works out, and the matter will be reviewed a year from now.

Mr. Grafftey: Perhaps this is a good time to ask a general question for the purpose of clarification. When the officials sought compensatory items for this package deal, what principles were involved apart from the notion of class or kind made in Canada? I am sure that things were not just pulled out of the hat in an ad hoc fashion. I hope I am not asking for anything that would prejudice negotiating procedures, but in the light of common sense could any principle be outlined at this stage of the committee hearing?

Mr. Crouse: Before the minister answers that, may I say that I perhaps misunderstood him. The copy of the tariff I have shows the British preferential tariff at 15 per cent and the most favoured nation tariff at 22½ per cent. Did the minister say it had been reduced to 7½ per cent? Would he clarify his statement, please?

Mr. Gordon: This is the regulation tariff, and this was reduced by order in council for one year. The normal tariff will then come into effect again a year from now, unless the exemption or reduction is renewed once more.

In reply to the other question, I do not know what principles really apply to bargaining except that you try to get the best deal you can. I think the officials who were responsible for these negotiations had in mind making concessions on what are called non-sensitive items, that probably would be looked upon favorably by the receiving parties to the bargain, and that would do as little damage as possible, or preferably no damage at all to Canadian industry. It was a negotiation and a bargain. Those would be the general approaches, but in the end they have to balance up what we gained with what we gave; and that, in the end, is what was done.

Mr. Grafftey: I wish to offer a word of congratulations because it does seem to be a happy consequence when reductions of agricultural items are done in conjunction with textiles. This seems to produce an all round result that gives much heart to many people in many sectors of the economy.

Mr. Gordon: I would be very glad to accept those kind words on behalf of the officials who did the negotiating, which was some months ago.

Mr. Greene: Could the minister inform us where we could determine what concomitant reductions in tariff had been made by other members of GATT to compensate for these reductions made here in our tariffs? In other words, how are we to determine whether our bargainers were capable and did a good job for our manufacturers unless we have both sets of figures?

Mr. Gordon: All I can say in answer to that is that when these tariff board reports were received there were certain changes that we wanted and we went out to get them. We had to make some concessions in order to get what we wanted in return. There is no exact balance that I can produce to show exactly what we received and exactly what we gained. It is a very detailed operation, and I am not sure how you can check up on this particular negotiation.

Mr. Stenson: In sail cloth there has been a reduction across the board of 7½ per cent. Are there any other items to be approved that have been reduced in the same way as sail cloth, and which do not show in this book?

Mr. Gordon: No, I am informed that is the only one.

Mr. Otto: Getting back to sail cloth, an industry with which I have been made acquainted whether I liked it or not, it is a very promising industry in Toronto. Am I to understand that sail cloth not made in Canada has been reduced to 7½ per cent tariff or has been reduced by 7 per cent?

Mr. Gordon: It is 7½ per cent most favoured nation tariff for one year, by order in council.

Mr. Otto: I take it this is for sail cloth of a type and nature not made in Canada.

Mr. Gordon: Yes, that is right.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, I have no intention of speaking out of order, but it has occurred to me that before we came to consideration of these items we passed and discussed two very important measures relating to a department of industry and an economic council. We have had many discussions in the house about secondary manufacturing in Canada, and there is a large body of opinion which feels that very often we are not manufacturing the goods that possibly we could manufacture. I am sure it would be a good thing for the department involved here to catalogue in some way a list of goods that are not of a class or kind produced in Canada, so that this could be passed on to the new department of industry.

I am sure this has been thought of prior to my advancing it. It would be a useful item for the department of industry to have such a catalogue and I believe it is self-evident that the officials here would have that list and could make it readily available to the new department for more profound study. Perhaps the officials could indicate whether this has been considered, and whether my suggestion has any merit.

Mr. Gordon: I think the suggestion has merit and I shall be glad to convey it to the minister of industry and commerce and suggest to him that he follow it up.

Mr. Monteith: Earlier the hon. member for Renfrew South asked how we might be acquainted with compensatory reductions in certain cases by other countries. Is there no method whatsoever by which the House of Commons is made aware of the reductions made by other countries in return for the reductions we make? It occurs to me that there should be some method by which we could examine the one against the other.

Mr. Gordon: As the hon. member probably remembers, when there is a major negotiation of tariff items it is customary to table a statement in the house showing in detail what was gained and what was given up. It has not been the practice to do that on these relatively minor renegotiations. As I said earlier, we were the suppliants in this case. We wanted certain things and we succeeded in getting them. In return we made some concessions, and by and large I think it is probably fair to say they were not very costly so far as Canada is concerned.

Mr. Monteith: I am not disputing that at all but I feel that both sides should be given to us in some form, in the minor negotiations as well as in the major ones.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The minister said two or three times that we wanted certain things and we got them. Could he enlighten us by telling us what certain things he wanted and got?

Mr. Gordon: We wanted the agreement of the other members of GATT to change certain items in the textile tariffs in line with the recommendations of the tariff board.

I forget how many reports were received from the tariff board on textiles. There were ten in the whole series, and three are being dealt with here. The items we gave in exchange are all recorded in these resolutions, and I do not know how to summarize them in a way that would produce a simple statement that would meet the very valid point made a moment ago.

Mr. Greene: To clarify the point, is it fair to state that what we have here in the form of tariff reductions is the price we are paying for these other concessions that we received by virtue of what the tariff board wanted for textiles?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, that is correct.

Item agreed to.

Item 569a agreed to.

Customs tariff—569b. (1) Hoods and shapes, caps, bonnets and berets, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 22½ per cent; most favoured nation tariff, 30 per cent; general tariff, 45 per cent.

(2) Hats, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent and per dozen 75 cents; most favoured nation tariff, 25 per cent and per dozen $1; general tariff, 35 per cent and per dozen $1.50.

Mr. Danforth: Mr. Chairman, in the case of item 569b there is drastic increase in tariffs perhaps more than on any other item we have considered heretofore. May I ask the minister, through you, sir, if this is the recommendation of the tariff board, or does it represent direct representations from the manufacturers themselves?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, these were the recommendations of the tariff board. I do not think it is fair to say that there are any substantial increases. Under item 569b (1) there is an increase in the most favoured nation rate from 22½ per cent—and various other items were consolidated—to 30 per cent. I quite frankly do not know whether that represents an increase or a decrease.

Item agreed to.

Mr. Weichel: Mr. Chairman, could I ask for leave to go back to item 559 for just a second.

The Chairman: Item 559g?

Mr. Weichel: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Customs tariff—559g. Batts, batting and wadding of wool, cotton or other textile fibre, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 10 per cent; most favoured nation tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. Weichel: I would like to ask the minister this question. I understand the government is proposing to reduce the tariff protection under tariff item 559g from 20 per cent to 17½ per cent. Could the minister give us a little explanation on this?

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I know this is most unusual but I would like to ask your consideration, sir, to this committee rising immediately in view of a statement which is to be found in the Citizen of this afternoon relating to the departure of the defence committee to NORAD headquarters.

The Chairman: Order. Is the hon. gentleman rising on a question of privilege or a point of order?

An hon. Member: On everything.

Mr. Winch: Sir, I am rising on something which I just do not know quite how to handle; but I now have in my hand a clipping from a newspaper published this afternoon, the Ottawa Citizen, which says:

The Commons defence committee has been informed that it cannot be given secret information by North American air defence command headquarters because the members haven't been checked for security by R.C.M.P.—

Our committee on defence leaves in 45 minutes and we now find, according to this newspaper, that the committee going to Colorado Springs has not been cleared by the R.C.M.P. for security and therefore we cannot get the information for which we are going to Colorado Springs. I ask, sir, as a question of privilege, that this committee rise now from its present business and for the Speaker to be in the house, in order that we may find out what this article means when it says the defence committee cannot get information because we have not been cleared for security by the R.C.M.P. This matter is of great importance. I have—

The Chairman: Order. The point has been made by the hon. member. He realizes this is implied in the statement he has made, that he cannot raise this question except when Mr. Speaker is in the chair. We are bound by the terms of the resolution now before us and so we have to proceed with the business now before the house.

Mr. Winch: Could I ask, sir, that in view of the importance of this matter the committee rise and report to the house.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pickersgill: I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that if the hon. gentleman would care to raise this point just before six o'clock there might perhaps be general agreement.

An hon. Member: That will be too late.

Mr. Pickersgill: But in the meantime I will be very pleased to make some inquiries privately. This, after all, is only a newspaper story and we know that newspaper stories are not always accurate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: Well, I call to witness many hon. gentlemen now sitting over there, notably the honourable and absent member for Qu'Appelle, who has his views about the subject. But I will undertake to make inquiries at once to see if I can find out whether there is any substance in this story, and I will report to the chairman as soon as possible.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, we have to leave at—

The Chairman: Order. In view of the assurances which have been given by the house leader of the government may I suggest that the matter be allowed to stand and that we revert to the business of the house.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I understand that it is a point of order; a motion has been made.

Mr. Pickersgill: There has been no motion.

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of State has just accused the press of not reporting the truth—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: This is not a point of order and the Chair did not understand the Secretary of State to have spoken those words.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, could I ask what it is that is recommended, because the 24 members of the defence committee are to leave from the front of the House of Commons in 40 minutes. Could I ask what the—

The Chairman: Order. May I suggest that this question cannot be discussed at this time. This may be considered a very urgent question and a very important matter by the hon. member, but we have rules and regulations as to the order of business to be followed. The committee is now considering a specific resolution. I would submit that, the question of privilege having been raised and in view of the ruling I have made, this matter should not be discussed any further and we should revert to the business of the house.

Mr. Winch: I am going to Colorado Springs, and God help them if I find that we do not get information because of the R.C.M.P.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I understand that the hon. member made a motion that we adjourn and report progress.

Mr. Pickersgill: There was no such motion.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Am I correct in that understanding?

The Chairman: No such motion has been made.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Woolliams: Then I will so move, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I second it.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am afraid that instead of making the inquiry which might have obtained some information for the committee, I will have to ask you, Mr. Chairman, to put the motion and I trust the committee will not accept it.

The Chairman: The Chair requires to have the motion in writing.

Mr. Woolliams: I would like to speak to the motion.

The Chairman: There is no motion at the moment. I will have to have the motion in writing.

Mr. Pickersgill: A motion is not debatable.

The Chairman: There being no motion before the committee, we shall revert to the item now before the committee, which is item 559g.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to reply to the question of the hon. member for Waterloo North about item 559g. This item provides for the entry of batts, batting and wadding of any material at 10 per cent British preference and 17½ per cent most favoured nation. The item is as recommended by the tariff board. It replaces the former item 536, with a minor change in wording for clarification purposes. The rates of duty have been reduced 2½ per cent under both tariffs. That was the recommendation of the tariff board.

The Chairman: Shall the item carry?

Item agreed to.

Item 569c agreed to.

Customs tariff—569d. Hat sweats, cap peaks, stiffening bands for the inside of hats and caps, tips and sides when cut to shape, and materials for use in the manufacture of such articles; all the foregoing for use in the manufacture of hats and caps: British preferential tariff, free; most favoured nation tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): On this item, Mr. Chairman, could the minister explain why it is here. It has been free previously and it is free now; and I fail to see any words in italics. Is it something itemizing these items for the first time?

Mr. Gordon: The item is being renumbered, Mr. Chairman.

Item agreed to.

Items 569e and 569f agreed to.

Customs tariff—572a. Carpets of sisal, palm straw or cane straw: British preferential tariff, 17½ per cent; most favoured nation tariff, 17½ per cent; general tariff, 40 per cent.

Mr. Nesbitt: I am rather curious about this item. Are the tariff rates here levied for the purpose of revenue or for some other purpose? I was wondering whether the minister could give us some background to that.

Mr. Gordon: I would say a little incidental revenue. It is not a big item.

Mr. Monteith: Following that question, is this the policy of the government, to put on duties for revenue purposes?

Mr. Gordon: I would think that the hon. member knows that this particular item has been on the books for a long time and certainly during the past six years.

Mr. Grafftey: Could the minister inform the house from which countries these items are mostly imported?

Mr. Gordon: Mainly from tropical countries, India and Japan.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—574. Coated or impregnated fabrics, containing textile fabric, produced by any method, including lamination, if the weight of the textile fabric is less than two thirds of the weight of the coated or impregnated fabric:

(1) The textile fabric being wholly or in part of man-made fibres or filaments or of glass fibres or filaments: British preferential tariff, 27½ per cent; most favoured nation tariff, 32½ per cent; general tariff, 50 per cent.

(2) The textile fabric not being wholly or in part of man-made fibres or filaments or of glass fibres or filaments: British preferential tariff, 20 per cent; most favoured nation tariff, 25 per cent; general tariff, 40 per cent.

Mr. Grafftey: Could the minister explain the listing under the general tariff, the 35 per cent and 4 cents per pound, etc? What does that involve? What is meant by the "various, various various" under the three items?

Mr. Gordon: It means that there are a variety of rates applying to various items which have now been consolidated under the new rates of 50 per cent and 40 per cent respectively under the general tariff. But in practice this would not be the tariff which would apply. The effective tariff here is the most favoured nation tariff which, as the hon. member says, is 32½ per cent and 25 per cent, reduced from 35 per cent and 32½ per cent. The other rate was 25 per cent, 25 per cent and various, which is now consolidated at 25 per cent.

Mr. Scott: In 574 (2) it appears as though the general tariff has been increased to 40 per cent. Is this an actual increase? If so, was it made on the recommendation of the tariff board or the industries concerned?

Mr. Gordon: I am informed, Mr. Chairman, that the 40 per cent is approximately equivalent to the previous 35 per cent tariff plus 4 cents a pound.

Mr. Grafftey: Could we have some sort of explanation of the new wording in this item? Quite frankly, it is a completely new item under 574b.

The Chairman: Order. It is my understanding that we are discussing item 574 which has not yet been carried.

Mr. Grafftey: Excuse me.

Mr. Gregoire: Carried.

The Chairman: Shall item 574 carry?

Item agreed to.

Item 574a agreed to.

Customs tariff—574b. Canvas in the web, wholly or flax or hemp, or both, plain woven, coloured or not, treated with weatherproofing or preservative materials, weighing more than six ounces per square yard, when the weight of the untreated fabric is two thirds or more of the weight of the treated fabric: British preferential tariff, 17½ per cent; most favoured nation tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 40 per cent.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, I understand that hon. members in the party to my left have decided not to participate in an item by item discussion of the extremely important resolutions now before us. Having decided upon that I respectfully ask their courtesy in letting other hon. members question the officials through the minister. We have done our homework and consider it important to question the officials. We would appreciate the courtesy of not being interrupted while in the middle of discussion of very complicated matters by shouts of "Carried".

Mr. Gregoire: On a question of privilege; after what the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi has said he has not proved to us that it is very important.

Mr. Ricard: You would not know the difference anyway.

Mr. Grafftey: In answer to that—

The Chairman: Would the hon. member resume his seat. I think we are getting into a debate which is not at all constructive and I suggest we return to consideration of these items. We are now considering item 574b.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): These items are important and I want to take an interest in them. This item deals with canvas in the web. If I go back to item 409f, that dealt explicitly with agricultural equipment and includes "parts of all the foregoing". They come in free under 409f. I am wondering whether canvas in the web used in farm machinery would come under this item, or under farm machinery or parts thereof, duty free.

Mr. Gordon: All I can say to the hon. member is that this is a textile item not farm machinery, and would come in under this item.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): This is the point I want to get across. I agree it is a textile item. Canvas is used in swathers, in combines, binders and all the rest of the farm machinery, and is made of textiles. But it is also part thereof of farm machinery under item 409f and should in my estimation, if the canvas were bought alone to replace part of a machine used as farm equipment in Canada, come in duty free as a part thereof under item 409f.

Mr. Gordon: If what is coming in is a bona fide piece of agricultural machinery it comes in duty free. Whether it is classed as a bona fide part or not I cannot say; that is something the hon. member will have to get a ruling on from the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): This has been one of the sticklers with regard to item 409f. I find a perfect example in canvases. Many items coming in as farm machinery, if they come in complete, are entered duty free. However, if they come in in parts, such as binder canvases or swather canvases, in many cases the duty is put on the piece coming in separately and not attached to a piece of machinery. I think the minister should clear this point up because he said that canvases used in agricultural machinery came in duty free under "parts of all the foregoing" in item 409f.

Mr. Gordon: If it is a complete part, Mr. Chairman, it comes in duty free.

Mr. Danforth: May I ask the minister a general question? I have noticed that the changes are on the basis of 2½ per cent, 5 per cent and 10 per cent. Is this in accord with the general agreement on tariffs or are these intervals chosen for the sake of ease in calculation? Perhaps there is some other reason why they should rise in this relationship.

Mr. Gordon: In general, Canadian tariffs go up in steps of 2½ per cent. Whether there is any great principle behind that, I do not know. That is the way the tariff is constructed.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Before this item carries I should like to ask the minister about the importation in bulk of canvas in the web. A number of manufacturers are engaged in the business of making up canvas for agricultural use. If they import canvas in bulk they will be paying duty under item 574b. Am I right?

Mr. Gordon: I am informed that in the case to which the hon. member is referring the canvas comes in duty free, and under item 442 for manufacture.

Mr. Grafftey: Could we have some explanation for the phrase "materials, weighing more than six ounces per square yard, when the weight of the untreated fabric is two thirds or more of the weight of the treated fabric". Could we, also, be told whether there is any reason for the comma being placed where it is?

Mr. Gordon: This was an attempt by the tariff board to simplify the tariff to some extent and arrive at a line between heavily coated and lightly coated fabric. I am not sure where the comma should be; I am sure we could move it around. Perhaps we cannot. It should probably stay where it is.

Mr. Grafftey: Does this mean that fabrics of a certain weight are widely made in Canada, but that others are not?

Mr. Gordon: No. In this case there were, formerly several items dealing with heavily coated and lightly coated fabrics. Now they are covered by one item.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—597a (5). Accordions: British preferential tariff, 2½ per cent; most favoured nation tariff, 2½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. Nesbitt: This is an intriguing item. I see the tariff on accordions is being reduced and I was wondering whether the minister could give us an explanation of this slight reduction. Obviously he cannot be giving up much revenue. Possibly, he is assisting some other countries or perhaps he is benefiting gypsies, or night club owners or high school students taking accordion lessons. Could the minister in his genial way tell us the reason?

Mr. Gordon: I would be glad to do so, especially since I represent a riding which has in it many Canadians of Italian extraction. It was agreed that the rate on accordions should be reduced by 2½ per cent in the course of the negotiations which took place in connection with the textile items. Imports are largely from Italy and Germany; they are not separately recorded, so I do not know the exact quantities involved. However, I am sure the hon. member will agree with me that we need more accordions in Canada, not fewer, and none are made here at present.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—610. Belting, n.o.p., not including single ply belting wholly of textile fibres: British preferential tariff, 7½ per cent; most favoured nation tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 27½ per cent.

Mr. Gregoire: I should like to ask one or two general questions on all the items, now that this last item on the page has been reached.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Before the hon. member deals with the subject in general I have a particular question to ask on this item.

Mr. Gregoire: Very well, I will wait until the hon. member has finished.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would belting imported for use in connection with agricultural machinery come in duty free under this item or not? This is the same question as the one I had in mind with regard to canvas.

Mr. Gordon: It would come in duty free under 409f.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Suppose a wholesaler brings in a shipment of belts which have numerous uses, though they have been purchased for agricultural machinery. Would those who buy this material be reimbursed under item 409f?

Mr. Gordon: I am informed that in such a case, where there is multiple use, the Department of National Revenue insists on repayment of duty, then gives a refund if the material is used for agricultural purposes.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That was my understanding, but I wanted to confirm it. Would the wholesaler apply for the rebate, or the retailer?

Mr. Gordon: The importer of record.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): In many cases that would be the wholesaler. But how does he know the belts are sold for agricultural uses? I am afraid many farmers have been buying belts at prices a little higher than they should have been paying.

Mr. Gordon: I do not know about farmers in Alberta, but in my opinion no farmer in Ontario has been led down the garden path that way.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I do not want to get into a discussion of any differences there may be between farmers in Alberta and farmers in Ontario. I know the farmers in Alberta have been led down the garden path in many ways. Looking over to my left I am reminded of one way in particular.

I do not want to believe that farmers in Ontario are smarter than Alberta farmers, but if the wholesaler is the one who is reimbursed by the Department of National Revenue in connection with the purchase of belts, can the minister explain to me how the farmer who buys a belt can be certain he is not paying a duty which may amount to as much as 20 per cent?

Mr. Crouse: I am interested in this point as it applies to the fishing industry. Belting is used in drag net fishing. I wonder if material for this purpose would enter free of tariff or whether the tariff would have to be paid and an application made for drawback?

Mr. Gordon: I have two questions here. In answer to the first, the farmer who buys a belt gives a certificate of use to the man from whom he buys it, and that man, if he is a retailer, presumably passes it on to the wholesaler or whoever was the importer. He is the one who applies for the rebate.

The other question is a somewhat different one. It has to do with the fishing industry. I am informed that the duty applies in the case the hon. member mentioned.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That is the very answer that I thought would be forthcoming and this is the point I want to clear up. The minister has suggested that the retailer would reimburse the farmer. He said that a statement would have to be signed by the farmer that the belt was going to be used for agricultural purposes and he would then be reimbursed a percentage, depending on where the belt was made. The point is that farmers use a number of belts and are never given any form to fill out. The retailer does not give them a form. This suggests to me that many farmers are buying imported belts for various agricultural uses and, just as I thought, paying an additional 20 per cent. Certainly there is a possibility that the wholesaler, retailer or middleman between the farmer and the maker of the belt is receiving an additional 20 per cent in many cases.

I think the minister and the department should give a great deal of study to the problem of belts used on agricultural machinery. Many members may think this a small item but belts for combines, mowers and so on can run into a lot of money. It is nothing for a farmer to have to pay from $14 to $30 for a new belt, and on larger combines it is more than that. I have used combines as an example of the cost but I know of a particular mower that requires a $10 V-belt. I am certain that combine belts would be classed as agricultural items, but many smaller belts costing nearly as much can be used for various purposes and could have the 20 per cent duty applied to them. The farmers are paying this money and receiving no benefit. I think a study should be made to devise a better method to alleviate, if possible, this extra burden so far as belts are concerned.

Mr. Crouse: I should like to make one comment. I can very much appreciate the fact that farmers are eligible for this drawback, even though it would appear from the remarks of the hon. member for Acadia that they are not always getting their just due. But I am somewhat surprised by the statement of the minister that one primary industry, agriculture, is eligible for this drawback while another primary industry, fishing, is not eligible. Fishermen also use large quantities of belting of various types. I should like to take this opportunity to ask the minister to reconsider this aspect of the application of the tax with the hope that the fishing industry, which does produce a large part of our revenue and provides a considerable amount of employment, will be given equal consideration when he reconsiders the matter.

Mr. Gordon: I think the point is very well taken and we will be glad to give it careful consideration.

Mr. Gregoire: I should like to ask a couple of questions covering all the items in Customs Tariff resolution No. 1. Can the minister tell us how much the government will gain or lose by all the changes in resolution No. 1? Can the minister give us the approximate amount?

Mr. Gordon: According to the best estimate we can get there will be no change whatever. This is a tidying up job.

Mr. Gregoire: Can the minister tell us how many more employees it will take to put these changes into effect? How many people will be required to instruct all the employees throughout Canada as to these changes and what will the cost be?

Mr. Gordon: I have always thought that when you simplify the tariff even to some extent, and I am not suggesting this is a great simplification, it should be easier in the long run to administer than it has been in the past.

Mr. Gregoire: Then in summary it is just a matter of simplification with no change at all?

Mr. Gordon: It is simplification plus implementation of the reports of the tariff board arising out of its investigations into the textile industry. As was said earlier, these investigations continued for some years. They started in 1957 and this is the end of it.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): This item covers belting, not otherwise provided, not including single ply belting wholly of textile fibres. Would this not include belts with metal in them? Many V-belts particularly have a metal core. Would they be included in this item? If not, where are they included?

Mr. Gordon: The exclusion is of the textile fibres, not of the metal. If there is any metal it stays under this item.

[Mr. Crouse.]

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The only change in this item is the words in italics?

Mr. Gordon: That is correct.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the minister tell us if there are manufacturers in Canada making V-belts?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, there are.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I do not want a specific figure but could the minister tell us what percentage of belting used in Canada is imported and how much is produced here?

Mr. Gordon: I do not think I have that information. In 1960 total imports under this item or under the items that precede it were about $1,750,000, but I do not know the value of the production in Canada.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): This is a very interesting item having regard to the value of the imports just given by the minister. We have manufacturers in Canada in this field. This is interesting from the point of view that we have been discussing a department of industry and the creation of more jobs in Canada. Can the minister give us any idea now or obtain for us the extent in percentage to which we rely on foreign imports and on Canadian production?

Mr. Gordon: One of the things that I think all hon. members have deplored in the past is the relative shortage of statistics giving a breakdown with regard to manufactured goods in Canada. It is very difficult to find out these things. We may be able to get an estimate and if so I will be glad to supply it.

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Could the minister indicate what this belting is that is mentioned here? Belting is used in many different processes outside the field of agriculture.

Mr. Gordon: The most important item that would come under this is what is generally known as rubber belting.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, arising out of the question asked by the hon. member for Lapointe the minister said that as far as he could see there was no revenue significance in the resolution. In regard to resolutions of this sort is there no detailed calculation of how they will affect ways and means in the result?

Mr. Gordon: The best calculation that has been made is that it balances out.

Mr. Grafftey: The minister means that it does not affect ways and means at all. Actually my question was whether it is normal practice in the case of resolutions of this kind to make calculations in order to find out how the balance of ways and means is affected.

Mr. Gordon: I think it is fair to say, Mr. Chairman, that if the revenue effects are at all significant they are taken into account. In this case the conclusion was that they were not significant. There were some pluses and some minuses, and they balanced out. There is not enough difference to put in your eye.

Mr. Grafftey: I should like to say, frankly, that I do not know what the strict procedure is in the discussion of budget resolutions. I noticed that the hon. member for Lapointe, perhaps realizing that these textile items were at the end of the list, used the occasion to make some general remarks. I noticed that the minister did make an opening statement on this resolution. I was wondering, then, if I could be permitted to make some general remarks on this last item? I do not know what the procedural details are in this connection, but we have gone through the item by item discussion, and at the beginning of the discussion I did ask what procedure should be followed. I think there is a certain amount of give and take on these matters and I should like, very briefly, to make a couple of general remarks.

First of all, sir, I should like to mention to the minister and his officials that after examining these items—

The Deputy Chairman: I do not believe the hon. member would be quite out of order at this stage if he were to keep his remarks rather brief. May I ask him to do that?

Mr. Grafftey: At the beginning of the discussion on this resolution, I did ask for some indication as to the proper procedure. Since I have been in the house, it seems to me that every year there is a different procedure followed in the discussion of these budget resolutions. I do not want to be lengthy, and I did not want to open up a general discussion in the middle of the item by item examination, but I do want to make some general remarks on this particular resolution.

My brief remarks are simply these: I am very happy that the minister informed me and the other members of the committee that it is only when significant revenue changes are anticipated that they are reported in so far as they affect ways and means. I think another thing that should be underlined is the fact that as we have gone over the resolution item by item this afternoon, we have become involved with the expression, "of a class or kind made in Canada". During the discussion of one item I did mention the fact, and I should like to repeat it at this stage as we close the debate on the resolution, that this would be a very convenient list to hand over to the new department of industry. I think it is important that we consolidate, as much as possible, the list of a class or kind not made in Canada for future and more profound study.

At this point, I should like to underline the fact that we are passing a resolution which, in principle, goes a long way towards satisfying three things. It would seem that our trading neighbours are satisfied with the results of this package deal which was negotiated, and which the minister took great pains to explain to the house. I thank him for that. It would seem, too, that while no one industry is ever completely satisfied, I think we have gone some distance towards rectifying many of the problems which faced the textile industry. It is more than a mere coincidence that many of the compensatory items involved, and which are inserted in this resolution, will naturally have a beneficial effect upon the farmers of Canada. I should like to point out that this resolution virtually satisfies three such points of consideration.

I should like also to state very briefly, and as uncontentiously as possible, that the administration which I supported for a number of years in this house felt it was very important for Canada to have an operating textile industry, a healthy textile industry. I do not want to be too contentious, but prior to 1957 there was some doubt whether the government of that day thought it was important that Canada should have a textile industry capable of survival. I hope that the presentation of this resolution to the committee indicates that the administration has now come round to the point of view that a healthy Canadian textile industry is something worth while.

The last general point I should like to mention as we close this debate, Mr. Chairman, is the hope that the minister will clarify our thinking on some of these points as the discussion proceeds on the other resolutions to come before us. It would be most helpful if the minister informed us whether the attitude of the Minister of Trade and Commerce or the attitude of the Prime Minister is going to prevail in the approach to tariff negotiations in relation to the United States proposal. If the Prime Minister's approach is taken holus-bolus, I think it is right to assume that this attitude will have definite effects on the tariff board's decisions and recommendations. This attitude will have effects on our secondary industries. We would all like to hear about that.

This is all I will say now because if I were to continue in this vein much longer I would no doubt be out of order. I would like to indicate that is the approach we will be having to the discussion of future resolutions. I thought this would be a good time to indicate it. I thank hon. members opposite for their indulgence in allowing me to make these observations at this stage of the discussion. I know there are certain rules covering this discussion, but I thank you for the flexible approach that has been accorded me.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Before the resolution carries, I should like to make a short comment. I know that I have taken up perhaps enough time of the committee this afternoon, but I should like to thank the minister for trying to answer my questions at all times and taking them seriously. Those questions which he could not answer, he has promised to consider. There is one subject, however, with which I have been dealing most of the afternoon, and that is agricultural products.

I know item 409f was dealt with already, but just before we pass the first resolution I would like to point out that it says at the bottom of that item, "all other agricultural implements or agricultural machinery not otherwise provided." I asked about four or five particular agricultural products, and in each case was told by the minister that he would have to discuss it with the officials and an individual study of each would have to be made.

Before the resolution passes I wonder could the minister give us some idea regarding what form of a directive is sent to officials in the offices of the Department of National Revenue across the country, with regard to other agricultural implements and machines used in agricultural production. What guidance is given to these officials across the country?

I listed portable livestock scales, steel boxes with hydraulic dumps, potato boxes, steel potato boxes which are a special machine used on potato farms, potato bagging machines, metal fence stays and a number of other items. Surely the minister could clarify the other agricultural machinery used in the production of agricultural goods? Surely these could be classified under one broad directive and sent to all officials across the country.

I could list a number of cases which I have had the privilege of dealing with, particularly over the last couple of years. I know some of the difficulties that importers and purchasers in Canada encounter in trying to decide whether an imported machine not commonly used in agriculture production, or shall I say specifically used, can come in duty free because it is not specifically listed in item 409f. Further I would point out that under resolution 1 we have three more items added to item 409f.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

It seems to me that every possible agricultural implement should be listed under this item because, unless they are listed, Department of National Revenue officials across the country tend to turn them down in most cases. The only alternative left to a purchaser is to approach his member of parliament and hope, through his pressure, to get the officials to rescind the tax already paid on an imported machine.

I am sure that if a wide enough directive were sent out to the officials this would not happen, but as it stands at present it is my opinion, and that of a number of people throughout the country, that any item, in order to come in duty free, must be listed under item 409f.

Mr. Pugh: Before the minister replies I want to say I listened with a great deal of attention to the hon. member for Acadia when he was questioning the minister on steel boxes for the ordinary farm wagon. The minister said, "Yes, that sounds as though it ought to come in." When an extension was asked on the hydraulic equipment the minister said, "Well now, I think at this stage we should query the actual department, just to make sure whether it comes in or not." It just so happens that a steel box with hydraulic equipment cannot come in duty free. It is not listed.

I am not sure whether the hon. member for Acadia asked about this previously and was turned down, but there is no question about it that such a steel box has a farm use, and has only got a farm use. However, with the hydraulic equipment it is turned down. When the minister was giving his answer on this general category under item 409f, his own common sense told him a farm wagon should come in; but yet he said, "No, I think we had better go to National Revenue and find out whether it should be allowed in or not."

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Before the minister answers I would point out that he said steel boxes were duty free. He made this statement, and I think Hansard will bear me out. It certainly bears checking at any rate.

Mr. Pugh: I know, but I think somebody nudged him after he gave the answer. When the hon. member for Acadia started talking about hydraulics, at that stage he began to wonder and I think he got an extra nudge. If the minister feels that common sense says a steel box should come in duty free, then why should not a hydraulic equipped box come in duty free? If the minister is perplexed, then what about the average farmer across Canada, and I am talking about the western farmer as well as the eastern farmer? Surely they must be really perplexed?

Mr. Gordon: If I may, I will just clear up this last point. When I was talking about farm wagons we were on item 409f and were talking about gravity discharge farm wagon boxes. This item comes in free, but we all know there are other items in the tariff. Generally speaking—and I suppose it is unwise to generalize in this as in other fields —but by and large agricultural machinery comes in free, and by and large I think it is fair to say that the farmers of Canada know this. I think it is fair to say that most farmers recognize a piece of agricultural equipment when they see it. Then there are borderline cases and there are situations where the case is not clear.

I would point out that the Department of National Revenue has some 47 ports of entry across the country where all the information that is available at headquarters is duplicated and available. If anybody is under any doubt as to whether an item is dutiable or comes in free of duty, all he has to do is ask somebody in one of the offices of the department, or write to the head office. In this resolution—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I wonder—

Mr. Gordon: May I finish? We were dealing with fairly certain specific items and I had not undertaken to embark on a full discussion of the tariff, or even on a full discussion of the tariff as it applies to the agricultural industry. I was dealing with these specific items, which for today was about as far as I had hoped I would have to go. I think I will leave it at that.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I want this particular item cleared up before we proceed. The minister stated earlier this afternoon that gravity discharged farm boxes would include wooden and steel boxes, but I think the only type of steel box that would be gravity discharged would be one parked on a hill. The minister made the remark that is often the illusion of many people not directly in contact with the agricultural industry, that an agricultural implement is easily recognizable. Not today it is not. Today agricultural machinery is becoming highly mechanized and farmers are resorting more and more to hydraulic and highly machined equipment. This is, in a sense, part of the automation that has taken place throughout the country in other industries as well as agriculture. When I asked the minister whether steel boxes are included under this item, he said yes. I asked him for the explicit purpose of clarifying that particular thought that was in my mind, and has been in my mind for some time. Now he and the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary are suggesting that steel boxes might be duty free, but if they have a hydraulic hoist attached to them, they are not duty free. Yet further down in item 409f hydraulic hoists are duty free. Perhaps the minister or his officials could clarify the position with regard to this matter. Surely an importer does not have to take the hydraulic hook-up off the steel box and import it separately; surely he should be able to import the two items attached together, if he so desires. This is the point I have been trying to make under this particular item.

Mr. Pugh: It will cost the farmer more money.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): As the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary says, it will cost the farmer more money. This is just the point I am trying to make. The government, and we as members of parliament in this house, should try and facilitate the economy of Canada and, in this particular item, the farmers of Canada. We do not want to charge them more money because of an error in the regulations, because of the advanced technological knowledge applied in producing farm equipment today, or because of general automation in agricultural and farm machinery. Surely we should accept the fact that steel boxes with hydraulic hoists attached should come in duty free; that a farmer should not have to send his hired man down to the United States, for example, to take the hoist off the box and let them come in as two items. This is one way he could do it and get around the duty; or if it were cheaper he would pay the duty and keep the hired man at home. This is, in a sense, how ridiculous this item has become. Surely the minister and the officials are prepared now, after our thorough discussion of this particular item, to say that steel boxes with hydraulic hoists are duty free if they are used for agricultural purposes.

I think a purchaser should have to fill out a form and swear that this machine is purchased for agricultural purposes. That is done, in regard to the purchase of machinery, in a number of cases. I can think of air cooled motors, for example; when you buy them for farm use, you fill out a form to this effect, "This machine will be used on the farm for agricultural purposes" and you do not pay the duty. This could also be done in connection with steel boxes with hydraulic hoists attached. I am sure the officials understand that; they are well aware of the forms that farmers fill out and sign. I am sure that if gravity discharge steel boxes can come in duty free, and hydraulic hoists down below can come in duty free, the two items attached should come in duty free. I would like the minister to accept this as a very reasonable argument on behalf of those farmers who are trying to mechanize or further mechanize their farms.

Mr. Olson: Mr. Chairman, before the item carries I wonder whether I could ask the minister a question for the purpose of bringing those of us who were not here during some of the previous sessions up to date, in line with the point which the hon. member for Acadia suggested has been bothering him for some time. In addition to that there is the fact that previously both these items were included, I think, under tariff item 409f; in other words, they were not added this time. I am wondering whether the representations that are now being made to the minister were made to his predecessor, and what were his reasons for retaining the confusion about which the hon. member has spoken.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, that thought did occur to me as the hon. member for Acadia was speaking; but I did not want him to think this should influence me to the point where this government would not give his representations the very closest and most careful study. I am sure the officials will do that. We will certainly look into this question.

I do not know that I should answer the question of the hon. member who has just spoken any more than I have, as to why this might not have been dealt with as extensively during the last six years. The hon. member for Acadia looks as though he wants to answer the hon. member himself; he is sort of on the edge of his chair. Perhaps it would be kinder to let him rise and give the answer.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I realize the question was not directed to me but it did implicate me and I would like to say a word further on this item. Perhaps in doing so I can allay the hon. member's anxiety with regard to this particular subject and my actions in connection with it in the last six years.

This matter was brought to my attention about two years ago. I took it up thoroughly and worked hard on it. Then, as I mentioned, because of the vastly changing agricultural scene and the illusion that exists in many people's minds that agricultural implements are easily recognizable, I found it takes some time to convince officials in one government or another that steel boxes with hydraulic hoists that are used on farms should now be duty free. Because government has changed hands gives me no excuse to quit working on this particular item or this particular subject. Perhaps the hon. member for Medicine Hat thinks I should not now continue to press for clarification of this item. But that is not my understanding as to why I was sent to Ottawa. If a problem existed two years ago, and still exists today, I will continue to work at it and try to have the item cleared up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I was not successful—I should not say "I", because several other hon. members had the same problem—

An hon. Member: "We".

Mr. Horner (Acadia): We were not successful in convincing the officials that agricultural implements are not easily recognizable. We will continue to work on this subject and I think, thanks to the hon. member for Medicine Hat and his great patience—of course, he was out of the chamber for quite a while this afternoon, so perhaps I did not cause him undue hardship in listening to what I had to say on this particular item—and thanks to his colleagues who have been patient with me while I have been dealing with my agricultural problems this afternoon, I think we have made, with the help of other hon. members, great progress on this very ticklish subject.

Mr. Woolliams: The farmers of Medicine Hat will be glad you raised this matter.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am glad the minister has said he will continue to consider my views and give them serious study. Perhaps because of the arguments advanced this afternoon this whole matter can be cleared up relatively quickly.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, this is really on another subject and I am certainly not going to hold myself out as one who is knowledgeable on this matter. I would like to ask the minister a question under this item, where all other agricultural implements or agricultural machinery come in duty free. I am thinking of those machines owned by rural municipalities, and particularly the machines used in western irrigation districts of Alberta and eastern irrigation districts, for ditch irrigating. The same kind of machine is used in northeastern Saskatchewan and the northern part of Alberta. They drain swamps with these machines. Are these machines categorized as agricultural machinery if they are owned and operated by the municipality, and do they come into the country free of duty? I have received inquiries from rural municipalities, from the western and eastern irrigation districts of Alberta in this connection. This is a new subject about which I am completely green and I would ask the minister to explain it.

Mr. Gordon: This item was not included in the resolution. With the help of the officials I could probably give an answer but it might not be a complete one. In the circumstances I would ask the hon. member to let me get the correct answers and send them along to him. If I try to deal with tariff items at random in this discussion I am afraid we will be here for some time.

Mr. Woolliams: I was not, of course, trying to embarrass the minister in any way. I have inquiries on this subject and I realize that no official can carry all the items in his head. I am willing to wait and get the answers, and I am sure the minister will give me his co-operation now, as he always has in the past.

Mr. Pugh: I think the hon. member for Bow River has made an important point. Not only is there customs involved, but if it is not classified as farm equipment then the 4-4-3 sales tax percentages would apply on the purchase. I have another point I should like to put to the minister. We are dealing with textiles and textile fabrics. I was wondering whether the proposed trade with China was the basis for any of the tariff changes which have been made.

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Chairman.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall resolution No. 1 carry?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Before it carries, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to ask the minister to be lengthy—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): —some of us are tall enough; but this is a problem all of us as politicians have, our inclination to talk too much. I want however to ask about snow blowing equipment. I mentioned a lot of agricultural implements this afternoon and the minister kindly accepted them and said that he would look into them. There is a problem concerning the classification of certain items under "All other agricultural implements or agricultural machinery, n.o.p.;" in item 409f. What about snow blowing equipment or snow removal equipment? Would they qualify under that part of item 409f which says:

> Machines and tools for use on tractors, including blades, loaders, rippers, rakes and related operating and controlling gear;

Mr. Gordon: I am not too familiar with this snow blowing equipment. I do not think it is specifically designed for agricultural use and so does not come under the specific item here. As I said to the hon. member for Bow River, perhaps on this particular resolution it would be a mistake to discuss the tariff itself, to discuss the items not included in the resolution. If the hon. member for Acadia would like an answer and would be kind enough to write a letter to the Department of National Revenue, they assure me that they will be glad to supply the information.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I would be glad to write that letter, but I should like to correct a misunderstanding with regard to snow blowing and snow removal equipment not being part of agricultural machinery, as I understood the minister to say. This is another perfect example why agricultural equipment is not easily recognizable.

Mr. Gordon: If the hon. member would allow me to interrupt, I think I said it was not specifically designed for that purpose.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am sorry if I misunderstood the minister.

Mr. Byrne: It is like a straw blower.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You are blowing a lot of straw now.

Mr. Pigeon: They are used to manure spreading.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Snow plowing equipment is not designed specifically for agricultural purposes but in many cases is used for such. I can remember many a hard winter when a lot of ranchers and farmers plowed the snow so that their cattle could follow up behind and eat the grass which remained. In those days a snow plow was a very vital machine to have around when a rancher was caught short of feed. The last few years have been pretty warm, I do not know whether or not because of the political activity in Canada, but they have not been so prominent on farms and ranches as in the past. But in the future no doubt they will be used to quite an extent by many farmers. I should like to know whether or not they would be included under machines and tools for use on tractors, including blades, loaders, rippers, and so on. Snow blowers are not specifically designed for agricultural use, but they are used for such in many cases, and they are made readily to attach to tractors. I wonder whether they would come under this head or not. Would they come in under that catch-all phrase or under the other catch-all phrase, which is:

> All other agricultural implements or agricultural machinery, n.o.p.;

I have taken a great deal of time and I see it is nearly six o'clock, but I hope the minister and his officials will take this snow blowing equipment along with the other items I have mentioned this afternoon and give it some thought as to whether it is already included under "all other agricultural implements".

Mr. Gundlock: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Medicine Hat brought up the question why something was not done under the previous government, and I should like to call this matter, which is very important, to the attention of the minister. I have before me a letter from an industry which is trying to establish itself, and as a matter of fact is establishing itself, in Lethbridge. It is an industry which produces, processes and packages vegetables, and in our area of Alberta we import over 90 per cent of the vegetables we process. By way of example—and I concede this point to my hon. friend from Medicine Hat—I should like to bring to the attention of the minister that automatic stock watering devices are exempt from duty, whereas automatic stock feeding devices are not. This is not an old thing; it is a new thing. For example, there are egg cooling devices and milk cooling devices, but there is not this new device which we need so badly and which I call a hydro cooling device. Industry is trying to develop in Canada today—and by today I mean the last month or two—and they need these machines which represent millions of dollars to Canada and Canadian producers. May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Pickersgill: Even though it is a little late, Mr. Chairman, before you leave the chair, and for the benefit of the record, I should explain that there seems to have been a good deal of misunderstanding about the press report which the hon. member for Vancouver East referred. I am informed by my colleague the Minister of National Defence that there was no suggestion whatsoever that any member of parliament was being screened in any fashion at all.

Mr. Pugh: What is it all about?

Mr. Pickersgill: I do not know what it is all about. I did not make the statement referred to. All I am saying is that the Minister of National Defence tells me there is no thought of screening any member of parliament. This is a perfectly normal type of official visit being made in a perfectly normal fashion, and I was able to assure the hon. member for Vancouver East of this before he left and, I think, to satisfy him.

Mr. Woolliams: May I ask the Secretary of State a question? Does he not have in mind an article on page 5 of today's Citizen in which the following appears?

> The Commons defence committee has been informed that it cannot be given security information by north American air defence command headquarters because its members have not been checked for security by the R.C.M.P., Chairman Maurice Sauve said Monday.

I take it the Secretary of State is telling us either that the chairman has been misquoted or that the government does not agree with his statement.

[Mr. Gundlock.]

Mr. Pickersgill: I think the hon. member could perhaps find out from the chairman what he meant.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

Mr. Gundlock: Mr. Chairman, as I was saying at six o'clock I wanted to bring to the attention of the minister and the committee a particular point with reference to items discussed earlier by certain hon. members. The question was asked why action had not been taken under the previous government. I want to make this point very clearly to the minister and his advisers because I think it is most important not only to the house but to Canada as a whole.

I gave an example which admittedly is an old one. I referred to the fact that automatic stock waterers were exempt while automatic stock feeders were not and are not exempt. The real point I should like to make to the minister and his advisers is this, and it is a new one, not an old one. This came about in my constituency only a week or two ago and I think the same thing applies throughout Canada. New industry is developing in Canada and certain items, as in the case of my previous example, are not listed and are subject to duty.

I do not want to leave the impression with you, Mr. Chairman, or with the committee or Canadians as a whole that we are striving to have more and more exemptions made possible for Canadian users. The real point that I think the minister and his advisers should take into consideration is this. I do not think we should have to fight here in committee to have exemptions made for certain articles. I think it should be made known throughout Canada if these articles are manufactured in Canada, and I see no reason in the world that they cannot be or should not be. If they are not available I think they should be made available to Canadians in order to increase secondary production and particularly primary production in the field of agriculture, because whether we like it or not we must admit that across Canada agriculture is one segment of the economy which one might say is in the lower brackets. It is not at the top of the Canadian economy.

Before we move on from this item I want to emphasize, by way of repetition if I have to, the fact that we are not making these arguments just to belabour the government. We are arguing in favour of increasing Canadian production. We are not rehashing old arguments. As I pointed out earlier, I have a letter here dated as recently as July 11 with respect to a new industry trying to establish itself in my constituency. I do not mean to be selfish by talking about my constituency, and in any event what I am saying applies all across Canada. I referred to the example of stock feeders. I referred to corn coolers, milk coolers and hydro coolers. Hydro coolers are actually only a magnification, if that is the proper word, of these other things. The fact that they are not listed here and apparently are not obtainable in Canada places a very great hardship on a new secondary industry, an industry that Canada needs badly. This is borne out by other speeches we have heard this session.

I should like to leave that thought with the minister. I am not belabouring the point at all. I think they should be made in Canada and perhaps they are available, but as far as this company knows they are not. They are not listed, so the company is hampered in developing a new secondary industry.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I had hoped that the minister would tell the committee and the country generally what is included in the words "all other farm machinery" in item 409f. It appears to me and to many others that very little is included in "all other farm machinery". This afternoon I listed a number of types of farm machinery that could come under those words and I thought at one time that the minister was going to give us the directive that the department issues to its officials across the country. Surely that is not asking too much. Surely the minister can make available to us the directive that the department issues to officials across the country in order to clarify once and for all what is included in "all other farm machinery". I listed a number of items this afternoon and I can think of several more. We have been dealing with hemp and woven material. I can think of lariat rope which is used on many farms; but there is a duty on lariat rope coming in from the United States. Certainly that is something used in farming or ranching in southern Alberta and could very well be classified under a broad definition as a piece of farm equipment. Yet a duty is paid on it. Could the minister outline for us what directive the officials receive across the country with regard to this all-inclusive clause in item 409f?

Mr. Gordon: We seem to be back on an item that was dealt with some time ago. This particular item to which the hon. member seems to be objecting is just as it has been for many years. It is designed to allow the importation, free of duty, of all items that are not otherwise provided for. I suppose I can go on repeating the explanation I have given so often, but there is nothing new about this proposal. It has been in the tariff for some time. It is intended to cover all agricultural machinery items that are not otherwise provided for. But, as I say, we have already dealt with this particular item.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I know there was a discussion of this item this afternoon, but the minister has not really dealt with it by way of explanation. He mentions repeating himself, but I have listened very carefully to his remarks and while he has been very kind in enlightening me and the committee on many items, he has not given us an explanation of this matter. I will admit that this item has been in the tariff, but the difficulty I have run into in the last couple of years is trying to ascertain what is included in the phrase "all other agriculture implements". I heard one definition this afternoon to the effect that all agricultural machinery must be on wheels and movable. I took that to be the definition, but I do not believe it is enough. I think it should be wider, and cover a wider range of equipment. It is for this reason I am pressing this argument this evening.

I believe the minister should be able to give the committee an outline of the definition given to officials across the country. No matter in what part of Canada you are, the goods you buy go through the various customs ports such as Calgary, Drumheller or Regina. Nine times out of ten the officials at these places have to make a ruling on a piece of equipment, and surely they have some directives to follow in this regard. All I am asking the minister for this evening is to have his officials give us some idea as to what agricultural implements are included in this item.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, this matter was mentioned earlier this afternoon. I think a great deal of the trouble arises, as has been pointed out by many members today, from the restrictive and unrealistic definition of the word "machinery". I am referring to farm machinery. As I understood it, earlier today the minister undertook to review this matter with his officials with a view to redrafting the section. I trust that my understanding is correct.

As the minister pointed out at the time, he would not want to redraft the section on the spur of the moment. I think anyone would agree with that. However, it was my understanding that the minister gave an undertaking that some time in the very near future he and his officials would go over this with a view to redrafting the section, so this problem would not occur as often in the future as it has in the past. In fact we would hope it would not occur at all. Perhaps the minister could tell us whether or not I was mistaken in this understanding.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not believe we can say that this particular minister is the one under whom this problem developed. I have always believed that the spirit of the law is important. I think what everyone has missed, particularly the officials, when they were discussing this matter with the minister, was this: What was really intended was that all equipment, whether you call it machinery or equipment, that can produce a dollar on the farm would be exempt from tariff. As the hon. member for Acadia mentioned, we are paying duty on lariats. What I would suggest with the greatest respect is that the wording be changed.

I should like to refer now to the leading case before the privy council in 1936 in which they dealt with the word "banking". I want to draw this analogy. In 1867 we defined the word "banking", and it did not include the lending of money. When the Social Credit government come into power in Alberta they passed certain measures controlling the lending of money. This particular piece of legislation went all the way through the courts to the privy council. Lord Simon said, in that particular decision, that the word "banking" like other words must grow with the economic factors and circumstances of the country. This is what the hon. member for Acadia has been talking about. Basically, the point he has been trying to make with the officials is that farm machinery is not being treated as farm equipment or being defined so that the farmers of western Canada can understand the definition.

This is the problem. We cannot put any blame on the new minister, but I would suggest that his departmental officials think about this and either give us a new interpretation or redraft the section so that the term "farm equipment" encompasses the whole field and includes any equipment that goes to make a dollar on the farm. I do not believe the minister realizes it, but when I raise this question I do so because millions of dollars have been spent and will be spent in irrigating western and southern Alberta. These irrigation companies are really co-operative companies formed by the farmers. They have complained for many years when the old Liberal government was in power, when the Conservative government was in power and now when another Liberal government is in power, that although they use this equipment in farm operations they are paying a tariff on it. Political science professors have pointed out that when it comes to tariffs, and it is time the country understood this, there is no difference between the philosophy of one party and another in this house. These recommendations are made by the tariff board and if they mean upping the tariff, the Liberal party ups the tariff. They have always painted a picture of themselves as being the low tariff party. They are no more the low tariff party than any other party. We are trying to plan the economy in such a way that it will help all Canadians. I am glad the Secretary of State is here because he spent four or five days last session on this very subject we are discussing now.

Let us get a definition that is workable. This is what all the argument is about. There may be some who feel there is a filibuster going on. There is no filibuster. The farmers want to know where they stand so far as farm machinery is concerned. I have seen articles in the press to the effect that important things come before this house in the dying days of the session, and yet the opposition has remained silent. They allowed these important matters to go through. This is important today to the people of western Canada, and that is why members like the hon. member for Acadia are asking these questions. I do not see the hon. member for Medicine Hat present. He should be questioning this item because he represents a farming community. The farmers of western Canada want a clear-cut definition. That is all they seek. I am coming back to that point when it comes to eastern irrigation equipment. Millions of dollars have been spent and millions of dollars will be spent, and if they are paying tariff on this farm machinery they want to ask the officials why.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Before it carries, surely the minister can give some idea or outline of what is included in "other agricultural machinery"?

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I think we are out of order. We are now on item 610.

Mr. Woolliams: When did you join the Liberal party?

Mr. Gregoire: We did the same with you last year. We tried to help you and you did not want it.

Mr. Woolliams: We know what help you gave.

The Chairman: Order. For the enlightenment of the hon. member for Lapointe we are not on item 610. We have passed that item and are on the general resolution No. 1, I should add that it seems to me we are getting a little far from the principle of that resolution, and I would ask the co-operation of hon. members in limiting their remarks to the resolution.

Mr. Grafftey: I appreciate your guidance, Mr. Chairman, but before we close off discussion on resolution No. 1 I think it is important that we arrive at a proper definition regarding agricultural machinery and uses. I am not necessarily asking for an answer tonight, but the minister did make a remark, when I was asking questions under a specific item, that it would only have effect under the excise tax resolutions. It is important we arrive at a good definition of machinery or goods for agricultural use under this resolution, because I am sure all hon. members would agree that by analogy we could easily argue it would have effect on the excise tax resolutions.

I should like to bring to the attention of the committee a typical situation that exists in eastern Canadian agriculture. Very often a piece of machinery that is imported is not specifically designed for agricultural uses. It could be a tractor that might be employed in other commercial uses, but a farmer buys that particular machine because it happens to fit into his particular agricultural operation. He may be a small farmer in Quebec or Ontario —and I am sure the same situation holds true in the west—who often has to use the tractor outside his farm to gain extra revenue.

It is very easy for us in the ivory tower of Ottawa to say that he should get a prior ruling, but he does not get it. Then an inspector comes along and says he is using the machinery principally for non-agricultural purposes. We have gone through this in other parliaments but, as the minister explained so ably an hour or so ago, in practical effect this discussion today would only bear on the excise tax resolutions.

Mr. Gordon: The definition may not be perfect but is exactly the same as it was when the hon. member was parliamentary secretary to the minister of finance. I would also like to say I was relieved to hear the hon. member for Bow River say there was no thought on his part of filibustering this particular resolution, and I am sure that is a fact. On the other hand I feel and suspect that some of the questions that have been asked were asked a little earlier this afternoon. Perhaps if we had some new questions it would be easier to deal with them.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Those remarks tempt me to rise once again. The minister said the definition is the same as it was before. I am not saying it is changed; all I am asking is, what is the definition for all other agricultural implements? The item says all other agricultural implements and agricultural machinery. To me the word "implements" is different from the word "machinery." I would call a lariat an implement. It assists a farmer or rancher in his work. I am using this an an explicit example, and I think it should be covered in item 409f.

Some hon. members say we should pass the resolution, but if it is passed now it will not be re-opened until the next budget comes in. I want the definition now, so that we will have the benefit of it for the coming year, and so that we will not have to go into it again next year. We have only one chance to review the budget resolutions and we should avail ourselves of it to make sure we know what changes are proposed.

I think the hon. member for Bow River made a very good point when he brought out the idea that legislation is enacted in the concept of growing. Certainly the term "agricultural implements" or "agricultural machinery" should be considered as a growing term in the legal sense.

We have complained to the department over the last two years that agricultural implements are viewed as though we were still back in the horse and buggy days, but all across Canada we are advancing rapidly out of the horse and buggy days where agricultural machinery is concerned. The minister said the definition is the same as it was before. We want to know what it is and whether it is broad enough to cover the growing aspect of automation in the whole farm machinery picture. Before the resolution passes I hope the minister will give us some outline of the directive that is issued to departmental officials all across Canada.

(Translation):

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, I wonder why the Minister of Finance will not give the clarification asked for by the hon. members of the opposition.

The minister replied a while ago that the definitions were the same as those figuring in the provisions of the legislation during the last parliament.

Well, what we are asking for is to get some easing or some clarification so that farmers will know what agricultural machinery will be exempt from excise tax and customs duties. Surely it is not when people rise and show arrogance that the discussion can come to an end; this is no way to speed up passage of this budget resolution.

Nowadays, farmers are modernizing their farms. They buy some quite expensive implements and when they go to work outside the farm to get some additional income, they immediately have to pay excise tax and duty on that machinery.

We are asking the minister and his officials to set up a catalogue of the implements which must be considered as farm machinery. Is this determined on the basis of manufacturing conditions or of the use made of them?

It is merely in order to get such clarification that we urge the minister to give us an answer. It is surely desirable that he should stop being stubborn and co-operate with opposition members so that we will know where we stand in order to accelerate the passage of this resolution.

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to reply to this particular question because I do not think the hon. gentleman was in the chamber this afternoon when I answered this question—

(Translation):

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I must say that I was present in this house this afternoon and I may add that I am perhaps more often in the house than the Minister of Finance, for I am not in the habit of blundering and of slipping away because of my arrogance. I am anxious to do my duty.

The Chairman: Order. I recognize the Minister of Finance.

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I had no thought of suggesting that the hon. member was not a diligent attender at the sessions of the house. However, I did think that when I answered this particular question he might not have been present. But if he was, perhaps I did not notice him, and I usually do notice him. If he was here, I apologize. If the hon. member was here he will remember that I said in reply to this particular question, put to me by somebody else, that an agricultural implement as such is, under the tariff, an implement that is specifically designed for agricultural use.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Gordon: May I finish, please. I daresay there can be some misunderstanding as to what is or what is not specifically designed for agricultural use. But if there is any doubt about it, the doubt can be resolved very quickly by applying for a definition or a ruling from any of the many branches of the Department of National Revenue.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I think the whole point has been missed. I am not trying to be difficult, sir, believe me, but the minister has just said that a machine must be designed for farming, and therein lies the difficulty. Many machines designed for many things are used in agriculture. I think we should have the wording—this is how I think it should read—to cover all other agricultural implements or agricultural machinery which serves farmers and ranchers in their operation of business. This is the point, and I am going to labour it for a moment.

The hon. member for Acadia this afternoon dealt with snow clearing or snow blowing equipment. It may be necessary to have snow clearing equipment to get your products to market. If this equipment is used in agriculture in that regard, it should be free of tariff. The minister says the machinery must be specifically designed for this purpose. I have the greatest respect for the department—and I know they are always behind the minister—but they must grow in the way I stated when dealing with the growing philosophy of that earlier case. The fact is that equipment should be exempt if it is used in agricultural operations of any kind or form. This is what we are trying to make clear. If we could get such a statement from the minister there would be no hold-up of this item as far as I am concerned, and I can almost speak for the other hon. members who represent large farming constituencies throughout Canada.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I have only—

The Chairman: The hon. member for Cariboo.

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Chairman, I am rising to say that in this matter I agree with hon. members who have just resumed their seats, because this is something that not only affects farmers but other people as well. I believe hon. members who have just spoken are right in pursuing this question in order to obtain an answer. I would hope the minister would, in the genial atmosphere of this chamber, rise and tell us that steps will be taken to settle this matter. I hope he will say that anything used in agriculture and which can definitely be shown to be used in agricultural production will be reckoned to be such by the various people he mentioned as being those to whom we could apply for a ruling.

If the minister cannot say now that the ruling will be this or that, when the application is made it is only common sense that the officials are going to say, "It is not of a class or kind that comes under these tariff exemptions" and we will therefore be stuck with this problem. I agree with the hon. gentlemen who have dealt with this matter; I think they are absolutely right.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, there is a suggestion I would like to make which might help us out of the difficulty. In view of the restrictive way in which the phrase "farming machinery" has been interpreted to date, I would hope my suggestion would help solve this problem. I am sure hon. members on both sides of the house have had this difficulty and, as the hon. member for Bow River pointed out, nobody is for a moment suggesting that the Minister of Finance is in any way to blame, because this terminology has been used in the tariff item for years. But it has become an acute problem in the last couple of years, during which time it has been brought to my attention, because of the new types of farm machinery which do not fit into the restrictive interpretation of the word "machinery".

Naturally one could not expect the minister to redraft the terms of the act on the spur of the moment, because this is a very complex matter. However, I would suggest to the minister that between now and the time the budget bills come down he might discuss the matter with his officials and the Minister of National Revenue and perhaps some way could be found out of this difficulty. Nobody would, of course, expect the minister to make some suggestion now on the spur of the moment, but perhaps he would give an undertaking that he will discuss the matter with his colleague the Minister of National Revenue and his officials, and when the budget bills come before the house some arrangement might have been made.

Mr. Mandziuk: Mr. Chairman, I fully realize, as do all hon. members, that the Minister of Finance is anxious to balance his budget and therefore he wants every dollar he can get. Perhaps I can suggest something that will throw the odd dollar up his alley. I agree with everything that has been said by my colleagues on this side of the chamber, that every item of farm machinery should be spelled out so that those who import this type of machinery could buy it knowing it to be tariff free.

However, we have the other side of the coin. We should also have a list of machinery which is subject to tariff, which is used for agricultural purposes and which, according to the law, is of a class or kind made in Canada but enters free of tariff. I have one item in mind to which the minister might give consideration. I refer to cabs for tractors and combines, which are made in a factory in Manitoba right in my own constituency, of material better than anything imported from the United States, at a price which meets and beats that of the United States article. Yet these cabs come in tariff free from other countries, and we are up against it in this regard. I suggest that the Minister of Finance should look into this matter. This is one item that is made in Canada by Canadian labour, Canadian brains and with Canadian finance. If anything should receive a little protection, I think this article should, because it is an agricultural implement. These cabs are used on tractors, and our tractors out in the west are used in all kinds of weather conditions. They are mostly used on the farm. It is true that often a farmer will take a tractor out to open up a highway, and he is then accused of not using his tractor for agricultural purposes and the excise boys get right after him. That is not fair, if he has no other way of getting to town, which is often the case. These cabs keep the farmer warm while he is driving the tractor; they shelter him from rain. The same cabs are made for every make of combine. I suggest the Minister of Finance take this under consideration, and it being a product of a class or kind made in Canada it should get the protection it deserves.

Mr. Pigeon: I have only one remark which may resolve the problem. The minister is rapidly finishing so he can consult his experts.

Mr. Gordon: I am sure that was an ingenuous remark and I will accept it as such. A lot of very useful suggestions have been made in the course of this debate and I can assure all hon. members that they will be taken up and considered very seriously. I think the hon. member for Oxford suggested that it should not be expected that the Minister of Finance should make a snap ruling in these matters, and I thank him for that suggestion. The hon. member for Marquette made a different kind of suggestion, and I was very interested in his exposition of what was being done in his constituency. I will draw it to the attention of my colleague the minister of industry. I think all hon. members will agree that some of these things are not susceptible of being resolved on the floor of the house in a few minutes or even a few hours. All I can do is assure hon. members that everything that has been said will be considered as carefully as it deserves.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I realize the minister will carry out to the letter what he says, but I am not satisfied with the definition he has given the committee. He stated that agricultural implements are specifically designed for agricultural uses, and if so they are allowed in under this all-inclusive item 409f. I want to point out to the minister and his officials that air-cooled motors, whether made by Briggs and Stratton or anyone else, are not designed specifically for agricultural use. I am sure the minister and his officials agree with me when I say that. Yet a farmer can buy them in Canada duty free if he fills out a declaration that they will be used exclusively on his farm for agricultural purposes.

An air-cooled motor does not fit the definition the minister just gave us. Why cannot a whole host of other implements used on farms today be handled in the same way as air-cooled motors? To my knowledge there is no reason why a farmer cannot fill out a form and swear that the implement he is purchasing will be used on his farm. The minister says, in effect, that this is the directive issued to the officials, that the machine must be designed specifically for agricultural use. I was not here when he said that this afternoon, but if I had this matter might have been cleared up a lot earlier. The minister's definition of 409f does not console me at all. If air-cooled motors can be purchased by farmers for agricultural use, duty free, then I submit a whole host of other machines could also qualify. I used as an example a lariat. To me a lariat is designed for catching cattle.

An hon. Member: You mean for hanging.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Someone says for hanging. I think a bigger rope is used for hanging. If the hon. member knows anything about ropes he can check with me later.

Mr. Woolliams: If the hon. member stays here he will hang himself soon enough.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The Minister of Agriculture, coming from the great city of Calgary, will agree with me that they have been using a lot of lariats recently in that city. A lariat is designed specifically, I think we will agree, for agricultural use.

Mr. Pickersgill: Can I make an offer to the hon. gentleman. I will be glad to pay the duty on any he needs for the next couple of years.

Mr. Woolliams: How about the rest of the population of Alberta? Is the hon. member so fat and healthy and so financially wealthy that he can afford them?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would buy two for the hon. member for Bow River.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I want to assure you, Mr. Chairman, that I cannot be bought.

Mr. Pickersgill: Not even with a rope?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Not even with a rope or the offer of a supply of ropes for the next two years. I am not going to be bought that easily. I was sent here by an agricultural constituency basically and many of the items I have mentioned this afternoon have been brought to my attention over the years by my constituents, and I will continue to work for the clarification and the easing of any tariffs which may be imposed upon agricultural implements or implements used for agricultural purposes. It makes me proud to feel that I have so many cohorts on this side of the house who are working so hard for the reduction of tariffs. I am proud to say that I worked for five years on these items and did succeed in making a number of changes to item 409f. But I did not accomplish everything, and perhaps that was because I had not the assistance of the brains the hon. member for Red Deer has in his party.

I am also proud to say that I did not vote for this budget, which is more than the hon. member for Red Deer can say. He is one of the people who want higher taxes imposed on the Canadian public, whether they be farmers or otherwise. He voted for the 11 per cent tax. I am trying to reduce taxes on agricultural products. I think this is a vital issue to the members sent here by the farmers in agricultural ridings. We are discussing resolution No. 1 which deals with the duty on agricultural implements. This sort of resolution comes up for debate only once a year after a budget, and this is the one time when hon. members have the chance to make changes.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to hear from the minister how he justifies his definition of agricultural implements when air-cooled motors which are not designed specifically for agriculture, but are nevertheless used in a multiplicity of ways throughout Canada, are allowed in. Certainly the same provision should be made for a host of other machinery used for agricultural purposes. I should like to hear the minister explain the definition his department uses in this regard.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, first of all I should like to say I am very surprised to hear these hon. members speaking so loudly this year on these matters when last year we never heard about them.

Mr. MacEwan: You were not around, that is why.

Mr. Gregoire: In fact, I think I hear it for the first time. Last year they did not say a word. They had six years in which to do that. What have they done? They never presented a budget last year, yet this year they are crying out loud. Why did they not do this before? They say: "Why don't you join the Liberals?" We have not changed sides. We remain here. Hon. members to my right are the ones who changed. Why? Because last year they stuck to their benches. They never got up.

An hon. Member: How do you know?

(Translation):

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) will agree that as far as his comments are concerned, he must limit himself to the substance of the resolution that is being discussed.

(Text):

Mr. Gregoire: Very well, Mr. Chairman, I think I have made my point. I think they can understand it. If they were mute last year, I hope they will not be blind this year.

We are discussing the problems of the farmers. I know they have problems. In particular, we are discussing the excise tax, not the sales tax. If we try to help the farmers by making unwise reductions in the excise taxes, we might be making trouble for the workers of this country who are ready to build equipment and materials to be sold to our farmers. We have all kinds of industries able to furnish equipment and machinery to our farmers. By abolishing these tariffs we might not help the workers of our country.

(Translation):

The workers of our country who can manufacture that farm machinery will find themselves out of work if an attempt is made to remove the customs duty on all that equipment and that machinery, whether it be snowplows or other material. Our workers would then be deprived of work in our factories, because taxes being higher in Canada than in other countries, prices are higher.

That is why customs tariffs were established, in order to protect Canadian industry. Otherwise, our workers, as well as various other classes of society, would suffer from unemployment, because Canadians would not buy production equipment. Farmers would be the first to be affected, because they would no longer be able to sell their products.

Mr. Paul: I rise on a point of order. In my opinion, the consideration of this resolution is not an occasion for setting forth a theory on production and consumption. We are considering a particular resolution and I would ask the hon. member for Lapointe to abide by the provisions of standing order 59(2).

Mr. Gregoire: I will try to be more to the point than the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinonge-Delanaudiere. We are at present discussing a clarification of the Customs Tariff. I am not one of those who would like to increase the tariff to protect industry, but when it is increased inconsiderately, we are asking for retaliation. But there are some reasonable limits to favouring exports without risking retaliation.

I am not an expert, but I believe that those remarks are relevant to the item before us more particularly because of the many exemptions found in the Customs Tariff concerning the importation of many items in our country. This is why, Mr. Chairman, we must assist industry in Canada so that it may produce our farm implements. All sectors of our community, the retailers, the farmers or the labourers must, first of all patronize Canadian production. That way our whole community will benefit, and particularly those who are actively engaged in production, because Canadian products will then be marketed in our country.

We believe industry should be protected not with high tariff walls but with normal tariff. Mr. Chairman, we do not object and let us not be accused of being Liberals, as was mentioned a moment ago, because in connection with the 11 per cent tax on building materials I did not hesitate to protest as I will do again if need be. When the time comes I will again enter the debate because we do not talk for the pleasure of hearing our own voices. When there are improvements to be adopted, we must set aside all partisan and political considerations, which is not what the Conservatives have been doing for the last few hours.

I would like to conclude by saying this: I am very happy to see that the Minister of Finance, while introducing this resolution, has not deemed necessary—and had he done so we would have blamed him for it—to impose a tariff surcharge that would have been more prejudicial to this country than the present problems.

(Text):

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I should like to say a few words after that verbose speech. The hon. member made some strong remarks directed, I suppose, against myself and other members who have been fighting hard to make a case on behalf of farmers all across Canada so that the items they need, the implements they use, might be available to them at a cheaper cost so that they in turn produce more cheaply. He suggested that I had been very quiet in the recent years. Let him check back in Hansard at any time; I wager I made just as many speeches last session as he did.

An hon. Member: Not as intelligent, though.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I will let the public judge as to their relative intelligence. In any case I am pleased to see exactly where the Social Credit party stands with regard to the question of lower tariffs on farm machinery. Apparently they are opposed to this idea—I gather so from the remarks just made by the hon. member. That party has three spokesmen now, the hon. member for Lapointe, the hon. member for Red Deer, and the other more notorious hon. member who they are trying to get rid of. They really should not worry about him because I am sure when they do get rid of him the hon. member from Lapointe can fill his boots without much trouble.

I wish to deal with resolution No. 1 which includes this first item 409f, which the minister has suggested the committee should adopt. Perhaps, after study, we should adopt it. I am sure I will be satisfied if the minister would inform the committee and myself how air-cooled motors are brought in under the definition he gave us a while ago—that of implements used for agricultural purposes.

Mr. Gordon: Would the hon. member like me to give him his answer right now?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Fine.

Mr. Gordon: The motors he is referring to come into Canada duty free under 409q.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Thanks. I do not have 409q in front of me but I am accepting what the minister says. I intend to pursue this matter a little further, if hon. members will bear with me. I would not want to think the Liberal backbenchers were trying to suppress free speech by interrupting what I have to say.

The Chairman: Will the hon. member kindly resume his seat. I should like to remind the hon. member again that in the course of his speech he should try to limit his comments and remarks to the resolution before the committee.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I would be pleased to limit my remarks to resolution No. 1. I must admit I was sidetracked by some comments thrown at me and I apologize for more or less allowing myself to be baited. I will deal with resolution No. 1. The minister stated that air-cooled motors are brought in under item 409a.

Mr. Gordon: Item 409q.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Well, I was close.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, if I could have your attention for a moment I should like to deal with what the minister said. He suggested that air-cooled motors to be used for agricultural purposes come into Canada under item 409q and are exempt. Fine. All I am saying is that all the other implements that I and other members have suggested should also come in under one item or another and be exempt. We only have a certain number of items before us and that is why I am dealing with the items that are before us.

I should like the minister to comment on this proposition, and it does not necessarily mean a change in these items. However, before resolution No. 1 passes I should like to hear the minister comment on this suggestion with regard to the wording: "All other agricultural implements or agricultural machinery which serve farmers and ranchers in their operations, not otherwise provided". Surely it could be made clear with those two or three or six additional words. It could even be shortened. You could say: "All other agricultural implements or agricultural machinery used in agricultural production". Maybe those three or four additional words would solve the situation and give a clearer understanding to the officials all across the country and a clearer and more precise understanding to all people wishing to buy machinery for use in the development of their farms, something that we very much want to see them do. The farmers have been in a cost-price squeeze over the years and we have all been trying our best to help them to meet rising costs.

I do not want to be a party to any group which suggests that we should not lower tariffs. I think the principle was initiated a good many years ago that farm machinery, whether it comes from England, Ireland or anywhere else in the world, should enter Canada duty free.

Mr. Pickersgill: By Mackenzie King.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The tariffs have been reduced gradually since 1897 by various governments, and I think the record will prove that is so. Certainly I read in the Gordon economic report that the Conservatives removed just as many tariffs as the Liberals did. If hon. members want to check that, it is in the Gordon royal commission report.

Mr. Gordon: What page?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I can give you the page. If you will bear with me a minute I will look it up. I think the principle has long been accepted in Canadian agriculture and in the Canadian parliament that agricultural machinery should come into Canada duty free. Certainly farmers today are purchasing tractors and combines. These are the big items in farming today on which the farmers spend their money. Nearly 50 per cent of the money spent by farmers on agricultural machinery is spent for the purchase of tractors. They are duty free, but here we are quibbling about smaller accessories. If large machinery is allowed to enter duty free certainly the principle should be well established that accessories should also enter duty free whether they be lariat ropes, a snowplow or a piece of fence—

An hon. Member: Or a calf.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): —or steel boxes, or what have you. The principle is an accepted one in the Canadian parliament since away back in 1897, and the tariff was gradually reduced from that time onward. Surely, therefore, we should accept the idea put forward this afternoon that the definition should read "all other agricultural implements or agricultural machinery which serve farmers and ranchers in their operations". Surely that would not be straying from the principle or bringing any new concept into the legislation. Certainly not. There is no straying from the principle, no straying from the concept or intent of the original legislation. It would be no trouble at all to add three or four words to that particular clause.

I do not really think it has to be done by way of amendment tonight, as long as we have the assurance of the minister that the department will issue a directive to officials all across the country so that from now on all machinery used on farms for agricultural production will enter Canada duty free, and so that all the farmer will have to do if duty is charged is to sign a declaration similar to that used in the case of air-cooled motors. All the minister has to do is accept the principle that all farm machinery should come in duty free.

As far as the government is concerned there is no particular amount of money involved here. The government is budgeting for a deficit of nearly $800 million, but there is no great amount of money involved here as far as they are concerned. There is a great deal of money involved, however, in the case of the farmer who is trying to automate by adding to his machinery and thus perhaps lowering his expenses. He may buy a machine to take the place of a labourer or something like that. But certainly there is no deviation from the principle in the argument I am trying to present. There is no deviation from the original concept, and I can see no harm in the minister saying that this resolution will now be interpreted to mean that it includes all machinery for agricultural purposes. I should like to hear the minister comment on my suggestion with regard to the issuing of directives to officials across the country on the ruling respecting all agricultural implements.

Mr. Danforth: Before the minister replies may I say that I am sure the minister perhaps does not appreciate just how serious this matter is. Some of us who have been in the house for some years have followed the principle he laid down this afternoon of making representations to the department and accepting rulings on various types of machinery with regard to which we had requested a ruling. In nearly every instance, unless it was covered specifically in the regulations, the rulings went against the persons applying for exemptions from duty under the act.

I think that perhaps one of the basic reasons for this is the fact that agriculture is progressing much faster than the regulations covering it. In various areas of Canada today tremendous amounts of money are being invested in machinery used for agricultural purposes. One reason I cannot accept the minister's definition tonight with regard to agricultural implements and agricultural machinery arises from the fact that there are instances now where air conditioning is being used for livestock buildings, and by no stretch of the imagination can anyone say that air conditioning was designed specifically for agriculture.

We are very much concerned about this matter not only because there are a great many implements involved but because some of the implements are extremely costly and the imposition of a tax makes quite a bit of difference in the cost price to the farmer. We are also concerned about the great number of new implements coming on the market each year which are designed specifically to advance the automation of agriculture. These are the things we are vitally concerned about and this is why we feel some help should be provided. I believe that the minister was sincere and earnest in his presentation this afternoon, but as far as we can gather there is no intimation that the procedure to be followed will be any different from that followed in the past. This, sir, is not good enough for the farmer of today. He wants to know when and how he can get the necessary relief that we feel is so desirable at this time.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, since this question is of great interest to the farmers of this country, we would appreciate very much hearing the views of the Minister of Agriculture on this matter.

Mr. Gundlock: I dislike taking up the time of the committee at this moment, but there are several hon. members who have made a reference, indirectly, to the Canadian people, and I do not believe it should be allowed. As a matter of fact, there was a reference directly to hon. members beside me in another party. The hon. member even went so far as to say, "Where have you been for the last two years?" I might ask him the same question, and I am referring to the hon. member for Lapointe.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Gregoire: Is that a question?

Mr. Gundlock: Yes, that is a very direct question.

The Chairman: Order, would the hon. member resume his seat? When remarks along this line were made by an hon. member a moment ago I called him to order and I am doing the same thing in these circumstances.

Mr. Gundlock: I thank you, Mr. Chairman. I should like to remind you, and other hon. members of the house, of what has been said in this committee. As a matter of fact, we were talking about the development of Canadian industry. We were not criticizing for a moment. Actually, we were asking the minister, or calling his attention to the need for the development of Canadian secondary industry. Earlier, Mr. Chairman, I quoted from a letter dated July 11 from one of my constituents. It is not dated two years ago, but is dated 1963. I think other hon. members of this house might do well if they read their mail, and they might find one of these letters from their own constituents.

Mr. Woolliams: I am going to be brief, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: I still think the minister could get around this difficulty, and I say this with sincerity—

An hon. Member: Can we believe you?

Mr. Woolliams: It is all right for you people, but somebody has to be concerned with the farmers, and we certainly happen to be concerned about them.

While I am answering, and in spite of the fact you brought several members to order tonight, Mr. Chairman, I want to answer the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. He said that it was the government of Mackenzie King that set down the terms of reference when farm machinery came into this country free of duty. Let him come forward tonight with the evidence that farm machinery coming into this country was at any time subject to a tariff, either under a Conservative or a Liberal government.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will accept that challenge right now. The duty which previously was on farm implements was taken off completely in the budget of 1945.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Not all machinery.

[Mr. Gundlock.]

Mr. Pickersgill: The hon. gentleman can find that out very easily by looking up the budget speech, which perhaps would be a profitable exercise.

Mr. Woolliams: I said all machinery.

Mr. Pickersgill: I said farm machinery.

Mr. Woolliams: I said all farm machinery, and that is my answer to you.

I want to go back to what I was saying before I was sidetracked by the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. I still say that this problem could be solved if we could have an assurance from the minister that all agricultural implements or agricultural machinery which serves farmers or ranchers in their production, would be free from tariffs. We have heard from the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who has expounded on the idea to get rid of tariffs. They are supposed to be the tariff free party. Let us have some evidence of what they have been preaching since the days of confederation.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Let us have the evidence.

Mr. Woolliams: We are asking for only one thing, that you assure the farmers that whatever equipment they use for production will be free from tariffs. Surely, that is not too much to ask from the Minister of Finance or his department tonight.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Acadia has roamed everywhere from lariats to snow blowers during this discussion. I do not think it is inappropriate that he should be concerned with blowers. It certainly should be a matter of vital concern to him. He also professes to speak in this house on behalf of all the farmers of Canada. It may be that he speaks on behalf of the poor, downtrodden impecunious wheat farmers, but I think there are other farmers in Canada. I think, in that regard, the hon. member for Lapointe stood head and shoulders above the hon. member for Acadia when he made his statement.

The farmers I represent—and I represent some too—are quite willing to have some reasonable concession in the tariff such as we have at present whereby the farming community and the industrial community can live in harmony. This enables the industrial workers to have money with which to buy farm produce. I think all this item attempts to do, when it comes to giving protection, is to put a tariff on those items which are produced in Canada, so that the Canadian manufacturer—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It does no such thing.

Mr. Greene: If this is not the case, Mr. Chairman, then the seatmate of the hon.

member for Acadia is off on a different tangent. This is the trouble with the party across the way: The left hand never knows what the right hand is doing. The hon. member's seatmate has just finished requesting protection for his industry at home, which is exactly the kind of thing this item attempts to do. It attempts to give some freedom from tax on machinery, but at the same time give protection to those items which are made in Canada, I think this is what the measure does. I think this is what most of the farmers in Canada want, irrespective of what the hon. member for Acadia may believe his constituents want.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I had no intention of speaking again on this item, but the hon. member for Renfrew South tempts me to do so, as does the silence of the minister. The hon. member said that resolution No. 1 exempts from duty those items not manufactured in Canada and puts a tariff on those items manufactured in Canada. Well, Mr. Chairman, if members did a little homework or at least paid some attention to what is said in this committee, they would surely know that Cockshutt tractors were at one time made in Canada, and may still be made in Canada. Well, tractors have come into Canada duty free for many years. How does that apply to this item?

Mr. Grafftey: It doesn't.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Certainly not, it does not. Item 409f of resolution No. 1 deals with items which shall be exempt from tax, and it includes three additional items specifically, aluminum sluice type devices for controlling water in irrigation ditches, haystack forms and heaters for orchards. Those are the only three items that it includes specifically. This is the reason the whole debate has been engendered. We want all agricultural implements, and all implements used for agricultural purposes, allowed in duty free; and as I pointed out the major, big and costly items now used in agricultural production do come in duty free. I am sure the minister will agree with that concept, and that his party will, even though it may have many members who want protection. They have retreated from one position to another and now they may well be termed accurately the high tariff party of Canada.

In rising to speak on this item I certainly feel I represent my constituency, but I also realize that in coming to this great place one must speak for those things which are beneficial to all Canada. I have tried to make my remarks general enough to include the east and the west. I do not want to belong to a party that wishes to split Canada between east and west, as the party opposite now does in agricultural matters. I do not want to become a part of that thought. I want Canada united. I want farmers in eastern Canada to enjoy the same privileges as farmers in western Canada.

I want farmers to be able to get their implements in duty free. This is a principle that has been established over the years. As matters stand now, if a farmer is a particularly good arguer and is sufficiently cantankerous, whether he be in New Brunswick, Renfrew, Calgary or Drumheller, he can convince a departmental official that what he is importing qualifies as an agricultural implement and he can have the 20 per cent tariff taken off.

This matter should be explicitly nailed down this evening, particularly since we have spent so much time on it, and since so many hon. members have shown such a great deal of interest in it. We should at least accomplish something this evening for the benefit of farmers all across Canada.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I know that many hon. members do not care about farm problems. They want to see this carried and they think these matters are not important. I know there are people in Canada who do not care a hoot about the farmers; but the farmers are the backbone of the nation and of the economy of the country, and will remain so for a good many years. Members of the Social Credit party wish to put this through in a hurry, but we can solve this sticky problem this evening if the minister will give an assurance he will discuss the matter with his officials and ensure that the words in item 409f will include all machinery used for agricultural purposes, or used for the production of agricultural goods.

Mr. Greene: Air conditioners?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I hear a chorus of nonsense coming from the other side of the house. Certainly if radios help to produce more milk, then they are agricultural implements. The hon. member for Renfrew South owns a dairy farm. It is a great dairy country down there, and they grow a little tobacco once in a while if the Liberal party does not outlaw it. I think Webster would agree with me when I say a proper definition of the word "implement" is a tool used to assist somebody in his work. I am sure some highly trained legal advisers would agree with that definition. It is a tool in this case used to assist farmers, and this afternoon the hon. member for Lethbridge suggested that automatic feeders should also qualify. Certainly they are a tool used to assist in the feeding of beef cattle, and I am sure the Minister of Agriculture would agree with that.

So far we have had nothing but silence or nonsensical quips from backbenchers on the other side with regard to the suggestion I have tried to make within the last hour.

An hon. Member: Why not within the last five years?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Surely some of the backbenchers opposite represent farmers in eastern Canada? I know there are not many of them represent farmers in western Canada, but those who do represent farmers must know this is important and should bring pressure to bear on the minister and his officials. We should have this definition made clear once and for all.

I do not want to propose an amendment to this tariff item. I do not want to go into that detail. All I am asking is that the minister issue a directive to the officials all across Canada that from now on machinery used in the production of agricultural goods shall come into Canada duty free. This is nothing new. It is a well established principle and a concept that was agreed upon by parliaments years ago.

I am taking this opportunity to express my views and thoughts on the matter. Some hon. members say this should have been done earlier. I agree wholeheartedly with them; but because it was not accomplished earlier, I am trying to accomplish it now. It is not a question of getting re-elected or not. It is a question of coming down here and doing a job.

As I said before, I represent a constituency largely devoted to agricultural production. You might well term me an agricultural representative, and I see no harm whatsoever in arguing on behalf of the farmers, even though some hon. members would like this item to pass hurriedly. I sat quite patiently this afternoon while the committee dealt with textiles. There are no textiles produced in my constituency.

All I am asking now is that the minister accept the principle which was established years ago that all agricultural implements should come into Canada duty free. The concept has been proven in law that the interpretation of legislation must grow with the economy. This definition of agricultural implements has not grown as it should have in the past number of years.

(Translation):

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I would like to draw your attention to the fact that the hon. members do not have to hear the same sentence repeated more than ten times during the same day.

(Text):

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I have been in politics for only a few years but I have found that the only way to accomplish anything is to repeat your request until results are achieved. If I have to repeat it a number of times for the particular hon. member, in order for it to sink in, I guess I am prepared to do so. If he is not interested in agriculture, fine. When he wants to debate textiles, or whatever it is, I will be prepared to listen to him. But if I find him too much to stomach, I will go behind the curtain.

Some hon. Members: Now?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am not asking for the impossible. I am not asking that the resolution be changed. All I am asking is that the definition and the directive sent out to officials across the country be broadened and widened to take in the whole scope of this now vastly automated agricultural economy in which we are living. Certainly that is not too much. Certainly we as legislators cannot continue to allow the existence of this problem which so vitally affects our primary industry and the life of our farmers. We cannot continue to view it as though we were still in the horse and buggy days. We must advance our views on this important subject. We must bring our views up to date if we are to be effective, if we are to bring about legislation which will accomplish the aims of the legislators.

This is all I am asking this evening, to raise our sights; to have a new fresh look at the agricultural industry as it exists in Canada today; to bring our views and opinions up to date on what this industry needs and what it is doing. Certainly if we are to bring about legislation which is accurate and effective, and if we are to bring about proper changes in item 409f, we should apply our minds to this problem. It has been the complaint with regard to this item that unless an item is specifically listed here you have to pay duty on it. I do not think it is possible to list all the agricultural implements or agricultural machinery used for agricultural purposes, because these implements, machinery and the agricultural economy are continually changing. What is not used in farming today may be used in farming tomorrow. That is why I am opposed to the idea of three items being added to this resolution today. I am opposed to it because three is not enough; you must add a whole host. I do not think we could possibly add enough. We must, with regard to this all-inclusive clause at the bottom, "All other agricultural implements or agricultural machinery", take it to mean precisely what it says. "All other" is what it says, and we must take it to mean precisely that. If the minister would rise and say yes, that is what it means, I would quickly sit down—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): —and for my part this item could pass. If the minister would rise and say yes, the all-inclusive clause includes all other agricultural implements and machinery. I would be satisfied. But certainly we should not lose this opportunity of presenting our views, of strongly arguing the case for farmers all across Canada that tariffs in connection with agricultural machinery and implements should be reduced.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the section already reads, "All other agricultural implements". My hon. friend might read the section; that is what it says.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak to the point of order. The hon. member seems to have missed the point. We are not complaining of the use of these words in the section; it is the interpretation applied to them to which we object. Certainly equipment used on the farm or used in the production of agricultural products has not been free of tariff, and unfortunately some of these producers have to quibble and argue with the department. Sometimes they win; sometimes they lose. That is the point the hon. member for Acadia and other hon. members have been trying to make this afternoon. The hon. member raises a point of order, but I say this discussion is in order; what the hon. member is discussing and wants clarification on is the law as applied to this item.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): That is exactly the point.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member for Acadia would permit a question, then.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Certainly.

Mr. Greene: The hon. member has referred to the words "all others", which are already in the section. One of his associates on the other side of the house has said he wants, I take it, air conditioning equipment included. I wonder whether the hon. member for Acadia would include air conditioning.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): If it is used in agricultural production, certainly I would include it. The interpretation of "air conditioning" may well include refrigeration. Who would not allow farmers to use refrigeration for some of the perishable goods they produce? It is certainly a "must" on all vegetable farms and it is certainly a "must" on many agricultural farms across this nation of ours. It seems strange that the hon. member should now interrupt and say, "But it does say 'all other agricultural implements' ". Where does he think I have been reading from most of the evening? All I ask the minister to do is rise and say, "Yes, we will now interpret that to mean all other implements".

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Yes.

Mr. Pigeon: Yes, as long as it is an intelligent one.

Mr. Gregoire: Suppose some farmers live on an island and have to have a yacht to go across to their island; would the hon. member include the yacht under this item?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I am not going to comment on the "ifs" and "ands" of what I would do, and so on and so forth. I am being sidetracked by these comments.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I was in the position where I was going to say something.

Mr. Mandziuk: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Yes.

Mr. Mandziuk: The hon. member addresses all his questions to the minister. Supposing the minister does not know, or has no knowledge of agricultural implements? Perhaps the hon. member should address his questions to the officials here.

Mr. Pigeon: Or the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Mandziuk: Or the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, I have been trying to make my remarks general, and on two or three occasions this afternoon I asked the Minister of National Revenue particular questions. Earlier this evening I asked the Minister of Agriculture for assurance with regard to several items which I mentioned, and I took his silence to mean he was in agreement with me; and I am sure he was, on those particular items. To get back to the subject and the point I am trying to make—

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Yes.

Mr. Scott: I have sat for 4¾ hours now listening to this interesting discussion. I wondered whether the hon. member could give us some kind of economic reason why the farming community should be singled out for this special type of concession against any other section of the economy. I am perhaps giving him additional leeway to get going again, but I would be interested in hearing from him some purely economic reason for granting these particular concessions to the farmers as against any other part of the industrial community of Canada.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Well, I am not going to be sidetracked by this question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Oh, I would love to deal with it. Certainly we all know the conditions which existed throughout Canada and the position the farmers were in. The Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of Trade and Commerce have just been out to western Canada, where they saw a wonderful crop in the growing stage. But who knows whether at this very moment tonight hail might not wipe it all out. A year ago the air force had to fly grasshopper poison to the aid of farmers in western Canada. Farming is a very risky operation and livelihood. A crop is never harvested until it is in the bins and even then it may spoil. Farmers have no unemployment insurance or many of the other insurances of other classes of business. All one need do is look at the income figures to see how farmers eke out a living providing for their families as best they can. Perhaps the hon. member was serious in his question, but this is the first time I have ever known a New Democratic party member support higher tariffs on agricultural machinery. I am sure the former premier of Saskatchewan knows full well the hazards farmers face from day to day and from year to year.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, on a point of privilege; I was not suggesting we were dealing with the tariff one way or the other. What I was asking the hon. gentleman, and obviously he is not the slightest bit interested in responding, was to give us a logical, economic reason, instead of a lot of hollering and shouting such as we have listened to over the last four and a half hours.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am sorry if I appear to be hollering and shouting. I tried to answer the hon. member's question but I do have to contend with a continual and nonsensical yapping, and I have found that if I raise my voice I drive my point home a little more quickly. I want to sit down. I am tired of pressing this argument. One has only to look at the figures to see the incomes of the farmers throughout Canada. I am arguing the principle which has been accepted by parliament in years gone by. It is a well established principle and I do not want to go back and rehash it. I am asking the minister and his department to accept this concept wholeheartedly and to interpret the word "implement" as I think it should be interpreted.

An hon. Member: Explain.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Now they want a definition of the word "implement". My definition, which I am sure will be supported by Webster, is that it is anything used as a tool for the aid or assistance of the person using it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): They can laugh. Perhaps some of them have mowed their lawns recently. Well, a lawnmower is an implement, but not necessarily an agricultural implement. Perhaps they have actually hoed a garden. In this case the hoe would be an implement but not necessarily an agricultural implement. If one turns on a sprinkler, then the garden hose to which it is attached would be an implement. It is assisting in the spreading of water on a lawn, but it is not necessarily an agricultural implement.

An hon. Member: What about a rake?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The minister and his officials will agree deep down that this is a realistic and a proper view of the word. The hon. member for Renfrew South, if he were minister, would apparently agree that the broad concept of agricultural implements should be accepted, and I think the minister should stand up and say: "Yes, this is my interpretation and I will so direct the officials throughout Canada". That is all I am waiting on.

If the minister will be kind enough to do that we can pass on to other items, and I only wish his backbenchers would give him the opportunity to stand up before they immediately holler "Carried".

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, in view of the fact that the hon. member for Acadia was unable to give the committee the reasons for his argument I should like to do so on behalf of this group. I think his argument is soundly based. If an examination were made of the bureau of statistics figures the return per thousand dollars invested in Canada in agriculture compared with the return per thousand dollars invested in industry can be ascertained. Reference was made to yachts in a rather playful manner, and I understand farm transportation is exempt from duty. Would the minister include as an agricultural implement a launch required by a farmer who had no other means of transportation but water?

Mr. Gordon: A number of different points come into this general area of discussion. I was asked about radios which were used to help hens produce more eggs. Radios are also used for other purposes so they are not exempt.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): So are air-cooled motors.

Mr. Gordon: I was also asked about trucks used by farmers. Trucks are used by other people for other things so they are not included in the definition. The same applies to the launch. This is a difficult subject. I dare say the whole tariff should be revised and rewritten from top to bottom. I have asked questions about this from time to time and have been assured it is a ten or 12 year job, perhaps longer. That is not a reason, in my opinion, why it should not be attempted, but it is certainly beyond the scope of this committee to do it tonight.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am not going to be too long. I realize that I have been battling this afternoon and evening against a high tariff party, a protectionist party, a party who wants to maintain high tariffs—

Mr. Gordon: I wonder if the hon. member would allow me to make a brief comment on that. He made reference to high tariff parties and even at one stage purported to quote from a royal commission report with which I had something to do. He said he did not know the page he was quoting from. I would refer him to pages 438 and 439. As to high and low tariff parties—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Give the information to the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate. He wanted the page.

Mr. Gordon: —and that sort of thing, I would remind him— am I right in saying this?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I understood that in committee it was customary for ministers to consult with their officials. It is a good custom, and if I may be permitted to do it I will probably avoid trouble. As I was about to say, the net result of all these tariff changes is a reduction in tariff, not an increase. If what the hon. member has in mind is that tariffs should be reduced drastically, I would suggest to him, with all deference, that he take this idea to the next convention of the Conservatives and see whether it is approved by that body.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The minister's last remarks might in the long run point to the quickest way in which I will get this done. I realize that this party will very soon be sitting on the other side of the house and, when we are once again in office, we will be able to give a better definition of the word "implement". I have the Oxford dictionary here. It states that an implement is a tool or an instrument. That is good enough for me. I would think the cowboys in the Calgary rodeo last week would have had a hard time trying to rope a calf without a lariat. I would think that many agriculturists in western Canada, including the Minister of Agriculture, would declare that the automatic feeders on his lot are a tool and should be regarded as an agricultural implement. I know. I have put up with a lot of interruptions from backbenchers opposite. I have had to cope with an attitude of disinterest. I do wish to thank the senior member of the New Democratic party for supporting my argument to some extent at least. I realize that the minister may not have been on a farm recently.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I was on my farm last week end.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am pleased to hear that. It really pleases me to think that the minister was on his farm. Up to this time I had no idea he had a farm. Anyway, he has not shown me he has any concept of what a farm implement is. He told us they were easily seen and categorised. Well, he is not prepared to broaden the scope of the decisions which have been made.

I do not intend to persist in this. I know the minister does not intend today to go ahead and act on the suggestions I have made. However, he has a record which suggests that tomorrow, or the day after, he may think otherwise. His record suggests he can readily retreat from a position he has taken, and this may be the case in the present situation. I have enjoyed defending and representing the farmers in my constituency and across Canada this afternoon and evening. It disheartens me to some extent to note the lack of interest taken in this primary industry by backbenchers opposite. But I am pleased to learn that the minister has a farm and that he was on it during the week end. I hope that when he visits it from now on he will see things he did not see before.

An hon. Member: Air conditioning.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Maybe not at his farm, but perhaps if he goes into the areas concerned with tobacco growing he would learn something about that, too.

I have taken up enough of the committee's time.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I am sure that if the backbenchers over there have not learned anything, the officials have. I believe the minister will, tomorrow, take a new look at the implements on his farm and that if he has the privilege of bringing in another budget, changes will be made in this respect in another year. In saying this I am, perhaps, accepting defeat, which I find hard to do, but the officials and the minister may rest assured they will hear from me in the future by way of letters until the principle which has already been long established is carried out to the letter.

Item agreed to.

Resolution agreed to.

2. Resolved,—That schedule B to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking out item 1012, and the enumeration of goods and the rate of drawback of duty set opposite that item, and by inserting therein the following items, enumerations of goods and rates of drawback of duty:

The Chairman: The first item is 1008.

Customs tariff—1008. Materials, woven, knitted, bonded, braided or felted, whether or not pleated, folded or sewn.

When used by manufacturers of hats in making bands for, or in binding the edges of, men's hats, 99 per cent.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I have only one remark to make. I notice that in item No. 2, there is a word which translators failed to translate into French, perhaps because it was difficult to convey its meaning. I wonder if we could not be given at least an explanation of what is meant exactly by the word "drawback".

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: Put in simple language it means the duty is paid when the goods come in and is refunded when they are exported; when the goods are used for the specified purpose, or exported, the duty paid on their importation is refunded.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Could the Minister of Finance be asked to see that his experts find a French translation for this word, Mr. Chairman?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: I would be delighted to do that, and if the hon. member for Lapointe has a suitable suggestion to make as to an appropriate word I hope he will give me the benefit of his suggestion.

Mr. Gregoire: I will try to help, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Grafftey: With respect to resolution No. 2, I should like the minister to tell us whether I am right in saying that the new item 1008 is as recommended by the tariff board.

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Chairman, this resolution arises directly from the tariff board's report on textiles. It would implement changes which the board recommended in the drawback provisions relating to certain materials used in the production of hats and caps.

Mr. Grafftey: I should like to ask the minister if the old item 1012 is almost the same as 1009. If there is a difference, would the hon. gentleman say where it lies?

Mr. Gordon: It is very similar. The new item is more precise.

Mr. Grafftey: It is simply a case of increased precision.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I do not know if this item can be related to the import of British woollens, but I remember that when we were on the government side, we had increased the tariff on the import of British woollens. We on this side of the house, remember also the questions which had been raised, the objection for example of the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate (Mr. Pickersgill). I would therefore like the Minister of Finance to tell me whether these customs duties which we had increased to protect the Canadian textile industry will be maintained or whether they will be reduced to their former level?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: These drawbacks apply to imports from all countries but they happen mostly to affect imports from the United States.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I would ask the minister whether it is possible to be more explicit in his answer, because he has not answered my question. I ask the minister whether the government will maintain the customs tariff on imported British woollens.

The hon. members of the previous opposition, especially the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, objected when the Conservative government raised the tariff on imported British woollens in order to protect our textile industry. So I ask the minister whether the present government will maintain that tariff at its present level or reduce it to its former level.

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, this particular resolution involves felts and synthetics and it does not involve the items about which the hon. member was talking.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—1009. Woven fabrics in the web. When used in the manufacture of linings for men's or boys' hats or caps, or in the manufacture of buckram shapes for women's or children's headgear, 99 per cent.

Mr. Grafftey: Is this as recommended by the tariff board?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Chairman, some time ago.

Mr. Grafftey: For clarification purposes, could the minister explain in a general way what effect this has?

Mr. Gordon: It just makes it a little more specific than it used to be.

Item agreed to.

Resolution agreed to.

3. Resolved,—That schedule A to the customs tariff be amended by striking out tariff items 535, 535a, 535e, 535g, 538c, 539, 569e and 575, and the enumerations of goods and the rates of duty set opposite each of these items, and by inserting therein the following items, enumerations of goods and rates of duty:

The Chairman: The first item is 540a.

Customs tariff—540a. Grasses, seaweed, mosses and vegetable fibres other than cotton, not coloured, nor further manufactured than dried, cleaned, cut to size, ground and sifted; oakum of flax, hemp, or jute; coir and coir yarn: British preferential tariff, free; most favoured nation tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, after some degree of examination I have been able to ascertain that resolution No. 3 merely renumbers items in consequence of various changes. In the first resolution we noted that there were some entries having to do only with renumbering. Could the minister explain in a general way the method of renumbering used?

Mr. Gordon: The purpose of this resolution is to renumber eight existing tariff items so as to fit them into the revised tariff schedules. This is the point at which it was desirable to fit them into the revised tariff schedules. There are no changes in substance.

Item agreed to.

Items 540b, 540c, 540d, 541c, 541d, 568 and 569g agreed to.

Resolution agreed to.

4. Resolved,—That schedule A to the Customs Tariff be amended by striking out tariff items, 180e, 180f, 188, 206b, 208x, 237a, 296g, 399a, 431h, 440m1, 440n1, 462d, 462i, 469, 478 (2), 570a (2), 597d, 696 (1) and 703b, and the enumerations of goods and the rates of duty set opposite each of these items, and by inserting therein the following items, enumerations of goods and rates of duty:

The Chairman: The first item is 9i.

9i. Feeds for use exclusively in the feeding of trout: British preferential tariff, free; most favoured nation tariff, free; general tariff, 25 per cent. On and after July 1, 1964: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; most favoured nation tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, this resolution provides for a miscellaneous group of amendments, mostly of a relieving nature, affecting 22 different tariff items. As hon. members may have noted, the effect of several of the proposed amendments is to enlarge the scope of existing free entry items by adding the words which are shown in italics. It is also proposed that several items which provide for the free entry of specified goods for limited periods of time, for example, heavy water, borate ore for use in fighting forest fires and aircraft of types and sizes not made in Canada, be extended for further periods.

Item 703b deals with the tourist exemption and I might make special reference to it. The proposed amendment to 703b would provide statutory authority for a reduction in the tourist exemption. That is the amount which returning Canadians may bring in duty free and which has already been in effect for more than a year. It was introduced by order in council P.C. 1962-903 of June 24, 1962.

No doubt many Canadian travellers to the United States and other countries woud be glad to make use of larger exemptions if they were available. However, experience shows that this change is making a substantial and relatively painless contribution to improving our balance of payments on travel account.

Since 1936 tariff item 703b has provided that Canadian residents returning from abroad after an absence of 48 hours may bring in with them free of duty goods to the value of $100 provided four months have elapsed since their last claim. In 1958 provision was made that in addition to the $100 basic exemption a resident returning from overseas after an absence of not less than 14 days might claim an additional exemption of $200. If advantage is taken of the special exemption no further exemption, basic or special, may be claimed for a further 12 months.

The statutory provision relating to the tourist clause has not been amended since 1958. However, P.C. 1962-903 of the 24th of June, 1962 had the effect of reducing the basic exemption to $25 and the special exemption to $75. The limitation is having a substantial effect on imports. In the six months July to December, 1962, total imports under item 703b were only $19.6 million compared with some $43 million in the corresponding months of 1961. Imports from the United States dropped from $35.6 million to $12.9 million for the period. In the peak year of 1960 total imports under the item were $82 million of which $71 million were from the United States.

Taking account of undeclared imports and expenditures for accommodation, the total net saving in our tourist account with the United States attributable to the change in the exemption is likely to be of the order of $70 million to $80 million per annum. Other factors, including changes in exchange rates, are also contributing to an improvement in the over-all balance of our travel account. We had a deficit on travel account in every year from 1953 to 1962 inclusive. The deficit reached a peak of over $200 million in each of the years 1959 and 1960. It declined to $160 million in 1961 and $50 million in 1962. In 1963 we are likely at least to break even and may well have a surplus.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, I should like to put two brief questions to the minister. Can he inform the committee as to the total effect this resolution will have on the balance of ways and means? There is another point I should like to bring up briefly. I have compared the tariff items in the resolution before us with the items that were introduced in the last parliament but not passed, and I have noted that some of the items in the resolution under discussion are items that were included in last year's resolution while some of them naturally are new items proposed by the new administration. I was able to find on close examination that the following items included in the last budget resolutions are in the current tariff resolutions, namely, 206b, 237a, 296g, 431h, 440m, 440n and 696. I have noted that while item 409f was in the last tariff resolution it is not in this resolution, and the minister explained to me an hour or two ago where it was picked up. I have noted that item 611a in the resolutions we brought before the last parliament, which I believe relates to some type of hospital goods, is not currently before us. Has the minister any explanation?

Mr. Gordon: The answer to the first question about the effect of these changes on the balance of ways and means is that it is negligible. In so far as the tourist exemption is concerned, there may be a slight change in this year's against last year's but it is not appreciable.

On the other points that the hon. member raised, there has been an attempt to do a bit of a clean-up job here and pick up a lot of loose items that were presented last year to the house but were not passed. In respect of the two items to which he referred specifically, the first one that he pointed out has been dealt with in another place and the hospital shoes item has been dropped as these products are now being made in Canada.

Mr. Grafftey: Only temporary relief was asked for originally?

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. Gordon: That is right.

Mr. Knowles: My question was in the same vein as the first part of the question just asked by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi. I, too, had in mind what I think was Bill No. C-81 of the last session of parliament. As the minister knows, it got first and second reading and we got started on third reading, but it was never passed. Nevertheless, as I understood it at the time, certain of its provisions were brought into effect subject to the passing of the bill. Now, will the bill based on this resolution take care of that situation so that any changes that were proposed by the last bill will now have the force of law?

Mr. Gordon: That is correct, Mr. Chairman, except for the item on hospital shoes which is now being dropped and which was a temporary item to allow these products to come in free. They are now being made in Canada. Apart from that one exception, the answer to the question of the hon. member is in the affirmative.

Mr. Grafftey: May I ask just one general question in the way of clarification before we go into the item by item examination of this measure? Am I correct in assuming that all the changes we are about to examine came about as a result of the normal operation of government business and did not involve tariff board recommendations?

Mr. Gordon: That is correct, with the exception of the item dealing with architects' plans and drawings.

Mr. Thompson: I should like to ask a question of the minister relating to item 9i. I notice you are removing the tariff on this item of feeds for trout farming, and then after a delay of one year you are reimplementing it. Does this mean that these feeds will be manufactured in Canada between now and that time?

Mr. Gordon: This item is related to the many representations which have been received from commercial trout farmers in British Columbia. The imports of trout feeds are estimated at around $30,000 annually. The representations for free entry were supported by several members of the house and by the government of British Columbia. I should point out that there are three Canadian producers of trout feeds in Canada. The government has been informed that these products have proven unsatisfactory for the raising of trout. Since there is a Canadian producer of trout feeds, it is proposed that free entry be for a limited period and a careful review will be made before the item comes up a year from now.

Mr. Nowlan: Before we deal with the individual items, I may say that I did not quite catch the figures given by the Minister of Finance. He told my friend from Brome-Missisquoi that he did not think this particular resolution would affect materially the balance of ways and means. I am not prepared to debate that with him at this time. However, I would take it that the minister would agree that the items dealing with restrictions on importations by tourists would materially affect the balance of payments deficit.

I am speaking from memory now about matters with which, at one time, I was fairly conversant, but this relaxation of controls on imports by tourists going abroad would substantially lessen the deficit in the balance of payments, and has had a very material effect in dealing with this problem at this time and will continue to do so in the future.

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I am delighted to confirm that fact. I think that is what I said in my remarks.

Mr. Barnett: In reference to item 9i, the minister was good enough to draw my attention to this item when I raised a question earlier in the committee's proceedings. I had in mind a question related to the one asked by the hon. member for Red Deer with regard to the reimposition of the tariff. I gather that the minister said representations on this subject have come principally from British Columbia. I could not quite follow what he said about manufacturers in Canada, but I have here a copy of a letter which was addressed to someone in British Columbia from the Quaker Oats Company, which apparently does manufacture fish food.

They point out in this letter that the matter of freight makes it prohibitive for the products of their plant to be shipped as far west as British Columbia. They mention that they have had some inquiries from Winnipeg, but even at that distance the freight was almost prohibitive. I was wondering in view of the suggestion in the resolution that this tariff be reimposed, whether the minister had made any inquiries to ascertain whether a manufacturer in Canada would be capable of producing a satisfactory formula anywhere in the western part of the country. I mention this particularly because in this letter the Quaker Oats Company indicates they are manufacturing under some form of licence a formula which is essentially a United States formula. The complaint that was heard in British Columbia was that no suitable formula was available in Canada.

Mr. Gordon: I gathered most of the complaint was that the form of trout feeds produced in Canada had proven to be unpalatable to the trout and that the manufacturers, at least one of whom resides on the west coast, are now trying to produce some more tasty package for the Canadian trout. If they can do that to the satisfaction of the trout and the people of British Columbia, then no doubt their own product will be acceptable in place of the imported product.

Mr. Barnett: This is the first reference I have heard to the matter of a tasty feed. However, I have been informed that a demonstration has been conducted by one of the trout raisers in the constituency of my friend from Fraser Valley, who also has raised this question with the minister. Whether it was a matter of palatability or not, I do not know, but I understand that two demonstration tanks of young trout were kept, one of which was fed an imported formula and the other some local formula, and whether or not it was because the trout did not like the formula, apparently the difference in growth rate was rather remarkable. I think that is perhaps an important consideration.

Mr. Gordon: I can assure the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, and I am sure all hon. members who are interested in fishing will agree with me, that one of our main objectives must be to produce a proper form of feed or a feed that will be acceptable to these trout and will make them grow larger and larger.

Mr. Barnett: If I may just conclude, I wish to thank the minister for his helpfulness. I was going to say that if by the time we are considering this matter in committee next year this form of agriculture did not appear to be all that was desired, I may be seeking the assistance of the hon. member for Acadia in this particular cause.

Mr. Gordon: I shudder to think that may happen, but I am grateful for the warning.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I have been very quiet in this debate but I have a couple of questions to ask the minister. With reference to item 597d, musical instruments, I see an addition is practice chanters. How does he classify practice chanters as musical instruments, and what organizations made representations in this respect?

Mr. Gordon: I am glad to have an opportunity to give this explanation. As most hon. members know and will agree, the bagpipe is a long established and well loved musical instrument without which many Canadians would find it difficult to get along. Without what is known as a practice chanter it would be impossible to train new generations of bagpipers, and so those who feel it is important that a new generation of people grow up who will be proficient in playing the bagpipes, felt if bagpipes themselves should come in duty free then it was only right and proper that the importation of practice chanters should be similarly facilitated.

The representations that were made to the department came from various people, and I think it is fair to say most of them were of Scottish origin.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The discussion is getting ahead of the Chair. I should point out that we are still on item 9i.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—180e. Plans and drawings, related specifications, any substitute therefor, reproductions of the foregoing except reproductions of Canadian originals, for the manufacture, assembly, erection, installation, operation or maintenance of machines, test sets, engines, apparatus, appliances, plant equipment, and parts thereof: British preferential tariff, free; most favoured nation tariff, free; general tariff, free.

Mr. Grafftey: Maybe the minister would like to explain why under the old tariff we see, "free, free free" and then the various percentages underneath. Can we have any clarification relating to that?

Mr. Gordon: Items 180e and 180f implement the wording and rates of duty recommended by the tariff board in its report on reference No. 128, which covered engineers and architects plans, drawings and blueprints. They replace the former items 180e and 180f. The items were referred to the board for study following a recommendation by the House of Commons standing committee on estimates that they be reviewed. The board's report was tabled in the house on April 12, 1962.

Under item 180e plans of machines and plant equipment will continue to enter Canada free of duty. In addition plans of appliances and apparatus which were formerly dutiable will become free of duty under the new wording of this item.

Item 180f provides for plans for structures. Formerly architects plans for structures were dutiable at 12½ per cent British preference and 20 per cent m.f.n., while engineers plans for certain structures were free of duty. The board recommended that, in general, plans for structures be dutiable at the same rates whether prepared by engineers or architects. There is no change in the British preference and most favoured nation rates on maps and charts under this item.

Mr. Grafftey: I am just having a little difficulty scanning this item. Is there any change in the wording of these items as opposed to the rates?

Mr. Gordon: There are some changes in the wording, yes.

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. Grafftey: Are they indicated by italics in the changes before us here? Normally I can distinguish changes in an item when I see the italics, but I did not notice these items before.

Mr. Gordon: This whole wording was recommended by the tariff board.

Mr. Grafftey: The whole item is new then?

Mr. Gordon: Well, reworded.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—180f. Plans and drawings, related specifications, any substitute therefor, reproductions of the foregoing, n.o.p.; maps and charts, n.o.p.: British preferential tariff, 12½ per cent; most favoured nation tariff, 20 per cent; general tariff 27½ per cent.

Mr. Scott: I notice the general tariff has been increased by 5 per cent in this case. Is there some reason for it?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, the general tariff has no real significance. I am not too clear why it has been increased except that was the recommendation of the board.

Item agreed to.

Items 188, 206b, 208x, and 220b agreed to.

Customs tariff—237a. Deuterium oxide or heavy water; uranium in the form of pigs, ingots, billets or bars: British preferential tariff, free; most favoured nation tariff, free; general tariff, 25 per cent. On and after July 1, 1964: British preferential tariff, free; most favoured nation tariff, 15 per cent; general tariff, 25 per cent.

Mr. Thompson: I notice deuterium oxide will continue free until July 1 next year. Is that because it is expected that heavy water will be manufactured in Canada in sufficient quantities by that time?

Mr. Gordon: There are plans to manufacture it in Canada. If they have not been implemented by that time, then this item would be reviewed.

Mr. Thompson: Then carrying on with that item, why is uranium placed in that same position? Are we not producing uranium far in excess of our present needs?

Mr. Gordon: We are big exporters of uranium, as everyone knows, and its production in Canada is sufficient. There is not any concern about importation, and I suppose for that reason it is put in those words.

Mr. Thompson: Why would you be imposing a duty on it in the future when there is not one now?

Mr. Gordon: I think the suggestion was that by doing it this way we would have an opportunity to review the situation a year from now. If there has not been any change then presumably the same rates of duty would apply.

Item agreed to.

Item 296g agreed to.

Customs tariff—399a. Pipes or tubes of iron or steel, commonly known as "oil-country goods", being casing or tubing, fittings, couplings, thread protectors and nipples therefor; sucker rods, pony rods, polished rods and couplings therefor; seismograph drilling bits, in sizes three and one half inches to four and three quarter inches inclusive; all of the foregoing for use in connection with natural gas or oil wells: British preferential tariff, 5 per cent; most favoured nation tariff, 10 per cent; general tariff, 20 per cent.

Mr. Nesbitt: I notice there are additional items here of thread protectors and nipples. Are there no companies in Canada that produce these items, and from what countries are they normally now imported?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, the words in italics have been added to this item to eliminate a tariff anomaly. Thread protectors and nipples attached to imported oil or gas well casing or tubing are dutiable at the same rate as the casing or tubing, namely, 10 per cent most favoured nation. However if the protectors and nipples were imported separately by Canadian manufacturers of casing or tubing they were dutiable at 22½ per cent.

The addition of the words "thread protectors and nipples" to item 399a means that the Canadian manufacturers can import these articles at the 10 per cent rate.

Mr. Nesbitt: From where are they imported?

Mr. Gordon: Mostly from the United States.

Mr. Nesbitt: Are there any companies making these items in Canada at present?

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Pascoe: I was wondering in connection with the potash exploration in Saskatchewan, would their solution mining of potash come under this item, whereby they send down water and bring up potash?

Mr. Gordon: It would not come under this item, Mr. Chairman. I am not sure under which item it would come, but I shall be glad to make inquiries and let the hon. member know.

Mr. Pascoe: I wish the minister would, Mr. Chairman; it is very important.

Item agreed to.

Items 431h, 440m, 440n, 455, 462d, 462i, 469 and 478 agreed to.

Customs tariff—570a (2). Carpeting, rugs, mats and matting of paper; stair pads: British preferential tariff, 15 per cent; most favoured nation tariff, 22½ per cent; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, with regard to this item I was wondering whether the minister could give us a word of explanation as to the reason for these particular changes.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, the only change in this item is the deletion of the words "carpet lining". Carpet lining is an obsolete term and no longer has any meaning in the trade. Dropping these words from the item will not affect the coverage of the item in any way.

Mr. Nesbitt: As I understand it, Mr. Chairman, we are dealing with item 570a. I notice there is a change here under the general tariff from, formerly, 25 per cent to 30 per cent now, and I was wondering whether the minister could give us some explanation of the 5 per cent increase.

Mr. Gordon: It is of no immediate significance, Mr. Chairman, except that it is apparently customary in these schedules, where it can be arranged, for the general tariff to be double whatever the rate is for the British preferential tariff. But it has no material significance.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—597d. Musical instruments, namely: autoharps, clavichords, harpsichords, harps; bass viols, violas, violins, violoncellos; strings for the foregoing; recorders, xylophones; bassoons, clarinets, English horns, fifes, flutes, oboes, piccolos, saxophones, practice chanters; parts of the foregoing: British preferential tariff, free; most favoured nation tariff, free; general tariff, 30 per cent.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I have a question to ask the Minister of Finance on this item. I do not know whether it is intentional or whether he is practising racial discrimination in this regard. I see he has exempted many instruments from customs duty, including English horns, but he has not mentioned French horns.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I can assure the hon. member that no slight was intended. I will ask the officials of the department to go into this question very seriously and see whether the situation cannot be rectified next time the matter is before the house.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a few very general questions on this item. First, can I assume that the item relates mostly to instruments and parts of instruments of a class or kind not made in Canada? Second, will this item result in a substantial lessening of operation costs for our nation's major symphony orchestras and musical groups throughout the country?

Mr. Gordon: On the first point, Mr. Chairman, the hon. gentleman is quite correct; these various instruments are not made in Canada. On the second point, the only change is in connection with practice chanters, and this will be a great boon to the Scotsmen or would-be Scotsmen of Canada in the future.

Mr. Grafftey: There is just a rewording to cover practice chanters?

Mr. Gordon: That is all.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I should like to ask a question.

I note that two categories of musical instruments, the stringed instruments and the wind, are duty free under this item, but no brass is mentioned anywhere. Is there a special reason for that?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: I understand there is another item covering those.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I have another question for the Minister of Finance.

I note that all the stringed instruments are mentioned except the contrabass. Is there also a special reason for that?

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: The basses seem to have escaped the immediate knowledge of my officials, but we will be glad to look into it.

Mr. Grafftey: I trust the minister will excuse my asking this question, Mr. Chairman, but I understand there has been a rewording of the item by the addition of "practice chanters". Do the tariff changes relate to just parts of the foregoing, or parts of the foregoing and the instruments themselves? It should be clear to me, but it is not. Do the tariff changes relate to parts of the foregoing and the instruments also?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, Mr. Chairman, that is correct. But if I may, I should like to correct the answer I gave the hon. member for Lapointe. I think if he looks at this item again he will see that basses are included.

Mr. Nesbitt: Mr. Chairman, I would like briefly to take advantage of this opportunity of congratulating the minister upon including the item covering practice chanters. Those of us who live in communities which have a Scottish background, where there are many pipe bands coming along, will extend a vote of thanks to him. Of course, those who are not of that extraction might not enjoy it quite as much as those of us who are, and I include the minister in the latter category. I thank him for making this provision. The only comment I have on this particular section is that I think it is perhaps unfortunate that chanters are included with an instrument which is sometimes referred to as the ill-tempered clavichord; but apart from that I think everything that has been done in this connection is just fine.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—696 (1). Philosophical and scientific apparatus (and ancillary equipment thereto), utensils, instruments, and preparations, including boxes and bottles containing the same; maps, charts, photographic reproductions and other pictorial illustrations; video tape recordings; stencils and cards, specially designed for the preparation of library index cards; casts as models; animals as research or experimental subjects; living plants, seeds, cuttings, buds, scions, tubers, bulbs and root-stock; mechanical equipment of a class or kind not made in Canada; parts of the foregoing. All articles in this item, when for the use and by order of any society or institution incorporated or established solely for religious, philosophical, educational, scientific or literary purposes, or for the encouragement of the fine arts, or for the use and by order of any public hospital, college, academy, school, or seminary of learning in Canada, and not for sale or for rental, under such regulations as the minister may prescribe: British preferential tariff, free; most favoured nation tariff, free; general tariff, free.

(Translation):

Mr. Côté (Chicoutimi): With regard to item 696, Mr. Chairman, I should like to tell the minister that until now I agreed with him on several points, but this time I am not so sure.

In item 696, mention is made of "philosophical apparatus". The fact is I have never heard it said that there existed such a wonderful invention as a philosophical apparatus, which is referred to in the tariff item now before us. Consequently, if there really were such an invention, which could bring more wisdom to the hon. members who are in office at the present time, I would be in favour of letting that apparatus come into Canada duty free.

(Text):

Mr. Howe (Wellington-Huron): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the minister a question on this particular item. With regard to living plants, seeds, cuttings, buds, scions, tubers, bulbs and root-stock, will those items all come under the regulations of the Department of Agriculture in connection with this type of thing coming into Canada?

Mr. Gordon: Yes.

(Translation):

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Chairman, so that the house may know what this is all about, I would ask the Minister of Finance to define the expression "philosophical apparatus", including boxes and bottles containing the same.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, we really should have an explanation about that.

(Text):

Mr. Gordon: I can understand that there may be some little misunderstanding with this old-fashioned language. I think the reference to scientific apparatus is more apt than the reference to philosophical apparatus.

Mr. Pascoe: Mr. Chairman, at the end of this item it says "under such regulations as the minister may prescribe". Does that mean that these regulations will be changed at the whim of the minister, or are they definitely set down?

Mr. Gordon: This is an item which has been in the tariff for a long time. There are no regulations.

Item agreed to.

Customs tariff—703b (1). Goods valued at not more than twenty five dollars included in the baggage accompanying residents of Canada returning from abroad after an absence from Canada of not less than 48 hours and acquired by them for personal or household use or as souvenirs or gifts, but not bought on commission or as an accommodation for other persons or for sale, under such regulations as the minister may prescribe, British preferential, free; most favoured nation tariff, free; general tariff, free.

A resident of Canada shall not be entitled to the exemption herein granted within a period of four months from the date of the last exemption allowed, nor shall the exemption be allowed on alcoholic beverages in excess of one quart, or on tobacco in excess of 50 cigars, 200 cigarettes and two pounds of manufactured tobacco.

(2) In addition to the exemption provided for in part (1) of this item, a resident of Canada returning from a point beyond the continental limits of North America after an absence from Canada of not less than fourteen days may elect to avail himself of the following special exemption:

Goods valued at not more than $75 (not including alcoholic beverages, cigars, cigarettes or manufactured tobacco), acquired in overseas countries by residents of Canada during an absence from Canada of not less than 14 days and acquired by them for personal or household use or as souvenirs or gifts, but not bought on commission or as an accommodation for other persons or for sale, under such regulations as the minister may prescribe, British preferential, free; most favoured nation tariff, free; general tariff, free.

All goods admitted under the foregoing special exemption shall be declared by the resident at the time of his return to Canada, and any person who has availed himself of the special exemption is not entitled to any further exemption under item 703b within a period of 12 months from the date the last special exemption was allowed.

Goods entitled to entry under this tariff item shall be exempt from all imports, notwithstanding the provisions of this act or any other act.

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to see statutory provision being made for the changes in the tourist exemptions. This is part of a program encouraged by the former administration to take the greatest advantage of the tourist industry. For a long time there was a failure to appreciate the economic significance of this important industry. I know my hon. friend the Minister of National Revenue has always taken a keen interest in this subject but there is still some scepticism concerning the importance to the Canadian economy of this industry, particularly in relation to its impact on the exchange situation. I wonder whether the minister has any projections as to the possible impact this will have on the exchange situation in the ensuing year?

Mr. Gordon: Perhaps the hon. member was not in the house when I gave this information in introducing this resolution. I included a fair amount of detail. If he would like me to repeat it I will but he will find it all in Hansard.

Mr. Dinsdale: If the minister gave these projected figures I will see them in Hansard tomorrow.

Mr. Gordon: I did give them in some detail.

Mr. Leboe: With regard to the balance of payments position, is the minister not thinking primarily of the United States in connection with these items? I believe the influence of imports from Japan and Germany has had an effect with regard to price.

Mr. Gordon: I referred to the effect on the balance of payments, and our major problem here is with the United States. The big item in the tourist expenditures would be with the United States, although the tourist expenditures in other countries would have some bearing.

Mr. Leboe: Would it not be true that imports of a good many things tourists buy in the United States can now be obtained at lower cost, shall we say, from other places as well, and these imports would affect this matter as much as the $25 limit?

Mr. Gordon: I do not think so. I think the expenditures which tourists made a few years ago primarily in the United States were substantial. They are not spending their money in the United States to the same extent now. They are spending it in Canada or saving it, I do not know which. To the extent they are spending it in Canada, most of it would be spent, I would suspect, on Canadian manufactured goods, although some would be spent on imported goods too.

Resolutions 5 to 6 agreed to.

The Chairman: We will now consider the resolution respecting the customs tariff surcharge on imports order.

Resolved,—That it is expedient to introduce a measure in the following terms:

1. The order of His Excellency the governor in council of the 24th day of June, 1962, expressed to be made pursuant to subsection (1) of section 4 of the Customs Tariff and pursuant to section 22 of the Financial Administration Act, shall be deemed for all purposes to have had the same force and effect as if it had been validly made on that day pursuant to an act of the parliament of Canada that authorized the making of that order.

2. All rates of customs duties more favourable than those of the general tariff, and the benefit of any tariff more favourable than the general tariff, expressed to be withdrawn by the order mentioned in section 1, shall be deemed to have been restored on the 1st day of April, 1963, and from and after the 1st day of April, 1963 the rates so restored and any tariff the benefit of which is so restored shall, subject to the provisions of the Customs Tariff, apply as they applied immediately before the 25th day of June, 1962.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-87, to amend the Customs Tariff.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When will the said bill be read the second time?

Mr. Pickersgill: Now, by leave.

Mr. Nowlan: By leave.

Mr. Gordon moved the second reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the second time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Mr. Gordon moves that I do now leave the chair—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, we would not attempt to go into committee tonight on the bill. Perhaps we should now proceed to the first reading of the other bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be considered in committee of the whole? Next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCE

LEGISLATION RESPECTING SURCHARGE ON IMPORTS ORDER

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-88, respecting an order of His Excellency the Governor General in Council entitled the surcharge on imports order, and to restore certain rates of customs duties and tariff benefits expressed to be withdrawn thereby.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read a second time?

Mr. Pickersgill: Now, by leave.

Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Next sitting of the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Next sitting of the house.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder, in the circumstances, whether the house would consider going into committee tonight on the Customs Tariff. Of course, the bill is identical with the resolutions we have just debated. It might be we would dispose of it in the time remaining to us. There really is nothing new to it. Perhaps there would be general consent to do that.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Monteith: I feel that probably we would like to look at this bill. I know that if it is as suggested by the leader of the house it would pass in no time at all tomorrow.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: We have made very good progress today and I should like to express appreciation to all hon. members for their co-operation, as well as to certain hon. members in particular for some of the most fervent and extraordinary oratory we have heard in this chamber for a long time.

With respect to the bill we have just finished discussing, I think it would be better to leave it, now, until Friday because, notwithstanding what I announced last night, we would like, tomorrow—and I have spoken to the representatives of the parties opposite about this—to go back to the economic council bill and see if we cannot complete it tomorrow afternoon. This would mean a good deal of progress toward the goal which I think we all have in mind. Then we would come back and start afresh on the budget resolutions on Friday, with the resolution on the income tax. On Thursday, of course, we take the resolution on the Canada pension plan bill.

Mr. Nowlan: Can the leader of the house give us any indication of the order in which we shall deal with the other budget resolutions? I am thinking of the sales tax, for example. I have in mind the convenience of other hon. members. I am not speaking for myself.

Mr. Pickersgill: Subject to consultation with hon. members opposite we would perhaps take a few minutes at the beginning of our time on Friday to finish off the Customs Tariff, if I hear from hon. gentlemen that it is really a formality. This would give us something to send to the other place. Then we would go on with the income tax resolution on Monday, if we did not finish it on Friday, until it was completed. Immediately thereafter we would take the excise tax or the sales tax—it is the same thing—until it was completed. Then there are, of course, the bills which follow these two.

Mr. Gregoire: Can the Secretary of State tell us why it should be desired to begin the resolution on pensions before the federal-provincial conference has met? I think that matter should be dealt with only after that conference has been held.

Mr. Pickersgill: Is the hon. gentleman referring to the Canadian pension plan?

An hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Pickersgill: There is no thought of proceeding with that measure beyond the stage where hon. members would have had an opportunity to debate the general scheme which the government has in mind. The purpose of this, as outlined in the Prime Minister's letter to the premiers, was to make the scheme public so that there would be something to discuss at the conference. It is precisely so that we would not be in contempt of parliament that we wish to bring this forward at the present time. It would not be proceeded with. It would just be exposed here and hon. members would have an opportunity to say something about it. It would then be available for the conference to discuss.

At ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, July 17, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WOOLLIAMS—REFERENCE TO STATEMENT BY SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning a matter that is found on page 2234 of Hansard. My question of privilege, stated briefly, is that I suggest with the greatest respect that the Secretary of State misinformed the house yesterday, and did it deliberately, in respect of a question that I put to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

I should like to review the facts relating to this question of privilege. My question was this:

> Is it not a fact that Banks was admitted to Canada by a special order in council of the previous government?

Then the Secretary of State said:

> That is not a fact.

I did not have the facts with me at the time because the report of Mr. Justice Norris had just come out. I did just mention that at the time. I shall read the question of privilege I raised then:

> On a question of privilege, the Secretary of State denied an assertion which I made a few minutes ago, but I have now found the reference in support of what I had to say. I wish to read from page 312 of the report of the industrial inquiry commission on the disruption of shipping:
> "The order in council of July 6, 1954, which authorizes Banks' admission to Canada, was based on the fact that there was satisfactory evidence of his rehabilitation. He was granted status as a landed immigrant."

Then the Secretary of State compounded and made much graver an already grave situation because as the minister of citizenship and immigration of the former Liberal government he should have known the facts. This is what he said:

> It is correct that after Mr. Banks came to live in Canada he was given the status of a landed immigrant, but he was first admitted to Canada, it seems to me, immediately after the war and not at that time.

My question of privilege is this. This is a misstatement of fact. As the former minister of citizenship and immigration in the Liberal administration, the minister knew that a person is legally admitted to Canada when he is granted landed status. I am sure the minister was aware of that. I should like to refer to section 5 of the Immigration Act, chapter 325 of the revised statutes of Canada, which reads as follows:

> No person, other than a person referred to in subsection (2) of section 7, shall be admitted to Canada if he is a member of any of the following classes of persons:

Then paragraph (d) definitely affected Banks' admission to Canada, and it reads as follows:

> Persons who have been convicted of or admit having committed any crime involving moral turpitude, except persons whose admission to Canada is authorized by the governor in council upon evidence satisfactory to him...

At that time the Liberal government—that was in July, 1954—passed a special order in council admitting Banks to Canada. I suggest in this question of privilege that if that order in council were now rescinded Banks would go back from whence he came. I say the minister committed a grave misrepresentation when he misrepresented the fact that it was his government which brought Banks into Canada.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think what the hon. gentleman has said is perhaps good evidence of the desirability of certain hon. members of the house—and I am not referring to the hon. gentleman but to myself—keeping their mouths shut. What I said was literally quite correct, that Mr. Banks was in Canada and had been in Canada for quite some time, at the time that order in council was passed. Therefore in the normal sense of the word he was not admitted, because he was here. He had been admitted as a visitor a number of years before, and had been living in Canada for several years before this question that he should be given the status of a landed immigrant came up.

I do think that when the hon. gentleman brought the matter up on a question of privilege yesterday, I explained quite accurately what the situation was. I had no intention whatsoever of misleading the house, and if in any way I did in fact mislead any hon. member of the house, or any other person in Canada, I apologize; and I accept my full share of responsibility for the order in council that was passed in 1954.

CORRECTION IN THE "PARLIAMENTARY GUIDE"

Mr. Vincent Drouin (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I regret that the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) is not in the house, because my question concerns him. However, I should think that it will be possible for him to read my remarks in the official record and then he can give the necessary explanation.

I should like to bring to the attention of the house a fact which reflects on the honour and pride of all members sitting on this side. Indeed, it is with amazement that my colleagues and I read the curriculum vitae published at page 258 of Mr. Normandin's Canadian Parliamentary Guide, 1963 edition. Under Mr. Gilbert Rondeau's name, one reads, among other things:

Mem. cercles Lacordaire, St. Jean Baptiste society, league of the Sacred Heart and chamber of commerce. First elect. H. of C. at g.e. 1962. Pol. party, Liberal.

I can understand that the hon. member wishes to be taken for a Liberal, because it is not the only effort he has made to that effect. But I should like him to know that such a desire is not shared by all members in this house.

Besides, the thousands of people who voted for the Liberal candidate in the Shefford riding did so because they wanted—just like all of us, by the way—Mr. Gerard Lacaille to sit in the House of Commons.

I raised that matter, Mr. Speaker, so that this untrue statement does not appear in the 1964 Parliamentary Guide. As far as I am concerned, I propose to write to the editor, Mr. Normandin, this afternoon, so that he will make the necessary correction on page 258 of the Parliamentary Guide and inform all subscribers.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Since this matter concerns one of our colleagues who is at the present time seriously ill in bed, it is proper that I should make a corrective statement on his behalf.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think it is up to the hon. gentleman concerned to speak for himself and not to have one of his colleagues speak for him. Questions of privilege are supposed to be very rare. They are very precious to the house, and I would leave the matter there. We have listened with interest to the statement of privilege. Perhaps it was a bit overstated; nevertheless I think we should leave it there.

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would like to rise on this question because our colleague is sick at home and cannot be here to express his opinion of the matter just raised by the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Drouin).

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member has already accomplished his purpose, so may I suggest we proceed.

(Translation):

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Does he intend to take the necessary steps to prevent the members of the house from being publicly and falsely called Liberals against their will, in spite of the truth and in opposition to their ideas?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has raised a question of privilege. Unfortunately, the hon. member for Lapointe who a moment ago was out of order and was called to order, is trying to ask a question and obtain a reply which I am unable to give him, since it deals with a question of privilege.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

FOURTH AND FIFTH REPORTS OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. Ian Grant Wahn (St. Paul's) presented the fourth and fifth reports of the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the report just presented I move, seconded by Mr. Cooper:

That Bill No. S-15 as reported be referred back to the committee on miscellaneous private bills for reconsideration.

Mr. Speaker: I regret having to tell the hon. member, who discussed this matter briefly with me before the opening of the house, that in my opinion, while I understand his concern, the proper time for moving this motion is not now, because in effect there is no bill before the house; there is no motion to concur in this report. Therefore I suggest to him that the proper time is during the private bills period between five and six o'clock on Thursday, which is tomorrow. I think that is the time the hon. member should present his motion, if the bill is then before the house.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order which you have just raised, and in connection particularly with the last remark of Your Honour, the bill—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member again, but I was not making a point of order; I was making a ruling. The hon. member perhaps should have listened a little more attentively or closely to that ruling.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, am I not to be permitted to set out my point of order—

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Aiken: —because I am going to state that under the rules, especially standing order 110, this bill will not be placed on the order paper. I refer particularly to standing order 110, the last part of which says:

—and no bill, the preamble of which has been reported as not proven, shall be placed upon the orders of the day unless by special order of the house.

This would prohibit the bill in question being placed upon the orders of the day on private members' hour. Therefore if it is the ruling of the Chair that I may discuss the matter on private members' hour tomorrow afternoon at five o'clock, I am quite satisfied to do that. But I want to raise the question now because I do not want to be met tomorrow afternoon with the statement that the bill is not on the order paper, and under standing order 110 it cannot be put on the order paper. If Your Honour would permit me to enlarge upon this point, I would like to draw the situation to the attention of the house.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the hon. member. I realize his concern, and perhaps properly so. I have not sufficient details upon which to really decide the matter at the moment. May I suggest that this matter be postponed until tomorrow; that in the interval I have the opportunity of going into the matter and, if necessary, speaking with the hon. member and reaching a just and proper conclusion.

Mr. Aiken: I am quite happy to accept your ruling, Mr. Speaker. I have quite a number of authorities which I do want to present to the house.

HIGHWAYS

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES RESPECTING NATIONAL POLICY

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, on July 15 the Prime Minister indicated that I would make a statement as the result of a meeting which he and I had with a delegation from the Yellowhead route association. On July 12 the Prime Minister and I received a brief from the Yellowhead association which was presented in person by Mr. William Hawrelak as president of that association.

National Highway Policy

The brief made two main points; one, to request the federal government to establish a policy on federal aid to the provinces for the construction of main highways; and second, to recommend that in any such federal aid provision be made for the construction of the Yellowhead route as early as possible. In the past few weeks the government has received other delegations and briefs requesting that we take some action on the formulation of a national highway policy.

In reply to questions from hon. members I recently reported in this house that I had been in touch with the ministers of highways of all provinces to make arrangements for meetings between the provincial officials and officials of my department. I should like to advise the house that the purpose of these meetings with the provincial officials is to collect information, construction schedules and possible problems on the present federal-provincial highway projects as well as to receive suggestions from the provinces on what they felt would be the role of the federal government in the highway field. Over the years the federal government has received a variety of proposals for extending the federal-provincial highway arrangements, and as might be expected the desires of all areas were not always the same. The present review is to gain a picture of the provincial thinking at this stage.

I am in a position to report that discussions have taken place with the provinces of New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Ontario and in Quebec, where at this stage time has permitted dealings with only the trans-Canada highway. Discussions are at this date taking place in St. John's, Newfoundland and on the 19th in Halifax, Nova Scotia. Discussions with the western provinces are planned to start July 25.

It is our intention, once information has been collected and reviewed by the government, that I will have discussions with the ministers of highways, when we could discuss policies, but with the information obtained, based on a factual background of programs and possible expenditures. Once this has been done it is our intention to have a federal-provincial conference which would give consideration to a relationship between the federal and provincial governments in the highway field. It is hoped, subject to the reaction of the provinces, that this conference could take place this fall.

With reference to the question of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) in connection with the request for a second trans-Canada highway, I wish to say that this can be dealt with only after consultation with the provinces.

National Highway Policy

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to hear that the Minister of Public Works intends to consult with the provinces in respect to this very important question. Indeed, the matter of assistance on the part of the federal government to the provinces for road building goes back, as I recall it, to 1919, when under the government of Right Hon. Arthur Meighen provision was made for some $20 million assistance in this connection.

The convening of the conference is a worthy step. It is necessary and is in keeping with the responsibilities which are inherent in our constitution. However, as to the question of the Yellowhead highway, extending from Portage la Prairie through Edmonton to the Yellowhead pass, I would point out that there seemed to be general agreement on this during the election campaign. The Prime Minister, as I recollect it, agreed on behalf of his party that this was one thing that would be done. I followed a similar course, and had somewhat earlier believed this to be a matter of national importance in the building and the strengthening of the fabric of confederation. I hope this route receives early attention.

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): We are pleased to have this report from the minister, and we are looking forward to the results of the proposed meeting with the various provincial governments in connection with this important matter. For a number of years we have been advocating a national highway system for Canada, and I would hope that in consequence of the broad policy which may come out of these meetings such a system of highways would be forthcoming. The participation of the national government must, I think, reflect the arrangements made with the provinces on fiscal matters. If the government of Canada is taking the lion's share of taxes it must naturally take on additional responsibilities.

Regarding the Yellowhead route, we are aware there is some confusion as to where the second trans-Canada highway may go after it passes Jasper. It has been proposed that it should turn south to Kamloops and on to Vancouver, but I should like to point out that its location should be what is known as highway 16 through to Prince Rupert down the highway which will be built simultaneously, as the province of British Columbia has stated on more than one occasion, with the highway through Tête Jaune Cache down through Blue River.

We are very interested in this project and are hoping for some real progress in connection with a highway system in Canada.

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): The Minister of Public Works is to be commended for taking the preliminary step of calling together the ministers of highways of the various provinces of Canada to discuss the matter of a second trans-Canada highway. Several of the provinces have completed their portions of the first trans-Canada highway. In some cases the work was completed several years ago. They are now anxious to proceed with a second highway, and if one takes account of the increasing motor traffic in Canada one can realize how urgently it is required.

I hope two other matters will be discussed at this conference. The first is the possibility of north-south traffic of an international character. If the tourist trade is to be encouraged there should be a tremendous improvement in the highways which bring in tourist traffic. This is too large a burden for the provinces themselves to assume and it might well become a joint project. The other matter concerns the maintenance of these highways. At the present time the entire cost of maintenance falls on the provincial governments. When there was only one trans-Canada highway they could meet it, but if there is to be an enlarged area of federal participation in highway construction it seems to me some plan should be worked out for joint participation in responsibility for maintaining these roads.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works with regard to the statement he made this afternoon on the proposed national highway policy. Has he received representations with regard to the Howse pass from the people promoting this very favourable route through the central part of Alberta as part of a second trans-Canada highway?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure the hon. member realizes this is a question for the order paper.

(Translation):

GOOD FEELING BETWEEN THE PROVINCES AND OTTAWA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, could I put a question to the Minister of Public Works? During the recent talks with the provinces of Quebec and New Brunswick concerning the trans-Canada highway, was any mention made of greater flexibility in the application of joint programs by giving an option to those provinces?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, we have only reached the stage of consultation with the provincial ministers of highways. When the necessary data have been collected, a conference will be called and decisions will be taken in a spirit of mutual understanding, for, as the hon. member must know, the provinces have fully recovered their freedom since April 8.

Mr. Pigeon: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker? Is the announcement made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) to apply also to the provinces, as far as the money being granted is concerned, if they do not want to participate?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, there are in the Liberal platform planks which relate to joint programs; as the hon. member knows, we intend to keep our promises.

(Text):

RIGHTS OF WAY FOR TRUNK HIGHWAYS THROUGH NATIONAL PARKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Public Works, but I notice he stepped out of the chamber just a moment ago and perhaps it could be taken as notice. Could the question of providing right of way for trunk highways through national parks be put on the agenda of the meeting with the provinces which the minister mentioned in his statement on motions?

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I shall refer that question to the Minister of Public Works, who had to leave to catch an aeroplane.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PROCEDURE IN ANSWERING QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Before questions are called, may I say I have had a word with the spokesmen of the parties opposite and the opinion has been expressed that a good deal of the time of the house might be saved during the question period if it were indicated in advance just which questions on the order paper were being answered and which were being made orders for returns, so that Your Honour would only have to call the starred questions. With the approval of the house I am in a position to do that today. This is only to be undertaken as an experiment between now and such time as we adjourn, to see whether it does in fact facilitate the business. If there is no objection I will proceed to do that, but if there is any objection we will proceed, of course, in the normal way.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise to object, but I have a suggestion I thought I might place before the house if I may be permitted to do so at this time. I suggest that each day questions come before the house the Secretary of State as government house leader, should notify the Speaker of those that will be stood and those that will be answered. I think that will save a great deal of time. The suggestion now made by the Secretary of State will receive full support, and I hope he will go even further. There is a great deal of time wasted in calling each day the numbers of questions that are stood for various reasons, generally for good reasons, but which none the less has the result of creating a very unsatisfactory situation from the point of view of getting on with the business.

Mr. Pickersgill: I thank the right hon. gentleman for his remarks. The questions that are being answered on behalf of the government are 421, 625, 763, 840, 868, 879, 887, 888, 889, 899, 902, 908, 910, 911, 930 and 933. There are no questions to be made orders for returns today, and if Your Honour will simply call the starred questions I should like to have the rest of the questions stood today.

Salary: $6,450.

2. Temporarily—no length of time specified.

3. His experience and knowledge of the department and likely help to minister, all members of parliament and departmental officers.

PERSONS SENTENCED TO PREVENTIVE DETENTION

Question No. 763—Mr. Howard:

With respect to the 68 persons referred to in the answer to question 420, who are serving sentences of preventive detention (a) how many are known to be narcotic addicts and (b) what is the age of each (i) by provinces and (ii) length of detention by years?

Mr. Chevrier: (a) 7. Ontario, 1; Manitoba, 4; British Columbia, 2.

(b) (i) and (ii)—see following tables.

USE OF URANIUM IN ALLOYS

Question No. 840—Mr. Martineau:

1. Is the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys carrying on any tests to determine the effect of uranium as an alloy in uranium steel alloy drills and with uro-steel pipe, cord and cable?

2. Is the department studying possible uses for uranium in alloys with both ferrous and non-ferrous metals and, if so, what have been the results of such tests and studies?

Mr. Benidickson: Mines branch staff in co-operation with industry are pursuing a broad program of research and development on the use of uranium as an addition agent to metals and alloys. Although very comprehensive work on the utilization of uranium in steel has been accomplished with favourable results, particularly in the refining of steel and the production of drill rod material and steel alloys for pipes, it cannot be said at this stage that a major breakthrough resulting in commercial acceptance has been achieved.

The addition of uranium to non-ferrous metals provides a refining action resulting in properties such as the improved hot workability of copper, nickel, and their respective alloys.

Briefly, it can be said that although it is too early to fully evaluate the results of studies carried out in the mines branch laboratories, there are hopeful indications that uranium is moving toward a significant non-nuclear role in industry.

WIRED TELEVISION SYSTEM, GERALDTON, ONT.

Question No. 868—Mr. Fisher:

1. Has the Department of Transport licensed a wired television system in Geraldton, Ontario, and, if so, when, and to what organization (address, officers, etc.)?

2. Has the D.O.T. checked this cable system at any time to discover if radiation from it may be affecting T.V. signals coming to residents using aerials, and, if so, when, with what results, and interpretations?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. Two community antenna television systems have been licensed in Geraldton, Ontario:

(i) Mr. Harry Assad—P.O. Box 1, Geraldton, Ontario, first licence issued April 29, 1960.

(ii) Marino Hardware and Electric Co. Ltd., Box 14, Geraldton, Ontario, first licence issued April 9, 1962.

2. Yes, however, any difficulty in the reception of programs at Geraldton seems to be one of distance to the nearest television broadcasting station rather than one of interference. Geraldton is approximately 140 miles from Port Arthur and 215 miles from Marquette and accordingly it is outside the normal service area of stations WLUC-TV Marquette, Michigan and CFPA-TV Port Arthur, Ontario.

Normally the coverage for a fullpower television broadcasting station with a 500 foot antenna is considered to be out to a 57 mile radius for the low VHF band, channels 2 to 6. Satisfactory reception may be expected within this coverage area with a good outdoor antenna. Beyond this area it may be possible to locate sites, usually on relatively high ground, where television signals may be received with sufficient strength for satisfactory reception, provided a more elaborate receiving antenna and a properly aligned receiving set is used.

In some locations reception may be satisfactory on a long term basis, while at others it may be satisfactory for a while and then disappear completely for varying periods of time. These variations in reception are caused by the normal propagation characteristics of the frequencies used for television broadcasting and reception becomes more sporadic as the distance between the receiving antenna and the transmitting antenna is increased.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

Mr. Harry Assad's system was inspected, following complaints, on March 28 and 29, 1962. There was some radiation at that time which was caused by the cable being repeatedly broken, by large trucks, during the winter and proper repairs could not be made due to the wintertime weather conditions. Mr. Assad was informed about appropriate corrective action to be taken. Departmental records indicate no complaints have been received since March 1962.

EXERCISE TOCSIN B

Question No. 879—Mr. Douglas:

1. Was exercise Tocsin B carried out in the fall of 1961?

2. If so (1) how many Soviet bombers were assumed to have taken part in this simulated attack (2) how many (a) H-bombs and (b) missiles were assumed to have landed on target in (i) Canada (ii) U.S.A. (3) how many (a) H-bombs and (b) missiles were assumed to have landed off target in (i) Canada (ii) U.S.A. (4) what was the megatonnage of the H-bombs and missiles which were assumed to have landed (a) on target (b) off target in (i) Canada (ii) U.S.A. (5) what percentage of (a) bombers (b) missiles were assumed to have been destroyed by the active air defences of NORAD (6) how many Soviet nuclear missile firing submarines were assumed to have taken part in this simulated attack, and how many missiles were they assumed to have fired (7) how many people were assumed to have been (a) killed (b) wounded in this simulated attack in (i) Canada (ii) U.S.A.?

Mr. Drury: 1. Yes.

2. (1) As the exercise did not involve interceptor forces it was not necessary to assume any specific number of enemy bombers.

(2) In order to engage the emergency measures and survival operations systems fully, the exercise plan called for 11 H-bombs and six nuclear warhead missiles to be assumed to have been detonated in specific areas in Canada. A total of 55 H-bombs and nuclear missiles were assumed to have been detonated on targets in the U.S.A., which would have been immediately important to Canada.

(3) It was not necessary for the purposes of this exercise to assume any off target detonations.

(4) (a) (i) 75; (a) (ii) 960; (b) (i) and (ii) not applicable.

(5) As the exercise was not designed to test air defences, no assumptions in relation to aircraft or missile destruction were necessary.

(6) The exercise setting did not differentiate between types of missile delivery.

(7) It was calculated that detonations of the character postulated in the areas chosen would have resulted in 2,215,000 dead and 1,591,000 injured in Canada. No calculations were made in relation to the U.S.A.

NET FARM INCOME

Question No. 887—Mr. Matheson:

What is the average net realized income of Canadian farm operators from farming operations, in constant dollars, for the year 1956 and the year 1962, using the index of prices of commodities and services used by farmers, including farm living costs, for converting the net income figures to constant dollars?

Mr. Sharp: The following estimates of total realized farm net income from farming operations, in terms of constant dollars, have been prepared for Canada as prescribed in question 887. They are in terms of 1956 dollars: 1956, $1,238,093,000; 1962, $1,258,000,000.

It should be kept in mind that these estimates represent income from farming operations and do not include any income which farmers may have realized from off-far sources.

In order that averages may be calculated, the following information is provided:

1. Number of farms in Canada [1]

On the basis of the 1956 census definition of a farm, there were 572,666 farms in Canada in 1956. For that census, a farm was defined as a holding on which agricultural operations were carried out and which was:

(a) three acres or more in size, or (b) from one to three acres, and with the agricultural product, in the calendar year prior to the taking of the census, valued at $250 or more.

On the basis of the same definition, there were 518,250 farms in Canada in 1961. However, the definition of a farm for the 1961 census of agriculture was changed and for that census a farm was defined as a holding of one acre or more with sales of agricultural products, during the 12 months preceding the taking of the census, valued at $50 or more. On the basis of this definition, the number of farms in Canada in 1961 amounted to 479,125.

2. Number of farmers

From the above definition, it is apparent that there are many farms enumerated by the census which are operated by those who would be classified as other than farmers. Consequently, estimates are supplied concerning the number of farmers in Canada, as determined by the dominion bureau of statistics' labour force survey. This survey reported 534,000 farmers at June 1956 and 415,000 at June 1962.

---

[1] Numbers of farms in Newfoundland, Yukon and Northwest Territories have been omitted in this instance, because the dominion bureau of statistics does not prepare farm income estimates for these regions.

FEDERAL TRANSFER PAYMENTS

Question No. 888—Mr. Matheson:

What was the proportion of federal transfer payments (a) including interest on the public debt and (b) excluding interest on the public debt, as a proportion of total personal income in each of the years 1956 to 1962 inclusive?

Mr. Sharp: (a) A ratio of federal transfer payments including interest on the federal public debt is not available as a precise breakdown of interest between the portion received by persons and that received by other sectors cannot be made from the data available.

(b) Federal transfer payments excluding interest on the federal public debt formed the following proportion of personal income in the years 1956 to 1962 inclusive:

1956, 5.6 per cent; 1957, 6.3 per cent; 1958, 7.7 per cent; 1959, 6.9 per cent; 1960, 7.2 per cent; 1961, 7.1 per cent; 1962, 6.9 per cent.

BANK OF CANADA BID FOR 1983 BONDS

Question No. 889—Mr. Martineau:

1. Has the Bank of Canada withdrawn its standing bid of $98.25 per $100 face amount on the Canada 4½ per cent 1983 bond and, if so, what is the reason for this withdrawal?

2. How has it affected the market for these and other Canada bonds?

Mr. Gordon: 1. and 2. There is nothing I can add to the reply I made to a similar question by the hon. member for Perth on the orders of the day for July 9.

GRANTS TO AGRICULTURAL EXHIBITIONS

Question No. 899—Mr. Gauthier:

What amount has the Department of Agriculture paid in grants to the agricultural exhibition of Canada during the year ended March 31, 1963, and, of this amount, what part of these grants has been awarded the province of Quebec during the same period?

Mr. Hays: During the year ended March 31, 1963, an amount of $911,232 was paid to agricultural fairs and exhibitions, under the exhibition grants regulations, of which $142,173 was paid to associations in the province of Quebec. In addition, special grants as detailed in the estimates were paid to the Pacific national exhibition, Vancouver, and the Royal agricultural winter fair, Toronto, totalling $401,758.

PURCHASE OF LANDS AND BUILDINGS, AGRICULTURE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 902—Mr. Gauthier:

What amount has the Department of Agriculture spent for the purchase of lands and buildings during the year ended March 31, 1963, and, of this amount, what part has been spent in the province of Quebec?

Questions

Mr. Hays: The Department of Agriculture spent during the year ended March 31, 1963, $65,400 for the purchase of lands and buildings for programs, excluding those associated with P.F.R.A. activities. Of this amount, none was spent in the province of Quebec. Under P.F.R.A. activities, expenditures during the year for this item amounted to $369,261.00, largely for land required in connection with the south Saskatchewan dam reservoir.

AIRPORT BUILDING, LONDON, ONT.

Question No. 908—Mr. Irvine:

1. Is it the intention of the Minister of Public Works to build a new airport building in London, Ontario and, if so, at what stage are plans as of now, and what is the proposed completion date?
2. Have tenders been called for a new London airport building and, if so, has the contract been let, to whom, and for what amount?

Mr. McIlraith: 1 and 2. A new air terminal building will be erected at the London airport and working drawings for this building are in the final stages of completion. It is proposed to call tenders early in August and the optimum date for completion of the project is the midsummer of 1964.

ST. ALPHONSE DE GRANBY, QUE.—MAIL CONTRACT

Question No. 910—Mr. Rondeau:

1. Does Mr. Emile Fournier, St. Alphonse de Granby, hold a contract for mail delivery and, if so (a) since what date (b) what is its duration (c) what was the amount of his tender?
2. Were public tenders called and, if so (a) was public notice given of this call for tenders (b) where was such notice posted (c) for what length of time was it posted?
3. Were any other tenders submitted?
4. Is the closing date for such tenders now passed and, if not, what is the closing date?

Mr. Denis: 1. Yes, for St. Alphonse de Granby R.R. No. 1.

(a) The contract expired on June 30, 1963 and has been renewed, but the forms are not yet completed.

(b) The new four-year contract will expire on June 30, 1967.

(c) The amount of the contract is $1,557.62 per year.

2. No.

3. N/A.

4. N/A.

PUBLIC DEBT

Question No. 911—Mr. Latulippe:

1. What is the total amount, the per capita amount, and the amount per family, of the Canadian public debt?
2. What is the amount of the interest paid on this debt annually?
3. What is the total money supply in Canada in relation to the public debt?
4. What is Canada's contribution to the international monetary fund?

Mr. Gordon: 1. Canadian public debt, as at March 31, 1963 (preliminary): unmatured debt, $17,961.8 million; gross liabilities, $24,811.9 million; net debt, $13,937.1 million.

Per capita amount (population as at April, 1963): of unmatured debt, $953.08; of gross liabilities, $1,316.56; of net debt, $739.53.

Amount per family (number of families as at June 1, 1962): of unmatured debt, $4,237.27; of gross liabilities $5,853.24; of net debt, $3,287.83.

2. Interest paid on debt during 1962-63 (estimated): on unmatured debt, $709.0 million; on gross liabilities, $882.0 million.

3. Total money supply in Canada in relation to public debt (money supply as at March, 1963); 86 per cent of unmatured debt; 63 per cent of gross liabilities; 111 per cent of net debt.

4. No country makes a "contribution" to the international monetary fund. Every member country has, however, a "quota" in the fund on which its borrowing privileges and lending obligations are based. Canada's quota is 550 million U.S. dollars.

U.S. SECURITY INVESTIGATIONS OF CANADIANS AT OXFORD UNIVERSITY

Question No. 933—Mr. Howard:

1. Since January 1, 1963, has the government received any reports of investigations by the federal bureau of investigation of the United States of America or any other so-called United States intelligence agencies, into the activities or politics of any person of Canadian citizenship attending Oxford University at Oxford in the United Kingdom?
2. If so (a) by whom were the investigations conducted (b) was any protest made by the government of Canada to the government of the United States, and what form did these protests take (c) are any steps being taken to prevent a recurrence of any such activities, and what are the details surrounding any such steps?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): 1. No.

2. Not applicable.

*JOINT PROGRAMS, QUEBEC

Question No. 804—Mr. Valade:

1. Does the federal government intend to pursue a policy of joint programs in the province of Quebec?
2. Has the province of Quebec officially asked the federal government to abandon the policy of joint programs?
3. Has there been an exchange of letters between the two governments on that matter?

Mr. Lamontagne: The position of the present government on that matter can be summed up as follows: if some provinces so desire, they should be able, without losing any money, to withdraw from joint programs already established which include regular expenses paid by the federal government. Ottawa will then grant those provinces a compensation equal to expenses incurred by them, by reducing its own direct taxes and increasing equalization payments.

As for the two other questions, I am informed that the answer is negative in both cases.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON BICULTURALISM

Motion No. 48—Mr. Frenette:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of any correspondence, documents or notes exchanged between the president of the privy council and the governments of each of the provinces in connection with the appointment, in the near future, of a royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, I should inform the hon. member that no correspondence has been exchanged between the President of the Privy Council and the governments of each of the provinces regarding the appointment, in the near future, of a royal commission on bilingualism and biculturalism.

Motion agreed to.

FARM CREDIT CORPORATION, QUEBEC

Motion No. 51—Mr. Langlois:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, letters and other documents exchanged between the Minister of Agriculture or his assistant and all the representatives of the farm credit corporation in the Ottawa central offices and in the province of Quebec for the period from January 1, 1961, to July 1, 1963.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, in his motion, the hon. member asks for the production of documents exchanged between a minister of the crown and the chairman of a crown corporation. It is a well-established rule of the house that confidential documents exchanged between a minister and the chairman of a crown corporation are privileged and are not tabled in the house. After discussing the matter with the hon. member, I understand that he is willing to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I actually met the minister and agreed to withdraw the motion in its present form. On the other hand, if I am not satisfied with the replies given to me, I shall put on the order paper a further motion for the production of specific documents.

Motion withdrawn.

CIGARETTE SMOKING

Motion No. 54—Mr. McBain:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all correspondence dated since April 22, 1963, received by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and officials of her department related to the subject of cigarette smoking; and also a copy of all correspondence dated since April 22, 1963, sent out by the Minister of National Health and Welfare and officials of her department covering the same subject.

Motion agreed to.

TELEPHONE CALLS TO WOOD, GUNDY COMPANY

Motion No. 58—Mr. Aiken:

That an order of the house do issue for a return for all bills, accounts or other papers showing the date of all telephone calls, including those made through the exchange or by direct dialing between April 22 and June 20, 1963 which passed between any minister of the government to or from his office (or residence, if charged to public expense) and Wood, Gundy & Company Ltd., Toronto, or any executive or officer of said company.

Motion agreed to.

TELEPHONE CALLS FROM PRIME MINISTER TO W. G. HARRIS

Motion No. 59—Mr. Pigeon:

That an order of the house do issue for a return for all bills, accounts or other papers showing the date of all telephone calls, including those made through the exchange or by direct dialing between April 22 and June 20, 1963, which passed between the Prime Minister or anyone on his behalf to or from his office (or residence, if charged to public expense) and W. G. Harris of Harris and Partners Ltd., Toronto, or other official or member of said company.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will be disappointed to learn that there were no such telephone calls, so perhaps this motion could be dropped.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is dropped.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I have only one remark to make in respect to what the Prime Minister has just said. He probably made phone calls in public phone booths, I do not know.

Mr. Pearson: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, that remark surely was out of order as well as being a rather cheap insinuation.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Order discharged and motion dropped.

Inquiries of the Ministry

POWER

PASSAMAQUODDY—INQUIRY AS TO PRELIMINARY DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether any preliminary discussions were had between the Canadian and American governments or representatives thereof concerning the feasibility of the Passamaquoddy power harnessing project before the details of the same were unveiled yesterday in Washington. If so, when did these discussions take place, and have any feasibility studies been made as to the economic value of the process?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): To my knowledge there were no discussions between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States on the occasion of the Prime Minister's visit there?

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I also ask this. Was there any communication in this connection between the Prime Minister and the President of the United States on the occasion of the Prime Minister's visit there?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, I do not think this matter came up at all during those discussions, but I would be glad to look into it.

SHIPPING

THREATENED BLOCKADE OF ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY BY MARITIME UNION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Prime Minister, and I apologize for not having given him prior notice. There is a report in today's press reports of a threatened blockade of the St. Lawrence seaway by the Canadian maritime union unless there is an immediate halt to the harassment of C.M.U. manned vessels in United States ports. With the immediate threat of further violence in United States ports, can the Prime Minister assure the house that the government is taking immediate appropriate steps to deal with this most urgent and potentially disastrous situation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I saw this report in the newspaper and we are looking into it at once, because if any such action were taken it would be of considerable importance.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): May I ask a supplementary question in connection with this matter. Has any examination been made of the legal authorities to see whether the several recommendations made by Mr. Justice Norris in connection with the S.I.U. are constitutionally within the authority of the government of Canada?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the matter is being looked into now. I did discuss the matter with the deputy minister this morning, but I am not at liberty to divulge the result of the discussion. There is a problem which will have to be looked into from a legal standpoint, and until that has been done I am afraid there is nothing more that I can add to the answer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In view of the serious situation just referred to by the hon. member for Red Deer can the minister say when it is expected this legal opinion will be available, so that action can be taken by the government to meet this catalogue of terrorism which is frightening?

Mr. Chevrier: Well, the answer I can give at the moment is that following the discussion I had it will be looked into at once.

LABOUR RELATIONS

REQUEST FOR DEBATE ON NORRIS REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): May I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the far reaching implications of the recommendations contained in the report of Mr. Justice T. G. Norris on the disruption of shipping, will the government agree to set aside time early next week for a full scale debate on the findings of the Norris commission?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): While not underestimating the importance of the matter referred to by my hon. friend, I feel that it would be undesirable to interrupt the debate on budget resolutions scheduled for early next week to permit this particular discussion. Perhaps consideration can be given, indeed consideration will be given, to the introduction later in the week of the estimates of the Department of Labour, which would provide an opportunity for debate.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a supplementary question. Does the Prime Minister not consider that the possibility of disturbances or dislocations might be offset if there were some clear statement emanating from a debate on this subject?

Mr. Pearson: So far as the government is concerned, it will need a few days to consider the recommendations in this report, which are very important and very numerous, before the house could expect a clear and definitive statement.

[Later:]

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. Is his department considering taking action with regard to the section of Mr. Justice Norris' report dealing with Harold Banks' annual income, salary and expenses?

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I think it will be appreciated that matters concerning individual taxpayers cannot be discussed on orders of the day, and that the provisions of the Income Tax Act provide for secrecy.

[Later:]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question, supplementary to the one addressed to the Minister of Justice by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. I ask the minister whether he and his officials have had sufficient time to study this report and determine whether they are going to take some action to deal with the findings contained therein.

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. gentleman asked a similar question yesterday. The answer I gave then was that the report had just come to hand and that we were giving it careful study.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. There has been some speculation that the federal government does not have power to deal with some of these very serious violations of freedom, and so on. Is the minister and his department of this opinion?

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member will probably recall that the Leader of the Opposition asked a similar question earlier and I gave a reply in which I stated, in effect, that this matter was under careful scrutiny.

REQUEST FOR CHEAPER EDITION OF NORRIS REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): As a pioneer in the 1955 campaign to expose and get Harold Banks out of Canada whose statements have been vindicated fully by the Norris report, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the very general and keen interest in the Norris commission report and schedules and the significant demand for copies, I should like the minister to consider the publication of a paperback, cheap edition of the report and schedules.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the report is already paperbacked.

Mr. Herridge: May I ask a supplementary question. When are the schedules to the report to be available to members?

Mr. MacEachen: I hope they will be available late this week or early next week. It depends on the printing.

PERCE, QUE.—REPORTED DAMAGE BY PROSPECTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspe): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, or in his absence to his parliamentary secretary.

Is the minister aware that German mountaineers are making explorations and digging on Perce rock?

Those researches are harmful to the hatching of birds eggs and can contribute to the destruction of this first rate Canadian historical site.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Cyr: Can the minister take the steps—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Cyr: —required to prohibit prospection on this rock in order to preserve this historical site and tourist attraction?

Mr. John N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the minister, I shall take the question as notice.

REQUEST FOR LOW INTEREST LOANS FOR STUDENT RESIDENCES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, my question is short, to the point, and will not transgress your ruling. It is directed to the Minister of National Revenue. The minister is aware that a campaign is under way to amend the National Housing Act. Since the amendments now prepared do not include a clause allowing low interest rate N.H.A. loans—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Rapp: Just wait a minute. Since the amendments now prepared do not include a clause allowing low interest rate N.H.A. loans on student owned and operated residences, will the minister give consideration to the inclusion of such a clause for the benefit of the low income students?

Hon. J. R. Garland (Minister of National Revenue): I am pleased to tell the hon. member and other hon. members on both sides of the house who may have been in communication with this interested group within the last few days that the subject matter of this question has been under active consideration by the government practically since we assumed office. I can tell him also I am meeting representatives of the campus co-operative group this afternoon after orders of the day. Perhaps I should remind him that there are facilities at the present time under the National Housing Act to provide loans to universities for dormitory accommodation.

TRADE

PROMOTION OF EXPORT MARKETS FOR TOBACCO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Since the Minister of National Health and Welfare, by making statements against the use of tobacco and giving up smoking, has interfered with the consumption of Canadian tobacco, is it the intention of the minister to find foreign markets in communist countries for the exportation of Canadian tobacco?

Mr. Speaker: I understand I should take up the burden of the minister. This is obviously a question for the order paper.

BROADCASTING

WINNIPEG—ISSUE OF LICENCE TO JACK SHAPIRA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. What is the present status of the application for Mr. Jack Shapira of Winnipeg for an A.M. and F.M. radio broadcasting licence for Winnipeg, as recommended by the board of broadcast governors?

Some hon. Members: Order paper.

Mr. Nowlan: Don't plant those again.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings that it is not a planted question. The issuance of the licence in question was authorized yesterday.

[Mr. Rapp.]

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

PROPOSED CHANGE IN PROJECT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Pit Lessard (St. Henry): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Has the minister received an official request from the province of Quebec concerning the new lay-out of the trans-Canada highway along Montreal harbour?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we did receive last Friday an official request from the provincial authorities concerning the change in the lay-out of the highway, under the Trans-Canada Highway Act, and in all the plans which were then submitted to us.

Since this is an urgent project, my departmental officials have been asked to examine those plans, and I do believe that we shall be in a position, before the end of July, to reach a decision which will be made known to the house.

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. A while ago I directed to the Minister of Public Works a question of exactly the same nature concerning the outlay of a second trans-Canada highway which would go around the city of Montreal. At that time, Mr. Speaker, you said that the question should be put on the order paper.

That is why I am surprised to notice that you let the hon. member for St. Henry ask the same question and that you further authorize the minister to give an answer.

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUPERANNUATED FEDERAL EMPLOYEES—REQUEST FOR INCREASED PENSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the answer he gave to my question yesterday, regarding retired civil servants, must have been based on a misunderstanding, I wonder if I might ask it again. In view of assurances earlier this session that consideration would be given to the position of retired civil servants whose pensions are inadequate, could the minister say whether we might anticipate at this session an amendment of the Public Service Pension Adjustment Act under which this sort of thing could be done?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I do apologize to the hon. member for the confusion yesterday. In answer to his question, all I can say is that the matter is still under study.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPOINTMENT OF SECRETARY OF RESOURCE MINISTERS COUNCIL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, on May 23 and again on June 14 the hon. member for Brandon-Souris inquired about the appointment of the secretary general of the resources minister's council. On those occasions the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources indicated that he would inform the house at the time the appointment was made.

In my minister's absence today I can tell the hon. member, and other hon. members of the house, that the executive committee of the council has unanimously agreed to the appointment of Mr. Daniel Wermenlinger. The chairman of the Canadian resources minister's council, Hon. René Lévesque, will be releasing a communique today concerning this appointment.

Mr. Wermenlinger was chosen from a group of 60 applicants from all parts of Canada following public advertisement. For his duties as secretary general to the Canadian resources minister's council Mr. Wermenlinger brings an excellent background as a consulting engineer and teacher. He is age 38 and is a McGill University graduate in engineering. He has had employment in the electric power industry in Quebec, and has been professor of the development of electric power at Laval University. He actively participated in the resources for tomorrow conference of 1961 and was a delegate in May, 1962 at the "conférence internationale des grands réseaux électriques" in Paris.

The new secretary general will take up his duties commencing August 15, and the office of the permanent secretariat will be located in Montreal. His general duties, under the direction of the chairman of the resources minister's council will be to undertake studies relating to the conservation and utilization of natural resources in Canada.

Hon. members will recall that the resources minister's council developed from experience at the resources for tomorrow conference in 1961. The federal government and all 10 provincial governments are represented by ministers responsible for the management of renewable resources. The council provides a forum for the discussion of questions of interest to the several governments, and for the co-ordination of resource management objectives and policies.

NORTHWEST TERRITORIES—DELAY IN UNIVERSITY TRAINING PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the parliamentary secretary for his information, and while he held the floor I wanted to ask him another question concerning the university training program for the Northwest Territories. This question was asked last Friday, and I think an answer would be desirable before the council prorogues its present session.

Mr. John N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): My minister will be in town shortly, and I think he would prefer to answer that question himself.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

REPORTED NEGOTIATIONS TO CONSTRUCT SUBMARINES IN ENGLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Defence Production. In view of a report I heard over the radio yesterday, is it a fact that the Canadian government is negotiating with England to have our submarines constructed in that country?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, there have been studies undertaken with a view to ascertaining where, in the event that they are necessary, submarines for the Royal Canadian Navy can be most effectively produced. As yet no decision has been taken.

Mr. Langlois: Does the minister not think that, before the time when it becomes necessary to have them, it would be a good thing to arrange to have them constructed here in Canada, considering the unemployment situation?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST THAT NEWSPAPERMEN ACCOMPANY SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Defence, but in his absence and in the absence of the associate minister perhaps it could be taken as notice. I understand that when the defence committee travelled to Colorado Springs there were many empty seats on the air force plane which took them there. Would the minister permit members of the press gallery to occupy those spare seats on future trips of this committee, so the press will be able to keep the Canadian people informed of the sittings of this frustrated committee and of the information that it is not getting?

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO INVITATIONS TO YUKON AND NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. It arises from the recent enthusiasm of his government about consulting with the provinces before proceeding with legislative matters. Can the Prime Minister assure me that in all such federal-provincial conferences the governments of the Yukon and Northwest Territories will be invited to participate?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the correct and normal constitutional practice will be followed in this matter.

Mr. Rheaume: As a supplementary question, have the governments of the Yukon and Northwest Territories been invited to attend the dominion-provincial conference on July 26 and 27, when the municipal loan fund and Canadian pension plan will be discussed?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

REQUEST BY ATLANTIC PROVINCES FOR CLARIFICATION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. My question is caused by two related incidents. Last week we passed the Atlantic development board bill. Yesterday the Atlantic premiers announced that they wanted a clarification of it. I just wondered whether the minister could indicate to us what steps he is taking to provide such clarification, and could he give some explanation as to why this seems to be necessary so very quickly?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): In answering the hon. gentleman's question, Mr. Speaker, I will have to apologize to my colleague the Solicitor General for informing him in public of what I would like to have consulted him about in private. I had a call this morning from the premier of New Brunswick, speaking for the premiers of the four Atlantic provinces, asking to have a meeting with the four federal ministers from the Atlantic provinces next Thursday. A meeting is being arranged for five o'clock next Thursday afternoon so that we can discuss the most effective co-operation in carrying out the aims of the board; that is making the assumption that the amendments to the act will have the same happy fate in another place that they have already had here.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ISRAEL—REPRESENTATIONS RESPECTING EXTRADITION TREATY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, at the request of some of our members. Have there been any recent representations from the state of Israel for the drafting of an extradition treaty between that state and Canada?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will have to look into the matter. I do not believe there have been, but I would like to answer the question later.

NUCLEAR TEST BAN—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON MOSCOW CONFERENCE

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the Canadian government being kept informed of the developments at the nuclear test ban conference in Moscow? Are there any up to date reports the minister can give to the house?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian government is following these discussions with close interest. It is being kept informed as to the nature of the discussions. There is every reason to believe that progress is being made in the discussions. When they are finalized I hope to be able to say something further.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO $3 PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. With the new crop year starting on August 1, when can the farmers of western Canada expect an announcement from the government in regard to the $3 per bushel for the initial 300 bushel quota of wheat?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I think the government is going to be in a position to announce the level of initial prices within a few days.

FINANCE

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL ASSISTANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. My question is based on an answer given on July 15, as reported in Hansard at page 2173, to some questions of mine regarding the minister's special budget assistants. How was it that Mr. Conway was appointed, or commenced work, on April 21, the day before the government itself was sworn in?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into that matter and give the hon. member an answer when I have the information.

ECONOMIC COUNCIL OF CANADA

PROVISION FOR ESTABLISHMENT AND DEFINITION OF DUTIES

The house resumed from Monday, July 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lamontagne for the second reading of Bill No. C-72, to provide for the establishment of an economic council of Canada.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I now take up my interrupted speech of last Monday, if you can call five minutes fill-in the beginning of a speech. Since that time I have been able to read with greater care the interesting discourse of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) when he introduced this measure into the house. I am now more astonished than I was before I made that careful examination that the minister is prepared to stand in his place in this house and describe this strange, anaemic piece of legislation as the government's program for establishing planning in this country. Moreover, I am astonished that a gentleman of his reputed economic knowledge is prepared to stand in the chamber and tell us that this bill is going to be the basis of what is known as indicative planning. I do not for one moment imagine that the minister is not well aware of most of the circumstances surrounding the particular national planning to which the term indicative planning was first applied. I refer to the economy of France. I assume he must know what went on there; he must know what the basis of French planning is, and I am astonished that he would tell us that his government's program is designed to introduce indicative planning into Canada.

Just in case he has not looked recently at the facts regarding the French commissariat du plan, I would like to put on the record some of the circumstances under which French planning was instituted. In the first place, it was instituted on a very widespread foundation of nationalization; all the coal mining industry, all gas and electricity, all insurance companies, all savings banks and similar savings institutions were nationalized. Specific industries, such as the Gnome-Rhone, Lorraine and Renault aviation engine factories. the Renault automobile factory and, of course, the railways have been nationalized for many years in France. In addition to that there are credit controls in operation in France, controls which I am sure this government has not in mind at all. Medium term loans must be rediscounted at the bank of France, which must consult the commissariat du plan for loans over one million francs. The Credit National, which is the main source of long-term investment funds, must consult the commissariat on all loans over two and a half million francs. In addition to that there are in effect in France quite a wide range of price controls over steel, aluminum, fuel and power, chemicals and motor cars. On top of that Mr. Speaker, there has been a wide measure of public investment in private industry, a sample of which is, of course, the steel industry, 30 per cent of the internal debt of which is held by the public authority. So we see, Mr. Speaker, that in the only instance of general indicative planning, the planning under which the term was first applied, the indicative finger is involved directly in a great many economic pies. As Mr. Pierre Massé, the commissaire général du plan, had to say at a meeting in London:

> Directly or indirectly the state controls or is always the main driving influence behind one half of total investment in France.

I mention this, Mr. Speaker, to point out that the use of the term "indicative planning" for the incoherent measures proposed by this government is really grossly misleading.

I would then turn to the make-up of the commissariat du plan in France, and I am sure that if Mr. Pierre Massé, the commissaire general, were to be presented with this bill which is before the house as a sample of indicative planning, Mr. Massé would probably go into hysterics. The commission in France is composed of approximately 50 experts of various sorts. Not merely economists, agronomists and sociologists, but university people and all manner of people are employed on a full time basis. Even more important than that, as one of the key methods by which French indicative planning is made successful there are established under the plan a large number of commissions made up of those who are actually in control of or responsible for the operation of various sectors of the French economy. Mr. Massé says that if the real forces of the country have been associated with making the plan, they are more likely to stand together in action.

I have no knowledge, of course, of who the 25 ordinary members of this economic council are to be, but I am sure of this, that they are not going to be people such as those who are called in in France to help in the construction of a plan, the people who are actively engaged in the operation of the French economy. We shall have, I presume, someone who purports to represent organized labour, someone who purports to represent the consumers, someone who purports to represent the employers and manufacturers associations. But it will not be the people who are engaged in the actual operation of the economy. Because if it were, Mr. Speaker, you would require many more than 25. You would require a similar set-up to that which they have in France, where you have up to 30 or 40 separate commissions, which are, in effect, working parties composed of government officials, industrialists, financiers, manufacturers, people who are engaged in the operations of the economy.

Therefore I suggest that this bill, when it is presented to us as the means by which planning is to be established in Canada in the first place, is nothing but a hoax; and in particular, when it is suggested to us that on the basis of this bill we can have something which could rightly be termed indicative planning then to my mind this is grossly misleading. Nowhere at all in the bill and nowhere at all in the speech of the President of the Privy Council is there any suggestion whatever of actually setting up a planning agency. The French indicative planning is dependant upon an actual planning agency, a planning agency which, as I say, draws into its ambit various other sections of the community in active working parties to draft the plan, and the plan itself is, of course, written under the auspices of the minister of finance.

Admittedly, in Canada we have two problems facing us which do not face France, or indeed any other nation in the world where planning has taken place. One of these is the very large measure of foreign ownership of our resources and our industries. The other is the federal structure of our country. These two problems are to my mind closely linked; in fact, one can hardly be dealt with without the other. Not too long ago the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) attempted in a most praiseworthy manner to deal with the first of these problems by bringing in an ill-starred takeover tax—not a very practical way of approaching this problem, but we can at least give him credit for making the attempt. But even if he had been successful this would not have coped with the continuing situation in Canada; it would merely have applied a brake to any further developments along this line. If the problem is to be coped with—and many seem to think it does not have to be coped with—it can only be done by replacing foreign owners by Canadian owners. However, here we run into two other problems. One is the unwillingness of the present owners to sell, and the other is the fact that if they were willing and the purchasers were private Canadian citizens, there would be no guarantee that the Canadian purchasers would not at a later date dispose of their property to foreign purchasers.

The only other manner of replacing foreign ownership by Canadian ownership is by replacing foreign owners by a public authority in Canada. Here we run into the problem of our constitution in Canada, with the provincial legislatures having control over property and civil rights. However, I think this problem is perhaps not insoluble if we had a government really prepared to do something about indicative planning and really prepared to cope with this problem of foreign ownership. But first of all we have to make up our minds about the answer to this question, which is: Do we really consider foreign ownership to be a detriment to the Canadian nation? I ask this question, Mr. Speaker, because I have found to my dismay that there are many people, some even in this chamber, who seem to regard the foreign ownership of our resources and our industry, with its inevitable result of absorption into the neighbouring republic, with a certain amount of equanimity. In this party we are convinced that foreign ownership is detrimental to our country, specifically in the context of the bill now before us.

This bill purports to be the foundation stone for indicative planning. It is impossible to carry out anything in the nature of indicative planning in the real sense of the word while this condition of extensive foreign ownership remains. Mr. Massé's comment on the necessity of drawing into the building of the plan all the real forces within the country indicates what our problem is here. What are the real forces of this country—the forces of economic power? They are not, in the main, Canadian forces. When we have to deal with these forces we have to deal with people or institutions whose concern is not the Canadian nation or the Canadian economy, except in so far as these are the source of immediate profit or addenda to a foreign economy. So I suggest that if the government is serious about embarking on a program of indicative planning it will have to deal with this question of foreign ownership and, in doing so, deal with the situation created by the Canadian constitution.

There have been references in the press and elsewhere to the difficulties the government is encountering in connection with the Canadian constitution at the present time as well as the pressures which are being applied by the provincial governments, in particular with regard to certain economic matters, all of which have to be considered in relation to anything we could call economic planning. We hear, for instance, that the premier of Quebec is much opposed to the government's plan for a portable pension. In fact, there have been reports in the press to this effect. Of course, the premier's fundamental economic reason for opposing it—and it is a most respectable reason—is that he sees in the pension plan a means of accumulating a volume of investment capital which could be used to expand the economy of his province. I suspect Mr. Lesage has discovered something which I think I have discovered. We will have to wait until tomorrow, I suppose, when the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) makes a statement in this house before we can confirm this; but I have a suspicion that I have discovered the truth, namely, that the portable pension plan is not going to result in any pooling of the savings of the Canadian public, but that instead it is likely to provide a happy hunting ground for the insurance companies and a continuation of the means by which corporations who arrange their own pension plans avoid a large measure of corporation taxes.

I hope I am wrong. If I am, there may still be some way of instituting indicative planning in Canada within the confines of confederation. It may be we shall find we are experiencing much the same results as Sweden, a country which has some interesting lessons to offer us if we were not too timid to accept them. In the London Economist of March 20, there was an article by a Swedish financial correspondent entitled "Enter the New Leviathan". This article describes an almost revolutionary transformation which has taken place in the monetary and credit field in Sweden over the last 12 months because of the operation of the Swedish social insurance plan and the coming into effect of the national supplementary pension fund. This has had far reaching consequences for the capital market, and I should like to quote briefly from this article:

> Although the fund did not start its operations until 1960 and will go on growing for many years to come, it has already become the prime source of long-term finance. Last year the increase in its investments amounted to 1,300 million kronor, and this year it will fall not far short of 2,000 million.
> It is estimated, on fairly conservative assumptions, that the fund will have increased its resources to 25,000 million kronor by the end of this decade. This would correspond to about a quarter of all institutional credits; and its share of the market would then be the same as that of the commercial banks is today. Its annual investments would in 1970 be between 5,000 and 6,000 million kronor, equal to the total net amount of borrowings from all institutions in 1962.

I suggest that here lies a clue to dealing with two problems which in my opinion stand as an immovable barrier to any effective indicative planning in Canada, namely the existence of such an enormous degree of foreign ownership and, secondly, the difficulty of bringing the provincial authorities into any concerted national plan. I would suggest the experience in Sweden indicates the way in which the government, if it really wishes to embark on a program of planning, should be moving at this time. It should be prepared to use this portable pension plan as a means of building up a vast pool of the savings of the Canadian people and it should be prepared to make arrangements with the provincial governments so as to make available the capital they require for their own investment programs. I suggest that had this government possessed the courage and the honesty to make known a real proposal for indicative planning, including a project of that sort and made its intentions known to the provincial governments there would have been far less scurrying about in the backrooms of this house in the past few weeks as the administration sought to avoid a showdown with recalcitrant provinces. The governments of the provinces would realize they were expected to become part of a national plan and their justifiable demands for an increased share of investment capital would be met.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this organization entitled the economic council of Canada —I do not know what else you could call it— is merely going to be another of those farcical organizations we have had so often in the past. At best it will be a fact-finding statistic-collecting organization with no authority to present, institute or formulate any real economic plans. Anyway, there is no intention of having it do anything of that sort. As the foundation stone for economic planning in Canada it is as ludicrous and as inadequate as the proposal which was made by the previous government and which was so strenuously derided by the gentlemen now occupying the treasury benches.

(Translation):

Mr. Rosaire Gendron (Riviere du Loup-Temiscouata): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the economic council, we may wonder, on the local, provincial or federal level whether we need such an instrument to help promote our economy.

To illustrate my views on our development and on regional issues, I should like to quote the following:

> In such areas which, to a large extent, have been kept out of the economic advance, there is a recession not only in comparison to the remainder of the country, but sometimes even in the absolute sense. From year to year, life becomes more difficult there: The competition of powerful industries and prosperous farming in other areas gradually ruins the remaining industrial establishments, as well as farming and business. A spirit of revolt, the very opposite of the spirit of enterprise which alone could improve conditions, takes shape and develops. Slowly, and mostly unwillingly, the people leave those areas without a future to seek better opportunities in more dynamic parts where they sometimes create serious problems with regard to accommodation and employment.

It was on purpose, Mr. Speaker, that I did not indicate the source of that quotation at the start. Some people might think that it describes some of our underdeveloped areas. Well, it is an excerpt from the International Review of Social Sciences, UNESCO, No. 3, 1959, dealing with certain French areas which are faced with the problem of industrial centralization, and where the necessary steps were to be taken to give them a new start.

Now, that is about the same problem which is found in the lower St. Lawrence and many other of our districts. Such a situation may well cause some anxiety.

On the one hand, we see an increasingly larger part of our people getting used to put their trust in a welfare state, and, on the other hand, we have a group of citizens who are alarmed by the situation and try, generously, to give a new buoyancy to our economy and to fight that centralizing trend.

We are greatly concerned, because if we come to rely solely on the welfare state, stifling any initiative, growing accustomed to sponge on the state, since there is no other solution and that on the other hand, those who are struggling to give new impetus to the economy feel that they are ill-supported and ignored, it may happen that they will grow weary and that they will also follow the trend.

[Mr. Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

In our area, we did not merely bemoan our lot nor blame our neighbours for our troubles. We deemed it necessary to form a group and to set up a district council of economic planning. It is the municipalities and the county councils which took the initiative, since industry lacked the required vitality to fill in the gaps. It was therefore necessary to rely on those whose duty it is to promote the public weal and to see to it that, instead of being constantly at strife, because everyone wants to have a finger in the pie, we should work together in good understanding in order to achieve our common aims in our given community. In this manner, a normal and constant development of our areas would be possible, so that instead of relying entirely on state assistance, we could proudly enable our people to earn a living.

This is an example of a community which may not be as privileged as others, but which accepted its responsibilities and preferred to unite rather than remain divided, and hired experts to conduct studies. We started by making a demographic survey, because it is the best way to know exactly what is our human potential, a most important point. We had a survey made on transportation by Mr. Pierre Camu, vice president of the St. Lawrence seaway authority, and also an investigation in the field of agriculture and of forestry, in order to know what our resources are and to be in a position afterwards to plan properly the development of our areas.

You have, on a higher level, the example of the province of Quebec which also felt the need to put its affairs in order. Our province provided for the establishment of a council of economic planning which could operate in a truly democratic fashion, without undue state control, but thanks to an indicative direction and planning. This was achieved through regular legislation providing financial incentives to those who wished to take part in the plan, thus permitting a more orderly development of Quebec's resources.

We feel that if that is a must on the local and provincial scenes, it is just as necessary at the federal level.

Who would build a house with foundations, walls and partitions without adding a roof?

We are a nation and as such we have obligations to fulfil and a part to play. Some will say, like the hon. member who spoke before me, that we will get nowhere unless we resort to imperative planning. Others will claim that it would be better to leave things as they are, that everything will come out all right in the end. Others yet will raise various federal-provincial problems.

In my opinion, everyone must do his share in his own field. The fact remains however that the federal government has a great part to play in the field of transport, communications, public works, etc. Our efforts should be co-ordinated to give a boost to our economy.

Every one will agree also that we must try to co-ordinate the efforts of the regional and provincial economic boards so that there is no conflict between their different activities, which is the only way our country can grow in a normal and orderly fashion.

Of course, we must not exaggerate the importance of the economic council, since that is not the only solution. Several other measures dealing with the serious problem of unemployment and underdeveloped areas are now on the order paper. This piece of legislation is just one aspect of the over-all plan to facilitate the normal economic growth of our country.

I think the hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) spoke for all our hon. friends opposite when he said one should take care not to rush into a marriage one might have cause to regret till the end of one's days. That, it seems to me, is typical of the attitude our hon. friends take when they are faced with the problems now before us, that is to say they have a way of flirting with problems without ever espousing them. I would even go as far as to say that is just like a young man who would be courting a girl and telling her in advance he has absolutely no intention of marrying her and who would still deny her the right to go out with another boy. Well, perhaps such a relationship can accidentally end up by creating something, but it is surely a sterile and irresponsible way of dealing with the problem at hand.

We on this side of the house want to espouse the cause of the unemployed, the cause of the depressed areas, and we know, because such is the law of nature, that childbirth cannot always be painless. Be that as it may, let us see to it that projects are carried out which will make the development of our country possible, even if, at first, that might hurt the feelings of some of our neighbours.

Everybody will agree that we must allow all people who are interested in the economic life of our country to group themselves, to unite, to make surveys and also to put forward programs which may help us to deal with the serious situation we are in.

To be constantly bringing up the problem of federal-provincial relations as an objection is to use a two-edged sword. Naturally, we can never care enough for the respect of provincial rights and especially those of the province of Quebec. Of course, we must allow that province to develop normally in the respect of all its rights.

On the one hand, feelings are aroused by the question of federal-provincial relations in the province of Quebec. On the other hand, the other provinces are led to believe that the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) is yielding to the pressure of the province of Quebec. But we must realize that we live in a pluralistic state, which means that there is a need for continuous negotiations. On that point, I should like to refer to the same book where we find, on pages 362 and 363, that in a pluralistic state:

> —various other requirements must be fulfilled so that the necessary spirit of compromise and conciliation can be maintained. Population segments entirely deprived of power must not be numerous; the access to political life must be fairly easy; the various groups must be of a fairly equal strength, so that none of them can readily impose its will on others; finally, negotiations must be pursued unremittingly, with obstinacy and ability. We have seen that the maintenance of an order, whichever it is, always calls for a certain amount of energy; the maintenance of a pluralistic order entails enormous efforts in negotiations. Politicians being the true negotiators in pluralistic systems, every organization must have them at its disposal.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, the man who succeeded at a critical and extremely difficult time, on the international level, in negotiating for the establishment of world peace, will succeed, on the national level, in negotiating the establishment of Canadian unity, with due respect for the individual rights and the interests of every Canadian.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, if the minister is really anxious to see this economic council give good results, I am sure he will admit that it is imperative that this council, and consequently the federal government, secure full co-operation on the part of the provinces.

For example, paragraph (j) on page 4 of the bill states the following:

> to seek full and regular consultation with appropriate agencies of the governments of the several provinces.

And, on page 4, paragraph (iv) of section 11 states:

> the use of training programs at all levels of industry, and the use of retraining programs to meet changing manpower requirements.

I would ask the minister the following question: if he really wishes this legislation to work efficiently and to help promote the economic development of this country, why does the government obstinately refuse to submit it to the provinces at the federal-provincial conference which is to be held in a few days? I am asking this question with the utmost sincerity, since the federal government needs the provinces' and the municipalities' full co-operation if it wants this legislation to be fruitful. I should be very grateful if he would take a minute or two to give us a direct answer, and thus give assurance to the house that he will make all the necessary efforts so that the Canadian economy will derive all that it possibly can from this bill. I would be very happy if the minister could take a minute or two to give me an immediate answer to that question. What are the actual objections?

Mr. Speaker, since the beginning of this session, we have witnessed a complete invasion of the provincial field. Besides, some economists remind me of certain psychiatrists: the patient's mental and physical health often gets worse after the latter has been committed to their care. We do not wish to see that happen with the healthy autonomy of our provinces. We want the provinces to have complete jurisdiction in the labour-management field, and in all matters which come under provincial authority, such as natural resources, hydroelectric power, as well as numerous other fields, including agriculture.

Mr. Speaker, we are anxious to be told on what grounds the government obstinately refuses to consult the provinces.

Before promulgating ARDA, we consulted all the provincial governments, and only with their full consent, did we enforce the act.

I feel that the bill providing for the establishment of an economic council of Canada should come under the Department of Trade and Commerce, or the Department of Industry. Whom does the government intend to appoint as chairman, directors and members of that council? Does it plan on selecting a fair percentage of representatives of our agricultural elite, of our labour force and of our managerial class?

Mr. Speaker, let us assume that one of our provinces, because it was not consulted, or because it is jealous of its autonomy, chooses not to co-operate with the central government, or with the economic council. What then would be the latter's attitude? Would its action not be impaired, would our economy not be endangered?

I wonder also whether the Agricultural Rehabilitation and Development Act—or ARDA—should not be under the jurisdiction of the projected economic council. ARDA has been operating in numerous countries, such as France for instance, and it has helped solve many problems, as it bears upon three technical fields: (a) the use and improvement of marginal lands; (b) rural development and industrial expansion; (c) land amelioration and soil conservation, water conservation and production.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It seems to me that the hon. member is wandering quite a bit from the measure now before us. I can understand that, while discussing the establishment of ARDA, he may possibly want to use this subject as an example, but I would suggest that he limit his remarks along this line and return as soon as possible to the matter under consideration.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I think that ARDA can, from the economic point of view, assist greatly in relieving numerous problems which exist now in agriculture, more particularly in underdeveloped areas of this country. In my opinion, if this economic council of Canada really wishes to do efficient work, it must know the policy embodied in ARDA and work in close contact with it.

Mr. Speaker, I also believe that there is another serious problem, that is unemployment. Permit me to say incidentally that, according to the last statistics, unemployment is higher now than it was last year on this date. I am of the opinion that it is absolutely necessary to have the largest proportion of our raw materials processed in Canada.

As far as raw materials are concerned, grains as well as metals can be considered as raw materials.

It is a fine thing to sell our western grain abroad, but if that grain were processed in the east, the income of our farmers would be higher. In fact, this is why the Conservative government had prepared during the last session a piece of legislation providing for payment by the federal government for the transportation of grain from Fort William to eastern Canada. The same legislation provided for payment by the federal government of the building cost of warehouses built along the waterways of eastern Canada in addition to the warehousing costs of cereals.

Mr. Speaker, the minister's speech was most interesting. I readily recognize it, as I often do not share his opinions, but I must admit that this speech was substantial.

He did a good job and I believe he is probably sincere when he advocates certain measures, regardless of the provinces' interest.

It is easier to work out a policy in some countries as, for example, in France, where you have a unified government, than in a country like ours, with a federal government and ten provincial governments. I admit that it is often difficult in our country to carry out an economic program. However, as long as the constitution has not been revised and amendments have not been brought to bear with the consent of all parties, in my opinion the minister must submit such a program to the provincial authorities to get efficient co-operation and work towards the national interest.

Those are, Mr. Speaker, the few remarks I wanted to make and I would be pleased if the minister could give us the reasons why he does not want to submit this bill to the provinces with a view to securing their full co-operation.

(Text):

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, this bill is part of a much advertised Liberal program of legislation, but in form it is merely a rewrite, with one addition, of two bills which were brought in by the former government. I refer particularly to Bill C-87, which was introduced on November 28, 1962, to establish a national economic development board, and to an act of parliament, the National Productivity Council Act, chapter 4 of the 1960-61 statutes. In addition to the combination of these bills there is a very greatly enlarged objective clause, which I believe makes the whole intent of this bill much different.

At this stage of our proceedings we cannot study the bill clause by clause. I do not wish to do so, but there are three particular parts of the bill that ought to be discussed, as each derives from a source which ought to be mentioned. There is first Bill C-87, and if we look at the bill before us we find that clauses 1 to 8 are identical with the clauses in Bill C-87, with the exception that the name has been changed from the national economic development board to the economic council of Canada, and the word "board" where it appears has been changed to "council". The only difference I can find is that the term of office of the chairman is to be seven years instead of ten years. Therefore we have no objection to this part of the bill and we think these clauses are worthy of support.

Clause 11 of the bill is lifted right out of the National Productivity Council Act. The words are identical and this portion of the bill is merely a reprint of the main and essential part of that act.

Clauses 12 to 20 are substantially the same as clauses 13 to 21 in the old bill, No. C-87. This leaves only clauses 9 and 10, which stipulate the duties of the council, where the difference in direction appears. The present bill looks something like the old bill, but its implications are much broader, and it is our view that it gives the council a stronger hold, almost an octopus hold, on the business and economic sectors of Canadian life.

When we come to these clauses on committee stage we will want to have some assurance from the minister as to the extent to which he intends to use these very broad powers that are given to the council. We will also want to make sure that the centralization of powers in Canada is not extended unduly, and in fact is not extended any more than is necessary for an over-all look at the Canadian economy.

What we fear most is not the actual wording of the bill but the theories behind it, which were expressed by the President of the Privy Council when he introduced it. We feel that they tend to show us that his intentions are to make this council one which will have a very strong bearing on business in Canada. We believe that business in Canada today appreciates assistance; they appreciate assistance in changing from one product to another; they appreciate assistance in improving their product and in marketing it. For these things they do look to government, and they were encouraged to look to government by the progressive legislation that our party brought before parliament. To this extent we are in sympathy with the purposes of the bill.

We think that any assistance whatever that can be given to Canadian businessmen, particularly in the export field, is well given. It is not within the competence of many Candian businesses, particularly the smaller ones, to go out into foreign fields and look for markets; they have to rely upon the services of such bodies as the Department of Trade and Commerce and the new council which will be established. To that extent we are not objecting to, and in fact we approve of the principle of this bill.

I think we should examine the theory and philosophy behind the changes that were put into this bill which amends the bill concerning the national economic development board. This bill, along with other government legislation, has been put forward as part of a program. We are told that this bill goes hand in hand with the department of industry bill, the capital development corporation bill, the Atlantic provinces development board bill and the municipal loans bill, to indicate a program of economic development to assist in relieving unemployment, and so forth. Mr. Speaker, we do not think this objective has been accomplished. We think that the program as a program was hastily thrown together; that it is composed of bits and pieces picked up here and there in order to present to the country quickly something that looks like a program. We think this bill particularly was merely derived from two or three sources, put together and announced as one of the great, new items of legislation of this government. We do not think this has in fact been accomplished.

We recall that when the department of industry bill was before the house the minister could not say, for example, how many people would be employed in the department or how much it would cost. He said this would depend pretty much upon the circumstances at the time. It was an indication of an intention to do something, without any well laid plans. I am not going to dwell on that matter now, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members opposite will say I am rehashing the old bill, and I do not wish to do that; I merely wish to deal with this particular bill. This was one aspect that bothered opposition members and on which a number of questions were asked; that is, what is this department doing; how many people are going to be employed, and how much is it going to cost? These questions could not be answered by the minister and therefore the house was left pretty much in the dark as to the intention of this bill.

We believe the same thing applies to the municipal loans legislation. I do not want to beat anybody over the head with the problem with which the government is faced in this regard, except to say that here again we think it is not part of a well planned and well laid out program. We think it was done hastily as part of a program to be laid before this parliament within 60 days in order that the government could fulfil their election promise. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we think the municipal loans bill, as part of this program, while it was well intentioned and may in the end work out properly, was not planned and put forward in the way it should have been.

The capital development corporation bill is not before us; it has not yet been discussed. However, I think it is perhaps in the same category. After reading the resolution we think this measure has not been planned and there is no over-all plan which will give assistance to the new economic council for Canada. The same remarks apply to the Atlantic provinces development board bill. There again it merely contains slight changes. A maximum amount of money was included as a provision of the bill, but we did not get any clear picture about who was going to be on this board or how it could be improved under the new legislation as compared with the old. We recall that the hon. member for Cape Breton South (Mr. MacInnis) particularly asked the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) what plans he might have to assist in the development of the Atlantic area. The minister was unable at that time to say there was any plan, that he had anything to put forward. He just said, "We will wait and see what the board produces".

These are all rough sketches of the legislation we had before, Mr. Speaker. I am merely trying to prove the point that this economic council is not a great, new piece of Liberal legislation; it is merely a throwing together of two Conservative bills, one of which was passed and one of which was never passed, with expanded objects to which I shall refer in a few minutes. I mentioned that this bill eliminates the national productivity council and takes the heart, the main sections, out of the previous bill, puts them into this bill and sets up one council. There is only one thing in commendation that I wish to say to the government. I am glad they did not create two new councils. It is quite obvious that they intend to change the personnel of the productivity council, because when the bill before us is passed, the productivity council will come to an end; therefore the appointments which have been made will also come to an end and the government will be able to go ahead and make new appointments. I think possibly this is one of the main features of this new bill, as it was with the Atlantic provinces development board bill; that is, it is not in order to make any progress or because there is anything in either of these bills which could not have been done under the old bills; it is merely a case of passing a bill in order that the personnel may be changed and the government may put its own nominees on these boards. I think that is not sufficient reason for the government making a great fuss about the program they are putting forward. This bill will eliminate the productivity council and its members, as I have said. It is also an enlargement of the progressive legislation already brought in. I believe the worst feature of the bill is that the central organization, the council, has been given such broad powers under this new bill that it can more than assist and advise, which the old bill only sought to do; it can now give some direction. This is the thin edge of the wedge to which we take objection. When we come to the clauses I intend to ask the minister if he will indicate clearly to the house how far he proposes to make use of clauses 9 and 10 and how far he expects that the council will be provided with funds and direction along these lines.

I hope it will not be said of me that I am afraid of progressive ideas. I am sure that one matter that is thrown back and forth from one corner of the house to another is that certain parties are afraid of progressive ideas and will vote against them. We are not afraid of progressive ideas; but if progressive legislation means more direction in Canada's economy, if progressive legislation means more centralizing of Canada's economy in one body in the federal field, then I do not believe this is progressive. I believe it is rather the opposite, that it is regressive; because in our British North America Act and most of our legislation we keep fighting against this tendency to have everything in this great country run from a central point. I hope that that is not the intention behind this bill.

I believe that at the moment what Canadian business wants most is to be left alone. I think that if it can be given some help to secure better products and better markets it will be pleased. But I do not think that it will welcome interference or direction. In the explanation of the bill which the minister gave us when introducing it, my definite impression is that he intended to make use of the bill to give direction. Certain statements and writings of his were read into the record to indicate his feeling that Canadian business could not look after itself, and that Canadian business had to be directed in some fashion in order to get the economy rolling. I say, Mr. Speaker, that if this is in fact what is intended it will not have that effect. Business is interfered with constantly, it seems, by every piece of legislation which is introduced. We all know that a good deal of the business personnel now engaged in each section of the Canadian economy spend a lot of their time answering government questionnaires and requests, complying with regulations, paying taxes and filing returns. This is so particularly with small businesses. I have received all sorts of complaints about organizations such as the dominion bureau of statistics, which is authorized to send out questionnaires to small businesses, and which can force the small businesses to answer these questionnaires. In the case of a one-man business where the wife probably does the books, there just is not time to complete this sort of questionnaire. In the case of corporations, they must file tax returns and so forth, and fill in forms which emanate not only from the central government but also from the provincial and municipal governments. I think it is a common complaint among businesses large and small that government interference, government returns of one kind or another and government supervision is stifling the actual objective of these companies, which is to produce some product and put it on the market to sell. I saw a newspaper article recently which indicated that the percentage of people employed in office work is now increasing and the percentage of those employed in production decreasing. This is brought about to a large extent by the factors I have just mentioned, and government intervention in all these matters has caused a great deal of difficulty to small businesses.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that these theories of social and economic advances must be approached with caution. Last year I felt that the bill to establish the national economic development board went as far as it should have gone in the direction indicated by this new bill. Perhaps this new bill has gone too far, in that its direction is more intensified toward control of private business. We have to approach the matter with caution. We must not bring new ideas and specialized personnel to the point where they are devoting their efforts to non-productive objectives. I hope that the minister when he replies on second reading, or when we get to the committee stage, which we hope to do this afternoon, can assure us that this type of legislation and the work of this council will be approached in a cautious manner and that there will not be forced upon Canadian business another series of interferences by way of government forms and returns, and so forth, without an effective result being produced as far as business is concerned. If that assurance is given I see no reason why we should not support the bill.

Progressive legislation can be effective and useful if it is taken with caution. I do not want to mention any other matters, but matters have come before this house in recent weeks which a lot of us feel were brought about hastily and without proper thought. What we fear with regard to this bill is that in order to make a great impression on business and on the people the government will rush into interference with business in Canada in order to improve the employment situation and increase production and exports. Often if you rush into these things without proper groundwork being laid the effect is the absolute opposite of what was intended.

We do not get the results intended by legislation already on our statute books, nor do we get the result intended by new legislation.

May I say in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that the former bill on the economic development board was a satisfactory step. As I have stated, there is only one objectionable feature in the new bill, and that is in clauses 9 and 10. In the old bill the clauses were very limited and were prescribed with caution. The wording was carefully considered to the point where the council could not misuse its powers of direction. I am afraid that the same caution has not been used in the drafting of this present bill, but if we have the necessary assurances from the minister we will be satisfied to support the principle of the bill, with some hesitation as to the government's intention.

(Translation):

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great interest to the statement made by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) according to which the purpose of the economic council of Canada is to establish planning in our country. He also made a point of being explicit about the sort of planning he had in mind. In fact, the President of the Privy Council is an expert on planning fundamentals. When I see him, I am reminded of our great Quebec socialists. That is why we are always somewhat leery. Quebec is against all forms of socialism and the President of the Privy Council should know it since he has suffered two bitter defeats in his own city because of his ideas on centralization; he even had to go into exile in an English speaking riding.

When the President of the Privy Council uses the expression "indicative planning", I am yet confident. It even seems that he is trying to convince himself by repeating in his bill the words "assess, recommend, study, reexamine, analyse, encourage, initiate research," etc.

But I would advise him to be careful at all times on the brink of dangers he seems anxious not to reveal to the people. In fact, the government would have shown more respect for democracy if they had had two members appointed by each province and three by the federal government. Such a membership would be acceptable to all provinces and to all parties in the house. Thus they would have set up a national council representing all ten provinces.

So the objective of the economic council will be to study that grand system of supply and demand, resulting in all the various unpredictable up and down cycles, but having a real cause nevertheless. It is that cause I want to discuss before the house.

When I see the President of the Privy Council consider only two parts of our economic system, I am always surprised to find that he does not go farther along those lines and does not use the third part of our present economic system. Is it a lack of agility? Perhaps he keeps that last ball up his sleeve, to keep us guessing. That is his secret. Nevertheless, that omission should not be made on purpose, let alone, rewarded.

Mr. Speaker, the possibilities of adaptation of our industries will be considered, and even the creation of new industries if possible. Very well.

When we deal with markets, I feel that we give too much importance to export industries and not enough to manufacturing industries capable of reaching the private market. Certainly we should think about exports, and we can even boast of being one of the largest exporting countries.

And despite the fact that Canada ranks fourth among exporting countries, our trade balance is becoming more and more unfavourable. Is that not food for thought for our economists? I am not an economist but I have enough common sense as far as administration is concerned to realize that, if I sell 50 per cent of the lumber on my woodlot to pay my suppliers and still owe more, my lot is not producing as it should, or expenses have got out of hand.

While, with our exports in relation to our population, we should have enormous surpluses, we find in the end that we have increasing deficits. The defect certainly goes deeper than exports themselves. This deficiency in our economy is that we have completely ignored the local market. Consequently, we have taken great care not to help, encourage, back, not to mention all the other words used by the minister, the market we have here, within our reach, the domestic market.

I want to point out that these last years, the federal government gave all the assistance that was needed to certain industries, mainly to those with foreign capital, based on our natural resources, and completely forgot the smaller industries which could do nothing else but barely carry on in this one-way economy.

I could not say what the minister thinks about this but I am sure he could not help seeing that deficiency.

However, I fear his cure. In any case, if a better physician cannot be found, I hope with all my heart that he will rectify a mistake by helping the industries which should have been the first concern of the past governments, private industries, family industries. Thus, he would, I think, apply the effective cure to our deficit of payments by renewing, modernizing, multiplying and creating, in some cases, numerous private industries which have been needed for over 20 years in order to meet consumer demand and supply the domestic market which is today out of our control in a proportion of 60 per cent.

In brief, Mr. Speaker, I feel it is urgent—and Social Crediters have been saying this over and over again for 25 years—to deal with the crucial problem of the processing industry in our country, without slowing down the growth of our big industry.

How many consumer goods are we obliged to import when it would be so easy to produce, manufacture and process them here?

I cannot go into details because I will do so when the bill is studied in committee, but you can see all the sectors that the processing industry could cover all over the country, thus giving work to thousands of workers who could more easily consume all the goods manufactured in our country.

In spite of what our good economists say, we Social Crediters remain convinced that the great ill of the day is the lack of purchasing power due to a faulty distribution of credit.

As long as our modern economy rests solely on supply and demand, without taking into account capital and distribution, we will go from recession to recession every three or four years at the whim of those who control the faucet of our credit and of our system of distribution.

Since it is mostly concerned with exports, our big industry will continue to have a surplus of production at certain intervals because there is not enough variety at the secondary level of industry and it will be our small industries which will suffer the most from that situation.

I wonder if the President of the Privy Council ever asked himself the following question. Would it not be those who control our monetary system who cause those ups and downs, those alternating periods of surplus and restriction?

When, for instance, your business has been going well for three or four years and everybody is working, the bank suddenly tells you that it must cut off your credit, and you wonder why, but the only answer you get is that banks have decided to do so all over the country.

Everybody must accept that decision, private individuals, provincial governments and even the federal government.

That is why encyclicals state that those who control credit and money also control the lives of people.

Yet, we look for an answer, we examine the situation and we nationalize everything that comes under provincial jurisdiction. We are so anxious to solve the problem that we no longer even hear the protests of the provinces. Are we not doing the same thing as the foolish virgins of the gospel?

Let us put our house in order before we start telling the provinces that they are unable to solve the problem of unemployment.

Actually, unemployment is not a problem at all; it is just the normal consequence of undue interference on the part of the central government.

What our major concern should be under the present circumstances is to nationalize bank credit.

That would keep the great centralizers busy for a while. Let them start by centralizing credit. Let them give back to the Bank of Canada the exclusive powers of making and issuing all credit across Canada.

In the industrial field you will admit that some industries in the present situation must be guided by the state and even state controlled.

In the monetary field, you will admit also that eight private companies are able to issue, on behalf of the state, the credit which represents its face value, its actual wealth.

I do not understand you or I understand you too well. Spelling out the facts might be the greatest scandal against the state and the people.

You remind me of a milk producer who wonders what to do with its product while consumers are waiting for it to survive. Everybody starves because our producer decided against the use of a delivery man to take it to the consumers.

Is it because they do not understand or is it because they are paid not to understand?

That is the question we have the right to ask ourselves with respect to this government.

You persist in saying that the logical system of Social Credit is not feasible—because it does not suit the modern financiers and our would-be millionaires. But, at least, find a better one. And stop clowning in front of the people in order to distract their attention from the truth.

Those really responsible for our unappealing economy are not up on the moon. They are right here. They are the government and all the successive governments which sold out to big finance, and which are still living off the traitor's pay-off, surrendering their country to some financiers from whom they have accepted blood money.

The great remedy would be a nationalist government which would operate, at last, in the interest of the people who elect them and not of American finance.

Mr. Speaker, we are first of all for private enterprise, and we consider every act of the government as bringing assistance to that private enterprise.

Today, times have changed, and production must adapt to our atomic era and for that purpose, governments must support the almost superhuman efforts of private enterprise.

As for this bill, the federal government must give assistance, provided that doing so it does not violate any statute.

Under the pretense of playing the good Samaritan the federal government should not infringe upon the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces.

If the chairman of the future economic council abides by the standards stipulated in the bill, then we will be confident that this organization will be of valuable assistance in the improvement of our Canadian economy.

I would even dare ask something of the president. I acknowledge his high qualifications as a rational and enlightened economist, but I should like him to be a little more daring and I want to repeat this, I should like him to be a little more daring in his future research. In a word, would he stop just looking at facts? I have already seen many other economists doing just that.

I believe, sir, that your years of being factual are behind you and that your new duties require broader views. Stop being contemplative and initiate the new economic discoveries our country needs so urgently. Break away from the narrow framework of partisan philosophy and think of the greatness of our country.

[Mr. Gauthier.]

I am not prone to condemn at first sight. That is why I will have faith in the new council.

I am sure that the government will be able to take advantage of all the suggestions put forward in this debate.

Let us not forget that the federal government has been created by the provinces and that it will not be able to work seriously and efficiently unless it obtains full co-operation from the ten provinces.

The objective of the government, namely to create a system of economic planning in Canada, with close consultation with the provinces and the private sector of our economy, is most commendable.

We hope, for the minister's sake, that we will not have to wait too long for the desired results in the best interests of the labour force of this country.

(Text):

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take up a great deal of the time of the house today speaking on this bill. The subject, however, is a very important one. The scope for debate is very broad. This subject has recently occupied a great deal of our attention during the last two election campaigns, when it was mentioned from almost every platform in the country. I am sure it is a subject that is dear to the hearts of all Canadians, particularly since they have been somewhat frightened, bewildered and misled by the barrage of propaganda directed at them from the Liberals during the last two campaigns. The Liberals have been telling the people what a terrible state the country is in because of the Conservative government we have had for the last few years.

The purpose of this bill is to establish a council which will take a good look at the economy and report on the state of the economy. The Liberals would much prefer that any such report were given to them in private rather than to the public because they would much prefer to dispense their own kind of misinformation to the Canadian people. They have found it pays; they would not be in office if they were not so successful in selling this misinformation. However, I do not want to rehash the last two election campaigns. I do believe that we have had perhaps too much propaganda and not enough analysis of the factors in those parts of Canada's economy where the government can be useful.

A casual look at the subject will indicate the many roles a government can play. I am sure that those of us who believe in private enterprise are not at all interested in trying to get the government into business any more than is absolutely necessary. We believe in the maxim that the best government is the one which interferes the least. However, the modern world in which we live and the competition from other nations, makes it almost impossible for an industry in Canada today to survive and expand as it must without some help from the government. Other nations have their industries regimented, assisted or controlled by the government. They are financed by the government. The laws of the country are made to assist these industries to export their goods. Whether we like it or not, therefore, in order for Canadian business to have a chance to compete the government must assist in some ways.

Some of this assistance, of course, has to be in the form of a guard against the harmful effects of governmental action by other countries, and the influence they have on their own industries and their own exports to this country. Some of the effects we must have would take the form of financial assistance to our own exporters who want to enter markets where the purchaser might not be financially sound or where the cash to purchase the goods is not readily available.

I am sure that we should have spent much more time in considering the fact that Canada is just a new manufacturing nation. We should have considered the fact that, while we are very proud of what we have in this country, generally as a nation we had had much less need for education in order to get along. The educational standards of Canadians, therefore, have been very low. If we had considered all these facts, we would have realized some of these fundamental difficulties a little quicker than we did. I am just citing this as one example of the way in which the government could have used a little more foresight, and I am wondering if there are similar areas in which foresight could have been used. We discovered, almost belatedly, that we did not have a pool of skilled workers. We started to try to change this country from a producer of raw materials to a manufacturing economy. We started to build new plants and found we did not have the skilled tradesmen necessary to man those plants. We started a crash program to train them. Now I suggest that if there had been more imagination, more consideration of what I call the fundamentals of Canada's economy, whether it be by a skilled advisory group or by a government, we would not have been so late in recognizing the need for these skilled tradesmen.

I am happy to think that the problem of Canadian ownership of industry is receiving attention. I was glad to see that the government was quick to withdraw the method by which it was suggested they would do something about it. Certainly, the fundamental point here is that you do not get people to do things by punishing them if they do not. You encourage them to do what you think is best for the country. If there is one thought I may give the house today in this respect, it is this point of the encouragement of Canadian ownership. Obviously if the country is going to change from a producer of raw materials to a manufacturing economy, large amounts of capital have to be found. If these large amounts of capital are to be imported, then we are going to have a good percentage of our means of production owned outside the country.

The alternative is to turn the Canadian from being a saver into being an investor. Canadians are too cautious, too slow to invest, too careful of their dollar. We must show a little more daring. The only way you can encourage this is by giving rewards for investment. I would suggest the only way this can be done is to put in a new incentive for the wage earner, put him in a new tax bracket if he invests a certain percentage of his earnings per year. This might be done through a payroll deduction plan. Let us offer companies these same tax concessions to spread out their shareholdings amongst many more Canadians. Every time they sell more stock in a company give them a special tax concession. Let us tie it all together with a buy-Canadian program. By laying stress on these things, we will give encouragement rather than discouragement. Perhaps we will start tackling these fundamental problems in the right way. I hope that those on the treasury benches, and this council when it comes into being, will at least consider this method I have suggested.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Gregoire: Before you put the question, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. (Translation):

Mr. Speaker, before the question is put, I should like to rise on a question of privilege and I think I must do so today because of the remarks made by the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Drouin) earlier this afternoon.

In fact, the hon. member attempted to mislead the house this afternoon when he rose on a question of privilege to say that a member of our party had indicated, in the Parliamentary Guide, that he was a member of the Liberal party, because had the hon. member read the English version, in the same volume one paragraph before he would have noted that the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) is shown as a member of Social Credit.

It is true that in the French version, the word "Liberal" is mentioned, but on the other hand, the hon. member could have seen the words "Social Credit" in the English version before the French one.

Mr. Speaker, I think the facts should be set straight the same day, when one of our members who is ill was accused unfairly. I think it was unfair to point that out to the house.

(Text):

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I had prepared a speech for second reading of this bill, but I do not want to delay the house. However I do wish to say as an unregenerate democratic socialist I do not expect too much to come out of this bill, regardless of the best intentions of the government, so long as the commanding heights of our economy are in the hands of monopolistic capitalism, and to a large extent in the hands of foreign owners.

I want to endorse completely everything that was said by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Cameron) and to place my position on the record so as to protect my flanks in the days ahead.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The question is as follows: Mr. Lamontagne, seconded by Mr. Pickersgill, moves that Bill No. C-72, an act to provide for the establishment of an economic council of Canada, be now read a second time.

Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Carried.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Carried on division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, could the minister give me a short answer to this question? Why does he not take the opportunity of the federal-provincial conference to be held in a few days, to present this bill to the provinces and obtain better co-operation from all concerned?

(Text):

Mr. Thompson: I just wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that there has been a great deal said about economic planning and about the future of Canada during the course of this debate. The debate has ranged, on the one hand, from calling this legislation utterly useless and insipid, to calling it dangerous and dictatorial on the other. Taking a strictly objective and constructive view so far as the setting up of this economic council is concerned, I say it can render a great deal of good and a genuine service to Canada if certain precautions are heeded and a few fundamental changes are made to several of the sections.

There can arise real areas of conflict between the economic council of Canada and other regional and provincial economic councils, such as the Atlantic development board. In my opinion there is a real and pressing need in two areas so far as the function of the council is concerned. First it involves overall co-ordination and interlocking with provincial and regional economic boards and councils, and second there is a need to bring about a greater degree of co-operation and understanding between management, labour and government.

The greatest danger we see at the senior level of government is that it will appropriate to itself the sole responsibility for the creation and execution of all plans. In this respect I would like to read a portion of an editorial which appears on page 32 of the July issue of Canadian Business. This article is very timely, and it says under the heading "Too Much Government Elbowing":

> The greatest danger we face is that our senior levels of government will appropriate to themselves sole responsibility for the creation and execution of all plans. It is still timely to remind ourselves that the prime responsibility of government should remain the clear delineation of long range objectives and the revamping of the financial and commercial structure through appropriate changes in taxes, tariffs, combines legislation and the like, to create an economic climate that encourages and prods private industry into constructive expansionary programs. If it is true, as indicated in the speech from the throne, that these are "times of great change throughout the world" when "the task before us is to seek out with wisdom and imagination, those new paths that will surely lead us forward," it is also true that the need for business to maintain maximum flexibility and freedom of choice is equally imperative. This requirement is not fulfilled by governments vying with each other to erect a multiplicity of new administrative bodies and to assume financial responsibility for activities now largely and more properly the responsibility of the private sectors of the economy . . . National and provincial attitudes with respect to taxation, industry rationalization, welfare, financial and fiscal policies all need to be formulated and pursued in a manner that aids and not hinders Canada's drive toward our minimum growth objective.

In this legislation we must have a guarantee that there will be full consultation with proper representatives of labour and management before instituting production expansion and research programs. What incentives for co-operation are there if the reports are to be withheld and if the findings of the council are not to be published? The question is simply, how do labour and management have a hand in planning productivity and assistance programs if they are to be removed or elbowed out from the carrying out of programs introduced by the council, and which are taken over by the government? I think we should bear this in mind as we go through the clauses of the bill.

Mr. Gelber: Mr. Chairman, planning has become fashionable but even though it is fashionable there is no reason it should not be examined. It seems to me there was much lacking in this debate, but the problem we are facing is a serious one for the country. This country must grow economically at a faster rate than it has been growing.

In certain parts of the house there is a feeling that we should go back to the free, automatic, self-correcting market, but this market does not exist any more. Since the days of Sir John A. Macdonald we have always interfered with the development of business in our national policy. We have directed business in certain channels, we have provided avenues for business to develop in, and have provided a climate in which investment can come to Canada.

Mr. Chairman, as our country has developed in two world wars we have come to a stage of industrial maturity more akin to that of the United States. At the present time our economy and state of industrial maturity are more similar than ever before in our history. One further illusion has been destroyed; that is, that the more dissimilar are our economies, the more our trade is increased. We have to create in Canada a proper framework in which business can develop and prosper.

There is a view that our future can be both bright and haphazard. This is a mischievous idea. We certainly knew in the depression of 30 years ago that the so-called free market could exact too great a price. The unregulated market can be unstable, it can be capricious, it can be irrational. This is not good enough. We now have economic tools which we and others have developed, that can be used to guide the development of our economy, to lead us to higher economic plateaus and, to provide a greater abundance for the people of Canada. In providing this economic context one of the things we have done is provide welfare payments, social insurance benefits, social assistance, health and welfare services, from all levels of government amounting to $3,300 million a year. This was the figure in 1961, which was 11 times what we had paid in the immediate post-war years. This is not only a great social advance but it helps provide a market; it helps provide an economic context in which business can develop. This represents an important social revolution and is a compelling economic fact. The key to economic growth is profitable investment.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to quote from a study made by the international labour organization, published in 1961, by a group of experts one of whom was Professor Benjamin Higgins of McGill University. It says this:

> The experts' analysis of the nature of the problem confirms the belief that lack of employment opportunities is due largely to capital shortage. In their view policies for proper utilization of labour must therefore centre mainly on ways of increasing investment and of making the best use of such capital as countries have or can obtain.
> The first requirement is to raise the level of investment. As employment opportunities increase, the living standards of those who would otherwise have remained unemployed or underemployed will rise and there will be an urgent need for larger supplies of food and other necessities.

The key to economic growth is investment. We must provide more job opportunities; we must provide 250,000 additional jobs each year in this country. We have the resources, we have the manpower and the plant. We must now direct our economic activities into channels which will provide a greater rate of economic growth. Total new capital outlays reached a peak in 1957, declined in subsequent years through 1961, but rose again in 1962 and appear to be going upward again in 1963. These totals, however, are not sufficient to create a level of full employment in this country. We have in Canada half a million unemployed. If we are to create a higher level of employment we must encourage the mobilization of our economic forces and create a greater flow of investment capital in order to accelerate our rate of economic development.

This bill is to call together, to negotiate, to talk to people who are concerned with planning. We are planning at all levels of government; we are planning in business. It is a matter of getting an over-all umbrella for the co-ordinating of a plan of economic development. This matter has urgency; this matter has importance; this matter is a challenge to Canada and is a step along the road to an over-all plan for the economic well-being of Canada, in co-operation with the provinces, municipalities and business. It opens up new opportunities for the development of this country.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Scott: No, Mr. Chairman. There are a few general remarks I should like to make on the bill and which we would have made on second reading except that we thought it preferable to have second reading and make these remarks at the committee stage.

As has already been pointed out, the bill is really almost identical to the one brought before us by the previous government, which bill at that time intended to set up the national economic development board. There are two major changes in it, the enlarging of the permanent staff of one to three, which is a distinct improvement, and the arrangement for a greater amount of publication of some of the studies which the board will carry out. This in itself is, again, an improvement and is welcomed. However, beyond that point there is really not a great deal of difference between the two bills, unless the minister can draw some matters to our attention which have escaped our notice to this point.

My chief reason for wishing to participate in this debate is to deal with some aspects of the minister's speech when introducing the measure on second reading. The speech itself was an interesting one. Knowing the calibre of the minister and his general economic reputation, we expected nothing less from him. It was interesting chiefly because it was one of the few occasions when anyone in the chamber has attempted to substantiate by some reasonable, economic arguments the planning attitudes of the government. We have had a great deal of discussion from the Conservative party about regimentation, interference with individual rights, and all that sort of nonsense. But the minister's speech was a rational attempt to economically explain their position on planning. As I say, Mr. Chairman, we expected nothing less from him, knowing his reputation.

I would like to deal with some of the points he raised because we in this party feel that the attitude he expressed is to some degree economically unrealistic and is a misrepresentation—not an intentional one—of the positions and policies we have advocated in this and other debates when similar economic measures have been under consideration.

In his speech the minister spoke of two types of planning. He first spoke of what he called indicative planning, and then of imperative planning. I think we should make it perfectly clear for the record that this bill does not provide either indicative planning or what the minister calls imperative planning. The minimum requirements of good, effective indicative planning is a planning board that will use all the advanced technological facilities at the disposal of the economists and that, after its studies are completed, will come up with a picture of the economy of the country as they would like it to be; a picture of the economy that will use the input and output table analysis, that will show the desired levels of production and the breakdown of the desired levels by industrial sectors, that will trace back how these can be developed. These tables will affect the employment of manpower and the location and distribution of capital investment. This picture of the economy is then made available to the country and to industry generally, and it is hoped they will use this picture or plan of the economy to guide their investment policies and to regulate the scope of their own economy. In short, it is hoped that the economic sectors of the economy, industry and other people involved will co-operate with regard to the levels of employment and investment which are envisaged in the government's plan and go beyond the levels of economic growth.

An analysis of this bill makes it perfectly clear that it does not even go that far. I know that at the conclusion of his speech the minister spoke of the necessity for devising a plan of economic development. That is not in the bill. Its terms of reference are very vague. It seems to be largely a fact-finding, information-gathering, information-co-ordinating agency. As the council develops under the guidance of the minister, perhaps he will be able to turn it into a proper agency of indicative planning. We very much hope that this will be the case, but as it stands at the present time the bill does not provide for indicative planning as understood by economists and as indicative planning takes place in other countries of the world.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands dealt this afternoon in some detail with some of the indicative planning which has been done in France and the amazing amount of success which has followed it. For the information of members of the Conservative party who were very worried about infringement on the rights of big business and private enterprise, it is interesting to note that in France when indicative planning was commenced the business community were opposed to it. But then as they appreciated its advantages and the way it could assist them, people in private enterprise are now its proponents and some of its major supporters. When you examine our proposals in comparison with proposals in other countries of the world, Mr. Chairman, you will realize how weak this council will be. The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands pointed out that the section of the French plan which prepared indicative planning has a permanent staff of 50 with casual employees numbering in the hundreds in order to draw up the type of indicative plan which is needed. Under this bill we have three permanent people, some part time directors and presumably some staff; but our suggestion is that this type of organization is totally incapable of doing even the indicative planning of which the minister spoke.

The real tragedy of this is that good indicative planning does work. If you prepare a plan of your economy as you want it to be, and if the industries of the country are convinced that the proper amount of research, accurate information and the proper amount of time has gone into drawing up such an economic plan, probably at least 50 per cent of it will be effective. Our main objection is that unless you are prepared to add on to your general plan some agency to ensure that it is carried out, then the general effectiveness of the plan itself is greatly diminished.

The other matter the minister spoke about was what he called imperative planning. This is nothing but a straw man set up by the minister, which he immediately proceeded to knock over. It is a caricature of our position to suggest that the detailed over-all planning that we advocate requires a daily, detailed intervention by government in each sphere of economic activity. To some extent, as I have said, well prepared indicative planning does work if it is a genuine plan. It works even better if the sectors of the economy which are involved know that behind the desire for co-operation lies a mechanism which, if necessary, can be used to see that the plan is carried out. If plans are to be effective governments must be prepared to intervene at critical points in the economy to ensure that the plans are carried into effect. If you are not prepared to do that, Mr. Chairman, then you are just playing around with the whole concept of planning. If your economic plan provides the mechanism to see that it is carried out, you will never need to use it in 90 per cent of the cases, because if it is an effective plan which can be consummated by the government, private industry will go along with it and you will not be required to interfere in those sections of the economy.

The minister said in his speech that one reason he is opposed to imperative planning is that he does not think that imperative planning could work in an industrial society. He stated that this was an acceptable form of planning for underdeveloped areas but that it would not work in an industrial society. All the minister is saying in that sentence really is that in our industrial society as we know it now the existing power groups are already so strong and so well-entrenched that it would be very hard to deal with them. But whether the government plans or not, whether it leaves it to the spheres of private enterprise, planning does take place. If it is not done by the government in the interests of all the people, then it is done by private enterprise in its own interests. That is the complaint that we make with the statement made by the minister in introducing this bill.

The private sections of our economy plan for their own welfare, and plan very inefficiently. As far as I am concerned, I cannot understand why governments are not prepared to step in and protect the interests of the community as a whole. When a government steps in to see that a plan for the general welfare of the whole community is carried into effect, you are not at that stage interfering with the rights of private corporations; you are affirmatively asserting the rights of individuals in the community in general rather than interfering with the private rights of corporations.

The minister further said that effective planning or imperative planning would involve wage and price controls. With all due respect, Mr. Chairman, that is nonsense. All you are doing with effective economic planning is controlling investment. Effective economic planning deals mainly and exclusively with the proper location of investment in the economic sphere of the country. For example, the minister said it would not work because we have a mixed economy in Canada. This again is not so. The mixed economies of Europe have had to use many of the planning techniques we in this party have advocated over the years, and they are working very well. So that a mixed economy can be adapted to the whole concept of proper and effective economic planning.

The minister also said that effective economic planning could not be used because we are living in a federal state, with the provinces having their own jurisdictions and their own areas of operation. This is a real problem. No economist could afford to ignore or overlook it. But surely the real problem is this, that our governments in the past have never really tried to solve the problems we face as far as the federal structure of Canada is concerned. We have always said that planning has to be federal, provincial, and much of it also municipal. The real difficulty is not hiding behind the problems which confederation creates but in trying to sit down, in co-operation with our provincial and municipal groups, and see that the present institutional and jurisdictional situations are developed in such a way that our planning can be effective.

The hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands pointed out how the pensions scheme, if properly used, could provide a tremendous fund which could be allocated among our provinces. Once you begin federal planning you begin to draw in provincial bodies. They begin to co-operate in your schemes. You begin to draw in your municipal organizations. What we in Canada need is a permanent secretariat dealing with provincial and municipal matters. Perhaps we even need a minister of state for the provinces. Perhaps our provinces need departments of federal relations. But certainly the difficulty is not going to be solved merely by saying that our federal constitution makes effective and proper planning impossible. This is not so. What is required is to get into the whole field of economic planning, and then you will find that many of your constitutional difficulties will prove to be imaginative. The minister spoke of a plan. But that is not in the bill. Maybe he will tell us what authority is in the bill for drawing up such a plan. We should like to see it. He spoke about implementing a plan. We would like to know how. If the government is not prepared to intervene in the economy, how could it ever implement such a plan completely? Is it merely intending to rely on the co-operation of the people concerned?

In conclusion I should like to say a word in explanation of why we have been so insistent on discussing planning in this debate. When one examines the broad field of Canadian affairs he begins to realize how many matters await attention of governments both federal and provincial. There is, for example, chronic unemployment, the misallocation of investment, the lack of social capital to carry out important and necessary works, the slowness of regional development, the fluctuations in the business cycle of which the minister spoke and its reaction on our economy, the slow rate of growth and the fantastic changes which are taking place in the pattern of world trade. We believe that proper planning really can pursue the goal of full employment without endangering the balance of payments situation. We have been asking ever since this house assembled for some clear statement by the government on its trade policy. It is only by means of proper economic planning that we can really analyse our economy, find out what industries can compete in world markets and which are so inefficient that they cannot do so. It is only by means of proper economic planning that we can provide a scheme of adjustment assistance to industries which need such assistance during a period of transition. We are faced with all the difficulties posed by automation. We have to contend with a situation where so many of our assets are under foreign control. We must recognize that there is in Canada a lack of economic democracy—in practice the consumer has no rights, and no say about what is put on the market. His opinions are, in any case, created by the mass media. There is still educational inequality. Does anyone in his right mind believe that all these things can be tackled and put to rights unless there is an over-all plan for Canadian development which would marshal all our resources, decide what we are capable of producing and determine how Canada can fit into the pattern of world trade?

I wish to emphasize once again that with the best intentions in the world this poor economic council will not be able to remedy this situation. It has neither the power nor the authority necessary to do even the elementary work of indicative planning, much less to see that the plans made are carried into effect.

Of course, the proposal represents a step forward and we intend to support it. We hope the chairman will take this council and make something of it. If this is done, perhaps in the years ahead Canada can move into the modern world of economic planning and take her place among some of the more progressive and forward looking nations of the world.

Mr. Pickersgill: There was a kind of informal arrangement—I do not wish to put it any higher that that—that we would try to finish this bill today, and I was wondering whether it would be the wish of the committee to sit on for half or three quarters of an hour with a view to trying to complete the committee stage.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In ordinary circumstances I think there would be agreement to continue to sit, but I know plans have been made by various members based on the assumption that we would rise at six o'clock, the regular closing hour.

I was glad to see the words of commendation used by the Secretary of State last evening with reference to the co-operative attitude shown by the house, but I think this is one occasion when it is impossible to accede to the request which has just been made, much as I would like to do so. In any event, there will be a good deal of discussion on this subject. I am very anxious to hear the President of the Privy Council as he gives us, as I am sure he will, the philosophy which will animate the government in connection with the operation of this economic council. We are as desirous as can be of hearing the hon. gentleman translate the philosophy in the book which was mentioned—I gave only part of the name when I referred to it in the house; I gave the second part of the name and left out the major part. I noticed on examination of Hansard that the hon. gentleman asked me a question, a question I did not hear, as to whether or not I would give the full name of the book. Anyway, I am sure the hon. gentleman will wish to elucidate some of his philosophy. We have been anxious to hear him translate into concepts for parliament the general views expressed by him during the days when he represented the tribune of the Liberals. I am sure the house would not desire to deprive itself of the fullest opportunity to hear the hon. gentleman. This is an important piece of legislation and anything on our part which might rush it to a conclusion would certainly not be a proper discharge of our responsibilities in the opposition.

Mr. Thompson: The situation in which we now find ourselves in this house does not allow time for light hearted jesting about what we should or should not be doing. We have wasted hours and hours on this bill without referring to the specific items with which we are concerned.

An hon. Member: Wasted?

Mr. Thompson: Yes, a lot of the time has been wasted. It seems to me we should realize that there is a certain amount of work which we should be accomplishing, and get down to the business with which this bill actually deals.

An hon. Member: Politics.

Mr. Thompson: This is not a question of politics. Mr. Chairman, if you would ask certain members to be quiet you might be able to hear what I have to say. We are very willing to co-operate in extending the time of sitting in this house, now or on some other occasion, in order to get down to the work we are supposed to be doing; but as long as there continues to be the attitude which some people have in this house I do not suppose we shall really make any progress.

It had been informally agreed by the different parties in this house that we would try to get this through tonight. However, some of the most important aspects of the measure are still ahead of us. It is time we began to deal item by item with the work before us, allowing sufficient time for this to be done. Otherwise, we shall be running contrary to everything which was said during the earlier stages of debate. I am sorry we are not going ahead to make the extensive progress which we could have done today had we wished.

Mr. Knowles: What has already been said makes it clear we are not going to sit beyond six o'clock, though the clock I am looking at does, indeed, give us a few minutes longer. In order to clear up what may be a misconception, let me say I know of a general understanding that we would try to finish second reading today. I think we have kept that understanding. I knew of no understanding that we would attempt to finish any of the later stages.

Mr. Pickersgill: If the hon. gentlemen would read the words I used last night as reported in Hansard he would see that they admit of only one interpretation. However, I think it would be fruitless to split hairs in connection with it.

Clause 1 stands.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. gentleman rises may I say I believe there is a general understanding that it is agreeable to all hon. members to have an order of the house to continue until the end of the month of July the hours of sitting that we have been following during the present week. If that could be so noted it would save having a formal motion and save a little of the time of the house in that way.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That represents the agreement. I think it is a good idea. I think it is reasonable and it is not oppressive in any way.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, we agree that we should continue with the hours that we have been following this week, and if it will facilitate getting through the work which I think it is generally agreed we should be getting through the hours might even be extended.

Mr. Knowles: What the Secretary of State asks for is what we agreed to originally and we stand by it.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that the hours of the house for the rest of the month shall be the same as they are now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Monteith: I have just one question. How does this affect the hours of sitting on Friday?

Mr. Pickersgill: As I understand it, the hours of sitting on Friday are from 11 o'clock in the morning, with the usual luncheon adjournment, until 6 p.m. The government would be very happy if the house would consider sitting on Friday evening but I am not asking for that. Hon. members might think about it and if they think it might be useful in making progress we could decide that on Friday. I say that the government would be very happy but I am not asking for any decision now.

Mr. Thompson: May I ask the house leader a question in this regard? If we wait until Friday to decide whether we are going to sit on Friday evening it will seriously disrupt the plans of a great many members of the house who otherwise would be going home for the week end. This actually happened last Friday because last Thursday I understood it was agreed that we would sit until midnight on Friday. Many of our members agreed to do that, and then some time on Friday afternoon the arrangement was changed and the plans of a number of members for their week end activities were seriously affected.

Mr. Pickersgill: I can repeat that if the house is in the mood to accept a decision now to sit on Friday evening no one would be as happy as I would.

Mr. Monteith: Apparently the order is going to cover the same hours as we have now. Would the house leader reiterate his outline of the business for tomorrow and Friday at least?

Mr. Pickersgill: It was understood that tomorrow we would start at once with the Canada pension plan resolution. That would be the order for the whole day, unless debate should be completed before the day is over. It was indicated that on Friday—and the hon. member for Perth spoke about this last night —if there was a general understanding that there would not be a protracted debate, we would take the customs tariff bill and also the other tariff bill first; but if there were to be a protracted debate I think we would prefer to leave them over until next week. In any case, the main item of business for Friday would be the income tax resolution, and should that be completed we would then go on with the excise tax resolution. Those two items and the tax bills will be the business for next week until they have been completed.

It being seven minutes after six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

PRIVATE BILLS

COMMITTEE REPORT—STATEMENT BY MR. SPEAKER ON MOTION OF MEMBER FOR PARRY SOUND-MUSKOKA

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have a short statement dealing with a question of procedure which I think it would be in order to make at this time. As appears in Votes and Proceedings of yesterday the hon. member for St. Paul's (Mr. Wahn) presented the fourth report of the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills which read as follows:

> Your committee has considered Bill S-15, an act to incorporate The Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada, and has agreed to report the preamble thereof not proven on the grounds that the committee feels that it would not be appropriate in the circumstances outlined to the committee to issue a federal charter.

Thereafter, as reported in yesterday's Hansard at pages 2292 and 2293, the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) proposed the following motion:

> That Bill No. S-15 as reported be referred back to the committee on miscellaneous private bills for reconsideration.

At that point Mr. Speaker intervened to suggest to the hon. member that the proper time to move such a motion would be during the private bills period if the bill was then before the house. Later on the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka stated that under the rules, especially standing order 110, this bill would not be placed on the order paper, and this would prohibit the bill in question being placed upon the orders of the day during the private members' hour. At this juncture Mr. Speaker suggested that the matter be postponed until today to give him the opportunity of going into the matter.

May I be permitted to say that I have considered the matter and to reiterate that it was not the proper time for the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka to propose his motion to refer back the bill under routine proceedings, as he did yesterday, since the bill had first to be placed upon the orders of the day by special order of the house. In this connection standing order 110 applies.

In looking at two precedents relating to similar instances—the first in 1931, at page 552 of the Journals and page 3824 of Hansard; the second in 1958, at page 401 of the Journals and page 3329 of Hansard—it will be seen that a motion should be moved and adopted under routine proceedings in order to place such a bill upon the orders of the day for consideration, and the motion to refer the bill back to the committee is dealt with at its proper place when private bills are taken up during the hour for private members' business.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORRIS REPORT—ANNOUNCEMENT OF APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL COUNSEL

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I wish to announce that pursuant to the recommendations of the Norris report regarding possible prosecutions, special counsel will be appointed immediately to review all the facts and advise whether charges should be laid against any persons for conspiracy to prevent, by unlawful means, persons from working in the business of shipping; or for conspiracy to commit indictable offences, particularly offences involving violence; or for offences under the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act.

At the appropriate stage I would envisage that there would be consultation with the appropriate provincial authorities in regard to any Criminal Code infractions indicated by the advice of such counsel.

NORRIS REPORT—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SETTING UP OF INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I have a very brief announcement to make. On Monday last, on tabling the report of the industrial inquiry commission on the disruption of shipping, I indicated to the house that the report and the recommendations would be a matter of study by the Department of Labour and other departments. I wish now to advise the house that the government has set up a committee consisting of the deputy ministers of justice, transport and labour and the under secretary of state for external affairs. Other departments may be called in for consultation as the need arises.

This committee has already begun its work and has been asked to bring forward proposals for study by the government without delay. I might also add that I am getting in touch with the United States secretary of labour regarding a further meeting in the near future.

TRADE

WHEAT—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SALE TO POLAND

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform hon. members that the Canadian wheat board has made another sale of wheat under the provisions of the Export Credits Insurance Act and will today be making the following announcement from their head office in Winnipeg:

> The Canadian wheat board has negotiated a contract for the sale of approximately 100,000 tons of wheat for shipment to Poland. This sale, totalling about 3.7 million bushels, is for shipment from St. Lawrence and Pacific coast ports during the period August to November, 1963.
> Payment for the wheat is to be made on the basis of 10 per cent at time of shipment with the remaining balance to be paid in equal instalments plus interest at 2, 2½ and 3 years respectively. These credit arrangements were authorized by the government of Canada under the provisions of the Export Credits Insurance Act.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce in reference to the announcement he made of a sale of wheat to Poland. Would the minister be in a position to give the house some information as to the terms of the sale?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I gave these terms in the statement that I made. I have given the copy of the statement to the Hansard reporter. And the hon. member will be able to read it in Hansard.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. At what price per bushel was that deal negotiated between Canada and Poland?

Mr. Sharp: At the best possible price, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Part of my question has been asked in other supplementaries. Could the minister give us the grade of the wheat sold to Poland? I wanted the price as well, but he could not tell us what the price would be.

Mr. Woolliams: He has not told us the price yet.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): I wanted the grade and the price.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, when I made this statement I was very careful to say I was informing the house of the announcement being made today by the Canadian wheat board. As I have said on many occasions, the Canadian wheat board is instructed by parliament to sell wheat to best advantage. It has never been customary in this house to reveal details, nor do I think it is proper for me as the minister to take credit for these sales.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: Out of courtesy to the house I did think hon. members might like to know the terms of the announcement that is being made simultaneously in Winnipeg today.

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I have a further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pickersgill: Is this a debate?

Mr. Simpson: —for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the minister's statement that the shipment of this grain will take place through St. Lawrence ports, and I believe he mentioned west coast ports, would the minister consider asking the wheat board to see that a substantial portion of this grain will be directed through the port of Churchill—

Mr. Fisher: Never.

Mr. Simpson: —where the apparent savings by shipping the grain through this port can accrue to all western farmers?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, it is the policy of the Canadian wheat board, and has been for many years, to ship as much grain as possible through the port of Churchill so the full capacity of that port is utilized. I understand this continues to be its policy.

Mr. J. E. Pascoe (Moose Jaw-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Does the minister believe that the sale of 3.7 million bushels of wheat to Poland—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pascoe: —will do much to alleviate the situation shown in the latest release by the dominion bureau of statistics—

Mr. Speaker: Order. What is the question?

Mr. Pascoe: My question is that—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pascoe: —regarding storage facilities, the figures published by the dominion bureau of statistics figures indicate that elevators will be plugged when marketing of the new crop starts in about three weeks time.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. gentleman agrees that all farmers in western Canada would like to deliver as much grain as possible in this crop year. If this fills the elevators, it is the inevitable result of that policy.

FINANCE

UNITED STATES TAX ON INTERNATIONAL CAPITAL TRANSACTIONS

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the message which the President of the United States delivered to congress at noon today is directed towards the improvement of the international balance of payments of the United States. One of the measures to which the President referred was action yesterday by the international monetary fund to facilitate continued investment by the fund in United States dollars. The arrangement is quite a technical one and I shall not try to describe it at this time. The effect is simply to allow the fund's holdings of U.S. dollars to continue to increase as they have done in the last two or three years.

Another measure announced by the President involves a system of taxes on certain international capital transactions. Certain types of capital movements have been causing weakness in the U.S. balance of payments and the new tax system is apparently designed to meet this problem. The tax applies to U.S. nationals who purchase securities, both bonds and stocks, of the following countries: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Federal Republic of Germany, Hong Kong, Italy, Japan, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, Monaco, The Netherlands, New Zealand, Norway, Republic of South Africa, San Marino, Spain, Sweden, Switzerland and the United Kingdom.

The tax rate proposed ranges from 2¾ per cent of the value of securities with a maturity of three to three and a half years and rises to 15 per cent in the cases of securities with a maturity of 28½ years or more. The same 15 per cent applies to purchases of shares. Perhaps I might just read into the record the three paragraphs relating to this particular tax:

> The interest equalization tax would be a special temporary excise tax, to remain in effect through 1965, imposed on the acquisition of stock, securities or other obligations of foreign issuers or depository receipts or other evidence of interest in, or rights to acquire, such interests. The tax would be payable by all United States citizens, residents and corporations, including organizations exempt from federal income taxes. The tax would apply to portfolio purchases of stock or debt securities issued by foreign corporations, governments, or other persons, whether such securities represented new or already outstanding issues and whether the acquisition was effected in the United States or abroad. It would not apply, however, to purchases of interest presently held by Americans.

U.S. Tax on International Capital

> The tax would not be applicable to direct investments by United States persons in overseas subsidiaries or affiliates, nor would it apply to acquisition of any indebtedness payable upon demand or maturing in less than three years. Moreover, loans made by commercial banks in the ordinary course of their banking business would be exempted. The tax would not be applied to purchases of securities issued by international organizations of which the United States is a member, governments of countries considered to be less developed, and corporations whose principal activities are centred in less developed countries. An underwriter or dealer would be exempted from the tax on acquisitions of stock or obligations resold to foreigners as part of the underwriting of a new issue.
> The tax would be applied to acquisitions occurring after the date of the President's message. It would not apply to purchase commitments made on the open market on or before that date or to other purchases which the buyer on that date was unconditionally obligated to make. Exemption from the tax would also be provided for purchases made within 60 days after the date of the President's message if the security purchased were covered by a registration statement filed with the securities and exchange commission within 90 days prior to the date of the President's message.

Now, Mr. Speaker, quite clearly the measures proposed by the President of the United States will have wide repercussions in each of the 22 countries I have mentioned. These repercussions, if the President's proposals are approved by congress, may well have an important effect upon Canada's balance of payments and upon the Canadian economy as a whole. It would be unwise for me to say more than this, however, until there has been time to give careful study and consideration to all the implications of the President's proposals.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, the statement just made to the house by the Minister of Finance, of which some of us at any rate had some prior knowledge, is one of the most important statements which could have been made to the parliament of Canada at any time in the immediate past, present or future. The implications are such that there should certainly be no casual comments at this time. As the minister has pointed out, there are highly technical questions involved on which one would not wish to pass hasty judgment or make hasty observations. Certainly this message, if it were to be implemented by congress, could have most serious implications as far as the situation in Canada is concerned. Obviously this is a matter for congress, and it would be both bad taste and poor judgment for us to make comments on a matter which has only today been referred to that body.

This bears out what has been suggested in the past, that this problem of the balance of payments is one which the United States government has had well in mind, and it was questionable whether the budgetary proposition made by the minister should have been put forward at this time in view of the possibility of some such action as this being taken, as some of us had suggested it might be.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): I think this proposition made by President Kennedy is close to another proposition which was made in this house about a month ago when the Minister of Finance presented his budget. At that time he imposed a tax of 30 per cent on the sale of Canadian stocks or shares to foreign purchasers. The hon. gentleman withdrew that tax, but today the administration of the United States has proposed exactly the same tax except that instead of the rate being 30 per cent it is to be 15 per cent.

(Translation):

At that time, Mr. Speaker, we had in Canada a Mr. Kierans who went to see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) to ask him to withdraw the tax on the sale of Canadian securities to non-residents. Today we hope that the same Mr. Kierans will go and see President Kennedy to ask him to withdraw that tax too.

Mr. Speaker, I notice however that even if the tax applies exactly on the same grounds as the one the Minister of Finance had introduced on June 13 last only to withdraw it a few days later, this time, instead of the Canadian government getting the profit, it will be the American government which will collect this tax on the sale of securities, and, once again, Canadians will be victimized.

I am sure that when the Minister of Finance spoke to us about administrative difficulties, there were none; but the American government intended to impose that tax today. The under-secretary of state exerted some pressure on the Minister of Finance for the withdrawal of the tax, so that the American government might impose it now on exactly the same items.

At that time the Minister of Finance spoke of technicalities and of technical difficulties. Today, he again mentions technicalities. There are no such technicalities. It is the Canadian government which, once again, complies with demands of American finance.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance said, and rightly so, that this might affect the balance of payments, but I think that, as we Canadians will certainly benefit less from the influx of American capital in this country, and shall have less American investments here, I think this would be the time for the Minister of Finance to find some sources of capital, to create capital in our own country, so that investments do not decrease and that we continue to develop this country with our own capital, because we shall no longer be able to count on American capital investments.

The Minister of Finance should see things more clearly now that he has been taken in by the American government, and he should learn from that lesson that he cannot count on foreign countries helping Canada—on the contrary we are their victim—and he should see to it that we, in Canada, use our own capital resources to develop this country.

Americans also have their own sources of capital, and they use them, not only for the expansion of their country, but for developing other parts of the world. Canada should do the same thing. This country should get from the Bank of Canada the capital it needs for its development, and then it will have no more cause to complain about decisions made by foreign countries.

(Text):

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, as the spokesman for the Conservative party has said, this is a most serious statement that the Minister of Finance has had to make to us. However, I think it would be extremely naïve to imagine that Mr. Kennedy has taken this action because of the actions of the Canadian government. I think that is perhaps exaggerating our importance in the world.

It is, however, a situation that the government should have been able to foresee in the light of the continuing stream of reports for many weeks past of the grave concern of the United States authorities over the continuing drain on their gold reserves and the appeals that were made by President Kennedy to United States investors to withhold further transfers of capital to Europe in particular to West Germany, for one.

I foresee that the government is going to face some very serious problems with regard to our exchange rate. If they attempt in the face of this move on the part of the United States authorities to maintain the fixed exchange rate and to pursue the minister's professed goal of a balanced budget, we are going to find that the Canadian people will have to pay a very bitter price for it.

I suggest that the government should now reconsider its whole attitude toward an expansionist policy in this country at this time. It may very well be that the crisis that has been precipitated by the United States administration will cause the industrialized countries in the world to take seriously the proposals that have been made for the developing of a much greater measure of international liquidity than at present obtains. If so, then there will be some gain made from this situation.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether any information was given to him by the President prior to the announcement today of this new system of excise tax. Was there any consultation, or has the love feast of Hyannis Port now been dissipated in the light of the experience of the United States following the withdrawal of the 30 per cent security tax?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I can understand the right hon. gentleman's interest in love feasts of the kind he has mentioned, because he was not exposed to any of them during his term of office. Naturally it has rankled ever since that we have initiated them on this side. Subject to correction, I may say that I believe the Minister of Finance has been in touch with United States government officials on this matter. I understand that President Kennedy's administration sent an official up from the treasury office before this announcement was made in Washington.

Mr. Diefenbaker: When was that?

An hon. Member: How long ago?

Mr. Pearson: It was this morning.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the decision may have been taken yesterday, but that is rather expeditious action. I do not believe, although I will find this out, that a messenger from the President was sent to any of the other 22 capitals.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is it not a fact that Canada is the one nation that will be directly affected to a greater extent than any other?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, that is not a fact. The right hon. gentleman should know there are 22 governments that will be affected by this matter.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the dissertation on taxation to which the right hon. Prime Minister has just exposed us, may I ask the Minister of Finance if there is any other government of the 22 nations which has considered or was considering a withholding tax to the extent that we were when the President of the United States made this statement this morning? In view of his announcement, I am wondering if the Minister of Finance is not now prepared to give consideration to the withdrawal of his suggestion in respect of increasing the withholding tax because the same result would have been achieved by the President?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): It would seem to me, Mr. Speaker, that we are back on the budget debate.

An hon. Member: We will be tomorrow.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps I could add to that answer by saying that the withholding tax to which my hon. friend referred was imposed by his government.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nowlan: I should like to ask the Prime Minister to what extent the government of which I was a member imposed a withholding tax which had to be withdrawn within 48 hours after it was introduced, and to what extent his government is imposing a withholding tax now to which parliament has not given approval?

Mr. Pearson: It would take me too long to go through all the deficiencies of the previous government.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I should like now to go to the cooler end of the house. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. The tax on foreign securities proposed to congress by the President of the United States is going to have very serious effects upon provincial and municipal financing in Canada. What steps does the Canadian government intend to take to make up this gap, which will undoubtedly face the provinces and municipalities within the next few months?

Mr. Gordon: In the first place, Mr. Speaker, the legislation to which my hon. friend refers has not yet been passed by the congress of the United States. Second, as I stated in my earlier remarks, I think it would be unwise for this government to say any more about these particular measures until we have had time to study them most carefully.

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): May I ask the Minister of Finance whether he has any information as to why Canada is paying 15 per cent and, as I understand it, several of the 22 countries are paying all the way from 3 per cent to 15 per cent? Why is Canada listed as 15 per cent?

Business of the House

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, the same rate of tax applies to all 22 countries. The purpose of the tax is that in the higher ranges of the longer term issues of 28½ years or more, the rate of interest would be 1 per cent higher.

[Later:]

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance which he may want to take as notice. If the United States congress passes the measure to which the minister referred, would the tax apply to the purchase by the United States of the downstream benefits of the Columbia?

Mr. Gordon: I have no idea, Mr. Speaker.

REPORTED DECREASE IN FOREIGN EXCHANGE RESERVES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Can the minister tell the house if the budget is responsible for the decrease in our foreign currency reserves?

Some hon. Members: Order.

GOOD NEWS BROADCASTING ASSOCIATION

MOTION TO PLACE BILL ON ORDER PAPER FOR CONSIDERATION THIS DAY

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, in accordance with the ruling you made at the opening of the house I now propose to move a motion along the lines that were suggested, namely that the bill in question, S-15, be placed back on the order paper for discussion. I should like to say a few words in connection with my reasons for asking the house to make this order.

Bill No. S-15 was considered in the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills on two separate days. On the second day a witness was called and evidence was heard. Following this the committee considered and passed the preamble and all clauses of the bill. The committee amended the last clause and added two further clauses.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Is the hon. member speaking to the motion that he has purported to make? If he is, it seems to me we should find out first whether he has unanimous consent to make the motion.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, in connection with the point raised by the hon. member, this motion does not require unanimous consent. This is a motion on a private bill taken under routine proceedings. The precedents have been carefully examined and the Speaker has today made a ruling in that connection. It is on the basis of that ruling that I intend to follow the procedure suggested by the Speaker rather than the procedure which I attempted to use yesterday and which was out of order. I merely want to explain the reasons. As I was saying—

Mr. Speaker: Order. May I suggest to the hon. member that he move his motion, which we have discussed. I can anticipate what it will be, and I hope it will be in order.

Mr. Aiken: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Portage-Neepawa (Mr. Enns):

That Bill S-15 entitled: "An act to incorporate The Good News Broadcasting Association of Canada", the preamble of which has been reported as not proven, be placed on the order paper for consideration later this day.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Francis: Is this motion debatable, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Speaker: Yes.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order at this stage.

Mr. Speaker: I should point out to hon. members that the scope is very limited. If any hon. members have comments to make they should make them now, but I propose to put the motion after a few comments.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I wish to raise a point of order on the regularity of the motion proposed by the hon. gentleman. This is an extraordinary procedure, and I should like to have some indication that it is in order because in my view, this motion is not in order, and cannot be put by a private member. Under our rules a private member is not in a position to make a motion of this kind at this time.

Mr. Francis: I understand that your ruling is that this motion is accepted, and I should like to speak to the motion, if I may.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to the hon. member that it is not necessary to speak to the motion, but I will not prevent him from doing so. Perhaps the Minister of Labour was not here when I gave my ruling. It was to the effect that, after researching the authorities, I find the procedure followed by the hon. member for Muskoka-Parry Sound (Mr. Aiken) is correct. He is, in my view, entitled to move this motion. Evidence to that effect will be found in 1931 and also in 1958 where procedures identical to the one we are following at the moment were employed. At that time I believe they were employed by the other side.

Unless the hon. member has some short, pointed remarks to make, I propose to put the motion.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Carleton): I just want to say that I intend to vote against this motion because I do not believe the miscellaneous private bills committee arrived at this decision lightly or haphazardly. It is my opinion that if this bill were referred back to the committee the same recommendation would be brought before this house.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Francis: I see no point in referring this bill back to the committee. I may state for the record that the reason the decision—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but we are not discussing the merits of the motion. We are simply asking the house to give authority to the hon. member to raise this matter between five o'clock and six o'clock if the bill is before the house at that time. The question of whether the bill should be referred back is not at issue at the present time.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I wonder if I might say a word. Your Honour has ruled that the motion is in order. As I understand it, the only effect of the motion would be to put the bill back on the order paper again so that it could be considered during private members' hour. I wonder if the house would not consider, with a view to saving time and avoid dividing the house, having the motion adopted now and then dealing with the matter when private members' hour arrives.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to thank the Secretary of State, but that is the purpose of the proceedings at the moment. Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. Aiken: I have not completed my preliminary remarks.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that he withhold those remarks until private members' hour.

Mr. Aiken: If no one else is going to speak I am quite happy to do that.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: Carried on division.

Motion agreed to, on division.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS RETURNS ACT

AMENDMENT PROVIDING PUBLIC KNOWLEDGE OF RETURNS RESPECTING PENSION FUNDS

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-89, to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act (pension funds).

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Howard: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the bill, very briefly, is to provide that when returns are made under the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act, those returns in respect of the operation of pension funds, and the financial details of pension funds, will be in the public domain and it will be permissible for people to have access to that information.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

QUEBEC—STRIKE AT SOLBEC COPPER MINE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Megantic): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to find that the riding of Megantic is so important these days that two members have mentioned it.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. I directed a question to the hon. lady on July 4 as recorded on page 1825 of Hansard; she answered at that time that she would consider the question. Today I should like to put the same question again to her. Did the minister do something to help financially the miners of Solbec Copper Mine in Quebec, who have been on strike since March 1, 1963?

(Text):

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, may I say to the hon. gentleman that following his question, which I took as notice, I had the answer ready for about four days thereafter, but since he had been absent from the chamber I stopped bringing it with me.

Mr. Langlois: Could the minister forward it to me at my office, or give me the answer tomorrow in the house?

Miss LaMarsh: I shall be glad to.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—INVITATION TO LISTEN TO RADIO PROGRAM "SOUNDINGS"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the minister's responsibilities in connection with the proposed Columbia river treaty and his own practice of keeping in touch with local opinion on any question, will he listen to the C.B.C.'s national radio network series "Soundings" this evening between 8.30 and 9 p.m. for the interesting and enlightening program entitled, "Columbia river project—a local look at a national issue," and in so doing hear the views of the residents of the Arrow lakes, Revelstoke, Rossland, Trail and other communities in the Kootenays?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should remind my hon. friend that he and I have an obligation at that hour and that is, as diligent members of parliament, to be in our places in the house. However, if the hon. gentleman will arrange that I will have a pair, and if there is no matter immediately concerning me before the house, I shall be glad to listen to the program entitled "Soundings". And may I say to the hon. gentleman that I am always interested in his soundings in the house.

Mr. Herridge: I wish to inform the minister that I am willing to be his pair.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

FORTIETH WEDDING ANNIVERSARY OF MEMBER FOR DIGBY-ANNAPOLIS-KINGS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I do not rise for the purpose of asking a question but with the leave of the house, especially today when we are discussing honeymoons between nations, it is a good day to recall that one of our members, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan), is celebrating his fortieth wedding anniversary, and I feel the house would want to extend congratulations to him. The very fact that he looks so young indicates what a fine wife he has, and to both we extend our best wishes.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, if there is any occasion which would justify a departure from the normal rules of the house it is the occasion to which the right hon. Leader of the Opposition has made reference, the fortieth wedding anniversary of my hon. friend, the hon. friend of all of us, the financial critic of the opposition. May we on this side wish him well, and we hope he and all of us will be around when he celebrates his golden wedding anniversary, still sitting over there.

AGRICULTURE

NIAGARA PENINSULA—ASSISTANCE TO FRUIT GROWERS SUFFERING FROST DAMAGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Jim McNulty (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Could the minister inform the house whether he has received an official request from the province of Ontario to participate in a survey to determine individual grower losses in the $3 million frost damage suffered by Niagara peninsula fruit growers?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there has been no official request from the province of Ontario to participate in a survey, but there is correspondence between the minister of agriculture for Ontario and myself as to what steps might desirably be taken jointly by the two governments to assist growers who suffered serious losses from frost. At the moment, action to consider or implement a proposal cannot be taken pending further advice from the minister of agriculture for Ontario.

Mr. McNulty: As a supplementary question, has the minister received a request from the Ontario grape growers' marketing board for low interest loans for growers affected by frost damage, and from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture for an emergency disaster farm loan act?

Mr. Hays: There have been proposals from the grape growers' marketing board and also from the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, which are being considered.

FORT ST. JOHN, B.C.—REPORTED REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. I believe the Fort St. John farmers union has appealed to the minister in the light of crop conditions in the area. I wonder if the hon. gentleman has anything to report to the house in connection with this matter?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): If the hon. gentleman is referring to what I think he is, the government of British Columbia will, in the first instance, have to initiate any measures which may be taken for those farmers. I am already in touch with the minister of agriculture in the government of British Columbia. We have this in mind, and discussions are going on.

IMMIGRATION

HAL C. BANKS—INQUIRY AS TO POSSIBLE DEPORTATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I wish to direct to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in view of the statement made in the house yesterday by the hon. member for

Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) on a question of privilege, as recorded at page 2291 of Hansard, wherein he said:

> I suggest in this question of privilege that if that order in council were now rescinded Banks would go back from whence he came.

Could Mr. Banks, the president of the S.I.U., be deported simply by rescinding that order in council which gave him landed immigrant status in Canada?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, since listening to the question of the hon. member yesterday I have had an opportunity to look into this matter, and I have reached the conclusion that the order in council may not be rescinded because its purpose, under section 5 of the act, was to provide for the admission of a person who had been rehabilitated. As the person concerned has now attained what we call Canadian domicile by virtue of a five year stay in Canada after being admitted, he may not be subject to a deportation order.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is not that a legal opinion?

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry, but the hon. member for Greenwood had the floor.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): In connection with this matter I would like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration whether he has given consideration to the application of section 19(1)(a) of the act, under which deportation can be carried out without the necessity of any order in council if, upon proper inquiry, it is found that an individual has subverted democratic institutions in Canada; and I take it there is plenty of evidence of that in the Norris report.

Mr. Favreau: I think the hon. member for Bow River was quite right in saying I probably would have been out of order in giving what might be a legal opinion to the house, but it was in answer to a question yesterday. It is true that under section 19(1)(a) of the act, should a person, even after having acquired Canadian domicile, advocate the overthrow of government by force or render himself guilty of such activity, he might be deported. However, so far as I am concerned for the time being, I have not read the report that way.

The hon. member may be sure that every consideration will be given to this aspect of the question as to the facts, but it really must be only in the case where subversive activities, within the meaning of advocating the overthrow of government by force, have been entered into. However, we will look into that question.

Mr. Brewin: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does not the minister believe that trade unions are democratic institutions, and is he not aware—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Brewin: —that the regulation includes democratic institutions as well as governments?

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are entering into a debate. I believe the hon. member for Bow River had a supplementary question.

Mr. Woolliams: I merely wanted to ask the minister whether his opinion was a legal one.

DIVORCE

PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED TO DEAL WITH PETITIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Does the minister intend to open negotiations with the political and religious leaders of the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland, so that divorce bills be referred only to the Senate, or that some other kind of procedure be adopted?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the issuing of this legislation does not rest with the government, but rather with parliament. In fact, the leader of the house has already made a statement regarding the procedure to be followed in that case.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS

PERCE, QUE.—REPORTED DAMAGE BY PROSPECTORS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Gaspe directed a question to my minister in connection with the excavations and explorations which would be carried out on the Perce rock by German mountain climbers. I am informed that the Canadian wildlife service has no information in that connection, but we expect to reply directly to the hon. member.

Hansard has attributed a preliminary reply to my hon. friend from Richmond-Wolfe (Mr. Asselin); because of the noise and enthusiasm of hon members opposite, the stenographer did not correctly identify the member who made that answer.

Inquiries of the Ministry

WORLD FAIR

REPORTED RESIGNATION OF CHAIRMAN OF CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Could the minister confirm or deny the report which was published in a Montreal daily to the effect that, during the time the Prime Minister was absent, he received, as Acting Prime Minister, the resignation of the chairman of the world fair, Mr. Paul Bienvenu?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Minister of Justice): When the Prime Minister was absent, I neither had the opportunity of meeting Mr. Paul Bienvenu nor, as far as I am concerned, could I have received his resignation either orally or in writing.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO INITIAL PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of his remarks two or three days ago with regard to the announcement of an initial price for the coming crop year, is the minister now prepared to inform the house as to what will be the initial price in the coming crop year for wheat grown in western Canada?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): As I said yesterday, Mr. Speaker, in reply to a question, this is under consideration and I hope that in the next few days there will be an announcement.

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. I wonder whether in his recent invasion of Saskatchewan he assured Liberal leader Ross Thatcher that when the crop year arrives the price of wheat will be up to $2—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Korchinski: —or are these statements uttered by Mr. Thatcher incorrect?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

POSSIBLE DANGERS IN WATCHING SOLAR ECLIPSE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard.

[Mr. Turner.]

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare which comes to mind—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I did not see the hon. member. Would he mind waiting his turn; there are quite a few hon. members ahead of him.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I believe you recognized the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard, who is now speaking. I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare which comes to my mind because I am being continually dazzled by the brilliance of the lady minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

An hon. Member: Another honeymoon.

Mr. Basford: I would like to know whether the minister has any advice for parents in connection with protecting their children when watching the eclipse of the sun next Saturday.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is a happy circumstance indeed that my hon. friend should hit upon asking this question today. The Department of National Health and Welfare has already issued two warnings to the public which the press outlets of the country have been good enough to carry; however, they do not appear to have been carried very prominently.

It is a matter of very grave concern to the public health authorities of this country that everybody should realize that on Saturday next there is to be an eclipse of the sun, which normally might be watched by adults and children. The strongest warning is given that great care must be taken in looking at this eclipse, for damage can be done to the eye which is painless when it occurs, of which the viewer has no warning, and which could be permanent. It is therefore most strongly urged upon everyone who might watch the eclipse that no reliance be placed upon household facilities such as smoked glass, sun glasses or exposed film. Indeed, it would be more appropriate for anybody interested in watching the eclipse to watch it when it is later presented on television.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

INQUIRY AS TO REPLIES BY PROVINCIAL PREMIERS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister tell the house how many premiers so far have accepted his invitation to attend the federal-provincial conference scheduled for July 26 and 27, to discuss the proposed municipal loan fund and contributory pension plan?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have had four written replies from the provinces accepting this date. I have had one oral communication that the date is satisfactory, and one reply saying that the date is not convenient for the premier of that province, but I hope he will be represented.

(Translation):

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question. Has the suggestion of the Prime Minister to the premiers of the provinces, met, in some instances, with a refusal?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: I have received replies from the governments of Quebec and Nova Scotia accepting the date, and from two other provincial governments—New Brunswick, and I am not sure of the other. The premier of British Columbia has indicated that the date is not convenient to him personally.

(Translation):

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? If a majority of the provincial premiers are not interested in attending the conference, will it nevertheless take place in Ottawa at the prescribed date?

(Text):

Mr. Pearson: The premise on which the hon. gentleman's question is based, as is sometimes the case, is quite unfounded.

Mr. Gene Rheaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I asked the Prime Minister if the governments of the Yukon and Northwest Territories had been asked to participate, and he informed me no, that it was neither proper nor constitutional. I wonder whether the Prime Minister would be good enough to invite these two governments to at least sit in as observers at this very important conference.

Mr. Pearson: I think it is quite appropriate that the governments in question should be informed of what goes on. It is not customary, however, to invite them to conferences of this kind. They were not invited to conferences of this sort by the previous regime either. The suggestion that they should be there as observers is an interesting one, and I will look into it.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, referring to the answer of the Prime Minister with regard to the premier of British Columbia, did he suggest an alternative date or did he simply say that he was not attending?

Mr. Pearson: He indicated that it would have been preferable for him to have had a date after the first week of August, but I have written him expressing the hope that he will send a representative on the date in question as the majority of the provinces apparently find that date acceptable.

[Later:]

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps I could add to the information I have already given about acceptances to attend the federal-provincial conference next week. The premier of Manitoba has written that the date is convenient to him, and we have had acceptances orally from the premiers of Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland.

WITHDRAWAL OF PROVINCES FROM JOINT PROGRAMS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, before we go on to the orders of the day, I should like to put a question to the Secretary of State, in his capacity as leader of the house. Could he tell us whether the government intends to put on the order paper, before the anticipated adjournment, a measure allowing the provinces that wish to do so to withdraw from joint programs without loss of money, as was suggested yesterday by the President of the Privy Council?

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): The hon. gentleman has, I am sure, enough knowledge of the constitution and of our procedures to know for himself, without asking this question, that this is the kind of matter which would first be discussed at a federal-provincial conference, and there will be one in the autumn.

(Translation):

[Later:]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the President of the Privy Council concerning a reply he gave yesterday to the effect that the provinces could withdraw from joint programs. He also stated that no province had officially made such a request to the federal government.

Is he aware of requests having been made not necessarily to the President of the Privy Council himself but to the federal cabinet, by the authorities of the province of Quebec, in order to withdraw from these joint programs, under the conditions he described yesterday?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (President of the Privy Council): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should now like to direct to the Prime Minister the question I put to the President of the Privy Council. Has he received any requests from the authorities of the province of Quebec in order to obtain a larger share of direct taxes in return for the federal government's withdrawal from joint programs?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, I do not know of any direct request of that kind, but I should be glad to look into it.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

BOUNDARY BAY, B.C.—REPORTED FAILURE OF SECURITY MEASURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I think I speak for the hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard as well as myself when I inform you that we expect to have that riding back in our fold next time. I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Does the Department of National Defence intend to take action under the Official Secrets Act against the two Vancouver Province reporters who entered the Boundary Bay wireless station without giving their passes to the security guard and who took pictures of these defence installations?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, we are looking into the facts of this case to see whether they are as alleged. If this report proves to have foundation we will then consider at once what action should be taken.

EXERCISE "TOCSIN B"—SUGGESTED DISCREPANCY IN ANSWERS GIVEN

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): On a question of privilege, I should like to draw the attention of the Minister of Defence Production to a discrepancy which is revealed in yesterday's Hansard. On page 2298 we find an answer given by the hon. gentleman to a question asked on the subject of exercise Tocsin B. The question was:

> Was exercise Tocsin B carried out in the fall of 1961? If so, how many Soviet bombers were assumed to have taken part in this simulated attack?

The answer given was:

> As the exercise did not involve interceptor forces it was not necessary to assume any specific number of enemy bombers.

I should like to point out that in a return to an order of the house brought down on February 12, 1962, on a motion of Mr. Pitman there was a reply to a question asking "What was the extent of the simulated attack in terms of (e) bombers attacking?" The reply states, among other things:

> For exercise purposes it was assumed that 300 to 350 individual aircraft tracks were detected in the attack on North America.

Those two answers are certainly at variance. While I think it is serious enough to withhold information, I think it is even more serious when we are given information which contradicts information previously given in the house.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Defence Production): I think the difference is more apparent than real. The question asked was how many bombers? The answer given to Mr. Pitman was, none; not a given number of bombers, but individual aircraft tracks. This means tracks on radar screens, and one bomber passing over a series of radar observation points might produce as many as 20 or 30 tracks. So the number of bombers and the number of tracks are not necessarily the same. I think the information given to the hon. member was correct. No specific number of bombers either had to be assumed or was assumed.

Mr. Douglas: On the question of privilege, if the hon. gentleman is correct the first answer was wrong, because the return to the order dated February 9, 1962 was specific. Question 5 asked: "What was the extent of the simulated attacks in terms of (e) bombers attacking?" The question did not have to do with tracks at all, and the answer was in reference to bombers attacking.

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

WINNIPEG MAINTENANCE BASE—INQUIRY AS TO REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, but in his absence I will address it to his congenial parliamentary secretary. A month ago, that is to say on June 18, the Prime Minister and the transport committee of the cabinet gave a very receptive hearing to the Manitoba delegation in respect to the retention of the T.C.A. overhaul and maintenance base in Winnipeg. My question is, has the report of R. Dixon Speas and Associates been received to date and, if not, has the minister's office any indication when it may be expected?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this is a question I should like the minister himself to answer. The minister will be absent until Monday next; in the meantime I will take the question as notice.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BOUTIN—CORRECTION IN PARLIAMENTARY GUIDE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. A. Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I should like to correct an error which appears on page 192 of the Parliamentary Guide, regarding the Dorchester constituency.

If we look at the election results in that county, we note that victory was attributed to a Conservative candidate although he even lost his deposit. Being credited with the victory is already too great an honour for leaving unnoticed that error as well as others which have slipped into the Parliamentary Guide.

In my opinion, this correction will contribute to clear up the doubt which the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Drouin) has in his mind at the moment, if we refer to the question of privilege he raised yesterday.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EXTENSION OF SALARY INCREASES TO RECENTLY RETIRED CIVIL SERVANTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Has the government yet found a way to provide retroactive pay increases to former civil servants who may have retired after the effective date of such increases but before they were actually announced? I ask this question with respect to the increases announced last December 10, and also with respect to the increases announced two days ago.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows this is a very difficult point because it involves the question of where you draw the line. The government has spent a lot of time on this and has come to the conclusion that the cut-off date will be July 1, 1963, but it will not be made retroactive.

TRANSPORT

FERRY "BLUENOSE"—REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF RESERVATION PROCEDURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, but in his absence I will direct it to his affable and efficient parliamentary secretary. In view of the report in the Liverpool Advance that the management of the C.N.R. ferry Bluenose has been turning down reservation applications despite loadings considerably less than capacity, will the Minister of Transport investigate the procedure used by the company when making reservations, with the hope of a change being made which will be beneficial to the company and to the travelling public?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, this question will be transmitted to the attention of the minister.

NORTH SYDNEY-NEWFOUNDLAND—INQUIRY AS TO SECOND FERRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport, but I see he is absent from the house, no doubt on other business, so may I direct it to his parliamentary secretary since notice has been sent to the office. For the information of the house, the country and the Secretary of State, can the minister advise how soon we can expect some action on the proposed second ferry between North Sydney and Newfoundland?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, did the hon. member not direct his question to the Acting Minister of Transport? Because I happen to be the acting minister. I apologize to the hon. gentleman, but someone handed me a note just as he began to speak and I did not hear all his question. However, I did hear about the subject, and it is one in which I take at least as great an interest as does the hon. gentleman. I believe there will be a decision about that in the very near future.

AIRPORTS

POLICY WITH RESPECT TO PARKING LOT FRANCHISES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport a question of which I gave notice, and to which his parliamentary secretary may have the answer. Has there been a change in policy respecting airport parking lot franchises since the new government took over, particularly in Ottawa, and has this had the consequence of much larger parking fees as a result of the change in policy?

Mr. Jean-Charles Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I do not have the answer to this question, but I will take it as notice and next Monday the hon. member will have the answer.

PARLIAMENT HILL

SHORTAGE OF PARKING SPACE DURING CHANGING OF GUARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I am sorry to detain the house for a moment, but I promised to bring up this matter on behalf of a group of tourists. My question is directed to the Minister of Public Works. There is a great shortage of parking space on parliament hill during the changing of the guard, and at the same time there are usually vacant spaces in the diplomatic row. Would it be possible for these spaces to be used by tourists during the time when the guard is changed?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): I am glad this matter has been brought up. Officials of my department have been looking into this matter for the past two weeks, and we hope to be in a position to improve parking facilities on the hill very soon.

PENSIONS

PROVISION FOR CANADA PENSION PLAN, INCREASED OLD AGE SECURITY PAYMENTS, ETC.

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish a comprehensive pension program to be known as the Canada pension plan and to provide among other things for the payment of pensions on an adjusted scale commencing at the option of the pensioner, at any age between 65 and 70 years; for the payment of pensions to surviving spouses commencing at any age after 65 years; for the progressive establishment of such pensions over an initial period averaging ten years in order to facilitate the adjustment of existing pension schemes to the new plan; for the payment of an additional pension of ten dollars a month to all persons to whom a pension may be paid under the Old Age Security Act; for the adjustment of pensions payable under the Old Age Security Act to co-ordinate such pensions with the new plan; and for the appointment and remuneration of such officers, clerks and employees as may be required for the due carrying out of the new plan; and to provide further that all expenditures under the new plan, additional to those required under the Old Age Security Act, shall be paid out of or reimbursed from contributions by employees, employers and self-employed persons.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Miss LaMarsh: In rising today to introduce this resolution dealing with the Canada pension plan I have the honour to speak to the implementation of one of the most important and far reaching plans of action put forward by this or any other government. It is the natural next step in providing rounded welfare legislation for Canada. The whole record of the Liberal party in office has always been the introduction of legislation designed for the welfare of Canadians. Every major social advance made by parliament in this century has been made under a Liberal government. The legislation now before us, I am proud to say, will continue this tradition.

I should like briefly to express my personal gratitude to members of the public service for their devotion to duty and the long hours they have given to the development of this plan. Nor should I forget to say a word about the contribution of many of Canada's pension experts who, from the depths of the years of their experience, have offered advice and admonition to me, to my officials and to many members of the house who have been kind enough to bring their submissions to me.

The purpose of the Canada pension plan is to ensure, as was said in the speech from the throne, that all Canadians will have an opportunity to retire in security and with dignity. The legislation based upon this resolution is complex. Legislation as far reaching as this, as much a departure from the past as this is, must be drawn to produce its benefits as early as possible to achieve its goals without interfering with the body politic. Further, the parliamentary process, which was designed as a way in which all the people's representatives might take their part in such decisions, must be used in this case to full advantage.

In my view, Mr. Chairman, it is the government's responsibility to propose a scheme. It is then the responsibility of all members of parliament as the people's representatives to address themselves, without thought of partisan advantage—

Mr. Grafftey: You have already been partisan.

Miss LaMarsh: —to the proposal; to modify, to amplify or to change, but always to act with the intent to cause improvement in the legislation. Each of us here has a responsibility to produce the best piece of legislation possible in every field. This is especially so when the legislation is such as that to which this resolution refers, legislation which will for the future affect almost every Canadian. For that reason I make no apology for saying that the contributory pension plan to which this government has bound itself is inflexible only in its main purpose. The government will therefore welcome from any member any contribution or suggestion genuinely designed to improve the legislation, particularly as all other parties have already committed themselves to the principle and idea of contributory pensions.

I recall that in my early months in the house the then minister of justice, Mr. Fulton, took such an attitude and saw fit to adopt a couple of suggestions of mine which were then incorporated in legislation respecting capital and non-capital murder. Indeed, this co-operative attitude has been shown already in the government's approval in principle of several private members' bills which have been referred for study to committee.

I think it is fair to say to all hon. members that the government's pension scheme, introduced now so quickly after the opening of this session of parliament, has excited throughout the body politic a great deal of interest. The fact that the plan is intended in its application to cover the widest possible range of citizens is itself sufficient cause for this interest. Most economically advanced countries of the world have been moving toward this type of contributory wage related pension scheme for some time. The introduction in 1951 by the Liberal government of the day of the old age security program brought into effect in Canada, as all hon. members know, a flat rate scheme available to all at the age of 70 without a means test.

The present premier of Quebec had a lot to do with that plan. The present Secretary of State for External Affairs had a lot more to do with it. It was a logical and particularly apt step for pensions in Canada at that time. Unfortunately, however, in recent years some of the increases in payments made under this legislation have been based not upon increase in productivity, not upon progress of the economy, but only upon pure political expediency. This can no longer be countenanced.

Mr. Grafftey: Would the hon. lady permit a question?

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Miss LaMarsh: It is degrading to those who are recipients of old age security—

Mr. Grafftey: Would the hon. lady permit a question?

Miss LaMarsh: —to find themselves used as political footballs—

Mr. Grafftey: Would the hon. lady permit a question?

The Chairman: Order. Will the hon. member kindly resume his seat. He asked the minister whether he could pose a question and the minister continued to make her speech, so I assume she was not prepared to reply.

Mr. Grafftey: That is not the usual practice, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: Order. It is the only practice.

Mr. Grafftey: She should have the courtesy to say yes or no.

The Chairman: Order. The minister has the floor.

Mr. Grafftey: No courtesy.

Miss LaMarsh: Those who cry courtesy might have the courtesy to wait until I have concluded to ask their questions. As I say, it is degrading to those who are recipients of old age security to find themselves used as political footballs, and it is arrant fiscal irresponsibility if such payments are not keyed to the progress of the economy. The country simply cannot continue to afford to pay attractive sums which have no reason for being except for their political sex appeal. Present old age security payments yield at best little more than subsistence levels. Our country has always recognized, through adopting the old age security legislation, the validity of that oldest of social responsibilities, that we support the aged of our community.

In a modern industrial society it is increasingly impossible for a family to care for its own aged. Of course, it is rejected by all Canadians that those who cannot be cared for by their immediate families should be shunted aside to fall upon public assistance, or worse, to be abandoned. Some may criticize the type of plan which we propose under this resolution because it is one where the contributor, while active in the working population, pays to the government to create a debt from the state to him for his own retirement years. In effect, under this plan each generation will provide for the one which has preceded it in building Canada. No matter in what way pensions are provided, this is in fact their economic and social significance.

As I mentioned earlier, all the major parties have already committed themselves in principle to a wage related contributory pension scheme. What then, one may ask, are the alternatives in designing such a scheme? Each party has gone on record, reflecting the generally held feeling in this country, that such a scheme must be comprehensive so that it applies to the widest possible group of Canadians, and it must be as inexpensive as possible while returning an adequate pension to the individual. It must be truly portable or transferable so that an individual Canadian may carry his benefits with him anywhere he may choose to live and work.

It is possible, Mr. Chairman, to construct a scheme which, in common with many of those offered by private pension companies, is completely funded; but this would put in the hands of the state tremendous sums of money which would be withdrawn or used for other purposes. No government plans are completely funded. In a public plan the contributor may rely upon the fact that so long as his country exists the continuous inflow of contributions under such a plan will assure him of his benefit rights on his retirement. These were the arguments balanced by the government in coming to its conclusion that this plan should not be funded; thus the plan is framed on a pay as you go basis. The plan, including the costs of administration, will be no charge at all upon the general revenue.

The Canada pension plan has important features which are new to this country. We cannot tell at this stage exactly how people will decide to use them. For example, we do not know how soon and in what numbers people will take advantage of the opportunity to start pensions before the age of 70. Nor do we know how many voluntary contributors will decide to take part in the plan. Neither of these factors affects the finances of the scheme in the long run. Whatever the decisions, the relation of benefits to earnings will settle out in a way that makes it safe to estimate that for the first 10 years the contribution rate will not need to be more than 2 per cent of earnings.

However, the calculations for the next few years are more uncertain. The ages people choose to begin pensions, and the number of volunteers who join, will have a relatively big effect on the short run finances of the scheme. Also, of course, the amount of time which parliament decides to take in discussing the legislation will influence the date at which collection of contributions starts, and therefore the contribution rate needed to finance the increase to $75 in the flat rate pension. Until there has been some preliminary discussion of this, Mr. Chairman, it is not proposed to set the exact date for starting the $10 increase to $75.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Miss LaMarsh: I am sure the date is of some interest to hon. members opposite.

Mr. Grafftey: Another broken promise.

Miss LaMarsh: May I say that I hope, sir, it will be early in 1964, to the disappointment of the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi. Because of the uncertainty as to the length of time the house may take in dealing with the matter, the government cannot yet fix the initial contribution rate more precisely than to say it will not be more than 2 per cent of earnings. Here I refer again to the total rate which will be divided between employers and employees. The rate for the employee alone will be not more than 1 per cent, that is to say, a man whose annual earnings are $3,000 will pay up to $2.50 per month. The maximum contribution for anyone earning $4,000 a year or more will be not more than $3.33 per month.

It was decided at an early stage of the pension plan that a combination of compulsory and voluntary coverage would be the most acceptable and most workable method of achieving comprehensive coverage. How, then, to operate the comprehensive plan? Fortunately, Mr. Chairman, machinery already exists. As all hon. members are aware there is this machinery in the combined resources of the Department of National Revenue, my department and the unemployment insurance commission. It was decided, therefore, that this same machinery should, for simplicity, efficiency and cheapness, be utilized for registration at the time of the regular reissuing of unemployment insurance books and numbers by the unemployment insurance commission. This will also have the advantage that this same numbering system may be used.

Accordingly, since the next time for renumbering and reissuing the books has been scheduled for May 1964, it was concluded that the registration for contributors should be carried out at that time. This, Mr. Chairman, is the earliest practicable time, bearing in mind the tremendous administrative complexities of registering what is expected to be more than seven million contributors.

Then the coverage of this scheme, the Canada pension plan, is of every Canadian who can be included, bearing in mind some administrative problems. Broadly speaking, the only classes definitely excluded from coverage are those whose earnings are paid to them by their own spouses, for obvious reasons, members of the armed forces and casual employees. Employees of provincial governments may be included if the province so wishes, as may employees of foreign governments and international agencies.

The Canada pension plan is designed to pay benefits related to earnings. As all hon. members know, wages are not uniform across the length and breadth of our country. What is less than sufficient for subsistence in one part of the country may provide a much greater degree of comfort for the recipient in another part of the country. For that reason we should have no difficulty in agreeing here in committee that the pension plan should be one which upon retirement provides an income, bearing in mind the reduced costs of living on retirement, related to that enjoyed throughout an individual's productive life. This scheme is designed to do just that.

We already have in this country a flat rate scheme. The new wage related scheme is added to it, and payments will be made in one lump sum of the two portions of pension, flat rate and wage related. This will mean that our retired, rather than as now supplementing the flat rate payment of $65 per month with their savings, if any, or public assistance, will have in the future an appreciably more generous income related to their earnings, up to an average level. It is, unhappily, not possible to apply this retroactively to all those who have taken or who are about to take their retirement. For this reason, and in order to provide a little more in the way of security for those who have now retired or will shortly be retiring, this government has pledged itself to the payment, from the contributions to this plan, of an additional $10 per month to each recipient of old age security.

Mr. Grafftey: That is not what you said during the election.

Miss LaMarsh: This has always been the promise made by the Liberal party in the last two elections.

Mr. Grafftey: Wrong.

Miss LaMarsh: It has been the promise made by the leader of this party and now the leader of the government. There were some who said it was irresponsible to promise this increase. I have before me, Mr. Chairman, several newspaper clippings in which it is reported that the right hon. gentleman opposite ridiculed the Liberal scheme for promising this $75 per month pension plan.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I rise immediately on a question of privilege. At no time did I ridicule the increase. What I ridiculed was the promise of $250 or $260 per month without increasing taxation.

Miss LaMarsh: I, of course, accept what the right hon. gentleman says, as I am required to do in the house. However, I should like in passing to refer to a newspaper clipping from the Winnipeg Free Press dated March 4, 1963. The date line is Prince Albert, Saskatchewan, and this paragraph appears in the article:

He—

That is the former prime minister.

—did not mention the Liberal party in his context, but he did ridicule the Liberals for promising schemes such as a $75 per month pension plan, charging that Liberal promises in total would increase income tax for everyone by 40-50 per cent.

There are those who, like the right hon. gentleman in this chamber, hooted in derision at the suggestion that this payment might be made. I was surprised to note from his comments, following the Prime Minister's announcement in this chamber on Monday last that we would deal with this resolution today, that the right hon. gentleman has now swung so far in the other direction that, notwithstanding the whopping budgetary deficit which resulted at the hands of the last government, and notwithstanding the deficit at present in the old age security fund and the unemployment insurance fund—

Mr. Grafftey: I thought you said you were not going to be partisan. You are a disgrace to the old people of this country.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Grafftey: She said she was not going to be partisan. What she is doing now is sheer hypocrisy.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. minister has the floor, and I suggest she should not be interrupted while she is making her statement.

Mr. Grafftey: A disgrace to the old people.

Miss LaMarsh: While this government is committed to this increased payment at the earliest possible date, it is committed not to pay it out of general revenue but from a flow of contributions under the new contributory pension scheme. As I have said, it will be paid as quickly as possible, and it is hoped that will be early in 1964, within a year of this government taking office.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Miss LaMarsh: I think it should be remembered by those who cry shame—and certainly such a cry did not come from my predecessor in this office, who has been listening with some interest—that it is well known by those who have any facility or training in pension schemes of this complexity that in any country in the world where such a plan was introduced it has taken at least two years to do it. This government has taken three months. I say without partisan taint that the exact time of payment is dependant upon the speed with which this chamber adopts the plan.

An hon. Member: Tell the truth.

Miss LaMarsh: In proceeding to tell the truth about this plan, as about all other things, it must be readily apparent, even to those such as the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi (Mr. Grafftey) who obviously from his remarks knows so little about the field, that if payment of contributions were started immediately it would not be possible tomorrow to pay out, to anyone reaching retirement age, the full benefits of such a plan which has the aim of providing sufficient sums to enable people to retire in security and dignity. There has to be a period of earnings before benefits can be related to earnings. There will be, as we have said throughout in our plans, ten years from its inception to the payment of full benefits, and this will permit the adjustment of pension plans already in existence. In the interim each person retiring will be paid a graduated sum, based upon the length and the amount of his or her contributions, plus the flat rate of $75 benefit.

It is increasingly common that those who are employed by others cease their employment and take their retirement at an age earlier than 70. For this reason, and in order to bridge the gap between earning and retirement years, the government has designed the plan to provide an option to each pensioner to draw his or her pension on a reduced rate from the age of 65 onward. It is anticipated that such options will begin at the earliest possible date, in January 1966.

There are those who will ask, why not start the contributions now? This would, of course, permit for earlier payments to all, but I suppose it need not be pointed out to hon. members of experience that the parliamentary system itself takes time for the preparation, discussion and passage of such legislation. It should be borne in mind that this is a highly complex scheme and requires a great deal of unseen administrative work, all very time consuming, and none of which may be commenced until parliament has given approval to the full legislative scheme. Forms and literature must be designed, tenders called and material produced. Forms must be prepared by punching for mass registration and setting up of pension records. Then these will have to be distributed to the U.I.C. offices. Forms will have to be distributed to an estimated 350,000 employers. Temporary field staffs have to be recruited and trained to complete this phase. A master key punching of about 7 million account records has to be completed, and after that the numbers and forms must be distributed to employers, some of whom will have to redesign their payroll records before they start paying the contributions.

The machinery of government, which I have already mentioned and which is already in being, has to be used because of the otherwise tremendous outlay and delay, and we have to use it without interfering with the regular responsibilities of the U.I.C. offices in looking after the unemployed and paying unemployment claims, together with the regular responsibilities of national revenue in the income tax field.

All these considerations place the earliest date for the commencement of payment of contributions at October, 1964, and this only if this legislation is treated with dispatch by this house. Normally one would only anticipate payment of the increased old age pensions to be made after these contributions have begun to flow in, after October, 1964. However it is contemplated that the contributions, once started, will produce enough revenue within a fiscal period to enable payments to start very early in 1964.

I can see a question in some hon. members' eyes; just how much will the pension benefits be? Average earnings in the country are approximately $4,000 per year, and for this reason this figure has been chosen as the starting level. All earnings up to this level will be used in computing contributions. The plan is designed, when the transition period of 10 years is over, to pay a pension of 30 per cent of the earnings upon which contributions have been made, if taken at the age of 70, and upon a reduced basis if taken at any time from 65 to 69.

This basis has been so designed that the average person will receive the same total payment from the age he starts his pension until his death, whichever starting age he chooses. His lifetime earnings will be the basis for the scale of the payments, and here is a most important feature. The average of these earnings will be adjusted by an index representing the general level of salaries and wages, so that he will be receiving benefits on the basis of the equivalent receipt of earnings in the year of his retirement. The effect will be that the Canada pension plan will permanently provide a satisfactory standard of pension for those with earnings up to the average level. This $4,000 level will be adjusted with changes in the general level of wages and salaries, and will do away with the incentive to barter for the favour of the old people of this country just before an election.

When the plan has passed its transition stage a man whose wage has been $4,000 or more will receive a monthly income related pension at age 70 of $100 plus the flat rate portion, totalling $175 per month. If his wife is also a contributor she will receive up to the same amount. If a man and his wife, both contributors, choose instead to retire at age 65, each will receive up to $118 per month in pension.

What of the widow and widower? There is here, some hon. members will be pleased to know, complete equality, and each spouse receives the same treatment regardless of sex. Either survivor of a marriage may be sure of receiving somewhat more than half the retirement income of man and wife together. This, of course, applies to survivors of 65 years or over.

It might be of some interest to hon. members to compare the relative benefits of the United States social security plan with those of the Canada pension plan. In each case, at present levels, this proposed Canadian plan is more generous than the United States plan. It should be borne in mind that the figures which I will be using are of retirement at the age of 65. Our benefits are greater at the age of 70 years, as I previously explained—

The Chairman: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. minister, but her time has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Chairman: Does the committee give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Miss LaMarsh: May I thank hon. members for their courtesy in allowing me to complete my remarks, Mr. Chairman. The table to which I made reference indicates that for average monthly earnings of $100—and this, of course, is at the end of the transition period, when the plan is in full operation—in Canada benefits at age 65 will be $71; at age 70, $105, as compared with the United States benefits at the same income level of $59. At $200 monthly the Canadian benefit at age 65 will be $91; at age 70, $135, as compared with the United States benefit of $84. At $300 monthly the Canadian benefit at age 65 will be $111; at age 70, $165, as compared with the United States benefit of $105. Three hundred and thirty three dollars is the maximum level for monthly earnings. At that level Canadians will be able to obtain $175 a month if they are 70; $118 a month if they are 65. The upper limit of the United States pension plan at an income level of $333 per month is $112.

It will be seen from this scheme, Mr. Chairman, that this government has no intent to pre-empt the field of private planning for one's own retirement. There are many who will still wish to provide additional benefits over and above those to be provided under this plan. Indeed, the whole field above $4,000 in annual income is left open to private endeavour. It is obvious that in so far as these plans are concerned—that is, private pension plans, many of which are already in existence in Canada—employers and employees will have options either to keep them in existence, over and above the Canada pension plan, or to adjust them. What course will be followed in each instance is for the individual employer and his employees to decide, probably by negotiation. Since many such labour-management negotiations are for a period of one year or longer, it will be of advantage for us to provide specific information at the earliest possible date by the passage of this legislation.

Unfortunately this plan cannot provide for the wanted portability of private plans. In order to do this, at least upon a provincial basis, the province of Ontario has already enacted regulatory legislation and has expressed itself to be in accord with the goal of full portability of pension plans. Other provinces have been looking at this development with interest; they have expressed interest in this approach, so much so that some are now considering the adoption of similar plans. It is hoped that some uniformity might be obtained in order to make such private plans portable on a Canada-wide basis, just as will be this Canada pension plan by its very nature. However, the Ontario type of legislation, if enacted by each province of Canada, could not produce comprehensive coverage, nor could it provide quickly fair sized pensions for people of up to average earnings who retire in the next decade or two. Speaking from memory, Mr. Chairman, I believe it is some 40 years before the full benefit of the Ontario type regulatory plan could be obtained by an employee in that province.

The fact that this type of plan cannot provide benefits for those who retire in the near future appears to have been recognized in both Ontario and Quebec. On June 10 last the premier of Quebec expressed himself in his legislative assembly, when he was discussing pension schemes in answer to a question from the leader of the opposition there, as follows:

> There are needs and attitudes which finally impose themselves in spite of what is said in constitutions. For instance, one cannot indefinitely deprive the population of a province of services from which it could constitutionally benefit from a central government if nothing equivalent is even offered to it.

Then on March 26 this year Mr. Cecile, the Ontario minister of welfare—my opposite number in that province—expressed his government's view in the legislative assembly in this way:

> I have advocated for many years the inauguration of a compulsory social security maintenance scheme designed largely along the lines of the United States plan. I am pleased, indeed, to learn that the three major political parties in Canada are all agreed that not only is such a plan practical, but necessary. I hope the time is not too far distant when a social insurance scheme becomes effective in this country so that every working individual may obtain all the advantages that might be made available to a restricted group of employees under the more limited approach of a portable pension plan.

It seems to me that we in this house should take some cheer from this fact. I am sure this presages Ontario's full co-operation at the meeting of provincial premiers next week in bringing the benefits of the Canada pension plan to the people of Canada; if not from this government, perhaps from another.

In a country such as Canada, where there are concurrent areas of responsibility in the welfare field as in others, the closest co-operation between the federal government and the governments of the provinces is necessary for the social welfare of the Canadian people. I am sure, Mr. Chairman, it is known to all hon. members that there are other welfare programs in which the provinces and the federal government co-operate to provide joint action. For some time it has been apparent that these programs, the cost of which is in the main shared on a 50-50 basis, should be restudied with a view to fitting them to current conditions. In addition many provinces have their own independent welfare programs in which this government does not share in any way.

Of course this realm of action lies outside the scope of the Canada pension plan, but it cannot be ignored in a rounded welfare program for Canada. This is one of the important fields for discussion at the conference with the provinces which is to be held next week, and is a field referred to by the Prime Minister in his letter to the premiers of June 20 last. It is appreciated by the government that it is only fair to the provinces to consider the effect upon them of our moving ahead with this legislation. In particular, the increase in old age security payments to $75 will create a demand for parallel increases in shared programs which we have with the provinces. This will be one of the things we will wish to discuss. I hope, in another realm, that the provinces will look with favour on what I consider an area of need, and that is to provide an extension of assistance programs to single women and widows at age 60.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, a federal-provincial conference is especially necessary because there is another field where the close co-operation of the provinces and this government is most desirable. As a part of this Canada pension plan, ideally there would be provision in it for benefits to be paid at least to three classes of persons not now covered. There would be widows with dependant children; those contributors who, because they become disabled before reaching the age of 65 and no longer have regular earnings are now covered only by assistance programs, and orphans of contributors. It is now generally agreed that these are areas of need. Most provinces have indicated in the past a readiness to discuss plans for those in such circumstances. There is opinion that such programs, since they do not apply to "old age pensions"—that is the wording of the British North America Act—are not within the domain of the federal government, and that legislation to deal with these cases on a Canada-wide basis would require amending our constitution upon the assent of the provinces. If agreement can be reached with the provinces—on these three types of classes, it is to be hoped that such provisions may soon be written into the Canada pension plan. This is an urgent matter for consultation with the provinces in the pension field.

In the time at my disposal today, Mr. Chairman, it has not been possible to deal fully with such a complex proposal as the Canada pension plan. Nor, I think we would all agree, is it fair to expect hon. members opposite to have a considered opinion on the basis of the resolution and these few remarks. Therefore, for the benefit of all hon. members and for the benefit of interested people in the country and the provincial governments, I have had prepared a supplementary outline of the nature and scope of the Canada pension plan. With the leave of the committee, Mr. Chairman, I would request that this outline be permitted to be printed as an appendix to Hansard. I am also prepared to send now to the leaders of each party a copy of this outline. I have as well a supply which might be tabled, printed in English and in French, which are available for any interested member. If leave of the committee is given, Mr. Chairman, then I should like at this time to have these documents distributed to interested members and I will table them accordingly.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: The document to which the minister refers, of course, cannot be tabled now in committee. It can be circularized and left informally at the table, but official tabling for the purpose of insertion in Hansard could be done when the Speaker is in the chair.

Miss LaMarsh: At the conclusion of my remarks it might be possible briefly to revert to motions in order that it might be tabled, and I would be pleased to do this in order that it is made available to everybody.

Before concluding my brief remarks, Mr. Chairman, may I repeat what I said at the outset. The Liberal party and this government are pledged to a wage-related contributory scheme. Since taking office, we have been working steadily to explore the best type of scheme for Canada. We believe that the scheme now placed before parliament will commend itself to the house, but I should like once again to make it clear that we welcome comments of hon. members and any other interested persons which are aimed at producing the best possible plan for all retired Canadians. I also hope that in the period before parliament gives final approval to this legislation interested members of the public, including, of course, representatives of employers and workers and of those who are concerned in the financing of private pension plans, will make it their business to assist in advising me. My officials and I will, as always, be glad to study their views.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, before the hon. lady takes her seat may I ask a question. Did I understand her to say that it is not the intention to vest the funds collected from employers and employees; that no fund will be set up? Or did I misunderstand?

Miss LaMarsh: No, that is correct. It is not a fund; it is a pay as you go plan.

Mr. Douglas: Would the minister explain how it is proposed to do this?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, as the minister has said, there not having been available until this time any summary of the general plan, detailed examination will be quite impossible. However, I think there are some general remarks which I can make at the very beginning. The plan as enunciated is far from clear. There is a great deal of window dressing in it, hopes expressed for the future, and hopes as to what may be achieved 10 years from now.

Miss LaMarsh: You did not do anything in six years.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It was said suggestions would be welcome from the opposition. There was a plea for non-political and non-partisan consideration. The less said about that the better, on the basis of some of the remarks which were made. Looking at the plan in its entirety, one could almost compare it with an iceberg of which only the tip can be seen above the water. Let me say this immediately, that in every part of this nation the old people will be thoroughly dismayed by the fact that the promises, direct and implied, that they would receive $10 a month—

Mr. Winkler: For votes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —immediately by way of increase in pension is not going to be achieved. Indeed, all through the election campaign that was used as an argument. We have stated that social security advanced greatly in amount during the period the government which I had the honour to lead was in office, but that social security could not be advanced unless it was taken out of the additional earnings and the expansion of the economy. That was not the attitude of the Liberal party in the election campaign.

I have received a number of letters. One was given to me since the hon. lady started to speak. It comes from an old age pensioner from British Columbia and says this:

> I and many other senior citizens with O.A.P. want to thank you for exposing—

what he calls

> —the diabolic scheme, the plan to get votes by offering and promising payment within 30 days after the election of an increase of $10 in old age pensions.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That will be the attitude in every part of this country.

Mr. Basford: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Chairman: Is the hon. member rising on a point of order?

Mr. Basford: Yes. Would the right hon. gentleman obey the rules and identify the letter he is reading?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I will be glad to table it. If the hon. gentleman wants the actual words I will be glad to table the letter. After all, he is entirely correct in that, and I was hoping that some hon. member would ask that question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is available for tabling, and I will do so either now or at the conclusion of my remarks.

Some hon. Members: Now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Might I table this letter, sir, at the request of the hon. gentleman?

The Chairman: We have the same situation here as we had a moment ago. It cannot be tabled at this time. It may be left at the table for the availability of the members.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would be very glad to quench the thirst for dependable information on the part of the hon. gentleman, which must be satisfied and at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Chairman, my point of order is that the right hon. gentleman should obey the rules and identify the letter he is reading. We want to be sure that we are not having any more forgeries.

Mr. Diefenbaker: All I can say to the hon. gentleman is that his mind reveals a great interest in the subject possibly for good reason.

Now, sir, the purpose of this debate was to unveil a plan to give the provinces the opportunity which they should have had before it was brought before this house, namely that of consultation and consideration. Indeed, the present government offered that consultation in this work of art entitled "Canada's Liberal path to prosperity, progress and peace—the Pearson Plan", where at page 12 it says this:

A Liberal government would give prompt consideration to a national contributory pension scheme co-ordinated with existing provision for retirement and old age security. The pensions would begin at 65 and be based upon federal contributions as well as upon contributions by employees, employers and self-employed. This is a highly complex problem requiring the agreement of the provinces, but we would act as quickly as is consistent with establishing a really sound and effective scheme in the general interest.

Miss LaMarsh: May I ask the right hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not going to have any of these interruptions. I sat quietly while the hon. lady spoke and I am asking for the same consideration.

A moment ago, the hon. lady said something should be done for women—something should be done for unmarried women and widows. How far removed is this plan from the promise made in these words, to be found on page 11:

There is a serious gap in provisions for old age—one which particularly affects women workers. Many companies retire their women workers when they reach the age of 60 and the men at 65, but old age assistance is not available to anyone under the age of 65. For unmarried women and widows we would make it available at 60.

That was the promise. And that promise is being implemented today by undertakings to see whether the provinces will do what was promised in this policy summary to which I have referred.

I was interested in another aspect. One would almost think that creation began with the Liberal party—that nothing had ever been done in the field of social security except by the Liberal party. I do not intend to go into that today, except to say—

Some hon. Members: Ah.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, no, I am familiar with that old mythology, those myths which members opposite repeat over and over again until finally they begin to believe them themselves. No party has a monopoly of social justice. A short review of history from the days of Macdonald shows that throughout the years each political party has made its contribution in this regard. When I look back to the days of Macdonald I find that the Liberal party of that day opposed trade unions. They were entirely opposed to such a system being built up on behalf of labour. Does this mean that the Liberal party carries that stigma forever? As far as social security legislation is concerned, workmen's compensation provisions and the like, it was first introduced into the country by a Conservative government in the province of Ontario. After all, one would think there was in the hearts of those so-called Liberals something different from what is possessed by other human beings.

Some hon. Members: True.

Mr. Diefenbaker: One has only to state that proposition to understand how ridiculous it actually is. I repeat: This announcement today will prove a disappointment to the old people across this nation who were callously deceived by promises made during the election campaign by those who sit opposite.

I was tremendously interested in the homily on political honesty to which we were treated. I felt the hon. lady did protest too much when she said that increases were based on other than political considerations. All I know is this: All through the election campaign the older people of this nation felt they had a true commitment from the Liberal party in this regard. They believed they had a commitment not only in general terms but in actuality. The hon. lady spoke of increases in the old age pension and social security payments as something which should be entirely based on economic considerations. What about 1957? You may remember, Mr. Chairman, that the hon. gentleman who is now Secretary of State for External Affairs took a strong stand at that time in this regard. The Prime Minister followed suit, because he was a member of that government. They were boasting of their surpluses; boasting of an expanding economy. The cost of living had been going up seriously and dangerously for five or six years. But they said at that time that $6 was enough for the old people of this nation. The economy at that time, so they said, was expanding. Yet at that very time they refused any further increase. All kinds of explanations were given. One of them was supplied by the Hon. Walter Harris, who was minister of finance. He said: If we give them more than $6 there will be a dangerous trend toward inflation. That was the excuse. They thought they could get away with it.

During the period in which the government of which I was the head was in office, we expended in this country on social security sums far and beyond those which had ever been expended before. My hon. friend who is sitting beside me did more on behalf of social security—and I am measuring this on the basis of the amounts which were made available in this connection—than had ever been done before under any other government in a period of 50 years or more. He will deal with that in detail, later. We increased the amount of social security benefits, old age pensions, soldiers' pensions, old age security payments and so on. In 1919, the Liberal party promised health insurance, and they won several elections afterwards on the strength of their promise. They finally brought it in in 1957, subject to a qualification that it would require the consent of the majority of the provinces. That is as far as they went. When we came in it was one of the things which added to the difficulty of the financial situation in which we found ourselves, the amount of the expenditure we had to make in this connection in the first year being about $170 million and increasing year by year thereafter. If it had not been for the increases in social security payments and the assistance given to the provinces to enable them to discharge their responsibility, we would have had a deficit in no one year between 1957 and 1962.

A belief in social security and social justice is not something I have acquired in recent years. I have taken the same stand throughout. All of us are affected by the days of our childhood and youth, and I fully realize what the difference would have been had there been in effect something of the social security that was beginning to expand among all political parties after 1926.

As far as many social security matters are concerned, it is of interest that the government of the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett brought in legislation on hours of work and vacations with pay as well as an unemployment insurance measure. But when the Liberal party came into power in 1955 the first thing they did was to submit the matter to the courts and to appoint counsel to argue that these measures were unconstitutional. Then they took years thereafter before introducing similar measures.

Mr. Matheson: Were they constitutional?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I believe now as I said in 1944, we must go forth to new horizons of social justice. Today the opportunity comes to us as it has come to few men in few generations to take part in the forward march of the common man. Tremendous changes are taking place. The state must guarantee and underwrite equal access to security, to education, to nutrition and to health to all. That assurance is inexorable through the awakening of the spiritual being of man everywhere, and the recognition by all men of their responsibilities for the welfare of every other man, not only within their own state but beyond its confines.

I am not going to give the quotations today because there will be fuller opportunity later; but throughout we in this party have followed the course of expanding social security in this nation. When we came into office the human betterment needs of Canadians had been neglected to such an extent that Canada lagged behind most of the nations in the western world in the care of those who, through no fault of their own, were unable to meet even their most modest needs. Not once but twice in the five years we were in office we increased old age pensions, blind, disability, war veterans and other pensions. We brought these matters before parliament in order to rectify the dilatory tactics of the former administration in meeting a serious social security problem.

I am not going into the statistical record, but during our period in office we increased human betterment payments from the national treasury to the average Canadian by about 80 per cent. That is a record which indicates something of our purposes, our aims and our intentions. All of these things, disabled pensions, extra old age assistance and so on, will be dealt with by others in this debate. I shall do no more than refer to this fact. In the field of health and welfare the amount of payments in 1956-57 was $885 million and in 1962-63 expenditures were $1,900 million, an increases of 115 per cent. And so I could go on citing the whole field of social justice during a time when many argued that there should not be any expansion in social security however far behind other nations we had fallen up to 1957.

Mention was made of the United States by the hon. lady. It is perhaps useful to compare the position of Canada in relation to the United States, the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand. It is very difficult to get comparable data. The data for 1949-50 and 1956-57 are not exactly comparable with that for 1958-59 and 1959-60. But these are the figures. In 1949-50 the percentage of Canada's national income expended on social security was 7.8. In 1956-57 it was 8.7 per cent and by 1960-61 it was approximately 12 per cent. Some figures for other countries are: the United Kingdom, 12.5 per cent; New Zealand, 13.9 per cent and the United States 7.6 per cent.

I said a moment ago that no one had a monopoly of the feeling for others. I remember so well, however, the attitude and philosophy of the Liberal party in 1957 when the then member for Eglinton protested that the slight increase of $6 would not be effective until July 1. A moment ago the hon. lady said there should not be an increase in an election year. They did it themselves that year. They thought they could get away with $6, and the same group of six-buck boys is riding again. This time they promise a manna in the future. At that time I expressed myself in these words, as found on page 2774 of Hansard for March 28, 1957:

> As far as old age pensions are concerned, we believe the increase is totally inadequate for the needy; it is niggardly and paltry. Twenty cents a day will do nothing to help the needy among the old age pensioners of this nation. The increase of $6 per month simply will not meet their desperate need; and with the government spending so extravagantly and so profligately in other directions there are no words with which one could describe its disregard of the needs of our senior citizens.

We proceeded to increase these pensions subsequently. One of the most unusual explanations that was given by anyone opposite was made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Pickersgill). You know, he believes in two flags, and one thing and other like that. I am sorry he is not here today. On October 25, 1957, when we increased the old age pension by $9 a month, he said as found on page 427 of Hansard,—and listen to this for a philosophy:

I am going to support it, but it does present a real problem for all of us who are conscientious representatives of constituents on the Atlantic seaboard. The effect of the legislation the government is now proposing will be—perhaps not for anyone more than myself and the hon. members for Burin-Burgeo and Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador—to give to the retired adults in many of our communities larger incomes than those of the working members of their families who have to contribute through the sales tax toward the payment of these pensions.

There was a philosophy. Only one with a two-flag mentality could come out with an ejaculation like that.

The Chairman: I regret that I have to interrupt the right hon. gentleman, but it being five o'clock it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may proceed to the consideration of private members business pursuant to section 3 of standing order 15.

Mr. Speaker: Has the Minister of National Health and Welfare leave to table the documents to which she referred in committee of the whole?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of document referred to, see appendix to Hansard for July 19.]

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Speaker: Since there are a number of private bills standing on the order paper for consideration in committee of the whole, is it agreed that in accordance with section 1 of standing order 54, they be referred to the committee in one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. S-11, respecting the Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Western Canada—Mr. More.

Bill No. S-18, to incorporate Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec—Mr. Wahn.

Bill S-19, to incorporate The Union of Slavic Churches of Evangelical Christians and Slavic Baptists of Canada—Mr. Smith.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Bill No. S-21, to incorporate Ukrainian Canadian Foundation of Taras Shevchenko—Mr. Mandziuk.

Bill No. S-24, respecting The Evangelical Lutheran Synod of Canada—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. S-23, respecting The Canada Board of American Missions of The United Lutheran Church in America—Mr. Winkler.

Bill No. S-8, respecting Quebec Fire Assurance Company—Mr. Forest.

Bill No. S-22, to incorporate Fidelity Mortgage and Savings Corporation—Mr. Morison.

Bill No. S-20, respecting General Mortgage Service Corporation of Canada—Mr. Wahn.

Bill No. S-13, to incorporate Standard Trust Company—Mr. Wahn.

UKRAINIAN NATIONAL FEDERATION OF CANADA

The house in committee of the whole on Bill No. S-12, respecting Ukrainian National Federation of Canada—Mr. Mandziuk—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: For the information of hon. members the amendments proposed to this bill, as recommended in the fifth report of the standing committee on miscellaneous private bills, are printed at pages 221 and 222 of Votes and Proceedings of July 17.

On clause 1:

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to delay passage of this bill but I wish to mention a question of principle which was very much discussed in committee and which it might be useful to put on public record. May I first say that the members of the committee were greatly impressed with the presentation made by the sponsors of the bill, both in this house and in the other place, and with the very able assistance we received from the parliamentary counsel.

The question of principle to which I want to make reference is that incorporated in the proposed clause 8A (2). If I might summarize it in this way, there is conferred upon the central body the power itself to incorporate further corporations, thereby involving a delegation of the crown's right to incorporate. At the time the committee considered this there was general agreement among members, including the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and hon. members on this side of the house, that they were concerned about the possibility that a number of precedents might be set up, by which this power might be more greatly used.

At the time it was considered in committee it was disclosed to us that there had been three other examples in which this particular power had been conferred, all in connection with religious institutions, and it was agreed by all members of the committee that the Ukrainian National Federation of Canada was no less entitled to this power. However I think I am expressing the views generally held by members of that committee in saying they would be unhappy to see this particular provision being brought forward in connection with other organizations whose beneficial purposes and bona fides are less obvious than they were in this particular case.

Therefore I would like to lodge a caution, for the benefit of others who might be bringing bills forward, that there is a general feeling that this particular power, that of delegating to a corporate body the right itself to create corporations, should not be too widely used in bills brought before this house.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

SECOND READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. S-25, respecting the Board of Trade of Metropolitan Toronto—Mr. Wahn.

ALLSTATE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF CANADA

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-28, to incorporate Allstate Life Insurance Company of Canada.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the hon. member sponsoring this bill through the house. Can he tell us who are the majority owners of this insurance company?

Mr. S. Perry Ryan (Spadina): Mr. Speaker, 75 per cent of the stock will be owned by the Allstate Life Insurance Company, a United States firm. Twenty five per cent—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It must be understood that the hon. member is now closing the debate.

Mr. Gregoire: Oh, no, Mr. Speaker.

(Translation):

Mr. Speaker, it is just that we want to ask a question about this bill, the answer to which will determine our stand.

(Text):

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed by the house that the hon. member shall have the opportunity to answer this particular question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Gregoire) that 75 per cent of the ownership of the stock of this proposed corporation will be held by Allstate Life Insurance Company, a United States company. Twenty five per cent will be held by Simpsons-Sears Limited of Canada. The situation is that Allstate Life, the United States company, is actually owned 100 per cent by Sears-Roebuck, and the Canadian company of Simpsons-Sears Limited is 50 per cent owned by Sears-Roebuck; so it works out that about 87½ per cent of the stock will be issued to the United States Allstate Life firm. That actually will not be the way it will be, but in effect that will be the equitable ownership. As to the remaining 12½ per cent, Simpsons Limited of Canada will own it. There is another provision with respect to non-voting participating preference stock, 8 per cent of which will go to employees, who of course might be Canadians; so there may be Canadian ownership of somewhat more than 12½ per cent, depending on the result.

Perhaps I should give a little more elucidation in view of the hon. member's question. Bill No. S-28, to incorporate this new Canadian life insurance company with the English name of Allstate Life Insurance Company of Canada and, in French, Allstate du Canada, Compagnie d'Assurance-Vie, is similar to Bill No. S-12 introduced at the last session, which bill was not passed prior to dissolution. The only change is in the addition of the French name. As many hon. members know, Allstate is the name of two insurance companies in the United States. They are, as I said, both owned by the Sears-Roebuck company. In January of 1953, when Sears-Roebuck and Simpsons Limited formed Simpsons-Sears Limited, there was an informal agreement or understanding that Simpsons-Sears Limited would eventually acquire an interest in the insurance business in Canada of the two United States Allstate companies. In pursuance of this agreement there was incorporated by parliament in 1960 the Allstate Insurance Company of Canada, which was given power to write all lines of insurance in Canada other than life. At the present time both United States companies—that is, Allstate Insurance Company, which writes all types of fire and casualty policies, and the Allstate Life Insurance Company, which writes life policies—are carrying on business in Canada very successfully. Their history in Canada is that in 1949 the fire and casualty company acquired a licence under the Foreign Insurance Companies Act and commenced its operations here on a major scale in 1953. Its annual premium volume is now in excess of $16 million, representing about 4.8 per cent of all automobile insurance in Canada, and a much lower percentage of fire and casualty lines. This company has approximately 250,000 Canadian policyholders at the present time; that is, the fire and casualty company. In 1960 the other company, the life company, acquired a licence, also under the Foreign Insurance Companies Act, permitting it to write life policies in Canada.

The Allstate Life company has approximately $32,500,000 of life insurance in force in Canada at the present time, with approximately 3,400 policyholders. It is the business of this life company that it is proposed shall be acquired by the incorporation contemplated in this bill. If the incorporation of this Canadian life insurance company be granted, then it is intended that the holdings of the United States Allstate Life Company in Canada shall be transferred to the new Canadian company as of January 1, 1964.

I may say to the hon. member that the Allstate offices in Canada, both firms, are now staffed 100 per cent by Canadians. In addition several Canadians have gained their experience here and now fill important executive positions with the company in the United States. Allstate now employs about 700 people in Canada and it is expected that in the next five years they will employ about 1,000 Canadians. The company maintains offices in most cities of Canada and it is well known. It also maintains sales offices in the Simpsons-Sears department stores. In 1960 the Sears-Roebuck company and Simpsons-Sears Limited—I know this is rather confusing—carried on discussions as to the implementation of the informal agreement they made in 1953. After these discussions the Sears-Roebuck company offered to sell to Simpsons-Sears Limited an interest, not exceeding 50 per cent, in the Canadian business of Allstate; but Simpsons-Sears Limited, in view of its capital commitments, certain commitments it had undertaken for extending its mail order and departmental store business, decided to purchase a 25 per cent interest. To permit Simpsons-Sears to acquire this interest it was decided to incorporate Canadian companies which would acquire the Canadian Allstate business. The shares of these companies would be owned, as I said, as to 75 per cent by Allstate and, through Allstate, by Sears-Roebuck and Company, and as to 25 per cent by Simpsons-Sears Limited. As the shares of Simpsons-Sears are in turn owned 50 per cent by Simpsons Limited and 50 per cent by Sears-Roebuck and Company, this will result in Simpsons Limited having, as I say, 12½ per cent interest, and Sears-Roebuck an 87½ per cent interest in the Canadian business of Allstate. These percentages were arrived at without taking into account the 8 per cent interest represented by non-voting participating preference shares which will be held primarily by Canadian employees in the Simpsons-Sears profit-sharing fund. So it will readily be seen, Mr. Speaker, that both the Allstate companies have the right to do business in Canada, in any event, and that by the formation of the two Canadian companies and transfers of assets to them there will result somewhat more than 12½ per cent Canadian ownership of the Allstate business, where there is presently no ownership whatsoever.

The two Canadian companies—that is, the one already incorporated and the one proposed by this bill—will each have nine directors, a majority of whom must under the law be Canadian citizens residing in Canada. The original directors of this company, the ones applying for this incorporation, are all Canadian residents and five out of six of them are Canadians. It is planned that Mr. John Atkinson, a Canadian, shall be president of the two Canadian companies and that the management will continue to consist wholly of Canadians. The operation of the Canadian companies will to a large extent be carried on independently of the United States companies, which is consistent with the United States companies' intention to decentralize their operation. It will readily be seen by all hon. members, Mr. Speaker, that the acquisition of an interest in the Allstate business was an inducement to Simpsons Limited back in 1953 to enter into the agreement with the Sears-Roebuck company, and that this proposed incorporation will falcilitate the proper carrying out of this undertaking which the Allstate and the Sears-Roebuck people made at that time to the Canadian firm. Mr. Speaker, if the new life insurance company is not incorporated, the life business will have to continue as at present wholly-owned in the United States. Or in the alternative, it will have to seek a provincial incorporation, and that would be less desirable than a Canadian charter in the view of the applicants, the petitioners.

The present Canadian management and staff are most anxious to obtain separate Canadian incorporation. This will provide a much greater sense of identity than is possible at the present time when the Canadian operation is being carried on as a branch of the United States company. Incorporation in Canada will also permit a separate Canadian profit-sharing plan to be developed which, in view of the faster rate of growth of the Canadian part of the business over that in the United States, should prove highly advantageous to Canadian employees. They are the ones who want this incorporation and are most enthusiastic about Canadianizing it. That is another reason for the dual name.

I submit to all hon. members that there is some gain here in the form of at least a one eighth Canadian participation in the ownership. It is not a large gain but it does give Simpsons Limited a fixed and definite interest in the life insurance operations in Canada of the Sears-Roebuck operation where none now exists. If the bill receives second reading it is my intention to move that it be referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce, where it can be examined in detail.

(Translation):

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I must tell you frankly that the hon. member for Spadina (Mr. Ryan) has not convinced me at all. He would like to Canadianize the Allstate company, but the owners and stockholders remain nevertheless foreigners and this, on the very day when we are informed that the American government has just imposed a 15 per cent tax on American investments in 22 countries of the world including Canada.

There are now in our country many life insurance, fire insurance and automobile insurance companies, several of which are Canadian undertakings, if we consider their staff as well as the capital invested.

Now, the staff of the company the incorporation of which is proposed may be Canadian, but on the other hand, the capital stock is 87½ per cent American-owned; in other words the profits it makes will go to foreign countries.

What is the amount of money that will flow out of Canada each year? I wonder whether the hon. member sponsoring this bill has given a thought to that before introducing the bill. What is the amount of benefits that will go out of Canada each year to be distributed to the owners of the stock of this company? Of course substantial amounts will be added to those that are already flowing out of this country. In fact, an estimated amount of over $1,200 million is leaving Canada every year to be distributed to citizens in foreign countries, in the form of profits, interests, benefits and dividends.

As the majority of owners of this company are citizens of the United States, they will be anxious to draw their benefits and to bring them back, so to say, to their own country.

Mr. Speaker, there are several Canadian companies selling insurance. Then why should we accept all foreign companies which would like to enter into the insurance business in Canada. In fact, it would be interesting to inquire of the Department of Finance or the department of insurance in Ottawa in order to determine how many American or foreign countries whose majority owners are non-residents do business, and in what amount, in Canada.

On the other hand, I would be curious to know how many Canadian companies are doing insurance business in United States. In fact, is the American government willing to incorporate in United States a Canadian company wishing to do business there, especially in the insurance field.

It would also be interesting to know how many Canadian companies derive profits from the United States. As a matter of fact, I am convinced that the Canadian people would be amazed to note the disproportion in that connection. It would then be realized that Americans can set up companies in our country—which they use as their hunting grounds—in order to invest their capital, collect premiums and have them yield profits for themselves, while we are unable to avail ourselves of the same advantages.

If we asked ourselves all those questions, we might be less interested in incorporating so-called Canadian companies, which are only Canadian through their insurance salesmen. It must be kept in mind that it is the salesman who does all the work, while the shareholder does not even live in Canada. In fact, he receives dividends, he takes profits, but the insurance salesman is the one who does most of the work, and in a field where competition is rather fierce today. And those who benefit, who make large profits, are foreigners after all.

Let no one tell us that these are Canadian companies, when 87 per cent of the shares are held by non-resident Americans or others.

Mr. Speaker, I have nothing against the Americans. The United States have a population of 180 million people and, in my opinion, the Americans should be happy to sell insurance to their fellow citizens, leaving Canadians to do the same to their own people.

One must not forget that insurance companies represent one of the largest savings and investment funds for the development of a country's economy. Consequently, let us leave to our Canadian companies the task of keeping for us that savings and investment fund that will contribute to the growth of our economy.

Today, President Kennedy announced during the noon hour, that the United States government will be asked to approve a 15 per cent tax on American investments in Canada. On the other hand, we will continue to export our capital to the United States and to invest there for the advantage of American companies. That is illogical, Mr. Speaker.

This afternoon, the Minister of Finance complained about his biggest headache, the deficit in our international balance of payments. It now seems that the members of his own party wish to add to his troubles by helping again those companies to take our capital away from us.

I now see the minister of commerce (Mr. Sharp), who is also interested in the development of trade and industry in this country. Insurance is one of the greatest businesses, one of the most important industries of the country. Then why encourage the establishment of foreign industries and businesses in our country when it would be perfectly possible to develop an insurance industry here in our country by Canadians and for Canadians.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the sponsor of the bill will understand that such a situation is no longer justified. The sponsor of the bill will understand that we cannot in good faith accept the passage of a bill which would be giving still another part of our savings to foreign companies the profits of which will revert to non-residents and consequently leave the country.

Mr. Speaker, needless to say that an attempt can be made to have the bill read for the second time before the end of the session, but we shall not allow it to pass. Therefore, if the sponsor of the bill will realize that the time of the house is too valuable for that, he will simply withdraw his bill. It must be understood that if insurance companies were scarce in Canada, if there were not any, it would be different. But, we have enough especially in the field of life insurance; there are Canadian companies in the province of Quebec, as well as in all other provinces, with Canadian stock. Since we have enough and that we are in a position to develop that industry ourselves, to bring other foreign companies to Canada to operate in that field is utterly nonsensical and illogical.

The sponsor of the bill should make it clear to those who are asking for the incorporation and refrain from introducing it again.

I note that the provisional directors of the company mentioned in the bill are all from Toronto. But, just because of that, are we going to believe that the real directors and owners are people from Toronto? Everybody knows when a lawyer prepares the incorporation of a company he often picks his secretaries as acting directors until the first meeting, where the real directors will be appointed. Therefore, those first directors are not the real directors of the company. That is why, even if the whole city of Toronto were thrown in, we know quite well, as the hon. member himself told us, that that company is controlled to the extent of 87½ per cent by American interests.

So, Mr. Speaker, that is one of the reasons why we are opposed to this bill. I think we have very good reasons for being opposed to it, and I believe all Canadian insurance companies agree with us. In fact, every one who cares about the well-being of our economy also agrees that we should try and keep as much as possible in our own country that field of endeavour which we must control.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. member for Lapointe. Does the hon. member think it is normal or abnormal for foreign industrialists or foreign investors, not residing in Canada, to come in this country and invest money, abiding by Canadian laws, just like Canadians may go to the United States or Brazil, where the Brazilian Traction Company is controlled by Canadian interests, inasmuch as these corporations conform to Canadian laws?

Mr. Gregoire: Of course, I think that is normal. But there is a sentence which the hon. member failed to understand. If a company or somebody invests funds in our country, well and good, but this insurance company does not come here to invest in Canada; it comes here to take our savings out of this country.

The investments of an insurance company are in fact the savings of that company's policyholders. When an insurance company makes an investment in a large building, of the kind we can see in our cities, it does not invest capital from the United States but our own money, which comes from our savings and our investments. It is not its money which it brings in; it brings no new capital. A foreign insurance company settling in Canada comes without anything. It just channels our savings and our investments. It just channels them into a holding which it created for its own advantage. It is not the same thing as if it invested capital or brought in skills or some other talents, not at all, it just comes and uses our savings and investments to make profits. That is why I say that in Canada we have everything we need to do it ourselves.

Mr. Pigeon: I have a supplementary question for the hon. member for Lapointe, Mr. Speaker. Can he prevent a Canadian to do business in good faith with a company such as that mentioned in the bill we are considering now, if it is incorporated?

Mr. Gregoire: No, Mr. Speaker, it is not a matter of preventing anyone from doing business with a company. After all, we do not live under a dictatorship. It is not a question of preventing a Canadian of good faith from doing as he pleases. However, we must not either greet with open arms all those companies owned by non-residents who would come to operate in a sector where we are capable of operating ourselves.

There are in Canada American, English and French insurance companies. If that was done in the past, it is not a reason to keep on allowing foreigners to channel our savings, our efforts and our investments.

It is not a question of stopping a Canadian citizen from taking out an insurance policy with the company of his choice. No, that is not the problem. It is only a matter of trying to protect our own people as much as possible, especially in the insurance business, against the intrusion of foreign companies when, in fact, we succeed so well in developing the insurance business in our country. All the more so—and I think that Allstate is one of them—since those companies often have methods against which our own insurance companies cannot always compete successfully. When a person buys an insurance policy from Allstate, that insurance is sold at the counter. And when you have claims to lodge, there is no agent to help you; you inquire at the counter, you get no help from them, and often the person who takes an insurance with a counter insurance company such as Allstate is not in as good a position as if he were to insure with an insurance company which has brokers and agents who are interested in giving satisfaction. In fact, all insurance brokers and agents in the country will tell you that counter insurance, whether from Allstate or other American companies of the same type established in Canada, does not give satisfaction to the policyholders.

So the point is we must protect our insurance industry against that new method they want to introduce in Canada and which, often, does not serve at all the interests of Canadian policyholders.

(Text):

Mr. Greene: Would the hon. member permit a question? I understand that these companies which make direct sales of insurance are able to sell more cheaply to the consumer than those which deal through a series of agents. I wonder if he would tell us whether his party is against these direct sales which result in insurance being cheaper to the consumer?

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Not necessarily, Mr. Speaker, Not necessarily. We are not necessarily against this type of counter sales, for they tend to reduce prices.

However, there are different points to consider with regard to that system. For example, it creates unemployment and reduces the need for manpower. But this is only a minor argument. The main argument is that it might be advisable that the government inquire into the service given to Canadian policyholders in this system of direct sales of insurance.

You will understand, Mr. Speaker, that as members of parliament, we are in touch with the people. We find that some citizens are sometimes cheated by certain insurance companies. It is very difficult to obtain satisfaction from these insurance companies.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to give you one example. About four years ago, my car was parked in one of the main arteries of Montreal, while I was on the other side of the street. A passing cab sideswiped the side of my car. The driver gave me the name of his insurance company, to which I naturally wrote—it was a company which sold insurance over the counter, as the company we are discussing today—but I did not collect a red cent for damages. Was it because I did not go about it the right way in presenting my claim? However, as the amount involved was not very important, I did not think it was necessary to ask a lawyer to put in my claim for me. But I must say that the company did not pay any damages.

This type of company which functions rather like a slot machine selling insurance leaves the car owners to shift for themselves in case of need.

To come back to the matter in hand, I feel the government should inquire into it, and find out whether that type of company serves the public in a satisfactory and honest way.

Mr. Pigeon: May I direct a question to the hon. member?

(Text):

Mr. Greene: May I ask a question? Does the hon. member's party advocate greater control of insurance by government and by government agencies?

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: No sir. Our party has never requested that a greater control be exercised over the insurance companies by the government nor are we asking for any legislation of that kind. The words "protect" and "control" have a different meaning: to wish to protect our Canadian insurance companies against a foreign insurance company is quite different from wishing to "control" them.

There is no question of control here, Mr. Speaker; it is a matter of finding out the facts, not of controlling. It is chiefly a matter of protecting the Canadian people and the Canadian industry, in this case our insurance companies, but there is absolutely no question of controlling them.

Why should we ask for government control? There is no such need, Mr. Speaker. Our insurance companies are doing well at present and no government control is called for.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the hon. member for Lapointe. He suggested that an investigation should be carried out by the federal government in the field of insurance. Does he not fear that that would be an infringement upon provincial autonomy? Since the provinces are rather touchy about their rights and since each of them has an insurance division, would it not be up to them to carry out such an investigation if that is necessary?

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I would have no objection to this recommendation being passed on to the provinces.

However, since those big insurance companies are seeking a federal charter, then I feel it is up to the central government and not to the provinces to undertake the investigation we recommend.

At this stage, allow me, Mr. Speaker, to give an example to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. In my own riding as well as in the constituency of Chicoutimi and Lotbiniere, about a year and a half ago, a number of citizens were literally tricked by confidence men who pretended they were giving away sewing machines, the only catch being that the recipients had to undertake—through a finance contract—to pay an amount of $600. Altogether 190 people let themselves be fooled in that way.

In that case, there had been an actual transgressing of the law. Therefore, those people got organized and instructed a lawyer to represent them before the provincial government, requesting the province to get that finance company off their backs.

(Text):

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Gregoire: One moment, sir.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Now, after that lawyer made the necessary representations to the provincial government, the attorney general of the province of Quebec replied that this was a matter coming under federal jurisdiction. At that point, I myself asked Mr. McGregor to look into the problem. Before going any further, I must congratulate Mr. McGregor before the house for the magnificent work he did, for he succeeded, with the co-operation of his inspectors, to install order where disorder existed and at the same time to bring to heel an American finance company, the Seaboard Finance, which, with the assistance of two confidence men had taken in a great many people. Following the intervention I just mentioned, justice was done to those people.

(Text):

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I must object most strenuously to this company whose bill I have been asked to sponsor being put in the same category as the type of groups to which my hon. friend has referred. After all, this bill has been considered in committee and passed by the other place, and I am certain there can be no possible comparison between the men seeking to incorporate this company and the type of groups to which the hon. member has referred.

Mr. Gregoire: There is no comparison at all. It is just an example of provincial and federal jurisdiction. That is all.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The time allotted to the hon. gentleman has expired, and unless the house gives unanimous consent—

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Greene: I should like to ask the hon. member a question. He has referred to the flow of dividends and profits going to the United States of America from American companies doing business in Canada. How does he reconcile that with the fact that the deputy leader of his party, the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette), has a car agency from an American concern and the profits from that company go back to the United States? In view of the ideas the hon. member has expressed today, is this in accord with the thinking of his party so far as their deputy leader is concerned?

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, it is true that the hon. member for Villeneuve operates an American car agency. But if the previous governments had been wise, they would have encouraged Canada to develop its own automobile industry and we would not have to sell American or foreign cars. It is because of government negligence that at this time we have to sell American cars.

(Text):

Some hon. Members: Six o'clock.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Gregoire: Six o'clock.

Mr. Herridge: I move the adjournment of the debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being six o'clock, the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired and the house will revert to the business that was interrupted at five o'clock.

PENSIONS

PROVISION FOR CANADA PENSION PLAN, INCREASED OLD AGE SECURITY PAYMENTS, ETC.

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Miss LaMarsh—Mr. Batten in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to establish a comprehensive pension program to be known as the Canada pension plan and to provide among other things for the payment of pensions on an adjusted scale commencing, at the option of the pensioner, at any age between 65 and 70 years; for the payment of pensions to surviving spouses commencing at any age after 65 years; for the progressive establishment of such pensions over an initial period averaging ten years in order to facilitate the adjustment of existing pension schemes to the new plan; for the payment of an additional pension of ten dollars a month to all persons to whom a pension may be paid under the Old Age Security Act; for the adjustment of pensions payable under the Old Age Security Act to co-ordinate such pensions with the new plan; and for the appointment and remuneration of such officers, clerks and employees as may be required for the due carrying out of the new plan; and to provide further that all expenditures under the new plan, additional to those required under the Old Age Security Act, shall be paid out of or reimbursed from contributions by employees, employers and self-employed persons.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 7 p.m.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I had just about covered the preliminaries preparatory to discussing the particulars of the plan brought before the house. I might summarize. Mention had been made by the minister that the day of introducing old age pension increases before an election was over. I had just pointed out that in 1957 that was the course followed by the St. Laurent government, the increase becoming effective after the election with the results that everybody recalls at this time. I further pointed out that the reason given by the leaders of Liberalism in that year for the picayune amount that was provided for was, to use the words of the then minister of finance, "That is the way you fight inflation." This was his answer to criticism directed at the fact the pension would not be effective until July 1.

I should like to point out something more in that connection. During the period from 1953 to 1957 the provinces, and indirectly the municipalities, were being starved by the government of that day. The old age pensioners were being starved. The veterans were being starved. Then, after the election of 1957 we introduced appropriate additions and the members of the former government expressed different views, the general purport of which was, that one of the best ways of getting along is to recognize that you have to change your views. These remarks were made by one of the most distinguished members of the former government, and an equally distinguished member of the present government.

Now, sir, the attitude of the opposition was very clearly set forth during the period we were in office and also during the campaign. We stated we would extend social security; we would add to the dignity and security of our older citizens; we would make retirement from toil and labour a rewarding part of life through an addition to the present old age security program by bringing about directly an old age and retirement plan with survivor benefits. We said that we would co-operate with the provinces to bring about portable pensions. In addition to that, and in order to assure survivor benefits, we would have to secure an amendment to the constitution. We endeavoured to secure that amendment for two years, in particular from January 17, 1962, thence during the next year until the time we were defeated in the house.

I might summarize the letters which were sent to the various provincial governments by me as prime minister. They were to the effect that the law officers of the crown advise that the authority, under the amendment to the British North America Act, section 94(a) in 1951, would permit parliament to enact directly graduated old age pension schemes, but would not permit the inclusion of benefit payable under certain circumstances to widows and children, nor to contributors who become disabled before they are old. To extend the law in this most desirable way, it would be necessary to replace the present section of the British North America Act in this way:

> It is hereby declared that the parliament of Canada may from time to time make laws in relation to > (a) old age pensions, and
> (b) pensions and other benefits incidental to, or conducive to the better operation and administration of, a scheme of old age pensions,

We had hoped that agreement would have been reached by 1962 on a means of amending Canada's constitution, but we found it was impossible to secure agreement. The attitude of the provinces in general was favourable to our request, with the exception of one province and to a lesser extent a second, so that again under the constitution the dead hand of the past controlled the present to a degree that made impossible the bringing into effect of national social security legislation, providing for survivor benefits.

In this case the government has become a convert only in recent days to the need for consultation with the provinces, but in this legislation it is placing the cart before the horse. It has brought in a general plan in a resolution, and having brought in the plan, complex as it is, then it calls the provinces together to discuss the matter. I do not know what the reaction of the provinces will be, but certainly two of them have passed legislation in connection with pensions, legislation that may well become a dead letter unless there is full co-operation between the two levels of government, federal and provincial. These things have to be worked out so that in reality, as we debate the matter at this time, not knowing what tomorrow will bring forth in the meeting of the dominion and provincial representatives, we can only discuss in a general way the recommendations and suggestions made.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

We intend to examine this matter most carefully. The minister has pointed out that it is complex and difficult. I understand one of its architects was Mr. Stanley, upon whom the Minister of Finance relied with such disastrous results in preparing the budget. After the fiasco of that budget and the recommendations made, it will be doubly necessary to give the fullest examination to this plan that he and those associated with him evolved, to the end that the government will be saved from itself once more and from having to make a further retreat.

After pleading for discussion freed from the sinister influence of political considerations, the minister asked for co-operation. We are going to give the fullest co-operation, and in a little while, Mr. Chairman, I will indicate how far we are prepared to go in this connection in order to give those who now sit on the government benches the opportunity of voicing their vote as they voiced their views in regard to social security during the election campaign.

Over the week end I read the biography of Arthur James Balfour, prime minister of the United Kingdom and a leader in Britain for almost 50 years. In the book there is an extract which illustrates the spirit we are going to use and apply as we examine this general plan. I quote:

> Society is becoming more and more sensitive to the evils that exist in its midst;—

This would be around 1903-04.

> —more and more impatient of their continued existence. In itself this is wholly good; but, in order that good may come of it, it behoves us to walk warily.

If only the Minister of Finance had read those words before he produced that budget.

> It is, no doubt, better for us to apply appropriate remedies to our diseases than to put our whole trust in the healing powers of nature, but it is better to put our trust in the healing powers of nature than to poison ourselves straight off by swallowing the contents of the phial presented to us by any self-constituted physician. And such self-constituted physicians are about and in large numbers—

It applies today, Mr. Chairman.

> —gentlemen who think that they pay Providence a compliment by assuming that for every social ill there is a speedy and effectual specific lying to hand; who regard it as impious to believe that there may be chronic diseases of the body politic as well as of any other body . . . Of two evils it is better, perhaps, that our ship shall go nowhere than that it should run upon the rocks.

All of us recognize the need for action being taken. As the minister has stated, there is universal agreement in that connection; but I have a number of questions to ask the government, and after all, Mr. Chairman, when you remove the halo from what has been said to date and start to look at the substance you ask yourself: Is there not a great deal in what has been said which is of a nature expressing the possibility of a hope, while denying at the same time the achievement of that hope at an early date?

As the minister has said, this is a tremendous problem and I have a number of questions which I ask merely for information. I am sure the provincial premiers would find some of the answers very helpful.

With the taking over in large measure of the responsibility of providing all employed Canadians with a retirement pension, will private pension plans, in the natural sequence, not tend to be wiped out? It is a frightful challenge. There are hundreds of thousands of people who have pension plans, but not one word was said today, except by way of generality, as to what is going to be done with them.

Can any person under a private pension plan opt out of the national scheme?

Miss LaMarsh: No.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Can they opt out of any provincial plan that is in existence? What happens to the contributions a person has made to provide for old age before the benefits have accrued? What effect will this plan have, unless worked out with the greatest of care and most meticulous of examination, on the 2 million workers already members of private pension plans? What about interference with provincial jurisdiction? To what extent will this plan interfere with legislation such as that recently passed by the Ontario legislature, whose purpose it is to supervise and regulate the pension plan?

I heard today with a great deal of interest the estimate as to how much is going to be deducted from the employee and paid by the employer. All I have to say is that the economists we have talked to say the estimate is about 20 per cent of what the actual deduction will be in a matter of three or four years. Nothing is said about this. We have the unfolding, the unveiling of a great plan, but without evidence as to how much it is going to cost. Is this going to be a means whereby a tremendous amount of additional taxation is to be imposed, without benefit, on many of those from whom the deductions are made who are today members of other pension plans.

Miss LaMarsh: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman must surely have heard that part of my remarks which indicated that the requirement was 2 per cent, to be divided equally between the employee and employer, and that this was the entire amount to be charged.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I appreciate that, Mr. Speaker. If that was produced by Mr. Stanley, all I have to say is that I need better proof than that, after the budget mistakes that we had.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, if the—

Mr. Diefenbaker: My hon. friend has made her speech—

Miss LaMarsh: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Diefenbaker: —and I should like—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I understand the minister is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, privilege.

Miss LaMarsh: Again on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman has made the imputation that some private citizen prepared this plan. May I, as the minister concerned indicate to the house that the figures used and the plan as drawn up were prepared by the public service of Canada and by the department of insurance.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If that is a question of privilege, the minister progresses. I am glad that the public service of Canada are again being consulted, after the incursion recently of outside advice. A study was made, and a very complete one, by Professor Robert Clark of the University of British Columbia. It was a tremendous study; he worked at it for a very long time. It took 15 months to complete and produce a report of some 727 pages.

An hon. Member: Why didn't you implement it?

Mr. Mandziuk: You talked too much, that's why.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Winnipeg Tribune asks some pertinent questions—

An hon. Member: Why didn't you implement it?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, these quarrelsome contributions are all very helpful, I am sure; but I was trying to discuss the matter somewhat seriously. The Winnipeg Tribune sums this up very well when it says:

> The high cost is not the only reason for going slow on such an ambitious undertaking. There are many other problems involving constitutional questions, property rights, existing pension rights, the purchasing power of the dollar and federal-provincial relations.

I listened with interest to the description of how this plan was going to work out. This is the first time in all history that painless pensions have been invented. Only 1 per cent. The state is not going to pay anything. We have had this type of experience in the past in the introduction of measures such as hospital insurance and all the other fields of social endeavour.

Mr. Matheson: Unemployment insurance.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In the matter of a few years they multiply; they expand; the cost becomes terrific. But what studies have been made in that connection? I could not quite understand, from what the minister said, whether or not this would be a compulsory plan. As I understood it, though—and I have to depend entirely on listening to the revelations as she made them—

Miss LaMarsh: You heard it for two hours.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —it would be compulsory up to a salary level of $4,000. This is a tremendous undertaking; one that will require a great deal of study. I again come back to the question of cost. I am just asking for information, that is all. We find that in the United States the deductions started at 2 per cent. They had the same hope. The deductions started at, not 1 per cent but 2 per cent. The payroll tax is now 6 per cent and it is expected to be 9 per cent by 1970. That does not indicate bad administration, but we ought to learn, on the basis of experience in other areas, what may well be the result here in the future. As has been said on more than one occasion, these tremendous amounts of money will be siphoned off out of the investment field and, rendered funds sterile in government bonds during the first few years beyond that which is being redistributed. This is a vast plan. Most people think of only one thing—this is all they heard during the election campaign—that they were going to get $10. Now the minister says we have to work fast on this. I have seen closure applied by that party, many of whom are sitting over there today. They did not even let us speak in 1956; they moved closure before the discussion started.

An hon. Member: Eighteen days.

Mr. Diefenbaker: But this is a new type of closure, "If you people do not pass this quickly, the old age pensioner who is getting the fixed amount is going to be held up".

Mr. Winkler: Let them pay them the $10 right now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is an idea with considerable wisdom in it. We want to see the election campaign promises carried out. Before I deal with the thoughtful suggestion of the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler), may I refer to the Financial Post in this connection. I am not saying I am in agreement with these views, but they show how we must carefully study this matter and not be stampeded into passing something that is going to be an incubus on the Canadian economy for years to come. We believe in the objective. We carried it so far that we increased social security payments during the period of our office by 79 per cent. But this is a very difficult matter, and we found after the examination not only by Dr. Clark but also by outstanding civil servants that there were many problems in the way. The Financial Post said:

> There can be no doubt that the goal of portable pensions for all Canadians is a commendable one and well worth working for. Rarely now does a worker stay in one job for life. Indeed, a fast-changing economy demands a mobile work force and the loss of pension rights when moving from one job to another creates unnecessary hardship for the individual and unnecessary burdens for the nation as a whole—
>
> Even getting a provincial portable pension plan working will impose many complications, most of them costly, on employers and employees. In Ontario, which has set up the first provincial program and scheduled its start for Jan. 1, 1965, companies are having difficulty fitting existing plans into the government's over-all pension framework.
>
> Quebec now says it intends to introduce a plan similar to that scheduled for Ontario. British Columbia and Alberta are known to be actively considering comparable schemes.

Then it says this:

> Inadequate study and over-anxious politicking could very well produce a pension mess beyond imagination and beyond repair.

I believe, as the minister said, that there is general agreement on the necessity; but the difficulty will be to work out a plan that is effective, constitutionally proper or co-operatively implemented with provincial assistance. The increase in the cost of living is now starting ahead faster than was the case when we were in office. They used to say what terrible things would happen when we borrowed money from the international monetary fund, but now they have done the same. The United States today is securing the right to borrow $500 million from the international monetary fund. This is the first time the United States has done that and it is bringing in regulations—if congress passes them, but effective now—designed to bring about that which we brought in in May of 1962. We had to take that action.

However, there is one group which needs assistance now, and that is the old age pensioners. Why not do that which was undertaken implicitly or indirectly by the former government in the elections of 1962 and 1963? There was a commitment. We on this side lost tens of thousands of votes because we stated: "We have raised you to $65. The other people raised you $6. We raised you from $46 to $65, and there will be an increase when the situation improves; but in the meantime there will be this contributory system over and above the existing pension". The Liberal party said there would be an immediate payment. I say, very well, first of all, do not try and apply closure to the opposition. Do not try to lead the old people of this country to believe that the reason they are not going to get another $10 is because the opposition dared discuss the rest of this question. If it cannot be brought in immediately, make it effective now, and whenever the whole system is in effect then give each one the persion, beginning today. Then they would be doing something along the line they promised.

Second, we suggest that people be allowed to obtain their pension on an actuarially reduced basis as early as age 65. Is this plan actuarially sound? If it is actuarially sound and it is certified so, then we need not expect an ever-increasing levy on business, employers and employees, as has been the case elsewhere. By allowing our people before age 70 to obtain a pension at a reduced rate for the rest of their lives, no significant cost would be imposed on the federal treasury. Persons choosing to take their pension at an earlier age would, of course, benefit from any increase in pensions voted by parliament. While this was not said, it seems to me implicit in what the minister said that this $10 is the last increase. Because she mounted the white charger of political purity and said that never again are Canadians to be bought by their own money. The Liberal government of Mr. St. Laurent tried to do just that and put off the implementation of the additional pension till after the election so that the carrot would dangle before the voters of Canada. Also include a system of flat survivor benefits payable to widowed mothers and dependant children of widowed mothers. As I listened to the minister I think that something in this regard is being done. Canada is one of the very few countries in the western world which does not have a system of survivor benefits unrelated to a means test. Indeed, it is the view of Dr. Robert Clark that this is the greatest gap in the welfare legislation of Canada.

The basis of financial survivor benefits should be made the same as that used to finance old age security itself. This in turn should be altered from its present illogical basis as we see it to an equal tax on earnings of employers and employees, as is done in the United States under the social security act, and under this the self-employed would be covered under similar legislation.

With regard to co-operation with the provinces, the federal government should co-operate with the provincial governments in the regulation of pension plans. It could do so in its capacity as an employer by seeking to have federal employees covered under provincial statutes. It could also offer to administer provincial portable pension acts for those provinces which were willing to pass the appropriate legislation, and a fee could be charged for this purpose.

The question of cost is one to which we must return—not the cost of the firm, fixed old age pension but this contributory one. Because experience has shown that governments have to plan most carefully if they are to assure that their pension plan will be as cheap as employee pension plans in the long run. In addition to that, as I said earlier, we would set up a contributory plan following the most careful study, to the end that the mistakes which have been found to exist in other such plans will be found wanting in ours.

I mentioned a moment ago that I should like to read this literature because it gives one an idea of events so very recent. I outlined a moment ago the promises made. Here is one which went across the country. The great trouble is that a lot of people read the big print but do not read the fine print. How often it happens that those who do not read the fine print find, after they have come to certain conclusions, that the results were not in keeping with the promises of the large print. This is one: "Jobs Created. Take a Stand for Tomorrow—Vote Liberal".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Never have I seen anything like the political puppets sitting opposite who applaud that, after their experience in recent days. It was all right before the people of Canada had had the experience they have now had. Look at what it says: "Jobs Created". Yet there were 4,000 more unemployed in the month of June than there were a year ago. All the promises of yesterday are disappearing in the light of experience. The hon. lady gave us a course today in how to look at the sun when it is in eclipse. Well, we are looking at this government now. The pamphlet goes on to say: "$140 a Month for Today's Retired Couple; Up to $295 a Month when You Retire". That is what I ridiculed. They said it was not going to cost the people of Canada anything. I said that was the most ridiculous promise ever made since the days of the south sea bubble. "Up to $295 a Month When You Retire". By Jove, people are asking today: when do we get into this bonanza? I quote further:

For people who are retired now: The Liberal plan for pensions will establish a new national minimum of $75 a month for today's old age pensioners if they are single or widowed, $140 for married couples.

Then, on the same page, further down under "Contributions" it says:

The Liberal plan will add a contributory pension to the existing old age pension. The addition will be paid for entirely by contributions, not by taxes.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs—I just to have to mention the question of social security and he immediately launches forth with that eloquence so characteristic of him—made a speech on the subject on January 30, 1962. Here are some extracts:

There are four essentials to our plan. First, it will for the first time guarantee to Canadians that they need no longer be concerned about security in their years of retirement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They will not be applauding when we get to paragraph 2.

Everyone will have the opportunity of a pension equal to a good proportion of the income he had been earning. The Liberal plan will establish at once a new national minimum of $75 pension.

I emphasize "at once". Today they are trying to weasel out of this. They fooled the people. They pulled the wool over their eyes. Now they do not want to answer for what they did in deceiving the people.

Here is what appeared in the Winnipeg Tribune: "What can we expect from the Liberals?" that paper asks. I see the Prime Minister smiling. He would go into office, the article says, with a tough schedule for the first 60 days of business, including a visit to London to meet Prime Minister Macmillan, a meeting with President Kennedy and arrangements for a budget by mid-June. Well, I tell the right hon. gentleman that the Hyannis Port honeymoon ended today as far as the United States is concerned. Then the paper says: "Old age pensions will be increased immediately to $75 a month from $65".

I want to give hon. members opposite an opportunity to support their ideals. We realize that an amendment to the effect that $75 should be paid would be one which would be out of order. But there is nothing to prevent a recommendation, and I know they are just waiting for an opportunity to be able to show that they want to recommend to the government immediate consideration of this proposition. They promised the old age pensioners in Canada $75 a month in the large print. Then, in the small print, there were some evasions and qualifications. Their advertising was carefully designed to delude, and it succeeded. It could not have been more effective. Everyone took it the government intended to follow this through. Now I read in the Toronto Star of June 29 an article by Mr. Joe Scanlon in which he sums up everything in advance—and he is fairly close to authoritative sources:

They have a plan that will lead to an immediate increase in the present pension and at the same time take the first step to a contributory pension plan.

For our part, as far as this is concerned, we do not intend to allow the government to say to us that, if we dare to discuss this, any time we take in considering this contributory plan in order to make it more effective will deprive the old age pensioners of the increase. What that means is that we should pass this potpourri as it is—get it through; then work will start and the tremendous organization which would be required would be set up. Well, I feel that everyone on the government side of the house will be most anxious to do everything possible to show that there was no callous disregard of election promises in this field. I therefore believe we should take all the time necessary to consider this measure—and it will take time, now. The provinces are meeting. They will, no doubt, be making suggestions after they have had the plan placed before them. They have not yet heard what it may be, because, as the Prime Minister has advised one or other of the premiers, this resolution has been called early so that the plan might be made available and the provinces might know what they are up against when they come here. And this will take time. We want to see the old age pensioner not deprived in any way of the carrying into effect of the promise—

An hon. Member: Promises.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —that was made—

An hon. Member: Commitment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —while the rest of the plan is being studied. So let us proceed now and do our part in this house to bring to the attention of the government a promise that was made. You see, Mr. Chairman, what they are trying to do is this. They are going to try to pretend that this extra $10 a month is going to come out of the contributions that will be made under the national contributory plan. They are going to start to collect in November or December—I do not know when—and by January they are going to be able to take out $110 million, or whatever the amount is, thereby weakening the fund even before it is established. Surely that is not good common sense. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, in full support of the principle of contributory old age pensions—

An hon. Member: In an irresponsible way.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —in entire support of the laudable desire of the government to make available the $10 a month to those who were so promised, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Monteith):

That the said resolution be amended by adding after the words "ten dollars a month" in line 9: "and this house asks that the government give consideration to making the payment of such additional pension to commence on this date."

(Translation):

Mr. Girouard: Mr. Chairman, I must point out first of all the honour my leader (Mr. Thompson) did me in asking me to speak on his behalf tonight on the occasion of this debate, not only because he asked a backbencher—

The Chairman: Order. I wish to remind the hon. member that there is at present an amendment before the house and that amendment must be discussed before we can hear the remarks of the hon. member for Labelle.

(Text):

Perhaps I could hear argument from hon. members on the amendment which has now been submitted by the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Monteith: What is wrong with it?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, I think it is quite obvious to all members of the house, certainly to the members on this side of the house who are prepared to look on these things rationally—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Byrne: —that this is an amendment to a resolution which requires a considerable amount of expenditure.

Mr. Churchill: The amendment does not.

Mr. Byrne: If the amendment were accepted it would change the sense of the resolution completely and require immediate action which would result in an expenditure of some $50 million to $100 million before it was possible to bring in the measure that would provide for the expenditure.

An hon. Member: That is what you promised.

Mr. Byrne: I am sure the house would not be prepared to consider this amendment in order in any way.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, there is just one short reference I should like to bring to your attention. The only objection that can be raised to an amendment of this type is that it would alter the plan set forth by the government. The minister made it exceedingly clear in her initial statement that there was no date set upon which the $10 increase in old age pensions would be made, and since a date was not set surely the setting of a date should not be taken to change the amount of money that will be expended. I will admit that there might be some objection if a date had been set and the amendment set the date back earlier, in that this would mean a greater expenditure, but in this particular case no date was set and therefore no change that anyone can imagine or point to is possible.

Miss LaMarsh: With respect to what the hon. member has just said, he has indicated the line of attack in the amendment moved by the Leader of the Opposition. The amendment is indicative of the spirit of co-operation and of the real interest in the aged people of this country on his part. It is indicative of how little he really cares about the welfare of our aged. The line of attack has been indicated in that if the amendment were adopted it would have the effect of altering the government's plan set forth in the resolution, and indeed, Mr. Chairman, it would do so. The government's plan has been explained explicitly both in my remarks and more fully in the paper which the right hon. gentleman has had in his hands, despite what he said, for the past two hours. It is indicated clearly there that the only way that payment can be made is from the contributions which are to flow in, contributions which, under the timing, cannot be made earlier than October, 1964. The right hon. gentleman was careful not to read that document or to inform himself as to the material before the house. My submission would be that if such an amendment were permitted to be adopted it would have the effect of materially altering the plan of the government as set forth in the resolution, and thus it cannot be accepted.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, if I may say a word I think there has been a complete omission to realize the wording of the amendment. It does not say that $10 will be paid. It asks the government to give consideration to making the payment of such additional pension to commence on this date. It is a recommendation to the government, not a direction, not an interference with the financial plan. Of itself it does not require a contribution whatsoever. It simply asks the government to give consideration to this matter. I am sure that both sides of the house are anxious to do that and that the minister in particular, possessed with the interest that she has indicated, will get widespread support for this, because the amendment is not going to interfere in any way with the financial obligation or with the collection of any amounts required to provide payment.

Mr. Francis: I do not believe any of us could believe that the purpose of such a motion could be anything other than to place the maximum possible coercion on the government to make this plan effective at the earliest possible date. There is no question but that the plan which has been laid before this house by the minister gives rise to administrative difficulties in the collection of revenues. The plan also indicates the earliest possible date in which this could be effected. In addition, the plan indicates that the method of financing the benefits which are proposed is from the contributions as outlined, and the plan cannot be effective before October, 1964.

The adoption of the amendment, therefore, would inevitably have the effect of substantially changing the plan by requiring the payment of pensions in amounts in excess of those which would be provided in the terms of the plan as outlined in this house, and not by any minor sum but by a major sum. The intention of the government, as outlined in the terms of the plan, is quite clear. The adoption of the amendment would place the government in such a position that it would have to change substantially the nature of the plan proposed, and therefore I do not think the amendment is in order.

Mr. Churchill: I should like to say one word with regard to what has been said concerning coercion. There is no coercion, direct or implied in the amendment which has been proposed. The amendment simply asks the government to give consideration to making the payment of such additional pension commencing on this date. This government, which is very fond of setting dates, might like to take this opportunity of giving the further consideration that is suggested by us because obviously everybody in the house is in agreement on pushing forward with this plan.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: This is an example of outstanding co-operation.

(Translation):

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect, I believe that the amendment, as it stands, cannot be accepted because it proposes to the house something it cannot do.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Favreau: The house is asked to give consideration to the possibility of passing a bill which would involve the payment to commence on this date of a pension when the bill has not yet been presented and the act has not yet been passed. We certainly cannot consider legislation involving an expenditure which would take effect at a prescribed date when the bill has not yet been presented to the house.

On the very face of it, the wording of the amendment is not acceptable because the house does not have the right or the opportunity to consider and study legislation which would involve the payment as of today of a $10 a month pension to anyone.

Under the circumstances, since we are being asked to consider something preceding a bill that has to be passed before the measure is enforced, I say that we are being asked to consider something that is impossible, for on the face of it the wording of the amendment cannot be accepted, as it is unconstitutional.

Mr. Paul: Could the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration tell us in what way this amendment is unconstitutional?

Mr. Favreau: We are asking the house to consider the acceptance or the approval or the immediate passage of a $10 monthly payment when the legislation itself has not yet been introduced.

Mr. Paul: This by no means infringes upon the provisions of the constitution.

(Text):

Mr. Winkler: This is the normal course to follow in presenting an amendment to the house for consideration when that amendment does not commit the government to an expenditure of funds. I will say this. We are doing our utmost this evening to help the government keep its promises, Mr. Chairman. If they fail to agree with this motion, the old people of this country will know precisely where these people stand.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Winkler: That is where they stood in 1957, and that is where they stand tonight unless they support this motion.

Mr. Woolliams: As I understand the objection to the amendment by government members, it is that the amendment changes or alters the motion in question. I suggest this, Mr. Chairman, that the only change or alteration that has taken place has been from the time the commitment was made to the Canadian people until the time it was executed in this house.

(Translation):

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Chairman, it seems that some mentioned promises made during the last election campaign. I can tell you that if you study a little the Liberal party's platform, you will see that the present government did not promise to increase old age pensions as soon as it came into office. It made no such pledge. Some members of the party may have made speeches to that effect but in the party's platform, the first plank was to put the country's economy on its feet.

Mr. Lambert: Order.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Why should I be called to order when members on the other side of the house said all they wanted.

In any case, Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to say that if some people made speeches to that effect, there is no mention of this measure in the Liberal party's platform and the Liberal party must not be blamed.

(Text):

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): We will hear some gems of wisdom now.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman—

An hon. Member: Louder for the record.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, in so far as the point of order is concerned—I can hear catcalls from across the way—

An hon. Member: That is your side that is giving them.

Mr. Greene: —but this is just what you expect from a barnyard, and that is what we generally hear. I would point out, Mr. Chairman, in so far as this point of order is concerned—

An hon. Member: Smart alec freshman.

Mr. Greene: Well, it is better to be a smart alec freshman than a tired old campaigner. One thing about a freshman is that he has some hope of doing something around here, whereas some of you have been here for years and have accomplished nothing.

Mr. Winkler: You have little hope now.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, in so far as the point of order is concerned, I would say that this resolution carries out implicitly the exact pledges that were made during the campaign, and as contained in the literature of the Liberal party, namely, to bring out a responsible scheme which will be paid out of or reimbursed from contributions by employees and employers and self-employed persons. This party, by bringing this resolution forward at this time, is simply carrying out this pledge and promise in accordance with the tenure of the promise. We know that in 1957 and 1958 the right hon. gentleman opposite—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I do not think we are now on the question of order.

The Chairman: Yes, I would kindly ask the hon. member—

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

The Chairman: If the hon. member will kindly resume his seat I wish to point out there is a point of order, a very serious point of order, before the committee at the moment, and if any hon. member wishes to express his comments and helpful views to the Chair in connection with it, I would be most happy and grateful to hear them; but I think his comments, recommendations and advice should be strictly limited to the point of order.

Mr. Greene: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. The resolution, as it is worded, does not indicate the spending of any public moneys. It indicates a self-liquidating fund, but the right hon. gentleman opposite proposes an amendment which would in effect result in the spending of public money.

Now, there was a time when the right hon. gentleman was in a position—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Greene: This is on the point of order, Mr. Chairman. There was a time when the right hon. gentleman was in a position to introduce resolutions or amendments which would have the effect of resulting in the spending of public money, but he is not now, nor will he ever again in the future be in that position.

This amendment is very clearly out of order. It is a callous attempt to play politics with the rights, welfare and well-being of our old people.

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, I want to raise a point of privilege with regard to the remarks of the hon. member because he is imputing motives to the Leader of the Opposition, and this is clearly not within the purview of parliamentary procedure.

The Chairman: It is quite true that an hon. member cannot impute motives to other hon. members, and perhaps the words uttered by the hon. member went beyond his thoughts.

Mr. Greene: If alluding to the fact that the right hon. gentleman opposite is playing politics is impugning his character, then his character must have been impugned many times in this house out of his own mouth. I merely say that the amendment is clearly out of order, as it involves the spending of public moneys, and I repeat that this is a cruel hoax on our old people with whom this side of the house has the utmost sympathy and for whom this party, by introducing a responsible and self-liquidating measure, is trying to do something worth while, and at the same time serve the economy of the country in good stead.

The Chairman: Order. I do not think the hon. member is speaking to the point of order, and I would invite him to do so.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, may I say and may I repeat—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Greene: —that this is very clearly an attempt to bring in a money resolution.

Mr. Mandziuk: Mr. Chairman, on a point of privilege, the hon. gentleman apparently thinks he is in the other house where they cannot discuss money bills.

Mr. Chevrier: I should like to bring to your attention that the amendment, which reads as follows:

> —and this house asks that the government give consideration to making the payment of such additional pension to commence on this date—

—is out of order for the following reasons.

It is out of order first, because as has already been said on more than one occasion by some who have preceded me, it would require an additional expenditure and therefore would disturb the balance of ways and means. It is next out of order because, if such additional pension were to be paid and to commence on this date, it would clearly be in contravention of the normal rule in the house, with which surely hon. members on the opposite side are familiar, in that a private member cannot under any condition move an amendment which requires the expenditure of public funds. This is clearly set out in Beauschesne's fourth edition, page 214, citation 249 which reads:

> No cases can be found of any private member in the Canadian Commons receiving the authority of the crown, through a minister, to propose a motion involving the expenditure of public money. No principle is better understood than the constitutional obligation that rests upon the executive government, of alone initiating measures imposing charges upon the public exchequer.

One could go on to read the subsections of the citation, and I refer Your Honour to the third subsection, which I think has immediate application here, and which reads as follows:

> An amendment declaring that government action in any matter should be taken forthwith and giving a direct order which, if approved by the house, would compel the government to adopt measures involving an expenditure of public money, could not be moved by a private member.

It would seem, sir, that that is a complete answer to the amendment which has been moved on this occasion, and I do not need to go into the matter at great length because this is a rule which has always been respected in the house and does not require any further elaboration. For those reasons it seems to me that the amendment is clearly out of order.

(Translation):

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, you have to decide whether the proposed amendment introduced by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) is legal or not.

A while ago the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Favreau) mentioned two reasons that should enlighten you and, by way of consequence, result in the rejection of the motion introduced by the Leader of the Opposition.

First, he mentioned the constitutionality of the amendment, and when I asked him a question I did not get any answer, because that amendment has nothing to do with the constitution.

The proposed amendment may be related to the procedural rules of the house, and that is the only question which, in my opinion, should be considered at this time.

The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, and especially the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier), mentioned the illegality of the amendment and suggested that it would involve an expenditure of public funds. I respectfully submit that such is not the case because the object of the amendment introduced by the Leader of the Opposition is simply to invite the government to consider the opportunity to adopt subsequently a measure that would allow it to pay an additional amount of $10 a month. In my opinion, the adoption of this amendment would not require at once the expenditure of public funds, because, subsequently, it will be up to the government to introduce legislation in accordance with the amendment for the house to pass.

The simple fact of adopting the amendment does not mean to legalize it.

I am told that a measure requiring the expenditure of public funds can only be introduced by a minister of the crown. In order that that measure be enacted, the proposed resolution must be followed by legislation introduced by a minister of the crown.

The adoption of the amendment introduced by the Leader of the Opposition is, therefore, not out of order because it does not require an immediate expenditure. In fact, it is a matter of adopting an immediate principle which could subsequently involve the expenditure of funds, providing some legislation were introduced by a minister of the crown for that purpose.

(Text):

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Justice and other speakers on the government side have suggested that this amendment is out of order on the ground that it increases expenditures and that this is not within the competence of a private member of the house. I would suggest that we look at the last sentence of the resolution, which says that the expenditures under this plan shall be paid out of or reimbursed from contributions by employees, employers and self-empolyed persons. The minister herself indicated this afternoon that the $10 a month will be paid some time in advance of the actual collection of contributions. That means, therefore, that the money will be advanced and will be later reimbursed from the contributions. It may be that in the minister's mind there is a gap of only the period from January 1 to October 1; but there is nothing in this resolution that says that the one shall only be payable January 1 and the other on October 1. In other words, all it says here is that the $10 a month shall be either paid out of or reimbursed from contributions, and there is nothing in this resolution that sets a limit on how much this reimbursement shall be.

Moreover, the passage of this amendment would not be mandatory upon the government. This asks the government to give consideration to making the payment of such additional pension commence on this date. In other words, if this amendment were passed it would be a suggestion to the government that when they bring down the bill which will follow the passage of this resolution they should insert a clause in the bill, if they so choose, making the payment of the $10 a month effective upon the passage of the bill, or even retroactive to this date, of July 18. This is not mandatory; this is simply a suggestion to the government since the government itself has not placed any date in this resolution as to when the old age supplementary pension payment of $10 a month shall be paid out of or reimbursed from these contributions.

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order I would refer hon. members to page 216 of the fourth edition of Beauchesne, paragraph 4 of citation 250:

> The fundamental terms of a money resolution submitted to the house with the governor general's recommendation upon which a committee of the whole is set up cannot be amended. Amendments will only be in order if they fall within the terms of the resolution. The procedure in committee on those resolutions follows in principle the procedure of the committee of supply, and amendments are out of order if they are proposed with a view to substituting an alternative scheme to that proposed with the royal recommendation.

I would suggest that the fundamental basis of this pension plan is being changed from one of financial responsibility to one of financial irresponsibility by the amendment proposed. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has made it quite clear that this is a contributory scheme; that the $10 supplement being proposed will be refunded or made good out of contributions which can only start in the fall of 1964. If this $10 supplement is to be paid out of those contributions there must obviously be a starting date which is not so early or so far back as in effect to outrun the contemplated contributions.

It is the proposal of the government to institute the payment of the $10 supplement at a time which will match the contributions received. A scheme such as is proposed in this amendment would have the effect of unmatching the contributions and the payment and changing this contributory pension scheme from one of financial responsibility involving, in the long run, no subsidy or payment out of public funds, into one which is financially irresponsible and calls for the inevitable payment of money, in the long run, out of public funds. It therefore contravenes the citation I have mentioned, and I submit it is out of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to argue this point at any length but I just want to cover the points raised by the Minister of Justice and also the point just dealt with by the Minister of Defence Production. In the first place I say this does not disturb ways and means. I realize that no private member can require the expenditure of public moneys. I realize, too, that no direct order can be made to the government by a private member. Those were the three points raised by the Minister of Justice. None of these applies, because the wording of the amendment is, "this house asks that the government give consideration" to doing this. We are not disturbing ways and means; we are not providing for the expenditure of public moneys: that is always a matter for the crown. We are making no direct order.

The Minister of Defence Production quoted a citation to the effect that you could not substitute an alternative scheme. I am not asking that an alternative scheme be substituted. I am asking that the government give consideration to making the payment of such additional pension commence at this date. In other words, I ask the government, when it brings this legislation in, to give consideration to this particular matter, in no way directing them, in no way interfering with ways and means and in no way giving a direct order.

Some hon. Members: Question.

(Translation):

Mr. Caron: Mr. Chairman, whatever preamble the Prime Minister has included in his amendment, one thing is clear: he has or he has not introduced an amendment.

If he wants us to pay immediately, well, whatever the preamble, it is indicated that we must pay immediately, and that cannot be done because the whole legislation was prepared with that end in view. If, on the other hand, his amendment with all his preambles indicates that it is only a suggestion, well there is no amendment and you must reject his motion.

(Text):

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, it is quite obvious that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is either ignorant of the rules—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Monteith: Look who is speaking.

Mr. Byrne: —or he is attempting to mislead the house.

Mr. Pigeon: You expert.

Mr. Byrne: While it is true that a private member may introduce a resolution which may have the effect of advising the government to take into consideration the expenditure of certain moneys, the resolution we are discussing this evening is the preamble to a bill. We have often heard hon. members on the other side of the house say that what has appeared in a given resolution does not really appear in the bill; that the resolution does not go far enough and does not describe what we may expect in the ensuing bill. This is a resolution introduced by the government which has the effect of previewing the bill which will be presented to the house for consideration. If an amendment introduced by a private member to this resolution were to carry, then the government would unquestionably be, if not bound, certainly required to bring in a bill which would have the effect of producing a large expenditure not anticipated by the resolution.

Mr. Mandziuk: Rubbish.

Mr. Byrne: It may be true—I wish the hon. member for Marquette would contain himself for a few moments and listen to what I am saying.

Mr. Mandziuk: On a point of order, this was anticipated last April.

Mr. Byrne: Mr. Chairman, there cannot be a point of order on a point of order. If the hon. member would contain himself until I have finished my remarks, he can then take the floor. As I say, this would require the expenditure of money if it were introduced in a bill, and if the resolution this evening is carried would be required to be in the bill.

While it may be true, as suggested by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, that there will be a period of time under the proposed bill when the $10 increase will be paid before we begin to collect payments, at the same time it is up to the ministry to determine the amount of expenditure which can be budgeted for in a given fiscal year. I am sure, Mr. Chairman, on reflection, that you will unquestionably rule this amendment out of order.

Mr. Mandziuk: Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who just preceded me asked me to contain myself, and then he went on as if he were on the hustings in April.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Mandziuk: That is what he did, and I should be permitted to do likewise. He did not consider—

The Chairman: Order. It seems to me—

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Chairman: There is no question yet because no ruling has been rendered by the Chair. It seems to me from what I have heard of the last two arguments that they are not proper arguments. If any hon. member wants to be helpful to the Chair he should try and put forward a substantial argument.

Mr. Chevrier: If I may be allowed, I should like to say one word, and I will be brief, in answer to what the Leader of the Opposition has said. I think the Leader of the Opposition has admitted that a private member cannot introduce a matter of this kind—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, nothing of the kind.

Mr. Chevrier: Would the Leader of the Opposition allow me to complete my sentence.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No. That is false.

Mr. Chevrier: Now we have arrogance from the Leader of the Opposition. The Chair has allowed me to make an intervention, but the Leader of the Opposition will not allow me even to complete my sentence, and he is the one who complains bitterly about the treatment which he gets from this side of the house.

I should like to say now, Mr. Chairman, that the argument of the Leader of the Opposition boils down to this. If you were to take out of this amendment the words "give consideration to", then the amendment would be out of order. But because of the fact that the words "give consideration to" are contained in this amendment, it is in order. Otherwise, if I understand his admission aright, the amendment is out of order. I rose simply to say that the rules are quite clear, as I indicated before, namely that you cannot do indirectly what normally you could do directly.

Mr. Moreau: Mr. Chairman, on the point of order, surely this resolution clearly calls for an expenditure of tax money from a bill. The legislation with regard to this has not yet been passed. I think the minister in her remarks this afternoon clearly indicated that the payment, although advanced from the date of collection, the increase of $10, would be made after the bill has passed the house. With regard to the point of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam that there was an advance, in other words that there would be some borrowings against some future contributions, surely that was very clearly explained by the minister and would be after the legislation had passed. If we accepted the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition, we would be in the situation where, if we started making these payments and parliament at a later date refused to pass the resolution, we would be spending tax money.

The election material on which this amendment is supposedly based, Mr. Chairman, is clearly in our election promises. I have here the promises of the Liberal party in the general election, 1963, and they clearly indicate—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Moreau: —that we would not pay this increased $10 out of taxes.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Chairman, there are only two questions surely for the Chair to decide. First, can any amendment be moved to this resolution? I think it is quite clear that amendments can be moved, and I refer particularly to May's sixteenth edition, page 772. Speaking on procedure on resolutions on a money bill he says:

> Procedure in these committees follows in principle the procedure of other committees of the whole house, but with special rules confining amendments within the scope of the resolution to which the Queen's recommendation has been signified.

Having decided, Mr. Chairman, that an amendment can be moved we must then ask whether the adoption of this amendment would in fact create a charge on the public funds, and to that the answer is clearly no.

(Translation):

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Chairman, after having heard all that discussion on the legality or the illegality of this amendment, I think it must be recognized that there is much astuteness in this amendment since the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) is quibbling to achieve his political ends.

Could the Leader of the Opposition not introduce an amendment that would not commit the government to an expenditure of funds?

He is making a suggestion to the government through an amendment and indeed, it is quite usual that suggestions are made to a government through an amendment.

I think all hon. members are anxious to see the old age pension increased. But I do not think we should make a political football of it through an amendment which I think is illegal and not justified.

Suggestions are not made to a government through an amendment.

If the right hon. Leader of the Opposition wants the government to make an expenditure, let him say so and he will probably get general support. But if he wants to make a suggestion, let him make it but not by way of an amendment.

Mr. Drouin: Mr. Chairman, before the question is put, you must ask yourself whether or not this motion is in order. According to standing order 77, any public bill must be read twice in the house before it is referred to a committee or amended. We are now at the resolution stage which precedes the introduction of the bill. In other words, we have not yet come to second reading. If the motion were put to a vote and carried, the bill would be automatically amended. How could we allow that something should be done indirectly which is formally prohibited by standing orders?

Under the circumstances, I respectfully submit that the motion introduced by the Leader of the Opposition is absolutely out of order, that Your Honour must say so officially and reject the motion.

(Text):

The Chairman: Order. I am sure very few hon. members will envy the position in which the Chair finds itself at this point. I might say, to be honest, that I was prepared to render a ruling an hour ago after I had heard the original argument, but so many different facets of this important amendment have been submitted to me that I am wondering whether it will be at all wise to rule on the proposed amendment at this time. I feel it might be conducive to proper order in the committee if the Chair were allowed to ponder and study the many arguments which have been submitted this evening. Naturally, the debate could continue until we have an opportunity to consider the matter further. There are a number of speakers who wish to address the committee on the resolution and in the meantime the Chair would have an opportunity to consider the arguments which have been raised and would then be in a much better position to render a decision which would be fair to the committee. That is the submission I should like to make to the committee at this time.

If that is agreeable I would ask the hon. member for Labelle to speak.

(Translation):

Mr. Girouard: Mr. Chairman, when I was interrupted, I was congratulating the leader of our party for having given a backbencher from Quebec the opportunity to express his views on the measure now under consideration.

Faithful to tradition, our leader has not taken advantage of a great opportunity to follow the example given us today by the party in power and the Leader of the Opposition and to put the matter of transferable pensions on—

(Text):

The Chairman: There is a great deal of conversation going on in the chamber which makes it difficult for the hon. member for Labelle to be heard. I ask the co-operation of hon. members in this respect.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member for Labelle, but a moment ago, Mr. Chairman, you stated you wished to withhold judgment in connection with the matter which has been placed before you. With respect, I suggest that if you intend to give your ruling you should give it now. Your Honour said you were ready to do so. The Secretary of State came in—and I am not going to say any more about that.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would simply point this out: this is the last occasion on which we have an opportunity of discussing this matter and placing our views before the house on this amendment before the meeting of the dominion-provincial conference.

Mr. Pickersgill: I rise on a point of order.

The Chairman: I believe the Leader of the Opposition is already speaking on the point of order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I simply asked whether Your Honour intends to give a decision tonight. I do not know what the Secretary of State is exercising himself about.

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order.

The Chairman: Can we have some order in the chamber? I believe the Leader of the Opposition is speaking on a point of order. Perhaps he could be heard out and we could then hear from the Secretary of State, if he wishes to speak himself on the point of order.

[The Chairman.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am simply asking Your Honour if you did not feel, whatever the circumstances, that you could give your ruling now so that we may know the position of affairs. We would then be able to take whatever further steps might be necessary. I say this with the greatest of deference.

Mr. Pickersgill: Your Honour asked the committee for a courtesy which I have never known to be refused by any committee before in my experience, and I would be much surprised if there were ever an occasion on which it had not been extended. Your Honour then recognized the hon. member for Labelle, who had the floor. Next, Your Honour drew attention to the fact that there was a great deal of noise in the committee and that the hon. gentleman could not be heard, and you suggested that as a courtesy he should be heard. Whereupon, the right hon. gentleman, who had no right whatever to take the floor intervened.

An hon. Member: What right have you?

Mr. Pickersgill: Notwithstanding the fact that the hon. member for Labelle had the floor, the right hon. gentleman did not raise a point of order in the normal and proper fashion. He simply sought to interfere with the regular proceedings of the committee. I suggest that the hon. member for Labelle has the floor and that no hon. member has any right to interrupt him without his permission.

The Chairman: On the point which was raised by the Leader of the Opposition, the courtesy which I had requested was that I might be given an opportunity to study the record and consider the authority. What I had hoped, of course, was that I would be given the opportunity to do this after hours. That is what I was suggesting.

Mr. Nugent: On the point of order raised by the Leader of the Opposition, as one who might be taking part in this debate tonight may I point out it would be helpful to know if we were speaking to the amendment or to the resolution. It might make a considerable difference in what was said. If we were speaking to the amendment we would have an opportunity to speak later on the resolution. I should also like to know, when another hon. member is speaking, whether he is speaking to the amendment or to the resolution. I can understand the Chair wanting extra time to consider this question, but after listening to the contributions made by some hon. members on the original point of order I do not think they added anything to the arguments which had already been made. The point was a very simple one.

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Chairman: Order. I do not believe the hon. member is speaking, now, to the point made by the Leader of the Opposition. The position of the Chair is clear enough. Certainly, if the amendment were in order we would be discussing the amendment. That is the whole point. What I should like the committee to do is to allow the Chair to suspend its decision, and the discussion, which would continue, would be a discussion on the resolution. That is why I have recognized the hon. member for Labelle.

Mr. Nugent: Perhaps I could say this, Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Chairman: Order. I think I have heard the hon. member out. If he would look at standing order 50 he would see that it states:

> Whenever Mr. Speaker is of opinion that a motion offered to the house is contrary to the rules and privileges of parliament, he shall apprise the house thereof immediately, before putting the question thereon—

In other words, the decision has to be rendered before putting the question; but with the co-operation of the house I submit there is no necessity to put the question immediately.

Mr. Nugent: With the co-operation of the house.

The Chairman: That is what I say.

Mr. Nugent: The question of privilege I raised was that when Your Honour asked hon. members if they would concede that you should have time to think it over some said no and some said yes.

The Chairman: That was not the way I interpreted the opinion of the house after I had made the submission. It seemed to me that there appeared to be consent and agreement with the proposition I was making to the chamber. The point was really completed when I asked the hon. member for Labelle to address the committee. He has already started to make his speech and I would ask him to continue.

(Translation):

Mr. Girouard: Mr. Chairman, I hope to be able to conclude my remarks this time. But this gives me an opportunity to emphasize once again that my leader, in asking me to speak in his place, refused an opportunity to make political capital to the detriment of our old people, as did the government party and the Conservatives.

On the other hand, I think that the Minister of Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) placed herself in an unfavourable position by forgetting that she was in the house today and not on the hustings.

As for the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), he made it a point to refer to the forties.

As usual, we heard today the government party saying: we are introducing legislation that the former party did not want to submit. We heard the former government saying: What you are proposing now, we worked it out.

Mr. Chairman, since they want to quote historical facts and statistics, what about the Social Crediters who, in 1930, requested an increase of old age pensions and family allowances? And our opponents said then that it was a utopia and that our heads were in the clouds. But today the two old line parties want to take credit for those measures and suggest that they were achieved by them.

If we really want to do some good, I feel it is time, since all parties request that measure, that we forego politics and give our senior citizens the protection they need.

However, the Minister of National Health and Welfare has gone a little farther today. She told us: the opposition party has been working for two years to give you something, and it got nowhere. But, with my government, within three months I will submit a plan.

Mr. Chairman, I am now convinced that what is submitted to us at this time is the result of three months' work only. And I am truly afraid that what happened with regard to the budget will repeat itself with this measure.

It is not enough for the party in power to say to the Canadian electors: we are giving you a plan, three cheers for us. I believe that when our fellow citizens have studied the pension plan, they will not cheer so loudly.

The farmer will say: What about me? What will happen to me? Did I not contribute also to the growth of my country?

At the same time, the fishermen will say once again that he is the sucker, because he is not given anything under this plan.

And the small store owner will think: "And I, what is happening to me? There is no mention about me in this pension plan."

And what about the service station owners, and so on—

It might happen too that the rich stockholder in the stock exchange wonders why he is not included in that pension plan? But in his case, I am less worried because representations will be made in due course and because this class of people will know perfectly how to adjust to the new plan introduced by the government.

To all the small people whom I mentioned, the Minister of Health and Welfare might just say: "Applaud, we have fulfilled an electoral promise."

In view of such pusillanimity, not to say cynicism, I wonder where we are going.

But once more, tonight, we of the Social Credit party, must congratulate the government because, despite all its blunders, at least, it is doing something, and is not content, like a certain other party which has been turned out of office, to waste two hours of the time of the house and keep us from attending to the nation's business.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, even if we think that the increase from $65 to $75 is still inadequate, and that the social security legislation is also inadequate, we must give the people a chance to try and make the best of what is offered by the government. Our elder citizens need government protection and, today, we are happy to see that a movement is taking shape throughout the country, because the hon. members who have visited their ridings lately have no doubt noticed that almost 75 per cent of our elder citizens now depend only on their old age pension to live on to the end of their days. So at this time, we must commend the government although we hoped they would go further in their projects.

When I suggest that the government should go further, I think that family allowances must soon be considered. And since reference is made to the federal-provincial conference, I think it is high time to think about the situation of our old people, who are in need, because it is painful to see 65-year old persons forced to sell their homes in order to qualify for old age assistance. I think the government should really bring legislation forward to deal with this matter as soon as possible.

I also wish to remind the government that it is high time something was done to help needy mothers, and also the blind and the disabled. It can count on our entire support for any measure of that kind.

Not only is the government increasing the old age pension, it also proposes introducing a portable pension plan. It is not easy of course to discuss, to criticize, to approve a bill, or even to make suggestions about it when we know nothing of its provisions. However, it may not be useless to point out, once more, that Social Credit has always stood for progress in that direction.

Since the minister has invited suggestions, when the time comes to debate the resolution, the government might even consider allowing people of 60 or more to benefit from this welfare measure.

I understand that, in certain industries that have a contributory pension plan, employees are entitled to their pensions as soon as they reach age 60. They can thus retire earlier, thereby making jobs available for young workers who are now unemployed. I know that many of our senior citizens would gladly retire at 60 if they could count on an adequate pension plan to provide for their needs from then on.

Mr. Chairman, there were several pension plans in private industry before this, but I believe that a uniform scheme throughout Canada would be of much greater interest. And why would it be so? Because first of all, it would enable a lowering of such insurance cost to a considerable degree and also give the individual the possibility of recovering his freedom, because we know that pension plans are a stumbling block for many people. I know, for instance, that many civil servants will say: "I might have a good job in private enterprise, but I cannot accept it, because, in five or ten years from now, I shall have my pension."

The same thing is said in private industry. In such a case, the worker is bound and cannot leave his job for a better paid one because he knows that he must remain where he is if he wants to benefit from his pension plan. We shall most certainly have suggestions to make about the provisions of this legislation when we are in possession of the bill.

We shall also have recommendations to make about the financing of the measure. The Social Credit party would undoubtedly have been able to suggest alternative means of financing which would have cost a lot less to the Canadian taxpayer. Finally, I hope to have an opportunity at that future time to answer the stock question of the Leader of the Opposition who just a few days ago again asked our leader "Where will you find that money?"

I hope, Mr. Chairman, to be in a position to take 20 minutes before long to explain in the clearest, simplest and most precise terms where a Social Credit government would find the money to finance social legislation.

If we consider what we are offered today—the budget incident proved it—the only benefits that are offered our people today are given to them only after an extra third is to be paid by them in administration costs. The administration cost of the budget is today exactly the third of the budget amount. So, I believe that the occasion will be given to me to answer the Leader of the Opposition—and I shall not then prevent the other hon. members from listening to me carefully—because be it today, in five years or in ten years, I am sure that the house will ponder over that, as the capitalistic system we have today will, sooner or later, have to resort to a measure advocated by the Social Credit party if it wants to maintain individual enterprise and individual liberty.

What is surprising, Mr. Chairman, is that the two governments which succeeded one another in this house have in turn advocated measures which the Social Credit party has had for years while neither one nor the other dared—I say "dared"—launch the smallest experiment with the financial suggestions offered by my party.

Another feature of the contributory pension plan on which I must expand here is the one concerning its constitutional or unconstitutional character. I already see my hon. friends getting impatient and saying to themselves: Those Quebec demands again. It will come, Mr. Chairman, but not for the moment, because first of all, I wish to consider the matter as a federal member only, that is as a legislator of the country from sea to sea and then, I will be pleased to express the views of my province.

Some will say that any discussion at this stage is difficult because the Prime Minister has convened a federal-provincial conference on the matter. I do not quite agree, because I think this is the time to express our views to the Prime Minister if we want him to channel the discussion in that direction during the federal-provincial conference.

From the point of view of all provinces, the question that seems to arise is this: Why lose the opportunity of having at our disposal millions of dollars we urgently need for our own purposes? And that is, Mr. Chairman, the objection raised by Quebec. It could also come from Ontario, New Brunswick or any other province, because I am of the opinion that our provinces really need additional funds for their own undertakings today. One province might be able to do without them, because I notice that in Alberta they have found a government that did not wait for the contributory plan to balance its budget.

Well, Mr. Chairman, to mention but one of the Quebec demands, here is according to Le Devoir, what Mr. Gérin-Lajoie said:

> A universal pension fund would facilitate the establishment of a school credit board.
> A pension plan under provincial control would put into the hands of the provincial government a sum of at least $250 million per year. Such an amount would facilitate investment operations not only for the provincial government but also for the institutions that rely on financial help from the province for their investments, such as school boards, municipalities, classical colleges and universities.

That is an example from Quebec. It could have come from Ontario or somewhere else.

Mr. Chairman, that is only an example to show how useful it could be for the provinces to have the control of the funds that would accumulate under the present act in the years to come.

The government will be able to listen favourably to that statement of principle, which has nothing to do with the constitutionality of the project, although it is not yet sure the provinces will approve it. But it seems that if the provinces manage their contributory pension funds themselves, they could come to a difficult but possible agreement, since portable pensions may result in difficulties, because of salary differences and various operations in the provinces.

That is the reason why I do not think the province of Quebec should take a different stand from that of the other provinces. It has only to put forward its claims and it is possible that they will be listened to carefully.

But, Mr. Chairman, I think that at the present time, the Quebec problem has not only to do with the claiming of this source of income. The program raises mostly a constitutional problem. The question is very serious for the province at this time.

Has the federal government the authority to legislate in that field? Many will be tempted to say yes since, after all, Ottawa already has legislation concerning old age pensions and unemployment insurance and since the proposed scheme is nothing but an extension of that social and labour legislation.

However, outraged citizens of Quebec will say in reply to that statement made in good faith: "If, one day, I had the stupidity to give you my tie, it does not mean that you now have the right to take my shirt away from me".

That is somewhat the position of the province of Quebec and that is the point which should be discussed. The provincial government sorely regrets having given away its legislative and taxation powers in the past. In a fit of nostalgia, it promptly rebels against any further encroachment by the federal government.

But that makes the other provinces impatient; they can hardly understand how one province can oppose legislation which seems acceptable to all of them.

I would like to make it clear to all hon. members that the province of Quebec is not really responsible for this situation. Once, it was given certain rights like all other provinces, and the province of Quebec wants to keep these responsibilities which are clearly established in the British North America Act.

Municipalities come under the jurisdiction of the provinces. Consequently, the Municipal Loans and Development Act is ultra vires. The province of Quebec is against it and who, in this house, can blame it.

I think that the civil rights come under provincial jurisdiction. But, by its portable pension plan, the federal government wants to pass legislation in that connection and Quebec is against that. Which member here could blame our province? No one, Mr. Chairman. If there are any, they will say it is inconceivable that one province should stand in the way of a stronger confederation.

I agree that Canada should be strong and that to be strong it must remain united.

It seems unfair that the province of Quebec should prevent nine other provinces from enjoying the development taking place throughout Canada, as it also seems unfair that nine provinces could object to the just claims of a province that is an equal partner within this same confederation.

There is a solution, Mr. Chairman. It is imperative while there is still time, that Canada, the provinces, the hon. members of the house, recognize merely the fact that the province of Quebec is simply not a province like the others. The province of Quebec is not asking more than the others, but it only wishes to preserve the rights that were granted to it by the British North America Act. This is not a privilege, Mr. Chairman, it is a right.

During the last election campaign, there was great hope in the province of Quebec. Mention was made of equality, of biculturalism, of bilingualism, of all kinds of words starting with bi- and a few weeks after the opening of this parliament, we heard the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne) state in high-sounding terms: "We shall be the fathers of a new confederation". Strange father of a strange confederation who, within two months, begot three children who are totally unacceptable to the province of Quebec.

Besides, it is a strange confederation, especially when the Prime Minister should have to decide, with his back to the wall, that the legislation will be considered at a federal-provincial conference. Those measures, so to speak, are the three children unacceptable to the province of Quebec. You know which ones I mean, but I shall name them: the plan to assist municipalities, the portable pensions scheme and the program of assistance to universities.

After that, people are surprised to see that the province of Quebec is so hard to please. During election campaigns, it is shamelessly misled; not only its rights are recognized, but some others are acknowledged that it does not even possess, for instance, the right to establish full bilingualism throughout the country. That is an achievement which every French Canadian, in his heart of hearts desires, but which is not based on any constitutional text. Instead of promising things to which Quebec has no right, let it rather get its due.

The President of the Privy Council (Mr. Lamontagne), the new father of a new confederation, spoke in Quebec of giving French Canadians additional rights. And, as soon as he takes over, he rushes into a field which is dear to French Canadians. True to his former attitude, he advocates centralization and just keeps silent or goes out when things get too hot.

The solution, Mr. Chairman, as I said and repeat today, is simply to recognize that Quebec is not a province like all others.

Quebec never refused to pay taxes to the federal government, even when they were as hateful as the one on building materials. The province of Quebec was never opposed to any federal legislation, whatever it might have been, whether in the educational or any other field. Yet, it always said: "Give us an equal amount when you invade a field under provincial jurisdiction."

It is as simple as that, Mr. Chairman, a little comprehension, a little understanding on the part of the other provinces, and everything will be all right.

Indeed, Mr. Chairman, I wonder why it is always the opposition which should stand up for Quebec's rights.

To my mind it would be easy for the 40 or 50 members from the province of Quebec, who are sitting on government benches, to make suggestions to the government, when such questions are raised.

Allow me now to quote an article of Jean Marc Leger which appeared in Le Devoir and which reads as follows:

And Our Members of Parliament

In the various Quebec-Ottawa disputes which stem in fact from a single conflict, what is going to be the position of our French Canadian members in the house? Their task will surely not be easy, but the moment of truth is nearing when they will have to choose between party and country. It is not sufficient to try lobbying, to have compromise solutions accepted, more often a graceful form of surrender. They will be judged by their stand, their speeches, their vote on important issues.

Mr. Chairman, I conclude these few comments by assuring the house that they have been made in the best possible spirit.

I truly hope that, during the federal-provincial conference, it will be possible to find a satisfactory means of respecting Quebec's demands without jeopardizing a piece of legislation which the other provinces wish with all their hearts.

Let us find a scheme under which one or two provinces could join the plan by means of an agreement while the others would have a similar program of their own and then all Canadians would benefit from legislation which, without being perfect, would none the less improve social conditions.

Then the Minister of National Health and Welfare will be able to say that she has given Canada an old age pension plan and our fellow citizens will be able to rejoice because, as I said, it will be a great improvement over the last five years. And this will be in the best interests of French Canadians.

(Text):

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, the resolution before the committee precedes a piece of legislation which is probably as important a proposal as any we have before the House of Commons at this session. Some of the things that I shall say will be critical of certain aspects of the proposal, and there are certain other negative things I may find it necessary to say, but at the outset I want to indicate that I feel we should recognize that in this proposed legislation we are moving into a new phase of social security in Canada, and it is a very important phase.

I believe there are many things in the proposed legislation that have been worked out very well. I not only listened to the speech made this afternoon by the minister but I have carefully read the paper that she tabled. I join with her in commending those in the public service who have done the job of putting this piece of legislation together.

I also want to say that in my view the legislation comes within the terms of our constitution. It is provided for quite clearly in section 94A of the British North America Act, which was put into our constitution in 1951. In saying that, however, I am not ignoring the very effective speech that has just been made by the hon. member for Labelle.

To comment at any length on what he said would be to digress from what I want to say about the legislation that is before us, but I do share the view he expressed that we have got to find a way to respect on the one hand the things that are near and dear to the hearts of the people of Quebec, and to respect on the other hand the things that are near and dear to the hearts of the people of the other nine provinces.

I agree with him that it would not be proper for one province to deny to the people of the other nine the benefits of federalism that they want. By the same token, those of the other nine must not deny to the people of that one special province of Quebec the rights that are near and dear to them.

I hope the day will come when, instead of our making many speeches of the after-dinner type about the unity we have in this country, we will get down to the problem and deal with it, and that we will even grapple with the necessity of rewriting our constitution to protect, in our time, the rights that are so precious to the two main groups in this country. We can do it and I hope the day we get to the job will come soon.

Nevertheless, so far as this piece of legislation is concerned I submit that it does come, as I have already said, within the provisions of section 94A of the British North America Act, and in my view there is no doubt about its constitutionality.

I have deliberately made these opening remarks of as positive a character as I could, because I wanted to speak in that vein for a bit before I said something else that I feel must be said. I regret as deeply as I possibly can that the Minister of National Health and Welfare chose to introduce in her speech on this important piece of legislation the terrible partisan note that she imported into that speech. If she and those on her side do not like what happened tonight when the Leader of the Opposition returned in kind, she has only herself to blame.

I suggest it is time that the ministers of this new government, like the Minister of Finance and the Minister of National Health and Welfare, got over this bad taste they have shown by importing so much partisanship into the presentation of important items.

The Minister of Finance did it when he presented the budget. The Minister of National Health and Welfare did it this afternoon when she presented this piece of legislation, which is important not just to the Liberal party, not just to the various parties in the House of Commons, but important to all the people of Canada. I hope we will deal with it on that basis, and I hope during the course of my remarks to do something that has not been done for quite a while since this debate got started, and that is to say something about the proposals that have been placed before us.

There is one other comment that I must make. I regret very much that the Minister of National Health and Welfare saw fit to say several times this afternoon that the time when this legislation would come into effect, the time when the $10 increase to those who receive payments under the Old Age Security Act could start, the time when all the rest of it would become effective would depend upon how quickly parliament dealt with the legislation. Mr. Chairman, that borders close to something which would call for my using a word that is not parliamentary. We were told categorically by the Secretary of State, when he announced the business of the house the other night, that this day is all we are getting before the summer recess to debate this legislation. He made it crystal clear that it is not to be proceeded with any further; that all that is happening is that today the details of the legislation as presented by the minister are being exposed—that was quite a word—to the Canadian people.

This means that the plan is that we have this day's debate, then it is adjourned, and there it rests. At least, that is the plan thus far; but I am now going to make a very strong appeal to the Secretary of State that this plan be changed. It must be changed for two reasons. The first is that the Minister of National Health and Welfare, and the Prime Minister too, because he has said this sort of thing on motions or on orders of the day, cannot get away with this idea that this legislation is being delayed, that its effective dates are being delayed because parliament is not prepared to deal with it. We are prepared to deal with it. We are prepared to debate it tomorrow, and I say, as one who has to negotiate between this party and the government and between this party and the other parties, that I am prepared to ask my friends in this party to sit on Saturday and sit a week from Saturday and to give all the extra time that is necessary for this resolution to be debated and passed and for the bill to be brought in. If the government is not prepared to accept that offer, let not the Minister of National Health and Welfare, nor the Prime Minister, say that the delay is because of the difficulty of getting the matter through parliament. Parliament is ready to deal with this legislation and I am sure, when I say that, that I can speak for hon. members in all four parties in this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: We want it dealt with; we do not want it delayed. But, Mr. Chairman, there is now another reason why the business of the house must be changed, why this debate must not simply be adjourned tonight and then left over until the fall. This is because of the ruling that has been reserved by the chairman. I say quite frankly that I think the chairman had every right to ask the courtesy of the house for time to consider that ruling, and he was quite honest with us in saying that he wanted time after hours; in other words, he indicated that he would not give a ruling tonight. But do you see what that means, Mr. Chairman? It means we will not get a ruling on this amendment until October. What kind of a place is this, to suggest that an important issue such as whether or not the $10 a month should be applied immediately shall be delayed simply because of the difficulty of making a ruling?

As I say, the chairman had every right to make that request, but I think the obligation now rests upon the Secretary of State, as leader of the house, to arrange for further days in this part of the session to debate this legislation. In fact, I think it should be debated tomorrow; it should be debated on whatever days are necessary next week, so that the ruling can be given by the Chair. I recognize that it is a difficult question. The procedural point was so difficult that I did not even take part in the discussion on the point of order, and that is unusual in this house. I admit it is difficult; but what is more important than a difficulty of that kind is getting this question settled as to whether or not the house wants the government to consider bringing in this $10 increase right away.

If the Secretary of State, as the leader of the house, does not arrange for further debate on this issue we can only assume that the government simply does not want this matter really brought out in the open; all it wanted was a chance for the Minister of National Health and Welfare to make her statement, so that we might have on Hansard the material she gave in her speech and in her white paper; but it does not want to let us see the bill; it does not want to really get moving at this time. Perhaps the government has a good reason.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. gentleman would permit me to ask him a question. Has the hon. gentleman not read the letter which the Prime Minister addressed to the premiers of the provinces, and is not the hon. gentleman also aware of the fact that when this business was arranged I was perfectly frank with him and with the house; that the reason this matter was being called at this date was so the house would be informed of the details of the government's proposals, so the country would be informed of them and so they would be before the provincial premiers. Until that conference, which has been called, meets so that certain ancillary features which the government wishes to have in the legislation can be considered, it would really be, surely the hon. gentleman would admit, quite a grave discourtesy to the premiers and quite wrong to proceed.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am quite prepared to assure the hon. gentleman right now that I will ask my colleagues to consider the possibility of bringing this matter before the house again as soon as the provincial premiers have had their meeting.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I am always glad to accept questions from the Secretary of State. There must be something in our both being from Winnipeg, because his question was right in the middle of a sentence in which I was about to deal with this very point. I was about to say that the government may have good reason for delaying the legislation. But if it has, tell us what it is; do not let the Minister of National Health and Welfare rise and tell us that the reason there will be some delay is because of the time parliament takes. The Secretary of State asks me whether I recall the letter the Prime Minister sent to the premiers of the provinces. Of course I do; I read that letter very carefully. That letter was sent to the premiers of the provinces after the notice of this motion had appeared on the order paper. That letter indicated that the intention was to have this legislation proceed to the point of first reading of the bill so that the bill could be presented to the premiers when they met to discuss the whole matter.

It was said in the letter quite clearly that what was proposed for discussion with the premiers was other areas of social welfare. There was no suggestion that this legislation was to be submitted to the premiers for their approval, their veto or what have you. But I was concerned—I have been here a bit—and therefore on Wednesday, June 26, which I think was a day or two after the Prime Minister had tabled his letter to the premiers, I asked him this question:

> Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Does the invitation of the federal government to the provinces to join in discussions on pension matters contained in a letter to the provinces which the Prime Minister tabled and had placed on Hansard yesterday, imply that the introduction of legislation regarding a Canada pension plan is to be delayed until after these discussions have taken place?

The Prime Minister's reply was:

> No, Mr. Speaker, that is not an implication that need be drawn from the letter.

My question indicated my suspicion that the writing of that letter would result in this kind of delay, but the Prime Minister said there was no such implication to be drawn from the letter. Well, if the government has changed its mind, and I do not think it should have, I think—

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. gentleman does not want to misrepresent the situation, and neither do I. He referred to the first letter; I referred to the recent letter calling the conference. I think my remarks were quite plain. There is no question that when the Prime Minister gave the answer to the hon. gentleman, that was the intention of the government. But when the government decided last week to ask the premiers to meet before the end of July, it was indicated, it seems to me, quite clearly in this very house that this discussion with the premiers, which was not contemplated for July at the time of the earlier letter, would take place before any further stage of this legislation was proposed to the house. I repeat again to the hon. gentleman that I am prepared to ask my colleagues to give consideration to bringing this matter back before the house as soon as the conference with the premiers is over, if that is the wish of hon. members.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I hope that the Secretary of State will not only take up with his colleagues the question of bringing the legislation back to the house after the premiers have met, but that there will be at least one further day provided so that the chairman can rule on the amendment proposed tonight. To leave that amendment over for two weeks, let alone the possibility of leaving it over until fall, I submit is not only unfair to the house but is unfair to the people of the country.

I realize that the main subject before us is the introduction of a new scheme for provision of old age security and that we should not get lost in the immediate matter of the $10 increase. But I think it is quite an accurate reflection of how the people of the country feel that the house has been in a bit of a turmoil tonight over this very question. My mail indicates that our older people across the country are assuming from the announcement about this legislation that their $65 cheques will go up to $75 almost any month now; yet we have been told today by the Minister of National Health and Welfare that the best that can be hoped for is that the $10 increase will take place some time early in 1964. I submit that that is not good enough in the light of all the promises made by the party now in power during the recent election campaign. While I admit that the performance tonight was a little lacking in decorum, and was perhaps not parliament at its best in terms of procedure, I suggest that it was a reflection of the strong feeling in the country that something should be done about this matter. It is not a case of how the chairman rules on the amendment or how the committee or the house might vote on the issue. We as private members put it to the government that they have to find a way to divide the question into its two parts and get this $10 increase through to our old age pensioners at the earliest possible date.

I said at the outset that this proposed legislation marks, in my view, the entry of this country into a new and extremely important phase of the whole question of old age security. I have down in my notes three one-word headings describing the history of old age pensions in Canada as I see it. I take a certain amount of personal interest in the fact that I think the effective history of old age security in Canada actually began on the day I was born. It just so happens that on June 18, 1908—most hon. members will remember a more recent June 18—the House of Commons gave second reading to and debated in committee the Government Annuities Act, which was the first piece of legislation providing anything in the way of old age security for the people of this country. That is an interesting debate to read. The proposal was for an annuity of a maximum of $50 a month. There were the usual arguments about the danger of this interfering with private business and the danger of its doing something about the initiative of the people, and so on. Concern was expressed about the cost. The minister piloting the bill tried to allay the fears of hon. members of that day by saying that it would cost the government only $50,000 a year. However, it got started. But what got started then was the recognition of the fact that something needed to be done by government to assist people in their old age. That phase—I call it recognition of the need—took a long while. It started in 1908, though there had been agitation even before that.

Some years later, in 1926, the Old Age Pensions Act was passed, which provided a pension of $20 a month payable at age 70 on a means test. Then as hon. members know, through a number of years efforts were made to get the pension increased, and finally it got up to $40 a month. But that phase, which lasted roughly from 1908 down to about 1950, was merely a phase in which we recognized that government had to do something about the needs of our older citizens.

Then in 1950 we moved into the second phase. That second phase I characterize with the word "universality". If there is one thing to be said about the report of the old age security committee of 1950 and the legislation which came out of the recommendations of that committee, it is the acceptance of the principle that in old age there should be something for everybody in the country, without any means test. As I say, it took us many years to reach that point; but we did reach it in 1950 or 1951, when the legislation was passed, becoming effective in 1952, and we established the fact that pensions for senior citizens should be on a universal basis, that everybody should have a pension when he reaches a certain age. That was a tremendous step forward from the earliest phase, which was merely recognition of the need.

We have now come to the point where we realize that a further phase must be moved into, and that is the phase where we provide adequacy. The reason I welcome the legislation now before us is because I think it is a step—a halting step but nevertheless a step—in the right direction toward putting old age pensions on a basis of adequacy, of providing sufficient for a decent retirement.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: My hon. friends across the way should not applaud too loudly, because all I am saying is that it is a good step. It does not provide adequacy; it only starts that direction and there is still a long way to go. If we are going to have a pensions scheme in Canada that provides adequate pensions for old age, there are a few things we have to face up to. First of all, I think we have to recognize the basic principle, the philosophy if you will, that older people who have finished their time of work are entitled not just to be kept alive by $20 a month, or $65 a month, or $75 a month, but to a standard of living equal to that which society is able to provide at the time of their retirement by those who are still working. I do not know why we settled so long for the silly notion that it was good enough for old people just to keep them alive. People who have done their share of producing the nation's wealth or developing the nation's economy are entitled in their retirement years to a standard of living equal to that which they themselves have helped to build up. Let us not go for this argument which sometimes appears in the editorials of some of our newspapers which is directed against the extravagance of old age pensions and the political auctioneering which is going on, and all the rest of it. What these arguments fail to recognize is that it is a sound philosophical principle, a sound principle of human life that we are trying to accept, when we say that we must move into an era so far as old age pensions are concerned when we can provide an adequate living standard.

The next thing we must recognize if we are going to do anything toward providing an adequate coverage is that it cannot be done by reliance upon private pension plans. I could expand on this but perhaps I can do no better than to quote a few sentences from Dr. Robert Clark, who wrote a monumental work a few years ago on old age security in the United States and Canada.

In paragraph 1504 of his report he says this:

> The mere fact that so many hundreds of thousands of employees are now members of pension plans does not ensure that any given proportion of those who reach pensionable age will ever receive a pension.

In another paper the same Dr. Clark had this to say:

> From the general viewpoint of the public interest that as many as possible of the aged should have an adequate income, and not merely a subsistence income, employee pension plans have two disadvantages, apart from the limitations of coverage referred to earlier. Under the majority of pension plans in Canada, when an employee leaves his employer prior to retirement he does not get any benefit from his employer's pension plan unless he has been with the employer for 10 years or more. Employees who change jobs many times in the course of their lives may work for a succession of employers with good pension plans, yet reach retirement with only a meagre pension to supplement their Old Age Security. Likewise undesirable from the above-mentioned viewpoint is the fact that the vast majority of employees covered by pension plans, confronted when they leave their employer with the choice of cash or a deferred annuity, take cash. As a consequence of these factors, to an extent which it is impossible to determine, most employee pension plans restrict the mobility of labour. Although the point is readily exaggerated, most pension plans also give employers an incentive to discriminate in hiring personnel against persons over age 40. These disadvantages are likely to be more serious in non-contributory pension plans.

Yet despite the fact that authorities such as Dr. Clark have expressed such views as this—and Dr. Clark is not alone; we have a good many professors in this field in Canada who are speaking and writing most effectively on this subject—the Minister of National Health and Welfare in the paper she presented this afternoon says:

> The Canada pension plan is not intended to be comprehensive in any other sense—

The reference back is to the intention that it should cover everybody.

> It is not designed to provide all the retirement income which many Canadians wish to have. This is a matter of individual choice and, in the government's view, should properly be left to personal savings and to private pension plans—

Our whole point is that Dr. Clark is right. When you leave pension plans to private auspices they will not provide adequate coverage. We shall not move into the phase of adequacy if we leave this to private plans. We must enlarge tremendously the role of the public sector in the whole business. The Minister of National Health and Welfare was completely frank about it in her paper. In another place, where she talks about funding versus pay as you go, she says:

> The absence of large reserves means that there will not be large transfers of funds from the private sector to the public sector.

Our contention is that we shall not move into this phase of development unless we accept a much greater measure of government responsibility than is envisaged in this plan. In this connection, I suggest that the people of Canada, about the third day after they have read of today's statement by the minister, will wake up to its inadequacies. Figures have been thrown at us today about possible pensions—a man and his wife would get $175 a month, both, perhaps, if both were contributing. This is made up of $100 under the Canada pension plan and $75 under old age security provisions. But this would be possible only in the case of persons whose income was $4,000 or more.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I apologize for interrupting the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired.

Some hon. Members: Carry on.

The Deputy Chairman: Is it unanimously agreed that the hon. member may continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles: I thank the committee for its courtesy. Let me point out what will happen under the terms of this plan as it develops. The minister has made it clear that registration will not begin until May, 1964. Payments into the plan will not begin until October, 1964. Then, the white paper makes it clear that the first year in which any benefits can be drawn from the plan will be 1966, and in 1966 a person whose income has been $4,000 and who has been contributing can get a pension under the plan amounting to $10 a month if he retires in that year at the age of 70. If he retires in 1967 he can get $20 a month. It adds up to this: not until 1975 will it be possible under this plan for a person to get a pension of $100 plus the $75 under the Old Age Security Act.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare, after her little partisan and political introduction was over, said: let us not play politics with this whole question. Yet she has laid before us a plan which even under its present terms will not be fully effective for 12 years. During that time we shall have three, or possibly four federal elections—more, if we continue at the recent rate. Does the hon. lady suggest that we can get through all that period of time without having political arguments about this measure? I think it is nonsense to deprecate political discussion of this issue. What I think is wrong, though, is the kind of thing which happened today—the government giving the impression that it is going to pay $10 immediately, whereas it will not be paid until next year, and $175 in the near future when in actual fact that amount of money will not be available as a pension until 1975, and even then only to those whose income had been $4,000 a year.

All this underlines my point. I welcome the fact that we have made an initial, halting step in phase three. We have begun to develop a scheme whereby we could provide adequate pensions. The real goal, however, is years away and will remain many years away unless the government can get over this notion that, somehow, the greater part of our providing for old age must be left to private plans, insurance companies and so on.

I could hardly contain myself this afternoon, or tonight, when the Leader of the Opposition claimed that this plan would draw off all kinds of funds and take away the function of providing pensions from private plans, insurance companies and the like. That is precisely what it does not do. It provides a scheme under which people who are employees will pay 1 per cent of their wages into the plan. People are not used to pension plans costing so little and they know that for so little they will not get much in return.

In discussing the pay as you go plan versus a funding arrangement, the minister says the reason for the line which the government has followed is that it is not proposed that large reserves would be built up as a vehicle for federal debt management or investment. One could argue the respective merits of these two methods, and there are merits on both sides. There are strong arguments in favour of a pay as you go scheme, but I suggest this should be viewed in the light of our whole economic problem, and one of the main elements of our problem today is securing public control of the economy of the country so that the savings of the people can be used for the advantage of the whole country. The way the government's plan is worked out, with all its sophistry about leaving large areas to private plans and individual choice, means that large amounts of the people's savings will still be in private hands, in the hands of the insurance companies to be used for investment in ways in which they think fit rather than the people deciding through their government on how they should best be used. I suggest these two things must be dovetailed together; the whole question of providing adequate pensions and of the funds which are saved being used in ways which are good for society as a whole through public investment.

I say, readily, that I think this is a most significant date in our history—a milestone. We have come 55 years in this story. We are now moving into phase three, but I do not think that after all these years we need to take such a halting step. The minister says that other countries have this sort of thing. Of course they have; even Sweden which has done very well, took a few years to get where it is today.

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member has had sufficient time to conclude his speech.

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Knowles: Is the hon. member denying unanimous consent to the first spokesman for this party to speak on this question?

Some hon. Members: Go on.

Mr. Pickersgill: I think there was unanimous consent.

An hon. Member: Certainly there was.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. There was unanimous consent for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre to have extra time.

Mr. Knowles: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I shall take only a few more minutes.

An hon. Member: What happened to knucklehead over there?

Mr. Knowles: There is one thing that the minister said this afternoon with which I want to express wholehearted agreement and that is her drawing attention to the fact that there are other areas of need. She mentioned in particular widows with dependant children, disabled persons not yet 65 years of age and orphans. She was perfectly right in pointing out that as circumstances now stand they cannot be dealt with under a federal plan for old age pensions, but I am glad that a conference is to be held with the premiers to discuss this sort of thing and I hope we will move with serious concern toward integrating our various welfare and pension plans to provide a decent life for our people.

I mentioned Dr. Robert Clark. There is Professor Clarence Barber of the University of Manitoba, there is Professor John Morgan of Toronto, there is Dr. Malcolm Taylor of the University of Alberta and there are others across the country who are experts in this field, not to mention the experts we have in our own public service, not to mention the tremendous interest in all of this by the people who work under the direction of the Canadian welfare council. I think we should get over this notion of just working on one piece of legislation today and another after the next election and thinking we have solved the problem. We have got to get together and integrate the whole program.

I welcome strongly the introduction of this legislation. I do not think I am overstating it when I characterize it, as I have tried to, as entering upon a new phase in old age security; but I hope we will soon step up our pace in this sort of thing, that we will really start to achieve adequacy in the old age field, that we will integrate it with the other aspects of social security and social welfare so that it will soon be really true that there is a good life for all our people.

Mr. Haidasz: Mr. Chairman, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this debate on the Canada pension plan. I am happy to hear that the spokesman for the New Democratic party and the spokesman for the Social Credit party are in favour of the plan. I regret, however, that again it is the Conservatives who are against this major piece of social legislation. History again is repeating itself.

This plan of social insurance, promised in our election campaign and delivered within the first 60 days of decision by the twenty sixth parliament of Canada by the courageous and enlightened leadership of the present Prime Minister, will increase the benefits to our senior citizens now and much more in the future as average wages and accumulated benefits increase. Members of this house will want, I am sure, to commend and thank the Minister of National Health and Welfare who has in so short a space of time worked and persevered with her advisers in the Department of National Health and Welfare to make this pension scheme possible. In the tradition of previous Liberal ministers of national health and welfare the present minister is making available to the senior citizens of this country the benefits of the philosophy and the reform policies of the Liberal party, which strives for the attainment of security and dignity for every Canadian citizen.

In our industrial society the age of 65 is often being accepted as the compulsory age for retirement. Yet we are a work-oriented society. Unfortunately a man in retirement often loses not only his self-esteem and social responsibility but above all his financial income. The solution to this problem is not to throw to our senior citizens a bribe of a few dollars in old age pension before each election. The solution in the economic aspect of retirement is an actuarially sound contributory pension system with benefits designed to provide a decent retirement living. The Canada pension scheme is thus designed to give our senior citizens in retirement a comfortable living.

As the minister stated this afternoon, a realistic minimum level of pensions is too difficult to achieve in a country like Canada merely by increasing the flat rate pension. Living costs vary between city and village and between different regions of the country. The purpose, therefore, of the Canada pension plan is to make available reasonable minimum levels of income for all Canadians at normal retirement ages, and within the plan there will be room for the possible continuation and extension of other private pension plans to provide benefits over these minimum levels.

The main feature of the plan, Mr. Chairman, will provide a flat increase in the present old age pension from $65 to $75 per month at the age of 70. The $10 raise will be paid out of the fund and it is estimated to be $116 million per year. The earnings related portion of the pension based on contributions, plus the flat rate pension, would both be available at any age between 65 and 70 depending upon the choice of the contributing pensioner. The rate of contribution during the ten year transition period will not exceed 2 per cent of the earnings on which contributions are made, as stated previously by the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Furthermore, Mr. Chairman, contributions will be deductible from income tax as now exists for private pension plans. Self-employed people will be encouraged to join the plan. They will pay the full 2 per cent of the first $4,000 of their earned income. At existing wage levels the total monthly pension available to a single person at age 70, whose average monthly pensionable earnings were $333 per month, will be $175 per month, which is comprised of a graduated contributory part of $100 plus the $75 per month flat rate pension.

An enviable feature of this Liberal plan is that at every level the Canadian pension will be higher than United States security payments. In comparison a United States citizen receives only $112 per month at the age of 70 based on monthly earned income of $333. I assure hon. members that the present plan will be entirely self-financing and therefore no burden at all will be placed on the national treasury. May I call it ten o'clock?

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the house leader what the government proposes for tomorrow, and if he is able to tell us, for next Monday and Tuesday?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, I believe, the government would like to take the committee stage and third reading of the customs tariff bill on the understanding that I think was arranged with hon. gentlemen opposite, that this was really largely a formality. Then, we will go into committee of ways and means to consider the income tax resolution. Should that be completed, we would go on to the excise tax resolution. I am sure that we would not go beyond those two before six o'clock.

I wonder, sir, if I might be permitted to clear up what I was told was a misunderstanding, perhaps not so much of the house but at the table, about the hours for the rest of the month? I think I perhaps expressed myself rather loosely last night. I believe I am correct in saying the understanding was that the hours would be the same as they have been this week, and that would apply also to private members hour being available for government business on every day except Thursday.

Mr. Monteith: That was my impression last evening.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the Secretary of State formally, now that Your Honour is in the Chair, if he will consider providing at an early date another day's debate on the resolution we have been discussing, so that the chairman of the committee of the whole could have an opportunity to give his ruling on the proposed amendment?

Mr. Pickersgill: I should be glad to bring that suggestion to the attention of my colleagues. I am sure hon. gentlemen realize that I could not vary the business the government had agreed upon in this way without consultation. I do not believe that I could recommend that we interrupt the consideration of budget resolutions, except possibly for the tax bills, until they are completed. Of course, the sooner they are completed the happier the government will be.

It being five minutes after ten o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, July 19, 1963

The house met at 11 a.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. KNOWLES—OMISSION FROM "HANSARD" OF APPENDIX RESPECTING CANADA PENSION PLAN

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Yesterday afternoon when the Minister of National Health and Welfare was speaking in committee of the whole she asked permission to table what was referred to as a white paper on the Canada pension plan, and that it be printed as an appendix to Hansard. Mr. Deputy Speaker, who was in the chair at that time, said this at page 2346 of Hansard:

> The document to which the minister refers, of course, cannot be tabled now in committee. It can be circularized and left informally at the table, but official tabling for the purpose of insertion in Hansard could be done when the Speaker is in the chair.

Later, as reported at page 2350, Mr. Speaker, who I believe was the same Deputy Speaker, said:

> Has the Minister of National Health and Welfare leave to table the documents to which she referred in committee of the whole?
> Some hon. Members: Agreed.

I am sure we all believed that as a result the white paper referred to would appear as an appendix to yesterday's Hansard. Unfortunately it does not. I am sure the minister will agree that there was even more in the white paper than in her speech, and that it should be made an appendix to Hansard. I hope the house now agrees that it be made an appendix to Hansard for today.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of document referred to above, see appendix.]

REFERENCE TO ARTICLE IN NEWSPAPER "LE DEVOIR"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. An editorial published in this morning's Le Devoir reads as follows:

> In the Commons, a spokesman for the Social Credit party stated bluntly that if Ottawa takes the lion's share of taxes, it is quite natural that the federal government should shoulder heavier responsibilities.

Mr. Speaker, to the knowledge of all members of our party, no one ever made such a statement in the house. Indeed, it would be in contradiction with our policy. I wanted to call that fact to the attention of the house and of the press.

FINANCE

UNITED STATES TAX ON INTERNATIONAL CAPITAL TRANSACTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister would the Acting Prime Minister say what action, if any, the Canadian government has taken since the announcement yesterday of President Kennedy's new system of taxation on securities? Do the government realize today what it did not realize yesterday, that what is being done affects Canada to a tremendous degree, and beyond any other country?

Hon. Lionel Chevrier (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my understanding of a question is that it is to seek information and not to make statements such as the Leader of the Opposition has made on a matter which is of tremendous importance to the economy of this country. Now, to deal with the question which the Leader of the Opposition asked me, all I can say at the present time is that the minister of external affairs has had a discussion with the ambassador for the United States. Since the minister is not in the house, as he and the Prime Minister are both at the airport at the moment, I am not able to give to the house the result of those conversations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, in response to the gratuitous remarks of the minister may I say this. Yesterday, as reported at page 2331 of Hansard—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —I asked the Prime Minister this question:

> Is it not a fact that Canada is the one nation that will be directly affected to a greater extent than any other?

The answer to that question was no, with qualifications. Now today it is shown that Canada is the nation most affected. I now ask the Acting Prime Minister, who I think gave a most off-hand answer to a matter which affects Canada as this does, has consideration been given, or is consideration being given, to Canada taking the initiative and proposing a conference on investment and finance attended by the 22 countries affected, four of which are commonwealth countries? Canada more than any other nation is going—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am asking—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Leader of the Opposition I think is coming to his question now.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I was diverted from it as a result of the answer I received. I am asking the minister whether he does not think parliament should be given more information than he or anyone has yet given. Particularly I ask whether consideration is being given to such initiative being exercised.

Mr. Chevrier: Mr. Speaker, the prime minister—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Chevrier: — the Leader of the Opposition, who evidently thinks he is still prime minister because of the manner in which he poses his questions, makes speeches when he knows full well that he has no right to do so having risen to say it is in response to the reply received from me. Then he went on in the manner in which he has, and I think he should be treated in the same way as any other member of this house.

In so far as the question is concerned, I shall see that it is brought to the attention of those under whose responsibility it comes, and he will get his reply in due course.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Petulance is no substitute for information.

Mr. Chevrier: We got an example last night of what the Leader of the Opposition can do.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Peevishness and petulance are no substitute for information, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Chevrier: Neither is arrogance on your part.

(Translation):

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Following the announcement made by President Kennedy which will affect the Canadian economy, does the government intend to open negotiations for the installation of a direct telephone line between the Prime Minister's office and the White House so that there may be more frequent consultations?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order. I hope hon. members are not going to begin a practice of asking supplementaries which are in effect new questions. It would lead to all sorts of confusion.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the Canadian government taking any steps to provide Canadian capital to replace United States investment which will be coming here in decreased amounts in the next few years?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): This question has been under study for several months now, and it is still under study.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): I wish to ask the Minister of Finance whether he anticipates that the tax on foreign securities suggested by President Kennedy will have an adverse effect on Canada's exchange position. If so, what steps does the government intend to take to safeguard Canada's exchange position?

Mr. Gordon: As I said yesterday, I think it is too early yet to speculate or guess what may be the full implications of this proposal of the President. I am not in a position to answer the hon. member's question directly, but I can assure him that this matter is being carefully watched—I was about to say hour by hour, but perhaps I should say it is being watched almost continuously.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask the affable Secretary of State for External Affairs what representations have been made to the government of the United States. Have there been any discussions following the astounding announcement made yesterday by the president?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, may I say to the affable Leader of the Opposition, about whose position in this house, as he knows, I never really had any doubt, that I did see the United States ambassador last night. As the prime minister knows, it is not the custom nor would it be desirable—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and I am sure the Leader of the Opposition knows too—that it would not be appropriate to reveal discussions between the ambassador of another country and the government. The Leader of the Opposition may assume that this matter which obviously deserves attention was carefully and usefully explored between the ambassador and myself on behalf of the government.

[Later:]

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the fact that in the first half of 1963 new Canadian securities floated in the United States amounted to $590 million, representing 67 per cent of all new foreign securities purchased by Americans during that period, would the Prime Minister agree that Canada is going to be more affected than any other nation by the new tax imposed by President Kennedy?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the effect of this move on Canada is now being considered, and it would be idle to speculate as to the extent to which it affects Canada in comparison with the other 21 countries.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I should like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Due to the fact that yesterday the Prime Minister left the impression that a messenger came from the United States treasury department to discuss with the government the implementation of the new United States tax, can the minister give us the name of that messenger?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Trued.

[Later:]

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the reported statement by the premier of British Columbia that the new United States tax would not affect the Columbia river development, has the minister been able to establish whether the new tax, if approved by congress, would apply to United States investment in the Canadian downstream benefits?

Mr. Gordon: I am very sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I have not seen the statement by the premier of British Columbia.

Mr. Chatterton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister be good enough to have his officers look into the question as to whether this tax would apply to United States investment in the Canadian downstream benefits?

Mr. Gordon: I would be glad to do this, Mr. Speaker, but I think hon. members will appreciate that all that has happened so far is that the president has made certain proposals. These proposals are not even going to be considered by congress for some weeks, until some time in August and—

An hon. Member: He may have to withdraw them.

Mr. Gordon: As the hon. gentleman has just said, he may have to withdraw them or make some changes in them, as sometimes happens.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance whether the tax proposals of the United States President to congress become operative as from the time of his statement, as they do here in the House of Commons, or does he have to wait until congress actually passes the legislation before they become effective?

Mr. Gordon: As I am sure my hon. friend knows, Mr. Speaker, they become operative when they are passed by congress.

[Later:]

Mr. Douglas: Might I ask a question of the Minister of Finance. A few moments ago he said that the legislation proposed by President Kennedy may not pass congress for some time. That is true, but is it not equally true that the tax will be due and payable, in the event that the legislation passes, as of today, July 19?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, that was in the proposal of the President but I assume it can be changed by congress. If congress passes the legislation in the form requested by the president, then it will be effective as from July 19.

INQUIRY AS TO DATE OF APPOINTMENT OF SPECIAL ASSISTANT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, is the Minister of Finance yet in a position to answer my question of Wednesday as to how it was that Mr. Conway started to work for him the day before the hon. gentleman became Minister of Finance?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I was going to answer this question. I have not read the material before me but I will do so as I answer the question.

Mr. Nowlan: That is dangerous.

Mr. Gordon: I had this prepared by treasury board. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre asked how it was that Mr. Conway was appointed or commenced work on April 21, the day before the government itself was sworn in.

Under the financial arrangements made with Mr. Conway he was entitled to a living allowance for each day he was absent from his normal place of residence, and a professional fee for each day he was engaged in his duties with the Department of Finance. In addition, he was entitled to receive transportation expenses.

The pertinent regulations provide that entitlement to a per diem living allowance commences when a person leaves his normal place of residence en route to the new location where he will be performing his duties. Mr. Conway left his normal place of residence, which was Boston, by air at 7 p.m. on Sunday, April 21, in order to start work in Ottawa on Monday, April 22. Mr. Conway was entitled to, and received, for April 21 reimbursement of his transportation expenses, which commenced with his journey from Boston on April 21, and reimbursement for one half day's living allowance for April 21. He had to spend the night here. His professional fee did not commence until April 22.

Because Mr. Conway was entitled to, and received, reimbursement for travelling and living expenses incurred on April 21, that date was given as his commencement date. I would just add that perhaps it would have been more correct to have inserted April 22 rather than April 21, in reply to question No. 877, asked by the hon. gentleman, but that was the point. I was not prepared to say definitely with regard to that because I had not had the chance to review the question.

Mr. Knowles: On a question of privilege, may I point out that the treasury board minute, the validity of which I question, under which Mr. Conway was appointed was not passed until May 2. That raises some question about Mr. Conway and the others working with the Minister of Finance before that date. I think a very serious question now arises as to how Mr. Conway knew before the present minister became Minister of Finance, which was on April 22, that he was to be required as an assistant to the minister and thus made the decision to leave Boston the day before.

Mr. Gordon: All I can say is that perhaps on Sunday, the 21st, I had some premonition that I might become Minister of Finance on the following day.

Mr. Knowles: Had the Minister of Finance authority to provide payment to an assistant who was an outsider covering the day before the present Minister of Finance was made minister?

Mr. Pickersgill: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if that question is not more proper for the Auditor General than for orders of the day?

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Something should be looked into here.

Mr. Speaker: I suggest to hon. members that perhaps we have pursued this subject far enough at this time.

Some hon Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I think the proper place would be on the discussion of the various resolutions, but certainly on the question period it seems to me we have had a full enough discussion.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, on the point of order surely this is not a matter for the Auditor General; it is a matter for the house if the treasury board, which at that time had not met, is faced with having the responsibility of paying someone who was hired by the minister prior to his taking office.

Mr. Gordon: I think we have had a fair amount of discussion about Mr. Conway and the other three gentlemen I got to assist me, but I wonder whether I might say this about Mr. Conway's position. Mr. Conway is a student at Harvard. I asked him to come up here to do a job.

An hon. Member: What a job.

Mr. Pickersgill: Let him finish.

Mr. Gordon: If his appointment had not been approved in the proper way by treasury board then either Mr. Conway or I would have been responsible for travelling expenses incurred. I really do not think any member of this house would expect a Harvard student to pay his own way up from Boston. He is not in a position to do so. He came here to work for this government and he did work for this government. He is still working for it indirectly, through the tax commission. I do not think we should get into too much of a discussion as to the propriety of treasury board paying this man's travelling expenses from Boston.

Mr. Gregoire: I should like to ask the Minister of Finance how come he hires students to help prepare the budget.

Mr. Gordon: Because in my opinion young men and women are usually pretty bright.

Mr. Valade: Does the Prime Minister intend to have this student run in the next election in place of the present Minister of Finance?

UNITED NATIONS

SOUTH AFRICA—CANADIAN REACTION TO PROPOSED EMBARGO

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I wonder if the minister is in a position to advise the house as to the government's reaction and proposed policy in regard to a recommendation by a committee of the United Nations that an embargo should be imposed against South Africa.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): This question is under consideration. As the hon. gentleman perhaps knows, the security council will be meeting some time next week, I believe, when certain aspects of this question will be discussed. The Canadian government is following this subject with careful attention. Its policy will be announced at the appropriate moment.

POWER

COLUMBIA RIVER—CIRCULATION OF ARTICLE IN VANCOUVER "PROVINCE"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the deputy minister of northern affairs and national resources and several officials of the water resources branch have been circulating an article on the Columbia river power plan written by Mr. Paddy Sherman, a journalist for the Vancouver Province, as an objective and accurate report in all important respects to persons seeking information from that branch about the Columbia river treaty, will the minister inform the house if the circulation of Mr. Sherman's article has been authorized by the minister? If so, will the minister assure the house that the government considers Mr. Sherman's report objective and accurate in all important aspects?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the government, of course, is not responsible for the circulation of newspapers from or to any part of the country, including the excellent newspaper in Vancouver for which my hon. friend apparently does not have the same regard that I have. I can only say that Mr. Sherman's article is, in its essentials, an accurate account of the situation.

PASSAMAQUODDY—INQUIRY AS TO PRELIMINARY DISCUSSIONS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Some days ago I asked the Prime Minister whether the Passamaquoddy project was discussed at the Hyannis Port conference, and also whether there had been any discussion between the governments of Canada and the United States prior to the announcement made by Mr. Udall.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I think I told the right hon. gentleman I would look into this matter. I regret I have not done so, but my recollection is that what I told the Leader of the Opposition is correct, namely that there was no discussion. I am sorry I have not confirmed that impression, and I will do so at once.

GRAIN

WHEAT—INQUIRY AS TO INITIAL PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It stems from the report issued by the Canadian Press that the wheat board has announced that payments on the new crop after August 1 will perhaps be deferred and cash storage tickets will be issued because the initial payment has not been announced by the government. Is the minister now in a position to announce the initial payment for the coming crop year?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, as I said in the house the other day, initial payments will be announced within the next few days. I would remind my hon. friend that last year initial payments were announced by his government on August 6.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): July 6.

Mr. Sharp: August 6.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): July.

DIVORCE

PROCEDURE TO BE FOLLOWED TO DEAL WITH PETITIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State? With reference to the question I put to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Chevrier), I wonder whether the Secretary of State intends to consult the government of the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland, as well as the religious authorities of those provinces, before introducing legislation with a view to preventing divorce bills from being submitted to the house, or is he contemplating another course of action?

(Text):

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the government has no thought or intention of presenting any legislation whatever on this subject, therefore the question does not arise. The question of what should be done with these private bills is a matter for both houses of parliament. The members of the government have no more responsibility in that matter than any other member of parliament.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY AS TO DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING 12 MILE FISHING ZONE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he has any statement to give to the house on the preliminary talks which are reported to have taken place between Canada and the United States and some other countries with regard to the historic fishing rights which those countries claim in the waters adjacent to Canada's coasts?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): There have not been any such talks as yet. It is possible that talks on the 12 mile limit and on the negotiations with regard to historic rights may take place some time toward the end of August.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): The press reports to the effect that preliminary talks have already taken place are not correct?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I cannot add anything to what I have already said.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): May I ask a supplementary question. Are nationals from other countries still fishing within the 12 mile limit of Canada's coasts, according to historic rights?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Perhaps my hon. friend will allow me to take that question as notice, and I will give an answer later.

INDIA—CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN AIR PROTECTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Could the minister tell us whether the United Kingdom and the United States have asked Canada to join in air exercises or air protection for India; can the minister say whether a decision has been made and, if so, when the decision was made?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. friend for giving me notice of his intention to ask this question. There have been discussions on this subject between the governments of the United States and the United Kingdom. There have been a number of reports from abroad which were highly inaccurate, particularly in their references to the possible role of Canada in relation to this matter. It has in fact been well known for more than six months that for a number of reasons, including the lack of appropriate equipment, Canada would not be making its contribution to India's defence needs in the way suggested by these reports from abroad.

This decision was taken by the former government in January of this year, and it was reaffirmed by Canada to the United Kingdom in the month of June. As I indicated on July 16, our contribution has taken other forms which we have reason to believe were most welcome to the government of India. I can assure the house that the military, political and economic considerations were exhaustively studied by the Canadian government before it reached the decision and before there was confirmation of that decision. The Canadian government is fully aware of its commonwealth responsibilities and has kept in close touch with the government of India and other governments concerned with that country's defence needs; and we will continue to do so.

OLD AGE SECURITY

INQUIRY AS TO CHAIRMAN'S RULING ON PROPOSED AMENDMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. In view of the very definite announcement that was made on the C.B.C. news at eight o'clock this morning that Deputy Speaker Lamoureux would today give his ruling on the proposed amendment regarding the $10 increase in old age security payments, will the Secretary of State say whether house business for today is being arranged so that the C.B.C.'s information will turn out to be correct?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): I heard the news report to which the hon. gentleman referred, and I wondered whether perhaps it did not suggest that at times it would be useful to have someone to advise on parliamentary procedure even in places other than parliament.

DECISION TO POSTPONE PAYMENT OF INCREASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister tell us whether the government's decision to repudiate its commitment to increase immediately old age pension by $10 a month was made before or after the budget fiasco?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): The government has not repudiated any commitment, Mr. Speaker.

AGRICULTURE

ALBERTA—APPLICATIONS FOR WORK UNDER P.F.A.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. S. Smallwood (Battle River-Camrose): On July 16, Mr. Speaker, I directed a question to the Minister of Agriculture, and asked him if he had issued an order that anyone wishing P.F.A. work in Alberta must apply to the office in Regina. He informed me he would let me know the next day. On Wednesday he was not in the house, and I received no reply yesterday. Being a very patient man, I wondered if I could expect a reply today.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): In reply to the hon. member I would inform him that I have had a reply here for a couple of days, but each time I stood up he was momentarily out of the house.

The policy regarding applications for work with P.F.A.A. in each of the three prairie provinces is that these are to be directed to the director, P.F.A.A., who supervises the administration of the program and whose office is located in Regina. Instructions to the director of P.F.A.A. to follow this procedure were sent to him by officials in Ottawa. I might say that this was done on my direction, and I have impressed upon the department that all these appointments must be made on merit because we also have a responsibility to the taxpayers.

Mr. Smallwood: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The Minister of Agriculture said I was not in the house momentarily. He was not in the house all day on Wednesday, and I have been here all the time.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the hon. member has received his answer.

MILK—INQUIRY AS TO PROGRAM FOR SCHOOL CHILDREN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Is he in a position to advise what progress is being made in the milk program for school children, and whether this program will be in effect for the coming school year?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): We are working on this program, Mr. Speaker, and we expect to make an announcement fairly soon.

FORT ST. JOHN, B.C.—REPORTED REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Bert Leboe (Cariboo): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Agriculture. I believe Mr. Frank Ward of the farmers' union of British Columbia has written him concerning the crop situation in the Fort St. John area and asked that it be declared a disaster area. Has the minister anything to tell the house at this time in that connection?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I have been in touch again with the minister of agriculture for British Columbia, and he is watching the area. Anything in this regard will have to be initiated by him. He is aware of this, and we are in consultation with him.

ADVERTISING

REPORTED STATEMENT AS TO PROPOSED FEDERAL EXPENDITURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. Is Mr. Keith Davey an employee of the government of Canada and, if so, in what department? I ask this because in this morning's Globe and Mail Mr. Davey is reported—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Orlikow: —to the effect that government expenditures on advertising—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member please come to the question? Preliminary statements should be short and to the point.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is no.

Mr. Orlikow: Then a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. How could Mr. Davey announce what government expenditures on advertising are to be, if he is not an employee of the government, as reported in the Globe and Mail?

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to put it to the Prime Minister that we desire an answer to the question relating to the statement of Mr. Davey setting out the advertising expenditures of the government.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps he has read the estimates.

Mr. Fisher: Could the Prime Minister explain how the firms are listed in the estimates? It is a mystery to me, and perhaps the Prime Minister could tell me.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Is the announcement by Mr. Davey regarding the various advertising allocations by different departments and the firms who are to receive the very large sums of money an accurate report? If so, who authorized Mr. Davey to make it?

Mr. Pearson: I have not seen the report, Mr. Speaker, so I cannot comment on its accuracy, but I will be glad to look into it.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Prime Minister if, when he has looked at the report of the statement issued by Mr. Keith Davey, he would advise the house whose decision it was, the government's or Mr. Davey's, to raise the advertising limit from $7 million to $12½ million.

[Later:]

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question in his capacity as the minister responsible for the Canadian government travel bureau. I would like to ask the minister whether he approved the switches in the large advertising accounts put out by the Canadian government travel bureau to McLaren's and Colliers, as announced by the national director of the Liberal party?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I approved the appointment of the advertising agencies in the areas for which I have responsibility, including the travel bureau.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister indicate whether he forwarded the information about his approval to Mr. Davey and thus led to this unusual announcement?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether this is unusual or not. I think these things are fairly well known. I did not personally forward this information to Mr. Davey. However, it is the sort of information that must be pretty well known by now, since I have changed the advertising agencies responsible for the work in my department.

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce whether he changed the advertising agency because the former one was not a good agency.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I think there must have been some reason for changing the advertising agency.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Sharp: I think the advertising agencies that I appointed will do the work very satisfactorily indeed.

Mr. Gregoire: That is not the question I asked the minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Gregoire: The question was, were there any reasons for the change?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I can answer that question by saying that the reasons were the same as those which inspired the government in 1957 and 1958.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry; we are entering upon a debate, and I think we have gone far enough.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond.

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sorry, but the rules of the house apply to the hon. member also.

Mr. Gregoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I did not make any debate about it; I just asked a question, and because of the answer of the Prime Minister I think we are entitled to more explanation than we have had. The fact that the previous government did that is no reason for doing it any more. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether this is what is called good patronage.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could I ask the Prime Minister whether any of the advertising companies which have now been selected are those companies which handled the Liberal party's election campaign.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I am not well informed on those questions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Is it the intention of the government to propose an amendment to the Canada Elections Act requiring that political parties show the sources of their contributions, including those from advertising firms?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have never been more grateful to have a question than I am to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who, it seems to me, at times almost reads my mind; because I have been seeking—

An hon. Member: It won't take long.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pickersgill: As a matter of fact, if something is clear it never takes long to understand it. The reason I am grateful to the hon. gentleman is that I have been seeking, through consultations with hon. gentlemen opposite, to get agreement to having a motion made to refer the report of the Chief electoral officer to the committee on privileges and elections, without debate, so we could get that committee set up at once to consider these proposed amendments to the elections act. If it would be agreeable to the house we could perhaps revert to motions and I would make that motion now; it could be adopted at once, and then the hon. gentleman's curiosity could be satisfied.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, we do not need to revert to motions. The notice of the motion is already on the order paper; it is a government order. When we reach government orders today the minister could call it, and I can say that we are prepared that the motion pass without being debated. May I ask the minister if he will now answer my question as to whether, when these matters go before that committee, there will be a recommendation by the government that the contributions of advertising firms to political parties should be reported.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I would not seek to anticipate at this time any of the recommendations that might be made by the government in regard to a bill to come before this house, because I am sure the hon. gentleman would be able to find in some corner of the commentaries on the rules some exception that could be taken to that.

[Later:]

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and ask him whether there are some French Canadian advertising agencies among the new agencies of his department?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I should like to have some notice of this question. I am not certain as to how the advertising agencies which have been appointed are handling their business. It is my understanding that there are some sub-agencies involved, but I am sure that there would be provision in the agencies for handling the business in the French language in an adequate manner.

Mr. Douglas: Will Mr. Davey make an announcement regarding this?

(Translation):

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Are government publicity contracts awarded after tenders have been called?

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

ATTENDANCE OF MEMBERS OF OPPOSITION PARTIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gilles Gregoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister. Could he tell us whether he has approached the provincial premiers on the subject of admitting members of opposition parties, as observers, to the federal-provincial conference which has been convened for July 26 and 27 next?

(Text):

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have not taken any such steps.

TRADE

WHEAT—REPORTED SALE OF REDUCED QUANTITIES TO RED CHINA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister confirm the report in today's Globe and Mail that Canada is finalizing a sale half the size of the original wheat sale to China, which was something like 74 million bushels of wheat, over the next two years?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot confirm that.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. I did not quite get the minister's answer, but I think I understand it now. Can he assure the house that every effort will be made, in view of the prospective crop in western Canada, to make this sale at least half the size of the original sale?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, in all these negotiations there are two sides that have to be satisfied. I could not possibly give any assurance like that. I can, of course, give an assurance that the Canadian wheat board, which has the responsibility in these matters, will make as large a wheat sale to China and our other customers as is possible. I am sure the hon. gentleman will agree that the wheat board is doing its best on behalf of the western producers of wheat.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I realize the wheat board is doing its best to sell Canadian wheat, but is the government prepared to facilitate the wheat board by providing the necessary credit to make these sales as large as possible?

Mr. Sharp: The answer to that question is yes.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO COURSES AT COLLEGE MILITAIRE ST. JEAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct to the Associate Minister of National Defence a question which follows from a conversation I have had with him. Does the government intend to provide for a complete course at the Royal Military College of St. John such as the one now given at Kingston?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that question has been under consideration for some time within the department. My hon. friend is aware that, in the course given in Kingston, students specialize in the field of engineering. On the other hand, an inquiry is now being made to determine whether a course other than that of engineering could not be given at the Royal Military College of St. John.

ATLANTIC DEVELOPMENT BOARD

REQUEST BY ATLANTIC PROVINCES FOR CLARIFICATION OF LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State. Will he undertake to better define the scope of the Atlantic development board immediately, as requested by the four Atlantic premiers at their meeting in Fredericton this week?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could ask the hon. gentleman to repeat his question. I was listening as attentively as I could but I did not hear it all.

Mr. Fairweather: I am sorry I did not make myself clear. Will the minister undertake to better define the scope of the Atlantic development board, as requested by the premiers of the four Atlantic provinces, who met this week in Fredericton?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, the premiers made no such request to me. The premier of New Brunswick telephoned me, as I already told the house, and asked to have a meeting, which has been arranged for next Thursday at five o'clock. The purpose of the meeting is to discuss the methods by which all governments concerned can co-operate in carrying out these aims, and the premiers are naturally anxious to know what is in mind. In order to make the conference more successful I have asked my hon. friend the Minister of Defence Production who, as is understood by the house, will be in charge of the department of industry, and therefore, of the area development agency, to be present at the meeting.

WORLD FAIR

REPORTED RESIGNATION OF CHAIRMAN OF CORPORATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Georges Valade (St. Mary): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, Mr. Speaker. Has he been informed, officially or otherwise, by the chairman of the world fair corporation of his intention to resign?

(Text):

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Valade: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister was rising to answer the question when he was interrupted by Your Honour, and I think you should give him time to reply.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): All I was going to say, Mr. Speaker, is that this is not a question that could be answered on orders of the day in any event.

Mr. Speaker: I was about to add that I think that question had been asked yesterday.

(Translation):

LABOUR CONDITIONS

REPORTED INCREASE IN NUMBER OF UNEMPLOYED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Labour.

Considering that the number of unemployed increased last month, could the minister give us the special reasons for that increase in unemployment or tell us it is the result of the budget announced on June 13 last?

(Text):

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the joint press release was made public yesterday, and the factors occasioning the changes in employment and unemployment were fully set out in that document.

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

INQUIRY AS TO APPOINTMENT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister is now in a position to tell the house on what date he will announce the appointment of the royal commission on biculturalism.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I had hoped to do it today but I was not in the house when motions were called. I will certainly do it on Monday on motions.

AIRPORTS

BOUNDARY BAY, B.C.—REPORTED DISPOSAL OF HANGAR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Defence Production is in a position to answer my question of July 15 with regard to allegations concerning the sale of an airport hangar at Boundary Bay, B.C.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Defence Production): Mr. Speaker, at Boundary Bay, British Columbia, a synthetic trainer was constructed in 1941 at a cost of $150,000. This was used continuously for some time, but this type of training facility has since become obsolete. In October last year the building in which it was housed was severely damaged by a thunderstorm, as a consequence of which it was decided that the building, a frame structure, was of no further use. It was stripped and the shell offered for sale by tender on the understanding that not only would the building be sold but that it would be removed from the site.

A number of bids were received from some 80 invitations to tender which were sent out, the most satisfactory of which was an offer from a general contractor of a sum in excess of the amount mentioned by the hon. gentleman. This sale was made. The sale terms included the acquisition of the frame structure, its removal, and the restoration of the site, when the removal had been completed, to its original condition. The next best offer was an undertaking to remove the building at a cost of $5,000 to Crown Assets Disposal Corporation. This second best bid was not accepted.

HIGHWAYS

RIGHTS OF WAY FOR TRUNK HIGHWAYS THROUGH NATIONAL PARKS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, last Wednesday the hon. member for Cariboo asked a question concerning rights of way for trunk highways through national parks. This is a matter which might be appropriate as a subject of discussion with the provinces when we meet with them next fall. It is, of course, a matter I would consider in co-operation with my colleague the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

CUSTOMS TARIFF

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee to consider Bill No. C-87, to amend the Customs Tariff.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Schedule A amended.

Mr. Gregoire: Just one word. I do not intend to start any debate; just one word.

In this resolution—

Some hon. Members: Just one word.

Mr. Gregoire: One word; one minute. There are provisions here affecting advertising agencies, photographic material, cameras and so on. I would just like to say we protest against the changes which have been made affecting advertising agencies because they constitute what we call patronage.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses two and three agreed to.

Schedules A and B agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Mr. Pickersgill: I wonder whether in view of the fact that the committee has before it a resolution on the Income Tax Act of which notice was given on June 13, and that on July 8 the Minister of Finance gave notice of a resolution modifying it in some particulars, there might be an agreement in the committee to substitute consideration of the notice which was given on July 8 for that given on June 13 without further formality. If this could be done by consent of the committee it would avoid a lot of technical difficulty and expedite the work of the committee.

The Chairman: Is that agreeable?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Churchill: Without restricting debate?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think it was clearly understood that this would still permit any debate which would be possible on the other resolution. That is the understanding of the government, and we shall not seek to be technical about it.

INCOME TAX ACT

Resolved,—That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Income Tax Act and to provide among other things:

1. That with respect to new depreciable property of a prescribed class acquired in the period of 24 months commencing June 14, 1963 capital cost allowances be computed on a straight line basis at a prescribed rate not exceeding 50 per cent per annum if the property has been acquired by a taxpayer in a taxation year for a manufacturing or processing business in Canada and the taxpayer is

(a) an individual who was resident in Canada for a period of not less than 183 days in the year, or

(b) a corporation that in the year had a degree of Canadian ownership and control; and for the purposes of this paragraph,

(c) a corporation has a degree of Canadian ownership and control in a year if the corporation throughout the 60 day period immediately preceding the year (or if the corporation did not have a preceding year, throughout the 60 day period commencing on the first day of the year) complied with the following conditions:

(i) the corporation was resident in Canada,

(ii) either

(A) not less than 25 per cent of its voting shares were beneficially owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, one or more corporations controlled in Canada or a combination thereof, or

(B) the voting shares of the corporation were listed on a recognized stock exchange in Canada and it is established, in prescribed manner, that no one non-resident shareholder owned beneficially, together with any other person associated with him at any time in the period, more than 75 per cent of the voting shares of the corporation, and

(iii) where the year commences after December 31, 1964, the number of directors of the corporation who were resident in Canada was not less than 25 per cent of the total number of directors of the corporation; or complied with the conditions specified in clauses (i) and (iii) and was a wholly-owned subsidiary of a corporation that throughout the 60 day period complied with the conditions specified in clauses (i), (ii) and (iii); and

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

(d) a corporation is controlled in Canada at a particular time if at that time it complies with the following conditions:

(i) the corporation is resident in Canada, and

(ii) not less than 51 per cent of its voting shares are beneficially owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, one or more corporations controlled in Canada or a combination thereof.

2. That a taxpayer whose business in a prescribed area of Canada has been certified to be a new manufacturing or processing business that commenced commercial operations in the period of 24 months commencing with the date on which any enactment based on this paragraph is assented to be exempt from tax on the income from that business for a period of 36 months from the date certified to be the date of commencement of operations, and that the rate of capital cost allowances for new depreciable property of a prescribed class acquired by the said taxpayer in the said 24 months period for such business be computed on a straight line basis at a prescribed rate not exceeding 50 per cent per annum.

3. That with effect for 1964 and subsequent taxation years section 40A of the act, which provides for a deduction from the tax otherwise payable by a manufacturing and processing corporation, be repealed.

4. That with respect to expenses incurred after June 13, 1963 a corporation whose principal business is operating a pipe line for the transmission of oil or natural gas be allowed to deduct in computing income the drilling and exploration expenses, including all general geological and geophysical expenses, incurred by it on or in respect of exploring for petroleum or natural gas in Canada and the prospecting, exploration and development expenses incurred by it in searching for minerals in Canada.

5. That for the 1963 and subsequent taxation years a dividend received by a person resident in Canada from a corporation that throughout its taxation year in which the dividend is paid or credited

(a) is taxable as a non-resident corporation carrying on business in Canada,

(b) derives substantially all of its income from sources in Canada, and

(c) has its shares listed on a recognized stock exchange in Canada be deemed to be a dividend from sources in Canada paid or credited by a taxable corporation within the meaning of section 38 of the act.

6. That the 15 per cent rate of tax payable by a non-resident person on dividends paid or credited to him by a person resident in Canada be reduced to 10 per cent with respect to dividends paid or credited after June 13, 1963 by a corporation that in its taxation year in which the dividend is paid or credited has a degree of Canadian ownership or control within the meaning or paragraph 1.

7. That the 15 per cent rate of tax payable by a non-resident person on dividends paid or credited to him by a person resident in Canada be increased to 20 per cent with respect to dividends paid or credited after December 31, 1964 by a corporation that in its taxation year in which the dividend is paid or credited does not have a degree of Canadian ownership or control within the meaning of paragraph 1.

8. That where a corporation resident in Canada that in any year before 1967 was not a corporation that had a degree of Canadian ownership and control, within the meaning of paragraph 1, becomes a corporation that in 1967 has such a degree of Canadian ownership and control, a non-resident person shall be entitled to a refund equal to

(a) 5 per cent of any dividends paid or credited by the corporation to him after June 13, 1963 and before January 1, 1965, in respect of which he has paid a tax of 15 per cent to Canada, and

(b) 10 per cent of any dividends paid or credited by the corporation to him after December 31, 1964 and before January 1, 1967, in respect of which he has paid a tax of 20 per cent to Canada.

9. That where a corporation (other than a non-resident-owned investment corporation) paid or credited dividends during the period commencing on June 14, 1963 and ending on December 31, 1964 in taxation years in which it did not have a degree of Canadian ownership and control within the meaning of paragraph 1, the amount of which dividends exceeds five fourths of the amount of dividends paid or credited by the corporation during that number of days immediately preceding June 14, 1963 that is equal to the number of days in the period commencing on June 14, 1963 and ending on December 31, 1964 that were included in taxation years in which the corporation did not have such a degree of Canadian ownership and control, the corporation shall, on or before January 31, 1965, pay a special tax equal to 5 per cent of the amount of the excess.

10. That with respect to income earned after December 31, 1964 the 15 per cent tax imposed by part IIIA of the act on a non-resident corporation carrying on business in Canada be 20 per cent.

11. That with respect to income of a non-resident-owned investment corporation earned after December 31, 1964 the present 15 per cent rate of tax be 20 per cent.

12. That any amount paid or credited after June 13, 1963, by a person resident in Canada to a non-resident person, as or on account of a management or administration fee or charge, be subject to the 15 per cent tax on income from Canada of non-resident persons.

13. That with respect to interest paid by a person resident in Canada to a non-resident person on any obligation issued after June 13, 1963, if the non-resident person

(a) is exempt from income tax in the country in which that person is resident; and

(b) has obtained a certificate of exemption from the minister, the non-resident person be exempt from the 15 per cent rate of tax imposed in respect of such payment.

14. That for the taxation years ending after November, 1965 a corporation shall during the 12 months period ending 4 months after the close of each taxation year, pay to the Receiver General of Canada

(a) on or before the last day of each of the first 10 months in that period, an amount equal to one twelfth of the tax as estimated by it at the rate for the taxation year

(i) on its estimated taxable income for the year, or

(ii) on its taxable income for the immediately preceding year,

(b) on or before the last day of the eleventh month in the period, an amount equal to one half of the remainder of the tax payable as estimated by it on its taxable income for the year at the rate for the year, and

(c) on or before the last day of the period, the remainder of the tax and that for the taxation years ending after November, 1963 and before December, 1964 a corporation shall, during the 11 month period ending 5 months after the close of its taxation year, pay to the Receiver General of Canada

(d) on or before the last day of each of the first 9 months in that period, an amount equal to one twelfth of the tax as estimated by it at the rate for the taxation year

(i) on its estimated taxable income for the year, or

(ii) on its taxable income for the immediately preceding year,

(e) on or before the last day of the tenth month in the period an amount equal to one half of the remainder of the tax payable as estimated by it on its taxable income for the year at the rate for the year, and

(f) on or before the last day of the period, the remainder of the tax, and that for taxation years ending after November, 1964 and before December, 1965 a corporation shall, during the 11 months period ending 4 months after the close of its taxation year, pay to the Receiver General of Canada

(g) on or before the last day of each of the first 9 months in that period an amount equal to one eleventh of the tax as estimated by it as the rate for the taxation year

(i) on its estimated taxable income for the year, or

(ii) on its taxable income for the immediately preceding year,

(h) on or before the last day of the tenth month in the period, an amount equal to one half of the remainder of the tax payable as estimated by it on its taxable income for the year at the rate for the year, and

(i) on or before the last day of the period, the remainder of the tax.

15. That the return of income for a taxation year that is to be filed with the minister in prescribed form and containing prescribed information by or on behalf of a corporation be filed

(a) for taxation years ending after November, 1963 and before December, 1964 within 5 months from the end of the year, and

(b) for taxation years ending after November, 1964 within 4 months from the end of the year.

16. That with respect to amounts received after June 13, 1963, where a taxpayer has received an amount in a taxation year,

(a) as consideration for the sale or other disposition of any shares of a corporation or of any interest in such shares,

(b) in consequence of a corporation having

(i) redeemed or acquired any of its shares or reduced its capital stock or

(ii) converted any of its shares into shares of another class or into an obligation of the corporation, or

(c) otherwise, as a payment that would, but for this provision, be exempt income, which amount, in the opinion of the minister, was received by the taxpayer as part of a transaction or series of transactions whenever effected or to be effected, one of the purposes of which was or is to effect a substantial reduction of, or disappearance of, the assets of a corporation in such a manner that the whole or any part of any tax that might otherwise have been or become payable under the act in consequence of any distribution of income of a corporation has been or will be avoided, the amount so received by the taxpayer or such part thereof as may be specified by the minister shall, if the minister so directs,

(d) be included in computing the income of the taxpayer for that taxation year, and

(e) in the case of a taxpayer who is an individual, be deemed to have been received by him as a dividend from a taxable corporation within the meaning of section 38 of the act.

Income Tax Act

17. That for the 1964 and subsequent taxation years where, in the case of two or more corporations, the minister is satisfied

(a) that the separate existence of those corporations is not solely for the purpose of carrying out the business of those corporations in the most effective manner, and

(b) that one of the main reasons for such separate existence is to reduce the amount of taxes that would otherwise be payable under the act the two or more corporations shall, if the minister so directs, be deemed to be associated with each other.

18. That upon any appeal to the Exchequer Court of Canada from an assessment in such case the court may confirm or vary any direction given by the minister as provided in paragraph 16 or 17, or may vacate any such direction where it determines that

(a) none of the purposes of the transaction or series of transactions referred to in paragraph 16 was or is that specified in that paragraph, or

(b) none of the main reasons for the separate existence of the corporations referred to in paragraph 17 is that specified in subparagraph (b) of that paragraph.

19. That for the 1963 and subsequent taxation years

(a) a business loss incurred in a previous year by a corporation may not be deducted in a taxation year if

(i) the business in which the loss was sustained by the corporation was not carried on by it in the taxation year, and

(ii) in the period between the end of the year in which the loss was sustained and the end of the taxation year control of the corporation has changed hands, and

(b) a business loss incurred by a corporation in a taxation year may not be deducted in computing the income of the corporation for that taxation year if the business in which the loss was sustained by the corporation was wound up or discontinued, and after such winding up or discontinuance control of the corporation passed to a person or persons who did not control the corporation in the year at any time when the business in which the loss was sustained was carried on;

but this paragraph is not applicable where the change of the control of the corporation occurred prior to June 14, 1963.

20. That for the 1963 and subsequent taxation years section 18 of the act, which provides rules in the case of any lease option agreement, hire purchase agreement or other contract or arrangement for the leasing or hiring of property, be repealed, and appropriate transitional provisions be enacted in respect of any such contract or arrangement.

21. That for the 1963 and subsequent taxation years the benefits received by an employee from his employer's contribution to a group life insurance plan that are at present excluded from income be excluded only if such contribution is in respect of group term life insurance.

22. That, with respect to any annuity contract entered into after June 13, 1963, that part of the proceeds of the contract that consists of interest accumulated prior to the date on which the annuity commences be included in computing income of the recipient unless such proceeds are received as a life annuity or as a refund of premiums upon the death of the holder of the annuity contract.

23. That for the 1962 and subsequent taxation years the manner of taxing a bankrupt corporation, a bankrupt individual and a trustee in bankruptcy be revised and in particular

(a) that the trustee be deemed to be the agent of the bankrupt person for all purposes of the act;

(b) that section 63 of the act not apply in the case of any income of the trustee from dealing in the property of the bankrupt person or from carrying on the business of the bankrupt person;

(c) that the income of the bankrupt person be computed as if upon the occurrence of the bankruptcy the property of the bankrupt person did not pass to and vest in the trustee; and

(d) that the trustee be liable for payment of any tax payable by the bankrupt person to the extent of the property of the bankrupt person in the possession of the trustee.

[Mr. Pickersgill.]

Mr. Nowlan: I wonder if before the minister makes his statement—I presume he intends to make a statement—he will give consideration to dealing with the Excise Tax Act rather than the Income Tax Act today in view of the development which took place yesterday and the uncertainty of the situation. It might be better if we had more time in which to consider these income tax resolutions, because they go to the very root of the question of Canadian ownership.

Mr. Gordon: I appreciate the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman. I am prepared to go on now with the income tax resolutions. The officials who are familiar with that side of things are here. I suggest that with any luck we will get through the income tax resolution very quickly, and then we will be in a position to go on with the excise tax resolution this afternoon.

Mr. Nowlan: You are a great believer in luck.

Mr. Gordon: I don't know why. The income tax resolution sets forth a number of proposals which are now to be considered in turn on the basis of their individual merits. These were described in the budget speech. Although the measures were amended and clarified by the statement made on July 8, the basic principles and purposes are unaltered.

Since there are 23 numbered paragraphs it may assist hon. members of the committee at this stage to recapitulate in a few sentences the broad areas of subject matter to which the proposals are directed. Substantial tax incentives to encourage industrial growth and employment in the country at large and additional incentives for particular designated areas of slower growth are set forth in paragraphs 1 and 2. The repeal provision in paragraph 3 may be considered in connection with these.

An incentive measure affecting drilling and exploration for gas and oil is summarized in paragraph 4. Measures designed to exert an influence on the ownership of Canadian industry are set forth in paragraphs 1, 6 and 7. Other paragraphs which are either consequential or closely related to these are Nos. 5 and 8 and Nos. 9 to 12 inclusive.

A measure designed to encourage certain non-resident institutions to invest in Canadian bonds is contained in paragraph 13. If the hon. member will wait a moment, I was just going to add that this, of course, will be partially but by no means wholly upset, in fact not to more than a degree, if the present Kennedy proposals are passed by congress. The provision still offers a very important inducement to certain investors in the United States to buy Canadian bonds.

A measure to obtain earlier payment of corporation income taxes and to enhance the flow of revenues during the next two years is contained in paragraphs 14 and 15. Measures to achieve greater equity by closing loopholes and by improving the administration of the Income Tax Act are set forth in paragraphs 16 to 23 inclusive, and I expect that hon. members of the committee will be very interested in those proposals.

I will, of course, give an introduction to each of the main paragraphs in the resolution when we come to them, and with the approval of the committee I should like to begin with an introduction to paragraph 1. This paragraph provides a tax incentive for manufacturing and processing businesses with a degree of Canadian ownership and control. The paragraph proposes that accelerated capital cost allowances be granted in respect of certain new depreciable property acquired in a 24 month period for use in manufacturing and processing businesses by individuals resident in Canada or by companies resident in Canada that have a degree of Canadian ownership and control.

A taxpayer acquiring new machinery or equipment that would otherwise fall in class 8 of the Income Tax Act regulations for use in a manufacturing or processing business will be allowed to claim capital cost allowances in respect of that machinery or equipment at the rate of 50 per cent on a straight line basis. This 50 per cent rate is a maximum rate. Taxpayers may spread the deduction of capital cost allowances over a number of years if they so wish.

When capital cost allowances are calculated on a straight line basis a fixed percentage of the original capital cost may be deducted each year until the total capital cost has been deducted for tax purposes. For example, under the concession referred to here 50 per cent of the capital cost will be deducted in the first year and 50 per cent in the second. This method compares with the diminishing balance basis which is the general rule under Canadian tax law.

The normal capital cost allowance for machinery and equipment is 20 per cent on the diminishing balance basis; that is, if a machine costs say $1,000 an amount of $200 would be deductible in the first year, and in the second year 20 per cent of the remaining balance or $160 would be deductible. In the third year $128 would be deductible, and so on. Under the proposed incentive the cost of machinery may be deducted over a period of two years whereas under the normal rules only about two thirds of the cost of the machinery would be deducted by the end of the fifth year.

I mention this because the extent of this incentive is very great indeed, and in the opinion of the government it will mean a great speed up in investment in the private sector of the economy in the next two years. In order to qualify for the accelerated allowance—

Mr. Woolliams: That is the thing; qualification.

Mr. Gordon: It is not qualification. I think the word "qualify" is clear enough. In order to qualify for the accelerated allowance the machinery and equipment must be acquired by the taxpayer in the period commencing June 14, 1963 and ending June 13, 1965. That is the nature and the extent of the incentive, and I think it is fair to say that this incentive is greater and will probably have more important results than any other incentive that I can recall of this kind.

The requirements which a company must meet to have a degree of Canadian ownership and control are contained in detail in the resolution. First, the company must be a resident of Canada. Second, there are certain requirements concerning ownership of the company's shares which must be met. On this point companies have a choice between two tests. Test A is that no less than 25 per cent of the company's voting shares must be beneficially owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, one or more corporations controlled in Canada or by a combination thereof. Test B is that the voting shares of the company must be listed on a stock exchange in Canada, and a non-resident company or an individual alone or with associated persons must not beneficially own more than 75 per cent of the voting shares of the company. In other words there will be at least 25 per cent of the stock available for Canadian investors.

The third condition is that at least 25 per cent of the directors of the company must be resident in Canada, but this requirement does not apply until 1965, the purpose being to give companies a chance to meet the requirement. It is not normal to change directors in the course of a year.

This portion of the reference also provides that a company which is the wholly owned subsidiary of a company that qualifies as having a degree of Canadian ownership and control shall also qualify, provided it is resident in Canada, and four years commencing after 1964 at least 25 per cent of its directors are resident in Canada. Now, obviously a time must be established for measuring or determining whether a company has a degree of Canadian ownership and control. A company will be regarded as having a degree of Canadian ownership and control during a taxation year if, during the period—this is the whole period—of 60 days immediately preceding that year it meets the stipulated requirement. For the first taxation year of a new corporation, its period is the first 60 days in that taxation year.

Subparagraph (d) of the first paragraph defines what is meant by a corporation controlled in Canada for the purposes of this provision.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I think it is generally agreed, and it is a course that has been followed throughout the years on the first item of the resolution in committee stage, that a general discussion is permissible not only of the particular section but also of the entire field. Then as time goes on the individual items are dealt with as they come up. I mention that because the minister spoke with bland optimism of the hope that if we could get through this measure this afternoon we could proceed with other items. I would think this particular resolution is one that, on the basis of the reaction of Canadians generally and people abroad, deserves the fullest consideration and examination by parliament. Naturally the official critic of the opposition, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, will deal in detail with these various matters.

However, I thought that it might be appropriate, in order to get a background for the discussion, to consider the courses that were outlined by the minister in the budget and the reaction that has resulted therefrom, not only within our own country but particularly abroad. I mention this because you will recall that for several years the Liberal party, then in opposition and also during the two recent elections, spoke most critically of the attitude taken by the previous government. They said we were anti-American when we took the stand we were pro-Canadian. Never in the widest stretch of our imagination would we have thought of bringing in the kind of legislation suggested by the present government, knowing full well the detrimental effect such would have not only on Canada and its economic advancement but as well on our relations with the United States.

The purpose of several of these resolutions is to interfere in Canada with foreign investment. Never did we at any time take such a stand. We wanted to see as many as possible Canadian industries Canadianized. We wanted as well to assure that United States business subsidiaries coming into Canada should adopt an attitude of responding to Canadian objectives rather than having their course determined in a foreign country, however friendly. But they said we were anti-American when, in taking a stand on behalf of Canada, we endeavoured to bring about generally by conversations or arguments the objectives that the present government now says can only be brought about by legislation so drastic that already Canada's economy has been aversely affected.

You will recall, sir, the manner in which the various members of the present government maligned us, condemned us, pilloried us as anti-American. Never at any time did we even consider the possibility of going as far as this government has gone, because we had received our advice from trained civil servants. We knew what the effects would be. However, for some reason this government rushed in. I am not placing responsibility on the Minister of Finance. He is just the tribune for the rest of them. He gave them the plan and that plan has had, as I said a moment ago, a tremendously detrimental effect upon Canada's economy and upon Canada's image abroad. I intend to refer later to some of the recent editorials. I was pictured as one who would bring about a disruption in the wonderful relations with the United States that the previous government had enjoyed. Read the editorials today. All over the United States they are saying, in effect, nothing could be worse than what we have today in Canada. We are surprised; we are shocked. The Hyannis Port honeymoon is apparently over.

There was to be a new field of operations, a new spirit of Canadian-United States relations. They spoke of these things. In the budget they did everything they could to undo the possibility of good relations with that country. We believe in a strong Canadianism. We have said that. But, sir, what has been the effect? Does anyone think President Kennedy did not have before him a plan when he made the announcement yesterday? Had not Canada given him ample proof of ways that could be followed to bring about not an expansion of trade but a reduction, not an expansion of investment but a grave diminution?

As a matter of fact, on the basis of President Kennedy's message yesterday I do not think the Minister of Finance could have brought about the objectives he enunciated in the budget speech as effectively as the Kennedy plan will.

I wonder to what degree yesterday's drastic action on the part of the United States was in some way made excusable by the inexcusable measures that were proposed by the Minister of Finance in the budget. We believe in the objective of Canadian owned industry. We have taken that stand throughout, but these provisions as to the percentage of voting shares beneficially owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, and one or more corporations controlled in Canada, are as ineffectual in the administrative field as was the 30 per cent securities tax of unlamented memory.

They called it a face the facts budget, and now Canada faces the music as a result of the action taken yesterday. I do not know what manner of men brought about the various items in this connection, and I am referring particularly to those that deal with the need of Canadianizing Canadian industry; but on the basis of the last few weeks there is no Canadian who can deny that the chronology of the budget has been a continuing record of disaster unparalleled in Canada's parliamentary history.

It is a record of haphazard incompetence. The budget, and a number of these sections to which particular reference will be made, are the product of a government without a plan and without direction. The budget has been called everything, including a blunder budget and the vanishing budget. There are various sections in the Income Tax Act resolutions that I believe should also be withdrawn. They should be reconsidered, because they represent ill digested economic consideration of the effects that would follow such drastic, and in part quite ineffective, legislation.

When strong protests were made there was retreat. There are equally strong protests being made against various sections of these resolutions, and on the basis of those objections I think it would have been infinitely better for the government not to have engaged in a series of irresponsible declarations, followed by irretrievable retreats, but to have proceeded slowly and with full consideration. The government wanted to do all these things in a matter of a few days, but it was not the speed with which it operated that brought these economic monstrosities into being, because all of them were set forth in the book written by the minister.

But, sir, what has been the effect? Yesterday the President of the United States, in a special message to congress, asked for an immediate new excise tax ranging from 2½ per cent to 15 per cent on the purchase of securities issued in 22 industrialized countries, and this tax is to remain in effect until December 31, 1965. Yesterday the Prime Minister said he did not accept the suggestion on my part that Canada was the most affected country, but all across the nation, yesterday and this morning, the stock exchanges have indicated that Canada is the one nation most affected as a result of this action.

Where was this wonderful spirit of consultation that was developed at Hyannis Port? Yesterday the Prime Minister said "Oh, Canada was put in a special position; Canada was advised yesterday morning as to what was going to be done." Well, Mr. Chairman, the pressmen of the United States were given full information at least 12 hours before Canada was even considered.

What was Canada's reaction? What did the government say to the United States in the face of this drastic plan? What will be the effect? One of the principle items in United States newspapers over the last few weeks has been a suggestion that in view of the unbelievable action taken by the Canadian government, which was supposed to be superfriendly to the United States, retaliatory measures would have to be taken by the United States. I am not saying that what has been done is in that classification, but I recall the fact that in 1962, in the month of May, when we found it necessary to take economic action in regard to our foreign exchange, and when in June 1962 we borrowed from the international fund and took drastic action because of our international exchange difficulties, these magicians opposite said that what was being done represented the results of incompetence on the part of the then government.

What do they say about the United States now? Is this the result of incompetence? Is it the dilatoriness of the Kennedy administration that brought about the situation in respect of which action was taken yesterday? How they talked about incompetence on the part of the former government, but do they apply the same adjectival exaggeration to the Kennedy administration which had to take action yesterday, and which sees the most powerful nation in the world having to secure a grant of $500 million from the international monetary fund?

What is Canada's position now? Can she raise any objection to what is being done in the United States Can she argue that there should be some alleviation? Can she point out that we have the greatest trade with the United States, both ways, of any country in the world, and that therefore there should be some consideration given to Canada? No one would now advance that argument after the attitude implicit in the action taken by the government in its budget.

I would very much like to know the degree by which American antipathy has been materially increased as a result of the proposed 30 per cent tax on stock sales to foreign investors. Even though ridiculed by members of the present government, our relations with the United States over the last few years were on good terms, but we did not bow to demands on the part of the United States as to what we should do, and we did not fly in the face of the United States as did this government. I cannot understand why these supermen who sit opposite, these workers of economic magic, had no idea what the consequences would be of the totally inexcusable action taken in the budget in various particulars. That it was inexcusable is shown by the fact that the government turned tail and ran for cover on its 30 per cent takeover tax. I am hoping that the minister and the government, having established an unenviable record of declaration and retreat, will even now before this debate is over be prepared to suspend consideration of several of these items which cannot but have a detrimental effect on Canada's economy.

What is going to be the result of this? Administratively it will create chaos. I would like to know how the 25 per cent is going to be determined, on which day of the year it will apply. How are we going to police this without a tremendous bureaucracy? The very thought answers itself. I submit that in the philosophy of the budget, instead of it being one to provide for an expanded economy it has been a crippling one, slowing down economic activity. As a matter of fact only yesterday Mr. Kierans, the president of the Montreal stock exchange, had something to say about this. He is no friend of this party, but is close enough to the Liberal party to be a prospective Liberal candidate for election to the legislature of Quebec in support of Mr. Lesage—

An hon. Member: Another honeymoon ended.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That may not mean that he has too close a relationship with the government. He said that the action taken yesterday by President Kennedy, if it is approved and adopted by congress, will slow down economic activity, will hinder ready access to United States capital markets and will bring about higher interest rates. What happened yesterday was an understandable consequence of the government's attitude in this budget. I am not saying it was the result of it at all; far from it, but it gave to the United States an object lesson as to what could be done between friendly nations. I repeat what I said earlier—

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the right hon. gentleman a question. Is this the explanation that he thinks the United States will make to the United Kingdom?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not care what explanation they may have made to the United Kingdom. I am thinking of Canada-United States relations.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad to see this. It is one of the first times that the United Kingdom has been brought into debate in this house by representatives of the Liberal party as an example of what Canada should do.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am dealing with Canada. The United Kingdom had nothing to do with the kind of nonsense that was embalmed in these resolutions and in the budget. I am speaking about what this government did by way of providing an object lesson to the United States as to action that might be taken. It is the most serious situation, according to John Meyer, that we have ever faced in this nation; and he is one who is quoted with respect, his opinion at all times being given full regard.

I know the government will not like my saying this, but I think I may generalize, without going into particulars, by simply saying that they instituted measures in the budget with no idea, apparently, of what the consequences would be. They instituted measures that were completely oblivious of the possibility of retaliatory measures being instituted. We cannot say anything to the United States now; we cannot say "Well, now, this thing is wrong; this is unfair; this is going to have a detrimental effect upon our economy". Five hundred and eighty million dollars have been invested in Canada by the United States since January 1 this year. That investment will certainly be materially reduced. Municipalities across Canada desiring to borrow in New York will find themselves unable to do so. Yet when the question was asked yesterday it was brushed aside as if it were of no particular consequence. Furthermore I suggest that in what is being done in general there is a violation by the present government of the spirit of the tax convention. What we have done by the threat inherent in the budget is to compromise Canada's position.

I am going to leave in a moment, Mr. Chairman, because I have a luncheon engagement. I simply summarize what I have been trying to say. The philosophy inherent in this budget is not in keeping with our relations with the United States. It is dangerous to the economic strength of this country; nobody can deny that. No matter how they would salve it over, the fact remains. I believe in Canada determining its own destiny, in a Canada in which investment coming into this country shall be used for the purposes of Canada and not on the basis of the determination of any other country, however friendly. I say that when this is taken together, the whole philosophy, the packet plan as it were, it is a philosophy that cannot but have the effect psychologically and economically of interfering with Canada's growth and expansion. Instead of being a budget to help us develop, to give Canadians a new sense of adventure, to build up equality of opportunity in all parts of Canada, the philosophy in the 1963 budget is the antithesis of the idealistic objectives that were set out by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, as the Leader of the Opposition has dealt with a number of subjects in a rather general way and has sought, it seemed to me, to suggest that the particular budget resolutions which we are considering had such far reaching effects that they influenced President Kennedy in making his statement to congress yesterday, I thought it might be helpful to hon. members of the committee and to the public, perhaps through the press, to remind hon. members of just what this message from the President deals with and what it is trying to accomplish.

It seems to me that perhaps some hon. members have not had an opportunity to read and fully study the message, and there were moments when I wondered whether the right hon. gentleman opposite had really fully appreciated the implications of what the President was setting out to do. The message the President sent to congress is entitled "Special message on the balance of payments". The proposal for an interest equalization tax is only one of ten points that he brings to the attention of congress, and I would point out that he devotes only about one tenth of his message to this particular subject. It is one of a number of means by which the U.S. administration hope to improve their over-all balance of payments.

There can be no argument, of course, that the U.S. balance of payments has been weak and that it needs to be strengthened. In his message the president, as always, outlines various weaknesses and various means to overcome them. I suggest to all hon. members that we in Canada can be glad that the United States is taking steps to improve its international position and to ensure the continuing strength of the United States dollar. The greater part of world trade, after all, is conducted in United States dollars, and it is by far the world's major reserve currency. Anything that may disturb the flow of world trade or may undermine international confidence is bad for a country like Canada with such a huge stake in international trade and international investment.

The United States balance of payments has in recent years been weak in an over-all sense, and it has been weaker in some directions than in others. While the United States has been running a substantial deficit, certain other countries have been running a corresponding surplus. While the United States has been losing gold reserves, other countries have been acquiring them. The major surplus countries are those in western Europe, and they include France, Germany and Italy in particular. It is in these countries that interest rates are substantially higher than they are in the United States.

In his introductory paragraphs on the interest equalization tax the President refers—and I quote his words—to—> —the wide differential between long term interest rates in the larger industrial countries and the United States.

Then he goes on to refer to the inadequate capital market mechanisms in many foreign countries. These remarks are clearly not intended to describe the Canadian situation. Nor would it make sense, I suggest, if they were so intended to apply to Canada, because the fact of the matter is that Canada, so far from being a surplus country in this context, is as we all know, and we know it with regret, a deficit country. This country has run an international deficit for more than a decade, I think entirely with the United States. The deficit which we run bilaterally with the United States is even larger than our over-all deficit, because in our case we happen to run a surplus with overseas countries. Year by year we paid over to the United States foreign exchange that we had earned overseas. In other words the United States, far from running a deficit with Canada, has in fact been running a substantial surplus with us, and year in and year out we have used capital that we have raised in the United States to pay that country for the surplus of goods and services which we import from them.

Actually, as I have indicated, the capital we have raised in the United States has fallen short of their surplus with us. The governor of the Bank of Canada pointed out in his annual report for 1962 that:

> While the net capital inflows from the United States to Canada in recent years have been very large, they have been less than our current account deficits with that country.

Under these conditions the United States would surely not wish to cut down their capital exports to this country.

Mr. Martineau: May I ask the minister a question at this point?

Mr. Gordon: I would be glad if the hon. member would wait until I have finished my remarks. We do not, to speak broadly, raise any more capital from the United States than we need to pay for the very large bills that we run with them. We have raised capital, as I have said, in the United States to pay the bills which we have incurred there. It was the temporary failure to raise capital which brought so many undesirable consequences a year ago, including the Canadian tariff surcharges which were, if possible, even more unpopular in the United States than they were in this country, and that is saying quite a lot. It is not credible that the United States administration would be trying to incur a repetition of this situation.

Our early studies of the proposed United States tax which we have been discussing reinforces the opinion that it could have important effects, and I am confident unintended effects, on this country. As was stated earlier today, the Secretary of State for External Affairs has already advised the ambassador of the United States that we have serious worries about the tax proposal and that we shall want a discussion of this matter with United States authorities. The right hon. gentleman was careful in the words he chose and in the way he would make a statement and then qualify it. I say this in no—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): In admiration.

Mr. Gordon: I do not say it in admiration, but I do say it in no critical sense. He left certain impressions which I think it might be desirable to clear up, because I am sure he would not wish to leave any impression which was not strictly accurate and true.

An hon. Member: I would not be too sure of that.

Mr. Gordon: I say that in all sincerity. I am sure that anyone who has been in a position of responsibility in this country, as the right hon. gentleman has, would not wish to say anything or give any impression that would in any way worsen a situation which at the moment is a little delicate. I do not think it is too delicate. I think we will get out of it all right, but I am sure the right hon. gentleman—

Mr. Monteith: Who left the impressions last June?

Mr. Gordon: —would not have wished to do anything which would aggravate the situation. If I may call it one o'clock, Mr. Chairman, we might all go and have some lunch.

At one o'clock the committee took recess.

[Mr. Gordon.]

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Gordon: I was saying, or suggesting, at one o'clock that while I was sure the Leader of the Opposition had not made any such suggestion the suggestion has been made that this proposed tax which was recommended by the President of the United States stems from, or is even in retaliation against, the alterations in the withholding tax which this committee is about to discuss.

This suggestion, if there is such a suggestion, can only be based on a misunderstanding of the nature of the alterations which the government is proposing. On balance, what we propose involves a substantial reduction, not an increase in our resident withholding tax. The tax is reduced immediately from 15 per cent to zero in relation to Canadian securities purchased by tax-free bodies in the United States and elsewhere. It is reduced immediately from 15 per cent to 10 per cent on income paid by corporations offering to Canadians at least a 25 per cent participation in their equity and directorate. The increase from 15 per cent to 20 per cent would only apply to corporations which, after the lapse of two and a half years, still do not offer Canadians that degree of participation. On balance, I repeat, we are proposing to reduce, not increase, our withholding tax.

Even if the United States were considering retaliation, and even if there were something to retaliate against, which of course there is not, I cannot conceive that any great and responsible nation would take measures against 22 countries, including its principal allies in the free world, in order to affect only one of them. To suggest any such thing would be the height of naïveté, as the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands aptly pointed out yesterday.

In his message, the President indicates the priority to be given to the United States interest equalization tax. I quote:

> I have been assured that the house ways and means committee will be prepared to give high priority to this proposal after action has been taken with respect to the over-all program of tax reduction and reform now before it.

On this basis, having in mind that congress will be considering this proposal after it has dealt with this somewhat controversial question of tax reduction, it is my understanding that it will be weeks, perhaps months, before action can be expected on this measure. In the meantime, we shall have ample opportunity to discuss with our United States friends the possible effects of the interest equalization tax not only on the Canadian financial system but also on our economy as a whole and on our balance of trade and payments. In this connection I should like to quote a paragraph from the joint communique issued on May 11 at the end of the Hyannis Port meeting to which the right hon. gentleman referred earlier between the president and our Prime Minister.

> The President and the Prime Minister stressed the interest of both countries in the balance of payments between them and with the rest of the world. The Prime Minister drew particular attention to the large United States surplus in the balance of current payments with Canada and noted the importance of allowing for this fact in determining the appropriate policies to be followed by each country. It was agreed that both governments should always deal in a positive and cooperative manner with developments affecting their international trade and payments.

I suggest to you, Mr. Chairman, and to the members of this committee that this is the spirit in which we should approach this particular measure which the president has proposed and put before congress.

(Translation):

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, 22 countries of the world are being subjected at the moment or at least in the future to that tax on imports of American capital into their countries. That 15 per cent tax was announced yesterday and we learned about it in the house yesterday afternoon. Today we could witness the reaction. However, the amazing thing is that we only know the reaction of the Canadian government. The countries of the world who are proud of their liberties and of their national sovereignty did not see fit to express the reaction that we, in Canada, have displayed.

I would compare the situation to that of a new born infant. For some time, he thrives on his mother's milk but at a certain age, he is considered old enough to feed himself and he is weaned. Then he is left to develop by himself through his own efforts. Our country, the product of the confederation pact sealed 96 years ago, is still today like a child as it is entirely dependant for its subsistence on a foreign country.

The president of the Montreal stock exchange, Mr. Kierans, himself, said yesterday that Canadians have always depended on the tremendous savings generated in the United States to finance at an ever-increasing rate our Canadian economy. Canadians did not finance their economy, that was done rather by savings coming from the United States. We were not capable of financing our economy.

And yet, if we go back over 300 years, we will find that the first settlers came to both countries about the same time. How is it then that they have been able to grow, survive and build an enormous industrial empire without help, when we are still dependant on American finance?

Mr. Chairman, contrary to what others may think, in view of the fact that we have been unable to fend for ourselves, I personally rejoice that the country that has been nursing us is doing us the great service of forcing us to stand on our own feet. I welcome that and I hope that from such facts, we will learn to find our wings, to find our own feet in the development of our economy, which can be done, because we have in Canada businessmen and industrialists just as clever and bright as those of any other country in the world.

Today, we are taught a hard lesson which had to come, and I hope it will teach us to find our own feet. For too long, we have depended on decisions taken in other countries. Today, we can now start taking our own decisions. We are in a too large degree the victims of foreigners or of American capital. We can free ourselves, so let us take advantage of the situation. This should be an opportunity to reconsider our economy and all our finance structures in such a way that we will become our own masters in our own land, controlling what we did not control heretofore, that is the capital needed for our investments.

In the sentence I quoted a while ago, Mr. Kierans said:

> The tremendous savings generated in the United States.

Why does not the Minister of Finance reconsider our monetary system, so that we too can generate the capital and the credit we need for the development and the progress of our economy?

I think that the present Minister of Finance, being a good accountant, would be able to father that new economy which would make enough capital available to enable us to develop ourselves a Canadian economy. As a matter of fact, we do not need foreigners to do this. We are able to do it ourselves.

Let me give you an example. Only recently, the sales tax on building materials was increased. In this connection, I read in today's papers that according to some municipal authorities, interest rates will rise and it will be harder to obtain capital on the American market, precisely because of this new tax.

Mr. Chairman, it is Canadian citizens who are responsible for the development of municipalities, because they are the ones who manufacture and assemble the materials used in the construction of public buildings or of public services in Canada. In fact, there is only one thing which our Canadian citizens have not made up to now and that is cheques and coupons, the bits of paper which are used to carry out that development.

Mr. Chairman, the Minister of Finance does not seem interested, even if he is in a predicament today, to hear the suggestions that are made to him, so that he may really become the Minister of Finance.

What is he doing at the present time? He is still trying to solve the problems resulting from the decisions of foreign capitalists. Yet, the solution is simple. It would merely be a matter of seeing to it that the creation of the credits necessary to the development of our country is resumed, for and by the Canadian people, as at the present time, such credits are controlled and created in most cases by foreign bankers.

It is a very simple suggestion, Mr. Chairman.

As the hon. member was saying, credit accounts—

Mr. Habel: A subject that seems easy enough.

Mr. Gregoire: But it is easy to those who want to understand. On the other hand, those who do not want to understand may find the matter difficult.

But the Minister of Finance should endeavour to realize that our country is able to develop itself and that it is not only on account of our lack of capital that it is not doing so, for capital can be more easily built up than our country.

In fact, it is easier for the Minister of Finance to try to build up the required capital for our country's development than it is for all our manufacturers, workers and farmers to achieve actual production in the country.

This lesson should help us find a new orientation for our economic system.

These days, we are considering the establishment of an economic council. It is sought to develop our industries by means of an economic development council. The government wants to develop our country but it forgets one thing, namely that that cannot be done without the consent and support of American capitalists and financiers. Even if Canada has the required workers, industrialists and producers, it cannot put them to work because it does not have the permission of a few financiers.

Under those conditions, and in view of the restrictions imposed by a handful of small American or foreign financiers, I wonder what a group of members of parliament who have been democratically elected by the people, can decide.

I am also wondering what is the meaning of democracy in our country. And what can the Canadian people say if all those decisions are subject to the approval of foreign financiers?

The Minister of Finance is no longer the minister of finance. He cannot control his finance because he is always the victim of decisions made by foreign financiers who control everything. A case in point, the moment he announces that a tax will be levied he has to withdraw it because a certain stock exchange president has come to see him.

Indeed, I should like to know why the Minister of Finance does not hasten to inform President Kennedy of all the administrative difficulties he himself had to face when he imposed his 30 per cent tax. He should even lose no time in sending Mr. Kierans to Washington to explain to them the administrative difficulties facing the Canadian government. I think President Kennedy would withdraw his tax since we are told it is for that very reason that our Minister of Finance had to withdraw his. But let me tell you that, for my part, I never believed that administrative difficulties had forced the Minister of Finance to withdraw his 30 per cent tax on the sale of Canadian shares to non-residents. In fact, I can give him examples of many other taxes which have given rise to more serious administrative difficulties, not only to the Minister of Finance, but to all Canadian taxpayers. In my opinion, if there is someone who should meet with difficulties, it should be the Minister of Finance and not the taxpayers.

Nonsense. Has not the sales tax on building materials given rise to administrative difficulties for those who are in the building field? One needs merely to look over the letters of protest sent to the minister to see that my contention is right.

In fact, have we ever heard in Canada of a single tax with which Canadian taxpayers had no difficulties? I challenge the Minister of Finance to name one tax that did not result in difficulties for Canadian taxpayers. Yet they were never withdrawn. Quite the contrary, they were increased as much as possible.

All levels of governments increase those taxes, and the Minister of Finance is anxious to make us believe he withdrew his 30 per cent tax because he was faced with administrative difficulties. Nonsense.

All taxes cause difficulties. The true reason is that the United States wanted to establish its own tax.

It is well known that the American under secretary of state exerted pressure. The Minister of Finance gave in and, less than a month later, the American government levied exactly the same tax, except that its rate is 15 per cent instead of 30 per cent, and that the profit goes to the American government instead of the Canadian government.

Mr. Chairman, as I said a moment ago, I did not take the floor to protest against the 15 per cent tax proposed by President Kennedy. On the contrary, it has my full approval, and if the President of the United States wants to increase it to 75 per cent, so much the better. This tax will prove that we cannot rely on American capital, on American investment to ensure the growth of our economy and that if we want to survive in the world's economic struggle, we must act as the United States did when they wanted to develop their country, we must create our own capital.

As a matter of fact, they were successful in that field. They created the necessary capital to establish the whole industry they have at present, and they went even further. They created additional capital to develop Africa, South America, and other countries and to invest in Canada.

Would anyone try to make us believe that Canada is not able to do the same? If the Minister of Finance is prepared to accept a shortage of capital because the Americans want it that way, I am against it, I cannot accept the situation and I tell the Minister of Finance that he must assume his responsibilities, since it is his duty and he must set up a monetary system in order that Canadians be the masters of their capital and this not only as far as administration, but also as far as creation is concerned, because money, capital and credit are created some place; they do not fall like manna from heaven, they do not grow in potato fields, they are created some place.

Capital is created by men, by individuals. There has not always been a monetary system; it is a human invention. Men have invented it because they felt the need for it. When there was no money, Mr. Chairman, I must say it was most inconvenient.

In stories about pre-historic times we read how the citizens of that era walked about with an axe on their shoulders. At that time, there was no monetary system, and no money, there were no "quarters" and it was most impractical.

If the Minister of Finance had lived at that time, and had wanted two eggs for breakfast, when getting up in the morning, but having no eggs available and nothing but a camel, for instance, he would have had to barter his camel for two or three cows, then one cow for two or three sheep, and again one of those sheep for a couple of pairs of footwear, only to barter one of them for two or three chickens, and one of those chickens for a dozen eggs. By that time it would have been midnight before he could have had his scrambled eggs for breakfast.

At that time, Mr. Chairman, there was no monetary system, and it was really most inconvenient. Nowadays, men have set up a monetary system. It is a human invention. If man has been bright enough to invent a monetary system, I wonder, Mr. Chairman, why at this time he has not enough brains to improve it when it is defective, as it is now the case in this country.

Mr. Pigeon: Set up the printing press.

Mr. Gregoire: I see that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) has again interjected one of his whimsical remarks, though he has been put in his place several times. And I remember that the present Prime Minister told him before that his interruptions were not always clever. Now, I believe that the Prime Minister was right, because, when somebody does not want to understand, he does not.

In my office, I have a painting which I could show to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm; it represents two feet.

Mr. Pigeon: After the next election, you will not be in this house.

Mr. Gregoire: Mr. Chairman, I continue my remarks to say that, today, we have an example which shows us that at this time we must endeavour to reorganize our finances and our system in order that we may take action and develop by ourselves.

Since the Bank Act and the Bank of Canada Act are to be amended next year, I think a study and an analysis should be undertaken right away of the transformations and amendments which should be brought forward so that the Minister of Finance, the government and the Bank of Canada can create in our country the capital needed for our own development, without having to toady or to grovel before foreign investors as we have been doing since confederation.

Mr. Chairman, it is urgent to develop a new school of thought in our country: the finance separatist school. We must separate from our continuous dependence on foreign investors, and such a project would be Canadian from sea to sea. The ten provinces could set up an arrangement to see to it that our country would become independent from foreign capital. It is simple, Mr. Chairman.

I ask the Minister of Finance to think it over. Let him pay a visit to his bank manager. Let him go and get a loan from him. We saw him lately pass a resolution to borrow $1,500 million, but let him ask his bank manager what he does when he grants a $100,000 loan to a friend. The bank manager will tell him that he takes his pen and writes some figures in a bank book. At that moment, he is creating new credit which will represent the wealth of the nation.

Why should we leave that in the hands of one individual only? Why should not the wealth of the country instead be represented by assets and credit which would belong to Canada and be under the "control" of the Bank of Canada instead of remaining under the "control" of a few investors? The Minister of Finance should consider the way the necessary credit for the development of Canada can be built up, and then, he will not complain, as he did today, about the American government levying a new tax that will slow down our country's business.

Is it not amazing, Mr. Chairman—and serious, in my opinion—that a mere statement by the president of another country is enough to bring about on the Canadian stock exchange fluctuations as the ones we have witnessed yesterday and today. A mere statement by the president of another country is enough. If we were really controlling our economy, we would not be the victims of those decisions made outside of Canada.

If the minister accepts this situation, we do not. We have to learn to become an adult nation, capable of governing ourselves without being continually in bondage to foreign governments and dependant on their decisions as far as our economy, our policy or social system are concerned.

[Mr. Gregoire.]

Mr. Chairman, it is a lesson for us. Let us try to profit by it and to improve our legislation in order to become truly independent in our own country.

(Text):

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I should perhaps first state that I propose to discuss the income tax resolution. This may limit my rhetorical style, but that is the subject upon which I propose to address the committee.

I hope you will pardon the personal note when I say I rather regret that my first contribution to either the budget debate, or the discussion on the resolutions arising from it, does not take the form of being complimentary to the Minister of Finance and of commending the resolutions.

I would very much like to have done so for the personal reason of long friendship with the minister and a great admiration for his attractive qualities. Also I would like to have gained a reputation for originality, because I have not noticed anybody either in the house or in the committee saying a kind word to the minister or about his budget. But unfortunately, Mr. Chairman, the fact of the matter is that candor compels me to say this is an extremely bad resolution, and I propose to try to say why I think so.

The purpose of the resolution, as announced by the minister, is to advance Canadian control of our economy. That is indeed a very laudable objective; but it is my view, on looking at this actual resolution, that it will not only fail to fulfil that purpose but, on the contrary, the natural result of the effects of this particular resolution will be to do precisely the opposite and minimize the degree of control which Canadians will have over their economy. I shall later give my reasons for saying that.

In my view, and I summarize what I am going to say before I say it, the resolution is administratively inept. It will succeed in irritating foreign investors and completely frustrate the good intentions it is supposed to serve. This resolution is both delusive and deceptive to anyone who believes it is likely to increase Canadian control of the economy.

The minister announced that its purpose was to deal with the problem of non-resident ownership and control of Canadian industry. He gave us some of the figures in his budget speech, and pointed out that in 1959 57 per cent of the manufacturing industry in Canada, 75 per cent of the petroleum and natural gas industry, and 61 per cent of the other mining and smelting industry were controlled by non-residents. The resolution we are discussing was designed to deal with this problem, and I can say that no one in this corner of the house, or in this party, is likely to quarrel with that purpose or disagree with it as an attempt.

We are all facing this problem of foreign ownership and control, but in my submission it is not enough to have good intentions. We have been told that the road to hell is paved with good intentions, and I suggest that the road to political disaster can also be paved with them.

Let us examine the particular resolution in question. It provides, as the minister has told us, a form of incentive or a benefit, by way of accelerated write-off of depreciation, for corporations which are described in the resolution as having a degree—and I ask the committee to mark these words—a degree of Canadian ownership and control.

These corporations with this degree of Canadian ownership and control are to receive the benefits of the incentive in this accelerated write-off, and in another section of the resolution, in the diminution of the withholding tax.

Let us examine what corporations with a degree of Canadian ownership and control will so benefit, and what will be the result. There are two groups. I leave out some of the unnecessary additional classifications, but basically there are two groups. One is a corporation of which not less than 25 per cent of its voting shares are beneficially owned by one or more individuals resident in Canada, or one or more corporations controlled in Canada, or a combination thereof. In other words an incentive is to be given to corporations, which are owned by foreign investors, to divest themselves of 25 per cent of their stock, and presumably to sell that stock to Canadians so that they will qualify for this particular incentive. This is one way in which they will qualify for the incentive.

I am not going into any elaborate discussion of the matter, but I say it is a perversion of language to suggest that a 25 per cent ownership of a wholly owned American subsidiary amounts to any control whatsoever. I know in law no less controlling situation than to be a minority shareholder where you have unified majority ownership on the other side. You have no control whatsoever. The very best you can do is make a nuisance of yourself under certain limited circumstances by seeking to get the corporation wound up and its assets sold. You do not control action in any shape or form by this 25 per cent ownership.

But, Mr. Chairman, that is not the real difficulty here. The real difficulty is that this will work this way: It will give an incentive to the American corporations to try to divest themselves of part of their share capital to a minority of Canadians, and it may in turn give an incentive to Canadian investors to invest in these minority interests in foreign controlled corporations. Again I emphasize I am talking largely of wholly owned American subsidiaries.

I am fully aware of the fact that 25 per cent of ownership may give a control in certain circumstances, where the remaining ownership is widely diffused, but with a wholly foreign owned subsidiary this 25 per cent amounts to nothing that would in any circumstances be called control.

What will be the result of this provision? It is that Canadian investment funds, that might be available for investment in truly Canadian corporations, and which would give some real measure of control, will be drawn into this phoney sort of control, namely into minority interest in a wholly-owned subsidiary of a foreign corporation.

There is only a very limited amount of Canadian capital available for investment and it has been estimated—I do not know how accurately—that to acquire a 25 per cent interest in these foreign owned investments in Canada would require $4 billion. Even if a small percentage of that $4 billion, available in Canadian savings for investment, is channelled into this minority control by reason of this incentive, by so much will Canadian control in its own equities and ownership be divested from Canadian owned and controlled companies, and Canadian control will be diminished, rather than advanced under the terms of this resolution. Indeed the situation is worse than that because the second part of this resolution envisions that not even a minority interest will necessarily be Canadian.

Under clause (B) of the resolution it is provided that a corporation is deemed to be by law, under this resolution, to be a corporation with a degree of Canadian control—and I presume the statute will follow the same terminology—if:

> —the voting shares of the corporation were listed on a recognized stock exchange in Canada and it is established, in prescribed manner, that no one non-resident shareholder owned beneficially, together with any other person associated with him at any time in any period, more than 75 per cent of the voting shares of the corporation,

There is an element of Canadianism in the fact that the shares have to be listed on a recognized stock exchange in Canada. I presume that means, under the regulations that apply to recognized stock exchanges, a certain amount of shares would have to be offered on that exchange for purchase by Canadians. But it is perfectly possible, under this regulation, that a corporation would qualify for these incentives when, say, 74 per cent of the shares were owned by a syndicate in New York and 26 per cent of the shares were spread around amongst foreign investors in Philadelphia, Boston and what have you. Yet if the terms of this resolution were carried into the legislation this would be deemed to be a corporation with a degree of Canadian ownership and control. It certainly will have very little Canadian ownership, and I venture to suggest it will have practically no Canadian control.

Therefore the clause, if it is used as the basis of granting the incentive the minister speaks of as being an effective incentive—and that is how he opened his remarks—that particular incentive will be given to someone on the basis of a supposed "degree of Canadian ownership and control" when there is in fact no control and very little ownership. I say it will utterly fail to achieve the supposed purposes of the minister and the supposed purposes of this particular resolution. In fact, it aids precisely the opposite development; that is, the abstraction of Canadian investment funds from availability for investment in the ownership of their own equities.

Mr. Chairman, I had intended to spend a little time reading from various quotations in the financial press—I do not always get the opportunity to cite them in support of my own arguments and theories. These quotations point out the administrative weaknesses and difficulties of this proposed resolution. They are many and varied. The assessment of beneficial ownership is an extraordinarily difficult task and the possibilities for corporate manipulation are infinite. The administrative difficulties of applying this regulation will be tremendous, as has been pointed out by qualified financial advisers in the press. I think that part has to be looked into very carefully.

Then you get strange phrases like this, "One qualifies"—I think these were the minister's words—"for these incentives if there is not a non-resident shareholder, together with any other person associated with him who owns more than 75 per cent of the voting stock". It is true, Mr. Chairman, that this is not the legislation and is only the resolution, but what does a phrase like "any other person associated with him" mean? It is the vaguest, loosest sort of language, impossible to administer, with no real meaning. The ability to conceal the fact that a person is associated with you is the simplest thing in the manipulations of the financial world at the present time, and I defy the minister or his advisers to produce legislation that will make that part of the resolution administratively workable or intelligent at all.

I just want to add this, Mr. Chairman. In my view the whole philosophy that underlies this resolution is punitive. When saying that, I think I speak for the party I represent in this house. The whole philosophy is one of punishment; it is punitive; it is gimmicky; it is not really tackling the problem that is involved. As I say, it will have the effect of irritating foreign investors who, as the minister says, we still need for the development of this country. But it will do nothing whatever to meet the real need, which is to promote and give leadership to the investment of Canadian funds in Canada, to mobilize Canadian resources for the development of our own country. The positive, and not the punitive, approach is the one that is necessary if this problem of foreign control is to be solved. Let us give up these punitive gimmicks of which this resolution is a sample and, I would say, a very poorly drawn and inadequate sample.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, in other circumstances I would have liked to conclude my remarks by urging the minister to withdraw this particular resolution. But I realize that unfortunately from his point of view the room for retreat and manoeuvre is limited at this stage; therefore I can hardly hope to persuade him to withdraw this resolution. But whether it is withdrawn or not, I say to him and to this committee that the excellent, well intentioned purposes which were announced for this particular resolution will not be served by the resolution and the legislation proposed, and that in actual fact it will defeat, rather than assist, the solution of the problem with which we are all concerned; that is, the problem of domestic, Canadian control of our own economic destiny.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to reply very briefly to my friend the hon. member for Greenwood. As he said at the opening of his remarks, we are very old friends, and I can assure him that nothing he has said today will change that by one iota. He was kind enough to tell me last night that he might have something to say on the resolutions today and that he might have occasion to disagree with me in some respects. I would remind him that our friendship has not been weakened in the past by disagreements on a number of occasions, and I see no reason why it should in the future. I would remind him, though, that when this matter was being discussed in the first place, in the budget speech, at page 1001 of Hansard for June 13 I did not refer to the control of these companies. What I said was that a 25 per cent interest is, in most cases, appropriate to ensure that a Canadian point of view is always available when company policy decisions are arrived at.

The hon. member may disagree with that. I have had the kind of experience he has had with some of these companies, and I do know that if a Canadian point of view is available to management when they are making decisions, it makes quite a difference. I suggest to him that there is quite a difference between the policy decisions of wholly owned Canadian subsidiaries and those where there is an important and legitimate minority interest. There has to be. In discussing this matter during the budget speech I went on to say that a smaller percentage than, say, 25 per cent would probably not be sufficient for the purpose; that a larger percentage would neither be necessary nor, in many cases, practicable. I think the latter part was the point I had particularly in mind, because I agree with him that we are not in a position in this country to find all the capital that we need for all the purposes that are crying out for it. At this stage I do not think I wish to get into a debate with the hon. member on the particular criticisms that he offered. I think I will just leave it by saying that I was not completely convinced by all his arguments.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, this first paragraph deals with two different facets. It deals, in the first place, with an accelerated depreciation, which is one matter on which one could have a discussion and a debate and there might be differences of opinion as to the effect and the benefits derived therefrom. But I would suggest that this is perhaps the minor facet at the moment, despite what the minister said this morning about its importance. I think perhaps this is a minor part of the resolution, because when you adopt this resolution you are also adopting the definition of the Canadians of this corporation who, under certain circumstances, will be entitled to this accelerated depreciation.

I could not agree more with what was said a moment ago by the hon. member for Greenwood with regard to this matter. I agree entirely. It is a rather welcome relief that I do so because we cannot agree entirely on some of these matters. So far as the inadequacy of the definition, its purpose and its futility is concerned, that is something which goes to the root of the resolution. It is the reason why we should not allow the resolution to go through at this stage. The incentive or the depreciation in itself is not so important. It plays a part, of course; but once you adopt this paragraph you are adopting the same definition so far as the withholding tax is concerned, and when you are dealing with the withholding tax you are dealing with what I think is a particularly vicious and wicked section of the resolutions which should not be considered at any time.

What we are really doing here, as I see it—and if I am wrong I am sure the minister will correct me—is defining the good boys and the bad boys. The good boys are going to get cookies and cake by way of incentives; the bad boys are going to get hit over the head. I suggest that this is the first time in the western world which I can recall where there have been incentives for the good and not the bad, where there have been carrots and clubs for a given taxation period.

If I read the definition aright, the minister was faced with a very difficult administrative problem. There is no question about that; he admitted it. When he first brought in his bill he provided for 25 per cent Canadian ownership, although I think he faced the fact that this was probably impossible to administer. Anyway, he withdrew it and now you have a situation where a company must be listed on the Canadian stock exchange and not more than 75 per cent of such company can be owned by an individual or by associated companies. In other words, a small group. Let us take Ford of Canada, for example. If 74.89 per cent of Ford of Canada is controlled by the Ford family, shall we say, the other 25 per cent listed on the Canadian stock exchange could be—and in some other corporations they might be—owned by people in Ghana, in Holland, in Germany, in France, in Switzerland and in England, and not one single share owned in Canada. As long as the Canadian directors who are officials of the company are resident here and it is called a Canadian corporation, we are going to give it tax incentives and benefits. Let us take another example. My hon. friend for Ontario has a corporation in his constituency, General Motors, which employs a few dozen Canadians—14,000. General Motors, as I understand it, is a wholly-owned United States subsidiary. Whether that is right or wrong is a matter one could debate for some time. But we were told by the government that the fundamental problem was that of employment, of ensuring employment. I think a man who could get a job with General Motors would be just as happy as if he had got a job with Ford of Canada. Yet General Motors cannot qualify for these incentives, if they want to put in new equipment, because they are not in that category where they have a few resident Canadian directors. They are the bad boys, whereas some other corporation would be a good boy.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that undoubtedly if there are shares listed on the Canadian market there is bound to be the odd Canadian investor. Surely this was not the intention of the minister when he wrote his first book. Surely this was not the intention of the minister when he wrote his second book. And surely this was not the intention of the minister when he wrote his budget. Then we were going to have at least 25 per cent Canadian control. How utilitarian that would be is debatable, yet it was a major objective and something which, if it could have been administered, might have been a success. But that has gone, and now you have left the 75 per cent ownership. As long as it is not more than 75 per cent owned outside Canada by associated companies or a family or group of that kind, then the other 25 per cent may be owned by Canadians in whole or in part, or may not be owned by Canadians at all. As long as you have the requisite number of Canadian directors who may now be officials of the company, which was precluded before—they may not even be Canadian citizens, but as long as they are Canadian residents—this qualifies the company for preferred treatment. As I have said, I do not think this is so vitally important in this case where we are dealing with depreciation, although that in itself is important. But it is of vital importance when we are going to deal with the withholding tax. Once we adopt the definition in this section, the position will be the same as when we are dealing with the withholding tax.

For that reason, particularly in view of what happened yesterday in the United States when we did not know, as the minister said, what the reactions would be or what results would flow from the presidential message, this is not the time to be adopting definitions or passing laws which will further complicate our relations with our investors in other countries. I would urge that the committee not pass this paragraph this afternoon but that it be stood over until such time as the situation is clarified. We think that the committee, the house and the country should have more opportunity to consider it and then deal with it concretely.

There are many other things which one could deal with, Mr. Chairman. I have a dozen questions which can be asked but I am sure others have too. All I want to do for the moment, in support of the hon. member for Greenwood, is to point out what to my mind is the absolute futility and inconsistency of this definition. If there was ever a case of gimmickry on gimmickry, then this is a gimmick to outdo all the gimmicks in creation.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, as we are now discussing paragraph 1 of version 2 of the fourth edition of the budget I feel we must have some sympathy with the hon. member for Greenwood. I also have some sympathy with the Minister of Finance in the position he finds himself as minister. We all recognize the need for revenue, and one point which is so often missed by those who would comment on the federal financial scene is that the Minister of Finance has control over but one third of the expenditures which are within the four corners of our federal budget expenditure, because there are so many statutory items over which he has no real control. One can recognize that in this day and age the Minister of Finance requires extra revenues, in addition to which, of course, not only has he to meet the level of expenditure which existed prior to his assumption of office, but we have been given notice of a veritable flood of expenditures which are to come. Of these a good number will be statutory items or of a nature over which the minister will have no future control. So he has his problems.

The budget, the minister told us on opening night, was to be a budget which would stimulate industry and provide employment. Then on the famous Monday night when we had the explanations we were told that the purpose of the budget was to provide more revenue. Then, of course, we know that there was another objective in this budget, and this was the implementation of the philosophy of Canadianization of companies or Canadianization of foreign investment in Canada. But what has been the result? I would suggest to the minister this will have the contrary effect. We were told, with respect to the removal of the 30 per cent takeover tax, that this was being done because of administrative difficulties. I can understand the views of the minister in this regard and disagree heartily with the opinion expressed by the hon. member for Lapointe whose knowledge in this field is, I suggest, in inverse proportion to his volubility when he talks about there being an absence of administrative difficulty. I have heard it said in Ottawa—it is notorious—that the people in the Department of National Revenue responsible for these matters were consulted somewhat late in the day and that the difficulties were therefore not apparent until the minister was committed to the budget and had announced his plans. Then he was obliged to say: we planned to do this but we now find it is impossible.

This provision was, we were told, an attempt to get United States investment out of equities and into bond holdings. I have no quarrel with the proposal made by the United States President. He and his government are facing a serious and complicated problem. They are taking action and it will affect us. But the effects of this proposal, if the proposal is implemented will, I suggest to the hon. gentleman, be the reverse of what he wished to accomplish by means of his budget. The heaviest incidence of the proposed United States tax will be on longer term investments and bond holdings. Instead of United States money coming into Canada and flowing into the bond market rather than into equities, the reverse is likely to happen because the United States proposal would subject investments in bond holdings to the heavier tax rate. Admittedly this is what appears on the surface of the president's proposal, and we do not know how the measure may be amended by congress. However, this is what I gather from the face of it and I intend to leave the matter at that point.

Now we come to the purpose of these resolutions, which is to provide an incentive for certain categories of companies which have a so-called Canadian content. They are told that at least 25 per cent of their directors should be resident in Canada in order to qualify for these benefits or, as was explained by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, there must be some odd combination in relation to the holding of voting shares. On this point, the resolution is far from clear. It says—"And it is established in prescribed manner". I realize, of course, that we cannot expect to have the details with regard to this at the resolution stage but it would be most interesting to know what the prescribed manner will be to establish that—> —no one non-resident shareholder owned beneficially, together with any other person associated with him at any time in the period, more than 75 per cent of the voting shares of the corporation.

Then we come to this business of the number of directors. No doubt it is felt that by this provision a certain Canadian content would be given to a corporation or business. I do not know what type of corporation the minister has been accustomed to deal with, but I can tell him that there are a number of jurisdictions in this country where it is possible to establish corporations in which the directors need hold no shares at all. It is possible to do that today in the province of Alberta; it merely means the inclusion of an appropriate clause in the articles of association. I myself, as a solicitor, have often participated in such arrangements merely to comply with certain provisions and regulations of this particular kind. I would strongly suggest to the minister that this requirement is a hollow one. It means nothing. There could be compliance with the letter but not with the spirit of the law. Companies can get away with it, and it means absolutely nothing.

I am puzzled, too, by the procedures to be used to determine the ownership of shares where the Canadian resident holds shares in a mutual fund. When these funds are then put into equity shares in a Canadian corporation how do we arrive at a true appreciation of the share holding? We are getting down to certain situations where there will have to be knife edge decisions.

Mr. Gordon: Not under this provision.

Mr. Lambert: Well, I should like the minister to consider this. There may be an appropriate answer, but where one has this 25 per cent Canadianism, or anywhere where there is a percentage requirement of shareholders, what does one do where there are holdings in a mutual fund?

There is another point. I suggest the requirement that a certain number of directors should be residents of Canada can be readily defeated as far as Canadianization is concerned. There are hundreds of companies in Alberta, for instance, which are involved in oil field supplies and in the oil business. Their directors are, for a good part, United States citizens, residents of this country who are shuttled back and forth by their parent corporations in the United States. These men may live for two, three, or five years in Canada, but they are here to carry on the business of a subsidary company according to the dictates of head office policy, which is American. They have done a tremendous job for the industry, but I say to the minister that as far as introducing an element of Canadianization into these companies is concerned, the requirement in these regulations means nothing. It will not introduce that element. If the government intends to introduce Canadianization in this way, let these men be domiciled in Canada or I should say become citizens of Canada. I admit it will be much more restrictive, but it is a restriction to achieve a particular purpose or advantage with respect to investment in new equipment and new plant. It is a restrictive rule, so if it is the intention of the government to give an advantage to the Canadian element why not provide that it shall be a Canadian citizen who shall be a director?

There is one further point on which I would quarrel with this resolution. I do not think that the allowance of up to 50 per cent for depreciation in a year, particularly in new business, means anything except in the odd case. If you are establishing a new business you must look to the long pull. You are not necessarily going to make money in the first two years of business. It is only the rare bird who is able to operate in the black in the first two years. Yet this individual or company is being given the advantage of a write-off of up to 50 per cent for depreciation in those two years. What good is it to him if he is already in a loss position? The purpose of this depreciation incentive is so that he will have less taxes to pay and more money available for further investment or to recover for himself.

I also suggest to the minister that even if he did avail himself of the 50 per cent, or whatever lesser percentage he chose to take, all he would be doing would be to hasten the evil day when he would have no further allowable write-off. Therefore in the third year, or whatever subsequent year it may be, he will then be bearing the full impact of the tax on income which has been established at a certain figure because there is no more depreciation allowance. You cannot escape it. You are not giving 150 per cent depreciation in this instance; you are limiting yourself to 100 per cent. Whether you write it off in two years, four years or ten years you are still going to be limited to the cost that you are going to depreciate. It is true that you are advancing it now, but three years hence you are going to be hit with the whole burden.

There are other things I should like to say with respect to other paragraphs in the resolution, particularly as to related companies. I think that is a pernicious provision. I have fought against it and there are others present who know how I have fought against it. I think it is induced by a rather illogical division between small businesses and large businesses and I hope the minister will look at it because I think there is room here for manoeuver. There is room to do something constructive with regard to corporate income tax. I agree with my colleague, the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, that this provision has too many hooks and unknown dangers for us to pass it immediately, and I would prefer to see this item stand so that we can go on with others that are less controversial.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I think that is a good suggestion. I would suggest that we leave the discussion of this particular paragraph, not the resolution, move on to other paragraphs and then come back to it. I thought that the main point made by the hon. member for Edmonton West was in connection with the depreciation or capital cost allowance of 50 per cent. It seemed to me that he was thinking primarily of new businesses; at least, that is what he talked about. With great respect to him, I would think that this provision would prove to be a tremendous incentive to many established businesses to expand. It has been in the past when people have been offered accelerated depreciation. It proved to be very effective, and I have no doubt in my mind that this will prove to be a very great incentive to increased capital investment in the private sector of the economy. But I agree with the hon. member that this will apply perhaps especially to established companies rather than to those that are not yet established.

I do not think I have anything more to say except that I agree with the suggestion that it might be a good idea if we went on with some of the other paragraphs and came back to No. 1 later.

Mr. Leboe: I have some questions I should like to ask the minister in connection with the depreciation allowance. Would it not be possible for a person to acquire a debt as well as a depreciable piece of machinery costing several hundred thousand dollars? In other words, the piece of machinery might not be needed now but rather six, eight or ten years from now and in order to take advantage of this provision the company would buy a piece of equipment for installation at some later date. The depreciation allowance would be granted, even though the company had made the purchase on the time payment plan with only a small down payment.

I have one or two other points. I was interested in the remarks of the minister about the incentive for expansion. He did not refer to expansion to meet certain markets in his remarks. I am wondering whether or not we are trying to entice people to expand their plant where markets do not exist. In my business experience, when the market was there the money generally was readily available to go ahead and expand. I am wondering, however, about creating an incentive just for the sake of expansion without knowing whether or not there is going to be a market for the product, be it a machine or something else, that is going to be made. Would the minister care to comment on these points?

Mr. Gordon: As to the first point, Mr. Chairman, it would be possible, of course, for a business to buy a piece of machinery for $300,000, or whatever the figure was that the hon. member suggested, that it would not need for some years and claim this depreciation. However, I cannot imagine many companies doing that because, after all, they would get certain tax advantages, but only up to 50 per cent and not many people will invest in machinery and have to spend at least half their own money for that purpose unless they are going to use it. There might be the odd case but I suspect only on the part of some company that had so much money that it did not know what to do with it.

On the second point, I quite agree that most businessmen are not likely to expand their operations unless they are satisfied that markets are available. But I think we all know that in Canada we have many businesses that have not kept themselves as modern and up to date as they perhaps would like to have done. I think we know that there is a great deal of obsolescent machinery in Canada and that the prime need in this country is to make our businesses efficient and modern in every sense of the word so that they can face up to the kind of competition with which they are now confronted. The purpose of the incentive is to encourage companies to modernize, to scrap obsolescent machinery and to replace it with the most modern machinery it can acquire.

Mr. Leboe: I should like to have the minister relate what he has said to the remarks of the Minister of Defence Production the other day when he said we must temper our efficiency with the idea of providing jobs. It seems to me there is a direct conflict here. In essence, we are saying we must modernize, get more up to date machinery, which will bring about automation to a greater degree, provide a greater degree of efficiency and a better product; yet the Minister of Defence Production, if you will refer to his speech in Hansard, said we must temper our efficiency, our automation, with the idea of providing more jobs. I should like to see if the minister can relate the two objectives because there seems to be a conflict.

Mr. Gordon: I am afraid I was not in the house when the Minister of Defence Production made the remark to which my hon. friend refers.

Mr. Leboe: You will find the remarks there, all right.

Mr. Gordon: I will have to look them up. I am pretty sure the Minister of Defence Production would agree with me, however, when I say that in general terms, and certainly there may be some exceptions, if Canada is to prosper, if we are going to compete with other countries as we must, we shall have to do everything we can to modernize our industry in this country. I do not think there can be much quarrel with that. The hon. member used the word "temper", and there may be occasions where other considerations have to be taken into account for a while, but by and large if we do not keep up to date in this country then we are going to get into a great deal of difficulty.

Mr. Leboe: I agree with you, and I disagree with the Minister of Defence Production.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I should like to divide my remarks into three parts this afternoon. I understand we are still dealing with paragraph 1. In particular, I should like to say a few words in a general way as a member of the House of Commons, a person who lives in the city of Calgary and represents the riding of Bow River which contains about one third of the people in the city of Calgary. I believe that in the city of Calgary, on a per capita basis, we have more people from the United States than we have from any other part of Canada. We have, in a city of 235,000, at least 35,000 or 40,000 people from the United States.

In fact, recently I was talking with the United States consul there, Mr. Madill, who has just been moved from the city of Calgary to New Zealand. He says it is one of the busiest consulate offices in the whole of Canada. I refer to those facts because I should like to mention certain things which took place during the campaign. I do not want to flog a dead horse, because the campaign is over, but these events set the whole tone of the resolution, the whole tone of the budget. If we look back at the campaign for a moment we find, and I say this without any equivocation, that far more irresponsible than any taxes that may have been imposed or attempted to be imposed by the former government, was the budget. Yet, when we tried to develop a plan, when we encouraged Canadians to invest more money in their own business, we were then labelled anti-American.

I am going to go further. I did not intend to go that far this afternoon, but there was a most vicious attack made because they labelled us anti-American. They labelled the leader of our party anti-American. I say that I do not blame the newspapers in the United States for writing that kind of propaganda: I blame the people now sitting on the treasury benches. I believe the kind of publicity that Canada is getting is probably the result of that situation that developed. The people of the United States generally are beginning to realize that probably their true friends after all were the members of the Conservative government and not the present Liberal government. I think we should always remember, and I think we should remember it outside of the house particularly, that when you attack the Prime Minister of your country, then you are attacking your country as a whole. This is something that was accomplished by those people who now sit on the treasury benches.

As I have said, I come from the city of Calgary which does contain many people from the United States. I am going to be personal for a moment. I am married to a person who is a fifth generation American. During the campaign, because we were pro-Canadian, propaganda was poured out to the effect that we were anti-American. This was false; it was deceitful; it was wrong, and it was irresponsible to the country.

I was interested in the minister's last remark before he sat down concerning competition, and how Canada must compete with other countries industrially. One of the problems of competing is, of course, modernizing our plants. One of the phrases we have heard quite often lately is to get the economy rolling in order to increase productivity. I have said over and over again when I have spoken on this side of the house, and when I sat on the other side during the time the Conservatives were in office, that we should honestly try to reduce taxes.

I believe, in that regard, I should put an interesting story on the record. We are always bringing forward programs or attempting to bring forward programs, it seems, in order to win votes. These programs increase the taxes and take taxes from private industry and from the wage earner and, as a result, increase the cost of production. Then, we are not able to compete with some of the other countries, particularly the communist countries who say their economic penetration into the western world is greater than any other kind of penetration.

I should like to put this story on record with regard to taxes before I speak to the resolution. It is a story that is reported in "Vital Speeches of the Day", for March, 1963, at page 346. This is the report of a speech on "Our Most Precious Possession", by Mr. Doan. This is what he said:

> There is a story of an old Indian who owned some oil land. He sold it for quite a sizeable sum of money. Soon thereafter the internal revenue service sent a man to see him for he had never filed a tax return. He asked why he should give 25 per cent of this money he had received to the government. The tax agent patiently explained that the government did a lot for him. It protected him from his enemies, it cared for him when he was sick, it gave him dams which made huge lakes for him to fish, and power for lights for his hut, and free money when he grew old, and for these purposes it needed money.

This is the reply the Indian gave to the man from the internal revenue department:

> Yes, I understand. It is like this: I have a dog and the dog is hungry. He comes to me and begs food. I say to him, "My dear faithful dog, I see you are very hungry. I am sorry for you. I shall give you meat." I then take my knife, cut off the dog's tail, give it to him, and say, "Here, my faithful dog, be nourished by this nice piece of meat."

This is exactly the kind of tax system we have in this country. This is exactly what we are trying to do so far as the tax structure of this country is concerned.

I should like to spend just a few moments in referring to the new tax that has been implemented by the United States. I should like to quote something which appeared in this morning's Gazette, July 19. I quote from the article.

> Eric W. Kierans, president of the Montreal and Canadian stock exchanges, noted that "Canadians have always relied on the large pools of savings generated in the United States to finance a higher rate of growth in Canada, at cheaper cost, than would have been possible otherwise."
> With Canadians cut off from a ready access to American markets, "higher interest rates seem inevitable."

It goes on to say:

> As a result, we can expect a slowing down of economic activity at a time when we already have high unemployment.

I do not think anyone would suggest that that tax was implemented because of what has taken place in what I classify as an irresponsible budget, but I do say that Canada should have been left out of the list of 22 nations mentioned, or at least our Minister of Finance should be in a position to negotiate on behalf of Canada. But, when one looks at the terms of the budget and at what he tried to do in it, but which he withdrew and retreated from like Napoleon, one cannot except the Minister of Finance to say, "Go easy with us. We are Canadians. We do not want that kind of tax. It is going to hurt our economy, and it is going to mean maybe another 100,000 men unemployed next winter."

We cannot negotiate in that fashion because we have put our worst foot forward and the chickens have come home to roost; and this was done by people who said we were anti-American and they were pro-Canadian.

An increase in interest rates could easily develop. I am not a student of this, but I question whether the minister has really completely conceived of the situation between Canada and the United States economically, and what this might mean to our exchange problems. We may face tighter money, and tight money brings back many problems and will increase the number of our unemployed.

The whole background of the budget, and the whole principle behind the books written in the past by the minister, was that if we followed certain steps, laid down in the budget, it would mean full employment for Canadians, whatever that means—when you have less than 4 per cent unemployed. Then of course you have full employment, according to him.

Mr. Gordon: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Woolliams: Certainly.

Mr. Gordon: I do not remember making that statement. I wonder if the hon. member would give the reference?

Mr. Woolliams: I have not got your book with me. It may be 3 per cent. What did you say?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I have said this on several occasions and I am delighted to repeat it. In my opinion we have full employment when jobs are chasing men instead of men chasing jobs.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Read your book. Somebody else must have written it.

Mr. Woolliams: I would say this with the greatest respect to the minister, as I understood it and maybe I misinterpreted it, I think he went so far as to say that where there is only 3 per cent, or 3½ per cent, of the people unemployed, you have full employment in Canada, and I am ready to read that paragraph into the record whenever this debate comes on again. I am quite confident the minister made that statement. He has written three books and he has written one budget, and maybe he has talked so much about this matter that he has overlooked this particular item; but nevertheless that was my interpretation of his book and the interpretation of many Canadians who read it.

Mr. Gordon: You have read it?

Mr. Gregoire: I would like to ask a question—

Mr. Woolliams: Certainly.

Mr. Gregoire: —of the Minister of Finance. Could that level of employment be achieved in my constituency?

The Chairman: Order. Do I understand the hon. member for Bow River has completed his remarks?

Mr. Woolliams: No, I have not, but I thought it was in relation to something I was saying. My hon. friend has always been so polite and kind to me that I would not want to deny him the right to anything, but if you would permit him to put the question I am willing to yield.

Mr. Gregoire: I have put my question to the minister.

Mr. Gordon: Nothing would make me happier than to have all the people in the constituency of the hon. member for Lapointe in the position where they had lots of jobs to choose from. I am sure he would agree that would be just fine.

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad to hear the Minister of Finance say that, because I do not think any member of parliament presently sitting in the house, or any former member, has said he did not want full employment. Every government that sat over there has striven for the same thing. After all, governments may make mistakes innocently and logically, but every government that sat on that side worked for full employment.

However the point I want to make is that when there was unemployment in 1957, when the Conservatives were in office, to listen to hon. gentlemen opposite one would think we had invented something new in the political world.

Coming directly to paragraph 1 of the resolution, I am inclined to agree with our financial critic that what is so strange about the resolution is that it puts one group of people in one pen and another group in another pen. You have the bad boys in one pen and the good boys in another, and one of the difficulties is to differentiate between the good and the bad by reading the resolution itself because, when you approve of the first part of the resolution, as other hon. members have said, you have then approved of the definition of what you mean by a good boy and what you mean by a bad boy.

But even if one were to take that part out and looked at the resolution as it reads in reference to the 50 per cent depreciation, what does this really mean? Applying it to new companies going into areas where there are surplus labour pools, and there is one in my own riding, Drumheller, most of these companies which start out, buy new machines and new processing equipment and would not show a profit for a number of years; so that actually the resolution as it stands is really superfluous. It really does not mean anything even if applied to companies now in operation that are showing a good profit, because if you write the depreciation off for the first two or three years then it is gone and they are going to pay this taxation on profits in later years.

The minister has already changed one of the provisions of the budget, cutting the 11 per cent sales tax back to 4 per cent and amortizing it over a period of years, but this is going to be dangerous and the full tax will be paid in a number of years.

With reference to the definition of what is a Canadian corporation and what is not, it seems to me we could have a situation, as pointed out by the financial critic of our party, where Canadians would not own any part of a company but it still could be categorized as a Canadian company. Where does that put us? It merely discriminates as between one company and another. Of two companies having almost the same identical structure, one may comply with this provision and the other may not. A definition of that nature is very dangerous and it is certainly a new type of thinking in discriminating in favour of one company as against another.

If it applies to the Ford Company and not to General Motors then it is unfairly discriminatory and unjust. On that ground I support my fellow colleagues in their contention that the resolution should be stood; but I go further and say not only should it be stood but it should be withdrawn, as the minister did with other portions of the budget, in his retreat like Napoleon from Moscow.

Mr. Pugh: I want to clear up just one point. Would the minister give a definition of residence?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, unfortunately I am not a lawyer. I gather this is a legal question and I am not in a position to give the answer.

Mr. Pugh: If the minister backing this resolution cannot give a definition of residence, how then is it to be interpreted? Surely there must be some definition. Does it mean the residence of domicile, or does it mean ordinary residence? How long must the residence be, for instance, in Canada? Also, if the minister can give us a definition of "resident"—and I am sure he can—would he give statistics to—

Mr. Gordon: I am informed, Mr. Chairman, that there is nothing in the Income Tax Act, or very little, defining "resident" but that it is to be found in the common law of the country. That is why, not being a lawyer, I am not prepared to give a snap decision; I do not think I am qualified to do it.

Mr. Pugh: Then without the definition at all, and referring to the common law of Canada, has the minister any figures to show the number of non-Canadians resident in Canada who are at the present time directors of a corporation subsidiary wholly owned other than in Canada? I am asking the minister this question because there must have been a reason for putting this residence qualification into the resolution. First of all, apparently the question has not crossed the minister's mind as to what is the definition of a resident of Canada for the purposes of this measure. Second, in putting this qualification into the resolution he must have had some object in view. There have been a great many "airy fairy" decisions on the budget already, and if this is going to be carried into this budget resolution, surely it should be stood over right now until such time as this normal type of question can be answered.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I have in mind "resident" in the general understanding of the word, but I am not in a position to give the hon. member a legal definition of it. My hon. friend may be a lawyer—he probably is—and if so, his knowledge of the common law would be very valuable to the committee, I am sure. I was not quite clear about the hon. member's second question with regard to the number of directors of various Canadian companies. There are no statistics at all on that.

Mr. Pugh: The question is this. The minister must have had something in view when he started talking about residence as being a qualification for a director of a corporation which was wholly owned in the United States, or a subsidiary. Has he any idea as to how many non-Canadians would fit into this category at the present time, because if they are resident in Canada, according to the common law or any other definition set up by the regulations which will come into effect with the passing of these resolutions, surely that fact would qualify them under this paragraph and they could be non-Canadians.

Mr. Gordon: That is correct.

Mr. Pugh: In fact, they would be in no different category than prior to the passing of this resolution?

Mr. Gordon: This resolution contemplates that directors will qualify if they are ordinarily living in Canada and therefore familiar with Canadian points of view.

Mr. Pugh: Then there could well be figures in the department at the present time which would indicate how many non-Canadians who are resident here are directors of corporations wholly owned outside Canada.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry to have to tell the hon. member that there are no such statistics.

(Translation):

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, the headlines of this morning newspapers here and there in Canada reported that the tax which has just been suggested by President Kennedy will be highly detrimental to our economy.

I must admit that many Canadians were quite surprised to learn that our economy was threatened by a decision of the President of the United States. In fact, we had been used to hearing during the last electoral campaign that, under the Conservative government, the Americans having been treated off-handedly, the Canadian people would suffer the consequences and that all kinds of retaliatory measures would be taken against them, especially in the economic field. This is why I believe that the ordinary citizen must have been surprised to learn this morning from the Minister of Finance himself that President Kennedy's recent proposal to the American congress could have such an impact on Canadians in general.

Now, what is even more unpleasant, is that after the Prime Minister's visit to Hyannis Port, all seemed to go extremely well. It will be recalled indeed that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) brought a rocking chair along, but it must have been rickety, judging from the results, and that the President of the United States gave the Prime Minister his personal flag which is seen floating over his private home. But I think that this flag must surely be flying at half-mast this morning at 24 Sussex, after the proposal made yesterday by President Kennedy.

All this brings me back to the Prime Minister's reaction after those measures were announced yesterday. Indeed, all he did was to advise us to keep calm. He said that we should not get excited, or pass judgment too hastily, but to wait and that he could not make a statement now. We heard the same thing from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon). We are urged to keep calm.

Still, as a member of the former government, Mr. Chairman, I am entitled to remind the house of the situation which prevailed under our administration and which hon. members opposite described during the election campaign as having been brought about by an anti-American party.

When we were in power, our relations with the United States were good enough for Canada to be ensured of a special treatment whenever the American government took steps to protect the U.S. dollar. That is precisely what happened in the case of American defence contracts. Indeed, after Mr. McNamara, the American secretary of defence, met with members of the former cabinet and heard their representations, the United States government made an exception for Canada because of our excellent relations with our southern neighbours.

The result was that Canadian manufacturers continued to be treated the same way as their American counterpart concerning the award of United States defence contracts.

I cannot understand, Mr. Chairman, why the present government has not done anything, since the announcement of this policy, with a view to obtaining special treatment from the American government. After all, it seemed that the famous trip to Hyannis Port had settled every misunderstanding which could exist between our two countries. But one could ask today why Canada is put exactly on the same level as San Marino or the sovereign principality of Liechtenstein?

Frankly, Mr. Chairman, when we know that Canada—

Mr. Lamontagne: Just like France.

Mr. Balcer: Indeed, I could point out to the President of the Privy Council that, according to today's newspapers, during the first half of 1963, Americans bought $590 million worth of Canadian bonds, that is 67 per cent of the over-all amount of foreign bonds purchased by United States citizens. Mr. Chairman, Canada, which sold nearly 67 per cent of all foreign securities bought by the United States during the first six months of 1963, will be the first country affected by President Kennedy's plan. I feel it is our government's duty to suggest to the United States a preferential treatment for Canada, based on a good neighbour policy.

After the hullabaloo of Hyannis Port, and in spite of the outcry directed against the previous government during the last election campaign, the present government has done nothing, and Canadians feel disappointed.

The Minister of Finance urges us not to exercise ourselves unduly, as the proposed legislation has yet to be approved by the United States congress, and this may take several months. We are told that even if the measure were passed in the fall, it might find itself seriously amended.

The Minister of Finance thus tries to bring us some comfort, but actually we are left dangling in mid-air. Our financial circles find it much worse to remain in such state of uncertainty, than to know hard facts.

Mr. Chairman, it does seem rather childish to try and seek solace in the thought that the legislation has not yet been approved by congress, for we know, through the president's statement, that the proposed measure would become retroactive as from yesterday July 18, and we are aware that the Canadian stock exchanges have already been affected by the United States proposal.

Besides, one has merely to study the stock exchange to appreciate the effect of the new measure taken by the United States on the Canadian market.

Mr. Chairman, bearing in mind the action taken by the United States against Canada, we should consider very carefully the resolutions under study.

I believe also that the warnings given by the members for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan), for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) and for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), should be taken into serious consideration by the house before taking actions that would be merely aggravating, inefficient and would cause uneasiness in Canada itself. These measures, instead of stirring up industry and trade, will result in a more serious decline in business.

Mr. Chairman, we must be very careful when we are dealing with our neighbours to the south. We can see the extent to which what is going on south of the 45th parallel can affect our economy. That is why I believe that, if the Minister of Finance wants to promote Canadian economy, he must find perfectly accurate means which leave no room for doubt, in order that there be no discrimination between investors residing in Canada and those who invest money in Canada, that is foreign investors and Canadian investors. There should be no discrimination between them.

A climate of prosperity must be restored in Canada. We should welcome foreign capital to a certain extent, and that is what must be determined with the greatest care.

Let us not forget that, in all Canadian cities, from the smallest to the largest, municipal councils are spending vast sums of money to bring in new industries. I might point out that it makes very little difference to those municipal councils whether the funds are American, French, English or Canadian. What they want is work for the Canadian people.

I realize we could go too far in that direction, but nevertheless we must make sure that all steps taken to curb foreign investments are capable of having beneficial results and do not constitute an obstacle to the development of our country.

That is why I feel those resolutions, as drafted, do not suit that purpose and why I agree with the views expressed by the hon. members I have mentioned at the beginning of my remarks.

(Text):

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, after quite a number of people have spoken on these resolutions it might be rather difficult to sound original, but perhaps something is to be said for expressing a somewhat similar idea in a different way; and sometimes the purposes of emphasis might be served by repetition by a number of people. On the question of emphasis, for example, it is not too often that I have heard in this house speeches made by hon. members on the left hand side of these benches quoted with approval. However, I did think that the speech of the hon. member for Greenwood touched upon what I consider to be one of the most fundamental faults in the budget presented by this government, namely the concept of the punitive aspect of taxation as compared to the encouragement of Canadians to achieve what the government is setting out to do. Certainly nothing could be more unsettling to the country as a whole, or more discouraging to investors both here and abroad, that the wild gyrations of the minister in withdrawing so many of the budget items. But it was not just the fact that these items had to be changed which was so bad; it was the fact that they were so startling and severe. The takeover tax, which was so quickly withdrawn, in itself could have done very little harm in a very short time if it had not been such a rude departure from all that had been expected of this government. While nothing may be gained, in some instances, from refighting the last election, I think that in order to appreciate the impact which this action had on the country, the effect it has had on the budget, and how it is affecting the confidence of investors and businessmen in this country, we should look again at the situation.

The fact is that the Conservatives had been branded as anti-American. They had been branded as anti-American by the concerted efforts of Liberal propaganda over a considerable period of time. I would say that for political purposes the Liberals had gone far out on a limb on this and had played the theme that they are the friends of the Americans, and had stressed the importance of having a government friendly to the United States. They had sold the country on that, and sold the Americans to quite an extent on the idea that they would be that government. They had sold the people of this country on this, that if they came into power their mere assumption of office would restore the confidence of the business community. Here would be a government which would get along well with the United States, and in this way it would restore the confidence of the United States investors and Canadian investors and smooth the path toward economic well-being.

It is against this background that we must consider the action of the government. In addition to the budget as originally presented there were the items which have now been removed from it, and the budget resolutions are before us now; all are inextricably woven together. Certainly I thought there was some justification for the early Liberal propaganda when the change of government first came about, and that there might be something to the fact that the business community now had more confidence in the government than they had when the Conservatives were there. Certainly, all the organs of propaganda, the press in this country most of which had been favourable to the Liberals, as well as most of the press in the United States immediately began to hammer home the theme that now we had a government which understood co-operation, a government which was steady and reliable, a government which would take the commonsense viewpoint which this country needed if it was to meet the challenge ahead. I think the tide of propaganda which poured out did, for a little while begin to have an effect. Businessmen began to feel that at least the situation had stabilized, that we had a government which could swing the country behind it and that we would enjoy a period of stability, if nothing else. When we measure these expectations against the dismay brought about by the punitive measures announced by the Minister of Finance, we begin to understand the degree of shock felt by our friends in the United States who had hoped for so much. Had such a measure been introduced by a Conservative government which, through constant propaganda, had been branded as anti-American, it might have been considered in a different light. It might have been resented to a certain extent, and those who had been influenced by propaganda might have tried to make something more out of it; but I believe it would have been considered fairly objectively. However, it was presented by a government which had done nothing but stress the importance of friendship with the United States, a government which had made so much political capital out of our balance of payments difficulties. When we appreciate this fully, we begin to realize why there was so much consternation at the hon. gentleman's announcement, not only in this country but throughout the United States.

We in this house have begun to recover in the last day or two from the shock we felt at President Kennedy's message to congress about the contemplated tax on shareholdings abroad. It should be remembered that the position of the United States in this regard is very different from our own. Canada is almost completely dependant on outside capital for its continued economic expansion. President Kennedy could implement a step such as this knowing that its results, while they might annoy foreign institutions, would not affect him too adversely, because United States generates more than sufficient capital within its own borders for its own needs. For anyone to suggest that if President Kennedy can do it a nation such as ours can do it, is to miss the point completely. Canada is just emerging from its position as a supplier of raw materials. We are only beginning to find our real stature as a manufacturing nation and we have a long way to go before we achieve the industrial capacity we must have if we are to overcome our employment difficulties. There is no suggestion that in the near future we are likely to become independent of outside sources of capital for investment. For a long time we shall need substantial sums to build up the industrial complex for which we must strive.

Since we are today so extremely dependant, we are therefore extra sensitive to the reactions of our friends, not just to friends in the United States but to those of potential investors around the world. This is what makes the budget resolutions so important. It is this extreme sensitivity which has led to so much consternation throughout this country. It is this extreme sensitivity, this extreme reliance on the confidence of other investors, which I suggest must make us extra cautious and extra critical with regard to the remaining budget resolutions. To begin with, we must see if there is in the remainder of these resolutions the same sort of punitive attitude which has been taken with regard to almost every item so far. I am suggesting we should look at each item on the basis of asking ourselves whether we find an attempt to drive people into doing what we want them to do, to punish them if they do not react in what we consider to be the proper way, or whether we find an honest attempt to encourage them to invest their money in ways which will best help this nation. If we do this we will be looking at the resolutions in a manner which is most likely to help both the government and the country.

I am not at all encouraged by what I see on a quick review of these resolutions. I am not happy with the provisions made for judging what is Canadian ownership. To begin with, it seems to me we find here a preoccupation with surface appearances rather than with what really happens down deep. In fact, mere window dressing and bookkeeping effects are, I suggest, what we have here. Certainly, anyone who is at all conversant with Canadian affairs is aware of the necessity to overcome our balance of payments difficulties. These difficulties are, I suggest, tied to the fact that we are so dependant on outside capital. Canada, as I said, a minute ago, is only now emerging as a manufacturing nation but Canadians are not heavy investors. It does seem to me that where one has a country which is so much in need of capital for its development and where the inhabitants are perhaps the most cautious investors per capita of any in the world, what we should most look for in budget resolutions is a way in which we can change Canadians into investors rather than savers.

It does not make sense to punish some people for transferring shares—to discriminate between one class of shareholders and another by means which, I suggest, are artificial, particularly at a time when we are overlooking at least one most obvious source of capital. There is nothing in these budget resolutions, I suggest, designed to encourage Canadians to invest more. There is nothing in them designed to encourage Canadian companies to get Canadians to buy more of their shares. I suggest it would be hard to tag a scheme as being mere bookkeeping or more propaganda if there were solid tax incentives allowed to a company which could say that a larger percentage of its shares was actually held by Canadians. We should not look only to the Canadian financial community or to the major trust companies for funds. It does not take a lot of arithmetic to consider that we have four or five million working people in this country and if we could encourage each of them to invest $100 in Canadian companies we would almost halve our balance of payment difficulties.

It may be I am too pessimistic when I suggest $100 per year, or maybe I am too optimistic. I am suggesting that this would provide a large untapped pool and that in the budget resolutions there is not the slightest attempt to get at it. I am aware that the Liberals during the election campaign had a scheme to set up an investment pool owned by the government with the idea of selling bonds to the Canadian people. I am opposed to that for many reasons, one of the principal ones being that I think it would place a large amount of money in the hands of the government which could be manipulated by government advisers to the detriment or disadvantage of industries and businesses in a way I should not like to see. In addition, it smacks to me too much of socialism.

Certainly there is nothing wrong with trying to convert the Canadian workingman into more of a capitalist by encouraging him to own a good percentage of Canadian industry. If I am right in my modest estimate of $100 per person invested by four or five million Canadians and if I am correct in my simple arithmetic that this means an investment potential of $400 or $500 million, and having in mind the apparent cure that this would be for most of our balance of payments problem, I may be forgiven for being somewhat critical of the government for not giving any consideration whatsoever to this in the budget resolutions.

To come back to where I started, I do not know where the minister got it but this conception of punitive measures to try to force people to hold shares rather than encouraging them through incentives is where we go wrong. I do not want to belabour the point too much. However, I suggest to the committee that my idea of trying to get Canadian working people to invest has one more aspect to it in that it does avoid the difficulties of anti-Americanism that showed up in the budget resolutions before, or the suggestion that might now be made that because the Liberals were so silly about putting this in in the first place they cannot now adequately make representations to the United States government to save us from the possible harmful effects envisaged in President Kennedy's message to congress.

We will be much less dependant on the inflow of foreign capital if we generate a lot more of our own. More than that, I suggest that we are going to earn the respect of other countries throughout the world if we learn to stand on our own two feet a little more. The simple fact is that today Canadians are spending a higher percentage of their wages on daily consumption than are most other people. To put it bluntly, Canadians are much more selfish as a people than the people of most other countries in the world. If you want to get ahead and stand on your own feet you must be prepared to make sacrifices. It is the duty of the government to encourage the Canadian people to make these sacrifices. It is the duty of the government to point out to the Canadian people how helpful this would be, that all they have to do is to invest a little more.

I suggest that any scheme devised to get Canadians to invest more is bound to meet with failure if in the budget resolutions no encouragement is given to them and if in fact this aspect is ignored completely. How, I ask you, are Canadians to understand the basic difficulties of finance in this country if the government is going to ignore them in a budget which they themselves so loudly proclaim is to get the wheels of industry moving again.

I intend to speak on several items where specifically I think the opposite effect is achieved to what is desired. I believe that what is desired is to encourage more Canadian control of industry. It is not my understanding that this is a simple bookkeeping entry or that it is simply to discourage foreign investment. I believe that what the Minister of Finance had in mind was to bring in resolutions which would result in more Canadians investing money in Canadian industry, more Canadians owning Canadian industry, Canadians having a bigger share in Canadian industry, and making it more attractive to companies which now have money invested in Canada to have Canadians taking a bigger part than they now are. But I suggest this is unrealistic unless Canadians are going to dig into their own pockets and buy that percentage of industry. There is no such thing as holding a percentage in a different way in different companies. You might be able to influence things slightly but, boiled down, control and ownership in order to mean anything to the Canadian economy is investment control, the actual number of shares controlled and held by Canadians. We cannot do this until Canadians dig into their own pockets, and I suggest that we take another look at this resolution and encourage the Canadian workingman to start investing more.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, I am still a little worried about the use of the words "resident" and "non-resident" as they apply to shareholders and directors in this resolution. When I first asked the minister for a definition of "resident" he said he really did not know. He said later that it would be as the common law would indicate. This would seem to indicate that there must have been a tremendous amount of indecision in actually drawing up the budget resolutions. Since last speaking I have had a chance to look at some legal dictionaries and I should like to quote from The Dictionary of English Law by Earl Jowitt who was lord high chancellor of Great Britain from 1945 to 1951. Under "residence" we find the following:

> This word is used in law to denote the fact that a person dwells in a given place, or, in the case of a person, residence connotes the idea of carried on there: thus, if a company is formed in England for the purpose of carrying on a trade (such as mining or manufacturing) in a foreign country, but its business is under the control of a board of directors in England, the company is said to have its residence in England. In the case of a person, residence conotes the idea of home, or at least of habitation, and need not necessarily be permanent or exclusive. The word denotes the place where an individual eats, drinks and sleeps, or where his family or his servants eat, drink and sleep.

In another volume, Stroud's Judicial Dictionary, third edition, page 2569, the words "reside", "residence" and "resident" are dealt with, and I find the following:

> "Residence" signifies a man's abode or continuance in a place. What is the meaning of the word "resides"? I take it that that word, where there is nothing to show that it is used in a more extensive sense, denotes the place where an individual eats, drinks and sleeps, or where his family or his servants eat, drink and sleep. A man's residence is where he habitually sleeps. "Residence" has a variety of meanings according to the statute or document in which it is used. It is an ambiguous word and may receive a different meaning according to the position in which it is found. The words "residence" and "place of abode" are flexible, and must be construed according to the object and intent of the particular legislation where they may be found. Primarily, they mean the dwelling and home where a man is supposed usually to live and sleep; they may also include a man's business abode, the place where he is to be found daily.

Then, there is a reference on page 2571 which refers to residence as regards income tax acts. There are a number of citations given there. I quote:

> Domicil has here nothing to do with the meaning, for a man can have two or more residences in two or more different countries, but can have but one domicil; "residence", as regards income tax acts, has much the same meaning as in the Representation of the People Acts—

Then, farther along I find this:

> Residence does not only mean residence on land; a residence, even by a foreigner, on his yacht anchored in English waters, suffices for liability to income tax; so also a man employed in Africa whose wife and family in Scotland received the bulk of his salary, was held to be a person residing in the United Kingdom, for purposes of income tax.

What I am suggesting to the minister is that the intention of this act, as expressed by other members, is in all probability to give greater preferment to Canadian investors and also to Canadian directors. I am satisfied that the way the provision is drawn now, without any definition coming from the minister as to residents or residence, practically any person who resides in Canada for even a short time could qualify for the purposes of the provision as it is now set out. The same situation applies to a director. I feel that the definition which was previously requested should be given. If the words residents or residence are not sufficient, then some other words should be set forth. Would the minister now do so?

Mr. Gordon: I should like to thank the hon. member for what I feel is a very valuable contribution. I feel it is very helpful to have this explanation. I think perhaps he will agree that I was not too far off when I said this was a rather complicated subject. There is a lot of law on it with which I am unfamiliar, not being a member of his profession. I thank him for his contribution.

Mr. Pugh: May I follow that up? The whole question is, do we get a definition or do we not? What was in the minister's mind when he introduced this in the budget, and also in the budget resolutions? We are today supposedly ready to pass this resolution, yet we have not got a definition. What I am suggesting here, as I have said before, is that Canadians get no preferment in any way, shape or form in so far as investment in Canada is concerned. In other words, practically anyone can qualify as long as he has a residence in Canada for ever so short a time.

I believe the same situation applies to a director. I asked the minister before if he had any figures as to the non-Canadian directors now resident in Canada and who are directors of firms which are controlled within the United States wholly or as subsidiaries. It is quite obvious that unless we do get some form of definition of residents or residence, or some binder on that in point of time, then we do not know where we stand at all.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member knows, in fact I am sure he does, that the Income Tax Act has been based on the concept of residence ever since it was first introduced in 1917. It has never been formally defined in the Income Tax Act, but it has been developed through a series of decisions. So far as I know, the whole act is based on this concept and this particular proposed resolution, which will be followed by a bill, follows the conception that has been developed. I suppose I should not say that it was the original concept when the income tax was introduced. There is no difference between residence in this case and residence under the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Macdonald: If I might add to what the minister has said, I would refer the hon. member to section 139, subsection (3) of the Income Tax Act. There has been considerable jurisprudence developed on this particular section and also under the general law. It may be found in the Commercial Clearing-house Service on Canadian Income Tax, in McDonald on Canadian Income Tax—no relation—and the Deboo service, as well as many other services. Not only does the statute provide for this situation but defines the particular situation where a person is resident or non-resident, and that has been fully gone into by the Canadian tax courts. I think the answer to the hon. member's questions could be found there.

Mr. Gordon: I should like to add a word of apology, if the members of the legal profession in the house will not misinterpret it. I understood that the hon. member was a member of the legal profession. I understand now that he is not. If he is not, I apologize for any misunderstanding.

Mr. Pugh: Still a member of the profession, but not practising.

Mr. Woolliams: In so far as subparagraph A is concerned, I should like to put this question directly to the minister. In view of what has been said by other members, under formula A, if you can call it a formula, is it not possible for a foreigner or a group of foreigners residing in Canada, taking the idea of residence from other hon. members, to own a 25 per cent block of shares bought by foreign capital and qualify under formula A? In other words, a person may not be a Canadian citizen, but so long as he is residing in Canada and owns 25 per cent of the voting stock, even if it were brought with foreign capital, he could qualify under formula A. Is that not correct?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, that is correct.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, I put the next question to the minister. Does the same situation not apply to formula B? In other words, is it not possible for a person residing in Canada to own these shares bought with foreign capital, and still qualify under formula B? In other words, this really does not encourage Canadians to make Canadian investments. Is that not the answer?

Mr. Gordon: All I can say is that it is based on residence and not citizenship.

Mr. Lambert: If that is the situation, then I fail to see what the minister is trying to get at with this particular clause, this provision in the budget. If the purpose of the budget is to encourage Canadian participation, Canadian investors, in equity stocks, then residence, I put to the minister, is not the criterion. There are too many loopholes. All you have to do is have a company, a foreign company, and this applies whether it is British, French, Belgian or otherwise, or even in the West Indies where you have income tax at 2 per cent, and have the officers of the company residing here to carry out the functions of directors. I know some companies that are domiciled there, and how they invest in Canada. The capital comes from there. All they do is send out officers of these companies who are residents while they are carrying out the functions, and the instructions come from the foreign firms; but they own the shares in the provincial companies that are established here, and these particular companies qualify for these exemptions.

It is true enough that the minister is encouraging investment in new facilities. That may be an incentive, but on the other hand I tell him in all sincerity that I do not think with this provision he will encourage Canadianization of equity capital if he is going to limit it to a residence qualification, because a residence qualification means nothing.

I suggest that if he wishes to guarantee the same end by introducing the concept of citizenship, then we would get somewhere more in keeping with the stated objectives of the budget.

Mr. Gordon: That is a point of view. My own view is that that would be going too far at this stage.

Mr. Woolliams: I would like to put the same question once again to the minister. Under formula A is it not possible for a foreigner, or a group of foreigners residing in Canada, who own a 25 per cent block of the voting shares bought by foreign capital, to qualify? In other words, that section does not mean anything so far as the objective of the budget is concerned.

First of all, it does not encourage Canadians to invest. It does not have to be Canadian capital. A foreigner residing in Canada can buy shares with foreign capital from another country, and he qualifies. Surely that is not the spirit of the budget?

Mr. Gordon: In the first place, as the hon. member will see if he reads this carefully, under A it must be beneficially owned; so if people buy these shares with money supplied by a foreign corporation they would not be beneficially owned. Second, under B the point is very simple, that this gives all Canadians a chance to buy these shares, if 25 per cent are available and are listed on a stock exchange. They will not have to buy them, but they will have a chance to do so.

Mr. Woolliams: They have a chance to buy the shares now.

Mr. Gordon: No.

Mr. Woolliams: They have the chance to buy the shares in the gas line company in Alberta.

Mr. Gordon: It was the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I think, who referred to General Motors of Canada. I would like to know who has a chance to buy a share in General Motors of Canada?

Mr. Woolliams: A lot of Canadians own General Motors stock.

Mr. Lambert: The minister has referred to stocks that are listed, but there are a lot of companies in Canada that are private companies. I will not say there is a majority, but this applies to private companies as well. I would suggest that the real equity development in this country comes first of all from privately owned companies.

Mr. Gordon: That is a matter of opinion, and if you took the totals your opinion might not be supported, but the private companies come under clause A.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): There has been an interesting discussion with regard to this resolution and we have dealt in general terms with the budget. In the last few minutes I think my cohorts got down to the gist and the meat of what is meant by this resolution, but first of all I would like to say a word or so of general comment with regard to the whole aspect of what we thought might be in the resolution and of what we had hoped would be in it.

The people of Canada were led to believe that our economy was stagnating in 1962 and early 1963. This is what the Liberal party told them, and the members of that party said they had to get the economy rolling again. I looked for something in the budget that would stimulate the economy and not hinder it, not drag it back, not control it and not limit it. To my amazement I found controls, limitations and hindrances and now, in dealing with this particular resolution, we see a great deal of nonsense because all the differentiating between paragraphs A and B is causing concern among companies and will accomplish very little for Canadians.

In 1962 we had a growth rate of 8 per cent in the gross national product. We were told this was not enough. We were also told unemployment was too high, and when the budget came along we looked for something which would increase Canada's growth rate and decrease unemployment, which were the announced intentions of the budget. But what do we see? We see an idea that Canadians should re-invest in Canada.

There are two ways through which this can be effected—through incentives and encouragement, or through controls and force. It reminds me of the old saying that you can lead a horse to water but you can't make him drink; and this is something of which the minister should be well aware, because he tried several ideas in his budget. He has withdrawn some of them, and he is finding out that others will accomplish very little.

We see a great deal of confusion on the part of the government this afternoon with regard to the actual interpretation of the first part of the resolution. I think the hon. member for Bow River was quite correct when he said all one has to do is reside in Canada and own 25 per cent of a company to get the advantage of this part of the resolution. One does not have to become a citizen and take an active part in the development of the country, and there is no specified length of time for residence. As the hon. member for Bow River pointed out, many Americans are already residing in the city of Calgary.

The minister, when he was asked how the differentiation would be made, said 25 per cent of the voting shares would have to be beneficially owned. As I interpret this, it means it will be his decision to determine whether they are beneficially owned, and certainly if a person, company, association or group of persons have 25 per cent of the voting shares of a company operating in Canada we would hope it would be operating beneficially for Canada, and of course beneficially for themselves. These two tests, differentiating the way in which shares are held, actually amount to no real test. They give the minister very little guidance in using his judgment as to whether or not any given company is beneficial to Canada.

This is the way I interpret his remarks in this regard. He has tried to explain resolution No. 1 to the committee. He has done nothing but confuse the issue by perhaps not knowing just how these two tests will apply. The examples of Ford and General Motors have been used. One of these companies, under his category, is a good company and the other is bad. Surely the workers at General Motors feel they are getting paid just as well as those at Ford. In fact, perhaps there is more employment with General Motors than there is with Ford. They are both competing and making the same type of product, and surely if we are to tax either, they should be taxed on an equal basis. These companies are in the same business, employing the same number of people. I am sure the hon. member for Ontario, in whose city General Motors carries out its business, would have to say—and I am sure most of the residents of the city of Oshawa would have to say—that General Motors is very beneficial to Canada, Ontario and Oshawa.

How can the minister justify trying to bring about legislation and enactments under the Income Tax Act which will create in his mind the good and the bad boys, and then it will be left to him alone to determine which company is good and which is bad. There is no real difference, as the hon. member for Bow River pointed out, between A and B, in a sense, in many cases. It is solely up to the minister to decide who is good and who is bad. I can remember that a few years ago, when there was certain legislation which the government was attempting to enact, with regard to which the minister was given discretion, the then opposition took strong exception and said the minister was given too great a prerogative. This resolution certainly gives the minister a far greater prerogative. All these resolutions hinge upon the minister's decision as to what is beneficial and whether or not a company meets his two tests, which are in a sense one test.

It was suggested earlier that resolution No. 1 should be stood. I wholeheartedly agree, because even the minister and his officials are not clear as to how it would apply; they are not clear about its administrative effects. This is not the first time the minister has brought in items which he has not thoroughly thought out. The whole budget of June 13 has become a shambles because this has been withdrawn this, that and the other have been changed. We have seen that on June 13 he made part of paragraph 4 retroactive to April 10, 1962. Now he takes the retroactive part away. He says, "We have to take this away now; certain companies might benefit". At page 1498 of Hansard he said they had to make it retroactive to April 10, 1962 because some very complicated drafting would have to be carried out if it were to be made effective on the day of the presentation of the budget. He now makes it effective on June 13. I did not see any of the complicated drafting that he said was necessary on June 24. However, the minister seems to have that faculty which is given to most of the fairer sex, of being able to change his mind at will and often enough to keep everybody in the country, including the officials, in a state of flux, in a state where they hardly know where they are with regard to the budget, with regard to these income tax resolutions, with regard to whether or not the economy is being asked to forge ahead or stagnate.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that these resolutions, together with other parts of the budget, will do nothing to stimulate the economy or promote employment in the country. They will cause unemployment and bring about a loss of investment in the country, which will come anyway because of the recent announcement by President Kennedy as to taxing investment in Canada by United States persons. Certainly we see nothing in this particular resolution which will aid the economy. I agree with other

hon. members, and particularly the financial critic of the opposition, who said that this resolution should be stood at least until the minister becomes clear as to where he is trying to go with this basic idea that Canadians should invest in Canada. We certainly agree with the principle that Canadians should invest in Canada, but you cannot force them to do so; you can create the incentive for them to invest. Without fully thought out suggestions, without fully thought out budgets, without fully thought out income tax resolutions this house can hardly be asked to pass these measures when the minister and the officials are not certain what they mean by them. I suggest that this resolution be stood at least until the minister becomes clear on it and can clarify the position to the house and the country with regard to where he wants this particular theme of his projected across the country.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, I wanted to raise a very small difficulty or problem that has been put to me and ask the Minister of Finance something about it. I have had complaints from several small accountants, people who do work in smaller towns for individual taxpayers in preparing their income tax returns and also do considerable work for small businesses which happen to be incorporated companies, that one of the effects of these regulations will be to deprive them of a considerable amount of work, in that it will concentrate in the same season of the year, the same time, the activity that in a sense they have been carrying on throughout the year for these small business organizations.

I do not know how important this is, but it was put to me that it was another example of the kind of regulation that will cause no immediate hardship, after the first instance, to the large corporation which has at its disposal a well geared financial reporting organization. It will cause no disadvantage, and indeed it will be of assistance, to chartered accountant firms which are large in size, which have a number of employees, juniors and people whom they are training. But for the individual accountant, or the person who may not be qualified as an accountant but is making his living through doing this kind of work, usually with some kind of banking or clerical experience, this is going to be a very severe blow, the kind of blow that perhaps will not be felt in the big cities but, let us say, amongst the small business people across the country.

I do not know how significant is this criticism, but the bitterness with which it was expressed suggests to me that perhaps the minister could give some indication as to whether the effect of this has been considered and just how important or telling the criticism may be.

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, the point the hon. member has raised has to do with paragraph 15 of the resolution. I have received a number of representations on this point. The objective of the clause, as the hon. member pointed out, is to get the money in earlier rather than to make life complicated for the people who make up the return. I am looking into the matter and hope to be able to do something about it.

Mr. Monteith: Mr. Chairman, on the issue of the small town accountant to which the hon. member for Port Arthur referred—I think I know to what he was referring—I was pleased to hear the minister say that he proposes to do something about it. Also, as a small town accountant I have come to one very sincere conclusion, and that is simply that ownership cannot be legislated for. I do not believe it is possible to do so.

There are one or two questions I should like to ask the minister concerning the actual application of this section. For argument's sake, let us say some machinery or plant is purchased within the two year period. The company is to be limited to writing off this machinery and plant over a period of two years. I think the minister said this morning that it would not be necessary for the firm actually to write it off over a period of two years; but I am wondering, for argument's sake, if a new firm, which normally would not show a profit in the first year or two, chose not to write it off, what would happen at the end of the two year period? Would they then be able to write it off under the terms of the act as they now exist, or could they write it off at 50 per cent a year, presuming that they did not wish to start writing it off until after the end of the two year period?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I was interested in hearing the hon. member refer to himself as a small town accountant, or an accountant from a small town. I seem to remember that at one time he and I were students in the same firm and he did not give any indication then that there was anything "small town" about him at all. In fact, just the reverse.

Mr. Monteith: Do not give away secrets.

Mr. Gordon: I will not give away any more secrets, but I remember that life was very pleasant in those days. Let me assure him on that point. As I said to the hon. member for Port Arthur, this matter is under study, and probably before the bill comes along we may be able to do something about it. With regard to the second point he raised about the depreciation or the capital cost allowance, if somebody does not choose to write it off at that rate over the first two years then they can write it off as fast as they like afterwards.

Mr. Monteith: They can still write it off at the end of the two year period, and following the end of the two year period?

Mr. Gordon: Yes, as long as the investment has been made in this period.

Mr. Greene: Mr. Chairman, on the point made by the hon. gentleman opposite with respect to changing the concept of the Income Tax Act from one of residence to one of domicile or citizenship, I would point out that this would also involve persons who were resident in Canada but were not citizens or domiciled here, but who would be able to live here, earn their incomes here and pay no income tax. I trust that our hon. friends opposite are not trying to create a state of preferred citizens in this way.

Mr. Lambert: In reply to that, I think the hon. member for Renfrew South was referring to my observations in this regard. I am not suggesting that under the general concept of the Income Tax Act we should remove ourselves from the residence provision, which says that everyone who is resident in Canada for a period of 183 days or more is thereupon subject to income tax. There may be some other exceptions in the fine print of other regulations which may catch other persons; but what I am concerned about is this: Bearing in mind the objectives of the budget, the incentive to invest in new facilities can apply to anybody. That I accept. But the further objective of encouraging Canadian investment I do not think is accomplished by the wording of this resolution or this requirement. You could have a person who was a citizen of the world who could bring in capital, which capital could be hidden. I noticed that the parliamentary secretary was dubitant, shall I say, that the matter of beneficial ownership would cover this. But let me assure him that it is quite easy to hide true ownership. Certainly from my three years connection with the Department of National Revenue I know that the minister and his able senior civil servants in the department had not the personnel to delve into all these cases and really track them down. As a lawyer I can assure the hon. member that capital can be hidden. Remember that we are giving certain people an advantage in the act. In order to qualify for this advantage, why would you not require that it be limited to citizens if your objective is the Canadianization of equity holdings in Canadian corporations? In order to gain this advantage, surely to goodness one has to put up something too. That is my point.

Mr. Monteith: I should like to ask the minister one further question on this business of the actual write off. Frankly, not having been in practice for some years I have forgotten the appropriate term, but I will put it this way. When you have written off a new piece of machinery in two years and you then choose to sell that piece of machinery or trade it in, what happens to the capital value?

Mr. Gordon: It is subject to recapture. I do not know whether that is the term that is used, but that is what it means.

Mr. Monteith: One other question on paragraph 1(b), which says:

> —a corporation that on the last day of the year was a corporation with a degree of Canadian ownership and control.

Then it goes on to explain the ownership and control, and so on. What would happen if, for argument's sake, a company which had been a United States partnership were in Canada and it was not a corporation?

Mr. Gordon: That would be dealt with under 1(a).

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, there was some discussion between the minister and myself this afternoon with reference to the statement that if we had less than 3 per cent unemployment he would take issue with me. I should like to put on record what his exact words were in "Troubled Canada". I might say in respect to the minister that he showed me what he said in the Gordon report.

An hon. Member: Who is the author?

Mr. Woolliams: The author, of course, is the present Minister of Finance. Starting on page 3 he says:

> Our primary aim, therefore, which for the time being should take precedence over all other objectives no matter how desirable they are, must be to stimulate and encourage economic activity throughout Canada, to re-establish a satisfactory rate of annual growth, and to restore high levels of employment.

All those aims are very honourable. Then this is the paragraph:

> This does not mean that every single man and woman in Canada would be employed every day all through the year.
> There will always be some people who are in the process of changing jobs or who are engaged in seasonal pursuits or who have decided not to work for a few months for some reason or another, or who come under the category of "unemployable".

After saying that he said this—and I think you have to read that with this:

> If the number of people without jobs for these reasons could be reduced to even 3 or 4 per cent of the total working force, this would mean that only half as many people would be out of work as in 1960. This would be a great accomplishment.

In other words, he says there will always be people who are changing their jobs, who are out of work because they follow seasonal pursuits or who refuse to work for one reason or another. For example, a man may have worked on a big construction job in the summer and decides to draw unemployment insurance in the winter. Note what the hon. gentleman says, that it would be a great accomplishment if the number of these people were reduced by half. In other words, if this could be done he would be satisfied.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, if he does not say that, it is a matter of interpretation. I have at least put on record what he said in his book, "Troubled Canada".

Mr. Gordon: I am delighted to have it on record. What I was saying at that time was that if unemployment could be reduced by 50 per cent it would represent a great improvement. If it could be reduced by 75 per cent it would be a still greater improvement.

I wonder if I might refer to something which was said earlier about any possible connection between the budget resolutions we are now discussing and the recent proposals of President Kennedy. I think all hon. members would like to know that the state department has formally denied today that President Kennedy's proposed tax on the purchase of foreign securities by United States citizens and residents is a retaliatory measure against Canada. Mr. Robert J. McCloskey said that in Canadian circles there had been some suggestion that the Kennedy measures were directed specifically at Canada or had been taken in retaliation for the action proposed by the Canadian authorities earlier. This is absolutely not the case, Mr. McCloskey said.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Port Arthur.

Mr. Woolliams: I should like to make one remark to the minister with reference to what he said about unemployment.

Mr. Fisher: I will yield to the hon. member if continuity requires it.

Mr. Woolliams: Actually, I had two things I wished to say. I heard over the radio today that there are 30,000 more people unemployed in Canada today than there were a year ago. That information seems to have come from the dominion bureau of statistics.

With regard to the position some of us took on this side on this question of possible retaliation as far as the United States administration is concerned, what I, myself, said was that the action taken by the hon. gentleman would make it more difficult to negotiate with the United States administration with reference to the new proposed tax. Having taken the position we did in the budget we can hardly go along and say to the United States government: This measure is going to make it very difficult for Canada; it is likely to increase unemployment here and make it harder for us in one way or another. There is no doubt it will be more difficult for us. For example, we only have to look at what happened to bond issues today. I think they fell four points. It will be much more difficult now for the Minister of Finance to negotiate with the administration and say: please take this tax back. After all, we planned to do to them something which was worse than what they now plan to do to us.

Mr. Greene: May I suggest that the hon. member's party is hardly the party to tell us how to negotiate with the United States.

Mr. Nowlan: The hon. member for Renfrew South obviously does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Fisher: I wanted to ask the minister a question about the over-all intention of these resolutions in trying to do something about Canadian ownership. I have not been able to find any statement by the minister regarding the problem raised by mutual funds and mutual fund companies, so many of which are operating in Canada with aggressive sales forces under United States control. The principle which seems inherent in mutual funds operations is that because of the need to keep shifting and balancing their portfolios and also because of certain regulations it is not the policy of mutual fund groups to exercise any ownership claim in respect of their shares in terms of controlling management policy.

As I understand it, these groups are becoming increasingly important in the investment market and their business has been expanding rapidly in Canada. I wonder whether the minister or his officials have considered at any time in the preparation of this budget whether this denial on the part of mutual funds or holding companies of their right to exert in certain circumstances their ownership privileges is, at the same time, a denial of the intent inherent in this legislation. Also, is it not the case that here the government has perhaps an opportunity to find a vehicle which might be used for Canadian ownership purposes as seems to be intended by this act?

I am interested in this matter because we advocate some kind of Canadian development fund which, I understand, is within the framework of the thinking of the minister himself. In essence, if we have a development fund we are tapping the potential for equity investment in Canada today and doing it through these mutual investment funds, and it would seem to me there is an opportunity here, and I should like to have the minister's comments.

Mr. Gordon: I am afraid I am not clear what the point of the hon. members question is. If he is talking about mutual funds, they would qualify under this proposal if 25 per cent of their stock was listed and available for purchase by Canadian investors. I do not know if that was his point or not.

Mr. Fisher: That was part of it, but my point was that these companies are important and also vulnerable, since ownership does not mean anything in terms of the actual management of companies. What they are interested in is the income, not management policy.

Mr. Gordon: I am not sufficiently familiar with mutual funds to know what the significance is of the difference between the ownership and the management contract. I presume that in the final analysis the owners must be able to change the contract unless it is a very long term contract. I just do not know. I would be glad to talk to the hon. member later or now, but I do not think there is very much more I can add at this moment.

Mr. Lambert: On this particular point, I am rather pleased that we have come back to the question of mutual funds or the participation of Canadian investors in American or foreign controlled mutual funds which have investments in Canada. This is a point which I think creates some difficulty, and it is quite conceivable that the minister may have the answer.

Let us assume that company X is a public company resident in Canada and operating in Canada, and it desires to avail itself of the benefits proposed in the first paragraph with respect to depreciation. Part of the shareholdings are taken up by a mutual fund in which Canadians participate. However, the mutual fund is an American or foreign investment group. How does this company qualify under this provision? I do not know whether you are going to go one step beyond by looking at the ownership of the mutual fund.

Mr. Gordon: It qualifies under section B if its stock is listed on a Cnadian stock exchange, irrespective of who owns the stock. It does not matter who owns it. If it is listed on a Canadian stock exchange, then Canadians have an opportunity to buy the stock at some price, and under those circumstances it qualifies. But it does not matter whether there is a mutual fund or any other owner of the shares.

Mr. Lambert: In other words, it is the listing that counts.

Mr. Nowlan: Is that not the solution to the minister's problem? Is it not the listing which will accomplish almost as much as any of these other qualifications? I was rather intrigued a moment ago by his reply to the hon. member dealing with when this depreciation should be taken. Frankly, I thought it had to be within the first two years. I guess I have not read the section very carefully.

I listened to the minister this morning and he said, I think quite properly, that there was need for the improvement and modernizing of industrial plant and equipment and that this was an incentive to that end. It was my impression that the incentive was going to be on a do it now, do not wait, basis. But now we are told that, provided they buy up, they can take the depreciation at any time. Obviously the provision is not an incentive for employment because the only people who can get the benefit of this are those who qualify under these technical provisions in so far as control is concerned. It is not to improve over-all employment as it would be if we gave an incentive to General Motors and Ford, such as I mentioned a few moments ago.

Frankly, I am wondering now just what the intention of the section is after the dialogue, shall I say, that we have had back and forth during the day. I am not clear in my mind as to what the intention is. As the hon. member for Edmonton West said a moment ago, could not the same thing be achieved by saying that the company must be registered or listed on a Canadian stock exchange? I think the minister would accomplish almost as much as he would by these various qualifications.

Mr. Gordon: I am sorry if I did not make it clear to the hon. member. The incentive and the urge are to encourage these particular companies to increase their investment in plant and machinery, and naturally in the process to do two things, to modernize their plants and to provide employment either in the primary or secondary sense, either in their own plants or for the people who build the plants or produce the machinery. The objective and intention are to get this work done within the next two years. The purpose of that, of course, is to provide more employment within the next two years. The incentive that is offered is a 50 per cent write-off, but the date when the write-off is taken does not make much difference as long as the work is done within the first few years. That is the first point that the hon. member raised.

As to the second point, the people who qualify for this will be either, under A, those companies where there is a 25 per cent beneficial ownership in Canada or, B, where Canadians have the opportunity to acquire up to 25 per cent. That means that the stock must be listed on an exchange and that no single parent company or groups of parent companies should control more than 75 per cent. The theory behind this is that if there is 25 per cent around, Canadians can buy it at some price.

Mr. Nowlan: Could I ask the minister a supplementary question in connection with depreciation? Was consideration given to allowing the special depreciation write-off for machinery or equipment of a class or kind made in Canada rather than on the very general basis set out here? I suspect there might have been some consideration given to that and I am wondering what comment the minister has to make.

Mr. Gordon: It could be done that way, but if one of our objectives is to see that Canadian industry becomes as efficient and modern as possible I think it perhaps would be unwise to limit this incentive just to machinery of a class or kind made in Canada. I should like to see more machinery made in Canada, as I am sure the hon. member would; but there are some kinds of machinery that we all know are not obtainable in Canada and yet our industry will need the best machinery in the world if it is going to be able to compete with other countries in the world.

Mr. Lambert: With regard to the acquisition of plant or equipment, does this mean a firm contract for purchase and delivery maybe two years and six months hence, or must it be delivered and installed before the second anniversary? You can enter into a firm contract for the erection of a very complicated industrial plant, say an oil refinery or something of that nature, which takes more than two years to plan and instal.

Mr. Gordon: I think the test is the acquisition of title.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, if I can change the point a little, the minister mentioned the statement by the United States state department that their action was not a retaliatory measure. The mere fact that they should feel it necessary to issue such a statement rather alarms me because I am one of those who talked about the effect our proposed action might have had on the Americans, and I certainly did not want anything I said to be construed that way by the Americans or anyone else. I know that my leader took the same position and I am sure from what he said that it was not to be construed that this could by any stretch of the imagination be taken as a retaliatory measure or that the Americans were being accused of this.

When there is this sort of misunderstanding I think it is necessary that I should say something about it, because I know that too many statements made by this party have, in some inexplicable way, been construed as anti-American when they were not intended to be. Just to set the record straight I should like to explain to the house and to our American friends that the action taken by them is not considered by us or anyone else, I am sure, as retaliatory. I wish to make it clear that my remarks about the action we took having misled the Americans in some way meant only that I can understand that the government, having brought in such measures, might have misled the Americans to believe they could have been mistaken about any harmful effects they might have foreseen in their legislation, or we would not take this sort of action. The United States may say we prepared for this sort of thing. My hon. friends may say to the United States, we are going on a new facet of investment handling on both sides. We have our own reasons, which again mislead the United States into believing that these harmful effects would not prevail.

Then, next, I made this point very clear, for which I hope I may be forgiven, that the government, having made an initial mistake and having put in this measure originally, and then having to withdraw it because it was going to be so harmful to us and because it caused so much resentment in the United States, just indicates that this government had so little understanding or was so callous of the effect it had on the United States that this government was put in the position where it had practically tied its hands in trying to explain to the United States how harmful President Kennedy's proposal might be.

This is so on the following grounds: One, that this government had no hesitation in doing something similar and, two, this government had so little understanding of it that it would do it anyway. Therefore, any protest made by this government might arise out of that same sort of ignorance of the consequences, and this could have done nothing but weaken the position of this government in making its protestation. I am sure that in all of this there is nothing our United States friends can construe as any accusation whatever that it is retaliatory. In fact, I thought the explanation we made was explanatory of the United States action, and how the action of this government could have resulted in what might, at first blush, be taken to be a sort of anti-Canadian action by the United States. We did not call it anti-Canadian; we were merely explaining what this government might have done to lead the United States into thinking this would not harm us, and why this government is not now in any position to adequately explain our position to the United States.

Mr. Gordon: I wish to assure the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona that I did not mean to imply that any of his remarks had made a particular impact on President Kennedy or even on the controller of the treasury. I do remind him that just before one o'clock I went out of my way, in referring to the remarks of his leader, to say that I was quite certain that the Leader of the Opposition had not in any way said anything that could have been interpreted in that way, or if he had, he had not meant it. I think perhaps, therefore, we can let the matter rest there.

I suppose that by this time most hon. members know that there have been reports from Washington, I do not know how authentic they are, that the treasury has said the measure will not come into effect now until August 16.

Mr. Monteith: You have company.

Mr. Gordon: There are various suggestions that the measure will be modified, changed, clarified or amended as sometimes happens with complicated measures of this kind. I think, too, hon. members will know by this time of statements made by the state department in answer to any suggestion that this measure was in any way retaliatory. I can assure my hon. friend from Edmonton-Strathcona that this government is in an excellent position to negotiate with the United States on this and all other matters.

Mr. Nowlan: Obviously, Mr. Chairman, they have so much in common in shifting and changing their ground with respect to financial matters that they are, perhaps, in a very good position to negotiate on these things.

I should like to go back to a question I raised with the minister a few moments ago. I gathered from him that the primary objective of this measure was the renovation of Canadian plants and equipment. I did not have that impression when we started. I thought the objective was to increase employment and to provide for Canadianization. I understood that it was, also, indirectly to provide for the renovation of plants and equipment. Then, the minister made it very plain, I think, that the primary objective of the provision in question, as he told me a few minutes ago, was the renovation of plant and equipment.

If that is the case, I cannot understand why it is tied up with the necessity for a degree of Canadian ownership. It may be, of course, that the subsidiaries are so wealthy that the parent company need not put up the money. However, I believe there are a good many here who cannot. I do think it is unfortunate as a matter of tactics, and I do not say this critically, that so far as the incentive is concerned the depreciation is tied up with Canadian ownership. We could have dealt with it much more quickly than we have if the depreciation had not been tied to a degree of Canadian ownership. The minister says the purpose of the section is simply the renovation of plant and improving the efficiency of Canadian industry. If it is, then the provision should apply to all companies in Canada, whether they are owned by people in the United States, the Dutch, Germans or Canadians.

I suggest again that there must be a dual purpose in this provision. If a company obtains what we term a degree of Canadian ownership, then it is going to get this and if it does not it will not. This vitiates entirely the argument of the minister that the primary purpose of this provision is to improve efficiency. If you are going to Canadianize these firms, that is one thing. Let us say so. Let us not say it is to increase renovation, and then tie that up with this other matter which, so far as I am concerned and a good many others on this side, is not a happy move. We do not like to accept it. If it had been purely a matter of depreciation, and if it had not been tied up with this description of Canadian ownership, then the provision would have gone through much more quickly.

The Deputy Chairman: Does this complete discussion on paragraph 1?

Mr. Monteith: Six o'clock, Mr. Chairman.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Will the house leader let us know what the program may be for next week?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I think perhaps I can put it very simply; budget resolutions and still more budget resolutions and then the bills. When these have been completed, I will be able to satisfy the hon. gentleman's curiosity about other matters.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

APPENDIX

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTER OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE,
HONOURABLE JUDY LAMARSH
RESPECTING THE CANADA PENSION PLAN

JULY 18, 1963

The purpose of the government's proposed legislation is to ensure that, as soon as is possible in a fair and practical way, all Canadians will be able to retire in security and with dignity.

The advantage of a federal plan is that it is the only type of pension plan that can be made available comprehensively to all Canadians. This was recognized in 1951 when the British North America Act was amended. The Canada pension plan is comprehensive in this sense. It will mean that a contributory program is available to Canadians to provide for their old age. Coverage will be compulsory for, broadly, all employees; such exceptions as are made will be for those types of employment in which the collection of contributions is not administratively feasible. Most other people having earned incomes—broadly, the self employed and the majority of employees not covered compulsorily—will be able to belong to the plan voluntarily. If a provincial government wishes, its employees will be covered.

The Canada pension plan is not intended to be comprehensive in any other sense; it is not designed to provide all the retirement income which many Canadians wish to have. This is a matter of individual choice and, in the government's view, should properly be left to personal savings and to private pension plans, subject in the latter case to such degree of supervision as the provinces may think appropriate. The recent Ontario legislation is the first example in Canada of an attempt at close supervision of private plans.

The purpose of the Canada pension plan is to make reasonable minimum levels of income available to all Canadians at normal retirement ages. There will be scope for the continuation and extension of private pension plans to provide benefits over these minimum levels.

The present minimum provided in Canada is the old age security benefit of $65 a month from age 70. Unfortunately many people are unable to go on earning until they reach age 70.

Realistic minimum levels of pensions cannot be achieved, in a country like Canada, simply by increasing the flat rate pension. Living costs vary greatly between town and country, and between different regions of Canada. What people need, in order to make satisfactory provision for retirement, is related in part to the level of earnings to which they have been accustomed. The Canada pension plan will therefore both increase the flat rate benefit and provide new levels of pensions related to previous earnings.

Main Features

The Canada pension plan will make these main changes in the provision of pensions:

1. The flat rate pension will be raised to $75 at age 70 for everyone who meets the residence requirements of the Old Age Security Act.

2. People whose pensions begin after the plan is in operation will receive, if they have made contributions under the plan, a further pension in proportion to the earnings on which they have been contributing. The scale of pensions will rise during a ten year transitional period.

3. The increased flat rate pension and the earnings related pension will both be available at any age between 65 and 70, according to the preference of the pensioner. The amount of both pensions will be graduated so that anyone with average life expectancy will receive the same total payment, from the age he starts his pension to the time he dies, whatever starting age he chooses.

The main features in the financing of the plan are:

4. Since the new benefits will be related to earnings, the Canada pension plan will be financed by contributions of a percentage of earnings. The rate of contribution during the ten year transition period will not exceed 2 per cent of the earnings on which contributions are made. For wage and salary earners, the employer will be required to pay a half of this contribution.

5. Initially contributions will be made, and benefits will be paid, on the first $4,000 of annual earnings. This level will be raised in line with any increase in average earnings.

6. Contributions will be deductible from taxable income. This is the same as for private pension plans.

7. The Canada pension plan will be entirely self financing. The contributions are designed to cover all pension costs over and above the continuation of the existing $65 pension at age 70. The cost of administration will also be covered from the contributions.

Timing

It will take a good part of a year to set up satisfactorily the administrative machinery for collecting contributions under the plan. Graduated pensions cannot be paid until the contributor has a record of earnings as the base for determining the rate of benefit. Graduated pensions will therefore begin in January 1966. Contributions before this date will be used to finance the earlier addition of $10 to flat rate pensions.

In January 1966 two things will happen. The plan will begin to provide pensions related to earnings. People will become able to start drawing pensions, both flat rate and earnings related, before age 70.

Until the plan is ten years old, pension rates will build up steadily. In 1966 the graduated benefit at age 70 will be $10 a month for anyone who retires after contributing on earnings of $4,000 a year. For anyone retiring in 1967 the maximum will be $20 a month, and so on until the top rate of $100 a month is reached after ten years. For people with lower earnings, the benefits will be proportional to these. The flat rate pension of $75 will, of course be available in addition to the graduated benefit. The amounts available in total pensions will therefore rise from $75 to people already retired to $175 for contributors with average earnings of $4,000 in 1975.

Financing

The Canada pension plan will not build up a huge investment fund in the hands of the federal government. Instead, it will be financed on a pay as you go basis. The money received in contributions will in most years approximately match the money paid out to pensioners. While the program will operate with a contingency reserve, in order to avoid short run fluctuations in contribution rates, this reserve will normally be small by comparison with the size of the annual payments.

This method of financing is a fundamental difference between a public pension plan and private plans. While full funding may be provided under private pension plans, it is not the practice in government old age insurance programs. Indeed, full funding on the scale of a nation-wide plan would be a quite excessive form of saving enforced by the state.

The practical consequence is that this plan can provide benefits within a few years—to people whose working lives are already well advanced—whereas a private plan ordinarily provides good pensions only to people who join the plan when they are quite young.

Contributions under the plan will not be required before the age of 18. They will stop at whatever age, between 65 and 70, a pension benefit is taken.

The initial contribution rates will be adequate for the financing of the plan through the transition years. The rate will slowly rise for about a generation afterward, as the plan matures and an increasing proportion of people have retired at the full rate of graduated pension.

The ratio of benefits to contributions is especially favourable for those who retire during the transition period. It is therefore reasonable during this period to assess the voluntary contributor at or close to the combined employer and employee rate. However, after the program has been in operation for a period of time and adjustments have to be made in contribution rates, the rate paid by voluntary contributors may be less than the combined rate for employer and employee.

Calculation of Benefits

Pensions are to be 30 per cent, adjusted if the starting age is before 70, of "what a man has been earning."

This obviously cannot mean what the pensioner earned in, say, the last year or even few years before beginning the pension. That would be very unfair to the man who suffered sickness or unemployment in the last few years before retirement. On the other hand, the pensioner cannot be allowed to pick the best year or few years of his earnings record; that would excessively favour the man whose earnings have been erratic and it would tempt voluntary contributors to contribute only in good years.

The pension benefit will therefore be based on the man's average earnings from the effective date of the plan to the time when he starts to draw his pension. These earnings cannot, however, be used without adjustment. To do so would mean that, as the general level of earnings rises over the years, there would be a widening span between earnings recorded in the early years and those shortly before retirement. The pension benefits paid would therefore be a declining proportion of "what a man has been earning" shortly before retirement.

Accordingly, for calculating pensions, earnings will be adjusted in line with changes in the general level of salaries and wages. The current average of salaries and wages in Canada is about $4000 a year, the ceiling chosen for earnings under the Canada pension plan. This ceiling will also be adjusted with changes in the general level of wages and salaries. The pension program will therefore permanently provide a satisfactory standard of pensions for people with earnings up to the average level.

If a man starts his pension in, say, 1970, "what he has been earning" will be calculated by averaging his actual earnings in 1969 and, for each earlier year, his earnings adjusted by the change in average salaries and wages between that year and 1969. In other words, all his earnings will be put on a 1969 equivalent.

The use of average earnings would excessively penalize people whose earnings in some years are abnormally low because of sickness and unemployment. This will be overcome, to a reasonable degree, by excluding a man's years of lowest earnings from the calculation of his average earnings. Also, for each year beyond 65 that a man continues to work, he will be able to exclude, from the calculation of his average earnings, an additional low year. This will provide quite a powerful incentive to go on working after 65 for the man who is able to do so, without any large reduction in pay.

The graduated contributory and flat rate universal pensions will be paid to beneficiaries in one cheque. At existing wage levels the total pension available to a single person at age 70 will range from $75 to $175 monthly, as indicated in the following table:

Combined Pensions Available to Single Contributor at Age 70, by Average Monthly Pensionable Earnings

333	100	75	175

Adjustment for Age

Pensions drawn before the age of 70 will be reduced by a small percentage for each month between the date when the pension starts and the date of the pensioner's seventieth birthday. For anyone who takes his pension at the earliest opportunity, when he reaches 65, the pension received would be 32.5 per cent less than the pension he could have claimed at age 70. This reduction at ages between 65 and 70 would be proportional to this.

Anyone who is eligible for both the flat rate and the graduated pension must choose the same age for starting both.

There will be no retirement test. A man may start drawing the appropriate rate of pension at any time between his 65th and 70th birthdays, whatever his other earnings. Once he elects to draw his pension he cannot go off pension for a while and then come back on at a higher rate.

At existing wage levels the total pension available to a single person at age 65 will range from $51 to $118 monthly, as indicated in the following table:

Widows and Widowers

The income available to the surviving partner of a marriage will be rather more than half the previous combined income of the couple. To achieve this, since the flat rate pension is halved, the income related pension available to a widow will be 60 per cent of the benefit available to the couple.

This provision will apply with equality to the sexes. That is, it applies equally to either a widow or, if a deceased wife had earned income entitling her to a pension, to a widower.

A widow or widower will be entitled, from age 65, to whichever is the larger of either (a) her or his own combined pension, or (b) her or his own flat rate pension plus 60 per cent of the combined-earnings related pensions of the couple—subject, however, to the maximum which applies at the time to the total pension of any one person.

Administration

The Department of National Health and Welfare will administer the Canada pension plan. The contributions under the plan will be collected by the Department of National Revenue. Employers will be responsible for deductions from their employees and will then remit these deductions monthly, together with their own contributions, to that department. Voluntary participants will make annual payments to the department.

The Department of National Health and Welfare will maintain an index of contributors, and will be responsible for the payment of benefits. The Department of National Revenue will forward to the Department of National Health and Welfare the record of pensionable earnings so that this information can be credited to each individual contributor's account. The maintenance of the records and the calculation of benefits will be achieved through the use of modern data processing equipment.

The necessary provisions will be made for appeal procedures to ensure that contributors, beneficiaries and employers may have an impartial review of any disputes which may arise in relation to the program.

Authority will be provided to work out reciprocal agreements with other countries for the coverage of people who move between countries.

Relation to Other Pension Plans

A great contribution to old age security has been made, and will continue to be made, by the considerable growth of private pension plans, which now cover more than 1,800,000 people in Canada. Not all of these plans, however, provide sizeable pensions, particularly for workers who do not join the plan early in life. Also, since vesting is rarely complete, private plans have operated as a growing restraint on the mobility of labour.

Several provinces are interested in lessening these and other problems connected with private pension plans, particularly by the establishment of rules for portability and solvency. These are, in the view of the federal government, useful steps forward.

However, since such private plans would be funded, even their compulsory extension cannot make possible retirement at an adequate standard for people now in their forties to sixties who have not been covered previously. Moreover, self employed people cannot have access to such plans.

The Canada pension plan not only provides early benefits but also automatically provides Canada wide portability of pensions for people with earnings up to an average level. It is thus designed for those whose needs cannot be fully met by the extension of private pension plans under provincial supervision. It will be available comprehensively and it will quickly provide fair sized pensions to those who retire in the next decade or two.

The plan is designed to meet these needs of the Canadian people while helping to establish a pension system which, through the combination of private, provincial and federal action, will be sound and satisfactory in the long run.

The Adjustment Period

The adjustment of private pension plans to a public program with graduated benefits cannot be altogether easy. However, this does not appear to have been a deterrent to private plans in the United States. Since the American Old Age, Survivors and Disability Insurance program was established there has continued to be a substantial growth in private pension plans. The number of employees covered by private pension plans, expressed as a percentage of the wage and salary workers in private industry, rose from 31 per cent in 1954 to 45 per cent in 1961 in the United States.

The Canada pension plan has been designed to ease as fully as possible the adjustment of private pension plans to the developing public program. The fact that the Canada pension plan will be financed on a pay as you go basis, with a small contingency reserve, ensures that contributions in the early years of the program are at a very modest level. The absence of large reserves means that there will not be large transfers of funds from the private sector to the public sector of the economy. Transfers will be from the working population and employers to retired people, who will spend their benefits largely on consumer expenditures. It is not proposed that large reserves be built up as a vehicle for federal debt management and public investment.

Some employers and employees will no doubt wish to revise existing pension plans by reducing contribution rates approximately in line with their contributions under the Canada Pension Plan. The ten-year transitional period means that such adjustments can be made carefully and gradually.

In sum, the advantages of the fairly lengthy transition are:

1. To provide adequate time for existing pension plans to be adjusted to the federal plan;

2. To enable contribution rates to begin at a low level and rise fairly slowly, so that companies and individuals not now paying into pension schemes will have time to adjust to this new financial situation;

3. To avoid too sharp a contrast between people who have already retired—who will get the new $75 minimum pension—and people who start drawing pensions only a few years later.

Economic Progress

In the government's view, the great merit of the Canada pension plan is that it is a social security program which is realistically geared to the growth of the economy. It can help to provide a foundation for their social programs, notably for those who are disabled, for widows with dependant children and for orphans. In itself, it quickly makes modest pensions available. These benefits will grow until, in ten years, an adequate scale of pensions is available for people of low and moderate incomes. As such incomes grow, with economic progress, the scale will rise in a way which ensures that people who make contributions now can be assured of pensions which will still provide a secure retirement in line with the economic conditions of the time.

In the growth of the economy, importance is rightly placed on the role of private pension plans in providing savings to finance investment. All pension arrangements, of course, require payments out to the beneficiaries as well as savings by those who are now working. In a static economy no mature pension plan would be in itself a source of savings. The net saving through private pension plans arises from the growth of the plans as the population increases and income levels rise.

Such growth is of continued importance. The Canada pension plan will provide, on a permanent basis, the scale of pensions for low and moderate incomes which is an appropriate first charge on a society that values the security and dignity of those whose working life is past. But there will remain full scope for private saving above this minimum. The scope will be enlarged with economic progress. The individual, in association in many cases with his employer, will remain responsible for the saving which a rich and growing country needs for its further economic development, and by which more and more people can afford to provide for themselves a truly comfortable retirement.

International Comparisons

Since their inception, pension programs in many countries have changed greatly. Although a number of older systems date back to the late nineteenth century, the majority of the programs were initiated in the decades immediately preceding or following world war II.

The programs in effect in Great Britain and France were extensively revised in 1946 and 1945, respectively. Revisions occurred in the West German program in 1957 and in the Swedish program in 1959.

It is of significance that the programs in Great Britain and Sweden were both revised in 1959, for the purpose of adding graduated benefits to the existing flat rate benefits. Most pension programs now in operation relate the rates of pensions in some way to the pensioners' prior earnings.

The benefits under the Canada pension plan will inevitably be compared with those available under the old age, survivors and disability insurance program in the United States. Set out below are the rates of benefit payable to workers with no dependants but with various average monthly earnings, up to the maximum under the United States program. The minimum pension under the United States program is $40, compared with the flat rate $75 at age 70, or $51 at age 65, in Canada.

Survivors and Disabled Pensions

A full program of social insurance would provide benefits for survivors and disabled persons who have not reached an age at which benefit would normally be considered an old age pension. Doubts have been expressed whether such benefits are within federal jurisdiction under the existing provisions of the British North America Act. Certainly such programs as now exist for these people are provincially administered. This is, accordingly, a subject which requires full consultation and discussion between federal and provincial governments to ascertain the wishes of the provinces and to determine whether a mutually satisfactory approach can be worked out.

The persons who might be covered under wage related pensions for survivors and disabled persons would be as follows:

28902-5—155

(a) Widows with dependant children

A pension payable from the date of the death of a contributor to his widow, if she has one or more dependant children, until the youngest child reaches age 18.

(b) Orphans

A pension payable in respect of the orphans of a contributor from the date of death of the last surviving parent until the youngest orphan reaches age 18.

(c) Disabled Persons

A pension payable to a contributor under the program who suffers such a prolonged disability that he is unable to secure gainful employment.

If such coverage were to be provided as an additional part of the Canada pension plan, the scale of pensions would be related to the benefit otherwise available to the contributor at age 65, and the cost of the benefits would be financed as a part of the contributory program.

Federal-Provincial Shared Programs

Another related matter concerns federal-provincial assistance programs. The introduction of an adjusted pension at age 65 will reduce federal-provincial expenditures under the old age assistance program. Once the Canada pension plan is in operation many persons in the 65 to 69 age group will not have to seek old age assistance because the adjusted benefits will be available. Similarly, if a disability pension is subsequently included as a part of the Canada pension plan, many persons who would otherwise have sought assistance through blind persons or disabled persons allowances will find their needs met under the new program.

Since payment of old age assistance, blind persons and disabled persons allowances is made by the provincial governments and the cost is shared, it is important that any federal plans for future improvement of the provisions of this legislation should be the subject of consultation between the federal and provincial governments. If the provinces will agree to share the additional cost the federal government is prepared to increase the maximum assistance payment under the federal legislation to $75 a month. One question of special interest to the federal government is whether the age of eligibility under the old age assistance program can be lowered from 65 to 60 for widows and unmarried women.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, July 22, 1963

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PRESIDENT OF UNITED NATIONS GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Mr. Speaker: I am sure all hon. members will be interested in knowing that we have in the diplomatic gallery the president of the United Nations general assembly, Sir Zafrulla Khan. I know you will join with me in extending a very hearty welcome to him while he stays in Ottawa as the guest of our parliament, and in Canada generally.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that a communication has been received which is as follows:

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Gerald Fauteux, Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 22nd July, at 9.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General.

FINANCE

UNITED STATES TAX ON INTERNATIONAL CAPITAL TRANSACTIONS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a statement concerning the application to Canada of the proposed United States interest equalization tax. An agreement on this matter was worked out during the week end in discussions between representatives of the United States and the Canadian governments. As the house knows, the agreement was announced simultaneously in Ottawa and in Washington yesterday evening. I should like to table the text of the announcement and ask the consent of the house to it being printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreeable to hon. members?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: For text of document referred to above, see appendix.]

Mr. Pearson: The agreement has, I believe, important effects and implications. The spirit of co-operation in which it was worked out is encouraging. That spirit enabled agreement on a most complicated matter to be reached quickly, and I am sure this prompt and decisive handling of difficulties will be greatly reassuring to the public, including the financial communities, on both sides of the border.

When I say "handling of difficulties" I do not mean either that the difficulties were all solved or that they were glossed over. I mean that the representatives of the two governments were able to deal with this problem in the spirit of the Hyannis Port meeting of last May, when the communique included this paragraph on balance of payments problems:

The President and the Prime Minister stressed the interest of both countries in the balance of payments between them and with the rest of the world. The Prime Minister drew particular attention to the large United States surplus in the balance of current payments with Canada and noted the importance of allowing for this fact in determining the appropriate policies to be followed by each country. It was agreed that both governments should always deal in a positive and co-operative manner with developments affecting their international trade and payments.

In accordance with that spirit, we on our side fully appreciate the United States government's desire to improve its own balance of payments position. It would not, of course, be appropriate for us to express views about the general policies adopted by the United States for this purpose, but it was clear from the behaviour of financial markets at the end of last week that the proposed interest equalization tax could have unintended and serious effects on Canada.

We accordingly made representations on the subject through diplomatic channels and arranged for representatives of the Canadian government to go to Washington over the week end. We are extremely grateful for the promptness with which the United States government considered the problem. When it was pointed out to them that they had underestimated the effects of their proposed measure on Canada, they promptly joined in seeking to correct the consequences.

The modification of the United States proposal which was announced yesterday does not solve all the problems. The tax is still intended to apply to purchases by Americans of outstanding Canadian securities. This will pose some continuing problems, and the government of Canada will continue to seek exemption for such transactions.

The two governments readily agreed at the week end, however, that the major and immediate problem arose from the proposed tax on new issues of Canadian securities. The two governments were able to find at once an approach to a solution of this problem.

The United States government has recognized that Canada's case is different from that of other countries in that, while capital moves from the United States to Canada, it thereby only helps to finance the excess of Canadian purchases of goods and services from the United States compared with American purchases from us. In the final result we are suppliers of exchange to the United States, not removers of exchange from the United States. In recognition of this the United States government has recorded its hope and expectation that new Canadian issues can be entirely exempt from the proposed tax. We have stated that we will not use exemption from the tax to give us an advantage by borrowing in the United States aimed at increasing our currency reserves.

The unlimited exemption for Canada is to cover all new security issues by business and all levels of government; under this exception there would be no question of rationing access to the United States capital market.

This modification of the United States proposal is a most helpful result. I should like to follow what the Minister of Finance said yesterday by expressing on behalf of the government and, I am sure, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the house, my appreciation of the co-operative spirit of the United States government and also of the work done in this matter by the governor of the Bank of Canada and by the Departments of Finance and External Affairs.

While the immediate result is most helpful and goes a long way toward removing the immediate difficulties, I must repeat what I said earlier about the underlying problem. The whole incident underlines the importance to both countries, as was recognized at Hyannis Port, of taking constructive, long term action to lessen the problems of the balance of payments. For that reason I am hopeful that, in the same spirit of co-operation as was demonstrated over the week end, we will shortly be able to arrange a fruitful meeting of the joint economic committee of ministers of the Canadian and the United States governments.

From Canada's point of view the objective must be a further substantial reduction of our current account deficit in the balance of payments. This government has made clear on numerous occasions that the correction of our balance of payments position, with its favourable effects on employment, is a central objective of our economic policies.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I certainly join with the Prime Minister in expressing appreciation to the United States for showing consideration to Canada. The relationship between Canada and the United States has at all times been such in my memory. Indeed, in the days of former president Eisenhower the closeness of that relationship denied the difficulties that subsequently arose.

The Prime Minister speaks in fulsome terms of the Hyannis Port idyll and the ideal agreement arrived at there, but may I add that while the Prime Minister was patted on the head at Hyannis Port by the President, Canada was kicked in the economy. The Prime Minister says that as a result of representations made the difficulties which would have followed the continuance of the policy enunciated by the President have now been alleviated to a greater or lesser degree. This still leaves, as I see it, a veto with the President of the United States with regard to the expansion of Canada's economy, which is something that is not in keeping with the sovereignty of this nation.

I am surprised that following this fine relationship to which the Prime Minister referred the United States saw fit to bring into effect an economic plan which could only hurt Canada and damage this country economically more than any other of the 22 or 23 countries included in the plan. As I see it, there was no reason for the application of this plan to Canada. Our balance of payments position has at all times been favourable to the United States. These other countries to which the plan is being applied are in a different position.

As far as our trading relations are concerned, we recall very well that in 1956, in the palmy days of the former Liberal government, the commodity deficit between the two countries and adverse to Canada was about $760 million. In 1961 and 1962 during our period in office we were able to bring about a favourable balance in this regard. Furthermore, there was a pronounced reduction in the balance of payments problem in general during the days we were in office, and I hope that what took place in 1961 and 1962 will continue in 1963 and in the following years.

Our relations with the United States should have caused that country to give some notice to Canada, and to consult with Canada before taking this action. When the government now surrounds itself with a halo of self praise, may I suggest that in addition to parliament speaking out firmly and strongly on Friday, the major reason for the change was that the financial people in New York took a strong stand, as did financial interests in our own country.

While it is too early to say that this action will alleviate the results that would have flowed from the plan enunciated by the president, at least it is a step forward. Consultation beforehand, however, would have prevented this action being taken. It is not as though Canada found itself in a position very much better than most minor countries, for the members of the press were fully briefed on Thursday and on Friday morning the government of Canada was told what the action would be. This is not consultation in the true sense of the word.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the Social Credit party may I say that we, in common with all Canadians across the country, are happy with the announcement that has just been made; because certainly the situation that was in prospect for us as we saw it last Thursday and Friday was not a pleasant one, particularly in the light of the many financial problems that we face.

However, I believe there are two observations which arise from this situation which come emphatically to mind. The first is the financial confusion surrounding the general situation relating to government financing both in the United States and in Canada. This comes back to the problem of the balance of payments difficulty, which has been increasingly critical for both countries. Certainly the United States cannot continue with the tremendous deficits that they have had, both in terms of trading dollars and of gold. Neither can we in Canada.

And second, I trust that out of this crisis there will be a realization that the old approaches we are using to meet these problems are inadequate to meet our present needs. Certainly this becomes increasingly evident as we see the turmoil in which we have been since our own balance of payments crisis a year ago, as well as the budget crisis of the past few months. As we look at these financial problems we begin to wonder whether the tail is wagging the dog or the dog is wagging the tail. However, we are glad that this quick action has been taken. I hope it will lead to the conclusion that something more drastic is going to have to be done in the near future if we are to find any permanent solution to these problems.

Mr. Colin Cameron (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Like the others who have spoken before me, Mr. Speaker, we in this party welcome the report of the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister on this question. I hope I will not be considered too Cassandra-like if I suggest that perhaps we are not out of the woods yet, in spite of the move that has been made or is proposed to be made by President Kennedy.

I understand, for instance, that the tax is still to be imposed on outstanding issues, and this may have a decisive effect on interest rates in this country as a result of the fact that the outstanding issues will be subject to a great deal of downward pressure on price and upward pressure on interest. This is almost bound to affect interest rates on new issues from Canada.

There is also the question as to whether it is going to be accepted by congress. We can only hope it will be; but if congress has been convinced, as it well may have been, that it is necessary for the United States to take drastic steps to curb the outflow of American dollars, it may be somewhat hesitant to accept this generous treatment of Canada as a special case. I suggest to the government that it might well be in the interests of Canada if it could be arranged that financial witnesses from Canada could be called before whatever congressional committee may be studying this matter.

As I said earlier, I can well believe that congress will be convinced of the necessity of the United States taking some drastic action. After all, sir, they cannot very much longer sustain a continued weakening of their net reserve position, which will result in a continued outflow of American dollars. If the channels that lead to Canada are to be kept open, then it may well be that the United States will have to take drastic steps to block the holes which lead to an outflow of American dollars in other directions, which again will cause repercussions that may catch us. In fact the Canadian government may have succeeded in warding off a clip on the jaw only to leave us liable to be sandbagged on the back of the head later.

One of the most useful steps which the Canadian government could take at the present time would be to press for an international monetary conference on the question of international exchange, perhaps on the lines of a royal commission before which the various financial and monetary experts who have voiced their opinions and views on this problem could be summoned. Otherwise we are going to experience continuing exchanges crises in one form or another.

Biculturalism Commission Appointed

ARTS, LETTERS AND SCIENCES

PERSONNEL OF ROYAL COMMISSION ON BICULTURALISM

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a short statement on the commission on bilingualism and biculturalism. The co-chairmen will be Andre Laurendeau, editor in chief of Le Devoir, Montreal, and Davidson Dunton, president of Carleton University.

Other members of the commission will be Rev. Clement Cormier, president of St. Joseph's University, Moncton, New Brunswick; Mr. Royce Frith, a lawyer in Toronto; Jean Louis Gagnon, a journalist and broadcaster in Montreal; Mrs. Gertrude Laing, a housewife in Calgary; Jean Marchand, general president of the confederation of national trade unions of Quebec; J. B. Rudnyckyj, chairman of the department of Slavic studies at the University of Manitoba; Frank R. Scott, dean of law at McGill University in Montreal, and Paul Wyczynski, director of the French Canadian literature research centre and associate professor of French literature at the University of Ottawa.

The members of the commission, whose names I have just given to the house, cannot, of course, and are not intended to represent every point of view of every group in our country. Nevertheless, through the diversity of their backgrounds and interests and their broad experience, they do represent a varied and important cross section of our people. They are all deeply interested in the subject of this inquiry and are all fluent in our two national languages. They are all aware of the dual cultural and racial basis of our confederation and of the important contribution made by other cultures and traditions.

I am sure the members of the commission will enjoy the support and good will of all members of the house as they examine into a vitally important aspect of our national life and our national development.

Mr. Herridge: Can nobody in B.C. speak French?

(Translation):

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, today is a memorable day that will mark, I hope, the beginning of a new era of co-operation between the two great ethnic groups that make up our country.

The only road to progress for Canada resides in mutual understanding of the need to work together to attain that aim.

(Text):

Mr. Speaker, we are pleased indeed that the announcement for which we have waited so long regarding this vital royal commission has now been made. At this point it is not in order to make any remarks regarding the men and women who have been appointed to this commission. Certainly they have assumed one of the most important challenges that has been given to any group of Canadians in recent years. The development of Canadian unity and the development of our nation as a whole is something which is a more critical problem than most of us understand or realize at this time. I look forward to seeing this commission expressing the genuine will of the Canadian people toward the Canadian unity and the national purpose of Canada about which we all speak, and which we all feel is imperative to the survival of our nation, yet which so often is very difficult to grasp or to actually put into effect.

We are just four years from our centennial, and perhaps at no time during these past 96 years have we faced such a critical problem and an important challenge as we now face. As I speak for members of our party here in this house and across the country, I believe it is the hope and desire that this royal commission will lead to the greater understanding, co-operation and spirit of unity that we need in these difficult and troubled times.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we are pleased that this long awaited announcement has been made. There will be ample opportunity to say more about it in the future, but we do look forward to some constructive progress as a result, with the hope and prayer that Canada will become the united nation, as far as purpose, understanding and genuine co-operation are concerned, that we must be if we are to be the nation we want to be and which the world expects us to be.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the house has been looking forward with anticipation to the setting up of this commission. I think the house will be in general agreement with the words of the hon. member for Red Deer, though it would have been interesting to have questioned him as to the degree to which he and others associated with him accepted the recent words of Premier Manning of Alberta in regard to this very important matter. I hope that the setting up of the royal commission will be beneficial.

Mr. Thompson: That is politics, which is not at all necessary when dealing with this announcement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not know what the interruption was, but I have always thought that Premier Manning spoke, as it were, for the Social Credit party generally across the country. However, I do not want to bring about any discord in that party which has been so united in the past.

I want to say immediately that we feel the setting up of a royal commission is not an effective way in which to meet the problem that we face. It can only operate as an educational body, and all of us would benefit from that. It can only operate, too, as a postponement of any effective action being taken for several years.

The royal commission will sit, elicit facts and listen to arguments; but in no case, of course, can it determine the results of its recommendations. No action can be taken until there has been agreement between the dominion government and the provincial governments on the question of the amendment of the constitution in order to meet this problem. I know that leading members supporting the government have from time to time come out with the rather doubtful plan of two flags for Canada. That plan will not work as far as the constitution is concerned. There can only be one constitution for Canada, and if changes are to be made to that constitution they will have to be determined on the basis of final agreement between the federal and provincial governments.

We in this party stand where we have always stood throughout the years, for an equal partnership between the founding races and without infringement on the rights of other Canadians. Whatever may be the views on the compact theory, the British North America Act is more than a constitutional and legal document; it is the legal, spiritual and fundamental essence and conscience of the Canadian way of life, and there are sections in it that are ageless and cannot be changed by the people of Canada excepting by unanimity among all the provinces.

I would like to have heard the Prime Minister tell how this commission is supposed to work and how it will operate. We cannot change the constitution, as they do in the United States from time to time by interpretation of the courts. The supreme court of the United States in its interpretations through the years has altered some of the concepts inherent in the ideas and views of the fathers of that country. We had our constitution rewritten by interpretation during the 1880's and 1890's by the privy council. However, that is no longer possible.

As far as this commission is concerned, I am not fully aware of the powers it will have, but it must give consideration to fiscal matters. We believe that the provinces must have a larger share of the total taxes collected in this country than has been the case previously. When we came into office the provinces had a 10 per cent share of corporation income tax under the 1956 agreement. We increased that through parliament by 3 per cent. Finally, in the last agreement that was entered into, the amount of that share was increased to 16 per cent, with an escalating provision each year until 20 per cent will be available to the provinces within five years.

These are problems that must be faced. The royal commission will merely discuss; the determination will have to rest upon the federal and provincial parliaments. I have stated the view we take, that there should have been convened a conference of federal and provincial government representatives on the questions of the constitution, biculturalism and bilingualism. At such a meeting there would have been representatives of all the national political parties, and a full and complete study could there have been made and agreement reached, without postponement, as to the means to repatriate the constitution, to carry out immediately the recommendations of the Therrien report and to endeavour to come to agreement on those other kindred matters, by those who alone have the power to bring about such changes. At the same time such a national meeting would give Canadians a forum, with the power to act to round out and restate, if agreed to, Canada's national goals before this nation embarks upon its second century. We endeavoured to bring this about on February 8 when as prime minister I suggested to the various provinces the calling of such a conference, which we still say is necessary for this country. That suggestion was replied to. Five provinces, Ontario, Saskatchewan, Nova Scotia, Manitoba and New Brunswick agreed with it. Quebec and Alberta asked that the matter be delayed until after April 8. Newfoundland and Prince Edward Island gave no reply, and British Columbia gave an acknowledgement.

Sir, as far as this royal commission is concerned which the Prime Minister has now announced, we say, first, that it is not sufficiently representative. To be effective it should have strong provincial representation. I feel it would have been the course of sound judgment and statesmanship—and I am asking that this still be done—that the provinces be given an opportunity of representation on this most important royal commission.
