Only a Year.
One year ago—a flaxing voice.
A clear blue eye.
A clear shining smile.
Too far to die.
Only a year—no voice, no smile,
No glances of eye,
No whispering words of golden hair,
Fate, but to die.

One year ago—what loves, what wishes
Came into life?
What joyous hopes what high resolves,
What generous strife.
The silent picture on the wall,
The burial shroud,
Of all that beauty, life and joy,
Remains alone.

One year, one year, one little year,
And so much gone!
And yet the even flow of life
Moves calmly on.
The grave grows green, the flowers bloom fair,
Above the head.

No more to be of merry birds,
That sing above,
That sing above,
Tells us how coldly sleeps below,
The form we love.

Where hast thou been this year beloved?
What hast thou seen?
What visions fair, what glorious life,
Where hast thou been?

The veil the veil so thin, so strong,
The mystic veil, when shall it fall?
That we may see?
Not dead, not sleeping, not even gone,
But present still,
And waiting for the coming hour,
Of God's sweet will,
Lord of the living and the dead,
Our Savior dear,
We lay in silence at Thy feet,
This sad, sad year.

THE NAME WAS Called Marah.

People had come and gone all the week, and Anita had seen the most of them. It was kind of them to come, she felt, and she choked back her dread of sympathetic eyes, and long hand clasps, taking the consolation offered with a gentle passivity that covered an unsuspected sea of bitterness. When Mary came, at the end of the week, she knew the first touch of real comfort. They sat silently together for a long while, Anita on the couch with one black sleeve across her eyes, but the other was on her friend's knee. Then Mary talked of Arthur, quite simply and naturally, without the hushed tones and awed looks that had so racked Anita all the week. He might have been in the next room, by their voices, and several times they laughed a little. Then, as the current passed, she felt again, unable to keep the dreariest of loss at bay any longer.

"Well, there will be the child, any way; you have that to be glad of, Mary said at last. Anita moved restlessly.

"Oh, why should I be glad of it!" she exclaimed. "Mary turned to her in wonder. "Oh, I know! They have been saying it to me all the week. Anita went on bitterly. "You will have your child—your have that to be thankful for. I am not thankful for it.—"We didn't want it, in the first place—and now, what do I want of it, all alone?" She rose excitedly on one elbow. "I know I shock you, but I am worn to death playing a part—let me be honest with you, or I shall go mad!"

"Say anything you like; I shall understand," Mary pressed her shoulder again, and kept a hand on her shoulder.

"I have never cared much for children; someday, I have never known any," Anita went on more quietly. "And then Arthur and I were so wholly everything to each other, we didn't want anyone else. I made the best of this for his sake, and he pretended he was pleased or mine. But we both knew. Now I have to go on pretending, because every woman is supposed to be born a mother. But I don't want it. I shall do everything I can for its safety; but Mary, I pray it doesn't live—I pray it every night of my life!"

Mary stroked her shoulder in silence.

"You ought to say that I am both unwomanly and wicked," said Anita. "Ah, my dear—"Mary's voice faltered and stopped abruptly. Anita turned with a little gasp and buried her face in the cushions.

Six weeks later Anita came reluctantly back to life, to a bleak prospect of years that could not be evaded or hurried and to an immediate duty that bound her to thought and feeling. But for the boy, she might have gone out and found work, work that claimed every power she possessed, and left her mercifully numb, heart and brain, at night. But the child chained her to inaction as inextinguishably as he did to life. She must sit at home and contrive to make her little income cover her needs, just as that small presence would have to suffice the needs of her own being.

"At least you have your child"—she turned bitterly from the universal phrase.

The door was opened, and Mary came in with the baby on one arm.

"We're awake, for a wonder, and we thought we'd like a look at our mother," she announced, and laid the little roll of blanket on the pillow beside Anita. "He is really a most intelligent baby for his age," she added. "You can see his nose quite distinctly in a good light, and his eyes seem to be mates. He's very remarkable, that man!" And Mary buried her face in baby's clothes for a luxurious moment. Anita looked at the little red being with a curious air of detachment.

"He seems to be a healthy baby," she said listlessly.

"Yes, bless him! We must settle his name soon."

Mary rose to lower a shade for the comfort of the blinking eyes. "Is it not a beautiful name?"

"I must go away," she decided.

Anita heard the announcement with perfunctory regret.

"Will you do something for me first?" she added presently. "Give me one day of freedom. I don't know where I shall go—to town, probably—but I want to get away from this house and everything about it for one day. And this will be my last chance—until the baby is at school," she added with a faint sigh. Mary agreed gladly.

Spring was pouring in at every window as Anita told on her widow's bonnet. The baby, lying on the bed, seemed to find everything enchanting, and kept up a steady flow of conversation. When his mother paused beside him he broke into a wide smile, so human, so full of cheer and good will, that Anita laughed and kissed him impulsively.

Mary coming, she turned away from the baby's radiant face into her room, hearing him impulsively. When he heard the door open he turned away from the window for a last good-bye, she hurried away, pretending not to see.

The tulips were out in the squares and the whole city seemed to be smiling at the day's perfection. It was impossible not to catch a little of the exhilaration. Anita went about with a new step, doing her small errands, and at noon found herself deliciously hungry, a forgotten sensation. When she had finished her luncheon she lingered contentedly at her table by the open window, staring at the sidewalk through.

"I wonder if he's asleep now," she thought.

Mary's hand came to her elbow. One of her husband's associates stood looking down at her fresh morning with kind eyes. "I have only three minutes, but—" He drew out the chair opposite and plunged into his subject. It was work for her, work that would take all her thoughts and her energies, and that she could do well. The pay would not be high; it was the chance to get away from her present life that held her attention. The door that she had believed shut was held open to her, and she accepted eagerly.

When he had turned away, she sat facing the idea, wondering vaguely why she was not more uplifted. It was what she had longed for; why should her heart be suddenly heavy? With a responsible person to take charge of the boy—a woman in place in the street below with a baby against her shoulder, and then all at once Anita felt a little head in her own neck. Involuntarily she bent her cheek down, and her arms tightened as though they held something through her, bringing quick tears to her eyes. Why, she could not do it, give her baby up absolutely, never see him all day? Her little boy—how could she shut him out? Why had she done it for so long? Oh, she did want him—she wanted him for every moment! There was a new heaven and a new earth and all the bitterness, all that was cold and resentful, was swept away in an overwhelming rush of tenderness. She knew now what he meant, her little Arthur: in her inmost soul she had known it weeks ago, but her rebellious spirit had stood aloof and denied the comfort. And now it was hers, all hers.

She had meant to stay until evening, but she scribbled a note explaining that she could not accept the offered work, and took the next train home. The trip seemed hours long to her eagerness, and she almost ran from the cars to her house. He would be asleep—little man! But she wanted to be near him. She wanted, too, to apologize to Mary, to go back on her knees and gather up the friendship she had been willing to throw aside. By the opening of the door she had learned that she did not wish to escape. The day had broken, and Mary met her in silence and drew her into the living room, closing the door. Anita dropped into a chair and waited, not daring to speak. The baby had been taken ill—very ill. There was a trained nurse with him,

Bring Joy to Every Woman's Heart, and Draw Admiration From Every Man. How to Improve Your Appearance.

The true source of beauty is health, every woman takes proper steps to regain and maintain health.

When beauty begins to fade you can be almost certain that some derangement of functional activity is secretly undermining strength and vigor. This must be stopped, and can be stopped by Ferrozone, which vivifies all bodily functions so quickly that an improvement in health and looks immediately follows.

Ferrozone increases the appetite and improves digestion. This stimulates nutrition and quickens the formation of rich pure blood. Better blood means stronger nerves. Increased nerve force reduces the wear and tear on the body. Strength develops, spirits rise, and all-round improvement follows.

A rebuilding process is started by Ferrozone that results in a plump, well developed figure; the complexion becomes clear and rosy, pale, hollow cheeks fill out and sunken eyes take on a new lustre and brightness.

No lady can afford to miss the benefit that invariably follows the use of this grand restorative. Ferrozone is a tonic, a re-builder and regulator of unqualified merit. To its enduring and lasting results thousands have testified. In a convincing letter from her home in Landsdowne, Mrs. F. G. Butler says:

"For years I had a sallow complexion. I did everything to improve it but didn't succeed till I used Ferrozone. It improved the condition of my blood and in a few weeks brought a rosy flush to my cheeks. I took one Ferrozone Tablet at meals and gained strength and flesh. I can strongly recommend Ferrozone to every woman who wants a clear, healthy complexion. Ferrozone did wonders for me. Ferrozone is the best, quickest and most permanent road to health. You should get it right away. But beware of a substitute and be sure you get Ferrozone when you ask for it. EVERYBODY SHOULD READ THE ACADIAN. IT GIVES ALL THE NEWS.

THE ACADIAN.

WOLFVILLE, N. S., MAR. 18, 1904.

World Wide.

The latest budget of war news is big with details of events that haven't happened.

Diplomatic President Roosevelt has cautioned his officials against swerving from neutrality, even to the extent of criticizing either of the far eastern belligerents.

The largest photograph in the world has recently been developed and exhibited in Germany. It is a picture of the bay and city of Naples, in dimensions, 39 1/2 in. by 4 ft. 11 in. A copy of the photograph will be shown at the World's Fair.

From Minnesota comes a tale of Indian cannibalism. A drunken Indian murdered his wife, and being starving as well as drunk, devoured her body. Now a party is on his track to bring him back and have him tried before civilization.

The fighting that has been going on in Somaliland struck something definite last week when Gen. Manning's forces gained a complete, and it is anticipated, final victory over the wild men of the Mullah's army. The Mad Mullah, however, is still at large.

Ottawa University re-opened on Wednesday, March 22nd, having been closed since the fire. All the old students have returned, and several new ones. The students are being quartered in various buildings, but the classes will be conducted without inconvenience.

Joseph Chamberlain is returning to London after a three weeks sojourn in Egypt. Mr Chamberlain's fiscal policy has been condemned as bankrupt by even so grand a political authority as George Meredith. It took Mr Meredith's business about twenty years to prosper, so he ought to know what is bankrupt and what is not.

St. John's Shipping hay from New Brunswick to the Annapolis Valley appears like sending coal to Newcastle. But the trade goes on. A quantity of pressed hay from Carleton county, now in the shr. 'Effort' at the Market Slip, is one of many consignments which have been sent across the bay lately. During the present season more hay than ever before has been shipped to Nova Scotia. The cause of this is that last summer's hay crop in the sister province was an exceptionally poor one. At ordinary times Nova Scotian farmers sell a lot of hay, some of which is brought here for export, but this year none has reached St. John from Nova Scotia, and the farmers have not even enough for their own needs.

Among the new books that will in Quebec, by Messrs Dianne and Doughty. It is published in Quebec and contains an accurate history of the bygone days of the city. More pretensions but less reliable is another history from the pens of Sir Gilbert Parker and Mr Bryan Mr Henham, the novelist, also turns to ancient Quebec for the material of his latest book and in the 'Ploegshare and the Sword' gives us a delightful story of the times of Richelieu. Henry J. Mo-gan has collected the memoirs of some four hundred Canadian women, more or less noteworthy, and compiled a book entitled 'Types of Canadian Woman and of Women who are or have been connected with Canada.'

The Canadian Parliament.

The session of Parliament just opened promises to be one of the most interesting in the history of Canada. Many subjects of vital importance to the people will be discussed, the principal among them being the Grand Trunk Pacific project. During the last session a new feature was introduced into Canadian journalism by the Montreal Daily Herald in the shape of a daily letter telling the story of the preceding day's doings in a bright spicy way. The feature created most favorable comment, and made many friends and subscribers for that enterprising journal. The letters were recognized as the brightest records published of the doings of the Canadian Parliament. The Montreal Herald will continue these letters during the present session, and is offering the paper as a trial trip at the low rate of 25 cents for three months, addressed to any post office in Canada or the United States. A post card to The Herald, Montreal, will bring you a sample copy.

Seminary Notes.

The Recital to be given this (Friday) evening by the pupils in the Vocal Department of the Seminary, promises to be of unusual interest. A varied program, consisting of glees, duets, solos, etc., classic and modern, will be rendered. There are more than twenty pupils taking part. The pupils in Voice will be assisted by those in Piano and Elocution. General admission 25 cents.

We are glad to learn that Miss Warren, teacher of Violin in the Seminary, is rapidly recovering from her recent quiet serious illness.

At a recent meeting of the Seminary Missionary Society, the students were greatly interested in an address by the Rev. F. G. Harrington, setting forth Japanese conditions, and the necessity for evangelistic efforts in that land.

The Senior class to the Seminary this year number 210.

Meeting of Kings County Agricultural Society.

The meeting of the Kings County Agricultural Society at Canning on Tuesday, the 15th, was only fairly well attended but some good papers were presented and valuable discussions followed on very practical subjects.

Capt. C. O. Allen reported the results of his enquiries in the matter of the size of apple barrels and more especially as to whether it was advisable for Nova Scotia to adopt the larger barrel of Ontario. He had written a number of firms, principally in Great Britain, in reference to the matter and they were unanimous in saying that the Nova Scotia barrel should come up to the Ontario one, that at present Nova Scotia apples are discriminated against on account of the size of the barrel.

Prof. Sears gave a paper on 'How to make the Farm Home Attractive.' He advised where possible an open lawn in front, he would plant trees along our roadsides, especially our hard maple, he would use our natural shrubs, many of which are as fine as can be bought at nurseries, and above all he would keep things neat.

Mr John Donaldson spoke next on the production of farm manure and their value. He thought that farmers should aim to produce more barn manure and buy less commercial fertilizers. He said that the farmers who kept stock from them: 1st, the profit from the sale of milk or beef or pork after paying for the feed; 2nd, the profit on the feed or the difference between the cost of producing it and the cost charged to the stock; and 3rd, the profit on the manure. He thought the fertilizing elements in barn manure were in the best possible form besides the value of the humus.

Mr Jno. N. Chute of Berwick, Sec. of the Society, gave a paper on Commercial Fertilizers. He had used them with marked success but thought farmers should study their own needs. Experiment and find out what your needs are. On his own farm he found that some brands worked better than others, that his soil did not need much potash. Other farmers would be quite the reverse. He urged farmers to take advantage of the law provided for analysis of fertilizers to see that the ones they are using come up to the standard, and he discussed the 'guaranteed analysis' as commonly given on fertilizer bags and showed how it might be simplified.

There was considerable discussion on the matter of a dog tax. Several present thought the farmer who has sheep killed by dogs ought to receive pay from the county and all favored a law taxing dogs of all kinds.

Profit in Growing Plums.

A PAPER PREPARED BY MR C. A. PATRIQUIN FOR THE ANNUAL MEETING OF THE F. G. A. AND NOT READ.

Shall we continue to grow plums? This is a question we hear quite often asked of late because of the ravages made by the Black Knot; the droppings of the young plums through the activities of the curculia; the quantities of fruit destroyed by the dry rot during the ripening period; the difficulty of placing the fruit on the market in such a condition that it does not have to be sold as soon as received; and the small prices realized during the last ten years.

Having carefully considered these and other hindrances, and having had some practical experience, I believe there is 'good' money in raising plums. I will suggest some ideas which lead me to think so. The Black Knot has, during the past year, destroyed tens of thousands of trees in this valley, and will, I think, continue its deadly work so long as we continue to deal with it as we now do by cutting it off fall and spring, or in some instances not at all. This disease can, I believe, be overcome by a careful and thorough removal of the Knot from the trees or branches during the summer months, say between the first of June and the first of September. So long as I followed this plan, going over my trees two or three times during this period, I had little difficulty in dealing with the disease and my trees were practically free from Knot. But just as soon as I neglected to do this, and waited until fall or winter to remove, and so doing allowed the spores to ripen and lodge themselves in the bark ready for development at the next season, I found the task of keeping it in subjection not an easy one.

As to the curculio, I have thought it might almost be called a friend so long as we continue to grow varieties that fruit in such clusters. I think that a man or tree is not expected to overtax themselves, and that nature sends this insect as in the case of the tree to relieve it of ripening such a great quantity of fruit.

The difficulty of overcoming the rotting of the fruit during the period of ripening is a hard one to overcome. I have sometimes thought that this disease also comes to assist the tree in preserving its strength, as it is the ripening of its seeds that exhausts the vitality of the tree. This disease thins the fruit that we have neglected to do and so saves it the task of maturing such a number of seeds. I believe if we would thoroughly spray with Bordeaux mixture or some other fungicide and this, the fruit would be little bothered from this disease.

The difficulty of putting plums on the market in such a condition that the slaughter prices as soon as received by the commission men is the most difficult one, it seems to me, that confronts the industry today.

I will suggest some ideas that I think will in a measure help overcome this difficulty.

I would suggest that as fruit is picked from the trees it should be protected from the sun's rays. While there is nothing better for the development of man or fruit than abundance of sun there seems to be nothing more destructive to the keeping qualities of ripened or dead fruit than the sun's rays. When the fruit has been thoroughly cooled of its natural life heat it should be assorted and placed in tight packages that will present as even a temperature as possible, and then shipped to market by express.

Grow varieties that will not be placed on the market before the middle of September. Plums placed on the market before that time are not in demand, owing to warm weather that usually prevails the first of September when little preserving is done.

If we grow varieties of larger size than hitherto, can place them on the market so that they will keep from five to seven days, and our supply commence not earlier than the 15th September, I believe we can realize good prices, and plum growing will be quite as profitable as apples.

The Question of the Hour.

PROF. E. W. SAWYER WRITES ON THE TEMPERANCE OUTLOOK IN KINGS COUNTY.

MR EDITOR.—As one who was present at the temperance meeting in Kentville, on March 4th, and is interested in the cause of temperance, particularly in this county, perhaps I may be allowed to say a few words.

The number present at the meeting and the various sections of the county represented by the audience show how general and deep is the interest in Kings county. That between 700 and 1000 people gathered to hear local speakers on so trite a subject as temperance, proves that something more than a passing curiosity to hear strange voices brought the audience together. The meeting was a declaration of purpose and an expression of determination, on the part of thoughtful men and women, to put down the liquor traffic in this county. The orderly character of the meeting, the absence of invective and mere declamation, betokened the quiet, firm resolve that characterizes those who are sure of their position and are prepared to carry their purpose into execution. A firm conviction of the right and a readiness to see the right done, seemed to pervade the audience.

If the people of Kings county want the liquor traffic in this county stopped, it is certain that the traffic both can, and will be stopped. The action of the liquor sellers in Kentville clearly shows that they fear an aroused public sentiment that will express itself in deeds rather than in words. A free sentiment that rests satisfied with fine phrases and eloquent speech is not dreaded by the liquor traffic. What that interest fears is a sentiment that does, that acts as well as talks; that acts first, and talks afterwards.

Those interested in the temperance movement had an opportunity of hearing the Hon. John G. Wooley give his views on the matter, which he did with power and eloquence. Perhaps the most striking feature of the address was Mr Wooley's interpretation of the commandment, 'Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain,' which was at variance with the view, ordinarily held by theologians. The speaker held that the name meant was that people should not pray one way and vote another; in other words that they should not profess to be Christians, and not vote for the temperance candidate were he of an opposite political stripe.

The most notable event in theatrical circles this winter was the engagement of Sir Henry Irving, who, notwithstanding his advanced age, gave his most brilliant conception of the character of Shylock in the 'Merchant of Venice.'

Mr Monk's resignation as leader of the Conservative party, which was foreshadowed in a previous letter, has created quite a flutter in political circles, being accentuated by the ex-leader's now celebrated Lachine speech, with which the editor and his readers are of course thoroughly familiar. Mr Hugh Graham, proprietor of the 'Star,' has been credited with the development of the Tartar boom, by which Mr Monk was sidetracked. A Conservative caucus to be presided over by Mr Rufus Pope, will invite Mr Monk to withdraw his resignation, which, if the desire is unanimous, the ex-leader will probably accede to.

Montreal may truthfully be called a political incubator. Orators are as thick as fleas, particularly among the descendants of the late Jacques Cartier. The fact that constituencies are limited, causes much heart burning as a consequence, among the embryonic limbs of the law.

A new journal, which has for its mission the speedy disintegration of the British Empire, has recently been launched. Mr Bourassa, the high priest of the anti-imperialist cult, is the chief contributor. This fact therefore removes all mystery as to the cause of Mr Chamberlain's departure for Egypt.

Colds are Dangerous.
How often you hear it remarked: 'It's only a cold,' and a few days later learn that the man is on his back with pneumonia. This is of such common occurrence that a cold, however slight, should not be disregarded. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy counteracts any tendency toward pneumonia. It always cures and is pleasant to take. For sale by G. V. Rand.

A despatch to the New York Sun from Glenwood Springs, Colo., says:—After experimenting for seven years, John R. Spencer, an old fruit grower, of Grand Junction, Colo., has succeeded in perfecting a seedless apple. The apple looks like a navel orange. Its inside is entirely solid, and there is a depression in the navel end very similar to that of the seedless fruit. The tree on which the seedless fruit grows is unusual in that it has no blossoms. Spencer will not reveal the secret of his budding and grafting.

Montreal, March 8, 1904.—For a choice brand of No. 1, hard weather Montreal has distanced all her competitors this past winter. She is, however, equally at home in the juicy life. The streets are miniature rivers at present, owing to the heavy rains, ably assisted by Old Sol, whose efforts in diminishing the huge snow banks, which adorn every street, have been very noticeable. It will not surprise anyone to see the electric cars running on snow bottoms if the soft spell continues for any length of time.

The death of Mr. John K. Martin occurred at the home of his stepson, Mr. A. M. Hoare, Halifax, on Tuesday evening. The deceased was for some years a highly respected resident of Wolfville and had many friends here. He was eighty-five years of age, a consistent member of the Baptist church and was active in church and temperance work.

What came near being a drowning accident occurred on Tuesday afternoon. Master Karl Shaw was on board the schooner Greville, which has been laid up for the winter here, and was pushing away the ice-cakes from the stern of the vessel. In order to do this with better effect he stepped over on the ice, which under the influence of the March sun is becoming brittle. Finding the cake going down under him he jumped to another, and finally was precipitated into the water. He cried for help, and a young man named Munro, from the schooner Jessie D., went to his assistance. With much difficulty he succeeded in rescuing Karl in an almost insensible condition, but with the weight of his clothing was unable to get out of the icy water himself. Capt. Smith, of the Jessie D., then appeared on the scene, and succeeded in helping Munro to land. Both Munro and Shaw were pretty well done for but were all right the next day. It was a decidedly close call for both of them, and the plucky conduct of Munro and Capt. Smith is to be commended.

Fears are entertained for the safety of steamer Pro Patria, which sailed from St. Pierre, Miramichi, for Halifax over two weeks ago. The voyage generally occupied less than three days, and she is now 14 days overdue. She had 40 passengers on board and carried a crew of 30 men. It was thought that she had become caught in the ice, but this idea has been abandoned, as all the steamers seen in the ice have arrived. Even if she is adrift, the passengers and crew must be on the verge of starvation as the steamer was provisioned for only a short trip and her coal supply was limited. [Since writing the above the steamer is reported as having returned to St. Pierre in safety.]
