

FIRST MATE'S STORY

Zam-Buk saved my legs

H. M. Ryall, First Mate S.S. "Boston," Yarmouth, N.S., writes: "Zam-Buk has been a boon to me. I had the misfortune to fall and badly cut my shins. The wounds did not give me much trouble for about a week, and then my legs began to swell and pain me very badly. The doctor told me that my clothing had poisoned the wounds. He gave me some salve and an antiseptic wash. I used these for a short time, but instead of getting better the blood-poisoning and the pain got worse. I suffered so much pain and was so reduced in consequence that I had to leave the ship and go home. My legs were at that time swollen to almost three times their usual size, and the pain was so intense I could not sleep. Indeed my legs were in such a condition that I was afraid the doctor would advise amputation. Just at that time a friend recommended Zam-Buk. My wife obtained a box and began applying it to the wounds. Almost from the first application I felt a change taking place. The throbbing, burning pain ceased, and gradually the swelling began to go down. I continued the Zam-Buk treatment, and after a few boxes had been used the wounds were completely cured and I was able to go back to work again. I certainly believe that Zam-Buk saved my legs, if not my life."

CHAPTER XXVIII.

"Yes; join me. Look here, I'll tell you all about myself in a jiffy. My name is Doyle. I'm a horse dealer—as you've guessed, no doubt. But, mind you, there are dealers and dealers, and I'll tell you at once, sir, that I'm an honest one. Perhaps that's why I haven't made my fortune years ago. I've got a good connection—I buy horses all over the place—England, Ireland—wherever I can get good 'uns. Those you saw came from Ireland, and there ain't better anywhere—but that's neither here nor there. Join me. I don't want a partner—don't believe in 'em; but if you'll work with me, I'll treat you like a gentleman—as I see you are—and give you"—he laughed—"two pounds a week," and he held out his huge hand.

Harry grasped it gratefully; then his face clouded.

"You are very good," he said, "and I am more grateful to you than I can say, but—"

"Well, say three pounds, then!" broke in Mr. Doyle, hastily; "I don't want to be mean, you know!"

"It is not the money; I think you have offered me quite enough," said poor Harry, hesitating; "but you know nothing of me—"

"Do you mean to say that you have been in trouble?" he demanded rather blankly.

"In sore trouble," said Harry, grimly; then he smiled, as he caught the man's meaning. "No, not the trouble you think, Mr. Doyle! I, too, am an honest man!"

"Right you are!" exclaimed the other, striking him on the back, heartily. "There, I'll take your word for it! I shall soon find out whether it's true or not! I'm a bit of a judge of faces—a dealer has got to be, you know—and I flatter myself I can tell an honest man as soon as I can a wind-broken horse. Right you are!

Trouble, eh? Lost your wife, perhaps? No? Well, don't tell me, if you don't like! I know what trouble is—it's like a bruise, you don't want people feeling and pawing it about. You've no call to tell me anything about it. You don't mind telling me your name, I suppose?"

"Not the least," said Harry, and he told him.

"Hem! Good name! Well, sir, I think we'd better be toddling! Where are you stopping?"

Harry told him. He called a cab, and they were driven through one of the parks to a quiet street, in which stood a tall gateway; at the side of the gateway was a pleasant little house, with flowers in the window boxes, and a creeper climbing about, which gave it quite a rustic appearance.

"My cottage in the wood," said Mr. Doyle. "Stables at the back. I live here when I'm in London. Only keep an old woman, who'll be delighted to have some one else to do for."

What could Harry say? He went down to the stables. There were a great many stalls, and nearly all filled.

Mr. Doyle strode into the middle of the yard, and called several men by their names.

"Here, look here," he said; "this gentleman—Mr. Herne—gives orders here when I'm out of the way. Understand? Right," and strode on.

Before half an hour had passed Mr. Doyle had plumbed Harry's knowledge, and was more than satisfied.

Harry walked back to the hotel that night in a state of confusion and wonderment. Providence had taken up the thread of his life and spun it on a fresh wheel, as it were, in a moment.

His new life began the next day. Mr. Doyle proved as good as his word, and trusted him up to the hilt. A natural consequence ensued; Harry Herne was, as Mr. Doyle had been sharp enough to see, a gentleman; he understood a horse; he never made a mistake. The consequence was that Mr. Doyle rapidly recognized his superior, and bowed to Harry's decision without question. The new life would have made Harry happy enough, but, alas! there was a rift in his heart which made the music of existence mute. He used to go whistling and singing about Darracourt.

with a word—and such a pleasant word—for every soul he met. Now he rarely, if ever, smiled, and was as sparing of his speech as a Brahmin. The men in the yard regarded him with a mixture of admiration and awe—admiration for his handsome face and splendid form, and awe for the grave, quiet manner and that nameless something which proclaims the man of gentle birth. Mr. Doyle swore sometimes, Harry never. Mr. Doyle was often disobeyed, Harry met with instant and cheerful obedience.

It was hard work. Long journeys had to be made, often to no purpose. Strings of horses had to be conveyed to and from London. There were letters to write, people to see. Harry had no time to dwell upon the past excepting at night, and then, ah! then, in the quietude of the little room, with the flowers outside the window to remind him of the country, how plainly the vision of Lucille came floating into the room!

There he would sit, his head drooping, his heart aching and aching for just a sight of her, just to hear her sweet voice once more.

At times, too, in the day, the black fist would seize him, and he would stride up and down the flagged courtyard, his face pale and set. At such times the men did not care to approach him, and even Mr. Doyle kept out of his sight.

Now, whenever very particular "swells," as Mr. Doyle called them, came to the yard, he used to hand them over to Harry.

"You see, my boy," he would say, "you are one of their sort, and they take all you say as gospel truth, while they eye me askew sometimes, though I may be just as straight. You can sell them a horse in half the time, and get more money—especially if there is a woman in the case. By George, some of these days one of 'em will walk off with you, as well as a nag, see if they don't!"

And Harry would shrug his shoulders, and the bitter look would come into his face.

One morning there drove into the yard a quiet-looking brougham. Mr. Doyle called Harry at once.

"Here's one of your customers!" he said.

Harry was going out; but there stepped from the brougham, a tall, thin gentleman, with a pale face and gray, steely eyes.

Harry stopped short as if he had been pulled back by a string, and turned into the little office again.

"Go and see him for me," he said to Mr. Doyle.

He had recognized the marquis. Now the sight of him had torn open the wound in his breast, and sickened him, and when Mr. Doyle came back he found him sitting with his head in his hands, his face almost as pale as the marquis' own.

"Hello!" he said. "What's the matter?"

"Nothing, nothing!" said Harry, impatiently. "Well? Did you do any business?"

Mr. Doyle swore.

"Business? No! About as hard a customer as you could find, and as suspicious as a lord! I'd like to get the better of that man, hang me if I wouldn't! It's the Marquis of Merle!"

"I know!" said Harry, absently.

"You know?"

"I've seen him. Well, well?"

"Oh, he didn't buy! A nice fellow he is! About as warm as they make them! Spends most of his time at the Hazard. They tell me he's going to Old Nick as fast as he can gallop! Get home and lie down, lad; you look knocked up. The fact is you do more than your share of the work; you go and rest!"

"Rest!" said Harry. "No, it is not rest I want, I want rousing!" and he laughed a laugh not pleasant to hear. "I think I'll go for a ride," and he thrust his hat on his head and walked into the stable.

A young horse had arrived the day before, a handsome animal in everything but temper. Harry had had a brush with him in the early morning, and had almost found him too much even for his accustomed hands. He went up to the quadrumped and put the saddle on him; the animal laying its ears back and letting out with the ferocity of a tiger.

"Here!" said Mr. Doyle. "Don't ride that beast, take my cob."

But Harry shook his head.

"I want something to do," he said, grimly.

"Well, he'll give it to you, sure enough," said Mr. Doyle. "But don't take him, there's a good lad."

Quickly Freed from Grease and Grime and Easily Kept Spotlessly Clean with Old Dutch Cleanser.

Harry's will was notorious in the yard, and even so he made this remonstrance. Mr. Doyle knew that it was useless.

He watched the pair, both so willful, go out of the yard with a mind full of misgiving.

Harry, utterly indifferent to where he was going, made for the park instinctively. If he could only get a clear place for a fight and a gallop with this four-legged demon he felt that he might cast off the black fit which the sight of the marquis had aroused.

The fight soon commenced; fortunately the park was nearly empty, and Harry got the clear place he desired. For a quarter of an hour the animal tried every trick he knew to get rid of the burden which sat and nipped him like grim death. He kicked, reared, plunged, tried to bolt, but in vain; the hands that held him were like steel; the rider seemed to know and anticipate every vicious trick.

At last the horse gave it up as a bad job and consented to go along like a rational animal. The foam flecked its breast, its eyes were starting, its mouth sore. Harry's hands were tired, but there was something like peace in his heart, and for a time at least he had mastered the demon which kept continually whispering: "Throw honor and conscience to the dogs; go and make her your wife, you fool! Why lose all your life? Go and take advantage of her love and marry her!"

He was riding along, his head drooping, his touch upon the reins slack but commanding, on the best of terms with the horse, when suddenly a carriage came to-ward them. Harry did not look up until it was quite near; then something seemed to compel him to do so, some strange influence which he felt as strongly as if he had heard his name called.

He raised his head, and the next moment his heart leaped into his mouth.

There, seated in the landau, was Lucille!

She was alone, and leaning back with a pale face and half-closed eyes. She was changed, wonderfully changed; he saw it at once. As beautiful as ever, with the same loveliness, and yet—what was the difference? Her name rang in his ears, he thought he had called her; but it was fancy only. The carriage came along slowly; she did not raise her eyes; it passed—passed so closely that he could have touched her by leaning forward.

And she had not looked up! He drew a long breath, his eyes flashed, his heart leaped. It was no use to struggle any longer; he must, he would claim her! His own, his very own!

With a cry that really was no more than a whisper, though he thought it was a shout, he turned the horse's head to dash after the carriage. He would speak to her, call her name, say "Lucille, my darling! my love! have pity on me—I cannot live any longer without you!"

In his mad haste he plunged the spurs into the horse, and struck it with the whip. The devil in the animal not having been cast out, but only tired out, roused itself. With a snort and a plunge he flung himself sideways and fell!

For the Biggest Battle of the Campaign Between Russians and Germans.

10 A. M.

Special Evening Telegram. LONDON, To-day. A battle which promises to be the greatest and most important of the Eastern campaign has commenced near Cracow, Galicia. The Austro-German army, estimated to number 800,000 men, is endeavouring to check the Russian advance. This combined Austro-German army has occupied a line inside of the Russian Poland frontier from Cracow through Czenstochewa, to Kalish, has had lots of time to prepare strong defensive positions. The Germans and Austrians are bringing up reinforcements from Breslau and Bavaria. All the Bohemian and Moravian railways are congested with German troops and war material. The German plan of invasion of Russia from East Prussia has failed, according to Russian official reports. These reports say the Germans got as far as the western bank of the Niemen River, but found strong Russian forces on the hills on the eastern bank. Being in low marshy ground the Germans, according to the Russian view point, were at a disadvantage and could not advance. The fight is now in progress at Mirampol, near the northeastern Prussian frontier, while further south in the Suwalki district the Russians claim to have turned the German retreat into a disorderly flight. More heavy fighting is taking place at Augustow, 140 miles N. E. of Warsaw, in the province of Suwalki, where the Germans have received reinforcements and have been able to take the offensive. At Glatzew, 25 miles southwest of Augustow, the Russians have again entered German territory. At Miawa the Russians claim a victory over the Germans.

Fire Destroy Browning's Bakery.

A fire, the origin of which is unknown, occurred at Browning's bakery, in the west end of the city, yesterday afternoon, and before it could be got under control the building was practically destroyed. The fire was discovered near the boiler house about 2.30 p.m. and immediately the alarm was sent in. The Central and Western companies responded promptly but the fire had reached such proportions it was found impossible to save the bakery, so their attention was directed mainly to the buildings nearby. Six streams of water were brought into service, one of which was a stream of 100 lbs. pressure from the Southside. For nearly two hours the firemen and volunteers worked assiduously and succeeded in confining the area of the fire to the bakery. The total loss will be several thousand dollars, about two-thirds of which is covered by insurance. Some of the machinery is still good and it is expected that the factory will be rebuilt within a short time. In June 1880 Browning's mill was destroyed by fire but was quickly rebuilt.

At the City Hall.

The Chairman and full Board were present at last night's session of the Civic Commission. A telegram from Mr. F. Longley, the expert who is to report on the city water service, was read. Mr. Longley will arrive here on Monday next. The Gas Company wrote saying that in future they will notify the Engineer when opening streets. Mr. Morrie and Summers on behalf of Mrs. Barrett, of Springdale Street, claimed compensation for inconvenience caused by the blocking of the right of way near her house. Nothing was done in the matter. J. P. Blackwood wrote as to the debentures in payment of the award for Flavin Street property. The matter will be attended to.

Kent and McGrath wrote re an award for land taken by the Council, at Round Pond. This and the other outstanding awards will be attended to.

It was decided that all bills for taxes and water rates be sent out within ten days of the opening of each half year. ### Divorced Life

By Helen Hanson Fuestel

The Hand of Destiny

Marian found Challoner strangely unlike other men she had known. His habitual indifference whetted her curiosity, and goaded her into an acute desire to catch a glimpse of what was beneath the mask.

In her brief conversation, he talked to her in language almost strange. It was free from men's almost universal effort to be clever and engaging in the presence of an attractive young woman. His remarks were at all time remote from flattery. He did not struggle to be complimentary.

Other men, by doing these things, had always made Marian uncomfortably conscious of the sex difference between them, had forced her to keep on woman's eternal guard. With Challoner, however, she did not feel compelled to keep her guard thrown up. Conversation with this man, accordingly, was restful—not unlike a placid and refreshing oasis in her desolating travels among men.

She had begun to feel a great curiosity as to the kind of books he took with him on his lonely rambles with his pipe. She found herself making mental lists of the sort of thing she hoped he was reading. One day, with a startling thrill of surprise and satisfaction, she learned that he was reading Joseph Conrad, a writer whom she herself had discovered with a sense of weird elation before the limited editions of his books had begun to claim anything like general public attention. The wild, crude power, the booming color, the surge and swing of Conrad's terrific tales had filled Marian with fascination.

And now the discovery that Challoner, the interesting and elusive new-comer at the Inn, was reading this author of all others, seemed at once to establish for Marian Whitthrop a more potent bond of attraction.

Challoner looked glad when he discovered that Marian knew and cared for Conrad. "The admirers of Conrad are a coterie," he said. "He will never be a best seller because he's so far above and beyond the tastes of the general reader. I've always been a lover of the sea. That's one reason why I could understand Conrad's language, even though I had never seen it written before. I'm mighty glad I've found someone who reads and understands him."

Never had Challoner spoken so freely, as unrestrainedly, to Marian. His habitual indifference, eyes glowing and sparkling as he talked, Marian listened as one listens to an oracle abruptly found among common walks of men. They arranged for an exchange of the different volumes of this writer's works which each had brought along to the Inn. Temperament and circumstances were reaching cut with restless fingers to draw these two into closer association.

Marian, dully aware of what was happening, made no effort to resist. What dusty, tired traveller will undertake to resist the alluring vision of a shady resting place ahead, especially when the journey is essentially aimless, and when the anchor which once held her fast has been hoisted by means of the windlass of divorce proceedings?

Thenceforth, Marian and Challoner saw much more of each other. The latter's indifference began to wane. Not only pipe and book, but the woman now began accompanying him on his rambles and trips in a canoe.

LONDON GOSSIP.

LONDON, Sept. 16th, 1914.

THE CITY OF REFUGE.

London is now a city of refuge, as it was in the days of the Napoleonic war. You cannot go many yards in the Strand, you can hardly board a suburban bus or train, without seeing some "alien friend," whether Belgian, French, or American from Germany. The Belgians go about usually in families under the wing of their hostess. The people who have given hospitality are doing their best to make London homelike to these homeless folk, and are sparing no trouble in the way of taking the refugees about among the show places. Walking in a suburban road you may meet a Belgian who, without introduction, stops you and pours out profuse gratitude to England and the English.

This faith in the shelter of London has its embarrassing side, for the concentration of the refugees here was not anticipated when the various relief agencies were started at the outbreak of the war. Middle-class refugees with some money are taking small furnished flats and houses in the suburbs, and living very quietly. This morning outside Buckingham Palace I saw a Belgian widow in deep and flowing black showing her children a company of Guards setting off for Belgium. They watched the solemn step of the Guards—the men looked unfamiliar to London eyes in their khaki—as they came out of the King's Court and headed by a band in parade uniform playing them away to the field of adventure. The Belgian lady followed them with an intense and adoring gaze. French people from Paris and the North are now among us in very large numbers, but they are more familiar with our London ways than the Belgians, few of whom have been to England before the Germans pitchedforked them out of home and happiness.

THE SCOTS GUARDS' SONGS.

Reading in the casualty lists the names of so many Scots Guards men, brings back before me a scene I recently witnessed at the Waterloo station terminus of the London and South Western Railway when many of these brave men were entraining for the war. They had been played to the station by the band with the uplifting "It's a sad way to Pipe away," but after the band had ceased something more characteristic of Scottish soldiers was heard. Someone at the far end of the train began "The Bonnie Bonnie Banks of Loch Lomond," the old Jacobite song that told of war and eternal parting, and it spread slowly down the line, catching fire at each carriage till the whole train was singing it. At such a moment the pathos of the words and the lament of the tune (backed though they might be in other places) were inexpressibly touching as the wives of the soldiers who were there in numbers with their infants joined in the chorus.

You'll tak' the high road
And I'll tak' the low road,
And I'll be in Scotland before ye;
But she and my true love
Will never meet again.
On the bonnie, bonnie banks of Loch Lomond,
It reverberated in slow waves through the station. A number of the men were reservists and men who had rejoined the colors, and so there were more wives and children, and more hard partings than I have seen at other departures during the great war. But the men were obviously eager to be off. Most of them were in high spirits. One who wished to pay his respects for the last time to the refreshment room, was pulled up short with the words, "Go if you like, but you'll not get back, and bang goes your chance of fighting the Germans." That terrible threat was enough.

PITY THE POOR "AUTHORIZED" CORRESPONDENTS.

As most people in Fleet Street know, a party of twelve war correspondents, including men of long and honorable experience, were selected more than five weeks ago by the War Office and the proprietors of the leading English newspapers and agencies to accompany our Expeditionary force in the field. They have loyally observed every condition laid down in the War Office regulations. Acting on the instructions of the press officer detailed by the War Office to control their proceedings, they have engaged servants, purchased horses, and helped to arrange for their mess. In the hope of receiving orders at any moment most of them have patiently remained in London, while other correspondents unauthorized by the War Office, have gone roaming about Belgium and France in motors, setting and chronicling something at all events of the realities in this greatest of wars. Yet they wait week after week; no order comes from

ICH DIEN.

Some folks are wondering whether the war will lead to a change in the motto of the Prince of Wales. The famous "Ich Dien" is of German origin, having been taken, so tradition says, by the Black Prince together with the three Prince of Wales' feathers, from the helmet of the blind King of Bohemia, who was slain at the battle of Crécy. The general idea is that the English rendering, "I serve," might be substituted for the German words. In the ordinary course of procedure a change in a coat-of-arms is referred to the College of Arms, but inquiries made of that body indicate that any alteration in the Royal Arms would be effected in the first place by an Order in #### GOOD-BYE, OH! BACKACHE.

Nervine Will Fix You.

Stiffness is rubbed right out; Every Sign of Pain Disappears. Gee whizz—think of it! No more stomach dosing necessary to cure your lame back. Every trace of lameness, every bit of stiffness, every sign of weakness in the back's muscles can be rubbed away for all time to come by good old "Nervine."

No other liniment can do the work so quickly; can penetrate so deeply, can bring ease and comfort to the back-weary sufferer as Nervine invariably does. Backache isn't the only malady Nervine is quick to cure. For lumbago or sciatica you would go far to find relief so speedy as Nervine gives. For chronic rheumatism there are pain-destroying properties in Nervine that give it first rank. The way it humbers up a stiff joint and takes soreness out of strained or rheumatic muscles is simply a wonder. If you have an ache or a pain anywhere, if you have a sore back, a stiff neck, a stiff joint, a strained muscle—If you have lumbago, congested chest or sore throat, just try Nervine. Rub it on plentifully—it won't blister, it can't do anything but cure you quickly. The large 50c. family size bottle is the most economical, of course, but you can't from any dealer, also get the 25c. small size Nervine, the king of all pain-relieving remedies.

headquarters; at the War Office they are repeatedly put off, and their patience is wearing thin. In the public interest, as well as their own, many of them met on September 12th and drew up a letter to Lord Kitchener simply stating the facts of the case, pointing out in what a difficult position they and their papers were placed just because they had been selected for their special qualifications, and asking whether he could not fix a definite and early date for their departure. I hear vaguely that there is now some talk of guiding them officially over the old battlefields at a future time. Queer notions of Journalism some people have.

A NEW WAR DECORATION.

It is said that the King is considering a new decoration to be awarded to those who conspicuously distinguish themselves during the present war. In the past it has been customary to reward officers with either admission to or promotion in the Order of the Bath, but there are at present such a large number of members of this Order that it is felt some limit should be placed and a new military order founded. When this comes to pass, however, it will be found that decorations are granted very much more sparingly than was the case during the South African War, when Stars and Orders were showered. It has been suggested that the new Order, when it is founded, should bear the name of each of their Majesties, but no decision in the matter is likely to be arrived at for some little time.

In connection with our well known tobacco business we have recently installed an up-to-date Soda Fountain, and during the summer will dispense Arctic Soda Water; our syrups are the pure juice of the fruits and make a delicious drink. Try a 5 cent glass and cool off. JAMES P. CASH, Water Street.

Council. It is interesting to note that the motto of the Prince of Wales is the only German one in the British peerage, though many Peers have French and Latin ones.

HELP FOR A JADED TRADE.

The autumn trade for some dress-making firms is turning out beyond expectation to be good. One would not have supposed that the seasonal activity which normally begins about this time would be entirely absent this year. Women's purchasing power has diminished very much, but it has not disappeared. Still, the demand for some kinds of clothing has, of course, been killed by the war, and there is considerable unemployment everywhere in the women's trade. It is therefore rather surprising to hear of one or two firms which are able to keep some part of their staff working until half-past nine at night. There are particular reasons for this spasmodic outburst of industry. One of the reasons is, again, the heaven-sent Americans, who have in the last two months spent more money in London than they intended to when they set sail from New York. Hundreds of them, scattered over the Continent when the war began, have lost their luggage beyond immediate hope of recovery. They have added considerably to the London demand for clothes. I am told that one dress-making shop has orders from sixty American women for autumn frocks. Besides the Americans there are a good many English women whose wardrobes are by this time perhaps having adventures on the Continent. Unfortunately a little rush of trade due to such a cause cannot last very long.

OFFICIAL TO THE GOVERNOR.

LONDON, Oct. 2. The German policy of mine-laying combined with their submarine activities, make counter-measures necessary on military grounds. His Majesty's Government have, therefore, authorized a mine-laying policy in certain waters.

To reduce the risk to non-combatants, the Admiralty announces that it is dangerous for ships to cross the area between lat. 51.15 and 51.40 north, and longitude 1.35 and 3.00 east.

The southern limit of the German minefield is lat. 52 north, but it must not be supposed that navigation is safe in any part of the Southern waters of the North Sea.

(Sgd.) HARCOURT.

AN ARTILLERY BATTLE.

LONDON, Oct. 2. Dilating upon the splendid accuracy of the artillery fire and the extent to which the artillery has been used in the present war, the Daily Mail correspondent in France says the infantry has counted for little in these protracted operations. On the Allies' left wing the men say that they have nothing to do, and several have complained of spending eight days in the trenches without seeing a German.

GERMANS HEAVILY REINFORCED.

PARIS, Oct. 2. (Official.) A statement issued by the War Office this afternoon says that terrific fighting continues incessantly near Roye, where the Germans have been strongly reinforced. On our left wing the battle continued with terrific fighting notably in the region of Roye, where the Germans appear to have concentrated important reinforcements. The action extends more and more toward the north. The front of the battle line is now extended into the region to the south of Arras. Upon the Meuse the Germans attempted at night to throw a bridge across the river near St. Mihiel. The bridge was destroyed by our guns. In the Woivre district our offensive continues and progresses step by step, notably in the region between Apremont and St. Mihiel. On the remainder of the front there have been attempted only partial operations here and there.

MUTINOUS HINDUS SHOT.

LONDON, Oct. 2. In a despatch from Calcutta, the correspondent of Reuter's Telegram Co., describes briefly the mutiny of Sikhs at Hajbal, ten miles from Calcutta, in which 15 of the Indians were killed. The Hindus who mutinied are the men who more than three months ago resisted the Canadian Government's order of deportation, but who finally were compelled to return to India from Vancouver on the same ship that brought them out.

PREPARING FOR BIG ONSLAUGHT.

PARIS, Oct. 2. The official reports indicate that the French and British are massing a large army for onslaught on the Germans near Arras. The arrival of the East Indian troops gives the Allies sufficient force to execute this manoeuvre.

GERMANS FEVER STRICKEN.

LONDON, Oct. 2. It is reported in Amsterdam that 800 German troops in the lines between Brussels and Antwerp are suffering from typhoid fever.

ENEMY PREPARES TO MOVE.

LONDON, Oct. 2. A despatch from the Amsterdam correspondent of the Central News says, advising reaching there to-day from Brussels, set forth that there is every reason to anticipate an early withdrawal of German troops from the Belgian capital. Wounded men are being sent to Germany, he says, and German official documents are being packed up. The correspondent says he has learned from a good source that the German general staff has left Luxembourg in motor cars for Mainz.

ANTWERP'S POSITION EXCELLENT.

LONDON, Oct. 2. News from Antwerp says the city's position is excellent. The German dead near Wovre and St. Catherine's are counted by thousands, entire companies having been wiped out.

AUSTRIAN NAVAL BASE ATTACKED.

ROME, Oct. 2. The Anglo-French Mediterranean fleet is attacking Pola, in the Adriatic.

VICTORIOUS SERBIANS.

NISH, Oct. 2. The Serbians have captured Vlassenitz. Another attempt by the Austrians to cross the River Sava has been repulsed.

RUSSIANS WIN SEVEN DAY BATTLE.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 2. The seven days' battle between the Germans and Russians west of the River Niemen, in Poland, has ended in a victory for the Czar's troops. The Germans are in full retreat.

ZEPPELINS ATTACKING ANTWERP.

ANTWERP, Oct. 2. Zeppelin airships are operating with German artillery in attacking Antwerp. The infantry attacks by the Germans are decreasing because of severe shocks and heavy losses.

HOT WORK AT TSING-TAO.

TOKIO, Oct. 2. Japanese destroyers have wrecked the German barracks at Tsing-Tao, and fire is raging in the fortifications. The Japanese fleet continues to bombard the fortress, assisted by the British-Japanese land battery.

COTTON DISTRICTS AFFECTED.

LONDON, Oct. 2. A correspondent of the Central News at Acington, in Lancashire, says that the general opinion among cotton manufacturers is that because of the war the mills of Lancashire and Cheshire and, in fact, of the whole country, will be forced to close before Christmas. Thousands of employees are now idle and the suggestion is made that the Government come to the rescue with a large grant.

THE BATTLE IN RUSSIAN POLAND.

PETROGRAD, Oct. 2. The General Staff has given out the following official communication: Russian troops have continued to repulse the enemy from the boundaries of the governments of Suwalki and Lomzha. The engagement has been very fierce west of Symno. The German troops that were attacking Aschewetz are retreating hastily to the north. Considerable forces of the enemy, of which the bulk have arrived from the west, are concentrating in the districts west of the governments of Piotrkow and Klecie. Russian cavalry and infantry vanguards are reconnoitering energetically through all that region, impeding through vigorous attacks the movement of the enemy. The Germans always endeavor to use the highways in Russian territory because the other roads being rough paralyze their artillery trains. At attack by Russian cavalry against the German vanguard in front of Andrew and marching on Klecie was crowned with great success. The German infantry was caught unawares and is retreating in disorder pursued by Russian cavalry. The bombardment of Ossetz did damage to only a few private dwellings and a few telephone lines, as the gar-

Farewell of Cochrane Street League.

The executive of Cochrane Street Epworth League last night bade adieu to its members, who have volunteered. The event took place at the residence of Mr. H. N. Burt, the President of the League. It was regretted, though the circumstances were unavoidable, that the entire League could not attend. Patriotic speeches were made by the Pastor, Rev. Mr. Whitmarsh and Mr. Burt. On behalf of the League the Pastor presented each volunteer with a souvenir pin, containing the city coat of arms. A fitting reply was made for the Volunteers by Sergt. George Taylor. Patriotic music was rendered during the evening and after the singing of the National Anthem and "God be with you till we meet again" the gathering dispersed.

Rider Snatches Man From Death.

British Cavalry Officer Tells of Countrymen's Deeds of Valor—Lancer Takes the Horse of the German He Slew.

London, Sept. 16.—A British cavalry officer gives in a letter to a relative in England some stirring incidents and experiences.

"I shall never forget," he says, "how a splendidly made trooper of the — with his shirt in ribbons actually stooped so low from his saddle as to snatch a wounded comrade from instant death at the hands of a powerful German. And then, having swung the man right around to the rear side, made him hang on to his stirrup leather while he lunged his sword clean through the German's neck."

A young lancer, certainly not more than twenty, stripped of tunic and shirt and fighting in his vest, charged a German who had fired on a wounded man and pierced him to the heart, seizing his horse as he fell and exchanged it for his own, which had got badly damaged. Then his sword sheathed like lightning, he swung round and shot a German clean through the head and silenced him forever.

There have been many actions in which Englishmen have had to face overwhelming odds and have done it without flinching, without a murmur, retiring after the action. But you will some day, when the records of this campaign are pieced together and the world realizes the nature—the savage, brutal, hypocritical nature of the swelled-head Prussian—know what the British army has cheerfully gone through and is prepared to go through at the call of duty."

Patrons Pleased.

The patrons of the popular Crescent Picture Palace were pleased with the splendid programme presented last night, the big three reel feature: "Kathleen Mavourneen" fulfilled all that was expected of it, and the comedy picture: "The Goat Herder's Daughter" was also much enjoyed. Mr. Frederick Knights sang although being of a lighter composition than is usually used by him was sung very well indeed and gained rounds of applause. The same bill will be repeated to-night.

On Monday a two reel Eclair feature will be shown: "The Evil Genius" a superb photographic production.

Enjoying Though Not Possessing.

By RUTH CAMERON.

"I do not own an inch of land, But all I see is mine, The orchards and the mowing field, The lawns and garden fine, The winds my tax collectors are, They bring me tithes divine, Wild scents and subtle essences A tribute rare and free, And more magnificent than all, My window keeps for me, A glimpse of blue immensity, A little chip of sea."

—Lucy Larcom.

As we grow older we lose some of our sources of happiness, but we develop others. That is, if we are wise. If we are not, we fight bitterly to keep the semblance of youth long after youth has gone, a sad when even that is impossible, we spend the last of our lives, regretting the first of them.

One of the richest sources of happiness which anybody can develop is the ability to enjoy beautiful things without being troubled by the longing to possess them.

Two women passed in front of a window where some wonderful bits of statuary were displayed. The younger woman gave a quick glance in and then turned at the other's arm. "Come away," she said with bitterness, frowning her voice and drawing down the corners of her mouth. "Come away, it makes me miserable to look at those things, I want some of them so."

"But, my dear," said the older woman, "can't you enjoy looking at them even if you can't have them? Just see that exquisite bowl. The shape of it actually makes me happy it is so perfect." And a smile of the purest kind of pleasure lit up her sweet, plain face and thrilled in her voice. Just

War on Part of Allies Justified Says Pacifigator.

Dr. David Starr Jordan, Chancellor of the Leland Stanford University, who has studied international law and lectured against it in Germany, gives his verdict against the Tenth.

No man is more widely known on this continent as an advocate of international peace, and as an opponent of militarism, than Dr. David Starr Jordan, Chancellor of the Leland Stanford University. Some two years ago Dr. Jordan addressed the Canadian Club in Montreal on this topic, and since that time he has made a journey around the globe, visiting Australia, Japan, the Balkans, Austria, Germany and Great Britain, in all of these countries addressing public meetings, for the most part devoting his attention to a discussion of the same subject. He arrived in Montreal on Sunday on the Megantic, and kindly consented to give to a Herald and Telegraph representative his views on the European conflagration.

These views are of particular interest to Canadians, as representing the conclusions of a trained and disinterested observer, who has had exceptional opportunities of studying German public opinion, and who has frequently expressed his conviction that the underlying motive of Germany's military and naval preparations was defensive and not aggressive.

"I am naturally," said Dr. Jordan, "greatly grieved at the catastrophe which has overtaken Europe, and must confess that it has upset at least one conviction that I have long entertained—that financial considerations would prevent this war—even if at the same time it has confirmed my fears as to the dangers which confront civilization by the existence of military autocracies and great aggregation of capital employed in the manufacture of armaments.

The Junker Castle.

"It has been my privilege to possess the friendship of many German public men and men of letters, and while I appreciated, for some years past, the fact that there was, in the ranks of these classes of Germans, no little sympathy with the spirit that animates the pages of Treitschke, and finds articulation and concrete expression in Bernhardi's works—the spirit of war for both for its own sake and for the sake of Empire—I must confess that I was not prepared for the overwhelming evidence now presented that these archaic and de-civilizing theories had found lodgment in the minds of the German people in the mass. In the months preceding the war I spoke in several cities in Southern Germany in opposition to the doctrines of the militarists—speaking in German, so that there could be no misunderstanding of my meaning—and I found so general an acceptance of the principles enunciated that I am satisfied—even in the face of the wave of patriotic approval of the war that has passed over Germany—that there is a great stream of public opinion yet untainted by the doctrines of the Junkers. Naturally as the flame of patriotism always burns so brightly in Germany, the danger to the Fatherland has called forth the enthusiasm of its sons without respect to their previous attitude toward war. This is especially shown in the case of the Socialists.

"Do I consider the war on the part of the Allies justified? When Bernhardi published his book, 'Germany and the Next War,' and in lectures on the public platform he enunciated the same doctrines as to the virtues of war as an instrument for ennobling mankind and as to the places which Germany should make for herself in the world by using this instrument against France and England, I had no hesitation in declaring that such doctrines were subversive to the very basis of our civilization, and that no more consideration should be shown to the men who propounded them than to a nest of rattlesnakes.

Monstrous Doctrine.

"The fact that has now developed that not a few men, but a great body of men in one nation, do hold these monstrous doctrines, and are attempting to apply them, has not altered my opinion. I cannot acquit the military autocracy that rules from Potsdam, the Junker caste that dominates Prussia, of the guilt of this fearful conflict. Upon them and the armament firms the responsibility must rest. The Kaiser, unwilling to surround himself with men of ability, has been finally, even if willing, to stem the torrent. A word from Germany would have stopped Austria. It was never uttered, probably because Germany thought the hour had struck for the war for which it is now clear she had been long preparing. The Zabern affair was a revelation to the world of how far Germany had become entangled in the military skein. If the abandonment of civil rights illustrated by this incident, the evident failure of democratic principles, the supremacy of militarism even in the domain of edu-

Have You Read This?

It is well worth your while, for it is a delightful story.
Cloth, 50c; if mailed, 52c.
KENNEDY SQUARE

By F. Hopkinson Smith.
Kennedy Square, a place of "birds and trees and flowers," is both a hiding place and symbol of that small and charmingly select coterie of aristocracy in the old South. St. George Wilmot Temple, "a perfect embodiment of all that blood had bequeathed him," is the center of the group portrayed in this story and at his invitation enters also the scene at the beginning of the Post's prominence. The love of a tempestuous youth, born a gentleman, for "the proudest and loveliest girl on earth," furnishes the theme of the tale—a love tested by pride by a duel by hospitality and by the devotion of faithful blacky; a love in the evolution of which character is deepened and chastened and strengthened.
